HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 20, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF U.S. POSTMASTER GENERAL, AND ASSOCIATES—CONGRATULATIONS ON U.S. SPACE FLIGHT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the house will permit me I should like to draw attention to the presence in the gallery of Mr. J. Edward Day, Postmaster General of the United States, who is visiting Ottawa for discussions in connection with postal developments. He is accompanied by several distinguished citizens of the United States and members of the advisory committee. There is no better example of the benefits of international co-operation than can be found in the post office departments of the world.

It is particularly pleasing to welcome him at this time on behalf of his country when all of us in the free world, and in the uncommitted world as well, are watching the course of Colonel John Glenn as he speeds into history for the benefit of all mankind. I am sure I voice the prayers and hopes of all of us that the flight, so auspiciously begun, will be successful after so many disappointments and delays, in the process of which these facts became known to the world, as is always the case amongst democratic nations.

I know everyone is happy today, and I am sure the house will allow me to express the hope that the flight will continue to be, in its remaining circuits of the earth, as successful as it has already been. The latest word is that Colonel Glenn is approaching his first encirclement of the earth, and all of us pray for a successful conclusion. This House of Commons, I am sure, is united in extending congratulations to him, to his technical advisers, and in particular to the President and people of the United States.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on the opposition side would like to join with the Prime Minister in the welcome he has expressed to a distinguished member of the cabinet of our great friend and neighbour. It is an auspicious day on which the Postmaster General has arrived in Ottawa, an auspicious day in the history of his country, and we Canadians share in the pride that all Americans must be feeling this morning, just as a good many of us shared the excitement of the television screen with them from an early hour this morning.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The members of this group are in complete agreement with the welcome given the Postmaster General of the United States by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. I might say that we wish all other departments of governments in all countries could emulate the example of the post office departments in constructive co-operation in the arts of peace.

We also join with the Prime Minister and the leader of the official opposition in their best wishes to the United States astronaut, John Glenn, whose space flight is now being watched with such interest and admiration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF HIGH COMMISSIONER TO AUSTRALIA

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Evan W. T. Gill as high commissioner for Canada to Australia. Mr. Gill, at present an assistant undersecretary of state for external affairs, will succeed Mr. Terence W. L. MacDermot, who has retired from the public service after a long and distinguished career. Mr. Gill will take up his appointment in Canberra in the spring.

Mr. Gill's extensive and varied experience, both inside and outside the public service, makes him eminently qualified for his new post. He graduated from the Royal Military College in 1923 and received a B.Sc. degree from McGill University in 1925. Before the war he served with industrial and commercial organizations. He joined the Canadian army in 1940 and rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel in 1944. From 1944 to 1946 he served as secretary to the chiefs of staff committee and as a member of the cabinet secretariat. On demobilization he was appointed to the civilian staff of the privy council office and served as secretary to the cabinet defence committee and other cabinet committees.

In the Department of External Affairs, which he joined in 1950, Mr. Gill has held with distinction a number of important appointments. He served as counsellor at Canada House in London during 1950-51, and then became head of the personnel division in the department. He was appointed high commissioner for Canada to the Union of South Africa in July, 1954, and in March, 1957, he became Canada's first high commissioner to Ghana. He was appointed assistant under secretary in April, 1959.

Mr. Gill's special interest and wide experience in commonwealth affairs will, I am sure, be particularly valuable in maintaining our close family links with Australia. These connections are especially important at this time in view of the important economic developments taking place in the commonwealth.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it has not always been the practice to comment on announcements with regard to those who have been appointed to positions in our diplomatic corps. However, I should like to note with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Gill, to take effect next spring, as our high commissioner to Australia. Mr. Gill has had a very distinguished career in our foreign service. As the minister said, he has served Canada with distinction in many capacities, among these as a former high commissioner to South Africa. He will be replacing Mr. MacDermot, I take it, who has rendered distinguished service to Canada in more capacities than one, not only as a representative of Canada in several countries but as one who served Canada as a very distinguished educationalist before he joined the public service.

This appointment is received with satisfaction and also with an expression of gratitude to Mr. MacDermot for his distinguished service to the government of Canada, to the public service and to Canada itself.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group are not closely acquainted with Mr. Gill, but when there is a question of an appointment such as this, knowing the capacity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to assess the ability and integrity of individuals, we are quite willing to accept his recommendation and his views. We wish this gentleman every success in the important mission he has undertaken for this country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FURTHER REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY ASSOCIATE MINISTER OF DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister any comment to make on the statement of his colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence, that his recent difficulties arising out of his condemnation of the governments of Ecuador and British Guiana as communist were due to bad reporting by the Canadian Press?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I naturally have no comment on that matter. I also saw a report of a speech delivered yesterday by the hon. gentleman in which he condemned the $40 million being paid to western farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, but before asking it I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I did make a speech in which I referred to the $40 million, but I did not condemn it; on the contrary, I said that we on this side of the house had approved of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment. But I did make the statement that I thought the Prime Minister and his government were doing very little for the eastern farmers.

Mr. Ricard: This is the second time you have done that.

Mr. Chevrier: The supplementary question I pose to the Prime Minister is this—

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If the hon. member has questions to ask concerning my statements, he should ask them of me.

Mr. Chevrier: The supplementary question I should like to ask the Prime Minister—and I shall determine to whom the questions are to be directed, not the associate minister—

Mr. Sevigny: Will you ask them of me?

Mr. Chevrier: I will, in due course. The supplementary question to the Prime Minister is this. Is the Prime Minister aware that in a statement on the C.B.C. on Sunday, following the violence which took place in British Guiana, the associate minister in effect repeated the statement that the government of British Guiana was communist when, as reported in Le Devoir of February 20, he is quoted as saying:

> Don't you see? Who is ignorant? Who was in error? Have we not here a communist government?

I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any comment to make on that matter.

Mr. Pigeon: This is so ridiculous.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not seen that article, and naturally I have no comment to make on it. Comments in this connection have already been made.

Mr. Chevrier: Since the Associate Minister of National Defence—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am doubtful whether the inquiries the hon. member for Laurier is making are a proper subject for a question at this time. They may be an appropriate subject of debate, but I fail to see what information he is asking for in the questions he has asked. I think one supplementary question is ample to allot to the subject.

Mr. Chevrier: Then may I ask the associate minister, who is so anxious to reply to this question, and who in effect has repeated—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Chevrier: The question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat. I raised a point of order myself. If the hon. member who apparently wishes to ask another question wants to discuss the point of order, he is permitted to do so. I will hear the hon. member for Stormont later if it is necessary.

Mr. Chevrier: The question I wish to put to the associate minister is this—

Mr. Speaker: Order. My question is whether the inquiries the hon. member is making are appropriate for the orders of the day. They do not seem to be a search for information. If the hon. member wishes to initiate a new question, I will hear him in due course.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I am speaking now on a point of order, and it is this. The minister, having risen in the house and having made an apology for the statement he made earlier concerning his accusation that the governments of both these countries were of communistic nature, has in effect, in a television program in Montreal on Sunday, repeated the same accusations.

An hon. Member: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. members in due course, but the hon. member for Laurier is now addressing himself to a point of order; at least I hope he is.

Mr. Chevrier: I was about to say that the minister has in effect repeated his accusations, if he is properly quoted in the report which I have now. On that basis I was about to ask Your Honour's permission to address a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member's question in due course and deal with it then. If either of the hon. members who rose to speak on points of order have anything else to say, I will hear them now.

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): Yes. I do not think the hon. member for Laurier or anyone else is entitled to conduct an inquisition to serve his own party or personal ends.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member seems to be generating more heat than light with regard to the point of order.

(Translation):

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I very clearly stated to the house, on February 12, that I had not expressed myself correctly in a statement I made in Montreal. Having made that inaccurate statement, Mr. Speaker, I corrected myself. I have nothing to add to, nor to retract from, the statement I made in this house.

But I will say this. In an interview on television last Saturday evening, I did not repeat what I had said in a speech I gave in Montreal.

(Text):

But, Mr. Speaker, I said this; that in view of the week-end events, and in particular the events which took place in British Guiana; and in view of the reports which we have read and which have been written by commentators in the Canadian Press and other periodicals it is amply evident that communism is spreading in Latin America and is presenting a danger to world peace. That is all I said.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member seems to have taken the view with respect to the point of order that the subject is a relevant one, and if the hon. member for Laurier has a supplementary question—if a supplementary question is necessary—I will give him the floor.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I have, sir.

(Translation):

Further to the statement the minister just made, I should like to ask him the following question. Did he, yes or no, in his interview on television, use the following words:

Don't you see? Who is ignorant? Who was in error? Have we not here a communist government?

Did the minister use these words during his interview?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I used those words. I said this. In view of the events which have been reported in the press over the week end, in relation to what has been going on in British Guiana, in view of the articles written on the progress being made by communism in Latin America, it is quite evident that we must be aware of the danger. If the hon. member for Laurier does not feel that communism constitutes a threat, then let him say so publicly.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in reply to what the minister has just said, I rise on a point of order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Laurier is not entitled to reply to the answer. He has been allowed three supplementaries, and I think the subject might well now be left for debate at a time when it is appropriate to enter into debate.

The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was rising to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The same ruling applies to the hon. member for Kootenay West.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Associate Minister of National Defence, can the Prime Minister say whether it is the policy of the government to have members of the government make speeches on its behalf—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: —based on alleged facts gleaned from newspaper reports?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Prime Minister heard the question. There was considerable interruption, and I must say I had difficulty myself in hearing it.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood Your Honour to rule out further supplementaries with regard to speeches made by the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wants to ask his question, would he repeat it so that I may determine whether it is proper.

Mr. Hellyer: The question is this. Is it the policy of the government to have members of the government make speeches on its behalf based on facts allegedly gleaned from newspaper reports?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's question is a purely hypothetical one.

Mr. Hellyer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not hypothetical, because this is what the associate minister has informed the house and the country that he did.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is asking a question about the conduct of the associate minister, that matter has been disposed of for this morning. If it has to do with other matters it is not attached to any specific facts and, as I say, it is hypothetical.

COMBINES

CANADA PACKERS—INQUIRY AS TO COURT ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. On January 31, as reported at page 401 of Hansard, I asked the minister a question relating to the disposition of the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission regarding the action of Canada Packers in acquiring two other companies. At that time the minister answered as follows:

> My recollection is that this matter has been referred to counsel, but with precisely what instructions I do not recall. I shall have to look that up and give a more complete answer tomorrow.

Is the minister now able to enlarge upon that answer?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The answer is that the report was referred to counsel for an opinion as to prosecution.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate whether that opinion has been received as yet?

Mr. Fulton: My recollection is that it has not been, but if I am wrong I shall advise the hon. member.

THE CENSUS

STATEMENT REGARDING AVAILABILITY OF POPULATION FIGURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me when the final census figures would be presented. I said I would speak to the dominion statistician, and having done so this is the report he has given me.

As usual there will be three reports, as follows:

1. It is expected that the final population total for Canada, the provinces and the northern territories for the census of June 1, 1961 will be released in the daily bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics about March 9.

2. The population of the electoral districts, totals only, for 1961, 1956 and 1951 censuses, a four page bulletin, will be released about March 20.

3. The population of the electoral districts and census subdivisions totals for 1961 and 1956 will be released about June 5.

It should be noted that releases on other aspects of the 1961 census will become available while work is proceeding on bulletin No. 3. These are not related to the problems of redistribution of the House of Commons.

These 1961 census results will be four weeks later than in 1952 due to the fact that we are dealing with a considerable increase in our population, nearly 30 per cent, and have carried out more extensive checking operations to ensure greater accuracy and as complete a count as possible. Hon. members should note that the last redistribution bill was first introduced on March 10, 1952 but had to be withdrawn and a new bill introduced on June 27, due to premature action in presentation of the final figures. It has been decided to avoid any chance of error this time by the more extensive checking operations to which I have referred.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce may I put a question to the Prime Minister, and ask whether he is in a position to give the house an assurance that the constitutional requirement in regard to a readjustment of the seats in the House of Commons will be carried out before another general election is held.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter will receive attention in due course. However, it strikes me as strange that those who have been calling every day for an election are now speaking about constitutional difficulties.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might point out that I asked the question and I am not "those"; I am singular.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Also may I point out that I have personally taken no part in the election speculation. I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister and ask the hon. gentleman whether he recalls that a former government in the war years felt it necessary to get a constitutional amendment to postpone a redistribution.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is an argumentative one and would lead to a debate.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could indicate the order of priority as between the redistribution bill that will follow the publication of these figures and the intimation in the speech from the throne that redistribution commission will be established?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has come to the heart of the matter. He did not approach it in the singular manner of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. As a matter of fact, it will require legislation on the part of parliament as soon as it can be brought in to provide for the setting up of a commission to make the study that was forecast in the speech from the throne.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister any further information to give to the house with regard to his recent meeting with Hon. Robert Bonner, attorney general of British Columbia, apart from what has already appeared in statements by Mr. Bonner?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Bonner and I agreed that the details of our discussions would be confidential for the time being. We both made general statements as to the nature of the discussions which concerned the Doukhobor problem in British Columbia and a particular problem arising out of the application of the succession duty act.

ORGANIZED CRIME—STATEMENTS BY R.C.M.P. COMMISSIONER AND MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. state, as reported in a recent press article, that the Mafia is in control of organized crime in one or more Canadian cities?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Commissioner Harvison has assured me that at no time did he state that the Mafia or any other organization controlled big crime in any Canadian city.

He has, however, made speeches, as I have myself, calling attention to the problems arising from the fact that organized crime syndicates are showing an increased interest in setting up operations in Canada. His speeches of October 2, 1961 to the international association of chiefs of police in Montreal, and of November 6, 1961 to the Canadian club of Toronto; and my speech of October 4, 1961 to the international association of chiefs of police in Montreal, are an accurate reflection of official views on this matter, which are there outlined in some detail and in proper perspective.

I should like to emphasize that the heads of law enforcement agencies in Canada are very much alive to this problem and have held several exploratory meetings with a view to co-ordinating their efforts in this connection and discussing measures which can be taken to safeguard the public interest. These meetings have been attended by the directors and chiefs of several police forces in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, as well as the heads of the provincial police forces in those provinces. Commissioner Harvison has attended as head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question. Can the minister say whether he plans to introduce any legislation at this session of parliament which would assist the police in controlling this matter before the syndicates become entrenched?

Mr. Fulton: I have nothing to add to the reply I just gave.

TRADE

CUBA—REPORTED DISCUSSION IN NATO COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can confirm that the NATO council today or shortly thereafter will discuss the matter of trade with Cuba, in the light of representations which it is reported in today's press are to be made by Mr. Walt Rostow on behalf of the government of the United States.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, meetings of the NATO council are private meetings, and it would be quite inappropriate for me to say what is to be discussed in the NATO council today or at any other time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the reply given yesterday by the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Vancouver South, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm the report in today's Globe and Mail with regard to the holding of such a meeting?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the NATO council has regular meetings and various subjects are discussed. I cannot make any statement about what happens to be coming up for discussion today or tomorrow.

(Translation):

PUBLIC SERVICE

AGRICULTURE—REPORTED ATTITUDE OF INFORMATION OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked me whether I would take the necessary steps to remedy a situation allegedly pointed out to the Department of Agriculture with regard to French information supplied by that department. The hon. member's question followed up a report prepared by Mr. H. M. Halliwell for the Minister of Agriculture himself.

Though my jurisdiction may sometimes extend to the giving out of information (more particularly with regard to the department of public printing and stationery and the bureau for translations) it is not my responsibility to define the nature, the quantity or the percentage of documents in one or the other language distributed by the various departments. Except when an act or a ruling so provides, that task is entirely the responsibility of the department concerned.

Yet, I want to point out that it was because of a request made by the Minister of Agriculture himself that the report mentioned by the hon. member was prepared. We may therefore assume that the minister will certainly from now on consider any such recommendation made to him.

(Text):

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORTH BAY—CONSTRUCTION OF STORAGE FOR NUCLEAR WARHEADS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Is the minister in a position now to reply to the question which I posed to the Minister of National Defence yesterday?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Trinity may I say that facilities for the maintenance and storage of the Bomarc missile have been constructed at North Bay and are being constructed at La Macaza. These facilities will be available if and when nuclear warheads are obtained.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister say when that will be?

Mr. Sevigny: No comment.

HOUSING

REPORTED RENT INCREASES TO SENIOR CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has been advised that already many landlords across Canada are increasing rents charged to senior citizens by the amount of the increase in pension recently passed by the House of Commons. Has the Prime Minister any comment, and is there any action the government can take to stop this practice?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question about rents, which are a subject of provincial jurisdiction and not the responsibility of any minister of the crown in this government. If there is a desire to deal with the issue I certainly would not stand in the way, but it is not a proper subject for a question to this government.

Mr. Winch: I thought that a statement by the Prime Minister might have a salutary effect in the interests of the senior citizens of this country.

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO RESTORATION OF TWICE DAILY MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Does the name of our distinguished visitor, Mr. Day, remind our Postmaster General of a promise he made when he was in the opposition in respect of twice a day mail delivery?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from the United States has left the gallery that question would not seem to have very much point at the moment. I might mention, however, that in his country as well twice a day mail delivery has been abolished for some time.

PUBLICATIONS

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask a question of the Postmaster General. In view of the interest and concern in both the United States and Canada with regard to the proposed legislation on publications, is he having discussions with his United States counterpart on the situation as it affects Reader's Digest and Time magazine in Canada?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): There is nothing whatever in that connection which immediately affects our discussions. This is a problem or a situation quite apart from the post office.

SPEECH FROM THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night, I was talking about the lack of action on the part of the government in dealing with unemployment, as well as about the slump in which agriculture finds itself.

For the voters as well as for the member at home during the parliamentary recess, there were few administrative statements from parliament, the headlines being given rather to the former senator from Jean Talon hospital, to the letter, signed or not, from the Secretary of State, to the trip to Quebec, and to the appointment of Mr. Maurice Richard to the Senate.

Mr. Maurice Richard undoubtedly was one of our great French Canadian athletes, and it would be unfortunate to see his name linked with the administrative failure of the present government.

The speech from the throne did not tell us much that was news. It contains, however, a popular measure that we readily approve, that is the one about the increase in the old age pensions.

There again, it is fortunate that the Conservatives came after a Liberal government, because they did not initiate any social measure; and the increase in the old age pensions proves that they now approve that Liberal measure that was called for at the time the law was enacted.

The family allowances date back to 1944 and the best way of knowing if an increase is justified is to consider the upward trend in the cost of living since they were adopted.

Rent stood at 91.4 per cent in 1945 and had reached 132.7 per cent in 1960; the cost of clothing, which stood at 66.9 per cent in 1945, had increased to 110.9 per cent in 1960; the cost of food, which stood then at 66.3 per cent, had climbed to 122.2 for the year 1960.

That means that the value of the dollar, taking these statistics into account, is almost half what it was when the allowances were put into effect; and we can conclude that the buying power of the Canadian family has decreased by that much, whereas it should be increased to stimulate the country's economy.

These statistics not only show but prove that an adjustment of the family allowances rate is necessary. The adjustment is all the more essential since the Conservatives came to power, because they brought with them unemployment as it exists today.

By overlooking family allowances, the government is condoning a lack of distributive justice and puts many Canadian families in an intolerable situation, depriving them of a buying power that, while improving their economic conditions, would contribute to give back to the country, in a large measure, that economic development it should have.

I am not surprised at the inaction of the government in that regard. The Tories have always proved, by their statements, that they were against the allowances, and the attitude of the present government proves again that the Conservatives have not changed their minds and still have a great disregard for the families that make up our country.

I should not like to repeat today the ungracious statements made by the leader and members of the Conservative party on this subject, but it is agreed that immediate action is imperative.

Speaking of the next general election—it is bound to take place—and, in that connection, we just have to refer to a Canadian Press report of January 3 last entitled: "1962 holds promises of a bright future—Mr. Diefenbaker". According to the Prime Minister, a year of promises, and he knows what he is talking about. This will be an election year and we, on this side of the house, are awaiting the election eagerly, not for our own satisfaction, but for the benefit of the Canadian people. We feel that the slogan "Follow John" will not bring to the Conservatives the same results as in 1958.

Farmers who form one of the most important parts of our population feel the same way as we do concerning the government's inertia. As a matter of fact, the January 17 issue of Terre de Chez Nous published an article entitled: The federal government's inertia exposed. The article states further on that the Canadian federation of dairy farmers has expressed, on behalf of Canadian dairy farmers, its regrets and disappointment in the face of the federal government's inertia.

Speaking on behalf of the 350,000 members of the federation, the president, Mr. Lutes, deplored the government's failure to take action on a brief which was submitted about two months ago and which urged the immediate payment of 14 cents a pound to subsidize the consumption of butter.

For his part, Mr. Pierre Cote considered the present butter consumption deplorable and pointed out that it was going down every month, while the surplus amounted to more than 200 million pounds.

As Mr. Cote says, it is obvious that this surplus is due to the high resale consumer price and unless the federal government takes the necessary means to improve the situation by paying a subsidy, there is no hope of solving the problem.

If the situation is so serious, it is because of the present government.

Here is what Mr. Paul Henri Lavoie writes in the December 6, 1961 issue of Terre de Chez Nous:

> The change in government at Ottawa has only made matters worse since the views of those concerned, the producers, have practically always been systematically ignored. Such was the case, for instance, when the oft-repeated suggestion was made that a subsidy be paid for butter consumption. What was bound to happen did indeed happen. Faced with a situation which could soon become disastrous, after they ignored the producers' recommendations when it was time to make decisions, the government is now inclined to blame the producers and make them pay the full price for mistakes in which they had practically no part.

That issue of Terre de Chez Nous did not mince words in regard to the government. At the present time, the only place where butter consumption can be increased is on the domestic market and the only way to do that, is to pay consumer subsidies.

In fact, there can be no question of exporting our surpluses, except at a loss, since prices on world markets are lower than those on the Canadian market. Then, why not have Canadian families benefit by such a subsidy instead of the importing countries?

The unemployment situation is still a source of worry in Canada, notwithstanding the Prime Minister's formal promise that, if he were elected, no one would have to suffer from unemployment.

What is even worse is that the unemployment insurance fund, to which employers and employees of our country are contributing, is practically depleted. Almost $1 billion has been spent recklessly by the government in this field alone.

The Liberal leader was certainly right when he said in the course of this debate that the slogan "Follow John" had been very costly for the Canadian nation.

The Unemployment Insurance Act has been in force since July 1, 1941 and last year it had been in existence for 20 years.

It is quite impressive to note that under this Liberal legislation, during that period of time, over $3 billion was paid out in benefits, that is an average of more than $400 million each year paid out to those who suffered from unemployment, but there have been so many unemployed in the last four years that the fund has decreased alarmingly.

On the occasion of the twentieth anniversary, the dominion bureau of statistics published a special article which was reprinted in the Labour Gazette, the official publication of the Department of Labour.

Analysing that article in the light of the statistics on the situation of the fund, we note that due to the present unemployment situation, and the great number of benefits being paid, there has been in the last four years a huge deficit between the average annual revenues and the amount of benefits paid out. Therefore, we cannot but condemn this government for its failure to end unemployment.

What has the present government done to solve the unemployment situation? Nothing worthwhile, except passing the buck and putting the burden on the municipalities. And yet, the present situation is the very confirmation of the inefficiency of this government. What have the members of the cabinet done recently? They have travelled a lot. Sometimes, we find the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) in Quebec city preaching repatriation of the constitution, while the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), makes announcements about shipbuilding in British Columbia.

At about this time last year, the Prime Minister went to Japan, ostensibly to pave the way for the textile messiah, the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). Indeed, they have travelled a lot, but they have accomplished very little, and the people will certainly call them to account in the next national election.

Electoral blackmail has but a minute importance nowadays, and the Prime Minister is well aware of that. That is why he backed down during the last session on the issue of the amendment by the other place of the bill giving certain powers to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). It is a well-known fact that the amendment aroused the ire of the Prime Minister who tried his hand at electoral blackmailing.

That is what led Mr. Vincent Prince of La Presse, to make the following statement about the Prime Minister in an editorial dated July 12, 1961, I quote:

> Then why should he resort to threats? We see only one plausible reason: Mr. Diefenbaker is engaged in political blackmail. He is looking for a campaign issue.

What was true at the time that editorial was published is still true and the Prime Minister is still looking for some issue which would appeal to the people in the next election.

He tried hard in the speech from the throne to win friends among our senior citizens, but when he carries the pleasure as far as saying that the Liberals are repenting, he is wittingly mistaken because how could he have granted that increase if the act had not been passed by a Liberal government?

According to a report published in Le Devoir of January 10, the Prime Minister said:

> Everyone still remembers the famous six dollars the Liberals had promised in 1957.

The Prime Minister should know that it was not a Tory promise but a Liberal action, and the article goes on to say:

> Those who today are making promises are the same ones who believed then that six dollars were adequate.

The Prime Minister is knowingly and wilfully overlooking the fact that this measure was introduced by the Liberal party and that out of the $65 paid to the aged, $46 come from the Liberal party and not from the Conservative government. Has the Prime Minister forgotten that the pensions now received by our senior citizens come, in the proportion of 70 per cent, from a Liberal government?

Those who benefit from those pensions have not forgotten and will not forget. They will not forget that, while they benefit from an increase, their children and grandchildren were completely overlooked.

They will recall the consideration which the previous Liberal government gave to the welfare of Canadian families, that is to say to their children and grandchildren. They will recall that the last speech from the throne was as lacking as the previous ones in family benefits, and that the important question of family allowances was ignored. Such is the sympathy shown by this government to our families who, by the thousands, are suffering from unemployment due to Conservative policies.

It is a Tory speech from the throne, since it is against the family like the party and government now guiding Canada's destiny.

There is nothing surprising about the fuss being raised in this administration, if we consider the contradictory statements made by cabinet members.

At the Accra conference, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) stated that Great Britain's intention, with regard to the common market, is bound to dismember the commonwealth. In Halifax, the Prime Minister said he was confident, on the contrary, that the British would protect Canada, while in Windsor, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) stated emphatically that Canadian trade would greatly suffer.

In the atomic field, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) cannot get over the fact that Canada is without nuclear warheads, while the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) is happy about the fact that we do not have any. No wonder things are not running smoothly.

When I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) on January 29, I was not so much interested in the topic he discussed as in the designation he used for the previous Liberal administration. He mentioned at least four times the St. Laurent-Howe administration, but speaking of this government he said the "Diefenbaker government".

As a Conservative member, he was perfectly right in not associating with the name of the Prime Minister that of a French-speaking member of the cabinet.

The Liberal party has always respected the two main ethnic groups in Canada: we had the Mackenzie King-Lapointe team, then the Mackenzie King-St. Laurent team and finally the St. Laurent-Howe team.

I wonder how the present Prime Minister can claim to be the champion of national unity when he did not do anything along that line.

Let not the Prime Minister be mistaken about it, the public is aware of those facts. I wish to quote a few paragraphs from an article of Vincent Prince published in La Presse of December 29, 1961, under the title:

Water-carriers in the ministry.

Here is what the article says:

Most newspapers had foreseen that Prime Minister Diefenbaker would take advantage of his trip to Quebec yesterday to announce a major cabinet shuffle and the strengthening of the position of French-speaking ministers within the ministry.

Once again, the Conservative leader belied the prophets. Nothing of the sort happened. The various heads of departments remained the same and the only change in the Quebec representation is that Mr. Jacques Flynn, the member for Quebec South, has replaced Mr. Paul Comtois, recently appointed lieutenant governor of the province.

The ministers from Quebec continue to head the least important, or at any rate the least glittering departments in the federal administration. True enough, Mr. Noel Dorion has been appointed chairman of the privy council, but that is purely an honorary title. He is still Secretary of State and his functions have not been extended, contrary to what others had expected.

The new minister, Mr. Flynn, has simply inherited the portfolio of his predecessor, mines and technical surveys, while Mr. Sevigny remains Associate Minister of National Defence, Mr. O'Hurley, Minister of Defence Production, and Mr. Balcer, Minister of Transport.

And I continue to quote from that same article in La Presse.

Except for this last department, it will be admitted that the posts entrusted to our representatives are rather uninfluential. More generosity could surely have been shown. The Department of Justice, for instance, would have suited us very well. Mr. Dorion or Mr. Flynn would have been equal to the task. In any case, the more important portfolios—finance, trade and commerce, national defence, national health and welfare, agriculture, etc., continue to slip away from us.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Diefenbaker should have chosen the capital of French Canada to announce that he is perpetuating our inferiority in his cabinet. It was not worth the trip for his ministers. The announcement could just as well have been made in Ottawa.

Can the Prime Minister claim to be the champion of national unity when he flatly turns down, without an explanation or any consideration, the request for the setting up of a royal commission on bilingualism?

Can the Prime Minister claim to be the champion of national unity when he attempts to work up the rest of Canada on the question of the flag? What is he trying to do, in this regard—appeal to race prejudice?

This is what we are asking ourselves when we see how hard he has been trying to revive a badly reported statement of the leader of the Liberal party, made in Amherst, Nova Scotia, last November, and which our leader has described as inaccurate.

What is the Prime Minister trying to do when he asks his lieutenants to spread out this inaccuracy all over Canada before the election? Here are the views expressed in an article published in La Presse of January 23, 1962, I quote:

For one, I am afraid that the campaign Mr. Diefenbaker seems to be launching will put us back a hundred years. What are our English-speaking compatriots going to think? They will most naturally infer that any concession on their part on the flag issue would be equivalent to yielding before an articulate minority which is bent on sabotaging the feelings of the majority, of deriding the noble British traditions.

No, let us hope—

The article continues:

—that Mr. Diefenbaker will think better of it and that in the interests of the national unity he is talking so much about, he will abandon his plan to use for electoral purposes the alleged statement of Mr. Pearson.

That is the credit to be given the Tories and their leader on the issue of national unity.

There is only one thing we must hope for, namely that the general election will be called as soon as possible so that the mess may be cleared without delay, because the people of this country are anxious for a change, they long for a sound economy in all areas both industrial and agricultural in the best interests of all concerned.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the member would allow a question now?

An hon. Member: Too late.

Mr. Valade: Would the member allow me to put my question?

Mr. Speaker: I regret, but it is too late now, since the member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) has resumed his seat.

(Text):

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, may I join with my colleagues in congratulating both the mover and the seconder of this address for their speeches and contributions in this house. This, of course, is not done in any perfunctory way for, as has been said before, they both made very able contributions and can certainly see the reason for their particular choice by the Prime Minister in giving them and their constituencies this important honour. May I also congratulate you, sir, upon your elevation to this important office, and also your colleague the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn), and all those who have received appointment as parliamentary secretaries.

I should like to deal with a variety of subjects in the time allotted to me, and at the same time refer to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition in so far as his remarks concerned the question of Canada's prestige abroad. Hon. members will recall that the Leader of the Opposition cluttered up the record of Hansard with opinions of other people. It would be interesting if there were a law of plagiarism in this country, because if there were such a law undoubtedly the Leader of the Opposition would have been speechless, as he had very few opinions of his own. Fortunately, however, there is no such law. I say "fortunately" because I intend to refer to some quotations by people who hold somewhat different views than the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hellyer: If there were such a law your speech would be concluded before it had begun.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): We will hear from the kindergarten of the Liberal party later. I should like to deal with other matters because I think it is important at this time, which may well be the last opportunity for any hon. member, including the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), to make himself heard. Therefore I intend to deal with these items simply and clearly so that even he may understand them.

First may I deal with a question of Canada's prestige abroad. One finds it difficult to understand how such a distinguished parliamentarian as the Leader of the Opposition, who has depended so much for his reputation in the field of diplomacy on the need for the co-operation of others, can now attempt to destroy the reputation of this country abroad. There may be no purpose for following a completely bipartisan policy on external affairs; that is, there is no such need if the principles involved are of such a divergent nature that the parties of this house cannot agree with them. But I suggest that before we decide to expose these differences to the world we had better substantiate by chapter and verse what these differences are, rather than taking the course followed by the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues in trying to speak out of both sides of their mouths at the same time.

The Leader of the Opposition described the prestige of this country as declining. The only examples he could cite were certain editorial opinions from various foreign editors whose ego was offended by certain action Canada has taken, and which does not conform with their respective opinions. That is to say, it was in the best interests of these editorial writers to take a particular course, motivated by factors with which we could not and would not be expected to agree. I suggest that each of us should remind ourselves that we are not in this house as members of the United Kingdom parliament or the United States congress, but we are here as Canadians, responsible to the people of Canada, and this is where our first interest must lie.

The Leader of the Opposition took it upon himself, as perhaps the only vestige of evidence, to suggest that our prestige abroad had suffered by the representations made by members of the cabinet in their discussions with the United Kingdom in connection with the common market. I suggest, sir, that we really could not expect that any member of government would not press for all the advantages to be gained by Canada in any of these deliberations. Is it not equally true that representatives of the other commonwealth countries who occupy the same position as our Minister of Finance took exactly the same line of argument on behalf of their countries at this conference?

The Leader of the Opposition criticizes the forecful way in which the Minister of Finance took up the question of Britain's entry into the common market; not opposed to it, but hoping it would take into consideration all the factors that involve this country. What do other Canadians think of this attitude? One can draw opinions from many sources. I should first like to refer to an important quotation from a very responsible body of Canadians who are vitally important to our community. I refer to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, who in one of their publications say this:

> The Canadian Manufacturers' Association believe that the position taken by the Canadian government will be helpful in strengthening Britain's position in these negotiations. Canada, after all, in common with the other commonwealth countries, can hardly be blamed for making the most strenuous efforts to maintain as far as possible that preferential access to the British market which she has so long enjoyed.

Of course this is a position which Canadians must take in the interests of the development of the prosperity of their own country. What about the attitude of the world abroad toward this country? It is hard to evaluate any evidence in support of the position we have taken in the international community, but naturally as a country grows up and assumes more responsibility it is bound to run into divergent views. We do not disagree in international matters for the sake of disagreement but, as we become increasingly active in the world community, we are bound to encounter different points of view.

Nevertheless we have accomplished a great deal during these past five years, and I think it worth while to place on record some of the things which have been achieved under the guidance of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs. Certainly we can say that under his direction Canada was fortunate in being recognized as one of the vice presidents of the United Nations during the past year. It is well to remember that this international forum is a far more competitive body today than it was in the days when the present Leader of the Opposition was so closely associated with it. At that time there were some 55 member nations, compared with 104 who now occupy seats in that chamber.

There are many more achievements which could be listed. Mr. Marcel Cadieux has been elected a member of the international law commission by the general assembly. We are one of three western countries represented on the committee for the Congo and, of course, we have troops in that country, and have participated in all military actions when invited by the United Nations. We have played an important part in the work of the committee on outer space. We have been one of the principal supporters of the issuance of bonds to support the United Nations. The same comment applies to the project for a food bank. Canada played a role of first importance in the promotion of the resolution regarding radioactive fallout. We were co-sponsors of a resolution asking the Soviet union not to explode the 50 megaton bomb, a resolution which received the support of 87 nations. We were members of the committee of 10 on disarmament and we are members of the present committee of 15 nations. We have established close relations with the new African states, particularly with the French-speaking states, and so on. There are two and a half pages of accomplishments listed here, and I think the house should be made aware of these factors. I ask you, then, does this look like a record of a country which is losing prestige abroad.

In addition to this contribution let me say, as one who has been privileged to sit through three general assemblies, that there was never a day when delegations from other countries did not come to ask us for help or co-operation in connection with resolutions which were to come before the United Nations body as a whole. In the course of the opportunity I have had to visit some 14 countries this year I saw evidence of the respect held for this country, offered to me not as an individual but as a representative of Canada. What does concern me, however, is that for so long Canadians have counted themselves as poor relations to other countries. We have no reason to adopt such an attitude, because our record is one of considerable achievement. That an hon. gentleman with such a responsible task as the Leader of the Opposition should try to drag down the position we occupy abroad is, to my mind, one of the most retrograde steps that could be taken, and I suggest the hon. gentleman has done a great disservice to this country as a whole.

I turn now to another aspect of this subject. I do not propose to look to the past any more, but to look ahead. I think it is important to remind one another as we may shortly enter a new election and a new parliament that we should try to assess what has to be accomplished in the years ahead. I do not contend that it is the responsibility of this parliament to argue whether or not this government has completed all its election pledges given prior to the present year. I am prepared to let the public of Canada, the small business men, the farmers, the people from the eastern provinces make that decision.

I suggest we might look ahead at some task which, conceivably, the next Conservative government might undertake into the process of its ordinary business over the coming years. First of all I might revert to the field of international affairs. Canada, as I have said, has taken part in a number of aid programs, primarily through the Colombo plan. It has also given extensive assistance to refugees throughout the world. I have a feeling that we might make a greater contribution in another field. My experience has been that many of the countries which receive aid view it with a certain suspicion. They are inclined to inquire what strings are attached to it. Regardless of the course we follow, we must close the gap between the have and the have not countries. So we have two choices open to us; first, to continue to provide goods and services or, second, to assist those countries by providing technicians, educators and others with special skills.

As an example, I visited a clinic in Egypt which was contained in a refugee camp with a population of 3,000. This particular clinic, with two doctors on its staff, treated 550 people in the course of the day I was there. Hon. members can imagine the sort of treatment those unfortunate people received. I thought at that time that if it was possible to have one doctor from any of our graduating classes in Canada, someone about to enter his profession, spend a year or two at this clinic, what a help it would have been to these people. I have often thought, when I have seen refugees attempting to take vocational training courses without text books, what a useful thing it would be if an institution such as our trades and labour unions could arrange to supply these people with the necessary technical books. I have thought the same thing with regard to assisting underdeveloped countries to develop their oil fields, water resources, drainage, farms and so on.

Thus in the next parliament I suggest that we might review the whole operation of mutual aid. Having set up an effective office of mutual aid under an able director, it seems to me that we might shift our emphasis to providing more personnel. I suggest that it might be more acceptable than offering either material aid or cash. The Colombo plan is an example of the success we have had in that field. I do hope this scheme can be expanded to cover countries outside the commonwealth.

The second matter I would like reviewed in a new parliament concerns taxation. Anyone who has been exposed to the present taxation statutes of Canada will realize the difficulty in trying to understand the complications involved. It seems to me that we might review the statutes to determine whether our present laws provide sufficient incentive for business, corporate entities and individuals. We might ask ourselves whether we are taxing ourselves to such an extent that private interests cannot expand because tax incentives do not warrant it. Thus I think there should be a clarification of the present tax statutes.

I have often suggested in this house another matter into which the government of the day might inquire. My friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will appreciate what I am about to say. National park policy should be reviewed to determine whether the present act is capable of meeting the two extremes with which we are presently confronted, on the one hand the position taken by those who wish to see the parks maintained as natural museums, and on the other the position taken by those who wish to see ordinary development of the parks for the enjoyment and use of the public. A thorough review of the legislation is needed to eliminate this contradiction.

I turn now to the question of defence, a matter of considerable importance in this house. At some stage we must come to a conclusion as to whether or not Canada will assume nuclear arms. I think all of us can sympathize with the position taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the government, that at a time when Canada is playing a vital role at the United Nations in attempting to work out a satisfactory disarmament agreement it would be very unwise for a country that has assumed leadership in this important field to equip its forces with nuclear weapons, tactical or non-tactical.

I hold a view which may differ from that held by hon. gentlemen on the front benches. After we have explored every possible avenue for working out a successful agreement we must then accept the advice of our professional military people. If they consider it is necessary to the defence of Canada that we have nuclear weapons, I believe we have no other course to follow. However, I emphasize that this should not be done until every avenue has been fully explored toward reaching a successful agreement on disarmament. The taking on of nuclear weapons prior to that would hopelessly prejudice any discussions or negotiations that might lead to a successful agreement.

This is a somewhat different position from that taken by the Leader of the Opposition, who in one report is stated to have said in a speech that the Liberal government would consider allowing United States troops to have control over nuclear weapons in Canada if it were proved that a United States base here were absolutely essential. This is an example of the hon. gentleman talking out of both sides of his mouth. Of course the hon. gentleman said nothing about the criteria or about who would decide that it was absolutely essential.

When the present government again receives a mandate from the Canadian people it might well look into the question of transportation. I believe the time has come when a new bilateral agreement should be negotiated between Canada and the United States with respect to fifth freedom rights, permitting Canadian carriers to serve a greater number of major United States centres. One of the many anomalies existing in the present agreement is that the markets of San Francisco-Vancouver, Chicago and Montreal are not served by any Canadian or American non-stop carriers but are served by foreign carriers. This situation weakens the position of the Canadian aviation industry. Many other anomalies could be cited. Negotiations should be entered into with the United States so that these and other routes could be made available to Canadian carriers.

I turn now to another matter on which I have frequently spoken in this house; Canada's No. 1 mineral resource, the oil and natural gas industry. The government is to be congratulated on all that has been accomplished in this field in the past five years. I remind the house that in less than five years the Borden commission was established, which analysed the future of the industry and its problems. The appointment of the national energy board arose out of the recommendations of that commission. Following this the board, operating under its composite regulations, promptly handled 11 applications for the export of gas to the United States and dealt with 17 power licences. The board and its chairman deserve commendation for the promptness with which these matters were handled. Following this new regulations came into being governing the Northwest Territories and the Arctic. This was essential for the development of these vast areas. More recently, of course, we have witnessed the establishment of a national oil policy which has been eminently successful in its first year in reaching its target without encountering any real difficulties.

All of this has been accomplished in less than five years. We do well to remind ourselves of it, and to place these facts on the record. Under the new national oil policy the target of 640,000 barrels of oil has been reached this year. We are well on our way to meeting the target of 800,000 barrels by 1963. We should remind ourselves that the Borden commission stated that if such a policy were introduced it must not operate entirely at the expense of oil flowing into the export markets of the Pacific northwest or the United States as a whole. It should be pointed out that a large percentage of Canada's increased production has been exported to the United States rather than being channelled to the Canadian consumer. This is understandable; for oil, like other merchandisable products, follows the line of least resistance. Thus it has captured relatively virgin markets in this initial instance rather than replacing crude oil from foreign sources. It is, however, significant to note that in the next two year period the refinery capacity of Ontario alone will have increased by some 55,000 barrels, and thus we can expect to reduce the flow of oil into these export markets.

The house, I am certain, is familiar with the concern expressed by the United States secretary of the interior and other officials in that country over the level of increase in Canadian oil exported into the United States. The desire of the United States administration to maintain markets for their own producers is understandable. Consequently it might be well to remind ourselves, and in particular the petroleum producers, that if we are to achieve our future targets they cannot be realized at the expense of heavy flow of export sales south of the border without an equal increase diverted for domestic consumption.

I congratulate the government on the development of an oil and gas policy, something which has been required for many years and which, I regret to say, was ignored by the previous administration. I ask the government to give consideration to a new problem that is on the horizon in relation to this industry. It should be recognized that within the next short period of time the North American continent may face an oil shortage. The economic well-being of a country often depends upon its petroleum resources. It is estimated that the safe minimum of 11 years of oil reserves is dangerously close. We are going to have to ask the industry to step up and increase exploration and development. Predictions for the next 20 years indicate that the industry will be called upon to find new reserves that will yield substantial quantities of oil, up to 800,000 barrels per day or several times the finding rate during the last few years. In fact another authority, the Chase National Bank, has predicted that the demand for oil will be 73 per cent greater in the decade ending in 1970.

I have brought these figures to the attention of the house for one reason. If we are going to face a shortage of oil we had better recognize it now. We had better accept also that the necessary increase in exploration and development are going to cost a great deal of money. In fact, in terms of dollars it is estimated that it will require an additional $50 million a year. What disturbs us is that while this money may be found it might not be found in Canada, and we would hope that it could be obtained in our own country. It is particularly important that the Canadian independent companies be able to participate in the development of this important resource.

It is for this reason that I ask the house and the government to give consideration at the earliest possible date to amending the present depletion allowance. This is a very technical problem and I do not intend to go into detail. I merely remind the government of the urgency of the situation, the demands that are going to be made upon the industry, the necessity for developing capital in Canada, and the fact that we are going to have to give Canadians the opportunity to compete on the same basis as foreign companies. Therefore I suggest to the government that if we are going to meet future demands, if Canadians are going to have the opportunity to compete in the future, the best way we can do this is by amending our own taxation statutes, thus making available more Canadian capital and providing more incentive for the independent Canadian companies so they can compete on the same basis as their counterparts in the United States in the development of our own petroleum resources.

I have covered a variety of subjects, and I close by reminding our friends opposite that when we face a new session of parliament following an election, perhaps those in the opposition might look back and recall how they got themselves in the position in which they are today. I have referred to the Leader of the Opposition, who has shown considerable lack of courage in dealing with almost every subject. On the question of the sale of wheat to communist China he has two policies. He has two policies on the flag. He has two policies on national defence, and the best contribution he can make in attempting to obtain votes is to out-socialise the socialists by adding another $10 here or there to this or that pension, or by attempting to destroy the reputation of this country abroad. If he has any desire to obtain the position of prime minister of this country, I suggest to him that he had better take a lead from the present government and the present Prime Minister and recognize that forceful policies are those that are going to be accepted by the Canadian public as a whole, and that only by giving some indication that he has the qualities for leadership will he ever be accepted in this country.

I suggest, too, that when he welcomes back Canada's first man in space, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), he will perhaps have completed his role of getting into bed with the socialists. I have noticed that many young Liberals throughout the country, including the group who met recently at Milford Bay, have suggested that the Liberals might join the New Democratic party. Of course as one professor, a former Liberal, has said many times, it is the inevitable end of the Liberal party to become absorbed eventually by the socialists of this country. Even I, Mr. Speaker, recognize the need for true Liberals to act as the opposition to any government, and I would not want to see them completely taken over by our socialist friends.

May I close as I began, by asking the Leader of the Opposition if he will not display a little more of that type of leadership which he gave at one time as secretary of state for external affairs, so that Canada will progress and will even exceed the expectations of those of us on this side. For him to sit back and take a purely negative role is not going to be helpful to anyone either inside or outside of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate you most sincerely on your recent appointment to your present duties. Even though you have been occupying the chair for only a very short time, you have conducted our proceedings with dignity, fairness and efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, we are discussing at present the speech from the throne which was delivered at the opening of the fifth session of the twenty fourth parliament.

We have sat in this house for five sessions and will eventually have a general election.

It is our duty, as members of the opposition, to look carefully into the policies of the government which has ruled the country for the past five years.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who now holds the finance portfolio (Mr. Fleming) made a tour of Canada to promise balanced budgets and he promised that there would be no more budget surpluses in Canada.

Well, he did not take long to keep his promise. He was barely in power before he changed the Liberal surpluses into Conservative deficits with the result that he has succeeded, for his part, to leave us with the largest deficits since confederation.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a far cry from the promises the Conservatives made right and left in Canada during the last election campaign.

The Conservative administration of the last five years has been a costly proposition, and it is true to say that this Conservative administration has cost more to Canada than the last world war.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) also stated across the country that as long as he would be Prime Minister, no one would suffer from unemployment.

Well, Mr. Speaker, during the last four years, we have experienced the most alarming situation since the dark days of R. B. Bennett.

At the beginning of the session, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) delivered a very fine speech during this debate on the address in reply. He expressed regret and rightly so, over the fact that Canada is losing prestige among the nations of the world. And when we say these things, Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition reads in the house extracts from newspapers which prove that Canada's loss of prestige is regretted throughout the world, our hon. friends opposite start to cry: "What a shame to discredit one's own country like that."

When we tell the Prime Minister that unemployment is continuing, when we tell him that the economic situation is bad, he answers that we are belittling our country.

This reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of somebody else just as famous as the present Prime Minister. I refer to the Hon. R. B. Bennett. He too, in 1935, when it was said in the house that there was unemployment in Canada, that Canada was suffering from a depression and economic insecurity had this to reply—if you listen carefully you will get the impression of hearing the present Prime Minister:

> Why depreciate this country's position among the nations of the world? Why try to make us believe that it suffers more than it really does, when people abroad who observe our conditions without prejudice find that we are progressing and, seeing what we are doing, say when speaking of Canada: "That country occupies the most enviable position in the universe today."
> [Mr. Dupuis.]

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister today has the same reactions as Mr. R. B. Bennett yesterday, because he finds himself in the same position, and has to face the same conditions. Moreover, as in the case of the former Conservative prime minister, his only excuse is to say: "Our opponents want to smear this country's good name."

Mr. Speaker, is it the fault of the opposition if this government has been in a muddle all along the line for the last four years? Thus when I look across the aisle, I am reminded of the way the Prime Minister has been in the habit of shuffling those front benches in the last four years. Do you want a few instances, Mr. Speaker? Here are a few: at the opening of the 1958 session, the Secretary of State was appointed as minister of citizenship and immigration. The deputy speaker was appointed as secretary of state, and later on was called to the Senate—for reasons of ill health; it was the first time the Senate was being transformed into a nursing home. A little while later, that same person went for treatment to Jean Talon hospital. After a while, the minister of transport was appointed as Minister of Trade and Commerce, the former minister of trade and commerce moved to veterans' affairs, and his predecessor went for a stay in the Senate.

The then minister of agriculture, an egg, hog and poultry specialist, suddenly became Minister of National Defence. His predecessor had to abandon his portfolio on account of the criticism levelled at him, and he was appointed as lieutenant governor of British Columbia.

The minister of northern affairs lost his bearings and fell into agriculture.

Another deputy speaker was appointed as Associate Minister of National Defence, and since then he has become a specialist on communist affairs.

The minister of mines and technical surveys has become lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec.

The present Minister of Transport has occupied so many different benches and held so many portfolios that one is wondering where he is going to next. He started as solicitor general, then was appointed as secretary of state, and he is now Minister of Transport.

The leader of the New Brunswick Conservative party was in a sorry plight. He was called in and given a seat in the house, and he is now lost in the woods.

The situation remains the same and the burlesque show goes on.

In order to lend glamour to the last seats parade, the Prime Minister of this country thought it advisable to present a public show in the city of Quebec. There, with drums and trumpets, a lot of hullabaloo and a carefully planned publicity flavoured with all sorts of conjectures, we were told that this great statesman would be accompanied by his ministers who were coming to Quebec by plane, by jet, by sea and other means of transportation, as the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) so aptly put it yesterday. Once there, the most sensational announcement which the Prime Minister could make did not concern a shuffling of cabinet seats, because there had been so many changes before, but he said that the Secretary of State had been appointed president of the privy council and that all our people, and more particularly the people of Quebec, should rejoice. Everybody therefore looked eagerly forward to see what new importance the Secretary of State would have in the house.

Well, since his appointment as president of the privy council, we find that the Secretary of State is still as usual in his back seat, in the second row.

Mr. Speaker, the show the Prime Minister presented to our people and the world just proves that the utmost confusion prevails in the ranks of our opponents.

Did we not see the post of deputy speaker of the house become, somehow, a spring-board to a cabinet post. Three deputy speakers have used this spring-board to become ministers. Obviously, hon. members on the treasury benches are not exactly lacking in the ability to turn foolish somersaults.

Mr. Speaker, when opposition members state that there is confusion, uncertainty and depression, those on government benches tell us that we exaggerate and jeopardize this country's prestige.

Do you wish to have concrete proof that our hon. friends opposite are nervous and embarrassed?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dupuis: I can hear the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm laugh. I was waiting for his first guffaw to tell him something.

Mr. Speaker, if you look up yesterday's Hansard, you will see that speeches in this house were made by members from the province of Quebec, among others, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) spoke for all the time allotted to him, without being interrupted even once by the opposition, but things were different when opposition members rose to speak.

In fact, during the speech of the hon. member for Dollard, there were seven interruptions, including five on the part of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who apparently does not know how to behave in this house.

The hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) took the floor a little later and was interrupted 36 times during his speech, including 12 times by the ever-present member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, eight times by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) and seven times by the hon. member who, in a chance move, was appointed parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Pigeon: You set the example for us, what else can you expect?

Mr. Dupuis: Well, Mr. Speaker, here is another intervention by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. He does not like to be taught a lesson. When we talk about the last four years, he always shouts: "Tell us about the two flags. Tell us about the 22 years of Liberal administration."

Well, Mr. Speaker, once and for all, I shall tell him about the two flags and the 22 years of Liberal administration, and I hope he will understand.

An hon. Member: He cannot understand anything.

Mr. Dupuis: The Liberal party has in its ranks people who have the strength of their convictions and the courage of their ideas. There are people in the Liberal party who, when they speak of a flag, state exactly what stand they will take concerning a flag after they take over, soon.

Since the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wishes to speak about the flag, I shall tell him that the Leader of the Opposition has the courage to say that he will suggest for Canada an absolutely distinctive flag, but that we shall be able to use the other one as a symbol of our membership in the commonwealth, and I must draw also to the attention of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that our leader and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) have the courage to express their views, but the Prime Minister, the leader of the hon. member who repeatedly interrupted me, did not utter a single word during the discussion on a bill concerning the adoption of a flag to indicate what stand he would take concerning a distinctive flag. Or I should rather say, Mr. Speaker, that he once had the courage to do so—

Mr. Pigeon: Things have changed—

The Address—Mr. Dupuis

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to call the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to order.

Mr. Pigeon: Things have changed in the past 20 years, you know that.

Mr. Dupuis: The hon. member had better listen because he has a lot to learn from the Liberals.

Mr. Pigeon: Oh no, not much.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, has the man who is now Prime Minister of Canada ever voiced his opinion about a flag? Yes, twice. He did so lately, before the Ontario association of Conservative women in an attempt to appeal to racial prejudices on the flag project. I need not go back over this, for all the newspapers have talked about it.

And before that, the last time he had expressed his views on the project of a flag was in 1945. This is what I find in Hansard—

Mr. Pigeon: Twenty years ago.

Mr. Dupuis: —on page 2089—

Mr. Pigeon: Twenty years ago.

Mr. Dupuis: On page 2089 of Hansard for November 13, 1945.

Mr. Pigeon: Twenty years ago.

Mr. Dupuis: You go back 22 years ago, so we can go back 20 years. This is what the present Prime Minister said at that time:

> I cannot see eye-to-eye—and my sentiments so carry me that I must be restrained when I say this—with those who would deny the union jack a permanent and prominent place on the flag of this country; and the place of honour on any flag is the upper corner.

And the Prime Minister added:

> Some say, why not compromise? I will compromise on anything, but, speaking for myself, not to the extent of the removal of the union jack from our national flag.

Mr. Speaker, I need not discuss the ideas put forward by the Prime Minister in 1945, but I should like to know what he thinks of the national flag, in 1962.

While our leader has expressed his stand concerning the flag—

Mr. Pigeon: Two flags.

Mr. Dupuis: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm says "two flags". In the province of Quebec, under his friend, Mr. Duplessis, on particular commemoration days or great ceremonies, two flags were displayed: the lilied flag, unanimously adopted by the Quebec legislature, and the papal flag. The two flags used to float side by side.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Duplessis was then using two flags. Today, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, with his narrow-mindedness and his parliamentary pettiness, tries to ridicule a man who is worth a thousand times more than he is. Our leader—in case our friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm does not know it—is a member of the Liberal party. If we go back 22 years ago, as the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wanted to a moment ago, I say before the house and before the country that the Liberal party, the party which, during the 22 years mentioned by my friend, has given all the social security measures to Canada, while after four years, our Conservative friends feel happy to see the Conservative Prime Minister agree to add a total of $19 to old age pensions.

Mr. Pigeon: Six dollars.

Mr. Dupuis: I am proud to say that while the Conservatives gave $19, we gave $46 and we passed the legislation on old age pensions.

We have nothing to learn from those people concerning Canadian sovereignty. The Liberal party alone is the one which, in 22 years, has built this country's sovereignty, autonomy and greatness.

When I refer to those who have guided our country's destiny, of those who have represented Canadian politics, I think of the one who, today, is the Leader of the Opposition. He is a man we respect, because he is great, because he has brought Canada into notice throughout the world.

Mr. Pigeon: Two flags.

Mr. Dupuis: Is the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm completely mad? I have already asked him three times not to interrupt me. I am asking him a question, not asserting anything, but if he persists, that is what we will think.

Mr. Pigeon: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, in my opinion, is lacking in dignity in this house. He has just used a term which is surely not parliamentary. He might very well accuse his colleagues, he is just acting like a naughty child. He lacks education. I am not surprised to see him change ridings.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of privilege, the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has just said I am acting like a naughty child. Indeed, out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Actually, the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister refers to spewing and the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to naughtiness. But I am not calling him a naughty child because I use parliamentary expressions.

Yesterday, he interrupted the member for St. Denis 12 times during his speech. If we count the times he has interrupted me until now, I think he is about to beat the record of interruptions in this house.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Laurier, 32 times.

Mr. Dupuis: I should like to remind the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that in 22 years we introduced all the social security legislation, we passed all the legislation concerning the sovereignty of this country, we offered balanced budgets, and those were prosperous years for the people of our country. In the last four years, under a Conservative regime, we have known the greatest deficits and the most serious unemployment situation since confederation. We are now witnessing the most serious confusion since confederation.

When I think of the leaders who have presided over our country's destiny, I like to compare the Lauriers, Kings, St. Laurents, Pearsons and Guthries to the Tuppers, Brackens, Bordens, Bennetts, Manions, Meighens, Hansens, Drews and Diefenbakers.

Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid to tell my friends that when they are prepared to hold an election, we shall be ready to face them. We are ready to face those from the province of Quebec who are here so well represented by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, those who were promising that a Conservative government would give Canada an ambassador to the Vatican. Where is the ambassador to the Vatican?

Mr. Pigeon: Why don't you tell us something about the two flags?

Mr. Dupuis: Those who were promising the abolition of our contribution to the Colombo plan. What have they done about it? They have doubled its amount. Those who had promised to give Canada a distinctive national flag and who, now, are refusing to do so, a matter about which today their leader does not want to commit himself, but about which our own leader has made a formal promise in listing it, in the Liberal party platform.

Where are they today those who in 1958 promised us that "O Canada" would be adopted as our national anthem, that federal assistance to universities would be abolished, but who, instead, voted to increase such assistance when they had an opportunity to abolish it.

Where are those who promised us the deepening of the Richelieu to promote the economy in that area? During four years, they obstructed that project, while the hon. members for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin), for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and myself urged that a study of the deepening of the Richelieu be started as soon as possible in order to stimulate the economy of that area.

Mr. Speaker, are you aware that the Prime Minister has failed four times to keep his promise to visit the area? In fact, it is only after he was goaded and criticized, when he realized that his members would be defeated in our district if he did not agree to consider the deepening of the Richelieu river, that he decided to come back at the beginning of winter to stage a public show in the city of St. Jean.

Mr. Speaker, I will take a few seconds to tell you what happened. First of all, you may remember that I stated in the house that on September 21, 1959 the Prime Minister had promised to visit the Richelieu district but that he had just taken a short ferry tour in the vicinity of Sorel, after which he left in a convertible for the Gaspe peninsula.

Since then, he promised on three occasions that he would come to St. Jean. The last time he spoke about it, there was a lot of publicity; pamphlets were distributed from house to house, cars went through the streets with loudspeakers, pamphlets were handed out on the church steps, full pages of advertisement were printed in local newspapers and flash announcements were made on the radio.

The great man was supposed to come to St. Jean on December 12, 1961 to inform the local population of an important, a serious decision taken by his government. Well, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, we were awaiting for the fourth time that long promised visit by the Prime Minister, but he did not come. Yet, on that day, December 12, 1961, during the evening, some Conservatives had gathered at the Paul Beaulieu school, in St. Jean; it was only a coincidence.

And all that time, those Conservatives gathered together were waiting for that statesman who did not come. But the telephone rang. The one who acted as master of ceremonies, the hon. member for—I forget his name, he so seldom makes any contribution to our debates—oh yes, the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson), informed the gathering that unfortunately the Prime Minister had been held up in Ottawa, at the airport, because of bad weather.

You know, Mr. Speaker, ever since morning the weather had been bad. It was cold and it was raining.

Then, all the airports had advised their passengers that no airplane would take off that day. But the premier of Quebec, who had appointments in Montreal, seeing that the planes could not take off, took a car to get to Montreal at half past twelve, the same day, whereas the Prime Minister of Canada, who is not aware of what goes on at the transport department, waited until five, or five-thirty, to get to the airport in Ottawa and there, accompanied by two of his dear ministers from Quebec, he learned that the plane could not take off and that unfortunately he could not get to St. Jean. Can you picture that, Mr. Speaker, three toads caught in the ice, unable to take off.

During that time, the Conservatives were waiting at the Paul Beaulieu school, where the Prime Minister called them from Ottawa, to tell them this:

> Thanks to the numerous representations made by the Conservative members in favour of the Richelieu seaway project, the present government has decided to entrust an international joint commission with the task of studying the possibility of implementing that project.

Yet, when the Prime Minister said: "thanks to the representations of the Conservative members", he was not telling the truth and he knew it. Those who have intervened in this house for the deepening of the Richelieu are the hon. members for Richelieu-Vercheres, Laurier and myself. If you refer to the official reports, Mr. Speaker, you will find that 35 interventions in favour of the deepening of the Richelieu were made by the opposition members for the constituencies I have just mentioned, while on the other side of the house, we heard the famous speech—burial or cold shower speech that the transport minister made in Montreal on December 7, 1960, before the chambers of commerce, who were calling for the deepening of the Richelieu.

Mr. Speaker, I will give the second part of my speech when we come back this afternoon.

(Text):

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is such terrific interest in the United States astronaut who is now on his way back down to earth, could I ask for the unanimous consent of the house in requesting that all rules be suspended and the house recess for half an hour?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there is unanimous consent to the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver East the sitting may be suspended to resume at the call of the Chair. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then I do now leave the chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 2.40 p.m. the sitting of the house was suspended during pleasure.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 3 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, my first words will be words of appreciation to you, on behalf of this house, for having kindly adjourned proceedings for a few minutes, so that all hon. members gathered in the hall might watch the extraordinary feat just accomplished by that 40-year old hero of the U.S.A., Colonel John Glenn, Jr.

Colonel John Glenn, Jr., has just gained the right to the whole world's greatest admiration.

In every field the United States has great renown. This has now been confirmed in the scientific field. The United States could not lag behind. This scientific feat will considerably increase the confidence of the free world in our southern neighbours. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that their scientific achievement will serve peaceful aims, because we are well aware of the mentality of our neighbours, and we know that they will be able to improve that scientific development, for the sole welfare of all the peoples of the world and not for their destruction.

On behalf of all my colleagues and of all the members in this house, I tender to the President of the United States my most sincere congratulations. I can assure him that the name of the United States now shines brighter than ever on the international horizon.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, for once I agree with the hon. member who has just resumed his seat and I readily endorse his very eloquent remarks about the exploit achieved by Colonel John Glenn, Jr., and, through him, by the mighty American nation. That scientific achievement is sure to be epoch-making and I hope it will be a milestone on the road to world peace.

Mr. Speaker, the debate on the speech from the throne affords all parties in the house an opportunity, first to assess the government's record, second, to learn of the government's policy and of the legislation it proposes to put before the house, and finally—and this is just as important as the others—to allow the opposition or the parties of the opposition not only to criticize the government, but to state what policy they would follow if they were in power.

While in the course of my remarks, I shall do all I can to avoid touching upon points already so ably covered by my colleagues of the government and hon. members opposite, I shall try not to lose sight of this threefold objective.

As everyone knows, the riding of Bellechasse, which I represent in the house, is an exclusively rural constituency which is dependant on three main sources of income: dairy products, hog breeding and wood lots.

The Agricultural Stabilization Act, passed by this government, has been of great benefit to the Bellechasse constituency, as it has to all of eastern Canada. Formerly, under the previous regime, unstable prices had been a source of worry and disappointment. At times prices were quite high, at other times they were too low and, naturally, this had a substantial bearing on the farmer's income.

Because of these excessive fluctuations farmers could not plan their crops on the basis of the annual yield they and their families could rely on. This act was meant to put a stop to those price fluctuations and to ensure that the annual income would be more stable and predictable.

As everybody knows, its purpose was to provide, in the case of nine staple products, a price support of not less than 80 per cent of the average for the ten previous years. Among the nine staples covered by this act, are beef cattle, hogs, eggs, cheese and butter.

The act also provides for an optional support price on many other products such as processed milk.

The act was applied through various methods: direct purchases, deficiency payments, fixed payments to the producer and fixed prices guaranteed in advance for a year.

In view of the agricultural situation in eastern Canada, and especially in the constituency of Bellechasse, I shall dwell on only a few of the products, those of greatest importance to the farmers in my area.

For instance, the price of butter, which had been 56 cents a pound under the previous regime, was fixed at 64 cents.

Producers of whole milk, delivered for butter and cheese production, get a 25 cent subsidy on each hundred pounds, which helps farmers considerably. Incidentally I may say that for the year 1959-60, $10,951,000 have thus been paid out, including $4,731,000 in the province of Quebec. Besides, in the year 1960-61, the sum paid by the government reached $10,394,000, out of which $4,545,000 were paid in the province of Quebec.

As regards the portion received by the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces, under that act and various others passed by this government, if I had the time, I could give figures which might well change the views that my hon. friend from Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was expressing the other day when commenting on the estimate he personally approved, as we did, in favour of western farmers, following the drought which prevailed in that area.

The other day, I attended the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and I realized that there are rather acute problems, with which the government, indeed, intends to deal as soon as possible.

There is, for instance, the butter surplus, stocks of which, if I am not mistaken, amount to about 200 million pounds.

What is the cause of this overproduction? It must be noted, first of all, that in the province of Quebec, the embargo which had been placed on margarine has been lifted, with the result that consumption on the Quebec domestic market has fallen off, while the consumption of margarine has gone up. That decrease in domestic consumption extends all over Canada. And here, I would point out that it is time doctors agreed with one another in their views.

There is at the present time a pernicious propaganda being conducted, which in my opinion is unfair to dairy products. According to that propaganda, it is increasingly held that dairy products absorbed in some quantity by the consumer are liable to induce certain disabilities, certain difficulties capable of endangering his health. Quite fortunately, another school of thought in the medical profession has made itself heard and is attempting to put a stop to those so-called theories which have been advanced only in recent years.

How can we solve that overproduction problem? Should we discourage the producer? I do not believe so, and here are the reasons why I am led to suspect the kind of propaganda that is being carried on throughout the country.

I repeat that the government, at the suggestion of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, is seeking solutions which should soon be defined and implemented.

The idea of a food bank expressed by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) is making some headway. The United Nations Organization is considering such a thing. I am convinced that the establishment of such a food bank would facilitate the disposal of certain goods presently in storage.

In Switzerland, the same problem exists. And I should like here to quote the opinion expressed by Messrs. Shefrin and Manzies of the federal Department of Agriculture.

> It may be significant in this regard that a country like Switzerland should have found more appropriate to consider giving dairy products each year to underfed countries rather than proceeding to a difficult and costly readjustment of its agricultural industry through a decrease or increase in production.

Besides, those learned experts foresee at the same time that the total consumption of foodstuffs will increase by 70 per cent and that the sale of such goods will double in Canada during the next 20 years. A provident government should not be afraid of temporary difficulties when the future looks so brilliant.

Another problem which also interests eastern Canada, particularly the constituency of Bellechasse, is the hog breeding industry. Farmers are happy about the stabilization act under which the price of hogs was recently fixed at $23.65 per hundredweight up to a maximum of 100 head and under which a three dollar premium was added last year for class A. I wish to draw your attention to the fact that the average market price of hogs last year reached $27.50 per hundredweight.

An hon. Member: Why was it not stabilized at $23?

Mr. Dorion: Since my time is very limited, if the hon. member agrees, I shall answer his question at the end of my remarks.

Through that policy, it has been possible to reduce hog production without affecting 90 per cent of Canadian breeders. It prevented the accumulation of an ever increasing hog surplus. It clearly cuts the ground from under the feet of certain profiteers who were sabotaging the financial assistance legislation to farmers.

It has made possible the improvement of hog production to the extent that we are able to maintain our sales on the American market, even though the embargo was lifted last year and Canadian hogs sell at a higher price than American hogs. To show the value of this legislation, may I quote from a brief submitted to the cabinet on February 29, 1960, by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

> Our last annual and general meeting has again reaffirmed the general principles behind our price support policy. This policy takes into account the following principles: generally speaking, it is desirable to support the prices at the level of the market through direct purchase by the State; the support prices must not create cumbersome surpluses; confused situations must be avoided in agriculture, and we recognize the deficiency payments method which should be applied when the producers believe that this formula, or a combination of direct purchase and deficiency payments, is the best approach.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I shall turn, as I always do, to the needs of the county which I represent in this house. There is a third point, which bears on the rehabilitation and development of rural areas and it is, I believe, another step towards the economic restoration of our Quebec farmers.

The percentage of farms having an annual production of less than $1,200 amounts to 28 per cent in the whole country. In Bellechasse, two thirds of the farms draw most of their income from the forest.

This legislation will surely help to improve the situation and brighten living conditions on our farms. In this legislation, I should like to quote the opinion of an expert, who was deputy minister of agriculture in Quebec and who is still employed by the provincial government, Mr. Albert Rioux. This is what he said as reported by La voix nationale in August 1961:

> It is with a view to boosting the economy of the underdeveloped rural areas that the federal parliament has just passed a legislation on rural development. This legislation provides for all projects capable of raising the standard of living of farmers of a given area. It even provides for the industrial, touristic and educational developments which stimulate agricultural production. All sectors of the economy depend on one another, and agriculture benefits from all other economical activities. This legislation calls for the co-operation of provincial and local authorities. On this basis, it can be the starting point of an era of prosperity for the areas which have not yet benefited from industrial development.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier today, one of the aims of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne is to allow the opposition not only to criticize—indeed I heard as recently as yesterday the hon. member for Laurier say on the air that the responsibility of the opposition did not only consist in negative criticism, but in the working out of its own policy, so that the public might have an idea of the risk it is running if it ever was inclined to change its government. Now, on this point, I heard some opposition speeches. More particularly, I listened to the Leader of the Opposition, and read his speeches which I had not heard. I admit that I faced there a most troubling lack of material, which proves a real lack of political thinking in the ranks of the opposition.

If that gap is to be filled, we should, so to speak, go back to the various conventions held by our Liberal friends where they were so lavish in their promises and in all sorts of very contradictory talk.

For instance, in a matter in which I am deeply interested, as, indeed is the government, free education was promised at all levels. Ten thousand university scholarships of a $1,000 each a year were offered for a four year period, according to need and merit.

In a party resolution, I read this:

The provinces have the responsibility to see to it that teaching in their primary schools is improved so as to fill the children's needs.

Therefore, from now on, under the rule of the gentlemen opposite, primary teaching would be taken out of their jurisdiction. Is it possible to carry further the non-observance of and disrespect for, the constitution of 1867, which, on that vital point, was precisely enacted to safeguard the co-existence of both the cultures of the two basic groups in our national community?

And I also read this:

Vocational courses and higher education in universities—

—and it is well known, in this respect, that the concept of a university varies according to the province, whether we think of Quebec or of any other province, because cultural methods differ.

Vocational courses and higher education in our universities cannot be the sole responsibility of the provinces... The federal government must share with the provinces the cost of higher education.

In other words, a partial but very significant sharing of the central authority with the provinces in educational matters, and, as I said before, in spite of the very clear and precise words of the 1867 act.

Indeed, to make us fully realize the effects of such a policy, may I quote what the hon. Mr. Garson said in this House of Commons on January 28, 1957. As a matter of fact, after having read an excerpt of the Rowell-Sirois report, saying that the provinces must control the education of our young people while they are at school, he made the following comment:

I would point out that if federal subsidies were large enough to be of any value to the provincial governments who would receive them, the federal treasury could not justify the distribution of such large sums of money to the provincial governments without assuming some responsibility as to the way they would be spent.

Could it ever be stated more clearly that this would mean the intrusion of the central government in the exercise of powers which are the exclusive and express responsibility of the provinces?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Pigeon: No, no, sit down.

Mr. Dorion: I regret, but as my time is very short, I cannot do it now. When I finish my remarks, I will gladly answer your questions.

Mr. Chevrier: My question only concerns—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dorion: Have no fear, it is not unwillingness on my part, but I am afraid that what I have to say might exceed my time limit.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I say that Quebec, in particular, cannot accept this suggestion. On this point, I am content to use as my sole argument the conversation of the Hon. Mr. Lesage himself who, in this regard, follows the well-established tradition in the province of Quebec.

Does this mean that one of the principles behind confederation is transgressed when these provincial powers are touched? In this respect, may I quote the view expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in this house on July 18, 1959:

The province of Quebec has a point of view in regard to education which I think all hon. members of this committee have a duty to recognize.

It is patent that a different view altogether is taken of this subject in the province of Quebec from the view that is taken in the other provinces of Canada. Those who know the history of the province of Quebec understand the point of view of that province today and will know that Quebec regards this exclusive jurisdiction over education as something fundamental to the ethnic survival of that province and its people. This has been the view of the people of Quebec down through the years, that its jurisdiction over education is the sheet anchor of the survival of the culture, the language and the institutions of the province.

The minister then pledged solemnly to make all the necessary efforts in order to solve this difficulty arising from federal grants to universities.

Everybody is aware that thanks to the efforts which were made by the people of the province of Quebec, thanks to the goodwill and comprehension shown by our fellow-citizens of the other provinces, a formula has been worked out which safeguards the essential rights of the province of Quebec and of all the provinces in the field of education.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to remind the house in this respect that the speech from the throne precisely contains the promise that this alternate formula, which has proved completely satisfactory to the province of Quebec, will be added in due time.

You will be asked to increase the federal grants to universities and make suitable provision in those cases where alternative arrangements are made for supplementary provincial grants in lieu of federal grants.

Moreover, it is known that the grants have been raised to $2.00 per capita for each province. Thus, the government of the province of Quebec will receive the additional sum of $2,500,000, while the exercise of its exclusive rights in the field of education will remain untouched and this excellent measure, contained in the pact of 1867, protected.

This is what prompted La Presse—obviously, all the credit had to be given to Mr. Lesage, as if we had nothing to do with this decision—to make the following comment in its January 27, 1962, issue:

From an exchange of correspondence—

The exchange is between the premier of Quebec and the Prime Minister of Canada.

—Quebec won its point inasmuch as at the request of Mr. Lesage, Ottawa agrees to an alternative solution in order not to force down the throat of the province federal grants which are unacceptable in the exclusively provincial field of education.

In other words, we who were particularly interested—I am speaking of interest in the noblest sense of the word—in seeing that that clause of the Union Act of 1867 remained intact had to wait for a Conservative government, for the present Prime Minister—who was smeared in the province of Quebec as anti-French Canadian—and his government to see the return of that right of which those provinces that wish to do so may well avail themselves.

Moreover, the party which held power for 22 years, just found out that Canada was a bi-ethnic and bi-cultural country and that we should preach and spread bilingualism at the federal administration level throughout the country. In this regard, we inherited a very heavy legacy, a legacy of stubborn silence and apathy if not of denial every time Ottawa was asked to give a practical illustration of the bilingual aspect of our country. We have had that practical illustration in the last four or five years, since a Conservative government took over. I shall give but a brief list because I do not want to be repetitious:

Introduction of simultaneous translation in the Senate and in the House of Commons; bilingual stationery and forms in several departments. And here I would urge the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) to pay a visit to the printing bureau which comes under my department; he will see what goes on today and will be able to compare with what was going on under the Liberal administration.

Geographic maps and the Canada Atlas are now published in both languages. The Canada Year Book and that other important publication entitled Canada 1961 were published for the first time last year simultaneously in both languages.

Signs on public buildings have become bilingual following a simple instruction by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker).

Finally, the printing of bilingual cheques.

In this regard, it was said: too little and too late. Not at all. Neither too little nor too late.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if anything may have an educational value, it is precisely that small piece of paper which from now on will indicate everywhere from Vancouver to Newfoundland, that in this country, there are two distinctive groups, two basic groups which form the Canadian community and which have the same rights and the same privileges and which must enjoy the same treatment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister allow me a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since the minister's time has expired, the unanimous consent of the house would be required before a question can be put to him.

Mr. Dorion: I shall make a deal with the hon. member opposite. If he allows me to continue, I shall answer his questions with pleasure.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of this house, I should like to put a question.

Mr. Dorion: I thank the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: I said that with the unanimous consent of the house, I should like to put a question.

Mr. Dorion: I first request the unanimous consent. If the hon. member for Laurier wishes to give that consent on behalf of his colleagues, I shall continue and then he may put his questions. It will be an exchange of courtesies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the absence of unanimous consent, the minister may not continue and questions cannot be put to him.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, before getting on with the remarks and congratulations I have to offer, I wish to take exception to a statement made by the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion), in which he said that the Liberal members from the province of Quebec had charged the present Prime Minister with being anti-French Canadian. Well, I want to remind the Secretary of State that the first people who charged the present Prime Minister with being anti-French Canadian were the delegates, the Conservative leaders of the province of Quebec at the convention held in this city of Ottawa in December 1956.

There is no doubt because they are now ashamed of their gestures, words and actions, at the time, that the Secretary of State—like many others—is trying to accuse the Quebec Liberals of exploiting the problems of language and race.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this house for 22 years, and I have gone through six elections in the province of Quebec, and I challenge the Secretary of State to prove to me, or to find a single case in which I could have accused the present Prime Minister of being anti-French Canadian or of being a Protestant or a freemason. I challenge him to claim the contrary.

Mr. Dorion: It is not to the member for Levis that I have attributed those words; he knows very well to whom they are addressed.

Mr. Bourget: Those are gratuitous words, like so many other things you do which are gratuitous.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to kindly address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Bourget: Very well, Mr. Speaker. I will close my remarks about the matter, because I would not like—

Mr. Pigeon: You are putting your foot in it.

Mr. Bourget: —to deal with questions of prejudice. On the government side, and especially the members from Quebec have been trying for some time to have us believe that the Liberal members are stirring up racial prejudice.

Mr. Pigeon: That is true.

Mr. Bourget: Well, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, because I know that on the government side, and particularly among Conservative members from the province of Quebec, they do not want to admit they were the first in this country to smear their own leader. And you cannot deny that; we have seen it on television and in newspapers, in December 1956. The member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) was probably present at the convention, when it was said that the present Prime Minister had disowned the French Canadians, because he had not accepted that a French Canadian support his nomination.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Mackenzie King did the same thing.

Mr. Dupuis: We did not say that.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate you, first of all, on your appointment as Deputy Speaker of this house and to wish you, at the same time, much success in your new functions. I should like also, according to established practice, to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address.

I should like also to congratulate and extend my best wishes to all those who, on the government side, have obtained either a promotion or an extension of their term of office. I hope they will manage to fulfil their task with great wisdom, because they must realize now that their stay in their new posts will be of short duration.

As far as the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) is concerned—I regret he is not here at this time, I understand it is not his day of guard duty—I congratulate him in particular, but I take the liberty of giving him one piece of advice, that is, not to try to imitate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who is known for his exaggeration.

I had the opportunity, very recently, to read in a newspaper a report of an interview that the minister had given, and during which he stated that the Conservative party could have elected, at the next federal election, more members than the 50 they now have in Ottawa. He claimed that the Liberal party myth had been broken in 1958.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that at the time, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was not speaking in earnest but in jest, because he must realize now that the present Conservative bloc will completely disappear after the next election and that the accident which occurred in 1958 will not happen again.

I should like now to mention the masterful speech delivered by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in this house on January 22 last, in which he showed, with supporting evidence, that the Conservative policy is a failure.

That speech caused the Prime Minister to lose his temper to such an extent that he forgot, at the outset of his remarks, to follow the long established tradition in this house, that is to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address.

Like many others, I would have understood such a reaction if he had had an important and urgent statement to make, but far from it, all he did was to quote some selected extracts from a newspaper item.

It would be proper to point out that this article which, according to the Prime Minister, criticized the previous Liberal administration, stated also, as reported in an editorial published in the Ottawa Citizen of January 23, 1962, and entitled:

(Text):

The Prime Minister did not say that the same article had been even more critical of his regime and had included this sentence: "Instead of improving with the change of government, things got worse".

(Translation):

This oversight of the Prime Minister is, in my opinion, truly inexcusable; it clearly shows that our leader landed heavy blows from which the Prime Minister has not yet recovered.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that this is the last session of this parliament and that a general election will soon take place.

Consequently, it came to my mind that it would be appropriate to review the Conservative government's administration during the last four years.

I will certainly not have enough time to examine all they did and all they failed to do during that period of time. That is why I shall limit myself to the three points which, I feel, are of major importance for the economy of our country.

First, I should like to speak of employment or perhaps I should say unemployment because unemployment has been prevailing during those four years of Conservative administration.

It is hard to forget the harsh words the members of the present government had for the former Liberal administration when they were sitting on this side of the house. At the time, they were claiming that there were too many unemployed in Canada.

We have not forgotten either the Prime Minister's vision of a Canada where there would be no unemployment under a Conservative government. His famous statement that as long as he would be Prime Minister, no one would suffer from unemployment in Canada, cannot be forgotten nor will it be forgotten especially during the next election campaign. According to him, the Conservatives had found the solution to the problem.

That was the refrain we heard during the 1957 and 1958 election campaigns. They painted a rosy vision for the benefit of the Canadian people but, after four years of Conservative regime, the public realizes that the colour of the vision has turned to a dark blue. Since the early thirties, never has unemployment been so serious in Canada.

To prove my point, I merely have to refer to statistics compiled by the d.b.s. and published by the Bank of Canada in December 1961.

If we compare the last four years of Liberal administration, that is from 1953 to 1956 inclusively, with the last four years of the present Conservative administration, or from 1958 to 1961, we see that the number of unemployed under the present government has been twice as high as under the Liberal government.

In fact, according to these figures, the number of unemployed under the Liberal administration was as follows:

Liberal Administration

Year	Unemployed	Percentage of labour force
1953	162,000	3
1954	250,000	4.6
1955	256,000	4.4
1956	177,000	3.4

Well, that was the situation under the Liberal administration.

Let us see now what happened since the Conservatives came into power, that is since 1958:

(Text):

An hon. Member: What month?

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Number of unemployed—

(Text):

An hon. Member: What month?

Mr. Bourget: That is the average for the year. If the hon. member wants to have this information I can pass him the book.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Tell us about Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Pigeon: The thunder has wrought havoc in Quebec.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, I would have an answer to those interruptions, but I prefer to control myself.

Here are the figures relating to unemployment under the Conservative administration:

Conservative Administration

Year	Unemployed	Percentage of labour force
1958	432,000	7.1
1961	469,000	7.2

If you figure out the average for the last four years of each administration, you note that under the Liberals, from 1953 to 1956, the average was only 3.8 per cent, while it has gone up to 6.8 per cent under the Conservatives.

Mr. Tremblay: That is a misinterpretation of statistics.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, if this is misinterpreting statistics, then I should tell the hon. member that these are statistics published by the Bank of Canada in December 1961.

Mr. Tremblay: Your interpretation cannot be accurate.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, if I have misinterpreted these statistics, then the hon. member for Roberval, who does not know whether he is in Ottawa or elsewhere—for even we do not know where he stands at the moment—should complain to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), who is responsible for the Bank of Canada.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, having been asked by government members to speak about Mr. Lesage, I will do so.

When your friends were in power in Quebec, what did you do about unemployment?

Mr. Valade: There was no unemployment.

Mr. Bourget: You did not even see fit to take part in the winter works program, you did nothing and you should be ashamed to claim now that Mr. Lesage is doing nothing, when Quebec is the province which is contributing the most, in the whole country, that is, 40 per cent. That you cannot deny.

An hon. Member: There was no unemployment at that time.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could have a little bit of order in this house. I have no objection to answering questions from those who are interrupting me, because their questions are getting sillier all the time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It would be fitting that those who are interrupting from their seats stop doing so. The debate could then take place in an orderly fashion.

Mr. Chevrier: Especially the interruption coming from behind the curtains.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, that attitude of the government members from Quebec reminds me of the fact they always brag more in the house, where they are 208 strong, than in the province, when they try to explain the failure of their administration.

The supporters of the government can well claim that at the present time there are more people at work than there were during the previous years, and the contrary would be abnormal for an intelligent man, because the population increases and it is only normal that there should be more people at work.

However, what they cannot deny, is that the number of unemployed under the Conservative administration is almost double what it was under the Liberal government and nobody—I repeat nobody—can deny it.

Another fact that bears out my statement is that the unemployment insurance fund, in which there were more than $900 million when we went out of office, in 1957, is now on the verge of bankruptcy.

In fact, $25 millions are needed to replenish it. Is that not conclusive proof that the present government has failed with regard to the employment problem?

What is more unfortunate is that during the first three years of the present Conservative administration, in spite of repeated requests from the opposition, labour unions, various public bodies who begged it to take the measures called for under the circumstances, the government kept on denying that the situation was abnormal. It was satisfied stupidly to contend that the situation was only transitory and that it would disappear with the snow.

Mr. Speaker, the situation will undoubtedly right itself, not with the disappearance of the snow, but rather with the disappearance of the Conservative government which has now been in power for four years.

I am sure nobody will dispute the fact that it is very difficult to find a way to solve a problem when one denies that it exists. It will have to be admitted—and saying this I am replying in part to the arguments of the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion)—that the Liberal opposition was not content with criticizing, but in many instances offered suggestions which would surely have improved the situation had they been implemented.

The only action of the government, apart from housing construction, was to launch a winter works program under which it pays 50 percent of the labour costs. And we know that in the end that 50 percent represents a mere 15 percent of the total costs of the works, and that the major portion of the costs, the largest financial burden falls on the municipalities. It has also been realized that many municipalities do not have the necessary financial means to undertake the works without borrowing at a very high rate of interest.

It is, therefore, very easy to draw the conclusion that as far as employment is concerned, the Conservative administration failed and forgot the fine promises they made to the Canadian people in the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the second matter I would like to raise deals with the tax agreements between the federal and provincial governments. You will see, Mr. Speaker, that in that realm the results have not been any better than in the case of unemployment.

During the two election campaigns of 1957 and 1958, the supporters of the Conservative government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, launched an all-out attack against the St. Laurent administration, accusing it of pressuring the provinces and municipalities, and adding that everything had to be done over again in that field.

I believe it would be useless to recall the words of the Prime Minister and his candidates during both those campaigns, they are well known. They repeated over and over again that the government was rich, but that the provinces and municipalities were poor and could not meet their constitutional obligations.

The Prime Minister and his party had committed themselves to give provincial governments as well as municipalities the revenues they would need in order to perform their important duties and thus help them to develop their natural resources.

During the various federal-provincial conferences that have taken place since June 1957, the provincial premiers have reminded the head of the government of his promises, but without much success.

The concessions made were really inadequate and that is the reason why most provincial premiers showed their dissatisfaction of the offers made to them during the last conference in February 1961.

The present government seems to boast of having given back the provinces their taxation rights. It should know, however, that the provinces already have had those rights for a long time and that Quebec for one has made use of them for many years. What the government forgot, however, was to give them an adequate part of federal revenues, that would have permitted them to fulfil their obligations which become heavier and more urgent.

As a matter of fact, if we take, for instance, the province of Quebec, we realize that with the new formula, it will receive, during the five years covered by the agreement, only $2.5 million more.

According to the new formula, a federal abatement of 16 per cent on individual income tax is granted, and it will increase by 1 per cent per year to reach the maximum of 20 per cent at the end of 1967. On the other hand, the equalization payments being set up on a new basis, that is on the national average rather than on the average of the two richest provinces, will decrease considerably. What is given on the one hand by extending the taxation field on individual income, is taken back on the other by decreasing the equalization. As the premier of Quebec said following the conference held last February:

It would seem that the government in Ottawa has manoeuvred in such a way as to block the economic development of the province of Quebec.

Since the 1 per cent yield on personal income tax gives the province of Ontario about $9 million a year, it follows that in the next five years that province will collect $180 million more than if the present arrangements had been maintained.

Of course, we do not object to the province of Ontario getting an amount of $180 million. On the contrary, we are glad of it, but Mr. Frost must have been very disappointed, because relying on the Prime Minister's promise, he expected to get $100 million more every year, not in five years. What we find unfair, however, is that Ontario will be getting $180 million more over the next five years and that the province of Quebec will hardly be getting anything.

The situation would be very different under a Liberal administration, because we would restore equalization on the basis of the richest province, with the result that the province of Ontario would lose absolutely nothing and that the province of Quebec would be getting about $150 million more.

To the regime of inequality and fiscal unfairness the present government has established, we will substitute a regime of equity which will enable not only one province but all the Canadian provinces to carry out their constitutional responsibilities.

As for financial assistance to municipalities, we can say without hesitation that the government's record in that respect is no brighter than in the field of fiscal agreements with the provinces. We could even add that the municipalities have been entirely forgotten. We might state that they were asked to shoulder a heavy financial burden when they were called upon to pay 70 per cent and even more of the cost of the winter works program to alleviate unemployment.

In this respect as under the previous topic, it is fair to draw the conclusion that the Conservative government has failed to carry out its promises.

Now, I should like to say a few words about the financial situation in this country.

At a press conference he gave in Saskatoon on May 27, 1957, the Prime Minister stated that he could carry out his program, reduce unnecessary taxes and have a balanced budget. On that point, as on many others, the Canadian people have been deeply disappointed, because far from being reduced, taxes have gone up. Moreover, the government has shown a deficit every year and the total of those deficits, since 1957, comes up to more than $2 billion. Now, if you add the $900 million that came out of the unemployment insurance fund, you get a total of $3 billion.

Off-hand, one could think that such tremendous deficits were brought about by tax reductions but, as I said a while ago, taxes have gone up.

It is true that in December 1957, taxes had been reduced by approximately $204 million and by $35 million in the baby budget of December 1960, but those reductions are much less than the $352 million tax increase announced in the budget of April 1959.

To that increase of $352 million must be added an amount of $75 million representing the increase in the employees' contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. It can thus readily be seen that there has been no tax reduction but indeed an increase of $187 million.

Owing to that succession of enormous deficits, the per capita debt which was $670 at March 31, 1957, was up to $688 at March 31, 1961.

It would be in order to point out again the monumental blunder of this government when, in the fall of 1958, it made its famous conversion loan of $5,600 million. Some financial moguls were able to benefit by this loan, but many small investors lost from ten to fifteen dollars on each $100 bond they had to sell before maturity.

Furthermore, as I have already pointed out, that loan caused a very high increase in interest rates. Needless to say that the loan had disastrous consequences on the budgets of our municipalities and school boards.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

(Text):

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, if I failed to follow the remarks of the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) I hope he will not think I was not interested in the sincere and vigorous presentation that he made on this as on other occasions. It is not my desire either to increase repetition but I do wish to congratulate you, sir, on your elevation to the office of Deputy Speaker and I want to compliment you on the dignity and efficiency that you have already shown in the chair. I also wish to congratulate the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. They are a further indication of the capable young men who are in parliament and I think the present government is very fortunate indeed in having among its supporters more young men with more ability and natural talent than I have seen in any group or party since I entered parliament. This is not a reflection on the splendid young members of other parties. One of the real differences, of course, is that there are more of them in our party.

Recently I have been described as one of the old guard, and I did not resent this. In fact, I am somewhat flattered because from my experience I realize that any government is better to have an old guard than to trust to the complacencies of those who seem to be off guard or the wilder illusions of those who seem to have no guard at all. I realize that many changes have taken place. The years that I have been in this house have been filled with change and challenge. In fact, I do not believe there has been any other period in the history of human affairs that has been more interesting, more exciting and more challenging. Since we began our sitting this morning, Mr. Speaker, the astronaut, Colonel Glenn, in whose safety we were all interested with the result that the house uniquely adjourned for a few minutes until he had landed safely, has been around the world three times.

Having been so long and so closely identified with the affairs that concern the lives of our people, one could not help growing and maturing a little in these swiftly changing times. I believe we are facing very difficult times and, as I have said, they are challenging. I feel that I have more regard for those who sit to your left, Mr. Speaker, than do many others in the house because there are few in this parliament who sat to the left of the Speaker longer than I did. I have a keen regard for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). He is an exceedingly fine gentleman whom I have known for many years and I have a high personal regard for him, which increases my sympathy for him in view of the dismal uncertainties that he must see in his future.

I also have a keen regard for the few who sit to your immediate left, Mr. Speaker, in the left hand corner of the house. I am aspecially sympathetic to them today because yesterday I believe they lost their capable leader, the colourful and energetic member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). In my view he has made a very important decision. I know he will be missed very much by the small group he was leading on the other side of the house and I admire the British bulldog courage of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) in endeavouring to pick up and carry on the difficult task from where the hon. member for Assiniboia left off.

I am not surprised that the hon. member for Assiniboia sought this spectacular divorce in such a hurry but I am somewhat alarmed that he has chosen to marry the old, tired Liberal party. In fact, had he consulted me, which he did not, I could have introduced him to a much more attractive political lady. I realize, however, that all's well that ends well so far as he is concerned.

I must say, however, that there are much colder realities than these passing phases in political parties. In my opinion we are facing a very difficult period and I feel that the problems we have before us today are problems that to no small extent were created by the complacencies of the party that carried on the government in the 25 years prior to 1957. I know there would be a lot of criticism of any government, for uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. It is obvious to me that the complacency that prompted the former government to depend so much on the sale of raw products and pay so little attention to the promotion of secondary industry has cost our Canadian economy a very high price. The construction of sprawling factories and fancy bungalows seems to have prompted us to feel that no one else has done as well as we have. This is not true. In the last 25 years following the great war many of the leading industrial countries have had twice the industrial expansion that Canada has had.

It is true that we have sold our raw resources, the products with the least labour content in them. We took the money and we thought we were doing very well. There is always great national pride in any country. This careless trend, Mr. Speaker, has certainly been brought about by the extraordinary resources we had available for the countries of the world during the war and post-war periods. I know that this trend cannot be changed overnight. This situation did not develop during an election campaign. It is not going to be settled in any one term of office. It developed over several terms of office, but we have already conspicuous signs of improvement because we have the first favourable commodity trade balance that we have had in the last nine years. This is in bold contrast to the gigantic adverse balances we have had over many years, sometimes approaching a billion dollars. These unfavourable balances have contributed greatly to the international deficit position in which we are today, where we have fixed charges approaching a billion and a half dollars.

This serious situation can be improved, but when it was developing the former government had no positive trade policy. We drifted aimlessly, depending upon world capacity to buy us out of our future economic dangers. Instead of encouraging our secondary industries to produce more of our own requirements, we produced less. Between 1947 and 1957, our imports increased from 67 per cent, in relation to manufactured goods, to 78 per cent of our requirements. No other country in the world was buying so many of its manufactured requirements from outside the country. During the ten year period, we have seen one of the greatest industrial revolutions of all times. While the United Kingdom, Japan, West Germany and other countries, increased their industrial expansion at a much greater rate than we did—in fact, Japan increased it during those years almost three times as fast as Canada—our promising manufacturing industries and home markets were forgotten. While other important countries were encouraging industrial development by tax reliefs, accelerated depreciation, special allowances for research, bonuses, special freight rates, credit and guaranteed payments for exports, our secondary industries were left to grow up like Topsy. There was practically nothing done. As a result we bought in 1957 ten times more foreign manufactured goods per capita than any other country in the world. These are the facts that are disturbing, especially in a young country in view of the other problems that are associated with them.

In your native province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, you have seen industrial development spread to western Canada. Industry is playing a much more important part than it ever has in the history of this dominion. However, we have lagged far behind, and as an example I cite our great textile plants. During the last ten years of the former administration, in this cold country where we use so many textiles, 80 plants closed down and 22,000 people lost their jobs. In so far as heavy industries, chemicals and electrical appliances are concerned, 50 per cent more of our requirements were imported during that period. This was the result of other countries encouraging their secondary industries which were able to export their surpluses. They were alive and alert to a situation.

During those golden years we smugly boasted of the degree of progress we had achieved, but we were really only receiving the fringe benefits of the industrial revolution occurring in many other countries during that period. We have had varying degrees of chronic unemployment and a growing need for social welfare benefits as well as the costly subsidization of agriculture. I know that it may be difficult for some of us to see any relationship between these dangerous trends. However, when you stop to think of the billions of dollars that these trends have cost us, I say to those who still cling to the idea that we must encourage the export of our raw products instead of secondary industries, that they should stop and take stock before it is too late. The continuation of such a trend has curtailed opportunities for our people as well as development of the home market for our increasing agricultural production. We must never forget that no country in the world's history has become great without a vigorous industrial growth. Without this we cannot maintain the necessary educational needs of our time, the employment of an increasing population and the obligations involved by the consequent need of social welfare.

Despite our keen national pride, Canada has not had the industrial advancement anticipated by our pioneer statesmen. When the late Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir John A. Macdonald forecast a country with twice our present population before this time, they did not expect us to follow the lopsided development we have pursued, depending so much on the forest, the sea and the mine. To depend on these primary industries for adequate employment is to stand against the developing process of innovation.

It is not good enough to try to apologize in a general way or to say that the difficulty of unemployment that has been chronic in varying degrees in Canada for the last number of years is due to automation. I ask those who cling to this doubtful excuse to review conditions in the heavily populated countries that have taken fuller advantage of the latest industrial revolution following the recent war. These countries have led the world in automation, and yet they have no unemployment. Many of them, in fact, are short of labour. Sweden, Japan and West Germany, countries that are leading in industrial expansion, countries that are leading in automation, are today short of labour. Automation does eliminate some old jobs but it certainly produces many new ones.

I am glad to observe that the present government has shown an industrial concept which was lacking in the former government. I want especially to compliment our capable Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) upon his efforts to assist a much needed industrial expansion. It is most unfortunate that his efforts to encourage miscellaneous manufacturing industries by broadening the application of the regulation to determine goods of a class or kind made in Canada for customs purposes was thrown out by those in the other place. This was a serious setback to the economic program of the present government. However, the conversion that he accomplished—against terrific objection—of the Canadian dollar from a premium dollar to a discount dollar has done more to develop our favourable commodity trade balance and encourage industrial expansion than any single government measure in the last 25 years.

May I also compliment the energetic Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) whose untiring enterprise has given new life to our exporting industries. There has been a tremendous revival in industrial interest, stimulated by the present government all along the line. Trade missions and trade fair programs have been expanding. Export credit facilities have been provided and many advances have been made by our trade commissioners in search of trade.

The funds and the function of the industrial development bank have been extended and loans to small businesses have been made available in greater volume. The establishment of the national productivity council, the national design council and the domestic consumers service all indicate clearly that this government has a new and modern industrial concept. As the GATT agreements are dying a natural death in the face of the new common market challenge, it is most appropriate and important that our government has taken such steps in the interval to put our economic house in order. It is also in keeping with the traditional policies of the Conservative party that these economic crises should be met as they arise.

Had it not been for the sound fiscal policies of the Conservative party under the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald—and this is an historic fact, Mr. Speaker—had it not been for the sound fiscal policies that gave birth to the industrial life of this country, Canada would have long since been annexed to the United States. She could not have stood alone, and so I warn our people that a revival of industrial expansion was never more needed than at the present time. Indeed, one can remember that the leading Liberal in Macdonald's time opposed that policy and ran one election on a platform of commercial union with the United States. I think they have changed a little bit since then.

Canada also faced one of the most critical economic challenges of our history in 1930, and it was the government of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett that secured the British preferences for Canada in 1932. In view of the great depression of those years the benefits of the imperial trade agreements were more or less overshadowed. They were discounted, they were lost sight of, but today they stand out conspicuously in history as one of the greatest achievements in all the long term of our relationships with Britain. That I believe is admitted now, but there are those of us who can remember that the colleagues of members on the opposition side opposed them. I was a member of the house at that time and I can well remember when every Liberal opposed them, except the former minister of agriculture, the late Mr. Motherwell.

However, since that time the Liberal party used those preferences for bargaining purposes, sacrificing some of them in 1938 in order to make a favourable trade agreement with the United States. Later, after lowering tariffs to the lowest point they ever reached in 80 years—just before GATT came into being—they had nothing left for trade bargaining but the imperial agreements. Even at that I have always been doubtful whether that agreement did Canada any good. It was a kind of sacred cow so far as economics are concerned; and now, Mr. Speaker, it is lost in the shuffle.

Thirty years later it is very amusing to find the Liberals very fearful of losing what is left in the British trade preferences. It must now be obvious to all that with fewer and fewer people producing more and more primary products, the only hope for an increasing population to find jobs and for an increasing agriculture to find markets is by the increased and rapid expansion which is possible in our secondary industry.

I regret that the hackneyed phrase "We must buy finished products from a country if we are going to sell our primary products to that country" has been accepted so generally. That is not true. As an example to the contrary, for many years the United States has been our best customer and yet she sold to Canada hundreds of millions of dollars worth of goods more every year during the past century than we bought from her. In the same years the United Kingdom bought many millions of dollars worth of goods more than she sold to us, and yet she remains our best overseas market.

We cannot hope to consume all the coffee, sugar, bananas and raw cotton which Latin America might wish us to buy in order that Latin America would be able to pay for the machinery and chemicals we have to sell. We do not need its copper, timber and wheat, but some other countries do need them.

In view of our years of international trading experience it is a strange concept now that we must balance our trade with Japan, while for 50 years we have had many times the differences in trade balances with both the United States and the United Kingdom. Never in my experience have I read of a United States congressman pleading with the people of the United States to buy more from Canada, even in the years when we were buying over $700 million a year more from the United States than we were selling to the United States. Indeed, there were very few in this house who, during the past 50 years, expressed concern about the United Kingdom buying so much more every year from us than we did from her. Surely it is no more vital that we should balance our trade with Japan than with the United Kingdom? However, the economic challenges that are now on the horizon promise to be equally important as those we met in older days by older methods. Never in our economic history was it more important to increase our secondary industry expansion if we are to compete with the common market countries. However, we pray we may develop peace and better will among the nations of this new and smaller world. If so, we shall then be faced with a more exacting challenge if, at the same time, we are to gain disarmament and avoid economic depression.

Let us be ready when the objectives of our present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) are achieved. He is working hard towards that end and, when that time comes, I hope our improved standards of living will require enough new tools and gadgets to replace the employment now used in building atomic bombs and battleships. I urge the government—and I say this with all sincerity although I know I may be on ticklish ground in doing so—to give serious consideration in the near future to the establishment of a government department of industry to act in co-ordination with the respective departments of industrial development in the provinces. I feel this is of paramount importance, to co-ordinate all the efforts. I have referred to many of the efforts the government is making. I compliment the government for the steps it has taken, for the new concept that it has demonstrated, but I urge the government that the time is rather overdue when we should have a department of industry to accelerate the development that is so vital for our future.

As one whose interests are chiefly farming, and representing a rural district, I have no hesitation in forecasting that such a department of industry can be as important to our general Canadian economy during the next 25 years as the Department of Agriculture was in the past 25 years.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry—

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Habel: As dean of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Then, will the hon. member continue?

Mr. Rowe: The challenge to make such a theory an economic reality can be met by a new, enlivened spirit of co-operation. The old time sectional differences and class distinctions that tempted politicians to play on such ill-founded prejudices must be replaced by a new outlook. The west and the east, agriculture and industry, capital and labour must be more united and complementary to each other in this broadening concept of our future greatness. The vastness and variety of our resources can provide for increasing exports to the markets of older countries. Our high standard of living and increasing population can create a home market of unprecedented volume for our manufactured products as well as the greatest hope for our agricultural output.

I compliment the government upon the advanced steps they have already taken in this new concept regarding industrial expansion. Upon this approach depends new opportunities for the genius and enterprise that will develop a more balanced economic future so vital to all classes of our national society.

I hope that in the future we will have a more balanced development than we have had in the past. I am not going to lay all the blame on those who were in power for so long, but in all fairness I have to lay a lot of the blame on them. I say again that the present government cannot be expected to correct in one term of office the situation which has developed from such complacency. I hope that when this government is returned to office they will establish a new department of industry and give industry its proper place with agriculture in this country.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question that springs from his very interesting speech? In urging the government to establish a department of industry, is the hon. member suggesting that this department should plan the development and the direction of investment? Is he advocating some measure of planning?

Mr. Rowe: No, I had not thought of taking over the investments yet. I thought I would be interfering with the policies of some other party if I did that.

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like at the very outset to join my colleagues in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the motion for the address to His Excellency. Of course, it is always refreshing to hear the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), who has such a tremendous knowledge of the legends and background of this house. It was interesting to hear him trot out again the shadows which proclaimed the old difference between the two major parties, protectionism against free trade. Whether in an indirect fashion he was promoting the old policies of protectionism and trying to change them somehow to meet modern times, I do not know. But it is always delightful and certainly informative to hear the hon. member address this house.

I should like to point out that the throne speech is, of course, the opportunity for the house not only to discuss the future plans of the government but also to review its past performances. Unfortunately, during the time allotted to a private member in this debate he can only refer briefly to some of the government's activities, but in a general way one cannot avoid taking an over-all view of the situation within the time allotted to an hon. member.

I think that, notwithstanding what the government has been saying, the reputation and the image of Canada has slipped during the past four years since this government took office.

Mr. Pallett: Nonsense.

Mr. Crestohl: It may not be true in the opinion of some, and that opinion may be respected by others, but one should also expect that the opinion of those on this side of the chamber may also be based on reason and justification when making that statement.

I will try to illustrate some of the reasons which bring objective thinkers to a conclusion, after analysing the facts, that such may be the case. We may not want to admit it; it may be uncomfortable for some of us to admit it, but let us be objective and look at the facts.

It is true that before this government took office Canada was universally considered—not by the members of this house only, but universally—to be at the peak both internationally and domestically. Our country's advice was constantly sought. Our assistance as a mediator in international disputes was frequently invited. Those are facts. Our diplomats have helped to prevent many serious armed conflicts in various parts of the world. That, too, is a fact.

An hon. Member: Remember Suez.

Mr. Crestohl: I am not saying that it was a universal panacea, but the fact remains that my statement is factual. Our country has been invited to intercede and intervene, and did prevent many armed conflicts in various parts of the world. All this was possible because our country enjoyed the highest respect and esteem at every level. During those years we had a record of accomplishment, a record of achievement, and the record speaks for itself.

However, unfortunately this is not the position today. We now have a record of failure for the few things that have been attempted by the government since 1957. Let us look at some of them. Look at the fisheries treaty, for example, about which there was much talk by the government. That turned out to be a fizzle, a complete failure. There was an attempt, nobody will gainsay that, but it did not succeed.

Then let us look at the question of disarmament about which there was even more talk by the government. The discussions on disarmament also ended without success. The success that was hoped for was not forthcoming, unfortunately. Next I refer to the trade talks and the shifting of the 15 per cent imports to Great Britain, in which there was no achievement and only talk. This also resulted in complete failure.

My leader, in his forthright and effective address in this debate, quoted a statement made by a Tory member, Mr. Nigel Birch, in the British house of commons. That statement is so effective that it merits repetition and I will read what Mr. Birch said:

> Look what happens when Mr. Diefenbaker became Prime Minister of Canada. He wanted to increase imports by 15 per cent. We were delighted. We offered him anything up to a full customs union. What happened? Nothing—

That is the quotation by a member of the British house. In addition, our relationship with the United States is strained by a number of incidents. Notably among them is the performance of the government in connection with the Columbia river power project. Then there is the inconsistency of our position with respect to the European common market, and the very recent difficulties resulting from our policy toward Cuba, which is vigorously objected to by our neighbours.

Our relationship with the United Kingdom is deplorable, notwithstanding the denial of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) the other day. These are only a few references on the international scene to indicate the change of Canada's image since 1957. But there are many more. We have been losing stature; we have been losing face, whether or not we like to admit it. I say this is very sad and very depressing. I admit it is unfortunate, but it is a fact. We have been losing face and stature in the entire world. It is a very good thing, especially in an election year, to do some stocktaking and soul searching, and Canadians are no doubt making comparisons, comparing what Canada was like before 1957 with what Canada has been like since 1957. Every Canadian has a right to do that, and every Canadian will, no doubt, in his own way and by his own means try to draw conclusions from this comparison. Similarly this is the proper place and the proper time for members of the House of Commons to make this examination and do some soul searching. Let us see what such an examination would produce. Let us recall, for the purpose of comparison, a few of Canada's achievements during the 10 years before 1957—achievements which made every Canadian swell with pride. I once referred to that period as Canada's golden era of international diplomacy. Some of the highlights deserve repetition. In the first place, Mr. Louis St. Laurent fathered the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. In the second place this country was honoured by the election of a Canadian as president of the United Nations. Third, it was the courageous work of Canadian diplomacy which led to the creation of Israel as a sovereign state.

A Canadian was responsible for setting up a military force to maintain peace in the middle east and a Canadian diplomat was named its first commanding officer. Next, Canada was elected one of the three nations to supervise the truce in Indochina. Canada was also invited to help supervise the teams set up in Laos, Cambodia and Viet Nam. Then, again, it was on Canada's initiative that the admission was secured of 16 new countries to the United Nations, a performance which won the commendation of the entire world both east and west. Then there was the epic journey of a Canadian minister in the face of communist danger to liberate thousands of Hungarians and bring them to Canada where they are settled happily as good Canadians. There are many more such creditable achievements which I could mention, but the crowning glory for Canadian diplomacy was the award of the Nobel peace prize to a Canadian diplomat.

All these things made Canada very proud and elevated our prestige in the world to the loftiest level of respect and confidence. These are only some of the things which created an image of Canada that was respected and acknowledged throughout the world, whether members and supporters of the present government wish to admit it or not. Until 1957, these achievements, and others like them too numerous to mention, created in the eyes of human beings everywhere a splendid image of what Canada is like. People thought of Canada as really being one of the most wonderful countries in the world. It is no wonder people were anxious to come to Canada; they had heard these wonderful things about Canada.

When we examine these facts objectively, I say: which of the present government's accomplishments is comparable to any one of those I have mentioned? I do not know of one, nor, I think, does anybody else. The best the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), was able to point to was the speech delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) at the United Nations. It was a splendid speech, a splendid oration. I will admit that, and I think everyone will admit it. But what did it accomplish for the world or for Canada? Unfortunately, it accomplished nothing. It was just talk by the Prime Minister—important talk if you will, able talk, if you like, but nothing more. The Minister of Finance, still searching vainly for some accomplishment, also referred to the speech made on disarmament by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green). This speech, again, was a valiant effort, a splendid speech. But again I ask: what did it accomplish?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What did you accomplish in the field of disarmament?

Mr. Crestohl: I am putting before the house an affirmative record. I challenge hon. members opposite to show me a similar affirmative record. But I will deal with that question. What did we accomplish in the field of disarmament? We maintained the peace throughout the world where there were trouble spots. Our diplomats went out there at the risk of their lives and prevented these trouble spots developing into conflagrations. The speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was very accomplished and very sincere, but unfortunately it accomplished nothing.

An hon. Member: Boloney.

Mr. Crestohl: The hon. member may describe the accomplishments of his government in those terms. It is not my description. The speech accomplished nothing and that is as far as I will go. I regret its failure. It is unfortunate. I wish the hon. gentleman had succeeded. We shall come in a moment to the reasons why no success has been achieved. I say it is possible that we lacked the necessary world confidence and prestige to command the accomplishments for which we had hoped.

This government has now had four years of office. Let us compare briefly the two records. One is a story of achievement. I have just shown that there was 10 years replete with real achievement in the world of international affairs. What does the other record show? Unfortunately it shows nothing in the way of accomplishment. It has just produced talk. From what I have said, hon. members will see that some of us have the right to draw the conclusion that the image of Canada has changed and that our stature has declined. We say that these facts should be placed before the house and the country in order that they may judge. It is true the government attempts to hide these two records. It especially attempts to conceal the statements made by the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crestohl: If hon. members opposite are disturbed by what I am saying, I do not blame them. If I were sitting in their place I would also be disturbed.

The government attempts to hide the former government's record by the unbecoming observation that looking at these facts frankly is smearing the good name of Canada.

In my judgment the plaintive observation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we belittle ourselves when we talk of them is a weak defensive position for the government to take. If looking at the true facts makes us feel small, that is unfortunate; but that is the government's fault, not ours. The people of this country should be told the truth. The government should not attempt to sweep the truth under the carpet as it would prefer to do.

Other ministers have also made observations which have assisted in deteriorating the lofty status Canada built up until 1957.

The Minister of Finance did not enhance the image of Canada by his regrettable handling of our financial policy and the unseemly mess of the Coyne affair. Canadians travelling abroad in the past year often had to answer questions about what was happening in Canada, what action the Canadian government was taking that seemed to be changing Canada. Canadians have always been welcome everywhere in the world as representatives of a country which managed its affairs at home well and did its full international duty in an objective and unselfish way. Again I repeat that unfortunately things have changed.

An hon. Member: For the better.

Mr. Crestohl: That is only a matter of opinion. I may respect the hon. member's opinion and certainly he should attempt to respect the opinions of others.

The choice of language of the Minister of Finance has brought our country little credit. He has built up a reputation for having at his command a choice collection of vituperative words which he musters to his defence when he lacks facts, truth or logic. This is most unbecoming on the part of one of Her Majesty's ministers and brings no credit to the minister or Canada. It shows a lack of appropriate self-control and judicious restraint unbecoming to a minister of the crown. Let me illustrate this by reading from an item published in a newspaper friendly to the Conservative party. On November 30, 1961 the Montreal Gazette quoted the universally respected Manchester Guardian as follows:

> If Mr. Fleming feels that phrases such as 'complete fabrication' and 'false in its entirety' can properly be used of our commonwealth correspondent's report, he should think again.
> We have good reason to believe that our commonwealth correspondent's report was correct. He stands by the whole of his report.

I admire and respect the ability of the minister but I point out to him that the language he uses so lightly often goes abroad and has the effect of lowering the status of Canada in the eyes of the world. A minister of the crown should be more discriminating in his choice of language whether in this house or outside of it, nor should the minister attempt to hide behind the smokescreen of saying he was misquoted.

Nor was much prestige added to our country's standing by the cavalier statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) when he referred to Castro Cubans as being wonderful customers. The minister, of course, was quick to recant his assessment and attempted to laugh off his thoughtless remark by facetiously saying, like the late mayor of New York, Mr. LaGuardia, "when I make a mistake, it's a beaut". The statement made by the minister certainly did not endear Canada to its southern neighbours.

Canada's position was certainly not elevated by the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) when he visited Russia in his former capacity as minister of trade and commerce. What he later explained as a joke turned out to be a tragic reflection on our country in the eyes of the entire western world. Ministers of the crown should not joke lightly especially when they are abroad and attempt to hide behind jokes of that kind. The minister is reputed to have stated that under the trade agreement with Russia Canada would also sell to that country, of all things, uranium.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman has accused me of making a joke when I visited Russia on a trade mission. I explained in the house what happened. I thought my explanation had been accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite. A planted story was foisted upon me by a foreign correspondent who had no connection whatever with Canada. He was the one who treated the matter as a joke. The hon. gentleman is now accusing me of doing a disservice to Canada. The observation in question was made by a foreign correspondent. He is responsible for that disservice, as I explained when I made my statement to the house. I would ask the hon. member to immediately withdraw this statement.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, I was in the house when the minister made his statement. There was a series of them which—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Crestohl: Hon. gentlemen opposite are impatient to have me withdraw. I point out that I have a right to finish what I am saying before I withdraw, if indeed I come to the conclusion that I should withdraw.

The minister at that time made the statement that the remark with respect to the sale of uranium to Russia was a joke—

Mr. Churchill: I said no such thing, Mr. Speaker. Again I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is accusing me of things I did not say and he must withdraw.

Mr. Crestohl: Just a moment. If I have done the minister an injustice I will withdraw readily and promptly. If in saying the minister joked about the matter I am doing the hon. gentleman an injustice I will certainly withdraw. I was under the impression, as I believe many hon. members of this house were, in good faith, that in referring to the exchange between himself and the reporter the minister said, as I understood him, that the offer to sell uranium to Russia was meant as a joke. I did not see anything offensive in that. I believe that was the language that was used. All the newspapers reported it. I believe words to that effect will be found in Hansard. However, if the minister says he did not make the statement, that it was a joke, I will be pleased to withdraw. If the minister will now tell the house that is not what he said at that time I will withdraw.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in addition, I made no offer whatever to sell uranium to Russia. What greater nonsense than that could the hon. member speak?

Mr. Grafftey: You do not know the hon. member.

Mr. Churchill: I said nothing of the sort, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crestohl: If the minister says he did not offer to sell uranium to Russia I will accept his statement. I am referring to the fact that he was reported to have said that a similar statement was made only as a joke. If no statement was made by the minister to the effect that this was a joke I will certainly withdraw.

An hon. Member: Another misquotation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we have another interjection about misquotation. There was no misquotation. I tell you that it was a planted story dreamed up by a foreign correspondent in Moscow and based on no evidence whatsoever. There was no offer whatsoever by me to sell uranium to Russia at any time.

Mr. Crestohl: Did the minister make any reference to its having been a joke, because if it was thought to be so—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister has stated from his place that he did not make an offer to sell uranium either seriously or as a joke. I take it that the hon. member who has the floor is quite prepared, as he should be, to accept the minister's statement in that respect, and therefore I think we might proceed.

Mr. Crestohl: If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly withdraw it.

Mr. MacEwan: Turn the page. Who wrote it?

Mr. Crestohl: Who writes your speeches?

Mr. MacEwan: I write my own.

Mr. Crestohl: How do you know I do not write mine?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has a limited time and if he is allowed to proceed it will be in accordance with the practice.

Mr. Crestohl: I was discussing how Canada has not maintained the lofty position that it held before 1957. I say that if the cabinet ministers and members on the government side of the house are prepared to dig their heads deep into the sand, like ostriches, they can do so but it is the duty of the opposition to tell the country the true facts, and that is what we are doing and intend to continue to do. We do not have to rely on misquotations. I do not know of any other government with such a record of accusing newspapers of misquoting and misunderstanding them. I have a raft of misquotations here that ministers have sought to use as excuses on the floor of the house. Of course people are misquoted. People can make mistakes but it is hard to understand such an overwhelming number of misquotations and mistakes. The clearest illustration we have was that provided by the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) in the house in the last few days. He could have been misquoted but I say that so many apologetic statements do not do the government or the country much good.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I see that his time has expired.

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be to congratulate the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I also extend my congratulations to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) who will, we all know, do a fine job in his new position. We were all delighted with the selection of the new Deputy Speaker. The house is indeed fortunate to have a man of his standing and ability filling this important office.

Before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I was somewhat riled by the remarks just made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl) and I just have to get it out of my system before I continue. The hon. member made the statement that the speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) at the United Nations brought no results. I take exception to that. The hon. member is wrong as always because the Prime Minister certainly did a wonderful job not only for Canada but for the world when he made that speech at the United Nations. The Prime Minister renewed the faith of many people not only in Canada but in other countries.

I happen to know of one man in my constituency who was a Liberal candidate in 1953. He thought so much of the Prime Minister's speech that he sent him a telegram congratulating him on it. I have not seen the telegram but I was told that this man sent it and I am sure it is on the Prime Minister's files. Yet the hon. member for Cartier gets up and says that there were no results from this speech. The man who told me about this matter is very highly respected. I like to have respect for people but when they get out of line for political reasons and make statements such as that made by the hon. member a few minutes ago it riles me, and I must take exception to them.

During the short speech that I intend to make I am going to speak mostly about my constituency whose name I am seeking to have changed to Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. The reason I am doing so arises from the fact that economic conditions there are good and getting better. I know that there are many other parts of Canada where the same conditions prevail. According to leading economists of the country things will improve as the months go by and 1962 will be a banner year. This improvement is largely because of the sensible attitude of many Canadians who have made up their minds that they will not listen to the pessimistic and gloomy reports that have done so much harm to business, and who approve of the action that the government has taken to improve our economy.

Last week I was talking to a man who represents a large manufacturing firm in Canada. This gentleman calls on many retail outlets in Ontario. He told me that last year many merchants informed him that because of the cries of doom and depression many Canadians were cutting down on their buying. He said that many people told him that they were putting their money in the bank rather than buying many of the things they would like to own. This man went on to say that toward the latter part of the year customers had decided that these false cries of depression were not good for Canada. As this thought spread over the province, business gradually started to improve, Christmas buying was stepped up, and he now claims that Canada will have a very good year.

Why is there this cry of hard times, Mr. Speaker? What do these people who gloat over their gloomy predictions hope to gain by them? We are all supposed to be working and building Canada. If I had a man working for me who came to work with a sick and gloomy look on his face and spent the day whining and complaining, I would tell him to go and see a doctor and to come back to work when he was in a better frame of mind. What good is a gloomy pessimist in any business? What good to a city, a province or a nation is a gloomy pessimist who is always finding fault? There may be a place for these people but certainly it is not in business or in any position that is important to the people of Canada.

In every country there are sick people. Some have had accidents that have disabled them so that they cannot work. We have many people with no special trade. Many become discouraged and are not able to face the hard facts of life. All these people need encouragement and help, not a constant stream of gloomy predictions.

We hear grown men in mournful numbers say that people are hungry and have nothing on which to live. If there are people who are starving and hungry, these men who are talking about it should do something more than just talk. I have heard no word that these great friends of the needy, these great fighters for the poor and underprivileged, are doing anything to help them.

Canadians should analyse these men who are downgrading this great country. Check the lives of these men; find out if they ever did any thing to help our fellow men; find out if they ever did any work themselves; find out if they ever made a real contribution to mankind. I was advised as a boy never to listen to a pessimist. Unfortunately I have had to do so in this house although I admit I quite often get out rather than listen. All these people do is see the dark side of life. They can never be depended upon when things get a bit rough. They are about as useful as a pair of sponge rubber crutches to a man with two broken legs.

What a great difference there is between the the pessimistic preachings of calamity and the constructive program of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the members of his cabinet. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) did not sit around and cry blue ruin because of the recession. He went to work to do something about it. There is an old saying, Mr. Speaker, that idle hands make idle minds. I think before this government came into power the situation was just the reverse because idle minds were making idle hands throughout Canada. The new government took office and reversed the situation again by setting their minds to work instead of being idle and developing various means for improving the economy of this country.

The Minister of Labour went to work on this particular problem and did a wonderful job. I should like to say a word about the winter works program. The Ladysmith Chronicle of February 1, this year, had this to say about the program:

> The do it now campaign is rapidly taking on the complexion of some of our familiar seasonal shopping bargain campaigns, like January clearance sales. And so it should. The winter work publicity program has sound reason behind it.

The article goes on to say that the success of this plan thus far indicates what can be done. I will not read the whole of the article because my time is limited. I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, that on a number of occasions I have been called upon to take part in discussions with the various chambers of commerce in my constituency such as, the Galiano island chamber of commerce; the Chemainus-Crofton chamber of commerce; the Duncan-Cowichan chamber of commerce; the Salt Spring island chamber of commerce; the Ladysmith chamber of commerce; the Nanaimo chamber of commerce and the Pender Island chamber of commerce. I also attended meetings of the city councils of some of these cities like Duncan, Nanaimo and Ladysmith. The members of these organizations have always presented their suggestions and requests to me in a businesslike manner; they have never been pessimistic or gloomy about their projects. These men have been busy running their various businesses and engaging in community work. They have been too busy to sit around and wring their hands. There are some members of parliament who could follow their example and the country would benefit.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, conditions in my constituency are good. Apparently the life saver of many members of parliament is the newspaper clippings. These clippings become very valuable at times, and I have a few here from which I should like to quote. The Cowichan Leader of February 7, 1962 contains an article with the heading, "January Exports 25 Million". It reads in part:

> Lumber exports from the ports of Chemainus and Crofton totalled 25,507,170 board feet in January,—

That is in one month, Mr. Speaker.

> —almost five million better than the best month in 1961,—

I could continue to talk about this subject, but I have others I should like to mention. The Ladysmith Chronicle of January 25, 1962 contained an article with a heading, "Chemainus-Crofton Export Kings of Island Ports." It reads in part:

> Judging from shipping figures released from various island ports, this area was well ahead of all Vancouver island ports in lumber shipments to foreign countries during the past year.

The article goes on to say that during that time various goods were exported.

Here is an article dated February 3, 1962, from the Nanaimo daily Free Press, which is headlined, "Nanaimo Port Shipping Has Busy January." The article continues to talk, not about depression, but about the good things that are happening in this country of ours.

There are other things about which I should like to talk. Here is an article from a newspaper indicating that a boat basin is going to be constructed in Nanaimo. This is the equivalent of establishing a new industry in the city, and it will mean a great deal to that city and to the economy of Canada.

An editorial appeared in the daily Free Press of January 19, 1962 headed, "Pulp Expansion Opens New Era for Nanaimo." It reads in part:

> Decision of MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited to go ahead with an expansion program at the company's Harmac Pulp Division south of Nanaimo is received here with the greatest satisfaction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the importance of this announcement is the fact that this $40 million expansion program will mean 400 additional jobs in Nanaimo and also about 500 people will be working during the time it takes to build this tremendous mill. The editorial goes on to say:

> When the implications of such a step as MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited has taken are considered, one realizes that the 500 jobs which construction of this plant addition will create for two years, and the 400 permanent jobs which will continue thereafter, are not the only employment benefits which this development will bring. Needed will be many new homes, new schools, new service outlets of all kinds. This will mean new responsibilities for the local authorities, whether civic, school board or trustees of improvement and fire protection districts.

This is not the only new plant in Canada; there are lots more. We are not actually going to the dogs, as has been suggested. From the February 12, 1962 edition of the Nanaimo Free Press I quote this:

Building of B.C.'s $30 million submarine natural gas pipe line under the straits of Georgia from Vancouver to Vancouver island will start immediately.

This pipe line will go to two of the islands in my constituency. We have really nothing to worry about there.

Here is an article from the Free Press of January 6, 1962 which is headlined, "Job Picture on Island Looks Good." It reads in part:

A survey of national employment service offices on Vancouver island indicates there is a healthier employment level for this time of year than at any period in the past decade.

Those are the facts. Here is another sign of how the country is growing. This article is from the Nanaimo daily Free Press of February 14, 1962 and is headed, "Award Day at Crofton, Canada's Safest Mill." The article reads, in part, as follows:

Mr. Hamilton also pointed out that the new mill would have a considerable impact on the local economy, as $20 million is to be spent and four fifths of this will be on construction.

This will mean more work for the people in my constituency. I might add here, Mr. Speaker, that warnings were sent out from the employment offices of the region to the effect that much of the work has not started because they did not want people rushing in there and being disappointed.

The daily Free Press of February 9, 1962 carries an article with this heading, "Ottawa Grant Means Early Start on VTS." This vocational training school at Nanaimo is being built at a cost of $735,000, and the federal share, representing 75 per cent of that cost will be about $551,250.

Here is another article from the Nanaimo Times dated February 7, 1962, and it lists all the boats that have loaded at the port of Nanaimo during the month of January, 1962. We find that there were five ships from Norway, three from Liberia, one from Denmark, six from Greece, five from Germany, six from United States, four from Japan, five from Britain, one from Italy and one from Panama for a total of 37 ships. The total crew on these ships would number 1,152. It is estimated that a boat spends approximately $10,000 during loading operations for various things the crew needs. I have cited the number of ships visiting the port during one month, so hon. members can understand why I am happy.

I have in my hand a card which is a notice of a general meeting at the south end hall, on Thursday, February 22, of the Gabriola island ratepayers and residents association. The interesting part of the notice reads as follows:

Progress in Sixty Two is up to you and you.

This is an indication of the spirit the people of Gabriola island have. I am going a bit out of my constituency now, but the January 15 issue of the Free Press contains the story about the Qualicum river project to encourage the development of salmon where a million dollars is being spent to help increase the salmon catch.

There are many other projects in my constituency and I could go right through a list of them. They include a public building at Ladysmith, $40,000; harbour improvements at Ganges, $185,000; boat harbour at Nanaimo, $600,000; approach renewal to Chemainus, $13,000 and float renewal at Cowichan bay, $5,300. We certainly have to congratulate our very energetic Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) for the interest he has taken, not only in my constituency but in every area across Canada.

There is a new hospital being built at Nanaimo and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) has informed me that the federal grant for that hospital was $454,953, for which I thank him very much. I could go on and on, but here is one type of headline I have in mind "Forty million dollar expansion at Harmac." We have a good government in power right now and things are really happening.

Last week end I was in another constituency, Pontiac-Temiscamingue. The Deputy Speaker took me there and I saw a great pulp mill in which the men are working seven days a week. There is no unemployment; they are all working and at the meeting I attended they could not understand why some politicians should be talking about gloom and doom when they now have it better than they ever had it before. Previously if they got three days work a week they felt very fortunate, and now they are working seven days a week. The manager of the mill told me he could not understand people in parliament starting such terrible rumours, saying that things were never so bad; and he was not speaking solely of his own area. He told me he had toured the United States and all across Canada, visiting various pulp mills, and he found the economy in that industry was tremendous.

On the Saturday night I attended a meeting with the Deputy Speaker, who made an excellent speech. Afterwards my wife and I talked to various people and they were all tickled to death with the way things were going and could not understand why anybody would gripe, complain and talk about doom and gloom.

In our local paper in July, 1960, there was a story which reads as follows:

'Gloom aggravates recession' says head Canadian collieries.

Incidentally, the colliery near my constituency at Port Alberni is starting a large pulp mill. The story continues:

A company president warned Thursday that gloom aggravates recession.

Norman R. Whittal, president of Canadian Collieries Ltd., said at the company's fiftieth annual meeting:

"The public is wont to accept the gloomy forebodings of their leaders and this gloom, spreading throughout the country, in itself aggravates a recession such as we have experienced over the last few months."

That was in July, 1960, and that is a fact. It is disgraceful to have members of the House of Commons attempting to downgrade Canada and attempting to make Canadians believe there is a decline in Canada's prestige throughout the world. This is not well received by Canadians and is an unwarranted attack on Canada's high standing among the nations of the world. It is an attack made for political reasons.

In October, 1960, I was a delegate to the interparliamentary union at its meeting in Tokyo, and the Canadian delegation received a wonderful reception from delegates representing all the democratic countries of the world. We discovered for ourselves that Canada's reputation and prestige is highly respected by all. During my time there I had some interesting experiences which gave me an idea what they think of Canada. At one reception, where we all wore our badges with the inscription "Canada" one page boy came up to me and said "Me Broda". He knew that we came from Canada; he knew the Toronto Maple Leafs and the Montreal Canadiens. He himself was a goal tender and all he could say was "Me Broda". Evidently he knew some of the Canadian players.

Later the president of the ice skating association of Japan called at my hotel and talked with me for three quarters of an hour. Certainly there was nothing there that would lead anyone to think that our country was not highly thought of. I have a letter from a Mrs. Takae Sugita, dated November 17, 1961, in which she says:

Dear Mr. Matthews: Last year we had the pleasure of greeting the M.P.'s from Canada and this year we were honoured by the visits of the Prime Minister, Mr. and Mrs. Diefenbaker to Japan. It was really a memorable occasion. The Japan-Canada Society gave a luncheon in their honour at the Imperial hotel and my husband and I also attended it. There was quite a good turnout of the Niseis in Tokyo. Everybody thought that Mrs. Diefenbaker was so charming and friendly. The Japanese say that if a thing happens twice there will be a third. I wonder what is in store for us next year.

From that one can see how welcome was the visit of the Prime Minister and Mrs. Diefenbaker.

I do not know how much time I have left but I should like to say that people talking gloom and doom remind me of a story I once heard about Pat, who was lying sick upstairs in the firehall. The firefighters sent Mike to cheer him up. Mike climbed up the winding staircase to the bedroom where Pat was lying on the bed. He couldn't help saying "You look pretty pale Pat, I don't know whether you will make it or not. Terry Grady had the same disease as yourself. He looked all right but suddenly he died. You will be all right and I don't want you to worry. However, Gil Finnegan of the iron workers union, a very strong man who never had a day's sickness in his life, he contracted the same disease. He was looking pretty good too but suddenly he handed in his lunch bucket and departed this land. Don't worry Pat, I don't want to worry you. I'm sure you'll be all right." Mike then turned and started down the winding stairs but just as he got to the top of them he turned round and said to Pat "There's one thing bothering me Pat. How do they get a body down these winding stairs." That is the kind of comfort some people give, and it does not help our country when it needs encouragement.

Canada has prospered since the days of depression. There has been a depression in Canada and the United States but we are now well out of it. The picture today is bright and the prospects for the future are colossal. The duty of all governments is to make sure that the sick, elderly and underprivileged are properly cared for, and this the present government is pledged to do and is doing. There is a glorious future for all young Canadians. Those who have been misinformed should take a new look at things, listen to the right people, and they would then discover the facts and their faith would be restored.

(Translation):

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Bourdages and Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway), on the manner in which they performed their task.

The case they had to defend was rather weak and their arguments were not too convincing, but nevertheless I congratulate them for their courage and also for assuming their responsibilities and carrying out their duty.

I must also congratulate the Deputy Speaker on his appointment. Knowing his competence and his integrity, I am sure that he will conduct our proceedings with fairness and dignity.

The speech from the throne sets out the legislation to be brought before the house during the coming months.

Other members who spoke before me or will speak later on undertook or will undertake to emphasize its omissions which cause Canada to have no definite policy, a situation which, in my opinion, gives rise to unrest within Canada and concern abroad.

I should now like to single out statements included in the speech from the throne which are just political footballs.

First, there is the proposed amendment to section 94a of the constitution to establish a contributory old age pension plan and other benefits. The Prime Minister mentioned that in 1958. He did not say a word about it for four years, and now that we are on the eve of an election, he brings it up again to offset the program advocated by the Liberal party before the opening of the session.

The national grid system is another political football. This project which would require the provinces' consent would make it possible to convey power from one province where it is abundant to another province where it is scarce.

The principle itself may have some merits but the provinces where power is plentiful will have to think twice before parting with such resources.

Indeed, that project is merely intended to please the provinces which do not have enough power. It did not seem advantageous to a member of the national energy board, Mr. H. L. Briggs, who explained the proposed system before the Engineering Institute of Canada. His remarks were quoted by the hon. member for Laurier in the speech he made January 25 last, as reported on page 188 of Hansard.

I should now like to turn to what the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) said in this house on January 23 and as recorded in the official report, page 113, which reads as follows:

> There has always been numerous reasons for French Canadian dissatisfaction with the federal government. Some were well founded and others were merely based on prejudice. However, one of the most serious causes of discontent of French Canadians throughout Canada, and not only in Quebec, was undoubtedly the offhand and indifferent attitude of the previous government not only toward the French Canadian minority, but towards all minorities in Canada. And minorities then included everything that was not Liberal, not Grit.

According to the hon. member, the Liberal party which was in power from 1935 to 1957 was responsible for the discontent of French Canadians throughout the country because of its offhand and indifferent attitude towards all minorities in Canada.

The hon. member's statements are not too clear; indeed, one minute he speaks of the discontent of French Canadians throughout the country and, the other, of the discontent of minorities in Canada.

It is easy to tell, when you read the hon. member's address, that he is not quite clear on that point, that there is still some confusion in his mind on that matter, but not enough, though, to prevent him from asserting anything.

However, to illustrate that discontent and to give strength to his argument, the hon. member gave us an example. I quote:

> Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I seriously think that the previous government which could have done so much during the 22 years it was in power, is greatly responsible for the discontent of certain groups of Canadians. Some people were driven to despair by the lack of understanding of the government of the time.
> Need I illustrate the point? In 1942, there was only one member from Quebec in the Canadian cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member got his information and I did not try to check that. However, I can tell him honestly, that under the Liberal administration in 1942, after the death of the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe and the resignation of Hon. P. J. A. Cardin, and before the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent was sworn in, the French Canadian ministers in office, whether there was one, two or three, had as much value, each single one of them, as the whole group of French Canadian ministers who are now members of the cabinet under the present government.

As far as the treatment of minority groups under a Liberal administration is concerned, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had better read his history. Then, he would know that the members of minority groups in this country entered Canada under a Liberal administration and were always treated with fairness.

Under the Laurier administration of 1896-1911, there was an immigration movement, and you have only to ask the Jews, Italians, Poles and others who settled in Canada then how they were treated.

Not one of them complained about the freedom they enjoyed, no more than they had to claim the rights and privileges to which they were entitled. All these persons were subject to our laws, were treated on the same basis as our other citizens and enjoyed the same privileges.

The immigration movement which had started under Laurier stopped from 1911 to 1921, mainly because of the war of 1914-1918.

Still for the benefit of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the immigration was resumed under a Liberal regime, from 1921 to 1930.

Once again, it slowed down from 1930 to 1935 due to the depression and the high unemployment level.

From 1935 to 1945, the slack which had been felt during the previous period was not picked up, because, during those years, the Liberal government concentrated on putting the country's economy back on its feet, following which it had to face the problems brought about by the second world war.

However, immigration started up again after the war, and we had the good fortune of having a strong flow of immigrants bring us, as well as some capital, technicians, farmers and engineers who, through their efforts and special skills, added to the nation's wealth.

Speak to these people today and you will discover that they have never had any feelings of contempt toward the Liberal government which had helped them to find a new homeland. They are happy and satisfied with the life they lead, the freedom they enjoy and the benefits they derive from their rights and privileges.

For my part, I have in my constituency some 6,000 Italian and some 1,500 Polish and Ukrainian electors, and never have I heard them criticize the Liberal government which had helped them, nor speak of having been treated in an offhand manner or with indifference by the leaders of the Liberal party.

I understand that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm meant to speak instead of the French Canadian minority, which complains about not getting its share of the advantages provided for under the terms of the British North America Act.

Besides, as he said in his statement, some reasons are well founded while others are simple prejudice. There may be some truth in what the hon. member stated, but I can tell him that the separatist movement in Quebec is not due so much to situations that arose during the Liberal administration, but rather to the fact that the citizens of Quebec recovered on June 22, 1960 a freedom they had been deprived of for 16 years.

Let us hope, however, that the grievances of that movement, if they are justified, will be settled in a spirit of harmony and justice.

However, the Prime Minister could have tempered the separatist movement in Quebec by creating a royal commission on bilingualism in Canada instead of giving a categorical no to that request.

Whether we want it or not, whether we reject such a request or not, the French language, in my opinion, enjoys a great importance today in international relations. The peoples of African countries, like those of many Asian countries, speak French, and French is used more often than English in diplomatic and international relations.

And to prove my claim, here is what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) said yesterday, in Montreal, to the members of the Canadian club, as reported in Le Devoir this morning:

> Canada can play a major role in helping the new French speaking nations of Africa. In those words did Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Mr. Green, call discreetly yesterday on the collaboration of French Canadians for the international prestige of our country.
> Mr. Green, who was speaking to the members of the Canadian club of Montreal, spent some time explaining the position held by Canada in "the world of 1962".

If Canada is to play a part with the French-speaking nations of Africa, this obligation should not be met only by the French Canadians but also by the English-speaking Canadians. We want every citizen in this country to assume his share of the beneficient part Canada must play in Africa as well as in other foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with another matter. I wish to urge my Conservative colleagues from Quebec not to mislead the Quebec voters in the next election campaign on vital issues out of which they made capital in 1957-58. They will have to remind the Quebec voters that Canada does not have an ambassador to the Vatican as yet. Some criticized the Liberal party for not having done a thing about such an appointment and, with a great emotion in their voice, pictured us in the eyes of the people as almost atheistic individuals because we did not make such an appointment.

That issue was linked with religious considerations instead of being discussed from the point of view of diplomatic relations and good will.

Another issue our Conservative colleagues from Quebec should not forget to mention to the people is that of the Canadian contribution to underdeveloped countries under the Colombo plan.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we find in the speech from the throne the following sentence:

> You will also be asked to appropriate funds to maintain Canada's external aid program.

In the 1957 and 1958 elections, they made capital out of that issue. Under the guidance of their grand master at the time, the leader of the Union Nationale, they relied on the slogan that "Duplessis was giving to his province and the Liberals to foreigners".

They spread all sorts of slanders. Again with emotion in their voices, the Conservatives from Quebec contended that the Liberals were giving everything to foreign countries while the population of Quebec was overburdened with taxes, and that with that money it would be possible to carry out several projects in Canada. But they were omitting to give the actual reason for this assistance to underdeveloped countries, which is to help these people to overcome poverty and to prevent them from being the victims of communist philosophy.

The people must be told that this government has maintained the policy of the previous Liberal administration, that it has increased its contributions from $35 million to $50 million and that in addition it is giving assistance to the West Indies and Ghana.

Another thing I would like to recall to my Conservative colleagues from Quebec is that they should not repudiate the friendly and brotherly relations they had with the Union Nationale government in order to be elected in 1958.

Now that the Union Nationale party has gone into the valley of humiliation, everyone denies having had any relations with it.

However we know that in 1958 the organization of the Union Nationale was in attendance on the Conservative party and that money was not lacking.

I shall not take time to speak of letters of thanks or kisses of friendship exchanged during that election campaign, because they are facts of common knowledge to the people of Quebec.

However, for pity's sake, my Conservative colleagues from Quebec do not disown what you have worshipped.

We would be surprised, if each one of the Conservative members from Quebec were questioned, to learn where the funds they used to be elected came from.

The generous hand of Hon. Gerald Martineau was very helpful to them. And the purveyors of the Union Nationale government were well thought of and thanked for their generosity. I can tell the Quebec Conservatives that I know what I am talking about and that if they would rather forget those things, we shall not fail to remind them and to set the record straight.

Once again, gentlemen, be logical and frank. Don't burn down what you have worshipped.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not mention the kind of circus meeting the Conservatives organized in Montreal, especially and mainly in St. Denis constituency on the 30th of November last.

The meeting was for the purpose of choosing the Conservative candidate who, according to certain newspapers, had not come or, having come, half-opened the door and seeing that the attendance was poor, did not enter.

Listening to a certain speaker at that meeting, Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that it was the continuation of the Union Nationale campaign.

We know that the provincial constituency of Laurier is included in the federal constituency of St. Denis.

Judging from an earlier speech by an hon. member, we would think the Union Nationale was still campaigning.

True, there were not very many people present, although the meeting had been publicized a great deal. However, I believe more respect should have been shown for the ears of the listeners.

As a matter of fact, at that particular meeting, the member for St. Jacques (Mr. Campeau) was rather vulgar, as pointed out by La Presse last December 1. I quote:

> So far as Mr. Campeau is concerned, here are some noble expressions he used in connection with the Liberals: Liberal yoke, Liberal dirt, political scavengers, red cancer, organized gangsters, advocates of rottenness, downgraders of French Canadians, etc.

Judging from the tone of the speech, we certainly recognize the Union Nationale, now disowned by the Conservatives. However, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Union Nationale era is over in Quebec and that we, in the Liberal party, do not propose to imitate Tory speakers in that connection, using vulgar expressions like the member for St. Jacques has done, because we respect the intelligence of the voters.

Mr. Paul Lahaye (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I add to the congratulations and well deserved praise directed to you by the majority of hon. members who preceded me in this debate. I also extend my congratulations and best wishes to my excellent friend, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) upon his appointment as chairman of the committee of this house. The same applies to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, Mr. Bourdages and Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway).

Last Sunday evening, in my constituency of Champlain, in the town of Cap de la Madeleine, a convention of the Liberal party was held, and when I read the report published by Le Nouvelliste, the local Trois Rivieres newspaper, I was amazed to see a statement made by the main speaker, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I regret that the hon. member is not now in his seat, but I am sure that he will have no difficulty in getting acquainted with my remarks.

As mentioned this morning by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Laurier is supposed to have criticized, among other things, the subsidy of $40 millions voted for western farmers after their poor harvest, while nothing was voted to help eastern farmers.

I can hardly imagine the hon. member making such a statement, and if it is accurate, I challenge him to go and repeat it on the prairies. I shall have the opportunity in a moment to show what the Conservative government has done for eastern farmers.

The hon. member for Laurier has also strongly criticized the policy of the Conservative government in the field of agriculture. He has accused the present government of having lowered farmers' income by abolishing support prices on foodstuffs, mainly eggs and butter.

Mr. Speaker, I consider that as a fallacious and unwise statement. Such a statement on the part of the so-called Liberal leader in the province of Quebec gives us an idea of the kind of arguments our opponents will use in the next election campaign.

It will be a bitter pill to swallow for our opponents to realize that the Quebec oracle from Cornwall is no statesman, but a petty politician. Either the member for Laurier is completely ignorant of agricultural policy—which he cannot afford to be in his capacity as the right hand man of the Leader of the Opposition, or he is horribly and wilfully distorting the truth.

If the hon. member for Laurier has any sense of justice and fairness, he will ask the paper I have quoted—if his statement has been misquoted—to put the facts straight. But, if his statement has been correctly reported, he will have to state on the page where the convention was reported that support prices are still in force for butter and eggs, the support price amounting, as everyone knows, to 64 cents a pound for butter, while the one on eggs not only has been maintained at 33 cents but increased to 34 cents last year for grade A eggs.

Mr. Speaker, as a lifetime farmer and the member for a rural riding, I believe I am entitled to make certain comments concerning the agricultural policies of the present government.

I will start by admitting that our dairy industry is going through hard times and, before making a survey of the situation which exists today and putting forward certain suggestions, I will briefly refer to the situation which prevailed before 1957, when the government which has since been put aside was in power.

Even though, by doing so, I might be accused of being prejudiced by my opponents, I would say that one of the greatest difficulties now encountered by the dairy industry results from the fact that the previous government, on the eve of the 1957 election, in a purely partisan gesture, with the purpose of window dressing, raised the price of skimmed milk powder to 17 cents a pound, which raise had never been requested by any agricultural organization.

Mr. Speaker, that is the origin of present conditions. That was the starting point of the difficult situation experienced by our dairy industry, and to prove it I should like to quote a farming publication which most hon. members—at least those from Quebec—will or should know. I am referring to Terre de Chez Nous of December 6, 1961. It contains an item signed by the editor, Mr. Paul-Henri Lavoie. This publication is in no way related to La Reforme nor any Conservative paper, for I have never seen its editor on Conservative hustings. After taking a look at the position of our dairy industry, Mr. Lavoie says this:

There is, first of all, the setting by Ottawa of a price of 17 cents a pound for powdered milk just before a federal election, whereas organized producers never asked for such a price and their maximum claim stood at a fairly lower level. A complete organization was then developed in processing plants in order to take advantage of that very high price, which resulted in a considerable production increase.

Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, this was in the December 6, 1961 issue.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lahaye: Certainly.

Mr. Deschatelets: Does the hon. member know that according to the most recent 1961 statistics, prices paid by Canadian farmers have increased while their income has been lower than for the previous year?

Mr. Lahaye: Mr. Speaker, I think I should call it six o'clock, and I shall answer the question of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont after recess.

(Text):

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Lahaye: Mr. Speaker, before recess, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) asked me a rather ambiguous question. Since he knows a lot about agriculture, I am sure he will find in my remarks a clear and exact answer to his question.

However, I could tell him that he may find an answer right now to part of his question if he reads an article which was published in La Presse on February 2, 1962, concerning the federal bureau of statistics. Its title is:

Higher income for farmers in 1961.

That, in itself, already contradicts what he implied in his question.

The article in La Presse reads as follows:

According to federal bureau of statistics figures released today, the income of Canadian farmers has reached a new high of $2,928,900,000 last year.

A DBS survey shows also that the farmers' income went up for all types of crops, except potatoes, oats and barley.

The total farmers' income, not including deficiency payments, was 5.3 per cent higher than in 1960 when it reached $2,761,000,000. The previous record, which dates back to 1952, was $2,839,100,000.

Last year, agricultural income went up in seven provinces. However, there was a decrease in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia due to the drought and disease which affected the potato crop. No statistics were released for Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, this is a rather conclusive answer to the insinuation made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont in his question.

I shall now take up my speech where I left off before recess.

I was saying that the obviously political stand taken by the Liberal party was designed to increase its popularity in rural areas on the eve of the election. It is that attitude which led to the unfortunate situation of the dairy industry today.

At a price of 17 cents a pound, that most precious commodity was a determining factor in the establishment of some 20 milk powder processing plants. It was really gold powder.

As a result, butter fat stocks went up considerably. We can see to what extent those people have lost all sense of proportion. While the minimum price of butter was set at 58 cents a pound, the minimum price for skim milk powder was fixed at 17 cents a pound. You could not have a better example of a complete lack of good judgment, a complete lack of everything that could help to alleviate the situation. Honestly it is contrary to common sense.

As a result, we have seen our powdered milk surplus pile up quickly and become in no time a burden that could not be supported. Our butter surplus also grew tremendously.

The floor price of butter is set at 58 cents per pound and the floor price of powdered milk at 17 cents. What nonsense.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, do you think the farmers of Quebec and Ontario—the two butter and cheese producing provinces—will want to rely on the Liberal party and go back to chaos?

On the other hand the Conservative government immediately took the required steps to remedy that senseless situation.

The minimum price for butter was fixed at 64 cents per pound, and a 25 cent subsidy has been added since.

I state, as a matter of principle, that, under no considerations whatever, must the minimum price of butter or subsidies be removed, because present conditions in the dairy industry of the province of Quebec, our largest butter producer, should not be changed.

There is no reason why the farmer should see the price he is now getting for his milk go down for this would amount to a disaster.

I do not have the slightest doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the present government, which is constantly looking after, not only the western farmers, but also the eastern farmers, will be the one to receive the farmers' vote, because it is the one which will be asked to keep on helping the farmers who, like all other people, are entitled to a livelihood.

Mr. Deschatelets: When is the election?

Mr. Lahaye: It will probably come too soon for my hon. friends on the left side, the cold spot.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): That remains to be seen.

Mr. Lahaye: Mr. Speaker, I shall continue for a short time with the government's agricultural policy. I wish to establish that, as far as eggs, poultry and other agricultural products are concerned, the government has done a lot, first through the Agricultural Stabilization Act and, then, through minimum prices.

Whatever the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) may say, I am convinced that the Agricultural Stabilization Act has kept the price of eggs above the minimum price and that the government has not had to pay any subsidy to support it, at least not this year.

It is the Agricultural Stabilization Act that has created a balance between production and consumption.

There might be during a few months a small surplus of eggs and it is to be expected that this situation will right itself around the last six months of the year, which still leaves a minimum price for eggs, in case of need.

A similar provision exists for beef and pork.

You remember, Mr. Speaker, that before 1957, because of a policy that had nothing to give confidence to farmers, there was no way to stabilize prices. There were fluctuations, which were not decent, in the price of pork. In fact, the prices ranged from 17 to 40 cents a pound. Some farmers were almost driven to bankruptcy, because after buying piglets at the time the resale price was 40 cents a pound, they could hardly sell them after fattening, because the sale price had dropped sharply.

On the other hand, in view of the sudden rise in the price of pork, at certain times, doctors, lawyers, hotelkeepers bought pig farms of about 1,200 to 1,500 pigs and lost considerable amounts of money, although that kind of farming, normally, was rather profitable.

Fortunately, the Conservative government has stabilized prices by setting a minimum price of $22.65. Last year, after a necessary adjustment period because there were hundreds of millions of pounds in warehouses, the price of pork went up a little to reach a high of approximately $5 more than the maximum price of the previous year and this, without any subsidy from the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, I say that this legislation clearly establishes that the government is granting some protection to that agricultural class, in a country where there are too many producers for the number of consumers, and which will still have to be protected at least for a period of few years, the length of which we cannot determine as yet.

The voters will surely have confidence again in the government as they will be sure to continue to have a decent standard of living comparable with that of other classes.

With reference to the agricultural industry, on account of a policy which has been called for some reason vertical integration, we have seen a constant increase in chicken and turkey production, to such an extent that last year, prices went down to levels which were far from encouraging.

This government then decided to establish a tariff of 12 per cent on poultry meat imports from the United States. Unfortunately, because of the constant reduction in price, that 12 per cent represented at a given time only about 2½ cents.

Such protection was inadequate. Therefore, we saw last year that the federal government concerned over the agricultural class as usual, while keeping the tariff at 12 per cent, established a minimum of five cents a pound. This means, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont who may not be aware of it, that the minimum applicable to imports of poultry, pork, chicken or turkey meat from the United States constitutes a protective tariff of 5 per cent. This now enables our farmers to continue their production.

I have with me today the publication Terre de Chez Nous. In the February 14, 1962 issue, I saw what, in my opinion, was an extremely practical suggestion from the Ontario minister of agriculture. I quote part of that article:

When recently addressing a group of farmers in his province, the Hon. W. A. Stewart, minister of agriculture, expressed his intention of curbing the farm integration system to some extent in order to help the family farms to survive:

"The Ontario government is willing to introduce some legislation during the next session in order to curb the expanding vertical integration of the farming industry.

"It is prejudicial to the best interests of farming in general and of the family farm in particular that the food processing industry should completely control, not only the processing of farm products, but also the future and income of the farmers".

Mr. Speaker, I find that suggestion most reasonable and I recommend it wholeheartedly to the present premier of the province of Quebec. He could, indeed, take some very constructive action by controlling the packing and cattle feed industries whose production regular impinges on a field which rightly belongs to the farmer.

I am making that suggestion for the benefit of the Quebec farmers, and it should be applied by the ever busy and quite confused premier of that province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) who, at my request, finally recognized the pitiable situation that prevailed in the constituency of Champlain in respect of the erosion of river banks caused by the boats sailing through especially since the St. Lawrence has become a seaway.

Before 1957, only a few loads of stones were used as they were granted from time to time to friends of the government, but since then continuous retaining walls were constructed. At first, they were dry walls 1,000, 2,000, or 3,000 feet long, depending on the money we had been able to secure.

I was told today by the minister that very important contracts had just been awarded. One of those, in the amount of $66,601.80 is for the construction of a protecting wall 1,620 feet long which will be a permanent structure. That is what I have long been asking for and after studies made by engineers, my request was finally granted. I think it is an innovation. Another contract was awarded for a similar wall which is to be 4,165 feet long and its construction is to begin immediately at Cap de la Madeleine. This contract is for an amount of $175,216.25.

I note, in the votes for the current fiscal year that an amount of $200,000 was put aside for the construction of retaining walls at Champlain and that another amount of $200,000 is for Cap de la Madeleine.

This is worth noting. This is about ten times as much work as was done under the former administration during the four years before 1957. I give credit for it to the Minister of Public Works and to the Conservative government.

I should like to say a few words about the proposed Trois Rivieres bridge, a project which has been under consideration for a long time. I had the honour to participate in the debate, last year, on a bill to extend by three years the rights of another government or a public body, which would care to take it under its charge. I should like now to elaborate on the remarks I made at the time. In no way should I like to displease my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer), but I expressed the view last year, that it seemed more appropriate to have the bridge at Cap de la Madeleine instead of Trois Rivieres. I had pointed out at the time that the shore was about 30 feet higher at Ste. Marthe in Cap de la Madeleine than at Pointe du Lac. There is a second reason which would be quite strong—a bridge that would link the mainland to the north of the river, at Ste. Marthe in Cap de la Madeleine, would connect directly with the Shawinigan-Grand'-Mere-La Tuque highway, which will be completed up to Roberval, passing through the park, to end up at Quebec city.

There is still another reason. We are earnestly asking—and, in this connection, I have the support of the municipal authorities of Cap de la Madeleine and of certain advisory bodies that we respect and whose suggestions we usually consider—that Cap de la Madeleine be provided with a wharf which could accommodate vessels of a certain tonnage. This would be correlated with the proposed bridge, because a wharf which could accommodate vessels, ocean-going vessels, would also permit those vessels to unload at Cap de la Madeleine their cargo which is often shipped to industries of Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Shawinigan and Grand'Mere, and that without any traffic snarls on Duplessis bridge, thus clearing Trois Rivieres where traffic becomes particularly heavy at peak hours.

The national harbours board claims that the revenue of the wharf at Cap de la Madeleine does not justify the expense involved.

I would humbly submit, Mr. Speaker,—and I believe the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Public Works will understand my argument—that it is impossible, when there is no adequate wharf to accommodate a vessel, to make any profit. Let there be a wharf of an appreciable length to accommodate an ocean-going vessel or a ferry boat of a reasonable tonnage. Then, traffic will become heavier at Cap de la Madeleine, which will relieve Trois Rivieres and help that city and Cap de la Madeleine to continue to prosper.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired.

(Text):

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, things that happen in parliament occasionally happen very suddenly, and sometimes you find you have a promotion when you do not expect you are going to be promoted. It may be that way at the present time.

Tonight I should like to speak about a problem in my riding, a problem which I think affects all Canada. Recently I talked to a national press representative whom I drove through my constituency, and he was very surprised to find such a large fertile agricultural area in that part of northern Ontario. This area was completely unknown to him and I presume that some people across the country are still unaware of the fact that the riding of Timiskaming contains the odd geographical phenomenon that is called the little clay belt. However, in years to come a great deal more will be heard about the little clay belt, and as the need grows for more agricultural production in Canada I believe this very large natural resource potential of agricultural production will come into its own.

Mr. Herridge: The same as the Kootenays.

Mr. Peters: Yes, it possesses some similarity to the Kootenays. I understand our areas are similar in length of time of development. In many cases the people occupying the farms in my riding are the original pioneers who cleared the land 50 or 60 years ago. Indeed, there is not one farm in the Timiskaming riding which has been worked longer than 70 years. The little clay belt has a teriffic agricultural production potential, but it is a potential that will not be realized until we are able to develop markets and increase our consumption of the products produced in that area. The agricultural potential of all northern Ontario will be realized in years to come, when probably the area will be the breadbasket of all America. In Timiskaming we have a million acres of arable agricultural land. The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) represents another area, the great clay belt, that in the more distant future will be brought into production with a capacity of 6 million to 7 million acres of farm land.

In the little clay belt we have 300,000 acres of taxable farm land. We have 1,600 farms that produce agricultural products to supply the needs of close to 100,000 people. Unfortunately because of our inability in years gone by—particularly in the last 20 years—to develop markets and dispose of the agricultural production of which we are capable, we now have only 400 farming families that receive the major portion of their income from the land on which they live. This indicates, of course that many of the farms occupied by the 400 farmers have increased in size and production. Advancements in automation and technocracy have made their impact and now less farmers are producing more than ever before.

This is a very interesting agricultural area. It is what one would call a mixed farming area. We have about 25,000 head of cattle, and I am trying to interest the federal government in vaccinating them against brucellosis and making it a controlled area. These cattle are both beef and dairy production. We have a large new industry being built up in beef in conjunction with the community sales of that area. Therefore this is a very important agricultural area. It is an area that is, in my opinion, representative of agriculture in all parts of eastern Canada and the problems we have are probably very representative of the agricultural problems across the country.

I will not detail all the commodities that are produced there, but I should like to mention one. Maritimers are very proud of the fact that they grow very good potatoes. They do not grow really good potatoes. The people from my area won the Canadian championship in the potato class at the royal winter fair this year and they know, because of past experience, that they will continue to win it. This is an indication of the fact that in northern Ontario we have a very great potential in this field; and the surface is only scratched.

We have another problem, and this is certainly true of all eastern agriculture. I should mention that the previous speaker placed some emphasis on this problem as it affects the province of Quebec, including his riding. I think it affects the producers in the agricultural industry all across Canada. I refer to the problem of the lack of markets and marketing facilities, which includes supervising, grading and inspection.

We could probably produce enough potatoes in Timiskaming to supply the needs of southern Ontario as well as our own area, but because governments have not yet been interested in establishing grading stations and providing the capital necessary for co-operative enterprises to develop marketing, grading, packaging and the other forms of development that are necessary to put a uniform and well graded, well inspected potato on the table, we have not been able to induce enough people to come into the area and produce this commodity.

This becomes a real problem. Do you get all the producers into the area and produce the potatoes, with no market for them, and then establish the grading stations and facilities for packing these products; or do you develop a product, get a brand name for an area or region and then, when you have the trading and co-operative facilities for handling and storage, go about establishing markets for those products?

In northern Ontario we have other problems that may exist in other parts of eastern Canada. We are plagued with a high freight rate. I wish to refer to one specific item, that grain can be shipped from Winnipeg, Manitoba, to North Bay at 80 cents per 100 pounds. On our own railway, if it is shipped from North Bay to New Liskeard, the freight rate is 31 cents per hundred pounds. Therefore we have problems in connection with high freight costs which we have not been able to solve. There have also been problems in connection with the high cost of fertilizers, machinery, and particularly the high cost of rural living. This is perhaps the greatest problem that rural agriculture faces today. I refer to the price that is charged against land in the form of taxation in order to cover rural roads, rural education, rural communities. In particular, the municipalities which have been spreading into the townships, where rural taxation has to cover many facilities, are not able to carry these costs. This has placed a burden on the farmer and on the rural taxpayer, a burden that has not been asked of any other segment of the Canadian economy.

As the years go by, there is an increasing desire to supply those living in a rural economy with what are considered in the city to be the necessities of life. We desire to raise the standard of living of the people and the standard of housing and facilities, and I believe it is impossible for the municipal tax structure to be continued at the present basis.

While it is true that farmers in my area do not receive some of the benefits of farmers in other parts of the country, I believe that something has been done by this government, and something has been done by provincial governments to assist in this problem. We have heard very little objection to the acreage payments being made to farmers in western Canada. We have heard, of course—and we agree with this statement—that these payments should be made on an annual basis, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) says these are payments that are being made to establish in Canada a true price system for wheat. If this is true, I suggest that these payments should be made on an annual basis and they should be made regularly, because if a true price system is desirable one year, it is desirable each and every year.

Many of the other subsidies which have been given to agriculture in other parts of the country have not been made available to the farmers in eastern Canada. I refer in particular to my area and such schemes as disaster assistance, money that would be paid in the event of disaster. In most cases, when this kind of assistance is asked for, because the area is small, the regions are separated and the disaster is of a localized nature, it is very difficult to get any type of assistance for farmers who may suffer on this account.

Mr. Speaker, we have all heard of the drought in western Canada and we sympathize with these farmers. I believe we should demand that this government give immediate attention to this immediate problem and do something for the farmers of western Canada who are plagued by drought, and where the indication is that the situation will be worse, not better, next year. This assistance in the main has been of a very short term nature. In the last few years we have experienced only one major program of the Conservative government to develop something for agriculture on a long range basis. We have supported this program. I have heard many Conservative members rise and say that A.R.D.A. has been an exceptional achievement of this government and that it will do a great deal of good. We supported A.R.D.A. We believe that this program will do some good on a long range basis, but for goodness sake let us not make it too long; let us get cracking on it. If it needs some improvement in order to induce the provincial governments and municipalities to participate, let us get going. Already we have waited 40 years, which is much too long, to solve some of the problems in connection with putting agricultural land back into reforestation and beginning a national conservation program of this nature.

We believe that one of the major necessities of Canadian people in the field of agriculture lies in the area of orderly marketing. The New Democratic party believes that one of the long term programs that will help stabilize agricultural production and farm prices is the establishment of a national producers marketing board.

The New Democratic party believes that one of the long term programs that will help to stabilize agricultural production and farm prices is the establishment of national producers marketing boards.

Agricultural producers today have insufficient marketing power. In order to strengthen the marketing position of producers and provide them with a realistic price for their products it will be necessary to enact legislation to provide parity price levels for products under the control of a system of producers marketing boards.

To ensure flexibility these boards should be organized on a commodity basis with a defined jurisdiction on a regional basis. As an example, a potato producers marketing board operating within the maritimes area will be separate from another operating in northern Ontario. The efforts of each board will be co-ordinated through the development of a federal producers marketing board. Each of these units could operate in its separate sphere in supplying service to its area producers for export, and for their share of some common internal market. Their efforts will be co-ordinated and rationalized by the federal producers marketing board.

In respect to production, a provincial producers marketing board would have the responsibility of keeping the supply closer in relationship to the demand for the commodities. This could be done by taking the historic production of individual producers as a starting point, a system of producer licensing and any other powers the board must require.

In the marketing of the product, the provincial producer marketing board should have the responsibility and the power to deal adequately with the production and assembling of the product to the wholesaling and processing level. Provision should be made in the act to allow the processors and/or the wholesalers to become agents of the federal board if producer boards were to request such action. If this were done it would mean the establishment of boards of produce commissioners. For example, in respect to dairy products, vegetables and meat the commissioners would set margins of operations for processors and wholesalers in a similar manner to that in which the board of grain commissioners now operates.

In establishing the price of a given product the federal government would have the responsibility of bargaining on behalf of the consumer with the producer marketing board for producer price guarantees for the commodity. These prices would be set with reference to total farm costs and levels of farm income in relation to the rest of the economy, and be re-negotiated at the end of an agreed production cycle of the commodity. In contrast to the fixed producers' prices, the consumer market price would be a free-flowing market price. If supplies become sufficiently strong to depress the market price below the guaranteed producer price, compensation will be paid to the producers through payments from the consumer revenue fund, and in relation to individual production should market prices fall below the guaranteed producer price. To illustrate how this would work, using butter as the example and presuming that the producers marketing board are in control of supplies, several steps would be required. These would be:

(1) Necessary legislation drafted at the federal level with respect to agreed prices which would provide incentives for producers to organize.

(2) The producers in each province interested in butter production would have the responsibility of establishing the producer marketing board. A majority of producers in favour would be required to put the provincial marketing board into effect.

(3) If sufficient provinces established these boards representing a majority of the production, the plan would be declared in effect.

(4) The producer marketing board would bargain with the appropriate agency of the government—the agricultural price board—for a guaranteed price to the producer for a specified period of time. This time period would be related to the production cycle of butter.

(5) The guaranteed price and the possibility of deficiency payments would be only available to producers through the producers marketing board.

This means that if some provinces produced some butter but chose to stay out, they would run the risk of price penalty in the event of a strong production flow when consumer marketing prices descended below production prices. Commodities flowing into the export field would have to be handled by the federal producers marketing board.

It should be possible to draft this type of program so that producers in various areas could take advantage of different degrees of government participation. It might be, for instance, that producers in a given area of Canada would want only to be able to assemble the commodity and market it with a minimum amount of government participation in the pricing field. It may be that others would want more substantial government participation. The program should be flexible enough to accommodate these area differences.

To summarize: (1) The plan is designed to give maximum marketing power to the producer of the commodity. This would be done by giving the producer marketing board of the commodity in question responsibility and authority to rationalize the production of the commodity and to assemble it into position, and also by giving the producers the power to rationalize price in relation to farm costs and levels of farm income, and to become more effective in bargaining for that price.

(2) The plan is designed to let the consumer benefit from an abundance of supply by allowing the consumer price to decline in the face of strong production.

(3) The difference between the price the consumer pays and the price the producer requires is to be made up by deficiency payments.

(4) This program would not be implemented until the producer marketing boards were organized on an area and commodity basis representing a majority of the production.

I do not expect that all the farm representatives have been able to follow this proposal—

Mr. Charlton: May I ask the hon. member a question? I wonder if he would care to say from what he is quoting?

Mr. Peters: I am quoting from my own notes. The proposal has been designed and adopted by the national council of the New Democratic party as a plank in their agricultural program.

I am quite happy that there should be a few chuckles. This is a program in relation to only one aspect of a long range plan that will assist the farmers of Canada. The New Democratic party is not the only body interested in farming which is concerned with this problem. This year the national farmers union made a submission to the government on January 31, and on the subject of personal ownership, said that they were interested in personal ownership as applied to farmers and the farm community. I quote from page 5 of the submission:

[Mr. Peters.]

To halt the artificially promoted trend to bigness and vertical integration, farmers will have to seek remedies in the marketplace.

The report of the restrictive trade practices commission of August 3, 1961, indicates that the three largest meat packing companies together slaughter more than 60 per cent of all the cattle and more than 60 per cent of all the hogs in Canada. The report says that the position of the largest of the three, namely, Canada Packers Limited, in the market is so dominant that it is against the public interest and to the detriment of both producers and consumers.

Correspondence of the company, quoted by the director of investigation in his statement of evidence, shows that the company is trying to eliminate competition and break markets.

There is no doubt in our minds that the concentration of so much market power in one corporation is against the public interest and constitutes a definite threat to the survival of the family farm.

Short of bringing the three largest meat packing companies under public ownership, we can conceive of only one other measure to limit this power, namely, to give farmers countervailing power in the marketplace.

We, therefore, urge your government to use the power given it by section 95 of the British North America Act to enact enabling legislation providing for the establishment of national marketing boards with mandatory powers and controls over the marketing of commodities produced on farms, including those owned or operated by processors, distributors and manufacturers.

National marketing boards will do much to limit the abuses and antisocial practices of monopoly power in the market place as evidenced by the restrictive trade practices commission in its recent investigation into the meat packing industry.

It is not sufficient to speak of the need for establishing national marketing agencies or boards. The government advocates a national power grid but will do nothing until the provinces have committed themselves. The position is no different in agriculture. We suggest the establishment of a national marketing board to handle agricultural commodities and regulate their distribution in the interests of the producer and consumer. This beneficial objective can be met only through the government spelling out a program which I invite all hon. members to consider and support.

To make it abundantly clear that we are sincere in advancing this proposal I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the following paragraph be added to the address:

"This house regrets that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to give agricultural producers proper and countervailing power in the market place through, among other things, taking steps to provide for national marketing boards."

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I suppose this is what we have to expect, and we must just take it with all the equanimity we can muster.

Mr. Benidickson: Filling in a vacuum.

Mr. Macdonnell: We know that our hon. friends opposite in the far corner of the chamber are socialistically minded. They are quite justified in putting forward their views as they are doing here. I merely wish to point out that the attitude of the present government towards farm problems seems to me to be very sensible. We have not ignored these problems and have been prepared to take special measures. I think of the action taken through the wheat board. We can remember the price support that was placed under butter and various other commodities. All these problems have been dealt with, as far as possible, on their merits and in a practical way. I would think that farmers from coast to coast in this country have a great deal about which to be satisfied.

I must say this proposal made me almost dizzy when I heard of the various calculations that were to be made and the various people that were to be consulted. Quite frankly, this seems to me to be the essence of socialism. It appears to be a negation of freedom.

An hon. Member: It seeks to give countervailing power.

Mr. Macdonnell: Those words are used, but the essence of the proposal seems to be to dragoon people. The idea this government adheres to is that measures should be designed to help people help themselves. My hon. friends opposite will say the present proposal seeks to accomplish this, but the kind of interference and control this proposal embodies is such that as far as I am concerned it is inconsistent with the aims of the party to which I belong.

The present government is practical. We have dealt with various things which seemed to be in an exceptional position. The wheat board is one of them. But this goes beyond that and, as far as I am concerned, I could not vote for this proposal.

I wish to discuss a subject tonight which is as old as the hills. I believe it continues to be of immense importance. Indeed, in the difficult days in which we are living now I feel it is acquiring a special importance. I refer to relations between labour and capital and particularly to co-partnership with the aim of making the ordinary workman feel he is part of the show, working for himself. I shall have some distinguished witnesses to call, the first being Lord Amory, the present British High Commissioner, who in England was a manufacturer and who has views on the subject. He, by the way, was deputy chairman of what I believe was known as the co-partnership institute.

I also wish to call as witness through his writings Mr. James F. Lincoln of the Lincoln Electric Company of Cleveland who has written a book which I believe we should all read. It is one of the most stimulating and impressive books I have encountered for a long time.

Third, I wish to call as witness a Canadian manufacturer, Harold Lusk, an ex-president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, a most broad-minded, you might almost say evangelical man, in his approach to his business, but nevertheless a man who pays his wage bills, and pays dividends to his shareholders. In other words, he runs his business in a practical way.

I wish also to say I am merely following in the steps of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) when I discuss this subject. Last June the Minister of Finance in talking about what was required to meet the situation used these words:

> To secure a maximum increase in employment it is desirable—I should say essential—that every industry, every business and every labour organization should give renewed thought to increase of productivity, the improvement of efficiency, and the competitiveness of costs and prices.

Hon. members might say there is nothing new in that, and perhaps there is not, but I will be coming back to this point and I think I will be able to satisfy hon. members of the house that although there is nothing new in these concepts they have not been put into practice.

I now wish to quote from the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I remind the house that in the world in which we are living today we have fresh competition. Western Europe has been given a flying start by the Marshall plan and it is now competing with us as never before. I shall read an extract from an interesting speech the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) made last November in Toronto when addressing a group of manufacturers. The minister said, among other things:

> Western European industries are efficient, and have a high degree of technological skill. They also have lower wage rates than we have in Canada. Most important of all, there exists in western Europe something which we have in all too few cases in Canada—a high degree of co-operation between management and labour, which enables them to work together constantly to improve design and quality, and to lower costs. The result of all these factors is that most of the industries in the common market countries produce products which are equal to or better than ours in quality and design, and sell at lower prices.

I hope that hon. gentlemen have registered that and will ponder the seriousness of that statement with regard to ourselves.

> The highly competitive position of western European industries today is the result of hardheaded, practical thinking on the part of both management and labour. They know that unless their product is the best buy on the market it will not be sold and there will be no profits for the company and no jobs for the labour force.

Those are the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He goes all out to advocate co-partnership, to advocate that management should sit across the table from its employees not merely to discuss wages and hours but to discuss the operations of the company. He pointed out that this is the kind of thing that goes on in Europe, and I believe that in Germany it is required by law that the men have a certain say in the management of the company.

In spite of the lead given by these two ministers I am disappointed to find that the speeches of business and financial leaders in the last few months have seemed to ignore this point, have seemed to ignore the importance of making the men feel that they are part of the show. These speeches that I speak of stress lowering taxes, increasing depreciation, raising tariffs and giving export subsidies, all of which may have their point, but I draw the attention of hon. members to two things. The first is that all these four things that I have mentioned are entries in books, and are in effect subsidies. They do not suggest that a single man in a single factory is to do better work and produce more goods, which after all is the important thing. On this matter I wish to quote from James Lincoln's book, "A New Approach to Industrial Economics". First of all I wish to read an interesting sentence indicating the spirit in which Lincoln took on his job. He set himself a standard which hon. members may think a bit high, but which I believe he has worked out literally. When he was appointed many years ago he set up an advisory board which I believe has met every two weeks ever since. He says this:

I knew that if I could get the people in the company to want the company to succeed as badly as I did there would be no problems we could not solve together.

These are plain, simple words but I think hon. members will agree with me that they say a lot. When one can say, as one can, that Lincoln succeeded in that effort, it is not surprising that this company of his has had a brilliant career. Lincoln is frank in his criticism of manufacturers. He refers to the days that have gone by when he thinks manufacturers were effective in giving full play to their men, enabling them to do their best work. He says this, speaking of the manufacturer in the U.S.:

He has now failed to get the co-operation of the worker and is losing out because of friction. When he gets co-operation, he can and will win again. This is not a theory only. It is the history of all manufacturers who have designed a proper product and built it with co-operative workers. Wage rates per hour are of little importance in themselves. The important thing is wage cost per piece. This depends on efficiency of operation and on that only.

I quote another statement of Lincoln.

Perhaps he is a little exuberant and perhaps there is a little exaggeration but nevertheless he has succeeded to the point where he is entitled to make this statement:

When a properly designed product is made by co-operative workers, the cost can be reduced by any amount desired by the group involved.

That is a strong statement but nevertheless he gives cases where costs have been brought down not by 20 per cent or 50 per cent, but by larger amounts. He says again:

When the worker is rewarded and stimulated in a way acceptable to him, such co-operation can be gained.

He is quite frank in saying that he thinks workers have not always been treated as they should have been.

I wish now to say a word on the present economic situation by Deutsch, who is now at Queen's University but was formerly with the Department of Finance in Ottawa. He says this:

It is obvious that the recovery which is now taking place will have to be much stronger than any of the cyclical recoveries since the end of the war if full output and employment are to be achieved. If such a strong upswing is not realized the problem of substantial unemployment will persist further into the future.

This next I find very interesting:

Our export trade, always a vital factor in Canadian economic growth, is confronted with the prospect of an entirely different world. The developments now taking place point to the division of the world into large trading blocs, each with a huge internal market surrounded by protective barriers of one sort or another. The irony of it is that these developments indicate the possibility of Canada being cut off from the one special trading area with which she has been historically associated, namely, the British preferential system.

There is another aspect of our trading position which is being affected by new and powerful forces. The underdeveloped countries are entering and will continue to enter into the world market with an increasing volume of exports produced in low wage industries.

I also want to quote from what the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Mathers, had to say recently in Halifax:

—productivity figures from 1949-58 make sad reading for us in Canada. In Japan productivity growth over most of this period was at the rate of 5.5 per cent per annum. In West Germany the rate was 5.3 per cent, in Italy, 4.5 per cent, in France, 3.7 per cent and in the United States 2.3 per cent. In Canada by comparison it has been 1.8 per cent.

He goes on to point out that a high ranking Canadian economist estimates that a growth rate of between 4 and 5 per cent annually is necessary if we are to remain in the race for a share of the world's markets. Having quoted

Lincoln, I wish to quote from Lush and then from Amory. Let me say that these are two practical men. They are not long-haired evangelists. Lush has practised profit sharing for 13 years. He has this to say:

> It has been said with much truth that the only way to defeat communism is with a better ideology, and just as soon as management raises its sights and comes through with higher thinking, backed by unselfish leadership, management will find that slowly but surely its role of leadership will be accepted. Loyalty, good will and confidence cannot be bought. These must be won.

I also want to read from Amory. He has been a manufacturer and he is deputy president of the industrial co-partnership association. He says this:

> Let the chosen representatives of employers and trade unions get together and make a reappraisal of what is needed by industry for maximum efficiency in the interests of all. If this were done with honesty and good will, many time-honoured techniques of both sides would be discarded as outworn and irrelevant to the needs of today and tomorrow.
> I have always believed that in these matters the prime responsibility for the initiative lies with the employers.

I want to stress that again. The prime responsibility lies with the employers.

> Let the employers first make a sincere reappraisal of their practices to see if they really measure up to an attitude of partnership and consultation on equal terms.

I continue with another quotation from Amory:

> Our system of democracy is on test industrially as in other fields. We are competing with communist countries whose governments do not allow either free choice to interfere with its priorities or controversy and competing loyalties to weaken its single-minded concentration on economic results. In this race the free democracies are in danger of being left increasingly behind. In the face of this competition, we shall only survive if we cut out the waste, the misdirected efforts and, worse still, the inertia that results from our over indulgence in the luxury of scrapping about the subdivision of our present earnings and replace this with a much more dynamic spirit of positive co-operation.

I am sorry to read at length but I felt that it was worth while to put on the record these statements by practical men who have proved the success and feasibility of what they say.

I have made some considerable inquiry, so far as I can, as to the attitude of the ordinary hourly worker. I said the other day to a man who had a good deal of manufacturing experience, "would you say that a considerable number of hourly workers have very little interest in what they are doing?" He said, "you could put it more strongly than that."

I am going to stick out my neck by giving a small experience of my own. Years ago, when I was in business, our company occasionally discharged the functions of receiver and manager. We were for four years the receiver and manager of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company in Nova Scotia. We got some good advice when we were going there. We were told that the workmen were mostly from Scotland or had a Scottish background. We were told, "you can lead them anywhere but you cannot drive them an inch". This was good advice, and I like to think we followed it.

We had two great advantages, of course, as receivers. First of all, we were not regarded with suspicion as the owners often are. We were not the owners, we were merely another employee. We were working for the benefit of the company and the workers knew that their pay was the first thing that came out of the earnings we made. We had an advantage there. Second, we had another advantage in that we were bound to give the worker the full story of the operations of the company. I think that is a very important matter. I think a great deal of the dissatisfaction from which workmen suffer results from the fact that they do not believe they know the whole story. Those of us who are at all familiar with these matters know that that is true.

Even the best of manufacturers, even the best people in business, often consider themselves entitled to at least some accelerated construction here or a little extra there so as to keep the accurate story of the earnings from the worker. Now, coming back, I want to add this from my own small experience. We had, I think, a very good relationship with the workers during the four years we were there. They came on one occasion and asked for more wages, and it was my duty to explain the situation to them. One thing they found difficult to understand was depreciation, but they accepted it. They believed what we told them, and at the end of the day they said that it looked as if the money was not there. They did not press their request. No one can ever make me believe that if you are able to get a good relationship with sensible men who believe you are sincere you cannot talk to them as man to man on sensible terms. I want to say that there is no mystery about getting on good terms with men. Various people have done this. Simpson-Sears, Dominion Foundry and Steel in Hamilton and other companies, to mention no more.

I have been tremendously impressed with this Lincoln book. I wish I could prescribe it as reading for everybody. I cannot believe anybody could read that book by James Lincoln without being impressed. Furthermore, when you get the figures, you realize it is little short of a miracle. As you recall, he said if he could get people in the company to want the company to succeed as earnestly as he did there would be no problem that they could not solve together. This man has proven the truth of that statement, just as other people have. Lush said that he was afraid of what would happen in a bad year but when a bad year came the men took it in their stride without complaint. This impressed him and it impressed me very much.

I cannot see any invalidity in this argument of co-partnership and making the men feel they are part of the show. It only wants a little thought to realize that if the men believe they are part of the show they will be absolutely different. Indeed, the argument goes farther. It is that when men have a feeling that any improvement is going to go automatically into the pocket of the shareholder, whom they do not know and of whom they are suspicious, why would they try to work better? He says they will not, and I am afraid that may be true.

I come back now to what Amory and others have said about the responsibility of management. I have been very clear in what I have read to you. Lincoln is even clearer, and I read that to you. What is the answer? Are these men right or wrong? I cannot believe they are wrong. As I read this book through, I was deeply impressed. The figures are there and you can find out what happened with regard to the Lincoln Electric Company. There is nothing phony about it. I can see no catch in it at all.

Now, I have suggested that the remedy proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) is the right remedy and that their appeals to the business world should have been taken more seriously. The suggestion is that there should be more partnership. I have read to you what Amory has to say about it. I have read to you what Lush has to say about it. I have told you that I have been in touch with the people in Simpsons, who told me there was no question about the soundness of co-operation. Simpsons is not a small organization, it is a big organization. Dominion Foundry and Steel in Hamilton is not a fly by night operation; it is a big organization and they practise it. It is increasing. It has multiplied about ten times in the United States.

For the life of me, I cannot see why it should not expand. I think I can understand what the difficulty is. I heard of one meeting in which two believers in profit sharing talked with a group of businessmen, but they did not get anywhere. I believe it was Lush who told me that the reason they did not get anywhere was most of the men there were not owners, they were managers. He said he thought these men would have liked to go along the lines of profit sharing but their owners did not like it. I am afraid that is an attitude which has become widespread among shareholders. They take the attitude, this is ours and we can do what we like with it. I believe that idea is not only bad for the company, I believe it is bad for the country.

Now, I always hesitate to suggest legislation as a remedy, but perhaps there should be a tax benefit to companies who practise some kind of sharing with the men. There is no magic about profit sharing. It can be done through shareholdings as one method. Whether or not there should be a tax advantage to give people some inducement to practise this method, I do not know. I feel as sure as I am standing here that it is one method of getting us out of our difficulties. The men whom I have quoted have no doubt, and they are people who should know. The results are not balanced or uncertain; the results are clear and convincing, even startling.

I wish I had Churchill's voice so that it would carry. I was never so sure in my life that I am right. I wish I could do something to help the minister. He has tried his best, but it is difficult. He has met a lot of rather stiff opposition from the ordinary company management.

Of course, it is not going to be easy. Some of my business friends have pointed this out and I said to them I do not pretend it is going to be easy. I think it is going to be very hard because I believe it means that you men have not only got to take the initiative, you have got to make the people across the table feel you are sincere and pretty nearly have got to admit you have been in the wrong". All these authorities think that management should take the initiative since they ought to be better educated. They have had more opportunity to travel and to learn. Taking the initiative will be difficult and I told them that I know it is difficult. That is a very hard thing for a successful man who has been carrying on a business. It is hard for him to take any action which in effect says he is wrong.

These three men I have quoted made such strong arguments that it convinced me; I think everyone will agree that we in this country, if we are going to compete with this new European competition, have to get our costs down. It will not do at all if we are going to get them down by every other device except doing better work. Therefore I suggest this new approach by Lincoln to industrial economics. I prescribe a chapter of it every day for manufacturers, and if they are not cured in one reading then I would prescribe "the mixture as before" until they are cured.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the hon. member a question? His argument is a persuasive one but has he thought of presenting it to the national productivity council and, second, does it not seem possible that his argument may be an indictment of that organization which his own government set up not so long ago?

Mr. Macdonnell: I am so glad you asked that question because I intended to mention the national productivity council. I would hope very much that the national productivity council would follow this line of reasoning and would stress it in their work. Thank you very much for asking that. I would like to think I am not treating the question too lightly. What I say, is, don't neglect this subject. I do not think anyone who takes the trouble to dig into this book can possibly reach any conclusion but that, it is very well worthy of serious consideration and I hope my manufacturing friends will mark, learn and inwardly digest what it contains.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have only a very few minutes before the vote will be taken on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), but I think it would be interesting to compare the amendment—which undoubtedly the hon. gentleman did himself—with one of the points in the summary of the submission to the government of Canada by the national farmers union, which reads as follows:

> Short of bringing the three largest meat packing companies under public ownership, the N.F.U. sees only one other measure to counteract their dominant market power, namely by giving farmers countervailing power in the market place. The N.F.U. therefore asks for enabling legislation to establish national marketing boards with mandatory powers and controls over the marketing of commodities produced on farms, including those owned or operated by processors, distributors and manufacturers. It therefore asks the federal government to use its power under section 95 of the British North America Act and enact enabling legislation.

As the hon. member well knows, and as every distinguished lawyer knows, there have been many difficult cases heard in the courts, some carried to the privy council, about where the real jurisdiction lies over marketing of farm products.

The question was settled in the case of wheat because, if I remember correctly, it enters so largely into export; but the trend of the decisions as I recall them, and I am speaking very much from memory as I have not looked up these cases for a long time, was that in most commodities the jurisdiction would be in the provincial and not in the federal field. I would doubt very much if the jurisdiction could be founded under section 95 in any case; that section relates to agriculture, not to marketing.

But, sir, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture also presented views to the government of Canada and I have a copy of the views that they presented. In their presentation they indicated very clearly that marketing legislation may be necessary. They say, after referring to certain things that relate especially to Ontario:

> Continued study should be given to the difficult question of what further national marketing legislation may be needed to implement national programs of producer marketing as they develop in the years ahead.

We agree completely with this view. I do not think there is any doubt where the Liberal party has stood about the rights of producers to market their products in their own way, if they wish to do so. We have stood solidly behind the wheat board because it undoubtedly is within the jurisdiction of parliament, and we feel that farmers, whether the jurisdiction is federal or provincial, should have this right if they want it. But we fear that, since we are asked to make a mandatory statement, without examining whether in fact it is suggesting a serious invasion in a field of jurisdiction that was given by the British North America Act to the provinces, and not to this parliament, this would not be a proper motion for us to support at this time without having a careful opinion from the law officers of the crown that this would really be within the jurisdiction of this parliament. For that reason we shall not find it possible to vote for the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to pay the traditional compliments to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne and also to the new Deputy Speaker and the former deputy speaker who is now the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn). Any congratulations extended to these hon. gentlemen must today take second place to congratulations to the first United States astronaut, Colonel John H. Glenn.

Individual feats of heroism capture the imagination of the world. In this magnificent feat today there may be contained the seeds of a growing together, an easing of tension, a turning away from the ways of war to a more peaceful way of life. Astronaut Glenn joins two great Russians, astronauts Titov and Gagarin. I venture to say there will be a comradeship between these three men who are the first of the human race to brave space which is beyond the ideological conflict between the east and west.

It could well be that the acclaim which is so freely given to astronaut Glenn from the western world may be also given from the eastern world. Bravery knows no boundaries. Heroism is something all mankind can admire. This tremendous feat today could well mean a turning point in international relations. I say that the congratulations and good wishes of all free men must today be extended to astronaut Glenn.

In the course of my remarks I intend to review the accomplishments of the government but before doing so I shall deal with the subject of the export of power. I have in my hand an article which appeared in the Financial Post bearing the headline "How Power Companies Fared in Export Bids" from which I shall read a few excerpts:

> National energy board this week approved eight applications to permit export of power to the United States, but:
> In all cases, the licenses granted were considerably more restrictive than those asked for.

And again:

> Although the national energy board decisions were released all in one batch, some of them have been hanging fire for months.

And still further:

> Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper, which had asked for a 10-year licence, was given only one year, while most of the others were given three to five year licences.

I believe the national energy board is doing a magnificent job in the implementation of our national oil policy but it seems to me it is a little behind the times in the field of power exports.

I wish to quote from an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of February 13, 1962, referring to an address made by Mr. H. F. Beique, president of the Canadian Electrical Association and president and general manager of the Quebec Power Company, in reporting to the association. The article states:

In 1951 thermal generation represented only 14 per cent of net generating capability in Canada. In 1961 it reached 19.3 per cent; by 1972 it will represent 31 per cent of our capability, or very close to one third.

The article deals with statements Mr. Beique made with regard to the over-all cost of power as a factor in total manufacturing costs. The article states:

In these days, when competition for international markets is perhaps our most serious problem, the cost of electricity in Canada, for all manufacturing, is but eight tenths of a cent per dollar of product.

In primary manufacturing, it is 1.8 cents, whereas in secondary manufacturing, it is only four tenths of a cent.

These costs are so low that they are insignificant; as a matter of fact, it may be said that even if electricity were free to industry, a small increase in wages or in the cost of materials would annul the gain made.

The point I am attempting to make is that I believe the government must re-examine its policy governing the export of power and bring it up to date. An arrangement should be made under which power may be exported under terms which will allow the recapture of that power, with sufficient safeguards incorporated in the export licences to prevent any part of Canada from which power is being exported suffering from a deficiency of hydroelectric power. If the power is truly surplus there is no reason why five year applications should be reduced to one year, or why a 25 year application for the British Columbia Electric should be cut to five years. If the power is truly surplus for 15 years and there is a reasonable safeguard placed on top of the calculated requirements, I suggest the board should look at this realistically.

May I call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I take it that tomorrow and Thursday we will go on with the debate on the speech from the throne. Can some indication be given to us by the house leader as to what we will do on Friday?

Mr. Churchill: The throne speech debate will continue tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. It is one of those debates that may be concluded at any time. I do not think I should go beyond announcing that business for tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, should we complete the throne speech debate before Thursday, which I doubt, could the house leader give any indication what the business will be then?

Mr. Churchill: That is a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker. They are often asked in the house but never answered.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister raised the hypothesis.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 21, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ARGUE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESIGNATION FROM NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the house and my position in the house. I rise to inform the house that I have severed all my connections with the New Democratic party and, as a consequence, yesterday requested Your Honour to change the location of my seat.

My decision made at Regina to the Assiniboia N.D.P. executive was taken only after much careful and heart searching thought. The most difficult part of this decision was the realization that it meant leaving a group of men who had become very close to me, and who had worked and co-operated with one another for a period of almost four years. I leave eight hard working, sincere members of parliament who have served their country and their constituencies with distinction, and whose devotion to duty is an example to the whole house.

The second great difficulty in the decision I was making was that it was bound to hurt many good people of independent thought who had been my close friends within the C.C.F. These were the people who day after day, often at great sacrifice, went about trying to build a new party based on social justice and economic equality, and with the basis of control in the constituency organization. The consequence to them of my action I profoundly regret. In its justification I can only respond that the integrity of the Canadian nation, in my judgment, required me to make this decision.

I have already stated that in my opinion the N.D.P. was in the control of a small labour clique, and that their hold on the party was sure to continue and strengthen with the affiliation of more union locals. With delegates representing trade union locals and other labour bodies predominating over constituency delegates at conventions, discussion and persuasion on the convention floor becomes superfluous and votes become exercises merely to rubber stamp previously agreed to platform directives. It would be most dangerous to the democratic process to have a party gain power, the effective control of which resided in a handful of labour leaders situated outside the House of Commons. This was the impelling reason why I have left the N.D.P.

As to the future, I shall merely say that I desire to seek re-election to parliament in my own riding of Assiniboia, and that I expect to make a further announcement bearing on my political future at an early date.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the house for its kind indulgence.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in relation to the hon. member's statement.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a question of privilege affecting the hon. member individually, perhaps it would be in order for him to indicate what it is, but unless it is a matter of individual privilege or the privilege of the house I think the subject matter of the statement just made is probably one for debate. I point out to the hon. member that in the past similar statements of privilege have been made and precedent has been not to comment. However, if the hon. member has a point which he feels it raises—

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of rising and getting into the refrain of "Will ye no come back again" or anything like that, but I did feel that as a consequence of what the hon. member has said he has opened the way for a statement on this matter because there has been a reflection upon the other members of this party. As a consequence I just want to say that I do not intend to make the statement here, but it will be made tomorrow in the debate on the speech from the throne.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE METHOD OF EXECUTION

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-69, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment, form of sentence).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, the bill is a very short one consisting of one section. It is simply to provide a change of sentence upon someone found guilty of a capital crime in order that the sentence shall be carried out by a gas chamber and not by hanging until death.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COPYRIGHTS

REPEAL AND REPLACEMENT OF EXISTING LEGISLATION

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-70, to provide for copyright in Canada and to implement the universal copyright convention.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Miss LaMarsh: This is the reintroduction of a bill which is simply intended to modernize legislation which has not been modernized since 1921.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I have no firm views on the matter, but I thought I should bring this to your attention and to the attention of the house. It is my recollection that there is already on the order paper government order No. 6, a resolution that it is expedient that the houses of parliament approve the universal copyright convention signed by Canada at Geneva in 1952, etc.

I confess I have not given attention to the details of the question, but it did occur to me that it might be appropriate to bring the matter to Your Honour's attention, perhaps for consideration later, as to whether it is proper that the hon. lady should be given leave to introduce her bill at the present time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Perhaps I may be allowed to say a word on the point which has been raised. It would appear to me that a resolution of the house would have no legislative effect. What the hon. lady is seeking to do is legislate to change the laws of Canada. There does not seem to me to be any incompatibility between the houses of parliament approving a convention which has been entered into and subsequent legislation to implement that convention.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Minister of Justice for drawing attention to the possible point of order. I think no conflict arises at this stage, though it might as the bills progress if they turn out to be identical or very similar; because the house cannot, of course, carry on the same debate under two headings. But at this stage I think there is no obstacle to the hon. lady proceeding with her bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ONTARIO—REPORTED PLAN TO REORGANIZE COURTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister say if he has been consulted with respect to the proposed reorganization of the Ontario courts, introduced in the legislature yesterday by the attorney general; and if so is he prepared to introduce the necessary complementary legislation in this house in the near future?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I am not aware of the particulars of any measure introduced by the attorney general in the Ontario legislature yesterday, so I cannot say whether I have been consulted on the precise proposal. I can say, however, that the attorney general of Ontario and I have had discussions on the desirability of increasing the number of judges of the high court of Ontario, and I have indicated that subject to the approval of my colleagues, I am prepared to recommend the appropriate legislation to this house.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PURCHASE OF PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Will the minister inform the house whether there have been any discussions between members of the government or officers of the Canadian National Railways and members of the government of British Columbia or officers of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, with respect to the purchase of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway by the Canadian National Railways, or have any such discussions been proposed?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Acting Minister of Transport): I shall take the question as notice and refer it to the Minister of Transport, but it is obviously a question for the order paper; it is far too long for oral question and answer.

HEALTH INSURANCE

QUEBEC—ALLEGED BANKRUPTCY OF HOSPITAL PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that the government of Quebec has made bankrupt the hospitalization plan in that province?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: What steps does the minister intend to take to assist the people of Quebec who are the creditors in this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is perhaps making a noteworthy attempt to enlarge the jurisdiction of the federal government, but I do not see that his question comes under the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

MANITOBA

NEW SITE FOR TOWN OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the Minister of Public Works a question which was passed to him by his colleague the Minister of Transport on Friday last, and ask the minister whether he has any report to make to the house on any plans or proposals there may be for moving the townsite of Churchill, Manitoba.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that matter has been under consideration. Inasmuch as it is a matter which primarily involves the province of Manitoba, and inasmuch as consultations are under way at the present time and no decision has been reached, I am unable to make any further statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister able to state whether these consultations will be concluded at an early date?

Mr. Walker: When they are concluded, Mr. Speaker, a report will be made to the house.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in view of his knowledge of and responsibility for this matter. Could the minister say whether an official application has been received from the British Columbia government or an agency of that government for a federal permit authorizing the construction of a dam or dams on the Peace river? If so, what is the present status of the application?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his intention to ask this question, but as I entered the building only a few moments ago I did not have time to check in detail. Therefore the only answer I can give is that to my knowledge no application has been received. I shall ask my colleague the Minister of Public Works whether he has knowledge of such an application, which would probably be directed to him officially.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Public Works as a supplementary question?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Up to the moment no application has been received.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OUTER SPACE—SUGGESTED JOINT DEVELOPMENT FOR PEACEFUL PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he would care to comment on the message sent by Chairman Khrushchev to President Kennedy suggesting that the United States and Russia might pool their effort in the development of outer space for peaceful uses.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, according to the press today Mr. Khrushchev sent a message in that sense to the President of the United States and suggested there should be co-operation of a scientific, technical and material nature between these two nations in outer space.

As the house will recall, this is a matter which I had the honour of bringing before the United Nations in September, 1960. On an earlier occasion I spoke of this to the Canadian Bar Association and put forward the proposition that in view of the tremendous potentialities in outer space for good and evil, action should be taken among the nations before it is too late to achieve the means to ensure to all nations, great or small, sovereign equality in outer space and, as well, to ensure that outer space will be used for scientific and peaceful purposes. It was also suggested on behalf of Canada that international agreement should be reached as soon as possible on the use of outer space entirely for peaceful purposes, regulating against its use for military purposes.

Anything that may be done to advance such an agreement will certainly receive Canada's support. It is one of the most outstanding problems facing mankind. After what happened yesterday and the two previous flights that were made by U.S.S.R. astronauts, it must be generally considered by mankind that now is the time to prevent developments in outer space that would add to the fear of mankind. In other words, now is the time for the establishment of the rule of law internationally for the control of outer space for peaceful purposes.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is the government considering taking any diplomatic initiative in this regard with either of the two powers concerned?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the hon. gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, since this proposition was advanced at the United Nations, discussions have been taking place. As he knows, it has been the hope of mankind for a thousand years that nations might agree on the rule of international law applicable to all nations. We have not been able to achieve it in the terrestrial sphere; we hope it can be achieved in the extraterrestrial sphere before it is too late.

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): I wish to ask the Prime Minister a somewhat related question, Mr. Speaker. Having in mind yesterday's epic feat by the United States astronaut, would the Prime Minister give consideration to the sending of an invitation to John Glenn, Jr. and the members of his family to visit Ottawa in order that he may learn at first hand of the warmth of our affection?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure that Canadians as a whole would welcome such a visit, Mr. Speaker. I do not think any words that could be added to those that have already been used could reassure him more that he would receive a tremendous welcome here in this country.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED ABUSE OF DIPLOMATIC MAIL PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask of the Postmaster General a question of which I sent him notice. It relates to a protest I received about the use of diplomatic mail by the United States government in order to deliver propaganda to Canadians. My question is general. Can the minister indicate whether there is any abuse of the free diplomatic mail privileges of foreign countries in respect of distributing propaganda in Canada?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Under the terms of an agreement among the countries of North America, South America and Spain, each of us enjoys franking privileges in the other countries and no control whatsoever is exercised over the contents of mail which is handled in that way. I might nor do I think anyone else does so, to papers printed for the use of the committee on foreign affairs of the United States congress passing through our mails.

PENITENTIARIES

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING CERTAIN PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): I wish to direct to the Minister of Justice a question of which I sent notice. I will put my question in French.

(Translation):

Is the Minister of Justice in a position to make a progress report to the house on the negotiations held with the provinces with a view to extending the jurisdiction of the federal government in penitentiary matters concerning inmates under a sentence of one year and over?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question.

As I have stated before in the house, the federal government will not be in a position to assume these new responsibilities until a few years from now. Besides, I dealt with that problem in the house last year. The hon. member will find further details if he refers to Hansard of June 12, 1961.

(Text):

DRUGS

ALLEGED INCREASE IN COST RESULTING FROM PROMOTIONAL ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare based on an article in this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that the British Columbia medical association is of the opinion that sales promotional activities engaged in by pharmaceutical firms add considerably to the resale cost of certain drugs. If so, would the minister care to comment?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have not seen the article, and would not care to comment on it without perusing it.

SPORTS

ADVISORY COUNCIL—INQUIRY AS TO REQUESTS FOR GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I have a question I should like to put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but I will ask it in French.

(Translation):

Could the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the house whether he has received one or more requests with regard to the $5 million available to the national advisory council on physical fitness and amateur sport?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On Monday last I met with the provincial ministers to discuss arrangements for agreements with the provinces. At this conference we simply discussed how an agreement would be drawn up, and the officials of the provinces and of my own department were discussing this matter again yesterday. At this stage the officials of my department have proposed to draw up a draft agreement and send it out to the provinces for their consideration, and thus far there has been no request for actual funds.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL MARKETING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. My question is based on the astounding fact that the government members and members of the official opposition voted against the principle of marketing legislation last night.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the government intends to amend the marketing legislation.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Before the question is answered, Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order. Knowing as we do that hon. members are in the habit of sending out copies of Hansard containing the questions they have asked and answers they have received, I suggest to Your Honour that this question in this form should not be asked because my hon. friend has made an assertion—and that therefore makes the question out of order—and an inaccurate assertion which puts the question beyond the pale. I think this is important, because otherwise Hansard will go out containing inaccurate and out of order assertions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): If I might say a word on that point of order, I should like to point out that there is a third ground that the Minister of Justice could have given, and that the house took a decision on this matter last night, and a decision of the house is not subsequently debatable by any hon. member, even in the guise of a question.

Mr. Herridge: If the question offends the rules, then as a very green member in this position I apologize.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member demonstrates his experience. It is quite true that the hon. member began his question most improperly by reflecting upon a decision of the house. Objection having been taken, he will certainly have to delete that part of his question. As to the part of his question that remains, I forget whether it could stand alone. If he has a bona fide question of the parliamentary secretary, he may ask it.

Mr. Herridge: In view of recent events, would the parliamentary secretary inform the house whether the government intends any amendment to the marketing legislation?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's question comes within the category of those related to general policy. If he limits it to any present intention to introduce a bill he might get by with it. However, I am afraid he cannot ask it in this form.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture if he is in a position to inform this house as to whether there is any intention, at this session, of introducing legislation to deal with the marketing of agricultural products.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Agriculture): This is a question to be decided by the government, and when a decision on this matter is taken it will be announced to the house in the ordinary course.

TELEVISION

HALIFAX—ALLEGED INFRACTION OF RULES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of National Revenue whether the board of broadcast governors has found that the program entitled "Youth Wants to Know", which appeared on television station CJCH in Halifax, involved an infraction of the rules of the board of broadcast governors. If the hon. gentleman has not the information to hand, would he take the question as notice and report to the house?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will be glad to take the question as notice. I had not heard of the matter in any way until the hon. member raised it.

COMBINES

DRUGS—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and ask if he is able to indicate when he might be in a position to table the report of the restrictive trade practices commission relating to the pricing and selling policies of certain pharmaceutical houses.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, I have no specific information on that matter. I know the commission is endeavouring to bring in its report as soon as possible, but I will make inquiries to find out.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night I was dealing with the question of the export of hydro power generated in Canadian plants. I should like to make it quite clear that I am dealing with this subject in a very general way and that my remarks have no relationship to the specific and unique case relating to downstream benefits on the Columbia river. These benefits, Mr. Speaker, are a payment to Canada by power at site in compensation for the flooding of a beautiful valley in British Columbia. This flooding would be of no benefit to British Columbia unless the people of British Columbia received—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I think our sound amplification system is not working well and I hope hon. members will dispose themselves to listen, because it is almost impossible to hear.

Mr. Broome: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I say, unless these benefits flow to the people of British Columbia, unless they are of value to the people of British Columbia then there is no excuse for the flooding of this valley. This question, of course, because of its peculiarity and its uniqueness, is the subject of negotiation between the federal government and the government of British Columbia.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that the export of power should, I think, be considered in the same way as the export of any other commodity such as gas or oil, except that provision must always be made for the orderly recapture of this power as required by Canada. We do not export gas and oil except when there is a surplus to foreseeable Canadian requirements. The same policy should apply to hydro power.

At this session, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has introduced the subject of a national power grid. Eventually this grid will be built and will bring advantages to all parts of Canada. However, this grid must be based upon hydro power because it will bring power from remote localities, where hydro power is usually developed, to large load consuming centres. Thermal power on the other hand, whether it be coal, oil, gas or nuclear power, is generated in plants adjacent to load consuming centres, and thermal power plants can be scaled in proportion to a particular need. As the load grows extra turbines can be added. By comparison, hydro installations usually result in very large blocks of power becoming immediately available. One cannot dam half a river. When a dam is completed and the reservoir is filled, then the power is available but local demand cannot use all this power. It can only use a small proportion of it.

It seems to me that initially much of such power will be available for export and, as I say, if it is controlled under a treaty or regulations established by the national energy board then the surplus power can be sold for a definite period of time and provision can be made for its orderly recapture. Thermal power usually involves high operating costs; hydro power has large capital costs and low operating costs. Now, however, the gap between power costs, comparing hydro with thermal, is closing. The increased cost of money and increase in transmission costs will ultimately increase the cost of hydro power, but if we wait until local demand can use all the hydro power at any particular site then I think we shall be losing a chance to develop a very real national resource.

We in British Columbia have some 33 million horsepower capacity of hydro energy which is undeveloped, and there is no reason why this hydro energy cannot be developed as markets are available and as prices can be secured which will cover the cost of carrying the new installations until such time as either local demand or the provision of a national grid will allow the marketing of this power in Canada.

I have been asked many times what the Conservative government has done for the people of Canada, and when from memory I have given only a partial list, invariably

I am then asked why we do not let the people know what we are doing. Evidently our press relations need improving, because the story of the real achievements of this government has not been fully understood.

When this government took over in June, 1957 we had already entered a recession. The famous hidden report of government economists, presented to the Liberal government in the spring of 1957, warned the government that all was not well with the economy of the country. Unemployment was rising, business was slowing down, exports were falling off, and it was time for strong government action to control these forces of recession. The Liberal government chose to ignore this report. They maintained their tight money policy, claiming that inflation was the real menace, not recession.

Looking back it is easy to understand how this happened. They had been in power during war years, first the second world war and then the Korean war. They then had no problem of unemployment. After the war there was the gigantic job of rebuilding Europe and satisfying the pent up demand for consumer goods. There was no problem in selling either at home or abroad. We could sell all we could produce and within reason at whatever price we wished to ask. It was a market where salesmen did not have to sell, they simply took orders.

By 1957 this easy selling era had disappeared and we were once again meeting aggressive competition in the markets of the world, and increasing foreign competition in our domestic market. Japan and western Europe had rebuilt their war-destroyed industrial power, and with active government assistance were increasing their sales at the expense of ours.

It is a fact of nature, Mr. Speaker, that when any species refuses to evolve to meet changing environmental conditions that threaten its existence, then that species disappears; and this, I suggest, can be applied to governments also. I do not mean to imply that the Liberal party is as dead as the dodo, the mastodon or the dinosaur, but their policy in 1957 was strictly for the dinosaurs.

In 1957 they offered a six bucks raise in the old age pension to stimulate consumer spending when they had a $300 million surplus. They offered nothing for housing, although housing starts had dropped to the lowest point in years and they had $150 million voted by parliament for N.H.A. loans which they would not release. They offered no aid to exporters, nothing to small business, no reduction in taxes, nothing except wartime thinking for a peacetime economy. Today the Liberal party says "Liberals have the answers", but the same leaders who say this today had none of the answers in 1957. Five years ago they had none of the answers; today they say they have them all. What a change in five years.

When this government took office the $150 million in the N.H.A. fund was immediately released. A few months later the total was increased to $400 million; in May, 1958 to $750 million; in March, 1959 to $1 billion; in March, 1960 to $1.5 billion, and in September, 1961 to $2 billion. Total amount of loans that may be made by approved commercial lenders was increased 50 per cent from $4 billion to $6 billion. Down payments on new homes were lowered to 5 per cent, which is $500 on a $10,000 home.

These bold moves led to unprecedented expansion in the housing industry, an easier road to home ownership for the average Canadian, and the provision of jobs for 1.5 million Canadians in construction and in manufacturing, supplying timber, cement, household appliances and furnishings, and the thousand and one items which go into a home. We have extended the scope of this program to include loans to build university residences, loans to municipalities to build sewage disposal plants and extensions to trunk sewers. The new Vancouver sewage disposal plant could not have been built without this assistance, and there are new residences going up on the campus of U.B.C. which could not have been built without this assistance.

In the field of social justice, payments to old age pensioners were increased to $55, and this month to $65. The same increases were applied to pensions for the blind and disabled, and for those on old age assistance. Residence requirements were lowered from 20 years to 10 years and old age pensions were made portable so they could be paid to those Canadians who live outside Canada for health or other reasons.

It may not be generally known that this government increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent the proportion of revenue received from federal sales tax and personal and corporation income taxes earmarked to pay for old age pensions. The result was that in 1961 pension payments were $592 million and tax receipts to cover those payments were $603 million, leaving a surplus of $17 million. Under the Liberals the old age pension fund had a cumulative deficit of around $500 million. We are attempting to make this fund self-supporting and therefore payable as of right. Undoubtedly the recent increase will throw the fund into a temporary deficit position, but the growth in our economy will provide increased revenue which will eventually bring the fund back into a balanced position.

In 1962-63 old age pensions amounting to some $737 million will be paid to 930,000 Canadians. This money will be spent for goods and services, and will provide a stimulus to the entire Canadian economy. In total all social justice payments have been increased from $1.3 billion in 1956-57 to $2.3 billion in 1960-61, an increase of 77 per cent.

The speech from the throne indicated the desire of the government to introduce a system of contributory and portable pensions. As reported at page 531 of Hansard the Minister of National Health and Welfare had this to say about this proposal:

> The second aspect of making adequate income provision for our senior citizens relates to the question of contributory old age survivors and disability insurance which, as indicated in the speech from the throne, is to be placed before parliament if the provinces view with favour a suitable amendment to section 94(a) of the British North America Act.
> The government's objective in this regard is clear cut. Our aim is to have an integrated program of old age income security which, in addition to the universal flat rate benefit, will provide a graduated benefit for all those who can reasonably afford further provision for their old age and who have not already undertaken it under private pension plans or other contractual agreements.

As the house knows, this government, through federal-provincial conferences called by the Minister of Justice, has been endeavouring to reach agreement on the question of having our constitution amended in Canada. This has been our hope. We now feel it is necessary to ask the provinces to agree to an amendment to the B.N.A. Act so we may proceed to carry out our decisions in this regard.

In another area very vital to Canada, what is our record in regard to export trade, because Canada is more dependant upon export trade than any other industrialized nation? At least one job in five depends upon export trade, and in British Columbia the ratio is even higher. Dealing with commodity exports only, the total for 1956 was $4.8 billion. In 1961, taking the latest figures available, October 1960 to October 1961, they were $5.7 billion, an increase of $900 million. In 1956 we had a trade deficit of almost $600 million, while in 1961 we will have a balanced trade with exports slightly greater than imports. Also, Mr. Speaker, as you know our trade will be at an all time record high.

This has not happened by chance, but because this government went out to aid our exporters in every way possible. We eliminated the exchange premium on the Canadian dollar and immediately made our goods more competitive in world markets. We provided export credit facilities to provide long term financing for capital goods exports, and we made $200 million available for this purpose. To date almost $186 million has been committed, and this session we have increased this fund to $300 million. These facilities allow Canadian manufacturers to sell fully manufactured goods on credit and meet the competition of foreign firms in this regard, particularly United States firms operating through the export-import bank. We are participating in more international trade fairs than ever before; we are sending overseas more trade missions than ever before, and our trade commissioner service has been told to get out and sell Canadian goods.

Any discussion of trade would be incomplete without a reference to the European common market and the strong possibility that Britain will join this association. As far as I am concerned, I believe that what is best for Britain's long range interests will also be best for Canada. I would prefer a strong Britain in the common market to a weak Britain outside. Many people have suggested that Canada should join the common market. The truth of the matter is that we cannot join the common market. As the Minister of Finance said in a speech to the Kiwanis club in Montreal on February 1, when referring to the European economic community:

> Six European countries seeking closer integration, partly for economic and partly for political reasons, signed in March, 1957 what has come to be known as the treaty of Rome, which provides for the establishment of their common market.

He went on to point out that this treaty applies only to European countries, although there is provision for associate countries to join the common market. These associate countries were originally the French community in Africa and underdeveloped countries whose products would be complementary to and would not conflict with European products. They are countries which are not industrialized. There is no provision for industrialized countries such as Canada to join the European common market and, as the minister went on to say when speaking to high ranking officials in Europe, "We cannot join, and we would not be welcome even if we tried."

Finally, Mr. Speaker, before I leave the subject of trade let me point out that not only is our export trade at a record high but we now have a more diversified trade pattern. We have markedly increased our exports to the United Kingdom, western Europe, South America and commonwealth markets other than the United Kingdom. Although the United States is still our largest customer, all our eggs are no longer in one basket.

In regard to contributions to the provinces, it is a little known fact that up to March 31, 1961 the cumulative increases in federal contributions to the provinces and provincial institutions exceeded the cumulative budget deficit for the same period of time by almost $300 million. In other words, if these additional payments had not been made there would have been no deficit. For instance, payments to all provinces for hospital insurance this year will be $284 million.

Let us look at the picture as far as payments to British Columbia are concerned. In 1956-57 the Liberals contributed $7 million to the trans-Canada highway construction. This year we will contribute $17 million. By the time this highway is completed the federal government will have contributed over $100 million to the province of British Columbia, or about 25 per cent of all the money paid to all the provinces. An additional $40 million will have been spent on the highways and national parks in British Columbia since 1957. Yet the highway is plastered with signs leading the motorist to believe this is the work of the Social Credit government alone.

In the fiscal year 1956-57 the Liberal government gave just over $17 million in conditional grants to the province of British Columbia. In the present fiscal year this government will contribute over $70 million. Payments for old age security, family allowance, blind and disabled persons allowance, veterans payments, hospital construction grants, unemployment insurance, old age assistance, and so on amounted in 1956-57 to $137 million and in 1960-61 to $245 million, which includes $22½ million paid to British Columbia for hospital insurance for 1960-61. Just over $33 million was paid to British Columbia for hospital insurance prior to 1961, and in the 1962 estimates $26.4 million is provided for this same purpose.

Therefore by the end of the 1962 fiscal year British Columbia will have received over $82 million for hospital services. In the province of British Columbia we were already paying a 5 per cent sales tax, of which 2 per cent was earmarked for hospital services. When the federal government agreed to cover half of the costs of hospital services the premier of British Columbia indicated that the province was in a deficit position in regard to payments for hospital insurance, and that these payments from the federal government would be used to offset this deficit.

Well, the deficit has been far offset by now; yet there has been no reduction in our sales tax, and the money which is coming from the federal government to help pay the cost of hospital insurance in British Columbia is going into consolidated revenue to be used for whatever purposes the provincial government may wish to use it. I wonder how many Vancouver taxpayers know that each year this government has paid back to the provincial government, as a special grant, 50 per cent of the taxes collected from the B.C. Electric Co.

We have doubled the per capita allowance for university students. We have increased grants for hospital construction. We have brought in a ship building subsidy to help our ship building industry—a measure which is of major importance to the west coast. We have increased the capital of the industrial development bank to $400 million and made this money available as loans to small business. We held down freight rates by government subsidy to help, in particular, British Columbia and the maritimes.

All these measures, together with many others which I have not named, were aimed at stimulating the Canadian economy, increasing purchasing power, increasing exports and accelerating the development of our national resources. We were fighting unemployment and a sluggish economy caught in a typical North American recession.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): The speech from the throne is more notable for its omissions that for what it contains. It includes only passing reference to the great and important issues of the day. Not much is proposed in order to get Canada going again.

Dynamics of growth such as trade, industry and immigration, for example, are scarcely considered at all. The urgency of deciding on a defence policy for Canada is not realized. This view is shared by many thoughtful observers. For instance, the Globe and Mail of January 20, 1962, in an editorial entitled "The Uncertain Trumpet" had this to say:

> There was a general expectation in Canada this week that the speech from the throne opening what presumably is the last session of the present parliament would be a resounding election manifesto. It has proved to be nothing of the kind. It would be difficult to imagine anything further from a blast of trumpets. It is in fact, a curiously thin and inadequate statement from a government which must soon face the voters.

The financial editor of the Montreal Gazette takes a similar attitude in his column. On January 19 he is quoted as saying:

> A reluctance to come to grips with really basic issues is also apparent in the references to the British entry into the common market.

He was referring to the speech from the throne. The government's defence policy, or lack of policy, remains unchanged. There is no indication as to whether or not Canadian troops will be armed with atomic warheads.

However, the question is becoming increasingly urgent with the passing of the months since the last session of parliament ended. Since that time, Canada has acquired its first F-101 interceptors. The Royal Canadian Air Force has recently taken over operational control of the Bomarc station at North Bay; we are advised by the minister that it will be in charge of maintenance, heating and so on. Furthermore, an Honest John battalion has been sent to join our brigade group in Europe. In each case a decision has yet to be made as to whether or not these weapons will be armed with nuclear warheads. Two of them, at least, we have been told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) only reached maximum effectiveness when so armed. We were told earlier, too, that there was, as an alternative, the possibility that they could be armed with conventional warheads. We have since learned, and it was really no surprise to us, that no conventional warheads have been designed, let alone are readily available for our armed forces. This is a ludicrous position. We are spending a lot of money for weapons systems which are now operational except for the fact that they are unarmed, and we are continuing to spend hundreds of millions of dollars for further weapons systems which are in the same category.

This lack of decision on the part of the government is extremely frustrating to our allies. I know that the United States government and the armed forces are thoroughly frustrated because they cannot get any decision one way or another from the Canadian government. I know, too, that our allies in Europe feel the same way. If a decision were made not to arm our armed forces with atomic warheads, at least that would be understood and the necessary adjustments would follow. On the other hand, if we should decide to arm them, that decision would be understood and appreciated. But the failure to reach any decision is altogether incomprehensible to our allies in NATO and Canada has become the laughing stock of the world as a result.

Discussing this question of atomic warheads yesterday afternoon, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) put forward his own policy in this respect or, at least, he stated that his policy was different from that held by frontbench members of his party. Closer examination leads one to wonder, however, where it is actually a third policy or whether it is just part of the same old confused policy. He said:

> After we have explored every possible avenue for working out a successful agreement we must then accept the advice of our professional military people. If they consider it is necessary to the defence of Canada that we have nuclear weapons, I believe we have no other course to follow. However, I emphasize that this should not be done until every avenue has been fully explored toward reaching a successful agreement on disarmament. The taking on of nuclear weapons prior to that would hopelessly prejudice any discussions or negotiations that might lead to a successful agreement.

That is quite a mouthful. How long does the hon. member think we should wait before a decision is made? How long does he think disarmament discussions will continue to take place? They have already been going on for years, but no concrete results have been achieved. Does he think we should wait another three years? Does he think we should wait another five? Unless the hon. member is prepared to state categorically the length of time he has in mind, his proposal makes no sense at all; it is in fact no different from the one put forward from time to time by other members of the government party.

Mr. Pallett: Does the hon. member have an alternative proposal?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes. I think a decision should be made one way or another.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: This is a most urgent matter and it deserves discussion in more detail; I shall perhaps have an opportunity to go into it more deeply in another debate. But at the present time I urge the government who, after all have the responsibility under our system for making a decision, to announce its intentions in this regard.

What about the dynamics of growth. Has the government's immigration policy helped or hindered our national development? On April 5, 1957, at Toronto the Prime Minister promised a vigorous immigration policy to bring immigrants to Canada to increase the population. Later in the same month, on April 25, he indicated to the ethnic press association in Toronto that annual immigration up to 4 per cent of the population was feasible. This worked out to approximately 640,000 persons per annum. That was quite a vision, but the fulfilment has been something of a revelation. Immigration has been declining steadily. Last year saw the lowest number of people entering Canada in a decade.

On the other hand, emigration is increasing. More people are leaving Canada for their native lands and the United States. Most alarming of all is the fact that the people who are leaving Canada are those who have the most skill. We talk about the necessity of greater skill among our working force, yet the people who are leaving us by tens of thousands are those who have the greatest skills. These are the people we most urgently need if our country is to grow and develop.

Why are they leaving in such large numbers? Why does this trend accelerate? How can it be reversed? I think one of the reasons for its acceleration must be the lack of challenge in this country. It must be the lack of faith these people have in Canada. If it were otherwise they would not leave but would stay and assist as best they can in the development of this nation.

I think the problem was aptly summed up by the late Judith Robinson in one of her columns in referring to the summary fashion in which the cancellation of the Avro Arrow was undertaken by this government when she said the tragedy to her was not the cancellation of a particular project but the loss of faith of a whole generation of young Canadians in the future of their country. This, Mr. Speaker, is in fact the real tragedy, one which has not yet been overcome.

There is little indication that the government has given much thought to the relationship between interest rates and economic growth. This is a subject which merits study. What is the relationship between government deficits and interest rates? At the time of the election in 1957 one of the things we were not promised was deficits. Speaking at a press conference in Saskatoon on May 27, 1957 the Prime Minister included among his promises the following:

> John Diefenbaker said today a Progressive Conservative government could carry out its declared policy, reduce unnecessary taxes "and still do it on a balanced budget".

Mr. Martel: We reduced taxation by 42 per cent.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. gentleman claims that taxation was reduced. Total taxation has certainly increased and the deficits we were not promised have been growing in total. The inference of this and other statements made by the Prime Minister at that time was that we would have Diefenbaker, not deficits. Well, Mr. Speaker, we hit the jackpot, we got both.

There are important questions to be answered. Why does the level of unemployment remain so high? Why is the rate of growth of the labour force declining so rapidly? The statistics are interesting. For example, between 1956 and 1957, January to January, the growth in the labour force was 202,000, between 1957 and 1958 it was 195,000; between 1958 and 1959 it was 99,000; between 1959 and 1960 it was 127,000; and between 1960 and 1961 it was 193,000. In January of 1962 the growth stood at only 13,000. There has been a dramatic decline from a growth of between 100,000 and 200,000 per year to an annual growth of only 13,000 people. Where have they gone? What has happened to them? Are they all going back to their native lands or the United States? Are they too discouraged to remain in the labour force? Perhaps some of them are remaining at school for a longer period of time. It is to be hoped that is so, but it would be interesting to know.

Mr. Chambers: Perhaps the birth rate has something to do with it.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. member would be in a better position than I to judge that.

One of the most important failures of the speech from the throne was its failure to indicate any positive initiative toward the far reaching re-organization of world trading patterns. There was no evidence of a change of heart on the part of the government. There was no evidence of the emergence of a realistic attitude. There was much evidence of a negative, obstructionist and unyielding attitude at Accra and since.

One does not have to look far for the reports and I wish to mention just two or three. The Ottawa Citizen of September 14 last carried the following news item datelined Accra, Ghana:

> Canada has warned Britain that she cannot be the leader of the commonwealth and a member of the European common market, too.
> In an emotional intervention at Wednesday's session of the commonwealth economic consultative council, finance minister Donald Fleming said an eloquent requiem for the system of trading preferences that has bound the British nations together for a generation.

On the same day a Canadian Press dispatch was carried in the Ottawa Journal datelined Accra:

> Finance minister Donald Fleming of Canada said Wednesday the United Kingdom is irretrievably "launched on a slippery slope" to membership in the European common market. As a result the commonwealth will never be the same again.

Mr. Clark Davey, the Globe and Mail correspondent wrote in that paper on the same date:

> Commonwealth members, with Canada's trade minister George Hees making the keynote speech, emphatically told Britain today that she must choose between the European common market and the commonwealth.
> In an uncompromising statement to the commonwealth economic conference here, Mr. Hees presented what amounted to a flat Canadian demand that Britain not join the common market.

Canada had expected more, Mr. Speaker. We had hoped for something positive. We hoped our ministers would go there to preserve as best they could the real interests of Canada and the free world. Many were dismayed at the attitude displayed by the representatives of the government at that time. This was well summed up by the Globe and Mail on October 3, 1961 when it stated editorially that Canada had expected more from its representatives at Accra.

The attitude of this government seems to be typical of Tory attitudes throughout the generations. It is not unlike the attitude of the late R. B. Bennett in the thirties. It might interest hon. members to know that in the book "Neville Chamberlain" by Iain Macleod, at page 161, there appears an extract from a letter written by Chamberlain to his sister on August 21, 1932, from Ottawa, at the time of the imperial conference. The extract is as follows:

> In spite of the anxieties they caused us I have no complaint to make of the Australians or New Zealanders. They had to think of the difficulties of their own people . . . They were quite straightforward about it.
> Bennett was a different proposition. He alternately blustered, bullied, sobbed, prevaricated, delayed and obstructed to the very last moment.

I am sure that the same attitude Mr. Chamberlain observed at that time on the part of the Tory government of that day was displayed by our representatives at the Accra conference. Canadians generally favour Canadian participation and British participation in enlarging the trading area. On numerous occasions this has been voiced by many leaders in the industrial and commercial world. I should like to cite just two or three examples. Mr. John Meyer, the Gazette financial editor, is reported as follows:

> Uncertainty about Canadian policy towards the European common market was described last night as one of the strongest inhibitions on economic growth.
> John Meyer, financial editor of the Gazette, told the Montreal chapter of the national office management association, that a decision in favour of applying for an associate membership in the common market would do more to prolong the present recovery than any other factor.

Another distinguished gentleman is reported as follows:

> Moncton, N.B.—Eric W. Kiernans, president of the Montreal and Canadian stock exchanges, said Thursday night it is time for Canada to shake off its unnatural conservatism and to apply for associate membership in the European common market.

Later on he says this:

> Emotional exhortations about the traditional ties that bind the commonwealth countries will have little effect on the hard decisions that must be made by Great Britain and by ourselves.

In another article from the Gazette, entitled "Bankers for Most Canadian Businessmen" the following report appears:

> G. Arnold Hart, A. T. Lambert and F. William Nicks—the presidents respectively of the Bank of Montreal, Toronto-Dominion Bank and Bank of Nova Scotia—not surprisingly, make much the same point in their addresses to annual meetings. They emphasize the urgency of being realistic about Britain's application for membership in the common market—Mr. Hart: "A positive approach . . . instead of merely opposing changes from existing arrangements;" Mr. Lambert: ". . . exploiting the opportunities . . ." rather than "negative reaction of dismay"; Mr. Nicks: ". . . face realistically the changes that have taken place in Europe and seek ways of adapting ourselves to them."

[Mr. Hellyer.]

These are typical of the reactions of business leaders from coast to coast. They are outward looking. They are forward looking. They know that Canada must take a positive initiative and not continue, as it has been doing, on a negative course. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) returned to Canada and found that people here were making statements along this line and that Canadian public opinion was not what he had expected while he was away, he accused the opposition of using the big lie tactics in referring to what he and the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said. I have in my hand a newspaper report headed: "Fleming Hits 'Big Lie' Use by Liberals". It reads in parts as follows:

> Toronto—Finance Minister Fleming accused the Liberal party last night of using "big lie" tactics in attacking the government's position regarding Britain's possible entry to the European common market.
> Mr. Fleming said there has been "distortion" of the position taken by Canada at the recent commonwealth economic conference at Accra, Ghana.

This is a serious charge, Mr. Speaker. Just to set the record straight I should like to read to you what the Minister of Finance had said just a few days previously in London. I have in my hand a press report headed, "Accra Statement 'Underplayed'—Fleming Raps Market Plans—With Greater Emphasis". It is by Duart Farquharson, of the Journal London bureau and it reads in part as follows:

> The head-on clash between Britain and the overseas commonwealth countries at the Accra finance ministers meeting was not exaggerated but underplayed by the British press, according to Canadian Finance Minister Fleming.
> To set the record straight, Mr. Fleming last week called in leading British correspondents covering the international monetary fund meeting in Vienna. With great emotion, he argued that commonwealth countries were unanimous in their condemnation of Britain's attempt to join the common market. They were not merely striking up bargaining postures, but sincerely believed that such a British move was bound to result in the disintegration of the commonwealth.

That is very strong language, Mr. Speaker, and it is in direct conflict with what the Minister of Finance said in Canada a few weeks later. It is necessary to check because the minister, when he accuses the opposition of using "big lie" tactics is just refuting the facts which he himself so carefully put on the record. It reminds us of his performances in this house on other occasions in the not too distant past. We are really shocked at his short memory.

Is a change coming in the government's position? Many people have thought so and there were some indications that this was so. But now it is obvious that the government has not really changed its attitude. This is reflected in reports based on the speech from the throne and subsequent interrogation in this house. I wish to refer briefly to two press reports. One is from the Gazette of January 15:

> The Canadian government, though reiterating support for freer world trade, hasn't committed itself to joining the proposed United States attempt to get major reductions in world tariff barriers.
> That was made evident Saturday at the close of two days of informal trade talks between cabinet members of the two countries.

Then in an editorial which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 2, 1962, under the heading, "Negative Still?" we find the following:

> Despite its protestations to the contrary, it seems apparent that the government still has no positive policy towards Britain's proposed entry into the European common market, and that it is not yet giving the vigorous leadership the situation demands.

This is most unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, and it is a matter of concern that the government is still negative in its position. It must change. It must adopt a more liberal attitude or Canada may be left as a tiny island isolated from the main stream of world events. The problem—encompassing some of the things about which I have spoken, such as interest rates, immigration, deficits and world trade—is to get Canada growing again. This is the problem which was not faced in the speech from the throne.

There is a growing awareness in Canada that our economy is falling short of its potential. The evidence is all around us, with high levels of unemployment despite the absence of a recession, and an actual decline of the order of 4 per cent since 1956 in the per capita production of goods and services. This evidence corroborates the increasing gap between what we produce and what we can produce. This chronic slack is at the root of our present economic difficulties. To draw attention to this gap is not to wallow in doom and gloom but to emphasize the extent to which we are currently failing to achieve our great potential.

No one can put a price tag on human dignity, humiliation, and frustration at not being able to earn a living. This is one of the incalculable costs. There are, however, two other costs involved which can be measured. First is the cost of carrying the unemployed. Some insight into the magnitude of this cost can be derived from the $900 million depletion of the unemployment insurance fund since December of 1956, and the $250 million spent as the federal share of unemployment assistance schemes financed jointly with the provinces. Much greater is the cost in terms of goods and services that could have been produced had we been able to reduce unemployment as a percentage of our labour force since 1957 to the post-war average, between January 1946 and June 1957, of 3.3 per cent. Since June, 1957, unemployment has averaged 6.2 per cent.

Nor do these levels of unemployment in themselves adequately measure the lack of growth in our economy. Much of the lack of growth is hidden in the short hours worked and in the failure to achieve the levels of productive efficiency that accompany operating at full capacity.

During the entire post-war period, 1946 to 1956, Canadians produced on the average 4.5 per cent more goods and services each year than in the previous year. If this trend had continued through 1961, we would have produced $5.2 billion more than last year. If this had occurred, Mr. Speaker, we would have a surplus now instead of a deficit. This would amount to $100 million a week more goods and services produced than we did in fact produce. No nation can take any satisfaction out of falling that far short of its proven capacity.

Even though the production has been lost, the potential remains. Canadian workers still possess the skills and the drive they exhibited during the post-war era. There has been no excessive depletion of our natural resources. The only resource we are wasting is time. The Canadian economy, since this government has come to power, has been marking time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as an introduction to my participation in this debate, may I be allowed to associate myself with those who have expressed warm words of congratulation to the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Their contribution constituted a truly comprehensive review of the beneficial effects to our economy resulting from the actions taken by this government.

May I at the outset refer to a speech made in this debate by the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick (Mr. Michaud), truly a great friend of mine. I should like however to endeavour to set the record straight as it relates to a few things he mentioned. He did refer to the fact that there were rumours the fishermen were being taken out of the unemployment insurance fund. There is definitely no reason for alarm, Mr. Speaker, but it is unfortunate that rumours such as this one do instil fear in the minds of these brave fishermen who, as every hon. member of this house knows, earn their living in a rather difficult way.

The unemployment insurance fund was established some 20 years ago at a time when conditions were vastly different from those existing today. The coverage of the fund has been extended, and as a result the complexities have been increased. However, this government is aware of the situation and, as in all other cases, has taken action by creating a commission of inquiry to study the effects of seasonal employees on the fund, and to decide upon some other method of taking care of the needs of these seasonal employees. All the members of this government who were in oppsition when the fund was established were aware of the complexities which would develop with the administration of the fund. They were also sure it would not be possible to continue operating the fund on a sound actuarial basis because, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) mentioned, humanitarian reasons compel certain actions. The results have been contrary to the arguments of the mathematicians.

It is also well to bear in mind that since 1957 fishermen have contributed about $5,554,000 to the fund in payments and have received benefits in the amount of $44,706,000. There are also other categories of seasonal workers, such as the inland water transport workers and the loggers. The contributions from logging and lumbering amounted to $4,046,592, and benefits paid amounted to $30,289,530. Although a study is now being made, I certainly would not wish the fishermen to believe there is any danger they are going to be excluded from the benefits of this fund. The study will probably result in the creation of a special fund for seasonal employees. Alternatively, a new fund might be created that would give an incentive to work and an interest on the part of these employees in setting up a savings fund to be matched by the government and the employer.

The hon. member for Kent also referred to the grants made to the province of Newfoundland, to the fishermen of Newfoundland. I do not believe the premier of New Brunswick took the same action as the premier of Newfoundland. Perhaps he is not concerned with the plight of the fishermen and did not ask for the co-operation and help of the federal government. I believe this answers the inquiry: the province of Newfoundland was concerned with the fishermen while New Brunswick and Quebec were not.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, we should now look at the economic situation in our country. After all, the barometer of success or failure of an administration in this respect is our gross national product, which is the yardstick for measuring the total amount of goods and services produced in a country. In order to look at this we must make a comparison, and I shall do so by comparing 1956 and 1961. Our gross national product in 1956 amounted to $30.6 billion and in 1961 to $37.4 billion. In other words, there was an increase of 22 per cent over 1956. With the last quarter of 1961 going at the rate of $39 billion, we can expect an increase in 1962 of 7 per cent or 8 per cent, bringing the gross national product of 1962 to $40.2 billion. As I have said previously, this is the barometer of success or failure and I believe that every hon. member of this house will admit such an increase would indicate the success of this administration. By any gauge surely we can all agree that this result has been phenomenal and that the economy is in high gear. Again, for the sake of comparison, let us return to 1956, although I hate to turn back for such proof.

In 1957 the government of the day had a surplus budget of $257.5 million. This large surplus was the result of post-war activities and was due to increases in exports to those nations devastated by the second world war and the Korean war. In Europe the industrial plants had disappeared. Facilities of production were completely wiped out and a whole rebuilding job had to be done. Much of that surplus was also brought about by filling orders for export, thus causing more employment at home and creating higher domestic purchasing power and consumer spending. However, although this was a nice budgetary surplus I often wonder why it was allowed to be wasted. By the norms of any good administration, part of the surplus could have been put to better use.

When we repair the roof of a house we repair it when the sun is shining, and it was in those days that action should have been taken by the government to prepare for the following years. Instead, the government was satisfied to sit back, become lazy and complacent. Was there no incentive to look ahead? Had the government done so at that time it would have seen the darkening clouds approaching, bringing in their path the evils of unemployment and suffering. Had the manifesto or economic program which we hear so much about today been brought out in 1956—but no one ever heard of such a thing in those days—possibly we would not have had to face the economic ills of 1957 and 1958.

Mr. Hellyer: You mean the government would not have changed.

Mr. Keays: What was that?

Mr. Hellyer: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Keays: After I am through. Let us look at Germany, France and Italy, those burgeoning, fast growing and full employment countries. They have not taken everything for granted. They are not reclining, sitting back on their laurels satisfied with their present full employment and productivity. They are working harder than ever helping business to expand, assisting to increase exports, and increasing per capita production. During their prosperous years they did not impose overtaxation, draining revenues from their corporations and impeding progress. They are using their revenues to advantage, climbing toward higher levels and thereby playing a useful part in assisting industry with technical help, monetary facilities and encouragement.

It is interesting to note that the gross product of the six countries in the common market rose last year by 6.5 per cent. Trade within the community expanded by 45 per cent since the treaty of Rome went into operation, and their exports, taking all six together, increased over 50 per cent in the same year. This was the result of the planning undertaken in those countries while business was good and where surpluses were used to advantage.

What did the Conservative government do in 1957 when faced with this unpalatable situation? They went to work through the able Minister of Finance, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Labour, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Agriculture. Public works programs were immediately set in operation to alleviate the serious conditions of that time. The government increased the housing program until today we have reached the point where we are the largest builders per capita in the world in this field. It represents 18 per cent of our gross national product as against 11 per cent in the United States and 8 per cent in the United Kingdom.

The Department of Labour by extension of the benefit periods, by aid to the provinces for vocational training, by a contribution to trade schools whereby competent people were trained to meet the changes caused by automation and advanced technology helped to bring about a situation in which production of commodities never before manufactured in Canada has been achieved.

The Department of Finance, by lowering the exchange rate on the Canadian dollar provided the main stimulus for an upturn in our economy and a consequent, eventual balanced budget. That department also helped by providing greater loans to small businesses, and by extending the lending facilities of the industrial development bank and by guarantee loans to fishermen and farmers.

With the assistance of the Department of Trade and Commerce bold and imaginative measures were undertaken, such as the promotion of regional trade conferences which have now awakened Canadians to the possibilities of export. The department has also provided export facilities and has assisted in the creation of a productivity council, a body of proven administrators, the aim of which has been defined by its chairman, George DeYoung, as making industry more remunerative, more rewarding for the four groups affected by it—owners, employees, customers and the government. This council has also brought about a change in the thinking of some of the leaders of government, as indicated in the baby budget. It has also brought about a new thinking on the part of some of the industrial leaders in both primary and secondary industry, and there has been a change in the thinking of some of the senior leaders of labour who have been most helpful and co-operative in the establishment of this council.

What a tremendous amount of work has had to be done. Mr. Speaker, could you visualize the past administration willing to undertake that task? They would have given up the ghost long ago. It took a party with a true Canadian spirit and a national history of confidence and vigour, a party with fingertip feeling, faith and confidence, clearness of mind and decision of purpose. The task is not completed, and the results of past undertakings are the incentives to take Canadians to greater heights, to full employment and prosperity.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the hon. member accept a question now?

Mr. Keays: Certainly.

Mr. Hellyer: Is he aware that the $268 million surplus in 1957 to which he referred was already committed for increases in pay for the armed forces and the civil service of Canada, and to pay for the health insurance program which had been put on the statute books by the previous administration?

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, it was $257.5 million. I think that if a part of this surplus had been used for preparing for the future we would have had more balanced budgets afterwards.

Mr. Hellyer: It was all committed.

(Translation):

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I think I should follow the good and established custom of congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne).

I would also congratulate you, sir, on your appointment as Deputy Speaker of this house, and also the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), for receiving a call to the cabinet, as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Speaker, in the speech from the throne, the government seems to take credit for the slight improvement in our political economy. Hence, it should also assume responsibility for the slumps we have known at other times.

We might recall, Mr. Speaker, that, during the elections of 1957 and 1958, supporters of this government alleged that the spending of the Liberal administration was too high and that, if they were chosen to look after the business of this country, they would cut expenditures by at least $500 million.

Let us now look at the results of that promise, Mr. Speaker. The last estimates of the Liberal government in 1957 provided for $4.8 billion, whereas estimates of this government for the year ending on March 31, 1962, show an amount of $6,123 million.

They had promised to reduce taxes and interest rates.

The Prime Minister had said that he would lower taxes by $120 per family, and then he increased them by $36.

The Conservatives had promised to balance the budget while reducing taxes. Now, this is what really happened, Mr. Speaker, since the Conservatives have been in power: taxes have risen by over $150 million a year, and they submitted four deficit budgets, while another one is forecast for March 1962.

From 1946 to 1957, the national debt went down by $2.4 billion, under a Liberal administration, while during the four and a half years of Conservative administration, it rose by almost $2 billion.

In 1958, Mr. Speaker, we had a deficit of $38.6 million; in 1959, another deficit of $632 million; in 1960 there was again a deficit of $413 million; in 1961 of $340 million and, in 1962, the deficit will be about $700 million.

Our gross debt, which, in 1956 was $19,124 million had risen to $20,986 million in March 1960. The interest paid on the debt in 1956 amounted to $492,624,000 and, in 1960, to $735,630,000. The interest per capita was $31.38 in 1956, as compared to $42.17 in 1961. The national debt per capita stood at $664 in 1957, while it reached $688 in March 1961.

Mr. Speaker, they had given the assurance that no Canadian would have to suffer from unemployment. We know what happened to that promise.

In June 1957, when the present government took over the nation's business, there were 197,000 unemployed. On March 22, 1958, 597,000 Canadians suffered from unemployment. On March 19, 1960, the number had reached 609,000. On February 18, 1961, the unemployed numbered 719,000, the largest figure since the thirties when the country was "administered" by a Conservative government under the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett. On March 18, 1961, 705,000 were looking for work. For the week ending January 13, 1962, we had 545,000 unemployed.

During January 1962, there was a slight improvement as compared to the corresponding month in 1961, but the decrease can be partly explained by the unusual number of workers who left the labour market.

In January, the labour force had only increased by 13,000 people as compared to a year earlier.

Mr. Speaker, we note that the unemployment insurance fund was depleted of the $900 million we had in June 1957.

What steps did the government take to cope with unemployment, especially since it did not admit before September 1960 that there was unemployment in Canada. None, save the winter works program which has often been described as inadequate by the opposition. Recently, in another debate, I showed that the contribution of the federal government to the winter works undertaken during 1960-61 only amounted to 12 per cent, while municipalities contributed much more, that is 78 per cent of the costs.

The speech from the throne provided nothing, no efficient assistance to cope with chronic unemployment, especially as it affects certain areas.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from an editorial published in the Toronto Star on February 13 last, to show what the Australian government intends to do in order to solve the two major domestic problems facing that country.

(Text):

Canberra Acts, Ottawa slumbers.

Australia has two serious domestic problems—unemployment and economic stagnation. These are the two domestic problems that afflict Canada.

(Translation):

And the editorial goes on to say, Mr. Speaker:

(Text):

Income tax will be cut 5 per cent.

Unemployment benefits will be raised 10 per cent for single men, 20 per cent for men with families. The federal government will make large scale loans to the state (i.e. provincial) governments for public works.

(Translation):

A little farther on in the same article, Mr. Speaker, one can read:

(Text):

Why doesn't Ottawa follow the example of Canberra? Why doesn't the Canadian government devise and proclaim a broad program to make jobs, to ginger up trade, production and investment, to restore confidence in the economy?

(Translation):

Concerning agriculture, the Prime Minister made the following promise at Massey hall, in Toronto, on April 27, 1957:

We shall see to it that the farmer gets his fair share of the national income, by maintaining a flexible program of price support, in order to guarantee him a share of the satisfactory prices for agricultural products based on an equitable relationship between sale prices and the cost of production.

I now wish to read the preamble of the Agricultural Stabilization Act passed by this parliament in January 1958:

Whereas it is expedient to enact a measure for the purpose of stabilizing the prices of agricultural commodities in order to assist the industry of agriculture to realize fair returns for its labour and investment, and to maintain a fair relationship between prices received by farmers and the costs of the goods and services that they buy, this to provide farmers with a fair share of the national income.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the farmers did not forget the Prime Minister's words, nor the preamble of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. There is no doubt that farmers have not yet received their fair share of the national income. There is no equitable relationship between the prices that Canadian farmers get for their products and the cost of goods and services they buy.

Mr. Speaker, I should like once again to draw the attention of the government to the major problem facing dairy farmers in Canada, that is the stocks of butter, including clarified butter, and the per capita consumption of that product.

In 1956, butter consumption was 19.50 pounds per capita, while it is estimated that it will be less than 16 pounds in 1961. In December 1960, the stocks of butter, including butter oil, were 150 million pounds. At the same period of 1961, we had 200 million pounds.

Mr. Speaker, at this point of my remarks, I should like to draw to your attention the fact that the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) stated yesterday, at page 1065 of Hansard, that the act passed in July 1961 by the Quebec provincial legislature allowing the sale of margarine was partly responsible for the increase in stocks.

I can hardly accept that statement if I compare it with the one made by Mr. Jean Baptiste Lemoyne, president of the U.C.C., on October 16, 1961, as reported in a newspaper item in La Presse of October 17, 1961. I read:

Paradoxically, the sale of margarine has decreased in Quebec since the act making such sale legal was put into effect in early summer.

This was disclosed during a press conference last night by the president of the U.C.C. Mr. Jean Baptiste Lemoyne.

He was then answering a question about his organization's reaction to that legislation.

That legislation has improved the climate which had prevailed until then in that sector, he explained. Also, in spite of the enormous publicity that has been made since July 1, around that product, the quantity sold to the people of Quebec, far from increasing, has gone down.

Mr. Speaker, we know that when that legislation was proposed in the Quebec legislative assembly, it was supported by the U.C.C.

Those accumulated butter surpluses are causing concern within the dairy industry. That is why, at their convention held in Montreal, during the week of January 20 last, the Canadian federation of dairy producers sounded the alarm and appealed to all those who can and must contribute to find a proper solution. Here is what Mr. Paul Henri Lavoie wrote, in an editorial of the weekly Terre de Chez Nous, of January 24, 1962. That article is entitled "The dairy problem: Ottawa cannot brush it off".

And what must we expect from the Ottawa government? A contribution at least equivalent to its share of responsibility for the situation.

A little further, we read the following:

The federal government must have a very heavy conscience on account of its sins of omission in that regard.

And still a little further on, Mr. Lavoie wrote:

Around 1957, when consumers were paying a slightly more reasonable price than they are today for their butter, consumption remained at about the same level, and the need was even contemplated of resorting to some imports, as a result of a decrease in production.

Mr. Lavoie also added:

The example of other countries, where a decrease in the consumer price of butter has increased its sale, should have spurred to action.

Here are, Mr. Speaker, some of the recommendations contained in the brief submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, of which the Quebec U.C.C. is a member, to the Prime Minister of Canada and to the members of his cabinet, on February 7 last, which might help to solve immediately the problem of surpluses. I quote:

(Text):

(1) To halt and reverse the decline in butter consumption by reducing the price to consumers by 14 cents a pound. This is designed to increase consumption so that current production of butter, and over a period of time the butter surplus, will move into consumption in Canada.

(2) To maintain the butter support to the producer at its present level of 64 cents a pound by means of deficiency payments that fully compensate for the proposed reduction in the market price.

(3) It is proposed that a price support of 12 cents a pound be placed on skim milk powder. The virtual disappearance of a return to producers for skim milk powder is an absurd situation. This policy proposal may well result in some accumulation in government hands. We would very strongly emphasize however, that there is no product more needed by, and more suited to the needs of undernourished people of the world than high protein milk powder.

In our trade relations with other countries, at the time the Liberal party was managing our affairs, we were the foremost country in the world, per capita. In 1957, we occupied the second place, in 1959, the third place and, in 1960, the eighth place.

In the field of export trade, we are not the fourth trading country of the world any more, but the fifth. World exports have increased by 21 per cent since 1956, while Canadian exports have increased by only 11 per cent.

Our national production has increased by only 1.7 per cent during the last five years, whereas it had gone up 4.6 per cent during the last five years of the Liberal administration. In 1961, our per capita production was actually lower than the one five years before.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne reveals no coherent program which would indicate that the government is conscious of the new and important trade policies in Europe.

It is most important for Canada that the government reorganize our economy in relation to the common market. If Great Britain were to join the European economic community, not only our agricultural products but our forest products as well would be in trouble as far as their sale is concerned. The importance of our forest industry for Canada's economy is well known.

Last year, the Canadian pulp and paper manufacturers' association sent a trade delegation to Europe to examine the potential market for their products.

Our farmers and the owners of our lumber mills do not have the same facilities and resources to send such delegations. In 1958, there were 5,769 saw mills of all kinds in Canada. That is why the government must show leadership, imagination and daring to protect the markets of those two industries on the European continent.

At this stage of my remarks, I should like to quote two articles. The first, which was written by the chairman of the Canadian pulp and paper manufacturers' association, Mr. Fuller, is entitled, "Trade and Decisions" and reads as follows:

(Text):

Trade and Decisions.

I quote:

My concern at the moment is whether we really know where we want to go and have any sufficient roadmaps to get us there. It is a choice between exciting opportunities for growth; and stagnation. And the world will not wait for us to make up our minds.

(Translation):

The second article I should like to read into the record comes from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I quote from the Ottawa Citizen:

(Text):

When the Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented its brief to the annual federal-provincial agricultural conference in November, the national organization welcomed rather than decried Britain's move to join the European economic community. It believed the long run advantages to Canada and to Canadian farmers would outweigh the short run disadvantages. The C.F.A. said, of course, that every effort should be made in the negotiations to safeguard Canada's export markets for farm products.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, it will have cost the Canadian people $3,126 million in additional expenses on current revenues to have followed the Prime Minister toward new records; and we know, Mr. Speaker, what records we have reached.

Mr. J. Edgar Fournier (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the honour and the privilege of taking part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I have no intention of repeating all the wishes and congratulations offered to the mover Mr. Bourdages (Laval) and seconder Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I will say, however, that I approved of the appointments made by the Prime Minister.

The speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the 24th parliament is all to the credit of our dedicated and generous leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

It is easy to see that our opponents, harassed by political fever and the fear of facing the people at a forthcoming election, are striving by every means, without any consideration for truth or for the good of the Canadian economy, to condemn the progressive proposals found in the speech from the throne.

I think that in order to be a real member of parliament, an hon. member must be broadminded so that he can recognize and even accept any measure which serves the public weal.

Of course, it is the function of the opposition to criticize the government's policy, but criticism must be constructive and not done only to destroy or to satisfy ambitions based on political expediency. If we want to preserve the integrity, the dignity and the value of our democratic system, we must act accordingly.

One thing I find strange and perfectly ridiculous is to see our hon. friends opposite accuse the government of not doing what they themselves neglected to do during the 22 years they were in power, 22 years of suffering for the Canadian people.

Speaking of years of suffering, would some members of a political party dare consider the period between 1939 and 1944, that is the deplorable years of the second world war and the years of reconstruction and rehabilitation which followed, as years of prosperity due to a Liberal administration? Have they already forgotten the suffering and the horror of the Korean war?

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that a certain political party is unable to distinguish between the efforts of a whole nation to protect its freedom and the periods of readjustment which always follow the upheavals caused by modern wars.

It is distressing to have to remind a certain political party of events which caused only sorrow and have left painful memories in practically all Canadian families. This political party claims and even boasts that such periods of prosperity are due to its own efforts. I should like, Mr. Speaker, to show him the skeleton of what his administration was like.

Have they forgotten already the biggest political scandal, the greatest drama ever seen in this house where we are now. This scandal happened under a Liberal regime, and I am convinced that many hon. members who are here, at this moment, and who are aware of all the facts as well as I am, will want to boast about this event and see in it an honourable achievement of the Liberal party. I wish to go back to the year 1946 and to refer to the Gouzenko case and to a certain Mr. Rose, member for Cartier, who sat with the Liberal government while he belonged to the N.K.V.D., the Russian espionage organization.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Fournier: Mr. Speaker, if that scandal had taken place under a Conservative administration, we would have heard about it again and again but you know, everything is perfect.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Levis rises on a point of order.

Mr. Bourget: I regret to interrupt the hon. member in view of the fact that he is a newcomer to this house. He was not here, of course, at the time of the Gouzenko incident. I must remind him that, at the time, Mr. Rose was not a member of the Liberal party. Therefore, I want to point that out to him so that he will be in a position to put forward the facts as they happened. I should not like him to assert that the scandal was due to the Liberal party when he knows very well, or if he does not know, it gives me pleasure to inform him, that Mr. Rose—

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the hon. member for Levis has shown that his point of order was justified. I now recognize the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska.

Mr. Fournier: Mr. Speaker, on the opening day of the session, last January 18, I was surprised at the attitude of the members of the new party, called the New Democratic party—N.D.P. The same letters could be used to call it the new demolished or dismembered party. As I was saying, I was surprised at the attitude of the members of the new party with regard to the appointment of my colleague, the member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), as chairman of the committee of the whole. I wonder if that attitude does not reflect the statement made by the C.C.F. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) at Laval University in Quebec city.

I should like to take this opportunity to thank my hon. friend who so brilliantly explained the stand of his party before the people of Quebec and French Canadians generally. That statement will long be remembered by the French-speaking people of Quebec and other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, with the increase in welfare services mentioned in the speech from the throne, I am justified in stating that the government is generous.

I remember so well our opponents' roars during the federal and provincial elections, particularly in 1948, 1950, 1952 and 1953, when they persisted in yelling that a Conservative vote was a vote against old age pension increases, and would lead to the suppression of all social welfare services.

What a contrast, Mr. Speaker. The roars only brought a six dollar increase whereas the government, which they had so unfairly accused, came up with a $19 raise within less than four years.

So I want to thank again the Conservative government for its generosity towards the aged, the disabled and the blind.

However, we should not stop at that. There is another social measure that should be amended. I want to speak of family allowances. With the increase in the cost of living, family allowances are inadequate now to raise a family decently, but it is through our families that we shall be able to make Canada a strong country.

I, therefore, beg the government to grant my request and I am confident that a few million dollars will be, in the near future, apportioned among our families in need.

In a country like Canada, poverty and suffering should not be the lot of large families nowadays. I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) to investigate the urgent needs of those large families which, in this wealthy country of ours, lack basic necessities, to investigate the condition of those thousands of children of all ages who have to go to sleep on empty stomachs at night and who have nothing but old rags to protect them from the cold.

A physical fitness program for which we unhesitatingly voted subsidies totalling $5 million has won high praise. It may be a good thing to remember that the best physical fitness program in Canada is still to see that all Canadian children have something to eat every day.

I am sure that only a Conservative government like the one we have at present will solve this serious problem and correct this unfortunate situation which is due to too many years of Liberal neglect. Indeed, the Liberal party used to boast about economic conditions which were the result of sad events, but it forgot and neglected our large Canadian families in poor circumstances, especially in the province of Quebec and other nearby areas.

(Text):

I should like to take this opportunity of thanking the people of my constituency for the vote of confidence they gave me on May 29 last. I must say it was an easy task for the people of my riding to reach a decision. There were two main factors I should like to mention.

The people of Restigouche-Madawaska had not forgotten the error they made in 1960 when in that province they elected under false promises a Liberal government which is carrying on a program of destruction which every day brings our little province nearer and nearer to the edge of bankruptcy, especially by the runaway administration of hospital insurance patterned on the great fiasco by the premier of Quebec in connection with the same matter. The second factor was the unusual visit in my riding of the Liberal chief and a dozen of his colleagues who, for three weeks, carried out a campaign of destruction, nonsense, falsehood, misstatements, and twisting of the truth. It would take too long to mention more of their behaviour but I hope they have learned, if they ever do so, that the old Liberal method of fooling the electors is something of the past.

They all did the same thing, Mr. Speaker. They all used the same methods. Most of them had never set foot before in my territory but what a picture of poverty and misery they presented to the people. Without looking around, they were quick to condemn the Diefenbaker government for so long neglecting my riding. The audience just stood back and listened. Some laughed, others became angry and asked themselves, "Do they think that we are that stupid?" That was especially so when the former minister of transport—I refer to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier)—told the Dalhousie people how they had been neglected in the matter of port facilities. When he made that statement I presume he did not know that our Diefenbaker government had already spent $1 million to build the wharf which the ex-minister had failed to build. Those same hon. members failed to see the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge, a $3,500,000 structure promised by the Liberals for over 60 years and built by this generous Diefenbaker government. They failed to see the new Campbellton federal building and the new C.N.R. station, again an old Liberal promise of some 30 years standing, but carried out under this good Tory government.

They arrived in my riding, Mr. Speaker, like the great Goliath, with chests out and with swords in their hands. They were going to make a sweep. However, they met little David and made a sweep but in the opposite direction. I wish to thank the people of my riding again for giving me their confidence.

A subject in which I have taken a great interest, Mr. Speaker, is the proposed new electrical energy national grid system. I am very happy to see the government with which I have the privilege to be associated take the initiative in this important matter. Again it took a good active and constructive Tory government to initiate action with regard to the possibility of harnessing together this tremendous potential power in order to better the economy and the living standards of our Canadian people. What this improvement would do for a better Canada is a subject which would take too long to discuss at this moment. However, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to relate a bit of history in connection with the development of electrical energy first, in our local communities and second, in our province, in order to see what we have achieved, where we stand today and where we go from here. I shall now touch briefly on the first matter.

The early development of electrical energy in our communities goes back to the early 1900's when electrical energy was used only as a luxury by a few people for lighting purposes. The price was 20 cents per kilowatt. At that time electricity frightened people more than did any other discovery brought into use by the mechanical age. It had the power to set fire in its passage; it gave terrible warning if one touched it, and it would go as far as killing you without mercy if you became too brave in handling it. However, as time went on, people learned more every day about its uses and its handling. After the invention of the light bulb, electric motors came into use to drive the wheels of growing industries. Electricity came to be used in wire and wireless communication, for medical purposes, transportation, heating, refrigeration and so on until today we have reached the point where we cannot move around without its assistance.

During the early 1900's many problems were solved. Man became acquainted with electrical energy and found ways and means by which to handle it, and electricity became humanity's best friend. The problem of the transmission of electrical energy over long distances was encountered. The difficulties in connection with cycles were overcome. Differences between direct current and alternating current were established. Transformers with the capacity to increase or to decrease voltage came into use, permitting current at high voltage to be transmitted at low cost and then to be decreased in voltage at various points to serve the domestic or small consumers. Long distance lines were built with control stations at various centres with switching gear, regulation fusing and so on. While this early transformation was taking place, people became more and more conscious of electrical energy and its uses around the clock. It was then accepted as part of our economy and a great necessity. This summary covers the period extending from the 1900's up to the early 1920's and brings me to the second item, namely what was achieved.

While this development took place at a very high rate of speed, one problem was the production of electrical energy to meet the growing demand. In the early years of the nineties electricity was produced by small generators in the various communities, municipalities, villages and cities and in private industries. Fortunes were spent to provide mechanical devices, such as the diesel power of those days and thermal coal burning plants, steps were taken toward the harnessing of our rivers. This was all to the good, but as the demand increased so rapidly, by the early 1920's many of those limited resources were either exhausted or were beyond the financial ability of the owner.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member that the debate continues without interruption until six o'clock. The hon. member may therefore continue.

Mr. Fournier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is the time when, in practically every province across Canada, decisions were taken to pool all available resources in order to produce more and cheaper electrical energy to meet the demand, with the result that we saw in many provinces the birth of electric power commissions and the establishment of a provincial grid system. That was the result of a continuing growth in the demand for electric energy. Larger and more effective plants were built. The building of thermal coal burning plants at the mine site, the development of hydraulic power generators all connected together as one unit, saved millions of dollars to the citizens of the provinces and made large volumes of energy available. This is what has been done up to the present time and brings me to the third part of my remarks.

Today, in the early '60's, every province finds itself in about the same situation as that in which were all the communities in the early '20's, but on a larger scale. Today many provinces across the country have just about exhausted their resources for producing electrical energy. We have reached a rate of growth which requires that the capacity must be doubled every seven and a half years, something which is just about impossible financially or otherwise in some provinces. If we review for the moment the position of the provinces and their resources for the production of electricity, we find Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with a limited coal field and limited hydraulic resources now in production of power. We find Quebec with the world's largest hydraulic potential and with less than 30 per cent of its potential developed. We find Ontario with natural resources just about exhausted, the prairie provinces with limited hydraulic resources but very rich in coal deposits and British Columbia with some hydraulic developments to meet today's situation.

Let us see what could be done for the future. The transmission of electric energy has become possible more economically by using direct current and converters. To energize a national grid, the maritime provinces have the world's largest tidal power potential. Better than 5 million kilowatts can be produced. Newfoundland, at one site alone on the Grand Falls river can produce another 5 million kilowatts. The capacity of this tremendous Grand Falls hydro plant would work well to balance the load during the dull period of tidal power. Today, Mr. Speaker, it is possible to use the tides to generate power 20 hours out of every 24. New types of generators have made it possible to produce power with the uptide as well as the downtide. At times, even hydro power plants have dull periods at low water and one cannot operate efficiently without assistance from another source. The building of the Chignecto canal would be the first step towards the development of maritime tidal power.

Then, we move to Quebec, with its vast hydraulic reserves. Ontario is turning to nuclear power, thanks to our generous government. This power, developed by nuclear energy, could be directed east or west through a national grid system. Then, we come to the immense coal and gas reserves of the prairies and at the extreme west we have the Columbia and Fraser rivers, those great potential sources of hydro energy which can be converted to electrical energy and carried across Canada to the points where it can be used to the advantage of the Canadian people.

This, Mr. Speaker, is just a brief review of the proposed grid system. Before we see this system in operation, hundreds of problems will have to be solved. The physical possibilities, the feasibility, administrative organization and countless other problems will need extensive study. This will require the labour, sweat and full co-operation of everyone involved. Let us not be alarmed by this irresponsible young Quebec minister of resources who has made a name for himself in other fields, but not in electricity. He is making himself a name, but the dignity of this house does not permit it to be mentioned.

Three years ago the then premier of New Brunswick, in co-operation with the good and generous federal government of today and the Hon. Robert Stanfield, premier of Nova Scotia, decided to build the first interprovincial grid system between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I was fortunate, as chairman of the New Brunswick electric power commission and in co-operation with the Nova Scotia power commission, in having a hand in the construction of this grid system. Today, power may be generated at Halifax or the extreme end of Nova Scotia, or at Edmundston in New Brunswick, and may be transported across these two provinces like lightning. A central distribution centre, with operating dispatchers having full control of generation and distribution, is located in the centre of the system. The savings in spare capacity alone to each province already represents several millions of dollars.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the good name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) will remain in history as the founder of this national grid system. Since it will be the greatest achievement of the sixties I am proud, along with my colleague and former boss the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming), to be associated with this great project. I hope that at the next election the people of Canada will realize the importance of this grid system to the future of our country and the future of our children. I hope, too, that the Canadian people are now convinced that the only responsible government able to accomplish the construction of this national grid system is the present Diefenbaker Conservative government. This government has proven beyond any doubt to the Canadian people it has ability in all spheres of administration. This government will not embark on such a large project without a full study of the feasibility of its operation. It always places the welfare of the citizens and the economy of the country first.

I was amused to hear some members of the opposition already questioning the merits of such a grid system. They asked, who is going to participate? How will it operate? They have already found fault with it. These electrical experts have already condemned the job before its birth. They want to know if it will be a boy or a girl. Will he be born with hair or will he be bald? What will be the colour of his or her eyes? These are but some of the many ridiculous questions they ask. No one can answer questions as to how this grid system will be put together, who will take part in it or how it will work. These answers cannot be given until a lengthy and complete study is made in all the provinces, and that is exactly what this government intends to do. The government has proven this by inviting every province in the dominion to a meeting to set in operation the machinery for such a study. This organizational work is not completed overnight. In my opinion, what seems to disturb my friends most is the fact that the grid system, when completed, will not display a commemorative plaque reading, designed by Mike; engineered by Paul; supervised by Lionel and twisted by Jack. It is my hope that the opposition will show more horse sense in the future and stop finding fault with a project that does not even exist.

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me, and for the people of my riding of Trinity-Conception whom I have the privilege of representing, to join previous speakers in this traditional debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. At this time, I should like to join my colleagues on both sides of the house in congratulating the mover, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) on their contribution to the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I am personally glad to see you, Mr. Speaker, again assuming the very important position which you have so capably and justly filled ever since you have occupied it.

I should like also to congratulate the Deputy Speaker upon his appointment to that very important post. I believe he will carry out efficiently the new duties entrusted to him. I am not forgetting the reappointment of the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) as deputy chairman of committees of the whole house, who performed his duties in this important position during the last session of parliament to the complete satisfaction of all hon. members and with great credit to himself and to his riding. My congratulations also go to our former deputy speaker, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and to the parliamentary secretaries on their reappointment.

I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to talk about matters pertaining to the welfare of Canada's newest province. Since becoming the tenth province of Canada at the date of confederation, Newfoundland has progressed in many ways, especially in the field of education, culminating in the expansion of Memorial university. During the year 1961, all was not sunny for the province and people of Newfoundland, but with the ups and downs the province did progress economically as well as educationally.

Newfoundland has suffered practically every summer from the curse of forest fires. Last year she saw her forests devastated by fires which were considered to be the worst in the history of the pulp and paper industry. Millions of dollars worth of woodlands were destroyed. The damage to the forests was so great that the prospects for a third paper mill in Newfoundland seemed in danger because of the loss of wood to supply the three paper mills. The latest news, which is good news, is that a third paper mill will very likely be established in Newfoundland. Although all the details have not been worked out, negotiations have been continuing for some time, and the prospects are bright.

This paper mill will be established, it is expected, near Come-By-Chance in the federal riding of Trinity-Conception. At the moment, the Bowater Pulp and Paper Company of Corner Brook has agreed with the premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Smallwood, to start logging operations this year in Labrador. Newfoundland now has two large paper mills, perhaps the largest in the world, one at Grand Falls and the other at Corner Brook. These mills employ hundreds of Newfoundlanders in steady employment. Indeed both the paper mills actually support modern towns which have sprung up and been laid out adjacent to each mill. With a third mill at Come-By-Chance, and with another large town to come into existence, Newfoundland's economy will receive a badly needed substantial boost.

During the forest fire period the provincial government of Newfoundland threw everything into fighting the fires, in an effort to save our valuable wood stands. It even went so far as to solicit and receive help from the federal government which lent troops, water planes and other fire fighting equipment. Newfoundland is singularly blessed with valuable wood stands and forests and the natural resources of these forests are of particular importance to Newfoundland. They play a large part in her economy. The forests provide the raw materials which keep her two large paper mills operating at full capacity the whole year round.

Her forests have been a great boon to the people of Newfoundland in setting up her economy and leading to the building of two large and beautiful cities. It now appears that Newfoundland is about to get a third paper mill and her forests will also provide the raw materials for it. In that section of the province her people can look forward to another new town coming into existence in the near future, with employment being available to the people in the area. All in all the forests of Newfoundland play an important part in the economy of our province and will continue to do so, perhaps on a larger scale in the future than in the past. Consequently the menace of forest fires must be controlled and, if at all possible, entirely eliminated.

Perhaps the greatest advance made by Newfoundland since the date of confederation has been in the field of education. The provincial government has gone all out with its financial and other assistance to education and the building of new schools, new regional high schools, and as a crowning success we have the Memorial University of Newfoundland, so that our present government has often been termed "the government of schools". Since confederation more new schools have been built, opened and staffed than in the time between the discovery of Newfoundland and the date of confederation, which shows that Newfoundland is really on the march in the field of education. Newfoundland's university recently opened its new buildings with pageantry and pomp and it will soon be one of the greatest universities in Canada. At the present time some of the halls of learning to make up the entire university are only in the planning stages. When the university is completed it will be second to none in Canada and will be a worthy memorial to Newfoundland's gallant dead in both world wars.

The fisheries industry will always be an important industry to Newfoundland, contrary to the present day thinking of some politicians. Newfoundland was a fishing country even before its official discovery and down through the years she has charted the measure of her success or failure by her yearly catch. A poor fishery meant a poor year for Newfoundland and her people. A good fishery meant a prosperous year for Newfoundland. However, since Newfoundland became a province of Canada she has not advanced her fisheries in the new techniques and methods of catching and curing fish, such as are used by Russia, Iceland, and other foreign nations fishing on our doorsteps.

The past year has been one of the poorest fishery years in the history of Newfoundland, coupled with several storms which caused damage and destruction to both public and private property, to the tune of approximately $250,000 in one single storm, leaving many of our fishermen almost destitute. Time and time again the federal government of Canada has been urged to see that a thorough investigation be made into our fisheries, that measures should be taken and support given to bringing our fisheries up to date in both catching and curing methods. It was also urged that Canada should have already taken some action toward establishing the 12 mile limit to protect our Canadian fishermen and fisheries.

On many occasions Newfoundland fishermen claimed that foreign vessels were fishing inside the three mile zone, and several times they have stated that their fishing gear was damaged by foreign ships. Last spring a Newfoundland sealing captain gave me a flag of a foreign ship which he stated was definitely picked up inside the three mile limit when the ship was operating inside that limit.

The banks of Newfoundland are becoming more and more crowded every year with foreign fishing ships and the time has long passed when we should have begun protecting our fishing grounds. The present Canadian government fears that we would offend some of our friendly foreign countries if we were to establish a 12 mile limit for territorial waters and put real teeth into the provisions to enforce it.

Two years ago the government of Iceland became concerned over its fishermen's livelihood and unilaterally extended her traditional three mile limit to 12 miles. This was vigourously opposed by Great Britain, an old friend of Iceland, but on occasion Icelandic patrol vessels interfered with British draggers. On one occasion a British man-of-war went along as escort to British fishing vessels, and incidentally I have heard that man-of-war was captained by a Newfoundlander. Iceland's 12 mile limit is now recognized by Britain, with a three year phase out, during which British vessels may be allowed to fish in certain areas up to six miles from amended base lines.

Today Newfoundland finds that in and around her shores, where her waters at one time were teeming with fish, there are more Russians and other foreign nationals fishing than there are Newfoundlanders. The seal fishery, once a prosperous venture for Newfoundlanders, has been practically taken over by Norway and the wealth taken from our very shores. However, there does not seem to be anything done about it, or any assistance forthcoming from the federal government of Canada to investigate new methods and procedures for the seal fishery, in order that the wealth which is now benefiting the economy of other countries could be kept in Canada, and particularly in Newfoundland. In my opinion the time has arrived when we must give consideration to seal conservation by placing a closed season on the killing of seals off the east coast of Newfoundland.

Newfoundland badly needs federal and provincial government assistance for her fisheries, if they are to survive and be one of the chief industries of our province; because it is plain to see that Newfoundland fisheries are very important to that province and are still one of the major components that make up her economy. For the success of her fisheries Newfoundland urgently needs more public cold storage for both bait and fish. Without such storage facilities her fisheries cannot expand or enlarge. More community stages are also required. The fisheries are a big cog in the wheel of her economy and they must be protected and developed, as the economy of Canada as a whole requires and needs them.

Mr. Speaker, not so many years ago most of the people of Newfoundland were isolated because of very poor roads, and often because there were no roads at all. The picture has changed vastly, and because of the trans-Canada highway and the many local roads which have been built in the past 13 years isolation is practically unknown on the island. Again, when one considers that the cost of building and maintaining roads in Newfoundland is higher than in any other province of Canada, one realizes what a tremendous job of shedding isolation has been accomplished by those concerned with this program.

Since Newfoundland still has to contend with her narrow gauge railway, after being a province of Canada for 13 years, we consider that as a matter of equity the federal government should complete the unfinished portion or portions of Newfoundland's trans-Canada highway to compensate for her railway not being the standard gauge of the other provinces of Canada. We have not forgotten the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in 1957 to give us a standard gauge railway.

Newfoundland still needs more and better roads, more connecting roads, and above all she really needs the completion of her section of the trans-Canada highway. This completion of the trans-Canada highway will be delayed for years, and with it the economy of Newfoundland checkmated, unless the federal government soon realizes Newfoundland's position in the matter, recognizes her rightful claim to a standard gauge railway and makes a compromise or gives further financial assistance. Because the trans-Canada highway is not completed Newfoundland and her economy will suffer in regard to the tourist business. The tourist business in Newfoundland, goes a long way toward supporting our economy, and it could do much more. This industry is really considered too important a revenue item to be lost.

Since the days of confederation Newfoundland has rightly come into her own in the mining field. Already iron ore, copper, zinc, talc and gold in small quantities have been discovered and mined; but the latest development at Carol lake, being developed by the Labrador Mining Company—this is a new discovery—has placed Newfoundland in the forefront of the iron ore market and she is now Canada's largest producer of this commodity. Last year our mineral production was worth $96 million. Bell island, the iron ore island of Newfoundland, has been our main industry on the island for many years. The ore from Bell island has been steadily and continuously going into the markets of the world and has always been in fair demand. During the past five or six years the picture for Bell island has been continuously changing due to world conditions. The past two years have seen Bell island feel the pinch because of short orders for her ore, with the consequent loss of employment for many Bell island and Conception bay miners. Surveys for 1962 are not too bright and it is anticipated that unless world conditions change and further orders are received for ore, Bell island mines will close down for at least an indefinite period. At the present time the picture is far from encouraging.

In recent years mining has become very important in the financial and economical structure of Newfoundland because it appears that Newfoundland is now only on the threshhold of great developments in mining. At present only the surface has been scratched. Some of the biggest financial companies and combines of companies have acquired mining rights in Newfoundland and it is confidently anticipated that in the foreseeable future mining activities in Newfoundland will reach proportions that will make this industry the highlight of the century.

Mr. Speaker, compared with a quarter of a century ago, the budgeted expenditures for one year to cover the services of all departments in Newfoundland are now equalled by the expenditures of two departments, health and welfare. The medical and social services inaugurated in Newfoundland since confederation could not be contemplated 20 or 25 years ago, and the only drawback to further rapid expansion is the lack of doctors and nurses.

The advances made in hospital accommodation and medical and social services since the advent of confederation have been phenomenal, but the need is still not satisfied because Newfoundlanders need more hospital accommodation, doctors and trained nurses. However, Newfoundland can be justly proud of her program of hospital and medical services because she has the highest birth rate and the lowest death rate of all the provinces of Canada.

I should now like to discuss one of our greatest problems, that of unemployment. Because Newfoundland is an island, one of her principal sources of revenue to sustain her economy is her fishery. This is the principal occupation of her residents. If the fishery is good in one year, then the employment problem in that year is not so great; but in a year of poor fishery or failure in the fishery the employment problem becomes acute. Seasonal employment in Newfoundland cannot be avoided, because the principal industries or labour offering enterprises, the fishery, logging, seal fishery, road building and construction work, are all seasonal employment. Consequently during the off-seasons in these industries Newfoundland will have a great deal of unemployment because there is nothing to offer to the people to temporarily take up the slack.

Another factor which one must consider when studying this problem of seasonal unemployment in Newfoundland is the large percentage of her labour force which comes under the category of unskilled workmen. This is the class of workers who cannot afford to be unemployed. Thus we are faced with this difficulty each year.

Let us first look for at least a partial remedy for this problem. I consider that getting more people back into the fishing industry is very important, even if the federal and provincial governments have to provide extra assistance, especially during the coming fishery season, because due to storms, losses, and the like, many fishermen will not have the equipment with which to engage in the fishery this year without financial help. As to a long term cure, it will be necessary for our fisheries in Newfoundland to be placed on a sound footing and brought up to date in methods and procedures. Our fishermen should have all the mechanical devices that are used by the Russians, in order to make fishing a success. The government of Canada owes this to her fishermen.

Much remains to be done on the marketing side. Canadians do not eat enough fish. More marketing research must be conducted under federal auspices. A national fish marketing board could go a long way toward inducing Canadians to eat more fish.

The erection of a third paper mill and the creation of a new town of Labrador and perhaps one at Come-By-Chance, where it is hoped a mill will be erected, will tend to reduce unemployment. But what is really needed more than anything else is the creating and setting up of factories or industries in larger towns such as Lewisporte, Harbour Grace, Carbonear, Clarenville, Catalina, Port Union, St. John's, Corner Brook and Grand Falls, where many workers, particularly young workers could be gainfully employed in their home towns. It may well be that young people cannot always afford to accept opportunities offered to them elsewhere because they have to care for aged or sickly parents, or undertake similar responsibilities. If the suggestion I have made were followed it would lead to a reduction in unemployment, and I urge the government to give the idea their immediate attention and consideration.

I have outlined the serious problems that still face Newfoundland. Again I say that we need the help of the Canadian government as a team if we are to reach our goal of complete employment by creating jobs at home, thus making Newfoundland a more stable element in this country's economic structure.

Newfoundland's first oil refinery, operated by the Golden Eagle Company of Canada at Conception Bay, went on stream early in December 1961. It is a $7,500,000 plant and it will produce approximately 8,500 barrels daily, employing about 100 permanent employees. About 25 per cent of the plant's production will be shipped out of the province, and the provincial government will provide the refinery's initial market. Fuels, lubricating oils and asphalt will be produced for distribution in eastern Canada. Marine terminals have been built in Corner Brook, Botwood, Clarenville, Montreal and Rimouski. The company expects that the value of its assets will increase in value in 10 years from $15 million, as at present, to $75 million.

In closing I should like to say that I was glad to learn from the speech from the throne that Her Majesty the Queen Mother together with Their Highnesses, the Duke of Edinburgh and the Princess Royal will visit Canada some time during the coming summer. I sincerely hope their visit will be a happy one.

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): It is with pleasure that I rise to take part in this throne speech debate. In accordance with the time honoured custom my first words will be those of congratulation to the mover and seconder of the address, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne). I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) upon his elevation to the position of Deputy Speaker. At this time I also wish to extend congratulations to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) on his appointment to the position of Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. We look forward to seeing this minister more often in Nova Scotia as his department extends its new hydrographic and oceanographic base at Halifax.

The speech from the throne represents a monumental work on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his cabinet. Opposition speakers to date have made it their business to steer away from this blueprint of further national development. However, I believe this government has charted a course, has laid down a program, which will provide a higher standard of living and greater opportunity within a free economy for all Canadians.

It is not possible, in the short time available, for me to deal with all the progressive plans enunciated in the speech from the throne, so I shall limit myself to dealing with a few matters of significance and importance to our area. There are representatives here from all parts of Canada who are quite capable of outlining conditions as they exist in their localities, and I therefore propose to confine my remarks for the most part to Nova Scotia and to the developments taking place in that province.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) when he spoke in the debate, I am sorry he is not in his place today.

It appeared to me he must still believe he is on the sunny beaches of Acapulco, far removed from the pulse of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people. He kept calling for an election, saying the Liberals have the answer. When the election comes, he added, it would be on the record of this government. We on this side of the house will certainly welcome and accept that challenge. I remember well the election of 1957. It was fought on the record of the then Liberal government in office—and the Leader of the Opposition knows the result. The election of 1958 was fought on the record of the Conservative government in office, and the results of that election are painfully evident to the hon. gentleman as he looks over at the benches occupied by government supporters and then to the tattered remnants of his once great party. It was in these campaigns that the people of Nova Scotia looked to the present Prime Minister and, with a sailor's salute, said: Long may your big jib draw. Then they proceeded to elect 12 members from 12 constituencies in support of the Conservative party. These are times when the Leader of the Opposition must ask himself: What did we do wrong? At the time of their defeat it was the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), I believe, who said they had neglected their clothes on the left bank while in swimming and the Conservatives had slipped in from the right. The Leader of the Opposition had another viewpoint. In his opinion "the brass lost touch with the grass". However, today the hon. gentleman is critical of our Prime Minister and of members of this government for keeping in close touch with the people. I think it is time we enlightened the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) and pointed out that it was arrogance and indifference to the needs of the people that cost the Liberal party majority support in the Atlantic provinces. And this arrogance and indifference is still evident today, due no doubt to the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has the same old economic advisor he had in 1956. We heard the other day that Mr. Walter Gordon had been nominated to contest the Toronto Davenport riding in the next federal election. He is the man with bold imaginative policies—the man who has all the answers for the Liberals. Well, let us look at some of the bold imaginative policies of maritime Gordon, this aspiring Liberal finance minister, as enunciated in the 1956 preliminary report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. I quote from page 98:

> About one and three quarter million Canadians, or over 10 per cent of the total population, live in the Atlantic region. It is well known that the rate of economic progress in the three maritime provinces—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island—was relatively slow for a long period of years.

The report continues:

> It is a fact that average incomes in this region continue to lag behind the averages for the rest of Canada. In 1926, for example, the average income per capita in the three maritime provinces was 38 per cent below the average for the other six provinces; in 1939 the corresponding percentage was 32 per cent; in 1946 it was 24 per cent; and in 1955, 33 per cent. In 1955, the average income for the Atlantic provinces, including Newfoundland, was 37 per cent below the average for the other six provinces.

Then he continues:

> The fact remains that living standards are lower in the Atlantic provinces than they are in the rest of Canada, and that it is in everyone's interest to reduce this differential if it is at all possible—

I repeat: "if it is at all possible"— > —to do so. It is not suggested that this should be accomplished by ad hoc projects and handouts. Such measures are as unpalatable to the recipients as they are to those who must foot the bills. What is required is a positive and comprehensive approach to the problems of the Atlantic region. With this as the objective, it is suggested that the people of Canada as a whole might be willing to assist the people of the Atlantic provinces in discovering, developing and making the best use of resources in that area.

> If it should turn out that there is not the necessary combination of resources in sufficient quantities to permit a substantial rise in living standards in the Atlantic region, generous assistance should be given to those people who might wish to move to other parts of Canada where there may be greater opportunities.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crouse: It continues:

But even if assistance is provided for those people who might be willing to move elsewhere, many people undoubtedly would prefer to remain where they are, despite the handicaps referred to. People who so choose should at the same time be prepared to accept a different kind of life, or certainly life at a different tempo, and lower levels of income.

Is this bold and imaginative? No Atlantic provinces grants here. This would be ad hoc assistance. I continue:

It would be unwise to spend large sums on the construction of highways merely for the purpose of forcing a reduction in railway rates by the introduction of highway truck competition and thus increasing the present losses of the railways. It would be equally unwise to insist upon the continuance of unprofitable rail services if, with the construction of road facilities, the present traffic could be handled effectively by trucks and buses.

Do away with the railways, build no roads or highways. That is what is recommended by Mr. Gordon and his party. If you read the whole report it can be summed up as only a negative, do-nothing, move-out policy.

But, the Liberals say, Mr. Gordon has changed. He is now the national chairman of the Liberal campaign committee and his heart literally bleeds for the maritime provinces. I have in my hand a report of his speech delivered at Sutherlands River on December 14, 1961, as reported by the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. While we have heard of the new Pearson and the new Gordon they still have the same old policies for the Atlantic provinces and the evacuation of those provinces. Listen to these quotations from Mr. Gordon's speech:

Living standards in the Atlantic provinces were lower than in the rest of Canada, he said, and it was in everyone's interest to reduce the differential.

He stated that it was not suggested that this should be accomplished by "ad hoc" projects and handouts—such measures were as unpalatable to the recipients as to those who must foot the bill.

What was required, he said, was a positive and comprehensive approach to the problems of the Atlantic region.

And again:

There would be no point in anyone moving to Upper Canada, for example, in search of work these days.

And further:

Special measures will be needed for looking after these people and for re-establishing in other industries those who may be interested in such an alternative. It may be such measures could be included under the broad national scheme we have referred to for relocating people who may wish to abandon sub-marginal farms and be re-established in other industries.

In other words, the one suggestion Mr. Gordon did have for the citizens of the Atlantic provinces has now been modified and he cannot even suggest a suitable province to which we should move. Mr. Speaker, we will stay in the Atlantic provinces. We do not need to move out. Under the progressive policies of the present federal government employment opportunities are gradually being provided for our people. We did not listen to Mr. Gordon in 1956 and apply to the then Liberal government for a one way ticket out of our province. Some of the figures I intend to place on the record will indicate what has happened to the good ship Nova Scotia since we discharged the entire mutinous crew of Liberals and the present Prime Minister became captain.

The average income per capita in the Atlantic provinces, as quoted by Mr. Gordon has always been lower than the average income in the other six provinces. However, we are making progress for, according to the dominion bureau of statistics, the average per capita personal income for the four Atlantic provinces increased from a low of $851 in 1956 to $1,010 in 1960. In the three maritime provinces, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the average income in 1960 was 32.8 per cent below the national average. We are still not out of the woods economically and the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants are still justifiable, but we have been making a far better showing in the last four years under this Conservative government than we made in the last 22 years under the Liberal government.

The transition in Nova Scotia that brought about this increase in income is apparent in the fishing industry, the boat and shipbuilding industry, the mining industry, agriculture and in the construction industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: My hon. friends applaud misleading figures.

Mr. Crouse: My hon. friends opposite do not like to hear these facts. I hear a comment from my hon. friend, the economist from Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith). Nevertheless we are glad to state the facts even if my hon. friends do not like to hear them.

The Nova Scotia fishing industry is in the midst of an accelerated boat building and fish plant expansion program. This has been brought about by the far sighted, progressive legislation introduced by this government to assist the shipbuilding industry in Canada and the fishermen in particular. Already a number of new draggers in the 100 foot class have been launched, with more to follow before the end of 1962, and if you could but visit the wooden shipbuilding yards in Mahone Bay, Lunenburg, Dayspring and in fact, most of the yards throughout Nova Scotia, you would see a scene reminiscent of former years when our province became famous as the home of wooden ships and iron men, and the schooner Bluenose sailed the north Atlantic undefeated. The Halifax Chronicle-Herald on February 8 headlined their front page with the statement that this shipbuilding boom could amount to $10 million this year. These new fishing draggers for the ground fish and scallop fishing industry will provide a safer working unit for the fishermen who will be stepping out of smaller boats, into modern efficient ships that will help ensure a year round supply of fish for the processing plants. And speaking of processing plants, Lunenburg Sea Products Ltd. is planning an $8 million expansion to their facilities at Lunenburg. The plant will be erected on an eight acre site, will provide additional jobs for 200 to 300 people, will add at least $4 million annually to the economy of Nova Scotia and is expected to be in production early in 1964. In addition to this, two new fish plants are under construction for Cape Breton island.

While all of us welcome this expansion and realize the value of the fishing industry, not only to Nova Scotia but to Canada as a whole, we are also aware of the growing need for well trained crews for the expanding fishing fleet. A modern fishing dragger is a highly complex unit containing many electronic devices to assist in locating good fishing grounds, as well as protect the crew in foggy weather. New fishing techniques should be introduced and I would suggest the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Transport give consideration to the establishment of special vocational training facilities for deep sea fishing vessel crews. Due to their environment and long hours of work, fishermen cannot always secure the technical training required. I hope the government will find it possible to initiate this type of training program in the near future.

In our mining industry there were major advances during the past year. Salt production increased 40 per cent, milling started at the Walton silver-lead-zinc ore body and initial steps were taken toward establishing a major new gypsum producer in Cape Breton. In fact, present resources of gypsum in Nova Scotia are sufficient to produce 2 million tons per year for the next hundred years, and this will contribute substantially to the economy of the province.

Interest in Nova Scotia as a leading source of industrial minerals continues to grow. The tempo of exploration last year was at an all time high and this bodes well for the future of our mining industry.

In the field of agriculture in Nova Scotia, last year's records reached new heights. The gross income from farm products last year exceeded $53 million. Livestock and livestock products account for about 80 per cent of this amount which is an increase of more than $3 million over the previous year.

There was a time when if someone mentioned the Annapolis valley we thought only of apples. However, while apples remain one of the province's best known farm products, we see tobacco grown today commercially for the first time in our history. Last year's crop was estimated at $50,000 and present plans call for a crop of at least four times this size in 1962.

In the construction field and in the establishment of new industries the record is beyond compare. In my constituency the American boat building corporation has located at Mahone Bay. Yesterday's newspaper carried the report that they recently increased their working staff by 40 per cent. The Atlantic Bridge Company Limited at Lunenburg and the Lunenburg Foundry and Engineering Limited at Lunenburg recently built large new additions to their plants. Scotia Marine Products Limited at Lower Woods Harbour have established a $750,000 plant for the production of "algin", an end product of rockweed which has almost unlimited possibilities as an emulsifying agent in ice cream and food supplements. This type of factory is quite rare, as there are only 10 other algin plants known to be in existence throughout the world. Other plants established have been the Bonda Meal and Oil Limited at Short Beach, Yarmouth county; Cossor Electronics Limited at Dartmouth; Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited at Halifax; Eastern Paper Box Manufacturing Limited at Halifax; Federal Products Limited at Truro; the $3 million Formex Company of Canada plant at Kentville; the Oxford Desk Limited at Oxford; Phillips Electrical Company at Dartmouth; Springhill Homes and Supplies, Springhill and the Surrette Battery Company in the same town; the $14 million Texaco oil refinery going up at Woodside in Dartmouth, the fourth big refinery in the Atlantic region with a 13,500 barrel capacity; Weymouth Industries Limited; and I could go on until I listed a total of 22 new industries in Nova Scotia in the past four years. While all this has been going on our existing industries have been growing and expanding and for the most part have been providing new jobs. All this has happened in a province where the only suggestions the Liberals had when they were in office, for the improvement of our lot was Mr. Gordon's classic, "move out".

Despite this record of progress and steady growth, under a Conservative government, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), asks what there is in the speech from the throne for the Atlantic provinces? He then proceeds to degrade the maritime area with a speech filled with doom and gloom that could only be exceeded by his leader. There are many items in the speech from the throne that will be of benefit to our area. For example, the extension of the winter works program, co-operative measures between the 10 provinces to encourage wise management of our natural resources; the provision of low cost electric power; the maintenance of fair prices for our farms and fisheries products; legislation extending farm and fisheries improvement loans acts; increases in welfare pensions to all classes; increases in civilian war pensions and allowances; increases to our university grants; institution of a second ferry service between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

These are but a few of the measures that will benefit our citizens in the Atlantic provinces. In my opinion the remarks made by the hon. member for Gloucester do great harm to our area by destroying the confidence of the investment world in locating industry in the Atlantic provinces. In support of this statement I quote from a recent editorial in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald in which Mr. Karl A. Klausen, president of Nova Scotia Pulp Limited, stated Nova Scotia's excess of bad publicity has hampered its economic growth. I quote from the editorial as follows:

> Mr. Klausen said he had been advised by pulp executives and foresters across Canada against establishing a mill in Nova Scotia and that financiers in Toronto and Montreal warned against the move because of lack of confidence in our economic future.
> So far as this attitude begins at home, habits of thought and continual crying of havoc and hard times will have to give way to more reasoned appraisals of our strengths and weaknesses. For it is apparent that despite such soft spots as the coal industry the over-all economy of Nova Scotia, particularly in the vital field of manufacturing, is making some rapid strides—
> As the President of Nova Scotia Pulp Limited stated, this province has a vast industrial potential and a prosperous economic future if we can persuade ourselves and others to believe in it.

The record proves that under this federal Progressive Conservative government we are growing stronger economically. I would suggest that we be non-partisan enough to give credit where credit is due so that new industries will locate with confidence in the Atlantic provinces and help to expand our employment opportunities.

The hon. member for Gloucester condemns this government for its lack of consideration of the problems facing these people of the Atlantic provinces. I ask him whether he is not aware of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants which provided $100 million in the last four years to the Atlantic provinces and which will be increased to $175 million in the next five years with an additional grant of $8 million per annum to Newfoundland, in order to bolster our economy and to provide services to our people, which they could not otherwise afford owing to the disparity in our income. In his report Mr. Gordon went from 1926 to 1956, and with the exception of the five year period 1930 to 1935, this country was under the rule of a Liberal government. During those years the disparity in our income in the Atlantic provinces was as high as 38 per cent in relation to those in the rest of Canada. However, I cannot recall any member of the Liberal party advocating adjustment grants during those years and they are against them today; because Mr. Gordon has recently stated that he does not approve of ad hoc projects and handouts.

Another point worth mentioning is that these Atlantic provinces adjustment grants have no strings attached. They can be distributed at the discretion and pleasure of the four Atlantic premiers and there is no pressure brought to bear by this federal government as to how they will spend this money. As a result, we see today in the four Atlantic provinces, the greatest road building, school construction, and industrial assistance programs in our history, and our present population in Nova Scotia of 727,000 gradually increasing.

While I welcome the announcement in the speech from the throne that a new ferry will be built to serve between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland I would also urge upon the government that further consideration be given to establishing a second ferry between Nova Scotia and Gloucester, Massachusetts. At the present time discussions are under way between Premier Stanfield and Governor John Volpe of Massachusetts, and a meeting was held in Boston on February 19, to discuss various proposals on this matter. In the opinion of many Nova Scotians, a second ferry service is required to supplement the one now provided by the M. V. Bluenose between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour, in order to increase our tourist industry which last year brought over $50 million in additional revenue from over 600,000 visitors. Nova Scotia is truly Canada's ocean playground with 5,000 miles of rugged shoreline, scores of sandy beaches, thousands of lakes and streams and a temperate climate. The present proposal is to have a second ferry operate from Gloucester, Massachusetts, to a port along the south shore, a trip of 10 to 12 hours, depending on the port chosen. When we realize that 33,800,000 people live within a day's travel of Gloucester which is only 32 miles from Boston and 250 miles from New York, we get some idea of the tremendous tourist potential from this area. As Nova Scotia's fishing industry is expanding, and we ship over 75 per cent of our catch to the United States market, this additional ferry would also provide an improved service to this vitally important Nova Scotia industry. I hope the minister of trade and industry and the Minister of Transport will give careful consideration to this proposal so that steps may be taken to provide this additional service and improve still further the economic development of Nova Scotia which has made great forward strides under the present Conservative government.

Mr. Fisher: May I call it six o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to ask the house leader to indicate the business he proposes to submit for consideration of the house tomorrow and Friday.

Mr. Churchill: We will continue with this particular debate and conclude it tomorrow. On Friday, subject to change with due notice, the further supplementary estimates will be taken up.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 22, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

GRAIN

WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENT ON 1960-61 CROP; INCREASED INITIAL PAYMENT ON 1961-62 CROP; ISSUE OF ACREAGE PAYMENT CHEQUES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to report to the house in connection with the final payment for the 1960-61 wheat pool account, and advise that because of the increased volume of wheat exports it is now possible to close this account and increase the initial payment for wheat delivered during the current crop year.

As at the close of business, February 28, 1962 the board will close the accounts for the 1960-61 pool account for wheat in order that a final payment can be issued to producers. The final accounting will be completed as rapidly as possible and the issuance of final payment cheques will commence not later than April 2. This payment we hope will be completed on or before April 30, which will correspond to the time of heavy costs during seeding operations by grain farmers. Producers delivered 392,824,536 bushels of wheat into the 1960-61 pool account, and the final surplus for distribution will not be known until the accounting is completed.

Effective March 1, 1962 the initial price paid to producers who deliver wheat to the 1961-62 pool account will be increased as follows:

(1) 10 cents per bushel on all wheat other than Durum, whatever the grade, including all grades of sample and mixed wheats.

(2) 75 cents per bushel on Durum wheat grading No. 1 to No. 4 including Extra No. 4, toughs, damps and all off grades.

In respect of deliveries by producers in the 1961-62 pool account for wheat for the period August 1, 1961 to February 28, 1962, both dates inclusive, an adjustment payment will be made to producers at the rates which I have previously stated in order to raise the deliveries for this period to the new and higher price level which becomes effective March 1, 1962. The increase and the adjustment payment of 10 cents per bushel will bring the initial price of No. 1 Manitoba northern wheat to $1.50 per bushel basis in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver. In the case of Durums, the increase and the adjustment payment of 75 cents per bushel will bring the initial price for No. 1 Canada western amber Durum to $2.50 per bushel basis in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver.

The adjustment payment will involve a distribution of approximately $20 million. The issuance of cheques for this payment will commence around the beginning of May, following the completion of the final payment for the 1960-61 pool account, and will be completed on or before May 28, 1962.

I would also like to inform hon. members that on February 19 last the Canadian wheat board commenced the issuance of cheques on the 1961-62 acreage payment. This payment, involving approximately $42 million, will be completed not later than March 16 to the holders of wheat board delivery permits which have been issued to that date.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I know that all in western Canada will be glad to hear that it is possible to make a larger initial payment, particularly this year because there is a shortage of cash in western Canada as a result of the poor deliveries which resulted from the lack of moisture last year. Farmers will also be interested, I know, to hear from the government very soon as to whether the first payment on the nine months' credit extended in connection with the special sales to China has been made by the China Resources Company. I believe that payment is due in a few days.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of representatives of the prairie wheat farmers in this group—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: —I want to say that we welcome this announcement as a further relief to the prairie farmers in their present distressed situation.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. L. Hanbidge (Kindersley): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to increase the initial payment on wheat for the 1962-63 crop year to $1.50 per bushel, and to make it on a permanent basis?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The wheat board has not so recommended, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that the Minister of Agriculture will take up this question with the wheat board on his return.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INCREASE IN ALLOWABLE EARNINGS OF DEPENDANTS

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members a change in the regulations of the unemployment insurance commission relating to the allowable earnings of dependants consequent upon the recent increase in old age pensions. Previously, under unemployment insurance dependancy regulations, dependants were permitted to have an income of up to $14 per week. The recent increases in old age pensions will have the effect of bringing the income of senior citizens across Canada to $65 per month, which brings them above the present permissible ceiling.

The commission has now approved a change in regulations bringing the allowable earnings to $20 per week, which will mean that a senior citizen can still be claimed as a dependant by a member of his family who is a claimant and is his sole support. The same regulation will, of course, apply to all dependants whether senior citizens or otherwise. The new regulation is effective February 1, and if any adjustments are required to cover interim cases they will be made accordingly.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I say that we in this group welcome very much the statement which has been made by the Minister of Labour. We sincerely hope that the lead which has been given will be followed by other ministers in other departments, and particularly in the Department of Veterans Affairs with respect to recipients of the war veterans allowance who are also affected in a similar manner.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND QUALIFICATION PERIOD, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act to extend the period during which a veteran may qualify for benefits; to establish dates on which persons shall be deemed to be discharged; to extend the repayment period of loans; to enable the director to arrange group life insurance for veterans on a voluntary basis; to increase the rate of interest where a property reverts to the director; to increase the maximum assistance under part II; to provide further financial assistance to certain full time farmers; to provide further financial assistance to part time farmers and commercial fishermen; to extend the purposes for which a part III loan may be used; to extend the uses to which proceeds of a sale or other disposition of land may be put; and to provide for the release to a veteran of a portion of the land on which he is established.

[Mr. Hanbidge.]

Motion agreed to.

CANADA COUNCIL

REFERENCE OF REPORT TO PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

February 20—The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—

That the report of the Canada Council for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961, laid before the house on July 1, 1961, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts in order to provide for a review thereof pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL

On the order: Government notices of motion:

February 20—The Minister of Veterans Affairs (for the Minister of Finance)—The following proposed motion:—

That the public accounts, volumes I, II and III and the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961, and the financial statements of the Canada Council and the report of the Auditor General thereon for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

TRADE

JAPAN—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING QUOTA ON PLYWOOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I know he is absent because of government business. I wonder, therefore, if the acting minister could take notice of my question and perhaps answer tomorrow.

Would the minister tell the house whether there are negotiations presently going on in Ottawa between representatives of the Japanese government and the Canadian government with respect to establishing a quota on Japanese plywood coming into this country?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Acting Minister of Finance): I shall take notice of this question and see that it is answered at an early date, Mr. Speaker.

CUBA—MEETING OF AMBASSADORS RESPECTING U.S. EMBARGO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I am sorry I was not able to give him notice. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the Canadian ambassador to Cuba and other ambassadors of the NATO countries were convoked by the Cuban authorities in Havana concerning the United States embargo on Cuba? If so, would the Prime Minister comment on the conclusion of this meeting and the Canadian position in this matter?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that, of course, is a question that requires to be given consideration. I shall take the question as notice.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ROSSLAND, B.C.—REPORTED DECISION TO REMOVE STATION AGENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not giving him notice, but my telephone has been ringing incessantly this morning. In view of the recent decision of the board of transport commissioners to remove the agent from the station at Rossland, a city of over 4,000 population, and in view of the strong protests by the city council, the chamber of commerce and the population of that city, would an appeal to the governor in council against this decision receive consideration?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to study the implications of that question before giving an answer.

SHIPPING

NORTH SYDNEY—STATEMENT ON ICEBREAKING SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria inquired concerning icebreaking facilities at North Sydney.

I have made inquiries and find that this winter the icebreakers Labrador, McDonald, Wolfe, d'Iberville and Alexander all operate from Sydney, and their task is to provide icebreaking assistance to any vessel requiring it. However, the number of icebreakers available precludes the possibility of assigning one or more to any specific port although Sydney and North Sydney have some advantage over other ports in that the icebreakers return there for fuel and stores. No icebreakers have been diverted from the area during the past two weeks.

While North Sydney is the regular port of handling for Newfoundland traffic, it is the case that the Canadian National has found it necessary to divert its ships, with the exception of the William Carson, while there are difficulties with ice conditions.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—REPORT ON OYSTER TRANSPLANTING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister any report to make on the program of transplanting disease free oysters to the New Brunswick waters?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I wish to thank the hon. member for Kent, N.B., Mr. Speaker, for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question.

I am happy to advise the hon. member that the three year program to transfer a total of 10,000 barrels of disease resistant oysters from Prince Edward Island to the affected areas of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia has been completed as scheduled. There now remain only isolated areas such as Miscou island, where mortalities have only recently taken their toll. Transplants are planned for these this year. The last reports from the sampling last autumn give room for more than cautious optimism that the experiment has been a success, and that we can expect the oyster stocks to rebuild.

I should like to add that although the cooperation of the local fishermen has generally been excellent, there are one or two areas where some of the transplanted oysters have been illegally or accidentally removed but not to an overall serious extent.

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF COLD STORAGE SUBVENTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, who I understand is also Acting Minister of Agriculture. My question is this. What progress is being made toward transferring the administration of cold storage subventions from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Fisheries in so far as those subventions apply or might apply to fisheries products cold storage warehouses, in order that the fullest possible consideration may be given to any applications and in order also that it may be easier to lift the $50,000 ceiling on such subsidies which exists at the moment?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I can advise the hon. member that this question has been studied and that we have come to the conclusion, perhaps not finally but for the time being at least, that it would require considerable duplication of staff to divide the responsibility for the administration of this act between the two departments. However, I can assure the hon. member that in a case where applications apply to facilities which are intended for the use of fish, there is close co-operation between my department—I refer to the Department of Fisheries—and the Department of Agriculture.

With regard to the final part of the question, as to the lifting of the ceiling on the amount of the subsidy in each case, I have nothing to report on that matter at this time.

AIR TRANSPORT

C.P.A.—APPROVAL OF FLIGHTS FROM WESTERN CANADA TO LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has any progress been made with the British government in connection with landing rights in London on behalf of Canadian Pacific Airlines on its route from western Canada to the United Kingdom, which was announced last session? Can the minister make a statement on the present position of the matter?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I have been carrying on correspondence with Right Hon. Peter Thorneycroft on this matter, and there is an agreement between the two of us that preliminary talks will take place the middle of next month.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to ask a supplementary question. Is B.O.A.C. asking for additional rights in Canada in exchange for the C.P.A. landing rights in London?

Mr. Balcer: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN ROLE OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): In the absence of the Minister of National Defence I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Has he noted the announcement by the United Kingdom government of its decision to emphasize the role of its armed forces as that of a highly mobile, conventional force? If so, can he advise the house whether any thought is being given to a similar Canadian policy, in order that our forces may make their fullest contribution in opposing aggression and maintaining peace throughout the world?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is really asking for a fairly important declaration of policy in answer to a question. If the minister wishes to deal with it he is, of course, at liberty to do so, but I would think the question is not an appropriate one for orders of the day.

EXERCISE "GREAT BEAR"—STUDY OF RESULTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Has the minister yet had a chance to study the results of exercise Great Bear, a joint manoeuvre including 8,000 United States troops and A company of the second battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry from Edmonton? If so, does he intend to recommend the acquisition of any new mobile equipment?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no comments to make on this matter. I have not yet seen the report on this exercise yet.

CIVIL DEFENCE

ARNPRIOR—DISCONTINUANCE OF RESCUE COURSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I sent him notice, but unfortunately it may not have reached him in time for him to review the matter. Does the government plan to discontinue the rescue section of the civil defence course at Arnprior this coming summer and, if so, what is the reason for the decision?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the federal-provincial conference last November there was discussion by ministers and officials of the possibility of reducing the courses at Arnprior. It was pointed out that the army has taken over the greater part of the rescue training for emergency purposes and also that the provinces, with federal help, would gradually be undertaking their own rescue training operations. Consequently, while there is no specific date set, Arnprior probably will be closing at some time in the future.

Mr. Hellyer: When the minister's estimates are before us, I wonder whether he would give us in more complete detail a review of how these same functions will be carried out by the Department of National Defence or, failing that, why the financial burden should be unloaded on the provinces, which are already hard pressed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member recognizes that his statement is one for the estimates.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

REPORTED SEARCH FOR SUBMARINE OFF PACIFIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Can the minister report to the house regarding the activities of H.M.C.S. Skeena off the coast of British Columbia in looking for submarines?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to report on the activities of the Skeena. It has been stated before in the house in answer to similar questions that it is not considered to be in the public interest to report on such activities as those in which the Skeena is now engaged.

COURT MARTIAL FOLLOWING ACCIDENTAL SHELLING OF U.S. COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence whether it is correct that Commander Leir of H.M.C.S Skeena is to appear before a court martial as a result of the accidental shelling of the United States mainland from the Juan de Fuca straits.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): This matter is sub judice, and as such I do not believe it should be discussed in the house.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the Minister of Veterans Affairs brought to his attention the question I asked yesterday with respect to any proposals for the purchase of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway by the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and the answer that was given by my colleague to the effect that such a question should be on the order paper was also brought to my attention.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Late last Sunday afternoon a Montreal newspaperman called Oliver Clawson located me at a public gathering in Toronto. When I was given his phone number I thought to myself "Good lord, what have I said now about Quebec. What does he want to know?" When I got talking to him he asked what I knew about the departure from the New Democratic party of its house leader, Mr. Hazen Argue. I laughed at him and told him to roll that hoop in another direction. He insisted that a statement on Mr. Argue's defection was imminent and asked what did I think about it; had I talked it over with Mr. Argue; how was I sure this was just a gimmick of Mr. Thatcher, and how well did I really know Mr. Argue?

When I had finished the conversation I thought I had straightened Mr. Clawson out, but within a few hours my self-satisfaction was shattered. A news broadcast said that Mr. Argue, at a press conference attended by Mr. Thatcher, had announced his departure from the New Democratic party; that he had found the party was dominated by a labour clique, and that dark and sinister things were abroad in Canada. The shock to me was overwhelming. This almost seemed like a fantasy, but it turned out that it was not a fantasy, though one part of the story was and is.

My colleagues in this party, particularly the three who joined with me in supporting this man for the party leadership, have asked me to speak in this debate about our departed colleague. It is my duty, I feel, because some of the responsibility for what happened is certainly mine. Further, this departure was accompanied by comments of its author which hinted that other members of this parliamentary party shared his views and would soon follow him. There is nothing in this; we are in, of, and for the party.

Mr. T. C. Douglas commented last Sunday over his shock and said that of course it was Mr. Argue's own business and up to his own conscience. We here, his former colleagues, take no issue with any hon. member or any citizen changing party allegiance in order to be more at home with his conscience and principles, and apparently Mr. Argue has almost found such a spiritual home, in the political sense, with the Liberal party. We wish the party well with him. Looking at it in the light of the rise to prominence of another C.C.F.'er in that party, like Mr. Thatcher, we can see how valuable a political training framework has been provided by J. S. Woodsworth, M. J. Coldwell and others. No; there is no real issue so far as we are concerned with freedom of choice about this.

Indeed, it has been my own personal view that there has been too much of a fetish about hide-bound partisanship in politics in Canada. My good friend from Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) was once a supporter of the Liberal party, as was my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). So was the Prime Minister, and I once acted as poll clerk and scrutineer for the Liberal party. It is hard for me to say that this kind of experience tainted me. So, Mr. Speaker, there are no recriminations on the right of this man to switch, or on the party he is embracing. After these remarks we shall not take up the time of the house again this session on the departure from this place of honour on the part of the hon. member for Assiniboia, but we must take up the reasons given with such cool, deliberate malignity for resigning from the party.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member, in attributing malignancy to another hon. member, is trespassing upon the proper rules of conduct among hon. members.

Mr. Fisher: I will withdraw the word "malignity", but I think it is certainly fair to say "given so coolly and deliberately for resigning from the party". Essentially these are contained in the last paragraphs of the initial statement which he made. Of course this statement has been enlarged and garnished by its author, and the tale will probably grow with each telling. However, let us look at these paragraphs:

> The N.D.P. has now become the tool of a small labour clique and is effectively under their domination and control. The N.D.P. has come more and more under the control of a few labour leaders, mainly within a few large and powerful international unions.
> Labouring people, as with other citizens, have a right and obligation to take part in political activity, but it is in their best interest and in the interest of democratic government, that this action be taken as individual party members and not as representatives of a controlling class bloc within the party. Class control of a national political party now acquired within the N.D.P. constitutes a dark and sinister threat to democratic government in Canada.
> This challenge to freedom is real. This challenge to freedom, I shall oppose and expose.
> To this task I shall devote all my strength and energy. I do this in the defence of freedom and in the interest of my country.

You will forgive the zest I put into that reading, Mr. Speaker. It was as though John Blackmore or Ross Thatcher were nudging me.

The conception of the New Democratic party received public notice in April, 1958, at the C.L.C. convention in Winnipeg, shortly after the great triumph of the Prime Minister and his party in March. As a result of that election there was a total collapse of the Social Credit party and a debacle for both the Liberal and the C.C.F. parties. Our leader, Mr. Coldwell, was defeated although he undertook to carry on outside the house for a time. Then in the summer of 1958 the C.C.F. decided to join with the C.L.C. in a new party program.

The hon. member for Assiniboia had been chosen as our house leader, and he took part in the committee that was formed to set up the New Democratic party. We had two members of our caucus on the committee that was planning the new party; one was the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and the other was the hon. member for Assiniboia. Throughout the whole period from 1958 to 1961 this man was or could have been in on all the deliberations, most of which were held in Ottawa where he was working and living. Remember this point; throughout the whole period he was at the heart of the whole project, from 1958 to the founding convention. In all that time and at all those many meetings the other members of this committee cannot remember a single substantial objection raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia about labour representation in the party, labour affiliation with the party or labour finances in the party. Perhaps they have forgotten. Perhaps they are not telling the truth. Perhaps they have forgotten, but I have some memories on that very question. You see, one of the greatest doubters in the C.C.F. about this whole problem happened to be me.

In three articles given such wide prominence by our ever-loving press, in a statement to an Ontario C.C.F. convention, I reviewed the possible weaknesses of labour support. Did the hon. member from Assiniboia, from 1959 to the founding convention, ever join me publicly or privately in such fears? Not once, Mr. Speaker, not once. Repeatedly he was questioned, particularly by the hon. member for Kootenay West and by me about what was going on in those planning sessions. All we got was the general answer that everything was great. Which member of the caucus at this time was stamping around the nation talking to every trade union audience available, and carrying what message? I should just like to read what the general message was:

> Farmers who today constitute only some 12 per cent of the population are still a major key to political success. Almost half of the electoral polls are still classified as rural. But if the farm vote is a key to political success so is support from labour necessary if the farmer is to be a political partner in government. The working people in the factories and on the farms have every reason to unite.
> The problem facing both is that the great wealth of our nation is being concentrated in the hands of fewer and fewer people.

This was the message that was carried across the country by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Broome: Will the hon. member give the source?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, the source is an article by Mr. Hazen Argue that appeared in the founding edition of the New Democratic party paper, The Commonwealth, on page 18. That was the hon. member for Assiniboia from 1958 to August 2, 1961. And his star ascended. The C.C.F. held a national convention in 1960 at Regina. The house was sitting at the time. We sent our house leader off from here with our blessing. "Seek the C.C.F. national leadership", we told him. Mr. Coldwell was retiring. We said, "Let us not have any hiatus before the founding convention. You take the leadership". He promised that he would run for the post.

I arrived late, at the Regina convention, to find that our friend had agreed not to run and had decided to withdraw. We were going to have a hiatus. My friends in the caucus and I did not particularly like this, so we got together at that convention and we got the hon. member for Assiniboia to change his mind. I have confessed my responsibility in this. I think this is the incident that really began to put responsibility on me for what has happened. In an exciting switch at that convention, and with some recrimination, the hon. member for Assiniboia became the C.C.F. national leader one year before the New Democratic party founding convention.

Some people were very bitter about this. I was blamed for much of it. I would not like to show hon. members some of the letters I received about my activities at that convention in supporting the hon. member for Assiniboia. My stock with both C.C.F. leaders and trade union leaders went to a new low, but I did not worry about it and I did not think the hon. member for Assiniboia was worried about it.

The other members of the caucus were pleased and proud to have him as our national leader. In the next year, and again particularly at my urging, he announced his candidacy for the New Democratic party leadership. Some old time C.C.F.'ers came and remonstrated with me. They said "Mr. Argue promised he would not run for the leadership if Mr. Douglas was going to run". Again we ignored this; we supported our leader. We said "He is a good fellow to get along with; he is working hard in the house. Even if Tommy Douglas does come into the house we will support him". We knew it would be an uphill fight, but a fight is worth a chance and you can only get beaten, and I discovered from the man I first beat that there is no disgrace in being beaten. As a matter of fact I can say from that experience that there are perhaps reasons for pride.

Anyway, we had the leadership control of the C.C.F. in the hands of our house leader. Mr. Douglas during this time stayed fairly close to Regina, and our C.C.F. national leader ranged the nation with tremendous vigour appealing particularly to trade unions. There is not much point in noting his development of a radical or socialist position as distinct from a more moderate one, or in introducing the championship he gave to the "Get out of NATO" movement. These two approaches of course struck responsive cords among the representatives of the trade unions and universities. Those travels from January to August, 1961 of course cost a considerable amount of money, more than $5,000.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. That figure is completely inaccurate and false, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. Fisher: I will not withdraw the figure. I have seen the figure, and that is what it is. This raises—

Mr. Argue: That is not true; that is absolutely untrue.

Mr. Fisher: This raises this tricky matter of trade union money—

Mr. Argue: That is a false statement. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has referred to a certain figure. I have denied the accuracy of that figure and I think he has to accept my word for it, under the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member does not have the floor. If he wishes to disagree with what has been said, it is his privilege to do so; but if it is a disagreement I think it could more properly be made as an explanation at the end of the speech of the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fisher: The sum is not in question. The money to pay for all this travelling came through the C.C.F. This is not a confession; we all knew, including the hon. member for Assiniboia, that most of this expense money and the greater part of his salary as official leader came through the Canadian trade union movement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask the hon. member to consider the relevancy of some of the things he is saying. This is a debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, not on a motion to condemn a member of parliament for his conduct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I would consider that only matters which are of public policy and interest in the affairs of his party would be relevant, and that personal, internal and other matters are not matters of relevancy in a debate of this kind.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order you have raised I should like to point out that the reason given in this house by the hon. member for Assiniboia for departing from the party was trade union control, or that the labour clique was controlling the party. I am going to go into this contribution of the trade union movement. I am going to try to paint the picture of trade union participation.

Mr. Speaker: I understood that was what the hon. member wished to speak about, and of course I would not object to his dealing with that issue; I would consider it relevant. I am not objecting to any specific thing except that it seemed to me the hon. member was introducing many personal episodes which are not matters for public debate. He was verging on that, and I just wished to caution him as he proceeded.

Mr. Fisher: The point I wish to make is that the money came largely from the trade union movement in Canada, particularly from the trade union movement in Ontario, and more particularly from three unions, auto, steel and the packinghouse workers. I knew it and so did the other members. It was never any secret, and anyone who looked at our books at the founding convention could have seen it. The C.C.F. books are always open at conventions. This is the way the matter was. I knew where the money came from; I assumed that the hon. member for Assiniboia also knew, and I do not remember that he ever protested. In fact, because of the dearth of funds in the old C.C.F. it was very difficult to meet some of the expenses that occurred, and again our friends in the trade union movement were instrumental and sympathetic in providing this money.

However, I will get away from that part of it. Let us go back to the Coliseum and the convention. I was the nominator at that convention, and I was very honoured and proud to nominate the hon. member for Assiniboia. We know the result. I emphasize the result. We were very badly licked. We were neatly, soundly and completely licked at that convention. Some of us have been licked before; and while it was grim, there it was. My own personal chagrin, in sympathy with the hon. member for Assiniboia, was that we had been outsmarted and outmanoeuvred, but all this disappeared in the magnanimous way in which our candidate for the leadership threw himself behind Mr. Douglas: "I shall never let you down".

The convention ended and, the house resumed in September. The hon. member for Assiniboia, because of ill health, was not here for much of that time, and the session ended fairly quickly. Everything was quiet throughout the fall. This house did not resume until January 18. As chairman of the caucus of our party and as a friend I wrote the hon. member for Assiniboia and tried to get in touch with him a number of times. I was solicitous about him, how he was, what he was doing, had he recovered from the tremendous strain and effort he had made. I got no reply at any time.

In Montreal in November I met a minister of the crown. He came up to me, took me to one side, and said in a friendly way, "I have a tip from Saskatchewan for you from a reliable source. Your house leader is going to the Liberals shortly after the new session opens". I pooh-poohed this. I said it was nonsense. I wrote to our leader and put the question directly to him. I pointed out to him that I had received tentative offers from the party that he was rumoured to be joining—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: I pointed out to him that the surface advantages were very apparent. But again I got no reply. I took several other steps to try to find out what was going on, because after all I had nominated the gentleman; he was a friend of mine. I could not find out a thing; there were just these rumours.

The session opened last month on the day the by-election results from Ontario came in. These results were disappointing to the New Democratic party. Our leader issued a statement underlining labour's failure in Ontario. Between that night and a week last Friday he and I had many conversations about the party's strength and development, its future prospects both in the long and in the short range, the performance of the trade unions and their leaders, and these persistent rumours about a possible switch on his part to the Liberal party. I find now that within a few hours of his denying to me that he had ever seen Mr. Thatcher to speak to in recent years, he was closeted with him. I find now that when the national council of the Liberal party met here not too long ago they were told by Mr. Thatcher that the hon. member for Assiniboia would deliver himself over to the Liberals on call, and that the call would probably be forthcoming on February 20.

All this is not really important, except to me. Its importance lies in the denials he has made to the questions I put to him. After all, there have been past precedents for switches and changes. Most of us remember Ramsay Macdonald. The only thing that is important in any way at all is this charge about labour cliques and labour domination. In our conversations about this we agreed that the election failures in Ontario stemmed from slowness of support by the trade union leaders. It was not that there was a small group in control; it was just that the labour leaders were slow in coming through, showing a reluctance about giving a strong lead in developing more affiliations and more memberships. The C.C.F. part of the New Democratic party seemed to be doing very well, but not the trade union leadership. This was some clique. Some dark and sinister plot.

After our conversations I returned to my constituency and so did the hon. member for Assiniboia, and he did not come back until he had made his statement about leaving the party. I have since tried to reflect upon what the reasons for the change might have been, to guess what might have passed between the time I last saw him and the making of the announcement last Sunday. I look at the political situation, and I see that in Saskatchewan the policies of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) are receiving considerable support. I can see that somewhere in the constituency there may be rumours that things are difficult for the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan at the present time. I can see that someone could look at the Conservative party in this house—it seems to be doing very well on the prairies—and think there are 16 members from Saskatchewan and there are two cabinet ministers from Saskatchewan; there is not much future here. I thought that from a conversation I had about this very point. An article which had appeared in Maclean's was brought up between the hon. member for Assiniboia and myself. This whole question about what Mr. Douglas would do if, after the next election, a balance of power resulted as between the major parties, was discussed. The suggestion made in that article was that in such an event Mr. Douglas would move his group into the Liberal party here and form a coalition. I said at the time that this idea might sound all right but it did not make sense. Look at the political situation which would arise provincially as the result of such a rapprochement. What would be the effect between Mr. Thatcher and Mr. Lloyd in Saskatchewan. Would Mr. Wintermeyer welcome Mr. Donald MacDonald into his arms in Ontario?

An hon. Member: Never.

Mr. Fisher: I take it hon. members can judge what the answer is. Anyway, that really closed the conversation we had on the whole question as to whether in the future we were going to become part of the Liberal party. I certainly cannot say that the explanation which has been given about what has taken place can ever satisfy me. I cannot say I think I shall ever find out what constituted the key factor in the complex which led to the change. I know that many of my colleagues in the New Democratic party, in this tremendous reaction which is going to take place in the labour movement in response to the charges which have been made, are going to kill themselves to see that the hon. member for Assiniboia is not re-elected to this house.

Maybe this is a case again of being the odd man, but I do not really feel that way. I should like to imagine the hon. member back in this house, maybe in a growing Liberal party as the heir of Jimmy Gardiner. I may be here to watch it, but perhaps I shall be back in a school room teaching some children. I should like to be able to say that once I knew that politician very well; and I think I can tell those children that he was a very likeable fellow.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): My first words must be words of congratulation to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for the constructive way in which they presented their points of view. I wish also to extend my congratulations to the member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) on his appointment as Deputy Speaker and to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) on his appointment as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

My purpose in taking part in this debate today is to express some points of view on matters which affect the people in my riding. Before dealing with specific topics, however, I cannot but comment on the desperate efforts of the Liberals to confuse the issues before us at the present time. There is no denying that we are faced with many serious problems for whose solution understanding, study and sincere effort are needed. But the government, by very active programs, has been seeking remedies for these difficulties. The Liberals, on the other hand, want to take credit for the years of prosperity in a prosperous world, and then to blame the Conservatives for economic difficulties in this country which have been brought about by world conditions and world trends.

The opposition ignores the fact that the factors which led to our present economic difficulties were ever present when a Liberal administration was in power. It is not to their credit that a world war and the Korean war provided prosperity and economic development in the absence of competition from industrial countries which had been destroyed by those wars. Nor it is our fault that the competition offered by a restored Europe and Japan has limited the prospects for our own trade expansion and seriously challenged our trade in our own markets; or has this party caused automation and other trends which have brought about changes and unemployment. The Canadian people were not prepared for these changes, and no provision was made to meet growing competitions from abroad.

I blame the Liberal party for this; they were blinded by temporary prosperity, and did not see the warning signs. Their hindsight is more vocal than their barren foresight. It is easy during times of war to establish secondary industries fed with cost plus contracts. It is much more difficult to expand and create industries when conditions are more competitive. The Liberals floated in the ship of state on the high waters of good times without a rudder or compass. They just floated with the tide. On the other hand this government since it came into power has given assistance to every part of our economy, to every province of our nation.

I do not have time to list all that has been done to assist the farmers, the miners, the businessmen and industry, or the social benefits which have been returned to our people, but I am sure those who have received such benefits can judge how hollow are the present promises and lamentations of the Liberal party. I hasten to add, however, that although we have done a great deal to meet the problems of the day, we realize there are a great many more things to be done. We know that if our people are to enjoy the rich resources which are ours much thought, study and action must be undertaken; and because I have confidence in the leadership of our Prime Minister and the cabinet I know no effort will be spared and no suggestion ignored for the benefit of the country.

The Liberals have quoted statements indicating the attitude of people outside the country concerning Canadian development. I should like to place on the record one extract from a United States magazine entitled Business Week, issue of December 23, 1961. On the page dealing with Canada the following comment is found. After pointing out the difficulties on the Canadian horizon it said:

> Lying behind Canada's improved economic outlook for 1962 are the expansionary policies adopted by the Progressive Conservative government of Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker last June, in the wake of the forced resignation of austere nationalistic James E. Coyne as governor of the Bank of Canada.
> With Coyne removed from a position in which he was able to obstruct expansionist policies, the Canadian government moved quickly to administer a strong dose of monetary and fiscal medicine to the Canadian economy. That medicine is now starting to take effect.

That is the comment of an outsider.

I wish to make a few remarks concerning trade, and particularly the common market. During September of last year I had the privilege, together with five other hon. members of this house, of attending the seventh commonwealth parliamentary conference in London, where members of legislature bodies from all parts of the commonwealth had the opportunity of discussing their mutual problems. This conference was composed of people representative of many races, cultures and groups. All were concerned with trade and the development of their resources. All expressed great hope in the future of the commonwealth and stressed the need for mutual co-operation and assistance.

Great concern was expressed over the effect of the United Kingdom entering the European economic community, better known as the common market. All members expressed concern and pointed out the adverse effects on their economy that would flow as a result of the United Kingdom joining the European economic community, and referred to the loss of the imperial preferences established in 1932. Many would be more adversely affected in their trade than Canada, especially New Zealand, Australia, Ghana and Nigeria. Incidentally, India has based its next five year plan on the present trade arrangements with the United Kingdom and would be seriously affected.

In the United Kingdom opposition to entry into the common market cuts across party lines. Labour and Conservative members have spoken out forcibly against it. However, it is apparent that the majority of the leaders in politics and industry and in the labour movement in England feel that Great Britain must enter the European economic community for both political and economic reasons.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member permit me to interrupt him in the interests of better hearing what he is saying. There are a great many conversations, I find, that are interrupting the train of thought of the speaker, and there are also some conversations behind the curtains which are disturbing the house. I wish hon. members would extend the usual courtesy to the speaker.

Mr. Morton: These people felt that the United Kingdom could not remain outside much longer and prosper. Also, her entry would add to the political and economic stability of Europe as a whole. They questioned how much of the economic benefits of the commonwealth could be maintained. Both, Hon. Mr. Heath and Prime Minister Macmillan assured the conference that if they had to choose between the common market and the commonwealth, Britain would choose the commonwealth. However, it was suggested that in any event the present basis of the imperial preferences might have to be reconsidered in view of today's circumstances.

The political future of the commonwealth is open to question if the United Kingdom joins the common market and it becomes a political union. The entry of the United Kingdom into the European economic community could open up a great new future or it could create great economic and political problems. I urge the government to make a very careful assessment and give reasoned leadership to prepare the people of Canada for the great changes which may take place.

It should be clearly understood that under the present terms of the treaty only European countries can join the common market, as set out in article 237. It is true that there is provision for associate membership under article 3(k), but this would be only on a colonial or dependency basis. There would be no representation in assembly, council or commission as set out in article 4. Within the common market group there is to be free and unrestricted movement of capital and persons. There must be a modification of local laws to assist the functioning of the common market and, of course, there are to be no tariffs between the member countries but a common tariff against the entry of goods from outside the countries.

I turn now to a growing problem created by our changing society, the place or role of the displaced workman who may be unskilled or middle aged. This person through no fault of his own may find himself without work. I know a great deal is being done by local employment offices to assist these people, but a great deal more remains to be done. I urge the government to double its efforts and research to help these people find new roles in our Canadian society.

The proposed pension scheme and especially portable pensions, relate closely to this problem, as does the workman who retires at age 65. I think there must be an over-all new approach to these interrelated problems to provide more hope to people who are caught up in the human problems created by these changes.

Another matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the government is the problem of municipal finance. The recent brief of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities brought to our attention the great problem of municipal finance and requested federal assistance. Although we realize that municipalities are under provincial jurisdiction, their lack of finance could hinder the basic development of our country, and the works required could give much needed employment.

The federal government has already recognized the basic needs in its housing legislation, winter works programs and more recently loans to municipalities for the construction of sewers, as well as assistance, through the Minister of Labour to vocational and technical training. The question which arises is as to the best way of giving assistance within our constitutional responsibility.

A number of suggestions have been made. They include the extension of loans for specific projects which are required in the rapid growth of our municipalities, such as loans for construction of sewers; the establishment of a municipal loan fund, with regard to which problems of administration could arise; the establishment of a provincial-municipal bank or financial corporation which could co-ordinate financing of all municipal requirements. The original capital could be obtained by dominion-provincial investment and, of course, municipal bonds could be placed on the market in a more orderly fashion. Also suggested is the establishment of the same type of institution in each province with the same function. This, of course, would be more within the spirit of the British North America Act, but questions have been raised as to whether all the provinces would be in a position to establish such institutions.

The problem is big enough and important enough, having regard to the effect on our national expansion, to warrant serious study and action by the federal government. I urge the government to study these proposals and others in order to ascertain the best possible solution.

Perhaps the house would be interested in the effect of immigration since the 1951 census on the ethnic composition of the population in Toronto, and in particular in my own riding of Davenport. This effect has been ascertained as the result of a study sponsored by the city of Toronto planning board in the summer of 1960. One of the most striking developments in the ethnic composition of the population of the city of Toronto during the period 1951 to 1960 was the decline in the percentage of people of British descent. The 1951 census showed that about 70 per cent of the population were of British descent. The 1960 figures showed that only 40 per cent of the population were of British descent.

During the nine years it is estimated that 385,500 persons moved into the metropolitan Toronto area from foreign countries. Virtually all these persons settled initially within the limits of the city of Toronto. Of the immigrants coming into the Toronto area, 33 per cent were British, 22 per cent Italian and 13 per cent German. Whereas in 1951 besides the British only Italian, Polish and German immigrants were the most numerous, by 1960 there were eight ethnic groups in addition to the British entering Canada, each numbering more than 20,000, namely Italian, German, Jewish, Ukrainian, French, Polish, Hungarian and Greek. In my riding it is estimated that the population is about 35 per cent Italian, 30 per cent British, 10 per cent Ukrainian, 10 per cent German and 10 per cent Polish. Toronto has become one of the most cosmopolitan cities in Canada.

This great inflow of human wealth which has brought a rich diversity of cultures and customs is evident also in many other parts of this country. It has challenged our ability to bring about a reasonable integration and the development of a Canadian culture which will reflect the contribution of all the various cultures.

At this stage of our history it is most important that we develop our pride in Canada and stress national unity. If we are to develop into a great nation we must provide the opportunity for all people to have one common ideal and ambition, and at the same time retain the best of their own cultures. Political union and national pride do not necessarily prevent the growth of local cultures. It is a paradox in this changing world that while many nations are pooling their sovereignties in order to ensure peace in the world, others are seeking independence in order to satisfy national pride. Within Canada we cannot afford, by drift and indifference, to encourage separate cultures to become separate political entities. We must be big enough and understanding enough to provide a political unity which will also give scope for various cultures to grow and enrich our future Canadian culture.

I hope the government will give leadership in this integration and national growth, and that by 1967 we shall have the outward symbols of unity such as one flag and the right to amend our own constitution. We are at the crossroads of our national growth and development. We face the dislocation of new international trade movements and the threat of communist expansion. Internally we are trying to grow nationally and to bring together the different groups, cultures and economic trends. If we cannot find a modus vivendi by which to achieve this national unity, how can we expect to achieve peace in the world at large? I hope that by 1967 we can celebrate the hundredth birthday of our country by showing real unity and national understanding, thereby providing opportunity for the human and cultural development of our many groups who have one thing in common, namely the welfare of Canada taking its part as a nation in the world, seeking peace and proving that communism is wrong.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): I am pleased to join my fellow members in this house in commending the mover (Mr. Bourdages and seconder Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I also want to congratulate the recently promoted members, wishing them great success in their new functions.

However, if we, in the province of Quebec, are able to rejoice with those promoted members and on their behalf, we have no reason to feel flattered by the theatrical and grotesque show to which the Prime Minister resorted in order to enhance some comparatively unimportant appointments. It is obvious that, in undertaking this trip to Quebec city, they tried to create an illusion of the Prime Minister's interest in the province of Quebec, without the Prime Minister having to take any action of equal importance which alone might have been considered a sign of true interest, even understanding as concerns that province.

To my mind, that whole pilgrimage to Quebec city was in very poor taste and showed an appalling lack of subtlety, as it seriously reflected upon the intelligence of the people of Quebec.

Does the Prime Minister really think that Quebecers would not see through such a gross propaganda screen?

We can evaluate the importance of the Secretary of State's (Mr. Dorion) appointment as chairman of the privy council. That post was vacant since 1957. In 1958, the Prime Minister indicated that it was an entirely unimportant post. He therefore appointed a minister from Quebec.

The appointment of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) as parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister obviously needs no comment.

Mr. Tremblay: I should like to know who wrote that.

Mr. Cardin: Therefore, why all the ceremonies and dramatics on the part of the Prime Minister, if not to make us believe that he attaches great importance to the ministers and members from Quebec, whereas, in fact, they neither control nor decide anything.

It is unfortunate that apparently the Prime Minister does not want to give his Quebec ministers the authority and responsibility that were enjoyed and used so well under the successive Liberal administrations. It is extremely insulting to see how offhandedly the Prime Minister looks down on Quebecers as imbeciles, incapable of making any distinction between light and shadow, in such an essential and important field as the management of their own country.

The Prime Minister must greatly underestimate the intelligence, the temperament and the patient yet eager determination of French Canada to play fully and effectively the part to which it is entitled in the administration of the country, since he has chosen to come and laugh at us on our own doorstep at a time of social and political upheavals.

Mr. Tremblay: Who has written your speech?

Mr. Cardin: This unhappy trip to Quebec confirmed in the mind of many people that, despite the promises made by the Prime Minister in 1958, under the pretext of favouring Quebec, he systematically rules out the Quebec element from an equitable and significant participation in the administration of the country, just as he ruled out the province of Quebec as a significant factor to win the 1957 election.

Mr. Tremblay: False representations.

Mr. Cardin: For those who might believe that I exaggerate—

Mr. Tremblay: You said that in 1958 and you were defeated.

Mr. Cardin: —I refer you to an article—

Mr. Tremblay: Tell us who wrote your speech.

Mr. Cardin: —published in Le Devoir of January 23. Mr. Clement Brown, who does not always flatter the Liberal party, wonders what could be in the Prime Minister's mind when he interprets as he does the answer allegedly given by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) at a press conference held, not in the province of Quebec, but in Nova Scotia, to determine who would decide about the national flag.

Mr. Pigeon: Tell us about the two flags.

Mr. Cardin: Why, Mr. Speaker, at a meeting in the province of Ontario, the Prime Minister twisted the answer given by the Leader of the Opposition to make him say that only Quebec ministers would decide on the national flag.

I am convinced that the distinguished Prime Minister, who claims to be the champion of national unity, would not have given such an interpretation to our leader's answer if the meeting had been in the province of Quebec, and yet nobody in Quebec would expect or like Quebec ministers to decide alone about the choice of our national emblem. To me, however, it seems perfectly normal that the ministers from Quebec as well as the other ministers should decide together, not only about a distinctive flag, but any other question of national importance. Unfortunately, such is not the government's policy.

Recently, when the Prime Minister was asked if he would consider the establishment of a royal commission to study all aspects of bilingualism, he did not say that he would consider the suggestion or that he would refer it to his ministers, his only answer in the house was a loud and hostile "no", as if he had been deeply insulted by that question.

Mr. Dorion: Would the hon. member allow me a question on that matter?

Mr. Cardin: I shall answer the question of the Secretary of State after my speech.

Mr. Pigeon: He cannot answer.

Mr. Cardin: And yet bilingualism is not a dirty word which we should be ashamed of. For those who speak both languages, whether they are of English or French descent, bilingualism presents unquestionable cultural and practical advantages which are increasingly appreciated throughout the country.

Mr. Pigeon: You have refused simultaneous interpretation.

Mr. Cardin: The fact of knowing two languages is not a denial or a betrayal of one's racial origin. Why then is the Prime Minister scandalized at the mere suggestion of a proposed study on a matter of present day interest? Why not ascertain whether bilingualism could not become a distinctive cultural character of all Canadians?

Mr. Tremblay: What have you done with bilingualism while you were in power?

Mr. Cardin: That narrow and hostile attitude on the part of the Prime Minister, which caused all well-thinking Canadians to shudder, renders even more odious the visit which the Prime Minister paid to Quebec city last December and makes of bilingual cheques a valueless gesture full of electoral hypocrisy.

It seems to me that the unceasing efforts made in the past to have the voice of Quebec heard in the federal parliament, and those made to reach a very encouraging degree of understanding, co-operation and unity, among all representatives of the Canadian people, are too serious and necessary to national unity for us to let the progress made today in that direction be jeopardized by the demagogic and old-fashioned tactics of a Prime Minister who does not understand and who does not seem to want to understand that we, from Quebec, are merely asking to play within the federal parliament the role which is ours, to assume the responsibilities which are ours, and to contribute to the building of a united and strong Canada, which all Canadians, in the full exercise of their respective rights and freedoms, want to consider proudly as their country.

Mr. Pigeon. Twenty two years of division.

Mr. Tremblay: Very good.

Now that Mr. Lamontagne has been heard from, it is Mr. Cardin's turn.

(Text):

Mr. Cardin: I watched with a great deal of interest, Mr. Speaker, the remarkable performance of the Prime Minister in the throne speech debate a few weeks ago. His usual enviable vocabulary was there, his sense of timing and publicity was there, his questionable debating tactics were there, and he was certainly not lacking in arrogance. But the 1957 and 1958 vision was not there, and the fire that went along with it has apparently been doused; because the Prime Minister was groping to find a road, any road, that might lead him in the general direction of a new frontier. The confidence and, indeed, the cockiness displayed by the Prime Minister in previous throne speech debates were replaced by uncertainty and panic.

The uncertainty was more particularly spelled out by his refusal to answer questions of the Leader of the Opposition, who had extended that courtesy to the Prime Minister on several occasions on that very same day. The panic was evidenced by the increased pitch of the well known head and nasal noises used by the Prime Minister to denote a simulated sense of surprised shock, and which apparently is a sign for his acolytes to applaud.

Mr. Pallett: The usual type of personal Liberal attack.

Mr. Cardin: I will come to personal attacks in a moment. In case some should be scandalized and ask how a backbencher can dare to address the Prime Minister in somewhat less than flattering tones, may I say, using the Prime Minister's own words, "The Liberals have the answer to that too", and it is that the Prime Minister has been asking for it for a very long time. This is simply because he does not act like a real prime minister. He acts more like a silent movie hero who overacts his performance. The Prime Minister's attitude in this house lacks the dignity and the decorum so severely guarded by all previous incumbents of that high office, including all the Conservative prime ministers. I feel the time has come when the Prime Minister must be reminded that in our democratic form of government the Prime Minister is not above the truth. The office of prime minister is not above the law, nor is it above the rules of this house or above the standards of political decency, and it certainly is not above criticism.

Mr. Pallett: On a point of order, the hon. member is reading from a speech prepared by someone, although I presume he accepts responsibility for it. He has used an expression which implies that the Prime Minister, in speaking to this house, does not speak the truth. Now, by implication it is a very cleverly worded expression, but I think the hon. member should make some explanation; and if the explanation is that the implication of the words is as he intended to give, then he should withdraw them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speaking to the point of order—

Mr. Henderson: What have you got to do with it? Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking to what purports to be a point of order; what I submit to Your Honour is not a point of order at all, but an effort made by the parliamentary secretary to reply to an argument in the course of a debate when he had no right to the floor, just because he did not like the words that were used by the hon. member. It is true that if someone says something that raises a question of privilege the person affected, not someone acting on his behalf, has a right to take that point up at the first possible opportunity, but I listened most carefully to what my hon. friend said—

Mr. Pallett: I was listening, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: I listened also to the hon. gentleman opposite who does not do the courtesy of listening to me. I listened most carefully to what was said by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres, and he made—

Mr. Henderson: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and he made no reference whatsoever of a direct nature to the present Prime Minister. He did say that the office should be treated in a certain fashion. That was all he said, and it was an unexceptionable statement. I suggest that the only reason they are hurt was that hon. gentlemen opposite applied to it what was in their own minds.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has taken time to speak on a point of order which he said was not a point of order. I suggest that by his very words he has admitted it is a proper point of order, and I ask Your Honour to deal with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I felt that the implication "above the truth" was not in good tone or taste on the part of the hon. member who has the floor, as I know him, and to that extent he would deem it worthy of consideration to soften the expression for the record.

Mr. Cardin: I shall comply with your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I stated that no former prime minister acted in this way, and I said that the Prime Minister is not above certain things. I have full reason to say that, and I take full responsibility for the words I myself have written. It is because we had come dangerously close to a form of complete dictatorship in the province of Quebec under the late Premier Duplessis that I could not allow the Prime Minister to forget and ignore these fundamental principles.

Mr. Pallett: Is the hon. member choosing to ignore the request of the Chair?

Mr. Cardin: No. In deference to the Chair I will drop the phrase "above the truth". The Prime Minister's speeches in the house, which should set the note for useful and constructive debates, degenerate into criminal court debating tactics filled with personal insinuations, half truths and sophistry such as will not be found in the records of Hansard of any former prime minister of Canada, and are more in line with those we heard in the Quebec legislature under Mr. Duplessis. While the Prime Minister is himself the greatest offender in the House of Commons in this respect, he accuses the opposition of lacking in political chivalry and of adopting smearing tactics, considering himself like Caesar's wife to be above reproach. The Prime Minister is not above reproach and when he decides, in the short time left to him, to act as a prime minister we in the opposition will be happy to treat him as such.

Mr. Grafftey: Why did you betray him? You turned your back on your own prime minister.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: He is not worthy of his uncle's name, the late Hon. Cardin.

(Text):

Mr. Cardin: Although the Prime Minister smears our party and some of our friends who cannot defend themselves in this house, as he has done on several occasions, and although this is understandably annoying to our party, it is not considered by us so fundamentally important as the Prime Minister's habit of toying with the truth, and this is particularly noticeable when the Leader of the Opposition is personally involved.

Mr. Churchill: This is a disgraceful attack on the Prime Minister in his absence.

Mr. Grafftey: He is reading his speech. He is not worthy of his family name.

Mr. Cardin: From the first day the Leader of the Opposition was chosen head of the Liberal party the Prime Minister, by his cynical attitude, words and disparaging remarks about the Leader of the Opposition, has revealed that in the deep recesses of his soul there burn the envious fires of the little green-eyed monster. This the Prime Minister would not have indicated toward any other leader of the opposition. This fact, and the Prime Minister's apparent reluctance to let go of the external affairs portfolio, lead one to believe that the Prime Minister, along with his other ambitions, cherishes a secret dream of becoming a great international figure—

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: If he had written his speech himself, he would know what he is talking about.

(Text):

Mr. Cardin: This has apparently become an obsession, because it is the only reasonable explanation—

Mr. McCleave: I rise on a point of order. The hon. member who is speaking has confessed to the house that he is reading from a prepared text, and I think that offends against the rules of the house. It is obviously not the type of speech which contains various statistics or carefully reasoned argument such as one wishes to set down precisely beforehand.

An hon. Member: Everybody on your side does that.

Mr. Cardin: I am referring to my notes, just as every other hon. member has done throughout this debate. This dream of the Prime Minister has apparently become an obsession, because it is the only reasonable explanation of the fact that the Conservatives want word to get around that Canada's greatest contribution in the field of international affairs, under Conservative administration, was the Prime Minister's speech which he made to the United Nations in September, 1960, when he spoke against Russia.

Mr. Tremblay: Shame.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Cardin: To hon. members opposite I shall quote from Le Nouveau Journal, and this is what I read:

(Translation):

We then ask Mr. Green to give us, in order of importance, what he considers to be the greatest achievements of the Diefenbaker administration in the international field.

Guess what.

First Mr. Diefenbaker's speech at the United Nations, in 1960, against Russian colonialism.

Well.

(Text):

It is most unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the New York Times and the other responsible newspapers did not appreciate the full significance and impact of the Prime Minister's speech, because if they had known that it was considered by the government as Canada's greatest international contribution since 1957, I feel sure the New York Times would have reported that in its columns. But surely the Prime Minister betrays his greatest weakness by his continued disparaging, insulting and indeed inaccurate statements on the career, and indeed the reputation, of a great Canadian diplomat, who, by the way, has also become a great leader of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: I should like to quote from an article written by Arthur Blakely in the Montreal Gazette of September 21, 1961:

Pearson is the author of post-war Canadian foreign policy which, in broad general outline, has remained operative under three prime ministers and one complete change of government. In his service at home and abroad as Canadian secretary of state for external affairs, and foreign policy specialist, he won an international reputation such as no Canadian has received before or since.

Mr. Grafftey: And we supported him in a bipartisan fashion.

Mr. Cardin: The article continues:

He was the chairman of the NATO council back in 1951-52 and president of the UN general assembly in 1952. His statesmanship won for him the Nobel peace prize in 1957.

Perhaps the Prime Minister's otherwise inexplicable attitude toward the Leader of the Opposition stems from the fact that the Prime Minister has never quite forgiven the Leader of the Opposition for being awarded the Nobel peace prize in 1957. But be that as it may, and regardless of the Prime Minister's personal dreams and ambitions, it is still no justification for the Prime Minister toying with the truth as he did in this debate some weeks ago.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. We have another instance of insinuation that the Prime Minister is not telling the truth. This expression

"toying with the truth" is surely an implication that the Prime Minister was speaking falsehoods, and it should be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order which has been raised by the house leader, I most respectfully suggest to Your Honour that the rule book be consulted. There was in no way whatsoever a suggestion that the Prime Minister had said anything which was false or anything that was untrue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Henderson: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Cariboo—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order.

Mr. Pallett: Did the hon. member write the speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has the floor and I can say now, without further delaying the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres, that I was not incensed by the words he used and I would ask him to continue his speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: I realize that that point of order has been dealt with, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to raise at this stage another point of order having to do with the decorum in this chamber. Ever since I entered the chamber today, including this present moment, whenever any hon. member on this side of the house attempts to speak not just one, but in many cases two or three hon. members on the other side of the house interfere, make interjections and try to prevent the hon. member being heard.

No one over here is so sensitive as to object to single interjections which have something to do with the speech, because that is a normal part of debating procedure; but this constant, deliberate barracking by half a dozen hon. members, mostly connected with the Union Nationale, is destroying any kind of discipline, any kind of fair play or any kind of rights for the opposition in this house, and it should not be tolerated.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on this so-called point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may I say this. First, it was not a point of order; second, it was used just as a device to make an attack on the government side of the house. A point of order should be raised at the instant something occurs, and Your Honour's attention should immediately be drawn to it. The hon. member has been permitted to make an attack on hon. members of this house, an attack which should be withdrawn. He has accused hon. members of this house of interfering with debates in this chamber—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: —and he is infringing the privileges of the House of Commons by so doing.

An hon. Member: It is the truth.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member should be requested to withdraw his remarks, which reflect upon every hon. member in this chamber.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the house leader has of course created for me a question of personal privilege, which I shall deal with now, and I hope I will be permitted to deal with it without what happened when I rose to speak on the point of order. The hon. gentleman said I should have dealt with the point of order immediately. I am dealing with it immediately. I was interrupted by the hon. member for Cariboo while I was attempting to speak; I was interrupted by an hon. member over here to my left who, because he was behind me, I cannot identify.

Mr. Tremblay: It was I.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Roberval admits it was he.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, it was I.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: It is happening again. When the house leader rose to raise a point of order, which Your Honour has already ruled was not a point of order, he was listened to respectfully by this side without interruption. However, when I rose as a member of the minority to reply to that point of order, I was interrupted. Almost every word was interrupted by catcalls and ejaculations of one kind and another from hon. gentlemen opposite.

That is what happened throughout the remarks of my hon. friend from Richelieu-Vercheres, and this conduct is becoming intolerable. If certain hon. gentlemen want to have a one party state, let them say so; but if that great leader of theirs, who went around saying he was going to restore the rights of parliament—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. To some extent the Chair is involved in the comments that have been made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate by way of a question of privilege, in the sense of keeping order in the house. I felt that in the course of delivering his remarks to the house the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres was carrying himself quite well, and as an experienced member of the house has grown accustomed to normal interjections, which I did not feel were of any greater multiplicity than they have been when other experienced members of the house have been on their feet. Perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is more incensed by the interjections with respect to his colleague's address than his colleague is himself. I would ask hon. members to co-operate, and if the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres feels that his remarks are being overburdened by interjections, I am sure he will raise a point of personal privilege in that respect.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to deal with all the interjections that have been made, knowing the source from which they come. I do not wish to object, I just want to get on with my speech, which has been interrupted many times already.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with reference to the speech the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres is making. I would draw Your Honour's attention to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 115, paragraph 128 (1), which reads as follows:

> A personal attack, by one member upon another, is an offence against the house, in the person of one of its members, which, on account of the respect due from every member to the character and dignity of the house, as well as the importance of preserving regularity in the debates, calls for the prompt interference of the Speaker, in order that any irregularity, into which a member may have been betrayed in the warmth of debate, may be rectified, and that any expressions, which may be disrespectful to the house, or painful to the feelings of individual members, may be explained, apologized for, or retracted.

The hon. member's speech to this point has consisted of a planned, deliberate personal attack on a member of this house who happens to enjoy the highest elective office of the country as Prime Minister. Notwithstanding the fact that he is Prime Minister he is a member of this house, and the rules apply to him and in relation to him as well as to any other hon. member. The hon. member who is now speaking should observe the rules.

Mr. Cardin: I do not know why supporters of the government should be so highly sensitive today. It may be that the Prime Minister does hold the highest office in the land, but that is no reason why we cannot criticize him or find fault with him. This is not a personal attack—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown).]

Mr. Cardin: I am arguing that as Prime Minister he has done certain things and adopted certain attitudes in this house which I do not think are becoming to a prime minister. But it was not a personal attack; it concerned the public conduct of a public person. Now perhaps I may be allowed to continue.

An hon. Member: Read on.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. I feel I should rise at this point to caution hon. members with regard to these continuous interruptions. As I judge it, 15 minutes of the hon. gentleman's time have been consumed in this way. As and when points of order or privilege have arisen I have endeavoured to rule on them to the best of my ability and I will continue to do so, but in the meantime I think the hon. member who has the floor should be given a fair hearing.

Mr. Cardin: I should like to recall the profound thought that the Prime Minister expressed in the debate on the speech from the throne when he said, in his most pompous voice—

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, this is another instance—

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Pallett: Does the hon. member intend to observe the rules or not? "In his most pompous voice", he says.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Pallett: I do not know whether you heard that, Mr. Speaker. It is all part of the pattern.

Mr. Pickersgill: You should have been here during the pipe line debate.

Mr. Cardin: This is what the Prime Minister had to say, as reported on page 63 of Hansard on January 22:

> In order to build yourself up in your own image you do not have to disparage others—

I should like the house to remember those particular words. Then the Prime Minister went on to mention what he considers to be the greatest contribution of this government to international affairs, namely his speech, and on page 64 he is reported as saying this:

> We took our stand—and it was not a popular one at the time—in September, 1960, when I had the privilege of speaking at the United Nations. After Khrushchev had come out in favour of self-determination for all the peoples of mankind, I called upon him in the name of fairness, justice and equity and in pursuance of the principles of the United Nations to make it possible for those captive peoples under his control to be given the right to self-determination.

Nobody disagrees with that. A responsible prime minister would have stopped there, but not our Prime Minister. He had more to say. He went on:

> That is the attitude which this party has taken throughout the years. We are glad the need for action in this regard has suddenly been recognized in these last few months by those who for many years in the United Nations, knowing of the situation and having heard the calls of these people, never at any time raised a voice on their behalf.

Earlier, as reported on page 64 of Hansard the right hon. gentleman said:

> There was also a reference to the effect that this was the 44th anniversary of the independence of the Ukraine. We did not have to be told that. We brought that before the United Nations. All through the years the hon. gentleman did not deal with that question there.

To use the vocabulary of the Minister of Finance, that is a blatant lie; it is a nazi-like lie; it is a fascist lie with strong overtones of McCarthyism.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, may I direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fourth edition of Beauchesne, page 122, citation 140, which states as follows:

> The rule relating to personal reflections occurring in debate, may be stated thus, namely: that it is doubly disorderly for any member, in speaking, to digress from the question before the house, and to attack any other member by means of opprobrious language applied to his person and character, or to his conduct, either in general, or on some particular occasion, and tending to bring him into ridicule, contempt, or hatred, with his fellow members, or to create ill blood in the house.

I direct your attention further to citation 141, the second paragraph, which reads as follows:

> When the Speaker observes upon any expression as personal and disorderly, and tending to introduce heat and confusion, and this appears to be the general sense of the house, the member offending ought immediately to make an apology, and to ask pardon of the house for this breach of their order, in as large and liberal expressions as possible, so as in such apology to comprehend the person of whom the words were used.

Surely to refer to any member of this house as acting in a nazi-like way is a clear breach of this order, inasmuch as it tends to bring the hon. member referred to into disrespect, ridicule and contempt, especially if he is a member who holds a distinguished and exceptional position. Surely the hon. member who uttered those words is guilty of a clear breach of the ruling I have quoted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I thank the hon. member for Stormont for his contribution and assistance. Noting that it is near one o'clock, perhaps the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres would withdraw the word "nazi", which I think was used, and the expression "McCarthy-like". There was some analogy to McCarthyism, and the word "lie" was used. I think all are distasteful to the ear and for the record.

Mr. Cardin: I will withdraw the reference to "nazi" and "lie". That was a reference to a quotation from language used by the Minister of Finance. I was quoting the minister.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Is this the withdrawal which you have requested, Mr. Speaker? There were two other offensive words used.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Perhaps I could consult with the hon. member during the lunch hour as to precisely what he said and we could resume at 2.30 p.m. to consider the point of order raised by the hon. member for Stormont.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, before lunch the point I was attempting to make was that the Prime Minister in this debate referred to his United Nations speech of September, 1960, which is considered by the government as Canada's greatest international contribution since 1957 and which dealt in part with communist imperialism. We have no quarrel with that statement. However, the Prime Minister went on to claim—and I placed this on record before lunch—that the Leader of the Opposition in all the time he served as secretary of state for external affairs had never at any time spoken out against communist imperialism. With all due respect to the Prime Minister and the sensitivity of hon. members of the house, may I say that is not true. It is a blatant prevarication with strong undertones of the vilest form of McCarthyism. Over the years—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. When I left the house before lunch there were remarks made by the present speaker somewhat akin to those he has just made which remained on the record unwithdrawn. I did not take the opportunity at the outset of this afternoon's proceedings to ask the hon. member to withdraw those remarks and clear up the record. I think that should be done now both with respect to the remarks that preceded the noon recess and those that have just been made.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the remarks the Chair finds objectionable and which I borrowed from the Minister of Finance. I refer to the remarks I made before lunch. As to the comments I have just made, I cannot see that McCarthyism is an objectionable and unparliamentary word.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I am afraid the word blatant came to my ear. I did not hear the word which followed.

Mr. Cardin: Prevarication.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I was probably more concerned with the correction of the situation which existed before lunch. I shall listen carefully to what the hon. gentleman has to say and interrupt him again if necessary.

Mr. Cardin: Over the years, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has spoken out against communist imperialism as strongly as and certainly more often than the Prime Minister. Even though he was not naive enough to consider any speech an effective weapon against communism or as Canada's greatest contribution to world peace, surely there is no question as to where the Leader of the Opposition stood and stands in that respect. I wish to place on record a portion of a speech made by the Leader of the Opposition before the United Nations general assembly on September 26, 1949:

> Imperialism of the old kind is a rapidly diminishing force—a dying doctrine. The real danger today lies in the new imperialism of the post-war period. During that period only one state in the world has extended its borders and the area of its domination. That state has annexed 179,000 square miles of territory and included within its borders in the last ten years more than 21 million people. Backed by its armies, it has imposed satellite regimes on neighbouring states. It has used its great material power and resources to rivet its economic control over the peoples under its influence. Its leaders have talked freely of "liberation" and of "national sovereignty", but its agents abroad have never hesitated to proclaim their obedience to its control and their determination to serve its interest above the interests of their own governments and their own peoples.
> How can there be a feeling of peace and security where an alien power insists on imposing its domination over other nations and peoples?

In another speech at the United Nations on December 1, 1949 the Leader of the Opposition had this to say:

> Mr. Vyshinsky asks us to believe in the lamb-like qualities of Russian revolutionary communism. Naturally we do not believe this, and we are not deceived by it.
> If Mr. Vyshinsky really wishes to do something about the preservation of peace, he should try to persuade his government to pay some attention to the fear in the world of this new imperialism; to the concern which is deep and widespread about the methods which it adopts to spread its influence, and the threats to peace which are inherent in those methods.
> Within the U.S.S.R. sphere of influence—the new Soviet empire—have been included many peoples who previously had their own free governments: Finns, Estonians, Ukrainians, Latvians, Lithuanians, Poles, Rumanians.
> Not all the impassioned eloquence of Mr. Vyshinsky or Mr. Manuilsky can convince us that these peoples, of their own free will, happily and confidently have entrusted their destinies and their persons to the U.S.S.R. The fact that the Soviet union government finds it necessary to cut off the inhabitants of its territories from all normal contacts with other countries and to distort and manipulate information about other peoples in order to create misunderstanding and fear is, to us, convincing evidence to the contrary.

In an address to the House of Commons on August 31, 1950 the Leader of the Opposition said:

> Know your enemy is a principle taught to every soldier . . . the first characteristic of Soviet communist imperialism is that its operations are on a world wide scale. Believing, as they do, that their slave system is in inevitable opposition to the free systems of government of other people, the masters of the Kremlin survey in their calculations every part of the globe.
> The second aspect of Soviet power is that while it is prepared to impose its will on other peoples by military aggression, it can also act—and does act—in other ways and through other agencies. It has at its command the weapons of conspiracy, subversion and mass agitation.
> Third, we must be clear about the elements in a free society which Soviet communism uses and perverts for its own program of oppression, degradation and expansion. Our job is to play our part, a part determined by ourselves but worked out in consultation with our friends, in the collective effort of the free countries to prevent aggression, if possible by showing that it cannot succeed, or to defeat it if it occurs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. I regret to advise the hon. gentleman that, taking into consideration the time allowed for the interruptions, his time has now expired.

(Translation):

Mr. Robert Lafreniere (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I realize that several hon. members intend to take part in this debate and I shall, therefore, try to be as brief as possible. However, I should like to congratulate most heartily the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. members for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) whose remarks were full of enthusiasm and sincerity.

I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) on his recent appointment as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. His competence in both parliamentary and professional matters, his moderation and good judgment will be most useful to Canada.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the appointment of Hon. Paul Comtois to the position of lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec. His Excellency is the very impersonation of dignity and possesses to a degree the most important qualification required to hold that high office: a genuine love for his province and his country.

Several matters for discussion are suggested to us in the speech from the throne. I intend to deal with a few of them in the course of my remarks, but I should like first of all to discuss a question of great present interest which has not been overlooked in the speech from the throne, considering that the latter does refer to measures relating to the confederative pact.

It is common knowledge that at present serious difficulties lead to misunderstanding between the two main racial groups of Canada, that is English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians.

The main topic of conversations and writings these last few months has been separatism. This serious problem should not be ignored by anyone, especially the elected representatives of the Canadian people, regardless of racial origin. It is impossible for me to assess at this time all the consequences which would result if Quebec should secede from the rest of the country, but I am afraid that the bad ones would be greater than the good ones. In any case, Mr. Speaker, the problem is definitely before the Canadian nation and it calls for a solution. The public authorities, politicians, citizens throughout the country, educators worthy of their calling cannot shy from it without failing in a serious moral and civil obligation.

Those who are in favour of separatism have many grievances. Some of these may seem exaggerated to the English-speaking population, but, bearing in mind the principle of justice, most of them are perfectly legitimate. I should like to have the time to analyse each and every one of the causes which have contributed to the misunderstanding between the two racial groups, but this is impossible at the moment. I shall therefore deal only with the main one, that is, bilingualism.

In this country, Mr. Speaker, bilingualism is a one-way street. It is compulsory only for French-speaking Canadians, and I must add that this situation is extremely painful and unfair.

Before going any further in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to make something clear. When you hear the French-speaking members bring up matters concerning the rights of our minority group, do not believe that we wish to impose on the Anglo-Canadian majority our language, our culture and our religion. We want only that they should have their rightful place in the Canadian context.

We do not pretend that the French culture is the best in the world; we do not pretend that it is either superior or inferior to the Anglo-Saxon culture. In some matters, comparisons are undesirable. We do not have either, as some people say, a superiority complex, but we do have an equality complex.

Why should it be amazing for a nation to feel strongly about its language, its faith, its customs and its traditions? When we have children, because we see them through our love, we usually find them handsome and bright. From those points of view, they are probably not any better than the neighbour's children but we are attached to them because they are our own. The same thing goes for a people with regard to its heritage. One must understand that this can be a very deep feeling, although it does not preclude full appreciation of, and participation in the culture and institutions of another people.

This has always been our attitude regarding Anglo-Saxon culture.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that English-speaking Canadians will not blame us because we are defending our rights when our claims are justified.

We have known for a long time that "fair play" is an essential part of the intellectual and mental discipline of Anglo-Saxons. However, I suggest that they have so far omitted to put such fair play into practice, particularly in connection with bilingualism in this country. It must be realized that at least 6 million French-speaking Canadians living in this country feel compelled to learn a second language while English-speaking Canadians, up to now at least, have shown indifference toward a second language.

Now, a hundred years after confederation, a hundred years after the convention passed between the two ethnic groups of this country to the effect that French and English should both be the official languages of Canada, we bitterly notice that we, Canadians, have undoubtedly ignored one of the main clauses in our agreement.

I will not mention any other evidence than the words of the secretary to the Canadian conference on education, Dr. Seraphin Marion, following a study that the conference was able to conduct through a donation from the Ford Foundation.

This is a most interesting investigation carried out by the foundation on the teaching of the second language in Canada.

Dr. Marion writes:

> It would be foolhardy to live in an illusory world and to act like the ostrich in the Canada of 1962. A whole set of events took place in 1961 and they should open the eyes of the most optimistic and bring them back to hard realities. At the present time, all Canadians must admit the following: there are major obstacles in the way of national unity—or rather the union between the two nations co-existing in our country, the English speaking Canadian nation and the French speaking Canadian nation. And unless all those concerned make vigorous efforts, we shall probably see in a short time that a difficult, and even tragic, situation has developed.

Those views, Mr. Speaker, clearly show that some serious prejudice has been done, and that someone is certainly responsible for it. In my opinion, those responsible are the various administrations which have succeeded one another since confederation, until the coming into power, in 1957, of the Conservative government.

The Prime Minister of Canada said all over the country, during the 1957 election campaign and later, that it was his intention to respect the spirit of the confederative pact, and he has kept his word.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that in a country with a constitution like ours, the state, the central government, must take all the required but fair measures to promote the full development of the various racial groups forming the nation.

Failure to fulfil that duty has been the awful mistake of the previous Liberal administration, which has been in power for nearly a quarter of a century and which has always turned a deaf ear to the fair claims and rights of minorities in this country.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I would have become a separatist if the Conservative government had not given such excellent evidence of good will toward national unity, to which the Liberals so often refer but about which they have done absolutely nothing.

I am proud to be a member of the present government because it is, among other reasons, the only one that has taken concrete steps, that has achieved practical objectives in recognition of the rights of the minority I represent, in part, in this house.

The French racial group has obtained tangible results from the present government and those gains have caused no prejudice nor injustice to other Canadians.

Constructive criticism often becomes necessary, but there are times, however, when we are duty bound to express our gratitude.

[Mr. Lafreniere.]

I should mention at this point a particular event which took place these last few years in our national life. For the first time in history, the government has appointed as representative of the Queen a French-speaking person: His Excellency Governor General Georges Vanier.

It must be noted, as I have already pointed out, that there is in this country, out of every three Canadians, one French-speaking Canadian.

It is to the Prime Minister and to his government that we owe that great consideration. It is also to the Conservative government that we owe the installation of a simultaneous interpretation system in the House of Commons, which allows English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians to better understand each other.

As the representative of a constituency in which Laval University, is situated, I believe I should thank this Conservative government for having settled the problem of university grants to such great advantage. Such action is another step towards attainment of the true spirit of confederation. In this connection I should also mention that the Conservative government has increased provincial tax levies from 10 to 16 per cent, a percentage that will be raised to 20 per cent by annual increases of one per cent.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that during the few years it has been in power, this government has given the provinces twice as much as the Liberals gave them. So, in that field also, the Prime Minister kept his promise when he told us that he wished to make the spirit of the Canadian confederation a reality in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move on to another subject along the same line. One of the main causes of the uneasiness which is felt throughout the country, and especially in the province of Quebec, with the rise of the separatist movement, results from the fact that the federal government has never tried before to respect actually the use of the two official languages in Canada. It is undeniable that in all federal departments English is the only "working language".

May I mention a fact of personal knowledge. When they write to the departmental administration in Ottawa, the civil servants of the province of Quebec feel morally obliged to submit all their reports in a language other than their mother tongue.

As I already stated, it is the responsibility of the state to see to it that one of the main clauses of the confederation pact is adhered to. The federal government shall therefore have to take the required steps so that the civil servants of this country can perform their duties in their mother tongue. This problem must be tackled without delay.

In that field, the Conservative government made a worthy gesture when it introduced the latest civil service act. I am referring to section 47 which makes it an obligation for the commission to choose, in all parts of Canada, a sufficient number of bilingual civil servants to serve both major language groups.

I submit, sir, that any Canadian who wishes to make a career for himself in the civil service should consider it a duty and a moral obligation to learn the two official languages of our country.

(Text):

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am proud to belong to a party the members of which really make a good effort to learn to speak both official languages of the country. I know personally that many hon. members of this house regularly take instruction to learn French and others to learn English. This means that the example in that connection comes from representatives of our nation, and this example has to be followed by all Canadians in whatever part of the country they live.

I should like to mention the excellent policy of the Prime Minister in that connection. When he comes to visit us in the province of Quebec he never misses an occasion to address the people in our mother language. Some of the prime ministers of former Liberal administrations did not even know the word "merci" to express their gratitude for the great support they were getting from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pigeon: You are right.

Mr. Leduc: Name one.

Mr. Lafreniere: What I admire is the spirit of the Prime Minister when he addresses the people in both official languages, and this excellent practice is also followed by many other ministers of the crown. No previous government had so many bilingual members in its cabinet as has the present administration, and I believe this is important enough to be underlined in the House of Commons. To my personal knowledge that is the case with the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and many others.

There is a strong desire in both ethnic groups to understand each other, and we should do everything we can to take advantage of such a situation, a situation for which the government is mostly responsible. Every Canadian and in particular every member of the House of Commons and the civil service should be given the opportunity to use their mother tongue during the course of their work. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that when we express ourselves in our second language we certainly do not impart the full measure of our personalities.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to sum up in a few words those three suggestions which in my opinion are bound to promote bilingualism in this country, and will eventually lead to good understanding and good co-operation between both ethnic groups, French and English, whose duty it is to work for the prosperity of the country.

First, the members of the House of Commons who are here the representatives of the people should consider it a moral obligation to learn both languages. Civil servants of a bilingual country ought to be bilingual.

Every province of this country should organize an educational curriculum enabling all Canadians attending school to learn in their early years their mother tongue as perfectly as possible, and the other official language correctly. With such a system, bilingualism will develop in this country within a few years.

To give only one example—and I regret I do not have here the figures concerning other provinces—I shall only say that in the province of Quebec the number of young persons at school total 1.3 million this year, which gives the impressive proportion of 25 to 26 per cent of the population of the province.

That is at least solid proof that the administrations of Quebec have been concerned about education for a number of years.

I should like to add that if the proportion of the student population was similar in other provinces, bilingualism would soon become a complete reality, provided that school boards throughout the country would set up a truly effective program for the teaching of both languages.

Before I bring my remarks to a close, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I find the attitude of some members of the opposition somewhat strange. I am also glad I have in front of me the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), who, for some time, seems to have been the advocate of bilingualism in this country. It was the first time that I and many others had heard the hon. member speak about this matter. I think he could have done so a long time ago. I realize that—

An hon. Member: He practises it.

Mr. Lafreniere: —on his part, this would seem to be a question of political expediency.

An hon. Member: That's it.

Mr. Lafreniere: I also said—

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Lafreniere: Certainly.

Mr. Grafftey: Is it not true that the separatist movement, in the province of Quebec, came to life after the Lesage government had been brought to power?

An hon. Member: No, when the Conservatives came to power.

Mr. Lafreniere: Mr. Speaker, I would be unable to say otherwise.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Surely such an answer could be expected.

Mr. Tremblay: We are anxious to hear Mr. Brassard, who has been away for a few months.

Mr. Lafreniere: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin)—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): And you, for a year.

Mr. Lafreniere: —has criticized—

Mr. Tremblay: Away for the past four years.

Mr. Lafreniere: —the Prime Minister's attitude with regard to external affairs. In this connection, I should like to add that no other country could rightly be as proud of its Prime Minister as we were when ours made a speech at the United Nations in September, 1960.

Mr. Speaker, the standing orders of the house contain a serious order that most members respect, that is to take a member's word when he speaks to the house. I must say that all Canadians were proud of the attitude of the Right Hon. Prime Minister at the United Nations, in September 1960, and as far as I know, the Liberals themselves congratulated him warmly on the speech he made on that occasion.

Mr. Meunier: That is all he can do, make speeches.

Mr. Lafreniere: Mr. Speaker, I should like to analyse the economic situation over the last few years, but I shall not have enough time to explain all the measures taken by government.

Before ending my remarks, I only wish to point out that the Conservative government, in power for a few years only, has increased old age pensions by approximately $19. Prior to the 1957 elections, the Liberal government gave our senior citizens what we call in our language a little slice of bread—

Mr. Bourget: $46.

Mr. Lafreniere: —that is, an increase of $6.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): $46.

Mr. Lafreniere: Well, the Conservative government found a way to increase these pensions substantially and, these last few years, it has given our senior citizens an increase of about $19.

I also wish to mention another beneficial measure passed by the Conservative government and which, I know personally, has largely benefited the people of Canada, that is the small business loans act. In the province of Quebec, an amount of $23,160,000 was loaned to the owners of 625 enterprises. I do not have the figures for the other provinces, but I am satisfied that this move on the part of the Conservative government has made it possible to cut down unemployment.

Another initiative of the Conservative government, which I should like to draw to the house's attention, is the winter works program. In fact, the federal contribution for works carried out in Quebec totalled $1,426,000 in 1958-59, $1,685,000 in 1960 and $15 million in 1960-61.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order.

(Translation):

Mr. Lafreniere: That initiative—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

(Translation):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the usual congratulations which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Pearson) has offered to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Bourdages and Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway), to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) and to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) who has been appointed chairman of the committees of the whole.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the house longer in a language which I do not speak, in my own opinion, as well as the one I first learned to speak, but I cannot allow to pass without some comment the observations made by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency about my views on bilingualism. There are some people, such as my hon. friend from Laurier and my hon. friend from St. Denis who have been here longer than the hon. gentleman, who have been in Ottawa longer than I have, and who know that from the day I came to Ottawa I did not go around boasting about bilingualism, but I have never at any time asked anyone to translate any document out of one of the official languages into the other for my benefit.

I have always taken the view that if we are to make confederation work properly we must seek in every possible and practical way to make it equally easy for all Canadians to use either of the official languages in every part of this country, and I am no new convert to these views. It was not too easy for me to learn French in the bush in northern Manitoba, and if the hon. gentleman would like me to explain privately how I managed to get my foundation in it I would be glad to do so, but I will not waste the time of the house in that way.

It is quite true that there have been a few things done by this present government—and I have always given this government credit for everything it has done in this, as in any other field—to advance this cause. I think it would be strange if we had any government that did not do that. However, I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman that before he talks too much about the great efforts of his great party he should reflect on the fact that there is only one political party in this country that has chosen its leaders from both races, and that is the Liberal party.

In 1962 it is 75 years since Sir Wilfrid Laurier was chosen by the Liberal caucus in the year 1887 to lead the Liberal party of Canada. In those 75 years the Tory party has never even had an acting leader who was a French speaking Canadian, and for 40 of those 75 years the leader of the Liberal party was a French speaking Canadian.

The hon. gentleman talks about Liberal prime ministers who could not say "merci" in the French language. Perhaps Alexander Mackenzie knew no French—he was an immigrant from Scotland—but I would be very surprised if Sir John A. Macdonald was very conversant with the French language either. He was also an immigrant from Scotland. Other than Mr. Mackenzie there has been no leader of the Liberal party—Mr. Blake, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Mackenzie King, Mr. St. Laurent or our present leader—who was not completely conversant with both official languages.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know this perfectly well. That does not mean that Mr. Mackenzie King was very good at speaking French—

Mr. Pigeon: He never spoke in French.

Mr. Pickersgill: —any more than the hon. member for Roberval is exceptionally good at speaking English.

Mr. Tremblay: Still under three flags.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be permitted to continue my speech for 30 minutes without interruptions. As I was saying, we on this side of the house do not cast any reflections upon what I regard as the laudable efforts of the present Prime Minister to express himself in the French language; we applaud those efforts. But that is no excuse for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the chamber trying to defame Mr. Mackenzie King because he was rather bashful about his accent. If they think this is a way in which to get votes I think the Tory party is going to find what it has generally found when it has employed that kind of tactics; that it will not get any support. That is all I have to say on this subject.

Mr. Pigeon: Will the hon. member permit a question—

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Pigeon: —about three flags?

Mr. Pickersgill: I had not intended to say anything about it at all, because there are some things that I think we would be far better off to take for granted in this country rather than constantly talking about them. There are a great many problems that we have in common and which it is the business of this parliament to solve, and remarks such as we have just heard are not related to them.

I think it is no secret that we are within 16 months of a general election, and perhaps closer, although the capacity of hon. gentlemen opposite to make up their minds about anything is such that one wonders. However, we are at a time when the temper of the house suggests that an election is on the minds of some hon. members, at any rate, most of the time and perhaps on the minds of all of us some of the time.

This is going to be a time of testing. It seems to me there are two tests that every government has a right to expect to be applied to it and that the people normally will apply to a government. They do not always do that. There are circumstances when some great issue arises which puts considerations like those in the background, but I am not sure that any such great issue has arisen at the moment. I think there are two tests that the present administration is going to have to face before the electors, who are the masters of all of us in this house, although some hon. gentlemen seem to be forgetting that. One of these is the test of good management, the question as to whether or not the affairs of this country are being well managed. I am very tempted to use the rest of my 30 minutes to talk about that subject, because my views upon it are very strong and they correspond very largely with the views that have been expressed by representative people in almost every occupation in this country today. However, what was said by the Leader of the Opposition on this subject was so well documented and so thorough that hon. gentlemen have been protesting about it ever since. Nothing has worried them more than that speech, and I do not think I shall attempt to gild that particular lily, if I might use such a bad figure of speech.

I want to speak about the other test which every government should have to face and which, I think, this government will have to face. My right hon. friend Mr. St. Laurent spoke about this when he sat here as leader of the opposition on October 16, 1957. I wish to repeat the words he used on that occasion because I think they deserve repetition. I think they deserve to be pondered by every member in the house, as well as by every Canadian. At page 43 of the unrevised Hansard of that day Mr. St. Laurent is reported as saying:

> I believe I have reached a point where I should indicate, as precisely as I can, what the attitude of the Liberal opposition will be to the new government during the present session when I expect to be responsible for leading the opposition. It is over 22 years since the Liberal party was last in opposition. In the 22 years Canada has enjoyed—I use a word that I believe will become more widely used in that connection as time passes—

And has it not been?

> I say in the 22 years that Canada has enjoyed a Liberal government, we as Liberals have prided ourselves on the fact that every item of the program placed before the public in each successive campaign has been implemented in full whenever it was possible for the government or for the parliament of Canada acting alone to implement it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then it goes on:

> The only items in our Liberal programs which have not been fully implemented are those which have required provincial co-operation, which was not always forthcoming, or the co-operation of the governments of other countries or of international bodies. Everything we have undertaken to do that could be done by a government here in Ottawa acting on its own has been accomplished.

These words were uttered nearly five years ago. I have repeated them over and over again all across this country, and no person in Canada has ever cited a single example to show that those words are not true.

An hon. Member: Hospital insurance.

Mr. Pickersgill: Everybody who was here in this house in Mr. St. Laurent's day will know that they would not have been uttered had they not been true. It is no secret that Mr. St. Laurent did on occasion discuss his speeches with me before they were made; and as a matter of fact, before that speech was delivered I know very well that he gave the greatest consideration to that statement. He went over the documents to make sure there was nothing that had been overlooked. The best evidence of the truth of that statement is that although we are consistently told by hon. members opposite "Remember the promises of the Liberals", to my knowledge in the past five years there have been only two instances ever cited as undertakings which were given by the Liberal party but not carried out. I intend to deal for a minute or so with those two cases.

The other day the Minister of Justice, I believe it was—though this has been said on many occasions in this house—stated that it had taken the Liberals 38 years to carry out their pledge concerning hospital insurance. I intend to read precisely what the Liberals did say with regard to hospital insurance back in 1919. The resolution adopted at the Liberal convention of that year said:

> That in so far as may be practicable, having regard for Canada's financial position—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly. It is not a promise, as the hon. gentleman quickly perceives. But I will read on:

> —an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness, dependence in old age, and other disability, which would include old age pensions, widows' pensions, and maternity benefits, should be instituted by the federal government in conjunction with the governments of the several provinces; and that on matters pertaining to industrial and social legislation an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the dominion and the provinces by effective co-operation between the several governments.

Mr. Mackenzie King, when he went to the country in 1921 as leader of the Liberal party, did not repeat that statement of policy at all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It was only a chart and a compass then.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, but it was a chart and a compass that was published, not like the program drawn up by the party of the present hon. member for Carleton and his friends in 1956. The hon. member for Carleton has spoken very correctly. That is just what Mr. King said it was; it was a chart and compass for a long term future, and over that long term future virtually all these objectives were achieved by Liberal governments despite the fact that they had to face the opposition of the Tories, both federal and provincial, in doing so. It should not be forgotten that the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister of this country, and who raised the level of debate in this house the other day by talking about the Liberals starving the old age pensioners, is the same gentleman who was a candidate for Mr. Meighen in 1926 against Mr. Mackenzie King at a time when the Tories were fighting tooth and nail to prevent the old age pensioners from getting one red cent. That is the great latter day champion of social justice. He made his debut in politics by fighting old age pensions tooth and nail.

An hon. Member: Tell us about six buck Harris.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall leave that to the hon. gentleman. I will tell you about no buck Diefenbaker. In 1945 Mr. Mackenzie King repeated his undertaking in more specific language.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I am reading from the speech made by Mackenzie King in London, Ontario, on May 30, 1945, when he was laying down the program which was being placed before the people of this country. He said:

> Th Liberal program looks beyond family allowances to the early establishment of other great social measures. The government is prepared to support a national scheme of contributory old age pensions on a basis more generous than that of the existing pensions. The government also believes that a substantial improvement in national health could be achieved through dominion-provincial co-operation. We have accordingly pledged ourselves to support a measure for federal assistance in a nation-wide system of health insurance, to include assistance to the provinces for preventive medicine. If the present government is returned to office, we shall proceed with these measures as soon as agreements with the provinces can be concluded.

And on August 6, 1945, at a dominion-provincial conference held in this building, Mr. Mackenzie King put forward this great post-war program, which was torpedoed by Mr. George Drew, the Tory premier of Ontario, and by Mr. Maurice Duplessis, the Tory premier of Quebec. Neither of those reforms could be achieved until both those gentlemen had departed from the political scene in this country. That is another evidence of the great historic contribution to social justice of the magnificent Tory party.

Mr. Ricard: What about Taschereau in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one thing that always amuses me, Mr. Speaker. Every time these fellows are caught with their hands in someone else's pocket, they always say that someone else stole something too. They never try to defend their record. They just say, "We are no worse than the Liberals were". Well, they are a great deal worse than the Liberals were and that is a fact. It is no defence of them to say they are no worse. If they are no better than the Liberals, we would be better off if the Liberals were in office, if that is all they have to say for themselves.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Is the hon. member prepared to accept a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I will not accept an interruption at this stage.

Mr. Pigeon: Speak about six bucks.

Mr. Pickersgill: The other question about which the Liberal party has been accused of making a promise that was not kept was, of course, long before the period to which Mr. St. Laurent was referring. It was in the year 1925 when the Liberal party went to the country on a program which included, among other things, the reform of the Senate.

I wish to read what was said about this in the Liberal handbook for 1925. I shall not read all of it because it would take too much of my time but I shall read the essential parts of it, if I may have the attention of hon. members. This is how it reads:

> The people believe that the Canadian House of Commons should have the same power as the British House of Commons to pass legislation and the Prime Minister has personally declared this to be his view. How he is going to bring this about was fully set forth in his keynote speech in North York.
> Liberal senators already in office, as well as those who are to be appointed, will be pledged to support the necessary constitutional amendment for the reform of the Senate. The government in this campaign is seeking a mandate from the people. If that be forthcoming, the will of the people will be translated into political action as soon as the supporters of the government constitute a substantial majority of the Senate.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) will recall the outcome of the 1925 elections. Mr. Mackenzie King would never admit himself that the Liberal party was defeated in that election but I do not think even he would have claimed that they got a clear mandate when the Liberals elected only 101 members and the Tories elected 116.

It is true that as far as I have been able to discover from my search of the records this pledge was never repeated in any subsequent election. I may be wrong. I have not made a careful study of it but my research does not reveal that the pledge was ever repeated. I looked through the index of 1930 and, of course, in 1926 the preoccupation was with things other than Senate reform.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Does that constitute absolution?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it does not constitute absolution. It is, however, a fact for whatever it is worth that there was not the mandate that was a condition of this policy. I wish the hon. gentleman who is the present Prime Minister were here because I would like to give him a little advice on the subject. I know he would not want any advice from me.

Mr. Churchill: Who does?

Mr. Pickersgill: However, I believe he respects Mackenzie King more than he does me. At least the newspapers are constantly telling us that Mackenzie King is his model. I must say there does not appear to me to be much resemblance between the Prime Minister and his model.

Mr. Churchill: Thank heaven for that.

Mr. Pickersgill: But if I might offer the Prime Minister one piece of advice it is this. On one occasion Mr. King said to me, "Pickersgill, the most foolish thing I did in all my public life was to advocate Senate reform". Now, that did not mean he thought the Senate should not be reformed. He meant it was a foolish thing to make it a party issue in an election. I just offer that opinion of Mr. King to the house and to the Prime Minister for what it may be worth.

An hon. Member: Has he changed his mind since?

Mr. Pickersgill: If, in the whole Liberal record from 1919 to the present time, the only thing it may be said the Liberals did not do which they undertook to do was to reform the Senate, I am not ashamed of that record nor of standing up for it anywhere.

Mr. Grafftey: What about the promise of no conscription?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman knows very well what happened in that respect. A plebiscite was held. The hon. gentleman knows the whole story.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): What about restricted Chinese immigration?

Mr. Pickersgill: That has nothing to do with this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): That was in 1911 and in 1925.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. member has interrupted me I say that promise about restricting Chinese immigration unfortunately was kept, and I am sorry it was. Mr. King came into this house on May 1, 1947 and said he was sorry, too, and he made amends for it. It was not a Liberal policy. It was a Tory policy which the Liberals unfortunately adopted and which I am sorry they adopted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I say that is the record of good faith of the Liberal party. Now, what is the record of the Tory party?

An hon. Member: Put another record on.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): What about the flag?

An hon. Member: Yes, the three flags?

Mr. Pickersgill: Hon. gentlemen opposite certainly do not like to allow members of the opposition to speak. That is another promise made by the Prime Minister, to restore the rights of parliament, that is certainly being kept in a remarkable fashion.

What was the record in 1930? After the election of 1930 the man who became prime minister went across this country sowing promises like clover seed. And what a harvest he got. Mr. King put those promises on the record. They were there for people to look at five years later and the people looked at them.

Because hon. gentlemen opposite seem so ashamed of the past utterances of their leader we have made a collection of the promises and undertakings given by him to the Canadian people in the elections of 1957 and 1958. I have spent some of my time, rather profitably I think, sir, going over those promises quite carefully in the last few weeks in an attempt to determine how many have been kept. I have been afforded considerable assistance by friends and strangers who have written letters to me in response to my appeal. I appealed for assistance because I felt this job should be done thoroughly. I have a list of 81 promises that were made in those two elections that have not yet been kept.

At least half of those promises could not conceivably be kept because they were promises to take action immediately and the time has long since passed. Others could not be kept because they were going to be paid for out of Mr. Walter Harris' surpluses, and we all know where they went after six months of Tory management of our affairs. I could go on to cite many examples but I know perfectly well that even if I had time I would never be permitted by hon. gentlemen opposite to cite them in this chamber without so much interruption that I could not place them on the record.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member hesitates to cite them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, do I? The minister says I hesitate to cite them. I only hope I will be allowed to do so without interruption. I shall not cite all of the 81 because there is not time. But I will cite a few. Simply because I happen to have it in my hand, I will cite the Prime Minister's promises relating to employment and unemployment. Employment was hardly mentioned by the Prime Minister during the 1957 election and unemployment was not mentioned at all anywhere that I could find because there was not any. That is the reason.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister confined himself to promises to continue the full employment policy then existing in Canada under the Liberal government. In his Toronto speech on April 25, 1957, the Prime Minister promised that full employment with the highest possible standard of living would be one of the primary objectives of his government. That is certainly an unkept promise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): With that promise I think I shall have to advise the hon. gentleman that his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: I regret very much having to deprive hon. gentlemen opposite of the rest of this document but I will send it to them by post.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, before you recognize the next speaker, may I ask for the unanimous consent of the house to ask a question of the previous speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Will the house give unanimous consent to the asking of a question by the hon. member for Vancouver East?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): It was a weird thing, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). We were informed in advance that we were going to hear a tirade about the unkept promises of the Diefenbaker government. We waited for five, ten, fifteen or twenty minutes while the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate outlined the history of the Liberal party, the historical background for our meeting today, the qualifications of Mackenzie King as a French scholar, and then after he carefully looked at the clock and saw that he had four minutes to go he started for the first time to mention 81 alleged unkept promises. So far as I can make out he has dealt with only one of them and that was the question of unemployment which we inherited from the last Liberal administration and did so much to correct. There is no question about this matter. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has done more harm to the cause of the Liberal party through his ridiculous statements all over the country in the last two weeks, has been told to pipe down and not to mention this matter because with all this powerful campaign he put on in the newspapers throughout the country, he failed to find any support for this allegation of 81 or any number of unkept promises.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have them all here.

Mr. Walker: That is ridiculous. The hon. member had half an hour in which to put them on the record and he sought not to do so purposely, because he did not have any that could stand up under scrutiny. Never in my short experience have I heard such vilification as we have heard today of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). The Liberal party had a program first of gloom and doom. Now that they find that the country is prospering, they have given up that attack. Then, led by my hon. friend, they tried to have a program attacking our program and our promises. Today they have given up that attack. Now all we have in the house is a constant effort, with a repetition of wicked words and phrases such as they are able to get together, at a campaign of vilification of the greatest parliamentarian that ever sat in this house, namely the Prime Minister. I know that my hon. friend was a clever boy. At kindergarten he was the brightest student there, but he never graduated. He specialized in the game of alphabet. He wanted to show his prowess up in Simcoe a week ago. I read from the Globe and Mail. This is what he said: "Remember, P stands for progress, peace, prosperity and you know who." He smiled and then he said "And I do not mean Pickersgill either."

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the previous sentence.

Mr. Walker: We members of the government have a one-syllable word starting with P which would adequately describe the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. But we will not put it on the record today.

An hon. Member: This is cheap.

Mr. Walker: Then the hon. member went on to say something which is interesting. He said, "We are not going to win this next election"—I would ask whether you heard that, Mr. Speaker—"unless we demonstrate to the people of Canada that we are a real alternative and a believable alternative." Did you ever hear such a thing, Mr. Speaker? Then he goes on to say this, poor fellow, "We have also got to convince the people that we have something worth their while." Then the poor benighted member who does not dare make these statements in the house went on to say in a great burst of candour, and this is a quotation, "I admit Mr. Pearson is not a perfect leader of the opposition".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the rest of it.

Mr. Walker: Two flags in Canada, two leaders for the official opposition both starting with P.

All this nonsense about the history of the Liberal party and the promises that were and were not kept—if you go back over the 22 years of Liberal rule, you will find that the Liberals in all their 22 years in office did not fulfil one half the promises fulfilled by the Conservative government. There is no question about that matter. In those days there were few suggestions. One was Senate reform. I remember Mackenzie King speaking in Blyth in 1925 with regard to Senate reform. What did they do about it after all those years? They did nothing. What did they do about the campaign in 1919 for the acceptance of the principle of proportional representation? That is all they had to think about in those days. They did nothing except they proposed a more effective restriction of Chinese immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Walker: Just a minute.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Walker: No. I will treat you in the way in which you treated the hon. member for Stormont, but not with the same contempt.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is fine.

Mr. Walker: It is essential that these things should be put on the record. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has a phantom number of 81 promises. We have not yet heard even of one of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read that speech from Simcoe and you will have.

Mr. Walker: I would ask the hon. member to remain calm and peaceful for a little while, while I outline the situation—and this will not be pleasant for him—and the 60 promises that the Prime Minister made while leader of the opposition and later as Prime Minister and which he considered as promises in both elections, all of which have been fulfilled. In the first place with regard to northern development may I say this, and it will not take long.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, that will not take long.

Mr. Pallett: Who is interrupting now?

Mr. Walker: I am going to put this on the record and if my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate can challenge any one of them at any later date, I will put them on in their numerical order.

1. Under northern development, the Prime Minister promised completion of confederation by developing the north, and how well he is doing this.

2. The Prime Minister promised Arctic research and exploration to develop resources. The Inuvik research centre is proof of this being done.

3. A road program in the north to allow exploration of new mineral areas. May I say that 2,500 miles of roads have been built.

4. On roads to resources, as distinct from the former, $75 million has been spent by the federal government as its contribution.

5. The Prime Minister promised federal aid to economically sound railway projects. The Whitecourt extension in Alberta and the Gaspe railway are indicative of such aid.

6. The development of the northern community of Frobisher Bay. At last this has been and is being done, and the eastern Arctic, which was so long neglected, has now come into its own.

7. The Prime Minister promised to improve transportation, communication and development of power in the north. This has been done. A microwave network has been opened. The C.B.C. covers all of the north and a national power grid is now under consideration.

8. He promised an inventory of hydroelectric potential in the north, and the Yukon, Mackenzie and Nelson rivers are all under investigation.

9. He promised a joint federal-provincial forest access road program, and this is now under way under the distinguished new minister.

10. He promised a railway from Edmonton to Great Slave lake and the Pine Point railway, 438 miles in length, is now under way.

11. He promised he would ensure that Canadians would have a proper opportunity to participate in Canada's development. How well this has been done under the gas and oil and mining regulations in order to protect and ensure participation of Canadians.

12. With respect to natural resources the Prime Minister promised the first tourist roads in the maritimes, and what a bountiful harvest this program has resulted in.

13. He promised federal aid to the upper Thames river project and the project has already been started. The metro Toronto conservation program has also been started.

14. He promised an Ottawa-Hull interprovincial bridge, and the Macdonald-Cartier bridge is now in the process of being started.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget the Van Horne bridge.

Mr. Walker: Contrast this with the Liberal restrictions on Chinese immigration. These are the things that have been done.

15. The Prime Minister promised export of western natural gas if recommended by the national energy board. Just the other day, Mr. Speaker, a pipe line from British Columbia to the western states was opened.

16. Aid to the provinces for power development. Of course, the Atlantic provinces power development is the fruition of this promise.

17. A national conservation convention. The resources for tomorrow conference, one of the most important conferences since confederation, has taken place.

18. The Prime Minister promised action to bring about freight rate equalization. This has been carried out as evidenced by the MacPherson report and will be proceeded with in due course.

Mr. Pickersgill: In due course.

Mr. Walker: 19. He promised subventions for maritime coal used for power. This is already a reality.

Mr. Pickersgill: Especially in east Saint John.

Mr. Walker: Could the hon. member, who is so good at parlour tricks, restrain himself for a few minutes? We can get along without his interruptions. There are a lot of things I could have said to the hon. member today but I have a certain latent liking for him and I have desisted.

20. The Prime Minister promised assistance to control pollution of interprovincial streams. We know how magnificently this has been carried out in the sewage disposal program and in other ways.

21. He promised the South Saskatchewan dam, and this has been brought about.

22. He promised a national energy board, and this has been set up under a very distinguished chairman.

23. He promised agricultural rehabilitation and development and an act to accomplish this end has been brought about. Soil and water problems on a massive scale are now under study.

24. He promised to step up reforestation and conservation programs. This he has done through a new ministry under a former premier who is one of the most distinguished foresters in Canada.

25. He promised the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. How magnificently this has been fulfilled.

Even in the realm of parliament I might state 20 improvements that the Prime Minister has made but I will just deal with three.

26. He promised to appoint an Indian to the Senate. People laughed about this but it was one of the first things he did.

27. He promised to restore parliamentary committees, and how magnificently has this been done. The power of parliament has been restored to the backbenchers, and what a great success the public accounts committee has been under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton), a member of the Liberal party.

28. He promised to place redistribution of constituencies in the hands of a non-partisan commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nothing done about that.

Mr. Walker: This is something we thought could never take place but it will form part of the legislation at this session. Then I come to the question of taxation. If one looks back in retrospect he is aware of all the talk of gloom and doom; but he just has to review what has happened and it amazes him to think that any single leader in any democracy could fulfil so many promises in so short a time.

29. The Prime Minister promised a meeting of federal and municipal representatives to hear municipal views on their financial problems. It is a matter of history how well that has worked out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask the mayors.

Mr. Walker: 30. He promised to end tight money and to expand economic growth. Hon. members will recall the tight money situation we had when we came into power. They will recall our adverse trade balance. Now we are riding on one of the most prosperous waves and the beginning of a very wonderful program in the 60's.

31. He promised tax cuts, and it cannot be denied that percentagewise 75 per cent of all income taxpayers in Canada are paying less income tax than they were under the former administration.

Mr. Pickersgill: And far more sales tax.

Mr. Walker: 32. He promised to eliminate the excise tax on automobiles and the whole 10 per cent has been eliminated.

33. He promised a Hoover-type commission to study government operations. We have the magnificent Glassco commission functioning so thoroughly and with such tremendous results in prospect.

34. In the field of trade the Prime Minister promised to call a commonwealth trade conference to recover lost markets. This took place in Montreal in 1958 under the distinguished chairmanship of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

35. He promised to increase Canadian exports, and how magnificently that has been accomplished under the energetic Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees).

36. He promised to cut the commodity trade deficit with the United States and it has been cut almost in half.

37. He promised a national oil policy. We know that in co-operation with industry such a policy has been established to provide for the orderly development of Canada's oil and gas and that it is a tremendous success.

38. The Prime Minister promised a great program of port and harbour development. Think of the $13 million harbour at St. John's, Newfoundland, the tremendous development at the head of the lakes, the developments at Nanaimo and Port Alberni, the great developments at Toronto and Hamilton for deep water ships.

39. He promised to set up a forestry department and he has done so with tremendous results.

40. He promised to reduce Canada's overall deficit in world trade. He did not promise to balance it. No one thought that was possible. The Liberals did not balance it since 1952. We came into power with a $713 million deficit and in the year 1961 this was not only balanced but for the first time since 1952 we have a favourable trade balance. We had this without having another Korean war.

Mr. Pickersgill: You just had Castro.

Mr. Walker: As a matter of fact I would just like to go on to say what a tremendous instrument the Prime Minister has been toward peace in the world. I shall now deal with social security.

41. He promised to increase the old age pensions and, as you know, the last increase of $10 a month means an increase in our senior citizens purchasing power of $10 million a month.

42. He promised to increase veterans' pensions. He did so, not once but twice, 20 per cent each time.

43. He promised to increase civil servants retirement allowances. This he has done.

44. He promised to increase blind pensions, and of course he did.

45. He promised to appoint a standing committee on veterans affairs and this has been done with great success.

46. He promised to increase unemployment insurance benefits and this has been done, with the vacation pay act; and he also has extended the benefits to 52 weeks.

47. He promised to appoint labour representatives to all government boards and commissions dealing with labour interests. This has been done.

48. He promised to revise pension regulations for retired railroad employees, remove inequalities, and provide fair and reasonable basic pensions. At the present time this is under very active study and will be implemented in due course.

49. In the realm of agriculture there are 50 achievements and I shall only mention the over-all one, No. 49, assistance to agriculture. Even as one who knows little about agriculture I could talk for three hours on that subject alone.

50. He promised to appoint a royal commission on price spreads, and this was done with wonderful success under Dr. Stewart.

51. He promised to work for a world food bank. This was his original idea and the United Nations are in process of adopting it.

52. He promised aid to the tobacco industry and this has been done in no uncertain way.

53. In the realm of business, he promised to provide a small business branch in the Department of Trade and Commerce. This has been done, and very successfully done, that branch coming first under Mr. Roberts.

54. He promised loans to small businesses. Even the members of the C.C.F. party did not think this was possible but he implemented a nation wide program of loans for small businessmen.

55. In the realm of labour the Prime Minister promised extension of the period in which seasonal unemployment benefits are paid, and this was increased by two months.

56. He promised hundreds of millions of dollars for housing and, Mr. Speaker, $2 billion have been made available. I have no hesitation in saying that, after studying the programs of other countries, Canada has the greatest housing program and the greatest number of houses per capita of our population of any country in the entire world.

Finally, he made certain promises with regard to provinces and municipalities.

57. He promised a new deal that would maintain the constitution and preserve the equalization principle in dominion-provincial relations. This has been done by ending the tax rental.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask the premiers.

Mr. Walker: It was also done by restoring to the provinces the right to impose their own taxes, and he also introduced equalization to the "have not" provinces.

58. The Prime Minister promised greater aid to the provinces and this has been done in no uncertain way, with a billion dollars a year more than was given under the last Liberal administration.

Mr. Pugh: Twice as much.

Mr. Walker: You bet; twice as much. You are right.

59. He promised to convene a meeting of federal and municipal representatives to hear the municipalities' views on their financial problems. This has taken place with tremendous results.

60. Last, but not least, he promised something that was spoken about in the House of Commons ever since the end of the war, and even before the war. He promised a bill of rights and such a bill of rights is now on the statute books. He brought into line a backward Liberal party that through its years of government strenuously opposed a bill of rights. Now we have the provinces following in line.

Let us get away from vilification during the debate on the throne speech, but let us not forget that we inherited inflation such as had never taken place in Canada previously. For 12 years the Canadian dollar fell in value by three cents a year. As a matter of fact it went down 38 cents, with the result that when we came into power we had galloping inflation. We have now cured that. Do you hear anything about inflation now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask any housewife.

Mr. Walker: Ask any housewife is there tight money now? There certainly is not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget the high interest rates.

Mr. Walker: We inherited the greatest recession that ever hit the country since 1929. So that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may not remain on the record unchallenged, he suggested, as reported at page 701 of Hansard, that the depression of the 30's began under the Bennett administration. Do you not remember 1929 when we had the greatest crash of all time, which took place in November of that year? Do you not remember the dog days? I was walking the streets trying to get employment during those days—January, February, March, April and May of 1930—as the paralysis of our country set in. Then in July the Canadian people rose in their wrath and threw out the Mackenzie King government and brought in Bennett. Those are the facts of history and they cannot be gainsaid. In the recession of 1956—

Mr. Pickersgill: A recession in 1956?

Mr. Walker: Yes, it was predicted in the hidden report which was tabled in March of 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement isn't true.

Mr. Walker: It was tabled. I can produce the report and table it in parliament now so that my hon. friend may have it.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been tabled already.

Mr. Walker: This report predicted that the economy of Canada had been going downhill since 1956. The Liberal government knew a recession was on the way but took no steps to obviate it. However, in spite of the Liberals trying to hide this, the people realized that it was on the way and for a second time they threw out a Liberal government and restored Canada by bringing in a Conservative administration.

It is true we have deficit spending. Deficit spending is right in a recession and we have deliberately had it. It has been a principle of both parties, and of the C.C.F. party too, that in times of recession one can indulge in deficit spending to bring the country out of recession.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what the Minister of Finance said in his budget speech.

Mr. Walker: Do you know that in the 95 years since confederation there have been only 24 surpluses? Does my hon. friend suggest that in those years of recession, brought on by the Liberal administration, we should have tried to have a surplus? We deliberately had deficit spending.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance promised a balanced budget.

Mr. Walker: The pay-off is that in this year, 1962, C.P.R. statisticians and prudential life statisticians predict an increase in gross national product of 7 per cent, which would be approximately $3 billion. The actual increase in the gross national product will be twice as great as all the deficits incurred up to the end of April of this year. Does the pay-off not justify deficit spending to produce that increase in gross national product? The facts cannot be controverted. When we came into power the gross national product was $30 billion but at the end of 1961, five years later, the gross national product had increased from $30 billion to $37 billion, an increase of 22 per cent, something that is almost incredible in view of the situation in which we found ourselves when we took over the administration of the country's affairs.

Now that we are on the highroad to prosperity we will turn our attention no longer to deficit spending. True, there will be deficits this coming year—there is no question about that—but when we are on the road to prosperity, as we truly are, watch the future and watch how well we do this job.

Mr. Speaker, all these things have been done at a time of stress and strain. We have made this magnificent contribution to Canada, and at the same time increased the social justice payments to a figure that not even the most ambitious of us could ever have contemplated. As I conclude my remarks I must say this, that the Leader of the Opposition has changed his tune from gloom and doom to Tory boom.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of this house. This morning the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate accused hon. members of this house of interrupting those who were speaking. He has now interrupted the Minister of Public Works on 23 occasions in the short space of 30 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if anyone will consult the record of what I said, it will be found that I said we accepted as a normal part of debate interventions from across the floor that were related to the speech—that will be found in Hansard—but it was this barracking by half a dozen members at the same time that was objectionable. I have no apology to make for seeking to correct some of the grosser errors made by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the question of privilege has been duly disposed of.

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, following the example of my colleagues, I should like to congratulate you upon your appointment as chairman of the committees of the whole. May I also extend my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Bourdages and Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway).

I should like also to tell the house that we were sorry to learn that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) was ill. We wish him a prompt recovery and hope he will soon be back in the house.

Mr. Speaker, I intend, during the few minutes allotted to me, to set forth my opinion on government policy.

I should like to refer in particular to an industry on which the people of Drummond-Arthabaska depend to a great extent, that is agriculture. I would have liked to have time to deal also with the textile industry, but I shall have the opportunity to come back to that subject on another occasion.

If you examine the present situation of the Canadian economy and compare it with that of other countries in Europe and America, you will find that it cannot even be compared with the one that prevailed in this country a few years ago.

The first thought that comes to mind, is to find out the causes of that stagnation and recession. Would it be that we lack resources or that we are wanting in financial and intellectual potentialities? Yet, Canada is the richest country of the world in all kinds of natural resources: lumber, coal, oil, large and numerous water courses, iron and all types of minerals, and Canadians are a healthy and hard-working people.

During the last quarter century, before the Conservatives came to power, our country made great progress and yet the means at its disposal were far from being as efficient then as those which are available nowadays. Industries have developed, means of communication have expanded and improved, the St. Lawrence has been deepened, pipe lines have been laid and numerous other services have been organized.

If Canada has known such intense development in that quarter of a century it is because we have had at the head of the government, sincere and competent men of action.

Inertia and incompetence have now replaced action and efficiency. The Canadian people are the spectators of a big show costing a lot of money, but which will soon come to an end.

To get an idea of the country's stagnation today you only have to look at the per capita gross national product figures, the determining factor of a country's prosperity, which have gone down from $1,959 in 1956 to $1,898 at the end of 1960, on the basis of the constant 1949 dollar.

Yesterday, Canada was the second country in the world as to per capita production; today it is the third. It used to be the world's third trading nation; it has now been relegated to fifth place in that respect.

When we are informed of the country's financial situation in a few months—unless a general election is called before then—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) will announce his fifth consecutive deficit. It will be in excess of $1 billion. According to the Financial Post, cash deficits could well reach $1.5 billion.

What about unemployment which seems to be a left-over from the Conservative administration of the years 1930-35? In February of last year, the number of unemployed reached 713,000, which means that one out of every nine workers was unemployed. On January 13 of this year, the figure was still 545,000. We have just heard the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) sing the praise of the Conservative government; he claimed that the present administration has fulfilled all its promises.

Well, there is one promise they did not keep, namely to give employment to all workers, to give them an opportunity to earn their living.

When the Prime Minister states that he has kept 50 of the 62 promises he made during the 1958 election campaign, he is very careful not to mention the ones he did not keep, such as his solemn undertaking in the 1957-58 election to check unemployment once and for all.

Let me quote what was reported in the Montreal Star of February 19, 1958:

(Text):

As long as I am Prime Minister everything that can be done—everything without regard to limit—will be done to the end that no one will suffer.

That is one of the promises he has not kept.

If the Prime Minister believes he has kept all his promises, let him tell it to the 545,000 unemployed, let him tell it to the 545,000 wives and the millions of children of those unemployed.

Mr. Pigeon: Have some respect for Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, we have had, since 1957, a government which holds a great many records; the record for unemployment; the record for deficits, for deferred decisions, for administrative sham, for seeing things, for confusion, hesitation and inaction.

We would be inclined to believe that, in the field of agriculture, the situation is altogether different and that farmers are enjoying some kind of prosperity. Well, in agriculture as in all other fields of activity, we would have to go back to the years of Lord Bennett's Tory government to find the same distressing conditions that now exist among the farmers.

I would not have enough time to make a full analysis of the situation and to explain the extremely serious difficulties which face agriculture throughout the country; however, to give you a good idea of the poor state of agriculture under a Conservative government that has been in power five years, let me quote the opinion expressed by an outstanding citizen, formerly minister of Mines and Technical Surveys in the present government before his appointment to a high office in the province of Quebec. Here is what he said to the Montreal chamber of commerce, as reported in La Presse of November 22, 1961:

The farmer is a neglected man. Moreover, he does not derive the income he should from his work. Although he plays in our society a most essential part for which he must have more and more qualifications, the farmer does not look for popular acclaim but, unfortunately, neither does he reach the standard of living he should expect.

Farm productivity has doubled over the last twenty years. The number of farms has gone down by one tenth in ten years, but mechanization has come to our farms to stay. In spite of that tremendous technological development, the farmer's economic situation has not improved and his purchasing power has decreased considerably.

If one adds to that the farmer's insecurity because of the seasons and the temperature, the diseases and whims of nature, his income is far too low to cope with the difficulty.

That is right, Mr. Speaker, the farmer's income does not allow him to meet his obligations; I could even say that the milk producers in the country, especially in eastern Canada, do not derive sufficient income from that industry.

That statement from a former minister of the crown contradicts that of the member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) who said in this house, on March 2, 1960:

No one would deny that the agricultural situation in the province of Quebec is, at this time, excellent.

His words often go beyond his thoughts, and that is why perhaps he is now talking about separatism.

Mr. Speaker, some time ago, I read in an article that the Minister of Agriculture had just announced that the net income of farmers, from farming operations, had reached an all-time high in 1961, and that it amounted to nearly $3 billion. I would not like to contradict that statement because it is true, but it is only one aspect of the agricultural situation. It is just as if I said to a layman: the salary of a federal member is $8,000 a year, plus $2,000 for expenses. At first sight, that sounds reasonable; but if we take into account all the expenses incurred to represent our electors properly, reality is quite deceiving.

When we refer to the gross income of farmers, the figure is impressive, especially in the mouth of a visionary. But if we want to be frank and sincere, we must consider operation and depreciation costs to know what remains in the farmers' pocket. What farmers are interested in is their net income.

The point that the Minister of Agriculture wants to hide is the fact that the farmers' net income from farming operations has been the lowest since 1956. The net income forecasted by the authorities of the Department of Agriculture would be $1 billion, compared to about $1.3 billion in 1960. This means that the farmers have made $352 million less in 1961.

How can such a decline be explained? It is because the government has not yet had the wisdom of putting a stop to the increase in the cost of goods and services purchased by the farmers.

The promise of widening the spread between production costs and selling prices has again been violated and trampled under foot.

Mr. Pigeon: Will you please not read so fast.

Mr. Boulanger: One of the problems which deeply concern the farming authorities is the existing situation of the dairy industry, especially in eastern Canada and mainly in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario which produce 67 per cent of all the Canadian dairy products.

The producers and consumers may be held responsible for our tremendous surpluses of butter and all other farm and dairy products. In so doing, however, we would not be fair to them because there is no one else actually responsible for the situation but the two ministers who have been in charge of the agriculture department since 1957. Both, one after the other, in taking over the management of that department, saw fit to bring about changes in the law passed by the Liberal administration on the recommendation of the late Right Hon. James G. Gardiner.

The Agricultural Stabilization Act was amended in order to give back to the farmers the share of our national income to which they are entitled and to assure them of a price fixed a year ahead for the sale of their produce.

In the case of the dairy industry, this act proved itself to be wrong, illusive and misleading and it could even be described as mythical.

Here, I refer to the words of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) who said on January 28, 1960, as reported on page 469 of Hansard:

> I am one of those who believes that agricultural policy has one prime and overriding objective, namely a fair share of the national income to those who produce the nation's food. Down through the years farmers, farm organizations and most of our ministers of agriculture have agreed that stability of production and orderly marketing were instruments valuable beyond compare as a means of achieving that objective. So it was that the former government, under the guiding influence of the minister of agriculture, the Right Hon. James Garfield Gardiner, brought into being, among other measures, the old prices support act. Farm people across Canada wanted something better. They were encouraged to believe that the new stabilization act would provide that something better. I would remind hon. members of the preamble to that measure.

And he concluded his remarks by speaking on the Agricultural Stabilization Act passed by the Conservative government with the following words:

> If I understand this program correctly, it is the most retrograde step that could be taken from an already established position. Moreover, the arguments used are unworthy of an informed ministry.

Such was the opinion of a Conservative member and I think that it reflects the opinion of all Canadian farmers.

Proof that this is backward legislation lies in the price of farm products, and especially of milk, which has gone down considerably in the last few years.

This decline of prices would be serious in itself, but there is another factor which is still more damaging to the farm income, and it is the increase of production costs.

For every hundred dollars that the farmer paid for goods and services in 1956, he now pays $114, whereas the sale price of his products has not increased, or only by a fraction.

Therefore, it is in no way surprising that bitter criticism should be voiced by various farm groups in this country with regard to a lack of competence and action on the part of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton).

I could quote some newspaper items commenting on the government's dairy policy but I shall just say that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture seem to lack interest as far as that industry is concerned.

As the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) stated two days ago, we now have a surplus of 200 million pounds of butter, 60 million pounds of cheese and 30 million pounds of skim milk.

We now have enough butter in stock to feed the Canadian population for the rest of the year. And a production surplus of 45 million pounds is expected for next year, which will add to an already huge surplus.

What does this government mean to do to alleviate the situation? Why does it hesitate before acting in accordance with the advice the government received from the opposition and Canadian farm unions?

We would have expected the Secretary of State to make an interesting announcement when he spoke in this house two days ago. However, after having listened to his speech and gone over it, I realized that he knows nothing, absolutely nothing about the present agricultural conditions in Canada.

Besides, his ventures in this field are not incriminating, since he puts as much caution in his statements on the floor of this house as he does in signing incriminating letters. His secretary signs them.

This is what the Secretary of State had to say:

> The Agricultural Stabilization Act, passed by this government, has been of great benefit to Bellechasse constituency, as it has to all eastern Canada. Formerly, under the previous regime, unstable prices had been a sort of worry and disappointment. At times, prices were quite high, at other times they were too low and, naturally, this had a substantial bearing on the farmers' income.

Mr. Pigeon: Read more slowly.

Mr. Boulanger: I should have liked to make some remarks on the Agricultural Stabilization Act, but I am afraid that my time will run short, and I will go on to the comments made by another member, the member for Champlain (Mr. Lahaye), who, in one of his very rare contributions to our debates, went out of his way to criticize, in a most unbecoming and malicious way, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I must remind him very kindly that he will not succeed in his attempts to bring disrepute on a man who has been elected every time since 1935. The hon. member for Laurier has been a minister with a group of the greatest men Canada has ever known.

Mr. Pigeon: He refused Gaspe a railroad.

Mr. Boulanger: And his name will go down in history with those of Mackenzie King, St. Laurent and Lapointe.

Mr. Pigeon: I hope that after the next election, he will pass to history.

Mr. Boulanger: The hon. member for Champlain was speaking more particularly about prices established for butter and powdered skim milk. He said:

> The minimum price for butter was set at 58 cents a pound and the price for powdered milk at 17 cents by a Conservative administration.

And he added:

> What an anomaly.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is an anomaly resulting—

Mr. Lahaye: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Boulanger: That anomaly results—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Champlain is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lahaye: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is not correct. I did not say that the price of butter was set at 58 cents a pound and that of powdered milk at 17 cents by a Conservative government, because this happened under a Liberal government.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I apologize.

Mr. Pigeon: This is not the first time he has twisted the facts.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member for Champlain, I must say that there is indeed an anomaly, in that this government, which took over from a Liberal administration, has increased the price of butter to 64 cents a pound, but has reduced the support price for powdered skim milk. What are the results today? Milk which was selling at $3 per hundredweight in 1957, now sells for only $2.75 per hundredweight. These are the results of the policy of the Conservative government.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Lesage has his own responsibilities too.

Mr. Boulanger: I challenge anyone to prove the contrary—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Courcy has his responsibilities.

Mr. Boulanger: —even the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, who does not understand anything about dairy industry problems.

The Liberal government was justified in fixing the price of powdered milk at 17 cents a pound at the time; what is not justifiable is for the Conservative government to have abolished the price support on powdered milk.

When I hear the hon. member for Champlain commend the government for its agricultural policy in relation to the dairy industry, I say that he does not know anything about it, that he does not represent the views of his electors at all—

Mr. Pigeon: Whom are you representing?

Mr. Tremblay: You are representing the dead, the war dead.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: We'll fix you at the next election.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the speech made by the hon. member for Laurier, the hon. member for Champlain did not say all. For his information, I shall quote the very words spoken by the hon. member for Laurier at Cap de la Madeleine, because I have here the full text of this speech. Here it is:

> And to what must we mainly attribute that decline in farm income? First and foremost to the Conservative government, which is abandoning the price support program introduced by the Liberals, as the egg and pork producers know only too well. More than that, in 1959, the government disowned the legislation it had caused to be approved by both houses before the 1958 election, which legislation guaranteed a reasonable price support on eggs and pork.
> Once the elections were over, and it had secured votes from a great number of farmers because of that 1958 legislation, the government dropped the price support and replaced it by deficiency payments on very small quantities. The farmers who, in 1958, trusted the government, increased their production of pork and eggs, but in 1959, the government took away from them all the security they had been guaranteed before the elections.
> What should we think of a government which, through the measures taken by its agriculture minister, brings about a continuous drop in farm incomes, thereby betraying his electoral program—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must tell him that his time has expired.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Laurier knows nothing about agriculture.

(Text):

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to make some comments in this historic debate. I wish to make some observations regarding measures forecast in the speech from the throne. However, before proceeding to discuss various items I specifically refer to the motion before us moved by the hon. member for Laval and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. It is no mere formality so far as I am concerned when I congratulate the mover and the seconder on the subject matter of their remarks and the excellence of its presentation. I listened to the speeches with great interest and found that there were expressed by both the mover and the seconder thoughts which I consider are tremendously significant to every member of this house, especially to those of us who are members of the Conservative party.

My friend the hon. member for Laval brought to the attention of the house the fact that the Conservative party has always believed in private enterprise. He said private enterprise is the very essence of democracy. In his speech he stated that Canada under a Conservative regime is living its finest hours of freedom and that there is a place in the sun for everybody in this great country of ours. He stated that private enterprise and the state are two great friends who, provided they keep understanding and helping each other, will never see hovering above them the dark cloud of doubt and suspicion. And he continued, "For man is not made for the state; it is the state that is made for man". I think those eloquent words so well expressed by my friend the hon. member for Laval are most inspiring and thought provoking, and I commend them to the house for re-examination.

Then, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in his interesting and analytical address said much with which I concur—as a matter of fact, I usually concur with what he says anyway. However, his comments with which I find myself in complete agreement are found at page 23 of Hansard, about two thirds of the way down the first column:

> The time has long passed when during the course of a single speech one could begin to recite all the accomplishments of the present administration because they are far too numerous

I think you will quite understand why I agree with those remarks. Later on, as recorded at page 27 of Hansard he made this statement which I enthusiastically endorse:

> By any analysis of the government's record there is no cause for fear now or in the future. By any analysis of our economy and its future prospects there is no cause for pessimism. By any analysis whatever there is every reason for all Canadians to move forward to a greater and brighter future under the brilliant leadership of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, one of the world's outstanding leaders.

A day or two ago, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick (Mr. Michaud), in speaking in this chamber, referred in most appropriate words to the passing of the late Senator Leger. At this time I wish to say that I subscribe fully to what he said concerning this distinguished citizen of our province. My experience with the late Senator was not as close as I would have desired it, but I always found him to be,—whether in New Brunswick or in Ottawa and under all circumstances—always the perfect gentleman. He will be greatly missed by all and I take this occasion to extend sympathy to his wife and family.

It is with pleasure that I congratulate you, sir, on having been appointed Deputy Speaker of this house. I am confident that you will discharge your duties with all the qualities necessary to commend the respect of all hon. members and in accordance with the best traditions of this house. I am also pleased that my hon. friend, who formerly held the same position, is now the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and I am certain that he will continue his career of distinguished public service. I am certain that he will execute his duties to the satisfaction of all concerned.

May I also express my regret at the loss I believe this house has suffered in the removal of the fine gentleman who was the immediate predecessor of the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, a man of fine disposition and even temperament and a man of tremendous ability. He will bring great credit to himself and honour to our country as the representative of Her Majesty the Queen in the province of Quebec.

I should like to congratulate all who have participated in this debate. Naturally I have been more impressed by those who spoke in support of the administration than those who did otherwise. Sometimes I was rather annoyed at some of what I consider to be very undeserved criticism. However, Mr. Speaker, it has been a most interesting debate, I believe, for all concerned.

I should like at this time to say a word or two concerning the momentous event of history that took place on Tuesday, February 20, when history was made on behalf of our great friends to the south, the United States of America, by Colonel Glenn, who was the successful astronaut and space man who covered 81,000 miles, circling the earth three times and finally landing in practically the exact intended location.

I feel a distinct sense of satisfaction for myself and happiness for every citizen of the United States. Having spent the greater part of my life living practically alongside the United States border, having travelled frequently and freely back and forth, having made many friends and having acquired an addition to my family from that great country since my son brought a lovely wife with him back to Canada, I am very pleased and I rejoice with our neighbour to the south in the tremendous scientific achievement and accomplishment of Colonel Glenn on behalf of his country.

It seems to me that we in this house might very well consider that unemployment is our greatest domestic problem and, next to world peace, probably the most important one. However, I feel there is a difference between those on this side of the house and the Liberal opposition in our approach to it. We believe in and work for employment. They seem to enjoy talking about unemployment. This has been the pattern in recent years. They never ask how the figures compare with a year ago, a month ago or how they compare percentagewise with the richest country in the world, the United States. They appear to gloat and almost express pleasure when the figures of unemployment go up, and they indicate no particular satisfaction when they go down.

I contend that the program of this government announced in the speech from the throne on November 17, 1960, has, to the extent of my knowledge, been tremendously successful. It called first of all for a larger program of assistance to municipalities for winter works. My comment is that this has been tremendously effective. Efforts have been made and are being made in every part of our country to plan our activities in such a way that there will be maximum employment during the winter season.

There is nothing new about winter unemployment. I have spent my life in the business of lumbering and in connection with woods operations we always had people employed who worked at something else during the summer. It is just that we are going through a different phase and different plans must be made in the future. There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but that the winds of change are blowing. Activities which were adequate in the past will not, for one reason or another, be adequate in the future, and it is tiding us over this period of change that renders assistance to municipalities so important since the intention is to stimulate winter works. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the winter works program was last year, is this year and will be in the future an effective program so far as meeting the problem of seasonal unemployment is concerned.

I would also draw the attention of the house to the fact that all possible public works are now being carried on during the winter season. I have no doubt, and I am sure the house has no doubt, that this will have a most beneficial effect, and it will continue to be done in the future to the fullest possible extent.

Since the employment situation is much improved this year compared with last, I wonder whether anyone has taken the trouble to ask himself or herself what has brought this about. I submit that government policy, government activity and private enterprise, inspired and assisted by government participation, are responsible for the improvement. It did not just happen.

Let me recite some of the changes instituted by the government in the past two years. We are told, Mr. Speaker, that we need to be reminded more than we need to be educated, and so I am going to review some of the things which I think are responsible for the fact that today we have a lessening of unemployment compared with a year ago. This will continue to be the case and that should bring to every member of the house the greatest possible degree of satisfaction.

First, the government announced a five year extension of the policy of sharing in the expense of hospital construction from March, 1963, to March, 1968. I do not need to elaborate on the importance of this. I am sure that hon. members are all convinced that hospitals which are badly needed subsequent to March, 1963, will be planned for. They need to be planned for, and this program has a twofold advantage. It furnishes work and it also furnishes the hospital. Federal aid will be available and municipalities will know what they may expect in that five year period. This is most important, and the result will be more construction, more jobs, direct and indirect, and more hospitals.

There is another encouragement to construction in that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been authorized to increase their volume and improve their terms of mortgage lending. We listened to the Minister of Public Works tell us this afternoon that Canada had the greatest record with regard to housing of any 18 million people in the world, and I submit this is due to the fact that the government has recognized the situation. We all know of the increase. We know of the great acceleration in construction generally and in the building of homes in particular. We all know that there has been a reduction in the rate charged by the corporation. We all know that this has contributed tremendously to the furnishing of employment both directly and indirectly. There is an old saying that there is no better way to improve general economic conditions than to stimulate construction, and I have no reason to doubt that that is the case today.

I should also like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that recent legislation authorized Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to become a partner with provincial authorities with respect to urban redevelopment, which is often called slum clearance, but whatever it is called it is most desirable. With respect to this action I say that it has been most definitely job producing.

Then there is the question of universities and their need for more residences. Recent governmental action provided special authority to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make loans for university residences on attractive terms. To my certain knowledge this has been used to a great extent by many universities.

We also have another illustration in the provision of long term loans for sewage disposal and treatment plants up to two thirds of the cost, with the special incentive that the federal government will write off, in other words, will make an outright grant of 25 per cent of the cost for all expense incurred up to March, 1963.

I should like to refer now to one item in some detail because I live in a province where waterways are tremendously important. The Saint John river, of which the upper part is international, has a difficult pollution problem, and the prevention of any increase in pollution of this waterway is vital to our province. I only cite this as one instance of the need to grapple with the situation, but to add to our difficulties so far as the Saint John river is concerned there are many branches of it flowing from the state of Maine, thus complicating an already complicated situation.

Some years ago the New Brunswick government passed legislation encouraging the municipalities to deal with the whole problem of sewage disposal and participating in the financial implications. The provincial legislation plus the federal legislation should be a tremendous incentive for all municipalities to face up to the situation, grapple with it and deal with it. I submit that this is most essential legislation. It has been used to a great extent though not to the extent it should be; but it is on the statute books, it is to the credit of the government, and in my opinion it will be of increasing value and will be recognized as such.

May I refer for a moment now to the productivity council. I do not expect to elaborate on this. It has been debated in this chamber by many members, and I am sure that the general hope and expectation are that it will bring about a great improvement. The same plan has been tried in England with outstanding results. In Canada the productivity council has become established and has held meetings. The chairman is an outstanding and successful businessman. I believe that from a long range point of view this council will achieve results and I feel we are fortunate we have so many capable people on this council rendering valuable and efficient service.

Now I have a word to say concerning guarantees for bank loans for small business, a subject which would appear to deserve comment. As hon. members know, this measure provides for the government's guaranteeing a portion of bank loans for small businesses, to finance additions and for the improvement of business premises and equipment. A few evenings ago I listened to a debate on the floor of this chamber dealing with the extension of this act so that it might meet additional needs of something like the same general nature. Our friends in the opposition voiced tremendous concern because they said it had not been used much, in fact used so little, with only $23 million worth of applications so far. Some of them almost shed tears—I believe of the crocodile variety. Now, Mr. Speaker, I come from a part of the country where $23 million is a lot of money and when that amount of loans has been made under this general heading and realizing there has been considerable difficulty in getting a proper understanding with the chartered banks, and other difficulties which are not uncommon to new legislation, then it is my submission that properties have been improved under this legislation which otherwise would not have been improved because there was no provision under which this type of business could borrow. As a matter of fact this legislation has been an outstanding success. It has brought about increased employment and great benefit to small businesses.

Extending assistance to provincial governments for vocational training has been another one of the achievements of the government. This has led also to the retraining of those who have already become employed. The legislation likewise provides a grant of 75 per cent of the amounts expended for technical schools prior to March 31, 1963. We heard a report on this a few evenings ago from the Minister of Labour and I now have figures from him indicating that there have been 236 vocational and technical schools either built or improved under this act. The figures given me, which I believe are up to February 9, indicate that these schools will cost a total of $254,300,000, of which the federal share will be $170,000,000. I am likewise informed that of these 236 institutions 128 are new schools, 78 are additions to existing schools, and 30 are alterations to existing schools. I do not believe I need to elaborate on the importance of this assistance, or to emphasize that it has much more than one benefit because the construction of these schools furnishes a good deal of employment and stimulates employment in many industries.

Then there is the benefit in the technical education and vocational education of young people, in the opportunity furnished them to acquire a technical and vocational knowledge so important in this age of mechanical activity and automation. I submit that this program has been a tremendous success and I believe the Minister of Labour in particular, the government in general, and the people of Canada as a whole will derive great satisfaction and benefit from this program.

Much has been said in this house concerning secondary industry, its need and its importance. I believe the house is familiar with what took place in connection with the "class or kind" legislation which was passed last year. I listened quite intently to the various debates on second reading, committee stage and third reading of that measure. In my opinion the action of certain members of the opposition, presumably with the knowledge and consent of their leader, and perhaps under his direction, gave every reason that they be accused of conducting a filibuster against this legislation. I found myself unable at that time to comprehend their attitude, and I still find myself unable to do so.

They had complained that governmental action in connection with employment was long overdue and there was nothing that might furnish, reasonably prompt amelioration of the difficult situation existing with regard to employment. They said everything was long range and that we should do something that would have an immediate impact on the unemployment situation. Yet we saw them acting in such a way that I believe would be capable of being considered obstruction, or would appear to be attempting to postpone almost indefinitely the passage of the act. I submit that when goods of a class or kind made in Canada are imported into this country, that must displace potential jobs for Canadians.

The proposed act was to give the minister authority to deal with any situation without delay. Yet we saw our friends opposite gang up in an apparent attempt to prevent the passage of that legislation. I do not know how they will explain their action to the people of Canada in the coming election. Indeed, I would not care to have the responsibility which they have. Probably they will say that eventually the act was passed, but we know what happened to it. It was not passed in the other place and consequently did not become law. In my opinion it was legislation which would have kept Canadians working at their jobs and which, in some cases, would make a direct contribution to the establishment of new jobs.

Little has been said in this house regarding the development of the Columbia river. I suppose, coming from almost the extreme eastern part of the country, it might be considered a trifle presumptuous for me to say much about it but it is a subject which is most interesting to everyone. I am sure that everyone within the sound of my voice is well aware how this matter stands at the present time. A treaty has been signed by Prime Minister Diefenbaker on behalf of Canada, and the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance have been working diligently and faithfully to secure agreement with the province of British Columbia.

More progress has been made under this government in connection with this great development—the greatest that Canada has ever undertaken, greater perhaps than the St. Lawrence seaway—than in any other period of our history. As a matter of fact we in the east hardly knew there was a Columbia river until the coming into office of the administration of Prime Minister Diefenbaker. I am one of those who believe that the difficulties which are now irritating, and which have brought about some delay in carrying out the plans of the government in connection with this great project and the development of this great waterway, will be overcome. I have the greatest confidence that those who are working towards a solution of the difficulties will be successful and within a short time arrangements will be made to proceed with this tremendous undertaking.

I shall now mention the program for agricultural rehabilitation and development. In connection with this objective, legislation has been passed, a director has been appointed and plans are under way whereby the aims and objects of this particular legislation will be advanced. It is a long term objective.

In the process of the establishment of the many families making up the population of this great nation undoubtedly much land has been cleared which is probably not very suitable for the growing of agricultural crops. I have no doubt that there is much cleared land in our country that is more suited to the growing of crops of trees than any other crop. I assure the house that there will be the utmost co-operation between the department over which I have the honour to preside and the Department of Agriculture, in connection with future plans under this particular legislation. Let us make no mistake about it. This is one of the most important pieces of legislation that has ever been put on the statute books of this great country.

The Minister of Agriculture has great plans for the future under this act. He is assured of complete co-operation from us and the house may be assured that I anticipate a most successful long range development under this act, all for the good of agriculture and for the good of everyone connected with it.

I wish to refer to the railway which has been mentioned by the Minister of Public Works as one of the accomplishments of the government in the carrying out of its promises. It is just within the last day or so we saw a picture in the newspapers of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources sitting on a bulldozer. He was apparently turning the first sod for that railway. It seemed to me that this was a tremendous undertaking, 400 miles from northern Alberta into the north, the opening up of a tremendous new country and opening up great vistas and great prospects for all our people. Now we find the situation is that the funds have been voted, the survey has been completed, the work has been started and the minister drove the machine which turned the first sod. If this may be considered by the house as being a progress report, it seems to me a pretty good one. What more could we ask? For years the Liberals talked about it. We are doing it.

The speech from the throne contains many more important passages and declarations of intent. It is certainly not my purpose to try to refer to each of them because time would not permit. Hon. members will perhaps recall that I said a few moments ago in the course of these remarks that unemployment—or employment, if you like, because I prefer to refer to employment in the positive sense—that in the furnishing of employment it seems to me the peace of the world is the most important objective. The speech from the throne contains a recital of many important happenings of the past. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the preservation of peace is the most important single objective that any government could have. I refer especially to these words in the speech from the throne:

> The Canadian government remains devoted to peace as its primary objective.

I see no sign of any dissent around this chamber, neither did I expect any.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has now expired.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister's time had expired, and unless there is unanimous consent it is too late to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not know that the Columbia river negotiations began under a Liberal government?

An hon. Member: It did not do anything.

Mr. Churchill: They finished nothing.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): What is the question?

Mr. Matheson: The question is, does the minister not know that the Columbia river negotiations began under the former Liberal administration?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Mr. Speaker, in answering the question of the hon. gentleman, I made no comment about when the negotiations began. I made a comment as to the result of the negotiations and what had been accomplished by this government.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): You dragged it out for 13 years; we did it in two.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with all the previous speakers to congratulate and offer my best wishes of success to the hon. members for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) and St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) for the confidence the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has shown them. I would be remiss if I did not mention the movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. members for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne). They have really shown a creative spirit in the sense that they succeeded in making something out of nothing.

The hon. member for Laval broke into the chorus his leaders have been singing since 1957 about the poor legacy left by the Liberals. Following the example set by his leaders, he voluntarily forgot, or simply ignored like his colleagues a certain part of that enviable legacy left by the former Liberal administration.

And by the way, Mr. Speaker, what was that legacy? In brief, this country lived in an atmosphere favourable to the economic expansion which had been taking place for many years; Canada still had in all parts of the world the peak of her prestige but not a peak in the sense the Conservative members from Quebec understand it; the Nobel peace prize, awarded to our former minister for external affairs, who is now the leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Pearson), confirmed the universal esteem and friendship of the countries of the world toward Canada.

To come back to the national front, the former administration, from 1946 to 1957, through an administrative policy which lent more importance to the welfare of the nation than to the welfare of the party reduced our public debt by almost $2½ billion; there was over $900 million in the unemployment insurance fund; the former administration had also left a special fund of $165 million for national defence purposes and let us not forget the $272 million surplus in the last federal budget. Here is the true legacy left by the Liberals in 1957.

But what happened after the coming to power of a group of Conservative adventurers who were then and still are today more thirsty for domination and power than they are concerned about the general welfare of Canadians.

Here is a very concise summary of what really happened here under a Conservative administration. The conversion loan of more than $5½ billion flooded the bond market, and expanding private enterprise was hard hit by those who like to call themselves its champions. The result was that Canadians will, for years and years to come, pay an additional amount of $52 million just to pay the interest on that loan. To which we must add the not inconsiderable amount of $25 million which went to pay friendly brokers' commissions as well as publicity costs. That is how the Conservatives went about upsetting our Canadian economy soon after they came into power.

In the international field, the total lack of the most elementary sense of diplomacy in some of our ministers is doing considerable damage to our good relations with Great Britain. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself are largely responsible for that deplorable state of affairs. Yet, they spend their time, especially the Prime Minister, posing as champions of the commonwealth. They keep talking about it, but they never miss an opportunity to undermine it. The Minister of Finance denied the reports about the speeches delivered at the Accra conference. Is it through ignorance or insincerity that he is unaware of an indiscretion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce who gave a copy of his speech to a reporter? That is how we learned the truth, the actual truth, about the almost senseless stand taken by the Canadian representatives at Accra. They pretend today that this actual truth reported in the press has been distorted and misrepresented.

The Conservatives went even further: within two years, they reduced to nothing our repayment of $2.5 billion on the public debt by increasing the debt by $2,218 million. In addition, the Conservatives have almost depleted the $900 million unemployment insurance fund, while completely draining the special national defence fund of $165 million as well as the $272 million surplus of the last Liberal budget. To that we must add an ever increasing number of deficits without our country experiencing in return a prosperity proportionate to its wealth. We must also take into account unemployment which again this year, and for the fourth consecutive time, has reached proportions which are truly at variance with the Prime Minister's vision of 1958. Since the opening of the session, the parrots on the government side of the house have been repeating endlessly that unemployment is less serious this year than a year ago. If that is true, the better for those who are working. However, I do not think that this will be of much comfort to the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who cannot find jobs.

That is not all. In his celestial vision, the Prime Minister had promised us a tax reduction. What happened? In the fall of 1957 and in June 1958, the Conservatives did indeed reduce taxes by an amount of $204 million. The Prime Minister promised a $500 million reduction, but to him promises are more important than deeds, as far as votes are concerned.

In the 1959 budget, the Minister of Finance raised taxes by $352 million, apart from the indirect tax on the workers, the small wage-earners in this country, as he increased by approximately $80 million the employees' and employers' contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. But that was not enough. The Prime Minister wanted to fulfil his promises to the limit. At the same time he increased the sales tax from 10 to 11 per cent as well as the tax on spirits and cigarettes and he raised from 47 to 50 per cent the tax on corporation incomes over $25,000.

Add up all those increases and you will find that the Conservatives have taken back at least two or three times the slight $204 million decrease, with the result that Canadians today pay much more in taxes than before the Conservative magicians came to power. Yet, this does not prevent the Conservative parrots from repeating, with the assurance that comes from ignorance or bad faith, that the Tory administration has reduced taxes. What reduction? The situation in which the Canadian economy really finds itself has not, by any means, prevented the specialist in sensational and resounding statements, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny), from proclaiming shamelessly in Toronto, on November 4, 1960:

> Never has the country been so prosperous as under the Diefenbaker administration.

Another one who, like his leader, feeds on visions.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I should like to go back to a matter—

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Loiselle: —which I discussed on so many occasions in this house, the slum clearance—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) rises to ask a question.

Mr. Tremblay: I should like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. Could the hon. member tell the house who wrote this speech he is having such a hard time to read?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I might tell the hon. member that this speech is my own; I wrote it myself.

Mr. Tremblay: Was it not written by someone else?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. All hon. members should listen to the hon. member who has the floor and not interrupt from their seats. If some members persist in acting this way, I will ask them to stop or to please go and make their remarks outside this chamber. Otherwise, it would be impossible to proceed with this debate. I ask all hon. members to co-operate so that the debate can proceed in an orderly fashion.

I recognize the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Loiselle).

Mr. Loiselle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for calling the house to order. The hon. member for Roberval has spent the whole afternoon yapping on the other side of the house while hon. members on this side had the floor, and it is about time you intervened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must call the hon. member for St. Ann to order. I did not mention anyone in particular. Interruptions are made from both sides of the house. All I ask is that all members co-operate with the Chair in compliance with standing orders. I feel the hon. member for St. Ann should refrain from making such remarks about his colleagues. All he has to do is proceed with his speech.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling, and now I would like to revert to a subject I have dealt with many times in this house, that is the slum clearance and the provision of low rent housing. I have always been interested in that question which I have brought to the attention of the government since the Montreal St. Ann riding has elected me.

That riding is one of the oldest areas of Montreal and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the workers who live there and that I have the honour to represent are great-hearted men who deserve consideration.

As a councillor of the city of Montreal I had the honour to be appointed to the sanitary housing board, under the previous administration. I always made it a point to emphasize the need for clearing the slums and replacing them by low rent housing.

In 1960, the sanitary housing board, asked the economic research corporation to investigate and report on the housing situation in the city of Montreal.

In the first days of July 1961, the board submitted to the present administration a very comprehensive report on the Montreal housing situation.

I may assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the report is not very encouraging and is food for thought. I would say that the report alone should have convinced our municipal board of directors and the management of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that immediate action was imperative. To justify my statement, I shall just say that Montreal has 17,645 slum dwellings in which 29,282 families are living. Those figures mean that a total of 116,450 people, or 8 per cent of the whole population of Montreal, experience hardship in unsanitary surroundings which beggar description.

There have been people in the past who criticized the Jeanne Mance housing project. And, at this point, I want to bring to the attention of the house a financial report in this morning's Le Devoir with regard to that project, which, it is said, has yielded a surplus of $70,755.43.

Some people said, before the housing centre was built, that Montreal could not afford it. May I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that having followed closely the building of those housing units, I am very happy about the results. I am therefore pleased to point out that surplus today, as it should encourage our municipal and federal administrations to go ahead with similar projects in the city of Montreal.

The Jeanne Mance centre created some 800 new housing units equipped with all facilities required for modern living. Not only are there no vacant flats in those units, but I may assure hon. members that there is a waiting list which might surprise many hon. members. Even though these housing projects are not perfect, we must admit that they have made possible the clearing of an important district of Montreal and, especially, a great number of families have found in them all the comfort of a modern home. Moreover, this type of housing has greatly contributed, I am sure, to a substantial decrease in juvenile delinquency in this area. Montreal has an urgent need for several other similar housing projects, comprising units with several rooms for our large families.

In its report, the economic research corporation mentions that there are 17 blighted areas requiring redevelopment. Of these 17 residential areas, 9 were considered in a mediocre or bad condition and have been dealt with in a very detailed report.

Zones 2, 3 and 5, and a part of zones 1 and 4 are located in my constituency. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that zone 2 covers 310 acres, zone 3, 160 acres, and zone 5, around 275 acres.

This justifies the pleas I have repeatedly put forward to the government for slum clearance and construction of low cost housing.

I therefore repeat my request to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) who is responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I urge him to give special consideration to the representations of the administrators of the city of Montreal, so that a favourable decision can be reached as regards assistance to these 30,000 families.

If, perchance, the minister is somewhat dubious about the merits of my statements, he might yield to my invitation and see for himself, on the spot, the conditions under which families live in these slums. I will gladly take him around. He would, therefore, be able to see for himself the inhuman and pitiful conditions under which those workers' families live in my riding. He might also have to go up or down shaky staircases.

I have here photographs which were published in Montreal newspapers showing the frightful conditions which I just mentioned. I might even draw the minister's attention to a newspaperman's caption below one of those photographs:

The rear balcony, which will soon give up, has many uses. It is used at the same time as a dump and as a storage for the furniture which could not be placed in the rooms of the apartment. This is where they go also if they want to get a bit of fresh air.

After a meeting in Ottawa of the mayor of Montreal with the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of Public Works, the latter, in a statement made a few days later, described Montreal as a surplus area.

I should like here to read a few sentences from an editorial published in the newspaper Le Devoir of January 19, 1961:

A peculiar situation, since Montreal may just as well be considered as a housing shortage area, because it is the only possible justification and explanation of the continued enforcement of rent control in the metropolis, 16 years after the war ended and long after all other war controls have disappeared.

Nevertheless, federal authorities are most serious in their stand for the only reason that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is stuck with empty apartments which it cannot rent.

So we have a metropolitan area with a housing surplus and a housing shortage at the same time. There is a surplus and a wide choice for those who can afford to pay a relatively high rent and an acute shortage for those with a low income.

And the newspaperman goes on, Mr. Speaker, to explain that situation.

Again in the same connection, Mr. Speaker, I shall keep on calling the minister's attention to this very ticklish matter which is being discussed both by the Montreal authorities and by the leaders of the various organizations of the city of Montreal. In fact, I cannot but keep on renewing my representations to the minister.

As there are some hundreds of unoccupied apartments in houses built with the assistance of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the government is turning a deaf ear to the municipal authorities' repeated requests for slum clearance, to facilitate the construction of low rental housing. Such a thoroughly negative attitude on the part of the government is in no way justified, if we consider that it has granted credits for the building of housing in localities quite far from the Montreal labour centres.

In the face of the hard-headed obstinacy of the government which refuses its financial assistance for the construction of housing, the Montreal municipal authorities are considering asking the provincial government to grant them special powers to decree the freezing of municipal assessments in some areas for a ten year period.

If such a request were granted by the provincial legislative assembly, it would allow the construction of more sanitary housing, without any increase in real estate taxation during that ten year period.

However, the fact remains that those less fortunate workers are paying taxes to the federal administration and they are entitled, just as any other Canadian citizens, to benefit from the National Housing Act and from the loans granted by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In fact, I cannot understand the obstinate attitude of the federal government towards the Montreal labour communities. The Minister of Public Works will undoubtedly allow me to appeal to his humanitarian feelings on behalf of my fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I would briefly deal with another matter I raised a few times in this house. This is the construction of the C.B.C. building in the eastern part of the metropolis. Over two years have gone by since the representative of the municipal administration and those of the corporation reached an agreement on the site and purchase of land for the establishment of the whole radio and television services.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, those services are at present located in several buildings scattered throughout the city, and such a situation is very costly for the taxpayers.

The relocation of the C.B.C. services in eastern Montreal, in addition to eliminating a great many slum dwellings in an older part of the city, would be an incentive for several owners to improve their buildings. Furthermore, in many instances, we would see the construction by private enterprise of magnificent apartment blocks around that site. This would be a repetition of what is happening at present in the western part of the city along Dorchester boulevard. I am actually wondering why the government is delaying so much its decision about that project. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) always seems to be without a definite answer in that connection. I recently put repeated questions to him and to the Minister of Public Works in an effort to obtain an encouraging answer. Unfortunately, there was nothing definite in their replies.

I ask the government to carefully examine the situation and let us know its stand on that problem which requires speedy action. Let the government say yes or no but at least let it say something sensible. If the answer is yes, I say without hesitation that the eastern part of Montreal will be the scene of a redevelopment which is well deserved. If the answer is no, at least the municipal authorities will know where they stand.

In a transaction of this kind, the important point is not to know who gets the better part of the bargain but to be aware of any possible agreement between two governments for the sole purpose of serving the best interests of a whole community.

I hope that the Ministers of Public Works and National Revenue will be able to announce the good news shortly, so that the residents of Montreal who pay their share of taxes to the federal government may be treated fairly by those responsible in the central administration.

At this stage of my remarks, I should like to deal with a matter which is mentioned in the speech from the throne in these terms:

> My government is initiating negotiations with the provincial and municipal authorities with a view to removing the tolls on the Victoria and Jacques Cartier bridges in Montreal; should these be successful you will be asked to approve legislation for this purpose.

In reply to a question which was directed to him recently, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) stated that he has had some news in connection with the negotiations going on with the province of Quebec but that he has not heard from the city of Montreal. In fact, I doubt that he will receive a definite reply from the municipal authorities of Montreal because, if my information is correct, the only exchange of correspondence between the city of Montreal and the Department of Transport is a letter marked "personal and confidential" which was sent to the municipal authorities. How then could the latter make public their views on that question when they are sent a personal and confidential letter.

Being a citizen of Montreal, I am, like my fellow citizens, in favour of the elimination of tolls on Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges but under certain conditions. I am almost convinced that very few are aware of all the facts about the Jacques Cartier bridge and more particularly about the terms of the agreement passed between the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

As a matter of fact, according to that agreement, the city of Montreal was to pay an annual amount of $150,000 for its share of the deficits, and from 1930 to 1951 the operation of Jacques Cartier bridge cost the taxpayers of Montreal the sum of $2,789,768. From 1951 to 1957, the same operation brought financial surpluses and if my information is correct, I believe the Quebec provincial government never paid its share of the deficits. When the authorities of the city of Montreal in 1944 decided to discontinue their payments, court procedures were initiated and, following a judgment, the city of Montreal was condemned to pay its share of the deficits for the years 1944 to 1949 inclusive. As a matter of fact it had to pay $210,407 in interest charges and $3,552 for legal fees.

Mr. Speaker, it is good politics, especially on the eve of a general election, and to save a few seats on the south shore, to offer the elimination of tolls on Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges. I am all for it, so that my fellow citizens of Montreal might benefit from it, if possible, but provided the contract be amended and the operation of this bridge become the joint responsibility of the federal and provincial governments. Thus, the Montreal taxpayers would no longer be required to assume their share of deficits and maintenance.

The operation of the Jacques Cartier bridge, from the time it was built until now, has cost Montreal taxpayers the sum of $3,003,738. Furthermore, for the last two years, following an agreement between the federal government and the municipal administration, citizens of Montreal who have to use the Jacques Cartier bridge to get to St. Helene island, owned by the city of Montreal, have had to pay an additional amount of a little over $42,000. Why should the citizens of Montreal always be the ones to pay, when the time comes to be of service to the surrounding municipalities? It has always been said, in the past, that Montreal was the "milch cow" of the surrounding municipalities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I hear someone giggling, but I am sure it would do some hon. members good to drink milk.

I am in favour of the removal of tolls, but on condition that the present agreement between the authorities of the city of Montreal, the government of the provinces of Quebec and the federal government be amended so that only the provincial government and the federal government shall be responsible for the operating costs of the bridge.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of his remarks today, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lafreniere) said that small industries in Quebec were granted loans amounting to $23 million by the federal government.

Well, when he spoke on February 15 last, the Minister of Finance made the following statement, as can be seen on page 915 of Hansard:

> From the inception of the act in January 1961 to the end of last December, 2,977 loans amounting to over $25.5 million were made to small business enterprises.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot compare the figures quoted by the Minister of Finance and those given by the member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lafreniere) who said that small industries in the province of Quebec alone had received the sum of 23 million whereas the total amount of the loans granted throughout the country reached 25.5 million.

I would like to see small industries in the province of Quebec receive not only the sum of 23 million but much larger sums because the whole future of the province of Quebec is predicated upon the achievements of small business, and I am convinced that their growth should be encouraged.

Mr. W. G. Beech (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all offer my congratulations to you on your appointment and wish for you every success in this new and important position. May I also extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Laval and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway for the excellent manner in which they introduced the motion we are now discussing. Of course, Mr. Speaker, they had good material with which to work. When we consider that less than five years ago no member of this government had sat on the treasury benches, I think we can say that they have an outstanding record of achievement. This record appears to be disturbing some of the members of the opposition. I was greatly disappointed to hear the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) adopt the tactics he adopted today. First, he accused the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) of having at one time been associated with the Liberal party. Then he accused him—

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I made no such accusation. In what I said the hon. gentleman will find nothing to that effect, although I believe it is true.

Mr. Beech: He then went on to say that the Prime Minister was opposed to old age pensions.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is well known.

[Mr. Loiselle.]

Mr. Beech: May I say this. I have known the Prime Minister for a great many more years than has the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and never at any time or under any circumstances did he either directly or indirectly ever take a stand against old age pensions. This is unequivocally and completely false information. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has just stated that I made a false statement to the house. I think that statement raises a question of privilege. Perhaps I should allow Your Honour to rule on whether or not it does so before I attempt to say anything further.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I understood the hon. member, he said that it was based on false information. Is that correct?

Mr. Beech: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hence a question of privilege would not arise at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speaking on a point of order, may I say that I take it I will be permitted, at the conclusion of the hon. gentleman's speech, to make a correction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, that procedure would be in order and in accordance with the established practice.

Mr. Beech: I should like to say that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has a certain amount of ability and that it should not be necessary for him to adopt these tactics. Earlier this afternoon he offered the Prime Minister some advice. I wonder whether he would mind accepting a little bit of advice himself, namely that the good salesman does not attempt to sell his product by pulling down the other fellow or by trying to discredit the other chap's product.

Mr. Pickersgill: I give the same advice to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: There he goes again.

Mr. Beech: For the last two years I have been in receipt of representations by the representatives of the Canadian boiler society protesting the importation into Canada of pressure vessels that do not meet the specifications required by the various provincial governments. Approaches have been made by the provincial chief boiler inspectors to the Departments of Trade and Commerce, National Revenue, and Finance, asking for the assistance of the federal government in controlling this problem. Thus far these approaches have met with little success, and my purpose in addressing the house today is to lend my support to their efforts and to solicit the help of all hon. members in what I believe to be a reasonable request.

All the provinces have enacted legislation governing the manufacture, installation and operation of certain pressure vessels, the primary objective being the safety of their citizens. To this end, no boiler may be installed that does not meet the specifications set forth in that legislation. Nor may these vessels be placed in service unless they have been examined by inspectors appointed by the government for that purpose. Furthermore, no boiler may be operated except by persons who are authorized under certificate issued by the provincial department concerned, after an examination based on the type of boiler to be operated.

The number of inspectors and the task of carrying out these inspections are lessened because of the regulations governing the manufacture of boilers, and there can be no doubt that the law requiring that these boilers be built to certain specifications is the main factor responsible for the relatively few accidents due to the explosion of boilers in this country.

Adhering to these regulations does impose upon the manufacturer certain obligations which I believe they have no desire to evade, but I also believe that it is unfair to impose these requirements on Canadian manufacturers and then to allow boilers to come into Canada from foreign countries which do not impose the same requirements.

The Canadian boiler society is only asking for equal competition. If the safety of our people depends upon these boilers being built to certain specifications, then surely all boilers should be made to conform regardless of where they come from. The society has suggested that this could be brought about by the federal government requiring that all boilers imported into Canada bear a stamp indicating that they have been made according to the specifications required by Canadian regulations. As the government already requires some imports to be stamped and as there are no tariff revisions requested, there seems to be no valid reason why the suggestion made by the Canadian boiler society and the chief boiler inspectors of the provinces should not be granted, particularly as it affects the safety of Canadian citizens.

I should like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) for giving me the honour and privilege of attending the NATO parliamentary conference in Paris last November. I found the discussions there most enlightening and I have a much broader picture of the problems facing us in foreign affairs.

I appreciated the opportunity given to visit our forces attached to the NATO command, and I can tell the house that I believe that the Canadians have the finest fighting force in Europe. They are upholding the finest traditions of our armed services and deserve the best and most effective weapons and facilities we are able to procure for them. I also enjoyed attending the remembrance day ceremonies at Vimy Ridge and I want to commend the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) for the intense personal interest he is showing in the perpetuation of these memorial services at our national shrines, for there is no truer measure of the character of a nation that the manner in which that nation honours its dead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to make a correction, the hon. gentleman said that I had made a statement this afternoon about the Prime Minister being opposed to old age pensions, which was based on false information. The Prime Minister was a candidate in the constituency of Prince Albert in opposition to Mr. Mackenzie King in the election of 1926, as can be found by consulting the Parliamentary Guide, and one of the main issues in the election of 1926 was the opposition by the Tory party to old age pensions. If the Prime Minister says he was not in support of his party—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has the right to make a short correction but he does not have the right to continue the debate. The hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean.

Mr. Walker: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, old age pensions were introduced in 1908 by a Conservative member, as can be found on page 2398 of Hansard of that year, and the Prime Minister has always been in favour of old age pensions from the time he was a child.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe that the matter raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate involves an explanation, which he has given, and I do not think it should be the subject of further debate at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, Your Honour interrupted me and I took my seat before I had completed my explanation. You allowed a minister of the crown, who had no right of any kind, to get up and make a statement and it seems to me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member had already completed the personal explanation that he wished to make and he was embarking on a matter of debate. That is why I have ruled that the matter should now be closed and the floor is given—

Mr. Pickersgill: Why should the minister be allowed to debate it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —to the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourque: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean has asked that we call it six o'clock and it is five minutes to six. Has he unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join those who spoke before me in congratulating the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) for the excellent way they carried out their task as mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I also wish to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and I wish you all possible success in your new functions.

I also wish to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. May he also have every success in his new post, as well as the new parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard).

At the beginning of this speech, let me say how proud I am of my chief, the leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Pearson). I listened with great attention to his speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne and I congratulate him warmly for it.

(Text):

Since September, 1960, there has been a substantial increase in the money supply. In May the government asked Mr. James B. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada, to resign and since his resignation became effective there has been a startling increase in the money supply. The Coyne controversy lasted for about four weeks and during that period there was only a moderate increase in the money supply. But in the week ending August 2 there came the largest weekly increase in the money supply that has ever taken place, $267 million. Since then there has been a further net increase of $157 million. From October, 1960, to October, 1961, the increase has been $842 million. The increase during the 12 weeks that followed the resignation of Mr. Coyne was $452 million, more than half the total year's increase.

Since the Diefenbaker government came into office there has been a great expansion in our money supply and this form of inflation, monetary inflation, can be highly dangerous. The purpose of these Diefenbaker excesses and expenses, in expanding the money supply, is no doubt to sell its bonds. The Diefenbaker government, since taking office in 1957, has had an unbroken series of deficits totalling $2,105,000,000 to March 31 last and the Minister of Finance has estimated that the deficit in the current fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, will be $980 million while the gross total up to that date will approximate $300 million, a staggering amount of money.

This cannot be accepted as a permanent way of life. The deficits should be met by direct borrowing from the public instead of by an increase in the money supply. The shocking situation which has developed as a result of this policy is that now far more Canadian assets are owned by outsiders, mainly citizens of the United States, than was the situation when this government took over in 1957. This resorting to the printing press and the new Diefenbaker dollar is bound to deliver us to foreign investors whose currencies have become so much more valuable in Canada, and we may anticipate a still larger inflow of United States and other foreign currencies, further pressure on our exchange rate, further government requirements in the capital market, further upward pressure on interest rates, and so around again in a vicious circle.

Mr. Clancy: You are reading your speech. Why don't you table it.

Mr. Bourque: May I quote from the Toronto Globe and Mail for November 24, 1961, an article which is headed "Money supply rise in year near $1 billion." The excerpt reads:

> The increase in the money supply was begun by the Bank of Canada early this year and has had to be undertaken in large part to help finance the government's anticipated cash deficit of $1 billion.

I also have a clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press of November 18, 1961, which reads:

> Money supply soaring... In October alone, it took $187,000,000 to maintain the position of the Canadian dollar in terms of U.S. currency.

Mr. Clancy: Why not read the whole editorial?

Mr. Bourque: You can make your speech later, my friend.

Mr. Clancy: I will.

Mr. Bourque: I should like to quote from the Montreal Gazette of January 12, 1962. This article is headed "Fund braking rate by U.S. dollar sales". It reads:

> The exchange stabilization fund is actively selling American and buying Canadian dollars on the foreign exchange market to prevent the exchange rate for the Canadian dollar from falling off too precipitately.

The Diefenbaker government, by thus increasing the money supply, has simply pumped out paper money, what the late Mr. Aberhart used to call "fountain pen money".

Mr. Nesbitt: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bourque: You can ask a question later on when I have finished. Over the past four years the Diefenbaker government has increased our money supply by approximately 25 per cent, a fantastic percentage.

I should like to quote an article from the Winnipeg Free Press of December 12, 1961. It is headed "The victims" and it reads:

> Some unnamed Ottawa economists are explaining away the enormous increase in the money supply in the past few months by saying that it was made necessary by increased economic activity in the country... The real reason is not increased business activity but the fiscal needs of the Diefenbaker government.

Further on the article states:

> Since it took office in 1957 the Diefenbaker government has had deficits totalling $3 billions. It has increased the money supply in the same period by $3.06 billions.
> In the long run the victims of this policy will be those who have life insurance, pensions and other fixed investments which decline in value when profligate governments inflate the currency.

I should like to quote a further article from the Montreal Gazette of November 29, 1961, which reads:

> Dollar at 10-year low point.
> The dollar has been steadily weakening, in foreign exchange transactions—

Then under the heading, "Canada to appear before IMF in January":

> Informed sources at Washington yesterday said the international monetary fund likely will scrutinize Canada's economic and monetary policies at a meeting of the executive board in January.

The Diefenbaker government expenditures have been greatly in excess of the money received from taxes. Unwilling to increase taxes or cut expenditures, the proper recourse of the government was to borrow money from the public to pay for deficits incurred. But the Diefenbaker government seemed unable to sell these huge amounts in bonds to the people, at least directly. The public seemed hesitant to buy unless higher rates of interest were authorized.

With interest rates approximately 50 per cent higher than in the pre-Diefenbaker days there was still reluctance on the part of the public to purchase these bonds, so finally the Minister of Finance had to resort to the printing press or fountain pen money.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is utter nonsense, complete nonsense.

Mr. Bourque: The increase in the money supply under the Diefenbaker government has been very great. In 1958 the increase was $1,324 million. We are now at some point in a second great expansionist splurge. On October 4, 1961 the total was $14,550 million, up $76 million over September 27. In 1958-59, on top of a very large deficit, the government converted much of the federal bonds into longer term securities, resulting in a gigantic financial failure. The Diefenbaker government inherited a rate from the Liberal government of 3½ per cent. In 1958 the rate of interest had reached 5.8 per cent due to the government's great deficits plus an upward movement in interest rates.

The printing press method of creating money has been demonstrated to be a disastrous expedient in country after country where it has been tried. It leads to uncontrolled inflation, which could sweep across Canada like a prairie fire bringing desolation and ruin in its path.

Maybe hon. members think it could not happen here. It could happen here, just as it has happened in many other countries. There is nothing sacred about the Canadian dollar which can enable this government to defy economic laws. In the United States between 1940 and 1957 inflation cut the buying power of the dollar in half. What has happened before can happen again, and worse. Not only can it happen, but it is happening now right here in Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not true.

Mr. Bourque: This government must immediately change its attitude. Many people think inflation is a good thing. They believe that by cheapening the value of the dollar it is helping the little fellow. They believe they can pay old debts with cheap dollars. It never works out that way. The little fellow will soon find his savings sadly shrunken, and maybe completely wiped out.

Canadian citizens have a tremendous stake in maintaining the buying power of our dollar. Their savings, their insurance and their future pensions are worth a definite, stated number of dollars. Deflated dollars could cut the value of these dollars to one half their present value.

An hon. Member: Tell us about goof balls.

Mr. Bourque: The goof ball bill was a good bill. It was needed at the time it came in. You must admit that it was badly wanted. I should now like to read a clipping from the Toronto Star of July 22, 1961 under the heading "Dollar cheaper—and up go prices". The article is by Gordon McCaffrey:

A shock wave of higher prices is hitting the Canadian consumer.

It's bumping up the prices of most of the things we buy—food, clothing, home furnishings, building materials, repairs for cars, industrial equipment and office machinery.

The result will be increasing pressure on the cost of living index, which for the last few months has been holding steadily at about 129.

I should now like to read a clipping from the Vancouver Sun—

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I draw your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) is presently making all kinds of remarks. If he wants to go on, he should speak from his seat which is near the exit.

Mr. Pigeon: Do not read so fast, please.

(Text):

Mr. Bourque: I should now like to read from a clipping of the Vancouver Sun of November 9, 1961, under the heading "The cost of devaluation...." The article reads:

It's difficult for the average citizen to decide whether Ottawa's fiscal juggling will provide a cure for all our economic ills or end in financial calamity.

Then later on, under the title, "....And where will it lead?" the article continues:

—it appears that either higher interest rates or inflation must come when it's time to pay for this year's experiments.

I should like to read another clipping from the Toronto Telegram under date of August 25, 1961. The title is "No right to lecture, your policies 'A Mess' U.K. writer chides us". The article says:

The cause of Canada's present economic plight has been her absurd financial policies—

Then a further clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press of November 3, 1961, under the title "Bear by the tail". The article reads:

When Mr. Fleming announced earlier this year that the government had decided to use the resources of the exchange fund to drive down the price of the Canadian dollar, his statement was received with some incredulity by those who remembered his earlier speeches on this subject. After all, this was the same Minister of Finance who had warned parliament in March, 1960 that: "An attempt by the government artificially to lower the external price of the Canadian dollar would involve borrowing or raising by taxes very large sums with which to buy up foreign exchange". Mr. Fleming at that time had cited various cogent objections to any such course and had summed up in this flat statement: "In other words we would be embarking upon a gigantic financial speculation with no assurance of success".

Then further down in the article:

The minister is, indeed, "beginning to look, and act, like a man with a very large bear by a very short tail... He can't let go and, as matters now stand, he can't hold on much longer".

Then later:

Mr. Fleming is, indeed, walking the brink with no assurance that he can get back with his own and the taxpayer's skin.

Every time the buying power of the dollar goes down, so does the value of our savings, our insurance and our pensions. We must protect the value of the dollar itself. Inflation must cease. It must stop now; we may not be able to stop it later. Unless we stop inflation now the result will be not only the serious losses we would have to bear, but we will face a serious recession and increased widespread unemployment.

An hon. Member: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Bourque: If we continue to increase Canada's money supply we will eventually decrease by one half the value of the Canadian dollar. It is like pouring gasoline on the fire. When one considers that the government was again compelled to sell 134 million American dollars during January to withstand discount pressure on the Canadian dollar, now five cents off par, one begins to appreciate how dangerous the Minister of Finance's printing operations have become.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Bourque: Due to the unbroken succession of huge deficits and to the policy of the Diefenbaker government—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is this incredible nonsense—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Bourque: —to manipulate the exchange rate and thereby force down interest rates and the value of the Canadian dollar in terms of the United States dollar by the new tactic of manipulation, what might soon happen is of vital importance. This manipulation is so obvious that it was pointed out by my colleague from Leeds on June 23, 1961. This will be found on page 6949 of Hansard for 1961.

(Translation):

How does the minister propose to "manipulate" the rate in the manner and to the extent he believes to be desirable?... Where are we going to go for the moneys that are going to be necessary to go into the market and buy these United States dollars? I submit that we have two alternatives. We are either going to borrow more or we are going to print more and neither is a very happy choice. We have to do one or the other.

(Text):

Canada, as I said before, is now far advanced on the greatest inflation of our money supply in our history. Every Canadian will be affected—it will, in effect, influence and change the value of the dollars earned by each and every Canadian, the dollars they have in the bank or in investments. It is bound to affect those who live on pensions and those with fixed incomes. It will even prove to be a menace to all life insurance policies. Every Canadian will suffer thereby. Every Canadian will be poorer. Never has a government been in such a predicament. Investors are not interested in purchasing the bonds of a spendthrift government without a policy. Should the government risk putting out a bond issue it might have to admit that the bonds will not sell. Having overspent by many millions of dollars above the taxes received, due to lack of policy, this government dare not resort to the recognized methods of taxation or borrowing; it resorts as I said previously to the printing press and prints fountain pen money, thereby undermining our currency.

I have gleaned a considerable amount of my information from newspaper articles published by the late Mr. Grant Dexter. The late lamented Mr. Dexter, editor emeritus of the Winnipeg Free Press, was an outstanding journalist and a man who contributed greatly to the prestige of the so-called servile press of Canada.

We are immensely interested in the figures provided by the government in answer to starred question No. 2 placed on the order paper by my colleague from Leeds (Mr. Matheson). This starred question asked:

(1) What has been the net increase or decrease in the money supply for each of the years 1950 to 1961 in terms of volume and percentage?

(2) What has been the net increase or decrease in the money supply for each of the months of 1961?

(3) What quantity of silver dollars have been minted in 1961 (a) prior to July 13, 1961 (b) subsequent to July 13, 1961?

From the reply given by the Minister of Finance, placed on record in Hansard of Monday, January 29, 1962, it would appear that in 1961 the increase of money had been surpassed only once in the last 12 years—in 1958, just before an election. In 1957 when the present government came to power, the total amount of money was under $12,000 million and in 1961 it had increased by approximately 25 per cent to about $15,000 million. If this is not inflation, what is inflation? The Diefenbaker-Fleming government will go down in history as a government of economic tinkerers who never faced up to any fundamental economic problem. One can summarize the answer to starred question No. 2 by saying that in four years of recession the Diefenbaker-Fleming combination has pumped into circulation substantially as much money as the Liberal administration did in eight years of substantial growth. If hon. members will look at the answer to part three of the question they will conclude that soon silver dollars will be as scarce as hens' teeth. It takes too much metal to make a dollar's worth of money.

May I now cite a few excerpts from the address of Mr. Earle McLaughlin, president of the Royal Bank to the bank's annual meeting recently. Mr. McLaughlin said that on a similar occasion last year he had discussed the problem of maintaining Canada's independence. He added that the general problem is still with us and that in some respects our difficulties may have increased rather than diminished. He mentioned the fear we had last year concerning the burden of our external debt, of economic union, of foreign domination through the inflow of capital from abroad. This he said had now changed to a feeling of concern over Canada's place in a developing world economy. Canada, he told his audience, must adjust to this environment and make its own positive contribution. He spoke of three types of floating rates. From 1950 to 1960, he said, Canada had a true floating exchange rate, its value being determined entirely by demand and supply. From December 20, 1960 to June 21, 1961, this true floating rate was abandoned in favour of what might be called a nudged floating rate, and a downward pressure on the Canadian dollar was exerted through the purchase of United States dollars in the open market.

In the final budget of June 20, 1961, a third variety of floating rate appeared, with the result that the nudged floating rate has clearly given way to a manipulated floating rate. That is the end of this summary of the president's remarks. It is my sincere opinion that a manipulated rate is undesirable.

The following paragraphs I quote verbatim from Mr. McLaughlin's speech:

Now it is this policy of manipulation, the very success of which depends on the creation of uncertainty, even confusion, in the exchange market, that I maintain cannot be accepted as a permanent part of our international financial machinery.

"Follow John" has now become an outmoded slogan soon to be relegated to the waste paper basket. The people will not be fooled again.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman indicated he would answer a question at the conclusion of his speech. Would he indicate whether the incredible and fantastic nonsense he has read to the house is now the official policy of the party for which he speaks?

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to have excited hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Bourque: Would the hon. member mind repeating his question? I did not hear it all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Certainly. Will the hon. gentleman indicate whether the incredible and fantastic nonsense he has read to the House of Commons is in fact a statement of the policy of the Liberal party?

Mr. Bourque: I have supported all the statements I have made by newspaper clippings. I did not say all those things. No doubt those people are aware of what they are saying. I have substantiated everything I have said.

An hon. Member: Too many goof balls.

Mr. Bourque: The goof balls bill was a good bill.

Mr. Nesbitt: During the course of his speech the hon. member indicated he would accept a question at the end of his remarks. I wonder if I might ask my question at this time? Would the hon. member inform the house to what extent the cost of living in Canada has risen in the last two years.

Mr. Bourque: I believe it is an all-time record.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the hon. member not agree that when the government of his party over there was in power the cost of living rose 38 per cent and that it has risen only 6 per cent in the last four years?

(Translation).

Mr. Theogene Ricard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the debate on the speech from the throne gives hon. members an opportunity to express their views on government policies. In the few minutes at my disposal, I should like to make a brief review of the events which occurred since the present government came into power.

First of all, I should like to quote from an article which was published in the January 19, 1962 issue of La Presse under the signature of Mr. Vincent Prince and which reads as follows:

> Once more, the government feels ostensibly generous. Let those who have been forgotten rise and be counted.
> For the time being, it seems that the government does not feel we have the obligation of returning it to power. It is not complacent like the previous government which seemed to take for granted that it could not be replaced. We must not let ourselves be fooled by electoral tactics, but we must recognize that the present administration is making a genuine effort to acknowledge its obligations towards citizens of all classes and towards every part of the country.
> The parties in opposition will perhaps claim that the government has stolen their platform. That is normal. The important thing is that the taxpayer be satisfied.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of a newspaperman who can definitely not be called a Conservative. His article shows, I think, that he views things objectively and sees facts in their true light.

To hon. members opposite who have tried to make the people of Canada believe that the country was headed for disaster under the Conservative government, I would recommend the following subject for meditation.

In 1956, the gross national product amounted to $30.6 billion, whereas in 1961, it reached $37.4 billion. During that period, exports went up from $4.8 to $5.7 billion. Companies' profits totalled $3.55 billion in 1961, as compared with $2.91 billion in 1956. Consumer spending which was $18.8 billion in 1956 went up to $24.6 billion in 1961.

That seems at variance with the contentions of hon. members opposite that Canada is going bankrupt under the Conservatives. It will be recalled that during the 1957-58 election campaign, the Conservative party pledged itself to increase old age pensions and reduce taxes. Now, our friends opposite claim that, under the Conservatives, workers are paying more taxes than under the Liberals. I would ask you, then, Mr. Speaker, to refer to table VIII of the income tax deductions. Let us take, for instance, the unmarried worker who earned $60 a week under the Liberal regime. He paid $8.15 in personal income tax. Under a Conservative regime, he pays but $6.05.

The married worker with two children paid, under a Liberal regime, $2.93; under a Conservative regime, he pays only $2.75 in personal income tax. Those are the deductions.

Our friends opposite boast quite a lot about the prosperity we had under the previous regime, claiming that everybody had jobs and nobody suffered from unemployment. If you will but refer to figures published by the unemployment insurance commission, you will find that, from 1942 to 1956, benefits paid out amounted to the fabulous sum of $1,340,480,905.23.

An hon. Member: Give the figures for each year.

Mr. Ricard: I have them, but it would take too long. My hon. friends opposite say nothing about the fact that under the Liberal administration the most tremendous black market Canada had ever seen was set up. It is under the Liberal administration that we could not buy meat, sugar, tires and gasoline when we had a control system that our friends opposite would like to bring back on us at this time.

You know that on the black market list, there were names, most of the time, names of the organizers of the hon. members who sit on the other side of the house.

That is the regime that our Liberal friends would like to see in power again in the country, because through their controls they would have a chance to see their friends make money for themselves again like they did while they were in power.

This afternoon, we heard a speech by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin)—a most shocking speech. Never, in this house, have hon. members listened to a speech as demagogic and revolting as the one made by the member for Richelieu-Vercheres this afternoon.

He had brought us to think that he was ashamed to speak his own language in this house, but for this once, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres used his mother tongue to hurl the vilest insults at the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) of the country.

If you read the debates published in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, you will notice that never or almost never does the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) speak French in this chamber. Last year in one of his speeches, which covered about four pages, the only French there was consisted of one single sentence taking about three and a half lines.

During the three years we have been here, these gentlemen opposite have day in and day out uttered all kinds of nonsense, accusing us for all sorts of reasons, of having diminished Canada's prestige.

Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen have lacked sincerity, frankness, and respect for others for such a long time that they have acquired a way of thinking that makes them accept all sorts of things, that makes them believe that anything they say is right, and that they may abuse everybody.

The hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) said in his speech which appears on page 1059 of Hansard:

> ...I would not like... to deal with questions of prejudice. On the government side, and especially the members from Quebec have been trying for some time to have us believe that the Liberal members are stirring up racial prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, I will read something that proves beyond question that those who stirred up racial prejudice, not only in the house but especially throughout the province of Quebec, are our friends opposite and their organizers, with the blessing of the gentlemen sitting in front of us.

I refer here to an article published in the town of St. Hyacinthe in a Liberal newspaper called Le Clairon Maskoutain on June 6, 1957.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) will recall that at that time he came to the assistance of his former comrade who, however, bit the dust. The hon. member for Laurier is not responsible for the defeat of his friend, but I believe that he helped me, however, and I invite him to come again because following each of his visits in my riding, I win the votes of 1,000 or 1,500 Liberal supporters.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that Liberal party organ wrote that we had been accused of stirring up racial prejudice. But listen to what this gentleman had to say, on page 4 of his newspaper of June, 6, 1957:

> For a French Canadian, the issue does not seem very complicated. On the one hand, we have Mr. Louis St. Laurent, leader of the Liberal party, who has inspired the domestic and external policies of Canada, and who was able to give a true meaning to Canadian unity. On the other hand, there is Mr. John Diefenbaker, leader of the Progressive Conservative party, who has given many proofs of resentment against the French Canadian minority in this country.

Who else but you, gentlemen of the Liberal opposition, have raised the racial issue among our people, because you thought this might work to your advantage.

Then, we find this:

> But, that is not the main point. It illustrates, at the most, the distorted thinking of a politician who wants to govern our country by sowing discord, resentment and embarrassment on the eve of his accession to the office of leader of the Progressive Conservative party.

That is the kind of speeches you were making. You travelled round this country with your plotting friends, you roamed about the province of Quebec stating that John Diefenbaker intended to take the crucifix out of the schools and that he would forbid members of religious orders to wear the habit of their order in the schools.

Gentlemen of the opposition, you were the ones to blame for that odious campaign of racial prejudice witnessed in the province of Quebec. You were responsible, because you felt—as you do now on the verge of political demise—that you were sinking and drowning, and you were ready to grasp at anything.

Mr. Pigeon: They are going to disappear a few weeks from now.

Mr. Ricard: Again on June 6, in a program which the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is sure to recognize he said:

Voters of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, we do not want Diefenbaker and his anti-French Canadian policy.

Who was launching a campaign of disparagement in the province of Quebec, if not yourselves. And today, you are trying to whine; you are just a whining lot.

Those people who today, want to give our country two flags—

An hon. Member: Three.

Another hon. Member: Four, five.

Mr. Pickersgill: Six.

Mr. Ricard: They did not even dare to rise when they had the opportunity to do so. Why did you not give Canada a flag when you were able to do so, because now you will have no such possibility for 20 years. What good is it to you to make any promise?

In 1956, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) was saying that it was impossible to increase pensions to more than $46 a month. And today, with all the others behind him, he claims that he is going to give $70 a month, after having described the claims of the members of the new party as undertakings absolutely unfeasible and unrealistic.

An hon. Member: Six dollars, six flags.

Mr. Ricard: They are trying to put all the responsibility for unemployment on the Conservative party.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Ricard: I have here an advertisement published in 1960 during the provincial election campaign. It reads:

The Liberal solution—

—like all the other Liberal solutions which have never been able to solve anything—

The Liberal solution: unemployment shall be considered as a family problem and a provincial responsibility.

Ask your friends in Quebec to assume their Liberal responsibilities. You have not missed one opportunity to make remarks about the hon. Maurice Duplessis. You have always accused him of being a dictator, a man with no value whatsoever.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Listen to what the leader of the Quebec Liberal party had to say. This is from Le Nouveau Journal of February 16 last.

Mr. Jean Lesage appealed to Mr. Duplessis and to the duty of the ministers as representatives of the people.

Mr. Duplessis was a man of great experience; he was the greatest premier since confederation, and it is he who introduced this principle in our provincial legislation, said the head of the government.

Therefore, be consistent; my friends, be consistent.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Ricard: I also want to deal with my friend, the hon. member for Laurier, who has not been with us very often lately. Since he is here this evening, I should like to remind him of the statements he made at a convention in Vaudreuil-Soulanges, as reported in this newspaper:

Mr. Chevrier admitted that the government had granted an additional sum of $40 million to the western farmers who suffered badly from the drought.

And the following is in quotation marks:

"But what did they do for the eastern farmers? asked Mr. Chevrier; nothing. Absolutely nothing."

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier repeated again the same thing in even more explicit terms when he was in Cap de la Madeleine last week where he took the government to task, according to Le Nouvelliste of February 19, 1962:

He accused the Diefenbaker government of having reduced the farmer revenue by dropping the price support on foodstuffs, particularly on butter and eggs.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Among other things, he criticized the fact that $40 million had been voted for the western farmers on account of their crop failure, while no step had been taken to help the eastern farmers.

What is the hon. member for Laurier doing—

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: No, no, there is no point of order there.

Mr. Chevrier: I have here the notes which I used at the Vaudreuil meeting as well as at the Champlain meeting, and I should like, in answer to what the hon. member has just said—

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: There is no point of order.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Laurier but I feel that the matter with regard to which he is making a point of order is one of argument or debate which can be put right, as far as the record is concerned, by the hon. member at an opportune time.

Mr. Chevrier: I am rising also, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege because I have been quoted by the hon. member as having stated certain things which have not been stated. I now have before me exactly what I said and I wish to put it on record. I think I have that right as a matter of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Do not insult the press.

Mr. Chevrier: Now, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what I said, and I quote:

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. If the interpretation by the hon. member for Laurier is that he was misquoted by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot I think he should be permitted to proceed on a question of privilege, because it does cast a cloud on the veracity of the hon. member for Laurier with regard to a speech which he apparently is able to quote verbatim to the house in order to correct the misinterpretation. I only say this because I am satisfied, and I can be corrected if I am wrong, that the text of the address made by the hon. member for Laurier is not in the hands of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, and to that extent I think the hon. member for Laurier should be given the opportunity—

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): —and I presume he can do so very briefly, to correct the record.

Mr. Ricard: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. I will hear the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot on the point of order.

Mr. Ricard: I was quoting a newspaper report. I did not say that he said that, but I have no doubt that he did say it because it took him about two weeks to come here and deny what he said previously.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your decision. And now I wish to put on record what I said on both occasions:

> What should we think of a government which obtains a $40 million vote apparently for the western farmers—and they certainly need it on account of their crop failure—which does not pass any legislation to help the eastern farmers and particularly the egg and butter producers?

(Text):

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot said nothing about that speech at all. He was merely referring to a newspaper report and the question of privilege of the hon. member for Laurier is completely irrelevant to what the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot was speaking about. He was speaking about a newspaper report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Laurier wants to know what the Conservative government has done for the eastern farmers, I feel obliged to refresh his memory and tell him that he was sleeping in his place, because he voted for the legislation we proposed in order to assist the eastern farmers. We have adopted the Agricultural Stabilization Act under which the eastern farmers were granted, during the first two years it was in effect, approximately $75 million.

During the year 1959-60, federal grants totalling $10,487,965 were paid for the transportation of grain from the west to the east, whereas under the former Liberal government, during the year 1956-57, these gentlemen had granted only $7,300,000 for the whole of Canada.

During the year 1959-60 the farmers in the eastern constituencies benefited from grants totalling $22,443,000 for the transportation of grain from the west to the east.

During the years 1959, 1960 and 1961, the grants on milk sold to the creameries brought to our farmers the sum of $816,609.

That is what the government has done, Mr. Speaker, for eastern farmers, and I am sorry to note that the hon. member for Laurier should be so utterly ignorant of those figures.

Mr. Pigeon: He is all mixed up.

Mr. Ricard: Furthermore, the sugar beet producers of the constituency I have the honour to represent in the house received, in 1958, 1959 and 1960, subsidies amounting to $213,156.77. Supposing the 1961 crop should be subsidized on the same basis as that of 1960, it would mean that the farmers of the constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot would put in their pockets $336,410.77.

Those two subsidies on milk and sugar beets will have given the farmers of the constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, in four years only, the sum of $1,153,019.97.

That is what the John Diefenbaker government has done, hon. member for Laurier. That is what you have failed to do, yourself. That is why, at the time of the next election, what you are now dreading will become a great defeat. If you come back here, barely 15 strong, that will be about all the vestiges of the Liberal party. It is high time you got your handkerchiefs ready, because you will certainly cry over the things you failed to do when you had the opportunity during 22 years of power.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, once again I warmly invite the hon. member for Laurier to come to my constituency, because I wish to increase my majority at the next election.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Ricard: Certainly.

Mr. Deschatelets: When the present Prime Minister was elected leader of the Conservative party, was the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot among those who left the hall in protest?

Mr. Tremblay: Oh, what a bright boy.

Mr. Ricard: That was a trick by your friends in the C.B.C. who were working at throwing discredit—as they have done repeatedly—and had selected a given moment to point their cameras to empty chairs. That is what happened. That is what the Liberal party has always done. It has continued its attempts to throw discredit where there was none.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot a question.

Is he aware that while he was speaking, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) remarked that he was suggesting six flags for Canada?

Mr. Ricard: I would not be a bit surprised.

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like at the beginning of my remarks to offer you my respect and my congratulations on the way you have conducted the affairs of the House of Commons. Before going into my mother tongue I should also like to add in English that, as is customary, if a vote is called we will vote for the motion out of respect for the representative of the Queen but this will imply no approval of the government.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would like at the start of my remarks, to render tribute to you in my own language, to congratulate you on the way you are directing the debates in this house.

Without delaying any further, I shall also congratulate the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), for having been appointed Deputy Speaker.

It is also in order for me to join my colleagues in proffering congratulations to the mover (Mr. Bourdages) and seconder (Mr. Browne, Vancouver-Kingsway) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I also, on behalf of the people I have the honour to represent, tender my best wishes to the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), on his appointment to the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, if the rumour is correct the Conservative administration seems to get the credit for a very lengthy fourth session and a very short fifth one during the twenty fourth parliament, which, on the whole, will not have brought much to the Canadian people.

We heard, and then we read in the speech from the throne, that we would get some new legislation to stimulate our economy and help national development.

Mr. Speaker, this reminds me that, hardly three years ago, we heard similar remarks from a certain party leader, and I do think it strange that all sorts of new bills are being introduced during this last session.

Indeed, I remember an article published in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 26, 1957, under the title "Promises full employment". I quote:

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker promised that full employment with the brightest possible standard of living would be one of the principal objectives of his government.

(Translation):

Promise made by the head of the Conservative party in the 1957 election. Promise, promise, there will always be those to believe you.

I remember also that during the 1958 election campaign, after a statement made by the present Prime Minister, the following appeared in the Montreal Star of February 19, 1958:

(Text):

In the live telecast Mr. Diefenbaker said he would take any practical step to ease unemployment in addition to the million dollars for public works. Unemployment reached a post-war record of 520,000 in mid-January. He said that as long as he was Prime Minister of Canada everything that could be done would be done to relieve unemployment.

(Translation):

Needless to say, the Prime Minister has seriously failed to keep his numerous pledges which I could not all list here tonight. He spent his time making promises but unfortunately he has done nothing for the people of Canada. We merely have to spend a few hours in our respective ridings to realize that the people are wondering when the next election and their hour of liberation will come.

I remember the circular letter issued in 1953 by Hon. George Drew, the predecessor of the present Prime Minister. It reads as follows: Canada will vote Progressive Conservative because the people want tax reductions, through savings in the administration.

Mr. Drew's words were taken up by the present Prime Minister during the same campaign, that is on July 22, 1953. In fact, La Revue de Granby stated the following:

Canadian farmers are going through another painful experience. The government in Ottawa seems unable to solve, for the benefit of Canadian farmers, a large scale problem which is responsible for the loss of several million dollars in the annual income of the farmers. (Published by the Progressive Conservative party).

Speaking of the leaders of the Conservative party, I should like to refer to the 1945 election, my first election campaign as a candidate. I found in La Presse of May 15, 1945, an article entitled:

The policy of Mr. Bracken, at St. John, New Brunswick.

I quote:

The hon. Mr. Bracken said that the farmers would benefit from the policy of his party which would consist in setting the price of farm products before the crop season. He also promised free grain transportation between the lakes and the eastern Canada.

Strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Conservative party has changed its policy or repudiated its leaders since it came into power, for according to that same article, the hon. Mr. Bracken was supposed to publish that same evening, in Ottawa, a manifesto of the policy with which his party was trying to get elected.

I had secured that manifesto and kept it very carefully, and rightly so, Mr. Speaker. The manifesto, which I now have before me, is entitled:

(Text):

John Bracken says.

I invite all members, and especially the newcomers, to read this document. They will find good guiding rules in it.

Since I have been referring to agriculture, I draw their attention to page 5, where are to be found the words spoken by the Conservative leader of that day, on the evening of his election to the leadership of the Conservative party in Winnipeg, on December 11, 1952. And I quote:

(Text):

The right of farmers and other primary producers to a fair share of the nation's income.

Nearly one third of Canada's population is engaged directly or indirectly in agriculture, yet during the last decade farm income fell to such a low average as to become of very great concern in our Canadian economy. It is the responsibility of the nation to see that this great inequity shall not be perpetuated. I may say quite frankly that if it had not been for that plank in your platform which provides for a square deal to agriculture, I would not be here.

(Translation):

Mr. Bracken certainly had qualities since this government appointed him to a position of responsibility.

Mr. Tremblay: "Appointer" is not French.

Mr. Boivin: During the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958, the present Prime Minister and the members of his party changed their tactics. They chose to make promises right and left to get elected. In spite of all those promises, I think it would still be time for them to read over the instructions contained in one of their leaders' manifesto and which seem to have been forgotten.

If they chose him as their leader, it must be because he knew something about farmers. As proof of that, I should like to say that in chapter 4, page 39, of the same manifesto, there is an article entitled: "Equality for agriculture".

(Text):

Equality for Agriculture.

(Translation):

On October 26, 1943, the then leader of the Conservative party said the following in Lethbridge, Alberta—

Mr. Tremblay: Why not go back to Adam and Eve.

(Text):

Mr. Boivin:

Equality for Agriculture—The objectives of the Progressive Conservative party for Canadian agriculture are three in number: (1) equality for farmers in the Canadian economy; (2) the maximum contribution of agriculture to the welfare of the Canadian people; (3) the conservation, as well as development, of our greatest heritage, the storehouse of wealth in the upper foot of the nation's soil.

In this discussion I shall confine myself to the first of these objectives: Equality for Agriculture.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, our present Prime Minister certainly does not agree with what one of his predecessors said because you know his slogan: Parity not Charity.

Spoken words pass but written words remain, which goes to prove their lack of sincerity. In short, Conservatives who trade places trade faces. Despite all his promises and his interesting manifesto of 1945, the farmers of Canada again expressed their confidence in the competence of a Liberal administration.

Mr. Speaker, we went again to the country in 1949. The farmers knew that we had steered the ship of the state more efficiently than any other party could have done during a transition period from war to peace. The farmers expressed again their confidence in a party which had always understood them, that is the Liberal party.

I remember that a by-election was called in 1952 following the death of one of my colleagues, the late Mr. Henri Gosselin, whose remains lie in peace in the cemetery of his birthplace, in Lawrenceville, in my constituency. He had represented a constituency adjacent to mine, the Brome-Missisquoi riding. I was among the Liberal group which took part in that by-election; the Conservative party was then campaigning under the leadership of a new Conservative leader, Hon. George Drew. Once again, a circular letter was found during that campaign which had been distributed at the last moment under the title:

To our Liberal friends.

And under the heading:

But a vote for Henri Demers will give you the opportunity of stating on behalf of the whole province;

And I quote section 5:

That you want the government to help Quebec farmers as it has western farmers—Gardiner gave them $65 million last year.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party is not against grants to western farmers, but we want our fair share.

Since that election, I see again several members of the Conservative party still sitting on the government benches, who had supported the defeated Conservative candidate, Mr. Demers, and who are now in a position to fulfil that promise, now that they are in power.

Why do we not suggest two ministers of agriculture, one for western Canada and one for eastern Canada? Eastern Canada would include Ontario, Quebec, the eastern provinces, and Newfoundland.

What is being done at present for our farmers? Nothing. And the farmers of Brome and Missisquoi, in 1952, like those of all Canada in 1953, having benefited from a good government, again put their faith in a regime of prosperity, that is to say in the Liberal regime. They knew that our party was the only one to recognize that agriculture is the most important industry in Canada.

We, on this side of the house, know that farmers have fully contributed to production demand. We have said so several times and we repeat it again today. It is essential that farmers all over Canada be in a firm economic position and that they enjoy greater stability and security.

We have two ministers of national defence. Why not two ministers of agriculture? We have been brought to realize that defence matters are complicated; but in the field of agriculture, eastern problems although completely different from those of the west, are no less of extreme importance for this country's economy.

I said a moment ago that during the 1957 campaign we heard the present Prime Minister, like previous leaders of the Conservative party, declare himself the protector of the farmers. I should like to quote what he said in St. Patrice de Beaurivage, on May 30, 1957; his words were reported by the newspaper L'Action Catholique of May 31 of the same year:

We admit that prosperity for the agricultural class is a condition to the general prosperity of the country. The reform we suggested would involve reasonable prices through price support and important markets for your products. We promise the farmers that their lot will improve, he declared, and that is what they have been requesting for so long: a Conservative government will give the farmers a just share of the national prosperity through price support.

If we judge by the comments of the farming community, after four years of Conservative administration, we had a depression rather than prosperity. I would invite the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) to meet with our farmers who will be only too glad to talk about those famous reasonable prices for their products.

Not to say "lie" I will say "promise, promise, there will always be those to believe you".

The promise of May 30, 1957, would be appropriate today. Indeed with all those promises, our farmers put their confidence in the Conservative party but their lot was entirely different from what they had expected. Instead of the fair share of prosperity, it was in fact a share of depression they got. I know that our farmers, particularly those in Quebec, will remember their motto which is Je me souviens.

Mr. Speaker, I note on page 568 of the French Hansard for January 29, 1960, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture replied to my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska on the disbursements or losses suffered by the farm products stabilization board. I could see for myself that it did cost the Canadian taxpayers $1,094,364.31 for the year 1957-58 and $6,996,943 for the year 1958-59 to dispose of their powdered skim milk. And now, those people want legislation to solve their problems. Why not listen to them and let them have what they are asking for?

It is too bad that the government so suddenly removed the support price on that commodity, because several small manufacturers have been in a disastrous situation. In short, they did not have the cash to change over their processing plants. Appropriate legislation could not only help the manufacturer, but also provide assistance to the farmer.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the party of which I am a member has always been liberal both with a capital L and a small l, and liberal for both the workers and the farmers. My party wanted to enable the farmers to get, from their products, an income proportionate to production costs, thus providing them with a fair share of the national income.

I do not know what the government's future policy will be on the support price of butter. I should like to point out, however, that the price of butter is, in a way, the gauge for that of other agricultural products. Moreover, it is of vital importance to the farmers of my area.

We wanted to establish an agricultural development bank. We wanted to improve storage facilities on the farms. In a word, we wanted, as always, to help the farmers. All this we had to put off, but we will be at it in a few months. The farmers now realize that the Liberal party is the only one which can meet their needs, and I am sure that the promises made by the Conservatives will serve them a lesson. Thank heaven, Canada is still a democratic country. They are already saying that tomorrow or in the near future, they will again be under a Liberal administration when they will be able to forget the uncertainty and fear they suffer at present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We can hardly hear the member who has the floor.

Mr. Boivin: Mr. Speaker, since I have very little time at my disposal and it is going by very rapidly, I would like to review some facts briefly and arrive at 1935.

At the time of the 1935 election, as soon as the houses had been dissolved, a folder published by the Conservative party began to circulate in my constituency of Shefford during the electoral campaign. I have this circular here. It was printed by La Revue de Granby, Limitée. Here is an extract from it:

> The Canadian Rubber Company was about to open its doors, thanks to the Conservative party.

The people of Granby had a sad experience at that time, and the doors remained closed.

And history repeats itself. The Conservative party of that time and of today has remained the same.

And this time, Mr. Speaker, they called for a certain Joseph Charles Van Horne, a former member for Restigouche-Madawaska, to take out of my city of Granby a certain industry known as Radio Engineering and send it to New Brunswick.

The Tribune of Campbellton—I doubt that it is favourable to the Liberal party—reported on May 10, 1961, that Mr. Van Horne, the popular former member, had told a meeting held at Dalhousie on the preceding Friday, that they should cast their votes for the Conservative candidate in the next by-election, in order to assure the prosperity of this new industry.

The same newspaper published on its first page on May 17 the following passage:

(Text):

> Defence production minister to head inauguration ceremonies.

(Translation):

Another article on the same page read in part as follows:

(Text):

> Minister may make statement on contract.
> Mr. O'Hurley heads the federal department responsible for the placing of defence contracts, such as those required by Radio Engineering Products Ltd., the firm now relocating here from Granby, Que.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, any contract which Radio Engineering Products, Limited, will get in New Brunswick, like those it got while in Granby, were granted directly, upon checking by the officers of the United States Army, in Washington. I know that they go through the division called "Canadian Commercial Corporation". It does not come under the minister but directly under NATO.

In the same bulletin, Mr. Speaker—as I have only a few minutes left—in another article, it was announced that the rubber workers were going to enter prosperous times.

There is no better time for these gentlemen to prescribe quotas on imports as they asked for them when they were in the opposition.

Again in the same memorandum, still in 1935, more work for the textile workers was announced. Here is their chance today, when they are in office, to support their colleague, the member from Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) who is back from a trip and begs for quotas in order to assist that industry.

The same circular letter was also addressed to the workers in the stocking industry. The Nordic company closed its plant in Roxton Falls, Mr. Speaker, and that in Bedford has been virtually closed for two years.

Also in the same circular letter, we could find an article entitled:

Workers in elastic fabric vote for Bennett.

And today, all the machines in the braiding division of that industry have been stopped by imports; and to conclude, Mr. Speaker, in the same article, they were addressing the citizens in the following manner, just as the Prime Minister did last Friday:

People of Granby, who are going to vote for the first time in the present election, think well and vote in your own interests.

That is why in 1935, the people of Granby, of the province of Quebec and of Canada from coast to coast, voted in their own interests in supporting Mackenzie King, as they will do tomorrow in voting for Hon. "Mike" Pearson and his party, for the greatest welfare of all of Canada.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Habel: On a point of order, I do not think the hon. member for Stormont can be recognized because he is not speaking from the seat in which he usually sits.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would point out that the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) has now resumed his seat and that I have recognized the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. McFarlane).

Mr. Hellyer: That is the story of the life of the hon. member.

An hon. Member: Not so bad as yours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the hon. member for Kootenay East begins, may I ask the co-operation of all our members in order that he might be heard. I would ask those who are interrupting from their seats to kindly desist.

Mr. M. L. McFarlane (Kootenay East): First, I should begin by congratulating Your Honour on your appointment and saying how happy we are to see you discharging your functions as Deputy Speaker. In addition, congratulations are due to the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys on his appointment. I am sure that with our present officers we shall have a successful year. I wish, also to extend congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address on a job well done.

Canada at this time expects to continue her remarkable growth. This government and our Prime Minister have set a good example for other countries by resisting the temptation to intervene artificially to attack the problem of Canada's trade imbalance and the dollar premium while responding selectively to the needs of special areas such as those which produce textiles. All in all, it should hearten us in Canada to know that this country's outlook for the future is that of a growing economy playing a significant and responsible role in the world of trade. I am sure that all members of the house are glad to be here in, and contribute to the solution of the many difficulties which confront our country today. The purchasing power of our dollar is steady but I am positive we will weather the storm and Canada will again emerge as one of the leading nations of the world with our Prime Minister at the helm.

Of prime importance to all of us in East Kootenay, for which constituency I am speaking tonight, is the announcement that in co-operation with the United States progress is made toward the development of the Columbia river. In connection with this power project we should also include the development of the Kootenay river. The headwaters of these two mighty rivers are in my constituency. At one time a canal joined them together but only one boat went through this canal some 70 years ago. Since that time numerous studies have been made of the power potential of these two rivers. In recent years the international joint commission has finalized several plans for the development of the Columbia with a dam at Mica Creek near the northern tip of the big bend in the Columbia; also by the construction of a dam on the Kootenay at Libby mountain in the United States. This dam will back the water up into Canada for a little over 40 miles and cause many acres of farmland to be flooded. Residents in the area affected have been living in a state of uncertainty for the past 12 years, not knowing which way to turn—not knowing whether to make much needed improvement to their holdings or to make preparations to move to another location. Now it is up to our government to take action. It will mean the end of many years of waiting for those in the area, one which will eventually be under water. The construction of this dam will mean more power available for industry in my district, and it is my sincere wish that we will see the finalizing of this project in the near future.

Consideration should also be given to the completion of the trans-Canada highway. The northern route is now nearing completion and it is up to the government of the provinces and the federal government to complete a southern trans-Canada highway which would serve all of the southern portion of British Columbia where the greatest number of the residents of the province now work and live. Its completion will assure an expansion of the economy. This road across this section of the province—I am still referring to the southern trans-Canada highway—will also be of great value to the present trans-Canada highway when completed by the connection road links running north and south through the province.

Up to this time we have made terriffic expenditures on the present route, which is well deserved and needed by the province of British Columbia. We also need the southern trans-Canada highway as a means to bring the tourist dollar into the thickly populated section of the province. The impact of the tourist dollar in Canada cannot be over-emphasized. Statistics show only part of the picture. The benefit to Canada and especially to our great Canadian Rockies in British Columbia is declining from lack of foresight, in not making our main highways attractive and safe for the travelling public. Leadership in encouraging the extension of the tourist season in British Columbia is essential. In my constituency of East Kootenay we have many attractions, both winter and summer, for tourists. We have good accommodation for tourists the year round.

During the past years, due to a lack of foresight on the part of the previous administration action was not taken in developing the highways that are needed in Canada today.

Going back to the period between 1930 and 1935 when we last had a Conservative administration federally, roads from the United States into Canada were classed as access roads to develop our national parks. There are portions of three great national parks in my area.

I wish to stress the need for the construction of a road from Montana through the Flathead country into the city of Fernie. We have pressed for this road both federally and provincially for many years. This road will open up not only a recreation facility but also the timber volumes which will come out of this area. It will serve to assist in fire prevention and lead to greater efforts in the conservation of the watershed. There is a potential in this area for gas and oil developments and the development of mineral deposits will assist the exploring companies in eastern British Columbia.

I wish also to bring to the attention of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) the need for an armoury in Kimberley where we have an active unit. Premises are being rented to carry on lectures and they are dependant on accommodation from various sources. Rental charges are high and it is not conducive to producing a good militia unit. Training suffers and administration is a problem. In our committee work we have been advised that the army would assume command in the event of a nuclear attack. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must have efficient and well equipped militia units and the only way this can be achieved is by supporting militia units in armouries located in active areas. The need is great in Kimberley and I am distressed when I hear that armouries are being built in areas which do not want them and we are not receiving the consideration we deserve. Thirty million dollars is budgeted this year and we are asking for a fraction of 1 per cent of this budget to construct a building suitable for our needs in Kimberley. Negotiations are now in progress with a very active committee in Kimberley who are willing to build this armoury and rent the premises to the government on a long term basis. I would like to ask the minister for his support of this project at an early date.

Consideration should be given to the question of improving airports in East Kootenay. This is of prime importance not only for the present domestic service but also in case of emergency. Present airports in the area are in need of improvement so that we can handle larger planes than those now in use. Due to physical reasons there are limitations, but I believe that improvements should be made at an early date and that this should be a federal responsibility. Millions are being spent in the larger centres and I would request the Minister of Transport to take this matter under advisement. The problem is not going to be an easy one to solve but I feel sure that the money spent would contribute to the expansion of the air services in my district.

At this time I wish to bring to the attention of the government the historical site at Fort Steele, British Columbia. The old town of Fort Steele which is about to be rehabilitated as a provincial historic site is located ten miles northeast of Cranbrook. It is set

Gold was discovered on Wild Horse creek in 1864 and by midsummer a thousand miners, traders, and labourers had found their way to the new goldfield where a town sprang up. To link this new community with the coast, governor Douglas gave orders to complete the building of the Dewdney trail and by September 1865 pack trains were making the trip across British territory from Hope on the Fraser river to the Kootenay diggings.

The gold excitement was short-lived. The East Kootenay country slumbered on until it reawakened with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the mid 1880's. The coming of settlers created a new situation. Fort Steele's claim to fame is that it was the first and only fort constructed and manned by the northwest mounted police in British Columbia. It saw no shooting war but acted as a deterrent to disgruntled Indians at a time that bristled with threats of violence.

The fort was built in 1887 and manned by a detachment of the northwest mounted police under the command of Colonel Samuel Benfield Steele; hence its name. Its purpose was to intimidate insurgent Indians who felt they were being deprived of their rightful heritage of land.

This matter has been the subject of correspondence between the provincial and federal governments for some time. It was understood by the provincial government and the Cranbrook historical society that the property was to be turned over to British Columbia free of any charge. I have now been advised that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have reported surplus a property located at Fort Steele to be acquired by the government of the province of British Columbia and converted into a park and historic site. A stone cairn and memorial bronze plaque erected on the site in 1921 and restored in 1957 recall the historic significance of the location in relation to the early days of the west and the provincial government intends to restore the site and maintain it.

The original property was obtained by the R.C.M.P. from the government of British Columbia. It included a residence for the commandant and one for the caretaker.

However, in 1955 it was deemed advisable to acquire additional land and a number of parcels were then expropriated from private owners at a cost of $3,100 to the crown in the right of Canada.

Crown Assets Disposal Corporation has offered to dispose of the property to the province for a consideration of $3,100 being the reimbursement of the cost of the recently acquired lands, which may or may not form part of the original historic site.

The government of British Columbia wishes to acquire the entire site without charge or consideration in view of its undertaking to maintain it as an historic park and make some outlays for the restoration thereof.

I suggest that this land be turned over to the province of British Columbia for an historic site without charge and free of encumbrances. In view of the small amount involved it appears to me we could well afford to donate this land as an historic site. Development of this historic village will have great meaning to East Kootenay. Efforts are being made locally to give every assistance to the provincial officials and the historical society. Because the amount involved is small, I believe we should turn this over to the province free of charge immediately.

There are just one or two other items I should like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker. For a number of years the district of East Kootenay has been almost the forgotten land provincially, federally and in many other ways. There are a few conditions which I think should be brought to the attention of the government. I should like to start at the north end of the district and direct attention to the question of flooding which we run into almost every year at the present time. This valley is practically surrounded by the bend in the Columbia river at the north and by some flooding of the Kootenay river in the south. The flooding at Golden is periodic from the fact that the Kicking Horse river which runs into the Columbia brings down a great deal of waste, shale and rocks of many kinds. This causes floods in part of the valley near Golden and creates a problem for a great number of residents in that area. So far we have been unable to interest either the provincial government or the federal government—and this has been going on for a number of years—in giving us some relief in that area.

Going south in the valley we find the village of Athalmer also has a flooding condition through the fact that tributaries of creeks which become swollen in the spring bring down a great deal of refuse. In one place the water is actually running uphill into the Columbia river. A similar situation is also to be found at the village of Creston. We have a problem there also where the water coming down from the various rivers is bringing down refuse and creating a difficulty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 5 of standing order 38 as provisionally amended, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question now before the house.

Motion (Mr. Bourdages) agreed to.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That the address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of this house as are of the honourable the privy council.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I would now move that the house adjourn, if it is agreeable to hon. members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that I shall call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader what the business will be for tomorrow and next week as well?

Mr. Churchill: For tomorrow we will start with item No. 1 under government orders on today's order paper which has to do with the proposed railway line commencing at Whitecourt, Alberta. This bill has come back from the other place with an amendment which is acceptable. After that business is finished we will take the further supplementary estimates omitting from the group the estimates dealing with national defence, trade and commerce and perhaps one or two other items depending on whether or not the house is agreeable.

Mr. Chevrier: National defence or defence production?

Mr. Churchill: National defence and perhaps also defence production. It depends on the house. However, the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Trade and Commerce will not be available for tomorrow.

An hon. Member: What about the associate minister?

Mr. Churchill: On Monday an alert opposition should be prepared for a supply motion which I will announce tomorrow.

At 9.50 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 23, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

23rd February, 1962.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today the 23rd February, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—TABLING OF DECLARATION OF PARIS

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house may I table for the information of hon. members copies in English and French of a document known as the declaration of Paris, which is the report of the delegates to the Atlantic convention of NATO nations which met in Paris from January 8 to January 20, 1962.

TRADE

JAPAN—REPORTED RESENTMENT OVER EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he has any comment to make on a report which appeared in the press this morning to the effect that the Japanese authorities are becoming embittered by the efforts of the federal government to keep a tight lid on exports from their country to Canada, despite a continuing sharp increase in Canadian sales to Japan.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not seen the report in question. I doubt very much if it is expressed in accurate terms because, as the Minister of Finance has explained on so many occasions, the arrangements with Japan are on co-operative basis. However, I will draw this question to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

CUBA—MEETING OF AMBASSADORS RESPECTING U.S. EMBARGO

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yesterday the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin), asked me if I would inform the house whether the Canadian ambassador to Cuba and other ambassadors of the NATO countries were convoked by the Cuban authorities in Havana concerning the United States embargo on Cuba.

The Canadian ambassador was asked to call on the foreign minister of Cuba earlier this week to discuss trade relations between Canada and Cuba. My understanding is that ambassadors of other NATO countries also engaged in similar discussions with the Cuban authorities. The representations made by the Cuban government have been noted but, as is known to most hon. members, comment is not made on the substance of discussions forming part of normal diplomatic exchanges with another government.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of a report in today's Globe and Mail that the common market representatives appeared not to favour granting Britain's request to increase the traditional period allowed for the adaptation of Britain's agriculture to the trade alliance common policy, and in view of the obvious implications for Canada's large agricultural exports, would the minister state whether he will now ask for permission for a Canadian observer to sit in on the Brussels negotiations when Canadian problems are discussed?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there are Canadian observers over in Europe at the present time dealing with that subject and related ones.

Inquiries of the Ministry

JAPAN—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING QUOTA ON PLYWOOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier asked me, as Acting Minister of Finance, a question with respect to discussions which might be going on between representatives of the Japanese government and the Canadian government concerning imports of plywood into Canada. As the house will know, the Japanese government has imposed restrictive quotas on exports of plywood to Canada for several years. At the present time consultations are going on between representatives of the two governments with respect to the quota that will be imposed or acted upon during the present year.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DELIVERY OF LIBERAL FEDERATION MAIL TO N.D.P. HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General. In view of a report from the federal office of the New Democratic party that it is continually receiving mail addressed to the national Liberal federation, would the Postmaster General ensure that his officials are made aware that the national Liberal federation enjoys a separate existence and address, and that there is not the slightest chance of it being received into communion with the New Democratic party?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we probably have within the confines of the department some people who are aware of the political facts of life in this country, and who feel there is so little difference between the two groups that it does not matter where their mail goes. However, I appreciate the desire of some people in this house to preserve the existing fiction. We certainly should deliver mail in the way in which it is addressed, and will be glad to see that this is done.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS TO MINISTER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General, but before doing so I wish to say that today is not the day of Mr. Day, the United States postmaster general. Today is our own Postmaster General's day, his birthday. X number of years ago the Postmaster General was born. Unfortunately I have no picture of him as a baby. I suppose at that time he was not in a position to look after his publicity. However, he has certainly arranged to organize it since that time. I am sure to meet with general approval in wishing the Postmaster General the happiest birthday ever.

I have another wish to convey to him. The work of the present Postmaster General is very burdensome, involving as it does extensive travelling, scooter driving, pen nib changing, and so forth. For his own good I wish him a long, healthy and happy retirement away from politics after the next election.

My question is this. Has the Postmaster General any report to make about the discussions he held with the United States postmaster general?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for his expression of good wishes, which I appreciate very much indeed. I presume my very existence proves that there is something that sometimes comes from playing post office.

The postmaster general of the United States, Mr. J. Edward Day, and I had a most successful meeting earlier this week. There was an exchange of ideas, and I believe some constructive suggestions emerged. Several of the projects now under way in Canada which we were able to show him seemed to create interest, and the possibility may be explored of their being adapted for use in the United States. We also obtained from our friends in the United States some helpful suggestions which may have application here. I do not think it is necessary to go beyond that at this time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ROSSLAND, B.C.—REPORTED DECISION TO REMOVE STATION AGENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday as reported at page 1129 of Hansard the hon. member for Kootenay West asked the following question:

> In view of the recent decision of the board of transport commissioners to remove the agent from the station at Rossland, a city of over 4,000 population, and in view of the strong protests by the city council, the chamber of commerce and the population of that city, would an appeal to the governor in council against this decision receive consideration?

The governor in council is always prepared to consider any reasonable appeal against an order or decision of the board of transport commissioners. However, in considering appeals to the governor in council from orders of the board there has been a long standing practice not to disturb such orders unless it is clearly evident that the board has acted upon some wrong principle or has otherwise erred. Where the matters at issue are questions of fact, such as in the Rossland case, and are questions that the board is qualified to determine and which it has determined after holding hearings, it has been customary not to interfere with the findings of the board which has been constituted a court of record for the determination of such questions of fact.

In the Rossland case a district inspector of the board was sent to Rossland to investigate. A public meeting was held there on November 2, 1961, and interested parties were heard. It was shown that the Canadian Pacific Railway had established a merchandising service depot at Tadanac, about six miles from Rossland, in June, 1961, with pick-up and delivery trucking services to Rossland and that, in consequence, practically all traffic is now being handled by truck with delivery in most cases direct to the consignees. Carload traffic outward from Rossland was nil in the last reported year, and incoming carload traffic averaged about 12 cars monthly in that period.

The board considered that in view of the reduced traffic since the establishment of the merchandising services, the burden to the company of maintaining the agency outweighed the modest public loss and inconvenience resulting from closing the agency. The board therefore ordered the closing of the agency.

CIVIL DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In my reply to the hon. member for Trinity yesterday, as found at page 1131 of Hansard, I am reported as having said:

—while there is no specific date set, Arnprior probably will be closing at some time in the future.

What I intended to say was:

—Arnprior probably will be discontinuing these particular courses at some time in the future.

Upon inquiry I find that September 1 is the anticipated date.

CROP INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING REINSURANCE OF LOSSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As an encouragement to the provinces to make greater use of the Crop Insurance Act, can the Prime Minister say whether consultations have been held between officials of the federal Department of Agriculture and the provincial departments of agriculture to discuss the question of reinsurance of losses under the Crop Insurance Act?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As the hon. member realizes, Mr. Speaker, a question like that could not be answered without notice. There have been no consultations with me. However, I will look into the purport of the question.

Mr. Argue: I just wish to say to the Prime Minister that I sent the question to his office about 20 minutes before 11 o'clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It probably got lost.

(Translation):

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—EXCLUSIVE CONTRACT FOR TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Did the minister have discussions recently with representatives of the Montreal taxi-cab associations which are trying to get a partial concession at Dorval airport instead of the service given exclusively by Murray Hill Taxi Limited at present? Has the minister any comments to make following those discussions?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the last year I had many discussions with representatives of several taxi companies of Montreal and Dorval which wanted to obtain a permit for the conveyance of passengers from Dorval airport to the city of Montreal. Those various requests have been taken into consideration; I have no other comment to make in this respect.

Mr. Deschatelets: Does the minister not feel that this exclusive charter granted to Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited amounts to undue patronage on the part of the government?

Mr. Balcer: This exclusive concession was granted initially to Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited by our predecessor. If he thinks this is undue patronage, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont will only have to blame my predecessor, the hon. member for Laurier.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CENTRE BLOCK—TRAPPING OF MEMBERS IN ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary assistant. If the minister is here I will direct it to him. Is the minister aware that 14 passengers, including two members of parliament, were trapped in elevator No. 3 last evening for 25 minutes, and will precautions be taken to see that this does not happen again?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member this had nothing to do with the vote.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Public Works is being so genial, perhaps he might see if he can correct the time shown by the clocks in the hall just as one comes in the front door.

TELEVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me a question with respect to a program of station CJCH-TV, and whether it involved a breach of the regulations of the board of broadcast governors. The short answer to that question is no, but I think in view of the circumstances a word of explanation is perhaps advisable.

CJCH-TV put on a program some time in November called "Youth Wants to Know" in which 25 students from four Nova Scotia universities interviewed the premier of Nova Scotia on questions of public interest. Later on the Progressive Conservative association of Nova Scotia asked CJCH if it could put on such a program under the auspices of the party. The manager of CJCH telephoned the board of broadcast governors and asked if this could be done without attributing political sponsorship thereto, and in view of the fact that the 25 students were selected by the universities and not by any political party the first answer given was that it would not be necessary for it to be attributed to political auspices.

The program was put on and of course the premier, as usual, did so well that it was felt desirable to keep repeating the program. Since this will become at least for the next three or four months a matter of regular programming, it has been decided after consultation between the board and CJCH that in future all broadcasts should be given the political designation of being under the auspices of the Progressive Conservative association of Nova Scotia.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to ask the minister a supplementary question arising out of the answer he has given. Can the minister say whether the original program was a public service program or a paid program?

Mr. Nowlan: I take it that the hon. member is referring to the first program in November. I understand that was a public service program put on as a public service by the station.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STORM DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize for not giving him notice. He may wish to take this question as notice and answer later. Has the minister's department received any report of the damage to fishermen's property and equipment as the result of the storm which was very severe around the Burin peninsula two days ago? If there are no reports, would the minister initiate some inquiry to determine the extent of the damage?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I am quite sure no report has been received, at least none has reached my desk as yet. I will look into the question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. When the minister does receive this report, if the damage is of such a nature that it appears beyond the capacity of the local authorities to handle, in view of the federal government's jurisdiction over fisheries, would the government give consideration to making an addition to the aid already provided?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I will look into the question, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SINCLAIR REPORT—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING LICENCE LIMITATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Earlier this session, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Fisheries about the possibility of introducing legislation based upon the report of Dr. Sinclair relating to licence limitations. As I recall, the minister answered at that time to the effect it would depend on the length of the session. I wonder if I could ask the minister now if he has a better appreciation of the length of the session, and whether we can expect such legislation.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): The whole problem is still under consideration. I should like to point out that I believe any change could be made by regulation and would not require legislation. However, I am not absolutely certain, and it might depend on what the changes were.

CHANGE IN ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TODAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Before the orders of the day are called, Mr. Speaker, may I draw the attention of the house to an addition. We have called first for consideration an amendment suggested by the Senate to Bill No. C-63. I should like to follow that with second reading of Bill No. C-67—and this course is suggested as the result of consultation and agreement of the parties opposite—without further debate. This bill would then go to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. If further debate on the bill is required, that will be possible when the bill comes back to the house for the committee stage.

Then our next item of business would be supplementary estimates, and in order to accommodate various people the order in which they will be called is as follows: agriculture, defence production, finance, forestry, labour, mines and technical surveys, national research, northern affairs, citizenship and immigration, public works, etc. In the absence of one or two of our ministers on official business, I will endeavour to supply the house with the information that is wanted on specific items that are called in the supplementaries. If on the other hand they require more information than is available to me or my colleagues, we would have to defer some of these items until the ministers have returned.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, if I may say a word in appreciation of the statement just made by the house leader, we have sought in consultation to arrive at a mutual accommodation because of some difficulties on both sides of the house. I appreciate very much what the house leader is doing in this matter, and I would say that as far as we are concerned, if the government wish to have any item deferred to meet their convenience I am sure there will be no difficulty on this side of the house. It may be that in the case of one of two of the items we may make a similar request, and I would hope it would meet with the same type of response.

AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): May I repeat a question I addressed to the Prime Minister on January 19. Will the Prime Minister advise the house whether a request has been received from farm representatives for a consumer butter subsidy? If so, would the Prime Minister indicate whether any action is intended by the government to meet the problem of this record butter surplus?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I mentioned at the time, as I recall it, that the matter was under consideration and that is the position of affairs today. On the return of the Minister of Agriculture it will receive attention.

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LINE FROM WHITECOURT, ALBERTA

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. C-63, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from Whitecourt, Alberta, in a westerly direction for a distance of approximately 23.2 miles to the property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE BETWEEN MATANE AND STE. ANNE DES MONTS, QUE.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-67, to authorize the construction and operation on behalf of Her Majesty of a line of railway in the province of Quebec between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say one word in connection with this bill. In the absence of my hon. friend from Laurier I feel I should say this. We feel that before there is further debate on this bill it would be desirable to have the information that could be elicited in the committee. Therefore we are in complete accord with the position taken by the minister.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one request. We are agreeable to having this bill go to the committee. I would only ask that it not come before the committee next Tuesday morning, because other business will keep two members of our party away from the house that morning.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, we are quite agreeable to that, but I was wondering whether my hon. friend would agree to Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Balcer: I should like to repeat that we are agreeable to not sitting on Tuesday morning, but we were planning on sitting Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member is asking the minister a question.

Mr. Fisher: I would ask the minister whether he is aware that another transportation problem is going to take the hon. member for Port Arthur to Montreal, and whether he would consider this in fixing a particular day.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

615. Contributions to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council of one half of the amounts paid by the governments of those provinces to farmers in respect of harvesting and baling of cereal crops for fodder to a maximum of $2.50 per ton, $190,000.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, my colleague the Minister of Agriculture would like me to explain on his behalf that of course it is impossible for him to appear before the committee on this occasion because of illness. I should also like to add that as it happens it is also impossible for either of his parliamentary secretaries to be here. The hon. member for Provencher is in hospital at the moment, but I understand he has not a serious condition, and the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand is absent because of the death of a near relative. However, I will endeavour to give the committee any information it desires on the items under the Department of Agriculture.

I should like to give a word of explanation with regard to vote No. 615, which we are considering at the present time. This vote covers the $190,000 required to reimburse the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba for one half of the amounts expended by them under emergency fodder bank programs instituted during the drought last summer. It will be recalled that on August 30, 1958 the Prime Minister advised the house of the government's intention to consider assisting provinces in the establishment of forage bank programs under which farmers would receive certain incentives to put up forage as a reserve against an emergency situation.

During July, 1961 an offer was made by the government to the three prairie provinces to pay half of a bonus of $5 per ton to farmers making cereal fodder available to fodder banks. The purpose was to encourage farmers to salvage as fodder, cereal crops which would not likely produce economic yields as grain. Each of the three prairie provinces established a fodder bank program on a municipality basis. Farmers consigning cereal fodder surplus to their requirements to a municipal fodder bank were eligible to receive a $5 per ton bonus.

The volume handled under the program was approximately as follows: Manitoba, 7,600 tons; Saskatchewan, 65,200 tons and Alberta, 2,000 tons. This vote will cover Canada's share of the program, which is $2.50 per ton.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, we are thankful to the minister for those explanations he gave the committee to warrant his estimates. However, we should like to have some more details. To begin with, I might say that his estimates to assist the western farmers who suffered a loss of millions of dollars during the 1961 season are fully justified.

According to the report issued by the Department of Agriculture, Saskatchewan farmers were particularly affected as their lost crops were valued at $200 million while the loss totalled $10 million in Alberta and $50 million in Manitoba.

I note that for the year 1959, according to the public accounts of March 31, 1961, the government had already paid out to Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council, one half of the amounts paid by the provinces to the farmers in respect of the 1959 crops to a maximum of $300 per farm. Subsidies for administrative charges were also paid to the provinces and municipalities.

During 1961, the government paid an amount of $1,437,944.

I should like to ask the minister what amounts were paid in that respect since April 1 last year until now.

There is also another item concerning the transportation of fodder (straw and litter) and the movement of feed cattle from September 12 to April 30, 1960. The government appropriated $228,617 under that item. I should also like to ask the minister what amount has been paid until now for the fiscal year 1961-62?

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: As the minister knows, we are particularly interested in prairie agriculture; I think that is the right term. We want to make certain that these farmers are getting all the assistance which can be provided, and we want to know just how this estimate is to be spent.

In addition to his statement, which was informative, would the minister give us some further information showing just how this vote is applied? I should like to know what organization is used to make certain of the needs of farmers in one place and the payment of this subsidy to farmers in other places; whether there is co-operation among the federal and provincial departments of agriculture and the municipalities, and so on. We should like the minister to give us as complete an explanation as he can in this connection.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): With regard to this fodder program it is, in the first instance, carried out by the municipalities concerned, municipalities which in the interests of the farmers in their own areas have taken advantage of this program which is subsidized by the provinces and the federal government to a total of $5 a ton for the making of fodder out of cereal crops which did not hold much prospect of producing an economic amount of cereal grain. This is, of course, a great advantage to the farmers in the various areas because it allows them to keep their cattle rather than market them at an unseasonable time; it forestalls the possibility of a glut of cattle going on the market as a result of the drought which occurred last summer.

Mr. Argue: This has been a very worth while program. As has been pointed out, it was inaugurated to meet an emergency situation, and I should like the minister to give us a breakdown of the amounts spent under this item so that we might have an indication of the use which has been made of this provision in particular provinces.

The minister has mentioned one good reason, one pertinent reason, why this program has been of value. He has told the committee it increases fodder supplies so that livestock producers are subject to less pressure to place their products on the market at once, with the disastrous effect on cattle prices that such an action would have. But this program has been a good one for another reason. It has been an encouragement to livestock producers to go out and salvage some fodder from a crop which would probably yield little or no grain. In addition to helping to keep cattle off the market it has helped to salvage a crop which would otherwise have produced little or nothing, and which could not have been salvaged without this program.

I should like to ask a question which I admit immediately is probably out of order, though it has a direct connection with this problem. I hope the minister can relay it to his colleagues in the cabinet. A great many farmers who needed fodder have done a tremendous job in getting fodder wherever it may have been available. I think one of the amazing things about this whole drought situation is the tremendous amount of fodder that farmers and livestock producers have been able to salvage. However, some producers—and I am thinking particularly of farmers living near the border—have found that the best way to meet the shortage has been to import fodder. Fodder coming into this country is subjected to a tariff levy. I do not have the precise amount in mind; it is not a large levy, though I think it is in excess of $1 a ton; I may be mistaken. I would think, however, that in a time of emergency it is not in keeping with other aspects of government policy that this penalty should be levied against producers who bring in fodder from the United States.

I know this matter has been raised with the Minister of Agriculture. I know it has been brought to his attention by correspondence. We are all sorry that the hon. gentleman has been ill for so long, and we hope that he is back in parliament at an early date. However, I trust the acting minister will take note of my remarks and discuss this problem with him. The attitude of the government has been very helpful, and the suggestion I have made would round out what has been a worth while policy.

Mr. Peters: I was wondering whether the minister could tell us the amount of money that a farmer receives under this program on an average, on a acreage basis, if he takes advantage of this program under which the provincial and federal governments will each pay $2.50 per ton in respect of his fodder. In northern Ontario we were very interested last year both in this scheme and in the operation the government was carrying out in connection with food banks, especially in view of the fact that in northern Ontario we had a large amount of hay which was not going to be used this year. I suggested to the Department of Agriculture that this hay could be assembled at a reasonable price and the government could provide a subsidy for shipments of hay moving between eastern and western Canada or from the northern areas of the prairie provinces to parts of the country where transportation costs are prohibitive. I do not think we should have to bring in hay and fodder from the United States.

Mr. Argue: That was not my suggestion at all.

Mr. Peters: I did not say it was anyone's suggestion. In view of our transportation facilities and the control we exercise over them it should be possible to limit the disastrous effects of drought in western Canada.

Through the exercise of various controls it was possible to prevent a widespread throwing on the market of hay and fodder. The suggestion has been made in my area that in times of drought cattle could be moved to northern Canada for government supervised pasturing and wintering on a basis similar to that applicable in community pastures. I think this would be a step in the right direction. Natural disasters occur in all segments of the agricultural industry from time to time. There are sources of hay and fodder in northern Canada, and those areas happen to be on the way to the markets to which cattle is usually sent. Much of the cattle from western Canada moves into the Toronto and Montreal markets. I advance this suggestion for consideration.

Will the minister tell us whether the sums involved in this item represent a contribution to alleviate conditions produced by drought last year, or is this a regular fodder program for western Canada? I also wish to know how the federal government arrived at this sum of money. Does the federal government contribute at the request of the provincial government? To what extent does the federal government control or participate in the distribution of the fodder once it is in the fodder bank? Is its distribution supervised, and has the government any say as to who receives the product? Probably some advantage would flow from an interprovincial exchange of the assembled product. Does the administration of the program by the federal government make this possible?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, the administration of this program is entirely on a provincial and municipal basis. This is merely a subsidization of the provincial governments for what they have done in this program.

This brings me to a question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia as to how much applied to which province. The figures are as follows: Manitoba, 7,600 tons amounting to $19,000; Saskatchewan, 65,200 tons amounting to $163,000; Alberta, 2,000 tons amounting to $5,000, for a total of $187,000. The item is actually for $190,000, but that is about as close as we can safely come to an estimate.

I am grateful to the hon. member for Assiniboia for his suggestion regarding import duty. Consideration was given to the importing of feed and hay duty free, but the implications in several provinces were such that it was considered best to try to overcome this problem by further assistance in the affected areas.

I was asked about the program of assistance for Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In accordance with the terms and conditions prescribed by the Minister of Agriculture the federal government pays one half the amount paid by those provinces in respect of the transport of fodder and feed in the period of this fiscal year. That is covered by another item of $1.5 million which was passed in supplementary estimates No. 1 of the current year.

Mr. Argue: I thank the minister for his reply. I am very disappointed that the minister has not been able to say that in this time of crop failure emergency farmers living along the United States boundary are allowed to go what is often just a few miles across the border and supplement their supplies by bringing in feed from the United States duty free. It is obvious to the minister that if you live in the centre of a province you can travel 30 miles in any direction and stay within the province, but if you live within five or six miles of the United States border and there is feed available in the United States, that is the handiest source.

I think it is a bad practice for the government not to allow farmers living along the border to bring in supplies from the United States in times of emergency without paying tariff. I can tell the minister that farmers living along the border feel they should be allowed to do so, not as a long term policy but in an emergency. They appreciate the action taken by the government with respect to general trucking costs and the assistance provided through this item, and so on, but I share with them the feeling that it is ridiculous to deny them the opportunity of bringing in supplies from the United States, the most economical source, duty free. Those who are acquainted with the situation along the border feel, as I do, that the farmers there have a legitimate claim for repayment of the duty they have already paid.

I think the government should have another look at this question. I believe the farmers have a legitimate claim to be reimbursed the amount of the duty. They did not go across to the United States to buy fodder because they wanted to go there or because they preferred to go there. They went over there only because of crop failure the previous year.

Mr. McIntosh: Why was it cut off in the first place? Because the farmers wanted it.

Mr. Argue: If my hon. friend wishes to object to what I am saying, that is fine. The farmers who live in his part of Saskatchewan will know that he has objected to what I am saying. However, I am saying that the producers who live along the United States boundary feel that this is the rankest kind of discrimination in what could be an emergency year. I think the minister should check with his colleagues and persuade them, if he can, to reimburse these farmers for the duty which has been paid and which is a great hardship and a tax that should not be levied in that emergency situation. How does it make any sense at all to say that we will put an item in the estimates in order to help them overcome a difficult situation, but that for those who live along the boundary we will maintain a tax in order to make it more difficult for them to meet this emergency situation.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I perhaps left the wrong impression with my friend the hon. member for Assiniboia. I did not mean to say that I think anything in this world is final and irrevocable for all time. I was explaining what the situation is at the present time and the problems of adjusting duties which are, as he knows, applied to the country as a whole. There are difficulties, but this is not to say that I will not see that another look is taken at this matter in order to ascertain whether some adjustment might be possible.

Mr. Argue: If I may I should like to say one further word. Perhaps the best action would have not been to remove the tariff. I do not know about that matter; I am not an administrator. Perhaps the way to handle it is to reimburse the people who have paid the tariff if they submit a claim. But whether it is handled in one way or another, I submit that it is gross discrimination against the farmers who live along the boundary for them to be charged a duty when they are going a few miles from home in order to supplement greatly needed fodder reserves. I think it is contrary to the government's policy in other ways. I think it is contrary to the government's natural desire to prevent a glut of cattle on the market. In order to be consistent, I think the government should follow the suggestion I have made, even though some other members may not agree with what I have said.

Mr. Habel: I should like to ask the minister this question. Can he inform me whether the government of the province of Ontario made a request for assistance to the farmers of northern Ontario who, owing to very bad weather last season, had a poor crop of hay and grain? Was any request made by the government of Ontario to have assistance given jointly with the federal government?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I believe not. I am not aware of any, in any case.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I am glad the minister has agreed to examine the proposal which has just been made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) concerning the abolition of customs duties on animal feed imported from the United States.

Farmers in eastern Canada also have a problem with respect to the importation of certain feed grains, especially corn, oats and barley. Consequently, I would ask the minister—

The Chairman: Order. I have the impression that the hon. member is straying too far afield. I would ask him to limit his remarks to the item under consideration.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, we are now speaking of subsidies in respect of the crop and the baling of feed cereals, and I think that, with regard to the feeding of animals, grain is also a food. As the minister answered the hon. member for Assiniboia—

The Chairman: If I have rightly understood the hon. member, he was just about to deal with an entirely new matter. Therefore, I ask him to limit his remarks to the vote mentioned in supplementary estimates No. 3. As a matter of fact, the subject matter of this debate should not be extended so as to become a general discussion on agricultural problems. I therefore ask the hon. member to comply with standing orders, which are very clear.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I would simply ask the authorities of the Department of Agriculture to check whether or not customs tariffs on cereals might be eliminated for imports from the United States intended for western farmers. On the other hand, if this suggestion is considered, I fail to understand why we should not analyse the possibility of doing the same for the eastern farmers in this country.

We should not forget that our eastern farmers are also liable to crop damage. Indeed, last year, as the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) just said, farmers in northern Ontario lost part of their crop, and if I remember correctly, the Ontario farmers association asked the federal government for assistance. I even think that a newspaper in northern Ontario—and I would like to be corrected if I am not right—published an item which stated that the federal government had not acceded to the request for assistance made by the northern Ontario farmers.

I reiterate my request to the effect that the Department of Agriculture examine the possibility of abolishing customs tariffs on imported cereals intended for eastern farmers.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: I am certainly not happy with the remarks that have been made here, particularly by the last two speakers. We have a surplus of hay in northern Ontario, and we are not asking for any relief. We do not want any relief. However, my farmers of northern Ontario are paying this subsidy to western Canada. I think we have the right to ask the government to keep this money in Canada, at least, and not to go along with this proposal that the stuff be allowed to come in from the United States duty free. If our people are going to pay this assistance, then I think we at least have the right to ask that this assistance be put in another form so that the hay can be transported and there may be an equalization of the supply between eastern and western Canada.

The hay in northern Ontario, when delivered in the province of Manitoba with the freight rate that is now applied, will not cost as much as the Manitoba government paid last year in order to go to the United States and bring hay into that province. It is my understanding that they paid $34 last year for a limited quantity of hay. I feel quite sure that the ridings of Cochrane and Timiskaming can supply hay to that area at a lower price than that. If we give some assistance—and there is no objection to giving this kind of assistance—then I think we should at least be fair to the rest of the Canadian farmers, and should not ask them to subsidize something for the advantage not of their own farmers but of United States farmers. If we are going to put the matter on an assistance basis, let us at least keep it in Canada and let us try to help all the farmers in the various parts of Canada wherever it seems to be advantageous or even possible to do so.

Mr. Habel: I noticed that the hon. member stated that northern Ontario had a good crop of hay. I am glad to know that in his riding such may have been the case last year. I also note that he took exception to the remarks I made. In doing so he showed that he knows little about my riding. The farmers in my riding will certainly understand that he does not give much consideration to farming in my district. The farmers of my district are in dire need of assistance, and they have been asking the Ontario government to come to their aid. We are not opposing this amount at all. We are absolutely in favour of it. I simply asked the minister whether any requests had been made by the government of Ontario, and the answer was no. That goes to show that the government of Ontario has little interest in the riding of Cochrane, and I can see that the hon. member for Timiskaming is very little interested in the riding of Cochrane.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak for the riding of the hon. member. His farmers have the advantage of being a little closer to the western market than farmers in my riding, and I presume there would be an advantage from the point of view of freight rates from his area as compared with mine.

I am in no way disagreeing as to the need for assistance. We need assistance in my riding because for the last three years the farmers have not been able to sell their hay. I am only suggesting that when there is a great need in western Canada, the farmers of Cochrane might also like to be able to sell some of their hay to western Canada. I am simply opposed to the setting up of conditions providing for the importing of hay from the United States rather than using the money involved to bring about an equalization of the supply and demand in Canada for the benefit of our farmers. No matter how you look at it, even those farmers in the hon. member's riding of Cochrane north, who are in very serious circumstances will have to pay toward this assistance, and I think they should be given the opportunity to sell the hay they produce if it is to the advantage of the Canadian economy and will not cost any more money. I object to us paying any money to assist farmers in another country while there is still a great need in our own country and a supply of hay available. I believe the matter could be worked out if consideration were given to it.

This is not something new. I have raised the matter with the Minister of Agriculture; I have telephoned him several times. The department discussed the matter and looked at the price. I think I am being fair in saying that in the early days of the drought in Manitoba some of the officials there thought there was not going to be enough hay available, and panic buying of a limited quantity of hay brought about a very high price. Because of the high price we made the suggestion that assistance be given with respect to transportation costs so that hay could be moved from northern Ontario, where I am informed by the farmers there is a surplus. It is only with this in mind that I am opposed to the lowering of the customs barriers, because obviously the money involved would come out of the Canadian treasury and our Canadian farmers would not necessarily be assisted.

Mr. Habel: I want the hon. member to know that the farmers of Cochrane riding—he referred to it as Cochrane north—would be well satisfied to take all the hay they need from the hon. member's riding if they had the assistance of the province and the federal government. As a matter of fact they need it badly.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I think the last two speakers have been talking about two other problems with which this item does not deal.

Mr. Peters: We are paying for this.

Mr. McIntosh: Let me explain. The hon. member for Timiskaming said that we could bring the cattle down through northern Ontario on the way to market. The cattle for which the feed was required were breeding stock. The feeders were all shipped out of western Canada as soon as possible. With regard to the surplus of hay in northern Ontario and other parts of that province, as a result of the plan implemented by this government there was no shortage of fodder in western Canada. Under the plan implemented by the government, crops that would not yield more than three bushels per acre were cut for fodder. Consequently there was enough fodder left on the prairies for the requirements. In fact in my own constituency, which I believe was one of the hardest hit in Saskatchewan, I visited many municipalities with regard to the program implemented by the government and in not one municipality was the demand for fodder greater than the amount that had been cut for that purpose in that municipality.

The hon. member for Assiniboia talked about the importation of fodder from the United States. It was the farmer's own decision whether he went to the United States, brought in hay and paid the duty or whether he went to northern Saskatchewan and paid the extra cost of hauling. In addition, it was as a result of the farmers' request in the first place that the duty was imposed, so that hay would not come into Canada from the United States in good times. They cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Argue: I think they can in an emergency. This is a special case.

Mr. McIntosh: There was not the emergency that the hon. member says there was. Fodder was available in Saskatchewan, and they could have obtained it there.

Mr. Argue: The best source of fodder for the people in this area was the source closest to home. In certain instances the fodder closest to home was in the United States, but if they went 10 miles from home across the United States boundary they had to pay a duty which simply increased the amount of money in the Canadian exchequer, and I claim this is definitely discrimination in an emergency.

Mr. McIntosh: How many tons were involved?

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, I did not realize that land rehabilitation and irrigation came under this item.

The Chairman: No, they come under the next item, No. 616.

Item agreed to.

Irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces including the South Saskatchewan river project; the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act program; land protection, reclamation and development—

616. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $3,200,000.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief statement on item 616 by way of explanation to the committee. Because of the severe drought conditions that prevailed in the prairie provinces throughout 1961 there was an unprecedented demand for assistance in the development of individual farm and community water conservation projects and to provide pasture and feed facilities. Almost twice as many small farm water projects as in any previous year, consisting of dugouts, stock watering dams and small irrigation projects, were constructed to help to meet the critical situation. In addition, more of the larger community storage projects were constructed than planned, and an emergency federal-provincial-municipal well drilling program was initiated last fall to provide water for communities. Under this program the federal and provincial governments each contribute 35 per cent of the cost of a well and the municipality 30 per cent. Some 100 applications for such wells have been approved to date.

More community pasture facilities and more feed bases had to be provided in those areas most affected by the drought to preserve farmers' basic herds and reduce unseasonable marketing. This was accomplished by constructing a large community pasture of 140,000 acres in the British block in Alberta and a smaller one in Manitoba. These projects were not anticipated for 1961-62. In addition, a feed base for several hundred head of cattle was set up at Craven, Saskatchewan, where pelleted grain screenings were fed at a nominal cost to the farmers.

As a result of the situation created by the drought it is estimated that expenditures will exceed the amount provided in the main estimates by $1 million under the small water development program and by $100,000 under the community pasture program. The balance of the additional amount of $3,200,000 required consists of $500,000 for the St. Mary's irrigation project in Alberta and $1,600,000 for the South Saskatchewan dam.

Construction of the Waterton dam on the St. Mary's project was started in 1960 and will be completed in 1962. The South Saskatchewan dam was started in 1958 and will be completed in 1965. The additional amounts mentioned for the projects for 1962, totalling $2,100,000, are required because the works in progress advanced at a faster rate than expected. This was largely due to the abnormally dry season, which made it possible for the large earth-moving contracts to be carried out without interruption. The constant dry weather also helped to speed up the work on other contracts, although not to the same degree as the earth-moving contracts.

I should like to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that these further amounts do not represent increases in the total cost of these projects. We are merely advancing into this fiscal year money that it was originally expected would not be required until the next fiscal year. I might add that the amount for this item in the main estimates for this fiscal year was $18,322,297.

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I should like to say a few words on this particular item and on the importance of an irrigation and water storage program, not only to the area I represent but to the whole of the fertile Red river valley and to the western provinces. The serious drought experienced by the prairie provinces last year points up the necessity for an extensive program of land and water conservation. In my own area the farmers are appreciative of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, and this tremendous program of building farm dugouts and dams is one of the most important undertaken by the federal Department of Agriculture.

Experience over the years has shown us that these water storage programs will pay large dividends in the development of our prairie economy. In my constituency the spring water running down the streams and rivers from what we call the Pembina escarpment is largely lost to that particular part of the country. The building of dams in this area is a definite must if the fullest development of our agricultural economy is to be achieved.

Further to this, I should like to express my appreciation of the fact that this is recognized not only by the government of Manitoba but by our own federal Department of Agriculture. I should also like to express my appreciation of the auspicious start that has been made on this program in our area in the building of the Stephenfield dam on the Boyne river, which will be started this spring. I sincerely believe that a continuation of the program of water storage will turn out to be one of the most important developments in prairie agriculture. We only have to listen to the figures the minister gave a few moments ago to realize how this development is being encouraged, not only by the governments of the prairie provinces but also by the federal government. I am sure all members will join me in saying that this is one of the most important developments to take place, and one which will probably be taken over by ARDA to make land and water rehabilitation a reality.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, we certainly have no objection to the adoption of those items since they will hasten construction of the dam on the Saskatchewan river and the carrying out of other irrigation projects.

In the past, we have often said that the scope of this measure should be widened so that all Canadian farmers could benefit from it. We would like it to have a bearing on the whole of Canada.

I appreciate that western farmers are to benefit from this measure; it is justified by the farmers' water supply and especially by the construction of the dam on the Saskatchewan river.

However, if we consider the possibilities resulting from the irrigation of the land along the Saskatchewan river, we find that there will be half a million more acres of farmland once the projects are completed and the irrigation system is installed.

I understand that this area will be used to produce grain crops and also, perhaps, feed crops, but more especially grain crops.

No doubt that the Saskatchewan river dam project will then be justified, because it will enable us to produce more grain to help supply the foreign markets, which should still be large enough at that time.

I should like to ask the minister to keep in mind our suggestion that the possibility of extending this measure to all provinces be examined. While our problems may not be the same as those of western Canada, they do exist. In the east, our problems relate mainly to soil drainage and stone clearing. Much of our land could be made suitable for agriculture if it were cleared of stones and well drained. The cost of such undertakings would not be too high.

I understand that, in 1962, there will probably be appropriations for ARDA, but for the time being we cannot anticipate that measure, because the minister, who has been talking about it for four years, has never voted the necessary estimates. There is nothing in the speech from the throne to indicate that the government intended to further extend the application of that measure.

I am sure that eastern farmers will be happy when these estimates are voted for western farmers, but just the same, they would be still happier if the measure were extended so as to cover the whole of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, vote 616 of the further supplementary estimates asks for an additional amount of $3,200,000 to be divided between two aspects of the department. As I understand it, the original estimate was in the neighbourhood of $18 million, which amount we are now being asked to increase. It is my understanding that because this involves an increase of over $3 million in a general estimate, we can discuss briefly certain aspects of general policy as applied not only to what is asked for in the supplementary estimates but also in general under the item of the general estimates.

I am particularly interested in the wording of the first section of vote 616, the heading of which is "Land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects". This is followed by "Irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces..." As the committee knows, I come from the province of British Columbia, and sometimes I cannot help wondering what the government classifies as the western provinces. I am rather inclined, especially in view of the original vote and the supplementary item, to think there is a great tendency to believe that the western provinces of Canada end at the Rocky mountains, forgetting that the Rocky mountains are just a geographical, mountainous boundary between Alberta and British Columbia.

Admittedly the most westerly province is divided by four mountain ranges, but within those mountain ranges are a number of valleys. These valleys have to a great extent in the past required for their agricultural development—and they require it now—exactly what is set forth as the heading of the supplementary estimate we are now considering, namely land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects.

I have had the privilege of living in British Columbia for 52 years. During that period of time I can remember that the interior of British Columbia was once tantamount to being a desert, growing nothing, but because of water storage and irrigation we now have the most beautiful and agriculturally productive area of Canada known as the Okanagan. However, there is still a great deal that can be done in the way of land rehabilitation and irrigation and water storage projects, shall I say between the city of Armstrong and the town of Osoyoos. I now wish to deal with an area which I know well but which is better known by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I refer to the Creston area, where not too many years ago it was not a matter of irrigation but of land reclamation. This area is now one of the most productive in that part of British Columbia.

The Minister of Agriculture mentioned a few minutes ago that we have a general expenditure of $18 million, and we now have a supplementary estimate of $3,200,000 in connection with land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects. In view of these estimates I think the committee will understand why I rise in my seat and ask why it is that, whether it be under the general estimates or the supplementary estimates, the government thinks that Canada ends at the Rocky mountains. I maintain that with proper planning of projects and expenditures my province could give a greater productive return than perhaps any other province. I do not object to any money that is spent in any province of Canada, but why are we so completely and totally ignored in this matter of irrigation, water storage, land reclamation and rehabilitation?

I ask this question not only because I am a member from the province of British Columbia but from my knowledge of the whole of Canada, and particularly, after 52 years, my knowledge of my home province. What is the policy regarding land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects as far as the government is concerned? Why is it that we have been ignored, and is there any possibility or any hope at all of this government raising their sights and looking over the Rockies to that paradise of Canada on the Pacific coast, the province of British Columbia? Our province does not only produce forest and mineral products; it is also an agricultural producer with a potentiality that could give magnificent returns to the benefit of the economy of Canada and the greater security of our people if the program of rehabilitation, reclamation, irrigation and water storage is applied to it as it is rightly being applied to the provinces mentioned by the Acting Minister of Agriculture and those hon. members who spoke earlier.

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to express to the Department of Agriculture my satisfaction for last year building two dams on the La Salle river, namely at Starbuck and La Salle. In addition, the contract has now been awarded for the building of a third dam at Elie.

The La Salle river passes very close to the Assiniboine river, and requires that a high level of water be maintained. This can only be done by the diversion of water from the Assiniboine to the La Salle river. This could be done in many ways; it could even be done just by pumping. I understand that a floodway is being constructed, and a great deal of water could be sent through the Assiniboine river during the dry season in the summer to maintain a high level of water in that river. It would be a very easy matter to divert some of this water to the La Salle river, which is not very long. There are farmers all along its course. In some areas these farmers depend entirely on the La Salle river for their water supply in the summer and even in the winter.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat I should like to again express my satisfaction for the speedy manner in which the department has dealt with this problem.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one or two suggestions arising out of the well drilling program undertaken this year by the government. This program was really appreciated by the farmers on the prairies, and particularly by those in my area. These farmers feel the program should be extended in the future and should perhaps become as widespread as the dugout construction program in the P.F.R.A. areas of western Canada. In many areas the dugout is not a suitable source of supply for water and a well is a more reliable source, especially when livestock are kept. I should like to express to the minister and to the government the appreciation of the people of Birch Hills and the surrounding area for the large storage and flood control project which was undertaken on Cromarty creek in the railway municipality of Birch Hills. I believe it will be an addition to that area, and that the people will be happy with it.

I believe the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said he would be happy if P.F.R.A. were extended to the people of eastern Canada. Well, if we go back to the time when that act was first brought in and, later, to the time when its benefits were somewhat extended, we find that the Liberals forgot eastern Canada in the legislation of that day. Now, under the ARDA program, the present government has remembered that there are farmers in eastern Canada who are interested not only in conservation but in the development of projects of this kind. I do not like to say anything more in that regard. However, each time the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska gets up he says "We are happy to see this thing pass, but we would like some of the benefit for eastern Canada as well". I would point out that some of these provisions were made necessary in western Canada because we experienced drought there; perhaps they did not have a drought in eastern Canada.

Mr. Carter: Too much wind out there in the west. It dries everything up.

Mr. Nasserden: I see the man who wants to sell freedom with wheat is speaking now. I know the farmers of western Canada will appreciate that remark.

The Saskatchewan river dam project is, of course, an important one and this year, after we have had a drought in western Canada, everyone out there realizes just how important it is. They also realize that had it been proceeded with at a time when many people were giving lip service to the idea it might already have proved of great value to people in areas represented by the hon. member for Assiniboia, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and others in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, but I do not think I can let the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern pass without a word of comment. The hon. member said the Liberals had ignored eastern Canada. He would not say that in the presence of the hon. member for Cumberland or the hon. member for Westmorland, because each of those members knows what was done about maritime marshland drainage, which was begun immediately after the war by the previous Liberal government. The hon. member is apparently unaware of the legislation which was put on the statute books when Mr. Winters was the minister responsible for the department of resources and development with respect to water conservation in other parts of eastern Canada.

I should like to say a word of appreciation for the work which was begun by the late James Gardiner in assisting pilot projects for the drainage of the bogs in Newfoundland. I am glad the present government are continuing this work and I hope they will see fit to extend it much more widely. We do not encounter the problem of drought very often, though we did last year. Normally our problem is that we have too much water: we would be glad to have the hon. member for Rosthern come down and cart some of it away.

Notwithstanding the fact that my hon. friend from Drummond-Arthabaska is quite right in pointing out that these programs should be extended to all parts of the country, it is wrong to say that the Liberal government neglected the east. Of course, in the days of the dust bowl when P.F.R.A. was started it was an urgent national problem in the sense that these other problems are not. We all know that one of the reasons the dust bowl has not returned is the splendid work done by P.F.R.A. in all the years since.

Mr. Argue: I want to congratulate the minister on the able way in which he is dealing with estimates with which he has not had the opportunity of close association. He is an acting Acting Minister of Agriculture. I know there is really not such a post, but he is acting minister in the absence of the acting minister. This government has become known as a government of travelling cabinet ministers. It is a government composed of cabinet ministers who are able to engage in many extracurricular activities.

An hon. Member: We heard about your travels yesterday.

Mr. Argue: At this particular stage, when an election is not too far away the practice seems to be more prevalent than it has ever been. However, I did not know that this practice was extending to parliamentary secretaries as well. Now the acting Acting Minister of Agriculture is fortified with two parliamentary secretaries to the Minister of Agriculture. But I have been looking around for them all the morning—

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I do not think the hon. member wants to be unfair. I think he missed what I said when the first vote was called. At that point I explained the absence of the two parliamentry secretaries to the minister. One is in the veterans hospital here; I think it is not too serious a matter, but it prevents his being in the house. The other is absent because of the death of a close relative.

Mr. Argue: I apologize. I am sorry for having started along that line, and I thank the minister for interrupting me and giving me this information before I was in the embarrassing position of having said something for which I would be sorry. I hope the parliamentary secretary will soon be out of the hospital and, of course, we are sympathetic toward any colleague who has suffered a bereavement in the family.

Now I come to the item under discussion. I want to say, along with the hon. member from Rosthern, that one of the features of this vote which should be given special consideration at this time is the whole question of deep water wells. The program of dams and dugouts has been well developed over many years, and the experience in this field is considerable. However, the experience with deep water wells is relatively new. This is a new field which has been pioneered. One of the many reasons why deep water wells are now much more feasible than in the past is the fact that the vast majority of farms on the prairies are now supplied with electricity, which makes these wells exceedingly practicable as a source of water supply for livestock.

As the minister has said, this has been an emergency program brought forward to provide under this item for the drilling of deep water wells in a joint program in co-operation with the provinces and the municipalities. It should be made clear that these deep water wells have not been drilled for individual farmers, but are what are called community wells. I take it they are public property, the property of the municipality, although federal and provincial government money has gone into their construction. All farmers have access to these so-called community wells.

I understood the minister to say the cost was divided on the basis of a 35 per cent contribution on the part of each of the two major governments and a 30 per cent contribution on the part of the municipality. This is only a detail which the minister is free to check, but I understood the division of cost was on the basis of 37½ per cent, 37½ per cent and 25 per cent. One of us is right and one wrong, and probably the minister is right.

The latest information I have is that this program will end on March 31. If there has been an extension I wish to hear about it, and if not I plead with the government to extend this valuable addition to a long term water conservation program at least to the forthcoming full fiscal year, if not permanently. If there was a valid reason for drilling wells in the emergency drought during the past year, the same reason would apply to extending this excellent program in the coming fiscal year. All the federal government can do is make the offer, and I plead with the government to negotiate with the provincial governments for a continuation of the program if not on a permanent basis at least for the coming year, as a minimum extension.

I wish to advance a second proposal. Joint programs are the best. I urge the government to introduce a federal-provincial-municipal program to assist individual farmers to obtain deep water walls. Such a well represents an expensive undertaking. A dugout may be obtained for $500 or $600, but deep water wells often cost $1,000 or $2,000 or more. I wish to be fair to the minister and the government. I have discussed this question with departmental officials at both the federal and provincial levels. The federal government and the government of Saskatchewan both make the same reply to this suggestion. They say it is an excellent one in which they would like to participate, but they are afraid it would lead to their subsidizing, with the assistance of the individual farmers, a group of inexperienced fly by night drillers of deep water wells who are more interested in making a profit than in providing efficient wells. Apparently it is a problem to find competent, reliable drillers in this intricate field, and of course it is difficult for the individual farmer to assess the reliability and competence of a driller.

The federal government could perhaps arrange through the provincial governments for the licensing of drillers on the basis of their qualifications. What I am about to say comes within the purview of provincial government jurisdiction. Perhaps the provincial government could provide a few drilling outlets as pilot undertakings so experience could be gained in the field. If the provincial government obtained a few rigs and operated them in that kind of work there would be immediate control over the operation and there would be the additional advantage of experience in the field being gained.

In my judgment deep water wells are no longer a luxury. They provide an excellent and convenient source of water for livestock. They are often necessary if farmers are to enjoy the sewer and water advantages so long enjoyed by those in urban centres.

I am not being critical of the minister, as I know he will appreciate. This is an excellent program as far as it has been developed. There are technical difficulties readily admitted by those in the federal and provincial departments of agriculture. This seems all the more reason for providing leadership and taking action so that at an early date not only communities but individual farmers may have the advantage and convenience of deep water wells for the watering of livestock and family use on the farm.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on this subject, but I shall now call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Henderson: I was trying very hard, Mr. Chairman, to get to my feet before lunch but I could not make it. The various members who have spoken have been talking about their homeland or where they came from and they made me think of a school poem:

> Breathes there the man, with soul so dead,
> Who never to himself hath said,
> This is my own, my native land!

Apparently they were all from their native land. I come from the constituency of Cariboo which is as large as the state of Texas. We have everything. We have oil, gold and silver. In fact, a man from this country took $3 million in gold out of Cariboo camp. We have a great deal of oil. We have thousands of men working in the oil fields. The only problem is to get a market for the oil. We have agriculture which compares favourably with the best in Canada. The Peace River area, that gem in the tiara of diamonds, is situated in my constituency. Anybody who has ever been there comes back. We have had people leave and go to California but they came back to the Peace River country. It is the most prosperous part of Canada right today. I do not say this in any idle way. We have mixed farming which compares favourably with that in the best parts of Iowa or Indiana. The farmers have cattle yards. We had a bumper crop last year. We were not in a part of Canada which was dry and about which all the discussion has taken place. However, we are short of water. We are obliged to dig extremely deep wells. The town of Vanderhoof is in the constituency of Cariboo, and the well went dry there. I think dirt fell in it or something of that kind. However, the government came right to the rescue and dug another well. It was necessary to go to a depth of 500 feet or 600 feet. The whole town was out of water until they obtained this well. I was there and saw what they were doing. The government came right to the assistance of the town.

I think this government is to be congratulated on the way in which they have handled the water situation. Our country was dry. We had very little rain. However, we had a wonderful crop. Another rain would have made all the difference in the world. We had 40 bushels to the acre on the average through there, and a great deal of feed in the form of alfalfa that we could have shipped out. However, apparently nobody wanted the feed. A few carloads were shipped out, but we had hundreds of carloads that could have been shipped out. To give the Minister of Agriculture credit, I think he did a wonderful job in keeping the cattle from being rushed on to the market. In this way the price was kept right. Many people would have gone broke had they been obliged to throw their cattle on the market as was done back in the old days. We were raising cattle and the grass was burned out in the early days. There was no feed in the country. It was grass country. The grass got burned and we were obliged to sell our cattle. We received $12.50 a cow with a good calf thrown in. You do not make much money under those conditions. This year, however, we had plenty of crop but, as I say, we were short of water. For our water supply we depend on dugouts or scoopouts. The government had various units in there, digging these scoopouts. It is not necessary to pay spot cash for them, it is possible to pay for them on terms.

What any farmer would ever hold against this government is beyond me. I have been in that country for 50 years. We lived in there in the old days under the Liberal regime and it was absolutely the worst one that has ever been seen so far as the farmer is concerned.

An hon. Member: He was the forgotten man.

Mr. Henderson: That is true; he was the forgotten man. However, this government apparently see the farmer and have done everything they could to help him. I will tell you this, Mr. Chairman, I would not be here if it was not for the assurance that they will win again. They will win easily in that country. As I say, the Minister of Agriculture has done a wonderful job and we are getting lots of water out of the scoopouts. I have had a letter from my riding saying that we have had snow but the ground is black. We will have a snowstorm one night and chinook winds will come along and fill all the gullies with water. As I said, and I am not boasting, it is the most prosperous part of Canada and it makes my heart bleed when I see these farmers in this part of Canada. There was talk about moving people from the maritimes. We could have taken a lot of those fellows. We have an empire there, and there is not only farming but the farmers have oil wells. Everything is prosperous there.

I am not going to blow too much about my riding because I do not believe it needs any support. When the president of the Fraser Valley association was there at the convention the other day he said that his brother and he were dreaming of getting to the Peace River. They are growing strawberries or something like that, and he said that he and his brother had to get out there. That is their dream. I see my friend the lobsterman smiling, but we have plenty of cattle feed and things will be very prosperous there this year.

As I have said, I do not know why anybody would vote against such a government. I believe we have leading us the greatest statesman since confederation. I was angered a little the other day when a speaker on the other side was lambasting the Prime Minister because I do not like to see a good man knocked. I would not lambaste one of them if I thought he was any good. Yes, it made my heart bleed when I heard this member lambasting the Prime Minister. Our grandchildren in years to come will be told about this famous statesman. He is going to continue as Prime Minister. He will be returned to office because the people of western Canada—I do not know anything about Quebec—

Mr. Ricard: The same thing.

Mr. Henderson: —will not turn him down. He has done more for western Canada than any other man. This government has done a wonderful job with regard to the water situation in the Peace River and Cariboo district. They have been digging dugouts and scoopouts. We have five big scoopouts at home on the farm and they are designed so that one will pump into another. We do not irrigate but there is irrigation in the Cariboo. It is a wonderful part of Canada. It is prosperous and doing well, and so I will not say any more.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy listening to the expert on barbershops, barbecues and bulls. He always makes a very interesting address with a lot of homespun wisdom in it. However, in view of the development of the debate on this item I cannot resist saying a few words because of the philosophy of this group which is based on the conservation and development of human and natural resources. On that account this is an important item so far as this group is concerned.

Before proceeding further, I want to support the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East and the other members who have spoken in favour of the extension of the application of the policy contained in this vote for land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects. I mention this because there is a particular need in British Columbia which is of increasing importance. Only a few days ago the minister of agriculture for British Columbia, Mr. Richter, addressed the British Columbia fruit growers association in Vernon and stressed the importance of preserving every acre of the 2 per cent of our land suitable for agriculture and settlement. In that address he said that we cannot spare a single acre in British Columbia or destroy a single acre.

I hope the Minister of Justice will keep that in mind when he is contemplating the flooding of about 50,000 acres in east and west Kootenay if the Columbia treaty goes through as now arranged.

Mr. Pugh: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Pugh: Are you in favour of the development of the Columbia river?

Mr. Herridge: I am in favour of the development of the Columbia river without any unnecessary destruction of natural resources. I mention this because in British Columbia we have the climate and the soil. I am not blowing like the hon. member who preceded me or even exaggerating when I say that in our district we have numerous farmers who take $1,000 a year in produce per acre off their land year after year. I can think of one vegetable grower, a neighbour of mine, who lives about nine miles from me. He takes up to $15,000 a year gross from nine acres of beautiful black muck soil beside the lake. I think of another who takes close to $40,000 off 100 acres and I know of another who takes over $37,000 off 300 acres. I know of numerous fruit growers who take an average of $1,000 a year in peaches and cherries from their orchards which average five acres in extent.

I mention this to emphasize the value of good land in circumstances such as ours and in the Okanagan, where water can be used on a vast scale if it is properly stored in the first instance and diverted to use for Canadian agriculture. Without any partisan approach whatever, I emphasize that there is a great opportunity for the government to make this a national policy and to conserve and develop this land.

Mind you, this is a natural field for government. This is something that cannot be done unless there is government action on the federal and provincial levels. It is something that is beyond the capacity of private interests or, shall I say, beyond the normal sphere of private interests, and there is a wonderful opportunity here for a national policy based on the principles of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. In connection with my statement that I think government action is required, I wish to quote very briefly from the excellent compilation of background papers of the resources for tomorrow conference held in Montreal from October 23 to October 28, 1961. One article is entitled, "Objectives and organizational arrangements for multipurpose development and management of water resources" and it reads in part as follows:

> Water development and management in accord with the objectives and value standards of modern society will increasingly depend on governmental action. A variety of forces at work in modern society suggest that more and more emphasis will be placed on intangible values. This tendency, combined with the economic characteristics of water resources, underscores the necessity of relying primarily on governmental institutions to achieve the objectives of water development and management.

In British Columbia water development and management are very closely related to agriculture. In the constituency which I have the honour to represent there are thousands of acres of rich land that could be brought into cultivation if they were drained, for instance, if the Duncan river were lowered six feet by dredging, and there are thousands of acres that can be brought into cultivation by irrigation. There is a far greater acreage that can be brought into cultivation by irrigation in the ridings represented by the hon. members for Okanagan Boundary and Okanagan-Revelstoke.

There is a tremendous opportunity here so I urge that, particularly in connection with power potential and land rehabilitation, we do not just look at water resources from the point of view of kilowatts and power, necessary as they may be. I think the two can be developed together without any unnecessary destruction of land, which is growing more valuable every year with the increase in world population, and without any unnecessary, shall I say, giving away of water resources that will be required to irrigate this land in British Columbia and the prairie provinces.

Once again I say that in British Columbia we have the climate, we have the soil, and all we need is an extension of this type of legislation so that we could conserve that soil by irrigation, by drainage and in other ways.

Mr. Cooper: I did not intend to take part in this debate, but there were one or two things said this morning which I could not allow to go unchallenged. We are in what you would call the dry belt of Saskatchewan, where last year the dugouts went dry. This government increased up to $240 the grants to farmers for the purpose of constructing these dugouts and also for assisting municipalities in digging deep wells. These wells will be for public use. In our immediate vicinity we have to go down between 400 and 500 feet, and we get artesian wells. We have one well in our vicinity that flowed at the rate of 45 gallons a minute and it served the people for miles around.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made one statement which I cannot allow to go unchallenged. He said that the former administration had made a great study of the Saskatchewan river dam. I was a member of a committee out west which met the hon. member when he came out west, and we had met with every minister of the former administration who came west during the last 20 years to put this project before them. We met the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in Moose Jaw, and he said, "We have bogs in Newfoundland that we could drain and bring into production at a cost of $65 per acre, whereas your project, Saskatchewan river dam is costing $3,000 an acre". Well now, 500,000 acres at $3,000 an acre comes to around $1,500 million. If you allot all the costs pertaining to the dam to irrigation alone, you will find you arrive at a figure which is less than one fifteenth of that figure he gave. I cannot, therefore, allow the statement to go unchallenged that he made a study of the Saskatchewan river dam when, out of the blue sky, he could pull this figure and give it to these committee representatives who had been promoting this project for the last 15 years. I am sorry the hon. member is not in his seat so that he could reply to that statement.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: I congratulate the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) who managed to speak for 20 minutes without dealing with the subject under discussion, that is, the estimate for $3.2 million. He only succeeded in making a good election speech and I should like to do the same.

I also congratulate the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) who asked this morning why we pass such acts as the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I must tell him that if we adopt those measures which were introduced by the Liberal government, it is because the latter realized at the time that western farmers were in need of assistance. I can speak about this, because in 1931 I spent over 12 months in the province of Alberta. I also had the opportunity of visiting the province of Saskatchewan which was then in the grip of a terrible drought. It was following that drought that the Liberal government implemented those acts. I am willing to give the Conservative government credit for having introduced the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act but it is the Liberal party which has seen it through. We voted for it because we were aware of the western farmers' situation and we felt sympathy for them.

There seems to be some feeling that we are not justified to speak of the problems found in eastern Canada. I should not want to sound prejudiced but I think our present laws do not give enough protection to eastern farmers. Members from Quebec know that. If only they had the courage to say so. That is why I congratulate the hon. member for Rosthern who one day had the courage to express his views on certain agricultural legislation.

Last year I asked the Minister of Agriculture if he was thinking of extending the coverage of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to other parts of Canada.

Here is what I said on this matter, on April 12, 1961, as found at page 3603 of Hansard (page 2 of the English translation), when I put the question to the Minister of Agriculture in these words:

> Mr. Chairman, in connection with this item 36, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, arising out of a statement he made recently to the effect that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act would be extended to the whole of Canada. Would he like to comment on that?

To which the Minister of Agriculture replied:

> The Prairie Farm Assistance Act applies only to the prairie areas. The statement I made some months ago was that the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act should be applied to Canada as a whole because it is concerned with the rehabilitation of water and soil resources. I feel a similar type of act should be provided for the whole of Canada.

That was put on the official record last year. And I should like to ask the acting minister if it is the intention of the government to extend the scope of this legislation to all the provinces in Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I feel that I would be remiss in my duty this afternoon if I did not take part in this discussion concerning agriculture, and specifically this item on land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage. I think it is well known to my colleagues and other members of the house that I come from a part of Canada which has had the recurring problem of drought. Even in my short life span I have experienced three of these serious drought cycles.

In commencing my remarks on this particular item I should like, first of all, to congratulate our present Minister of Agriculture on the very positive action he has taken in connection with this matter. I am referring to last year's drought as far as Saskatchewan and western Canada are concerned. It points up in effect how this government has taken a realistic view of some of the problems of agriculture. I wish to congratulate our government on their national agricultural program. In fact I can assure the committee that in the eyes of the agricultural population of this country this government is fast becoming famous through our Minister of Agriculture for their national agricultural program.

This agricultural program not only deals with the over-all problem but also with regional problems, and the item we are discussing this afternoon deals with a serious recurring problem of a regional nature that we experience in the west. I come from a part of Saskatchewan that has one of the highest cattle populations per capita compared to anywhere in Canada. Not only has it a high cattle population, but the quality of the cattle raised in our area is second to none. As proof of this statement I would point out that at a recent royal winter fair in Toronto at which I was a visitor, I discovered that there were 101 head of cattle which came from the province of Saskatchewan and had been selected by the livestock associations of that province. Out of the 101 head of cattle selected for exhibition purposes, 36 head came from the great riding of Moose Mountain. I am reminded that the balance came from Swift Current-Maple Creek. I cannot assure the committee that this information with respect to Swift Current is absolutely authentic, but I do know they raise a lot of good cattle in Swift Current-Maple Creek.

The fact is that with these purebred, high quality herds water is naturally a very important factor in the economy of that part of the country. In the discussion today mention has been made of emergency fodder banks, and so on. This program is very important, but coupled with it is the emergency program of water conservation. I am thinking now of dugouts, small dams and also the emergency well drilling program that was put into effect last fall. This program was very timely and helped to maintain quite a number of basic herds in our area.

I was very glad to hear the Acting Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Fisheries, mention that there had been at least 100 applications under this emergency well drilling program. I know that a number of them were from the riding of Moose Mountain. I might suggest in passing that like any other new regulation or emergency measure there were a few doubts about the plan, but it did work very well.

I make the following suggestion to the committee. Because of the great importance of water conservation to areas such as the one in which I live in Saskatchewan, I think that any way in which we can propagate the over-all development of P.F.R.A. should be considered on a permanent basis. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar mentioned the south Saskatchewan dam. We feel this is the grand-daddy of the whole project of water conservation in the prairies and western Canada, and I hope to live to see the day when we not only have that dam completed on the great south Saskatchewan river but when we will have other dams along its tributaries and other rivers in Saskatchewan, and Manitoba for that matter, which will preserve the precipitation we have in the west which presently runs away through our streams into the oceans.

In my area of Moose Mountain, under the water conservation program that we are now considering in the supplementary estimates we have experienced the co-operation of the government. I should again like to take this opportunity to thank our Minister of Agriculture, and through him the cabinet, for the attention that has been given to the water shortage problem in my riding. I am referring to the assistance we have received in connection with a dam on the Souris river at Oxbow, Saskatchewan, which was completed a year ago. Also, an appropriation of $110,000 has been granted for a new dam at Gainsborough, which happens to be my home municipality. In addition, according to information I have just received another appropriation has been allocated for a dam at Lightning creek, Redvers, and I understand that consideration has been given to building one at Maryfield. These are very, very important to my area. This program comes under this supplementary estimate and I know the constituents of Moose Mountain greatly appreciate the co-operation I have received from this government in regard to this very serious problem of water conservation.

I referred a moment ago to the emergency well drilling program. I discovered that in the application of this emergency legislation last fall there were a few criticisms with regard to the policy. One of them was that the farmers concerned thought the expenditure of $1,000 for the development of a well seemed to be unfair when it was decided to locate the well on one particular farm because it seemed to give that individual farmer an important benefit in comparison to the neighbouring farmers. The suggestion was made that perhaps the municipality, in conjunction with the province and with the agreement of the federal government, could make some provision whereby part of the cost of the well could be recovered from the farmer upon whose land the well was placed. If this suggestion were taken up, I think this objection would be overcome.

Another suggestion was made to me and I am in agreement with it. It was that we should not consider this just as an emergency well drilling program but should make it a permanent policy of, say three wells, every year in each municipality because under the present emergency provisions the municipality is allowed to drill three wells with government assistance at the federal and provincial levels. If this program were arranged in co-operation with the municipalities and the provinces to develop a well drilling program so that the cost could be spread over the next five or 10 years, a greater number of these emergency wells could be provided.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we have lived through three or four serious drought cycles and we can expect to have them again in the future. Rather than have an emergency develop when we will find a shortage of water in areas where we have these very important cattle herds, if these wells were provided for now they would be there and it would eliminate any emergency which might develop in the future. This, together with our very accelerated P.F.R.A. dugout program, the small dams program and water conservation program such as we have in the south Saskatchewan project, and irrigation, would I think, in the long haul eliminate one of the greatest bugbears affecting the agricultural industry in Saskatchewan. We know we have one of the most highly productive areas in the world as far as wheat production and top quality cattle are concerned. We have these recurring droughts which cause an emergency, such as we encountered last fall.

That is all the remarks I wish to make this afternoon. I would repeat that we appreciate this program. I wish to support the supplementary estimates because these programs are very important to our part of the country which has to suffer these recurring droughts.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, under the item for land protection, reclamation and development I wish that from some portions of my constituency I could help out the Saskatchewan farmers, particularly in the area of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, that of Moose Mountain. We have a problem which is a little different. We have too much water; it comes off the mountain too quickly. I am referring specifically to the Similkameen river which is in my constituency. We have a similar situation on the Rock Creek river. These are both good sized rivers; in fact, I think they would make the Saskatchewan river look sick when they are in full spate. Briefly, our problem is that we have a high run-off, practically an uncontrollable run-off. We need federal and provincial help to tackle the engineering problem. I am hoping that ARDA, as its program develops, will have the answer.

Generally speaking, the agriculture policies brought in during the last five years have been excellent. We have felt their benefit in the Okanagan region the Similkameen region and over in the Grand Forks area just as, I imagine, people interested in agriculture have felt them all over Canada. It seems, however, that ARDA is in a state of flux at the present time. We know that a director has been appointed. Specifically, I should like the department to tell us at this time how far they have gone in the development of ARDA. Has the director met with the provincial ministers of agriculture, for instance? Have they developed a plan? In the case of British Columbia, have those concerned with this program actually got together or not?

To get back to the principal problem, the control of the Similkameen river presents a great many difficulties. I do not know whether the work would be undertaken by the provincial government in co-operation with the federal government and the local authorities or whether it would be undertaken by one or other of those authorities, separately or in conjunction, but the solution of this engineering problem will not be easy. I think the work will in any case be expensive enough to warrant the federal government sharing the cost with the provincial and local authorities.

Referring specifically, once again, to ARDA, I have one more question to ask. Will this machinery be used in cases where a small area could be well served by the placing of a dam, and will it be used in conjunction with the work of provincial governments? What I am really doing is to seek information in order that, looking to the future, I may be able to advise my constituents how they can go about getting aid under the terms of this act.

Mr. Winch: I am sure all members of this committee were most happy that, after years of talking and promising, a federal government has been prepared to co-operate with a provincial government and bring into actuality the commencement of work on the south Saskatchewan dam. In the supplementary estimates which we are now considering under vote No. 616 there is detailed on page 11 an amount of $1,600,000 as the additional amount required in this fiscal year in connection with this scheme.

I wonder if the acting minister is now in a position to give the house a progress report on the south Saskatchewan project. Perhaps he could tell us not only what stage has been reached in the physical construction to date, but also something about the planning which has been done for the future. Important as agreement between the federal and provincial governments may be as far as the construction of the dam itself is concerned, undoubtedly one of the most vital factors is the planning for the utilization of the potential which will be made available in the areas of flood control and irrigation. Undoubtedly this will be an extensive phase of the new development of that area, and I have been wondering what proposals or agreements have been reached as to the method of developing the new irrigation areas and the sharing of responsibility between the federal and the provincial governments. I have been wondering also, whether provision is to be made for the giving of federal aid to the new areas during the formative years. These are matters which should not be left to the last few months. I think we would be most interested to know what information the minister can give us concerning progress made not only in connection with the dam itself but in respect to planning so as to utilize to the full the potential which this new project will create. As I indicated, we would also be interested in the distribution of the cost and the amount of help which will be provided so that the people of this area may reap the fullest benefits in the shortest possible time.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let pass unnoticed the remarks made by my friend the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger). I want to comment on them, not to start a controversy but simply to put the record straight.

A few minutes ago, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska tried to insinuate that we, from the province of Quebec in particular, did not have the courage to give our opinion on the emergency measures for western farmers.

I want to say first of all, Mr. Chairman, that we are very happy to see our friends in the west benefit from legislation enacted to help them when their crops fail. I might add that when a similar situation occurs in eastern Canada, the same thing is done. As a case in point, I would ask my hon. friend from Drummond-Arthabaska to go back to the time of the hog cholera epidemic in my constituency and his last year; he will recall how quickly the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) took measures to remedy the situation.

My hon. friend from Drummond-Arthabaska surely remembers that some 400 herds of swine were affected and that it cost approximately $1,500,000 to the federal government to check the hog cholera.

I do not think we are doing either the eastern farmers or the western farmers a good turn by trying to stir up one group against the other.

I believe that we should concentrate our efforts and do our best in order that farmers may receive the same consideration, when they go through such hardships.

Since my hon. friend talked about the P.F.R.A. emergency fund, I would remind him that the western farmers had been contributing from 1939 to July 1960. They contributed about half of the amount paid back to them in grants.

Whenever a western farmer sells oats or grain of some kind, he is contributing to some extent to the emergency fund. I think we should give consideration to those factors and not raise a controversy, detrimental to both groups.

Let us join hands and we shall certainly succeed in giving satisfaction both to eastern and western farmers for neither the eastern nor the western farmers are seeking pure and simple dole. They want their share and it is only fair that the government should wish to help them.

Please let us try to work together in the best interests of our agricultural group both in the west and in the east.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, under vote No. 617 the federal government is expending $3,888,693 covering contributions to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta of $190,000 through the production and marketing branch, $3,200,000 covering irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces and $498,693 relating to the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Coming as I do from an area with a keen interest in agriculture I invite the committee to examine the question of agriculture in balance. Since 1956 the price of products sold by farmers has increased by 5 per cent whereas the price of products bought by farmers and used in production increased by 12 per cent. The situation is even more grave in certain sectors of the agricultural industry.

Earlier today reference was made to butter and other dairy products. An extremely important dairy product is skimmed milk powder. With respect to this product which is vitally important to eastern farmers there has occurred a sharp drop in price from 1957. In 1957 the price of dry skimmed milk, first grade, f.o.b. Montreal was between 17 and 19 cents per pound and in 1961 the price was between 6 and 10 cents per pound.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. What has this to do with P.F.R.A.?

The Deputy Chairman: I was just about to rise to ask the hon. member for Leeds to assist the Chair by relating what he is saying about skimmed milk to the item under consideration which has to do with irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces.

Mr. Matheson: May I attempt to answer that, Mr. Chairman, by placing on the record the approximate prices paid by farmers for feedstuffs from the west, bagged, per ton, delivered London and Ottawa. The figures in tabulated form are as follows:

	Dec. 15 1960	Dec. 15 1961
Oats—Western No. 1 feed ..	$61.95	$67.80
Barley—Western No. 2 feed	54.83	62.75
Bran	50.86	55.50
Shorts	52.98	57.65

On the other hand there has been a drop of approximately $63,000 in the price supports for dairy products in the year 1960-61 compared with the previous year.

The eastern farmer has every sympathy for his farming brother in western Canada but it is important that some consideration be given to equalizing the position of the eastern and western farmer. The dairy farmer is in the position of having to meet rising costs with no significant increase in his return from the sale of his products. That is something which is frequently overlooked.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks under item 616. Other speakers have mentioned the benefit to communities from the deep well drilling program. At this time I merely wish to endorse their commendation of the program.

I regret that the Minister of Agriculture is still sick as a result of his strenuous efforts on behalf of the farmer because my first remarks were intended for him personally. I wished to pass on to him words of appreciation from farmers in my constituency and other farmers as well for the assistance given last fall by the community pasture division of P.F.R.A. I refer particularly to the prompt action taken last autumn to establish an emergency feeding program. An emergency community pasture was set up in my constituency at Craven, as was mentioned in his opening statement by the acting minister. I visited this feeding ground several times last fall and talked to farmers who had cattle inside the fences on the 1,000 acres of crown owned grass and hay land on the Valeport flats. It was quite a sight to see the great herd in one pasture, many hundreds of head all together, but made up of small numbers from many farms. There were considerable quantities of water and pasture feed in the marshlands.

There was also the emergency feeding by pellets. These pellets made from grain screenings and molasses provided a balanced diet for the cattle. The pellets plus the available pasture feed produced highly satisfactory results. The pellets contained 11 to 12 per cent protein and 15 to 20 per cent fibre. This pellet feeding was provided to the cattle owners at a cost of 10 cents a day for a cow and an additional 4 cents a day for a calf. This nominal charge did not nearly cover the cost of the pellets and I imagine much of the $100,000 in this supplementary estimate covers the extra cost to the government.

As I said, I visited the pasture grounds on several occasions last fall. The farmers were very appreciative of the government's emergency program. One cattle owner said the goverment assistance was a godsend. He explained that he had been right out of feed and his cattle were eating weeds in the ditches along the roads when the emergency feeding program was announced.

I know the farmers were rather proud of the showing their cattle made, which was observable by motorists driving along the highway. There were always a number of owners helping with the pellet feeding and generally keeping an eye on the whole herd. When the nights were dark enough to offer an inducement to old time cattle rustling with modern equipment such as trucks, the owners took turns standing watch.

On one occasion when I visited there, 15 or 20 farmers were working together inoculating all the animals. Everyone seemed to be having a good time except perhaps the animals when the needles got a bit blunt.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I cannot relate the emergency program undertaken by the federal government during the drought to the item under consideration, which has more bearing on future projects involving water use and conservation, irrigation and so on.

Mr. Pascoe: If I may say so, Mr. Chairman, this item mentions the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act program. This is part of the program. In any event, I am nearly finished, but I think the matter comes under this act, if I may say so.

One of the main benefits from the emergency pasture and the government's chief reason for this feeding program was that it prevented panic selling of stock when farm feed was not available. Preventing this panic selling served two purposes; it kept market prices firm and it kept farmers in the business of cattle raising by keeping at least part of their herds intact. As I said earlier, I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture is not here so that I could pass on to him the thanks of the cattle owners. I also wish to thank him personally for acting on my representation to keep this pasture feeding program open longer than was first intended. If I may do so, I should like to draw something to the attention of my friend the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. I believe he said several times that P.F.R.A. was started by a Liberal government.

Mr. Boulanger: No; I did not say that.

Mr. Pascoe: If he had listened to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, he would have heard that it was started by the Bennett government.

Mr. Boulanger: That is what I said.

Mr. Pascoe: If I may do so, I should like to refer to a part that is actually under this item of irrigation. I should just like to call to the attention of the acting minister and, through him, to the attention of the P.F.R.A. officials a proposal by a number of farmers in the Moose Jaw area to dam the river south of Moose Jaw for irrigation purposes. I know the P.F.R.A. officials are quite conversant with this proposal. It has been drawn to their attention several times. I should just like to read again a resolution passed at a meeting of farmers with the Moose Jaw agricultural society. This resolution reads as follows:

> This meeting goes on record as requesting a detailed survey of the Moose Jaw creek area with regard to the possibility for the construction of a dam or dams suitable to store water to irrigate for agricultural purposes.

I should just like to draw that resolution to the attention of the acting minister and I hope he passes it on to the P.F.R.A. officials.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I should like first of all to point out to my colleague the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Pascoe) that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) never claimed credit for the Liberal party for putting into our statute books legislation on assistance to prairie farmers.

What he did say, if I can rely on my memory, was that such legislation had been adopted under the administration of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, but had been implemented by a Liberal administration. If the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) wants to contradict that statement, let him go ahead and do it. Talking about the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, I must say that I listened most carefully to his remarks this afternoon, just like I did yesterday afternoon, and I believe he is actually the Solomon's judgment of the Conservative party in this house. I am not at all surprised that the Prime Minister selected him as an assistant.

He attacked my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska who talked about the assistance to western farmers. My colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska spent a year in the west, in 1931, when he worked on an Alberta farm. I would not be a bit surprised if the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot had spent from five to six years in the west, from 1931 to 1937, since he seems to be talking with so much authority on the subject of western agriculture.

What I fail to understand of some Quebec members is that it is impossible to reach unanimity on any issue related to the common welfare of our province and the jurisdiction of the federal government. We have seen many instances of members from different areas and different provinces who got together, regardless of their party affiliation, to claim not concessions but rights.

The farmers in our parts also have problems and we want to help them. We want the federal government to consider their problems and to solve them.

It is not a question of playing western farmers against eastern farmers. That vagary only exists in the mind of a Solomon like the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) must have his show.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I am not at all surprised by the remarks and interruptions of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. It would appear that he has been brought into this world only to interrupt and talk from his seat, and that is why from time to time his interruptions sound pointless.

Mr. Ricard: That is why I have asked for the floor.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, as I have the floor, I hope to be able to go on with my speech.

An hon. Member: Carry on, Gus.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, the representatives of western farmers are not to be blamed for rising in defence of their fellow citizens, because it is their duty to do so, and I hope they will keep on doing so. But what surprises me, for instance, is the fact that some Quebec Conservatives are rising up in defence of western farmers and are overlooking the problems of those in the east, from Quebec, Ontario, the maritimes and Newfoundland.

We are Canadians just as the others and we want to have what we are entitled to get; we are not asking for any favour.

When I make those remarks, I am thinking of Ontario, the maritimes and Newfoundland as much as of Quebec. That is what I should like my Quebec Conservative friends to understand.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the hon. member for Lapointe should have taken the floor to raise a storm in a tea cup.

Our hon. friends had a very bad day yesterday and they have to do something today to try and make the headlines.

What I am saying today—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): You are the one who wants to make the headlines.

Mr. Boulanger: He has been brought up in the Union Nationale school.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, you have heard the hon. member who has just said that I want to make the headlines. I hope his interruption, as well as that of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, is being noted and will appear in Hansard, because some of those statements are missing from time to time these days.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): You usually say "the record".

Mr. Ricard: Take down all the interruptions.

Mr. Chairman, I only tried a moment ago to get all hon. members to co-operate and when the hon. member for Lapointe rises and twists my remarks, well, he is only using the choice method of the Liberal party—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): It means that we must not speak about the problems of eastern farmers.

Mr. Ricard: —that choice method—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): It means that we must not speak about the problems of eastern farmers.

Mr. Ricard: —which consists in trying to play the east against the west.

Mr. Chairman, you hear these interruptions.

To play the east against the west, that is what the hon. members opposite have tried to do in their 22 years of administration, and for the past four years they have tried more than ever because such is their method: divide and conquer.

Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the hon. member for Lapointe—in the guise of gentility, and usually assuming a look of innocence like a newborn babe—should act like that, because when he wants to sting or give a blow—

Mr. Tremblay: That is when he is in the house—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): You have been away for four years.

Mr. Ricard: —he does what he did a moment ago: he twists and distorts whatever we say.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): That is your brilliant interpretation.

Mr. Tremblay: He does so when he is in the house.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): You have been away for four years now.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at two things. One of them is the lack of vocal representation on behalf of the farmers of eastern Canada by their members. The second is the overabundance of apple polishing by members from western Canada. The charge is made today, and I think it is a justifiable one, that we as members of parliament should look at the estimates we are discussing in terms of what the government is doing and where it is going.

I am not particularly interested in the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre congratulating the minister on having done something for him personally. We are concerned with a program. I was given to understand that a great many of the abuses under P.F.A.A. had been done away with by the government, but that kind of apple polishing speech only indicates to me that the abuses have not been abolished and are coming back with a vengeance. I suggest that this is not what we want.

We should look at agriculture as a whole and I think we should be very surprised that a long range program instituted in the days of Bennett should apply only to three named provinces. Is this problem not a basic problem that affects all of Canada? Have some of the Conservative members not stood up and said that the long range program of their party and of the government is ARDA? Is ARDA not an extension of assistance to all the provinces and, if so, why has it taken so long to do something about it? In the pamphlet issued by the minister, which the hon. member for Timmins reminds me was issued to the public before the legislation was passed, there is this statement:

> As a means of meeting the small farm problem the government has under consideration ways and means of improving the level of living of farmers on small farms by means of better land use, encouraging the formation of economic farm units.

The reference is to a statement by the Prime Minister as found in Hansard of August 30, 1958. On December 15, 1960, we passed legislation providing for the extension of these benefits to other areas of Canada. Can the farmers not legitimately ask the government why the benefits are not being extended to all Canadians? Why is western Canada alone benefiting? Is it not time that the Minister of Agriculture told the Canadian people why the legislation is not being extended to all parts of Canada? When ARDA was enacted the minister agreed, as I think every member of the house did, that ARDA was not going to be legislation for specific provinces but would apply to all agricultural provinces.

Let us not fool the Canadian people into thinking that this money is to solve the drought problem in western Canada last year. It is true that there is a little extra money and it is quite true that there have been a few more wells drilled but this legislation has been on the statute books of Canada for many years, in good years and in bad. Is it not true that western farmers are as well able to look after their ups and downs as well as other farmers are? If it is, then the pamphlet that was issued to sell ARDA is not correct. It is pointed out in the pamphlet that in the province of Saskatchewan, for instance, only 4 per cent of the farmers had annual production under $1,200 in value.

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are not on the ARDA program. There is no such item in these estimates.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is not the ARDA program. I am reading from the pamphlet that was issued before the ARDA program was instituted. It illustrates what is needed in western Canada, and I can well understand the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs raising a point of order because here is an indication that in Saskatchewan only 4 per cent of its population had an annual income under $1,200 a year. In the province of Quebec the figure is 28 per cent.

We have absolutely no objection to and have always supported programs for western Canada. We are simply asking now that some of the western members be good enough to help some of us in the east to do for the rest of Canada what we are willing to do for them. We have provided the machinery that has made it possible, along with good government in Saskatchewan, for the people of that province to have better incomes than in any other agricultural province in Canada. The province of Quebec is one of the worst off in this regard and their problems are connected mainly with the dairy industry. All I am saying is that we should give the same kind of assistance to them and it can be provided under exactly the same kind of items as we are discussing today.

In my area there are thousands of acres of cleared grassland on which the farmers are not bothering to grow hay because they cannot sell it. We would like to have community pastures. We would like the government to come to us and say that they will feed our dairy cows for 10 cents a day and our calves for 4 cents a day. They are paying for this in the large area of western Canada affected by drought and are able to do it for $100,000. I think that the government is to be congratulated if this is the case, but I think the minister is under obligation to tell us how much of the money went into the subsidy to pay for the pellets which the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre suggested were provided out of the $100,000.

I am only suggesting that if this is a good thing for the farmers of western Canada then let us not have it only in the years when there is drought. Any beef producer will tell you that if you can feed a cow for 10 cents a day you are doing exceptionally well. In fact, if you can keep a herd alive in my part of the country for 10 cents a head you are doing very well. I should like to know why this subsidy is not being provided under this program in my part of Canada and in the rest of the country. I think the government has an obligation to tell us what part of the subsidy came from the added amount for which we are now asked in this supplementary estimate.

The Conservative members from eastern Canada must be aware of the situation. I know that many of them are connected with the dairy industry, which is in very serious straits. Many Conservative members are concerned with the production of beef, poultry or swine and I am surprised that they have not asked that what is being done to help the farmers of western Canada should be extended to the rest of Canada. Good heavens, Mr. Chairman, surely we do not ask for legislation just to elect a large number of members from western Canada but rather for legislation which applies to all of Canada, which is good for all of Canada and which assists the agricultural industry to operate in the most effective and efficient way and to get the most out of the natural resource being used. If there is anything else being done under these provisions I think we should find out about it now. While the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs does not want to talk about ARDA, I think this would be a very good time for farmers all across Canada—

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I did not say that I did not want to talk about ARDA. ARDA is a very great program and I am willing to talk about it for hours and hours because it is a wonderful thing for agriculture in this country. However, I did draw the chairman's attention to the fact that under this item the remarks of the hon. member in talking about ARDA were not in order, and that is my position.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the time of the committee, but if hon. members will read this pamphlet I am sure they will find that every problem we are discussing now will be solved if ARDA is implemented and is made 100 per cent effective. There will be no need for the legislation we are talking about now if this pamphlet is correct in its presentation of the problem.

Mr. McIntosh: I just want to ask the minister one question. The trend in the past has been for officials of the P.F.R.A. to concentrate their efforts on larger projects such as the south Saskatchewan dam and neglect the smaller projects. I wonder if the minister could give us some assurance that this same pattern will not continue in the future?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): To answer the last question first, I should like to say that there were almost 9,000 small projects undertaken in the past fiscal year, about double the average in the past.

I should like to answer some specific questions that have been asked of me. The hon. member for Vancouver East asked me about the construction program for the Saskatchewan dam. The completion date is 1965 and the program is now on schedule. It was a little behind, but as a result of the excellent construction weather that existed during this fiscal year, the program is now back on schedule. Under the terms of the agreement it is the responsibility of the Saskatchewan government to develop the areas to be irrigated, and the Saskatchewan government has such a program under way at the moment to ascertain which areas are most suitable.

The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, I think it was, put a question to me as to whether or not a meeting had yet been held in connection with the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. I think his question was out of order, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps you will bear with me if I answer it. I can tell the committee that the director has met with the officials of the provinces and programs to be undertaken under this act are now being evolved. This act will allow the type of work that is now being done in the particular area to which this item applies, and will allow this type of water conservation work to be done in co-operation with the provinces in other parts of Canada.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska asked me if P.F.R.A. would be extended to the whole of Canada. I cannot speak for the government on that matter, but I should like to point out to him that the same type of work that is now being undertaken under this measure can be undertaken under ARDA.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

630. To authorize the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund to be called the peace treaty claims (Japan) settlement account, to which shall be credited all amounts received from Japan by way of settlement of its obligations under article 18 (a) of the treaty of peace between Canada and Japan that was signed at San Francisco on the 8th of September, 1951, and, notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize payments out of the said account in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with the peace treaty claims (Japan) settlement regulations established by order in council P.C. 1961-1850 of the 22nd day of December, 1961, in respect of claims and in respect of expenses incurred in investigating and reporting on such claims and to authorize the repayment out of the peace treaty claims (Japan) settlement account of all amounts that have been paid out toward such expenses under the authority of this or any other Appropriation Act, $1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman, you are going rather rapidly. I should like to ask the minister if he can say whether or not this vote would have anything to do with the compensation being paid to the Hong Kong veterans, either in respect of their period of imprisonment or as compensation for forced labour. Perhaps I can take just one or two sentences to elaborate upon what I have in mind. As I understand it, and I must confess to the parliamentary secretary that I have not got the documents with me that I hoped to have when I rose to say a word about this subject and I am just relying on memory, we did make provision out of the war claims fund for these veterans on a basis roughly comparable to that of the United States so far as compensation for maltreatment of these prisoners during their period of imprisonment is concerned. However, I believe the United States also gave a forced labour award which we have not given.

I believe there was some problem at that time as to whether or not there would be adequate funds. As I understand it, some of the Hong Kong veterans feel that there were, in fact, adequate funds to give an award comparable to the United States award. I do not believe the question is closed. I would not want anyone to think I was seeking to say anything controversial or critical in any way. I am simply seeking to elucidate a question and get a little information. If the parliamentary secretary can give me a little information, I know that there are a number of Hong Kong veterans who will be interested in it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This particular item does not relate to the problem which the hon. gentleman has just raised. Actually, this item arises out of paragraph 18(a) of the treaty of peace with Japan and deals entirely with claims arising out of the Sino-Japanese war of 1937-41. It involves, actually, quite a small sum of money which was received in September of 1961, a lump sum settlement of some $17,500, United States, which then being converted, provided $18,025, Canadian. This amount is available for distribution to a small number of claimants who suffered as a result of the Sino-Japanese war. The Minister of Finance has been authorized to retain an adviser in relation to the disbursement of that fund, and has retained Mr. Justice Hyndman, whose experience is pre-eminent in this field and for whose wisdom and judgment my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate has as high a regard as I have.

The particular matter to which my hon. friend refers does not come under this particular item. He has referred, I think, to the forced labour award for prisoners of war resulting from the Hong Kong situation. This was referred in the first instance, as I recollect, to the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, now chief justice of Nova Scotia, who associated it with an award for maltreatment—I am speaking now from memory—of $1 per day. When there was some money in the fund, the war claims fund, then this government raised the amount I think to $1.50. The matter was referred again to the chairman of the war claims commission, Chief Justice Campbell of the province of Prince Edward Island, who reiterated the Ilsley award. I can only say to my hon. friend that the amount which remains in the fund is now only $67,534.35. The final report of the war claims commission has not been presented, and beyond that at this stage I cannot go.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the parliamentary secretary for being so generous, because the point I have raised is not directly connected with the item. I would ask him, if I may be permitted just to shade on the edge of the rules in so doing, whether he would assure me that the representations I have received will receive careful consideration if I pass them on to him.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the representations my hon. friend makes always receive careful consideration.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to make sure that the only amount that is going to be in this fund when it is set up is $17,500.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Seventeen thousand five hundred United States dollars. It was paid in United States dollars, and worked out to $18,025 Canadian.

Mr. Carter: The balance in the war claims commission will not be transferred to this fund?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, not at all; they are quite separate funds.

Item agreed to.

General items of payroll costs including superannuation payments—

631. Government's contribution to the hospital insurance (outside Canada) plan—further amount required and to authorize the treasury board to make regulations to extend the scope of the plan established pursuant to vote 668 of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1958, to include members of the regular forces in such circumstances and for such periods as the regulations prescribe, $90,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the parliamentary secretary just tell us the reason for this vote.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This vote is for an extension of what is an important hospital insurance principle for Canadian government employees and their dependants who are stationed abroad. It is for the foreign service and affects a total of 8,700 people. The position was that by a vote in 1958 treasury board was authorized to make regulations providing for hospital insurance for Canadian government employees and their dependants abroad, for dependants of the R.C.M.P. abroad, and dependants of the armed forces.

That was extended by the Appropriation Act of 1960 so that it would cover service subsequent to returning to Canada until these employees or their dependants could pick up the provincial plans. The basis of contribution is that which an employee would make were he resident in Ontario. In other words, this plan for federal employees is based upon the Ontario hospital insurance scheme. This particular supplementary estimate is to cover additional costs due to a considerable expansion that has occurred in the membership and the use of this plan since the preparation of the main estimates for the year.

In addition to the extension of the scope of the plan additional moneys are required so that members of the forces will not be without hospital insurance coverage while on certain types of leave without pay, or while qualified for coverage under a provincial plan having been released from the service immediately prior to or upon their return from a posting outside Canada. The amount previously voted was $130,000; this vote is $90,000, making a total of $220,000 for this purpose during the year.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, if the committee looks at the language of the vote it will perhaps realize that we are again carrying on this business of legislating under the estimates rather than by amendment of an act. The former member for Winnipeg North Centre has elaborated on this argument and I am not going to repeat it. Of course, his criticism in those days was directed to the former government. There may be good reason for us to look at this type of thing, because in vote 631 the committee will see that we are authorizing not only the expenditure of $90,000 but we are authorizing treasury board, which is a small committee of the cabinet, to make regulations to extend the scope of the plan. We do not even know what regulations are likely to be made by treasury board.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will tell us what the plan is and what is going to be recommended by the Department of Finance—which is in charge of this particular item—to treasury board, if they have not made regulations already. Of course he cannot guarantee that they will accept his minster's proposals, but at least we in committee of supply should be informed as to what he thinks his minister is going to recommend to treasury board.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The regulations that already exist are of course a matter of public record and have been laid upon the table of the house. My hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River has commented upon the general procedure of legislation in the estimates. I have in another place at another time expressed certain views with relation to that matter. They are a matter of public record and I think I shall have to be content to let that record stand.

My hon. friend asks what will be the recommendation in relation to the amendments to the regulations which are dated November 24, 1960. I can only say that they will be for the purpose of expanding the existing regulations so that coverage will be provided for certain members of the armed forces while they are on leave without pay, or for certain members of the armed forces and employees of the government of Canada to pick up this insurance coverage prior to their leaving for service abroad.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary whether this covers the problem where on occasion a member of the armed forces may be on leave and is killed. Is there an insurance policy of that nature attached to the hospitalization plan?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, this covers the question of hospital insurance exclusively. It has nothing to do with what may be the insurance feature in relation to the man's service in the armed forces.

Mr. Benidickson: The parliamentary secretary indicated that with respect to regulations for employees of the government of Canada serving outside Canada the government was using the Ontario scheme. Is Ontario as generous as other provinces in this country? I do not think Ontario is the most generous; I think they have been very niggardly in the administration of some of their petty regulations in connection with the cost-sharing program. I know that Ontario has the largest population and, of course, has one of the oldest provincial governments.

Why do we rely upon Ontario as our standard for what might be made available to employees of the crown serving outside Canada, particularly when in an administrative way I think Ontario has not been very generous in these welfare measures, including this particular one of hospital insurance.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend surprises me greatly when he suggests that the Ontario plan is in any way niggardly. My personal impression is that it is the very reverse. I have had opportunity during the last two or three years to take advantage of the Ontario plan, and I must say I have felt it was a most generous plan in all particulars.

I am not in a position before the committee today to make a comparison between the amount an employee of the federal government might receive in one province as against another. I can only say to my hon. friend that it would not be feasible to have ten separate plans operating and use the residence or domicile of the individual. The only reason the Ontario plan is chosen, I think, is that the national capital is located in Ontario and it is thereby the most convenient plan to adopt. I am sure that all those who benefit by this plan are quite satisfied that they are receiving generous treatment.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one respect in which the Ontario plan is much less satisfactory than that of the other provinces. I refer to the fact that it does not cover the whole population. In British Columbia, for example, there is a sales tax and everybody is covered by hospital insurance. In Ontario it is true that all people employed for wages are covered, but self employed people are not all covered.

Mr. Benidickson: Only there are more than eight people in the firm.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps this is not the proper occasion on which to make this observation, but I believe that there is no more inefficient bureaucracy that I have discovered than the Ontario hospital insurance commission. I say that out of personal knowledge of a number of cases. They can take a good many lessons from the department of health and welfare here on how to organize a service properly. It may be that taking Ontario as a model has no effect upon people overseas, and it may be I am using this committee as a forum for the expression of a grievance that I ought to get my member to express in the Ontario legislature. But my member in the Ontario legislature represents the riding of Russell and he seems to be otherwise preoccupied these days. You will understand me, sir.

Another question I wish to ask is this. The provision here refers to persons outside Canada, I take it, and it covers the period after their return to Canada before they would be dealt with under the operation of a provincial scheme. I think that in some provinces they would be covered as soon as they came back. In Ontario, as another of their little tricks, they deprive them of coverage for some time. But what I am trying to find out is this: does the federal government have any similar provision for any of its employees in Canada, or is this intended just to cover those who are not covered by any provincial scheme? For example, what about employees in the territories?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This particular vote relates only to employees and their dependants abroad, or to dependants of members of the forces. With reference to the situation of employees in Canada, they will insure themselves under the various provincial schemes. I do have a recollection that there is a territorial scheme in existence both for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I am speaking from recollection only, but I believe the territories have arrangements similar to the provinces.

The federal government has in the last two or three years provided, on a generous basis, a group medical and surgical scheme which is an outstanding type of group scheme, though, of course, it does not involve the hospital arrangements we are discussing here.

As to the hon. gentleman's last remarks I can only say that my experience of the Ontario scheme has been very different from that which he has represented to the committee. I have found the Ontario scheme most satisfactory and most generous.

632. To authorize persons who were contributors under the Civil Service Superannuation Act immediately prior to the 1st day of January, 1954, and who became contributors under the Public Service Superannuation Act on that date, who failed to elect under subsection (5) of section 25 of the said act before the 1st day of January, 1955, to elect, in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, to count service that would have been countable by them under the said section if they had not so failed to elect, and to deem such election to be valid for all purposes of the said act, $1.

Mr. Peters: Can the minister tell us how many people are involved in this vote?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): One.

Mr. Caron: I shall try to ask my question in English, so you will not need that thing in your ear. Does this provision mean that those who did not take advantage of the law of 1954 can now take advantage of it?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is confined entirely to those persons who failed to elect under subsection 5 of section 25 of the act. This is an election having to do with the defence services pension fund. In reply to the hon. member for Timiskaming I said one person was involved. We are only aware of one. There may be others—there may turn out to be others—but it is thought unlikely.

Mr. Caron: There is one dollar provided because you think you have sufficient funds to look after this in the regular administration?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, funds are available because of contributions which were made for this purpose by the individual concerned in the belief he was in the public service superannuation fund. This simply gives the power to elect.

Mr. Caron: And if anybody else comes along they would be accepted under the same principle?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If there is someone who comes under subsection 5 of section 25 of the act.

Mr. Benidickson: The parliamentary secretary says that up to the present time he has knowledge of only one individual whose case is being advanced as an argument to justify an amendment which is, again, being done here by means of an item in the estimates. He indicates that the employee was employed by the department of defence.

The hon. gentleman will have read the report of the Auditor General with respect to a number of superannuation items. Would he take this opportunity to indicate to what extent he is aware of steps taken in his department to tighten up the situation with respect to some of these practices which have been drawn to the attention of the public and to the attention of members of parliament by the Auditor General? After all, it is the Department of Finance which is responsible for the provision of superannuation in respect not only of civilians but of people formerly employed in the armed forces. It seems obvious that senior persons in the employ of the government have been soft in connection with placing former employees on retirement on a basis which would not normally prevail in private business. The cost of retiring an unsatisfactory employee on pension has, as the Auditor General has pointed out, been most expensive to the taxpayer.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think I should point out that if I were to undertake to go into that question on this particular item I should be carried very far from the vote itself and the discussion would soon be completely out of order. The hon. member and I will, I am sure, meet in another forum, namely the public accounts committee, where this matter will be discussed in detail. At that time we shall have witnesses before us and we shall be in a position to discuss the question on the basis of the information disclosed. I have not brought with me today the details of the Auditor General's report or the other facts of the cases mentioned because I did not think they were relevant to this item, which is a very confined one.

Mr. Benidickson: Has the parliamentary secretary the authority to assure me that we are likely to have the normal sittings of the public accounts committee to review, as we would in a normal year, the various recommendations of the Auditor General paragraph by paragraph?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have no knowledge which the hon. gentleman does not have, but I would draw his attention to items 13 and 14 of today's order paper which indicate that there are to be references to that committee.

Mr. Benidickson: It could be a smokescreen.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All I can say is that when the house refers those items to the public accounts committee, that very good committee will do its duty as it always has.

633. Contribution to the New Brunswick disaster fund, $50,000.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the government for this item. Perhaps I may be permitted to take a moment or two to say that this item seems to me to point up the need of a permanent fund of this kind to provide relief for our fishermen who so often have to suffer disaster. We all have poignant memories of the disaster for which this contribution is being made. A year before that there was a disaster in my own riding in which a dragger was lost with all hands as a result of which 14 families were left penniless. Only yesterday a storm occurred resulting in a loss of considerable property belonging to fishermen.

As far as I know no lives were lost but even the loss or destruction of property can be a disaster.

I wish to ask the government to give consideration to establishing a permanent disaster fund for fishermen. The minister pointed out some time ago that fishermen do not have too much in common with farmers. However, the farmer can always go to bed and sleep safe and sound every night but the fisherman risks his life every time he goes out to earn his living. I believe special consideration should be given the fishermen in view of that fact.

We have had ample evidence in recent years of the disasters which our fishermen and fishing communities have to suffer. I urge the government to give consideration to establishing a special disaster fund for fishermen.

Special—

634. Grant to l'association des universités de langue française to assist in defraying the expenses of the first world congress of French language universities held in Canada in 1961, $15,000.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this item whose purpose is to pay a grant to the association des universités de langue française. It will assist this organization in defraying the expense of the first world congress of French language universities which was held in Montreal from September 9 to 13, 1961.

I should like to point out right now that this item comes under the government's program designed to foster the expansion, throughout the world, of the French culture, to which six million Canadians belong, in the same way as the federal government already promotes the cultural development of commonwealth countries.

The congress I mentioned was an essentially international event, because it brought together representatives from 37 universities where teaching is done exclusively or mostly in French. In addition, the governments of the ten states made it a point to be represented by observers, high officials of the national education or foreign affairs departments. Two countries even sent their minister of national education.

At the end of the conference, the participants established an organization which ensures close contact between the French-speaking universities of the world and which will take the necessary steps and carry out proper investigations and research on their behalf.

[Mr. Carter.]

The organization is known as AUPELF that is the association des universités entièrement ou partiellement de langue française. Its board is composed of Msgr. Irenée Lussier, rector of Montreal University, chairman; Mr. Marcel Bouchard, rector of the University of Dijon, France and Mr. Mohammed El Fasi, rector of the Moroccan Universities, vice-chairmen. The members come in particular from Lille, France; Algiers; Liege, Belgium; Dakar, Senegal; Leopoldville, Congo; and Tananarive, Madagascar.

The fact that these members, who have chosen a Canadian as chairman of their association, come from such widely scattered places clearly indicates the international character of such a meeting and the world-wide importance of the role our French-speaking universities are called upon to play.

In this respect, I hasten to remind the house that Mr. Andre Bachand, who has recently been appointed assistant to the rector of the University of Montreal, played a major part in the organization of the convention. I take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to congratulate Mr. Bachand for the work he has done on this occasion, as director of public relations at his university, and to congratulate him also on his recent appointment to his important post. The many members of this house who have had the pleasure of meeting him appreciate his courtesy and competence. They will join with me, I am sure, in wishing him every success.

May I also associate with these congratulations Mr. Jean Marc Leger, editorial writer of Le Devoir. The success of the convention is largely due to him. On that particular occasion, he substantially contributed to the renown of Canada abroad.

In passing this item 634, the committee will acknowledge the advisability of giving aid to AUPELF whose work, let us not forget, will benefit many Canadians since this organization will stimulate co-operation between Canada and foreign countries through the exchange of professors, scholarships and courses for students and scholars, as well as through the exchange of textbooks and reference and scientific works.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I wish to add my voice to that of the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion).

He is very pleased that l'association des universités de langue française chose to hold its first convention in Canada. This adds to the importance, not only of the French culture in Canada, but also to our French Canadian universities.

I am sure all the members will be pleased to approve this additional amount, for everyone to know that in Canada, the English-speaking as well as the French-speaking Canadians gladly unite in order to assist association des universités de langue française to go on in its efforts to make known throughout the world the French culture which is particularly appreciated by those who have taken the trouble to get acquainted with it.

I associate myself wholeheartedly with the Secretary of State in support of the item we are asked to vote on.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise on behalf of this group to express our complete support for this estimate. I am sorry I must confine my remarks to English on this occasion as my French is not as good as the Prime Minister's. However, I want the committee to know we consider this a worthwhile move and are proud to be associated with any estimate that leads to a further development in understanding of the great French culture.

Mr. Benidickson: Hon. members will realize this amount refers to a conference already held. We all appreciate the honour that was given Canada when this country was chosen as the site of the first conference of the French language universities association.

I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary for information. We are now voting what appears to be an additional $15,000 of a grant which may have been $65,000 in the basic estimate for 1961-62. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am afraid I do not understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Benidickson: In the first column of the document before us we are asked to vote $15,000. The second column refers to an amount of $65,000. The third item, of course, is the total for the department. Have we previously granted something under this vote?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, not for this purpose. The amount involved there, I believe, is the total budget for all purposes. The $15,000 is the amount of the federal contribution.

(Translation):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, as an English-speaking Canadian, who has a strong desire to be bilingual but who fears that he will never manage it, I am happy to support the views expressed by the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion), the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I correct the answer I gave to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in respect of the amount of $65,000. That actually is approximately the total budget of the organization. I looked in my notes and thought that was what was involved there. If my hon. friend will look at the heading "special" he will see that it covers $50,000 for the New Brunswick disaster fund and $15,000 for this. The total is $65,000 in the second column.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

Forest research branch—

635. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $80,000.

Mr. Herridge: I intend to be quite brief. The members of this group cannot resist having a few words to say on such an important estimate, one of $80,000 for additional costs in connection with the forest research branch, inasmuch as we realize how important this work is to the welfare of the present and future generations. The only thing we regret is that more is not spent on forest research. When you study the budgets of European nations and some other nations and consider the great importance of the forest industry to Canada, we are still not spending nearly sufficient on forest research if the work required is to be done. Before proceeding I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy whenever I have sought information or asked for bulletins or literature or things of that sort which are within the range of his department. I appreciate that courtesy and I appreciate also the minister's woodsy feel. You can be a technician; you can know the scientific aspects of forestry; but if you have not the woodsy feel—and it is something you acquire by living in the forests and being associated with the industry—you do not understand the problems as well.

I intend to have more to say on the main estimates. However, the importance of this work is not understood by many members of the house. I was just glancing roughly through the annual report for 1960-61 and I noticed that this branch is undertaking work in silviculture and management, mensuration—which is a very important subject, changing the techniques from one type of scale to another—tree improvement, tree biology, forest and forest land, forest inventories research and forest fire research. All these activities require greater funds than have been available in the past if the work is to be undertaken satisfactorily, and in time to produce the results which are, shall I say required or necessary for the practical application of the recommendations derived from the studies in some cases.

I rise at this time, particularly to draw attention to one aspect of forest research or the direction in which forest research can be applied. I wish to refer particularly to the work of the Canadian tree farmers associations. I urge the government to give that at present small organization, but one growing in importance, every possible assistance and encouragement. It is a socially responsible and desirable form of free enterprise as it is composed of persons who are aiming to accept their responsibilities to present and future generations by making certain that we conserve and develop our forest resources to the greatest advantage.

It is marvellous field for young people to enter if they wish to have a co-operative attitude toward life and yet have the opportunity to give expression to personal initiative and personal application of their abilities and energy. I therefore urge every consideration for this organization. Its main purposes are to promote the conservation and the development of forest resources through the ownership of woodlots and tree farms by individuals, small corporations and so on.

I wish to bring to the attention of the committee and the minister briefly the recommendations made by this organization to the resources for tomorrow conference, as they were the result of numerous meetings on the part of the directors in association with other persons who have been interested in this field. I might say that this forest industry is my life blood; I have lived my whole life in it. The recommendations are as follows:

(1) An extension forester must be available eventually for every 100,000 to 200,000 acres of tree farm land and woodlots.

There is a connecting link between the tree farmer or wood lot farmer and the research facilities that are available.

(2) In general to encourage competent tree farmers to remain in all areas of general marginal and submarginal food producing land and to encourage these tree farmers to hold or obtain adequate acreage to support a healthy tree farming activity in all such communities.

That is where a good deal of research is required in order to find out different types of land that are suitable for this purpose, and species that are less suitable. It is a splendid field for young people from rural communities, particularly if it is allied with farming or other rural activities. Then they go on to say this:

Complete desertion of these areas would result in less intensive tree farming in the entire area because of the alternative, less economical, less intensive operation possible by public ownership.

I agree with that statement, on that scale, They continue:

[Mr. Herridge.]

We must not adopt a policy in Canada that would unwittingly have the effect of creating collective, publicly owned farms of the type in Russia.

Then the next recommendation is as follows:

(3) Availability of loans on long term at low interest rates to encourage and aid the independent tree farmer during a period of as much as 25 years to establish an efficient, productive, high yield tree farm.

I might say that 50 years ago I bought some land upon which nothing was growing but ferns, willow herb and willows. Now I have on that property white pine, 2 feet in diameter and as much as 100 feet in height. It is particularly good growing land, but it shows what can be done in one lifetime. From the point of view of the average Canadian where our forest resources have been so readily available, we have not acquired to any great extent to date that long term view or that willingness to plant at the present time for the benefit of future generations, which prevails to a much greater extent in Great Britain and in European countries. I remember that when the Duke of Buccleuch was here he told me what he had done on his estates since the war. To give him credit, may I say that his family has a sense of responsibility to the state and a responsibility to future generations. One hundred and ten thousand acres of his estate were overcut and in a sense destroyed because of the necessity to supply pit props for war production in the second world war. I forget when it was that he was here, but I think it was about four years ago. At that time he told me at the family's own expense they had replanted 77,000 acres. How many corporations have done that in Canada in the same period since the second world war, corporations that have no timber because in days past they destroyed the forest by their methods of logging and so on. I admit that those practices are changing and improving. However, I see a great future for the forest industry in rural communities. I am speaking on this item in view of the necessity of extending forest research because there are millions of acres in Canada which can be brought into production for the benefit of future generations and, with proper and selective cutting, can provide some income for the present generation. The association goes on to recommend:

4. Vocational training of tree farmers in the technical features of growing, harvesting and marketing of wood as a crop. This will be a form of adult education and may be copied from the Danish folk schools.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I have read a good deal about their practices, and I bring this to the attention of the Minister of Labour who I see is listening to what I have to say.

This is a type of vocational training that has not been undertaken to date and one that can be applied very successfully in a good many areas of Canada if you can get the co-operation of the local forest industry, the local educational authorities and local farmers' and other organizations. There is an opportunity here for the training of these people along vocational lines so that they will have the knowledge that will place them between the scientifically trained forest engineer and the person who works in the woods without knowledge of what he is doing. This is the next recommendation of the association.

5. The federal and provincial governments can assist our association greatly in carrying out its programs for local groups of woodlot owners by making available technical information on each of these programs and providing media for demonstrating this information to farmers at meetings. This could be the basis of the vocational adult education program. Macdonald college and other colleges have similar types of programs and others are needed.

I think these programs can be fitted into vocational schools. I am very glad to see that a vocational school is going to be erected in the city of Nelson as a result of the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments. Here is an ideal centre. As you know, Mr. Chairman, in my constituency alone last year there were over 300 million board feet of lumber cut and I believe it is estimated that up to 400 million board feet of lumber a year can be harvested in perpetuity by selective cutting. When you think of that vast and perpetual production and the increasing necessity for skills and for understanding in the industry and the increasing part that tree farmers or woodlot owners, whichever you like to call them, can play, one can see that there is a tremendous opportunity here.

In British Columbia the tree farms are largely huge areas that are leased by the large corporations from the provincial government. When I speak of tree farmers I am speaking of those who have anything from 100 to 5,000 acres of timber which they are operating on a perpetual yield basis. I should like to suggest that in establishing vocational schools the Department of Forestry would be very wise to get in touch with the industry and enter into consultation with all those people who have a knowledge of forestry and forest research including departmental officials and the local institutions in the area it is intended to serve. We can establish these vocational training schools for the management of tree farms or woodlots, and we have a lot of marginal land which will provide an opportunity to arrest the drift, shall I say, toward the entire destruction of what I term socially responsible and socially desirable free enterprise.

In the district in which I have spent the greater part of my life and which is a forested area, the harvesting of timber is largely carried on at present by three corporations. Yet there is a tremendous opportunity for the use of marginal lands with co-operation between the federal and provincial governments in making possible the purchase of forested land for tree farm purposes, the promotion of tree farming and the provision of opportunities for literally thousands of persons to have independent, happy and fruitful lives by the practice of this occupation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if I may say a few words following the spokesman of the free enterprisers and the dukes, I should like to say that I too cannot find it in my heart to suggest that we should not vote at least this additional sum for the purpose for which it is requested, that of forestry research. I wish to make a special appeal, and the minister will understand readily why I am doing so, for the intensification of research into two particular aspects of forestry. After all, our forests provide the biggest and most valuable crop in Canada, a fact that is sometimes forgotten, and it seems to me that we lose a great deal of that crop every year by fire. This was particularly brought to our attention, of course, by the forest fires in Newfoundland last summer.

It seems to me there are two kinds of research that could very well be intensified. The first is research into better and also cheaper methods of fighting fires because, as I discovered, fighting fires is not a job for enthusiastic amateurs. To be done successfully it has got to be done by people who know how.

It is true, of course, that forest fires are not always a total disaster, that there are times when forests benefit from being burned, but in most cases it is desirable to arrest these fires at a very early stage. I recognize that in this field most of the responsibility rests with the provinces, but the federal government can certainly do a good deal in two directions, first, by the co-ordination of efforts and perhaps the establishment of a strategic reserve of firefighters and, second, by research into better methods of fire fighting.

There is another aspect of this subject which it seems to me also deserves constant study, that of salvage after a fire has taken place. We know that in most cases these fires do not destroy everything and that a great deal can be salvaged if the right methods are used. A great deal can also be done if the right methods are used to promote the healthy development of new forests where fires have taken place. Perhaps because my own constituency was more adversely affected by forest fires last year than any other single constituency in Canada, the matter is possibly more in my mind than it is in the minds of some of the other hon. members at the present time. The minister came down himself to see what was happening at the very height of our difficulties last summer and I am sure I am addressing a minister who is very sympathetic. The minister, like the hon. member for Kootenay West, is familiar with the lumber business and, if I may say so modestly, I too have some knowledge because actually I was in the lumber business before I was 15 years of age. So that it is not just something in which I have taken an interest since I became a member of parliament. I feel that I am speaking to someone who is thoroughly sympathetic when I make this plea for intensification of this aspect of research, not that it is more important than the other aspect but because it is a field in which there is still a great deal to be learned, as is the case in every branch of the industry.

We do know that there is increasing competitiveness with woods products from products of some of our resources that are not renewable like the forests, and it is tremendously in the national interest to keep our forest products competitive in every way with other products, and not merely to keep up the supply but to increase the supply as the years go by because the demand will inevitably increase.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to associate myself with the hon. members for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) and for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), the latter being the most capitalistic of socialists, to say that there is certainly—I said socialist capitalist—and in order to join in their praise of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming).

The effort to instil into the public the importance of our future forests, and the forestry work to help the provinces were needed and called for.

I have been told, though I am no expert in this matter, that the minister is doing a remarkable job for which he deserves to be commended.

Earlier today I heard the hon. member for Kootenay West tell us that he once planted trees that are now 135 feet high, and measuring several feet around the base.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

As far as I am concerned, in 1942 I went into the bush to fetch two spruce trees which I took home and planted in front of my house. I looked after them, I saw to it that they were not broken, and, today, those trees have reached a height of about 35 feet, and a diameter of about 12 inches above the roots, whereby, that means if someone, even without being an expert in the matter, makes an effort to study the question, he finally loves all that beautifies the surroundings of his home.

In 1936, we made a test in Hull. We obtained from the provincial government of Quebec, for the junior chamber of commerce of the city of Hull, 1,200 maple trees which were transplanted in that city. Unfortunately that work had not been preceded by a period of education and preparation of our school children. Those 1,200 maple trees were planted but, unfortunately, there are only three or four left today, because they were broken by the school children who ran and played around them, not being used to such means of adornment and embellishment in our cities. Thus the city of Hull was deprived of a desirable improvement because one of those maple trees planted near my place has now reached about 100 feet in height and a diameter of some 18 to 22 inches at the butt. If we had first of all had our school children fully understand the value and beauty of trees, they would have protected them and today our city would be so much the nicer with 1,200 fine trees.

Therefore, I would ask the minister to enter into an agreement with the departments of education of the various provinces in order that an educational program be implemented to instil into our children and our young people the beauty of a tree and its value around private homes, and in the forest.

I do not believe the minister will refuse to consider that matter which in my opinion is of the utmost importance because the growing generation is not adequately prepared in that field.

When the Department of Forestry was created some time ago, we complained that the minister had not appointed a single French Canadian to an important position. Now I see here the item "salaries and wages" and I feel I may ask the minister if he has been able, since the establishment of his department, to find at least one person from the province of Quebec or from any other part of Canada with a thorough knowledge of French to act in an important capacity in that department. Because, as I said some time ago, some English speaking people, probably without any ill will, ignore the fact that there is a very touchy French speaking group in Canada—and one cannot blame them for being touchy. We have always been a minority, and we are still considered as such except in the province of Quebec which some seem to be treating as some kind of a reservation—French Canada—the province of Quebec only.

Well, I think we are entitled to be touchy and to ask, each time the occasion arises, what we are entitled to in Canada.

I am making this speech without any acrimony or spitefulness. But I ask this: if it has not already been done, I hope the matter will be reconsidered, and that it will be realized that the French element was entitled to be represented in that department, because we do have in Quebec forestry experts.

I know that, for some time, the Quebec government has been picking senior federal civil servants to bring them over to Quebec. Well, we could do the same thing, and pick within the provincial civil service a certain number of experts whom we could bring here in Ottawa; we would then establish the required balance, which would make French Canadians happy, as they are entitled to be.

The Chairman: Shall item 635 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make. I could conclude in about two minutes if the committee would give me the privilege, and if there are no other speakers.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to make these remarks?

Mr. Howard: I think perhaps it might be well to call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE ELECTORAL DISTRICTS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Representation Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member for Skeena rises on a point of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the point of order which I should like the house to consider is this. Part of the principle contained in Bill C-14 is to repeal one part of the act and substitute something else therefor. The bill makes reference to the Canada Elections Act, chapter 23 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, and further on it makes reference to schedule IV of that act.

I would draw to the attention of the house that by virtue of the Statutes of Canada, 1960, chapter 39, the act which is mentioned in this bill, namely the Canada Elections Act, chapter 23, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, was repealed and no longer exists. I think the bill is not drafted in such a way as to indicate clearly what is sought as one of its principles, and I think this is a question which should be cleared up.

Mr. Speaker: I think this is a matter that can be raised in the course of the debate. If the bill does not make sense in its present form, it is capable of amendment, and the question raised by the hon. member can be properly taken up in the course of second reading as a matter of debate. I think it is perhaps not a matter of order at this stage.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, could I say a word before Your Honour makes a final decision on that point. If, as I apprehend, the bill does more than merely change the name of the constituency and seeks to alter the representation in the House of Commons, it would appear to me that this would be a constitutional amendment. It is true, of course, that it is an amendment within the power of the parliament of Canada to make, judging from the precedents; but there would still be some question as to whether it would be proper even to consider a bill under the guise of an amendment to the Canada Elections Act which in fact was seeking to amend the British North America Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak on the point of order and set the minds of my hon. friends from Bonavista-Twillingate and Skeena at rest, I intended when I started to speak, to explain to the house that it is not my intention to ask the house to proceed with the bill in its present form, but I wished to introduce certain amendments, which must be done not during second reading but during consideration of the bill in committee of the whole.

I am quite aware of the point raised by my hon. friend from Skeena, and I am prepared to deal with it in committee of the whole, because there is no schedule IV to the act but only schedule III. One of the features of the amendments which I will be asking to be made in committee of the whole is not to increase the membership of this house but rather to give representation to Canadians who are now unrepresented.

Mr. Speaker: Then without coming to a final conclusion on the matter which has been very properly raised, perhaps the debate will indicate what substance there is to the possibility that there is a constitutional problem in the bill.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might just raise one other point. I would ask the hon. member for the Yukon whether he would indicate in his initial remarks what the proposed amendment is, because it may seek to alter the principle contained in the present bill in such a way that the proper course would be to withdraw it and present another bill.

Mr. Nielsen: I intend to do that, Mr. Speaker. The bill is one which in its present form seeks to amend the Representation Act and there are certain consequential amendments to the Canada Elections Act. At the outset I should like to explain that I do not ask the house to pass the bill in its existing form. I will be asking, with the assistance of my hon. friend from Chapleau, for certain amendments to be made which would have the effect, not of adding a member to this house for the Keewatin and Franklin districts of the Northwest Territories but rather of adding those two districts to the existing electoral district of Mackenzie river, thus giving the residents of the Keewatin and Franklin districts the representation which thus far they have been denied.

Before I explain those changes I wish to very briefly emphasize the reasons which urge this house to give second and final readings to this bill before the house rises to attend the royal assent to certain bills which Your Honour has indicated will occur at 15 minutes to six o'clock.

First, and most important, is the fundamental concept that in a free democratic society such as ours in Canada, every adult Canadian is by law clothed with the right to take part in government and to vote for representatives who govern. This basic concept was set out clearly in the four kinds of rights to which the United Nations dedicated itself in the universal declaration of human rights in 1948, a declaration which grew out of the public demand for advancing the inherent and equal rights "of all members of the human family".

Second, and of paramount importance in all the circumstances, is the protection afforded to all Canadians by the Canadian Bill of Rights. Since the passage of that act there can no longer be any excuse for continuing to deny to any Canadian the human rights and fundamental freedoms of Canadians wherever they may live in Canada and without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex.

Third, I do not think any member of this house would take issue with me when I say that it would be a dangerous practice indeed to perpetuate the policy of King George III of England of taxation without representation. This is precisely what has been happening to some 8,000 northern and Arctic Canadians for more than half a century.

Fourth, I submit to the house that it might perhaps be prudent, in terms of Canadian sovereignty, to enfranchise our northern and Arctic Canadians before the Russians do so.

In short, this bill which I propose, with the assistance of my hon. friend from Chapleau, to amend by these proposals which I intend to explain in committee of the whole should, I submit, be allowed immediate second reading for these four very compelling reasons. In summary, it would eliminate the long standing denial of the franchise to some 3,000 to 4,000 northern and Arctic Canadians. Second, it would eliminate that discimination with which the Canadian Bill of Rights concerns itself. Third, it would eliminate the abhorrent practice of taxing Canadians without their right to be represented in parliament, and fourth, it would strengthen our northern and Arctic sovereignty.

The essential principle of this bill—for the benefit of my hon. friend from Skeena—is quite simple: it is to extend to those Canadians living in the Keewatin and Franklin districts of the Northwest Territories that which is their undeniable right, the right to vote.

At the time of introducing this bill I thought this would be best achieved by providing for an additional member of this house to represent these two districts. Since introducing the bill on January 22 last, however, the territorial council of the Northwest Territories has been meeting in Ottawa and has passed a resolution calling for the consolidation of the existing three districts of the Northwest Territories—that is, the Mackenzie, the Keewatin and the Franklin districts—into only two districts divisable, approximately, by the northerly extension of the 102nd meridian which divides Manitoba from Saskatchewan.

It is contemplated that this division, to occur in 1964, will result in each of the two districts having its own territorial council. I should also explain here that this is a further urgent reason for extending the franchise to the resident Canadians of Keewatin and Franklin in that they are not even represented on the existing territorial council of the Mackenzie River.

It is at this time, I submit—that is, in 1964—that consideration might be given by parliament to the addition of a new member. In other words, the circumstances have changed since I originally introduced the bill of January 22 on the basis of a resolution passed by the territorial council of the Mackenzie District, Northwest Territories.

In the result, therefore, the amendments to this bill which will be proposed in committee of the whole will eliminate that aspect of the bill which would require the addition of a member of parliament to represent these two districts of the Northwest Territories. Instead the two districts concerned, Keewatin and Franklin, would be added to the electoral district of Mackenzie River, thus enfranchising those Canadians resident in Keewatin and Franklin.

I have available over 100 copies in English and in French of the reprinted bill as proposed to be amended in committee of the whole. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, that these be distributed to hon. members immediately upon going into committee of the whole. I have also attached to the bills a copy of maps in English and in French to assist hon. members during their consideration of this measure in committee.

There is a degree of urgency about obtaining both second and third readings today. As all our members are aware, if the bill does not pass through both second and third readings today it will go to the foot of the list and is not likely to come up again this session. Since this session will probably be the last before a general election, this would mean that these Canadians affected by this measure and entitled by law to the vote would once again be denied their rights as electors. I am sure no hon. member of this house would wish to delay the passage of this bill in those circumstances and, in the result, be the cause of perpetuating the disfranchisement of these northern Canadians. In addition, and this is most important, the chief electoral officer of Canada must be given the opportunity to erect the necessary election machinery in the areas of Canada concerned.

In urging the co-operation of all hon. members in giving an immediate second reading to this bill so that we may go into committee of the whole to consider the proposed amendments, let me say that for some time I have been urged by citizens groups such as the Baker Lake citizens association in the Keewatin and the Mackenzie River Progressive Conservative association to obtain recognition by this Canadian parliament of the fundamental rights of all qualified Canadians to representation in this house. I therefore urge all hon. members to allow the bill to go immediately to the committee of the whole for consideration of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I see the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) rising, but before he speaks may I say that if the house is disposed to accept the plea of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for its co-operation it seems to me that the procedure would be greatly simplified if the house would give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of the bill which is on the order paper and the substitution of the amended bill at this stage. Then the bill could go to the committee in its amended form and we would avoid the complication of making amendments to it there, particularly as the hon. member has indicated he has copies of the revised bill in English and French which could now be distributed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caron: Shall we proceed to consider the bill right away?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Perhaps the house would permit a delay of a moment or two while the copies of the new bill are being distributed.

I rise to indicate what I would have indicated with reference to the previous bill, except for the reference to the act which was repealed. I wish to assure the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) of our support for this measure. We approve the desire to give to a group of people, no matter how small or how large, the right to representation in the House of Commons.

Hon. members will recall that one of the first things I sought to do upon taking my place as a member of this house was to accomplish substantially the same thing with respect to native Indians in Canada, that is, to give them the right to vote in federal elections. That idea subsequently took the form of legislation. We in this party have always supported any attempts to give the people all possible rights to representation in this house, and, naturally, we have no hesitation in supporting the bill which is before us.

I note that one provision of the bill—indeed, it is one of the principal parts of the measure—relates not to the Representation Act but to the Canada Elections Act. I think this was necessary because of the nature of the area referred to in the bill and described by the hon. member from the Yukon. This provision seeks to give the chief electoral officer of Canada the right to appoint more than one election clerk, as I read it at a quick glance. This provision is necessary, as I see it, to ensure that it may be physically possible to operate the machinery of the Canada Elections Act so that everyone in the area has an opportunity to vote.

Apropos of this subject, there is another matter which we might consider. It is not only the returning officer and the various election clerks who will have difficulty in covering the area properly and seeing that the machinery of the Canada Elections Act can operate effectively. I think we must direct our attention to the vast size of this area and consider making the changes necessary to ensure that the elected representative of that region together with those who may be candidates can receive some assistance from the public treasury in order that they may have the opportunity to travel across this vast territory which, according to my memory, is more than a million square miles in extent. It is a tremendously vast area, and I think we should consider establishing the principle that the public treasury may assist candidates to ensure that the message gets across to these people in a political way. Otherwise we may end by giving them only the right and the opportunity to vote in elections without providing for that sense of attachment to the candidate or to political situations which is possible in urban areas.

We are happy to support this bill and the request of the hon. member for the Yukon. We shall do everything possible to facilitate the passage of the measure.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Crouse in the chair.

On clause 1—Total number of members.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee I feel I should explain as we go along each of the clauses and my purpose for offering an amendment. The only change this clause seeks to effect is to substitute the term Mackenzie River, which was heretofore the electoral district, with the name Northwest Territories electoral district. Henceforth the electoral district would be called the Northwest Territories electoral district. As will be shown on the maps which I have provided to all hon. members the district will include all the Arctic islands and all the mainland of the eastern portion of Canada above the 60th parallel except, of course, the northern portions of Quebec and Newfoundland. The amendment does not seek to change the constitution of the house in that the total membership would remain at 265 members.

Mr. Morton: Would the hon. member give the committee some idea of the population of the area?

Mr. Nielsen: As at 1959 there were 7,577 residents in the Keewatin district. Roughly 75 per cent of these would be of Eskimo origin. The remainder would be northern affairs administrative personnel, R.C.M.P., D.O.T. personnel, weather station personnel and other civil servants including industrial workers at Rankin inlet and individuals of that category.

In the Franklin district in the Arctic islands there would be another 500 people approximately. The two districts would comprise a population of approximately 8,000. A fair estimate would be that approximately 4,000 of those are entitled to vote.

Mr. Benidickson: Does the hon. member mean to suggest that the district of Franklin would be a separate constituency? What would be the total population of that area?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not recall whether or not the hon. member was in the chamber during the initial portion of my remarks. I explained that subsequent to January 22 when I first introduced this bill the Northwest Territories council passed a resolution which would divide the three existing districts of the territories—Mackenzie, Keewatin and Franklin—into two political divisions each with its own territorial council. The exact population cannot be ascertained until the results of the census are available to us but the approximate population of the Franklin district alone would be about 500 souls. This district includes all the Arctic islands.

Mr. Benidickson: With adults and children it would be about 700?

Mr. Nielsen: There are mostly adults in that area of Canada. This amendment does not seek to create a separate electoral district out of any of the existing districts of the territories but rather to consolidate the whole of the Northwest Territories into one electoral district.

Mr. Benidickson: I have some experience with the difficulties of coping with a riding that covers a large geographic area in attempting to do one's best in representing the citizens of Canada in the House of Commons. Although there are 82 electoral divisions in Ontario my constituency covers approximately one eighth of Ontario. The population of the riding of Kenora-Rainy River is not small. It is larger than the population of some of the ridings in metropolitan Toronto. The members of those ridings can fulfil their responsibilities merely by riding a streetcar but that is not true in my district and so I appreciate what the hon. member has in mind here in his private bill to amend the Representation Act.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate raised a question as to whether there was some conflict here with the British North America Act in its present form.

I had close friendly relations with the late member for the Northwest Territories who I think did a magnificent job in trying to serve the wide geographic area he represented in the efficient manner he did. I know how expensive it was for him personally, a man without large resources, to cover his constituency even at election time visiting small pockets of population in the area. Many hon. members did not realize the difficulty with which he was faced. Even during recess, in order to do his duty to his constituents, he had to undertake these very expensive trips from one relatively small community to another located a considerable distance away. This he did with great energy and devotion.

We have a private member advancing a bill that would amend the act governing the distribution of the fixed number of seats in the Canadian House of Commons and as yet we have heard nothing from the ministry. Hon. gentlemen opposite on the front benches cannot avoid responsibility in a matter of this kind. The Prime Minister's ministers are familiar with the provisions of the British North America Act. They know that if a seat is added in one place a seat will have to be taken away somewhere else.

Mr. Nielsen: May I rise to explain to the hon. member that the bill does not seek to add a seat. It is designed merely to give the vote to the Canadians who reside in the two districts referred to.

Mr. Benidickson: I am looking at the explanatory note which says—

Mr. Martel: It has been amended.

Mr. Benidickson: I am sorry, I misunderstood. That would perhaps eliminate that particular criticism. There are not many ministers of the crown present with us at the moment. I believe a bill of the consequence of this bill deserves an explanation as to the opinion of the government. This is important because in the speech from the throne we had an indication that following the decennial census we would be obliged, as is usual every ten years, to examine the electoral set-up in Canada. I simply wish to ask that one of the ministers of the few who are present rise and give us some guidance concerning government policy on this issue. This relates to a policy which was announced in the speech from the throne and involves a subsequent commission.

Mr. Nielsen: I might say that the principle of the bill basically is really quite simple. All that it seeks to do is to give some 8,000 Canadians the right to vote for the representatives who govern them. That is all it seeks to do. It does not involve any commission or redistribution. It does not involve anything else than the basic fundamental concept of the right to vote.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—"Northwest Territories" substituted for "Mackenzie River".

Mr. Nielsen: Clause 2 is simply an amendment to the Representation Act substituting the words "Northwest Territories" or "electoral district of Northwest Territories" wherever the expression "electoral district of Mackenzie River" appears in that act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Schedule amended.

Mr. Nielsen: Clause 3 simply describes the vast area to which my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River referred as constituting the Northwest Territories. It simply amends the schedule to the Representation Act and enlarges the existing Mackenzie district to include the whole of the Northwest Territories comprising Mackenzie, Keewatin and Franklin.

I think this will be an appropriate point for me to comment on the point raised by my friend the hon. member for Skeena and subsequently referred to by my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I also have a fairly comprehensive experience in travelling over vast areas in the north. I might say that the situation has been vastly improved in recent years with the advent of the D.E.W. line, mining activity up there and the oil and gas exploration and activity in those areas. There are now many more air flights made into the Arctic islands and into the northern Arctic areas of Canada generally than were made formerly. It is not an insurmountable difficulty now, so the chief electoral officer assures me, to set up the necessary election machinery, provided of course there is sufficient opportunity before an election is called, or no more than there would be in most areas of the Mackenzie river district.

I should also say, in respect of travelling in these two districts, that there are roughly 15 administrative centres where there is a population concentration which is entitled to vote and these 15 administrative centres are serviced fairly regularly. With this type of communication improvement it seems to me that it should not be too difficult for the member who might subsequently represent the district to hitchhike rides from one portion to the other in the discharge of his obligation to represent his people. I might also point out one further factor, namely the greatly improved radio communication in those areas which allows that sort of communication.

Mr. Howard: The explanation of the hon. member as to the relative ease that exists now as compared with conditions a few years ago with regard to getting around a district such as this is welcome news. I have a constituency which is considered to be large in itself but which, compared to this new district, is one quite easy to deal with. While I can appreciate that it might be easy to hitch hike rides, as the hon. members says, through a district which has more square miles than two provinces put together, I think the matter will not be quite that simple. I am still interested in the concept that the public treasury should take account of the geographic features as between ridings and should pay an amount additional—and perhaps this will be done by way of differentiation—to the indemnity which members now receive. May I say this provision would not be confined to the Northwest Territories but would I am sure be applicable to the constituency which the hon. member represents, the constituencies of Port Arthur or Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador or to my own and that of others whose territory is over the 1,000 square miles mark. I am not raising this matter in order to be critical of the bill, as on second reading I indicated our support for it. What I am now suggesting would be something which the hon. member could not introduce in any event because it would require a money bill and consequently could be introduced only by a member of the cabinet. In any event, this is a factor which I think must be considered in future years in order that a member would have reflected in his sessional indemnity the geographic factors with which he is obliged to contend and the high costs of transportation. Having done some hitchhiking through the northern part of my constituency I myself have discovered that hitchhiking is not always free, but that sometimes it is costly as well.

Mr. Benidickson: Obligations.

Mr. Howard: Obligations?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps my hon. friend the member for Kenora-Rainy River uses different phrases. However, I say that it is not free and that this fact must be taken into account. I hope that the hon. member for that constituency, when he is with us and whoever he may be, will be able to add another voice in support of this particular plea and that some day the government in office, whichever one it might be, will adopt the course suggested of concerning itself about the fact that all constituencies in the country are not equal, having regard to geographic and other factors and recognize that therefore all indemnities should not be equal and provide that some additional consideration be given there.

(Translation):

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few remarks to make on section 3 of this bill. It is precisely because of the provisions of section 3 that I am pleased to support Bill C-14, as amended, which has been introduced by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

I wish to point out that French copies of the bill have been distributed to hon. members. A map, in French, prepared by the Depart ment of Northern Affairs and National Resources, is included. It shows all the northern territories which will be added to the present district of Mackenzie to form what will henceforth be called the Northwest Territories.

There is another point which concerns my riding and which is of interest to Quebec residents and electors, as it is to me. It concerns the coastal islands along James bay and Hudson's bay. Subsection (b) of section 3 seems to provide for the eventual inclusion of those islands in the territory of the province of Quebec, which indeed claims some of them as its own. That is the only observation I wanted to make in that connection, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Appointment of more than one election clerk.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this clause provides for the appointment of additional people as election clerks and so on and the delegation of authority to election clerks by the returning officer, and I should like to be assured that this authority and power rests in the first instance with the chief electoral officer.

Mr. Nielsen: That is correct.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Nielsen: Now.

Mr. Churchill: Next sitting. By way of explanation, Mr. Speaker, in view of some of the comments made by members who have examined the bill perhaps it might stand for third reading at the next sitting. It will still be at the top of the list and will be the first item to be considered. In the interval the law officers of the crown might examine the bill to see if it is accurate in all respects.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there is a point that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has drawn to my attention which is relevant to the consideration of this matter, and that is the procedure in having a bill that had been introduced into the house reprinted after it came into the possession of the house. There may be precedents for what has happened but I do not recall them.

I do not propose to make an issue of the matter now but, unless the procedure is quite regular, I wonder whether Your Honour would take it under consideration because it does seem to me to raise some pretty fundamental questions. We give first reading to a bill and hon. members prepare themselves to debate on the basis of the bill that is before them. They then get into committee of the whole and find themselves confronted with a radically different bill.

I did not feel that I should raise the matter in the committee and appear to be obstructing proceedings because the hon. gentleman had very politely given an explanation of the difficulties that occurred to the hon. member for Skeena and some of the rest of us. But it does seem to me that we should not lightly depart from the regular practices of the house, and I wondered whether I might submit to Your Honour that this point should be carefully considered.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, under other circumstances the practice of giving unanimous consent to second and third readings on the same day when dealing with such a bill would be quite acceptable. However, for the reasons mentioned by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and also the fact that I do not believe the substitute bill was printed in sufficient numbers to be available to all members of the house, I think it would be well to hold it over in order that members may have the opportunity to consider it further.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood—

Mr. Benidickson: May I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I just wanted to make it clear that I understood that the house had agreed that the bill would be read the third time at the next sitting of the house and that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate then raised a point of order as to the propriety of the house printing a second bill of the same number and form but differing in substance, a point which I think deserves consideration.

In this case the house by unanimous consent has accepted the reprinted bill and therefore perhaps the point of order is not one that arises now but one that might arise if similar circumstances occurred. I can assure hon. members that I will give some thought to the problem and alert the officers to the possibility of its arising again and the proper course to follow.

Mr. Benidickson: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, there has been equanimity so far as the principle of the bill is concerned. I simply wanted to draw the attention of the house to the fact that in my experience it is somewhat unusual to have an amended bill put before us that is so different in content from the bill originally introduced. It is true that the house is master of its procedures and consent was obtained for acceptance of the amended bill but on the cover of the bill are the words "reprinted as proposed to be amended in committee of the whole". It is not something that was done in committee of the whole. There is a green rubber stamp impression on the cover which, having some experience in these matters, I think indicates that it has been received by the officers of the house on a certain date. In this case the date is February 22, yesterday.

The original bill to which I referred when I made some remarks in the debate had an explanatory note but the effect of the amended bill completely negates the explanatory note in the original bill. It was simply for the guidance of Your Honour, who I know will take an interest in this matter, that I wanted to say that in my experience this was an unusual occurrence. It is true that the consent of the house was obtained, but I know Your Honour will give consideration to the points raised.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their references to the matter. It is one that deserves consideration.

Business of the House

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act.

An act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

An act to amend an act respecting the construction of a line of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from Optic lake to Chisel lake, and the purchase by Canadian National Railway Company from the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, of a line of railway from Sipiwesk to a point on Burntwood river near Mystery lake, all in the province of Manitoba.

An act respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from Whitecourt, Alberta, in a westerly direction for a distance of approximately 23.2 miles to the property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader whether, in view of the concord, harmony and co-operation which has prevailed throughout the day, he could find it in his heart to give us at least a general indication of what the government's program will be for the whole of next week.

Mr. Churchill: I would gladly enter into an agreement with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I will give the program for the entire week if he will announce the subject of the supply motion which will be debated on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the seductive invitation of the hon. gentleman is of course entirely subversive to all the rights of an opposition and is not one that I could entertain; but I can assure the hon. gentleman that my conduct will be characterized by that spirit of co-operation which I always show in the house, and I hope he will respond to my invitation.

Mr. Churchill: On Thursday and Friday we will follow with estimates, the likelihood being that the further supplementary estimates which were not finished today will be taken up on Wednesday. Whether or not some legislation will be introduced, I cannot say at this moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: And there will be a supply motion on Monday?

Mr. Churchill: Oh, yes.

YOUTH APPRECIATION

DESIGNATION OF ANNUAL YOUTH APPRECIATION WEEK

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-71, for the establishment of an annual youth appreciation week.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is described in its preamble. There is little I can add except to say that a number of service organizations in the country have requested that such a bill be introduced to give us an opportunity to set aside a week in which to reflect upon the positive and good qualities of the vast majority of our young citizens and simultaneously, through a program of activities, to permit the adult population to become more fully aware of their qualities.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*SKIING DEVELOPMENT, MARITIME NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 79—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources made any statements in the past year about the development of skiing in the maritime national parks?
2. If so, when, where, and to what effect?
3. At the present time, how much skiing takes place in the national parks located in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Dinsdale: I will answer parts 1, 2, and 3 together, Mr. Speaker.

At the present time, little or no skiing takes place in the national park located in Nova Scotia. However, within the past year I have received representations from the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), about the possibility of developing some organized skiing facilities in the Cape Breton Highlands national park. Similar representations have been received from the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) with respect to Fundy national park in New Brunswick. I have also held discussions with interested individuals in the areas concerned and with representatives of the local chambers of commerce.

Following these representations I made arrangements for an expert, Mr. Franz Baier, to understake a technical survey of the skiing development potential of these national parks. Mr. Baier has completed his assessment and has submitted a report, which is now being studied by the officers of my department.

*SHIP CONSTRUCTION SUBSIDY AGREEMENTS

1. Since the announcement in the house on May 12, 1961, of the subsidy for the construction of ships, how many agreements covering the payment of subsidy for a specific project have been negotiated between the Canadian maritime commission, the shipbuilder, and the shipowner?
2. How many such agreements covering the payment of a subsidy for a specific project are for (a) operation in the deep sea trade (b) operation in the lake and coastal trade (c) trawlers and fishing vessels?
3. In what shipyards are these being built?
4. How many ships for which an agreement has been completed were under construction prior to (a) May 12, 1961 (b) have been commenced since May 12, 1961, and before September 27, 1961 (c) since September 27, 1961?
5. Of the 79 applications referred to in answer to starred question No. 20, at page 293 of Hansard for January 29, 1962, how many are for (a) operation in the deep sea trade (b) operation in the lake and coastal trade (c) trawlers and fishing vessels?

Mr. Balcer: As the answer to this question contains a list of over 30 shipyards, perhaps the house will agree to it being printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable to the suggestion of the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. Of 79 applications received by the Canadian maritime commission, 23 have been recommended by the commission to the interdepartmental review committee to date; 17 of these have been approved by the interdepartmental committee and four by the treasury board. The balance are still under consideration at commission, committee or treasury board level as indicated by the foregoing statistics.

2. Of applications received, none are for deep sea trade, 68 for lake and coastal trade, and 11 for fishing trade.

5. Answered by No. 2 above.

*TRANSPORTATION ROUTES DORVAL AIRPORT, MONTREAL

Question No. 129—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What are the terms of the contract referred to by the minister at page 355 of Hansard of January 30, 1962, between the Department of Transport and the concessionaire providing transportation from Dorval airport to the city of Montreal, as regards transportation and route to be followed?
2. Is the concessionaire required to follow along Côte de Liesse road?
3. If not, will the contract be amended so as to provide transportation for those who reside in the area serviced by Côte de Liesse road?

Mr. Balcer: The contract with the company providing limousine service to the Montreal international airport does not specify the exact route which must be followed between the city and the airport. In fact the route, including pick-up and disembarking points, is determined by the operator in consultation with the air lines in accordance with air line requirements taking account, it is understood, of both the fastest method of providing through service from downtown to the airport and, at the same time, the most likely requirements for pick-up and disembarking points en route.

[Mr. Speaker.]

COMPASSIONATE PENSION ALLOWANCES

Question No. 152—Mr. Creaghan:

1. How many persons are now in receipt of a compassionate pension, allowance, or supplementary award as provided by section 25 of the Pension Act?
2. Have all of these special pensions been reviewed by the Canadian pension commission since the 1st day of March 1961; and, if so, what percentage of the same have been increased or decreased since that date?

Answer by: Mr. Churchill:

1. 475.

2. No. To date, of those reviewed, approximately 50 per cent have been increased and less than 1 per cent decreased.

DENIAL OF APPLICATIONS FOR MILITARY PENSIONS

Question No. 154—Mr. McIntosh:

How many applications for pensions have been denied by the Canadian pension commission on the grounds not pensionable under section 13(2) of the Pension Act as the evidence did not establish that the disability or death arose out of or was otherwise directly connected with military service?

Answer by: Mr. Churchill:

Over the period April 30, 1950, to March 1, 1960, a total of 18,672 were denied on this basis. All dischargees who show any sign of disease or disability during service, or at the time of discharge, are referred to the Canadian pension commission for consideration. Less than 10 per cent of these claims were death claims where dependants were involved.

OATH OF OFFICE, PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 155—Mr. McIntosh:

1. Are members of the Canadian pension commission obliged to take an oath of office before assuming their duties?
2. If so, have all present members of the commission done so?
3. What is the wording of the oath?

Answer by: Mr. Churchill:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

While commissioners are not required by statute to take any oath of office, they do take the ordinary oath taken by all civil servants as set forth in the Civil Service Act.

*GARIBALDI PARK, B.C.—ACTION BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 162—Mr. Winch:

Has any offer been made to obtain Garibaldi park in British Columbia as a national park; and, if so (a) what was the date of the offer or offers which have been made (b) has it been considered or accepted by the provincial government of British Columbia (c) is any offer still open?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this matter has arisen in the house on a number of previous occasions during the discussion of my estimates or in the question period. The most recent reference was a reply I gave on April 19 of last year, Hansard, page 3792, to an almost identical question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Taylor). In that reply I pointed out that on May 2, 1958 my predecessor had written to the minister of recreation and conservation in British Columbia, Hon. Earle Westwood, proposing that if British Columbia were willing to turn the area over to the federal government, free of all encumbrances, the matter would be brought before the federal government for consideration. Should it be viewed favourably by the government, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources would take over the area in accordance with the National Parks Act and proceed with a program of development.

There has been no change in the position since that time.

3. Canadian Pacific Telegraphs; $109,783 pre-operational construction cost and rentals of $9,486 per year under a five year contract.

*USE OF EXCHANGE FUND TO SUPPORT DOLLAR

Question No. 166—Mr. Matheson:

Is the Minister of Finance now using the exchange fund to restrain or support the value of the dollar?

Questions

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this subject in the house on February 9, and the answer will be found at page 711 of Hansard.

*FEDERAL BUILDING, SHEET HARBOUR, N.S.

Question No. 167—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Does the government propose to construct a federal public building at Sheet Harbour, Nova Scotia; and, if so, has land been purchased, and tenders called or awarded?
2. If tender has been awarded, what are the names, with amounts, of all tenders submitted?

Mr. Walker:

1. Construction of a new federal building at Sheet Harbour, Nova Scotia, is being considered but no decision has yet been reached; no land has been purchased nor have tenders been called.

2. Not applicable.

*DR. EUGENE FORSEY, BOARD OF BROADCAST GOVERNORS

Question No. 168—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has Dr. Eugene Forsey met with any difficulties or impediments in carrying on his duties as a member of the board of broadcast governors; and, if not, is there any substance in the allegation contained in the Toronto Globe and Mail, editorial page, (page 6) of February 12, 1962, that Dr. Forsey is unable to remain with the board when Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., appears before it?
2. What explanation, if any, is there for this difficulty?

Mr. Nowlan: The answer to No. 1 is "no" and the answer to No. 2 is "not applicable".

*PRINTING OF UNEMPLOYMENT COMMISSION FORM 379 (5-58)

Question No. 171—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Why is unemployment insurance commission form U.I.C. 379 (5-58) marked "Printed in U.S.A."?
2. How many of these forms (approximately) are utilized on an annual basis by the U.I.C.?
3. Is there anything unique about this form that makes it undesirable or inefficient to have it printed in Canada?

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, the answers are as follows:

1. In the operation of the punched card system in certain regions by the unemployment insurance commission a multiple form composed of two punched cards is used. These special multiple forms are not printed in Canada. It has therefore been necessary to have form U.I.C.379 (5-58) obtained from the Remington Rand Company in the United States. However, I am advised that a change in procedure is contemplated by the unemployment insurance commission, which will enable a single form card system to be adopted in due course. This will permit the required cards to be printed in Canada.

[Mr. Matheson.]

2. Approximately 800,000 forms are used annually.

3. See reply to No. 1 above.

*ROAD CONSTRUCTION TENDERS, BURNT CHURCH RESERVE, N.B.

Question No. 172—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Were invitations to tender issued for the construction of a road in the Burnt Church reserve, New Brunswick area at Tabusintac; and, if so, what are the names of all the persons asked to submit tenders on the first and/or the second invitation?
2. From whom were tenders received, and in what amounts?
3. Who was awarded the contract, and in what amount?

1. Was Mr. Heakes employed by the royal commission on transportation in 1960; and was any contract signed?

2. In what capacity were Mr. Heakes' services used, at what salary was he hired, and for what period of time was he to be employed?

3. How many extra days did Mr. Heakes report for work and hand in research material which was accepted by the commission?

4. Did Mr. Heakes demand any payment for additional work with the royal commission on transportation?

5. Was Mr. Heakes paid any additional sum for his work with the commission, and how much was he paid?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Mr. Heakes was engaged by the commission as an economic consultant in February, 1960. The terms of the engagement were recorded in an exchange of letters between him and Mr. E. P. Reid, the assistant director of research of the commission.

2. He was asked to undertake a short economic research project to assemble information for the staff of the commission. He was engaged for 10 days at $50 per day.

3. Mr. Heakes claimed to have done 18 additional days' work which cannot be verified since the terms of his engagement stipulated that he was to work elsewhere than in the offices of the commission. He submitted additional material which he said was prepared during this further period. This material was accepted by officers of the commission who told Mr. Heakes that they had no authority to pay him for more than 10 days work and that he could not be assured of any further payment for additional work done.

*PROTESTS OF CIVIL SERVICE PENSIONERS

Question No. 180—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Minister of Finance received any protests in the last year from pensioners of the government who retired during or before the last war, whose pension totals are more than $3,000 a year, and therefore are unable to benefit by improvements in the pensions given to other pensioned civil servants of the same time?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

*WAGE RATES, BUILDING TRADESMEN, PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Question No. 181—Mr. Winch:

1. Has the treasury board within the past twelve months laid down a government policy respecting wage rates for building tradesmen employed in the House of Commons, or any other federal public building in Canada, affecting those who were previously classified as prevailing rate employees?

2. Were former rates of wages previously based on the construction rates established in the local area by trade union agreement and contracts with employers?

3. Has there been in the past twelve months a ruling of the treasury board that those employed in federal government buildings in the category of electricians, steam fitters, carpenters, plumbers, machinists, etc., will now be paid on the prevailing rate in the local area as maintenance men although their responsibilities may include construction installation?

4. If such a recent ruling was made by the treasury board, does the said ruling apply to electricians, steam fitters, carpenters, plumbers, machinists, etc., employed on such projects controlled by the government as dockyards?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): 1. Building tradesmen employed in the House of Commons are not under treasury board jurisdiction. For tradesmen employed in other federal buildings in Canada, the treasury board decided that prevailing rate employees engaged on construction work would continue to receive rates paid for construction work outside the public service and that employees performing maintenance duties be granted wages paid for similar work outside the service.

2. Wage rates established by trade union agreement and contracts with employers were paid where these rates reflected the over-all prevailing wage rate in the area of employment.

3. As outlined in 1. To date no job specification for the class machinist has been issued.

4. The rate for tradesmen employed in government dockyards is the prevailing rate for similar tradesmen employed in the shipbuilding industry in the area of employment.

*R.C.M.P. TELEPHONE LINE TAPPING

Question No. 182—Mr. Howard:

Does the Royal Canadian Mounted Police engage in the practice of telephone line tapping or listen in on, or record, telephone conversations between people who are not members of the said force?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): In accordance with long established policy I am declining to answer this question in the public interest. Questions such as this, and all others which have been asked regarding investigational procedures, could in due course, if answered, lead to disclosure of all methods which must necessarily be employed to protect the security of this country. Such revelations would be of great interest and value to groups within and outside Canada who have used conspiratorial methods to obtain Canadian information to which they are not entitled.

There should be no inference taken from my remarks and the form of my reply because such discussions, in whatever form they take, can only tend to imperil the difficult investigations which have to be carried out in the interests of our country. The policy of this government, and previous governments, has been to decline to answer such questions as not being in the interests of the public, and there is no intention of changing this policy.

Mr. Howard: The answer is obviously yes, then.

COMMUNIST CHINA—DISCUSSION OF FISHERIES EXPORTS

Question No. 185—Mr. Howard:

Since January 1, 1958, has the government or any agency, branch, department, or member thereof, proposed to or discussed with, the government or any representatives of the People's Republic of China the possibility of that country buying (a) dry salt herring, or (b) other fisheries products from Canada; and, if so, what resulted therefrom?

Answer by: Mr. Morris:

Since January 1, 1958 our trade commissioners in Hong Kong have kept the question of the sale of fish and fish products, particularly dried salt herring, under constant review and have made approaches to the China Resources Company and their associate company, Ng Fung Hong. In addition when our trade commissioners have visited the mainland they have raised this question directly with officials concerned.

On each occasion they have been told that there was no interest in the importation of Canadian fish or fish products.

INVESTIGATION, DOIG RIVER INDIAN SCHOOL

Question No. 186—Mr. Howard:

1. Since November 1, 1961, has any investigation been made into conditions of the Doig river Indian school; and, if so, what, in detail, was discovered as a result of that investigation?

2. If the investigation indicated that changes were necessary at the school, what steps have been taken to implement the said changes?

3. Was the said school closed for any period of time; and, if so, (a) between what dates, and for what reasons (b) what arrangements were made for the students at the school to continue their education during the period of the closure?

Answer by: Mrs. Fairclough:

1. Yes. Investigations into conditions of the Doig river Indian school were made by departmental officials. The department has also been informed that a committee of the Fort St. John and district chamber of commerce visited the school and reported that they found the school and teacherage reasonably adequate.

This school was constructed in 1950 to meet the immediate educational needs of Indians who had congregated about a store to form a settlement known as Petersons on the Beatton river. The school is not located on an Indian reserve but on land leased by the department. The school consists of a one classroom building and teacher's house nearby. These facilities compare favourably with small non-Indian schools in remote areas.

A power plant was installed in 1960 and the school equipped with electric lights and an oil space heater. Water was obtained from a river some 50 yards away.

The investigation revealed that with the exception of pencils and certain cleaning materials there was an adequate quantity of school supplies. Although in the summer of 1961 a contract for the drilling of a well near the school was awarded, difficulty was experienced in commencing the operation.

2. The drilling of the well has now been completed and arrangements have been made for the purchase of pencils and cleaning materials locally.

3. (a) The Doig river school was never officially closed but on November 21, 1961, the teacher reported that he had been dismissed and had left the school.

(b) By letter dated December 9, 1961, the teacher was informed that he had not been dismissed. He was instructed to return to the school and to resume classroom instruction immediately. He returned to his duties on December 14, 1961.

Answer by: Mrs. Fairclough:

5. When is the dredging supposed to be completed?

Question No. 189—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Has the Canadian government insured the credit risk or otherwise guaranteed payment to the Canadian wheat board for the wheat sold to the China Resources Company?
2. If so, by what statutory authority was such guarantee or credit arrangement made?

Answer by: Mr. Harkness:

1. This matter was covered by order in council P.C. 1961-1012 of July 13, 1961, which was reported to the house in the summary of orders in council passed that month, tabled on September 27, 1961. This order authorized the Minister of Finance to give the Canadian wheat board an undertaking that, in the event of any default by the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation in respect of payments due the board under contracts for the sale of Canadian wheat and barley made under the long term agreement between the said board and the said corporation, such parliamentary approval as may be necessary will be sought to enable direct reimbursement by the government of Canada to the board of any payments in respect of which the corporation is in default, and authorized the minister also to guarantee to six chartered banks the repayment of advances and interest thereon made to the board up to a total not to exceed $100 million outstanding at any time for the purpose of financing the sale of up to 6 million long tons of Canadian wheat and barley under the long term agreement between the board and the corporation.

2. The guarantee was given under section 11 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and the authority to make the undertaking was given to use the powers vested in the crown by section 54 of the British North America Act.

Question No. 192—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Since May 2, 1961, has the government, with reference to the agreement for sale of grain to the China Resources Company, indicated to the Canadian wheat board that it is prepared to guarantee a sum greater than $50 million as the total credit that may be outstanding at any one time?

2. If so, what has been the highest amount of the guarantee since May 2, 1961?

3. What was the amount outstanding under the guarantee on (a) October 15, 1961 (b) November 15, 1961 (c) December 15, 1961 (d) January 15, 1962 (e) February 15, 1962?

Mr. Harkness: This answer is rather lengthy and contains a long list of figures. I wonder if it could be printed in Hansard without being read?

Mr. Pickersgill: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. This matter was covered by order in council P.C. 1961-1012 of July 13, 1961, which was reported to the house in the summary of orders in council passed that month, tabled on September 27, 1961. This order authorized the Minister of Finance to give the Canadian wheat board an undertaking that, in the event of default by the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation in respect of payments due the board under contract for the sale of Canadian wheat and barley made under the long term agreement between the said board and the said corporation, such parliamentary approval as may be necessary will be sought to enable direct reimbursement by the government of Canada to the board of any payments in respect of which the corporation is in default, and to guarantee to six chartered banks the repayment of advances and interest thereon made to the board, to a total not to exceed $100 million outstanding at any time, for the purpose of financing the sale of up to six million long tons of Canadian wheat and barley under the long term agreement between the board and the corporation.

*SALE OF GRAIN TO CHINA—SHIPMENTS FROM PACIFIC PORTS

Question No. 194—Mr. Benidickson:

1. How many bushels of grain, sold under contracts with the China Resources Company, were shipped from January 1, 1961, to date from Canadian Pacific coastal ports?

2. How many bushels of grain, under the same contracts and for the same period, were shipped from other than Canadian Pacific coastal ports, and how many bushels from each of the said ports?

Questions

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the answer to these two questions in combined form is as follows:

The following quantities of grain have been shipped during the period January 1, 1961 to February 21, 1962, under contract with the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation and its accredited agent, the China Resources Company.

First, wheat from Pacific coast ports, 53,343,236 bushels; from St. Lawrence ports, 19,376,406 bushels; from Atlantic ports, 1,852,031 bushels, being a total of 74,571,673 bushels. Shipments of barley from Pacific coast ports entirely totalled 32,631,433 bushels.

I think I should add that of this total of 74 million-odd bushels of wheat, 31,727,421 bushels were for cash sales and 42,844,252 bushels were credit sales. For barley the same figures are cash sales, 12,694,500 bushels, and credit sales 19,936,933 bushels.

*CARRYING CHARGE, ACCUMULATED DEFICITS, 1957-61

Question No. 195—Mr. Matheson:

What is the carrying charge of the accumulated deficits 1957 to 1961 inclusive?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Total budgetary deficits from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1961, amounted to $1,401 million. Net interest payments in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961 were 3.80 per cent of the net debt. Applying this interest rate to the accumulated deficit of $1,401 million indicates a carrying cost of $53.2 million.

*FRASER RIVER SURVEY, B.C.

Question No. 197—Mr. Howard:

Is any survey work being done by the Fraser river board along the upper reaches of the Fraser river in British Columbia; and, if so, (a) has this survey work covered the questions of the level of snowfall in those areas during the current winter, and the detrimental effect such snowfall might have upon possible floods in the lower Fraser valley this coming spring and summer (b) what has been discovered as a result of these surveys?

Mr. Dinsdale: The Fraser river board does not conduct snow surveys in the Fraser river basin. This work in British Columbia is carried out by the water rights branch of the provincial department of lands and forests. The comptroller of water rights issues a snow survey bulletin as of February 1, March 1, April 1, May 1, May 15, and June 1 of each year, giving the results of samplings. The February 1, 1962 bulletin indicates that the snow pack on the upper Fraser river watershed was above, to well above, average to that date in the various sampling courses.

Questions

*GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES ADVERTISING, U.S. MAGAZINES

Question No. 198—Mr. Meunier:

1. Is the Department of Labour running advertisements in American magazines on behalf of the annuities division; and, if so, in what magazines, and at what expense?
2. Has the department considered placing such advertisements in Canadian magazines to bolster this Canadian industry; and, if so, what conclusion was reached?

Mr. Thrasher: The answer to part 1 is yes. Advertisements appear in the Canadian editions of Reader's Digest and Times at a cost of $21,065. The answer to part 2 is yes. *VISAS FOR EAST GERMAN SPORTS PARTICIPANTS

Question No. 199—Mr. Winch:

1. Is the clearing of visas to East German participants in international sports affairs a decision of the NATO powers; and, if so, what stand was taken by Canada in this arrival of policy?
2. Is there a definite understanding by NATO countries, agreed to by Canada, to ban the East Germans travelling in any part of the western world to compete in international sports events?
3. Is Canada making an official application for the right to hold the next winter olympics in our country; and, if so, will East German entrants be denied the right to participate?

Mr. Diefenbaker: 1 and 2. Under existing policy established as a result of the construction of the wall in Berlin last August, whereby the East German authorities put an end to the freedom of travel, temporary travel documents for East Germans are restricted to a few categories, mostly of a compassionate nature. These do not include those the Soviet authorities wish to send to international sporting events. In the circumstances, Canada concurred in these arrangements.

3. No, the next winter Olympics will be held in 1964 in Austria. With regard to the winter Olympics of 1968 it is hoped that an announcement will be made on this subject in the near future. The difficulties concerning the travel of East Germans have arisen as a result of the construction of the wall in Berlin last August whereby the authorities in the Soviet zone of Germany put an end to freedom of travel. We hope, however, that over the next six years progress will be made toward eliminating these difficulties.

Mr. Dinsdale:

*CANADIAN CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT—CONSIDERATION BY LAW TEACHERS

Question No. 202—Mr. Batten:

Did the Minister of Justice send the draft bill entitled an act to provide for the amendment in Canada of the constitution of Canada to the association of Canadian law teachers for comment; and, if not, will the minister give consideration to taking this action?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The draft bill entitled "An act to provide for the amendment in Canada of the constitution of Canada" was not sent to the association of Canadian law teachers, but copies in English and in French were sent to the deans of all the law schools in Canada. Since the law teachers in Canada have thus been supplied with copies, there was no need to send copies to their association.

4. When is it expected that construction will commence?

Mr. Walker:

1. The federal government and the government of Ontario jointly own approximately 500 acres of land in Etobicoke township near Thistletown. Negotiations are presently under way between C.M.H.C. and the province of Ontario regarding the use of this land. The municipality of metropolitan Toronto has requested that 1,100 public housing units be constructed on this land. This proposal is now being investigated and preliminary planning is under way.

2. The various parcels of land making up the total area were deeded to C.M.H.C. on the following dates: February 5 and 15, 1954; March 4, 1954; June 4 and 23, 1954; December 15, 1955 and June 3, 1958.

3. There is no delay.

4. If it is decided to proceed, I hope that construction will commence within a year. Meanwhile planning is to be completed, necessary agreements signed and municipal trunk services made available.

*DISCUSSIONS WITH ICELAND RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS

Question No. 205—Mr. Howard:

Since April 1, 1960, has the government of Canada, or any representative thereof, had any discussions with the government of Iceland, or any representative thereof, relating to the breadth of the territorial sea or proposals for the widening thereof.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since the 1960 Geneva law of the sea conference the government has been in contact with a number of countries concerning this problem. For the reasons given in the house on February 7, it is impossible to be more specific at this time.

*APPROPRIATIONS FOR DREDGING, CAMPBELLTON-DALHOUSIE, N.B.

Question No. 208—Mr. Michaud:

Have moneys been appropriated for dredging at Campbellton and/or Dalhousie, New Brunswick; and, if so, in what amounts, and for what projects?

Mr. Walker: Provision has been made in the 1962-63 estimates, subject to the approval of parliament, for annual maintenance dredging in front of the deep water wharf at Campbellton, N.B. This will cost about $15,000.

No dredging has been planned at Dalhousie, N.B.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

*WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 143—Mr. Racine:

Under the winter works program, with respect to each province and for the periods 1960-61 and 1961 to date (a) how many projects have been approved by the federal government (b) what is the actual or estimated cost of such projects (c) how many unemployed, registered as such with employment offices, have thereby been given work?

Mr. Thrasher: In view of the large amount of statistical information in the answers to several parts of this question, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the answer may be taken as read.

Mr. Speaker: If the answer is extremely voluminous perhaps the parliamentary secretary would ask that the question be made an order for return. I observe what look to be about half a dozen pages. We must have some respect for Hansard.

Mr. Thrasher: I ask that it be made an order for return.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

RECIPE BOOKS FOR BUFFALO STEAK

Question No. 161—Mr. Herridge:

1. Has the queen's printer issued a letter stating that recipe books for buffalo steak are available on application to him; and if so (a) how many such letters were sent (b) how many recipe books were printed (c) what is the total cost involved in printing and mailing the letters (d) what is the total cost of the recipe books (e) what is the amount of money expected to be realized by the sale of the recipe books?

2. Is buffalo meat available for sale; and, if so (a) where (b) what is the cost to the consumer (c) what was the price to the retailer (d) how many pounds of buffalo steak are for sale?

*CIVIL DEFENCE TRAINING PERSONNEL

Question No. 178—Mr. McMillan:

1. How many persons took the civil defence training course in Canada in 1961?

2. How many were so engaged at the last available date?

3. How many of this latter number were unemployed when their training started?

SALE OF OLD RAILS BY C.N.R.

Question No. 196—Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

1. Between September 1, 1957, and September 1, 1961, has any department or minister of the government exchanged any correspondence with J. P. Boisjoly Industries Limitée concerning the acquisition by the said company of old rails belonging to the Canadian National Railways located at Ste. Philomene in the county of Chateauguay; and, if so, which department or minister?

2. Have any of the departments or ministers of the government exchanged any correspondence in this connection; and, if so, which departments or ministers, and what were the terms of the letters sent by the departments concerned?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE RESPECTING QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On a point of order, I should like to direct the attention of hon. members to the questions we have had today, of which there were 64 on the order paper, 43 of that number being starred questions. This session the rules have been altered and we have reverted to the practice which was customary in the house several years ago, of questions being called on Monday and Wednesday and answered as we have just been doing.

During the last several sessions that practice was discontinued. The questions were not called, and the answers appeared at the back of Hansard. This year we reverted to the old practice so that the answers now appear at the front of Hansard. Consequently the need for starred questions is not as essential as it was during the last few years when by means of the starred question on Wednesdays a member would get his question answered and the answer would appear at the beginning of Hansard.

I would just ask hon. members to consider when placing questions on the order paper whether they really want them to be starred. Today we had three starred questions the answers to which were very long, and a request was made that they should be printed without being read in full.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I feel the occasions are rare enough when I can agree with the leader of the house, but I was a member of the committee on the rules which recommended that this change be made at this session, and I quite agree with the leader of the house that questions which elicit lengthy information might better not be starred, now that we know the information will be available in the front of Hansard anyway.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Rising on what purports to be a point of order raised by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, may I bring to your notice that surely, inasmuch as starred questions are still recognized as being in order under our amended rules, it is within the discretion of the individual member to decide whether or not he wants to put an asterisk beside his question.

Mr. Churchill: I did not question that at all.

Mr. Howard: Then why did you rise on a point of order?

Mr. Churchill: There was no other way of raising the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day are called it is customary to deal with matters affecting the business of the house, and I think the discussion was in order. It is not a question of right, of course; it is a question of practice, and hon. members have expressed their views.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN EVENT OF WAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would care to comment on a press report to the effect that he indicated in Edmonton on Saturday last that if war broke out Canadian forces would be armed with nuclear weapons.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The statement I made the other day in no way represented a change of viewpoint on the part of the government of this country, and I hope the Leader of the Opposition would agree that if war came, should nuclear weapons be used against us Canadian troops participating should not be denied the right to use nuclear weapons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What I stated was but a repetition of what has been said on previous occasions. I would simply refer the house to what I stated on November 24, 1960, when speaking to the Canadian club of Ottawa; on August 15, 1961, when speaking in Halifax to the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association; and again, on October 6, 1961 when Dr. Thomson and those associated with him in the Canadian committee for the control of radiation hazards made representations to the government.

We take the stand that in the interests of disarmament everything must be done to assure success if it can be attained, and that the nuclear family should not be increased so long as there is any possibility of disarmament among the nations of the world. That has been our view throughout; that was the reason for our vote on the Swedish resolution which came before the United Nations.

Mr. Pearson: In view of what the Prime Minister has said, to the effect that nuclear arms would be in the hands of Canadian forces if war broke out and nuclear arms were used against them—I think I am right in my interpretation of what the right hon. gentleman said—may I ask whether such weapons would be in the hands of Canadian forces before the outbreak of war?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I referred to the outbreak of war and said that in the event that nuclear war was launched, nuclear weapons should be placed in the possession of Canadians.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Could these weapons be used without the approval of the United States authorities?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Our views in that regard were set forth at length in February, 1959. At that time I said—and I am simply summarizing the remarks I made in the house—that in the event we should decide to make nuclear weapons available it would be necessary to have joint control on the part of Canada and the United States. That attitude, of course, has not been generally accepted. If I understand the Leader of the Opposition aright, some weeks ago he took the stand that he objected at any time to joint control, but he would be willing to have the United States store nuclear warheads in Canada.

That view we have never held. Our view is that at the moment this is hypothetical and will continue to be so as long as disarmament is to the fore. But should it be decided in the light of Canadian armament needs and defence responsibility that nuclear weapons are to be had at any time, joint control is of the essence of the stand we have taken.

Mr. Pearson: It is not possible, of course, in a question to remove the misunderstanding which the Prime Minister has created about my position in this matter. I ask the Prime Minister, therefore, this question. In view of the constitutional position of the United States, and in view of recent statements of the President of that country, how does the Prime Minister propose to bring about this joint control?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows very well that so long as the law of the United States is as it is at present, joint control is impossible.

Mr. Pearson: Then we cannot have the weapons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What I have stated is exactly the position of affairs. We have stated that until the United States makes joint control available, we do not intend to go further than we have unless war breaks out, at which time we hope to have available to Canadians the necessary nuclear weapons. That is much clearer than the evasive policy of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: In view of the Prime Minister's recognition of the constitutional difficulty, and in view of what he has just said about the necessity for joint control irrespective of that constitutional difficulty, how then is the Prime Minister going to ensure that nuclear weapons are in the hands of Canadian forces if war breaks out?

Mr. Speaker: There has been a substantial exchange on this—

Mr. Pearson: It is an important matter.

Mr. Speaker: —important matter. If it cannot be clarified in five supplementary questions I think it might better be deferred to be the subject of a debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST GERMANY—STATEMENT BY U.K. FOREIGN SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address an important question to the Prime Minister, as one leader to another. In view of the report in the Globe and Mail of February 26 to the effect that Britain's foreign secretary has stated his desire to arrive at a modus vivendi with the East German regime, would the Prime Minister inform the house whether the Canadian government will second this hopeful endeavour to lessen tensions in central Europe?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as one leader to another may I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question in order to permit of a full and complete answer. I have seen only press reports of what Lord Home is alleged to have said about the problem of Berlin. The hon. member will appreciate that it is difficult for me to attempt to answer his question on the basis of such reports.

However, as has been said on other occasions, the Canadian government has consistently taken the stand that allied troops should remain in West Berlin as guarantors of the freedom of the people of West Berlin. Our assessment coincides with the British foreign secretary's statement that the Soviet union would like to obtain some degree of recognition of the regime it has created in East Germany. It will be the task of the west in the months ahead to seek through negotiation the achievement of the Latin expression which the hon. gentleman used, a modus vivendi which will respect the essential interests both of the west and of the U.S.S.R. in the Berlin problem. The Canadian government will do everything possible to assist in the fulfillment of this task.

PEACE RESEARCH INSTITUTE—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of a Canadian Press report of a press conference at which the minister was asked whether he would lend either financial or moral support to any peace research institute, to which he was reported to reply "I don't plan looking into it". Could the minister say whether this is a true statement of the attitude of the government in regard to the peace research institute now being organized?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think my actual reply to that question was that there are a large number of organizations in this and other countries whose avowed purpose is the pursuit of peace, and I thought they should pursue their activities without the Department of National Defence taking any active part therein.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister advise whether he has received a report from the clerk of the city of Toronto advising that the city council has asked that the federal government extend the municipal winter works incentive program from April 30 to May 31 because of the severe cold weather which has been experienced, and because several projects in the 1961-62 program may not be completed by that date? If so, what decision has the government made on this matter?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did receive a letter dated February 13 requesting that the government consider extending the municipal winter works program from April 30 to May 31 of this year, in view of the severe cold weather and heavy snowfalls as a result of which many of these projects could not be carried on. It has been decided to extend this date to May 31, and all the provinces will be so advised.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF ANNOUNCED FARE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question relating to the announcement of T.C.A. that substantial fare increases will take effect on April 1. In view of the announcement of the president of T.C.A. that this increase raise is to meet a deficit, and his previous evidence that such deficits resulted from franchise extensions given C.P.A. two years ago, has the minister given consideration to a review of this apparently destructive competition?

[Mr. Pitman.]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I do not accept all of the premises in my hon. friend's question, my answer is no.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Has the government yet had before it for approval the fare increases referred to?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter for the management of T.C.A.'s decision.

Mr. Fisher: A further supplementary question. Does the minister's answer indicate there will be no review of this fare increase by the minister and the government?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, this is an internal decision of the board of directors of T.C.A. Of course the annual report of T.C.A. and its budget for 1962 will be reviewed by the standing committee that reviews the affairs of the C.N.R. and T.C.A. These documents will be the subject of inquiry on the part of all hon. members of that committee.

CROP INSURANCE

STATEMENT ON CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING REINSURANCE OF LOSSES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, as reported at page 1195 of Hansard, the hon. member for Assiniboia asked the following question:

> As an encouragement to the provinces to make greater use of the Crop Insurance Act, can the Prime Minister say whether consultations have been held between officials of the federal Department of Agriculture and the provincial departments of agriculture to discuss the question of reinsurance of losses under the Crop Insurance Act?

Proposals concerning reinsurance of losses under the Crop Insurance Act have been received by the Department of Agriculture from the governments of the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Discussions up to the present time have been between officials on an informal basis.

TRADE

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON GATT DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should address this question to the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but perhaps the appropriate minister might care to comment on discussions which are reported to have taken place at GATT in Geneva last week on a new world wheat arrangement, and which are reported to have been adjourned last week in disagreement.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition should have a third string to his bow, because he is talking about wheat and that is a question for the Minister of Agriculture. As far as GATT is concerned, seeing that the hon. gentleman is asking about negotiations at Geneva concerning wheat, that question will be answered in due course on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture.

FLOODS

FRASER VALLEY, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSULTATIONS TO AVERT DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources arising out of his answer to question No. 197, to the effect that the controller of water rights for the province of British Columbia indicated that as of February 1, 1962 the snow pack on the upper Fraser was average to above average for that date. Has the province of British Columbia been in consultation with the minister's department with respect to joint participation in a program to avert the possibility of damage in the lower Fraser valley in the spring months?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

COMBINES

DRUGS—STATEMENT AS TO TABLING OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, February 21 the hon. member for Skeena directed a question to the Minister of Justice asking whether the minister could indicate when he might be in a position to table the report of the restrictive trade practices commission relating to the pricing and selling policies of certain pharmaceutical houses. I now have the reply as follows.

I have had inquiries made as to when the report of the restrictive trade practices commission is likely to be received, and am advised that while the matter is being pressed forward with all possible dispatch, it is likely to be some time yet before the report is made.

IMMIGRATION

EFFECT OF NEW REGULATIONS ON ENTRY OF ORIENTALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether she has any information on the case revealed in the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, wherein a Canadian citizen of Chinese origin charges that the new regulations as now applied have absolutely no effect in changing the role of orientals wishing to come to Canada.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I have not seen the article referred to, Mr. Speaker. However, if it is as quoted, the information contained therein is erroneous.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can she tell us offhand now or give the information later as to how many Chinese unrelated to Canadian citizens of Chinese origin have been admitted to Canada under the new regulations?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure the hon. member does not expect a reply to that question, Mr. Speaker. He has had sufficient experience in this department to know full well that it takes longer than from February 1 to February 26 to process an application.

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

ALLEGED LACK OF ECONOMIC GROWTH

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is a traditional opportunity for those of us in opposition to raise some matters of great importance dealing with the Canadian economy. I therefore take that opportunity today in order to deal with what will be the theme in the next election and what is the greatest issue before the people today. The Prime Minister has suggested several possible themes for the next general election such as free enterprise versus socialism, senate reform and things of that nature. This is, of course, an attempt to blur and becloud the basic issues before the country, in an attempt to divert people's attention from the shortcomings of this government in meeting emerging problems.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

I cannot during this debate discuss all the essential problems such as social security and national unity which will have to be faced and solved soon. Apart from the threat to world peace, however, the paramount issue is the lack of economic growth, the nation's nearly stagnant economy. Without adequate and planned growth a relatively large number of our Canadian workers will remain unemployed, the farmers will accumulate surpluses, private enterprise will continue in hesitancy; municipalities will deteriorate through being unable to improve their local services, and other levels of government will find it increasingly difficult to extend our social security system to other areas of collective risks. In other words, economic growth is essential not only to a rising standard of living but also to the progress and improvement of all the other aspects of our national life.

Economic growth therefore must be the key domestic issue of the next general election. In the economic debate that has taken place in Canada in recent years the Liberal party has taken and is taking a realistic and responsible attitude. We are saying that the Canadian economy has not grown as it should have grown since 1957, and that the government has failed to take appropriate action to correct the situation. We in contrast are putting forward a concrete program to promote rapid and balanced growth.

What is the attitude of this Conservative government? They make the preposterous claim that the Liberal party is selling Canada short when it underlines the lack of economic growth. They say that Canadians never had it so good, and they apparently do not propose to do anything except to publicize their meagre accomplishments. This charge that we on this side are selling Canada short reminds me of another economic debate which took place during the last presidential campaign in the United States, and of Mr. Nixon's position in that debate as described by Meg Greenfield in an article entitled "The Prose of Richard M. Nixon" which appeared in The Reporter on September 29, 1960. This is what she had to say:

> The identification of his opponents with communism is generally considered to be a chapter from Nixon's past. In not very subtle ways, however, he has managed to assert throughout the last two years that those who have criticized him or the Eisenhower administration or the Republican party on matters ranging from the economy to national defence have not in fact attacked those policies but have attacked America itself. The implication is either that they have suggested we adopt a communist system, or, when this won't do, that they have not criticized a policy but a basic American institution. "It's time to stop selling America short" appears to be the grand theme of his campaign for the presidency, suggesting as it does some unspecific deficiency of patriotism in his opponents.

That surely has a familiar ring to hon. members of this house. I am quite sure that the tactics used by Mr. Nixon in the United States will not be more successful in Canada, as Canadians know too well their own economic difficulties to accept the rosy picture that the Conservatives are attempting to present to them.

Let us now look at the facts, Mr. Speaker. I might remind hon. members, if they do not choose to listen, that I am in that rather special category in which I have all day to speak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: Oh, no; have mercy on us.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has indicated her proper position when she says she has all day to speak. I trust that those who are listening will give their early attention to what she has to say.

Miss LaMarsh: Let us look at the facts, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives claim that our economic troubles are over simply because the Canadian economy is going through another cyclical upswing in business. There is nothing exceptional about the present recovery. It is due to the normal pattern of change in inventories, and is just another phase of the short cycle.

In March, 1961 my leader was the first in this house to say that the 1960 recession was over because the process of inventory liquidation was then completed. In the latter part of 1961 economic conditions began to improve, and several experts forecast an increase of about 6 per cent in the gross national product at market prices for 1962. This increase would be about the same as that in 1959, when unemployment remained at an average rate of 6 per cent. This is certainly nothing to boast about for a period of peak activity.

Indeed, the experts also predict that another recession will begin at the end of 1962 or at the beginning of 1963. Again this is the normal pattern of the short cycle. Recessions tend to appear every three years: in 1954, in 1957, and in 1960. It is quite normal, therefore, to expect the beginning of another one during the next fiscal year. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is the appropriate time for the government to anticipate such an unfortunate event and prepare plans now to cope with it before it comes. This is exactly what President Kennedy is doing in the United States.

The Leader of the Opposition, it may be recalled, made the same suggestion to the government on April 12, 1960, in this house when he warned that the Canadian economy was on the eve of another recession. The government did not accept his warning then, and it blindly refused to plan accordingly. As a matter of fact, here is what the Minister of Finance had to say at that time as found at page 3167 of Hansard of April 12, 1960:

> The Leader of the Opposition was so anxious this afternoon to get everybody talking recession with him that he was in effect asking the Minister of Finance what preparations he was making for the next recession. The best preparation that can be made for the next recession is to continue the present government in office.

He continued:

> That is the surest guarantee of avoiding a recession.

The Minister of Finance was wrong again. The recession began during the second quarter of 1960, but the government did not even recognize its existence before the very end of that year. It did not recognize the problem of increasing unemployment. As a matter of fact one of the ministers of the crown, as I recall, said that it would melt with the snow.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance.

Miss LaMarsh: Furthermore, the government even avoided the use of the word in the throne speech debate of November, 1960. I hope that same mistake will not be made this time, and that the Minister of Finance will be realistic enough to anticipate this new danger and act accordingly. I hope that this time he will do more than just sit passively and watch it happen.

Moreover, this current recovery is not without its weaknesses. I do not see how we can be satisfied with the present economic situation when, at a cyclical peak, the rate of unemployment is 8.5 per cent, and when this very poor result has been obtained because of our labour force remaining stable, a factor which is quite abnormal. I have been truly shocked since the opening of this parliament to see the self-satisfaction of the government over the problem of unemployment, as though the problem no longer existed, although almost half a million Canadians still remain unemployed.

The condition of Canadian agriculture is certainly not bright. The dairy industry, which is so important in eastern Canada, is in deep difficulties. This can best be illustrated by the tremendous butter surplus that has been accumulating in recent years. There were widespread rumours last year that the government would announce a new policy, but as usual it has not dared to come to grips with the issue. The Prime Minister has announced instead that the dairy industry will have to wait until May for a policy statement. Meanwhile it has to live under conditions of complete uncertainty as to its immediate future.

In the prairie provinces, Mr. Speaker, net farm income declined by about 45 per cent in 1961 compared with 1960, according to the most recent figures published by the dominion bureau of statistics. This tragic decline was caused by the reduction in production of grain crops in 1961 brought about by the terrible losses of last summer's drought, and the consequent drop in the year end inventories of grain on farms. We are also told that the outlook for 1962 is not very bright because of a lack of soil moisture, and that the supplies as at January 1 of this year were 465.3 million bushels compared with 745.9 million last year. Our wheat surplus may soon be completely eliminated, but it will not be to the advantage of Canadian wheat producers. We are committed to new sales abroad at a time when we may not be able to produce enough to fulfil our traditional commitments.

The current mild and temporary recovery reveals the more fundamental weaknesses of the Canadian economy. When we look at our long term situation it becomes evident that since 1956 our economy has simply failed to grow. This lack of growth appears clearly when we compare recent figures with the previous period and with the requirements of full employment. You say, what is the evidence? From 1950 to 1956 the average annual increase in our gross national product in constant dollars was 6 per cent. From 1957 to 1961 it has been 1.5 per cent. In 1956, compared with 1950, the volume of our gross national product on a per capita basis had increased by 22 per cent; but in 1961, compared with 1956, it had declined by more than 4 per cent.

From 1950 to 1957 total capital expenditures in constant dollars increased by 62 per cent, but since 1957 they have declined by 12 per cent. During these last self-same five years business capital expenditures in constant dollars have declined by almost 25 per cent. From 1950 to 1956 the average rate of unemployment was 3 per cent. Since 1957 it has exceeded 6 per cent. The average level of unemployment in 1961 was the highest in the post-war period, 7.2 per cent, in spite of the fact that net immigration estimated at 13,000—that is, only 13,000 more people coming into the country than those going out of it—was at its lowest post-war level.

Those are the basic facts which describe the long term situation of the Canadian economy. It is not a rosy picture, but it is a true picture. This is not glooming and dooming; this is a responsible discussion of the facts.

There are two other important aspects of this situation which must be mentioned. First, our export trade which is so vital to us is going through a revolutionary period. More than 50 per cent of the increase in our trade went to communist countries in the first nine months of 1961. This is a new but very unstable trade diversion. No one can tell how long such markets will continue. Moreover, the emergence of new trade blocs represents a challenge which the government is still refusing to face. The government, rather than embracing the idea of such potentially great trade developments, has hung back and consistently played the obstructionist. Second, it has been estimated that we will have to have one million additional new jobs in Canada during the first half of the 1960's in order to achieve reasonable levels of employment.

Since the present government came into office our economy has slowed down. While the government lauds itself because more people are employed, it suppresses any real discussion of the fact that we are barely holding our own and creating nowhere near sufficient jobs to take care of the present, much less the future. The government would have us believe that they are doing everything possible to alleviate unemployment, and that since nothing more can be done the whole matter might better be ignored. It has attempted to fix responsibility for this situation upon us, upon a prior administration. Who can forget the biggest single group in Canada who were suddenly thrust out of work in 1958 at the instance of this government, that skilled technical team at Malton building the Arrow and the Orenda engine, some 16,000 Canadians who at one blow were placed out of work? With that same blow Canada suffered the loss of a complex of highly skilled people such as we had never before put together and may never again. The government cast them away. Most of them left for the United States, which realizes the necessity for the development of such a force of scientists and technicians. This is what an editorial in the February issue of Aircraft magazine has to say, speaking of a young man who was part of the Avro team:

> James Chamberlin is a Canadian now living and working in the United States. It is ironical that three years after his departure from Canada his name may become nationally known. It is possible that with an election approaching the case of Jim Chamberlin may become a cause celebre, for he is a symbol of the growing export of brains that Canada has supplied to the United States in the last few years.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

> Mr. Chamberlin has recently been named by NASA as project manager for project Gemini. Project Gemini is the next major man in space project by the United States and involves putting two men in orbit in separate capsules which will rendezvous while in orbit. The fact that a man who has not even been in the United States long enough to qualify for citizenship would be assigned by NASA to manage a project which means so much to U.S. international prestige is an indication of the high regard with which he is held in U.S. scientific and engineering circles. Too bad Canada couldn't have held Jim Chamberlin and others like him.

When the Prime Minister asks, as he did in the past few days, whether we are to fight the next world war with bows and arrows, the people of the country at least know, even if they do not know whether a Bomarc without a warhead is equivalent to an unstrung bow, that we will not be fighting with Arrows, and they know who are responsible for that.

The cost to Canadians of the slowdown in our economic pace is $14 billion. That is the difference between our actual production in the last four and a half years and the production we would have had if the economic growth of previous years had continued. The cost is nearly $800 worth of goods and services for every person in the country. The cost for a family of four is over $3,000, and the loss has been getting bigger every year. In 1961 alone it was about $5 billion, that is $100 million a week or nearly $600,000 for every hour of the day and $10,000 for every minute. Worse still, the slowdown means a loss of 300,000 jobs for Canadians, extra jobs which would now exist if economic growth in this country had continued since 1957 as it was before.

Third, then, Mr. Speaker, the fiscal and monetary policies of this government have done nothing to assist and, indeed, much to harm economic development. May I quote from an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 22, 1962:

> In Toronto, the citadel of the Conservative party, the Globe and Mail demands an early budget and a full disclosure of the financial facts both for the enlightenment of the Canadian people and for the reassurance of foreigners since "in the last year or so Canada's credit and standing abroad have deteriorated. The heavy national deficit, the long delay in bringing down the 1961 budget, and the rancorous quarrel between the government and the former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. James Coyne, have created doubts about our financial responsibility." Lacking an early budget, says the Globe and Mail, "the result could be a sharp decline in much needed foreign investment."

Those are strong words from a government supporter but the Montreal Gazette, Canada's oldest and most reliable Conservative organ, appears to be more alarmed than its Toronto contemporary. It says:

> The present situation, when both federal and provincial governments are running up deficits and debts cannot continue ... Obviously everybody cannot go on spending above revenues indefinitely without the day of reckoning being terribly cruel.

These, then, are the costs of Canada's wasted years; the years of Tory talk instead of action, of mismanagement instead of purposeful government. As I said before, economic growth will be the key domestic issue during the next election campaign. This time the Conservatives will be judged not on a vision but on their record, a record of wasted years as compared with the period of progress and development during the former Liberal administration.

In contrast, we on this side of the house are presenting an over-all program designed to meet the new problems and the changes which have recently emerged. We recommend a new and freer trade policy. The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, has been in the forefront of those proposing new trade alliances in free trade areas such as the Atlantic community. We have, in addition, special programs to help those domestic industries which will have to adjust to freer trade. There are many such which have been undertaken in the various E.C.M. countries.

If I may, I should like to cite some of the procedures which are used in the various countries. I should like to point out that we are well aware of the fact that freer trade might have an adverse effect on some of our domestic industries, but that same fear was widespread in European countries and did not materialize. The governments of those countries applied some differing types of solutions through their budgets and through governmental action to adjust their domestic industries to this new trading community.

In Italy, Mr. Speaker, there is something called the fund for the south, which grants credits to small and medium sized industries for construction of new plants and modernization of existing ones. These loans bear 3 per cent interest for 15 years and cover 70 per cent of the cost of the project. Most hon. members will know that the southern part of Italy is much less developed than the northern and more industrialized part. Tax concessions in that country are allowed on investments in specific areas including exemptions of income tax, turnover tax, corporate tax, registration and mortgage taxes. Material and machinery in these regions are exempted from customs duties. An exemption from corporate income tax on a maximum of 50 per cent of corporate profits is granted, provided the tax exempt portion is used for new investment or to reactivate industrial plants. Municipal governments may grant exemption from all or part of taxes, such as commodity tax, consumption and land taxes, due to them up to August, 1967. Lands required for new industries may be expropriated and made available at their agricultural rather than their industrial value.

In the Netherlands certain regions have been designated as development areas. Special provisions apply to investments in these localities. Subsidies based on additional useful floor area of new factories provide up to one half the cost of purchasing industrial sites. To qualify an entrepreneur must agree in principle to employ a specified number of male employees. Up to one third of the cost of equipment can be written off at an accelerated rate. A company is allowed to deduct in any one year losses sustained in the six preceding years, and new industries may carry forward losses until they are completely absorbed by subsequent profits.

In Luxembourg the minister of finance is vested with power to extend substantial reductions in tax rates in order to attract new industries. Incentives take the form of accelerated depreciation, loans at low interest rates, direct subsidies for underindustrialized areas to promote the building of new plants, and lease-purchase schemes for industrial buildings.

In France, Mr. Speaker, some of these procedures were used. During the post-war period two modernization and equipment plans have been implemented. A third one is to become operative this year. Under it accelerated depreciation is allowed on a specific range of assets required for updating French plants. Companies can charge against taxable income the full amount of investment in companies and associations approved by the government whose functions are to assist members in modernization. Expenditure on scientific research is encouraged by an initial depreciation allowance of 50 per cent, and contributions to scientific organizations are allowable up to 2 per cent of turnover.

In Belgium state loans at reduced rates of interest are made available to industry through approved credit organizations, which in turn receive state subsidies and guarantees. Government built factories are sold or leased back to industries. Such locations are exempt from real estate taxes for five years. About 30 per cent of investments in industrial land, buildings and equipment can be written off against corporate taxes over three years. The capital gains tax does not apply to returns on investment in development areas.

In Germany most of the aid to distressed areas applies only to Berlin. However, enterprises situated on or near the eastern frontier are granted accelerated depreciation.

In Greece, an associate member of the E.C.M., price advantages of up to 8 per cent in bidding for government contracts, reduction in turnover taxes, exemption from custom taxes on machinery, are all available to companies operating in designated areas. Net profits destined for reinvestment in business attract a 40 per cent to 80 per cent tax exemptions.

These, then, are only some of the ways in which government has assisted in the E.C.M. countries.

Mr. Morton: May I ask the hon. lady a question? Would she indicate to the house in what period of time these inducements were given to industry, what year?

Miss LaMarsh: They have been given in various years since the beginning of the E.C.M. up to the present, and in different countries they have different periods of time relating to different industries.

In addition, this party has a program for regional recovery. We propose to set up an agency of the federal government which will be charged with the rehabilitation of problem areas. We of the Liberal party feel that to meet today's needs it is necessary to establish a Canadian standard of development opportunity. A new Liberal government will end the situation in which some Canadians have much poorer opportunities than others because they happen to live in areas whose resources have never been developed or whose industries are declining.

This agency will be responsible to one minister. It will identify the areas where a special thrust for development is needed, and suggest effective action programs. These programs will be examined with the provinces and the municipalities, with the industries concerned, with the federal departments and with local representatives. The programs will be backed by good administration, as well as by the necessary money.

Liberal action to meet the special requirements of development areas means capital grants for basic development projects such as roads, power generation and transmission, and other public investments. It means that private industry will be helped to get things moving, and in that regard tax incentives will be offered to companies which expand or modernize their operations, or which start new industries in the development areas. It means such things as federal public works programs. It means a municipal loan fund to provide capital for municipal works and services. It means that we will assist or aid in urban renewal and rural development and will make more capital available for clearing slums, for improving farmland, for reforestation, for development of recreational and tourist areas and for improving rural housing. Federal government purchases will help firms in the development areas, and the Liberal program for vocational training will be particularly designed to help workers displaced from declining industries so they can more easily move to new or expanding industries close to home.

In addition to all this a new Liberal government will provide an industrial development bank to operate as a vigorous agency for Canadian development. Another proposal which we have set forward is that dealing with urban redevelopment and the municipal loan fund, to which I have just made reference. A municipal loan fund is something which this country has long desired. It is understood by the Liberal party that one does deal from the federal government to the municipal governments, that they are the creatures of the provinces and must be dealt with through the provincial governments. However, our answer is to set up a municipal loan fund, and we believe that fund should be organized in consultation with the provinces and municipal representatives so that it will not conflict with existing sources of capital. It will provide loans for sound municipal improvements, of which provincial governments approve but for which capital is unobtainable at reasonable terms from existing Canadian sources. These loans will mean that municipalities can meet our great backlog of municipal requirements. They will create new jobs all across Canada and help to get our economy moving again on sound projects.

In so far as urban renewal and urban redevelopment are concerned, all hon. members know that many of our big cities need special development measures. They have slum areas where overcrowding and poor housing breed ill health, family tension, crime and juvenile delinquency; where perhaps adults now cannot live well and children cannot get a proper start on the road to good citizenship. We believe that no Canadian family should have to live in those conditions. We all suffer in health and amenities because of the pollution of city air and water supplies. Our surroundings are made ugly by urban blight. We believe we have to attack these evils, and a Liberal government will attack them and will work in co-operation with the provinces and urban municipalities.

In addition we have a full program for government planning. Now, before I hear any outcry about the use of such words, I hasten to add that such planning is the answer not on the basis of socialism but on the basis of co-operation between government and private enterprise. Mr. Pearson and the Liberal party have long recommended the establishment of an economic advisory council.

Mr. Grafftey: You are adopting all our policies.

Miss LaMarsh: We have the conviction that such a council should be composed of representatives of labour, industry, agriculture and government. The council's function would be to find out and analyse what is going on in the country; to study what is planned in all types of industry and in all the regions of Canada; to study such major problems as automation; to investigate economic trends; to publish outlook reports and, finally, to make recommendations to the government which in our system has, and must retain, the responsibility for policy and action.

The studies and reports prepared by the council would enable the government to secure a detailed and objective picture of the whole economy; to know its problems and its potential, and to assess its performance in the light of that knowledge. With such information the government would be in a better position to implement effective policies designed to reduce the gap between the potential and the actual performance of our economy. Private business would be in a position to use the targets and the forecasts prepared by the economic council for its own guidance. Government and business together would be able to take a reasoned view of our economic needs and the programs required to meet those needs. This would lead to better understanding and more effective co-ordination between the private and the public sectors of our economy.

A moment ago an hon. member said that what I was suggesting, an economic advisory council, was comparable to the national productive council which was set up last year. Nothing could be further from the truth. Some indication of that fact is that the United States has a national productivity council, yet the new President of the United States recently found it necessary to set up something very close to what the hon. member for Algoma East has been suggesting. That was a new economic council which is called the president's council of economic advisors. In the United States it was found necessary to have both, and of the two the more important has been the president's council. Just contrast the lethargic position of this government with the hustle of our neighbours in the United States.

I suggest that hon. members take a look at the periodical U.S. News and World Report of February 19 last, in which there is an article entitled "New Tools to Control Booms and Slumps". It contains the following:

> Kennedy aides have been instructed to draw up a broad, new plan to control the economy. They have been told to use any and all devices to nudge, stimulate, goad, divert or restrict economic activities of all kinds.
> The chief planners are the president's council of economic advisers and a new staff of economic analysts and planners, just created in the treasury and directed by under secretary Roosa.

Some of the tools which are in use in the United States, which have been recommended by President Kennedy, include a bold use of the federal budget and the national debt to cut rates of income tax when a recession threatens, and a speed up of public spending when unemployment rises. The President has already asked congress for emergency powers to make temporary tax cuts, and for broad powers to ease trade negotiations with other countries. He has requested the establishment of a department of urban affairs to spend more than $4 billion a year for public housing, a federal mortgage program, community facilities and slum clearance, with plans to expand later to such fields as mass transport, education, air pollution control and water supplies.

That is the type of planning which we on this side mean when we say we have the answer. To those who think it has not been proven nor will it work let me quote from something which was said by probably one of the greatest of modern thinking Canadian planners and builders, the late Hon. C. D. Howe:

> If our national development had been left entirely to private enterprise, Canada would not have attained its present status as a nation. And unless government continues to take a lead by well planned initiatives, guidance and regulation, it will not continue to develop as it should.

These, then, are Canada's wasted years. A stagnant economy is inexcusable for a country which possesses such great national resources together with a vibrant, forward looking people born to live in freedom. It is not necessary, and the people know that. A new Liberal government will provide the leadership, restore the confidence, and undertake the practical policies that will get the economy moving.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan):

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house is of the opinion that immediate consideration should be given to the development of policies that would ensure an adequate rate of growth in the Canadian economy."

Mr. Speaker: If no one wishes to comment on the proposed amendment—I have in mind the form of the amendment—I will put it to the house.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): It is always a delight and a pleasure to listen to the sweet and mellow voice of the handsome and tender hearted lady member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh). However, I must say that we have some criticism to make of her proposals and, because she is such a nice lady, we are really sorry she is being misled on this question.

To illustrate the effect which this party has had on Canadian public opinion throughout the country, may I point out that the Conservatives are beginning to steal our slogans. They have already stolen one for the coming election, "Social justice for all". That has been our slogan for many, many years. Now the Liberals are beginning to steal our criticisms and even our language to some extent.

An hon. Member: Even the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Herridge: No, no. They do not steal in that case; they simply adopt. The Liberals are stealing our criticism and using our language, but they have not stolen our program. Do not let anyone be under any illusion in that respect.

Before I proceed to the main substance of my speech, perhaps I may say that speakers for an opposition group such as this must live in a certain atmosphere of anticipation concerning the amendment on the motion to go into supply. The hon. lady, in the course of her well delivered speech, said in the first instance that economic growth is essential for many reasons, hence it must be a major domestic issue in the coming election. We agree with that statement. It is true. That is our language. Then she said the Liberals have concrete plans to provide for such growth. We are waiting to see whether, later, members of the official opposition will be able to list any details of such plans so that we might know what they are.

Then the hon. lady said the Conservatives paint too rosy a picture. Well, we can agree on that. I am trying to indicate the things upon which we can agree in order to show how fair and unprejudiced we are. I may say that all my life I have found it very painful indeed to disagree with a lady, so hon. members can understand my situation this afternoon. Then the hon. lady said, apparently in an implied criticism of the wheat deals with China, that the government had committed itself to future deliveries of wheat to such an extent that we might not be able to make deliveries to our traditional markets. We in this group would not fear the possibility that we might not be able to make deliveries to our traditional markets. What we say is, let us stimulate production and let the farmers increase production so as to meet not only the demands of our traditional markets but the demands of all countries which desire our foodstuffs.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Further, the hon. lady went on to say we should need a million new jobs by 1965. I think we can all agree with that statement, so once again we are in accord. She made some comment about weeping and wailing over a lack of growth. I could not quite understand who the hon. member thought was doing the weeping and wailing. Certainly it was not any member of this group. We deplore conditions which are not satisfactory, but we do not weep and wail; we advance ideas and programs to try to improve the situation.

Since the founding of the New Democratic party the Liberal party has adopted so much of our program and vocabulary, as well as our parliamentary leader, that the Canadian people must wonder whether the Liberal party is altering its basic philosophy of ensuring, as a government, that big business maintains its unfettered control over our economy and arbitrarily dictates the standards of living of the people of Canada at the expense of consumers and producers.

We in this group base our policies on a few simple statements. We believe that every Canadian child, regardless of where that child may live or the economic situation of its parents, is entitled to all the education it is capable of receiving with advantage. We believe that every able bodied adult who is willing and able to work should have guaranteed employment. We believe that all the people of Canada should have protection against the hazards of illness or disease or accident of any kind or extent without their economic security or their savings or their future being imperilled. We believe that the country is responsible for the care of the disabled and for those who are unable to work on account of disability. We think they should be cared for at the expense of all of us and given security with a measure of comfort. We also believe that our older citizens should be able to enjoy their retirement with security and also with a measure of comfort.

Mr. Grafftey: Are you against sin?

Mr. Herridge: I see that the hon. and active member for Brome-Missisquoi, where they raise ducks and, apparently, duckies, is interrupting me but it appears that at heart he is sympathetic to my views.

The Liberal party is attempting to convey the idea that it will provide planning in Canada. Hon. members will notice how popular this word "planning" has become. The Minister of Finance who, I notice, is listening attentively to my remarks, will remember that some years ago one or two members got up in this house and said "Anyone who suggests planning suggests slavery". Well, we have come a long way since that day.

Finally, we are told that on February 20—not in this house but addressing the junior board of trade in Toronto—the leader of the Liberal party spoke at length and impressively in favour of action in both the private and public sectors in order to ensure the growth of our economy. But he had to reassure big business. He had to show big business that this was, after all, part of the electoral gimmick strategy, so he uttered the following words:

> Planning, why? When economic action is taken in the public sector it should be designed primarily to stimulate and increase activity in the private sector.

I want you to notice this:

> When economic action is taken in the public sector it should be designed primarily to stimulate and increase activity in the private sector.

When we quote these words we must remember that although we have over one half million unemployed in Canada at present, the balance sheets of large corporations indicate some have made the largest profits in their history under these circumstances. We are devoted to the principle of planning for the people under the direction of the people's representatives, not by big business and vested interests.

I return to the subject of the Leader of the Opposition, who has a fascination for me this afternoon. Later in his speech on this occasion he apparently felt he had not provided adequate reassurances, and from my point of view he attempted to correct the previous impression he had created of the rejection of his own party's policy of support of free enterprise. I quote the following from his recent and famous speech:

> In this new world government and business must co-operate. Neither can afford to operate in a haphazard way. What we need now is careful co-operative planning. By this I do not mean planning, or a planned economy on a socialist model. A directed and controlled economy of that kind is for us not only undesirable, it is impossible. I mean planning, not with a view to bringing about more controls, but planning so that there can be a greater opportunity for profitable progress in the private sector of our economy.

When the hon. gentleman speaks I hope he will explain to the house that apparent contradiction in terms and objectives from the general impression created by his speech. If I remember correctly the speech was made to a board of trade in Toronto on February 20. You seldom find members of the cabinet or leading spokesmen of the official opposition addressing trade unions or farm organizations. Usually they address chambers of commerce, boards of trade and groups of that kind, for which they have a natural affinity.

Mr. Pearson: And the national farmers' union and the Saskatchewan farmers' union.

Mr. Herridge: When the Leader of the Opposition hears what is being said by the national farmers' union concerning the expression of opposition to the principle of marketing boards on the part of hon. members of the Liberal party and those on the government side of the house, he will not wish to turn up at another farmers' meeting.

This is extraordinary. The Liberal party proclaims that the haphazard relationship of the past between big business and Liberal governments must now be organized, with the assistance of an advisory council, to plan for more profits for the private sector. This council would be in a position to use for its own guidance, to assist in its decisions, the targets and the forecasts prepared by the economic council.

Let me quote some other remarks attributed to the Leader of the Opposition. This group has been watching every word spoken by the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. In fact we have a special man watching him for his pearls of wisdom.

The Ottawa Journal reported the Leader of the Opposition as saying in Hull on February 2 last:

> The Liberal government would set Canada going again not through socialism but by planning to give incentive to private enterprise.

This sort of planning is compared by the hon. gentleman with that prevailing in Europe. But the Canadian people cannot be misled. The Liberal planning represents the theft of a word, not the acceptance of an ideal. I give the Leader of the Opposition credit for having honesty and integrity, and we all respect him, but he is addicted to the free enterprise doctrine. He is going to continue to plan for the people who have brought about every major war in history and caused every line of unemployed persons in every country of the world. If we leave it to them, in the future we will face a third world war.

How can we get our growth rate up to the necessary level? I will speak about our policy so there will be a clear understanding of what we stand for, without hemming or hawing. The New Democratic party maintains that Canada can only achieve and sustain a high rate of economic growth if she plans her economy to ensure the best allocation and use of her available resources and technology.

Canada has not had this kind of planning in the past. Whenever our growth rate has slowed down in the past, our government has relied on natural forces to get it moving again, has subsidized private corporations to encourage them to undertake new investments, or has undertaken certain emergency government expenditures itself.

We give credit to the government for the introduction of such measures as the winter works program, but even that program would have been opposed by the old parties years ago. We all remember what happened in the hungry thirties, when few of the unemployed in Canada could avail themselves of a program of this nature but were offered 20 cents a day in relief camps. We have advanced since then. Since that time the C.C.F. has had an influence on Canadian public opinion, on the opinion of governments and official opposition leaders. No government today would dare return to the conditions of the thirties because of the change in public opinion.

What is a democratically planned economy? We say it is one in which the principal economic and social activities are co-ordinated and developed through deliberate planning by a democratically elected government. This should be contrasted to an unplanned economy where the principal decisions are made by private corporations and by powerful individuals associated with those corporations.

Let me illustrate that point. Last week I spoke to an important person in the Canadian pulp and paper industry. The industry faces an uncertain future. The present market absorbs approximately 90 per cent of the production of the mills in operation. This gentleman complained to me about the fact that another large mill is being contemplated to enter into production in the near future, when only 90 per cent of the present production is marketable. This seems to be the result of lack of planning and direction from the federal government in co-operation with provincial governments. That is what we mean by government control of industry, direction of investment and so on.

In our opinion a democratically planned economy is designed to serve the interests of the majority. An unplanned economy is designed to permit private corporations to pursue the goal of maximizing their profit. It is only by chance that what the private corporations do in pursuing this goal will be in the interests of the majority of the people. We must take the Leader of the Opposition at his own word. He intends to make it possible for private corporations and big business to increase their profits and expand their activities.

We believe the investment decisions of the various private corporations are unco-ordinated. Each corporation or group of corporations is concerned with its own sector of the economy and proceeds without concern for either (a) those other parts of the economy by which it does not think it is affected or (b) the country's over-all economic goals. The big corporation executive may get just as worried as anyone else when he reads in his financial paper that Canada has too little investment, or too much, or the wrong kind, but these considerations will not affect his own investment decisions for his own corporation. He will continue to make those decisions which best suit his own firm's economic welfare as he sees it. Yet there is no guarantee that what makes economic sense for a private corporation will still make economic sense for the country as a whole when all these private decisions are added up.

The result is that we get overinvestment in some parts of the economy, underinvestment in other parts. We get overinvestment in the country as a whole at some times, underinvestment at others. This is very damaging to the stability of our economy and to its steady rate of growth.

With democratic economic planning, such as that which we suggest, we can allocate our resources to serve the over-all economic goals of the country. This would level out the disastrous ups and downs that plague our economy, ensure that the economy produces what the people want it to produce, and enable us to maintain a high rate of economic growth and a low level of unemployment. The only unemployment which should exist in Canada is that caused temporarily by climatic conditions, where it would not be economic to transport workers from one area to another.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Would he not include seasonal workers in that list?

Mr. Herridge: These people are included in seasonal workers. They are persons that are put out of employment because of climatic conditions. To illustrate, may I say that in the district in which I live, any logging about the 3,000-foot level is usually ended by Christmas time, not because the companies are not operating or because there is no work to do but because the snow is too deep for economic operation. Hence quite frequently there is a lay-off of some men in January and February and possibly to March 15, until the snow lessens again.

What else, it may be asked, does economic planning involve from our point of view? Economic planning does not concern itself only with the allocation of investment as between private capital and social capital, but also within these two sectors. Planning and controlling investment within the social capital sector is relatively easy, because here the government can take direct action. For example, if the government finds that the housing program has gone ahead very quickly and is in danger of overinvestment, but that municipal services like water and sewage are lagging behind, it can shift some investment funds from the former use to the latter.

Planning and controlling investment within the private capital sector of the economy is less direct. "Indeed", some people may ask, "why do we need government planning in the private sector at all? Surely private businessmen know better than anybody else what are the best investments for their own enterprises." That is the attitude of the normal private business enterpriser.

It is true that a certain investment decision might be right for company A, another for company B and still another for company C, and so on. But when companies A, B, C and so on all across the country are making separate decisions about how to invest and what to produce, there is no guarantee that this will add up to economic sense for the country as a whole.

We make that point very strongly because there is evidence of it all over the country. I have seen it in my own lifetime. Men have started operations in a certain industry, particularly in the lumber industry. I refer to that industry because I have lived in the lumber country. They started up operations because they could get timber at that time, not looking to the future. They may find that some operations are not economic, and you have bankruptcies growing and so on, whereas if there had been some guidance, or some planning, even in the provincial sphere, we would have had sounder and longer term development. In an unplanned economy we have one corporation building an oil refinery here, another producing television sets there, another building a steel plant somewhere else, all according to how they view their own particular segments of the economy. But nobody puts all these programs of capital investment together in order to see whether they add up to a good program for the whole economy.

The other parties depend on some sort of invisible hand—the free market and so on—to see to it that this hodgepodge of private investment plans makes over-all economic sense. But there is no such invisible hand. There is no sort of over-all guiding hand in the economic field. All this in many cases ends up with economic chaos because there has been no planning. There is no machinery working automatically in the private enterprise economy to see to it that our capital investment is neither too small nor too large and that it is growing in the most desirable places.

That is why we have periods of underinvestment and unemployment such as we are in now, and other periods of overinvestment and inflation as we had in 1955 and 1956. This is also why we have misuse of our investment capital with some sectors and regions being starved for needed social and private capital while others overinvest to the point that they have excess capacity for many years to come. That is not just a wild statement by radicals; that is a fact, and we find the results all through our economy in recent years.

Mr. Pearson: Before my hon. friend leaves that point, I wonder whether he would permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: I have been trying to follow what he is saying. Is he saying that there should be no private or corporate investment without government approval?

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about the commanding heights of the economy, those sectors of the economy which have a controlling influence on the economic destiny of the nation. As we have said before, we believe in public ownership wherever it is socially desirable and wherever it is indicated that it is in the best interests of the nation. We believe in much larger development of the co-operative enterprise. We believe there is a tremendous opportunity for socially desirable and socially responsible legitimate free enterprise, which is found largely in smaller industries, community industries and services, small businesses, farming and so on. In those sectors you will find economic organizations or groups themselves, under a change in our philosophy, directing their own destiny, working together co-operatively in accord with a national plan which has in mind the over-all planning we suggest. We believe there is a great amount that government can do by giving some direction and some guidance, some central purpose, to the development of our economy. In those large sectors we suggest planning as I have mentioned, and in these other sectors we suggest the influence of government, smaller group organization and co-operation to bring about the same result.

Mr. Morton: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

Mr. Morton: Is he suggesting that no new enterprise should commence without government consent or that no investment should be made without government consent?

Mr. Herridge: I am not suggesting that no investment should be made. I will illustrate the matter in this way. I mentioned this large pulp mill that is going to be built. I do not know where it is going to be built, as a matter of fact, but I know it is going to be built. It will make more acute the problems of producers now in operation at this time. This is the situation in various segments of the economy including the mining industry, the forest industry and large scale manufacturing. We believe that government policies must be such that they will have the power to control the situation so that there is no uneconomic investment—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Would the federal government have that power?

Mr. Herridge: Yes. It would have great influence on it through taxation and fiscal policies. We recognize that this is not an easy problem to solve. You will have to have the co-operation of provincial governments in many of these fields in order to reach the desired objective. But we believe we must start in this direction. We do not underestimate the difficulty, but we are laying out a positive program rather than let the economy drift, in our opinion, as a free enterprise economy in which large scale investors have no concern for the other sectors of the country except their own. I am not blaming them a bit, because under present circumstances they are forced into that position.

Mr. Speaker, I observe people nodding their heads and waving to me. I am just doubting whether my time has nearly expired. In any event I am going to say this. A New Democratic government would take steps to end what we term this economic chaos. This party has no faith in the invisible hand, as I said before. What planning machinery would a New Democratic government establish? A planning board would be set up, staffed with specialists in various fields, including economists, statisticians, engineers, scientists and so on. This planning board would follow four basic steps:

1. Find out what the people want their economy to produce, and how they want it to perform.

2. Find out what the economy is capable of doing, based on the available resources and technology.

3. Set up a number of goals within the limits of the economy's capacity and based on the people's choices.

4. Draft a plan which would so allocate our resources and technology that these goals could be attained.

This plan would be presented to the cabinet who would discuss it and, after making any changes that they deemed necessary, would present it to parliament for debate. That is when the Minister without Portfolio would have his opportunity if he were here at that time. If parliament passed the proposals outlined in the plan, the government would proceed to put it into action.

There are many details of such a plan. Some might say, how would the planners find out what the people want? Other members of our group will go into the matter of how the planners find out what the economy is capable of doing and how they set up goals for the economy. Our people have these things worked out in considerable detail. The techniques of planning are rather complex but the general ideas involved are fairly simple. First of all, we have the spending and taxing powers of the government. This very general approach, of course, is not adequate in itself. Government spending and taxation must vary for different sectors of the economy and different industries. For example, corporation taxes can be made higher for industries that are overinvesting and lower for those that need to invest more. Government spending should be heavy in those sectors of the economy such as social capital and those regions like the maritimes that have difficulty attracting the necessary private investment funds. We say that Conservative, Liberal and Social Credit governments have not used their spending and taxing powers in this way to influence the direction of investment.

Then there is the question of the Bank of Canada and monetary policy. The proper policy to follow during periods of inflation is to contract the money supply, which raises the interest rates on loans made by chartered banks. This makes it more difficult for businesses to acquire funds and thus helps prevent them from overinvesting under the wrong circumstances and conditions. In periods of recession and unemployment the proper policy is to expand the money supply, which lowers the interest rates on loans made by the chartered banks. This will make it easier for business people, municipalities and home builders to borrow money for needed investment to stimulate the economy. Money, in other words, should be tight in periods of inflation—I do not really like the word "tight" but it is very hard to find another word to express the idea—and easy in periods of recession.

We hear people say, would planning mean regimentation and loss of freedom? The planning board which a C.C.F. national government would establish would not govern the country. Its role is to use its specialized training to gather information and draw up plans. The final authority will always be the people themselves through their representatives in parliament. All plans drawn up by the planners would have to receive the approval of the elected cabinet before being presented to parliament for debate. After being presented for debate the people's representatives in all parties would have full opportunity to discuss the plan, propose amendments, and reject or accept it. That is democratic enough, is it not? Moreover, economic planning does not mean directing or regulating every economic act or even any large number of acts.

I could go on to deal with the Bank of Canada and monetary policy, the control of finances and the necessity for a Canadian development fund which we believe would channel investment into uses which today are neglected by the private investor. We believe in the planning of public investment. There is a great opportunity for public ownership and there are other planning agencies that could be developed. There are several besides the ones I have mentiond that have been present for some time in the Canadian economy and which could be used in the over-all planning process. We could utilize them to greater advantage. I give as examples Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the board of transport commissioners, the wheat board, the restrictive trade practices commission and the tariff board plus a large number of provincial agencies whose co-operation we would seek to obtain in giving effect to a program which would provide a national economic purpose for our country. Today there is no attempt to co-ordinate the work of these agencies with a national economic plan. A New Democratic government would co-ordinate their activities just as it would co-ordinate the activities of big business.

I say in conclusion that in an unplanned economy people have very little say about how their economy is to perform, what it is to produce, and so on. The only way they can express their wishes in an unplanned economy is by their purchases in the market place and this only works to their advantage if the market place is perfectly competitive. I might say that there are fields in the smaller areas of business and industry where they are competitive. In fact, of course, the market place is controlled in general by a handful of firms in each industry so that to a very large extent the people's wishes can be ignored.

Democratic economic planning would give the people as a whole a degree of control over their own economic destiny which they do not now enjoy. Instead of just hoping for full employment, rapid growth and security they could take positive steps and participate in the planning to see that the economy provides these things. Economic planning does not impose choice; it allows choice where little now exists. It offers an opportunity for people in all walks of life to co-operate with the national and provincial governments with some purpose. It will give purpose to their lives, a sense of security and a central direction to our economic development. It offers freedom to the Canadian people in the fullest sense of the word.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Kootenay West has not finished his speech.

Mr. Herridge: As an amendment to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

> That the period at the end of the amendment be replaced by a comma and that the following words be added:
> "by the expansion of public and co-operative ownership for such purposes as the operation of utilities, the development of resources, the elimination of monopoly concentrations of power, and the operation of major enterprises immediately and directly affecting the entire nation."

I move this subamendment to give some reality, shall I say, to the amendment moved by the official opposition. The few words contained therein represent the philosophy of our movement, and when the vote comes we hope that we will not only receive the support of members on the government side but also that of members of the official opposition.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, during the past weeks and months and again today we have heard a number of misleading speeches and have read a number of misleading articles and publications put out by the Liberal opposition, all attempting in some strange fashion to convey to the people of Canada that this country's economy has slowed down. In fact, I think the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) used the word "stagnating" this afternoon. So, Mr. Speaker, we in the government welcome this opportunity to set the record right, and I should like to speak about the economy at this time under three headings. First of all, I should like to deal with the situation which this government found existing in Canada when we took office in June, 1957. Then, I should like to deal with the progress that has been made since that time. Finally, I should like to deal with the prospects for the future.

First, I shall begin with what we found when we took office in June, 1957. Early in 1957 it was apparent that two important changes had taken place in the trading world. The first was that the countries of western Europe and Japan had completely recovered from the devastation of war and, having rebuilt their economies and their productive machinery, were no longer customers for many of the products we had been selling them in large quantities since the end of the war. The second change was that these countries, having replaced their productive machinery with the most modern and efficient equipment in the world, were rapidly becoming very serious competitors for our market both around the world and right here in Canada itself.

In addition to these two disturbing facts of economic life which we discovered when we took over the government in June, 1957, we also found that the Canadian economy had been for some months steadily slowing down due to the tight money policy imposed by the Liberal government of that day. Government economists had, early in 1957, warned that industrial activity in Canada was contracting at an alarming rate. The government's tight money policy had made it impossible for industry to acquire the funds necessary to invest in new plant and equipment and in new inventory which it needed, and the expansion of the economy had slowed down accordingly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, faced with such a situation we immediately set about the task of readjusting the economy to the conditions of 1957. As a result of the policies which were adopted, the country came through this difficult period of readjustment fully as well as the United States which faced similar problems. In fact, Mr. Speaker, because of the corrective measures which were adopted so promptly there was less of a let-down in industrial activity in Canada than there was in the United States. The final proof of the effectiveness of this government's actions during these difficult years is the fact that the Canadian economy is again moving vigorously ahead. So that all members may know just what has been accomplished during the present government's term of office, I should like to cite some key economic indicators, and in each case I will show the increase that took place between 1956, the last full year when a Liberal government held office, and 1961.

In so far as total employment is concerned, total employment increased between 1956 and 1961 by no less than 452,000 new jobs, a percentage increase of 8 per cent. The gross national product increased by $6.8 billion or 22 per cent. Exports increased by $900 million or 19 per cent. Imports were kept down to an increase of $200 million or an increase of 3.5 per cent. Total personal income increased by $6.8 billion, an increase of 30 per cent. Labour income increased by $4.6 billion, an increase of 30 per cent. Corporate profits increased by $207 million, an increase of 6.2 per cent. Industrial production increased by 15 per cent and consumer spending increased by $5.8 billion, an increase of 30 per cent. Total personal savings increased by $400 million, an increase of 30 per cent.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that all hon. members, in fact all the people in the country, will agree that this performance, particularly when you take into consideration the very difficult conditions we faced when we took over the government in 1957, is a very creditable one indeed. However, Mr. Speaker, the most spectacular advance has taken place during the past year when the economy really started moving in high gear. I should like to give you some examples of just what has taken place during these past 12 months. The latest figures available in respect of export trade are for last November and we find that during the first 11 months of the year exports increased by 8 per cent over the first 11 months of the year before. This rate of increase was more than double the rate of increase for the last five years. During the last three months of that 11-month period, in other words last September, October and November, the rate of increase was 15 per cent over the same three months the year before. I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, this indicates quite a remarkable rate of acceleration. First of all, you see a steady increase year by year and then during the past year double that rate of increase; and during the past three months the rate of increase was doubled again. This is acceleration if I ever saw it, Mr. Speaker.

During the first 11 months of the year we achieved a surplus trade balance of $27 million, the first surplus trade balance since 1952. In 1956, the last year of Liberal government, Canada had a trade deficit amounting to $713 million. So we see that during the past year we produced right here in Canada nearly three quarters of a billion dollars worth of goods which were formerly produced, under the Liberal government, outside of Canada and the production of which provided jobs for Canadians instead of for workers in other countries. From November 1960 to November 1961, the last month for which figures are available, industrial production increased by 8 per cent. This was three times the rate of increase during the last five years. From the first to the third quarter of last year, that is within the brief period of six months, Canada's over-all production of goods and services in real terms rose by no less than 4.7 per cent. This rate of growth in national output exceeded that achieved in any like period in 14 of the last 15 years. I think everyone will agree that this has been quite a remarkable achievement under today's very competitive conditions. This growth has been achieved without any rise in the price level. In other words, not only is the present rate of growth of the Canadian economy comparable to any of the post-war years, but the absence of inflation indicates that it is proceeding on a sounder basis.

Between December 1960 and December 1961, employment increased by 180,000 new jobs. This was nearly double the rate of increase during the last five years. I should like also, Mr. Speaker, to cite some additional key indicators which are normally used to indicate industrial growth and which also demonstrate just where our economy has been moving during the past year. I will name the indicator, then the latest month in 1961 for which figures are available and then the percentage increase over the same month of the year before: Manufacturing employment, December, up 6 per cent; new orders in manufacturing, November, up 9 per cent; construction contract awards, December, up 15 per cent; production of motor vehicles, December, up 14 per cent; production of textiles, November, up 15 per cent; production of petroleum, November, up 32 per cent; production of nickel, November, up 28 per cent; production of steel ingots, probably the best key indicator of all, and this is basic steel, was up a remarkable 37 per cent.

Now I should like to underline what this government has done to assist industry achieve this very spectacular result during the past year.

1. First of all we lowered the exchange rate to a more realistic ratio with other world currencies, which had the effect of making Canadian exports more competitive in world markets. It has discouraged excessive imports and has provided a needed impetus to our tourist industry. The full benefits of this step should be felt increasingly during the present year.

2. We have held trade and industrial conferences in Ottawa and in all the provinces to bring the services of the Department of Trade and Commerce directly to businessmen in all parts of Canada. By so doing we have stimulated their interest in going into the export market and helped them to produce more efficiently and effectively for the home market. More than 5,600 businessmen have attended these conferences.

3. We have greatly expanded our trade mission and trade fair programs to show businessmen the opportunities which exist in foreign markets and to help them display their products in those markets. Those programs will be pushed forward and expanded vigorously during the present year. Businessmen have co-operated enthusiastically in the development of our trade mission and trade fair programs.

4. We have introduced export credit facilities to provide long term financing for capital goods exports. Sales to date for which contracts have been signed and which were made possible by the use of export credits amount to approximately $41 million; and credits which have been authorized by the government, but for which sales are still being negotiated by the companies concerned, amount to approximately $114 million.

5. We had our trade commissioners survey the markets they are serving and report on any products made in Canada for which there is a demand in their market or in which they believe our present sales could expand. The result of this survey was that last June we were able to advise producers right across Canada of more than 2,500 market opportunities waiting for aggressive salesmen with a good product at a competitive price.

6. We have greatly expanded the functions of the Industrial Development Bank to provide small and medium sized firms with a larger source of working capital.

7. We have made available loans to small businesses, to release working capital for these small but very important industries which previously had no alternative source of funds for growth.

8. We have introduced accelerated depreciation to encourage production of new products and the establishment of new industries in labour surplus areas. Since March of last year the department has approved applications for double depreciation on assets valued at close to $110 millions. Sixty per cent of the approved assets relate to firms located in surplus manpower areas, and a wide variety of new products will be manufactured with the approved assets. They include new types of steel, chemicals, electronics, plastics, foods, paper, textiles, and many other products. At the present time applications for an additional $55 million are being considered by my department.

9. We have set up the national productivity council to help industry become more competitive, and thereby provide more sales and more jobs.

10. We have established a national design council and a national design branch within my department to assist Canadian industries with their design problems and, by encouraging improved design, make possible more sales and more jobs.

11. We have introduced a domestic commerce service which is a completely new arm of the department and has been created to help new industry become established and expand.

I believe all hon. members will agree that the production figures I mentioned a few moments ago show more clearly than any words I could utter just what has been achieved by the co-operative effort of government and industry during the past year, and what can be achieved in the future if we continue the same teamwork effort. In the kind of competitive world in which we find ourselves today nothing less than that kind of effort will do.

The important thing is to keep intact the present teamwork effort between industry and government. The Liberal opposition are making all kinds of extravagant promises in a desperate effort to regain power but remember, Mr. Speaker, they are the same people who slowed down the economy in 1957 with their tight money policy, and they can be counted on to apply the same tight money policy again if they should ever regain office, and slow down the economy the same as they did in late 1956 and early 1957. There never existed any teamwork effort between last Liberal government and industry, simply because that government was not interested in co-operating with industry. It is just as simple as that, and if anybody doubts my words all he has to do is speak to any businessman in any part of Canada and he will say that that is so.

Mr. Pickersgill: How ridiculous can you get?

Mr. Hees: The thing which amazes businessmen is that when they come down to see this government they find they are treated courteously. We receive them and look for ways to help them instead of finding ways in which to brush them off quickly, as happened under the Liberal government.

It is vitally important that the present government should stay in control of the economy, and it is going to do just that. There is no doubt about it, and thus it will be able to maintain the present teamwork effort which is paying off in such a spectacular fashion today. Under this government, and with the kind of co-operation we have had between industry and government, we can continue to work steadily forward towards full employment and the greatest prosperity this country has ever known.

That success story which I have just related to the house, that record of prosperity and that record of increasing employment is simply killing the Liberal opposition. Their plans have been completely upset. They have been desperately hoping for increased unemployment to help them in the next election, but instead of increasing unemployment they are being met with increasing employment and increasing prosperity, and so they have switched to a different tack. This tack encompasses a series of personal attacks, more of which we can expect to hear from now on.

This plan of campaign was first indicated in an article in Macleans magazine last fall, an article written by Peter Newman, and I might add that that magazine has never been unfriendly to the Liberal opposition. The first implementation of that new policy took place in this house last Thursday, a disgraceful performance if there ever was one. It was a vicious attack on the Prime Minister, a completely unfounded and untrue attack in which there wasn't a word of truth, and it was made by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin).

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, it is a well known rule of this house that it is not competent for any hon. member, even a minister of the crown, to seek to revive a debate which has already been concluded by a vote in this house, and neither is it competent for him to refer to speeches made in another debate. That rule has always, to my knowledge, been enforced in the house and I hope it will be enforced in this case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a rule of the house not to refer to debates which have already been completed in the same session unless there is a direct bearing on the subject under discussion. I trust the hon. minister will relate his remarks to the amendment and to the subamendment now being considered.

Mr. Hees: I can understand the sensitivity of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate regarding that speech, because I understand he wrote a very great deal of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hate to waste the time of the house by rising on a question of privilege but it is just possible that someone outside the house might believe what the minister has said. I hasten to assure the house, which already knows it, that the statement just made by the minister is unqualifiedly false.

Mr. Hees: Well, whoever did write that vicious, guttersnipe, back alley speech should be thoroughly ashamed of himself. It was a disservice to this house that that speech was ever uttered and I hope another like it is never heard in this chamber. We have laid before the people facts regarding the program we have carried on for the benefit of the people of this country during the four and a half years since we took office. This has been done in speeches by the Prime Minister, by myself and by other members of the government. We have outlined what is, I think, an excellent record. Moreover, the Prime Minister has indicated the excellent program we have for the future of this country. And, as my right hon. friend said recently, we shall be very glad to let the people judge that performance and that program for Canada's continued rapid development in the not too distant future.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, the minister has made a brave effort to reassure himself and his supporters that all is well with the economy of Canada. He has cited figures which related to the past year and, more particularly to an upswing in the last quarter of last year, and has presented that as representing a picture of the economy throughout the whole period of four years, or more that this government has been in power.

The minister should know that figures for part of a year, even if they show a slight upswing, do not represent a sound economy any more than one swallow does not make a summer. Nothing that the minister has said can alter the fact that during the last four years and more during which this government has been in office the economy has expanded by only about 1.5 per cent per year as compared with 6 per cent per year in the previous five year period under the Liberal government.

My colleague the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) has already referred to this stagnation in our development and has spoken of the steps which a Liberal government would take to correct it. I should like to develop this theme a little further and in so doing I propose to confine my remarks to the position of the Atlantic provinces.

I think it was Lincoln who said that no nation could survive half slave and half free. I think it is equally correct to say that no nation can survive half rich and half poor. In the light of the present challenge to our democratic way of life perhaps we could go further and say that no society can survive half rich and half poor. We recognize the importance of the economic front in the war of ideas in which we are now engaged by providing assistance to the under developed countries of the world. Surely we cannot afford to be less concerned about the underdeveloped parts of our own country.

Mr. Murphy: Mention the provincial grants, then.

Mr. Carter: To speak of the Atlantic provinces as underdeveloped is not to say that no economic growth has taken place at all. But growth has been extremely small and painfully slow. At the time of confederation in 1867, the Atlantic provinces—perhaps I should more correctly say the maritime provinces—were relatively prosperous. They had flourishing economies based on agriculture, fishing, forestry, shipbuilding, shipping and international trade. Their provincial governments were in a generally sounder financial position at that time than the governments of the central provinces with a lower per capita public debt, a lower cost of living and a lower level of taxation.

One effect of confederation was to restrict this international trade which was an important factor in the maritime economy. The volume of trade with the central provinces which it was hoped would compensate for that loss did not materialize. The restriction of international trade produced, in turn, an adverse effect on the shipping industry and this, together with the advent of steam, crippled or curtailed the shipbuilding industry, though I believe at least one steamship was built in New Brunswick in the early days of steam. Thus, the Atlantic provinces were compelled to rely more and more on their primary industries of agriculture, fishing, mining and forestry as the basis of their economies. Ten years delay in building a railroad to link the maritimes with the central provinces and the overriding claims of military rather than economic considerations in determining the route of that railway were not conducive to the establishment of secondary industries. Consequently the maritime provinces began to lag behind the rest of Canada economically. This gap has steadily widened over the years. We can obtain a better idea of the magnitude of this lag by looking at the figures for population growth as published by the dominion bureau of statistics.

In 1871 the population of the maritime provinces, excluding Newfoundland, of course, was 768,000 representing 21 per cent of the population of Canada. Newfoundland had not entered confederation at that time. In 1961, 90 years later, the population of the Atlantic provinces, including Newfoundland, was only 1.9 million people representing 10.5 per cent of the population of Canada.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

Mr. Jones: And Mr. Gordon wants to export more, does he not?

Mr. Carter: Without Newfoundland the population would be 1.4 million representing 8 per cent of the population of Canada. These figures show that in the 90 year period the population of the Atlantic provinces has barely doubled while the population of the rest of Canada has increased five times over. Had the population of the Atlantic provinces increased at the same rate as the population of the nation they would today have a population of approximately 4 million people. That represents a tremendous loss in terms of human resources as well as in terms of domestic market.

The most striking example is afforded by Prince Edward Island. In 1961 the population of Prince Edward Island was 103,000 people but 80 years earlier in 1881 it had a population of 109,000.

If we look at the figures for disposable income—that is income available for spending after the payment of taxes, etc.—the disparity is even more marked. As I said the Atlantic provinces today represent approximately 10.5 per cent of the Canadian population but they have only 7½ per cent of Canada's disposable income. In my next comparison I shall use figures since 1949, the year Newfoundland entered confederation, so that province will be included. Personal income per person in the Atlantic provinces in 1949 was $622 per person compared with $982 per person for the rest of Canada. In 1959 the figure was $991 per person as compared with $1,546 per person for the rest of Canada.

Incidentally, the figure for Newfoundland has increased from $472 per person in 1949 to $841 per person in 1959 which indicates that Newfoundland is making some progress toward closing the gap between that province and the other Atlantic provinces.

It is not right to say federal governments in the past have been uninterested in this problem or that no attempt has been made to counteract it over the years. On the contrary a great deal has been done. No less than 14 royal commissions have been set up at various times to study different aspects of the problems connected with the economy of the Atlantic provinces. Out of the recommendations of these commissions have come such legislative items as trade subsidies, freight rate assistance, coal subventions, equalization grants, and the establishment of the industrial development bank, just to mention a few.

Nor do I wish to detract from what the present government has done by way of Atlantic provinces special grants, increased subsidies and subventions for coal, small loans to business and other fiscal measures such as deferred depreciation. However, I maintain that this problem cannot be solved in a haphazard or piecemeal way by any number of isolated measures such as I have just mentioned.

Mr. Crouse: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Carter: No, I will answer questions after I am finished.

In the throne speech debate—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. gentleman cannot refer to a previous debate as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate pointed out.

Mr. Carter: I do not know what the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is about to refer to the throne speech debate. I suggest to him that his friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate stated that reference cannot be made to a previous debate.

Mr. Carter: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker.

A few days ago, in this house, the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) who wanted to ask me a question cited a number of industrial activities in an effort to prove that economically the province of Nova Scotia is moving forward. I point out to him that in the same debate the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger) in his excellent contribution also listed a number of industrial activities that are taking place in his riding which represent an even greater total of capital investment than that mentioned by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg.

Mr. Crouse: All under a Conservative government.

Mr. Carter: Just wait. We will see.

Mr. Pickersgill: A Conservative government in Newfoundland?

Mr. Crouse: Some day.

Mr. Grafftey: After the next election.

Mr. Carter: The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador did not use that argument to imply that the over-all economic picture of Newfoundland and the Atlantic region is rosy. The truth is that these industrial activities are not the result of federal action but result from the efforts of the provincial governments.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Ho, ho.

Mr. Carter: Important and desirable as they are, they are barely sufficient to take care of the natural increase in our work force. In spite of the economic expansion referred to by the hon. members the economic gap between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada is getting wider instead of narrowing as shown by the unemployment figures published by the dominion bureau of statistics.

In 1954 the work force of the Atlantic provinces numbered 501,000. In that year there were 33,000 people out of work the whole year round, on the average, representing 6.6 per cent of the work force. In 1956 there were 31,000 out of work the whole year out of a work force of 521,000, representing 6 per cent. In 1958 there were 67,000 unemployed for the whole year out of a work force of 544,000 representing 12 per cent of the work force.

Mr. Pugh: Do you have the figures for 1961?

Mr. Pickersgill: They are even worse.

Mr. Carter: Just wait. In 1960 there were 60,000 unemployed for the whole year out of a work force of 560,000 representing 11 per cent. To come to the latest figures which my hon. friend wants me to put on the record may I say this. The latest figures show that there are 84,000 people out of work in the maritimes—that is the last figure available and is for January 13—just exactly the same as the figure for the year previous, which was also 84,000. In other words, 14.7 per cent of the work force were out of work or unemployed on January 13 as compared with 14.9 per cent a year previous.

These figures do not tell the whole story as only 6,000 people joined the Atlantic provinces labour force between January of last year and January of this year. During the previous five years an average of 14,000 people had come into the labour force. If there had been a normal increase in the Atlantic province labour force of 14,000 people there would have been 84,000 plus 14,000 minus 6,000, or 92,000 people out of jobs on January 13. Between January 1957 and January 1962 unemployment increased by 5 per cent. However, the labour force increased by 12 per cent so that less than half of the new people coming into the labour force in the Atlantic provinces were able to find jobs. If this problem is ever to be solved, it must be done by special action on the part of the federal government. The provinces are powerless to do more than they are already doing until action is taken to remove the handicaps and disabilities under which they are now compelled to operate.

Reasonable people will understand that a situation which has been steadily worsening for over 80 years cannot be corrected overnight. Special treatment is required and special agencies must be set up to administer it. This solution must also be worked out within the framework of a national policy. It is foolish to pretend that this is going to be easy, and the effects of automation may render the solution even more difficult. It is obvious that if a region lags economically when the rest of the nation enjoys a boom, it is impossible to improve the economy of the backward region when the national economy is in a state of stagnation as has been the case during the past four years. The first step then must be to get the national economy rolling again.

In the past we have had a national policy nationally applied. The tax arrangements between the federal government and provincial governments which were pioneered by the Liberal party were aimed at making possible a Canadian standard of public services across the country. However, a national policy applied on a national scale cannot be adjusted with sufficient precision to take care of the great differences in economic conditions between the various economic regions of our country, because the instruments of control are too blunt to be adapted to the measures that must be taken. As a result, we have an overexpansion in one part of Canada while at the same time there is an underexpansion of the economy in another part.

I believe we must now go beyond aiming at a Canadian standard of public services and must aim at greater equality of employment opportunity. To achieve greater uniformity of economic development our national policy must be applied regionally instead of nationally. The national policy would set up the national goals for public and private sectors of our economy and then that policy would be applied in terms of regional goals for different economic areas. This may involve a new kind of budgeting procedure with the government presenting an over-all budget not for one year but for a period of say three years or even five years, with interim budgets brought in for essential adjustments. To implement this policy it would be necessary to set up, in my opinion, a new department of government, namely a ministry of regional development and rehabilitation. A regional development authority would also need to be set up to co-operate with industry, labour, and provincial and federal agencies in determining the best way of attaining the regional goals and to co-ordinate the efforts of all concerned so that the regional efforts can be integrated into the economy of the whole.

The development authority would have committees of experts to study and advise on the special problems connected with the resource industries of fisheries, agriculture, forestry and mining; the manufacturing industries and the marketing and transportation of our products.

I know that this sounds very much like planning, Mr. Speaker, and I have avoided using that word because the socialist party to our right seem to think they have a monopoly on it.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Is that the socialist party to your political right?

Mr. Carter: The socialist party in the corner. I listened the other night to the leader of the New Democratic party. Later on in the evening I listened to the leader of the New Democratic party in the Ontario legislature; I refer to Mr. MacDonald. Today I listened with great interest to the hon. member from Kootenay West. They all seem to have the same theme. They all seem anxious to have the public identify socialism with planning.

Mr. Grafftey: Jean Lesage.

Mr. Carter: Even Jean Lesage. But no party or no group has a monopoly on planning. The kind of planning that we think of is very different from the planning advocated by the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Carter: —I mean the leader of the N.D.P., whose remarks I listened to very carefully, because what he was advocating was not planning but regimentation and that to my mind is the badge of socialism.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Carter: A little later. I am very leery of questions. A Liberal government would set up a fund to provide industrial capital and capital grants for basic projects. A great deal has been said about capital grants and there is no doubt that they have a place in working out a solution to the economic ills of the Atlantic provinces. But any sound recovery must be based on our resources and it seems to me that a capital grants program could perhaps be most usefully employed to level out the imbalance between upsurges and downswings in the economy.

The co-operation of the chartered banks would have to be solicited with respect to the provision of credit, and I believe it would also be necessary to expand the industrial development bank to provide credit when for various reasons the chartered banks cannot conveniently supply it. In addition, there must be a system of tax and trade incentives.

To come back to the Atlantic provinces, I would point out that our economic problems resolve themselves into two parts. One is the employment gap and the other is the income gap. These will have to be treated as two separate problems and the employment gap should be tackled first. Any improvement in the employment gap will automatically be reflected in an improvement in the income gap.

In applying this regional policy we must start with what we have, our resources, including our fisheries, forests, mines, our agriculture, our tourist attractions, our hydro electric potential and our potential for secondary industries. We shall have to expand these and diversify our products and find new markets for them.

It seems to me that the provision of new markets or of expanded markets is really the key to any solution of the economic problems of the Atlantic provinces because our trouble can be traced directly to confederation which deprived us of our natural markets. At that time we sold nothing to the central provinces. Our trade flourished with the United States, England and other parts of the world but mainly with the United States. If, as our leader suggested, we can develop an association with other countries in an Atlantic free trade area, it seems to me that this would go a long way toward remedying the handicap from which the maritimes have suffered ever since they became part of Canada.

Some means will have to be found to induce manufacturing concerns to settle in the Atlantic provinces and to discourage Canadian firms from closing branches which they have in those provinces. All too often in the history of our region it has happened that somebody has started a little industry in a small way and when the industry has begun to flourish a firm from central Canada has come down to the maritimes, bought out the little industry and then closed it with the result that people have been put out of work. I think that sort of thing should be discouraged and in my opinion it can best be discouraged by providing tax incentives which would make it uneconomic to close down these small branches. They are not closed down because they are losing money or are unprofitable but are closed down in many cases because the companies concerned can make more money by doing so. This, of course, means hardship to the economy of the area affected.

I think we could also very well borrow an idea from Eire and some of the European countries and extend a tax rebate on profits derived from exports. That should encourage manufacturing industries from other countries to establish themselves in the Atlantic provinces, and since these firms would already have their markets that problem would be taken care of.

The income gap, of course, is going to be much more difficult to close than the employment gap. With deference to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), I would think that with a planned program over a period of ten years, or two five year programs it should be possible to close the employment gap fairly well. But I am not so optimistic about closing the income gap because even if we level out the rate of expansion it will be well nigh impossible for the Atlantic provinces to overcome the lead which the rest of Canada now has. Perhaps that problem will be taken care of some day by automation because there must come a time when production in the central provinces will level out and as automation becomes more common costs of production will be fairly well evened out as well.

If we can remove the handicaps of the extra cost of living and the additional transportation costs which now enter into our cost of production in the Atlantic provinces, I see no reason why the ingenuity of our people cannot make the economy of the area dynamic once more and do so not only to the benefit of themselves but to the benefit of the whole of Canada.

Mr. Crouse: Will the hon. gentleman answer a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. Carter: Yes, what is it?

Mr. Crouse: You began your speech by mentioning the low income and low population in the Atlantic provinces. I think this is the greatest indictment of the Liberal government which was in power for 22 years that I have ever heard in this house. Then, you went on to mention the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member for a minute? First, I should like to remind him to address the Chair rather than the hon. member. Then, he is not taking the floor to make a speech, but to ask a question.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having said that, having commended the government for its Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, he then said that this type of assistance is not the answer to the problems of the Atlantic provinces. Is the hon. member against the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants?

Mr. Carter: I am sorry; I did not hear the question.

Mr. Crouse: Are you against the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants as put into force by this Conservative government?

Mr. Carter: I said nothing that would lead to that conclusion. My hon. friend does not understand plain English.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): In many ways, Mr. Speaker, I do not find myself at the moment in too enviable a position. The hon. lady who started off this debate started it in a sort of high, statesmanlike tone, talking about economic growth. This is another issue upon which Her Majesty's loyal opposition has, all of a sudden, seized. Then, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) met this question head on, and I thought for a moment—

Mr. Pickersgill: Got it right down into the gutter.

Mr. Grafftey: —I thought for a moment we were going to lock horns in a very profitable debate. I say, sir, that I find myself in a relatively unenviable position because the hon. member who has just spoken represents an area which, like other areas in this country, is faced with serious economic problems. I have spoken to hon. members from Newfoundland who support the government, and they have told me time and time again in informal conversations of the great problems of this area. It is very difficult when an opposition, which somehow or other shuns debate, starts off on a very high tone giving a very general theme and then before the debate really gets started they go into the details of regional considerations. I doubt even that the hon. member's speech will read that intelligently back home; it certainly has not contributed to what I hoped would be a very worth-while debate.

The hon. lady who led off the debate said there was an emergency at hand and that no vigorous measures had been taken. Then, what did the hon. member who has just spoken say? He talked about a ministry of regional planning and regional development, set up by experts who are going to think about the problems, then think about them again and then, as the opposition so often suggests, submissions would be made to another council for consideration which, in turn, would submit them to another advisory council. Perhaps we would have an opinion in about ten years. This is the answer of the opposition to the demand for immediate action. I shall have something to say about this type of debate in a few moments.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, some time ago, members of the opposition tried to ride another subject to death by attacking, but without success, our leader (Mr. Diefenbaker). Second, in previous years, they tried to create the impression, both at home and abroad, that the economy of this young and great Canada of ours was in a precarious state. Fortunately, they did not convince the Canadian people.

Today, in attempting to back up their fantastic tale, they are using, not one statistic, but part of one statistic, to prove or to try and prove that Canada is in a very bad way.

(Text):

I realize that it is the role of the opposition to seize upon worth-while issues upon which to go to the people. First of all, many months ago, even years ago, before the opposition got settled in their chairs, they preached that well known story of gloom and doom to Canadians. They have given up that attack because they understand it has gotten them nowhere.

Mr. Carter: Are you contributing to the debate now?

Mr. Grafftey: Then, sir, they tried to attack our leader. They have abandoned this method of attack. Today, when there are so many statistics which prove that Canada is moving forward—you can look at carloadings; you can look at any amount of statistics including export statistics presented on the floor of this house this afternoon by the Minister of Trade and Commerce—what do they do? They do not seize on one statistic, they seize on a part of one statistic, namely the percentage factor in relation to the gross national product. They are trying again, I submit unsuccessfully, to prove that this country is in a state of gloom and doom. This is not the case. We have only to look at the material growth of our gross national product since this government has taken office to ascertain that such is not the case. I cannot state the statistics exactly, but I suggest our gross national product has gone up approximately from $30 billion to close to $40 billion under the present administration. What do they do with this statistic? They seize upon the percentage. This will not work.

When the hon. lady began this debate this afternoon, I could not help feeling she was touching upon what might be considered to be Canada's version of the new frontier policy. Well, she and almost every Canadian today have great admiration for the vigorous president who is leading the United States in difficult times both at home and abroad. I do not say this in a self-satisfied way, but I should like to reiterate what has been said time and time again, that the new frontier policy employed in the United States, that policy which was dedicated to helping move the United States forward, as I am sure the hon. lady would have liked to say, was taken from programs already initiated in Canada. I ask all hon. members, then, what a paradox. We see the Canadian government initiating policies in relation to trade matters, financial matters, housing problems, winter works problems, which in turn were incorporated into the new frontier policy. What a paradox it is that these very policies the hon. lady has commended have gone from Canada to the United States and, I do not say this in a self-satisfied way, have come back again only to be praised by hon. members of the opposition.

The hon. lady mentioned the fact that during the last presidential election in the United States, the gentleman who is now president, in his campaign said that the United States was not moving forward quickly enough or at a fast enough rate. The hon. lady referred to lethargy both at home and abroad and said reference was made to that in the presidential campaign. In doing so she said that we on the government side of the house should not be too critical of the opposition when they criticize us. However, I should like to say with all the force and sincerity at my command that at no time during that presidential campaign did any member of any political party sell his country short at home and abroad in the same way as members of the Canadian opposition have been doing for the last three years.

I would be the first to admit that the presidential campaign evolved around this notion of lethargy at home and abroad, but I would repeat again and again that this planned campaign of doom and gloom at home and abroad was never employed by members of political parties across the border in the same way as it is now being employed by members of the Liberal opposition, both inside and outside the Canadian House of Commons.

The hon. lady also mentioned the president's initiative in relation to a department of urban affairs. However she did not mention the fact that this initiative was meeting with more than a modicum of difficulty in the United States congress, and I would like to bring that fact to her attention. I do not believe I am going too far out of range when I say that time and time again, both inside the House of Commons and outside it, I have hoped that a department of provincial and municipal affairs could be seriously considered by this government, particularly because this government has taken the position of the provinces and municipalities more seriously and has done more to better their affairs than any other government. No government has done more than the present Progressive Conservative administration in that respect.

The hon. lady also mentioned an advisory council and I listened to her proposal with great care. She said there was an emergency, that we needed action right away, not tomorrow or in years to come. She said we needed action to move Canada forward now, but all she had to offer was an advisory council. No member of the opposition will point out the difference between such an advisory council and the present productivity council which is already performing on the Canadian scene. But you know, sir, when the experts write your speeches for you, when the experts are not in touch with the people in the House of Commons and really do not know what is going on, when all you do is to pay a little trip to the top of the ivory tower and come down and make your speech, then you find that very often errors of this nature are made. As was the case today, debate becomes difficult for the opposition when all they have are prepared speeches. I have a great respect for experts when they play their rightful roles in the economic and political scene, but today the House of Commons is being treated to a most unique type of debate. We have had opposition by press clippings, and now we have opposition by speeches prepared by experts and quasi experts.

As I look over at the empty opposition benches I am quite sure that the hon. members who have just made speeches are not upstairs correcting them because speeches that are read, speeches that are prepared by the experts and quasi experts in the ivory tower, need very little re-editing, but they do not do much to enhance the pith and substance of debate in this house.

The other day the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate took it upon himself to lecture the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order and perhaps the hon. gentleman will say that in doing so I am lecturing the house again. But, we are carrying on a debate on a motion, an amendment and a subamendment, and not on the method by which the mover of the amendment prepared her speech. Evidently because he has nothing to say himself, the hon. member has spent most of his time making insinuations about the way the hon. lady prepared her speech. I believe it is the rule of the house that we assume, unless there is concrete evidence to the contrary, that every hon. member prepares his or her own speech, and I suggest the conduct of the hon. gentleman is not only ungallant but not parliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: In so far as a point of order is involved in reference to the reading of previously prepared speeches, the point should be taken at the time the speech is being delivered.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member who has just taken his place took it upon himself to continue to give us a very forceful lecture on the role of a government in the Canadian scene. He said a government is only normally tested when there was some major issue involved—

Mr. Pickersgill: You are breaking another rule by referring to a previous debate.

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should rise in his place when speaking. He is not even in his own place.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate not to speak without rising.

Mr. Grafftey: I am sure all hon. members will agree it is incumbent on members of the opposition to produce these so-called large issues for election purposes, but the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said one of the tests that a government must stand up against is how well has it governed the country. Hon. members of this government and its supporters are going to stand up to that test. Our record is going before the people and we shall be judged by it. However, after today's performance by the opposition there is one test I feel the opposition should face, and that is that they should prove to the Canadian people that they have a logical and responsible alternative government for them. On the basis of their performance today I say the opposition do not have a responsible alternative, if any alternative at all, to put before the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member would find it convenient to discontinue his address at that point, then I call it six o'clock and leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Grafftey: Before the house recessed I mentioned that the hon. lady who opened this debate had said that in her view this country was not moving forward fast enough in an economic sense. The paradox that I think should be put before the house is this: she cited the energetic proposals which had been placed before the nation to the south of us; she cited the energetic proposals placed before the United States by the president of that country. We are not supporters of a government which believe it has a cure for everything, but I repeat that the administration in the United States did, in the course of its frontier program, make use of many of the programs which had already been initiated by the present government. This is a fact. Thus we have a curious situation: we see policies and programs criticised by the opposition when they are initiated in Canada being adopted by the administration in the United States, at which point they are praised by the opposition in Canada. That represents, surely, the most amazing about-face that anyone in Canada has seen for some time.

Another thing which I think should be drawn briefly to the attention of hon. members is this: the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate took it upon himself the other day to lecture us on the proper role of a government. He said: if there is no major issue which can be brought forward, the government must be judged on its record. I agree that this government must be judged on its record; it is a record which everybody in Canada will recognize as a good one. I, in turn, would like to tell the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that oppositions also are judged on their records; they must produce these great issues to which reference has been made. So far in the last four years, they have produced none. They are trying to seize an issue in this supply motion today but I cannot recall one single significant national issue which the opposition has brought forward in all these years. Another thing which an opposition must do is to supply a reasonable alternative to the Canadian people. They must be in a position to be able to say to the Canadian people: if we, the opposition, turn the government out we have a logical and sensible alternative. After listening to the treatment which the opposition have given to this supply debate today I cannot see even the beginning of a serious proposal which would form such an alternative.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) said some interesting things in her speech. She mentioned the efforts of the president of the United States to set up a department of urban affairs even though this project has been blocked until now by the American congress.

Now, only a few days ago, I suggested myself in this house the establishment of a body whose duty would be to look after provincial and municipal affairs. No other government has ever done more than the present government, under the able leadership of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, for our provinces and municipalities.

I do not say that we have given everything to the municipalities and provinces, but at least we have given recognition to their rights.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I think we should give serious consideration to the establishment of a municipal and provincial affairs board. In my opinion, such a board should come under the Department of the Secretary of State because, after confederation, it was that department which was charged with looking after federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Speaker, our municipalities are in for great developments in the future. Under the constitution, municipal affairs are considered as a provincial responsibility. For that reason, I may have to suggest another name for the agency I have in mind.

We have several joint programs. I think federal-provincial joint programs could be co-ordinated under such an agency. Each program would then come under the jurisdiction of the department concerned.

The present government has done much to acknowledge the rights and needs of our municipalities. I am thinking especially of housing programs, winter works programs, etc.

That is why I feel we should give serious consideration to the establishment of a municipal and provincial affairs board.

(Text):

As I have shown, hon. members in the opposition had great difficulty in presenting us with a logical alternative. If there was an alternative which they were capable of presenting to us, it was an alternative highly characterized by an elaborate system of bureaucratic control. I, for one, do not wish to gaze into a crystal ball like some members of the opposition. I have heard various suggestions concerning what the main election issue will be but I feel one thing is obvious to all hon. members. As I said in this house a few days ago we cannot become involved in the classical debate of free enterprise versus socialism. I believe, and perhaps many hon. members share my belief, that it is a question of degree.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Grafftey: At the conclusion of my remarks.

In the 1957 election the Canadian people made it clear that they wanted government returned to the people in the Canadian House of Commons. The hon. member for Niagara Falls discussed the possibility of free enterprise versus socialism being a debating topic in the forthcoming election.

In 1957 the Canadian people, while recognizing that the civil service of this nation is second to none, took the position that the government of the day was to too large a degree governing by order in council, permitting far too much bureaucratic control to creep into the government of this country.

It was amusing to hear the dialogue in the house this afternoon. A wonderful debate occurred on the meaning of the word "planning". The socialists advocate planning in one way and the Liberals in another. I have always said the whole opposition can be lumped together. Just the other day one hon. gentleman jumped from the socialist camp into the Liberal camp. There was a slight discussion in the press about personality differences but I suggest the transition is easily made these days because those who advocate a high degree of bureaucratic control masked as planning are really advocating the same thing.

I will not pretend that the question of appropriate degree is a simple matter but the government I support believes that the individual is more important than the state, that the state exists for the individual and not the individual for the state.

Hon. members opposite be they socialists or Liberals are advocating bureaucratic control, but their arguments are not always forceful. When I heard the new leader of that little group in the far corner of the chamber speak today in those terms of watered down socialism I said to myself, "Gone are the days of the fire and brimstone of the Regina manifesto". They never talked about nationalization. My hon. friends kid us about turning our back on the free enterprise system. We have always stood for the free enterprise system and we have always let the Canadian people know where we stand. Those pronouncements which emanated today from the hon. gentleman in the far corner are a far cry from the fire and brimstone of the Regina manifesto. Where was the call to real militancy?

The hon. gentleman said there was a large area of agreement between the Liberals and socialists. Such is the degree of agreement that, as I said, just a few days ago one hon. gentleman jumped from one bed into another.

An hon. Member: Oh well, they say a change is as good as a rest.

Mr. Halpenny: Polygamy.

Mr. Grafftey: There was no doctrinaire debate about the hon. gentleman's defection. The attitude taken was: I was unhappy in the old bed so I am going to try a new one. Gone are the days of fire and brimstone and lines of clear demarcation. It became perfectly clear in the debate this afternoon that both opposition parties are advocating a high degree of state control, the very thing the people rejected in 1957 and will again reject in 1962. When the Canadian people gave a mandate to the present administration they were putting back in the House of Commons the voice of the people of Canada, and it is here to stay.

When I look at all the horsemen on the front benches of the Liberal party—

Mr. Hees: That's the nicest way you could have put it.

Mr. Grafftey: —what do I find? One would have thought that finding themselves out of office the Liberals would have put in the front benches people who would have attempted to get close to the grass roots. Instead, on the front benches we find the same old experts and former civil servants who were prominent on the front benches when the Liberal party formed the government. Experts and civil servants have a valuable role to play in their appropriate place but the hon. gentlemen who sit on the front benches of the Liberal party are far removed from the people.

Mr. Starr: They are in the same old rut.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, we have the same old faces. They have assumed leading roles in the opposition and instead of getting down to the grass roots and attempting to determine the needs of the people, the wishes of those they represent the Liberals have surrounded themselves with these ivory tower experts.

If there is anything this debate is making clear it is the lack of difference between the opposition parties, and the genuine difference between them and the present government. Differences should not be brought to the attention of the Canadian people just for the sake of doing so. But the difference is there. The Liberals and socialists are today advocating a high degree of state intervention and bureaucratic control in critical but peacetime years. The Canadian people will not tolerate this. As long as I hold my seat in this house I will fight for the principle that the state must not be placed before the individual.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls said what was needed was an immediate stimulus for the economy. In her remarks she came out fighting and I expected to see everybody in the opposition file in behind her and fight with her. She proposed a shock treatment for the Canadian economy. The measures, both long term and short term, introduced by this government are having an immediate effect on the economy. A former minister of trade and commerce stated that these problems could not be solved by the palliatives of doctrine but must be attacked on a day to day basis realistically, problem by problem. What do hon. members of the opposition do when the government introduces measures designed to meet the problems confronting us? They isolate each measure and claim it is the only thing we have up our sleeve. They state it is too little and too late. They refuse to recognize the integrated attack the government has made on the complex problems confronting us.

The government does not claim that any measure it has introduced is a cure all but taken as a whole the measures introduced represent a means of assisting this nation to attain its long term economic and national objectives.

Hon. gentlemen opposite like to use the word "planning". I am not fully certain what kind of planning the Liberals stand for as opposed to the socialists. But I know that all hon. members regardless of party affiliation recognize that whether we like it or not—some like it and some do not—the government has a role to play in the economy, a responsibility to accept. Whether that role is large or small the government must realistically discharge its obligation and plan the means of doing so. I will be the first to admit that. This discussion of the word "planning" is merely a play on words on the part of hon. members opposite. The government has never hesitated to admit it has this responsibility to discharge in moving the economy forward. This government has done more than any previous government to recognize the needs of the provinces. In fact, our deficits in the last few years can be measured against the increases in subventions and assistance to the provinces. We recognize that roads, schools, highways, hospitals, etc. must be built. I am not suggesting that the government is doing the municipalities and provinces a favour in offering them assistance. The government is realistically tackling the problems confronting our provinces and municipalities.

Hon. gentlemen opposite produced no evidence of any difference between their advocated so-called advisory council and the government's productivity council. No government has done as much to provide leadership in planning and co-operation between all levels of government, and in agriculture, and between labour and management. This is imaginative and real—

Mr. Pickersgill: Imaginary.

Mr. Grafftey: The leader of the new party in round and august terms mentioned social justice and said that they stood for social justice. I should like to say that we are just at the beginning of a session which has passed some of the most far reaching social justice measures ever seen by the Canadian people. I refer to pensions of all kinds and social justice measures of all kinds. It was the same in the old world. Prime Minister Disraeli of England often said that the socialists and Liberals talked about social justice but it took good Conservatives, men such as Shaftesbury and Disraeli to come along and actually deliver the goods. Hon. members opposite are talking about social justice at a time when some of the most far reaching social justice measures have been put before the people of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Tell us about the two flags.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member wants me to talk about the two flags. Well, I will tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker. While our friends talk about two flags in the province of Quebec—

Mr. Pigeon: Six flags.

Mr. Grafftey: —three, four, five and even six flags in the province of Quebec, we, of the Conservative party, have only one policy for all Canadians, the same policy for every province.

(Text):

Mr. Denis: What is your flag? Tell the people of Canada what your flag is.

Mr. Grafftey: It certainly will not be the "no flag" produced by hon. members opposite after 22 long years in office.

Mr. Denis: What is yours?

Mr. Grafftey: Twenty two long years in office and they will be more than 22 long years in opposition.

Mr. Denis: They will not be 22 long years in opposition.

Mr. Grafftey: The Minister of Trade and Commerce brought before all members of this House of Commons results in relation to Canada's trade position in the world today. Hon. members in very general terms have criticized our attitude toward the common market and in very general terms have indicated they are in favour of free trade. However, I should like to ask them this question, and I put this point to them in clear terms.

Would they have had the present government not put forward the Canadian point of view both at Accra and in London when England sought and seeks membership in the common market? I am led to believe, in fact, by what I hear, that the British authorities are very glad to have the Canadian point of view so ably stated, something which helps our and their position in every way as they seek entry into the common market.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a raspberry.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate says that is a raspberry. They have just thrown up a smokescreen, a hysterical smokescreen.

Mr. Starr: They never spoke up when they were able to do so.

Mr. Grafftey: The present government did speak up. As England seeks membership in the common market the Canadian government diplomatically, clearly and forcefully stated the consequences for Canada and the considerations that should be considered by the British authorities as they sought entry into this very worth-while organization. Would members opposite have wanted the authorities of the Canadian government not to have put the Canadian case forward? I say no. I challenge them to state a real reason for their two-horned opposition to this question.

I simply say that the measures that the present government are putting before the Canadian people are having an immediate affect. The hon. lady read a long document and not once did I observe a measure that would have an immediate affect on the economy. We have had speech after speech written by the experts and read by members opposite. These have been inflicted on this House of Commons but they have contained no immediate solutions. I am not saying that this government has all the answers. What I am saying is that this government has played its part in the responsible role of a federal authority in co-operation with the municipalities and the provinces. It has played its imaginative and dynamic part in helping to move Canada forward to its long and short term national goals. The Canadian people in a very short time will recognize this record. They will also recognize the type of opposition put forward in debate such as that which we have had this evening by the opposition. They will recognize that the opposition have not produced a major issue. They will recognize that the opposition have not produced a logical or serious alternative. They will recognize that the opposition, be they socialists or Liberals, advocate that degree of state control which is abhorrent to Canadians, a degree of state control which they rejected a few years ago and are going to reject again. I think the people should know it for what it is. I am glad that the opposition have been talking in the way in which they have been talking.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was kind enough to indicate that he would answer a question of mine at the conclusion of his speech. I should like to put this question to him. When he said that there was not an issue between free enterprise and socialism, that it was a matter of degree, has he put that view to his leader the Prime Minister, who says there is such an issue.

Mr. Grafftey: I answered that question very clearly. I think all Conservatives today realize that the debate is a question of degree. The old debate with regard to free enterprise versus socialism and the bitter struggle of the "haves" against the "have nots" and class warfare which took place in the old world is not taking place today. That is why I believe so many of their doctrines go out the window so to speak. I believe that all Conservatives in their heart of hearts recognize that it is a debate on degree. We are much closer to the free enterprise opinion than the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Herridge: Would the effervescent hon. member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired. I recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all of us were most interested in the delivery of the speech made by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). I agree entirely with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) that it might be advisable for the hon. member who has just spoken to have had consultation with his own political leader. We remember only too well the election challenge which was issued. If he really means that it is a matter of degree I would recommend to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi that we might manage to find room for him in our particular corner. However, the hon. member admitted that planning was necessary while at the same time he contradicted himself when he warned against the bureaucrats and against the state. I should like to think that the state and the individual are not two separate entities. I should like to believe that the state represents a group of individuals acting together as an entity. I believe that this continuous harping on potential bureaucrats is an insult to the integrity of the civil service we have in Canada at the present time. Attempting to build in the minds of Canadians the concept and the fear that the state and the civil service is something which is necessarily evil and which must be avoided at all costs I feel is not doing a good service to the development of either the Canadian nation or the welfare of the Canadian people.

The Liberal amendment is one that, taken at its face value, could almost be agreed to by any political party in Canada. In effect all it calls for is an increase in the rate of economic growth in the country. I believe I have even heard members of the government admit that in the interests of resolving the problem of unemployment every effort should be made to increase the rate of economic development. The issue is not whether an increase in the growth rate is desirable; the issue is the manner in which we desire to increase the rate of economic growth.

I agree entirely with the hon. member for Niagara Falls who moved the amendment, that the problem of the growth of the economy is likely to be one, if not the major, election issue. The Prime Minister has told us in no uncertain terms that in his opinion the election issue is going to be free enterprise versus socialism, which to my mind is merely another way of saying very much the same thing as was said this afternoon by the hon. member for Niagara Falls about the potential election issue. However, we would be interested in discovering from either the Liberal or Conservative parties, or both, the manner in which they propose to increase the rate of economic expansion of our country.

According to my observations the Conservative remedy seems to be a patchwork of reforms and the instigation of economic activity through the winter works program, which is highly desirable and most beneficial, and vocational education, which is equally desirable if not much more so in the long run; but according to the observations of this group there appears to be no major or massive planning designed to give the whole economy of our country the lift that it so badly needs. As a matter of fact, in the main the Conservatives seem to reiterate the necessity of maintaining what they choose to call the free enterprise system but which in my books, having in mind the force that every government has and must necessarily have, is nothing more than the use of force to maintain the status quo. In my view this has always been expressed most neatly by simply saying that we live under a dog eat dog system wherein everyone to the maximum possible degree is allowed to do exactly as he pleases, without regard to the public interest, and wherein there is really no genuinely free enterprise. It is very much controlled enterprise but controlled by corporations and powerful interests who are not necessarily held responsible for the public welfare as a whole. The Tories have yet to show that they have any intention of making the powerful economic interests in Canada raelly responsible to the over-all interests of the Canadian community.

We have lived through enough years of Liberal economic policy to recognize this debate for what it is. Yes, they will speak in the language of New Democratic policy but they will not dare to come out with specific remedies. They will not say by what method they will increase the tempo and the level of economic activity in our nation. The hon. member for Niagara Falls mentioned a few possibilities. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, she did not advocate that these remedies be applied in Canada, but she did hold up to us certain examples of what was happening in a number of other countries in the world. She mentioned tax concessions and tax exemptions. This reminded me of the tax free holidays granted to multimillion-dollar corporations, of which I have seen far too much in recent days, and which in the long run mean only the exploitation of resources and of people, with nothing left behind to show for it.

Is it the policy of the Liberal party to offer tax free holidays of five, 10, 20 or 30 years to exploiters so that they may come to Canada and give us work in order that our human resources can be applied to our natural resources? I think the Liberal party owes an explanation of what they mean when they speak of potential tax concessions, tax exemptions and reductions in taxation. Is this the catering to big business in which the Liberals indulged so liberally during their heyday in Canada? We know what it means in the long run. When corporations are given a free hand and every encouragement to invest here and to do as they please in our country, especially when non-Canadians are invited to do so, it means that we have an economy of boom and bust.

Under the circumstances existing in our country at the moment I am quite willing to concede that if the Liberals and Liberal candidates already nominated were to take the reins of office, unemployment possibly could be eliminated. However, I should like to ask them, how many unemployed will we have five or ten years hence when the long term efforts of their shortsighted policies make their influence felt? After the kind of policies they are now advocating were enforced by the former Liberal administration, and they ran into a snag, they resorted to the remedy of confiscation of the savings of the people in that they deliberately permitted inflation to rob the hard-earned savings of ever so many Canadians, which has now brought about very serious additional problems in Canada.

If we want to increase production we must also consider the means by which we increase the level of economic activity in our nation. It is very hard for me to determine which comes first, the chicken or the egg, with reference to the financial structure prevailing within our country. I contend that an organized financial house, nationally speaking, is one of the major needs so as to increase national production. It is said that money is the root of all evil. An ordered financial house might be a great blessing at this time to the vast numbers of unemployed and to other Canadians who are in need.

If the government is looking for additional revenue in order to implement this objective, I would highly recommend that it reverse its present policy, begin to pursue a policy of the ultimate maximum production in which our people are able to engage and end its advice to various segments of the Canadian community to reduce production in order to maintain artificially high prices. To me such advice is not only immoral but in the long run I feel it is also harmful to the welfare of our people. The problems of Canadian agriculture, for example, will never be resolved by a policy of advising our farmers to reduce their levels of production if they want to maintain existing price levels.

If the government wants to put its financial house in order it ought to pay some attention to what is happening in the field of foreign investment in Canada. I am not necessarily opposed to Canada welcoming investment on the part of people living outside our borders. However, I find it a little difficult—and I do want to add this qualification—to understand how we can expect world peace in the long run if we, one of the wealthiest nations of the world, on balance are importers of capital. I believe we have a moral obligation to the development of peace and prosperity throughout the world to become, on balance, an exporter of capital instead of depending for our prosperity on an unfavourable balance in the matter of foreign investment.

We advocate the establishment of a federal investment board. If we want to have economic growth, we cannot afford to allow those who have investment capital at their disposal to invest it wherever it happens to please them, without regard to the investment needs of other segments of our society. I am very impressed by what is happening in a goodly number of other democratic nations in the world, where each year responsible officials assess the likely investment needs of their national government, of local governments, of quasi government agencies and of private enterprise. After assessing the likely national needs, they then get together and assess the possible investment capital that can be raised through the government and on the open money market. Then they arrive at an agreement, a compromise or an understanding, and in a number of cases the levels of government do not all run to New York to begin cutting each other's throat, begging the money-lenders in New York to buy their bonds.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Regier: I have only a limited time.

Mr. Jones: Perhaps if the hon. member would tell us to what country he is referring.

Mr. Regier: I hope I will be able to hear the hon. member some other time. I understand that in the commonwealth of Australia there is an annual gathering of all three levels of government. They agree upon their essential investment needs, then the government of the commonwealth goes on the market and obtains this money, allocating it to the other levels of government. This kind of policy would save our municipal and provincial governments millions of dollars of needless interest. This is the kind of policy that our party would support. We believe we should go even beyond that, call in the private investment sector and act in consultation with it. I believe we must enlarge very greatly the role of the Bank of Canada in our nation.

At the time the Bank of Canada was originally conceived, our chartered banking system was the major source of capital within our country. Today, however, they are no longer the major source; they are very much the minor source. Even our credit union movement in Canada authorizes investments that are already close to one third of the volume involved in the operations of our chartered banks. Our insurance companies have powers vastly exceeding those of the chartered banks. I am not making a speech against the chartered banks. We have our central bank which is in constant consultation with the chartered banks. I believe the Bank of Canada is largely fulfilling the purpose, in this respect, for which it was originally designed. What I am saying now is that there are many other financial institutions operating on the Canadian scene whose operations largely offset the good intentions of our Bank of Canada in the monetary world. It is high time, as was advocated by Mr. Coyne in his controversial report to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), that the minister considered the limitations under which the Bank of Canada has to operate at the moment. The former governor of the bank pointed out the other influences which had grown tremendously within recent years. I hope that the government will give very serious consideration to at least this aspect of the report of Mr. Coyne.

I hope that no one will assume, when I say that we must set our financial house in order, that either I or this party at any time advocates pressing the button to start the printing presses rolling. This would be against our basic principles. We believe that the amount of money in circulation is not only a matter of convenience but it has much to do with the bringing together of the human and natural resources; with the exchange of goods and with bringing in the purchasing power of those people who have been able to save, to the advantage of national development and employment. Many people will argue that when the last world war started the government very quickly found the money necessary. It ought to be obvious that we paid for that inflation, the inflation of our currency which was necessary for our participation in the war effort. The inflation of the savings of our people since the war has made us realize that to start the printing presses rolling, while it was urgently required at the time, was not helping to solve our problem in the long run.

We believe also that the government, to set its financial house in order, must return interest rates to at least the level they were when this government took office. I hope that some day financial experts will assess the tremendous cost to the Canadian people, in ever so many ways, of that deliberate increase in interest rates that was foisted upon the Canadian people and the Canadian economy. I hope they will be able to assess, with some reasonable accuracy, what the cost has been to the Canadian nation. I should like also to plead with the government to do everything it can and be at all times conscious of the need for it to remain completely sovereign over its monetary policy.

We are always willing to co-operate on the international level, but it is important, if a nation is going to be economically independent, that it also have complete control over its own monetary policy. I am not too sure that this has always been so in the past. As an aside to my remarks on finances, I should like to underline my opinion, expressed on other occasions, that before proper economic development in Canada can become a reality, we have to realize that our concept and structure of tariffs is completely outmoded.

There are only a limited number of nations in the world that have retained this government's attitude.

Now, I want to say one word about aid to the underdeveloped areas. I know a lot of Canadians will say, why not look after our own people first; charity begins at home, and the like. I would like to appeal to these people that aid to underdeveloped areas in Canada is the right thing to do, and we should do it primarily because it is the right thing. However, it is also very important for the maintenance of world peace, and particularly if we mean what we say, that we want to block the spread of communism, that we increase the level of our aid to underdeveloped areas. Apart from that major consideration, aid to underdeveloped areas will in very direct ways supply a boost to the Canadian economy and will supply employment for our people at home. When our manufacturing plants produce machinery that is used in Kenya or India then our workers have better chances of employment.

On this occasion Canadians are not going to be stampeded into a period of boom by Liberal policies of tax reduction and tax incentives, with ruthless exploitation of natural and human resources leading to increased foreign ownership and control, producing large surpluses and a depressed agriculture. As a socialist I am a conservative—with a small "c"—in this attitude, namely, that it is the height of irresponsibility to say "here are the people and they have the know-how; here are our tremendous natural resources; please come over and exploit us for our short term benefit and your profit".

The words "conservation" and "orderly development" are becoming ever increasingly important to the Canadian people. This time Canadians are not going to be stampeded by Tory hero worship, by high rates of interest, by financial concessions to the financial institutions, by more slick exploitation of national consciousness, by huge election war chests and the politics of sheer political expediency. This time a growing number of Canadian people will realize that if we are going to live as one happy family in Canada then we have to start behaving as members of a family. As members of one family we ought to be prepared to explore and assess our natural human resources. Then we shall have to decide on our needs and limitations, and how those human resources can best be applied to our natural resources so that the maximum number of our people will be able to enjoy employment and the social security they need so badly.

The federal government of Canada is the most powerful economic interest that the country has. We must recognize this, and we must also recognize that the government has a responsibility as to what happens to the economic destiny of our people. We must recognize that the people as a whole must decide to use this instrument of government that was designed for them out of the sacrifices of their forefathers. This instrument was designed for the people and the people must use it to determine their own economic destiny as they have hitherto been using it to determine their political destiny. I am therefore happy to support the amendment to the amendment proposed by my house leader.

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): I would have anticipated a more realistic approach on the part of the opposition to this first supply motion especially when one considers that most if not all the economic indicators of importance point to a strong upsurge in our economy. Instead we continue to hear the old tale of woe, the old tale that has come from that side of the house since 1957. Unfortunately they have been unable to separate their hopes from the realities of today.

I think all hon. members of the house remember the Templeton doctrine—high unemployment means good times for the Grits because they are in opposition. In fact that seems to be the underlying plan on the part of the opposition, and has been ever since 1957. Unfortunately for them this has not happened. Their predictions have not come true and they have not come true for a very good reason—because this government took the action that was needed to put our economy back on the road to success. If the Liberals do not soon remove themselves from this fools' paradise in which they live, then they will soon discover that the defeat of 1958 is only a taste of what they are going to get later this year.

It is a constant source of amazement to me to see hon. members from the Atlantic region, who were in this house before 1957, rise in their places and speak of doom and gloom in our economy when comparing our part of the country with the wealthier provinces in Canada without at the same time mentioning, even in a passing way, the many tremendous things that have been done by this government to lift our economy up and put us on the road to recovery, and to greater heights than we could have ever anticipated had we remained Liberal, with a Liberal government in office. One has almost to assume that they are not aware of the changes that have taken place. They, like the remainder of their party, also seek the solitude of this fools' paradise in which they choose to live.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

It must be that the members of the opposition from the Atlantic provinces have adopted the premise of "Maritime Gordon", one of their supporters who is presently preaching for a call he will never receive. He had a quick solution. The Liberals have been talking about shock treatments and he was going to give the Atlantic provinces a shock treatment. He was going to give that treatment to the people living there. He was going to give them one way tickets, straight out. This is separatism in reverse. Of course we in the Atlantic provinces know that Liberal thinking, when that party was in office, stopped short at the borders of Quebec. They never went beyond. We can all remember that former great Liberal prime minister, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, saying "not one 5-cent piece for the maritime provinces." That is one promise they kept.

An hon. Member: They sent them Pickersgill instead.

Mr. Coates: It is appalling for any member from the Atlantic provinces to ignore the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and his constituents should give him the treatment he deserves. I look forward to most of them receiving it. We blanked them in two provinces in the last election and it will be a complete sweep the next time if they continue the way they are now.

Mr. Caron: Whom are you trying to make happy?

Mr. Coates: Let me tell you, my friend, you won't be very happy when the next election is over. These Liberal representatives from the Atlantic provinces seem to have been brainwashed by this talk about gloom and doom. They don't even know what has been done, and for that reason I would like to put a few of the facts on the record, if they do not know them they may be able to read of them and appreciate them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like the digging of the Chignecto canal.

Mr. Coates: I have already mentioned the special adjustment grants—adjustment grants which will by March 31 of this year have poured $100 million into the Atlantic area. But we are not cut off at this point. We are not told: this is the end of it. No, Mr. Speaker, we are to get $175 millions more over the next five years. That is the type of treatment this government is giving to the Atlantic provinces.

As a representative from Nova Scotia I need go no further than my own constituency to see the tremendous growth in the economy that is apparent throughout the province.

Mr. Pickersgill: In Springhill, for example?

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

Mr. Coates: All right. The hon. member mentioned Springhill and I am very happy he did so. Let us compare Springhill with the Pictou area which my hon. friend the present member for Pictou has done such an outstanding job of representing since he came to the House of Commons. I will tell you, my friends what you did for Pictou county. You closed coal mine after coal mine and the only solution you found was that offered by "Maritime Gordon"—move them out and give them one way tickets. That is your solution. Now let me say this: my hon. friend from Pictou county has worked, and his work is paying off. Almost every day we pick up a paper and see that something else is coming into Pictou county. Not long ago a new coastguard cutter went into the shipyards. Then, the other day there was a $2,300,000 car order. That is the type of representation the people of the maritime provinces have been looking for for years. If there had been a Liberal party in power in 1958 when this great disaster struck Springhill and took its only industry from it, leaving 7,000 people without an industry of any kind, there would have been a one way ticket for these 7,000 people. That would have been the Liberal solution to this problem. Instead, what has happened? The people of Springhill have four new industries. They have a minimum security penal institution. The Minister of Justice recently informed me that we were going to have a new medium security institution, the estimates for which were running as high as $2,500,000. This is an institution which would probably employ 125 people.

It does not stop there. This government, in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia, has made available to the people of Springhill $450,000 in hospital grants so that they may build themselves a new million dollar hospital. Further, the Department of Public Works now has on its drawing boards a new federal building for the town of Springhill. In addition, Industrial Estates, a crown corporation set up by the Nova Scotia government under its great premier Bob Stanfield is prepared to investigate, and will investigate, every possible industry which can go into Springhill and into every other area of Nova Scotia. That is what was done for Springhill, since the hon. member asks, and let me tell him there will be more done as long as we have a Conservative government in Ottawa.

There are so many things that have been done for the Atlantic provinces that one does not really know where to begin or where to end. What I am trying to do is to put down a few of the things which I feel are of real significance and which should be considered by some of the members of the opposition. If they did, then they, like some members of other parties, might begin walking across the floor as well.

Mr. Pearson: We shall all be walking across shortly.

Mr. Coates: When they are so blind that they cannot see in front of them I guess we do not really want them; we can find better people ourselves.

Federal payments to Nova Scotia have more than doubled since 1957 from $31,336,000 to $67,928,000. Does this indicate the type of government the Liberals wish to provide? Our wages and salaries have notably increased. Our wage earners are receiving more than $1,500,000 a day every day, 365 days a year. In 1956 they received $440 million; the figure is now running at a rate of $593 million per year. For every $3 they received in 1956 they are now receiving $4. If hon. members want to look at it in another way, it took the wage earners 89 years to get up to $3 and only five years to get it up to $4. Is this the type of progress the opposition opposes?

Let us look at another field in which the opposition should have taken great strides in 1945—the field of vocational training. Hon. members opposite knew that we would be faced with this problem. It was all in the hidden report. But like so many other things that are distasteful, it was hidden away. Whenever there is something that does not fit in with their plans they put it on the shelf—they put it somewhere, where they cannot see it. In 1945 they should have been taking steps to see that the people of our country were trained so that when this technological advance came upon us our people would have been ready to step into the new jobs open for them. But they did nothing or next to nothing. In 1956 the Liberal government of that day paid its share of vocational training to the government of Nova Scotia. It amounted to $420,000. In 1961-62 that share will amount to $1,795,000 and next year, with vocational training schools under construction in every area of our province, it will be even greater Over the past six years the contribution of the federal government to vocational training has been $4,200,000. Of that amount the Liberal government provided ten per cent and we provided the other 90 per cent.

Let us turn to another promise, because the Liberal party is becoming a very promising party at the present time. Let us turn to hospital insurance. In 1919 the Liberal party promised the Canadian people that they were going to provide them with hospital insurance.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not correct.

Mr. Coates: I do not suppose it is.

Mr. Pickersgill: The record was put straight the other day as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. Coates: The hon. member is always putting the record straight in order that it may please him.

Mr. Pickersgill: I read the resolution.

An hon. Member: Just forget the past.

Mr. Pickersgill: I put the facts on record.

Mr. Coates: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate wants to go back to the past. He is one of the very few members of that party who will undertake to do so. I do not think his leader agrees with him there, but then there are times when the four horsemen do not agree.

Mr. Pearson: That is when we go to Quebec.

An hon. Member: Under which flag?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what we would like to know. Which flag was it—Fleming or Diefenbaker?

Mr. Coates: The hon. member will not get out of it so easily. One would assume that after what the Leader of the Opposition went through in the town of Amherst when being questioned about what has been described by some of his friends in the press gallery as a cocky, immature young man, he would have stopped talking about the flag, because he showed that day that if he could not handle that cocky immature young man, where would the Canadian people be if they put their faith in him as their leader?

Mr. Pearson: With his faked report.

Mr. Coates: It only becomes vague when you start reading the facts.

Mr. Winkler: Whose face was red?

Mr. Coates: I return to the subject of hospital insurance. I do not blame the opposition for not wanting to talk about this because they talked about it from 1919 until 1957 and did nothing about it. They did not provide a red cent to the Canadian people. As usual it was left to the Conservative government to fulfil the old promises of the former administration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hundreds of millions in hospital grants.

Mr. Coates: Now, now. The comments of hon. gentlemen opposite are somewhat like those of the Leader of the Opposition in the fog at Amherst. Hon. gentlemen opposite waver back and forth and straddle both sides of the fence. You never know where their feet are but you can always count on them being on both sides of the fence.

Mr. Hodgson: The late C. D. Howe said, "What's a million?"

Mr. Coates: It took a Conservative government to provide the people of Canada with hospital care. At this time this government is providing the people of Nova Scotia $1 million a month toward better hospital treatment.

We in Nova Scotia are very interested in education. We have a fine record in that regard. Let us look at university grants in which we are all interested. Hon. gentlemen opposite also choose to ignore university grants. In 1956 Nova Scotia universities received $695,000. In 1961-62 they are to receive $1,095,000 and this figure does not include the 50 cent per capita increase in the grant recently announced. Is this the type of aid hon. gentlemen opposite wish to overlook and about which we should forget? This is another example of what is being done for every Canadian from Nova Scotia to British Columbia by the present government.

Since my election in the House of Commons it has been my contention that the industrial development bank has not provided that degree of service to industries in the Atlantic provinces that should have been provided over the years. For a number of sessions I had on the order paper a bill which sought to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act to make its services more beneficial to industries in our area. As all hon. members are aware at the last session of parliament the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) amended the act in a very material way which had the effect of greatly broadening the scope of the measure. The financial resources of the bank were increased from $157 million to $400 million. It has only been a short time since the amendments came into effect but the results to date are most gratifying and indicate a far greater service to industries in the Atlantic provinces than could have been possible without the amendments.

An example of the effect this is having at the present time on business in the province of Nova Scotia alone is indicated in the annual report of the bank which reveals that 49 loans were made available to business in Nova Scotia last year as compared with seven loans made in 1956, the last year during which Liberals were in office. Seven times as many loans were made available in 1961 as in 1956.

An indication of the increased scope of the services of the industrial development bank is to be seen in the 1961 report of the president where it is stated that there has been an 84 per cent increase in the number of loans made available under the act during 1961. This increase is far greater than in any previous year. Indeed, 23 per cent of all the loans made since 1944 were made in 1961. Ten new branches have been established since 1959 and in 1961 St. John's, Newfoundland, saw a branch established to serve that province thereby providing greater service to the Atlantic area.

An indication of the increased advantage being taken by industries and businessmen in the province of Nova Scotia can be gleaned from the report. In 1956 there were seven loans approved for a total amount of $393,000. In 1961 there were 49 loans approved, seven times as many as in 1956, for a total of $2,130,000. The increase in the number of loans is reflected in the increase in dollar volume of the loans.

This has been the story right across Canada with 1956 having seen 349 loans approved as compared with 1,364 in 1961, and almost double the amount made available to businessmen of this country between the period 1956 and 1961. As I pointed out, these amendments were not in effect for the full period of the fiscal year 1961. I look forward with confidence to the 1962 report of this bank as even greater evidence of the assistance that is now available to business as a result of the amendments and increased financial resources.

My hon. friend asked me about Springhill. I think it is only fair to point out what has been done in the rest of Cumberland county as an example of what is happening in every constituency in Nova Scotia.

Hon. gentlemen opposite speak about the economy not moving forward fast enough. I do not know how fast they wanted it to move but I do know that they had better start moving a little faster with respect to looking at the facts if they want to be around to see how fast the economy will move in the next four years.

There has never been a time in my memory when things have been as progressive and employment as high in Amherst as at this time. Every major industry in the town is expanding operations. Only today I received a letter from one of the large industries there asking me to see if I could obtain harbour and wharf improvements in a specific area as they are about to enter the export market no doubt due to the splendid efforts of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) in the attitude he has taken toward uplifting our export trade.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: The minister is applauding himself.

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Hees: I did not hear the hon. member's statement. I merely knew it was a wise comment and applauded on that basis.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is not the first time the minister has applauded himself.

Mr. Hees: I am much too embarrassed and overwhelmed with shyness to applaud.

Mr. Coates: Robb Engineering, the oldest major industry in Amherst, has been carrying out a constant expansion and remodelling of its facilities. At Pugwash a $2 million rock salt refinery operation will be added to the $3 million plant already in existence in that community. Last year a step forward was taken by this company in exporting its products to the United States for the first time.

One can go to Oxford and see the establishment there of a new factory by Industrial Estates Limited and their ability to secure federal contracts for the first time of a magnitude that was not ever possible previously. One can go to Parrsboro and see the ships loading pulp and lumber, in January, something which I do not believe the residents have seen for years and years. What is the reason for this activity? The reason is that the Department of Public Works has provided them with the most up to date facilities. One can go to the little village of Port Greville and see the shipbuilding industry throbbing, growing and wishing there was more room so that they could build more ships as a result of the forward looking program put forward by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) with his new subsidies.

This is the type of downcast, depressed economy that our friends opposite like to talk about. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, they are living in a fools' paradise out of which they had better come very fast. Otherwise, instead of worrying about who is going to be their next leader, they will all be sitting on the outside looking in at whomever the remainder of them, if there are any, try to choose for a leader.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I was greatly surprised to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce today say that the former government gave business and industry no co-operation. He said they were receiving a great deal of co-operation now. By implication he meant that they received no co-operation from the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe. This is the most ridiculous statement I have heard since I have come to the House of Commons. I will say that Mr. C. D. Howe co-operated very well indeed as minister. He contributed a great deal to the development of this country. If my memory serves me rightly the Prime Minister paid his respects to him and said so at the time of Mr. Howe's death. Hence the Minister of Trade and Commerce is at variance with his own leader.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not the first time.

Mr. McMillan: As for myself, I think the minister has become so inflated with his own ego that he thinks he surpasses Mr. Howe in his value to Canada.

Mr. Hees: I was not comparing myself with Mr. Howe. I was comparing the department today with the department then.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just puffed up by your own hot air.

Mr. McMillan: I do not mind it one bit if the minister wishes to build himself up. However, I do not think he should do so at the expense of the good name of Mr. Howe.

Mr. Hees: Oh, no. We do not do that over here.

Mr. McMillan: The Minister of Trade and Commerce painted a very rosy picture. He gave some figures. He gave percentage figures. I heard one Conservative member making reference to those on this side of the chamber and saying that we always referred to percentages and not to actual figures. As a matter of fact, I could give him some actual figures in connection with trade and commerce. I could give him the outright figure of the increase in business failures in Canada and the increase of the deficit of the C.N.R. under this government. They are not percentage figures. After listening to the minister I wondered why there was not a labour shortage in Canada at the present time—

An hon. Member: The same old blue ruin.

Mr. McMillan: —why at this time anyone was unemployed and why the unemployment insurance fund is still going down. The minister referred to the wonderful team work in his party. I will refer to some of that wonderful team work and where it has landed Canada at this time.

I think nobody will deny that there has been a slowdown in our economy from 1957 onward. The average annual increase in the gross national product from 1950 to 1956 was 6 per cent and since that time it has gone ahead only at the rate of 1½ per cent.

Mr. Pugh: That is not correct.

Mr. Pearson: Then the bureau of statistics is wrong.

Mr. McMillan: It is correct. In 1956, compared with 1950, the volume of national production on a per capita basis increased by 22 per cent between those two years and from 1956 to 1961, it has gone down by 4 per cent.

Mr. Pugh: That is not correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: These are dominion bureau of statistics figures published by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hees: How ridiculous can you get?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member who started this last series of interruptions will very shortly have an opportunity to give his own version of the facts. In the meantime, I think it is only fair that the hon. member who has the floor should have it to himself.

Mr. McMillan: The total capital expenditures in Canada in constant dollars increased by 62 per cent from 1950 to 1957, and there has been a decrease in 1961 from 1957. What is more important still is the fact that business capital expenditures are down by about 25 per cent. It is true that we have an increase in building, housing and some other sectors of our economy.

Mr. Hees: Of course, that does not count.

Mr. McMillan: However, in the business sector, the figure is down by 25 per cent. Prior to 1956, unemployment was slightly under 3 per cent. Since 1957 it has practically always exceeded 6 per cent. We know that in February, 1961, we had the highest unemployment since the war when it reached the figure of 719,000. Unemployment is not down so much now when you take into consideration the increased number of people who are on direct relief. In some of the papers I saw it referred to as a 14 per cent increase and in some others as 17 per cent. Then you must take into consideration the number of unemployed in the vocational training program and in the civil defence forces.

Mr. Pearson: And the number going to the United States.

An hon. Member: Name the paper.

Mr. McMillan: I think our trade is an important matter because trade accounts for about 25 per cent of our labour force. I am glad to note that we have had an increase in trade during this last year. However, 50 per cent of that trade in the first nine months of the year was due to an increase in shipments to communist countries. This is a trade diversion on which we cannot always count. I am also glad to note that we are shipping some commodities to Cuba. I have here U.S. News and World Report for February 26, 1962. In it there is an article which is headed, "How Canada Helps Keep Castro Going" and which reads in part as follows:

> At a time when the U.S. is appealing for support in a campaign to isolate Castro, Canada's exports to Red Cuba have reached record levels.
> Food, machinery, aircraft engines and other goods from Canada—even explosives—are being used by Cuba's communist masters to stave off any internal crisis that might spark an uprising.

Chemicals, chemical specialities and explosives reached an export value of $600,000 while aircraft engines and parts totalled $169,000. Then the article goes on to say:

> Criticism by U.S. officials of Canada's trade with Cuba has drawn sharp replies from Canadian spokesmen. Foreign secretary Howard Green called such criticism "improper". Nevertheless, there are signs that Canadian public opinion may force a change.

As one member of the House of Commons I would appeal to the government to stop shipping explosives and aircraft engines and parts to Cuba.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am a little puzzled to determine how the present argument of the hon. member relates to the amendment and subamendment before the house.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the new trade blocs present us with a challenge and I think we should investigate those blocs. I certainly do not think that at Accra the ministers investigated the European common market properly. For instance, the Minister of Finance said something to the effect that Britain would be on a slippery slope if she joined the common market. I have not got the exact words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce but they were to the effect that Britain would have to choose between the commonwealth and the European common market.

A Senate committee has stated that in the next five years or in the early 60's Canada will need to provide about one million jobs, and I do not think we can do that if our economy is standing still. If our economy had progressed at the same rate as it did in previous years under the former administration there would have been an increase in the gross national product of $14 billion in the last four and a half years. In goods and services this amounts to about $3,000 for the head of every family in Canada.

I have heard some reference to elections past and future, and the Conservative party won the last election largely on a vision. I was glad to hear one hon. member say tonight that his party would go to the country on its record. I do not propose to put on Hansard the platform of our party. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) suggested tonight that we should have a reasonable and sensible alternative. I would say to him that it is important to our economy above everything else that we should have a good stable and solid government, that we should have a sound fiscal, monetary and foreign exchange policy that will restore confidence among our people and among people of other nations.

The policy we have now discourages investment in our country. It discourages the building of new plants where people might be employed. I think this is very important to our economy. The policy that we have now produces a flight from the Canadian dollar. I predicted in the House of Commons last August and also in the previous year that unless there was some change in our fiscal and monetary policy we would have a flight from the Canadian dollar. I do not think that anybody will disagree with the fact that there is a considerable flight from the Canadian dollar at the present time. We only have to refer to Barron's Weekly, a financial magazine, which had this to say in this week's issue:

> For more than four years then, Canada's Conservatives, adopting one misguided economic and fiscal policy after another, have been playing with fire.

Further on it says:

> Canada's financial crisis worsens under this kind of irresponsibility.

I know there have been some articles in the press disagreeing with what Barron's has said but I can quote worse comments. Their comment is mild compared with those which appeared in the Monetary Times of London, in the New York Times some time last year and also in the London Spectator. Certainly in some of our own newspapers we have seen far worse comments than that which appeared recently in Barron's Weekly.

How can there be confidence, Mr. Speaker; how can there be new investment in the face of the present type of monetary and fiscal policy? Without new investment how can we expect to have any substantial upswing in our economy and in our gross national product? Without new investment how can we expect any great increase in employment?

In my opinion monetary policy is vital to our economy and to the welfare of Canadians generally. I know that at the time the minister announced a planned devaluation of the dollar I said that after this had been accomplished it would not be hard to maintain because of the way he set out to bring it about. In the budget debate I said at that time that it would create a lack of confidence and that this would be a strong psychological factor in depressing our dollar. What happened? We spent millions of dollars to depress the dollar and now we are spending millions of dollars to support it.

I will enumerate eight events, any one of which might have a considerable effect on our economy because of their effect through investment channels.

Number 1. In last May and June we had the Coyne affair which resulted in a bad press both at home and abroad. I think this was a psychological depressant on our economy and on our dollar, the results of which did not develop immediately.

Number 2. Then in June we had the long delayed budget and at that time the Minister of Finance made a complete flip-flop. He turned around and tried to depress the value of our dollar. If we turn to page 2673 of Hansard for March 31, 1960, we see that the minister said:

> An attempt by the government artificially to lower the external price of the Canadian dollar would involve borrowing or raising by taxes very large sums of money with which to buy up foreign exchange.

Then, a little farther along he said:

> In other words, we would be embarking upon a gigantic financial speculation with no assurance of success.

What success have we had? I know that already we are putting up $7 million a day to support that dollar.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): How do you know that?

Mr. McMillan: I can read, and that is contained in the report of the Bank of Canada.

Number 3. In December, we had the reported firing of the Minister of Finance. I do not care whether or not there is any substance in the story; that is not the point. The point is that the Prime Minister allowed these stories to continue for two or three weeks without denying them. I think, myself, that created a lot of misgiving in the country. It is very significant that immediately after that we had to support our dollar, while immediately before that we were trying to suppress our dollar. We have spent $200 million since that time, according to the last report, supporting the Canadian dollar and trying to keep it from going lower. I think that is very significant.

Up to that time, it had been reported in the house we were spending money to keep the dollar down, and after that we were spending money to support the dollar. This split in the cabinet, I think, was very disturbing to the country. I am not trying to say that the Minister of Finance was to be fired; that is not the point. The point is that the story got out to the people of Canada, to the people abroad. It may have seemed funny on the surface, but it was not funny to the taxpayer because, according to the last report, he has been paying up to $200 million to support that dollar.

In so far as the exchange rate is concerned, I may say that I saw a very funny cartoon. It showed the Minister of Finance holding a bear by the tail. He was in a very precarious position. I suggest the artist might more properly have shown the minister throwing the taxpayers to the wolves.

Number 4. In November I was in Ottawa and I saw a story in the Ottawa Journal to the effect that experts from the international monetary fund were coming to Ottawa to try to assess our troubles in connection with the exchange fund.

Number 5. Last year, particularly since last June, we have been debasing our currency at the rate of between $5 million and $6 million a day, that is up until early January. I do not know what has happened since then. We only have to go back a short time to ascertain what the Minister of Finance had to say about inflation. This is inflation because, in one year, we have increased the money supply by $1.2 billion, whereas to finance a boom year in years gone by, it has cost us between $400 million and $500 million.

The Minister of Finance had this to say on March 31 last, as reported on page 2673 of Hansard:

> Let us give no quarter to such a defeatist attitude. Inflation acts like a drug on the economic system—even small doses breed a craving for more.

Then, farther along he said:

> One of the most serious effects of inflation is that, like other drugs, it erodes stamina and willpower.

Are we to take it from this that the stamina and willpower of the government have been eroded?

An hon. Member: Where is the inflation?

Mr. McMillan: Would the hon. member not say that the printing of between $5 million and $6 million a day is not inflation?

Mr. Nesbitt: It depends on the amount of goods being produced.

Mr. McMillan: Then: Number 6. About a week or two ago practically all the members of the press, radio and television were saying that Canada would be on the carpet because of her actions with the exchange fund.

Number 7. The press also carried stories to the effect that Canada requested the meeting be in secret.

Number 8. At the Accra conference in September the comments that were made by our minister tended to create some doubt as to the future of the British commonwealth. We all had knowledge of the Coyne affair and of the planned devaluation of the dollar. We also have knowledge of the inflation that is taking place. However, I cannot believe that the other items originated in the minds of the members of the press and in their minds alone as the government would like us to believe.

What does this all add up to? If you take any one of these eight items, along with our high rate of unemployment, the slow pick-up in our economy and our huge budgetary deficit, you have enough to affect the price of our dollar and to scare investors away from our country. You also have enough to scare the Canadian people from investing in different projects within this country. When you consider all these points together, it is no wonder that financial men in New York and Chicago are saying that our dollar will sell at 90 cents. The actions of the government have certainly brought about a lack of confidence at home and abroad. Confidence is one thing you cannot buy with dollars alone. This is something the Minister of Finance must get out of his head. I think you have to have stability. In years gone by our financial system was the envy of the world. Our foreign dealings were above reproach. If you read some of the press reports today, you find that is not the case. I say that the market for dollars is the same as the market for anything else. It will react more to uncertainties than it will to realities. I think our government is providing the uncertainties.

Now, the fiscal and monetary policies should be closely related in order to have a good economy in Canada. I will not go into the details of the conversion loan, but I will mention it in passing because the series of events set in motion by that conversion loan have carried us to the point where we have had to adopt our present fiscal and monetary policies a part of which has been the present policy of supporting our exchange rate. I will say also in passing that the conversion loan is the basic reason, after all, for the governor of the Bank of Canada appearing in Washington last week to defend the actions of this country in connection with the exchange rate. I can say that we gave the people a good economy, good employment, reasonable interest rates and hope for the future and I suggest that the people know the party opposite for their promises. They promised almost anything from an increase in the price of asparagus to a covered city in the north, built on stilts. I suggest that the people will know them for their works, our poor economy, high unemployment and poor hope for the future.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has been part of that team. He likes to refer to himself as part of the team, but I suggest that team has produced some great records which have had something to do with the poor state of our economy. For instance, dealing first with the conversion loan I would suggest that probably the whole team got in on that decision. We were told that the conversion loan was the greatest financial transaction in Canadian history. Probably there is no doubt but that it was the greatest. Another record set by this government was the 719,000 unemployed last February. Another record was our bonds being sold at the lowest price in the western world, less than Cuba's bonds in the early days of the Castro revolution.

The other night I placed on the record the great increase in failures in small businesses and small industries. We have an economy which is standing still, but if there is any slight pick up in the economy from one month to another then a Conservative member seizes upon it with glee and tells us about it in the house.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): And you don't like it.

Mr. McMillan: Then we have the high interest rates. When this government took over the average interest on all debt was 2.98 per cent, but now the Minister of Finance never tells us where it stands.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): He told you today.

Mr. McMillan: Not the average interest.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, he did.

Mr. McMillan: He told us the average interest on some part of the debt.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): He told you the average interest on all parts of the debt.

Mr. McMillan: This is the sort of thing that happens because of the monotonous overdraft of $2 million a day and as a result of the depletion of the unemployment insurance fund. That has to be added to it. It is little wonder then that foreign papers like the London Monetary Times and New York papers refer to Canada as having an economy that is in a mess.

I heard one speaker say tonight that Canada's prestige was high in all parts of the world. Well, I have been in Europe and I got the impression that our prestige was never lower.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Ridiculous.

Mr. O'Hurley: Where did you go?

Mr. McMillan: I will tell hon. gentlemen opposite that the information I got was unsolicited. When I presented a Canadian $5 bill they would not take it at the airport in Lisbon whereas they said they took money from practically every other country in the world. They took Italian lira, they took money from some of the African colonies, from Brazil, from France, but they would not take Canadian money.

This government has offended Britain. It has offended the United States, Uruguay and British Guiana. We heard that in this house, and I do not think there is any doubt about it. It does not matter how often hon. members opposite get up and say we are on the wrong track. They say we have nothing to offer. The one thing we always offered, and still do, is stable and sound government, and that is something Canada has not got today. That is something we could always offer.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): This constant reiteration of doleful facts, of doom and gloom from the Liberal party, gives me a pain in the neck. I do not want to embark on that subject right now as I would like to start tomorrow, if I may call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I don't think so.

Mr. Pugh: I shall deal first with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Niagara Falls. We heard from her tonight that the gross national product has gone up 1.5 per cent; from the last speaker, the hon. member for Welland, we heard it has gone down 4 per cent. It is probably written on the record that the Leader of the Opposition turned around and said "That is correct, look it up in the dominion bureau of statistics." The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate turned around and nodded his head saying "Yeah, man, that is right." All I have to say to all hon. members is that all they have to do is look up the record because the dominion bureau of statistics shows otherwise.

May I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, this debate will continue tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 27, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH INDEPENDENT AFRICAN STATES

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the house is aware that the government has decided to extend its diplomatic relations with the independent states of Africa by opening two new resident diplomatic missions. On January 29 I informed hon. members of the appointment of the first Canadian high commissioner to Tanganyika, and today I am pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Fulgence Charpentier as first Canadian ambassador to the republics of Cameroon Chad, Gabon and Congo (Brazzaville). He will be resident in the capital of Cameroon, Yaounde, with concurrent accreditation to the other three republics.

I am also pleased to announce that diplomatic relations have been established with the republics of Togo and Senegal. The Canadian high commissioner in Accra, Ghana, has been accredited as Canadian ambassador to the government of Togo; the Canadian high commissioner in Lagos, Nigeria, who is already accredited to Sierra Leone, has been accredited to the government of Senegal. This brings the number of African states with which Canada has formal relations to a total of 15. It is hoped that through arrangements for non-resident accreditation of our two Canadian heads of mission in Ghana and Nigeria, diplomatic relations will be established in the near future with additional French speaking states in west Africa.

The decision to establish diplomatic relations with these French speaking African states has been taken because of the increasing importance of Africa in world affairs and the growing influence of these states both within Africa and at the United Nations. The French African delegations have played a notably constructive part in the deliberations of the general assembly, and the Canadian delegation has worked closely with them on many issues. Sharing a common French cultural heritage, Canada and the French speaking states of Africa have a mutual interest in establishing diplomatic relations. The opening of diplomatic relations with these countries will afford an excellent opportunity for strengthening these natural ties.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a field in which Canada can render great service. In 1961 the government established an annual program for educational assistance to the French speaking countries of Africa, which the new mission will help to administer. Mr. Charpentier's appointment will give us a better insight into the problems and requirements of these countries, particularly in areas where Canadian experience will be useful.

Mr. Charpentier, a native of Ste. Anne de Prescott, Ontario, is well known on parliament hill and in the city of Ottawa. He was chief of French Journals in the House of Commons for some years and during the war was director of censorship, receiving the M.B.E. for his services. He was a controller of the city of Ottawa during the years 1932 to 1935. Since joining the Department of External Affairs in 1947 he has served abroad in a number of posts and is at present head of the passport office. Mr. Charpentier, who will take up his appointment shortly, will find that both French and English are used in Cameroon and therefore his proficiency in both these languages will be put to good use.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the announcements he made as the house met, this afternoon, and in view of the fact that there are a great number of Ethiopians who speak French fluently and also that a number of Canadians are serving the cause of education in Ethiopia, is the government considering the possibility of accrediting a Canadian representative to the government of that country in the near future?

(Text):

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have under consideration accreditation with respect to several other African countries, but I am unable to make any announcement at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS IN EVENT OF WAR—U.S. COMMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any comment to make on the reported opinion expressed yesterday by a United States military source in Washington to the effect that nuclear warheads shipped from the United States to Canada after war broke out would not be of use?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I do not intend to make any observations on a matter as important as this on the basis of some report appearing in the press by some anonymous individual.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister inform us if we can take it from his statement that atomic warheads would be available to Canadian troops in the event of war, that there is a secret agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the United States in respect of the provision of atomic warheads at that time?

Mr. Diefenbaker: For the edification of the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, I would recommend your wise words of yesterday. "There has been a substantial exchange on this important matter. If it cannot be clarified in five supplementary questions, I think it might better be deferred to be the subject of a debate".

Mr. Hellyer: Would the Prime Minister not answer the question, which is a simple one? Is there an agreement or is there not an agreement?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he is not permitted to insist on an answer.

Mr. Hellyer: There must be an agreement if we are going to have them ultimately.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

NORTHERN RHODESIA—PREPARATION AND ADOPTION OF CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of a Canadian Press report that the British cabinet today reached a final decision on the constitution for Northern Rhodesia which would apparently allow for the possibility of a negro majority, and in view of the influence enjoyed by Canada in commonwealth relations, would the minister assure the house that Canada will use its good offices with the government of the Rhodesian federation to urge that government to accept this evolution toward democracy?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the minister wants to undertake to answer a question of that kind. I do not wish to be unduly restrictive, but it seems clear to me that the hon. member's question is an invitation to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to interfere in matters which are not under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Herridge: It was not intended in that way, and I leave it to the good judgment of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as to how the matter will be handled.

STATEMENT OF THE QUEBEC PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. V. F. Dubois (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Does the minister have any comments to make about the statement attributed to the premier of the province of Quebec which appeared in this morning's issue of the Gazette concerning a provincial lottery organized by the government?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I have discussed this matter with members of the Quebec provincial government and there has even been an exchange of correspondence between us. Everything was purely informal, on a personal basis and only of a general nature. In fact, I have received two letters, one from Mr. Lesage and the other from Mr. Gerin-Lajoie. Both were marked "personal".

That is why I am most surprised to hear that Mr. Lesage could say—as reported—that he had made official representations which called for a reply on behalf of the government.

During our personal talks I was asked whether or not it would be possible to amend the Criminal Code so as to permit the organization of lotteries by the provincial government. I had pointed out that there were a number of problems involved, that the questions of lotteries and other related matters were presently under consideration and that I would inform them in due time of any change in our position.

Practically speaking, the question of amending the Criminal Code to authorize the organization of lotteries by provincial governments is obviously one which concerns all the provinces. It would therefore be difficult, if not improper, to get in touch with one province only, without consulting the others. We have not consulted them and I am therefore not in a position to make an official statement.

Indeed, the manner in which Mr. Lesage made public the contents of personal correspondence amply shows the danger and difficulties encountered in answering such letters, even on a personal basis.

TRADE

LONG TERM CREDITS FOR EXPORTS OF CATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has any action been taken on the resolution, a copy of which was forwarded to him from the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada, as to the need for granting long term credits to countries which are financially sound and have proven their interest in the importation of Canadian cattle?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving notice of his intention to ask this question. I have been informed that the officials of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation have been carrying out a continuous study of terms of payment offered by competitors in other countries for the sale of cattle, and that such terms are currently cash, or very short term. They have informed me that the Export-Import Bank of Washington did provide two credits to Mexico some years ago, but these credits were of special nature due to an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico which decimated their stocks, and they were urgently in need of fresh stocks at that time.

In the event that a situation were to arise similar to the unfortunate event experienced in Mexico, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation would be prepared to consider approving credit terms extending beyond those presently being granted. In the meantime it is the corporation's view that cattle should continue to be sold on terms normal in international trade, which are cash or very short term.

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR RECORD OF PERFORMANCE WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I also have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the record of performance testing of dairy cattle has apparently outgrown the ability of the present staff to handle the work, has consideration been given to complying with the resolution from the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada that the necessary funds be provided to ensure that this valuable work be carried on at the level required for the continued improvement of our dairy cattle?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): The resolution to which the hon. member for Fraser Valley referred has been received from the secretary of the Holstein-Friesian association. In brief it requests the government to provide the resources necessary to ensure the carrying on of record of performance testing services at the level required for the continued improvement of dairy cattle. This the government has done.

Ontario is the only province in which any difficulty exists in taking qualified breeders under R.O.P. inspection as soon as they apply. There has been a heavy increase in the demands for this service in Ontario. Since 1957 the number of herds under inspection in Ontario has increased by 335, and the number of inspectors by 13.

If the facilities are not available to take new applicants under inspection when they apply, they are placed on a waiting list until they can be accommodated through the provision of more staff or the normal dropping out of others under the policy. It has been considered preferable to follow this practice rather than reduce the service to breeders under test. This has created no substantial delays. There have been no applications prior to January 1, 1962 which have not been taken care of, and there have been only 13 firm applications since that date which are now on the waiting list.

AGRICULTURE

EXPERIMENTAL FARM, OTTAWA—THEFT OF BUTTERFLIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can also put a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, about the recent theft of a valuable collection of butterflies. Could the parliamentary secretary say whether his attention has been drawn to the statement in the Winnipeg Tribune that no one has checked the collection since 1958, and could he say whether this is another example of the neglect of the present government?

Mr. Pigeon: Butterflies are your friends.

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make on a newspaper article. I would point out to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that this matter is under consideration now by the R.C.M.P. and is being looked after very well.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the search for the butterflies, have they checked Liberal stomachs?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROTESTS RESPECTING REDUCTIONS IN ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, as one old soldier to another, at the request of several other old soldiers in receipt of war veterans allowance. In view of the fact that the Department of Veterans Affairs is sending a notice to all recipients of war veterans allowance and widows allowance reading as follows: "The reduction in your war veterans allowance is the result of an equivalent increase in your old age security pension," would the minister inform the house whether he has received any protests concerning this policy? If so, is consideration being given to a review being made that would ensure that our older veterans and their widows, to whom we owe so much, are able to share this improvement in the pensions given to Canadians over 70 years of age?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this question is very important to a great many people. We have had some complaints due to a misunderstanding.

When war veterans allowances were first introduced nearly 30 years ago they were intended to be of assistance to those older returned soldiers who were unable to provide for themselves the necessities of life. It was felt that a number of former members of the forces, because of the arduous and dangerous nature of their service, had become pre-aged. The legislation was thus designed to provide financial assistance to service qualified veterans, in cases of need, at an age earlier than old age pensions become available to the population generally.

War veterans allowances were never intended to be paid independently of other sources of income, even where such income arose from war disability pensions or from pensions payable under social legislation. The purpose of the allowance is to assist those deserving and qualified veterans and their dependants who are suffering from financial stringency, and in determining qualification for an allowance all other forms of income must be taken into consideration.

The result is that when those people who are of an age to receive the old age security pension get an increase in that pension, that is part of their total permissible income and is so recorded for war veterans allowances purposes. The war veterans allowance is not then as great as it was in the earlier month.

May I point out that it was only last year, just nine months ago, that the following changes were made in war veterans allowance. Previously the monthly rate for a single veteran had been $70; nine months ago it was raised to $84. The monthly rate for a married veteran was $120 nine months ago, and it was raised to $144. The ceiling for total income was increased, for a single veteran from $1,080 to $1,296 and for a married veteran from $1,740 to $2,088. In other words, a 20 per cent increase in the war veterans allowance was made effective June 1, 1961.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I understand the logic of the minister's reply to my friend the hon. member for Kootenay West, but is it not true that the statement just made implies the institution of a means test with respect to old age pensions to war veterans?

Mr. Churchill: The War Veterans Allowance Act has contained the so-called means test right from the beginning. There is nothing new in this at all. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that there is the utmost sympathy on the part of this government for veterans and their dependants. The increase of last year which I mentioned was the third increase since we came into power with regard to war veterans allowance, and similarly the disability pensions were increased.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not realize that the statement he has now made amounts to a formal announcement that the government does not intend to carry out another election promise?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, every election promise that has been made has been carried out or will be carried out in the near future.

Mr. Pickersgill: "No one will suffer".

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WHEREABOUTS OF PORTRAIT OF LATE R. B. BENNETT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister and regret that I was unable to send him notice. I rise as one who has a great respect for tradition, protocol and things being done in the proper way.

I have in my hand a cutting from the Calgary Herald which is headed "Bennett Painting Missing; One Here" which tells the story of a pressman visiting Calgary lawyer E. J. McCormick, Q.C., an active Liberal. He asked him if the portrait he has of the late R. B. Bennett was the missing one from Ottawa. Mr. McCormick told the reporter in effect that he must ask the Prime Minister, and refused to answer.

I have two grounds for my question. First of all, the Liberals are already taking members of this group into their fold. Surely they are not going to take Conservatives into their fold. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether this is the missing portrait, and whether it has been turned over to the Liberals?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Everyone is flocking to the Liberal party.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say the Conservative party does not allow its great leaders, even its historical ones, to be adopted by the Liberal party despite the fact that a certain historian, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, is rewriting history for the benefit of his party.

There is a question on the order paper in connection with this matter. However, if I may be allowed to answer the question at this time I shall be pleased to do so, although the question on the order paper will be answered in due course.

Mr. Speaker: As the Prime Minister has reminded me of a fact I had overlooked, I think the preferable course would be to give priority to the question which appeared first on the order paper. That is the practice I have tried to follow. Perhaps the Prime Minister would reserve his answer for the written question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is one part of the question that is not on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, and to which I may be permitted to reply. The portrait in question presented to the people of Canada by Lord Beaverbrook hangs in the prime minister's office here, and is not in Calgary.

Mr. Herridge: The mystery is solved.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance at this time give some guidance as to when he will be bringing in his 1962 budget?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I think I may say, Mr. Speaker, it will not be this month.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, February 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Miss LaMarsh, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Herridge.

ALLEGED LACK OF ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last evening I was discussing certain phases of the gross national product. I feel it is important to put on record figures indicating the gross national product in certain years between 1952 and 1960. In 1952 the gross national product was approximately $24 billion. By 1956 it had increased to $30.5 billion, an increase of $6.5 billion. By 1960 it had risen to $36 billion, and indications are that at the end of the present fiscal year it will stand at $37.5 billion. I point out that this figure reflects and bears a relationship to the loss of the wheat crop last year.

Mention has been made in this debate of the measures the government has taken to meet current problems. I cannot resist commenting on the quick action taken by the government last year with respect to the crop failure, the measures undertaken to provide financial assistance, to arrange for forage for cattle and to hold firm the market.

It is interesting that there has been a phenomenal growth in the gross national product despite the gloomy assertions placed on the record by hon. members of the Liberal party. I think it does no harm to review the facts. In 1957 when the Conservative government took office there were reasonable grounds for the gloom of hon. members of the opposition; not because we had taken over, but because they knew that in 1957 nothing could arrest the recession which had gradually been developing since 1955.

Mr. Hellyer: Who is rewriting history now?

Mr. Pugh: The hon. member for Trinity asks who is rewriting history now. In reply I will fling in his teeth the frequently reiterated question: who caused the depression of 1930? The Liberals never heard of the depression of 1929 which was under way before the Conservative party came into power. They said we caused the depression in 1930. The Liberals formed the government up to that date and they were responsible for that recession. They were equally responsible for the recession of 1957 and the aftermath. They had their report.

Mr. Pearson: You spent two years denying there was one.

Mr. Pugh: It would do no harm to review the situation when we came in. There was tight money in 1957. Anyone who is familiar with conditions in his constituency at that time will know that tight money was in effect. Credit was tight and not available to the average businessman. Take another example, national housing. It was practically a nullity. There is no question about it. It was a case of try to get funds for national housing. They had it in the kitty; they had $50 million left over, but you could not get a loan. You could not get the thing processed. If you talked to any lawyers in your constituency at that time who handled these matters, they would tell you exactly the same thing, namely, "Sorry; we put in for a loan but we could not get them processed." They had $100 million, but if you examine the records now—and I will raise the matter later—there are $3 billion available for this national housing program. It is a matter of $100 million as against $3 billion.

Just to go back over this review, we had tight money, credit at a standstill, national housing at a standstill and our trade balance with other countries in a rather impossible situation—the Minister of Finance just put it on the record today—with $713 million of an imbalance, an alarming state. That is what the businessman was faced with when we came into office. Regardless of what has been said, there is no question but that when we came into office in 1957 we were obliged to take certain steps. It was necessary to do so for the economy of Canada. We took those steps. This government stepped right in.

As far as the over-all picture is concerned, we have long had a national policy which we are not backward in bringing forward. It is a policy which we talked about all along, and when the time came we put it into effect. Legislation was immediately forthcoming with regard to agriculture. I think it is fair to put on the record now what was done for agriculture in the last four years. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, they were rather tough years according to the Liberals. They are the people who have said those years have been bad. But despite all that, this government in the last four years has put in for agriculture twice as much as the previous government did in the previous four years.

The facts are irrefutable. I have mentioned national housing, which has been built up now so that housing is going ahead all over the continent. The figure of $100 million has become $3 billion. In 1956-57 social justice payments stood at $1.3 billion. They have now become $2.3 billion, or in other words another $1 billion put out in social justice payments. Then as to dominion-provincial relations, they were improved immediately and the federal contributions all round have increased by 70 per cent over those made by the former administration. Those are dollars which have been put out to the provincial governments. There has been a 70 per cent increase. As to veterans legislation, we just had a brief rundown on that matter. Direct payments in the last year were up more than 50 per cent over those in the last year of the Liberal regime. In other words the figure which was $200 million has now become $305 million in direct payments to the veterans.

This is but a partial list. I do not wish to start throwing things down people's throats. However, I would recommend to members of the Liberal party or to any opposition member the admirable speech made in this house by the Minister of Public Works. It may be found at page 1155 of Hansard if hon. members care to look it up. That speech is predicated on achievements and promises fulfilled.

I like to look at my own riding in connection with this matter because we have heard criticism of deficit financing. Yet at the same time many things have been done. As to federal buildings, we have a federal building in the city of Penticton. It is a rather wonderful building. In my own home town of Oliver we have a federal building. Kelowna will have a new federal building. We have had post offices in Rutland and Keremeos. The R.C.M.P. barracks also. It is all part of a planned expansion program. There has been participation in health units and senior citizens dwellings. Incidentally, we have enlarged all the legislation with regard to those things.

In my own constituency breakwaters have been built on Okanagan lake, three brand new ones at Summerland, Peachland and Naramata, and there have been extensions and improvements to those in Penticton and Kelowna. In addition, one large airport has been put in and taken over by the Department of Transport at Kelowna. There is paving and reasonable lighting at the present time, and we hope to get more. At the city of Penticton there is an extension and more paving and an administration building. I name these things in order to indicate a few of the things we have done which were not on the shelf under the Liberal party, which were not there and available for this deficit financing. However, we went ahead in our planning and we have benefited the constituency. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) spoke, as did the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) or rather the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey).

An hon. Member: That is very different.

Mr. Pugh: Yes, and a very different person also as a representative. If you read the speeches or if you listened to them as I did, I could not help feeling that the constituents were very well looked after. This is a part of a planned program of getting down to the people. I do not like to mention it here, but once again I go to my own constituency where we had cold storage subsidies in the last year alone of $345,000. That is a great deal of money. It is a great deal of aid to the growers of my constituency. It is a great deal of help to contractors all down the line. I have, of course, a little note here which says "And we have not finished yet". We have not finished by a long shot.

That had reference to the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke yesterday. I would recommend that the opposition read his speech and take the figures, go over them and mull them over. In them they will see a great deal to chew on. They are good figures. They show the position of Canada. One thing that I thought was rather remarkable is the fact that the imbalance of trade has now been wiped out. For the first time in many many years we have a credit balance of trade with other countries, and we have this credit balance despite an increase in imports and exports throughout Canada.

There is no question but that we are doing very well. The businessmen of Canada and incidentally the press, barring Barron's Weekly, seem to take a fairly good view of that which is being done by the present government; in fact they take an excellent view. I know you will find the odd little Liberal press clipping here and there to wave around and say, "Look here", but the general thought is favourable, and this is the thought throughout the constituency. That is the important thing, after all is said and done, for one who knows the difference between the brass and the grass. If you know your grass you know that your own businessman is a fairly happy person.

I would also recommend the speeches made by the Minister of Labour. There is a great deal in them. I would particularly point out what was done with regard to the winter works program. Last year this government paid out as their portion of the labour costs in all projects the sum of $32 million. That is a great deal of money. That means that the projects which were put into effect were rather large, when you consider them in total sums of money. Incidentally, I would point out that this is not a payment to the provinces, it is a direct payment to the municipalities on winter works. It is a direct payment in addition to all the other substantially increased payments which we have been making to the provinces and the municipalities in other forms.

The Minister of Labour mentioned vocational training. I think we owe him and the government a debt of gratitude also for putting that program into effect. In the city of Kelowna I am happy to say that the provincial government has seen fit to put up a vocational training school, and it is not going to be a small one. I think it is only fair to point out that this government is paying three quarters of the cost of that whole set-up. I have reference to the building or the fixed plant. It is only fair also to point out that certain other costs are shared with the provincial government. I refer to the cost of vocational training education. Furthermore, the cost of training teachers is shared as well. People do not seem to realize it, but the federal government has extended the act in order to give benefits to the provinces.

Last night we heard criticism from the hon. member for Welland with regard to the dollar discount. Strangely enough, there is criticism of the dollar discount on the part of Liberal candidates in the province of British Columbia. Some of them are even writing to the press about the matter. To my mind they are committing political suicide, because the province of British Columbia, one of the great exporting provinces of the dominion, has gained immeasurably in export trade since we devalued the dollar. I have in mind my own industry, lumbering, which is the biggest industry in the province of British Columbia, and also the fruit industry, particularly apples. I can also say with authority that a mining boom has started in the province of British Columbia since the devaluation of the dollar, the like of which we have never seen before. These are long term plans.

The criticism is that we are wrecking the economy of Canada by the devaluation of the dollar. I say that is utter tommyrot, and persons who utter such statements have not taken the trouble to study the matter thoroughly. Canada is clamouring for exports, and we are now in a much better trading position. In addition, all the little articles that are imported into Canada now enter with what might be called an additional invisible tariff barrier against them.

The difference in the value of the dollar has made a tremendous impact as far as we are concerned. Apples are exported from my constituency to the United States, and on such exports we get 7 per cent or 8 per cent more. Practically every apple exported from Canada comes from my constituency or the constituency of Okanagan-Revelstoke. We are getting extra money for our apples. In addition, our competitors in the United States are faced with an invisible barrier of 7 per cent so far as the export of their product is concerned, making a total difference of from 15 to 20 per cent.

We have heard a lot about the deficit and deficit financing from various members, but to my mind the criticisms are ridiculous. In the briefs which labour has presented to the government throughout the years, labour has said that more deficit financing and more government spending are needed. We are doing that. The people of this country have asked for deficit spending. We need more public buildings, and we are providing them. But I think the important thing to know here is that the total accrued deficit of the government is more than balanced by the total of the increased payments to the provinces.

Mr. Pearson: Oh—

Mr. Pugh: The Leader of the Opposition says "oh". If he will finish his sentence I will try to answer him. He does not. The figures are easily garnered from available statistics. The total accrued deficit since we came into office amounts to $1.4 billion, while increased payments amount to $1.7 billion. That is something that members of the opposition should mull over, because we have many other increased payments. If we have a deficit, I think we have been doing very well to more than balance it by one item, increased payments to the provinces. But when you also take increased payments to veterans over the last for years, what do you get? You get a rather large total. Then there are all the public buildings that have been erected. Add up the cost of all these over the last four years and what have you got? Then there are the social justice payments which the opposition have been sort of pooh-poohing, but none the less at present they are bidding like fury to outbid us. There are many items that would come under that category, but I do not want to prolong matters by going into all of them. If you add up all these items and balance the total against the deficit, big as it may seem, we have a very healthy balance, one of which I am rather proud.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Pugh: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Could my hon. friend give us the basis for the statement he made a moment ago about the balancing off between the deficit position of the nation and the payments to provinces made by the federal government?

Mr. Pugh: I suggest to the hon. member that he frame a question and put it to the Minister of Finance tomorrow on orders of the day. The minister will have a ready answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The fact is that you made a statement which you cannot back up.

Mr. Pugh: I have made this statement because it certainly points up something of which I am rather proud and of which the government is rather proud. It is something that can be supported by facts. Provincial payments are a rather sore subject so far as the former government are concerned. They say that they did this and they did that but, with particular reference to the province of British Columbia, when you total all the payments in each bracket right down the line they bulk large. There is no question but that from the time we came into office the payments have been bigger and better. If the hon. member wants to ask the Minister of Finance a question tomorrow I am sure he will give the hon. member the exact figures, $1.4 billion compared with $1.7 billion.

I must close, Mr. Speaker, but before doing so I should like to refer to the hon. member for Niagara Falls. In introducing the amendment the hon. lady stated—I cannot quote her exactly without looking up her words—that we want to tell Canadians now that they have never had it so good, and that we apparently do not propose to do anything except publicize our meagre accomplishments. I hate to take exception to what a lady says at any time, but she is in politics and I cannot help thinking that if she would do a little more homework she would probably get a better answer. That must have been the real reason behind this rather pusillanimous and ineffective amendment. It is very general in its terms and is merely a rehash of Liberal bemusement and indicates, if I may say so, their inefficiency in opposition.

The hon. lady is due for a shock, and so are the rest of the Liberals. Why do I say "shock"? I say so first of all because Canada is on the march. This is something that is not realized at all by the Liberal party. The policies which we have introduced in the last four years have been good for Canada and Canadians, for all types, sorts and sizes of Canadians. We want participation in the economy. Our legislation is designed to that end, and our policies are now being vindicated. Why also will the Liberals get a shock? Because we are not content, as the hon. lady would have the house believe, to capitalize on past achievements. We will continue to introduce legislation for the betterment of Canada and all Canadians. The pattern is set, and this government will continue to serve.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, as found in the Athens Reporter, the Minister of Trade and Commerce made this statement in Brockville on February 21:

> Final proof of the effectiveness of the federal government's action during these troubled years is that Canada's economy is moving vigorously ahead.

On February 22, sir, the Minister of Public Works delivered a lengthy address. On page 1157 of Hansard he is reported as saying:

> Now we are riding on one of the most prosperous waves—

On page 1159 he is reported as saying:

> Now that we are on the high road to prosperity—

On page 1160 he is reported as saying:

> We have made this magnificent contribution to Canada—

This is said, sir, with 609,000 people receiving unemployment benefits as of December 29, 1961. The Prime Minister has made statements in similar terms. According to Mr. Charles Lynch the Prime Minister, on December 20, said:

> It has been a wonderful year for me. I look back over it with a great deal of pleasure.

Reducing this problem to the local level may I tell this house soberly that for the last three years, 1959, 1960 and 1961, there have been substantially over 3,000 people unemployed in the town of Cornwall, which has a population of just over 42,000. The ratio of registrants to population in the town of Prescott, which is immediately east to the city where I live, is 15.5. There are now between 900 and 1,000 people in Brockville who are unemployed. I refer to Barron's National Business and Financial Weekly, to which reference was made by the previous speaker, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. This is the edition of February 19, 1962 and the front page story is headed "Playing With Fire; Canadian Economic Policy Sounds an Alarm for U.S.". May I read just two extracts from it:

> —a massive capital flight from the dominion already is under way.

Further along I read:

> For more than four years, then, Canada's Conservatives, adopting one misguided economic and fiscal policy after another, have been playing with fire.

May I read into the record the comparative table of indices showing the gross national product per person in constant dollars using 1950 as 100 per cent.

Countries	1950	1956	1960 (est.)
Japan	100	147	190
Germany	100	152	185
Italy	100	135	175
France	100	125	142
Netherlands	100	127	140
Sweden	100	115	128
United Kingdom	100	115	124
Canada	100	116	111

In constant 1954 dollars the per capita gross national product figures in the United States were, 1950, $2,096; 1956, $2,393; 1960, $2,442. Preliminary United States index figures would be respectively 100, 114 and 117. This table was prepared by Mr. H. G. DeYoung, chairman of Canada's productivity council. May I refer to a return which was tabled yesterday, I believe. The question of the government was:

> What is the percentage of foreign investment control in the years 1956 and 1961 in (a) the resource industries (b) the manufacturing industries?

The answer to (a) was only available up to 1959, and it shows that in mining and smelting the percentage of foreign investment control in 1956 was 58 per cent and in 1959, three years later, it was 61 per cent. In the manufacturing industries, in 1956 foreign investment control was 52 per cent, and in 1959 it was 57 per cent.

I refer this house to another answer that was given very recently, and it is related to the per capita production output for the years 1950 to 1960. Let me refer to just two figures. The figure for 1956 in constant 1957 dollars was $1,959 per capita and for 1960, the last available figure, it was $1,898. In other words, 1961 was less than 1956 by $61. Between 1955 and 1956 we had an increase in gross national product per person of 5.9 per cent and between 1956 and 1960 a drop of over 3 per cent. Using the average of seasonally adjusted to annual rates, gross national product figures in constant 1957 dollars for the first two quarters of 1957 and for the first two quarters of 1961, the last figures available to us, the per capita gross national product in real terms, that is in constant dollars, is as follows: 1957, $1,945; 1961, $1,863, a relative loss in gross national product of $82 per man, woman and child, and a loss of $328 per theoretical family of four. This is the basis for our contention that these past four years have been the wasted years for Canada, and that is how they will go down in history.

By way of contrast, and simply to indicate how successful the common market has become since it was brought into being by the six nations in 1958, I should like to point out that during the brief four years all the member countries have achieved a rate of sustained economic growth never before experienced in the history of Europe. Workers and employers, industry and labour, consumers and producers are sharing in an economic recovery and in a prosperity more rapid and more sustained than anywhere else in the world.

Listen to these figures. The gross national product of the European community rose 7 per cent in 1960 over 1959 in terms of constant prices, and climbed at a 5 per cent rate during 1961. Industrial production went up 12 per cent in 1960 and has expanded 25 per cent in three years. Is it any wonder, sir, that in light of these figures, which I have taken from Reader's Digest for February, 1962, our own Canadian performance has demonstrated a frightening downward deflection of growth trends? Perhaps we are wrong in saying that the affairs of Canada, from a business point of view, are not sound. However, we are in good company because there are many able people who agree with us. I think it is important that the government start listening to some of these people who are among their earnest supporters.

May I refer to the Financial Post of November 4, 1961, which contains an article entitled "We Need a National Goal for Expansion of Economy." The government may not like this article because it contains statements made by Mitchell W. Sharp, who is vice president of Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company. Of course during recent months he has indicated a partisanship that is inimical to the government. Mr. Sharp has said:

> There are three fundamental issues of economic policy facing Canada today.
> How to deal with persistent unemployment.

There were 719,000 people unemployed in 1961, and that was far too many. The second fundamental is, how to adjust our trading policies to the rapidly changing world around us. In this respect, I feel that this government has done nothing except put its head in the sand. The third fundamental is foreign ownership. I read into the record a few minutes ago a table which indicated how unsuccessful the government have been in this direction, no matter what their purpose may have been. When you take out the figures for the trade with communist China, the contracts for which incidentally we are not permitted to examine; when you take out the figures for trade with Poland under extraordinary credit terms; when you take out the figures for trade with Castro's Cuba, then you find our 1961 exports are in a critical situation.

Mr. Sharp says what is needed are measures to stimulate expansion along efficient and dynamic lines which will permit future growth and adaptability in a highly competitive and changing world. He says:

> Our secondary manufacturing industries must be encouraged to keep abreast of the most advanced technology, to engage in a rapid rate of innovation and development, to seek areas of advantageous specialization and to achieve adequate scales of output so that they can compete effectively both at home and abroad.

I shall not go on to deal further with the article, but it is not only men like Mitchell Sharp who are saying this. There is also E. P. Taylor, and I refer to an article in the Toronto Star Weekly of November 4, 1961 which is headed "Economic Leadership Needed." In it the Toronto industrialist, E. P. Taylor, is quoted as saying:

> "Canada's international rating has slipped rather badly in recent years . . ." With other competitive countries increasing their national production at rates of 7 and 8 per cent annually, it's plain that Canada should step up its own rate of growth. We need national economic policies designed to bring this about.

The article goes on to indicate:

> In this, as in every other modern country, the ultimate responsibility for the state of the national economy rests with the national government.

On this we agree. Let us look at the Vancouver Province for November 15, 1961. There is an article headed "Canada still looks for real economic leadership", and it says:

> Mr. James Coyne, the former Bank of Canada governor, is no longer delivering broadsides from Ottawa or public platforms, urging Canadians to tighten their belts and live within their means.
> But others have caught his urgency.

The article goes on to mention industrialist E. P. Taylor, Neil L. McKinnon, and W. J. Kirkpatrick. It also states that Dean E. D. MacPhee, of the University of British Columbia, who is respected by thinking people, listed Canada's ailments as follows:

> The low level of productivity in industry.
> The balance of payments deficit.
> The high proportion of foreign investment.
> The rising level of prices.
> The changing order of international trade.

The Financial Post of November 18, 1961, has an article entitled "The basic health not good enough" which contains the following passage:

> The hard evidence that Canada is in basic, long term trouble, whatever the current little improvements, is plainly visible right now . . . it is clear that if Canada aspires to a real growth rate of slightly more than 4 per cent a year . . . no substitute will do for a bold, intelligent and responsible attempt to plan our prosperity.

That is from the Financial Post, and there are friends of this government who could be heard by the government had it the ears to hear. The Toronto Telegram of November 29, 1961 has an article by David Grenier, its financial editor, which is headed "High cost of stagnation". He points to:

> —resources concentrated in industries that were not growth industries.

The Montreal Gazette of December 12, 1961 speaks of "Economic growth hindered" and the opening paragraph reads:

Uncertainty about Canadian policy towards the European common market was described last night as one of the strongest inhibitions on economic growth.

The Victoria daily Times of December 28, 1961 had an article headed "Still Stagnation", and the Financial Post of January 27, 1962 had a page headed "Where do we go from here". It shows various indices of growth in the period from 1947 to 1962 (estimated) and they read:

G.N.P.: Sluggish since '56—
Business outlays: decline from a peak
Corporate profits: no real rise
Unemployment: double earlier rate.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, which is friendly to the government, on February 1, 1962 spoke of "Steady decline in productivity noted in Canada". That article refers to the excellent address given by J. D. Campbell, president of Canadian Westinghouse Company Limited the previous day, and reports him as follows:

The decline since 1956—compared with an annual gain of almost 3 per cent between 1949 and 1956—is a result of the shift of labour into the service industries, unemployment and idle capacity in industry—

Just because we do not share its views it is quite unworthy of us to ascribe all the blame for what has happened to the present government, but we on this side believe that serious and vital changes have taken place in the world and, for some reason beyond our ken and understanding, this government does not seem to be concerned about these changes. They appear to move against the tide. Is it not urgently important that we look at the situation where immigration has turned into emigration, and Canada's most costly exports have become the skills and brains of its people?

With our best customer, the United States, the government perpetuates an insidious campaign of anti-Americanism. With our second best customer, the United Kingdom, the government raises tariffs on cars and textiles. It refuses to consider offers of freer trade, and it threatens to undermine the commonwealth if Britain joins the common market, despite Britain's trade plight. With our fourth best customer, Japan, the government imposes excise taxes on radio sets, tubes and cigarette lighters, and increases the tariff on nails. It thus makes it almost impossible for Japan to earn Canadian dollars to buy Canadian products. As Arthur J. R. Smith says, "Protection is the gateway to a lonely and trivial splendour," and so our policy is one of jingoistic bellicose nationalism.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

May I ask the house to go back in imagination to a period when difficulties were much greater than they are now, in 1962. I am going to ask the house to step back in imagination to the wartime cabinet of Great Britain in June, 1940. At that time the cabinet approved the final draft proclamation of an Anglo-French union and authorized its dispatch to M. Reynaud by the hand of General de Gaulle. This was on June 16, 1940, and the contents of the draft were telephoned to M. Reynaud. I wish to read extracts from that draft, and may I add that it was primarily the work of Winston Churchill, that gallant leader of Britain. It states:

At this most fateful moment in the history of the modern world, the governments of the United Kingdom and the French republic make this declaration of indissoluble union—

The two governments declare that France and Great Britain shall no longer be two nations, but one Franco-British union.

The constitution of the union will provide for joint organs of defence, foreign, financial and economic policies.

Every citizen of France will enjoy immediately citizenship of Great Britain; every British subject will become a citizen of France.

We might well say "ridiculous", yet in 1941 a man for whom I have the greatest admiration, Charles Morgan, a former professor at Oxford, gave two addresses, one in New York and one in London. In each he read the following:

It must be clear that the simplest law of self-preservation requires that we have a friend and not an enemy in Paris.

But this strategical point is not the one I wish to make now. I put forward a different and more embracing claim—not that the strength and independance of France are necessary to our political survival but that the life and spirit of France constitute an idea the death of which would be the death of civilization. I have heard it said that France is decadent, that she is corrupt, that to the world of the future no good can come from her—

This was written on February 25, 1941.

—that the British empire and America can afford to do without her. I hold, on the contrary, that, in spite of her faults and failures, there is in her a unique element without which the energies and virtues of the Anglo Saxon peoples cannot yield their full fruit.

Of all the countries in the world, Canada is surely the one to support such a contention, to believe it and live by it. Winston Churchill, in his famous speech at Zurich in September, 1946 used these words:

Among the victors there is a babel of jarring voices, among the vanquished the sullen silence of despair. Yet all the while there is a remedy which would as if by a miracle transform the whole scene. It is to recreate the European family, or as much of it as we can, and provide it with a structure under which it can dwell in peace, in safety and in freedom. We must build a kind of united states of Europe.

When I was at the United Nations observing what was happening down there I noticed an article in the New York Times of December 13, 1961 headed "Marriage of convenience: John Bull and B. Bardot".

And now suddenly this thing is happening. But what has been happening in all these years in Canada? About our attitude to these enormous changes of such far reaching importance culturally, economically, socially, affecting the survival of free people? This is one reason I so earnestly subscribe to the policies of the party to which I belong. I feel we must recognize that enormous changes are taking place in the world and that this unity of England and France—and of all Europe, indeed—is something that is ennobling to all mankind and in which we must participate in a vigorous way.

Can we not remember that when NATO was created the prime architect, according to the words of the chancellor of the University of London, was Mr. St. Laurent, who was then prime minister of Canada. It was our Mr. St. Laurent of Canada who had a major part in the formation of NATO, and it was certainly not thought in those days that NATO was something confined and related only to war. It was something very much larger than that.

Where do we stand on this matter? Our leader has expressed himself in rather clear terms, and I would ask hon. gentleman to listen for a moment. When the Atlantic trading community was first proposed by Lester B. Pearson in the House of Commons on March 21, 1960 the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) said:

> There is no reason on earth why Canada should not at least associate itself in this initiative in an aggressive and formal way. It seems to me there is a real urgency in this matter. This is the time to do it if it is going to be done at all. The European countries are finalizing their respective trade arrangements and next year it might be too late for any alternative proposal to be made to them.

He spoke in almost the same terms to the Empire and Canadian clubs in Toronto on April 24, 1961, when he said:

> This process of Atlantic economic integration must take place for political as well as commercial reasons. It is necessary for the prosperity and growth of the Atlantic democracies. But it may soon be necessary for their survival.

Then in the House of Commons on April 25, 1961, before I had the honour of being here, he said:

> We should encourage European, economic as well as political integration on a basis of expanded, not restricted, trade, and then we should do everything we can to convert that European economic community into a political trade area with which, stage by stage, other free countries could be associated.

[Mr. Matheson.]

There are certain parts of Canada where they have caught the urgency of this. Certainly this is so in Winnipeg. A series of articles have been published in this connection. Max Freedman has written on this subject at different times, as has Maurice Western, who has written about "The Turtle at Ottawa." The Winnipeg Free Press has written repeatedly on the subject "Is Canada turning her back on destiny?", particularly in view of the great leadership that is now being shown by the present idealistic, energetic and courageous President of the United States.

> Mr. Kennedy's state of the union message was by any measure a bold and masterly answer to what Mr. Fleming seemed to be seeking, a superb act of leadership in the face of formidable opposition in his own country and abroad, and it must have been with this thought in mind that five senior members of the American cabinet journeyed to Ottawa last week end in the confident expectation that they would find their counterparts in the Canadian cabinet enthusiastic about the president's program.
> But according to the communique issued at the close of their talks the president's emissaries found nothing of the kind. "Canadian ministers," the communique said, "emphasized that the commonwealth trade links, including the exchange of preferences and the historic right of free entry into the United Kingdom market, were an essential cohesive element in the commonwealth association". Where the Americans came prepared to discuss the realities of the present the Canadians were able to speak in the platitudes of the past, delivering the same tiresome lectures with which they have been haranguing the British since the negotiations with the common market opened.

I submit that there is perhaps nothing more important and more exciting in political economy today than for us to think in terms of the sweeping changes that have taken place in the world since world war II. We know there have been various attempts in history, in the nineteenth century and indeed in the eighteenth century, toward a world community. We saw this with the British when they repealed the corn laws, and the subsequent sweeping movement towards new growth and development. It is noteworthy that there were just two countries which resisted this kind of economic development that was lifting mankind all over the world. There was Canada with her national policy of 1879, and in that same year Germany which moved in the direction of an imperialism which ultimately led to world war I.

We remember the chaos of the world community that produced world war I and later demonstrated itself in dangerous and insidious ways in the inflation of 1921 and 1922 and eventually the flight from gold. We saw France and Austria, and the United States pursue nationalistic monetary policies that were designed to do nothing but destroy the economic stability of the world and indeed most individual economies of the world.

But somehow or other we have got over that; at least we think we have. We think the world has been granted a second chance. In 1947 there was GATT and in 1950, through the energy of the French there was the Schumann plan. What a brave venture this was by the French with their old, traditional enemy Germany. We saw in O.E.E.C. a development in this direction. Finally these people determined that they could go a step further and there was the treaty of Rome which was finally signed in March, 1957 after much discussion and negotiation. In 1959 we saw the outer seven, led by Britain into the development of the E.F.T.A.

This is not only something that is happening in Europe. This is a movement, ecumenical in its concept, that is happening in other parts of the world. In our own hemisphere we found that in 1958 five central American countries under the leadership of Costa Rica were developing a customs union, and in 1960 there were seven other Latin American countries led by Argentina. This has all formed a great stepping stone to a future Latin-American commonwealth which is certainly going to be in the nature of a great common market.

On November 2, 1961 our leader made this statement with respect to Atlantic trade. This was prompted by the Herter-Clayton report from Washington. The Leader of the Opposition said:

> The Herter-Clayton report from Washington is of the greatest significance to Canada and all free countries. It would put the United States government right behind those principles of international trade that the Liberal party has advocated for a long time; principles that the Liberal opposition, since 1957, have consistently urged on a Tory government in Ottawa, which has just as consistently ignored or rejected them.
> Rather than collaborate with Great Britain in furthering these principles, in extending the European common market into an even wider common market, the present government has publicly upbraided and criticized the British government for moving in this direction. It has done this, even though it scorned a British offer of free trade with Canada made more than three years ago.
> It is high time that our government awakened to the implications of what is going on across the Atlantic—and now across the border. It is high time that Canada's interests were promoted by positive and constructive policies instead of being damaged by the negative and sterile policy of the government.

Then we have the Toronto Globe and Mail of January 2, 1962 asking this question: "Can Canada renew time that ran out during 1961?" Fraser Robertson says:

> For Canada 1961 may be remembered as the year when time ran out.

I hope this is not so. It seems to me that when we look fairly at the theories of political economy in this country, basically there is a very large measure of agreement among all our political parties. Actually we tend to think pretty much in the same way. There have been statements made which have been guarded and timid at times, but nevertheless statements which make us think that the government does perhaps understand something of the far reaching changes that are taking place right now and have changed the face of the world within the last five years. Is this government really a Conservative government in the terms described by William J. Newman, who is a distinguished professor of government at Boston? I hope it is not. If not, this is the time to prove that, because this is a critical and urgent and climactic moment in history. Professor Newman says:

> The Conservative society is the futilitarian society. It is futilitarian because it cannot expand and develop, will not expand and develop, the opportunities for change and freedom. Because it does not and will not do so it is a society which is useless to man because it has nothing to suggest how man can meet new problems and how he can create better ways of living.

Surely this government is in a position to assess the situation, to stop tampering, tinkering and manipulating and get down to basic problems, giving the direction that is urgently needed by industry, private enterprise, labour, agriculture and all segments of our economy. In other words, I put this question to the government. Have we not reached the point where we could enunciate bold, far reaching policy and give Canada a chance?

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting for me to have the opportunity of following in this debate the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), whom I knew at university. The hon. gentleman has a notable war record. I rather regret that he has fallen into his present company, because in former days when I knew him he was most optimistic, but I see that he has now adopted the gloom of the present company he keeps. It may be said that he and I recognize the same problems but adopt somewhat different approaches to them.

This debate has developed into a battle of statistics. It reminds me of the story of the gentleman who was six feet tall. He wanted to cross a river, and so measured its depth and ascertained that its average depth was two feet. And in crossing, he drowned.

The amendment presented by the hon. member for Niagara Falls may be characterized as a blunderbuss amendment. However, it did not go off with a big bang. The powder was not very explosive, and the pellets fell with a dull thud. The hon. lady is very pessimistic concerning Canada's future. I should remind her that in her own constituency in the last two or three years there have been developments that should cheer her up. I have a statement from the office of the industrial commissioner of the chamber of commerce of the greater Niagara district which indicates that between 12 and 15 new industries have been located in the area employing more than 200 people. Several highly promising negotiations are under way at present with firms showing an interest in establishing in the Niagara peninsula. Eight local firms in the last two years have spent more then $8 million in plant extensions, and have provided more than 200 new jobs. One large industry is starting immediately on a $30 million plant extension. During 1961 the Ford Company of Canada built a new plant in the Niagara Falls area. Two hundred and fifty people are employed in a development along the Welland ship canal. I thought the hon. lady would like to know about these things in the event she is really as depressed as her speech suggested.

I am disappointed that this debate has developed into a battle of statistics rather than of ideas. We all recognize the problems before us today, but in fairness we must recognize that they have not developed since the Conservative government came into power. They developed during the 22 years in which the Liberals were in power, and I think should be approached from that point of view.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls spoke at length about planning. I wonder if that represents a change of policy on the part of the Liberals, because for 22 years they followed a laissez faire policy and somewhat ridiculed those who spoke of a need for planning. The leader of the New Democratic party yesterday gave his definition of the word "planning". When both hon. members had concluded their remarks I was not sure whether the word "planning" meant the same thing to them, nor was I sure whether the type of planning of which they spoke would result in a controlled economy or merely represented a nebulous hope that certain things will happen.

I think it may be interesting to examine the views of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce as set out in their 1958 report, giving their assessment of 1957. Under the heading "Canada's Fiscal and Monetary Policy" it is stated:

> The year 1957, while a good year by most measurements of economic activity, and a record year for some industries, nevertheless registered a pause in the sharp upward thrust of the Canadian economy which commenced late in 1954. Over-all economic activity measured in dollars this year will probably be slightly above 1956, but in physical production will be no larger and possibly a little smaller. Demands on the economy remained strong in the early months of 1957, but towards the latter part of the year were less insistent, with inflationary pressures reduced, and many areas of business activity recorded declines from the corresponding months of 1956. Developments abroad were unsettling during the year. In the trade area Britain and France experienced serious economic difficulties, and many raw material producing countries were adversely affected by the continued decline in commodity prices. In recent months confidence was disturbed by Soviet technological achievements, and by sharp declines in equity markets. Such developments, along with some weakness in the United States economy have created uncertainties which must be carefully assessed in appraising the outlook for Canadian business in 1958.

These people understand the Canadian business situation. They assessed it and were honest enough to recognize that the conditions referred to resulted not from the change of government but from what had happened in past years and the international situation. Referring to 1957 they state:

> The past year has witnessed more cross currents in the Canadian economy than in any recent period. The inflationary pressures generated by the sharp advance of 1955-56 abated considerably as the year progressed, and by early fall money rates were receding from the high levels of the summer, reflecting less pressing demands for capital funds. On the one hand, shrinkage in external markets adversely affected exports of many basic products. Weakness was also noted in residential construction and in markets for some consumer durable goods.

Those in the Toronto area remember that at the beginning of 1957 there was considerable unemployment in the area, especially in the construction industry, because of the tight money policy of the former government. The then government did not make available to the industry the facilities at its disposal. Many people in my riding were out of work.

Some economists have just recently wakened to the fact that some of the difficulties of that period began to manifest themselves in 1958, but if they study history they will realize that the tight money policy of the former government in 1957 not only affected the construction industry but choked off the growth of many small businesses at that time. I recall many small businessmen who were planning developments in my area but could not proceed because of the tight money situation.

I wish to place on record a few passages from the Canadian chamber of commerce submission to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue of February, 1962, which fairly assesses the situation in these words:

> Exports have been buoyant enough to reduce the trade gap substantially, capital expenditures have held up fairly well, consumer spending in recent months has shown signs of revival and unemployment is gradually being reduced. Furthermore there are encouraging indications for continuation of the business recovery in the United States, always a good omen for Canada.

And later:

> It is now evident in retrospect that Canada enjoyed exceptionally good fortune in the decade following world war II, and as a result of a unique combination of circumstances forged ahead more rapidly than most other countries. This surge left its inevitable maladjustments, some of which may take as long to correct as they did to arise. The task of making necessary adjustments has been aggravated by the delayed emergence of many countries—particularly in western Europe—as keen competitors both in the markets of the world and in the Canadian market. There is no miracle by which the problems we face can be overcome in a day, but with the energetic and persistent pursuit of appropriate policies they can be overcome in the foreseeable future.

These policies must bring to bear all the imagination of business and government on a broad front, and must be directed toward increasing both consumption and capital investment at home as well as widening the market for Canadian products abroad. A judicious combination of fiscal and monetary policies, supplemented with other business and governmental measures, will continue to help materially in reaching these goals.

Then mark this statement, Mr. Speaker.

Fortunately, many of the programs that could be suggested have already been initiated.

As was stated, the executive council of the chamber of commerce accepts the extension of deficit financing into another year but with some reservations. Then further under "Tax Policy" we find the following:

The executive council wishes to commend the government for the steps it has already taken in the last two budgets to stimulate investment by an acceleration of capital cost allowances and to encourage research expenditures by the removal of past restrictions. These have been moves in the right direction. It is the view of the council, however, that more could be accomplished by giving greater incentives under existing programs, thus encouraging investment in more efficient plant and equipment that will operate at lower cost, and by the extension of measures to other areas, such as the export field.

Then again under "Monetary Policy" in the same report we find the following:

In view of developments of the last year which appear to have resolved some of the questions about which the executive council previously expressed concern and also having in mind that the royal commission on banking and finance will shortly be commencing its public hearings, the executive council has no extensive statement to make on monetary policy at this time. It would reiterate its firm belief in the necessity for close co-ordination between monetary, fiscal and other policies and in the desirability of maintaining flexibility in the monetary area in particular.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a slam at the government.

Mr. Morton: If the hon. member will wait I think he will find that they agree with what the government has done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say that is a slam at the government.

Mr. Morton: No. When I have finished what I am reading the hon. member may understand that it is a compliment to the government on what has been done. I continue:

The simultaneous requirements of a policy of easier money, of dealing with problems relating to a discount on the Canadian dollar and of assisting with financing the government's cash deficit will call for the exercise of greatest skill and imagination on the part of our monetary authorities in the months ahead.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Morton: We all agree with that statement, of course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is also a slam at the government.

Mr. Morton: The report continues:

The executive council expresses the hope that the developments of the last year, both in government and in the central bank, have brought about the conditions under which monetary policy will be able to fill the very important and exacting role which it is now expected to play.

In other words they agree with what happened last year, and the change. The report goes on to say:

The executive council commends the government for its energetic efforts to promote export sales through the expansion of its trade services and to increase productivity through establishment of the national productivity council. In the realm of trade negotiations—

And so on. It goes on commending the government for its activities in connection with trade. It states:

Our trade with the United States is vital to our economy and every opportunity of extending it should be explored. Finally, both the United Kingdom and the common market countries have indicated their willingness to participate in a program of tariff reduction on broad product groups. All these and other possibilities should be considered on their merits without slavish adherence to existing arrangements and in the light of the cold fact that without an aggressive and flexible approach Canada may find that it has suffered serious injury to its manufacturing industry and serious loss of its trade opportunities in the main markets of the world... The continuance of the discount on the Canadian dollar will also help to this end. The members of the government have given generous support to the need for exports by drawing attention to the subject frequently in their public utterances. It is hoped that this will continue and that the program will be encouraged by the adoption of further well conceived measures.

While recognizing that there is still a great deal to be done, that is the viewpoint of those in industry who have studied the needs of Canadian industry. Far from being pessimistic and far from being extremely critical, as the opposition has been, they have commended the government on the efforts that have been made.

An hon. Member: They are Canadian.

Mr. Morton: That is right. We need to take into consideration in this matter not United States quotations which have been so glibly quoted in this house, but rather quotations from those in our own country. There is another quotation which it might be well to put on the record. It is from the commercial letter of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce under the heading of "The Outlook for Exports":

During the year just past Canadian exports rose to new high levels. A feature of this increase was a marked improvement in trade with countries other than the United States and the United Kingdom. A high level of shipments was maintained to countries in western Europe, Asia and South America but exports to the United States lacked buoyancy until the latter half of the year when improvement in the third quarter pushed total exports to a record for that period—12.7 per cent higher than that of the same period in 1960.

As we know, for the first time since 1952 we have had a favourable trade balance. This was not something that happened just by accident. We all remember the early days, when the government proposed certain trade changes in order to be less dependent on the United States. The present opposition ridiculed that idea, and they have tried to becloud the trade issues today by casting an unfair reflection on the Canadian government and its attitude toward the common market. To hear them talk you would think Canada was the only country that was raising any question as to the implications of the common market.

Those of us who attended the commonwealth conference in London last year know that from every part of the commonwealth members rose and pointed out the adverse effects that entrance by Britain into the common market would have on their countries unless certain special preferences were given. Other countries, such as New Zealand and Australia, whose representatives have spoken just as strongly as have our ministers, have pointed out how their economy is much more directly dependent on their trade with Britain than ours, and they have said so in no uncertain terms. Nigeria and Ghana, whose major products are sold to Britain at the present time, would also be greatly affected by the entrance of Britain into the common market. India, which has based its new five year plan on the present trade arrangement with Britain, would be greatly affected by Britain's entry into the common market. They are very much concerned about what would happen to them. Even in England there are those who express concern about England's entry into the common market. Hon. E. Shinwell, a former minister in the Labour government, said this:

In 1959, we imported more than three times the amount from the commonwealth than we did from the Six. In 1960, we imported rather more than this amount. In 1959, we exported about four times more to the commonwealth than we sent to the countries of the Six. In 1960, we did rather better than in 1959—

At the same conference which we attended he expressed grave doubts as to England entering into the common market. One of the Conservative members also stated:

Of all those who have told me that we can go in and shape the community to suit our national purposes, none has ever said to me that we can go in on any other terms than on the acceptance of what is in article 3 about "a common customs tariff" and "a common commercial policy toward third countries". It would split the Tory party were we to bind, beneath the votes or veto of a foreign or supranational agency, our liberty to arrange our trade with Australia, India, or any commonwealth realm or republic.

Michael Foot, Labour, said:

What we should do is to have the courage to recognize that we have still great associations with other countries that we can develop. We have not attempted to do it on anything like the scale that we should have done. Let us agree that this house and the British commonwealth should make the real decision.

Then Sir Norman Kipping, director general of the federation of British industries, said:

You will have seen, in the aide memoire to members about British industry and Europe approved . . . by the federation of British industries, grand council, a significant sentence: "We will not support a solution which in effect meant that the commonwealth was to pay a substantial part of the price for British association with the common market". This is no expression of sentiment; it is an economic judgment.

As the hon. member for Leeds said, Mr. Speaker, it is true that these are challenging days. We must recognize changing trade patterns, but we must also recognize the implications of these and figure out as much as we can where we are going to fit into them. For instance, if Britain does enter the common market without being able to maintain the preferences in our favour there will be serious effects. For example, I understand that our refrigerators going into the English market get a 17 per cent preference. If Britain enters the common market we will lose that preference, and in addition we will have a tariff against us going into the common market of 10 per cent, which makes a 27 per cent difference in the tariff. That is something we have to take into consideration. Economically, are we geared to compete with this type of competition?

Then there is the political aspect. As I said recently in another speech in the house, with the assembly, the council and so on set up under article 3 or 4 of the treaty you have to abandon a certain amount of your sovereignty, and if the organization becomes a political union, as is the hope of the founders, where does the commonwealth go from there? Are we ready for that? Have we given any serious thought to the implications? Some have suggested that in the event Canada, as a result of natural trade trends, would become more and more a part of the United States and perhaps another state of the United States. These are things that I believe we should be thinking about when we are talking about our national growth and where are going. Nothing about that situation has been brought up by the opposition except for a compilation of statistics. You can use statistics to prove almost anything, if you want, but they have skipped around the major problems and the things we are faced with today. They have made no suggestion as to what we are going to do about automation and other things that affect our trade. With great relish they have quoted figures on unemployment, but this battle of statistics on unemployment is not going to give food or clothing to those who are out of work.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Morton: It is not going to give the person who is out of work the self-satisfaction and self respect he gets in obtaining a job.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Morton: I hear the hon. member for Essex East say "Hear, hear"—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are waiting for action by the government.

Mr. Morton: —but all he does is quote statistics. In 22 years the Liberal regime, of which he was a major part, did nothing to prepare for the times we are faced with today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The most prosperous period in the history of Canada.

Mr. Morton: The hon. member says "the most prosperous period". I will not deny that, but it was during those times of prosperity that you were blind to the trends that are causing our difficulties today. You did not see the growing chronic unemployment. You were bailed out of difficulty by the first world war, the second world war and the Korean war.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Tory times are hard times.

Mr. Morton: They are so blind today that they cannot see the new things that are being done by this party. They are still blind, and so are their economic advisers.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): And so were the people of Canada for 22 years?

Mr. Morton: I agree that the people of Canada were blinded for 22 years by the hon. member's party. Perhaps at this time I should put on the record some of the things that the present government has done, just to remind these blind people across the way of what has been done.

Mr. McIlraith: They have doubled unemployment.

Mr. Morton: We have not doubled unemployment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Morton: We have inherited things that have caused unemployment. How can the people of this country be expected to go back to a party which has not yet learned the lessons it failed to learn in 22 years? First, the party to which I belong has greatly expanded the functions of the industrial development bank to provide small and medium sized firms with a larger source of working capital. Let the Liberals deny that. Second, we have made available loans to small business to provide working capital for those small but important industries which previously had no alternative source of funds for growth. During the tight money period started by the Liberals small businesses could not get money from the banks, while big businesses could.

Third, we have introduced accelerated depreciation to encourage the production of new products and the establishment of new industries in labour surplus areas. Fourth, we have set up a national productivity council to help industry to become more competitive and thereby increase sales and provide more jobs. Fifth, we have established a national design council to assist Canadian industries with their design problems by encouraging improved design to make possible more sales and more jobs. Sixth, in co-operation with the provinces the federal government is providing substantial assistance for the training and retraining of large numbers of the labour force. The object of this program is to prepare workers for the rapid technological changes which are taking place in Canada's industries. If Canada is to take its place as a modern industrial nation, its workers must have the skills to staff our modern factories.

There is something the Liberals neglected during the period they were in office. Today we lack certain skills in certain industries because they did not have the foresight to do anything about it except during the war. I will grant that during the war period they did help, but once the war was over that was as far as they would go. I know that in my own riding the government has authorized a new school, the Edith L. Groves junior vocational school, at an estimated cost of $1,211,000, and the federal government's share is about $908,250.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was the province that authorized the school.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

Mr. Morton: True, the province authorized the school, but at least the federal government offered the province assistance which was not given to them before.

Mr. Nesbitt: Seventy five per cent.

Mr. Morton: Seventy five per cent of the cost.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Based upon an act introduced by a Liberal government.

Mr. Morton: That is right. They put a lot of inactive acts on the statute books, and this party had to put some life into them.

Mr. McIlraith: You mean you had to create unemployment?

Mr. Morton: You created it and we are trying to get rid of it. Perhaps I am unfair, Mr. Speaker, in saying that. I realize that world conditions did have some effect. I would not like to give them credit for being able to even create unemployment.

We also introduced the industrial promotion branch which has been created to help new industries become established and to expand old industries. During the past year there have been 12 meetings held with various provinces across this country. Representatives of these industries have sat down with government representatives who try to ascertain how conditions could be improved for the industries. There were three of them in Ontario which were very enthusiastic and who wanted to have these meetings.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said we had done nothing. Of course we have done many things, only the opposition is too blind to see them. They are suffering from the same blindness that prevented them from seeing these problems accumulating while they were in power. I had hoped at this time to have some statistics to indicate the development of metropolitan Toronto. They do not appear to have come to my desk at this moment.

However, in closing—

Mr. Pickersgill: There is a shortage of ammunition in the battle of statistics.

Mr. Morton: I just wanted to show that Toronto has been growing. We have been mastering the unemployment situation. However, there is still a great deal to be done. Before we take into consideration too much of what the opposition has said in the amendment before us, I should like to emphasize the fact that it was their arrogance and their tight money policy that led the people of Canada to vote against them. The present opposition had become fat and lazy when they were in power, and they had no economic policies. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people will think twice before they go back to this party which brought the people to the verge of the difficulties they are facing today.

The Liberal party has not learned very much since that time. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they remind one a great deal of the immature little boy who has been tripped and, in his rage, he starts kicking the thing that has tripped him. This is illustrated by the incident we saw in the house the other day when one hon. member turned and kicked the person who had tripped him, namely the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). He started a personal vendetta against the man who had tripped him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are very critical today.

Mr. Morton: The hon. member says I am critical. I know I am usually quite calm, but after having heard the barrage of nonsense that came from the other side, I finally became aroused.

Mr. Pickersgill: He was just quoting the Minister of Finance, you understand.

Mr. Morton: No, he was just misquoting the Minister of Finance. I place more reliance on what the Minister of Finance has said than on what the hon. member for Essex East has said.

A great deal was said last night about the cost of living index during the time the Conservatives have been in power. I think perhaps, in fairness, it ought to be shown that there was a little increase during the time the Liberals were in power.

Mr. Pickersgill: More statistics.

Mr. Morton: That is correct; we have to fight fire with fire sometimes. If we left on the record only the statistics which hon. members opposite have quoted, perhaps the people of Canada might be misled, although I count a lot on the intelligence of the Canadian people. Between 1946 and 1948, the consumer price index advanced more than 25 per cent. This is one period during which the Liberals were in power. Then, with the outbreak of the Korean war in June 1950 came a resurgence of pressure on prices and in the course of the next 18 months further major upward movements took place. The consumer price index rose from 102.7 in July 1950 to 118.1 by December 1951, an increase of 15 per cent. Then between 1956 and 1957 there was an increase of 6.8 per cent. I put these figures on the record just to balance things up.

It is true that the cost of living has risen since we first came into power. The first year it rose more rapidly than it has latterly. However, these things happen in spite of what may be done. I do not think they are to the credit or to the blame of any political party. I think the sooner that we, as members of parliament, realize this is more than a battle of statistics, then the sooner we will get at the fundamentals of the problems that are facing this country and the better it will be for the recovery and continued prosperity of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Morton: I am glad hon. members applaud because this is the very thing we need them to recognize. I am sure that the things the government has done and will do, will aid the people of this country. I am not one who says we have done everything that can be done and that we have solved all the problems. However, at least this party is recognizing the problems and trying to do something about them, which is more than the Liberals did during their 22 years.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I found it very interesting to follow the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton). He referred to the 22 years the Liberals were in power, and that seems to have been a sort of theme song for the government backbenchers. I want to remind them of the solid basis that was created after the end of world war II. This government has seen fit to introduce measures which, in their relationship to the social and economic advancement of this country, have been merely the placing of one brick upon another, so to speak on a foundation created by the government of Mackenzie King.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member if he is referring to the $46 per month old age pension?

Mr. Benidickson: I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that when old age pension legislation was introduced by the Liberal party in 1925 and 1926, and by the former member for Kenora-Rainy River, it was the Conservative Senate, with its huge majority, which blocked that advance in social legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the Prime Minister was one of their candidates at that time.

Mr. Benidickson: I am going to say that in 1945 when family allowances were introduced by the Liberal government and which, by the way, have not been touched by this government in almost five years, it was the associates of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), and I think he sat with them in the opposition, who strongly opposed this suggested social improvement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member point to a single associate of mine who was actually sitting in the house at that time?

Mr. Benidickson: I will refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green); I will refer to the British high commissioner in London, I will refer to the lieutenant governor of Ontario, who sat in this house for the city of Toronto.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member had better be a little more careful.

Mr. Benidickson: This is not a new line of argument on economic matters such as we have before us, as was advanced by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton). We inherited troubles.

Yesterday the Minister of Trade and Commerce used the phrase "We have been in office for four and a half years." I want to remind some of those on the opposite side that this argument was attempted by the last prime minister with a Conservative tag, the late Lord Bennett, when he said he inherited troubles and had not corrected them. At the next opportunity the Canadian people put him out of office.

Mr. Henderson: That was the greatest mistake they ever made.

Mr. Pickersgill: They have just been complaining for four and a half years.

Mr. Benidickson: We heard from the hon. member for Davenport, who preceded me, that from a Liberal government we could expect a return to what he called a tight money policy. I do not want to deal with that at any length, but I do want to remind him that as a result of the terrible financial policies of his government the Canadian taxpayers on their federal debt alone are paying in interest more than $200 million more than what they paid in the last year of the former Liberal administration.

I want to say that the Minister of Finance cannot get away for long with gimmicks and sleight of hand, such as he introduced even in his most recent tabling of estimates. It is to be found that despite the fact that interest rates are not going down to any appreciable extent, and despite the fact that our total debt is going up, in his estimates the Minister of Finance conceals a possible expense in the forthcoming year to the extent of more than $50 million. He indicated that in a comparison of this year's interest costs with last year's interest costs, as presented in the book of estimates, there was a difference of $50 million, because in a side note on the same page —and perhaps the minister knows this—it is indicated that the actual expenditures for interest when he presented the blue book, were $50 million more than the figure he uses in the main tables when he compares 1961-62 estimated costs of interest with the estimated costs of 1962-63.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is the hon. member not aware that the bases of estimating these interest charges are precisely what they have always been year by year? There has been no change in the bases of those estimates in any respect.

Mr. Benidickson: The only member of the government who has yet spoken is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who spoke yesterday. He is of course a very cheery cheerleader for the government, but if one examines his speech he can find that it is not from this side but from the other side that one gets misleading statements.

I quote from page 1268 of Hansard where he referred to "the greatest prosperity this country has ever known." He also referred to an increase in exports of close to 8 per cent. I propose to deal with some of those matters. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh), who has just interrupted me, referred to the phenomenal growth in gross national product and said that businessmen are happy in Canada today.

Now I do not want to quote from those who might have a partisan view. I shall refer to some appointees of the present government, and perhaps first and foremost would be the president of the productivity council. The hon. member for Leeds made reference to that this afternoon. I am not going to repeat some of the indications that are available as to whether this country has been growing or, on the contrary, getting behind under the present government. These are the words of Mr. DeYoung, president of the productivity council:

> Let the figures speak for themselves. In terms of gross national product per person in constant dollars, using 1950 as 100 per cent, Canada shows itself as the losing team, limping sadly behind the competitive pack.

The hon. member for Leeds gave the comparative figures for various industrial countries of the world, and all these things have to be considered in relative terms. Rather than take a source in Canada, let us take one of major consequence in American investment. I refer to the Morgan Guaranty Company of New York, which looked at Canada's progress under this government. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh) says the government's programs have produced phenomenal improvements in our economic activity—

Mr. Pugh: What are you quoting from?

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Benidickson: The Morgan Guaranty Survey, reported in the Financial Times of June, 1961.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is eight months ago.

Mr. Benidickson: You had been in office over four years at that time. The report says:

> At an average 1.3 per cent per year, real economic expansion since 1956 has not kept up with the increase of population and labour force. Real output per capita has declined more than 1 per cent a year. Amid this slippage, the unemployment rate has doubled in four years to an average 7 per cent of the labour force.

I have referred to one member of the productivity council, its chairman; but first let me refer to another appointee of this government, the well known Canadian industrialist Mr. E. P. Taylor. We hear from the government benches that we, on this side, are creating a bad image for Canada abroad. In some respects it is flattering to think that a relatively small group could get such attention abroad; but Mr. Taylor, who has taken a great interest in the possibility of investment abroad, has made some comments.

He says that in his view Canada has never had as poor a reputation among business people abroad than that which has been typical of the last few months.

Mr. Pallett: That is utter nonsense.

Mr. Benidickson: These are interesting items to which I think the government should pay attention.

Mr. Pallett: Where did the hon. member get that last quotation from, or what is alleged to be a quotation?

Mr. Benidickson: I am referring to an article by Mr. Fraser Robertson, financial reported of the Globe and Mail, which is a publication that normally has good will towards a Conservative government, and it quotes Mr. Taylor in that report.

Mr. Pallett: Perhaps the hon. member would put the entire quotation on the record.

Mr. Pearson: That would make it even worse.

Mr. Benidickson: It would. We have heard from the Minister of Trade and Commerce that businessmen think this government is wonderful. We also heard that today from the hon. member from Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh), but the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Kirkpatrick said he sees no indication that we have yet provided the conditions necessary for the continued growth we require. That is the essence of the motion of want of confidence that has been moved here.

I think all hon. members have developed an admiration for the talents and abilities of Professor John Deutsch, who appeared before the Senate committee on unemployment and who was at one time secretary of our treasury board.

Mr. Pickersgill: And who is now on a commission appointed by the government.

Mr. Benidickson: Indeed the government showed their confidence in him, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate indicates, because Professor Deutsch was made a member of a commission appointed by the government after the Senate reported on unemployment. He was appointed to that commission, which required cabinet recommendation. Professor Deutsch says:

> The recovery which is now taking place will have to be very much stronger than any of the cyclical recoveries since the end of the war if full output and employment are to be achieved.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member should give the date.

Mr. Pearson: It is the Queen's Quarterly, current edition.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The date?

Mr. Benidickson: That is available. I happen to have a copy of the Financial Post which contains a report of the speech given by Professor Deutsch as the vice principal of Queen's University.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then it was not in the Queen's Quarterly?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, it is.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, and the earlier one—

Mr. Pearson: I will send for it for you.

Mr. Benidickson: Then I quote from a gentleman who has been very restrained in his comments but for whom I think all of us have a very high regard. I refer to Mr. Graham Towers, who for a long time has been silent after severing his relationship with government as the governor of the Bank of Canada. He says:

> We should not be satisfied with the progress of the Canadian economy during recent years. The fact that per capita gross national product is less in real terms than it was five years ago, combined with unemployment that has persisted at too high a level, should inspire a most serious and objective search for the reasons behind this unsatisfactory situation.

This is why I feel this house should be very dissatisfied with the kind of speech made yesterday by the ebullient Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is not enough to quote gross figures and not give relative figures, when Canada—as has been explained by so many previous speakers—in a relative way has been not even standing still but economically has been going behind under this particular regime.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What does the hon. member mean by "going behind"? Is the hon. member seriously suggesting that the economy, as he says, is going behind?

Mr. Benidickson: In relative terms, when related to growth of population and those who need jobs.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is changing his statement now.

Mr. Pearson: The figures speak for themselves.

Mr. Benidickson: I say that is certainly very true.

Mr. Pickersgill: The per capita production.

Mr. Benidickson: Do not take my word for it, Mr. Finance Minister; listen to what was said this month by the Financial Post, which is perhaps the outstanding financial journal in Canada and which is impartial, as far as I know. If anything, it perhaps has a high regard for a Conservative government, if we have a Conservative government; but they are a little dubious as to whether we have a Conservative government, even with the present Minister of Finance in his present portfolio. They say:

> The Canadian economy is operating about 20 per cent below capacity. If men, money and materials had been fully employed in 1961, Canada's G.N.P. could have been over $44 billion instead of under $37 billion.

Some hon. members on the government side may have thought the hon. member for Niagara Falls was partisan or exaggerating when she gave the figure of $5 billion, but there is what the Financial Post has to say, and it is a much larger figure than was quoted yesterday by the hon. member:

> The result of falling below the trend line established between 1945 and 1957—

That is, under the former regime:

> —has been unemployment at twice the rates of the early 1950's—

Mr. Pallett: Why does not the hon. member quote the other extracts from the Financial Post which say that the government is doing a good job?

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps my hon. friend will do that. I have not found that they have been anything but very critical of the over-all picture.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You cannot find anything like that.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

Mr. Benidickson: They have been very critical of the economic policies of the present government.

Mr. Jones: Look at those nervous Liberals.

Mr. Benidickson: When we find uneasiness about the staying power of the present increase in current expansion the real answer that we must get from the government is an indication of what they are going to do beyond what they have told us in the speech from the throne, to make sure that these huge losses in production and wealth and their impact on human misfortune are not to be continued. Mr. Walter Lippmann, the well known correspondent in Washington, says that down there there is something different; President Kennedy is seeking not only power but is making plans to catch the recession before it gains momentum.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he point to one place where Mr. Walter Lippmann said what the hon. member has just now said, that they are doing things differently down in Washington from what we are doing here in Canada?

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to hear from my hon. friend what—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is your statement.

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to hear specifically what my hon. friend, who is the senior economic minister—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Benidickson: —is doing to catch the next recession before it gathers momentum, because—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member not put words into Mr. Walter Lippmann's mouth that Walter Lippmann has never used at all.

Mr. Benidickson: I am quoting exactly.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have another Speaker now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is not quoting Walter Lippmann.

Mr. Benidickson: I am so used to the Minister of Finance calling everybody in this country a liar, including me and most of the hon. members in this house—

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Benidickson: —that it really rolls off me.

An hon. Member: You can easily prove him wrong by reading the quotation.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Show us what Walter Lippmann says.

Mr. Benidickson: I have quoted exactly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You did not.

Mr. Benidickson: We have here a motion of lack of confidence that the government in relative terms has not been advancing a program which is adequate to take care of the growth in our economy that would result in relatively full employment, relatively good tax revenues and relatively good progress. That is the essence of the amendment before us.

A subamendment has been put forward which reads in this way:

> by the expansion of public and co-operative ownership for such purposes as the operation of utilities, the development of resources, the elimination of monopoly concentrations of power, and the operation of major enterprises immediately and directly affecting the entire nation.

Speaking for the official opposition I may say that while some of the wording of that subamendment is effective, we cannot support it because in our view it is undesirably restrictive of the main amendment. The main amendment says that by any possible form we must have growth. We believe that this growth would normally come from the encouragement of private business. We have never been loath as perhaps even our most understanding private enterpriser, Mr. C. D. Howe, has said, to have the state give the utmost stimulus to that type of growth.

Mr. Grafftey: What would he think of the hon. member for Assiniboia?

Mr. Benidickson: Emphasis is placed in the subamendment on the expansion of co-operation. Although this is important we do not believe this force would provide the greatest stimulus to the Canadian economy. We believe that incentives are required and that they would be most effective if applied to both public and private enterprise. The main emphasis to growth must come from healthy and vigorous enterprise throughout the economy. As we have indicated this requires planning beyond what this government is prepared to provide.

The productivity council has been in operation for a year and in my opinion has not yet reported in adequate form through a minister. I read yesterday that it is not an advisory board and has no authority. They deny all that. When the establishment of the council was announced in the throne speech in December 1960 there was much fanfare about the likelihood of its value. I hope a minister of the crown will tell us more about its usefulness and what it has accomplished, in a year particularly when it is denied that it has authority of a kind we say would be desirable for an economic board or council within government for co-ordinating all the economic thinking and activity that takes place in so many individual departments and which at the moment possibly is not properly co-ordinated.

The other day I examined figures showing how much spending has been done by the government. I found that out of the unemployment insurance fund the following expenditures were made:

Benefit payments Year Ending	Amount
March 31, 1958	$385 million
March 31, 1959	478.6 million
March 31, 1960	415 million
March 31, 1961	513 million

We can only surmise what the figure will be for the year ending March 31, 1962. It is now evident that the Minister of Finance will not present a budget this month. But let us be generous to him and assume the expenditure will not exceed $450 million. If that were the amount the total expended since 1957 would be $2,242 million. At the end of December last there were 601,000 claimants. The actual holdings and investments dropped like stones since this government came into office.

Someone said the other day that when they looked at the figures for only two years it was seen that we could have built two St. Lawrence seaways with the disbursements. The St. Lawrence seaway was considered a major project for Canada. What about the Chignecto canal? What about the second trans-Canada highway about which the Prime Minister spoke the other day in Edmonton? Is the government simply going to drop these sums of money in unemployment insurance like stones without thoughtful planning?

The chief and basic problem as I see it in the four and a half years during which the present government has been in office, with unfortunate results, arises from the muddle, squabbling and disunity that exist within the government and its lack of cohesion and leadership. Is it any wonder there is confusion in the—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Opposition.

Mr. Benidickson: —government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Memories of the Quebec visit.

Mr. Benidickson: That was quite a comic opera of family rows and contradictions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There were no family rows.

Mr. Benidickson: With respect to almost any subject one could mention we can charge the government and particularly the Minister of Finance and his department with confusing and contradictory policies. Where do we stand on interest rates? The minister has contradicted himself in every budget. What about the exchange rate? What about inflation? What about monetary policy? It is only a year ago the minister disclaimed any responsibility for actions and policies and then later decided to fire the governor of the Bank of Canada. In other words, we have had expedients rather than policies. This is the main roadblock to confidence in Canada today.

I invite the ministers of the crown to give us their opinions on a motion of this kind which is concerned with the growth of our economy. I invite them to give us information not only with respect to the productivity council to which I have referred but also with respect to the Bladen report.

In October a delegation from six communities where the automobile industry is established visited the Minister of Finance and indicated they wanted action and not eleventh hour decisions which are so typical of this government. There was no decision. Is there not something of consequence for our economy involved here? What about jobs?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to indicate what action he and his party think should be taken on the recommendations of the Bladen royal commission?

Mr. Caron: That was put on the record yesterday.

Mr. Benidickson: I feel the report contained much relating to the efficiencies of large scale production. That could be given some encouragement by the Minister of Finance. With unemployment as it is this winter the minister should not delay giving leadership. From October when the representatives of six communities visited him until now, no decision has been taken. He should not delay until he brings down his budget, which we know will not be brought down this month.

Mr. Jones: The hon. gentleman has not answered the question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does the hon. gentleman support the recommendations of the royal commission?

Mr. Benidickson: In 1957 the Conservative opposition concentrated on the oil industry. When the Conservatives formed the government they decided to appoint another royal commission. Again they put in wraps an industry, perhaps the only one which could have made progress and substantial advances at that time. This government is very enamoured of royal commissions. The Clark report on social security, a vital document, gathered dust on their desks for three years.

I ask the government how concerned it is about stimulating the economy in view of its record with respect to roads to resources. In January 1958 the government introduced a program concerning roads to resources of very much interest to northern Ontario. The government's partners in office in Toronto were so disinterested that unanimity was not achieved and no agreement was reached. Instead of building roads which would have required an expenditure of $1.5 million on the part of the federal and provincial government in this period of severe unemployment and at a time when future unemployment might have been arrested, it was decided all they could expend was $500,000.

I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is absent at the moment why there has been so much dickering with respect to the uranium contract. Would this not lead to job opportunities? This is typical of the lack of leadership we have in this country at the present time.

Last year when the Minister of Finance introduced the budget we thought he was placing considerable reliance on a policy of devaluing the dollar. He indicated this would have the effect of assisting our export industries. How can that be reconciled with his firm conviction of a year previous that this should not and could not be done, that it represented a gigantic gamble? This is another indication of the confusion, contrariness and unpredictability which is responsible for the hesitancy some businessmen and exporters feel about having faith in the economic policies of the government. I refer to trade. The Minister of Finance is known to be a person who has great skill in the use of his hectoring manners. He can go to conferences and bluster, scream and so on. But the question I ask is this. Where is the good will upon which we can build trade?

The hon. member for Leeds referred to a speech made by the Leader of the Opposition in 1961, and in which he indicated that if another party was in power they would not create this iron curtain, would not adopt these tactics of wringing hands and screaming through key holes rather than joining conferences, but would participate in a serious manner in order to ascertain whether some of the great positive ideals of extending world trade could be fashioned with their participation. But from this government we have heard only of furtive restrictions against our best customer, namely Great Britain. We have observed serious errors of judgment in connection with our trade arrangements with such countries as Cuba in reference to which, as will be recalled, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, "You cannot do business with any better businessmen". The Leader of the the Opposition has been joined by some extremely eminent and distinguished people.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will be fair enough to say that the minister who used that expression was frank enough to withdraw it later and to express regret. I am quite sure it is not worthy of the hon. member to refer to the original expression without also referring to the explanatory statement that followed.

Mr. Benidickson: Businessmen will be glad to hear that he withdrew it with regret. I do not intend to list all the company of people who belatedly, after the Leader of the Opposition spoke, saw some advantage in connection with our affinity with wider trade groups. However, the company is rather distinguished. I think of the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the president of the Montreal stock exchange. I think of Mr. Weston, one of our outstanding businessmen who also had some business experience overseas. I think of Mr. E. P. Taylor who also has extended his operations overseas. I think of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I think of the national chamber of commerce. I think of the presidents of the Bank of Montreal, the Toronto-Dominion Bank and the Bank of Nova Scotia, and there may be others.

On the part of the government we have had fumbling and indecision in connection with trade. I think trade is perhaps the only area of real value in which can be created new wealth which will give us the growth we believe necessary in order to provide employment and the progress which has not been forthcoming in past years when in relative terms, based on population and on a discount for the inflation which has taken place, this country has gone behind rather than forward under this government.

Mr. Jones: Not at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Rubbish.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I was very much surprised to hear the remarks made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), because ever since the present government has been in power, the opposition has voted in favour of all the measures proposed to the house by the government, as well as the estimates that were submitted, except the measure concerning Mr. Coyne's dismissal and another one to help Canadian industry.

In fact, I am astonished by the attitude of the members opposite. If they criticize today, they are not logical with themselves because they have voted, as I have just said, in favour of all the legislative measures submitted to the house by the present government; they have also approved straight off the expenditures of the present government.

I was also surprised by the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh).

I was amazed to hear her repeat those words of the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe:

> If our national development had been left entirely to private enterprise, Canada would not have attained its present status as a nation. And unless government continues to take a lead by well planned initiatives, guidance and regulation, it will not continue to develop as it should.

Mr. Speaker, I found that when the Right Hon. C. D. Howe had to leave the realm of Canadian politics, he secured the directorship of more than 32 Canadian companies. In my opinion, the fact that he accepted all these appointments is directly opposed to the ideas he had put forward previously.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): It was a tribute to his competence.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the opposition speaks of economic planning. They would like to see the state control private enterprise, so that everything would come from the state.

During the last world conflict, we had a taste of controls and restrictions imposed by the state on our Canadian economy, when capital and salaries were under government control. Individual freedom was also restricted, as people were often detained without any kind of trial. Well, I think that the Canadian people are not ready to accept such a controlled economy, which would put everything in the hands of the state and, thereby, destroy private enterprise.

The state should rather assume a complementary part, while freedom of expression and freedom of investment in our natural resources must be left to the individual.

Mr. Speaker, I have here the encyclical issued by His Holiness Pope John XXIII, entitled Mater et Magistra, from which I quote the following paragraph:

> Socialization is, at one and the same time, an effect and a cause of the growing intervention of the public authorities in even the most crucial matters, such as those concerning the care of health, the instruction and education of the younger generation, the controlling of professional careers and the methods of care and rehabilitation of those variously handicapped.

Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who is so frequently mentioned in this house and who was at the helm of this nation's economic affairs for many years, unfortunately did not have any vision with regard to this country's future.

Indeed, when, during the war, billions of dollars were spent on national defence, it would have been easy for him, I think, to conceive and prepare a program for post-war years. As a matter of fact, unemployment was certainly expected, since the unemployment insurance fund was created at the time.

Mr. C. D. Howe should have gazed into the Mackenzie King crystal ball to find means of setting up a program to help Canada's post-war economy.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Pickersgill had it.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, various commissions were established by that government, especially the Gordon commission which recommended that the people of the maritimes be given one-way tickets out of the Atlantic provinces.

The previous government did not have any confidence in the future of the maritime provinces, but the government of the day has, by its policies and its action, taken steps to hasten the expansion of the maritimes and it will keep on doing so.

Mr. Gordon's comments were an insult to the people of Canada and especially to all those living in the maritimes. Fortunately, Canada will never put its destiny in the hands of men like Messrs. Gordon, Pearson, Lamontagne and Pickersgill because it does not want to suffer again from the kind of planning it experienced under the previous Liberal government, that is belt-tightening policies.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time, they were lending millions of dollars for the construction of a pipe line in Canada.

Since 1957, Canadian exports have increased by 10 per cent, while our imports have decreased by 3 per cent.

May I be allowed to refer to an article published in the Sherbrooke newspaper La Tribune, which reads as follows:

> In the field of international trade, Canada must face strong competition from countries where the cost of producing articles we export is lower than ours. Until now, we have managed to hold our own inasmuch as the increase in the cost of raw materials and labour has been offset by an increase in productivity, but this achievement is becoming more and more difficult.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

This situation is causing grave concern in many circles which are well aware of existing conditions. Warnings have already been sounded, pointing out the danger for Canada of finding itself excluded from international outlets because of its inability to put products on the market at the same price as those offered by other exporting countries.

We are already affected by those circumstances at home and some industries find themselves in a critical position because of stiff competition from abroad. Exports are of vital importance to Canada and that importance is emphasized by the fact that our country ranks fourth among the trading nations of the world. A few days ago, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada warned his fellow-citizens and said that we had to expect that not only the Russians and Chinese but also other Asiatics and Africans would be in a position to offer manufactured products at bargain prices.

To meet that competition we will have to take the measures required: we must increase productivity and cut down production costs with all the sacrifices involved for the manufacturers and their employees. Otherwise we shall run the risk of being cut off from world markets, which could have serious effects on our prosperity.

I believe that it would be fair for labour, when negotiating the renewal of work agreements, to consider not only its own problems but also the fact that its action might have repercussions on the economy of this country.

Mr. Speaker, it is also appropriate, I think, to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to continue his efforts in order that Canada may have exhibits at international fairs. This is excellent publicity. In that respect, we should follow the example set by Japan which conducts intensive publicity throughout the world in order to sell its products. We should also encourage the Minister of Trade and Commerce to send, every year, trade missions throughout the world to make the economy of our country better known and to promote the sale of our products.

It would be a good thing also that the number of Canadian industrialists on those trade missions be increased and that a greater number of French-speaking industrialists join them, since there is a great number of French-speaking industrialists in the province of Quebec who would be happy to show their products abroad and thus contribute to the expansion of our external trade.

As far as agriculture is concerned, farm income reached a record level in 1961. Economists foresee the same thing for 1962. I wish to refer here to a speech made at the convention of the Cooperative Federee de Quebec, which was held at Mount Royal hotel in Montreal on the occasion of its 40th annual meeting. The convention was attended by 1,200 people. I quote:

Mr. Nadeau emphasized before the meeting that co-operative production plans are a sure means of raising farm income, since they are meant precisely to increase the net revenue of farm operators, to enable them to take better advantage of their own markets and to supply consumers with quality products.

Those words are not mere wishful thinking. In fact, with the exception of a few dairy products and barbecue chickens, most other farm products do not meet the needs of the people of the province. Quebec, which consumes 29 per cent of meat production in Canada, accounts for only 12 per cent of that production.

Thus last year, when there was a demand for 1.9 million hogs, only 1.5 million were marketed while 200,000 were imported. If the present rate of increase in population and the present rate of pork consumption per capita are maintained, the demand will be 2.1 million hogs in 1966 and 2.4 million in 1971. Which means that if production is to reach the level of consumption in 1971, production will have to be doubled between now and then.

Also, out of a total market of 125 million dozens of eggs in 1961, which will increase to 140 million dozens in 1966 and to 157 million dozens in 1971, Quebec produced only 62 million dozens in 1961.

Roughly speaking, it is the same story with regard to the production of turkey, lamb, beef and even veal.

On the other hand, co-operative plans are not new to co-operatives. Co-operatives have always brought under the same control, that of the farmers, the production, processing and distribution functions. The joining together of the means of action of a great number of small farms provides them with a great strength on the supply and farm product markets.

Finally, concluded Mr. Nadeau, production co-operative plans offer advantages both at the producers' level and at the local and central co-operative levels.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that Canadian farmers do not rely only on the state to increase their income. The state must help farmers, it must play a complementary role. I believe that one of the best means farmers may use to help themselves is to organize themselves through co-operatives, which are the ideal method for the controlling of production and for ensuring a stable income to Canadian farmers.

The present government has done much for all Canadian farmers.

According to the statement of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier)—a statement made outside the house of course—the Canadian government is giving everything to western producers and nothing to eastern producers. I consider that statement as untrue. The hon. member for Laurier would be ashamed to repeat those words in the western provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the present government is responsible for the increase of the floor price on butter from 58 cents to 64 cents per pound, which was put into effect to help our farmers.

When the U.C.C. was coming to Ottawa to submit its briefs to the then minister of agriculture, the government chose to ignore its briefs as well as those that were submitted by the Cooperative Federee. A subsidy of 25 cents per hundred pounds of milk has also been granted to our producers, under certain conditions. From 1959 to 1960, out of nearly $11 million handed out by the Canadian government for all the provinces of Canada, almost $5 million have been paid out to the farmers in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the present government has been of great assistance to our Canadian farmers. Under the previous administration, the Canadian farm loan ceiling was $15,000, and loans could not go beyond 65 per cent of the value of the farm. Under the present administration, the loans range up to $20,000 and even $27,500, and they are accepted up to 75 per cent of the value of the farm.

Mr. Speaker, as my riding is a tobacco-growing centre, I wish to underline the fact that since July 1959, a special duty of 75 cents per pound is levied on synthetic binders imported from the United States. This duty has been imposed in order to assist the cigar tobacco industry in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the government of the province of Quebec also has its responsibilities as regards agriculture.

I notice that the order passed by that government concerning wood, and which gives the producers $11 per cord—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is straying a little from the subject we are discussing, and I would ask him to come back to it.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in order to correct a mistake I just made, I must say that in spite of an order from the provincial government, wood is still selling at $11 a cord. However, protests are being made to obtain a better price.

Allow me also, Mr. Speaker, to point out a situation that prevails now in the province of Quebec and which will surely affect the agricultural economy of this country; I refer to the provincial government's decision to refuse a higher school of agriculture to the Montreal district.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see that I have again to remind the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that the decisions taken by Quebec are not germane to the present debate. I, therefore, would ask him to keep to the subject of the discussion.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to draw attention to that question, because it affects the agricultural economy of the province of Quebec and of the country. However, I shall bow to your ruling.

There was also some mention of loans to be offered to municipalities. The federal government has some kind of a bank to grant loans to municipalities. We should think twice and use caution before implementing such a formula, so that it does not conflict with provincial autonomy, since municipal affairs are a provincial responsibility.

I wish to congratulate the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) for having extended, following the requests of Canadian municipalities the period provided for the winter works program. All those measures are a contribution to the country's economy.

There is reason to rejoice, Mr. Speaker, over the decisions reached by the Canadian government in the various fields of our economic activities.

As I said earlier, our opponents across the aisle, even though they criticized and made gloomy contributions to the debates of the house, have nevertheless supported all the leglislation introduced by the government and all the estimates, except in two instances.

(Text):

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): We are concerned this afternoon with an amendment dealing with the problem of economic growth. I think this debate has shown up the extent to which we substantially differ on how this can be achieved. I think I can agree with the hon. member for Niagara Falls that this will be the central issue in the coming election campaign because all other matters revolve about it. We cannot have full employment without economic growth. Our welfare policies, old age pensions, veterans pensions, and all the other means by which we transfer money from one group to another will be of no account without economic growth. Our foreign policy and our defence commitments can both be seriously weakened unless we have economic growth. Even our hopes for a better trained and more skilled working force can be destroyed unless we can achieve this kind of economic growth.

Alleged Lack of Economic Growth

We are, therefore, dealing with a very important decision. One of the former statesmen of this nation suggested that the twentieth century would belong to Canada. Well, we will have to make a decision very soon, within the next few years, or I am afraid we will have to revise that statement quite substantially. The New Democratic party believes that this goal can only be achieved by long range planning, and that the greater part of this planning must be done at the federal level. We believe that it must be done democratically. We believe that in every stage the planning should be under the scrutiny of the people and their representatives in this parliament. We believe this planning must be done with the co-operation of all concerned, of management, labour, farm and the consumer. All these people have a right to play a part in it.

Finally, we recognize the over-all responsibility of the representatives of the people gathered in this parliament in the formation of the actual goals to which this planning can be directed. In other words, the New Democratic party believes that democracy has an economic as well as a political connotation. Until this is an accepted part of our system, political democracy itself could well be in danger. I was very much interested last night in the speech by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). He is always interesting. One of the remarks he made was that we must now allow the state to undermine the role of the individual. I believe my political party can agree with this because we believe that the individual can only work properly when the state itself provides the opportunity.

It has been said of this government by its spokesmen that it does not believe in planning. It believes rather in slogans; that the issues confronting this nation are those revolving about the distinction between free enterprise and socialism. The fact that a minister of the crown could make such a fantastic statement and not be laughed off the stage shows how far we are behind in our thinking about social and economic issues. In Europe, they stopped talking about socialism. They have stopped worrying about socialism and gone to work to deal with their economies which are moving ahead to provide the kind of growth which we in Canada need. They realize that the terms "socialism" and "free enterprise" are completely irrelevant in the twentieth century. How we in Canada with the Canadian National, Trans-Canada Air Lines, the national film board, the C.B.C. and Polymer, with our dominion coal board, the fisheries prices support board and the national research council, can talk about free enterprise, is indeed a mystery.

I am reminded of a little town not far from Ottawa. Sometimes in the summer I visit this town. There is not a single industry there and even the cheese factory has closed down. The railway trains do not even stop at the station any longer, but simply flash by. I wondered how these people actually lived, how they got along. I found out. At the end of the month, in came all the family allowance cheques, the old age pensions, the veterans pensions and the other various transfer payments we have in this nation. Of course, we agree with those. It is rather interesting, though, to note that in the last election every single person in that town but one voted for the Conservative party. This person was a postmaster who had been appointed during the Liberal regime. I suppose in the next election these people will go to the polls again and vote for the Conservative party, free enterprise. Well, this is the kind of dichotomy of thought we have in this country. I think it is an extremely strange thing indeed, that we are still talking about socialism and free enterprise. Well, of course, according to the philosophy of this government it is easy to be right, it is easy to be successful, because there is no basis for assessing either success or failure. There are no goals to attain and therefore there are no goals to miss. One would have to agree with a quotation from a little book I found recently in the library entitled "Undirected Society". It reads thus:

> The politician works among variables so numerous and so uncertain that his most brilliant insights can never be proved right and his grossest blunders proved wrong.

And so this government takes refuge in statistics as a giant curtain to hide the obvious.

We are told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there are more people at work than ever before. Obviously there are because the population is larger. Could you imagine the chaos if that situation did not exist? However, the government does not mention that there are more people unemployed now than in the 1930's, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not mention the social problems that this has created in many parts of Canada. He did not mention that in one city alone welfare is up 180 per cent over the previous year.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that the gross national product is 22 per cent higher over a four or five year period, but does he not realize that the gross national product could be 100 per cent higher in 20 years time, and we could still have two thirds of our population unemployed? The only relevance his statement would have is simply that technology has moved ahead; but we have not moved ahead in learning to provide employment. Thus we continue tinkering away, refusing to believe that the human mind can bring order and progress in areas of economics and social welfare as it has in so many other areas.

This element of economic growth is very important at this particular time because we have never been so conscious of the new trade patterns which are developing throughout the world. In many countries, including those in the European common market, there has been an acceptance of a much greater amount of government initiative and direction. They have set goals. They have set national goals and, indeed, international goals while we blither and mumble on about free enterprise.

We in Canada talk apologetically about a full employment society while these countries already have that. We talk about the possibility of a police state, should we try to set up a full employment society, at the same time forgetting that Great Britain, West Germany and many other countries have already achieved that objective. What other kind of society can we have? How can we compete with these countries when we have 7, 8, 9 or maybe even 11 per cent of our people unemployed during the winter months?

Let us look at this very dispassionately. Let us forget the amount of social welfare we pay at present to these people who are unemployed. Instead, let us remember we made a decision some time in the 19th century that we were going to keep people alive and not let them starve; that we were going to pay for them to eat and to be clothed and housed whether they are working or not. We decided that, and our Christian conscience demands that they be clothed and housed in a decent way, and kept at a level of subsistence which we could accept in our western civilization.

Once this decision is made, surely the only thing we have to decide is how we are going to implement it? When we ask ourselves that, we find we have only two alternatives left. We can allow them to become productive workers or we can allow them to be unemployed and be a drag on our whole economy. We can allow them to bear the cost of government and bear the cost of those things we regard as being necessary to our way of life, or we can allow them to take out of society what they must have in order to survive. Those are the only two alternatives we have. In fact it is only a matter of organization once you make your basic decision.

When he spoke yesterday, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said with some pride that for the first time we have a balance of trade. Is that the only thing we have to be concerned with—a balance of trade?

Mr. McIlraith: Only in commodities.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, a balance of trade in commodities; but that does not answer the major problem. The fact that we are trading wheat for transistor radios raises the point of the employment provided. I may say we are all very glad to see the wheat being sold, but I am sure all of us realize that the labour content of our exports does not in any way compare with the labour content of the imports we are bringing in. I think we should be more concerned about the level of exports which we have in manufactured products, a field in which we are far behind Italy, West Germany, Sweden and Switzerland. By exporting more manufactured products we are going to produce more labour and we are going to keep our people employed.

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. member permit a question? What does he propose? How does he propose to deal with the problem?

Mr. Pitman: I am sure if you read our program you would find out. We believe in a far greater measure of social investment and in encouraging far more employment right here in Canada. We would also be interested in expanding trade as much as possible by giving low interest rates, credit and so forth. Indeed I would be very glad to send the parliamentary secretary a copy of our program.

Mr. Pallett: Is the hon. member suggesting higher tariffs against these imports?

Mr. Pitman: I can assure the hon. member for Peel that I am not suggesting higher import tariffs. I think I have stated already that we are in favour of selling our wheat, but we recognize a basic problem. It is one that must be faced—that we in our trade are not creating the same amount of labour here as in those countries we are trading with. This is obviously a problem which the government should face, and I think we have to develop our policies so that they can expand the amount of labour provided.

Mr. Pallett: Is the hon. member in favour of free trade, if he is not suggesting higher tariffs?

Mr. Pitman: We believe in free trade throughout the world over a longer period of time.

Mr. Nesbitt: Better tell them that in Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I have told them that in Peterborough and they are quite aware of the problem involved. My friends across the way do not realize that our and their supporters are in favour of planning. I read an article in the Globe and Mail on January 16 entitled "Urge Quebec economy be planned". This was no group of wild-eyed radicals who wanted to create prosperity. The group mentioned in the article included the Quebec federation of labour, the confederation of national syndicates, the provincial chamber of commerce, the Catholic farmers' union and the professional association of industrialists. These are the men who are suggesting planning and among them are supporters of the present government.

I was also interested in some remarks made by Mr. W. S. Kirkpatrick, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, whose name has already been used in this debate. He has been reported as suggesting the establishment of a federal group to accelerate expansion, a federal department of economic expansion. You see, you cannot set goals without planning, and according to Mr. Kirkpatrick we must do so in such a way as to accelerate the country's expansion and keep all Canadians working. He says:

> Such a department should not be an adjunct of an existing department but a separate ministry headed by a senior cabinet minister.
> It should have an advisory body, including the best brains of the country, drawn from business, labour, agriculture and academic circles, but selected as private citizens for their knowledge and experience and not as representing any group or organization.
> In consultation with this advisory group, the new department would have the responsibility of developing general economic policies, and other government departments would plan their actions within the policies so established.

It is interesting to follow the chamber of commerce and to view some of its latest pronouncements. I was interested in the remarks of Mr. E. P. Taylor who recently made his first speech in 16 years. What did he suggest? He suggested a "big daddy" on economics. I shall quote from the Toronto daily Star which carried the following article:

> Toronto's E. P. Taylor last night called for a federal "big daddy" to oversee the whole field of finance and trade.
> In an interview following his first public speech in 16 years, he said such a man should be responsible for several departments, including finance, trade and commerce, national revenue and labour.
> In his 40 minute speech concluding the Canadian Chamber of Commerce annual meeting, the president of the Argus Corporation got closer to the heart of Canada's ailing economy and came up with more concrete proposals than 650 delegates in three days of floundering.
> The speech was based on on-the-spot reports by two economists hired by Mr. Taylor to study economic trends in Britain, France, West Germany and Sweden.
> —he proposed the formation of a new federal cabinet post—minister of economic affairs. The minister, he says, would be a kind of "big daddy" over several departments—

[Mr. Pitman.]

It is almost Orwellian in its nature, if one remembers "Big Brother". He added:

> This man would be able to draw in people from business, industry and labour and put their heads together.
> The Germans have done this, and the French in a different way. This is one of the main reasons they are getting things done over there.

So says Mr. Taylor, but the labour movement has recognized this, and some time ago in his annual statement, Mr. Claude Jodoin stated:

> We suggest that the time has arrived when the appointment of a social economic advisory council should be effected as the first step toward a better relationship and a united attack on our economic problems.

We sincerely believe there is a need for planning by this government, and the second major problem is also associated with trade. It is the problem of productivity.

We are told that our prosperity depends on our productivity. We can see the need for this but what will be the effect on the entire nation, on those who are not going to receive the benefits of this productivity? We have a productivity council but how can labour be very enthralled if productivity means fewer jobs? Only by a national effort at productivity in which management and labour can see the advantages, can we achieve this. Labour must not be placed at a disadvantage.

Some days ago the Minister of Labour expressed dissatisfaction that there was a labour management committee in existence but no meetings had been held. It would be pointless to hold them, to get them together, when this government is against planning. There is no pattern into which they can fit their plans. There is no point in planning and getting together unless they know where the government is going, and certainly there is no way of being certain of that.

Just a little over a year ago there was a great gathering of the economic leaders of our nation in Ottawa. They met, presented their reports and went home. What came of it all? Perhaps some of its work found its way into legislation but certainly those who attended the meeting do not feel their suggestions have been given proper credence by the government.

There can be no assurance about the benefits of higher productivity unless the government takes a hand. There can be no assurance given especially if it means less work for more people. Unless it means general prosperity and not simply unemployment insurance plus higher profits, no assurance can be given. Neither the unions nor businessmen are going to place themselves at the mercy of unplanned inaction such as we have today. We feel the government is elected by the people. It is the only democratic agency but it cannot play any part in electing union and business leaders.

Therefore we believe that the government has a responsibility to take hold of and take a hand in the economic affairs of this nation. We believe that the rights of the minority must be guarded and the rights of property must be respected, but we also believe that the rights of the majority deserve some respect and that the rights of the consumer and those people who are in distress, those who are aged or sick, must be respected.

The third program is also associated with trade. A few articles appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail some weeks ago which indicated that Canada is going to find it harder and harder to compete in trade unless she begins to merge some of her industries; unless somehow we stop the fragmentation and allow the building up of much larger units of production. This was brought out in an article by Bruce Macdonald in which he said, quoting Humphrey Style, president of the John Inglis Co. Ltd.:

> It seems to me that part of our national policy should be to encourage mergers into larger units to get the cost advantages from greater volume of production and distribution.
> It may be that to achieve this greater degree of integration, while at the same time protecting the interests of the public in assuring them that the resultant cost advantages are passed on to them, some degree of modification of our existing anti-combines legislation and its implementation must be made.

Mr. David Henry, director of the combines investigation branch of the Department of Justice, substantiated this view in saying:

> In considering the implications of any particular merger the director is acting under the same disability that faces legal and economic advisers of industries planning to merge, namely that there is as yet very little jurisprudence that can serve as a guide as to how courts will view the legislation in light of particular circumstances.

So we are faced with the problem of having to plan great mergers, but how can this be done unless we do it within the pattern of a planned economy? How can we be sure that these mergers that we may have to allow to be formed, if we are going to compete for markets, will not mean monopoly prices, higher profits and once again appalling unemployment, unless there is some pattern of social justice in all the democratic planning with which this third program is concerned?

I read the speech of the hon. member for Niagara Falls and I am rather disappointed that the Liberal party is not going to support the amendment to the amendment proposed by this group. We in this group are rather surprised and sorry that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) is not here to see this, because this amendment is taken directly from the program of the New Democratic party which was partly written by the hon. member for Assiniboia. I think he would be rather concerned to find that his political party is not accepting this particular amendment to the amendment proposed by the New Democratic group in this house.

I wish the Liberal party could accept this amendment because I am afraid that planning without such an amendment and without its emphasis will become a kind of research activity. It can too often become a tossing around of the ball. But surely decisions must be made somewhere, and the proper people to make the decisions are those who are elected democratically to make them. As it is now, of course, these decisions are made by stockholders, and rightly so. They are made on the basis of the best profits that can be secured for the stockholders—and why not? This is their very frame of preference; this is what they should properly base their decisions upon. But we suggest it is too narrow a frame of preference and that the needs of the nation may well be not the needs of Imperial Oil or Abitibi pulp and paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is now six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was indicating that from the point of view of the New Democratic party, to achieve the kind of economic growth which is suggested in the amendment and subamendment it is paramount that some degree of responsibility be accepted by the federal government. I attempted to point out that there are several significant problems confronting the Canadian people today. These are problems of major proportions which must be dealt with within the near future or perhaps the opportunity to deal with them will pass.

The first problem is that of new trade competition, the competition provided by countries the governments of which have accepted a higher degree of responsibility and initiative and insisted on a full employment society.

The second problem is that of productivity. We face competition from nations which have recently engaged in a tooling up in industry on a large scale and in a modern way. We cannot face this problem of productivity unless management, labour and indeed agriculture can feel they, too, will share in the benefits of productivity. Perhaps the farmer more than any other individual has already experienced disadvantages from productivity. He was told all he had to do was increase his production and his life would be one of considerable prosperity. As it turned out, of course, this was not true. His prices went down, his income continued to decline. Fewer and fewer are being supported in the agricultural segment of our economy as the years go by.

The third problem is that of larger productive units. The manufacturing industry across the nation is realizing that as this competition becomes more severe we will have to reorganize our economy into larger productive units. The small secondary industry may very well become somewhat irrelevant in the kind of trading competition we will have to face in certain areas of our secondary manufacturing. If this type of merger takes place without those affected feeling that it is taking place within the pattern of a plan, I am afraid this will be done only with the opposition of either management or labour because neither will have the assurance that they will benefit from the advantage of these large units.

The fourth problem upon which I wish to touch is that of retraining and education. We have really just begun to scratch the surface of the problem of retraining our people. We have come to the conclusion that we have tragically failed the youth of our nation over the past fifteen years. We have been supplying our need for skilled workers from immigration sources, bringing in people to do the jobs for which we should have been training our own people. We have made a start in this area but surely it is only a start. Unless we make some important changes in our economy I do not believe we can achieve the kind of dynamic results which must take place if we are to provide our younger people with the educational goals they require.

The European common market is not only planning economically but it is planning educationally. It is providing opportunities for young people to move from nation to nation. It is arranging for the acceptance of credentials of training between nations. This is the situation with which we have to compete. People will be able to take their skills back and forth among the nations. It is more than economic planning with which we must deal.

Our young people are very discerning in this area. You do not have to spell it out to them that we do not have any plan or national goal. They feel we are a society of drift rather than a society of decision. As a result too many of our young people have no goals and drop out when it seems convenient, perhaps through discouragement. As I say, we have made a start in this area of providing training but much remains to be done.

In the last 12 months we have experienced less immigration to Canada than emigration from this country. Some 70,000 persons came to Canada and approximately 73,000 or more went out. It is tragic to note that many who are leaving are among those who have received training in skills in Canada. This outflow must be stopped. It can be done only through establishing and achieving national goals and objectives.

Many speakers on the government side have appropriately shown enthusiasm about the pick-up in our economy. In 1962 we see an increase in our gross national product. We have made some advances in the area of trade. But I suggest this is the time we need planning the most. Now that the economy shows an upward trend we must ensure that it does not fall, with the disastrous results we have witnessed in the past. It will be of no value if this climb in the economy should be followed by a sharp decline within three or four years.

In the past we have turned to scapegoats. We have blamed labour for wages. We have blamed the Liberals for what they did prior to 1957. We may begin to blame the European common market. Perhaps in the future we may blame the communist bloc. But we cannot continue to find scapegoats. The government must accept the inevitable responsibility of the challenges of this era. We must not allow this to be simply a cancerous affluence followed by a disastrous depression. Only in a planned economy can we create taxation policies which will encourage and assist an ordered growth. Only then can we direct investment, both private and public, into those areas that will provide the kind of full employment which the Canadian people have a right to expect and indeed will expect in the next decade.

Our economy is enjoying an upswing but I suggest this is the time to discipline ourselves and provide the opportunities presented by the twentieth century, which we have claimed as our own. One of my favourite historians is Arnold Toynbee. His thesis is, of course, that every civilization rises and falls. He might bring this thesis into the area of the nation state. Every nation faces certain challenges. If it overcomes those challenges, it continues to rise, to prosper and to provide something meaningful within western civilization. If it fails to meet those challenges, then indeed it has no right to expect anything else but a falling down in its prosperity and influence throughout the world.

We in Canada face many ills. There is still squalor in our major cities. There is still ignorance. It is not illiteracy but rather an inability to meet the challenges of the technological age. There is still unemployment, as we have seen even in this winter of upswing. There are still people who are not being cared for properly and who are in sickness and in want. These are the challenges of the 20th century and of the 20th century nation state.

I think the realities are just as stark for the nation state as they are for civilization. With the knowledge we have in this world of science and technology, with our ability to send a man around the world in space and to produce machines which can carry out production for us, we have the opportunity of making a nation worthy of all our hopes while on the other hand our technology and our machines can bring tremendous unhappiness. This is the challenge. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment to the amendment which we in the New Democratic party have proposed can give in the national government the planning and the policies which can bring about the affluence and progress which all Canadians desire.

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have only two minutes before the vote takes place. However, I should like to comment for a moment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman). May I say that I have never heard a more negative approach to sound policies which he has distorted for the past 40 minutes. It seems that the C.C.F.-New Democratic party is full of political theorists without solutions. They want to redirect social and private capital. I ask them how they intend to do that. Do they intend to nationalize the steel industry, the trust companies and the insurance companies? How do they intend to rectify their position with regard to the redirection of this capital? I am sorry that I have not more time at my disposal, Mr. Speaker. I should like to comment on only one thing as far as the Liberals are concerned. I have in my hand a quotation taken from the Ottawa Journal and it reads as follows:

> It is no empty boast of the government party that in most areas under federal jurisdiction they have done more in four years than the Liberals did in 22.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 8.15 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 4(d) of standing order 56, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment now before the house.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is now on the main motion.

IMMIGRATION—ALLEGED ABUSE OF REGULATORY AUTHORITY

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss a grievance. My grievance is provoked by a procedure that was followed by a minister in this house which I consider is an invasion of the rights of parliament and an abuse of authority which reflects on the very basis of our method of enacting laws in this House of Commons. I refer to the statement on immigration made to the house by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) shortly after this house opened, the effect of which is to make new immigration laws which the elected representatives of the people have had no opportunity to debate.

I find no precedent for a government dealing so evasively with such a serious matter when a different course had been promised, not only to parliament but indeed to the people of Canada. The production of a new set of immigration regulations instead of a revision of the Immigration Act is, I consider, an affront to the rights of parliament, to the press of Canada and indeed to the people of the entire country. It is nothing more in my judgment, than an attempt to divert the country's attention, and a poor demonstration of a lack of courage to face an issue. It is a move, a clumsy move at that, to block a parliamentary debate on the immigration laws of this country.

The chronological history of events of this whole manoeuvre shows that this government and the minister on at least nine different occasions clearly stated a promise to revise the Immigration Act. Not once was anything said about revising or altering the regulations themselves. I should like to refer to only two brief quotations in this regard. One appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of August 11, 1961 and is as follows:

> Canada's new blueprint for immigration, four years in preparation, will make its debut in parliament next month.
> A government spokesman said Thursday it is "absolutely sure" that the new Immigration Act will go before the Commons shortly after it reconvenes September 7. It had been forecast in the speech from the throne that opened parliament in November, 1960.
> The document has been promised by the Conservatives since before they came to power in June, 1957 but delay after delay has kept it from being introduced.

The second quotation is from the Toronto Globe and Mail of November 2, 1961, and is as follows:

> The final draft of Canada's revised Immigration Act, in the government's oven for many months, is now being considered by the cabinet. Full approval is expected soon and the revised act should be before parliament at the next session. Completion of the final draft marks the end of months of discussion and argument within the cabinet and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Revisions to the act were forecast in the speech from the throne a year ago, but they were not forthcoming.

The Prime Minister has himself on a number of occasions promised that the act would be revised. I want to put on the record one of these direct statements. I quote from the Toronto Star of May 15, 1961, which quotes from the Prime Minister's speech at Massey hall in April, 1957. This is the brief quotation:

> "We will overhaul the act's administration to ensure that humanity will be considered and put an end to the bureaucratic interpretations which keep out from Canada many potentially good citizens", said Mr. Diefenbaker, at Massey Hall in April, 1957—

The minister herself very definitely told the house that she would make available a draft of her new legislation to interested groups before it was formally presented to parliament. I quote her own words:

> I do not want to bring in a half-baked piece of legislation which will not stand the test of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member permit me to interrupt him. I have been waiting, expecting that hon. members would settle down. There has been ample time. I trust that they will moderate their conversations so that the hon. member who has the floor can have the usual courteous hearing.

Mr. McGee: On a point of order, before the hon. member resumes; surely in recent years there has never been a more flagrant example of an hon. member reading each and every word of his speech, which has obviously been written by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member on the point of order.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, I certainly am not reading the speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crestohl: If hon. members would like to look at my notes, they may. I am going to discuss a question of procedure which touches the very basis of our system of legislation, and that is the conflict—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Is that the point of order you are discussing?

Mr. Crestohl: Yes. It is interesting to hear these intellectual giants interrupting. It is very interesting to observe that their intellectual interruptions are somewhat exaggerated when you attempt to cram them into a pygmy peanut shell.

An hon. Member: Careful; it is all going down in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the point of order which has been taken has become a novel one, having regard to the amount of similar delivery of speeches that went on in the debate on the speech from the throne. I am sure the hon. member who has the floor will follow the customary practice of the house.

Alleged Abuse of Immigration Regulations

Mr. Pickersgill: Before he does, perhaps I might be permitted, in view of the very—

An hon. Member: Here comes the specialist.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of the very flattering insinuation, or direct statement, perhaps I should say, of the hon. member for York-Scarborough that he flatters me too much.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, when I am reading quotations—and I have read several—I cannot memorize them, and I did not memorize them. If the hon. member who is so fluent in his speech deliveries, who never refers to notes and who is the one—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the hon. member proceed with his address.

Mr. Crestohl: After all these promises, after all the manoeuvring engaged in, after all the tactics to which the minister resorted, after protesting that she was hesitant about bringing in a half-baked measure, what did the house finally get? What did the hon. lady finally bring in? I suggest she did not bring in even a half-baked measure. She brought in no measure at all. Apparently she had a frightful time with her oven. It is obvious to me and certainly it is abundantly clear to the country that the minister had no fire under the oven in which her measure was to have been baked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crestohl: It is interesting to observe who is laughing.

An hon. Member: Look around you.

Mr. Crestohl: Hon. members opposite do not realize—

Mr. Peters: Most of the laughter comes from representatives of Toronto ridings.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt again but if hon. members wish to interrupt they should remind themselves that they should rise uncovered and only one may interrupt at a time. I hope I shall not have to remind hon. members again.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Are salacious comments allowed in this house?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but I did not hear the hon. member's point of order.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I asked whether salacious comments are allowed in this house. It occurs to me they are out of order.

Mr. Crestohl: May I point out that perhaps these interruptions represent an attempt to deprive me of some of the time at my disposal to discuss a matter which I consider to be of considerable importance. If these facts hurt hon. members of the government, I can appreciate why they would interrupt. As a matter of fact when hon. gentlemen opposite interrupt I am confident that my remarks are hitting home and making them feel uncomfortable.

I submit that the minister did not bring a half-baked measure before the house: I think it is a completely raw measure. It represents a raw deal not only to the house but to the country.

The minister did not introduce the piece of legislation promised by herself and the Prime Minister. She brought forward immigration laws which were not passed by parliament. These are purely and simply immigration laws passed by the cabinet. The representatives of the people have not had an opportunity to express an opinion on those laws, those regulations which are now considered to be the laws of this country. She failed to submit those regulations to interested groups as she promised she would. But, of course, that was only another promise. What is one broken promise more or less to members of the government?

I point out that this is legislation by ministerial regulations. If you care to think back in history, that is the way dictators operated. That is the way this government is operating. That is not a good method to be followed by the government of any country, particularly a democratic country. There is nothing more undemocratic than to make laws by ministerial regulation without giving the elected representatives of the people an opportunity of discussing them. A frightful danger of delegating authority is that it can lead to the making of laws under the guise of regulations.

On a previous occasion I complained as I complain now that the authority given in a parliamentary statute to make regulations has unfortunately degenerated to the point where officials and bureaucrats are carrying things a little too far.

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Would he inform the house when the power to pass these regulations was included in the act? Was this not done under a Liberal administration?

Mr. Crestohl: I could not tell the hon. gentleman when it was done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crestohl: Just a moment. When an hon. member asks a question I expect that he and those who support his party will have the patience and courtesy to listen to the reply. I do not know when it was done. I am not attempting to conceal when it was done. Regardless of when it was done, that does not make it right, unless hon. members opposite are prepared now to make the statement that everything the Liberal administration did was right. If they make that statement, then I would go along with it; but I do not take the position that if it was done by a Liberal government it is necessarily right.

I am raising a grievance. The system of delegating the authority to make regulations under the statutes is a good thing. Regulations have to be made for administrative purposes. But an abuse occurs when that authority is converted into the making of laws.

I have no quarrel with any statute that gives authority to a minister or commission to make regulations. That is the language of the statutes. The making of regulations is appropriate, proper and necessary for various branches of government. But an abuse takes place when laws are enacted under the guise of regulations. That is going too far.

Lord Hewart, a chief justice of England, has written and spoken extensively on this form of making laws by bureaucratic operation. Hon. members will recall the quotation from the Prime Minister's speech at Massey hall in which he said he would stop this form of bureaucratic law making. I have merely paraphrased his comment. He made reference to "bureaucratic" practices.

Lord Hewart calls this form of law making by bureaucratic operation the "new despotism". I sincerely commend Lord Hewart's book to all members of the house. His Lordship points out that the authority given to statutory bodies and government departments to make laws by regulation places government departments above and beyond the sovereignty of parliament itself, and frequently even beyond the jurisdiction of the courts.

What do we see? This delegation of authority is very dangerous. The Prime Minister himself has recognized the danger. On one occasion he spoke about appointing a committee or commission to review all our statutes and the attendant regulations enacted thereunder and determine whether the regulations were abusive and inconsistent with the bill of rights, an infringement on the rights and duties of parliament itself. That is a statement which the Prime Minister made or one to that effect. It was quite a proper statement and one becoming a prime minister, especially at a time when we were discussing the bill of rights. Unfortunately, however, no such commission has been appointed or set up. I simply say that was perhaps just another promise which the Prime Minister made and which I still hope he will fulfil. I consider the matter to be an extremely important one which is basic to our whole system of government and to our system of making laws, namely that there should be no such abuse by statutory bodies making laws instead of regulations.

As I said, if such a commission is ever formed, I feel that the greatest offender will be found to have been the regulations made under the Immigration Act. On another occasion I will point out many basic errors, contradictions and inconsistencies in the regulations themselves and even, to a large extent, their complete futility. What the minister has so far done by her surprising and astounding performance is to lead the house, the press, the country and future immigrants down the proverbial garden path. Under the guise of regulations she virtually shoved down the throat of parliament without debate, as a fait accompli, a new set of immigration laws. She promised a revision of the act, but that was only another promise.

I should like to point out that a revision of the act would make possible debate, study by a committee, submissions by interested parties, analysis, discussion and amendments so that in the final analysis, out of all this consideration which is generally given to a piece of legislation in this house could come a better measure. I should like to feel that had these regulations which the minister brought into the house been given to a committee and to the house for debate, whoever it was who fashioned those regulations might have received enough suggestions, good or bad, to produce—to use the minister's language—a better seasoned measure or a better seasoned product, in her desire to produce for the country something that was good, properly cooked and digestible.

I feel that this whole operation over the past four years by the government and by the minister, this build-up of a promise to revise—"Later", "not quite ready", "I want to have the bill ready and distributed to interested parties to study"—was nothing but a hoax. All that did not happen. Nothing like that was done. The entire build-up to me has the air of a huge hoax on the country and on parliament. I say that is a genuine grievance. I feel that it is the result of a studied plan by the minister and by the government to string the country along and then to come and throw into the records a set of immigration laws in the guise of immigration regulations. I say that Canadians do not like to be treated in that way. I say that Canadians will resent being treated in that way. If the government, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration had the courage to make this promise that they would revise the act, they should have gone along with the revision properly and should not have slipped into the records in this devious or indirect way a series of immigration laws. I repeat that Canadians do not like to be treated in that way. They resent such treatment and they will show their resentment at the first opportunity given to them.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the grievance that is before the house at this moment, particularly as I represent a constituency composed of a great many people who have recently come to Canada. I know they would wish me to say on their behalf how much they disagree with the words which have just been uttered by the hon. member of the Liberal party. He said the Conservatives promised to revise the Immigration Act.

Mr. Crestohl: Did they not do so?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course they did so.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I am not concerned with that matter. I am concerned, as are the people who wanted to come to Canada, with the previous 22 years when revision of the act was wanted by these people who could not get into Canada then but who got into Canada under a Conservative government.

I am also concerned, Mr. Speaker, with the plaque that is hanging on the walls of this parliament building. Perhaps the hon. member has not seen it. Perhaps he will go and look at it some day. It is a plaque which was donated to the government of this country, the first one to accept tubercular refugees under the United Nations program. Has the hon. member seen it? I will show him where it is in the morning, Mr. Speaker.

It is wonderful to hear these people in the opposition talking about the immigration regulations and laws of this country. What do they know about the immigrants who have come to this country?

Mr. Pickersgill: They practically all came here when the Liberal government was in power.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Certainly they did.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just look at the statistics.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): They came when there was in power a government which had a policy of Canadian babies first, and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) can substantiate that statement: Canadian babies first.

[Mr. Crestohl.]

Mr. Pickersgill: We let the immigrants in. You have kept them out.

An hon. Member: Obviously he was the youngest one in his family.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): It is quite obvious that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate might have been writing speeches in the last few days. He might have written this one. I do not know. However, I and the new Canadians in my constituency know of the policy under the previous government. I will point out two facts. This Conservative government was the first government of this country to recognize the refugee problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is not correct.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not correct.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate can make his own speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: Who admitted the Hungarians?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): My hon. friend can talk about the Hungarians on his own time. However, I think that also happened after 1957.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was the minister.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was also the advocate of Canadian babies first.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member resume his seat for one minute? If objection is taken to what is being said, there will be an opportunity to make a correction or explanation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize to the hon. gentleman, sir.

Mr. Pallett: And to the house as a whole.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the house that in my constituency I have a great many people who have recently come to Canada. They came here under various circumstances. Some of them came here under the refugee program instituted by this government with respect to people with tuberculosis in the refugee camps. They came here because they believe in democracy, because they believe in our way of life. They did not come here because of the policies put forward by our predecessors in office. They wanted an opportunity to be equal; they did not want to be considered inferior.

Mr. Fisher: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fisher: It seemed to me that the grievance of the hon. member for Cartier related to the introduction of regulations to change immigration policy. There are a number of us who wish to speak on this matter, and I would put it to you, sir, that the hon. member who is speaking has not been directing his remarks to the specific grievance.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should hear the hon. member who has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in my view the grievance that was introduced covered a wide field. I do not think it was necessarily confined to immigration regulations but rather covered the whole field of immigration into Canada. I think there were statements made by the member who raised the grievance that had nothing to do with the regulations at all. I will await your ruling.

Mr. McGee: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, at least at one point in the remarks of the hon. member for Cartier it was clear that he was directing his criticism at the activities of the former minister of citizenship and immigration, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, particularly when he was referring to the principle of incorporating regulations as part of a statute. Unless I greatly misunderstood the hon. member, that was his point. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was responsible as the former minister of citizenship and immigration for such regulations being imposed, my impression was that at least part of the criticism of the hon. member for Cartier was directed at the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Crestohl: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not necessary to hear the hon. member. Having followed the hon. member for Cartier through his entire speech, I understood him to say that he was not attempting to deal with the content of the law but that his grievance related to the method of introducing immigration law by regulation rather than by statute, and I think that the comments of other members should be limited to the grievance as it was initiated.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that in my estimation and that of a great many members of this house the official opposition is not in favour of the change in the regulations. They want to restrict immigration into Canada as it was restricted under the former government. We all know that was detrimental to those people who wanted to come to this country, to live in a democracy under a government freely and democratically chosen.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to exercise the right that you accorded to me to make a factual correction in the statement made by the hon. gentleman. The hon. member stated that this government was the first government that had paid any attention to the refugee problem or had admitted refugees. That statement is completely and utterly incorrect. In the years before the war the government of Mr. Mackenzie King undertook to admit refugees. After the war there was a very large refugee program and, as the hon. member has said, I was brought into this personally.

Mr. Jones: May I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can raise a point of order. I was just about to say myself that the hon. member is entitled to make an explanation where he has been misinterpreted, but I think he has probably gone a bit beyond that when he endeavours to correct a factual error in the speech unless it is an interpretation that relates to the member concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does, sir.

Mr. Jones: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see the hon. member for Saskatoon.

Mr. Jones: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no point of order.

Mr. Jones: —the hon. member for Winnipeg North clearly related his remarks to the refugee problem in relation to tuberculosis. Everybody knows that refugees have come to this country under every government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises as a point of order another controversial issue of fact. I trust the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has made his explanation.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I have not, sir. That was the precise point I was coming to when Your Honour interrupted me. I was going to say that at the time the government in which I was a minister decided to admit the Hungarian refugees we admitted those with tuberculosis as well as those without.

Mr. Flynn: It is a question of fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a question of fact and the facts are well known.

Alleged Abuse of Immigration Regulations

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the house who over the years has had to deal with a vast number of immigration cases and in whose riding are thousands of new citizens I am particularly interested in the grievances raised by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl). That grievance has to do with important changes in immigration policy being brought in by regulation and not through the medium of legislation.

The hon. member for Cartier pointed out that in his view a great number of Canadians were and are very much disturbed by this situation and the procedure followed, and I believe he is correct in that statement. In my opinion the matter was very properly put by Michael Barkway in an article in the Ottawa Citizen of February 5. Because his words are concise and go to the root of the grievance I should like to quote a few sentences. He said in part:

> The greatest change in immigration policy since Mackenzie King announced the resumption of immigration in 1947 has gone into effect without approval or even debate in parliament. The essence of it is to give immigration officials greater responsibility and more individual discretion than they have ever had before—
> The reason why such a fundamental change of policy could be made without parliament's approval is that the real control over immigration has always been at the cabinet's discretion. The Immigration Act in practice leaves the government free to do almost anything it wants.

In those words I think we have the crux of the situation, and the correctness of that view was very definitely expressed in the words of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when she made a statement on January 19 of this year. In opening her statement on the change in immigration policy by regulation the minister put the matter in these words:

> The new regulations are in two parts, the first of which has been formally approved by the governor in council as P.C. 1962-86 of January 18, 1962, while the second part requires only the approval of the minister under section 62 of the Immigration Act. These new regulations consolidate, revise and replace the various regulations passed in previous years, including those issued under previous ministerial authority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like particularly to draw the attention of the house to the next sentence in the minister's statement.

> Part I of the new regulations deals with such important questions as visa requirements, admissible classes, the responsibility of transportation companies and most of the major administrative and policy matters dealt with in the present regulations.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a fair assumption to make from the words of the minister, uttered on January 19, that by regulation and by regulation only, will the major administrative and policy matters in relation to immigration be decided. These matters will not be decided by the people of Canada through their representatives in parliament, but will be decided by the minister in charge at the time or by the cabinet. I say, sir, that the hon. member for Cartier has a rightful grievance because the particular principle involved here is whether we, in this country, in matters of such importance as immigration, will be governed by legislation or by regulation. In other words, is the major policy going to be laid down by order in council or by legislation enacted by the representatives of the people? Are we going to have policy and administration by order in council?

This is a subject, sir, upon which a great deal has been said in the past, but apparently it has to be said again. The meaning of democracy is rule by parliament so far as is humanly possible, not rule by order in council. We heard from the member for Cartier and the speaker who followed something of what the present administration has done through regulation, and something of what the previous administration did or did not do. One reason we have this situation is rule by order in council in the field of policy rather than through legislation. Perhaps, sir, I could just give one example that comes to my mind because the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate mentioned the refugees. I seem to remember some rather big headlines this hon. member got when he occupied the position of minister of citizenship and immigration at the time of the Palestinian refugee problem. The former minister, on behalf of Canada said, because Canada was interested in these one million Palestinian refugees, that Canada would be glad to make a contribution by having some of these people. However, he laid down two regulations they had to meet. They had to be able to speak either English or French and they had to have a skill. Although the principle was sound, to the best of my knowledge there were not any of these refugees who came to Canada, because they could not meet the regulations. This was one regulation that was laid down.

When the minister made her statement on January 19 she referred to the order in council of January 18 establishing the new regulations. If you examine them carefully, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe you will find very much difference compared with the previous regulations as to who may come in, how they may come in and the basis upon which they may come in. We have gone too far by regulation instead of legislation, and it is now beyond the power of the administration to handle appeal matters and correct grave injustices. It is as a result of this that we have run into all these complaints, all of these disputes, all of these unhappy things that have developed in Canada and which have been discussed outside of Canada.

I feel, sir, it is because of this attitude of cabinet or ministerial control on such important matters that we have had situations such as the disgraceful manner in which the Chinese problem was handled when we asked that group to be stool pigeons—

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member is now going beyond the scope of the subject under discussion.

Mr. Winch: I understood that was done by regulation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not free to discuss everything that has been done by regulation. It is a very simple and neat point, namely that this change in the law was brought about by regulation rather than by statute.

Mr. Winch: Of course, I always bow to your views in matters of this nature, Mr. Speaker. I come back to whether or not it is proper to establish by regulation what should be the will of the people with regard to immigration policy. We in this group feel very strongly that when it comes to matters of policy, whether it is immigration or anything else, that is something which, in the ultimate, should be the subject of legislation and not regulation. This is particularly true when we consider that for months, even years, we were told there were going to be changes in the Immigration Act itself. We were told for years that not only the regulations but the legislation were under review.

All of us, sir, were definitely of the opinion that there were going to be major changes made by the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, but by legislation. It is understandable, therefore, that we in the house, and the people of Canada as a whole, fail to understand this important announcement of January 19 conveying information about new laws in connection with immigration. These matters were not going to be referred to parliament, because they had already been decided on the previous day by the cabinet. The new law had been enacted by order in council. I suppose, sir, we should have been most happy at the courtesy and kindness of the government in informing us the day after of the action which they had taken. I say there is a very important principle involved here, and that is rule by law or rule by regulation; rule by the people's will by legislation or rule by order in council.

This is a matter upon which one could speak for a long time. However, I am aware of the fact the minister desires to make a contribution to this debate, and it is only right and just that I should leave some time available for her. I think I have made the point clear so far as this group is concerned. We believe in parliamentary democracy and not cabinet dictatorship.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the previous three speakers, may I first of all say a word with regard to refugees. I do not believe that either this government or the previous government can lay claim to being superior to each other in the matter of the treatment of refugees. Canada has an excellent record in this field, quite the best of any country in the world.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fairclough: I, as the present minister, am very proud of it, and I am sure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is proud of it as the previous minister. When I occasionally see articles referring to the remarkable record of other countries in the alleviation of distress among refugees I am sometimes forced to smile at the naïveté of the persons who write these articles and who speak on the subject from public platforms when in actual fact they haven't a clue what they are talking about.

Canada has taken in a great many refugees on a great many occasions. I was in this house at the time the former minister made his announcement with respect to Hungarian refugees, and I know he will agree with me that there was not a dissenting voice here.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: We supported the proposal to bring these unfortunate people to Canada and to do what we could to rehabilitate them. I may say that their record here has been an excellent one. I am also personally proud of the record that has been established by the tubercular refugees who came to Canada. I am proud of the part that the various provinces took in caring for these people, in cooperating with the federal authorities in seeing that they should have proper treatment and that their families could be cared for until the breadwinner, if it were he, or the person who was afflicted, was able once more to take his or her place within the family circle.

Having said that I should like to make a few remarks with regard to the allegations—if I may call them that—which have been made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl). I was intrigued by his introduction of the subject, wherein he talked about the various promises that had been made, and then quoted from two newspapers. If I can read my shorthand notes—I used to write shorthand but I am afraid I am a little rusty—the first article he read I believe referred to a quotation from the Ottawa Citizen. The second article, without identifying any person, did not go so far as to say that information had been gained from any official government source, but just speculated there would shortly be forthcoming a revised act.

I believe I made it clear during the last few months that what would be brought forward would probably not be a new act because we ran into difficulties in attempting to revise the act. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) can appreciate, it is much easier to be more restrictive in drawing legislation than it is to be more flexible, and that was partially the problem which confronted us. Anyway, the hon. member for Cartier said I had intended to wait until I could bring in not just a piece of legislation, not just a half-baked piece of legislation. That is quite correct and that is still my intention. I might say he would have been better advised to follow the same example in his speech.

Mr. Churchill: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is not a new thing to bring in regulations affecting the administration of any piece of legislation. Most pieces of legislation which come before us provide for regulations to be drawn which will ease the administrative problem and spell out the procedures which are to be adopted in handling that particular piece of legislation. So, Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised that the hon. member should criticize the actions of his own colleagues when they were on this side of the house, because under the Immigration Act, which was their baby—I do not know if that is the proper word to use—I find that in Part VII, section 61, the governor in council is authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect "the purposes and provisions of this act and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing may make regulations" respecting several different matters, including persons who require assistance to come to Canada, literacy and other tests, passports and the terms, conditions and requirements with respect thereto. Regulations may also be drawn regarding non-continuous journeys of passengers brought to this country by certain companies, and nationals of a country that refuses to re-admit them. Then there is one I should like to read in full. It is subclause (g) of section 61 which reads:

> The prohibiting of limiting of admission of persons by reason of:
> (i) nationality, citizenship, ethnic group, occupation, class or geographical area of origin,
> (ii) peculiar customs, habits, modes of life or methods of holding property,
> [Mrs. Fairclough.]
> (iii) unsuitability having regard to the climatic, economic, social, industrial, educational, labour, health, or other conditions or requirements existing, temporarily or otherwise, in Canada or in the area or country from or through which such persons come to Canada or
> (iv) probable inability to become readily assimilated or to assume the duties and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship within a reasonable time after their admission.

Then section 62 of the same act says:

> The Minister may make regulations, not inconsistent with this act, respecting the procedure to be followed upon examinations, inquiries and appeals under this act and the duties and obligations of immigration officers and the methods and procedure for carrying out such duties and obligations whether in Canada or elsewhere.

All those things were spelled out in the act. This authority was given to the governor in council and now the hon. member for Cartier says this is all wrong. It was apparently all right for the former government to make regulations under this legislation but is all wrong for this government to make regulations under it. Since when, I ask you?

Mr. Crestohl: May I ask the hon. minister a question?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have only a few minutes and I would prefer to finish.

I might ask the question: since when did a Liberal government submit regulations for any legislation to parliament for debate? I cannot recall regulations being submitted to parliament for debate either under this or any other legislation. The regulations are made according to the authority given to the governor in council under the required legislation, and under the governor in council the government of the day takes responsibility for drawing up those regulations and presenting them to parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the Prime Minister promised to change all that.

An hon. Member: Another interruption.

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of fact I am sure that hon. members of the house will realize, as I have, that apparently both opposition parties were well aware that this subject was to be raised. I was not myself, of course, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I must speak more or less from the few notes I have been able to make while listening to this criticism.

Mr. Churchill: Your speech is better than his.

Mrs. Fairclough: But if my memory serves me well, the former government declared in a speech from the throne in 1951 that it would revise the Immigration Act. Nothing was done. Again, in 1952 they repeated this intention—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was revised.

Mrs. Fairclough: —and that year they finally did bring in a revised act; but that act, although passed, was not proclaimed.

Mr. Pickersgill: What?

Mrs. Fairclough: The following year nothing was said about it, but it eventually was proclaimed and became law, I think late in 1953; again, if my memory serves me well, it was September. That act was brought in. It is true that it was presented to this house for consideration; but when was it presented? It was presented in the dying days of a session and crammed through this house, with little or no time provided to give proper consideration to an extensive act which contained some 74 clauses. Now criticism is being levelled at a government which is attempting in an orderly fashion to bring in legislation affecting people who desire to enter Canada, and affecting their relatives and friends who are in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nothing done in four and a half years.

Mr. Pallett: Tell us about 1919 and hospital insurance.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the record.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has the floor.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, these interruptions do not bother me at all; in fact, I find them rather amusing. I do not wonder that hon. members in the opposition benches become a little irked at their ineffectual criticism of legislation brought down by this government, because they cannot help but think back to those long years of inactivity when they sat on this side of the house; and now, of course, every month seems like a year to them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: And to the public.

Mrs. Fairclough: It was said by the hon. member for Cartier that the people of this country had been led up the garden path. I believe those were the words he used. Mr. Speaker, contrary to his belief, the suggestions which came to my desk from many bodies were carefully considered in the drafting of these regulations. These suggestions came from church groups, religious groups, social service bodies, immigrant aid societies and from some of the hon. member's own close friends. He does not like the regulations. I wonder why, because some of his colleagues outside this house like them. I have had letters to that effect—quite a number of them. I suggest the reason the hon. member does not like them is because they please people too well.

I have no intention of allowing myself to be stampeded into bringing in legislation prematurely, regardless of the howls from the opposition benches. They can shout their heads off from now till doomsday, I will bring in my legislation when I am ready to bring it in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fairclough: I might say this. I have been the minister of this department now for something less than four years and I have been engaged in the study of a revision of this act for something approaching two years. I have received representations from various groups. Those representations were not that this government should hurry and bring in a new act, but quite the reverse: the representations from these groups were, "Go slowly. Do not be too quick in this matter. Give us a chance to talk to you about it". That we have done.

I should have liked to bring in a new act complete with regulations at one time, but it became evident very soon in our study of the act that this was probably not a wise course. Therefore we took the alternative, and we have brought in regulations, which I submit to this house are workable, flexible and will permit the entry of many persons who were heretofore denied entry to Canada.

I think it was in 1959—I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be quoted on this as a statement of fact, because I am depending on my memory—that we admitted some 7,000 persons to this country by order in council because they did not qualify for entry under the old act or the old regulations. This is a rather ridiculous situation when there are so many persons who are welcome to Canada by reason of their peculiar circumstances or qualifications but who are prohibited from entry because of the legislation which is in effect. We believe that with the new regulations we have cured that situation.

I might say that it is still my intention to consult with the various bodies who are interested—those I have mentioned, the immigrant aid societies and religious groups, who have always worked closely with the department—but before doing so we believe we should give these regulations a few months to work, to see what will happen and whether there are perhaps some flaws in them which need to be corrected.

Alleged Abuse of Immigration Regulations

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who I know has been keenly interested in immigration matters and has made representations to my department on countless occasions on behalf of various persons, has said that there is too much done by regulation and not enough by legislation. Mr. Speaker, the hon. members of this house would not want everything spelled out by legislation. Half the hon. members of this house are constantly applying to my department for the exercise of ministerial discretion with regard to cases where people would not be admissible under the regulations. If we are going to tie it down so tightly that everyone is admissible through the act, then I submit that very few people will get into this country.

We wish to give these regulations a chance to work, as I have said, and I can assure the house that I intend to proceed in an orderly fashion. I hope I will have the co-operation of members of parliament in seeing that when the act is revised it meets their wishes and the wishes of the people of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. lady takes her seat—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. lady takes her seat would she permit me to ask her a question? Is it not correct that in 1957 before the election the Prime Minister promised to revise the act and that that has not been done?

An hon. Member: It will be.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, it may very well be, but I do not recall that he ever put a time limit on it; and if he followed the procedure of the Liberal administration he could do it any time within the next 22 years.

Mr. Pickersgill: He will not be here much longer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock it is my duty pursuant to section 4(f) of standing order 56 to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the motion before the house.

Motion (Mr. Fleming, Eglinton) agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $1,072,000.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the house leader would indicate the business for the rest of the week. I think he indicated there were to be estimates but if he could give us some indication of the order it might be helpful to hon. members.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, supplementary estimates will be taken. We will resume where we left off the other day. There is one item to be concluded in the estimates of the Department of Forestry. We will then go back to the beginning of the book of supplementary estimates and take the departments in the order in which they appear there.

After the supplementary estimates are concluded we will then take the estimates of the Department of Public Works. That will be the business, largely, for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 28, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHURCHILL—EDITORIAL CHANGE IN REPORT OF DEBATES

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of the House of Commons and relating to the report of debates. If you will look at Hansard, page 1296, in the second column you will find that I used these words:

> Mr. Speaker, every election promise that has been made has been carried out or will be carried out in the near future.

That was followed by a remark by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—I regret he is not here today—who commended me for what I said by using the words "No one will suffer". In looking at Hansard now I discover that quotation marks have been placed around that expression as if it were not his own. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is improper —

Mr. Robichaud: We know where it comes from.

Mr. Churchill: —that this is an improper action on the part of those responsible, because I fail to understand how the Hansard reporters, who do such efficient work here, would be able to put quotation marks around any interjection. On looking through a large number of Hansards I have been unable to find any instance where an interjection has quotation marks placed around it.

The reason I draw it to your attention, sir, is this. If this practice of altering Hansard by a member is continued it may lead to some very peculiar instances in the future of interjections being made by members and then of recourse to the debates office to have quotation marks placed around those interjections to attribute them to some other source. I consider, sir, that this is an infringement of the rights and privileges of the House of Commons, by this alteration in Hansard without authority.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I speak to the point the Minister of Veterans Affairs made. There is no proof whatever that there has been any alteration to Hansard. In any event the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not in his seat. He is engaged on business that pertains to his duties as a member of parliament. It certainly would be most improper to deal with this matter, in which the hon. gentleman is involved, in his absence. In any event, the minister has not made out any case whatever. He only reminded us again of the promise made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: It is true the matter affects the hon. member who is not here. He will undoubtedly see it in Hansard, and if he has any comment to make about the complaint perhaps he can say so when he is next in the house. On its face it appears that the editing is not correct, in that there are quotation marks where there was no indication of a quotation.

MR. MARTIN, ESSEX EAST—OBJECTION TO HEADING IN REPORT OF DEBATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that on page 1297 of yesterday's Hansard—I think this is a real question of privilege which has some validity, as compared with the false one already raised—if Your Honour will look at the title just above the observations made by Mr. D. V. Pugh, the member for Okanagan Boundary, he will find, "Alleged lack of economic growth". That is not correct. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that the word "alleged" is improperly used in this title, because the opposition has taken the position that there has been a stunting in Canada's economic growth.

Mr. Speaker: I was not aware that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary was a member of the opposition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure that Your Honour would not want that remark to be taken seriously, because the title refers not only to what the hon. member said—

Mr. Walker: No one will take you seriously.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No more seriously than the people of Canada did my hon. friend last night in connection with a most remarkable performance. What the editor, I am sure with no bad intention, has done is to use the word "alleged" in connection with not only the speech of the hon. member for Okanagan

Boundary but the whole content of the debate. Now, the opposition has argued that there has been—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it is unnecessary for the hon. member to do more than draw attention to his objection. I will discuss the matter with the editor.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to the fact that the whole alleged complaint, properly I submit, bears that title; for the Hansard editor wisely inserted the same title over the text of the very speech by which the subject was introduced. I suggest to you, sir, this is clear proof, if proof were necessary, that it is an appropriate title not only to the content but to the manner in which it was raised.

Mr. Benidickson: You should not push civil servants the way you do.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO BOARDS OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-72, respecting the administration of certain crown corporations.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Bourbonnais: The purpose of this bill is to enable the government to appoint members of this house on the board of crown corporations. The House of Commons and the parliamentary committees would then be better informed on the decisions taken by the management of the crown corporations. At the same time, certain prejudices entertained by the public when some of these corporations show deficits would be removed.

*POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES

Question No. 170—Mr. Fisher:

Unto the date February 1, 1962, what effects, if any, have been noted by the Post Office Department as a result of (a) the reciprocal postal rate for publishers in Canada and the United States of America made effective in 1961 (b) the mailed in Canada rate for foreign publications shipped across the border in bulk and placed in the Canadian mail?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

(a) Since the reciprocal postal rate for publishers in Canada and the United States was placed in effect on July 1, 1961, an additional 11 United States publications, which were formerly posted in the United States, are now being forwarded by the publishers to Canada, in bulk, for mailing in Canada to Canadian subscribers.

(b) The present indications are that as a result of an increase in the number of United States publications being mailed in Canada, and an increase in the "mailing in Canada" rate of postage, which was placed in effect on August 1, 1961, the Canada post office will receive an estimated one and three quarter million dollars additional revenue per annum from the publishers of foreign newspapers and periodicals mailed in this country.

PORTRAIT OF LATE R. B. BENNETT

Question No. 190—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Is the portrait of the late prime minister R. B. Bennett, donated by Lord Beaverbrook in the government's possession?
2. If so, is it the intention of the government to take the necessary action to have the portrait of the only native New Brunswick prime minister hung in the parliament building?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Yes, and has been since the presentation to the Canadian people was made through the generosity of Lord Beaverbrook and the University of New Brunswick.

2. Having regard to the size of the portraits of former prime ministers on display in the foyer of the House of Commons, the opinion was that the size of the portrait did not lend itself to be placed permanently among the larger portraits of former prime ministers, and a portrait of Lord Bennett of larger size is being secured.

*PAMPHLET "OTTAWA AIRPORT"

Question No. 204—Mr. Hellyer:

1. How many copies of the pamphlet "Ottawa Airport" were printed in the two official languages?
2. What was the reason for the pamphlet?
3. What was the estimated cost?

Mr. Martini:

1. Number printed—20,000 English, 7,000 French.

2. The department has found a very substantial demand for basic information in pamphlet and pictorial form regarding Canadian airport and terminal developments both in connection with opening ceremonies and on a continuing basis. The pamphlet has served both to provide this information at the time of the opening and to satisfy a continuing stream of inquiries from press, radio and television sources, students, writers, airport organizations in other countries, and from various sources, domestic and foreign.

3. Cost $1,680.17.

*ROADS TO RESOURCES, ONTARIO

Question No. 206—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Has the government of Ontario yet requested the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources:

Questions

(a) To approve, in writing, a road to provide access to potential mineral and timber resources north of Minaki, Ontario, as contemplated in section 2(c) of an agreement, dated December 22, 1959, between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario, or,

(b) To approve for inclusion in the agreement any other road to resources in the area such as to the base metal mines near Werner lake, Ontario?

2. If the answer to 1(a) is in the affirmative, when was the request made?

3. If the answer to 1(b) is in the affirmative, when was the request made, and what are the points of commencement and termination of the road?

Mr. Dinsdale: The answer to 1, 2 and 3 is as follows:

The original program put forward by the province of Ontario in 1958 to be considered in the roads to resources agreement included a project for the improvement of an existing road and the construction of a section of new road from Minaki in the area around Werner lake. The route of the road as proposed was acceptable as a resource road in that it ran through a highly promising mineral and timber area with good potential for the future. While this road was not one of the projects scheduled for early construction, to cover future contingencies, section 2(1)(c) of the agreement—which I assume is the same as the section 2(c) referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River—provided for the inclusion of this road in the program at a later date, subject to my approval in writing, but without the necessity for a supplementary agreement.

By letter dated November 27, 1961, I received from the secretary of the Ontario government's mining access road committee an inquiry as to whether the agreement could be interpreted as meaning that consideration would be given toward approval of improving the existing road from Caribou falls dam site northerly to the base metal mines near Werner lake, by the construction of an additional 18 miles. On December 1, 1961 I replied indicating that section 2(1)(c) of the agreement would apply in this case.

Mr. Benidickson: My question was needed.

*"OPERATION FREEDOM" BROADCASTS

Question No. 209—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the board of broadcast governors received and scrutinized the various materials prepared by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce for its so-called "Operation Freedom"?
2. Has the board examined the releases designed for public service use by radio and television stations which are contained in these kits; and, if so, has it determined whether such material for commentary or spots should be labelled as political statements in the sense that it may attack one or more political parties and support one or more political parties?
3. Has the board considered whether the matter of equal time for rebuttal should be applied with regard to this "Operation Freedom" propaganda; and, if not, would the board consider making an appraisal of the material with a view to determining whether this is the right step to be taken?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the answer to No. 1 is no, the answer to No. 2 is no, and the answer to No. 3 is no.

*RADAR GAP FILLER STATIONS—KITCHEN RANGE SPECIFICATIONS

Question No. 210—Mr. Fisher:

In construction, repair, or maintenance work at the Department of National Defence radar gap fillers, are specifications for contractors so designed that Canadian equipment and material shall be used; (a) if not, would any specifications given to bidders on work at these filler stations contain the requirements of a kitchen range specified as follows: "Dewyer kitchen unit No. E 39-81-5 made by Dewyer Products Corp. Michigan City, Ind., U.S.A." (b) if so, was a Canadian product unsuitable?

Mr. Chambers: Specifications for the equipment referred to in this question contain the following clause: "To the full extent to which they are procurable, consistent with proper economy and the expeditious carrying out of the work, Canadian labour and material shall be employed".

The combination refrigerator, range and sink unit quoted in the specifications was used as a criterion only. If an equivalent product were manufactured in Canada, it would be acceptable.

MR. AND MRS. KARL BUDAN, ALGOMA MILLS, ONT.—POST OFFICE EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 212—Mr. Herridge:

Did Mr. Karl Budan of Algoma Mills, Ontario, write to the Postmaster General on or about January 31 protesting that he and his wife had not been provided an opportunity to obtain employment with the Post Office Department; and, if so, what was the nature of the reply?

Answer by: Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

Yes. The reply was to the effect that at the two post offices mentioned the regular staff was deemed sufficient to handle the additional work during this period. No extra help, authorized and paid by the Post Office Department, was employed at these offices in the past Christmas season.

C.N.R. PURCHASE OF P.G.E. RAILWAY

Question No. 213—Mr. Herridge:

With regard to the purchase of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway by the Canadian National Railways, have there been any discussions or have any discussions been proposed between the federal government and the government of British Columbia or the officers of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

There have been no discussions between the federal government and the provincial government or between the federal government and the railway concerned with respect to the subject matter assumed by the question.

With respect to the Canadian National Railways, the president has advised that he had a personal conversation with Premier Bennett during a short interview on Monday, February 12 and that general railway questions affecting traffic co-operation between the Pacific Great Eastern Railway and Canadian National Railways were discussed.

*PRINTING ERROR IN PAMPHLET "NATIONAL AVIATION MUSEUM"

Question No. 214—Mr. Hellyer:

Were a number of pamphlets, entitled "National Aviation Museum", printed with an error in the spelling of the French translation and subsequently destroyed as a consequence; and, if so, how many were printed, and what was the cost of the copies destroyed?

Mr. Dinsdale: In May of 1960 in preparation for the establishment of the national aviation museum in time for the celebration of the golden anniversary of flying in Canada, 100,000 copies of a leaflet were printed for distribution to visitors when the museum opened. This descriptive leaflet carried text in both French and English on a reversible self cover. Because of the many years of delay in getting this project under way, the work had to be done hurriedly, and unfortunately a spelling error in the original art work for the French cover was not discovered until the printing had been completed. The leaflet was reprinted at a cost of $1,300, which was the cost of the original printing.

The national aviation museum has since come under the jurisdiction of the museum branch of my department. Hon. members will be interested to learn that the museum has attracted widespread public interest and no less than 143,000 persons visited it in 1961.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of this—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister is not called upon to make a case, but only to answer the question.

*MILK SUBSIDY PAYMENTS, EASTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 215—Mr. Pigeon:

Since the federal Department of Agriculture has been paying to farmers a 25 cent subsidy for each 100 pounds of milk transformed into butter and cheese, what is the total amount received by the farmers of the eastern provinces, that is to say the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, and the maritimes?

Mr. Charlton: Up to January 31, 1962, $31,843,000 has been paid to farmers in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island under the 25 cents per hundred pounds subsidy on milk used for manufacturing purposes.

*BUTTER SUBSIDY PAYMENTS, EASTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 216—Mr. Pigeon:

Since the price of butter has been raised by the present government from 58 to 64 cents per pound, what is the total additional amount of money thereby paid to the farmers of the eastern provinces, that is to say the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, and the maritimes?

Mr. Charlton: Creamery butter production in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces totalled 920,772,000 pounds from May 1, 1958 when the price of butter was raised from 58 cents to 64 cents a pound, to January 31, 1962. The increase of 6 cents per pound on this quantity is equivalent to $55,246,320 additional returns to the producers in these provinces.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

QUEBECAIR—OPERATING RIGHTS, SEVEN ISLANDS-QUEBEC

Motion No. 13—Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Chevrier):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the president of Quebecair Limited and/or any other person or persons since January 1, 1960, concerning the granting of exclusive rights to Quebecair Limited to operate between Seven Islands and Quebec.

Mr. Balcer: There would be no objection to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed that this motion may be presented by the hon. member for Ottawa West?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBECAIR—APPLICATION FOR ASSISTANCE

Motion No. 14—Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Chevrier):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the president of Quebecair Limited and/or any other person or persons since January 1, 1960, concerning the application for a subsidy or a payment for its winter operations or for any assistance whatsoever to Quebecair Limited for its air services on the lower St. Lawrence.

Motion agreed to.

GARIBALDI PARK, B.C.

Motion No. 16—Mr. Herridge (for Mr. Winch):

Motions for Papers

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia since January 1, 1960, relating to the establishment of Garibaldi park in British Columbia as a national park.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact that there has been no correspondence on this subject since the date indicated, I wonder if the hon. member would consider withdrawing the motion.

Mr. Herridge: In those circumstances there would be no objection on the part of this group.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the house would allow the motion to stand, because the hon. member for Vancouver East is not here to give his consent to withdraw it.

Motion stands.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT "DO IT NOW" SLOGAN

Motion No. 17—Mr. Tucker:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any correspondence since July 1, 1959, from any person or organization, with the Minister of Labour or the Postmaster General, or any official of either or both departments, regarding the use of the slogan "Why wait for Spring? Do it now."

Mr. Starr: I am advised by my officials that apart from correspondence between officers of the Department of Labour and the Post Office Department, which is considered privileged, there has been no other correspondence on this matter. In view of this I would ask that the hon. member consider dropping this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. Tucker: I agree.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

EXPORT STRATEGIC LIST

Motion No. 18—Mr. McIlraith:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the strategic list referred to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, page 708, Hansard, February 9, 1962.

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has given me the following information on this subject. A similar question was raised in 1956 on July 9; the reference in Hansard is to page 5768. The then minister of trade and commerce, Right Hon. C. D. Howe, said:

Hon. members will appreciate that I cannot table secret and confidential information exchanged with certain NATO and other friendly countries covering controls over the shipment of strategic goods...

This motion cannot be accepted.

Mr. McIlraith: This raises a question of privilege, inasmuch as the minister who has just taken his seat has referred to another list. The reference in Hansard of that date is not to a question which had to do with the Export and Import Permits Act. The remarks of the former minister of trade and commerce had to do with a list which was of international significance in relation to NATO. The two lists are different. The remarks of the minister are not applicable.

Mr. Speaker: The motion might stand until the Minister of Trade and Commerce is here.

Mr. Churchill: The question asked for the strategic list. The answer has been given with regard to that list.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are two strategic lists.

Mr. McIlraith: They are two different matters.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent the motion may be allowed to stand. Otherwise it should be proceeded with. Is it agreed that the motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Stand until the minister is here.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE SUBMISSION ON RAND REPORT

Motion No. 19—Mr. Robichaud:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report made by an interdepartmental committee for submission to the government on the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Rand relating to the Nova Scotia coal industry.

Mr. Flynn: As indicated on February 8 by the Prime Minister, when he answered a question about this report put by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), the report referred to in this motion is privileged and it is contrary to the practice to produce it. I was wondering whether the hon. member would insist on putting his motion. If so, we would have to oppose it.

Mr. Robichaud: In view of the explanation given by the minister I will accept the suggestion that this motion be dropped. However, I intend to come back to the matter later this day during discussion of the estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

PURCHASE OF RAILS FROM C.N.R., QUE.

Motion No. 22—Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between any department or minister and the president of J. P. Boisjoly Industries Limitée, from September 1, 1957, to September 1, 1961, regarding the purchase of rails from the Canadian National Railways at St. Philemon, Chateauguay county, in the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

ARGENTIA FERRY TERMINAL

Motion No. 23—Mr. Tucker:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a letter addressed by the secretary of lodge number 1237 of the international association of machinists, St. John's, Newfoundland, to the Minister of Transport since January 1, 1962, concerning the Argentia ferry terminal together with a copy of any reply thereto.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN EVENT OF WAR—AGREEMENT WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs in the absence of the minister. Notice of this question was sent to the minister's office this morning. Has any agreement been reached between the government of the United States and the government of Canada or any agency or person thereof that would ensure the delivery to Canada of nuclear weapons either before or after the outbreak of war?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is in the negative.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he saw the program which has been characterized as the great Canadian comedy last night on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation network at ten o'clock, and whether the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) was speaking on behalf of the government when he said:

—if we have atomic warheads here we want to have them under our own sole control. That is perfectly natural.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to reply in kind. After all, the hon. member provides some continuing comedy to the house in his questions. As to the latter part of the question, may I say that I am unaware of what the hon. minister said. I can only add that last evening he seemed to have complete control of the situation.

Mr. Hellyer: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the house whether there has been any change in the policy of the government since July 6, 1960, when he advised the house as follows:

> At no time did I say sole control. I said joint control of Canada as to the use and also as to everything connected therewith. That statement still stands.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have not the statement before me. I know that at that time a rather lengthy statement was made. I simply point out the fact that since then discussions have continued between the United States and Canada with reference to this matter. It has been a subject that has caused a great deal of division among all the nations within NATO. However, in so far as Canada and the United States are concerned, at the moment there are no immediate discussions.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It deals with the television program, and it is directed to the Minister of National Revenue in his role as spokesman for the C.B.C. Will the minister ascertain whether a video tape of this program is available so that it can be run again across the country? Both those of us who saw it and many who did not see it would welcome the opportunity of having that entertainment again.

[Later:]

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I regret I was not able to send him notice. In view of the minister's unwillingness to accept statistics supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics or, indeed, figures from the Minister of Finance, as exemplified during his television appearance last evening, is the minister giving active consideration to setting up his own political bureau of statistics?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I should have made it clear last night, Mr. Speaker, that I thought I was being presented with material from the Martin bureau of statistics, and there is a great difference.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister in view of newspaper accounts of a speech made by Premier Bennett in the legislature of British Columbia last evening in which he is reported to have said that he had heard from the Prime Minister to the effect that from now on all was going to go well on the Columbia, that the Prime Minister had bypassed the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice and that they were going to conduct negotiations directly between one another, or words to that general effect.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish first, if the house will allow me to do so, to extend birthday congratulations to the hon. gentleman. None of us at our age like to have birthdays. However, this occasion gives an opportunity to at least extend felicitations to one who has been a long time member of the house.

With regard to the question he asked, I can only say that there has been no communication with the premier of British Columbia along the lines indicated, and that there has been no arrangement made for any meeting or any anticipated meeting.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago the hon. member for Kootenay West asked me a question arising out of the statement made by the premier of British Columbia that he had received a letter from me on Monday. There was a letter written to the premier of British Columbia, as to all the other premiers across Canada, not in connection with the Columbia river but generally in connection with power transmission. Perhaps I might indicate the subject matter by referring to certain parts of the letter. I stated:

> Replies have now been received from the provinces on the subject of a federal-provincial meeting of ministers regarding the problems of the generation and transmission throughout Canada of electric energy. I expect a reply soon from Premier Smallwood but I thought that you would like to know what the other premiers thought of the proposed meeting.

Then I set out the views of the various premiers and went on to say:

> In this connection on February 16 I mentioned in the House of Commons that while power development within a province is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, power developments between provinces are of interest and concern to the federal government.

I referred to the proposed meeting in these words:

> As most premiers agree that a meeting of ministers along the line suggested is desirable, it would seem to me that such a meeting could be held in Ottawa by mid-March if agreeable to you—I would suggest March 19. I am hoping that the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec will see fit to join in the meeting.

Then in the latter part of the letter I stated:

> Three principal questions will be considered at this meeting. The first will be the general advantages to be derived from the regional and interregional, and in certain circumstances international, intercommunications of electrical facilities. The second will be the principal problems involved in long distance power transmission, and the nature of the steps that might be taken to meet them; the third, the roles which the federal and provincial governments could play in the planning, research and development required in order to obtain the greatest benefit to the provinces and the nation.

That letter had to do with the general proposition of a national power grid.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT BY CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I direct my question to the Prime Minister. As there has been a great deal of speculation as to whether the government of red China would meet their February payment on the purchase of Canadian wheat, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether Canada is now in receipt of the payment which I believe was due on or about February 22?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The terms of payment under the long term agreement provided for 25 per cent cash and the balance over a period of 273 days. The first three drafts under this credit arrangement were payable in the latter part of February, and all of them have been honoured on the scheduled date.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's readiness to answer for the Minister of Agriculture questions on the subject of the sale of wheat to red China, will he answer the question appearing first on the order paper today under my name?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has already been allowed to stand at the request of the government, and it will come up again for consideration in due course.

Mr. McIlraith: Speaking on the point of order, may I say that my question was whether the Prime Minister would answer. That question has not hitherto been put.

An hon. Member: No point of order there.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question I wish to put to the Prime Minister with respect to the sale of wheat to China. In view of his kindly remarks to that government, in which he was obviously supported by his followers, is this an indication that there is an intention of exchanging diplomatic recognition with that nation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should not expect an answer on a matter of policy which has been outstanding for such a long time. I fail to see that urgency has arisen suddenly.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO CONCILIATION PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister inform the house as to what leadership he is giving at the moment in the difficult situation involving 110,000 non-operating employees of the C.N.R. and C.P.R. who are in conflict with management with respect to their contractual employment arrangements? Will he indicate whether or not he is proposing to both sides the appointment of a conciliation officer at this time to try to adjust the difficulties, or whether he will accede to the request of the employees that there be a board of conciliation?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): All facilities that are provided under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act will be at the disposal of those involved in this dispute, and I am giving consideration now to the requests made by both the railways and the employees.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the minister inform the house within a few days of his decision as to the opposing requests that have been made to him?

Mr. Starr: I think it would only be proper that I inform the people participating in the dispute first and advise the house afterward.

COAL

RAND REPORT—STUDY BY INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of the statement made in the house nine months ago, on June 1, 1961 by his predecessor, the former minister of mines and technical surveys, to the effect that a formal statement will be issued as soon as it is possible to do so on the report of the interdepartmental committee for study and report upon the probable effect of the specific recommendations of the Rand commission, can the minister advise the house when we may expect such a report?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, this problem is still under consideration, and when a decision is reached it will be indicated to the house.

Mr. Robichaud: It takes a long, long time to decide.

PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

REPORTED REFUSAL OF REAPPOINTMENT BY E. P. TAYLOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but in his absence possibly his parliamentary secretary would take it as notice. Arising out of the announcement that Mr. E. P. Taylor has declined reappointment to the productivity council, can the minister indicate this gentleman's reasons for not accepting reappointment?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take a look at the question and, if it is appropriate, give an answer tomorrow.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF SNOW AT MAIN GATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, and I regret not having sent him notice. It is inspired from listening to his broadcast last night and realizing that he can meet nearly every situation. My question concerns the members of the fairer sex who work in this building. In view of the almost impossible condition of the sidewalk at the crossing on Wellington street in front of the parliament buildings, and in view of the apparent inability of the city of Ottawa to provide even one man for one hour to shovel the snow away, will the minister instruct one member of the House of Commons staff to dig a path through the snow so as to make it unnecessary for members of the fairer sex to have their pedal extremities and other adjacent areas saturated?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will have to seek the permission of the mayor of Ottawa to encroach on her preserves, but I will be glad to do so.

OLD AGE SECURITY

WINNIPEG—INCREASED ROOM AND BOARD CHARGES TO PENSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I regret not having time to give notice. In view of a report in the Ottawa Citizen of February 27 that the Canadian National Institute for the Blind in Winnipeg has been forced because of its deficit to increase room and board charges for old age pensioners to $55 from $45 a month, thus still leaving the old age pensioners with only about 33 cents a day, could the minister inform the house of the approximate date when the government proposes to introduce a measure to provide some real old age security and social justice for Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question started out as though it might be bona fide, but it seemed to me that eventually he has lead up to an argument, and I rule his question out of order.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

Forest research branch—

635. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $80,000.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of points I wish to make on this estimate, since it deals with the research branch of the Department of Forestry. The field of forestry has had a number of important reflections or mirrors held up to it in the last few months, starting with the resources for tomorrow conference last fall, and there have been a number of other meetings to which I should like to refer.

My own interest in forestry research stems from a period spent in building a forestry research library at the head of the lakes and the opportunity that gave me for travelling in the field, and for visiting forestry operations in the United States and Canada. Since then, and because forestry means so much to the economy of my own area, it has always been the paramount interest I have had in terms of economics.

The first point to which I should like to draw the minister's attention is the confusion that exists at the present time amongst foresters themselves as to what kind of forestry research we should conduct and what priorities exist. If the minister took part in the resources for tomorrow conference and looked at some of the preliminary conclusions that were drawn by the two workshops there, I think he will acknowledge this. There seemed to be a number of fields which the foresters themselves, plus the other experts associated with them who came to these meetings, were really not sure should be emphasized. The traditional emphasis toward forest fire protection and the protection, you might say, in the field of forest pathology, were matters that we always had mentioned again and again, despite the fact that many of the younger foresters seemed to feel the emphasis should be much more on the economic problems facing Canadian forestry today.

I should like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that as a result of some questions I asked in the house, sessional paper No. 195 was filed. These questions dealt with a paper given by one of his officials in this particular branch at a joint meeting in Minneapolis of the United States and Canadian societies of forestry. Here I should like to suggest to the minister that if one of his research officers can produce a confusing paper such as this, then we are really in a rather desperate way in economic research at the present time.

I feel I have every reason to be critical of the point of view put forward here. For example, in our particular region the majority of the licences are held by corporations—I won't say the majority in the area, but the majority of the licences—are held by United States owned corporations. I can think of a number of them such as the Marathon Corporation, which is a subsidiary of the American Can Company; Kimberly-Clark, which controls large limits around Longlac; Ontario Minnesota Paper Company, in the western end of northwestern Ontario, and the Ontario Paper Company, the old offshoot of the Chicago Tribune.

Now, United States ownership of the mills and United States licencees are facts with which those of us who live in the area are very familiar. One of the first points I should like to make is that the experience of the natives, if I can include myself in that term—and I was born there—has been that these corporations in almost every sense are as good employers as the Canadian corporations, or better. This is also true in the sense of accepting responsibility for forestry research and responsibility in the field for such things as planting and general care for regenerative practices. You can hardly find a Canadian organization to match them in that part of the country. Despite the respect I have, for example, for the Abitibi Power and Paper Company and Mr. Ambridge, Abitibi cannot compare with Kimberly-Clark in the responsibility it shows toward its limits, its research and the whole protection of future supply. This, of course, is my opinion.

This officer of the department, Mr. Babcock, spoke at a joint United States-Canadian meeting. He brought up this whole question of the problem of an exporting country like Canada. Finally he had this to say:

[Mr. Fisher.]

> It is difficult to evaluate the ultimate effect on the Canadian economy of foreign participation since the variables are extremely complex. It would be incorrect to suggest that this condition is detrimental to the Canadian economy, because regardless of the size and scope of the operations of an international corporation, maximization of profit is its primary concern in the long run. However, it places in the hands of non-residents the basic economic decision making functions for a large segment of the economy.
> Decisions with respect to investment, plant location and expansion, purchasing, pricing and marketing all have their effect on the export of goods. These decisions in the hands of foreign based firms may directly affect the competitive position of Canada in world markets through their influence on the proportion of output allocated to foreign markets and the diversification of production for home consumption.

I have read that too quickly for members to appreciate the gist of it, but it seems to me that here is an economist who has a point but he really does not make it. He sets up a number of factors which would militate against the continuation of United States ownership in Canada, but then lets them go by saying, "Well, after all, really what is there to it?" I feel this is a most unfair kind of approach to make to a topic such as this. It would be better to go and say nothing than go and raise issues that you are not going to see through to some kind of conclusion.

I bring up the corporations, first of all, because this gentleman went to Minneapolis and had some things to say that are even more peculiar about trade unions that operate in the pulp and paper industry. He has a section in his speech called "Wage cost spiral". There are such lovely banalities in that section of his speech as this:

> Most Canadians will agree that the United States is a most excellent neighbour and a comforting ally.

Then this officer touches on the question of the danger we face by living next to the United States because labour in Canada discovers how well paid labour is in the United States. Labour in Canada belongs to the same unions as do the men working in the woods in the United States. Then he winds up with a little homily to this effect:

> Any external factor such as the use of relatively higher wage levels in the United States for labour-management negotiations in Canada, could artificially influence the cost of Canadian production.

Does he really believe this, or why did he bring it forward? I can tell him how this was reported in both Canadian and United States newspapers. The whole emphasis was on the fact that Canadian labour in our woods was looking to United States examples and United States organizations, and had raised wages inordinately high so we were not able to compete as well. I ask the minister whether or not that is the kind of role he feels one of his research economists should be taking. If the man has a case to make against the relationship of Canadian locals in United States international unions, why does he not make it instead of making this half-baked analysis? My point is, if this is a sample of the economic research that goes on in the minister's department, then no wonder when we have a conference such as the resources for tomorrow conference there is a great deal of confusion in the reports coming forward from the research workshop.

Perhaps I should not cite the report that was put forward in the last journal of the resources for tomorrow conference. I know these things were done in a hurry, and they are very definitely synopses. However, I should like the minister to have a look at pages 18, 19, 20 and 21, containing the recommendations and the points made at these research workshops. I think he will agree that in forestry we have to get away from the idea that research is a good word. Sure, it is an okay word, and everybody loves the word "research"; however, the research has to have some purpose.

I certainly feel that one of the first moves that should be made, as a result of the mix-up in ideas expressed at these workshops, is that these things need to be tied together.

I am not convinced in my own mind that the research being carried on at the present time in the minister's department is really valuable. I can give him an example of this. There was a paper published just the other day relating to skidding practices and how many logs could be brought out in a certain time. This was a fairly expensive study but I ask myself is this the sector in which federal research should be concentrated? What is the Canadian pulp and paper association and its woodland section doing? I know their publications and I would say almost 40 per cent of them deal with just this kind of study. In terms of priorities what is our forestry research division doing in a field such as skidding, taking examples from the Petawawa forestry research station on the length of time it takes to skid? If you are going into this kind of work the place to go into it is on the job.

I would like to suggest to the minister that there needs to be a reappraisal of what kind of research his officials are going to do. I could give him an example from some of the problems we are facing in my area. The whole question relates to two fields, one silviculture and the other logging management. One is the very key question of logging costs. That is fundamental; and the other is the whole relationship of spruce to our pulp and paper industry.

It is very apparent when you talk about forests you do so from either the industrial or the government point of view, and I say this not to cast a slur on any man in any branch, or on the forestry policy of the Ontario government, but it is apparent that every forester is concerned about the way we are cutting our spruce.

The only substantial argument that one can put against this was put just last week by the forester for an Ontario paper, a man named Mr. Bruce Thompson, who read a paper at the meeting of the provincial foresters association for Ontario held in Port Arthur. He indicated that it was not industry's responsibility to worry about research or worry about regeneration, rather it was industry's responsibility to worry about selling and keeping up production and lowering costs.

There has been tremendous confusion in this particular area, and the use of spruce lies right in the middle of it. As most hon. members are aware, in the paper and pulp industry the fundamental ingredients do not have to be spruce, pine, birch or anything like those. It is a question of cellulose. It is a very significant event that Mr. Thompson expressed himself as he did. Why worry about premium kinds of cellulose that you find in spruce, when the chemical engineers can come along and clear up the whole problem? The main point is that as long as you use some kind of wood it will provide you with cellulose. There is the further argument that since poplar and birch are considered inferior species, and they grow much faster than spruce, then it is not wrong to fall back on the chemical engineers and be confident about them, because in the past 10 years the advances in chemical science have led to an increased production of quality newsprint and other papers of all kinds being made from products other than spruce.

Here is an area in which I am positive I am right, either scientifically or economically. At the present time we do not know whether we should be worrying about our spruce regeneration or not. Some companies are, and they are planting millions of trees a year. Other companies could not care less, and argue what is the difference? Surely this is crucial so far as the future of our forests is concerned. We could waken up in 10 or 15 years time and find we have not a substantial area of decent spruce to cut, that we are overcut. I have only to point out the experience we had in the past with white pine, if anyone says this could not happen.

As I said, this is one fundamental question of research which the department should tackle, whether there is any need at the present time to worry in so far as our newsprint pulp supplies are concerned, and whether we are overcutting spruce and not developing alternatives to spruce. It is my contention that the department should go very far to influence the kind of forestry policy we are ultimately going to get.

The other problem I would like to raise with the minister is fundamental, vitally important and very delicate. That is the question of wood costs and our competition. We in my part of the country are accused of having the highest wood costs in the world. It is said that down in the southern United States you do not need a woods department; all you need to do is carry your woods department around in you back pocket because you have a whole bunch of negro settlers willing to work at very low rates on subcontracts, and because these settlers are impossible to organize they cannot have a higher wage rate.

It is argued that we must compete with this trend, but the argument never seems to be carried directly to its conclusion, although apparently the minister's economist who spoke in the United States went part way. The answer seems to be that Canadian labour working in the woods industry should not be prepared to take any more increases, and cut down in its demands. Now the whole point about this, as any trade unionist knows, is that all the paper companies have found their paper stocks moving in the last few weeks as a result of the dividend which Abitibi declared not so long ago. As a result of the Canadian government devaluing the Canadian dollar, the wood and paper companies in Canada have never had such beautiful balance sheets since 1956 as they have had this year. However, the men who actually start the whole business going, getting the wood to the mills, now want more when they see this happening; yet we have this story going around all the time that our wood costs are too high and that we are pricing ourselves out of world markets, including the United States market.

Is this not a challenge to the researchers? Is this not a problem for the national government to come up with the answer? I would draw the minister's attention to a statement made by the president of Abitibi. He says the logging tax is outrageous. Mr. Ambridge, the president of Abitibi, says world markets have been lost to the woods industry because of the outrageous logging tax. What does the minister's expert tell him about that? Has he any advice on that? What does he say to the Minister of Finance when this subject is brought up? Does his economist tell him that the logging costs are putting us out of the United States market? It seems to me that these are vital and important questions to ask at this time about our forest research.

I would suggest that the minister has had a magnificent period of quiet in which to take over and assume the responsibilities of his department. He has not had tremendous pressure put on him by this house. He has not had critical pressure put on him. I am not bringing that pressure to bear on him now, but I suggest it is about time for him to crystallize some of these problems, particularly as they relate to forestry research.

The point I would like to underline again is that it has its effects on my region of the country where the dream, like in many other areas interested in the pulp and paper industry, is to have substantial forest communities. I am speaking about the social aspect of forestry, and every trade union leader of intelligence in the industry can tell the minister that we need to get away from the incentive kind of thought. We need to work to the stage where everybody is on a daily rate. All the professional foresters that I encounter tell me that we need to move toward a day rate because this is the way to get responsible cutters in the bush, men who through continuity and through living in a community are going to be more than the standard lumberjack who goes in, makes a big clean up of $75 or $80 a day on occasion for a few months and then goes away for the rest of the year.

I see the Minister of Labour sitting there. I remember that he went to the lakehead and someone told him of the case of a man who made, I think it was $8,000 in six months, and spent the rest of the year drawing unemployment insurance. I do not think this is the standard practice, but those very examples are the kind of things we should like to get away from in our part of the country. We would like to have stable communities in which men work at forestry the whole year round. This would have immense social consequences for good. For example there is the improvement we could put into schools, and the whole social relationship of an area could be shifted and changed.

No one likes the kind of situation where you have 3,000 or 4,000 men either working terrifically hard or walking the streets of Port Arthur or any other northwestern Ontario town. At the present time this is not the responsibility of the federal government except in a very peripheral way, but I do suggest that here is an area of research and an opportunity for leadership that the minister has with his Department of Forestry.

I know there are examples in our own region of what can be done. One of the problems I could point out to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that relates to this question is the fact that we have an indigenous Indian population in the woods, but very few of them work on pulp and paper operations. Why is it that this is so? This is, in a way, their own land, their own forests, and why cannot they get jobs? Why are they not encouraged to work in the forests? Why cannot some liaison be established, not just in one place but in many places so they can fit into the labour field in the forests?

I suggest there is a good example in Kimberly-Clark in Longlac, Ontario, where very strenuous efforts have been made by this company to develop a year round labour force, probably at considerable cost to themselves. Here is almost a pilot project for the minister's research people. They could go in there and see what are the factors that make this work at Longlac. If it can work there, why cannot the other companies follow suit?

I should very much like the minister, in following up these things, to pay a visit to northwestern Ontario and also to the pulp and paper areas of Quebec. I do not mean a visit to the city of Port Arthur or Fort William, but to the towns where actual cutting takes place. I am thinking of places such as Beardmore, Longlac, Geraldton, Caramat, Ignace and similar parts of the country.

I hope the committee will forgive me for becoming so wrapped up in this particular topic, but I must confess that I have a great feeling of exasperation in this field. I have been closely associated with foresters for about eight years. Some of my best friends are working for the provincial government in the fields of research and industrial forestry. I have never met a profession that is so confused as the forestry profession seems to be at the present time. That is why I have perhaps put an inordinate responsibility upon the federal department to give some leadership in this field.

In case those few remarks about the profession of forestry may be taken in the wrong way, I sketched out the reasons for the confusion in an article that appeared in the Canadian foresters professional journal; but in a nutshell they seem to be this. The forester in his professional attitude is concerned with the future. He has to be, because this is the cycle that he is up against in biology. Also the forester, in terms of industry or government management, is up against the annual report and the quarterly dividend. Somehow in the straddle between those two points of view both the idealism and the assuredness of the forester seems to be lost, and as a consequence I can only think of one or two companies in Canada where the professional forester really has the kind of influence on forest policy that he deserves. One of the things that keeps staving off his movement toward a more responsible position is the very confusion that seems to be raised about goals and objectives.

Coming back to where I started, I cannot think of anything better to confuse objectives and goals than the kind of paper presented in Minneapolis by the economist from the minister's department.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the hon. member for Port Arthur and I am very glad to see such a keen interest in the forestry industry expressed from different parts of this house in the last few years. I speak as one who has no direct interest in management, and very little other interest in the pulp and paper industry at the present time; but for many years I have felt that the dominion government, no matter which party was in power, failed to take the proper interest in this very important and foremost basic industry of our country.

I cannot altogether agree with my hon. friend's remarks, but I am not going to speak of them in a controversial way except to say that I think the department has done a great deal to assist the provinces. After all, the forestry industry is connected with and has been regarded mostly as being the responsibility of the provinces. That is why I think governments here in Ottawa over the years felt that they did not have much to do with the industry.

However, when one considers the revenue the dominion government receives directly and indirectly from the great pulp and paper industry of this country, I think a very small proportion of it has been contributed back to the provinces in co-operation with them and for their assistance.

The hon. member has mentioned an article presented at an international meeting by someone in the Department of Forestry. To my mind this is not of any great significance. Sometimes these papers are well written and sometimes they are not so well written. In fact, I do not think there was anything very wrong with the article that was written. I do not agree that the research should be along economic lines or that the Minister of Forestry should get out into the bush and show them how to drive a logging horse or skid the logs, because there are other fundamental parts and functions that his department could play.

I well remember that our ex-prime minister, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, was keenly interested in the pulp and paper industry. I know from personal conversation with him that he also felt his government, and probably previous governments, did not do as much as should have been done. I do not say this in any political manner except that I compliment the present minister and this government for having done a little more on behalf of the dominion than has ever been done before, and yet not quite enough.

Mr. Benidickson: They have collected more in taxes.

Mr. Rowe: Yes. Well, in better times they always do. I merely mentioned that there are other factors which are basic to the preservation of this great resource. When one considers what is used in the pulp and paper mills and in the lumber mills, and what is still used for firewood, it is rather frightening to realize that there is more spruce, jackpine and timber of different species burnt in this country in forest fires and destroyed by fungus and insects than the entire amount used by the pulp and paper industry. Surely, then, this is the angle that should get first priority.

I know it is difficult for the dominion government, our constitution being as it is, to interfere too much with the administration of the departments of lands and forests in the respective provinces, but I may say it should be just about as possible, constitutionally, to do so as it is to interfere with agriculture. I believe we have only touched the edge of what the dominion government could do and should be doing in this respect, and I am glad the trend is toward co-operation with the provinces in this field.

I believe the government has in the first year, spent $5 million on assisting the different provinces. In addition, $1,250,000 is to be distributed in the different provinces toward the purchase of fire fighting equipment. I hope there could be a working arrangement with the Department of National Defence so that when these major fires take place prompt assistance could be forthcoming. No one who has ever experienced one of these great fires, such as that which happened last year in Newfoundland and those which occasionally happen in northern Ontario—the district to which the hon. member for Port Arthur has referred—can ever forget it. The destruction is simply tragic: To think that we, collectively, the dominion government and the provincial governments, should allow an annual destruction in these rich black forests of more acreage than is used in all the pulp and paper industries in Canada!

We hear people worrying about the amount of timber that has been consumed by the pulp and paper industries. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Port Arthur compliment the United States companies who have subsidiaries here in Canada. I know most of these companies very well—Kimberly-Clark and many others he has mentioned. I have no brief for any particular company, but I cannot think the hon. member is entirely impartial when he criticizes the company in his own district—the Abitibi company—for not being as up to date in every respect, particularly in connection with research, as any of the companies to which he referred. I think that there are many fine companies in the country, and one of the finest is the great Abitibi company which, of course, gives employment to many people. It is fair in its treatment of labour, as the Great Lakes Company and other companies have been, and I think Kimberly-Clark and its subsidiaries have carried out a great deal of research and are to be complimented for it. However, from the nature of this great industry and of the constitutional responsibility shared by the different governments, provincial and dominion, it is difficult to see how the dominion government can fit in today and exert as much influence as the industry might warrant.

Nevertheless I do believe that a great deal more could and should be done in co-operation between the federal and the provincial departments. I compliment the minister on the steps which have been taken along this line and I hope they may continue. I trust that more money will be spent in this direction, if only on roads connecting the forests of the different provinces because, after all, there is no better way to lay the basis of a sound protection against fire, fungi and insects than to have access roads through these great timber areas.

People speak about the pulp and paper industries and the amount of timber they use. They accuse them of cutting down the trees and ravaging the forests, thinking about nothing but profits. May I remind the committee that the pulp and paper industry is, generally speaking, across Canada, only earning between 3 and 5 per cent on the money it has invested? As I say, I have no brief for the Abitibi company and I mention it because it is a company with which I have no connection; in fact it might be said I was competitive with it. The hon. member was worrying about the men who are working for that company and about the other pulp and paper workers and bushworkers in Canada. I would remind him that they are among the highest paid workers in the world. I notice the hon. member did not say anything about the 33,000 shareholders, 75 per cent of whom are small shareholders. In fact, over half the shareholders might well be widows, retired school teachers, retired professional people, or retired members of parliament, even, who might have a few dollars invested. I would venture to say that the holdings are a great deal smaller on an average than the amount of investment it takes to employ one labouring man.

Mr. Fisher: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he assuming from my remarks that I was critical of the Abitibi company, aside from the research program?

Mr. Rowe: No.

Mr. Fisher: That was what I was criticising in connection with Abitibi and I should like to make the point clear.

Mr. Rowe: I understand. I only mentioned the Abitibi company as an example. I might well have taken the whole industry. I am in no way inferring that the hon. member was critical of the company's attitude either to the men or to the shareholders, except that he did mention it was less efficient in some respects, with regard to research and so on, than some of its United States competitors.

Mr. Fisher: My comments were specifically related to research. I am the first to recognize that among the pulp and paper companies the Abitibi company for various reasons is the most popular company to work for.

Mr. Rowe: I am glad to hear the hon. member's opinion on that, though I might be prepared to offer him an argument on it. But I am glad he has cleared up his position in respect of the Abitibi company. I am speaking in generalities. I do not want the hon. member—

Mr. Fisher: I am not scared of the president of Abitibi, Mr. Ambridge; but I am not going around lambasting him either.

Mr. Rowe: I know Mr. Ambridge is not scared of you, either.

It takes much work and effort to build up a great industry such as the pulp and paper industry and again I compliment the government on the steps they have taken to assist in this direction. I hope these efforts will be given encouragement by all hon. members in the future.

I can well recall a time in this parliament when practically nothing was spent by the federal government on the great pulp and paper industry, despite the revenue which came into the coffers of the dominion government for so many years. Again I suggest there is tremendous research work to be carried out with reference to destruction caused by insects, fungi and fire. So far as reforestation is concerned, practically every important company in Canada is doing a great deal. The hon. member for Port Arthur shakes his head but I should like to tell him that independent of what any of the companies may be doing there is a great misconception with regard to what can be achieved by assisting in reforestation. I have tramped through the bush a good many times over the years in which I was more closely interested in and responsible for this big industry. I have seen areas which will not have on them, it is true, for fifty years after it is cut down, wood which is fit to cut again. However, in some areas I myself have counted ten times as many little spruce growing up as spruce trees that were cut down. The most advanced and most educated silviculture scientists today, while they differ a great deal, believe that our general natural reproduction, if it is protected from fire, will amount to between 85 per cent and 90 per cent generally right across the board.

Trees are just like other products that grow. A few years ago some hon. members asked about this matter. I remember one hon. member asked why the pulp and paper industries and the lumber industry should be allowed to go into the forests and cut them down. I might ask some of my friends from western Canada a similar question. When they have miles of beautiful golden wheat that looks so beautiful from the aeroplane or from the train, why cut it down when it is ripe and ready to harvest? It is cut because the next crop will come on. Our forest industry is somewhat the same. When the trees are ready to cut and there is a market for them, they should be cut. They should be taken as a crop. The difference is that it takes from 60 to 70 years to grow a spruce tree and it probably takes fewer months to grow a crop of wheat, probably six months.

On the other hand, as has been mentioned, research is now being carried out no doubt by the companies. Lowering the costs of production is of vital importance in ever growing competition throughout the world. That is something that is always changing. The competition today in the world is entirely different from what it was a few years ago. There is competition from the Scandinavian countries and, though not as well known, from Russia. I have heard it said that there is not much competition from Russia because their streams run the wrong way and that when they freeze up it is impossible to drive. That is all very fine. However, I have seen some of the most beautiful pulpwood in the world come in at different seasons of the year from Russia in years past for far less than our cost of production. It was better trimmed and peeled and was in beautiful shape. Hence, we have competition in that regard. Any research that can be done in order to cheapen production is all to the good.

I know that a few years ago many companies had three times as many men in the bush as they have now. Many companies had as many as 1,000 teams and some of them had 2,000 teams of horses drawing out pulpwood, or skidding, which the hon. member mentioned this afternoon. Now some of the same companies have not any horses at all and one third the number of men are moving out the wood. The same thing is happening in general automation, as a result of mechanical advancement, in agriculture and other basic industries.

The hon. member mentioned chain saws. I can remember when the boast used to be made that if a man was strong enough he could, with a bucksaw, cut three cords to four cords of wood a day. Now two smart fellows going through university can take a chain saw and, as my hon. friend knows, can sometimes produce as many as 30 cords a day. Such is the march of progress.

I hope that we shall have a new look at the possibilities of protecting these great virgin forests. We have tremendous forest resources in this country. We are blessed with forest resources such as few other countries have ever been blessed with. The hon. member suggests that perhaps we are cutting too much spruce. May I suggest that spruce will grow and will replenish itself just the same as any other trees do. Chemical science is now finding out that just as good paper can be made from many other sources of wood. A few years ago they did not believe that could be done at all. Some assert that in a few years to come many other species of hardwoods will be used just about as widely as spruce is used at the present time.

Again I wish to compliment this government on the fact that, along with the other things they have done, they have a forward look with regard to the forest industry. I may say that at the present time I think they are looking as far into it as they feel it is constitutionally possible in order to assist this great industry to perpetuate itself and to protect it from fire, insects, fungi and so on. May I suggest that I believe they are on the right road, in the first place with respect to access roads to these regions. We have virgin forests that are not accessible to the present mills. In the next quarter of a century these forests will no doubt have mills in their midst. In the meantime, with access roads from one province to another into these districts in order to protect them when the forests are struck by lightning and fires are started or are infested with fungi, budworms and other insects which destroy the trees, these forests can be accessible through these roads.

[Mr. Rowe.]

While I personally think we have waited a long time to play the proper part in co-operating with the provinces in assisting the forest industry, again I wish to compliment the government for going as far as they have gone in the plans they have for greater support of and co-operation with the provinces in the future. I leave this thought with you, Mr. Chairman. I believe the features they are emphasizing are not so much the research that has been done, as mentioned by the hon. member for Port Arthur, in telling the companies how to handle their labour, how to reduce their costs or, in other words on the side of economics—I believe that is their responsibility—but are more in the direction of protection of the virgin forests in the years that are ahead from fire, insects and other destructive forces.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): At this stage, Mr. Chairman, and before attempting to make any observations in connection with the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Port Arthur and by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, I think it would be of interest if I were to give the particulars as to just where this $80,000 which is at present before us for consideration is being spent. I am sure the Minister of Labour would be interested. It is being spent in connection with the winters work program.

I will give to the committee briefly the general location and the general description of what is being done with the funds hon. members are being asked to vote. In Alberta, at Kananaskis forest experiment station, for cutting rights of way for access roads, clearing existing roads and boundary lines, we are asking for something over $6,200, furnishing 25 man-months of labour. In Manitoba, at the Riding Mountain forest experimental area, for stand improvement cuttings to release young white spruce for aspen overstorey, we are asking for a matter of $2,000. At Petawawa forest experiment station, for cutting rights of way for access roads, clearing boundary lines and plantation fire-guards, clearing and preparing land for planting experimental work, various stand improvement cuttings and thinnings, we are asking for a total of $54,350. In Quebec, at Valcartier forest experiment station, for cutting rights of way for access roads, clearing existing roads and boundary lines, we are asking for a matter of $5,450. The next is the Acadia forest experiment station near Fredericton, New Brunswick, constructing access roads, clearing boundary lines and areas for planting, various stand improvements, cuttings and thinnings, a total of $14,000. There is also an additional amount with respect to the forest at camp Gagetown. The total comes to the $80,000 requested in the item now under consideration.

It was with great interest, Mr. Chairman, that I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur. I know that he comes from a part of Canada which is noted for the fact that the pulp and paper industry, the forest products industry, if you like, plays such an important role in the general well-being of the area. He has indicated to my satisfaction by his observations that he has given the matter a good deal of careful consideration and has devoted considerable time to a study of the various problems of research and the proper methods or proper activities that should be carried on to improve the forests so that this absolutely renewable resource will be maintained in perpetuity. I appreciate his various observations. I cannot, and neither do I think he would expect that I would attempt to solve all the problems about which he has expressed some misgivings. I assure him and every hon. member that we have a fine group of very capable people in the Department of Forestry who are available to every member of the house and every Canadian citizen for the furnishing of any information that will seem to contribute toward the general well-being of every citizen of our country.

The hon. member has indicated that he has read the report of the resources for tomorrow conference and has also read some of the speeches made by one of the economists in the department, including one speech made in Minneapolis, and that this has aroused within his mind a certain degree of confusion. I am sure he would be the first to agree that undoubtedly in the field of experimentation, and to some degree at least that is what research is, we will always continue to have a certain degree of confusion because if we do not have it, research will not be necessary at all. I assure him that I have heard very capable people argue from diametrically opposite points of view with respect to a question concerning forestry practice. The two gentlemen I have in mind at the moment were very successful in their particular field of endeavour, forestry, but they had absolutely opposite views with respect to research and with respect to methods and the extent to which cutting should be carried on.

In connection with my own business activities, when I was a little younger I remember quite well one man who I believe loved every tree on a particular lot to such an extent that we were never able to persuade him to sell us the stumpage from the lot. Finally, however, he decided to do so but he was very stringent in laying down the conditions under which we were to operate. Only trees of a minimum certain size and larger on the stump were to be cut and we were to cut them very low. He imposed all these conditions, which seemed to be a very proper attitude for him to take. We carried out the operation and if we hesitated to follow his conditions he saw to it that we did. We carried out his directions to the letter. The logs were cut in the fall. During the following winter there was a terrific windstorm and the trees he had forced us to leave, expecting that they would grow, become larger and be more valuable, so that he could go out and pat them almost every morning, were all blown down.

This may seem to be a somewhat uninteresting little story, Mr. Chairman, but I mention it to indicate that I do not think there is complete unanimity—in fact, quite the opposite—among all foresters and all operators with respect to the manner in which forests should be handled and cut.

I should like to come back for a moment to the field of research. I am the first to acknowledge frankly that my experience in research is comparatively recent. My research was pretty much in the field of practical forestry from the point of view of one who went into the woods at a very early age and worked there for a good portion of his life. Research, both basic and applied, was something in which I had not had too much experience beyond reading articles in magazines and periodicals.

I do think, however, that we might very well consider that we are not going to get all the answers quickly with respect to the problem of the continuation of our forest resources from year to year, but I believe that we are making progress. I believe that we are finding out things every day that we did not know before. I believe that we are getting information concerning the forests and forest management.

At the present time a conference of forest officials from all over Canada is going on in Ottawa, and I was greatly interested in listening to the remarks of the deputy minister when he addressed these people last Monday morning. He spoke to them about the problems of forest management. Then he said, "In connection with your investigation of proper methods of forest management, remember that you should always keep in mind forest management in the broadest sense of the word and it starts with three p's". He was not referring to any front-bench members of the opposition whose names start with "P" but rather to production, protection and processing. He said that forest management in its best and broadest sense is needed to stimulate these three desirable results, and that is what will contribute a great deal to the general well-being of all our people and the continuation of the industry.

The hon. member for Port Arthur speaks of forest economics. I agree that it would be folly for parliament to vote money for the purpose of stimulating the production of species of trees for which there is no market or which some other country, by virtue of its more favourable situation with respect to production, might be able to produce at a much lower price. We have to acknowledge that in this day and age we are living more and more in one world than ever before, and every day that goes by we find that this is more the case. Whether or not we like it, we do face world competition. Therefore I should like to say to the hon. member for Port Arthur that I believe it is necessary that the economics be studied quite carefully. We must address ourselves to the production of the type of trees which we can produce with some natural advantages and which will be of a sufficiently superior quality that we will not only be able to hold our own but will have an advantage in the markets of the world.

I am sure he would also be the first to acknowledge that in a free country the officials who devote their time to studying certain aspects of forestry such as the economics of it may express opinions during a public address or anything of that nature which might be construed as not being final. I do not believe this is unnatural. I think it is difficult, if not impossible, to arrive at a conclusion with respect to everything. The fact that our aims are brought out into the light, the difficulties presented; the fact that the end result for which we are striving is mentioned, seems to me contributes something to our general knowledge and are somewhat thought-provoking in their application.

I do not believe the hon. member would be too critical of the fact that a conclusion was not reached with respect to the various problems that were mentioned by the gentleman from our department who spoke at the international conference in Minneapolis. In so far as the matter of applied research versus basic research is concerned, how much time should a department devote to basic research? How much time and how much money should the department spend on something that is going to be of benefit 25 or 30 years hence? The hon. member for Port Arthur pointed out that the department used money to tell the operators how to skid logs. I must confess that I cannot become very enthusiastic about that myself. However, I do believe there is a question to be determined there. I would be the first to acknowledge that I am not certain just what the answer is. I cannot contribute too much to it by way of definition.

I will say, however, to all hon. members that one does not easily forget the habits of a lifetime. In the setting up of the Department of Forestry, I seemed to have the idea that I wanted to refrain from duplicating, at great expense, something which already existed, perhaps in other departments or perhaps in the provinces. If, in the opinion of some hon. members we have been slow, I assure you it is not because of any lack of desire to make progress and contribute something to the well-being of all Canadians, but it is due to the fact we have always had to count the cost of everything before we undertook it. I believe we are nicely on the way, and we are making progress. I think there are many things we are determining from day to day that will be of benefit to the country. In the study of silvicultural methods, forest management and so on, to which I referred in general terms, I think we are making headway.

The hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned the matter of black spruce. Those of us who have been in the lumber business know—and I can see he has given the matter considerable study—that black spruce is a wood of considerable density. We have pulp-mills from Ontario and Quebec coming to New Brunswick looking for black spruce of high density. During the hon. member's remarks he mentioned that today chemists could apply to any kind of wood a chemical treatment that would produce an equally satisfactory basic raw material. But, Mr. Chairman, let me just mention one point, and this goes back to economics again: I am told by the pulp and paper people that a high density spruce will produce 20 or 25 per cent more pounds, more weight, than will the balsam fir, for instance, which we have all over Canada.

To what does this all add up? It simply adds up to this, that the pulp and paper industry, the lumber industry and other industries based on the forests are somewhat complex. However, we are still making progress. Things are being improved. I am one of those who measure improvement by the fact that companies engaged in business are making profit. I am one of those who thinks that profits make good times. I am one of those who believe these extra profits that people have, as individuals and as corporations, all lead to greater expansion and that leads to good times. I am a firm believer in profits. I agree, generally, with the hon. gentleman's observations in connection with the distribution of these profits. I believe that is a matter which is, generally speaking, taken care of.

I was very much impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. He mentioned that he had been associated with the industry for a long time and had found that it was possible to stimulate business, to keep it going and do the things that would contribute to expansion. During his remarks the hon. member for Fort William used the expression—Port Arthur, I should have said. I was last spring on a visit to Fort William, and I want to say at this time that the hon. member for Fort William was extremely kind to me. He certainly showed me around the town. I regret the fact that I was not able to call on the hon. member for Port Arthur. I made some inquiries, but he was not in the city at that time.

The hon. member used the expression that we should address ourselves to the general proposition that we should crystallize our problems. In my opinion, that is fine as an objective and we should all strive towards it. I do think it is going to take a prolonged time before we crystallize all problems. We are working towards that end and I am sure that, in his capacity, he is working towards that end also. But I am also sure that everybody within the sound of my voice in this chamber is working towards that end, to crystallize all our problems; but I doubt if we shall achieve that objective in our lifetime. However, it will be a lot of fun trying. That is really what we will get out of life. What we will get is this joy of working and joy of trying, with sometimes a great sense of satisfaction in having achieved something. I am sure that is what we are all striving to accomplish.

I appreciate the comments which have been made in connection with the forestry department and I assure all hon. members that if at any time there seems to be any additional information which they do not want to bring publicly to my attention in this chamber, they would be very welcome to visit the department to the see the things that are being done and get a better view of the general objectives of all the capable staff connected with it.

Mr. Robichaud: As has been stated this $80,000 is to provide a further amount for the operation and maintenance of the forestry research branch of the forestry department. The minister has just explained the purposes for which it is required. It is to provide certain winter works programs in different provinces, which will mean about $57,000 in salaries and wages.

We all know that research in forestry has a different purpose. First of all it is aimed at protecting our forests, increasing production and, at the same time, helping in the processing of our forestry products. In doing this it also helps the general economy. It improves conditions throughout the country, but it must also provide some assistance, some relief, to those who are more closely connected with the industry.

We understand the Minister of Forestry has some practical interest and very practical experience in this field, but I would like to refer very briefly to one class of people who are interested in forestry, the small farmers who have woodlots of their own and who must derive a living from their woodlots. I am sure the Minister of Forestry is aware of the statement made by the Prime Minister at Rimouski on February 26, 1958, when he stated that a Conservative government would introduce to parliament a new agricultural price support to provide farmers with a higher income. At that time he suggested that wood might also be brought under the protection of subsidies. The Prime Minister's own words were taken down and reported in the Toronto daily Star of February 27, 1958, as follows:

> I hope, and representations have been made, that the advisory committee and the stabilization board (which will administer the act) will give consideration to including farmer-produced woods so they will know the lowest prices they will receive a year in advance.

I am sure the Minister of Forestry knows what the Prime Minister meant when he made that statement.

Mr. Benidickson: The northern Ontario farmers thought that.

Mr. Robichaud: A few minutes ago the hon. member for Port Arthur said the pulpwood companies never had it so good. I am not in a position to discuss that statement at this time, but if such is a fact, I would like the Minister of Forestry to tell us why farmer owners of woodlots in New Brunswick have to be satisfied with $9 to $11 per cord for their pulpwood if their wood is so good for pulp products. Of course the Minister of Forestry may say this is a provincial matter. Probably he would be right in saying so but, if such is the case, then I would like an explanation of the statement made by the Prime Minister in Rimouski to the effect that the stabilization board was prepared to give consideration to including farmer-produced woods so that they would know a year in advance the lowest prices they would receive.

We know that up to the present time pulpwood is not one of the nine products which come under prices support, but we also know that the act gave the prices stabilization board wide powers to include other commodities. It would be interesting to know what the Minister of Forestry is doing to help that class of farmers who need assistance.

Mr. Howard: This is an extremely important item even though the amount of money is only $80,000. It is important because of the effect which it could have on our forest industry. I say this because of a degree of personal background in the industry itself in British Columbia, and also because it is estimated that 30 to 40 per cent of the economy of British Columbia rests upon the forest industry, that is, the all inclusive forest industry, the sawmill industry, pulp and paper, logging and the like.

I can appreciate the expression used by the Minister of Forestry to the effect that he did not want to rush full-scale into a huge program of expenditures until there was some assurance that there would not be duplication and that it would be beneficial. What we want to ensure in the field of research, whether it be in forestry or anything else, is that it be done on a regular and planned basis. It would be detrimental to the effectiveness of a research program if the appropriations for it were handled on a sort of hit and miss, feast or famine basis, fluctuating from one year to the next depending upon the sharpness of the red or blue pencil which the Minister of Finance uses. This is especially so in the field of so-called pure research as differentiated from applied research. There must be some degree of assuredness of a fairly long period of time, and especially is this so in forestry, so that research projects may be carried on to their conclusion.

We used to have a pretty disgraceful situation in the lumber business in British Columbia when the industry itself did not particularly care whether any trees grew the following year, or 10 years from the time they were logging. In British Columbia there was a policy of clear cutting areas, usually referred to as a policy of cut out and get out. Of course that does not exist any more.

Over the years we have got more and more into the field of forestry management, developing sustained yield programs both by way of tenure with private industry and by the establishment of working circles and areas within which there is a limit to the amount of timber that can be cut and logged over a certain period of time. This sustained yield program and concept being relatively new, it brings with it—and certainly this is the view of management operating under what were originally the forestry management licences—some rather complex problems researchwise. It brings out the attempt to understand what is going to happen 50 or 60 years from now or at the conclusion of the rotation period, whatever the period of years might be.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

This is something which cannot be entirely dealt with by the research facilities of the forest service in British Columbia, or in any other province for that matter. This, of course, is one of the reasons for the establishment of a federal Department of Forestry, the function of which is to work with the various forest services which exist in the provinces so that these branches will function on a co-ordinating, co-operative basis rather than going in different directions.

It is also a specific problem that I think the federal Department of Forestry should be working toward, and undoubtedly it has started to do this. It should be a matter of specific concern over a long period of time, thus making it possible to estimate how much money might be required in the future for the particular type of research program necessary to deal with the complications and difficulties arising out of our sustained yield or forestry management system in British Columbia. I am sure this is also applicable to other provinces.

I think this sort of thing presupposes that there is a large degree of knowledge available; that it really is the application of that knowledge to a particular problem which is important, and then the problem will be overcome. However, I do not think it is as simple as that. Without trying to put words into the mouth of the hon. member for Port Arthur, I think the idea he was seeking to leave with the committee was that, with so many imponderables, we have to attempt as best we can to ensure that if for the sake of argument, we have a 50, 60 or 70 year rotation period, and 50 or 60 years from now we are going to come back and re-log the area we are logging today, the growth will be at its height at that time so that the combination of each yearly increment of wood will be at the limit. We want to ensure that insect infestations, fungi and the like are kept to a minimum and do not interfere with the growth of that particular stand, and that when it is time to log the area we have the best possible type of wood which is fungus and disease free.

I think in British Columbia this is perhaps as important a question as any, researchwise, with which we should be concerned. This applies to the province in the way of research work undertaken by the forest service, and research work by the industry and the federal Department of Forestry.

In the field of research by private industry I think we must realize, without in any way wishing to be misinterpreted—and I hope nobody misinterprets this as being unkind to industry or to any body else—that the motivating factor behind carrying out pure or applied research is an economic one. I think we find that the research engaged in by industry is directed more toward a greater utilization of the product, less breakage and the like, so that the product which comes out of the mill contains the greatest volume of wood, and waste, and the like, is cut to the minimum. Private industry is concerned in keeping the cost of producing the unit of wood, or pulp or paper, whatever it is, to a minimum. This is the prime field of research in which private industry becomes involved.

Unfortunately we have found that the forest service in British Columbia has in years past not engaged to the extent it should have in the field of research. If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read one or two brief quotations from the report of the royal commission on the forest resources of British Columbia. This royal commission was headed by the late Chief Justice Gordon McGregor Sloan and the report was published in 1956. The report deals with the question of the research activities of the forest service, and I should like to quote from volume 2, page 559. The late Chief Justice says this:

> The type of study for which this division is staffed and equipped may be defined as applied research; that is, the application of known principles or procedures to local conditions to which the specific reactions can only be determined by direct experimentation and observation.

Then he goes on:

> Research for the sake of knowledge itself and without a practical objective cannot be undertaken with the limited staff and facilities presently available.

Throughout the report there are references by the late Chief Justice to this question of research. Evidence was given by Dr. Orchard, the deputy minister of lands and forests, and other people, to the effect that (1) research is without question one of the most important aspects of a proper forestry program; (2) the provincial forest service had unfortunately up until the time of the commission's report not had sufficient funds at its disposal to deal with this particular question, and in some fields engaged in practically no research whatsoever.

This matter was mentioned by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe; that is, the fields of insect infestation and diseases. I think this should be one field wherein we should concern ourselves to a very great extent. We all know that the spraying of forests with insecticides can have, and has had in the past, a beneficial effect upon the forest because it destroys certain types of insects which have been infesting particular areas, but it has a detrimental effect upon the fisheries in that area. There is this great conflict of social and economic interests as between fisheries resources on the one hand, which are detrimentally affected by forest spraying programs, and the forest resources on the other hand, which are beneficially affected by the same program.

I know that a great deal of research has been undertaken in this field by the Department of Fisheries and some beneficial results have been achieved to the point where it is possible to dilute a certain type of insecticide to a degree which will give maximum forestry benefits and minimum detrimental effects to the fisheries. Unfortunately the problem still exists inasmuch as in British Columbia, at least up until four or five years ago according to the report of the royal commission, the money was not available to carry out a proper, thorough and effective type of research in this field.

This is a field in which the federal Department of Forestry can profitably become engaged and be of very great benefit to the industry, to the people who work in it and to the economies of the provinces concerned. The minister indicated that he is going slowly, and understandably so, to ensure that the research programs being put into effect are not being duplicated by other services or departments. The minister said his department is feeling its way in this field and progress is being made. I hope this provision means that in the years to come there will be a large increase in the sums made available for this and similar purposes—I am not restricting this comment to the vote we are considering at the moment, which is supplemental; I have in mind the main estimates, which amounted last year to a little less than $2 million. I would hope that as a result of the interest shown by the minister and the studies which are going on at the moment there will be a large increase in the funds made available for this field so that the foresters and the people working in the research branch of the federal department can become involved in questions of pure research to the fullest possible extent. My own view is that it should be possible to take such items as the clearing of rights of way, which is going on under this vote of $80,000, the effects of cutting and pruning and the like, and place them under a separate item for separate consideration because, to me, these are two separate branches of endeavour. One involves pure research and the other the question of the work itself.

As the minister has explained, the work provided for in this vote was not done primarily for research purposes but to provide winter work to assist somewhat in bolstering the economy of this country. If we could make this distinction between the two different types of activity I do not think any confusion would arise about the purpose of the work being done by the research branch of the Department of Forestry. I do not think there is confusion about the approach we might be making in the provision of research, but I think at the present time there is confusion about the end which is sought by the research branch of the department.

I have nothing further to say at this time. I note that this a supplementary estimate, and it is kind of the committee to be so courteous as to allow not only myself but other members who have participated in the debate to stretch their remarks perhaps beyond the strict confines of the vote now under consideration.

Mr. Carter: We have had a most useful and interesting debate on this item. Although the amount involved is relatively small, the subject is an important one. I think that when there is a limited amount of money available for research it is wise that we should establish priorities. I think everyone will agree with the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe that priority should be given to the elimination of the wastage of our forest resources by fire, insects and disease. Next to that, I hope, will come some research which will enable us to reap the harvest of mature trees while they are still marketable and before they become rotten and useless windfalls which is the case to a large extent in the forests of my own province.

Forestry is, of course, a most important industry in Newfoundland because timber is perhaps the most important prop in our economy. We already have two papermills and we hope arrangements can be worked out to support another. I should like to bring the minister's attention to another area of research which has not been mentioned and which, perhaps, is not of great interest to the paper industry. The area of research I have in mind, and one which is beyond the resources of the provincial authorities, is the question of forestry and reforestation as a means of soil conservation and soil formation. This question is of tremendous importance to my own riding. Hon. members will understand that most of the settlers in my riding as well as in most of the coastal settlements of my province were settled two or three hundred years ago. The early settlers, our forefathers, knew nothing about the importance of conservation measures or even about the relationship between the preservation of trees and the preservation of the soil. Because of this lack of knowledge they cut down the nearest wood to them to build their houses, their boats, their flakes for drying fish and their fuel. As a result there was tremendous erosion of soil all along our coast line.

The provincial government realizes the importance of woodlots and the supply of wood to the fishermen. It set out a limit on crown lands—a limit three miles from the coast line—within which timber would be available to supply the needs of our fishermen. But, as I have indicated, not only have these limits been denuded but the soil itself has deteriorated to a great extent. The situation thus created is one which deserves attention and we should consider whether it is possible to develop a type of tree capable of repopulating this area and at the same time starting a process of soil formation.

This little limit was of great importance to the small mill owners in my riding and represented an important factor in the economic life of these communities. I hope the minister will find it possible to give some attention to the problem which I have outlined although I recognize it may not appear to be a great one compared with the size of the pulp and paper industry.

May I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Pallett: All day on one item of supplementary estimates.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion and public bills.

ADVERTISING

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT DISTRIBUTION OF MISLEADING INFORMATION

Mr. J. C. MacRae (York-Sunbury) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to carry out a survey of all aspects of commercial advertising on Canadian television and radio, in certain newspapers and other fields of mass communication, for the purpose of recommending what steps, if any, should be taken to prevent the distribution of fraudulent and misleading advertising to Canadian consumers;

That the said committee consist of fifteen members to be named at a later date, nine of whom shall constitute a quorum;

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records; to sit while the house is sitting; to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, while the majority of advertisers, manufacturers and retailers are completely and entirely ethical in this country, there are still far too many who are selling rubbish by false suggestion, by half-truths, and by words carefully chosen to mean nothing when they are challenged in a court of law. If, for example, we take an old magazine, let us say one of 50 years or so ago, the advertisements in them seem ridiculous to us; I refer to the advertisements and the claims that are made therein. However, somehow or other, we do not seem to feel this way about a current magazine, a television commercial or a radio spot. Many of them are just an insult to our intelligence.

In the dark ages of the art, advertising literally got away with murder. According to history, it was not unknown for an advertiser to exploit a nostrum offering to stop a baby's crying. Apparently that claim was valid for, after swallowing certain of these concoctions, some babies never cried again. Various rugged individuals were induced by advertising to search for symptoms of dire diseases. Sick folks were persuaded to trifle with major maladies. Consumers were educated to consume nonsensical compounds or deadly poisons or habit forming drugs.

Then, as now, the bulk of Canadian business was sound and reputable. Interspersed were the pirates. Some of these freebooters used advertising to further outrageous exploitation of their victims. Such advertising ran all the way from murder, manslaughter and other crimes through felony and misdemeanor to misrepresentation and misleading tricks. However, actually these old ruffians became playful at times. There is the legendary figure of the advertiser who offered at some alluring price "complete sewing machine, all charges prepaid" for $3.95. When the victim received an envelope in return for his money, if he did not open it very carefully he got stuck a second time, for in the envelope was a needle. That was the complete sewing machine.

When business became slack, it was stimulated by fresh offers. If legend is correct, there was the advertising of "Beautifully framed: Genuine steel engraving of Queen Victoria for only a dollar." What the sucker in this case received was a postage stamp. It was a steel engraving; it was Queen Victoria, but the one who got beautifully framed was the purchaser himself. I think perhaps I may be pardoned if I mention another illustration. We all know the old story. Years ago there was advertised a complete killer of potato bugs for $1. It was stated that if you sent $1 in you would get the necessary ingredients to kill all the potato bugs in a 10-acre field. What you received when the parcel came were two blocks of wood with the instructions that, of course, if you placed a potato bug between the two blocks, they certainly would kill that potato bug and all the rest, as well. That is an old story and it is supposedly true.

Today the majority of advertisers—and I cannot stress this enough—are high grade organizations of responsibility and integrity. In its lower fringes, however, advertising is still smeared with much that is definitely unfriendly to consumers. Periodically the shysters get too bold. There are "crime waves" in advertising as there are in other activities. Fraudulent and misleading advertising shatters the public's confidence in publicity. Consumers then become less responsive to all advertising. Apparently there will long be a continued need for clean-up campaigns to give the truth-in-advertising movement another forward surge. Fortunately, much of the ground thus gained is held. The long pull trend of advertising honesty appears to be gradually upward. Therefore, a discussion of misrepresentation in advertising should not —and I hope that my remarks will make this clear—smear advertising as a whole. Consumers can help both themselves and reputable business by continuing to use their influence against shysters.

Today in this country one of the most active groups is the Canadian association of consumers, a group of women who are banded together across all of Canada, and who are trying to protect the consumer in so many different ways. I have had a number of discussions with their president, Mrs. Plumptre, here in Ottawa, and others who have pointed out various attempts by advertisers to mislead.

Mr. Benidickson: Such as sliced bacon camouflaging.

Mr. MacRae: Yes. That is the kind of thing referred to. What legislation have we now? First of all, there is the Combines Investigation Act, section 33C (1) which reads as follows:

(1) Everyone who, for the purpose of promoting the sale or use of an article, makes any materially misleading representation to the public, by any means whatever, concerning the price—

And I stress again "the price".

—at which such or like articles have been, are, or will be, ordinarily sold is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

But again, Mr. Chairman, please listen to this. Subsection 2 reads as follows:

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who publishes an advertisement that he accepts in good faith for publication in the ordinary course of his business.

This particular section of the Combines Investigation Act was recently tested in Toronto. I am sure that hon. members recall the case very well as it was the first case in which a firm by the name of Eddy Black was prosecuted under nine counts of misrepresentation as to price, was convicted under nine counts and fined. The magistrate at that particular point said that the reason the fines were not heavier was that it was the first testing of the law. In fairness I must say that the company has indicated that they may appeal. I am not sure whether they have done so. However, the Combines Investigation Act refers only to price, and this idea, of course, where they advertise a selling price of $5 and that the suggested retail price is $15 but the article is really worth only $5 in the final analysis.

The Criminal Code, section 306, is also pertinent. It reads as follows:

(1) Everyone who publishes or causes to be published an advertisement containing a statement that purports to be a statement of fact but that is untrue, deceptive or misleading or is intentionally so worded or arranged that it is deceptive or misleading, is guilty of an indictable offence—

Subsection 2 states as follows:

(2) Everyone who publishes or causes to be published in an advertisement a statement or guarantee of the performance, efficacy or length of life of anything that is not based upon an adequate and proper test of that thing, the proof of which lies upon the accused, is, if the advertisement is published to promote, directly or indirectly, the sale or disposal of that thing, guilty of an offence—

But again subsections 1 and 2 do not apply to a person who publishes an advertisement that he accepts in good faith for publication in the ordinary course of business.

Finally, as to legislation, we have the Food and Drugs Act. A very fine article was published within this last few months in the 1961 Canada Year Book. The article was written by Dr. C. A. Morrell, director, food and drug directorate, Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa. I should like to quote some things he said because it seems to me they are extremely pertinent.

The present Food and Drugs Act is a federal statute with provisions applying to the manufacture, advertising, packaging—and this is what we are discussing now—sale of food, drugs, cosmetics and medical devices anywhere in Canada. There are no similar provincial laws. It seems to me that is one of the weaknesses in our system as to legislation.

Mr. Benidickson: They have no jurisdiction in criminal affairs.

Mr. MacRae: That is so. This federal law exists for the protection of the consumer. Food and drug legislation of some kind has been known in the world for centuries. The first Canadian law of general scope was "An Act to Impose Licence Duties on the Compounders of Spirits and to Prevent the Adulteration of Food, Drink and Drugs". It was passed in May 1874 and became effective on January 1, 1875. In this act the present Food and Drugs Act had its origin. There have been many minor and several major amendments to the law since 1874, the most recent one being passed in 1953. The original law was the first such law of national scope in North America, and there has been continuous enforcement since 1875.

Here are the powers and scope of the national Food and Drugs Act. There is authority provided (1) to establish standards of composition or identity for foods, drugs and cosmetics; (2) to prohibit the sale of foods that are dirty or harmful; (3) to prohibit the sale of drugs manufactured under unsanitary conditions or that are adulterated; (4) to provide standards for all drugs; (5) to require licences for certain biological preparations; (6) to prohibit the sale of harmful cosmetics or those made under unsanitary conditions; (7) to prohibit the sale of harmful medical devices and, (8)—this to my mind is a very important one—to prohibit the advertising, labelling, packaging or processing of foods or drugs "in a manner that is false, misleading or deceptive or is likely to create an erroneous impression regarding its character, value, quantity" and so on.

The act has a clause that prohibits the advertising of any food, drug or cosmetic to the general public as a treatment, preventative or cure for a number of serious diseases and also lists drugs that may be sold only on prescription.

The Food and Drugs Act is a part of criminal law and it lays down standards and other requirements that will minimize health hazards and fraud in the sale and use of these products. It outlines areas of responsibilities for the manufacturers and distributors but it does not guarantee that drugs will meet the quality standards that are expected of them.

The Food and Drugs Act contains clauses and sections with respect to advertising. It is illegal to make false, exaggerated or misleading claims about a drug or to create an erroneous impression as to its composition, character, value, quantity, merit or safety. The work of enforcing this section is considerable since the advertising of drugs is very extensive. Control of advertising is limited to that directed at the general public.

With all these factors in the legislation you may ask whether we are not protected sufficiently. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we do have adequate legislation. I am not a lawyer by profession and perhaps not as well versed in the statutes of our country as some of our legal members, but it seems to me that we do not have the necessary regulations. There are a number of other members who wish to speak and perhaps they will be able to deal with that aspect.

The other day when the postmaster general of the United States was here he held a press conference. He was asked about the problem of advertising by means of television and radio. Evidently they have the same problem in the United States that we have here. I have complained many times about the fact that we are flooded with television advertising from the United States, much of which seems to me to be in bad taste, much of which seems to be misleading. In some cases the advertising in their magazines is terrible. We do not hear so much about radio advertising in the United States perhaps because we do not listen to their stations.

Mr. Benidickson: Oh, yes, we do. The C.B.C. takes it in big quantities.

Mr. MacRae: I do not think what Mr. Day said in his remarks to the press was reported in any newspaper because I searched for it and could not find it. He said that the situation with regard to radio stations was so bad in the southern states that they actually chased the people concerned right out of the country. However, what they did was to go to Mexico and from there they beam their advertising and progaganda particularly at the southern states, which has created quite a problem.

Mr. Benidickson: The C.B.C. gets more revenue from United States programs than it does from Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss two or three cases that are very much in point. One is the recent Colgate-Palmolive case in the United States. In their television advertising the shaving of sandpaper was depicted. I will not discuss that further. I know that my seatmate, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), would like to discuss that one. He has had experience in the fields of radio and journalism, and this is a very interesting case.

I might point out the difference with regard to control between Canada and the United States. In the United States the policing body is the federal trade commission, and under the Clayton act and its amendments it seems to me they are doing a magnificent job. There is another aspect which I hope will be discussed this afternoon. I have the material here to do so but because my time is limited I shall leave it to others. I refer to the matter of the advertising and the sale of vitamins to a gullible Canadian public. I hope that two or three hon. members who are doctors will discuss that matter in full. It seems to me that Canadians are being bilked of millions of dollars every year by this racket, and in my view it is nothing but a racket. If a person has a well balanced diet, and almost everyone in this country knows what a well balanced diet is, there is no need for all these vitamins. They are simply swallowed and the system does not absorb them, but people are spending millions of dollars on them every year.

Dr. Monagle, chief of the nutrition division of the federal health department, discussed this matter fully when he addressed the Canadian fruit wholesalers association. If hon. members are interested in this point I would be most happy to discuss it with them.

There is another racket which we have not yet encountered in Canada but which is very prevalent in the United States. It has to do with fall-out shelters. We can expect the same thing to happen here soon because it seems to me we are on the brink of annihilation unless we learn to live with one another. People are beginning to think of their preservation more than ever. It has been noted that in the United States manufacturers of fall-out shelters have been using the fear of people in order to mislead them. I have here a list of 15 different actions on the part of U.S. manufacturers of fall-out shelters for which they have been castigated. They include the making of false or misleading statements, false implications, the use of pictures that give a false impression of the product, down payments that are made to appear as the entire price, phony guarantees, false indications of official government endorsement, claims that the product is custom made, bait advertising, sales promotions involving lotteries, scare tactics and so on. These are things that might be used with regard to almost any product one can name. There are many other practical cases but I do not think I have too much time left. The other day in the Ottawa Journal there was a "Brother Juniper" cartoon. I do not know how other members feel about these cartoons but I get a great deal of enjoyment out of the little fellow. In this one he is talking to one of the other brothers and he is saying:

> How come they're always putting new ingredients into toothpaste? Why don't they just put in toothpaste?

I think that is a very sensible idea.

Mr. Benidickson: Instead of towels in breakfast food.

Mr. MacRae: Towels in packages of detergents. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) has brought up a good point. Detergent boxes are half filled with towels and boxes of breakfast food are half filled with plastic gimmicks for children. There are a number of other points I should like to make. There is the brain washing that seems to be practised on our children in this day and age by means of advertising. I believe the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) has that point in mind and plans to speak about it. Then there is the matter of the built-in obsolescence in so many of our products that we buy.

Finally, I want to say a few words about radio and television. They provide great entertainment for us but I think we have some false standards. We all see television programs for which some sick comic or some fellow who cannot sing is paid perhaps $50,000 to appear on a program and sing a song or two. Then the sponsor has to sell a million tubes of toothpaste to pay him. We see that kind of thing going on whereas on the other hand a man who is making some contribution to this world of ours has to work five years to earn that much money.

It also seems to me that on television and radio—I suppose those concerned will not take this comment kindly—there are far too many commercials. They are too loud and too long. If they could somehow or other be compelled to have their commercials only half as loud as the rest of the program instead of twice as loud I think we would be getting somewhere.

I hope other hon. members will contribute to this debate. I am deeply interested in this matter. I believe there is a place for such a committee to investigate and to act as a watchdog with respect to advertising on television and radio, magazine advertising and advertising in some of the newspapers of our country.

Mr. Phillips: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MacRae: Surely.

Mr. Phillips: I listened to his remarks with a great deal of interest and I did not want to interrupt him. Does he realize that if his objection to fraudulent advertising were to apply to political campaigns, the opposition parties could not advertise during the campaign?

Mr. MacRae: That is realized.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I will try to return the debate to more serious matters, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support the resolution of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae). I think it is a good resolution. I agree with the method of setting up a special committee of this house. I think that the House of Commons should and can be an educational device by means of which we could scrutinize certain aspects of our society which need scrutiny. This is a sensible and moderate solution. There is no precipitous action suggested—simply a desire to acquire information. If we look below the border, we will see how special congressional committees have done a job in examining crime and various other aspects of American society about which a certain amount of concern is felt.

Then, too, I think this is the right place to be dealing with this matter at the federal level. At one time, of course, we believed that the government had no right to interfere in these matters. Today there are very stringent federal controls in the area of food and drugs to which the hon. member has already referred. We also saw the Combines Investigation Act amended two years ago to include definite control of certain areas. I will not read that as it has already been read. Certainly we in this group have constantly encouraged greater concern by the federal government in this area of advertising. If one reads the record of the banking and commerce committee for 1960, he will find there attempts by members of the C.C.F. group to introduce amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to deal with the problem the hon. member has brought forward.

We are very happy, therefore, to see other political parties are now concerned with this matter of advertising. We are all very greatly impressed with the work of the Canadian association of consumers. They cannot be praised too highly. Of course, it is a private organization and its work is limited by a lack of funds. Advertising is very big business and has no need for more funds. One may look at the general area of advertising and say it has grown out of all proportion to its importance in our society. At one time, advertising was considered to have an informative role; it was to give information about products. Today, with our Madison avenue techniques joining forces with psychology and the hidden persuaders about which we have heard so much, it is a force in our society with which we need to concern ourselves.

Those of us in this house who are concerned about democracy I think must realize that democracy is based upon the ability of men and women to make a free choice. This house must concern itself with any activity that might undermine that freedom of choice. When a medium may be used to divert or damage the kind of democratic society we are creating, then this house certainly has reason to be concerned. We protect people physically from poisons, from bad food, and it may be that we should protect them from mental and spiritual injury as well. Some people may see this as an affront to freedom and say that a man can use his money as he wishes. I say, no. The techniques of modern advertising may very well be a threat to the kind of society which we in this house are seeking to build. The state must often put on controls to protect that freedom.

We have talked a great deal about freedom of the individual, and this is an area in which we can protect that freedom. Today, of course, advertising has become more and more complex. It was very easy to tell the various types of textiles in the early days. They were either wool or cotton. Today, however, with the synthetic textiles like dacron, nylon and so on, it is very difficult to identify these textiles and the public can be easily misled. I think, therefore, this is a very important resolution, and one which should receive the attention and concern of this house. I do not think I need to indicate the number of areas in which we have seen false and misleading advertising. We have seen it, perhaps, in its most pernicious form, in the area where our young children are concerned. We have seen television programs containing advertising designed to give young children certain ideas by means of which they can put pressure upon their parents. We have seen various methods by which the young people of our country have been used in order to create future markets for these particular products.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury mentioned the whole area of fallout shelters. One could mention a lot of other areas as well, such as toothpaste and cigarettes in which the advertising has been misleading and false. Finance companies which advertise the advantages of borrowing from this company as compared to that are certainly not in any sense guided by the truth. We agree that most of the manufacturers and retailers in this country do not need to be controlled by this kind of legislation. However, there are always a few and, in a sense, we have to protect the ethical businessman from the unethical businessman with this kind of legislation.

I do not wish to take up any more time. There are other members who wish to speak. In conclusion, I would say that all parties here are concerned with the individual and the sanctity of the personality. We may differ on how that personality is to be protected and given a greater opportunity. I think this resolution is an important one, and I think it should commend itself to this house.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): I join this debate in the life-long hope that brand X will some day triumph on television; that brand X shirts will turn out to be whiter; that brand X baseball, football or hockey team will beat the New York Yankees, the Winnipeg Blue Bombers or the Montreal Canadiens. I also have a sneaking longing to see Joel Aldred cough some time in the middle of a cigarette commercial, to see a housewife who still has a look of anguish on her face from indigestion after using some form of seltzer and, finally, to see the people who jump about so spiritedly on the beer ads, lurch or perchance even fall down. Of course, these things are not possible under the myth or fiction of present advertising.

First, sir, may I list some of the problems as I see them. These are my suggestions for solutions which are in accord with the very fine resolution of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae). I shall also try to be as brief as the last speaker because I realize that a great number of people wish to make a contribution to this most interesting debate.

Mr. Benidickson: No, a great number of people want to have this motion carried.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McCleave: The first problem is the use in advertising of such words as, "most doctors recommend"; or, "three out of four baseball players use"; or, "four out of five housewives prefer". This is the sort of advertising which appears to be making a factual statement but, none the less, to the uninitiated, will have its appeal.

Then, may I turn to the second problem which is connected with advertising in the visual field. I am thinking of recent golf matches which a television crew had tried to cover in some far-off part of the world. The crew came back but found that part of their film was missing. They had to take the star out to simulate some of the shots. This, of course, was in the realm of fiction, although it really did not alter the outcome of that particular golf match.

Then, the third problem is the T.V. actor who sips coloured water instead of whisky, which is probably to his advantage.

The fourth problem is the quality of detergents, in which shirts are shown whiter than white, or whiter than brand X washed shirts, and sometimes you find that these are actually blue shirts because on television blue shirts photograph whiter than white shirts. Still another problem arises from the food freezer scheme.

A further problem which arose in the United States very recently concerned a shoe company which said its shoes would correct, prevent and relieve a large variety of ailments. I list some of them as indigestion, stomach ulcers, high blood pressure and arthritis, which is quite a claim for any shoe company to make. However, it was persuaded to tone down these rather high-flown claims to a simple statement that its shoes would give relief only for hip pains, swollen joints and ankles.

Request for Commercial Advertising Survey

Yet another type of problem arose very recently when one large company was giving away a fruit bowl as one of its premiums. It stated that if you sent in so many box tops, or what have you, you would receive this very large glass bowl for holding fruit. It was actually an eight inch bowl which would not hold many bananas, apples, grapefruit or oranges, but the advertising agency substituted a 12 inch glass bowl in its pictures which, of course, would hold that much more fruit and bring that many more suckers into the field to obtain that type of bowl.

Then there is the puzzling case of the advertiser who was left speechless. This was the Gillette Safety Razor Company, to which we all owe a debt in the fall of the year when they bring us the world series. It had been seeking the superior razor blade and, by golly, it did turn up with the superior razor blade, one that could live up to just about any claim you could make for long life and the quality of shave it gave. The company looked hard for words to describe this marvel but over the years it had already used all the words in the English dictionary to describe less superior products.

Mr. Benidickson: You promised to be brief and let us have a vote.

Mr. McCleave: The company finally settled on a simple statement that their new blade was indeed the best for shaving.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) mentioned that I would probably be dealing with a recent case in the United States involving the Colgate-Palmolive Company which was found guilty of misrepresenting a rapid shaving cream. Perhaps most of us have seen the television commercials already. The cream is applied to sandpaper and then the whole thing wiped off very quickly. However, in actual fact the federal trade commission in the United States found that the purported sandpaper was a sheet of plexiglass to which sand had been applied. Some of the reasoning in their judgment is of extreme interest to this debate initiated by my hon. friend, and so I would like to put it on record. This was a unanimous ruling by the federal trade commission and the gist of the ruling was that television camera trickery must not be used in demonstrating the qualities of a product offered for sale. The ruling accompanied a commission order against Colgate-Palmolive Co., and its advertising agency, Bates and Company, Inc., of New York city, prohibiting them from falsely advertising shaving cream, and from using spurious or false mockups or demonstrations for any product. The commission declared:

> The limitations of the television medium may present a challenge to the creative ingenuity of copywriters; but surely they do not constitute lawful justification for resort to falsehoods and deception of the public. Any argument to the contrary would seem to be based on the wholly untenable assumption that the primary function of television is to sell goods, and that the commission should not make any ruling which would impair the ability of sponsors and agencies to use television with maximum effectiveness as a sales or advertising medium.
> Stripped of polite verbiage, the argument boils down to this: where truth and television salesmanship collide, the former must give way to the latter. This is obviously an indefensible proposition. The notion that a sponsor may take liberties with the truth in its television advertising, while advertisers using other media must continue to be truthful, is patent nonsense. The statutory requirements of truth in advertising apply to television no less than to other media of communication—
> In this case the pictorial test of Rapid Shave, proving to any doubting Thomas in the vast audience that "it really could shave sandpaper" was the clinching argument made by the commercials. The "sandpaper test" was conducted as the announcer said, "to prove Rapid Shave's super moisturizing power . . ." without this visible proof of its qualities, some viewers might not have been persuaded to buy the product. At least, Colgate-Palmolive must have thought so, or else they would not have emphasized the pictorial "sandpaper test" in the expensive television advertisements of their product.

Finally, in this decision of the federal trade commission comes:

> One need only consider the difference in the impact of these commercials on viewers had they been told, honestly and truthfully, that what they were seeing tested was a plexiglass mock-up, rather than what they thought and were told they were seeing, namely, actual sandpaper. The difference between telling and not telling the truth, could, in this instance at least, have been the difference between an effective and ineffective "sell". In such circumstances, the claim of "harmless exaggeration" is rather hollow.

I shall leave the record with that very brief statement on the principles applied by the federal trade commission, not only quoted from the standpoint of the grounds of the decision but also to show a little bit of the philosophy that can be brought into this field.

Some hon. members have already suggested that it may be said against the hon. member for York-Sunbury that he has attempted to interfere with the freedom of the press. On that point I would like to say that I do not believe freedom of the press is a licence of the press to be irresponsible. As I conceive it, it is the duty of the press to act within reasonable and civilized limits and not to accept any philosophy which would allow certain people, advertisers for example, to use the press to peddle untruths and half truths which may either be very damaging or partly damaging to the public. However, I do not say that in all the cases I have mentioned one should consider taking action against the advertisers.

In health matters, yes. I think it would be a good idea if the committee envisaged by the hon. member for York-Sunbury could look at the regulations now dealing with food, drugs and medicines, because these are basic to health and perhaps the present regulations are not strict enough. I think we might also have a look at advertising in connection with many matters. We might also have a look at the problem to see whether sections of the Criminal Code dealing with fraud are strong enough.

Over-all, sir, I would support the resolution. I think its spirit is a sound one and I also think it would be welcomed by the vast majority of publishers, the vast majority of people in television and radio, and probably even by the vast majority of advertising agencies themselves. The honest advertising agency is caught in this position; if he does not stoop to the odd bit of chicanery himself, his unscrupulous rivals, who might stoop to photographing a blue shirt to prove that is whiter than the white shirt, will simply pass him by in the race for the consumer's dollar. In other words, a sort of modern day Gresham's law—

Mr. Benidickson: Grosart's law.

Mr. McCleave: As I was saying, it is a sort of modern day application of Gresham's law, that the bad will subvert and debase and eventually drive out the good.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am going to confine my remarks on this resolution introduced by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) to a few personal experiences I have had in recent times with television advertisements. The problem facing a parent of three young children, as I have, is serious indeed when it comes to television advertising. I have been asked by my children whether they should believe the advertisements which appear on the television programs they are watching. I started off by trying to explain that most of them were valid and honest advertisements, but some of them were not.

I was then asked, "Well, are they lies?" This is a matter in which young children have a way of embarrassing a parent, because these advertisements were not precisely lies but they were not precisely the truth; they were examples of misleading advertising such as we are discussing this afternoon. Unfortunately a young child cannot appreciate what is known in literature as the "willing suspension of disbelief" and take, as many of us do in our general attitude to advertisements on television—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That sounds like a Hegelian phrase.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not mean to interrupt the hon. member. I just said that my hon. friend's phrase suggests to my mind some of the philosophy of Hegel.

Mr. McGee: As I was saying before that rather obscure interjection—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): For the benefit of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), who is a scholar, Hegel was a German philosopher.

Mr. McGee: Again, Mr. Speaker, if I may resume, this notion of the willing suspension of disbelief is very difficult to explain to a young child. Therefore my wife and I have instructed our children that they are to assume that the advertisements are not completely true and they are to proceed on that basis. It is clearly impossible for either parent to be called to the television screen to pass judgment on individual advertisements.

I think this is an unhappy commentary on current advertising practices on television, and I should like to acknowledge the point raised by the hon. member for York-Sunbury, that there have been honest, sincere and effective measures taken by advertisers and advertising agencies to restore the public confidence in their various advertising media.

I should like to give the house an example of the unhappy consequences of this type of advertising, particularly the type that appears on children's programs just before Christmas when we are watching for signs and listening for hints about what our children would like for Christmas. We were astonished, and somewhat delighted, to be told at the dinner table one night that our young son Owen, who is aged four, wanted a globe for Christmas. We tried to find out whether he really meant a globe. He described what he had in mind, and sure enough, that was it. We were rather flattered that our young son of four years of age should express an interest in international affairs. We thought, "Who knows; he might become as great an expert as the hon. member for Essex East in future years". Naturally we were somewhat flattered. We said, "Are you sure you do not want some of the other items that have frequently been mentioned recently?" No, that was the only thing he had in mind, and he stuck with it.

As Christmas got closer and closer we attempted to interest him in other things. We were unsuccessful, so on Christmas morning there was a globe for Owen under the Christmas tree. Owen was also in tears on Christmas morning because the notion to ask for this globe for Christmas had been placed in his mind by a television commercial on one of the children's programs, and as soon as we discovered what was the matter my wife remembered having seen this commercial. It showed a globe all right, but at a certain moment a hole appeared in the globe, and it enlarged and one saw a herd of rhinoceroses. Then the hole closed again and opened up, and there were lions and tigers. Our youngster clearly had in his mind the idea that this globe would have a hole in it through which he could see the wonders of the world.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It sounds like the Prime Minister's vision.

Mr. Benidickson: Obviously talking this out.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, order.

Mr. McGee: I offer that as an example that perhaps we should have been more alert and perhaps there are disillusionments in every child's mind on every Christmas morning, but it seemed to me that this was a typical example of the suggestions that are placed in children's minds particularly.

I must say one other word about children's programs. I resent the fact that advertisers are using children and instructing them precisely and specifically to go and get mummy or daddy to buy this or that product. One of these days I am rather expecting them to be suggesting that the youngsters should slip a package of this or that into the carriage that mother pushes through a supermarket. Our family manages to get enough extraneous items in the carriage on a trip through the supermarket without that sort of instruction. That is the basic complaint I have with advertising, and particularly television advertising. I hope this resolution will find favour with the house and that the committee can proceed to examine this question and produce some useful results.

There is one other matter I wish to mention in connection with this resolution. I wish to place this information on the record in the hope that when Hansard leaves the printing presses and is distributed across the country to the various universities, some mathematicians either in our university communities or perhaps within the government service itself may help in solving a problem which is related to advertising. This is a problem which has baffled me as it has baffled a lot of people who have attempted to find some way in which a person borrowing money and embarking on credit arrangements can determine the annual rate of interest from the pattern of payments and make a fair evaluation as against other sources of credit available to him in our economy.

I should like to place on record in this regard a formula which, according to an article in the Financial Post of August 27, 1960, has been approved by the United States reserve board as a method of determining annual interest rates. Perhaps I may now proceed to place the formula on the record. Afterwards I can carry on to outline the suggestion I have to make with regard to it. It is an equation involving five variables, and the component parts are as follows:

i=rate of charge
m=number of payments in one year
n=number of payments to discharge debt
D=charge in dollars
P=principal or cash advance

So the formula is:

$$i = \frac{2\ m\ D}{P\ (n+1)}$$

This formula, admittedly complex, and clearly beyond the capacity of the average shopper to work out during an individual transaction, gives the precise interest rate to several decimal places. But the request I should like to put forward is this; I hope that some talented mathematician may resolve it for us. This formula gives the precise interest rate as an annual rate, but I would be satisfied with a much simpler formula which would arrive at the annual interest rate, give or take 1 or 2 per cent. Having found such a formula, a much simpler one than the one I have just put on record, the next step would be to have some ingenious person evolve a simple arithmetical calculator which would quickly produce the interest rate being charged. I have in mind a simple type of computer such as hon. members will have seen used for other purposes. An arrow is set at a certain figure; another arrow is set at another figure, and then the result is shown at another position in the device. I am hopeful that once the initial work and calculations had been carried out this device could be made out of heavy cardboard or plastic—something which would not involve much expense and something which could be made readily available to every person who has dealings in credit. Then we would have a situation where a person embarking on a small loan or embarking on a purchasing program on a credit basis would be able to tell what the annual interest rate involved in the transaction would be. He would then have a freedom of choice which, I suggest, should be an important ingredient in every shopper's activities, to decide whether it might be better to purchase the item he has in mind through the scheme before him or through some other form of credit, for example, a bank, a small loan company or some other source.

I hope, this problem having been placed on record in Hansard and going out, as it will, to the universities and many other circles in our country, that some bright mathematician may be able to assist this parliament and this country in finding a solution to a problem which has escaped serious investigation for some time.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): It is a pleasure to take the last three minutes of the time of the house in connection with this bill. I was very interested in the speech of the hon. member who introduced this measure. He certainly opened up a wide field. I was also interested in the remarks of the hon. member who spoke about breakfast foods for children. Whether they spill them on the floor or not is his problem.

I only wish to make one brief comment. I do think there is a great deal of misleading advertising taking place in connection with a certain phase of our national life, that is, in the drug business. That is the only aspect upon which I can speak from my own knowledge. When I look at 155 preparations containing five grammes of acetylsalicylic acid, and the different claims that are made for them, ranging from cures for ingrown toenails to falling hair and arthritis, I can only wonder. Of course, they do not say their preparations can cure these troubles. They say "can relieve it" and they are quite right.

I think the Department of National Health and Welfare is doing a good job in protecting the public with regard to the purity of products offered for sale but it is not protecting the public against the effects of a certain kind of audial and visual advertising. Printed advertising, yes; you can read it and you can pinpoint it. "Are you suffering from laryngitis? Send a dollar to box 200". Then all you get is a bottle of 100 Aspirins. O.K., that is possible. Aspirins sell for 98 cents. I am sorry I used a trade name. I should have said acetylsalicylic acid.

I really think we should tighten up with regard to some of this advertising. I challenge the hon. member for Essex East, who used to be the minister of health, to say what he did to protect the public in this respect. He did nothing.

May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 1, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF U.S. REPRESENTATIVES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will permit me to make reference to the presence in the gallery today of distinguished representatives of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States who are here for the purpose of attending the meeting of the Canadian-United States interparliamentary group. I think, for the purpose of the record, I should place on Hansard the names of the various representatives who are here.

The Senate is represented by Hon. George D. Aiken, chairman; Hon. Roman L. Hruska; Hon. Pat McNamara; Hon. Mrs. Maurine B. Neuberger and Hon. Claiborne Pell. The representatives of the House of Representatives are Hon. Cornelius E. Gallagher, chairman; Hon. Laurence Curtis; Hon. William S. Broomfield; Hon. William T. Murphy; Hon. Robert N. Giaimo; Hon. John M. Slack, Jr.; Hon. Harold T. Johnson; Hon. Daniel K. Inouye; Hon. Stanley R. Tupper who, by the way, is a descendant of Sir Charles Tupper, one time prime minister of Canada; Hon. Howard W. Robison and Hon. James Harvey.

I extend on behalf of this house, and I am sure the members of the opposition will join with me, the warmest congratulations and good wishes. Indeed, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) will recall that in the month of January, 1943, for the first time in our history members of the congress of the United States met members of the Canadian parliament and members of the various parliaments of the commonwealth here in Ottawa to discuss those matters that particularly affected the welfare of our respective nations. He knows the close relationship that prevails and which we all hope will continue in the years ahead between the United States and Canada and the other members of the commonwealth.

Then in 1958 this organization had its beginning. As I look back on that beginning I think generally speaking it will be recognized that this interparliamentary group embarked on an uncharted course which held out almost as much prospect of adventure—some predicted misadventure—as did that trip into space the other day by Colonel Glenn. I believe that this interparliamentary group, and what it means in co-operation between our nations, is as important to all of us as any interplanetary activities. In its common dedication to the things in which we believe we are united in freedom.

These gatherings which alternate between Washington and Ottawa provide channels of communication that otherwise would not be available between the lawmakers of our two nations. These meetings permit a review of the ever widening range of our common interests, and these discussions assist us in our consideration of the solution of these problems.

One could say a great deal, but I think the message I am trying to convey could be summarized in a few words. While from time to time we have our differences, the things that unite us, being of the spirit, are becoming stronger with the passing years. What we need is infinite patience, with a full realization of the problems of each other, to the end that in mutual understanding, forbearance and patience we shall strengthen the bonds between our nations and thereby show the rest of the world what can be achieved when independent peoples, each maintaining their own sovereignty, are prepared to join together in peace for the welfare of their respective countries and, indeed, the welfare of all mankind.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I would like to echo the words of the Prime Minister in welcoming the members of the Canada-United States interparliamentary committee to Canada. This has been an excellent committee, which has done work of a practical and permanent nature. There are unquestionably important problems to solve between our country and the United States, problems which may cause difficulty and friction; but when we look at what has transpired in the past, and particularly at what took place during the war years between our two countries—I have in mind now our balance of trade payments, the construction of the Alaska highway and the building of the northwest passage—I can come to no other conclusion but that when men of good will and understanding want to solve problems, they can do it. I can remember, too, in those years when there was some difficulty about receiving into the Yukon certain members of the United States army because of war regulations. Those members were admitted into Canada by means of an order in council which exempted them under the title of "distinguished citizens".

I should like to mention the St. Lawrence seaway as another example, sir, of the manner in which our problems have been solved, because I had some little experience with that project. There we had difficulties of construction, of costs and of plans and specifications in the international section of the river. I can pay no greater tribute to those from the United States who sat on the opposite side of the table from us than refer to the manner in which they helped, because of their understanding and co-operation, to solve many difficult problems.

I also commend you, sir, for the manner in which you have presided over the deliberations of the Canadian section of this committee and I wish you and those who are associated with you well in your deliberations.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not say a few words in my mother tongue to show the Canada-United States delegation that the house is bilingual.

Naturally, I address myself to all members of the committee but especially to Senator Aiken of Vermont, whose state is right next to the province of Quebec with which it has been maintaining good relations for many years.

I ask him to pay our respects to our Franco-American compatriots who live not only in Vermont but in all the states of New England.

To him and to all his distinguished colleagues, I offer our best wishes.

(Text):

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as one of the members participating in the particular set of meetings that are going on, speaking on behalf of the members of the New Democratic party may I associate this group wholeheartedly with the remarks of welcome by the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Laurier to the distinguished senators and members of the House of Representatives of the United States who are with us for the sixth meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group.

I know that our members are unanimously of the opinion that it is impossible to find words to express our appreciation for the hospitality that has been shown to us on previous occasions. The ideas expressed by representatives of the United States are, from our point of view, excellent and the discussions are free and open. Frequently their ideas have merit. Sometimes we differ with them and I am sure that sometimes they differ with our points of view, but I think agreements which are treasured the most are those agreements which are reached after the expression of differences of opinion.

This interparliamentary group affords an opportunity for the free, frank and fruitful discussion of problems of mutual concern to our respective countries. We trust that this visit will not only increase mutual understanding, but will be enjoyed and remembered by our visitors from the nation to the south. We know that our goal and objectives are the same, namely peace, prosperity and happiness not only for ourselves but for all nations of the world. We are sure these discussions will tend to move us more quickly toward these goals.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Third report of committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—STATEMENT BY U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has any comment to make on the statement made this morning by Secretary of State Dean Rusk that the United States is willing to work out arrangements for joint control of nuclear weapons in Canada in a manner fully consistent with national sovereignty.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I shall have to give study to the remarks of Secretary Rusk, and when I have done so I will make a report to this house.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question. Mr. Rusk indicated that the United States had discussed such arrangements with other governments, but he did not mention any discussions with the Canadian government. Could the Prime Minister say whether discussions were held on this subject between the two governments and, if so, why they have been discontinued?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman was here yesterday, and I am sure he had a complete answer to everything he is asking today.

Mr. Hellyer: Not at all. That is why I should like to press the question again.

Some hon. Members: Order.

ARCTIC ISLANDS—REPORTED SELECTION OF LANDING STRIPS BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister comment on a Canadian Press statement emanating from Ottawa yesterday to the effect that the United States has picked out some 50 emergency landing strips in the Canadian Arctic islands for military and civilian planes? Is the statement factual, and are there any conditions governing the use of these fields?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I saw the article referred to but have no official information in that regard. I asked for a report from my officials, but have not yet received one.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT BY CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question which is really supplementary to the question I asked yesterday on the subject of wheat sales to China. In the latter part of his reply to my question the right hon. gentleman said:

> The first three drafts under this credit arrangement were payable in the latter part of February, and all of them have been honoured on the scheduled date.

I wonder if the Prime Minister would inform the house as to the amount of those drafts in dollars and cents.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As I recollect it, there were three drafts amounting to some $2,900,000, those payments becoming due toward the end of February. In so far as March is concerned, there are a number of drafts which total some $8,050,000.

CUBA—REPORTED STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister any comment to make on the statement reported to have been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at a Progressive Conservative meeting in Toronto, that Canada's policy with regard to trade with Cuba would come under fire at the meeting of Canada-United States parliamentarians now under way?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): After the very congenial circumstances of a few minutes ago, I am sure that nothing will come under fire.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question to ask the Prime Minister, having to do with the fact that we are now on orders of the day and not on motions. The supplementary question is this. Does the Prime Minister feel that the statement made by his colleague—and I understand that the hon. gentleman shook his fist—to the effect that Canada would stick to its position, is the kind of opening gesture that will help this meeting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, those of us who know the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who happens to be absent today, know that he does not require the shaking of a fist in order to emphasize a position.

Mr. Chevrier: I would appreciate it if the Prime Minister would answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SALE OF VESSELS TO CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address an appropriate question to the Minister of Transport. In view of public interest and reported recent developments in the case of the Canadian National Steamships vessels which were sold to Cuban interests during the Batista regime, which failed to meet their obligations, leaving the ships to rot in Halifax, would the minister bring us up to date on the latest developments and state specifically whether the deal has now been completed to the government's satisfaction and whether any of the vessels are now in use?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the fleet of eight vessels was sold in August, 1958 to the Banco Cubano del Commercio Exterior of Havana, Cuba, for $2,800,000. The agreement of sale provided for an immediate cash payment of $560,000 with the balance payable in five equal annual instalments of $448,000, with interest on the unpaid balance at 5 per cent per annum. The instalment due in August, 1961 was met in full and the principal outstanding under the agreement has been reduced to $896,000. This balance plus interest continues to be covered by a letter of credit guaranteed by the Bank of America, New York.

Inquiries of the Ministry

The ships having been sold, the government has no knowledge as to whether they are now in use.

SHIPPING

NOVA SCOTIA—LEAKAGE OF OIL FROM GROUNDED FREIGHTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret not having had time to give him notice, so I would ask him to accept this question as notice. Would the Minister of Transport tell the house what arrangements are being made to prevent 100,000 gallons of bunker and fuel oil from leaking out of the freighter Suerte grounded at Three Fathom harbour, which could do great damage to the sea birds, beaches and inshore fisheries in that area?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that my department has been in touch with the owners and the underwriters of the vessel. I shall be pleased to tell the house tomorrow what progress has been made in these circumstances.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WATERLOO SOUTH—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Inasmuch as we understand that March 8 is the last day for the issuing of writs for a by-election to be held in the constituency of Waterloo South, would the Prime Minister indicate to the house what plans are afoot in this regard?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman pointed out, on March 8 a decision as to the date of the by-election will have to be made and an order in council passed accordingly. That will be done.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister now acknowledges that a decision will have to be made, will the Prime Minister not say that this will be a very difficult thing for this government to do?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have seen on the part of the hon. gentleman in the last few days less demand for an election than in the past.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Bring one on. Let us have one.

Mr. Chevrier: Fix the date.

[Mr. Balcer.]

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE OF NAME OF LIBERAL PARTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the acting house leader. In view of the recent events which resulted in a change in the seating arrangements in this house, I wonder whether the house leader has received a request from the Leader of the Opposition to change the designation of that party to the Socialist Liberal party?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not one related to the administrative responsibilities of any minister. In view of the fact that it has been asked, I do not know whether the hon. member for Laurier was rising in order to answer it or to comment.

An hon. Member: The Ottawa Journal could answer it.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I was rising to do two things, Mr. Speaker. The first was to comment on the statement made by the hon. member, to the effect that we have never changed our name on this side of the house.

An hon. Member: You will after the next election.

GREETINGS ON ANNIVERSARY OF PATRON SAINT OF WALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. F. Jones (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In order to show the affinity and affection which those of Welsh descent feel toward all other minority groups may I say this.

(Translation):

On behalf of all people of Welsh descent, I should like to extend my best wishes to all hon. members and to our distinguished visitors on the occasion of St. David's day.

(Text):

To complete my salute to St. David may I say to all, iechyd da.

PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

STATEMENT ON REPORTED REFUSAL OF REAPPOINTMENT BY E. P. TAYLOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Peterborough directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a newspaper announcement to the effect that Mr. E. P. Taylor had declined reappointment to the national productivity council. The hon. member asked:

Can the minister indicate this gentleman's reasons for not accepting reappointment?

It was with great reluctance that Mr. E. P. Taylor accepted an appointment to the national productivity council last year, and it was agreed that his appointment would be for one year only. Mr. Taylor has indicated in a letter to the chairman of the national productivity council that, were it not for the fact that circumstances beyond his control make it impossible for him to devote the time required to the affairs of the productivity council, he would be glad to let his name stand for reappointment.

It is well known that Mr. Taylor has many commitments in other directions, and it is therefore not possible for him to devote the necessary time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State even though it was put to him some time ago.

Since the former under secretary of state, Mr. Stein, resigned a few months ago, does the Secretary of State intend to appoint a successor in the near future or, at least, before dissolution of parliament?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this matter does not come exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. At any rate, I can inform the hon. member that the cabinet is aware of the situation and that the matter will be settled shortly.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF ANNOUNCED FARE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): The question I wish to ask the Minister of Transport is this. Will he refer to the air transport board the question of increased tariffs and tolls which Trans-Canada Air Lines has announced it will put into effect soon with reference to its routes?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): As I announced some time ago, Mr. Speaker, T.C.A. would be in the same position as any other carrier in Canada as far as the air transport board is concerned. T.C.A. has filed its new rate increases, and they are at the present time being reviewed by the air transport board. If for one reason or another the air transport board does not feel that the rates are adequate or are the proper rates, it has until April 30 to refuse or accept those rates.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

The Chairman: House again in committee of supply, further supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962; vote No. 635, Department of Forestry. Shall this vote carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister not going to make the customary statement?

Mr. Stewart: He has made it already. Where have you been?

The Chairman: Order. The item that was under consideration last night was item 635, and so far there has been no notification to the Chair of a change of programs.

Mr. Hellyer: Last evening the government leader in the house came to the opposition and said that the business before the house today would be consideration of the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Winch: The main estimates.

Mr. Hellyer: This information was transmitted to the members of the opposition, and that is the work for which they have prepared for this day.

The Chairman: In view of the explanation given by certain members of the house, I take it that it would be in order to go ahead to this item in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for the year ending March 31, 1963.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $11,098,000.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bourget: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Walker: If the opposition is anxious for me to do so I shall be very happy to oblige.

Mr. Hellyer: If we could get another performance like the one we had the other night, it would be very amusing.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): May I describe briefly first the world of housing as we understand it in this House of Commons. There can be no question of the very heavy and continuing impact of the house building and related industries on the national economy, an impact that has been revealed in all its sharpness and clarity by the giant forward steps taken by this government during the years since it assumed office in June of 1957.

It is not my purpose or intention today to review in detail all the developments that have taken place during the past four and a half years as a result of the federal government's interest in and concern with housing. Even a simple chronology of events, a straight recital of new legislation, policy determinations and procedural adjustments, would take more time than I have at my disposal. The events have been many in number and forward thinking in nature, and have arisen out of our forthright common sense approach to the complex problems that have confronted us and out of our ability to adapt to meet changing circumstances. And woven into the whole fabric of housing, bright and chromatic in its colours, has been our resolute determination to assist those Canadians whose needs are most urgent, namely the lower income families of our nation and our senior citizens.

I shall have more to say about these considerations a little later in my remarks. In searching for a means by which I may most vividly impart to hon. members something of the drama of housing in Canada, I came across some statistics that can be readily interpreted and easily digested, even by the hon. member for Trinity. I cite the figure of $3,271 million.

Mr. Hellyer: Mighty big figures.

Mr. Walker: They are, and perhaps if you come to me later I will explain them to you.

Mr. Hellyer: I hope you will have found out in the meantime.

Mr. Walker: This is the dollar value, since 1957, of National Housing Act mortgage loan commitments by the approved lenders and by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, N.H.A. loans for municipal sewage treatment projects university housing, the federal share of costs of public housing, both rental and land assembly, and of urban renewal studies and grants for slum clearance. This is, of course, a staggering sum, even in these days of astronomical figures. It serves, however, to set the scene in a new and perhaps different dimension, to reveal the effectiveness of the amended National Housing Act as a legislative instrument, and to emphasize the significant role of the house building industry in the economic and social life of the country.

[Mr. Walker.]

Of this amount of $3,271 million, more than $1.6 billion—for my friend, that is one billion six hundred million dollars—was invested in national housing and related requirements in Ontario, while Quebec's share was $581 million. The balance—if hon. members of the C.C.F. party or what is left of it would be good enough to either retire to the smoking room or pay attention, I would be able to carry on.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we have to take that kind of insult. We have been sitting here listening.

The Chairman: Order. I think there has been a lot of coming and going throughout the whole house. However, it appears as if all hon. members are now settled down and are keen on hearing the minister.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I indicate to the minister that, one, I do not smoke and, two, he is usually not worth listening to anyhow.

Mr. Walker: I want to thank the hon. member. He has my permission to retire. As a matter of fact we would all be very pleased if he did.

Mr. Peters: Get on with your jokes.

Mr. Walker: I would be glad to.

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. members to be silent.

Mr. Walker: There must be five of you left.

Mr. Peters: You will be the one who is leaving.

The Chairman: Order. The minister may continue.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For the benefit of those who were not paying attention, perhaps I may review what I said. Of this amount of $3,271 million, more than $1.6 billion was invested in N.H.A. housing and related requirements in Ontario, while Quebec's share—of course, this does not interest the new party representatives—was some—$581 million.

Mr. Peters: Why don't you make your speech to the country?

An hon. Member: Keep quiet.

The Chairman: Order, please. The minister has the floor, and I am sure everyone will have a chance to make whatever remarks he deems appropriate when the time comes.

Mr. Walker: The balance, Mr. Chairman, was roughly divided as follows: British Columbia, $256 million; prairie provinces, $700 million and the Atlantic provinces, $130 million.

Now, what happened in the field of housing in 1961? In the first place, 125,577 new dwelling units were started during the year. This was much more than we anticipated, and was an increase of 15.3 per cent over the 108,858 starts reported in 1960 and brought the total starts during the five year period, 1957-1961, to nearly 663,000 new dwellings.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Go paddle your canoe.

Mr. Walker: I understand you are becoming a capitalist in playing golf whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Mr. Peters: What about you?

Mr. Walker: Not the hon. member for Timiskaming; I am referring to his friend the hon. member for Timmins beside him. The hon. member only tries to play.

Mr. Fisher: You had better go back to your canoe.

Mr. Walker: You know, Mr. Chairman, on a matter as serious as this I would think hon. members, if they refuse to leave the hall, would at least be attentive. This interests at least the 2.5 million Canadians who are now in new homes as a result of the advent of the Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): May I speak to a point of order, Mr. Chairman? Will you inform the minister that we happen to be in the house and not in a hall?

The Chairman: I think the minister is probably aware of that.

Mr. Walker: I can think of one kind of house the hon. member should be in.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is that?

Mr. Walker: I am not going to raise my voice again. There were 115,607 units completed in 1961. The total was slightly below the corresponding figure of 123,757 for 1960, a decline of 6.5 per cent. This year's completions brought the aggregate since 1957 to some 650,000. This means that one out of every six Canadian families is living in a new house built since 1957. My hon. friends can call that anything they like, but it is a magnificent record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Walker: What effect have these high rates of production had on the market for new housing? As I was able to tell you last September in introducing a measure to amend the National Housing Act, the answer is that there continues to be a satisfactory balance between production and consumption; and that in spite—I am glad to see my hon. friend is here—of the impact of a volume of new house construction of this magnitude, output has kept pace with demand but has not been permitted to exceed it. At the end of 1961 the number of completed and unoccupied houses and duplexes in 36 major Canadian urban centres was 4,223, down 5.5 per cent from the figure for December, 1960.

Responsible in part for this encouraging state of affairs is government policy which, while not denying an N.H.A. mortgage loan to any eligible prospective borrower, has controlled the use of public funds for speculative purposes by the approval of C.M.H.C. loans to merchant builders only when the houses for which they are intended have been pre-sold to satisfactory purchasers. As my hon. friends will appreciate, this really worked out well, as the figures must indicate.

Mortgage funds required to finance new National Housing Act residential construction were in substantially better supply during 1961, with life insurance and trust and loan companies continuing to meet the bulk of the need. Of particular interest was the spirited participation of trust companies, whose volume of N.H.A. lending, in terms of dwelling units financed, was almost three times that of their previous record year in 1958, also during the regime of the Diefenbaker government.

Nevertheless, in the virtual absence of loans from the chartered banks the flow of N.H.A. mortgage money was not wholly adequate, and it was supplemented as required by public funds in the form of residual loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, for which there was a steady demand throughout the year. As hon. members are aware, it has always been our policy to encourage a maximum investment on the part of approved lenders in national housing mortgage loans. Consistent with this policy it has been necessary at the same time to maintain the lowest possible interest rate so that borrowers do not find themselves confronted by unnecessarily excessive costs for the money they have obtained.

I respectfully submit that both these objectives have been attained. Throughout 1961 the N.H.A. interest rate was at a level sufficiently high to be attractive to the approved lenders, but when a continuing flow of new funds seemed assured, at least for the foreseeable future, and the borrowing rate of the government had decreased slightly, it appeared reasonable that the N.H.A. interest rate should be reduced. This action was taken on November 6, 1961 and at the same time interest rates on loans for limited dividend housing, for municipal sewage treatment projects, and for university residences were also lowered.

It is interesting to note that during the year 1961 life insurance, trust and loan companies were responsible for loans aggregating $452 million, or 62 per cent of total commitments. This figure compares with $232.2 million or 59 per cent of total commitments in 1960. In addition, central mortgage made $271.3 million available from public funds, compared with $161.1 million in 1960. That is a great participation for the crown corporation, $271.3 million, and in all some 64,000 new dwelling units were financed under the N.H.A. Act in 1961. Of these about 63,000 were built with mortgage loans, 38,500 by approved lenders and 24,500 by the corporation. Federal-provincial partnership arrangements accounted for the balance. In 1960 only 37,000 units were financed under the act, just one half of last year's volume.

It is readily apparent that the physical product of the N.H.A. mortgage loans must be, and is, highly significant in terms of employment in the building trades. You may recall that last fall I said each new dwelling unit financed under the N.H.A.—and this is so important, and has been so important in the last five years, in getting Canada out of the recession—involves an average of two and a half man years of employment, on and off site. On this basis N.H.A. lending in 1961 was responsible for more than 160,000 man years of employment, and of these, federal direct lending for more than 61,500 man years.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, you will agree this is a contribution in which we can all justly take pride and satisfaction. Of the total number of housing units built, if we take a rough figure of 125,000 with two and a half man years for each of them, you can see we have an astonishing number of men getting employment in our housing industry. I might add that not content with merely adding to the central mortgage employment opportunities, I and the officials of central mortgage are working closely with my colleague the Minister of Labour to devise new ways and means of attaining an even higher rate of employment in the building industry, particularly in the winter months.

I have told the story of the N.H.A. mortgage lending in 1961 in some detail, and I should now like to make just a brief reference to conventional loans. I am informed that conventional mortgage lending on new housing by the lending institutions was less in 1961 than in the previous year, when loans were approved for 42,000 dwelling units, amounting to $307 million. However, there was a substantial increase in conventional mortgage loans by these lenders on existing dwellings and on non-residential property, with the dollar value rising to $600 million from $484 million in 1960.

A few minutes ago I referred to our unfailing concern with housing for lower income families and for elderly persons. This concern was again translated into positive action on several fronts in 1961. For example, some 3,300 units of rental accommodation were financed under the limited dividend provisions of the N.H.A., more than double the number approved in the previous year. Of these, about 2,700 were for lower income families and approximately 600 for our senior citizens. All the activity in these sectors took place in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

In 1961 production of limited dividend rental accommodation brought the aggregate since mid-1957 to more than 18,600 dwelling units and the total loans to an excess of $143 million. I believe you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that this constitutes a satisfying achievement, not merely in terms of numbers but in the knowledge that thousands of Canadian families, husbands, wives and their fine children, and many elderly persons, have been assisted in their search for improved living accommodation, and this after all is the primary consideration and the raison d'être of the Diefenbaker government.

Nor must we forget the assistance that has also been afforded to borrowers under the act as a result of amendments approved in 1960, when the ratio of loan to lending value was increased to provide higher loans and lower down payments. The maximum N.H.A. loan by regulation was raised and the permissive repayment period was extended, but even that is not the full story. In partnership with the provincial governments we were again active in the field of public housing and in the realm of urban redevelopment, and we are very, very happy to have Ontario taking such an active interest in the public housing program and very happy to have the assistance which their new program promises. In 1961 according to preliminary statistics—and here I should again stress that few of the 1961 figures I am able to provide today are final—the construction of more than 900 dwelling units was approved, and the federal share of public housing expenditures totalled nearly $8 million. This brought to almost 4,000 units the number approved since mid-1957, and the total federal share of expenditures in this respect to more than $54.5 million.

Under similar arrangements the development of 855 building lots for sale to home owners was approved during the year, bringing the total number to more than 4,500 since 1957, and the federal share of expenditures required to develop the lots has exceeded $13 million in the same period. Federal contributions toward redevelopment of blighted areas in our cities totalled more than $5 million in 1961. This figure represents federal grants, less one half of the estimated recovery from the disposal of the cleared lands.

In 1961 grants, which included one of more than $3.6 million to the city of Winnipeg and one in excess of $1 million to the city of Montreal, brought federal contributions since 1957 for these purposes to more than $18 million. I should also mention that grants amounting to some $600,000 have been made since 1957 to municipalities for urban renewal studies, and most hon. members who represent urban districts must know that their particular localities have benefited as a result of this. Of course these urban renewal studies are intended to identify substandard areas and to form proposals for the solution of problems attributable to blight.

I should now like to review briefly two other highly successful provisions of the National Housing Act, two new concepts that were added, hon. members will recall, late in 1960. The first of these has to do with loans for municipal sewage disposal projects. By the way, this is an idea that I received from the backbenchers on the government side, from whom I have obtained so many other ideas on many other subjects.

The primary purpose of this program is, of course, to assist in resolving the problems of water and soil pollution, which had reached alarming proportions in many parts of Canada. Accordingly the government introduced, and parliament approved, legislation providing loans of up to two thirds of the cost of a project; and to encourage municipalities to tackle the job without delay, 25 per cent of the loan and of the interest paid or accrued will be forgiven if the project is completed on or before March 31, 1963, or on that proportion of the project which is completed by that date.

Last year, the first year of operation, no less than 115 municipalities in all our ten provinces obtained 145 loans in an amount of more than $40 million to assist them in the construction or extension of trunk sewage systems or sewage treatment plants. At the year end there were also on hand some 245 preliminary inquiries—think of that—representing a loan potential of an additional $80.6 million.

I am sure the hon. member for St. Denis must regret that the Postmaster General is out of the chamber for a few moments. As another indication of the response to the legislation, loans were made to 78 communities—we will be glad to have the hon. member back—of less than 5,000 population, and of these 63 have less than 2,000 population and 50 less than 1,000. In most of these smaller communities—

Mr. Deschatelets: If you were more interesting you would not have an empty chamber.

Mr. Walker: I count a total of nine Liberal members. The hon. member is quite right in drawing my attention to that matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that is an improper observation, and if the minister will look and see how few members there are on the government side will be ashamed to be a member of this ministry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Walker: I am very happy to say that there are a goodly number of government representatives, and I stress, although it may not be too polite to mention it, that there are less than 11 members in the Liberal opposition and at the present time there are two members of the N.D.P., whereas there are—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Twenty two Conservative members.

Mr. Walker: —whereas I count 80 Conservative members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, when I was so rudely interrupted by the hon. member—

Mr. Deschatelets: On a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont on a point of order.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the minister just said there were 80 members on the government side. There are not more than 40.

The Chairman: Order. I think the scoreboard has been sufficiently discussed, and perhaps it would help in making progress in the business before the committee if the minister would continue his statement.

Mr. Valade: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, this is not a trivial matter. The Minister of Public Works—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for St. Mary had risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege because as a member of this house I was attacked by the words of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont. I am a member of the Canada-United States interparliamentary committee, which comprises about 40 members. I also sit in the House of Commons—

The Chairman: Order. I think this is not strictly a question of privilege. The situation is that we have a quorum of hon. members at the moment. The minister has the floor, and I think if he will continue with the subject upon which he has embarked we will make some progress.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister has made a statement with regard to the number of hon. members in the chamber—

An hon. Member: What point of order is that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and if Your Honour will examine the rules and procedures of this house it will be found that the only person who can properly identify the number of members in the house at any one time is the Clerk, speaking on behalf of the presiding officer. The Minister of Public Works said there were 80 Conservative members in this chamber. That is not a fact. In view of this I suggest that the only proper way to regulate this matter is for you, sir, to indicate to us whether or not there are 80 Conservative members in the chamber at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member has made an explanation to this committee, which explanation will be taken into account, as it has to be, of course. However, the concern of the Chair is to proceed with the business. I think there has been sufficient discussion on the presence of hon. members in this chamber. As I said before, the Chair is only interested in there being a quorum. We have that quorum; therefore I would ask the co-operation of hon. members in allowing the minister to continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are fewer Tory members now.

Mr. Walker: In all fairness, Mr. Chairman, I must say that when the hon. member for Essex East got to his feet it is true that several of our members left the chamber. Of course that is more habit than anything else; you cannot blame them for that. As another indication of the response to the legislation—

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is having some trouble with his statement.

Mr. Walker: I will have a little chat with the hon. member for Laurier afterward.

The Chairman: Order. I am afraid the minister has now exhausted his time and unless there is unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

[Mr. Valade.]

The Chairman: I take it that the committee gives unanimous consent to the minister continuing.

Mr. Deschatelets: He is so funny; go ahead.

Mr. Walker: I am glad to have you back. Were you in Bermuda? You are looking well. As another indication of the response to the legislation, loans were made to 78 communities of less than 5,000 population, and of these 63 have less than 2,000 population and 50 less than 1,000. In most of these smaller communities sewage systems are being provided where they did not exist before and this has also, in many instances, encouraged the installation of public water systems to replace individual wells.

The committee will be glad to know that there was also a most favourable acceptance of N.H.A. loans to universities to assist in the construction of dormitory accommodation for students. Loans in an aggregate amount of more than $20 million were made to 22 universities and colleges for residences to house some 4,300 students. Preliminary applications had also been received at the end of the year from 11 universities which, if approved, could result in loans amounting to $16.7 million that would help to finance accommodation for an additional 4,000 students.

During 1961, too, as hon. members are aware, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation undertook at the government's request to encourage the development of a secondary market for N.H.A. insured first mortgages by offering for sale a part of the portfolio it had acquired as a result of extensive lending operations since 1957. Indicating a growing interest in N.H.A. mortgages as investments, the corporation sold $41 million of its loans to investment dealers, banks and life insurance and trust and loan companies. Proceeds of sales are used to retire corporation debentures held by the federal government. Many of the loans were resold by the purchasers to pension funds, which had not previously included mortgage investments in their portfolios. This is, of course, only a beginning, but we are confident that a market of this kind, stimulated by periodic sales by C.M.H.C., will create not only a more regular but actually a larger demand for N.H.A. mortgages.

As I mentioned last September, we are also appreciative of the responsibilities imposed upon us by the research provisions of the National Housing Act in directing the search for a more attractive, more utilitarian house for Canadian families at a lower cost. I shall not take time to describe in detail the progress being made on this front, except to say that when

I had the privilege last October of taking part in the formal inauguration of field tests of the mark III experimental house at Rockcliffe I was highly impressed by this and other tasks being undertaken by the National House Builders Association and other groups and individuals with financial assistance by the federal government.

In spite of this record of achievement, the highlights of which I have touched upon today, we are still aware that we can learn from experience, that we can benefit from the knowledge of others. We know we can benefit, too, from the knowledge and criticism of hon. members of this committee, including the hon. member for Nipissing. It is for these reasons that we watch closely at all times housing developments in the United States; that we have, indeed, established and are maintaining a close liaison with our contemporaries in that country. But perhaps the older cultures have even more lessons for us, and I counted it a privilege last autumn when I was able to make an all too brief visit to Europe for the purpose of looking into the house construction and financing techniques being used in some countries over there. Later, as hon. members know, I attended an important conference in southeast Asia, and again I was able to see in another dimension the latest developments in the housing field.

At my suggestion the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and three of his senior officials subsequently undertook a more detailed examination of housing developments in England, Scotland, Sweden and Holland. The primary purpose of the study by Dr. Bates and his party was to inquire into the methods of producing housing in those countries and examine the ways in which housing is financed and subsidized.

I have reached the end of my observations on the housing situation in 1961 and in the years since 1957. It may be asked—and it is a proper question—what of the immediate future? What is 1962 likely to have in store for us? I shall not be so rash as to hazard a precise estimate of the number of new housing starts; there are too many imponderables, too many world uncertainties, too many guesses entailed. However, I will say that if only because of the substantial carry-over from 1961, amounting to some 74,000 units, we are confident of another substantial volume of housing investment in 1962. Furthermore, should the number of starts also show an increase over 1961, the investment increment would naturally be of even greater magnitude.

That summarizes the picture of housing as we see it at the present time.

Mr. Garland: I wonder if the minister would permit a question before he leaves the subject of housing. Could he say, of the total number of starts in 1961, how many were single dwellings?

Mr. Walker: I shall be glad to find that out for the hon. gentleman. I will have the figures available when we are going over the items. I shall be very pleased to do that.

Now may I discuss briefly some features of the departmental activities during 1961-62, and outline certain points of interest in our plans for the coming fiscal year. The total appropriation which is requested in the 1962-63 public works estimates is $217,451,000. Of the total amount requested, $200,226,000 is for the activities of the department as such. The remainder consists of $660,000 required by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and $16,565,000 for the national capital commission. The accounts for the present fiscal year are, as hon. members are aware, still active; and while it is not possible at this time to give precise figures on expenditures, I expect the usual high percentage of the funds appropriated will be spent. Usually the estimates of the Department of Public Works come down in the committee much later than this.

I should like now to report on the building construction activities of the department. In order to provide needed accommodation for government services across Canada, construction was begun on a number of important buildings during the year. These included a building for the Queen's printer in Halifax, Nova Scotia, $248,700; a public building in Kentville, Nova Scotia, $368,936; in Montreal, Quebec, a building for the Department of Veterans Affairs, $1,063,400; as well as a building for the western zone office of the unemployment insurance commission, $455,000; St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, a public building valued at $440,758; in Ottawa, Ontario, alterations and improvements valued at $5,088,000 were begun on the west block as well as a computer centre for the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue, $1,738,488; in Etobicoke, Ontario, a new public building, $179,429; Lacombe, Alberta, a public building, $147,794; in Prince Rupert, British Columbia, a new public building, $703,524 and in Vancouver, British Columbia, a building to house the unemployment insurance commission and postal station "C", $729,000.

In addition to these projects begun during the year, construction continued on other major projects such as additions to public buildings in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Moncton, New Brunswick, and the new postal terminal in Quebec city. Here in Ottawa I can point to the completion of the new building for the Post Office Department at Confederation Heights and continuing work on the new building for the headquarters staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare in Tunney's pasture. In London, Ontario, there was a new postal terminal; in Toronto the Arthur Meighen building was opened; in Winnipeg the new unemployment insurance building was completed; and in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan and Penticton, British Columbia, new public buildings were completed.

During the year the department continued to assist the winter works program through the construction of standard post office buildings in smaller communities across Canada. I will not bother to give a list of these locations, since they have already appeared in Hansard on February 9 of this year.

Turning now to the harbours and rivers work, I should like to draw the attention of the committee to the more noteworthy of the many projects currently in progress. For example, in St. John's, Newfoundland, work continued on the complete reconstruction of one of North America's oldest harbours. At Baie Comeau, along the province of Quebec's flourishing north shore, the department, in conjunction with private interests and the provincial government, is undertaking a major expansion of harbour facilities. Important harbour improvements are also under way at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and Cornwall, Oshawa and Port Credit, Ontario. In Toronto harbour, work on the extention to the shipping channel and for the provision of additional seaway berthage continued, and these facilities are expected to be available in time for the 1963 shipping season. Work also continued during the year at the lakehead on the construction of new terminal facilities capable of accommodating ocean going vessels. At Nanaimo, British Columbia and Grand Manan, New Brunswick, important wharf projects were begun.

Before dealing with the trans-Canada highway I will continue to review what has been accomplished with respect to harbour improvements and repairs. During the current year major harbour improvement and repair projects were completed at Hamilton, Ontario and continued at Wood Islands, Prince Edward Island, and Pointe au Pere, Quebec and at Pictou, Nova Scotia. A breakwater extension in the St. John area at Negro Town point in New Brunswick and the reconstruction of the assembly wharf at Port Alberni, British Columbia, were completed. Work also continued on the million dollar water supply system to serve the various federal communities in the vicinity of Fort Churchill.

And now a word about the trans-Canada highway. As hon. members know, the province of Quebec became a party to the trans-Canada highway agreement on October 27, 1960. To my friend the hon. member for Levis may I say that we welcome the inclusion of that province. All ten provinces now participate in this grand design.

Under the agreement with the provinces, provision is made for federal participation in the construction of the highway across each of the ten provinces. The total value of the work approved to date is estimated at $689,823,000, of which Canada's share is estimated at approximately $400 million. Payments during the present fiscal year to date approximate $31 million. The total mileage of the highway, exclusive of 140 miles through the national parks, totals 4,719 miles, of which 2,995 miles have been completed under the agreement. Adding some 1,000 miles of the highway which were paved prior to the passing of the act, nearly 4,000 miles of the highway now have a paved surface. The sections of the highway through the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta are practically completed, and the remaining provinces are making every effort to complete the highway before December 31, 1963, although completion is doubtful in Newfoundland and Quebec.

The construction of the sections of the highway through the national parks is a federal responsibility. Expenditures on this account to date total $68,247,000, of which $5,875,000 covers expenditures during the present fiscal year.

Mr. Bourget: I did not hear what the figure of $68,247,000 related to.

Mr. Walker: That relates to national parks, which are a federal responsibility. It is expected that all major work, with the exception of additional snow sheds in the Glacier park and final course paving in the Terra Nova, Glacier and Revelstoke parks will be completed before September of this year. The work with respect to Glacier park is a tremendous undertaking and far more difficult than we anticipated. The Glacier and Revelstoke national parks section is part of the Rogers pass route through the Rocky mountains, and is the last major gap in the whole trans-Canada route. It is expected to be declared officially open this fall, which means that for the first time it will be possible to travel the whole trans-Canada route from coast to coast. This will be properly celebrated by the presence of the Prime Minister, who will officially open the trans-Canada highway in Rogers pass, British Columbia, in September of this year. He will be joined there by all ten provincial premiers and by as many hon. members of the government as are able to attend. I trust that if there are any members of the opposition parties left at that time, as many as possible will attend.

I come now to the department's program for 1962-63. Hon. members will note that the number of large new items included in the estimates indicates that activities of the department will continue at a high level in the months to come.

I should like first of all to consider some of the major projects planned for the Ottawa area. At the Confederation Heights development on Riverside drive, plans are being prepared for two new buildings to house three government departments, one for the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Forestry and the other for the Department of Transport. Both will be imposing structures and will complement the over-all scheme of government buildings in the area. Construction is expected to start during the coming year. If any hon. members have a spare moment I urge that they visit Confederation Heights and examine the magnificent development that has taken place there in the last year or two.

Of special interest, I think, is the fact that in the new northern affairs and national resources building, the use of Eskimo art for decorative purposes will be employed and so reflect its close association with the north and northern development. The exterior of the forestry wing will conform to the northern affairs building, but the interior will feature a maximum use of Canadian wood materials.

The transport building will be an imposing high-rise edifice providing the focal point of the whole development. With the completion of these two buildings, along with the new proposed building to house the head office of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, construction in Confederation Heights will be complete. There will remain only the landscaping then, to transform the area into one of the finest collection of government administration buildings to be found in any capital in the world.

Work will also begin this summer on Canada's new national library and archives, which is to be erected on the site of the No. 1 temporary building. Tenders for the building, including demolition of No. 1 temporary building, are to be called this summer to enable work to begin in July, at which time the taxation branch offices in No. 1 temporary building will have been moved to new quarters at Tunney's pasture. Excavation work will begin immediately and is scheduled for completion sometime in 1963, when the actual construction will begin. The completed building will be open to the public by 1967, in time for Canada's centennial celebrations. Also due to get under way this year is the site development for the mines branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys on the Corktown road location.

I am certain that hon. members are interested in learning of the building construction projects scheduled by the department for other parts of the country. I shall therefore give a brief resume of some of the major projects. They are:

Newfoundland: Additions and alterations are to be made to the public building at Corner Brook.

Nova Scotia: New public buildings will be erected at Shelburne, Springhill and Sydney Mines as well as new unemployment insurance commission headquarters in Halifax.

New Brunswick: New buildings are planned at Edmundston and Sussex.

Quebec: Two new postal buildings and an unemployment insurance commission zone office will be built in Montreal, while federal buildings are scheduled for Grand'Mere, Ste. Genevieve de Pierrefonds and Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere.

Ontario: Public buildings are planned for Arnprior, Brockville, Fort William, Georgetown, Midland, Strathroy, Sudbury and Waterloo.

Manitoba: New buildings will be constructed at Boissevain and Fort Garry.

Saskatchewan: New public buildings at Shellbrook and Duck Lake.

Alberta: New federal buildings will be constructed at Calgary and High Prairie.

British Columbia: New buildings will be constructed at Burns Lake, North Surrey and a building in Vancouver to accommodate unemployment insurance commission offices and postal station "C" will be completed.

Yukon and Northwest Territories: A public building is planned for Hay River.

It is anticipated that the program of erecting standard post offices in the smaller centres across Canada as an aid to winter work will be continued next winter. Present plans call for a program roughly the same size as undertaken this winter.

Considering plans for harbours and rivers during the 1962-63 fiscal year, the department expects to continue with work currently under way at a number of major Canadian ports, as well as to make a start on projects which, when completed, will be of great importance to the Canadian economy as a whole. The extensive harbour improvements at St. John's, Newfoundland, will be continued, as will the harbour improvement projects at Baie Comeau and Pointe au Pere, Quebec.

In Toronto harbour the ship channel extension will be completed and major dredging projects will be continued. Major work including dredging will be undertaken in the Hamilton harbour. The new terminal facilities at the lakehead will be completed and placed in service later this summer. This means that Canada's most inland port will be one of the most modern in the world for handling package freight cargo.

Some of the other major projects to be undertaken during the coming fiscal year are as follows:

Newfoundland: The dredging of a number of high spots and the widening of the channel at Catalina will be undertaken. Major wharf reconstruction and extension work is slated for Old Perlican and Marystown. A new 100-foot long L-shaped wharf will be constructed at Piccadilly. Wharf construction and extension work will be undertaken at Ship Cove to provide improved facilities.

Nova Scotia: A new breakwater wharf is planned for Chapel cove. The existing breakwater at Freeport will be extended some 600 feet. At Pinkney Point a new breakwater will be constructed while at Walton the existing wharf will be replaced. It is also expected that reconstruction of pier "C" at Pictou will be completed during the year. Harbour improvements are planned for Inverness in Cape Breton.

Price Edward Island: A U-shaped breakwater landing will be constructed at Egmont bay, while extensive harbour improvements will be undertaken at Summerside and Alberton.

New Brunswick: Major harbour improvement projects are scheduled for Botsford, Lameque, and Malloch Beach. In Saint John extensive dredging and a further breakwater extension are planned.

Quebec: At Havre Aubert, large dredging operations will be continued and a start will be made on the construction of a new deep water wharf. Wharf reconstruction will begin at Riviere au Tonnerre and Les Eboulements. At Matane and Portneuf large projects are contemplated.

Ontario: Large new harbour projects are scheduled to provide improved facilities at Goderich, Leamington, Port Credit and Sarnia.

Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Northwest Territories: New wharf facilities will be undertaken at Barron river, Jan lake and Pelican Narrows as well as major reconstruction of the wharf at Cambridge bay.

British Columbia: A new boat harbour to accommodate a large number of fishing boats is being planned for Nanaimo. An important new ferry terminal is being planned at Prince Rupert to accommodate the proposed ferry which will operate between Prince Rupert, B.C. and several points along the Alaskan panhandle.

In the field of bridge construction, I am pleased to report good progress on a number of projects. The bridge between Campobello island, N.B., and Lubec, Maine, will be completed and open to traffic in the coming year. Also scheduled for completion this year is the new low level bridge over the Burlington canal.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Walker: Thank you. The governments of Canada, Ontario and Quebec have agreed on a design for the new $12 million Macdonald-Cartier bridge between Ottawa and Hull. In this connection, a girder design with no superstructure above the deck railings was selected. It is anticipated that plans for this bridge will be completed in time for tenders to be called by midsummer to enable work to begin this year.

As the federal government's central construction agency, the Department of Public Works continues to assume responsibility for the construction of an ever increasing number of projects on behalf of and financed by other government departments. For instance, during the current fiscal year the department will be spending approximately $36 million on projects financed in the estimates of other departments. At the present time it would seem that the department's activities in this field will be considerably more extensive during 1962-1963. In fact the total amount of money provided by other departments for projects which will be carried out by the Department of Public Works is in the neighbourhood of some $56 million. Much of this appropriation is for the continuation of works already under way, but there are also many new items.

In particular, we will be doing a great deal more work for the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice, which has provided over $9 million for construction, during 1962-63, for large institutions in Nova Scotia, Quebec, British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario as well as for smaller ones in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Hon. members will be interested in some of the larger items. I will not take the time at the moment to include these but I shall be happy to answer any questions. At this time I should like to thank the ministers in charge of the various departments for whom the Department of Public Works acts as the construction agency for their wonderful co-operation during the current fiscal year.

I have but touched on the highlights of the activities of my department for the coming fiscal year. Hon. members may have many questions they will wish to ask about specific items in which they are especially interested. I will try at this time or at least during the debate to answer them to the best of my knowledge and ability.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I think we have seen this afternoon further evidence of the confusion that exists among the government members, when all the members of the committee noticed that the Deputy Chairman of the house, who was occupying your seat, did not exactly know where to go.

He first called the supplementary estimates of the Department of Forestry whereas there had been an agreement, so I gathered, to the effect that the main estimates of the Department of Public Works would be examined.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: I wonder whether the hon. member is following the right procedure in commenting on the order of business of the house. As I understand it, that is something over which neither the Chair nor the opposition have any control. It is a matter for decision by the government. I would ask his co-operation in dealing with the estimates.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It was such a nice example that I could not prevent myself from saying a few words about it.

(Translation):

And now, with regard to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), as we say, he is a hopeless case. It seems that he will never mend his ways; he starts on the wrong foot, he antagonizes everybody.

I do not want to teach him a lesson, but it seems to me that, being a minister of the crown, he should set an example to the members, so that we may be able to discuss intelligently the important estimates he is submitting to the house. As I said previously, his case is hopeless and I think, Mr. Chairman, that we will ask you to pray for him.

In any case, I wish to thank him for the information he has just given us on the various activities of his department last year. He has explained to us, among other things, the projects that the department intends to carry out during the next fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, I will not deal this afternoon with matters that come under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I will leave to my colleague, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Garland), the task of dealing with that section of the activities of the public works department, as I will leave it to my colleagues from Ottawa and the region to deal with matters concerning the national capital commission.

I wish to add that I regret the absence of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Tassé), who has been away since the unfortunate accident that happened to him early last fall. On behalf of all the members of this house, I express to him our best wishes for a speedy recovery and return to the house.

As usual, I will limit my remarks to a few important points in the administration of the department, but I might go into details later as we proceed with the study of the various items.

In the past, in order to better evaluate the efficiency of the department, I used to prepare an analysis with the help of a chart showing the exact percentage of the amounts spent in each branch of the department.

Unfortunately, as, this year again, these items are examined before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) makes his budget speech, I was unable to make a thorough study of the situation, because we lack the information I just mentioned, which is contained in the budget papers tabled by the Minister of Finance before he makes his budget speech.

Mr. Chairman, these are perhaps the last general estimates of the Department of Public Works which will be discussed before the next election. I therefore believe it might be well to review briefly this department's activities since June 1958.

The minister said earlier today that the present government had taken giant forward steps. Well, I would suggest to him that, as far as the activities of the Department of Public Works are concerned, those giant steps were backward steps, and here is the proof.

For the year 1958-59, the department's expenses were $220 million; in 1959-60, they had gone down to $203.8 million. In 1960-61, we were asked to vote the amount of $195.9 million, which represented a decrease of $25 million in the general estimates of that year compared with those of the previous year. As a matter of fact, I had the opportunity in July 1960, of stating that those estimates of $195.9 million for the fiscal year 1960-61 were only $7.9 million higher than those voted in the last year of the Liberal administration, that is 1956-57, not considering, of course, expenses for the trans-Canada highway which, as everybody knows, are statutory expenditures which increase or decrease according to the work carried out by each of the provinces.

Mr. Valade: Your expenditures were extravagant.

Mr. Bourget: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Valade: Your expenditures were extravagant.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member intends to interrupt me or to make some remarks, I would suggest that he sit down, as he will then have all the time he needs to make a speech. If he has some intelligent remarks or suggestions to make, I would advise him to go back to his seat.

Mr. Deschatelets: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valade: I will make many suggestions.

Mr. Bourget: In 1961-62, disregarding expenditures on the trans-Canada highway we voted, under the general estimates, an amount of $166,548,000 which is $2,300,000 more than the amount voted the year before.

On the other hand, if we deduct from that amount the sum of $2,700,000, that is the increase on account of the national capital commission, which was formerly under the privy council, we find that the appropriations for the Department of Public Works had been reduced by $400,000.

Now, those constant annual decreases in the public works estimates make it very clear that this government soon forgot its promises, and more particularly that famous public works policy, of which we had heard so much during the 1958 election.

Moreover, the large reserve of public works—

(Text):

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Bourget: Yes.

Mr. Walker: Would the hon. member admit that during the ten years up to 1957 the Liberal government's average expenditure in public works was less than $90 million as against our average of $215 million?

Mr. Bourget: I am going to give a very good answer to the minister. I am glad he asked me the question, because before coming down to this chamber I picked up the figures. I think I mentioned them last year during the discussion of the public works estimates. Here are the figures, Mr. Chairman, and I challenge the minister to deny them. The estimates for the Department of Public Works for the year 1946-47 were $37.2 million. Ten years after that, in 1956-57, under a Liberal government the estimates of the Department of Public Works were $147.5 million, an increase of $110 million. I have not calculated the percentage, but the minister will see that we had a progressive administration during that time which increased the amount of work being given to the people of Canada every year. This is clearly shown, and I hope the minister and every other member of this house can see that, especially when you consider the huge increase in the expenditures during the ten years from $37.2 million to $147.5 million.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, the large reserve of public projects—as I was saying earlier when the minister interrupted me—which could be undertaken at a moment's notice if necessary, as stated in the house on June 6, 1958, by the predecessor of the present minister, was just another vision of the Conservative party, a vision which existed only in the mind of its members.

Yet, as you know Mr. Chairman, statistics prove that if there ever was in Canada a period when we should have undertaken public works to help our thousands of unemployed, it was surely since the Conservative government came into power, because the number of unemployed is twice as high as it was when the Liberal government left office.

Mr. Rompre: Did Mr. Lesage not settle that matter?

Mr. Bourget: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Rompre: Mr. Lesage was supposed to settle that.

Mr. Bourget: You should talk. When your government was in power in the province of Quebec, what was the contribution of the Union Nationale—

Mr. Denis: Nothing, absolutely nothing.

Mr. Bourget: —with regard to works designed to reduce unemployment?

Mr. Denis: Nothing at all.

Mr. Bourget: You should be ashamed. You should not raise that question; you should be ashamed because you never said a single word.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member does not know that heavy damage has been caused by thunder in the province of Quebec.

(Text):

Mr. Bourget: That is not a point of order. The hon. member is trying to make a speech. Get up and make a speech.

Mr. Pigeon: I will make a speech that will be difficult for you to answer.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like to remind the committee that we are dealing with estimates of the Department of Public Works, and matters relating to unemployment and other subjects are not relevant.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You noticed that I was very good until somebody else interrupted. As a matter of fact, I did not interrupt the minister when he spoke and I would hope the same kind of treatment will be given to me. Thank you for the word.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I should like to analyse the estimates for the next fiscal year, that is for 1962-63.

What strikes me first is that again this year there is a decrease of $463,343 in the general estimates we are asked to vote. If we subtract from the amount of $167,434,000 the $16.5 million that are earmarked for the national capital commission, which has been under the Department of Public Works for the past two years only, the reduction is greater still.

On the other hand, if we look at the estimates for the two main branches of the department, the one which looks after the construction and repair of public buildings and the harbours and rivers engineering branch, we notice that there is an increase of $1,618,000 in the first case whereas there is a decrease of $1,327,000 in the second. If we take a closer look at the estimates of the public building construction branch, we see that with the exception of Ottawa and the province of Ontario, there is a decrease in every province. As far as Quebec is concerned, for instance, there is a reduction of $166,000.

As for harbours and rivers, we find that there is also a decrease in five provinces, the largest, amounting to $3,255,000, being in Ontario. For the province of Quebec, the decrease is $786,000.

If, moreover, we examine the public building projects for the province of Quebec, for instance, which are shown at pages 339 and 340 of the estimates, we find that almost half of the projects to be carried out consist of nothing new, but are simply previous ones which are to be completed.

As regards harbours and rivers, for the same province, we found the same thing, since a large portion of the items shown at pages 352 and 353 consist of projects to be completed or of retaining walls to be built, a thing which, as we know, does not require much preparation. It is obvious that the minister did not rack his brains to find new projects, for there are but few of them in the list of works recommended for the year 1962-63.

By the way, I want to point out that in the expenditures provided for the province of Quebec, there has been a decrease of $952,000 from the estimates of last year.

Again this year, we see in the list of projects for the province of Ontario, an amount of $1 million for the construction of an unemployment insurance building in Toronto.

I would point out to the committee that this is the fourth time an amount is provided for the construction of that building because back in 1959, we voted an amount of $400,000 for that purpose. I wonder how things are going with that project, in view of the fact that last year, to a question I asked in this house, the minister's parliamentary secretary answered that it could not be said when the plans and specifications for that building would be completed on account of changes that had been made.

Now I hope, Mr. Chairman, that in his reply the minister will be able to tell us if the plans have been completed and when tenders will be called. And should he be unable to give us that information, he should, in my opinion, delete that item from his estimates.

I also notice that among the work to be carried out in the province of Quebec, there is an item for the construction of a public building at a cost of $500,000. I understand this is a building to accommodate the unemployment insurance office in Quebec city. That is another proof of the inability of the minister to take a decision, or of the existing confusion in his department because that item has been included in the estimates in 1959 and in 1960. I wish—

Mr. Flynn: There is also the post office.

Mr. Bourget: Right, let us talk about the post office. It has not been completed yet, even though you have been in office for five years. Let the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) look through the files of the public works department and he will find out that one year before the planning committee of Quebec and Quebec city had rejected the site that had been selected plans and specifications had already been made and we were ready to call for tenders.

An hon. Member: The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is not aware of that.

Mr. Bourget: I also would like to remind the minister that he himself had announced that project during his visit to Quebec city in January 1960, that is two years ago. But all that was undertaken until now, was to demolish the old hospital. However, we may perhaps be comforted by the thought that tenders will soon be called for this project, if we can believe a statement made by the minister's parliamentary secretary to newspapermen in Quebec city.

I hope that the minister will not feel hurt if I tell him that he certainly shall not be arrested for speeding.

Now, I should like to talk briefly about the trans-Canada highway, that wonderful program developed by the Liberals and in which all Canadian provinces, Quebec included, are taking part.

I could hear just a few moments ago the minister stating with great oratory, that the official opening of this highway would take place during the fall.

An hon. Member: It will not be long.

Mr. Bourget: Well, I hope that the man, responsible for the implementation of such a wonderful program will be invited, and I am referring to the Hon. Robert Winters.

Mr. Valade: Are you for a joint program?

Mr. Bourget: If you have something to say, say it so as to be understood.

Mr. Valade: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Bourget: Surely.

Mr. Valade: Is the hon. member of the opinion that the trans-Canada highway comes under the joint program policy denounced by the Liberal government of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Denis: Certainly not. It agreed to it.

Mr. Bourget: I am glad that someone asks me this question. I am surprised that the hon. member would ask such a question. I am really surprised.

Mr. Valade: But answer the question.

Mr. Bourget: I am going to answer it—

[Mr. Bourget.]

Mr. Pigeon: Go ahead.

An hon. Member: Cheeky.

Mr. Bourget: —this way: When I, personally, asked for a vote on the question of the trans-Canada highway, about two or three years ago, how did you vote, if you do not agree to the joint program? You went under cover most of you—

An hon. Member: They ran away.

Mr. Bourget: —you ran away, vanishing behind the curtains, going to your offices, because you did not have the courage to stand here and to make known to this house, and not only to the province of Quebec but to all your colleagues of the other provinces, what you thought of the joint programs.

Mr. Valade: Are you in favour of joint plans?

Mr. Bourget: There you are, complacently accepting what the government offers you, and then you go back to the province of Quebec and repeat that those bad Liberals have violated the autonomy of the province of Quebec—

Mr. Pigeon: That was true.

Mr. Bourget: —while you have been here for four and a half years with your own government, and you have not changed anything.

Mr. Valade: But are you in favour of joint plans?

Mr. Bourget: I did not get what the hon. member has just said. There is too much noise. I am quite willing to answer questions, mind you, because the answers are so easy, for the Conservatives not only have a past, they also have a present for which they must answer. And very often—

Mr. Pigeon: May I put a question to the hon. member for Levis?

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to answering questions since we are in committee, although it is not up to me to answer questions, but to the minister himself.

Mr. Pigeon: This question concerns you.

Mr. Bourget: I will concede him another question; go ahead.

Mr. Pigeon: Is the hon. member for Levis aware of the joint plans of the minister of uniforms, the Hon. Bona Arsenault?

Mr. Bourget: The hon. who?

Mr. Pigeon: The Hon. Bona Arsenault, minister of uniforms.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had answered that question, and I think the Leader of the Opposition clearly explained the position of our party about joint plans, but you did not do so on your side. If you are against them, just vote against the estimates we are going to discuss in a moment, or during the week, for the construction of the trans-Canada highway. You should have the courage of clearly expressing your views once and for all and not act Union Nationale in the province of Quebec and Conservative party in Ottawa. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Pigeon: We are Canadians, we respect our racial origins.

(Text):

The Chairman: Order, order.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: I hope, Mr. Chairman, you will give—

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege and on a point of order at the same time. After what the hon. member for Levis has said, I would ask him to kindly refer to Hansard of the time, where he will see that the hon. member for Dorchester voted contrary to what he just mentioned.

I will add that on the occasion of a personal visit paid by the premier of the province of Quebec—

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. There is no point of order in the matter raised by the hon. member for Dorchester. It is rather a subject for debate or argument, and the hon. member can raise it at a later time in the committee if he so desires.

Mr. Bourget: I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, for what happened, but it puts a little pep into the debate and I think all hon. members like a little pep once in a while.

(Translation):

An hon. Member: Answer.

Mr. Bourget: I have no objection and I am ready to reply to the remark of the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Drouin) but he must realize that he adds to the confusion as I said a few minutes ago, some stood behind the curtains, others in their offices.

Mr. Chairman, I was talking about the trans-Canada highway and I am coming back to it.

We know that, under the bill introduced in parliament in 1960, the period for the construction of this highway had been extended until December 31, 1963.

The other day in this house, I could hear the minister summing up the promises fulfilled by the Conservative government since June 1957.

Mr. Walker: Wonderful.

Mr. Bourget: The minister has undoubtedly forgotten in his list the numerous promises made by many of his colleagues about the trans-Canada highway, when they were in the opposition.

As a matter of fact, many of them, who now sit here as ministers—and the minister has only to check the official report to see if what I am saying is true—accused the former administration of niggardliness because it would not pay a larger share of the cost. They also blamed the former government for not undertaking a second trans-Canada highway, as well as sections of the north-south highway that was to be linked to it.

Mr. Chairman, the Conservative government has been in power for over four and a half years and absolutely nothing has been changed; the government has not increased in any way its share of the construction costs of that highway.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: We would rather approve of his continuing to make inaccurate statements, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: I take it that the committee gives unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bourget: I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman, and also the members of the committee for their generosity.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: He should put that in his lunch-box.

Mr. Pigeon: Come and say that in Joliette.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I know what the judgment of the member for Joliette is worth and he can say what he likes.

Mr. Pigeon: But I will not read from a prepared speech when I take the floor.

Mr. Bourget: It seems to me that the minister should have dealt with the trans-Canada highway when he recited the various promises fulfilled by his government. With regard to the trans-Canada highway, he could have said "we swiftly forgot the promises made in that respect."

As I was saying a little while ago, the construction period has been extended to December 1963. I realize that in the case of two or three provinces, the highway may not be finished by that time for want of money, as it will probably be the case for Newfoundland, or on account of the difficulty of carrying out the work in some areas such as in British Columbia, or, as in the case of the province of Quebec, because the work started only last year.

However, I think it is time a federal-provincial conference should take place, before the construction of a second trans-Canada highway is discussed and that plans be worked out for the future.

We know that several provinces are working out road construction programs, to be implemented over a period of three, four and five years, and that it is necessary for them to know at once what the federal government intends to do about a second trans-Canada highway.

I hope the minister, in his reply, will give us more information than he has given us until now on this matter.

Another project on which I should like to draw the minister's attention, and about which, of course, he does not like to hear, is the one concerning the construction of a causeway in the Northumberland strait, to link New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island.

In this year's estimates, there is provided an item of $50,000 for further study of that project.

We can see that in the last four years we have spent or we will have spent $750,000 for a study of that project, and that it has not yet been possible to get the slightest report about it.

Yet, according to the minister's predecessor, the study of that project was to be completed about April 1959. Those words of the minister of the time may be found on page 1933 of Hansard of July 4, 1958.

On several occasions since 1959 and even when the estimates of the Department of Public Works were before us, we have tried to find out from the minister whether that project was economically feasible.

I for one, on July 18, 1960, spoke at length on that subject after mentioning the number of surveys made by various departments of the federal government and firms of consulting engineers.

The minister told me that he could not give me a definite answer because he had been informed, he said, by the national research council, that the results of the tests under way "would not be known until next fall," that is the fall of 1961.

Notwithstanding the minister's answer, it seems quite evident that from the surveys made and the time elapsed since they were undertaken, the government has now the necessary information and is in a position to tell this house and especially the people concerned whether that project is economically feasible or not.

The minister may try to use finesse and express his regret for not being able to give us a report, but everyone knows that he is trying to avoid, like the government, giving a definite answer in that regard.

In a newspaper article of December 7, 1961, we could read the following:

> Prime Minister John Diefenbaker stated last night that the engineering studies made by the federal government concerning the Prince Edward Island metalled causeway proved that the project is apparently feasible from the point of view of the engineers.

And further on in the same article:

> Mr. Diefenbaker informed his audience that another study must yet be undertaken in order to determine exactly what will be the effect of the spring ice conditions in the Northumberland strait which the nine-mile long causeway will cross.

On the other hand, we find on page 397 of Hansard for January 31, 1962, the following question put by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. McWilliam):

> Have the studies into the Prince Edward Island causeway been completed to the point where such studies have demonstrated the feasibility of constructing such a causeway?

The minister answered in these terms:

> No. The engineers are reasonably certain at this stage that some type of crossing can be constructed. However, studies into the designs for various types of crossings and into some of the engineering problems associated with them, all of which have a bearing on cost and feasibility, are still not completed.

Well, this shows again that the government is playing for time and especially that it wants to avoid having to make a decision before the next election.

I think that the people concerned, especially from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, will not ignore the fact that this is another one of those unfulfilled promises of the federal government.

The last point I should like to raise is in connection with the brief submitted recently by the Hull city council, in conjunction with the industry and tourist commissioners of that city, in which they make a plea for the construction of federal buildings in Hull.

I do not want to infringe upon the field of my colleague, the devoted member for Hull (Mr. Caron), but I should like to read into Hansard an excerpt from this most interesting brief which I wholeheartedly support.

This quotation will be found on page 13 of the brief, and reads as follows:

A joint interest.

I quote:

The construction of federal buildings in Hull is wholly to the advantage of the federal authorities.

First, they recognize that the city of Hull is part of the national capital district and, therefore, that it must benefit from the developments of this district. These important construction projects are a practical way of contributing to the urban renewal and to the beautifying of the city. It is in the interest of Ottawa that its neighbour city, situated at its very gates, be as attractive as possible.

A certain balance should be struck in the federal decentralization policy of government services, because the extension on the Ottawa side will soon have reached the point of saturation. It would be well, at this time, to cast an eye on the Quebec side.

In that area, huge sites are still available in close proximity to the federal administration centre. Essential municipal services could be easily provided.

Incidentally, I find here the following remark:

The city of Ottawa is complaining at this time, about the cost of extending services to federal buildings, because they are so far away.

The federal government should retain a certain balance in the development of the two main partners in the national capital district, i.e. Hull and Ottawa.

According to Le Droit, the delegation which presented that brief was well received and was told that the government was very much interested in the matter. I hope that the Minister of Public Works will not just be satisfied with words of encouragement, but will quickly take action and see that further federal buildings are erected in the neighbour city of the federal capital. In this respect, the Liberal government set a good example by building the printing bureau, a splendid building which any city or town in Canada would gladly call its own.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make. I am sorry to have exceeded the time generally awarded to a member when estimates are discussed, and I thank hon. members of the committee for permitting me to do so.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this item I should like to offer the minister a word of friendly advice. I watched the television broadcast the other night and was happy with it. I suggest the minister should not overdo this. The Minsiter of National Health and Welfare has announced that all positions are filled for the year at the Shakespearian theatre at Stratford. There appears to be no opening for another performer. I offer that as a word of caution. It does provide a bright moment in an otherwise dull afternoon but it should not be overdone.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has the hon. gentleman never heard of one of Shakespeare's characters named Falstaff?

Mr. Peters: I am advised that all positions are filled at Stratford this year.

Although there is a reduction from last year in the estimates for this department it is still the large sum of $217 million. The government's activities in the housing field have produced some remarkable results not anticipated by private moneylenders. The Conservative government has gone into housing on a large scale without much regard to the needs of the people who require houses. They entered the field rather on the basis of lending money through a normal mortgage machine in order to maintain construction when unemployment was at high levels, and also with a view to meeting the social need for more housing.

Is it not necessary that some consideration be given to the type of housing we provide and the reasons for providing it? It must be remembered that mortgage funds are provided over a period of 20 years or longer. Even at an interest rate of 5 per cent a $20,000 home will cost $40,000. We are all aware that mortgage money cannot be borrowed even at that rate. At the expiration of the mortgage the amount paid is larger than the actual value of the home. Consideration should be given to the money invested in interest payments. Part of our national worth, our gross national product, is tied up in the housing we provide our citizens. It is not a total loss to the government or the country. We should have a new housing policy under which the government would reduce interest rates to a bare minimum.

Before this is done the government would have to reconsider the method of making loans through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. A system would have to be introduced under which the money would return to the corporation instead of to the treasury so it would be easier for the Canadian people and particularly members of parliament to know what amount was returned to the revolving fund at a given rate of interest.

The minister did not mention whether or not we are building the right kind of houses. Consideration should be given to this. People may be purchasing houses which, when they are paid for, they will not want.

Young families have difficulty obtaining suitable housing. A young factory worker or farmer faces his most difficult years when he begins working in his occupation. The difficulty is multiplied by the fact that in those years he will raise his family and have to meet the attendant increased responsibilities and expenses. In those years he will require more bedrooms and larger facilities than at any other period. When he has paid for his house in 20 or 25 years his children will have grown up and left home and in his old age he may be left with a white elephant instead of a comfortable cottage in which to spend his years of retirement.

I am not an architect but I feel the government could give consideration to what has been done by some municipalities in providing school buildings. I have visited schools in Toronto. Parts of the schools are portable and can be dismantled a room at a time to meet the fluctuating needs of the school children. Additions can be made to the schools when the need demands. The suburbs have fluctuating populations and there is not always a constant proportion of young people.

Perhaps houses could be built in a similar manner so that they could be expanded or contracted as the need of the family unit changed. Consideration should be given to this project.

May I call it five o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill SD-1, an act for the relief of Madeleine Françoise Hankowski—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, if the house is agreeable I would ask that the first 36 bills standing in my name on today's order paper under the heading "Private Bills" which are all divorce bills be withdrawn from the order paper until next Thursday evening when I expect to be in a position to make a statement on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax requests the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw from the order paper until next Thursday divorce bills Nos. SD-1 to SD-36, inclusive, being items 1 to 36 respectively on today's order paper. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: They will reappear on the order paper for next Thursday.

[Mr. Peters.]

THE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-3, respecting the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada.

He said: As the sponsor of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada desires the power to use either the name "The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada" or "La Mutual Life, compagnie d'assurance du Canada" in the transaction of its business, the latter name to be used basically in connection with advertising, literature and policies issued in the French language.

The company was originally incorporated as an Ontario company by an act of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, being chapter 17 of the statutes of 1868, with the name "Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Company".

The company was incorporated as a dominion company by an act of the parliament of Canada, being chapter 33 of the statutes of 1878, with the name "The Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Company". By this act all assets of the Ontario company were vested in the dominion company which assumed all obligations of the Ontario company.

The powers granted to the company by chapter 33 of the statutes of 1878 have been varied and enlarged by the following acts of the parliament of Canada: chapter 96 of the statutes of 1889; chapter 123 of the statutes of 1894; chapter 112 of the statutes of 1900; chapter 159 of the statutes of 1903; chapter 67 of the statutes of 1925.

The name of the company was changed from "The Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Company" to "The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada" in 1900 by an act of the parliament of Canada, being chapter 112 of the statutes of 1900.

The company was Canada's first mutual life insurance company and from its inception has been a mutual company. The company sells insurance throughout Canada but not outside of Canada. Approximately one sixth of the company's business—insurance in force, investments and agency personnel—is carried on in the province of Quebec.

In connection with its business in the province of Quebec the company advertises and issues company literature in the French language. Normally when dealing with a person whose native tongue is French, whether in the province of Quebec or elsewhere, the company carries on all transactions with that person in the French language, including the issuance of a policy in the French language, such policy of necessity setting out the name of the company as "The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada". For some years agents of the company on business in the province of Quebec have urged the company to obtain power to use a French version of its name.

The alternative name requested by the company has been chosen in order to differentiate the company from provincial mutual life insurance companies carrying on business in the province of Quebec, the names of a number of which include the word "mutuelle".

Mr. Louis L. Lang, Galt, Ontario, is chairman of the board. Mr. E. A. Rieder, F.S.A. of Kitchener, Ontario, is president. Mr. R. C. Berkinshaw, C.B.E., is vice president and lives in Toronto. Many other distinguished Canadians across Canada are directors of this company.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to lend my full support to this bill as requested by the company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

WESTMOUNT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Webster) unfortunately cannot be here today. However, he has asked me to move second reading of the bill in his stead.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house prepared to accept the hon. member for Halifax in place of the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave (for Mr. Webster) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-4, to incorporate Westmount Life Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE ELECTORAL DISTRICTS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Representation Act and the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker: Before the house proceeds, may I have leave to raise a point of order which it seems to me must be raised in connection with section 4 of the bill as reprinted.

Hon. members will recall that this Bill No. C-14 came before the house for second reading a few days ago. At that time the hon. member for Yukon by unanimous consent was authorized to substitute an amended form of the bill which is now before the house and which is described as "Reprinted as proposed to be amended in committee of the whole".

Second reading proceeded, the bill was passed through committee and it stands for third reading, although the bill in its present form including section 4 was in the hands of the house only at the time when second reading was moved, or rather was in the hands of the house for the first time then. If hon. members will look at section 4, I think they will agree with me that it authorizes—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have only section 3 in my bill, Mr. Speaker. Would you mind reading out section 4?

Mr. Chevrier: Could we have the bill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or could we have copies of the bill?

Mr. Speaker: I shall be very pleased to read the section. Section 4 provides as follows:

> 4. Section 9 of the Canada Elections Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:
> "(8) In the electoral district of Northwest Territories the returning officer, with the written authorization of the chief electoral officer, may appoint more than one election clerk and establish, if necessary, an office in each locality designated by the chief electoral officer, and may delegate, in writing, to any such election clerk appointed his powers of selecting and appointing enumerators and deputy returning officers and of selecting polling places."

Hon. members will observe that the first three sections are an amendment to the Representation Act which does not provide for the expenditure of any funds but is an act to deal with representation and electoral districts. On the other hand, section 4 provides for an amendment to the Canada Elections Act under which provision is made for payment of the expenses of elections. The problem I wish to present to the house is that section 4 appears to authorize an expenditure of public funds. For the convenience of hon. members who wish to look into the matter I may say that the requirements with respect to bills which authorize an expenditure of public funds are found in section 54 of the British North America Act which states in part as follows:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue... to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that house by message of the Governor General—

That is part of the section. Then our standing order 61 implements that statutory provision. References to the practice will be found in Beauchesne's fourth edition, in citations 243, 245 and 355. In determining whether any particular legislation appropriates money within the meaning of these provisions the issue is not the amount of money but whether there is an appropriation of public funds. I cannot but come to the conclusion that section 4 authorizes the expenditure of public funds.

If that would stand in the way of the progress of the bill, it might be that the issue could be dealt with either by amendment or, if it is desired to proceed with the bill, this difficulty could be rectified by deferring it until a resolution has been brought in. It would not be proper for this bill to be read a third time and passed, thus setting a precedent which would stand in the future against the well known constitutional practice that no public funds are ever appropriated, involving as they do taxation, without the house having an opportunity to consider the matter in the resolution stage in committee before the bill itself is presented.

It would be in order, of course, to refer the bill back to the committee with instructions to delete clause 4. It may be that the Canada Elections Act, as it stands, would be the means of providing the money necessary for the implementation of clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the bill. If so, then clauses 1, 2 and 3 could be made effective even if clause 4 were deleted. If the Canada Elections Act does not have these enabling provisions, then it is all the more evident that the proposed amendment to the Canada Elections Act contravenes our practice.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): In view of the remarks which Your Honour has made with respect to this bill, I may say that I am sure the house appreciates the view which you have taken and, as always, the care with which you have considered matters which are the constitutional privileges of this house. In view of these comments, I feel that this house would want to take the appropriate action, so I move:

That Bill No. C-14, an act to amend the Representation Act and the Canada Elections Act, be not now read a third time but that the said bill be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to delete clause 4 therefrom and amend the title of the said bill to read, "An Act to Amend the Representation Act".

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the decision which Your Honour has handed down, I may say it is certainly in conformity with our understanding of the rules and regulations. I think I would be disposed to agree with the acting house leader, Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) in the motion he has just made. I think it would be unfortunate if this house were to do anything by means of a private bill which would indicate the expenditure of public funds. I believe the procedure which is being followed is the proper one under the circumstances and we would be disposed to accept it.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I find myself in a somewhat difficult position, Mr. Speaker. May I say first of all, Mr. Speaker, that we in this group appreciate very much the stand you have taken and the way you have drawn to the attention of this house the implications of a certain bill introduced by a private member which, under clause 4, calls for the expenditure of public money. This, of course, is not within the purview of a private member.

However, sir, I should like to ask whether or not you have considered one other phase of the matter. The amendment which is now before us calls for referring the bill back to committee and the withdrawal of one clause. The withdrawal of this one clause could go a long way towards nullifying the effectiveness of the bill itself. The point I should like to ask you, sir, is this: I am now going back in my memory a long time, but I can remember an incident in the provincial legislature. I think the provincial legislature is not different in so far as matters of this nature are concerned, from the House of Commons. I believe, sir, that a private member can introduce a bill calling for the expenditure of money from the public purse, but that bill cannot be carried on third reading unless the government has announced that it is acceptable to them. I am certain, sir, my memory is correct on that constitutional provision. If the government accepts the private member's bill, that bill is then in order.

I should like to ask you, sir, if you have given any consideration to that phase of the matter? Under those circumstances, the government, instead of asking that this bill be referred back to committee for deletion of the clause, could give permission for the expenditure of public money.

Mr. Speaker: Having placed this motion before the house, perhaps I should ascertain if there are other members who wish to speak. It is not in order for me to answer questions which are not relevant at the moment. I have made my ruling with respect to this bill. I believe I know to what the hon. member is referring, and that is a case where the acceptance of the government has been indicated in the course of the bill. This has happened in some cases. However, the obstacle here is the lack of the resolution and committee stage.

I believe the hon. member for Skeena wishes to make some contribution. Perhaps I should say that I consider the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver East now to be passed because I made my ruling and expressed my view, and an amendment has intervened which recommends a specific course of action.

However, I do not wish to stand on ceremony. If the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) has something to say in connection with what was suggested, then perhaps the hon. member for Skeena would defer his remarks.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I think the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver East is not well taken. I notice in Beauchesne's fourth edition, 1958, citation 243, the following:

> All bills providing for the payment of salaries or for any expenditure whatever out of the public funds of the dominion must be first considered as resolutions in committee of the whole. And all such resolutions necessary to the introduction of a bill must first obtain the recommendation of the Governor General. It often happens that bills are introduced with certain clauses providing for salaries or other charges on the public revenue, and in that case the bill may be introduced directly on motion, while the clauses in question ... are considered in the shape of resolutions in committee on the bill.

The point that the hon. gentleman was seeking to make was that if the government accepts this bill then it could be put forward, even though it does involve the expenditure of money.

Mr. Winch: If they so announced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes; but I think it is clear from what Beauchesne has said that under our practice no money bill can be introduced except by a minister of the crown. The situation, in this particular instance, cannot be corrected, the hon. member having moved something which under our practice cannot be moved by a private member. The government cannot really be saying that it approves giving the hon. member a power which under our rules resides only with a member of the government.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I think, Mr. Speaker, that following the course of your thoughts upon this, and as it is not possible now for the government to accept or do anything else, perhaps we could consider another course. As the hon. member for Vancouver East said, and as the hon. member for Yukon is well aware, the effect of the bill will be greatly lessened if this provision is not made, if an amendment is not made in the Canada Elections Act because of the distance, the geography and the like. Would it not be possible to follow this course? I think everyone wishes to make sure this amendment is put into effect and that it be an effective amendment so far as the people up in that part of the country are concerned. I believe that if the Minister of National Revenue is in a position to do so, he should indicate to the house that on some subsequent day it would be the intention or hope of the government to introduce a money bill dealing with the Canada Elections Act, as a separate piece of legislation. Were he to do that we could then proceed to give third reading to this bill and wait for the accompanying money resolution to be introduced by the government. This would ease the minds of all hon. members in the house.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to terminate the debate by speaking now.

Mr. Speaker: As the minister says, if he has the right to speak now he will certainly close the debate, but perhaps by leave of the house he could indicate what he has to say in response to the hon. member for Skeena.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: I gathered from the debate which took place on this bill on another day that it was the desire of the house to facilitate its passage but, sir, we have landed into a constitutional difficulty which you properly drew to our attention, a difficulty we are now trying to deal with and at the same time meet the views of the house.

If we can get the bill into committee, and the committee of the whole sees fit to amend it and bring it back to third reading, then the bill will maintain its position on the order paper and can be dealt with later on during this hour or on some other day. However, if it goes to the committee and stays there, then it will be there for quite a while.

There are two possibilities. At the moment I am not in a position to give an undertaking on the part of the government, but the provisions of the Canada Elections Act are so wide and the powers given to the chief electoral officer are of such a nature that it would appear to the law officers that the chief electoral officer, through his own organization, might be able to take such steps as are necessary to implement this bill if parliament sees fit to pass it, even without clause 4. I am not in a position to give a definite undertaking on this matter but my understanding is that if parliament sees fit to pass this bill, and if the law officers feel the chief electoral officer has not that power then, as the hon. member for Skeena suggested a moment ago, a bill could be introduced and I think would be introduced to add a section to the elections act which would implement the procedure contemplated in clause 4 of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: It would seem to me, sir, that in the light of your decision the proper solution to the problem would be to do as indicated in the amendment that is now before the house. It is quite clear, from what the minister has said following your decision, that the bill goes beyond the constitutional jurisdiction of a private member. I think the proper manner in which to proceed is to refer it to committee of the whole to delete the section, and it will then be up to the government to determine whether or not it wants to introduce a resolution by way of amendment to the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Nowlan: If it is necessary.

Mr. Chevrier: If it does, then the house will be faced with that responsibility at the time; but I certainly do not think we can be placed face to face with that responsibility now in the light of your decision and in the light of the amendment that is before us. It is my very respectful suggestion that we proceed in the manner indicated by the motion.

Amendment agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 4—Appointment of more than one election clerk.

Mr. Grills: I move, seconded by Mr. Dubois, that clause 4 be deleted from the bill.

Mr. Winch: We are in a position now to ask the minister to give his definite, considered opinion. We are in agreement on this bill, and we should ask him that if in the immediate future it is not found that the purport and effect of the bill can be carried out in its entirety, will the government in the immediate future introduce the necessary governor in council regulation?

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot give you that undertaking on the part of the government. The only thing I can say is that if the bill stays in committee it will be here for a long, long while. However, if it comes out and gets third reading, as I said earlier the law officers are giving consideration to the matter and it is my opinion—I may say this is not the government's opinion—that the act is wide enough to permit the chief electoral officer to do this. If that is not the case then the government will give very careful consideration to bringing in an amendment to the elections act, to accomplish that which the House of Commons purported to do the other day, but which it now finds it has not the power to do.

Amendment agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. Grills: I move, seconded by Mr. Dubois,

That all the words after the words "Representation Act" be deleted from the title so that the title, as amended, would read "An Act to Amend the Representation Act".

Amendment agreed to.

Title as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Mr. Chevrier: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Nielsen: Now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There will have to be unanimous consent to take the third reading now and I hear objection.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. member a question, if I am not out of order?

I note that clause 3, dealing with the definition of Northwest Territories, lists certain areas. In paragraph (b) it says that the islands that are within the province of Manitoba, the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec are excepted. Could the hon. member tell us what islands in the province of Quebec are being excepted from that definition?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, the islands are not excepted in the sense that they are not included in the electoral district, so that their residents would obtain the vote, which is simply what this bill seeks to do. The clause is phrased in this way to ensure that any possible provincial rights to offshore islands will not be interfered with should the question arise in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members would agree with me that in view of the area which has to be covered by the staff of the chief electoral officer by the addition of these two new districts, the sooner the house proceeds with third reading the quicker the chief electoral officer will be able to get his machinery in motion. I would impress upon Your Honour and hon. members that it is indeed urgent that, having agreed to the principle of extending the franchise to these people, we should proceed to give the bill third reading so as to enable the chief electoral officer to proceed immediately in setting up the necessary machinery for carrying into effect the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does what has been said alter the situation?

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that we should pass the bill now, but I would advise him that the other place has adjourned for a week.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time; next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

REVISION OF GRADES RESPECTING RAPESEED AND MUSTARD SEED

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-15, to amend the Canada Grain Act (rapeseed and mustard seed).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that last session I introduced Bill No. C-130, to amend the Canada Grain Act. The wording of Bill No. C-15 which is before the house for discussion at the present time is very similar to that of the bill I introduced last session.

Hon. members will know that Canada is best known in the commercial markets of the world for the high quality of her grains, particularly wheat. The purpose of this bill to amend the Canada Grain Act is to bring grains such as rapeseed and mustard seed to the same high standard as other Canadian grains. Ninety to 95 per cent of all the rapeseed grown in this country is exported, and it is imperative that the quality of this grain be of the highest standard that we are able to achieve.

The amendment before the house proposes to revise the present statutory grades for rapeseed to meet present day trade requirements. It is in conformity with the suggestion of the board of grain commissioners for Canada to have the Canada Grain Act reclassified in accordance with schedules A and B of the bill. It also meets with the full approval of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), under whose jurisdiction fall the Canadian wheat board and the board of grain commissioners for Canada. I am sure it will also meet with the approval of hon. members of this house. Schedules A and B are based on the recommendations of the chief grain inspector for the board of grain commissioners and are in compliance with the export requirements contained in stipulations with regard to maximum percentage of foreign materials, degree of soundness and standard of cleanliness.

Clause 2 of the bill will change the definition of the grades of domestic mustard seed from the present commercial definition to a statutory definition. The committee on western grain established commercial grades for domestic mustard seed on November 4, 1953. These grades have now been revised to meet trade requirements, and the effect of this amendment is to raise these revised commercial grades to the level of statutory grades.

At their annual meeting the Saskatchewan wheat pool delegates also asked the board of grain commissioners to include the presence of mustard in rapeseed as a factor in grading. Mr. Speaker, it is not now a factor except for a declaration as to mustard seed content when rapeseed is exported. It is generally accepted in the trade that the presence of more than 2 per cent of mustard in a rapeseed sample reduces its value as a source of edible oil. The identification of mustard in rapeseed—which are similar in size and colour—requires special equipment.

I must inform the house that unless steps are taken to change the grading to that spelled out in my bill, mustard may ruin the rapeseed crop, and thus growers of rapeseed will be faced with a loss of vital markets unless they produce a crop free of mustard seed. If mustard seed is allowed to become an impurity in rapeseed, processors could not hope to use it for making edible oils.

The menace of mustard contamination of prairie rapeseed crops is now recognized by the three western provinces as being extremely serious. In southern Alberta mustard has been grown for many years, and it should be left to these places to grow all the mustard seed that can be sold. There is no need to extend the mustard acreage into Saskatchewan. This is completely unnecessary, because we could sell to the United States and other countries all the mustard they need from the crops produced in southern Alberta.

Of course, we are aware of the fact that some commercial interests are now actively encouraging the growing of mustard throughout Saskatchewan by offering contracts which might sound attractive to farmers, but the farmers are uninformed about the dangers involved. If we ignore these threats to our rapeseed crops in the west and attempt to grow mustard and rapeseed in the same areas, then I say, Mr. Speaker, that we would be killing the goose that lays the golden egg, as far as rapeseed producers are concerned. Wild mustard alone, without any additional trouble from the two types of tame mustard, would be capable of killing the market for rapeseed to be used for the manufacture of margarine or for export.

Mr. Frank Mohler of the seed growers of Maymont, this year's president of the Saskatchewan branch of the Canadian seed growers' association, expressed concern about this matter and said that growers of rapeseed faced a loss of vital markets unless they took pains to produce a crop free of mustard seeds, both wild and tame.

Dr. H. R. Sallans, oilseed chemistry specialist in the prairie regional laboratory of the national research council in Saskatchewan, urges that rapeseed and mustard be kept separate and be grown in different fields and different districts.

Dr. Sallans expressed concern that contamination of the seeds of these two crops would affect the marketing potentialities of both. He firmly agreed with a statement made by Mr. F. Mohler, president of the Saskatchewan branch, Canadian seed growers' association, that if a district wished to keep on growing rapeseed it should give up all intention of dabbling in mustard production.

World production of rapeseed in 1961 is believed to have reached an all time high, exceeding for the first time the pre-war average level. It is estimated that the world production of rapeseed is 4.3 million short tons, some 7 per cent more than in 1960 and almost one third more than the 1950-54 average. Virtually all of the rapeseed grown in North America is produced in Canada, namely, a near record of 745,000 acres.

According to Mr. R. E. Merry, president of the institute of edible oilfoods, oilseed production on the prairies could expand to occupy at least 1,500,000 acres, if Canada is to meet her domestic needs and fill the potential demand for rapeseed abroad.

The publication Foreign Trade issued this month by the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, indicates that the future prospects for marketing Canadian rapeseed and mustard seed appear good. The publication also forecasts that the common market countries will provide an expanding outlet for Canadian oilseeds. Canadian exports of oilseeds in 1960 are such as to indicate that both rapeseed and mustard seed have considerable export value. In that year, total exports of rapeseed amounted to $13,240,000, and exports of mustard seed to $2,604,000. Japan and Italy were Canada's best customers for rapeseed.

Hon. members will be aware of the fact that last fall a Canadian oilseed trade mission went to Europe. After two months touring, the members of the mission returned to Canada and reported on what they had seen. The tour was organized by the Department of Trade and Commerce under the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees). The government chose men to make up the trade mission who not only knew the oilseed industry but had a personal interest in it. The six nations toured were Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Italy and West Germany. Here are the mission's general conclusions:

The general improvement in economic conditions in western Europe will result in a continuing increase in the consumption of the products of oil seeds. The consumption of fats and oils will steadily increase in those countries, Holland, Belgium, west Germany and Britain, where present consumption is at a high level. In Italy and France, a sharp increase is envisaged as their consumption is expected to rise sharply to approach the same per capita level as that in the other four countries.

If the proposals for oilseeds, fats and oils in the common market are adopted, a greater potential will exist for increased marketings of oilseeds and oilseed meals in the EEC countries. The proposed tariffs on oils will have the effect of switching some of the trade in oils to oilseeds.

A market for rapeseed exists in all of the countries visited, providing Canadian prices are competitive with those charged for other oilseeds.

The mission made the following recommendations, and I should like to stress their importance:

1. Consideration should be given to amending the grading nomenclature of rapeseed to read No. 1 Canada rapeseed, No. 2 Canada rapeseed, No. 3 Canada rapeseed etc. Rapeseed containing in excess of some minimum quantity of mustard seed should be degraded.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is this recommendation in full conformity with the actual provision in the bill?

Mr. Rapp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was just about to say that this recommendation is in full conformity with the wording spelled out in my bill.

The recommendations continue as follows:

2. Consideration of a government agency issuing an export certificate of mustard content in rapeseed upon loading in a Canadian port.

3. Consideration of a government agency issuing an export certificate of oil content for all oilseeds upon loading in a Canadian port.

Here again I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that rapeseed and mustard seed are very similar in size, colour and weight. Unless some experts issue these certificates, the result will be that people overseas who buy our rapeseed may find that there is more mustard seed in the deliveries than actually appears to be the case. To proceed with the recommendations:

4. It is recommended that study and research be given to the mustard seed crop to test new varieties, increase oil content, ensure pure seed, and reduce moisture content.

5. Every effort should be made to contain Canada's mustard seed crop and to inform Canadian growers of the disastrous effects of the mixture of rapeseed and mustard seed upon export sales of rapeseed.

I am sure the house will realize how important the adoption of this bill will be to the rapeseed industry and to the mustard seed industry. As is indicated by the mission's recommendations, unless steps are taken to change the grading now in effect to the grading which is spelled out in schedule A, our rapeseed industry may suffer a severe loss.

I had some other observations to make but I see time is getting short and I should like to hear some other members express their opinions on this bill.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): The house will recall that when we had before us last year an amendment to the Canada Grain Act dealing with rapeseed and mustard seed—an amendment introduced by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp)—there was no more enthusiastic supporter of that measure than members of our party.

Therefore it was to be anticipated that I should join with the hon. member in seeking the modification for which he asks in this bill. The house will, I am sure, support the objective of this bill which is to maintain a high standard of quality, grading and moisture content, particularly having in mind that rapeseed, as the hon. member told us a few minutes ago, is exported from this country to the extent of 90 per cent of the Canadian production. This being the case we would want to maintain a reputation abroad for a high quality product, just as we do in the case of other grains.

Knowing something about the production of corn, 65 per cent of which, is, of course, grown in southwestern Ontario, I can say that we have found—

Mr. Herridge: It all comes from Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, it does not all come from Essex East although the highest quality may come from that area.

Mr. Pugh: A lot of corn comes from Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The bulk of Canadian corn comes from southwestern Ontario which includes Essex East. We have found in the production of corn it is essential to maintain high grades and make sure that the moisture content is adequate to the demands of the trade. Therefore I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member in this connection.

The most remarkable thing about what is happening in the house today is not the commendable effort of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale but the fact that with respect to a measure of such great importance to the farmers of Canada and particularly those of the hon. member's constituency, there is no one on the government side of the house at this time charged with the administration of agriculture.

I would not wish to include the Minister of Agriculture in this indictment. The minister is ill and this we all regret. But his parliamentary secretary is not in the house.

Mr. Pallett: He is in hospital.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I regret that he is in hospital. I do not know what is happening in the Department of Agriculture that has led to such a high degree of disability. But there is a second parliamentary secretary, and he is not in the house at a time when we are discussing a matter of concern to the farmers of western Canada. This bill is being discussed without any manifestation of interest on the part of the government.

Mr. Pallett: Utter nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a fact. This bill should have been introduced by the government.

Mr. Jones: It should have been introduced by the Liberal government years ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This bill was made possible because of the energy and foresight of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, and members like the hon. member for Essex East and others in the Liberal party in particular who gave the hon. gentleman support.

When this bill was introduced last year we pointed out that it was of such importance that it ought to have been introduced by the government. That argument is even stronger today because we are told by the sponsor of the measure that the recommendations contained in the bill as to standards of quality in schedules A and B were approved by the board of grain commissioners. Here is the board of grain commissioners, a government body, recommending a particular course. In spite of this the government does not sponsor the bill. It does not even give an indication of interest. This is indicated by the absence of one of the parliamentary secretaries to the Minister of Agriculture.

An hon. Member: Do not talk it out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In addition, the Acting Minister of Agriculture is not in the house. He ought to be in his place now or someone speaking for the government should be present to—

Mr. Jones: On a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know my hon. friends do not like this. They wish to delay passage of this bill.

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In order that we may clear up this point would Your Honour refresh the hon. gentleman's memory by advising him that this is the private members' hour?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a point of order. I will not have my time taken up by specious points of order raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon.

I was complaining about the lack of interest on the part of the government and its failure to support one of its most devoted and energetic followers, leaving it to members of the opposition to rise and support him. To indicate how substantial is my accusation and how justified I am in making this complaint let me point out that the sponsor of the bill told us that the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Pugh: There are only three Liberals in the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —had caused a commission to be sent to Europe to investigate the export potential of rapeseed and mustard seed and that this commission returned from Europe and made four recommendations. Included among the recommendations are the provisions contained in schedules A and B of the bill. That commission was not appointed by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale—although his activities may have inspired the government at long last to do something about this—it was a commission appointed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Neither he nor his parliamentary secretary is present today. There is no one on the government side of the house to indicate why the government appointed this royal commission—

Mr. Starr: I am here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —or why it has not come to the support of the devoted and energetic little member from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale who today in this important effort is being supported by members of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Pugh: All three of them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Therefore, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Pugh: All three of them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I know I am fighting along with the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale against this great galaxy of government members, these numerous members of the Tory party, who are embarrassed at this moment by the absence of ministers who should assume responsibility in this field, including the Minister of Trade and Commerce, his parliamentary secretary, the Acting Minister of Agriculture, and also one of the parliamentary secretaries to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member is laughing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In spite of these catcalls—

Mr. Pallett: Stop smiling.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and in spite of the efforts on the part of the whip of the Conservative party and others—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pallett: Why is the hon. member laughing?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am laughing with sorrow at hon. members opposite who are not showing the proper interest in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is laughable that a government with such a large majority does not find it possible when one of their own comes forward with a good measure to give him the support his bill deserves. This measure deserves support. We should pass it right away. The bill should have been introduced by the government.

Mr. Dinsdale: Don't talk it out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I commend the hon. member for bringing forward this measure to maintain high standards of quality with regard to a commodity 90 per cent of which is sold in the markets of the world, and particularly, in Japan and Italy.

It is now one minute before six o'clock. I suggest that we give immediate passage to this bill and in doing so that we express our regret at the lack of interest in it on the part of members of the government.

Mr. Jones: The hon. member has talked out the bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as one of the spokesmen for prairie agriculture in this group I wish on its behalf to express support of this bill and join in the fight with the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale against the inertia and lack of interest on the part of the government with respect to this measure.

Mr. Pugh: Shame.

Mr. Herridge: I congratulate the sponsor of the bill for his courage, industry and efforts in this respect.

Mr. Dinsdale: He is an excellent Conservative.

Mr. Herridge: I commend him for proceeding in the face of the little support he has received from his party. Because I have more to say on this bill I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. member not consider modifying his proposal? Could we consider that we have not yet reached six o'clock so we could pass this bill notwithstanding the fact that the government shows no interest in it?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Does the Minister of Labour wish to pursue his question of privilege?

Mr. Starr: I merely wish to point out to hon. members of the house that it is now six o'clock and that the hon. member for Essex East talked out this bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour who usually confines himself to those things of which he has some knowledge—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Not like the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —has raised a question of privilege. I am now proposing that the house which is master of its own rules sit beyond six o'clock and give passage to this bill.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member talked it out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): The hour for the consideration of private bills having expired the house will now proceed to a consideration of the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Before the house rose for the recess I was mentioning the fact that there seemed to be a need for a change in the requirements particularly of young people, in the field of national housing. I had indicated that there was a period in which when income was low there was a need for increased facilities and that in later years, when the mortgage was paid off, many of the homes that had been necessary for the young family were not necessarily satisfactory for the retired family. I had suggested that some consideration should be being given now in the form of a study in order to find out whether there is not a better way of solving this particular aspect of the housing problem. Certainly this situation is developing in many of our cities where it is not necessarily advantageous to own a house at all or it may be much wiser to rent the type of accommodation that is necessary.

This is being done in some the cities through the co-operation of some of the municipalities and the federal and provincial governments in order to allow people to rent homes according to their requirements for the number of children they have and taking into consideration their wage structure and the money available to that family. It may mean that those with a high income will be obliged to pay a much higher rent for the same accommodation than would be paid by workers with a low rate of pay. This may raise the general problem whether or not we have not bent over backwards in Canada, because of our free enterprise background, our pioneering spirit, in the fact that we have jealously guarded this business of house ownership. Certainly they fostered the idea of house ownership. It may be the situation that in years to come it may be advantageous for the government to know whether it would be wise to use rental systems, particularly for low wage earners or low cost rental projects. Some day it may be true that it is not advantageous to buy a house, to make the payments on a house over a very long period of time, and that these houses may be government owned, municipally owned or owned cooperatively by the municipalities and the governments, where the financing can be spread out over an even greater period of time than 25 years.

As we all know, there are in existence now many homes which are serving their occupants very well and which have been built over a period of 60 years or 70 years and in some cases over 100 years, with modifications, of course. This was pointed out quite strongly by Mr. A. C. Ashforth, president of the Toronto-Dominion bank, in an article which appeared in the Prince Rupert daily News of December 6, 1960. In this article he points out as follows:

> With a 35 year mortgage ... the principal repayments for some years will be less than normal depreciation. Apparently the government expects inflation to continue in the housing market.

He goes on to point out that these houses in 10 years may be worth less than the payments that will still be owing on them. He then goes on to say this:

> We need to consider if we are not building the wrong kind of houses, for the wrong reasons, in the wrong places, designed for the wrong people, at the wrong time.
> Present policy directs N.H.A. financing into new houses and refuses to extent any aid to people buying existing houses. It drives young families into new houses and pushes them into the suburbs and this multiplies the demand for services of all kinds, and adds to the speculative and inflationary pressures on land values.

This situation has become fairly common in the city of Ottawa as I imagine it is in other cities where there are many houses that are not being used this year because of the fact that the market for that particular value of house in many cases has not kept up with the expectations of the contractors.

I should now like to turn to something else. The minister probably can explain this matter. However, when I checked on the Department of Public Works annual report I found that the last report I have been able to obtain was for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960. I think we should at least have had the report for 1961. I would strongly suggest that the department is at fault or is remiss in its duty to the members of parliament when it does not provide the preliminary study for the current year, whatever year that may be, so that we can discuss in some detail not necessarily the exactitudes of the department but certainly the trend that is developing. I think this preliminary report should be an up to date report, should cover the last six months and should give an indication of any change of policy in which the government is engaging. I think the actual report itself should be for the last fiscal year, not for two years ago. I do not know why this is not possible, and I would like the minister to indicate why it has not been done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am interested also in discussing this matter of public buildings. It is my opinion that there is a trend developing in the Department of Public Works that would indicate that patronage, which I believe had been almost completely removed from the department under the previous minister, is now returning to the department. I do not want to say any more on that. I think that this is something that the government should be guarding against.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is making a serious allegation. He either should put up and give some information, or shut up and withdraw. I resent that very much.

Mr. Peters: I do not want to go into the matter to any extent, but I will use an example.

Mr. Walker: Give us some good examples, not just the usual fiction.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, if the minister would contain his asinine self and remain in his seat until someone else has had an opportunity to reply, he would find that I am not going to do so in the manner in which he did. There can be very few as ignorant as that. No one else is going to reply in that way. We do not want to get into the same field as he is. There was a case in recent times in which a considerable amount of discussion at the political level affected a particular public building in my own area. This matter was discussed last year and was brought to the attention of the minister. Remarks have been made about it. I am not making any further comment on it except to say I do not think this is the way any department of government should function.

Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Walker: Give me the particulars of that; the only chance I have seen of any patronage in the hon. member's riding is when he, himself, is trying to get something.

Mr. Peters: I am not in business, and there is no possibility of my getting any patronage.

Mr. Walker: You will soon be out of business.

Mr. Peters: The minister, if he wishes to ascertain these facts—

Mr. Walker: Put up or shut up.

Mr. Peters: I wish the minister would shut up. I am getting very tired of listening to him.

Mr. Walker: You will get more tired.

Mr. Peters: I would be quite happy if he would shut up, Mr. Chairman. The patronage that this hon. member could get from this or any other department is nil. I have no company. I am not engaged in any form of business other than being a politician. There is no opportunity for the minister to make the remark that he did. I am not connected with any company and have never been, other than gold mining in which I was an employee. I doubt if even the minister is suggesting that I am asking for patronage on behalf of the mining industry.

I have been very pleased with the buildings that have been erected by public works—

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has given us no instances of any sort.

Mr. Peters: If this is a point of order, I will listen to it, but if it is not a point of order—

Mr. Walker: I ask him to withdraw.

Mr. Peters: —I am not much interested in what the minister has to say.

I have been very pleased with the type of building that the Department of Public Works has been erecting. There have been two or three small post offices constructed in my area. They are very functional buildings. I like the style and I like the architecture of these buildings. I believe the department is now following the proper course in building these post offices. They are not ornate and are a decided asset to the areas in which they have been located. They are a credit to the communities and a credit to the Post Office Department for whom they have been built.

There is another problem I should like to discuss about which questions have been asked in the house. I refer to a survey that was conducted by the Department of Public Works in relation to the port of Moosonee. The provincial government has been very interested in this project. The Ontario Northland Railway, which is owned by the provincial government, has been interested in the development in the port of Moosonee, as have a number of other companies including some serving the Hudson bay area in connection with the Department of National Defence. I refer to the Bell Telephone Company, Marconi and others connected with communications in that area. The survey was conducted to ascertain if there would be any economic justification for a complete survey being undertaken. To date, we have only had a report from the provincial government on their decision which was made as result of this survey.

I hope that during the discussion the minister will see fit to give us a report. We understand a negative decision has been reached but we would like to have the facts so we can make a decision as to whether or not a port is feasible at this location, and what the estimated cost of the port would be. We should like to know also whether or not the federal government will give consideration to assisting in the building of this port.

The people in northern Ontario are not entirely in agreement with the chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway who envisions a very large port being developed at Moosonee. He also can see in the very near future a large industrial development taking place in that area which would justify the large expenditure that would be necessary for the installation of a deep sea port in that area.

I think the Department of Public Works must be concerned about this matter because they have a dock at Moosonee that is in very bad shape. The department will either have to do something about fixing that dock or give some consideration to a long range program which would improve the establishment of a deep sea port in that area. The reason we are interested in this problem is that if the port is developed it will mean a flow of trade into northern Ontario to service the industries which will develop in that area. It is quite true that there is a large iron ore development possible in the Belcher islands. The amount of ore has been ascertained and the grade of that ore is known. There is a market for it in Europe when the mine is developed. I believe the people in northern Ontario want to make sure they have the facilities available to supply the needs of the Belcher islands and the Hudson bay area from Ontario, rather than have all the produce come from Europe via Hudson strait. I think it is important to the people of northern Ontario to know just what to expect from that particular development, how much it is going to cost and what the possibilities are.

It may be that the department has decided the project is not feasible at the present time but may be at a later time. It may be possible that some of the work can be undertaken as a means of aiding the employment picture in that area. It may also be that some of the work could be done in the winter or that there are other factors which would make the project more or less feasible.

I would also like to make some comments about the buildings that are being built in Ottawa for the various departments of government. I have no fault to find with their architecture, and I agree with what the minister said today that their architecture is modern, pleasing to the eye and appears to be functional. In my opinion the buildings are worthy of the federal government; but I am not sure about the development of a planned scheme, if there is one, nor do I think the locations of these buildings are as well conceived as their design.

In my opinion there would be a considerable advantage gained were the government to group these buildings into a set area, keeping them closely together. At the moment it appears they are being spread out all over the city of Ottawa, and that we are as unplanned in our development as the city itself is in its development. Parliament should be presented with a long range program so that hon. members would have a much better understanding of what the government intend to do and have accomplished 20 years from now. By having that program we would know how the gaps which appear to exist at present would be filled. At the moment our expansion appears to be haphazard, with buildings going up on a piece of land here, a piece of land there, and have no all-embracing scheme covering them.

For example, I refer to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The old buildings housing that department were not so old, they were well grouped in one area. Recently however we have undertaken a building program for that department which does not appear to fit in with the buildings we already have.

I presume that the national capital commission and national capital development are in very serious straits, although I am pleased to note that we have a chairman who seems to be easy to get along with in those matters. However, I know there must be a lot of fun in this planning stage, with the minister having the temperament he has and the mayor of Ottawa having the temperament she has. The two of them must have a great time together. There is a great similarity between the two and I imagine there is great fun when they get together to decide something between the commission and the city. This is a field in which we are looking for improvement and there appears to be a great deal of room for that improvement.

I should also like the minister, when replying to some of the questions that have been raised, to give us a report on the progress and further intentions of the government in relation to the modernization of the west block and the building of the tunnel between it and the centre block. I presume it cannot be helped, but we hear a great deal of complaint, from the hon. members occupying the west block, about the drilling which has continued over a period of time. While I do not object to that, having run one of those machines for many years and having listened to its noise, I presume it can be very discomforting to the hon. members who have to work in that atmosphere. I hope the minister will be able to tell us what the schedule is and whether the drilling is going to continue for long.

I do not know that I am too appreciative of the minister but I do find that this department, despite the minister, is considered to be a very good one. With the one exception I have mentioned, the officials of the department have always been very courteous and always know what they are talking about. I have been to see them on a number of occasions about matters in my riding, and I believe the department has capable officials who are doing a very good job and who should be given credit for it. However, I think the minister will agree with me in saying that it is never so good that it cannot be better. For these reasons I have raised the problems I raised today.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I should like to commend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) for having replaced all signs inside the parliament buildings and on nearby buildings by bilingual ones. The purpose of this step is to show to the Canadian people and foreign visitors that there are two official languages and racial groups in Canada. Moreover, following requests made by members of the house and representatives of the people, he pursued the task undertaken when he had bilingual signs put on all buildings in the national capital.

Mr. Chairman, some time ago, I asked the minister to make a survey in regard to the dredging of L'Assomption river from Le Gardeur de Repentigny bridge to the city of Joliette. The dredging of that river is essential to the economy of the district.

Mr. Chairman, after that project has been examined by the senior officials of the Department of Public Works, I wonder if it would not be necessary for the provincial and federal authorities to come to an agreement in view of the fact that, in the province of Quebec, non-navigable waters come under the Quebec streams commission. I would appreciate such an examination being undertaken as soon as possible by the engineers of the Department of Public Works—who, I am glad to say, are most competent—so that this project may be carried out shortly if it comes under the federal authorities or so that negotiations may be opened between the provincial government and the department for the purpose of reaching an agreement in that connection.

Mr. Denis: That is a joint program.

Mr. Pigeon: I mean while respecting provincial autonomy instead of flouting provincial rights, as you did for 20 years.

Mr. Chairman, please excuse me for this digression. I should not bother to reply to one who was of no value to his party when they were in power. He was here for 20 years without uttering a single word. Today, he is completely changed, he is not the same man. I am sure that the Canadian people will see to it that he is eliminated along, with his friends, for another 20 years, which should enable the Liberal party to amend itself and to obtain better men for the future.

Mr. Fortin: With Maurice Sauve, what a chance they have.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I know that the federal government is contributing, on the average, 50 per cent to the construction cost of the trans-Canada highway. This highway will run through the province of Quebec, and there is a strong possibility that it will pass on the south shore. The north shore of the St. Lawrence river, that is from Joliette to Trois Rivieres is one of the richest regions of the province of Quebec.

In the first place, it is one of the oldest regions and is also tremendously rich in woodland. Moreover, its land and water wildlife is most interesting, and Montreal sportsmen go fishing and hunting in the region north of Montreal, in some areas of my constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and in the constituency of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere. They even build summer camps in those areas.

Consequently, and in accordance with representations made by the mayors of the Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm riding, that is from L'Assomption to Trois Rivieres, I ask the minister whether the government could not consider the advisability of running the trans-Canada highway through our region, extending the metropolitan boulevard to Trois Rivieres and thence towards the south shore, if advisable.

I know that Mr. Mongrain, the mayor of Trois Rivieres is entirely of the same opinion, like the mayor of the town of Joliette and all the mayors in that area who fear economic difficulties. One must recognize that this $150 million highway is some kind of a door opened to industries. I am wondering whether the government of the province of Quebec, who is responsible for the route, will decide that the trans-Canada highway is to be built on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river rather than on the south shore, to bring industrial development to those areas. Otherwise it should announce without delay its intention of building a highway on the north shore.

I would not want the Joliette area and the northern part of the province of Quebec to be pictured as some underdeveloped country. I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that the government of Quebec will not delay progress and will make an affirmative reply in the interests not only of the people in Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, but in the whole province.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the minister has received many requests from Canadian municipalities, particularly those in Quebec, about the construction of sewage treatment plants. It would be advantageous on many counts for the Canadian municipalities to seize the opportunities offered them by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I feel the solution of this problem is now essential.

The chambers of commerce and other organizations are paying a great deal of attention to the matter. I would be very happy, Mr. Chairman, if the minister would tell us whether he has received any request from the various provinces and especially whether he has received any from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Meunier: Before dealing with the remarks made this afternoon by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), I would like to reply to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon).

Mr. Denis: It is not necessary to reply to him.

Mr. Meunier: He would like to see the trans-Canada highway—

An hon. Member: Not necessarily another road, if possible.

Mr. Meunier: —pass through the constituency of Joliette, now that the laying out has been made, chosen and decided. I surely think that the hon. member preaches in the wilderness. He should have made up his mind before 1960, when the construction of the trans-Canada highway was just being started. He then could have had a chance of having it go through his hometown.

Mr. Pigeon: The laying out of the trans-Canada highway was done by the former administration.

Mr. Meunier: I shall not spend any more time on the questions asked by the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I am going to deal with the speech made by the minister this afternoon. In fact, he started it with a stormy tone of voice. Happily no scuffle resulted from it. The minister must agree that he personally through his remarks aggravated the house members. He pointed out that only a few members were sitting on the opposition benches but he had not looked on the government side where there were only about 45 members present at that time.

Mr. Deschatelets: Out of 206.

Mr. Pigeon: You have already been defeated by one vote when you were in office.

Mr. Pallett: They were 80.

An hon. Member: You see double.

Mr. Meunier: Privately, the minister is congenial, he is a good chap. But as soon as he rises to speak in the house or elsewhere in public, his attitude changes entirely.

An hon. Member: So does Mr. Lesage's.

Mr. Meunier: I said that when the minister rises in the house it seems that his attitude changes. He has a knack for aggravating his listeners. It seems that he does this in order to distract our attention and thus prevent us from noticing that he is overstating the facts. The minister talked about the various activities of his department and devoted much of his speech to housing.

He reviewed the measures taken by his government under that act. He gave us interresting statistics about the houses built and the amounts invested. But he was modest, because he could have mentioned that the National Housing Act was enacted by a Liberal government and expanded, only, by the present government, which is trying to extend its scope to all the citizens of Canada.

If such was the case, the government failed to achieve its aim. As the hon. minister knows, I represent a Montreal constituency. And the housing statistics for the city of Montreal do not agree with those the minister gave us this afternoon.

Although the minister lives in Toronto—I do not envy him—he must not forget that Montreal is the largest city in Canada and that it does keep statistics too.

The minister gave us, this afternoon, statistics for the whole of Canada. I can tell him that there is an area in Canada where things are not going so well, and that is the city of Montreal.

This afternoon the minister told us that construction started on 125,767 houses in 1961, an increase of 15 per cent over 1960. However, in Montreal, during the first seven months of 1960, housing starts totalled only 8,844 compared to 12,187 during the same period in 1959.

In 1961, the number of building permits in Montreal decreased by one third compared with 1960, and in 1960 it had decreased in comparison with 1959.

The year 1961, which just ended, ranks eighth for the total value of construction, the record year being 1959 with the building of the Dorchester street skyscrapers, in Montreal. The year 1960 came fourth.

This afternoon, the minister stated that during 1961, 3,300 housing units had been built by limited dividend housing companies, of which 2700 were for low income families. I regret that he was not able to give us statistics for each province. However, I can say that very few low rental units have been built in Montreal.

At the present time, apartment houses are being built in Montreal, which are of little value for low income families.

[Mr. Meunier.]

I would be remiss if I did not point out to the minister the cause of the decline in the construction industry in Montreal. There is only one cause and it is that lots or building sites have reached a very high price.

It is true, as the minister pointed out, that housing construction plays an important part in the economy of the nation. In fact, activity in the building trade is a sign of prosperity because all trades are employed.

However, since 1957, while this government has allocated millions to housing, the price of lots has gone up sharply, and a large number of building contractors had to quit that trade, being unable to sell their houses because they had to ask for a price that the buyer could not afford.

The minister stated this afternoon that one family out of seven is living in a new dwelling. That may be true, but I can tell him that it is not the case in the city of Montreal.

The result is, Mr. Chairman, that, with lots being priced too high, single family properties are out of reach for workers and white-collar people. I daresay that one with a $6,000 to $7,000 yearly income and a family of two or three children also finds himself in that category.

Since the minister referred to low cost dwelling units, I hope he will take into consideration the request he received from the mayor and the chairman of the executive council of Montreal for a housing project, under section 6 of the act, on the St. Sulpice Domain and Trinitaires boulevard, in Ville Emard.

The plan submitted by the Montreal municipal authorities was designed to house civic employees. I do hope that the minister will give an affirmative reply.

Newspapers have mentioned that the minister was opposed to these projects because he had been told that there were too many empty units in the city of Montreal. That statement is partly true. However, the apartments which are unoccupied are not one family units but mostly small units of three or four rooms in apartment buildings unsuitable for large families.

Because of the high cost of land, apartment buildings have been built for the past two or three years, to cover entire city lots in Montreal leaving no space back or front. Needless to say, those buildings are not fit for workers with children.

I should like to make one last remark to the minister concerning the research to be carried out on public housing and community planning, under section 5 of the act. This afternoon, he told us that his department is continuing its research in the field of urban housing districts. I note however, on page 363 of his estimates, that the item of $1,649,000 we were asked to vote last year, does not appear this year. Yet, research is very important in this field. Regulations should be enacted, with the co-operation of provincial and municipal authorities, for the guidance of the building industry and for the classification and development of land.

In this respect, I should like to draw the minister's attention to a report which was published in the January 19, 1961 issue of La Presse, during the conference of the home builders' association which was held in Montreal, under the chairmanship of Mr. John Parkin, of Toronto. The report recommended the establishment of a Canadian research institute on urban centres:

> The establishment of a Canadian institute of urban area development would be of immense value not only for the building industry, but also for the general economy of Canada. The creation of such an organization is essential to put an end to land speculation and bring a necessary orderliness in the many housing development projects to be carried out in future years.

Further on, it is stated:

> Mr. Parkin feels that it is abnormal for one of the largest industries in this country, the building industry, not to have as yet established its own research centre. Starting from a recent report prepared by the Canadian architectural institute, Mr. Parkin broadly defined the functions of such an organization. It should first of all offer guidance to the building industry throughout Canada, indicating what type of housing would meet the requirements of the Canadian people. It then could deal with land classification and with its development. In a word it could study from an economic viewpoint those districts and urban centres which are developing, in order to regulate their expansion.

Mr. Chairman, I pointed out a moment ago to the hon. minister that if housing construction has slowed down in Montreal, it is due to the high price of lots and also to inflation that has affected those lots since 1957.

Well, this is the content of this builders' report under the title:

A Gold Mine.

It is said that the convention:

> Contended that speculation upon building sites was a real gold mine for those who exercise it, exactly because it does not require expensive work nor is it subject to taxation. It pointed out that it is done on a large scale all through this country and that it is responsible for most of the numerous problems arising from many home building projects.

Une mine d'or.

He explained that, due to this speculation, several towns are going right now through an abnormal and very expensive expansion. He remains convinced that this situation can and must be corrected through the adoption of some taxation procedure.

I do hope that the minister will agree that the report issued at the builders convention makes sense and if he is interested he could get a copy and consider it. That may suggest to him means of stopping the inflation of lot prices so that all Canadians may eventually possess their own homes.

(Text):

Mr. Walker: In reply to the hon. member, may I say that the number of housing starts in Montreal in 1960 was 16,345 and in 1961, it was 17,204.

Mr. Slogan: In rising to say a few words on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Public Works I should like, first of all, to commend the minister on the hard work he has done in the department and on the sympathetic hearing he has given us. Often we have had to lay a rigid case before him, and sometimes, when we did not have all the facts, he turned us away until we did. But I must say when we had a good case and had the people behind us he was always sympathetic toward the provision of anything that was needed in the constituency.

In this regard I was interested in references made by the opposition to patronage. It seemed to me that every time an hon. member who supported the government got something for his riding it was considered patronage. I suggest that if opposition members followed the example of many of us on the government side, worked a lot harder for their constituencies and talked a lot less in this house, the people in their ridings would be a lot better off.

There are three items in the estimates which are of particular interest and concern to me. One has to do with the wharf at Berens River, provision for which is in the estimates this year in the amount of $65,000. I might say that a request for a wharf at Berens River has been made year after year, always failling upon deaf ears. But there was something new added last year. I may say that I have made a request for such a wharf on a number of occasions since I was elected a member of this house and I was happy to see that these representations have been successful this year.

Berens River is an isolated community on lake Winnipeg. There are no roads to it, and those who live there must depend on air and water transport. There has been a Hudson Bay wharf there for a number of years but this has been condemned. Whenever we have sent engineers in to decide what to do about a wharf they found that some of the people wanted it on one side of the river and others wanted it on the other side; they never seemed to be able to make up their minds. Well, this little community of 125 families formed a community development association. They have an Indian reserve there, and most of the people are métis. But since they formed this little group last year they have received $20,000 to clear an air strip so that planes can land during the break up and freeze up seasons. This air strip will also serve as a hay field so that they can grow hay for cattle during the summer.

I had the pleasure of visiting Berens River a few months ago to inspect the old wharf and I was received very kindly by this committee, which has now presented a united front. That made it much easier for a member of parliament to present their case to the minister and I thank them very much for their co-operation in this regard. Here is a small community which has shown what a small community can do if the people work together. I have mentioned that $20,000 was spent last year on an air strip. A pulpwood co-operative has been formed this year and about $40,000 will be received from pulpwood under this scheme. This will provide employment in the area.

Last year, too, this isolated community which was in dire need of some health facilities received a $50,000 nursing station located there from which public health nursing can be carried on into the north. Indeed, the northern area of my riding which is extremely isolated reminds me of that series of television programs entitled "The Flying Doctor". We have that type of service in my area.

A few years back we were also fortunate enough to have established at Little Grand Rapids a $41,000 nursing station.

It has been impossible to build a road northward along the eastern shore of lake Winnipeg. Under the roads to resources program we received $1.5 million to extend roads into the remote areas. However, the terrain is such that it is impossible to build roads northward; therefore they mostly run eastward toward the Ontario boundary. As a result of this wharves along the lake are very important from the standpoint of transportation and as a means of providing a livelihood to the fishermen.

[Mr. Slogan.]

In the last few years improvements have been made in several villages along the eastern shore of lake Winnipeg. There was a wharf extension at Princess harbour which cost $7,700. Some dredging was done at Pigeon point which cost $5,500. There was some rock blasting in the harbour and dredging at Rapid Point which came to approximately $10,000.

We have had problems with regard to the locks at St. Andrews on the Red river because of the low level of water. As a result there has been a terrific odour. Of course, the city of Winnipeg is largely responsible for this. However, the Department of Public Works has been most co-operative in trying to alleviate the situation.

The locks at Lockport require an expenditure of approximately $50,000 a year for maintenance and operation. In the last three or four years it has been found necessary to build a retaining wall because of the nature of the soil in the area which causes the banks of the river to slide in. With building the retaining wall, painting the bridge and undertaking various other projects an expenditure of approximately $93,000 was made.

We have three canalmen at Lockport. They are the only canalmen in Canada who come under the Department of Public Works. Complaints have been received to the effect that they would like to be put in the same category as the other canalmen across Canada. I would ask the minister to give this consideration, if possible. They feel they have been discriminated against in some manner. Although they have been extended sympathy and their working conditions have been improved somewhat, they feel they would like to come under the Department of Transport as do all other canalmen in Canada. Of course, the civil service commission is involved and we have not received too much co-operation from that body.

In North Kildonan we have a suburban area which like all other suburbs of major cities witnesses the construction of approximately 200 and 300 new homes every year. Nearly all these homes have been constructed under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans. Most of the people in the area appreciate the action of the government in increasing maximum mortgage funds available and amending the qualifications of eligibility.

The mushrooming of the suburban area has created a number of problems and led to new necessities. One of them is a postal service. I was glad to see in the estimates this year provision for a postal letter carrier depot to be constructed in East Kildonan on the border of North Kildonan which would serve both areas. I believe the value of this depot would be approximately $65,000.

With respect to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation let me say this. A year or two ago in this house we had a great debate about the Whiteshell nuclear research establishment. The Leader of the Opposition was very persistent in attempting to have this establishment located in his own riding. Members of the C.C.F. group urged that it be located at Elliot Lake. Progress has been made at Whiteshell. Approximately $1.5 million was spent there last year and approximately $4 million will be spent this year. Of that sum approximately $1 million will be spent by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in constructing the new town site at Pinawa. To date at that townsite three land clearing contracts have been let by C.M.H.C. in the amount of $61,130 and three contracts have been let for sewage and water supply and for road bases which total a little more than $1 million. I believe an additional $1 million will be spent at the townsite in the coming year. This will provide a great deal of employment in the area. We expect that approximately 500 men will be employed there.

That brings to mind the often misquoted statement made by the Prime Minister in Prince Albert on February 14, 1958 when he said that no man or woman would suffer unnecessarily from unemployment in Canada as long as they could be helped by public works. This is but one example of how the national policy of the Conservative government is working and how this party is trying to spread public works across the nation to provide equality of opportunity.

Here is Springfield, an area 300 miles long and 150 miles wide. When a C.C.F. member represented the constituency not one public works project was undertaken. Many pages of Hansard were filled by the hon. member but not one project commenced while he was the member for that riding. Then the Liberals represented the riding for 22 years. The Liberal representatives did not talk very much but they also did not accomplish very much. As far as I can ascertain only one or two buildings were constructed in the constituency between 1935 and 1957. Here was a great area neglected. Ninety per cent of the young people of that area had to seek opportunities elsewhere. Today for the first time they can find employment with the research establishment. Not just the ordinary labouring man can find employment at the construction site, but the brilliant young people attending universities will find an employment outlet at this research establishment.

It was interesting to note that when the Leader of the Opposition made his request that this establishment not go to Manitoba he mentioned as a reason the fact that there would be unemployment at Elliot Lake. Many of the young people in my constituency were working at Elliot Lake. I think it would be very nice to have something to offer them in Manitoba. After all, approximately $300 million has already been spent in Ontario by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

This project is welcomed in my riding by people of all political denominations. I may say the Leader of the Opposition will receive a rare reception if he ever shows himself in Springfield.

Recently we have had a swap deal with the United States under which the Pine Tree radar stations now come under Canadian jurisdiction. We heard some criticism from the opposition about this. Here is another instance where C.M.H.C. has been able to step in and look into the matter of housing for this radar station which is now called the Beausejour R.C.A.F. station. When it was occupied by the United States it was operated of course, as a foreign base. There were fewer married men, and many lived in trailers. Now that Canada has taken over the base there has been a great demand for expansion in the area to bring it up to normal requirements for a domestic base. In the last couple of years $795,000 was spent there. We expect that $1 million, approximately, will be spent on housing this year. I believe that the Department of Public Works through C.M.H.C. will be asked to administer housing in the area.

A great deal of employment has been created in the area. The staff at the base has been increased substantially and employment will increase when C.M.H.C. undertakes to provide housing. In this regard I should like to say to the minister—and this is also a decision for the Department of National Defence—I hope the town of Beausejour and village of Lac du Bonnet might be given consideration for part of this housing. I believe approximately 100 homes will be required. Of course there is the other side to the story and that is that with this lovely new town of Pinawa going up, it would be nice to have housing situated there, and to have some consideration given to this matter. Pinawa is located on the lake. There is an attractive summer resort area there and it will have all the modern facilities of any town. It will be a showplace for Manitoba.

I forgot to say also that this summer at Lockport we will continue the extension of the retaining wall. I think there has been a vote of $10,000 for that purpose.

In Springfield we have something like 3,500 Indians. As I said before, we have put up a service for them something like the flying doctor service. In this regard the Department of Public Works, in conjunction with the Department of National Health and Welfare, put up a nurses' residence last year which cost $112,000. I understand that plans are under way to amalgamate the Indian affairs hospital along with that in the pulp and paper town of Pine Falls and that something in the neighbourhood of $400,000 will be spent there in the coming year.

We have in our riding beautiful Fort Garry, the old stone fort, which is one of the few forts remaining intact. We hope by 1967 it will be our own showplace in Manitoba. This was the fort that was locked to visitors when I was elected. I raised this matter. I might say that last year something like 50,000 visitors signed the guest book. We have put two guides in. This year we are building there a museum that will cost something like $50,000.

I think that just goes to show you what a member can do if he works hard for his constituency.

Here was an area that had been neglected since confederation. When you walked into it, you found it was an area that was barren. There were no roads to speak of. There were no opportunities. The young people, as soon as they got out of school, were obliged to go and seek their livelihood in the great city of Winnipeg. Many of them found their way to Toronto and to the east, many of them going to the United States and so forth. So we saw that under the Liberals at least 50 per cent of the young people in the province were leaving and as far as the rural areas were concerned probably it was more like 90 per cent. Now, under this national development policy of this government through these public works and other projects we are trying to keep our young people at home with their families, where they can get married and raise families and find some opportunity. That is what our policy is designed for, namely, to treat all areas alike and to bring those that are underdeveloped up to the standards we can see elsewhere.

I could go on to talk about a large number of other things. There is the trans-Canada highway that runs through my riding. Several million dollars have been spent on it. There is a south and north perimenter road around the city of Winnipeg. The south perimeter road, of course, has been proceeded with and is being widened to four lanes, but in the north perimeter road we have not yet reached the stage of building the bridge across the river. I might say that, with the traffic pattern in the suburbs of Winnipeg, there is an increasing demand for this bridge and that the municipalities in the area are very much concerned about it. There is an oil refinery on one side and there is a great deal of traffic from the east to the west and from the west to the east as far as gravel trucks are concerned. Some of the best gravel is found on the east side. There is a great deal of crossing the river because of the mushrooming of the suburbs. The traffic patterns indicate that this bridge should be proceeded with at the earliest possible moment. This, of course, is not the decision for the federal government. It is rather a decision for the provincial government. However, I think the people in the area should know that we are very much concerned about the matter and that we are certainly going to see that this bridge is built at the earliest possible moment.

As I say, the Department of Public Works has been most kind to us. I might also say that it was not very easy to get all these things. It was not a matter of writing to the minister and saying that I want this or I want that. If he gave it, he wanted to know the reason for it. Often it was with the co-operation of municipalities in the area, and other groups there that we could bring the need before the people.

I think this record of accomplishment in Springfield is a record of which I can be proud. I am willing to place it against that of any other member of parliament who ever represented the riding and against all the members of parliament who represented the Liberal party in the riding since confederation. I should like to stack it up and see how it matches. I think it would match up very well. This area had been neglected for so long both by the provincial Liberals and the federal Liberals that it was inevitable that much of this had to be done, and we were the party that came out and did it. There were many things that the Liberals said could not be done. However, with a little bit of conscientious hard work, we did them.

I do not want to drag this discussion out, Mr. Chairman. I have a great deal more that I could say but I think most of it would not come under this department. In refutation of the member of the New Democratic party who talked about patronage, I should just like to say that if that little group over there did a little bit more hard work, a little bit less talking and became a little bit more concerned with individuals in the places in the riding, they too could have a record like this one to show their people.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Meunier: I wish to ask the minister this question. In his remarks a few minutes ago he gave statistics for the condition in Montreal in 1961. I wish to ask him whether he was giving the figures for Montreal only or for metropolitan Montreal.

Mr. Walker: For metropolitan Montreal.

An hon. Member: That is different.

Mr. Winch: Because I think it is the right thing to do, Mr. Chairman, I should like first of all to thank the Minister of Public Works and his deputy, General Young, for their courtesy in answering in connection with any problems I have raised with them since the last introduction of item No. 1 of the Department of Public Works. I am one of the relatively few members in the House of Commons who can rise in his place and speak on item No. 1 of the Department of Public Works in a particular way as I have not a federal building in Vancouver East. As a matter of fact, to my knowledge there is no federal public works expenditure in the entire set-up of Vancouver East. That is why I say I am one of the relatively few who can rise in his place and speak on this item when there is nothing spent in his riding. What may surprise you, Mr. Chairman, and the minister is that on behalf of Vancouver East and as its member here I am not asking for a federal building or for a post office or for any expenditure his department can make in my riding itself. I happen to represent a riding which is basically residential. In it there are only a few secondary industries and the harbour front.

What I have to say under this item is said on behalf of the city of Vancouver because what affects Vancouver has a definite effect on over 100,000 men, women and children who live within the boundaries of the federal constituency of Vancouver East. There are three matters which are of major concern, I believe, in Vancouver which either come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works or upon which he can give advice.

The first matter I want to raise is one on which I admit there might be a split jurisdiction or perhaps the matter might not come under the minister at all. He will tell me about that. I refer to the harbour development in Vancouver. Vancouver, as the minister knows, is the third largest city in Canada. It is not only the major western port of Canada but one of the most important western ports in North America. With the expansion of trade westward, Vancouver is now in the position where the harbour facilities are completely underdeveloped. If my memory is correct, Mr. Chairman, it has been some 20 years since one of the major harbour facilities owned by the Canadian Pacific was burnt down and it has never been replaced. Any of you who follow the western newspapers undoubtedly saw pictures in the past few weeks showing ocean-going liners waiting at anchor in the inner harbour for a spot to load and unload cargo.

Vancouver East and Vancouver Centre are the boundaries of the harbour areas of Vancouver. One half of the harbour of Vancouver is in my riding. I would ask the Minister of Public Works, therefore, if it comes under his jurisdiction in any way whatever, and if there is any planning for federal government participation in harbour development in the city of Vancouver. I am afraid that perhaps the authority of the Minister of Public Works may only extend up to the tidal high-water mark. However, because of the prime importance of Vancouver to Canada, I hope he does not mind my raising the problem now. I am certain he is cognizant of it. If he has jurisdiction, then he will tell us of any planning. If, as I am led to believe, his authority does not extend beyond the tidal shore, he may have some influence with his colleagues in the cabinet.

The next matter, Mr. Chairman, I know comes completely within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works. I am thinking of senior citizens housing, something of which I have been concerned and which I have been interested for many years. This is a major problem in the city of Vancouver. I know all cities and all provinces have this problem of housing for senior citizens. I know from facts, figures and studies that the city of Vancouver has the major problem because, situated as it is on the Pacific coast and having no extremes of heat or humidity in summer or freezing weather in winter, it has the greatest percentage of senior citizens of any major city in Canada. These people do not live their lives in British Columbia. They come to British Columbia in later years of life as old age pensioners or superannuates. The Vancouver city council is cognizant of the situation. The Vancouver city council, under the leadership of His Worship A. T. Alsbury, has been doing everything possible to work in co-operation with the province and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make homes and apartments available for our senior citizens at rents which they can afford to pay.

I should like to ask the minister what his policy is, how far he is prepard to go and how far he has told Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to go in co-operating with councils and provincial governments in supplying homes for our senior citizens. You may ask, Mr. Chairman, why I put the question in that way. I do so, sir, because of the communications I have received from the Vancouver city council, from His Worship A.T. Alsbury and communications from Dr. Bates of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. These communications have led me to believe that for some reason or other Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is blocking the desire of the city of Vancouver to extend aid to its senior citizens. I know, and I want to be the first to admit, that there are a number of projects under way authorized by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Walker: May I answer the hon. member? I am very glad he has raised any matter that is in his mind. I can reassure him that not only Dr. Bates but all the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are anxious and willing and have been co-operating with the officials of Vancouver in an earnest effort to get proper housing for the elderly. Anybody who is not politically prejudiced I think would be very happy to admit that. I know, of course, the hon. member for Vancouver East is not being political, he is just telling what somebody has told him. He wanted an answer, and I am happy to have been able to give him this answer.

Mr. Winch: I am very glad that the Minister of Public Works has said I am not politically prejudiced on this matter. I am sorry, though, that he said I am telling something I have been told. This infers I am basing my remarks on rumour. I should like to say I am making them on the basis of information supplied me by the Vancouver city council over the signature of his worship the mayor. This informs me that over 12 months ago the city and the provincial government passed authorization for construction of 300 additional units in the city of Vancouver. I am in receipt of a further communication to the effect that this program has been dropped because of no action, no authorization, after 12 months from central mortgage and housing. I think you will agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that as a member for the city of Vancouver and having that information over the name of his worship, the mayor of Vancouver, I should take it as pretty factual information. Moreover, I shall say I also have that over the name of Mr. Bates in a recent letter to me.

Why is it being held up? They state they are not quite certain whether there will be the need, or at least that is my interpretation of the letter. They want to wait until the 400 now under construction are completed. May I point out to the Minister of Public Works that the last analytical figures show that inside of 24 months the requirements for senior citizens will be approximately 5,000 of the type of homes that Vancouver wants to proceed with at an accelerated rate.

I know the interest of the Minister of Public Works in this matter. I know all that has been done by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Good heavens, I am the one man who should know it because my father and myself started the first of this type of house construction in Canada and we could never have done it without central mortgage and housing and their mortgages at very low rates of interest. I know what central mortgage and housing has done, but I say there is much more to be done, and I know the minister by supplementary estimates brings in additional millions of dollars for central mortgage. That is why I cannot understand why the city of Vancouver, the third largest city in Canada, and the province of British Columbia have been waiting for 12 months to go ahead with something that is blocked by central mortgage.

Mr. Walker: Perhaps the hon. member would read Dr. Bates' letter.

Mr. Winch: I would be very glad, sir. It will take me five or 10 minutes to get it down from my office but I shall be glad to read the three letters to the house, one from Vancouver council, one I received three weeks ago from Dr. Bates and the letter which I sent him two days ago furthering my plea to authorize the additional construction of senior citizens housing in Vancouver. In view of what the minister has just said I will not say anything more on that now but, sir, when we come to deal with that particular item I shall have all the documentation on this matter and will accept the invitation of the minister to read it to the house.

There is another item of major importance to us in Vancouver on which I would like to make a personal plea to the Minister of Public Works. I was most interested in the speech from the throne, part of which made reference to the government negotiating with the province of Quebec to remove the tolls on two bridges. That is a most worthy endeavour and I sincerely hope they are successful in removing those tolls because in this day and age toll bridges and toll highways are a curse on modern civilization and modern transportation.

Because of the peculiar circumstances in which the speech from the throne says that at this particular session, at this particular time, the government is going to negotiate with the province of Quebec about the removal of tolls on two bridges, and because of what that means to the great city of Montreal and the people in its environs, I would like to ask the minister: please will you take a look at the city of Vancouver in the province of British Columbia?

In Vancouver proper we have one third of the entire population of British Columbia; in Vancouver metropolitan area we have almost one half of the entire population of British Columbia, and we are a city, an island, surrounded by toll bridges. Unless we travel via the Pattullo bridge at New Westminster, half a million of us cannot get out of Vancouver without paying a toll unless we go 62 miles up to the city of Mission and cross there on a combined road and railroad bridge. This is the list: First Narrows, a toll bridge; Second Narrows, two toll bridges; Oak Street, a toll bridge and the Deas tunnel, a toll tunnel. They are now putting up a new bridge at Port Mann, another toll bridge. I repeat, the only way we can get out of Vancouver without paying tolls is over the Pattullo bridge.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell: I understand him to be laying it down as a self-evident fact that toll bridges are a bad thing and ought to be disposed of.

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wonder if that is necessarily so. I have not a fixed view on the matter but it does seem to me that where bridges are put up for the benefit of certain people it is fair that they should pay for them, and not the taxpayers at large. I do not want to inject myself into the hon. member's speech, but he stated that as a self-evident fact. I am not able to see it, but at the moment I am not able to make any effective argument against it.

Mr. Winch: I think with the taxation on gasoline, the taxation on tires, the taxation on automobiles, the taxation on oil and the taxation on licences it is a curse that in a city like Vancouver, with a population of half a million people, we cannot get out of that city without paying a toll.

Mr. Walker: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, we have nothing to do with tolls. We have no tolls.

Mr. Winch: The only route we can get out of Vancouver without paying tolls is over the Pattullo bridge—

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order—

Mr. Winch: —because the government named the Pattullo bridge as a highway on the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order; the Minister of Public Works has raised a very valid point. Tolls are not the responsibility of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Winch: If that is so then I would like to know why the throne speech says this government is going to work with Montreal and Quebec to remove the tolls on two bridges in Montreal.

Mr. McGrath: We debated the throne speech for eight days.

Mr. Winch: I am discussing the point you raised. If I am now out of order in discussing the matter of tolls then that sentence in the throne speech was out of order. I am glad that the government is entering into negotiations with the province of Quebec to remove tolls on two bridges in the city of Montreal but I would say "Please, Mr. Minister, will you not give some consideration to entering into negotiations with the province of British Columbia for the removal of tolls on those damned bridges that surround us"? Of course, we have one bridge which is free. It was built in 1936. I refer to the Pattullo bridge. The time—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I have been allowing the hon. member a great deal of leeway on this particular point. The minister interjected briefly to state that his department was in no way responsible for the tolls that are charged on these particular bridges. For that reason I find it difficult to relate what the hon. member is saying to item No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. The hon. member has made his case as a result of the leeway I have allowed him on the matter, and perhaps he could now turn to something else.

Mr. Winch: That is not necessary, Mr. Chairman; you have already given me the answer because you said I have made my case in appealing to the Minister of Public Works. We know from the debate on the speech from the throne that negotiations are being entered into with the government of Quebec, and I would ask the minister to please enter into negotiations with the government of British Columbia, not only with regard to the Pattullo bridge—that is all settled—but on the other bridges so that tolls may be removed and we will not be an island surrounded by bridges, having to pay out of our pockets for entering or leaving our own city, the third largest in Canada.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I should first like to congratulate the minister upon his excellent statement with regard to housing, public works, the trans-Canada highway and the national capital commission, I should like to raise two points in connection with the criticisms of hon. members of the opposition. The first matter concerns the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming about patronage in public works. I hope that the minister in his remarks in this debate will make it perfectly clear that contracts for public buildings are put out to tender and the lowest tender gets the contract. The other point concerns the remarks of the hon. member for Levis. His irrelevant attack upon the minister with regard to highways, and so on, was just a way to conceal the good things that have been done by this government in the fields of public works and housing.

I should first like to dwell for a moment upon the broad housing policies of the Conservative government. I think this is one area in which we can take a great deal of pride for what this government has done in the past four and a half years.

I should like to dwell upon the financial situation and cite the metropolitan area of Hamilton, Ontario, as an example of the dynamic way in which this government has dealt with the housing situation in the country. An hon. Liberal member said there was a shortage of money in 1956 and 1957. This is the fact. The lending institutions across the country entered the commercial and industrial lending fields, thereby drying up the lower interest yield on mortgage money for housing and forcing this government to enter the house lending business on a large scale.

I think the Liberal regime was well aware of this drying up of capital in the latter part of 1956 and the early part of 1957, and I think they should have taken a lead in starting direct lending well in advance of June 10, 1957. However, I am sure it was not their intention to let the people know of the economic report that was concealed, which indicated the cyclical decline of housing construction and a forecast of a further decline in the future.

I should also like to comment upon the fact that the approved lending institutions in Hamilton loaned $63 million from 1957 to the end of 1961. As far as limited dividend corporation loans are concerned, in that period $3,738,172 were loaned in Hamilton. This is in regard to privately owned limited dividend corporations which are providing homes for senior citizens. With regard to direct loans by C.M.H.C. to private individuals and private lending corporations, a total of $31,170,472 were loaned.

I am sure that the ambitious city of Hamilton has been greatly assisted in their progressive construction in housing, with loans totalling $97,936,000. This figure excludes direct lending from trust or insurance companies not on approved lending lists, and conventional loans. I am sure that if this government had not gone into the lending field in a direct way, in the way it did when it started lending $150 million directly and eventually brought the figure up to $2 billion, many builders in this country would have gone bankrupt through lack of funds. I think the Minister of Public Works, his department and C.M.H.C. should be commended for doing a very fine job in this regard. Next I should like to talk about Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation. I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Vancouver east say that C.M.H.C. has been blocking loans for senior citizens homes—

Mr. Winch: They blocked one in Vancouver.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I gathered form the intensity of the hon. member's attack that he was very disturbed about these loans that were proposed to be blocked by C.M.H.C. In Hamilton loans applications that have been put through our city council, they have received the acknowledgement of the federal government, have passed through C.M.H.C. in a matter of days and in fact these dwellings have been built and people are living in them. I am speaking of senior citizens dwellings, limited dividend loans incomes ranging between $3,000 and $4,200 a year, and federal-provincial housing for those with income levels from $2,950 and less a year to $5,800 a year. With these income levels people cannot afford today to buy their own home because of the lack of capital, and with their low earnings they cannot acquire a mortgage.

In the city of Hamilton we have a very large program in this respect. There are some 1,200 federal-provincial homes in my riding. This program is operating very effectively, with a small waiting list. As far as limited dividend private corporation loans in Hamilton are concerned, the list is completely filled with people within the proper incomes. There is also a small waiting list in this category.

As far as urban renewal expansion and development is concerned, in the city of Hamilton, as in other parts of the country, I think this government is very aware of all the ramifications and problems that we are going to run into. Hamilton took a lead by setting up an urban renewal committee. This committee was designed to get the ball rolling in Hamilton as far as urban renewal was concerned. The initial impetus in regard to urban renewal must come from the municipalities. The federal government and C.M.H.C. can give assistance and provide people who are able to go out and help, but initially the initial effort must come from the municipalities.

The federal government is interested in a person who may be uprooted because of urban renewal, and it is of the utmost importance that the federal government should look after the individual to ensure that he is protected in every way and will not be thrown out of his home in a very haphazard way if it is blighted. In the past 18 months Hamilton has undertaken the clearance study of 278 acres. This program is under consideration at the present time by the provincial authority in Toronto. There are problems which will arise because of this redevelopment. One of the problems is, not that the federal government has not dealt in a forward looking way with urban renewal but the problems that arise in this regard that may be of interest to the committee. The act now states that urban renewal is for the clearance of slum or blight areas, the relocation of homes and the development of new housing accommodation, but there is no section in the act which indicates that in an area of blight or semi-deterioration where a large area is cleared, where schools and recreational facilities are needed, the clearance of these areas for these facilities comes under the National Housing Act. I would hope that the officials of C.M.H.C. would look into the aspects of an integral part of the redevelopment of certain areas so that not only housing could be used for the redevelopment but schools and recreation areas. Possibly there could be a relocation of traffic through the tearing down of blighted areas so that we could go even further in the vast scope of urban renewal.

The next point I should like to deal with for a moment concerns the cost of land in the country as a whole. Everyone knows it is going up and up. But I want to point out one thing which this government has done, and I think it has a direct relationship to the cost of land. In the bill which was passed here some 18 months ago that made available sewer loans to the municipalities, hidden in this type of legislation is a thought to reduce the cost of land. In the constituency that I represent we were very fortunate that out of $40 million of initial loans for sewerage receptacles and sewage disposal plants we had over $2 million, showing the progressive way in which the city council of Hamilton is taking advantage of this legislation.

But there is a larger scope in land servicing. The reason that land costs are high is that services have been creeping steadily out of the centre of the city, thereby putting a high premium price on that land near where the services are being constructed. Under the legislation which was passed some time ago providing for the availability of long term sewer loans to the municipalities, the legislation allowed for servicing large tracks of land, where desirable, so as to open up vast tracks of land, thereby putting a glut on the market and forcing the price down because of the number of lots that would be available. This is an example of the supply and demand theory.

I hope that the federal government on March 31, 1963 will take a look at the long term program of federal sewage loans. I think this will help the cost of land and do a good job in the long run.

In Hamilton as a whole we have had practically everything in the housing field. We have had federal-provincial housing, limited dividend lending, direct corporation lending, approved lending, sewer loans and even land assembly. There are a number of pro and con thoughts on land assembly. There are many builders, in private enterprise, who believe in land assembly and some who are private enterprisers who do not believe in it. But 540 lots in Hamilton south were done two years ago. I do not want to argue the pros and cons of land assembly, but I do know there are 500 homes in my constituency that are there and built. It is a beautiful survey. It is a pleasure for parents to bring up their children in this type of assembly because the municipality has built beautiful schools and park areas have been correlated in this development.

I should like to congratulate C.M.H.C. on the sale of mortgages to private institutions. I think this is a good thing and I hope it will continue in the future.

The next subject I should like to dwell on is over-all public works as pertaining to Hamilton south and Hamilton as a whole. Hamilton, as I am sure everyone knows, is a progessive city. It has the third largest tonnage harbour in Canada although it is a great distance from the sea. The federal government has recognized this fact, and from the point of view of harbour expenditure I think it is second to none in relation to the population of the area. So far as dredging is concerned, since 1957 there has been some $2,245,000 spent on dredging down in the Hamilton area to keep the channel open. So far as public works are concerned, Hamilton is a conservative stronghold. We have all Conservative members and we work as a team to develop the harbour and to develop the public works. There will be some—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): If the hon. member who represents one of the Ontario constituencies—I believe it is Timmins—would like to get up and contribute to the debate and tell us what he thinks of housing,

I am sure we would be happy to hear from him.

As far as public buildings are concerned we were fortunate that a long time ago post offices and other public buildings were built, but a little over a million dollars worth of additions have been done in the past short while.

I should like to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Wentworth. I am sorry he is not in the house tonight; I think he has another engagement. For many years in his constituency the entrance of the Hamilton harbour has been a very vexing point. A couple of ships ran into the old bridge and blocked the harbour for some time. Through the persistence of this hon. member I believe a new low level bridge costing $5,122,960 will be opened this year. I think it is really due to the personal efforts of this member that this is being done.

As far as the harbour and river facilities estimates are concerned there is provision for the expenditure of some $7,438,000 in the Hamilton area as a whole and I should like to tell the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that we are very appreciative in Hamilton not of just being given money but also very appreciative of getting the money that is developing our community into one of the strongest economic units in the country in the whole area of housing, and harbour and bridge construction. I think it is proving that the Conservative government is on the right track. It has not left Hamilton behind.

I cannot stress too much the importance of the minister's taking up with C.M.H.C. the sections of the National Housing Act with regard to urban renewal. I have sat on the urban renewal committee in Hamilton as the federal representative and I have learned a great deal from this, but I find that there are some loopholes which I think can be cured very easily so that when a city or municipality is designing an urban renewal area they can go into the whole ramifications of schools, recreation facilities, churches and so on, along with housing and apartment dwellings in that area.

I should like to take this opportunity of saying that C.M.H.C. in the constituency which I represent and in Hamilton as a whole has done a great job and the co-operation they have given, in an unprejudiced and unpolitical way to, I think, every member of the house is appreciated. They should be congratulated, and I hope they will continue their good work in the future.

Mr. Carter: I should like to begin my remarks in this debate by expressing my thanks to the minister and his staff for the very kind and, for the most part, sympathetic consideration they have given to the problems I have brought before them on behalf of my constituents. I should like to take this opportunity also of expressing my appreciation to the staff of the minister's department, both the senior officials here and the officials in the district office in our province. They have always been most co-operative and most sympathetic and have gone out of their way on many occasions to do everything possible to alleviate the problems that I have had to bring before them. The minister is very fortunate in having such competent and devoted officials at the disposal of his department.

When I listened to the minister opening the debate on this item I must say he sounded to me much more like the minister for housing than the Minister of Public Works. Housing is of course, a very important activity in the minister's department and also in the economic life of our country. Housing is one of the very best ways of priming the pump when our economy slows down. The minister has told us that a great deal has been done in that direction under this government. As I listened to the minister it was not clear to me whether the aim of the government's housing policy was to create jobs or to build needed homes. One can understand that under the economic conditions which we have experienced during the past few years a delicate balance has perhaps had to be achieved between the two.

In a free enterprise country when a government has to go so deeply into the housing business there is raised in my mind a question as to whether the economic and fiscal policies followed by the government are sound. The prime purpose of every national government is to create a climate in which private enterprise can operate to fill the needs of the people. Housing is a legitimate function of private enterprise. If it is impossible for them to carry out this normal function I think we should take a second look to see whether this is due to our failure to provide the proper climate and whether the fiscal policies pursued by the government have something to do with it.

The minister took great pride in what this government has accomplished in the field of housing. I cannot share his enthusiasm in this respect. For a national policy which is designed to apply to all parts of the nation and to treat every part of the nation alike, the figures the minister placed on Hansard this afternoon certainly show this is not being done.

He told us that in the country as a whole aggregate loans under C.M.H.C. totalled $3,271 million. Then he went on to tell us that 50 per cent of this amount had gone to one province. Out of the aggregate a total of $1,600 million went to Ontario alone, while loans in all the Atlantic provinces totalled only $120 million.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No, not the amount available.

Mr. Carter: These are the figures the minister placed on the record. As I understood the minister, of the aggregate of $3,271 million a total of $1,600 million went to Ontario and $120 million went to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): They could have had more.

Mr. Walker: The hon. member knows very well that we have to receive applications. After all, we do not go about soliciting applications. Unless the provinces make applications on their own through the various channels there is nothing we can do about it. Surely there is no criticism of that. We make a special point of doing all we can to assist the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Carter: I quite understand that, Mr. Chairman, and I was not criticizing the minister. I was criticizing the way the policy has worked out in one part of Canada compared with another. We know that people must apply. If they do not apply in the Atlantic provinces it is because they cannot afford to apply. That is what I am complaining about. The great national policy, so called, of which the minister is so proud actually operates to favour the rich provinces. A wealthy province like Ontario can take advantage of it but poor provinces like the Atlantic provinces are not in a position to take advantage of it. That is why the people of the Atlantic provinces do not apply. They would apply just as readily as the people of Ontario if they could afford to do so.

I believe a national policy applied to the whole nation should be designed to operate in such a way as to take into account the economic differences in the various regions and not to favour the rich at the expense of the poor.

Even if we considered it as the minister seemed to do this afternoon as a means of creating employment, the need in the Atlantic provinces is much greater than in Ontario. The minister of finance for Ontario has said the employment situation is better in Ontario than in Canada as a whole and better than in the United States. Let us understand that that is not so in the Atlantic provinces. Approximately 13 per cent of our people are out of work now and probably 25 or 30 per cent of them will be out of work before the winter is over.

Mr. Nowlan: What month is this?

Mr. Carter: Well, we have that situation every winter. In my province we have up to 30 per cent of the work force out of work in the winter.

Mr. Walker: The hon. member appreciates, of course, that this government has spent annually three times the amount that was spent on public works under the previous administration. Also on a per capita basis the amount of money spent in Newfoundland is many times greater than the amount spent per capita in Ontario. In addition the gifts of capital expenditures in the Atlantic provinces and particularly the province of Newfoundland—

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the minister has no right to rise in this chamber and interrupt the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. Walker: Is the hon. member for Levis the leader of the house? If so, since when? The hon. gentleman has not raised a point of order.

Mr. Bourget: The minister is not the chairman. The minister cannot make rulings.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I assume that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo yielded the floor to the minister although I was not following the discussion closely at that point. However, it being ten o'clock—

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to the point of order?

The Deputy Chairman: There is no point of order. I see that it is ten o'clock so I will rise and report progress. If the hon. member wishes to refer to this when he resumes tomorrow after orders of the day he may do so.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the acting house leader the order of business for tomorrow and Monday?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, we shall continue tomorrow with the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Public Works which hon. gentlemen opposite have been examining in such a friendly mood this evening. I am waiting for the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to explain tomorrow how unemployment in his province will affect 25 per cent of the work force in March, at the opening of this month.

I am not in a position to give the numbers of the bills with which we will deal on Monday, but on Monday and Tuesday we will deal with legislation. We will commence by taking up some of the items on the order paper standing in the name of the Minister of Finance. I will detail them tomorrow when the house rises.

Mr. Bourget: I thank the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: I might say this. If we should finish the estimates of the Department of Public Works tomorrow, as I am sure we shall—I am amazed that we did not finish them today in view of the friendly position which the Minister of Public Works has taken on television and in this house—following their completion tomorrow morning we shall then go on with northern affairs tomorrow afternoon.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 2, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

VACANCIES

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received communications from several members notifying me that the following vacancies have occurred in the representation:

Of Mervyn Arthur Hardie, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Mackenzie River, by decease.

Of Hon. Paul Comtois, member for the electoral district of Nicolet-Yamaska, by reason of his acceptance of an office of emolument under the crown.

Accordingly I have issued my warrants to the chief electoral officer to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts, respectively.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—TABLING OF LETTER FROM PREMIER KHRUSHCHEV TO PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a note I received from the chairman of the council of ministers of the U.S.S.R., N. S. Khrushchev, in response to my letter which was previously tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MEETING ON SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I wish to inform the house that Canada has accepted an invitation from the British government to participate in a commonwealth conference in London from March 28 to April 13, to discuss the role of the commonwealth in the development of world wide communications systems based on satellites. The Canadian government has followed with keen interest the research which has been taking place in this field in recent years, mainly in the United States. We are very interested in exploring with other countries, including of course the United States, the basis of future co-operation among the countries of the world in developing communications based on earth satellites.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to comment on that announcement, if I may, and say that I think the Prime Minister is well advised in doing what he has announced. There have been from time to time, originating in the Department of Transport, I believe, telecommunications conferences and the like which the Prime Minister has in mind, but this one of course has a much broader and wider view and I think the house will welcome the announcement made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this group has always had a continuing faith in the important role the commonwealth can play in world affairs. We are very pleased to hear the Prime Minister's announcement with respect to this one segment of Canadian activities in that role.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT TO CANADA OF AUSTRALIAN DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in announcing the forthcoming visit to Canada of Right Hon. John McEwen, deputy prime minister and minister of trade in the Australian government. He is expected here on March 15 and 16 for talks with Canadian ministers on a broad range of trade and economic matters.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—STATEMENT BY U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he is in a position today to answer my question of yesterday, which was in substance: is the Prime Minister in a position to comment on the statement made yesterday morning by Secretary of State Dean Rusk regarding the attitude of the government of the United States toward sharing with Canada in the matter of nuclear weapons?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to what has already been said.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister, are we to understand from the reply he gave a moment ago that he does not propose to comment on the statement of the secretary of state of the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has come to the right conclusion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In that case may I ask the Prime Minister if he will reconcile his statement that there have been conversations between the Canadian government and the United States government in this matter with the statement made yesterday by Secretary of State Dean Rusk which is as follows:

> The United States remains prepared at any time to discuss such arrangements with the government of Canada and we have, of course, discussed such arrangements with other governments.

In view of this statement, implying clearly that the United States has had discussions with other governments and not with the Canadian government, how does the Prime Minister reconcile his earlier statements with this statement of the secretary of state of the United States?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is giving his own interpretation of the implications. I said that discussions had continued from time to time. That is factual and absolute and is in no way contradicted by the statement made by Mr. Rusk.

Mr. Hellyer: You have been smoked out.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister, to clear up all this confusion and uncertainty once and for all and to show his awareness that nuclear war would be suicidal, to consider declaring Canada's intention to renounce nuclear weapons for all time?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is putting a question that has been asked from time to time and which involves a very large question of policy. I think he is optimistic to expect that matters of this kind can be settled with the brevity which is required on oral questions before orders of the day.

ARCTIC ISLANDS—REPORTED SELECTION OF LANDING STRIPS BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has had an opportunity of looking into the question I asked him yesterday about Arctic air bases for the United States air force, and what report he has received from his officers in this respect.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I am sorry, I have not as yet received the report. I inquired about this report about half an hour ago, and it is not yet ready.

INDUSTRY

DOMINION TAR AND CHEMICAL CO.—ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or in his absence to the acting minister. The morning press carries the story that Dominion Tar and Chemical Co. Ltd. have announced their intention of building a plant in the United Kingdom. My question is, does the minister think this is a desirable trend, that plants should establish themselves in the United Kingdom to take advantage of the common market, while Canada seems to have no objective policy to keep them here?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take this question as notice and report to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Now that we are into a new month, could the minister say whether the budget will be brought down in March?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Time will tell, Mr. Speaker. I won't

Mr. Pigeon: The minister will not.

FINANCE

REPORTED PRINTING OF CURRENCY WITHOUT SERIAL NUMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question arises as the result of a news story appearing in last night's edition of the Ottawa Journal to the effect that Mrs. R. W. Dann of Edmonton has received currency bearing no serial number. Is the government keeping a record of the money now being printed?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The hon. member has been in the house for sufficient time to know that the government does not print money; that is a function which has been placed by parliament in the custody and jurisdiction of the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada, of course, in accepting delivery of currency when printed takes elaborate precautions in relation to the numbers printed on the bills.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING ON MINE CLOSINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and ask him whether a meeting has been set up by the government of Nova Scotia and the government of Canada on the subject of further mine closings in Nova Scotia, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 28.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I have been approached by the premier of Nova Scotia, and I expect to meet him next week.

Mr. Chevrier: Has any date been fixed?

Mr. Flynn: No definite date, but it will most probably be Wednesday.

(Translation):

FLAGS

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF MODEL DESIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Did he receive copies of the six flag models proposed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate? If so, what are the designs?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did not receive any such thing.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $11,098,000

Mr. Carter: Last night, Mr. Chairman, you gave me the floor about ten minutes before the committee was due to rise, and about half of that time was occupied by interruptions, mainly from the Minister of Public Works. My colleague the hon. member for Levis attempted to raise a point of order about this, but since you ruled that there was no point of order perhaps you will permit me to deal with this matter as a question of privilege.

When the minister intervened I was dealing with the government's housing policy. I had endeavoured to make the point that the fact the government finds it necessary to go so heavily into the housing business is an indication that there is something wrong with the government's fiscal and monetary policy which failed to produce the economic climate in which private enterprise, whose normal function it is to provide for the needs of the people, was able to operate in the housing field.

At that point the minister rose to interrupt. I thought he was going to correct an error I had made, because I recognize that we all make slips of the tongue especially when we are attempting to think on our feet. But the minister did not do that. What the minister proceeded to do was to debate my comment. In his rebuttal the minister did not deal with the point I was making with respect to housing policy. He proceeded to deal with public works, and made statements as to how much this government had spent on public works in my province. I intend to deal with that statement later.

My question of privilege is this. If the procedure is adopted by the house of allowing a minister or anyone else to interrupt at any time the member who has the floor in order to start debating subjects which are not under discussion, bedlam will result. The minister has no more right to interrupt than any other person.

Your Honour made the point that I conceded the floor to the minister. I did so because I thought he was going to correct a statement I had made, but the minister took advantage of that opportunity. We do not know what the minister is going to say when he rises. We have to trust to his sense of fairness and proportion in matters like this. When he does not observe the ordinary rules of procedure he is out of order. I do not mind conceding the floor if the minister requests that I do so and states for what purpose he is rising, but I shall not yield just to permit a red herring to be brought into the argument I am advancing.

Since the minister has undertaken to intervene in my remarks I would ask Your Honour to count my time as from now and not as from five minutes to ten o'clock, as would normally be the case.

As I said, a national housing policy should operate in such a way as to treat all parts of the nation alike as far as humanly possible. The figures the minister produced yesterday illustrate that the government's housing policy is creating an overexpansion in economic activity in one province and is doing little to correct the underexpansion in other parts of the country. In my opinion a government policy should operate with the purpose of having quite the reverse effect. It should try to level out economic expansion and make it more uniform throughout the whole country.

I pointed out to the committee that unemployment is always a serious problem in the Atlantic provinces, and during the winter months when it is at its peak it can reach and has reached in my province as high as 25 per cent of the labour force. The Minister of National Revenue seemed to ridicule that statement, and I want to put some figures on Hansard to support what I said. It is true that since 1960 we do not have a separate breakdown of percentages of unemployment in the various provinces; instead we have figures for the whole Atlantic region.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, on a point or order, I suggest that we are talking about public works, not unemployment, and I think we should at least keep on the subject.

Mr. Carter: I am going to relate the figures I am about to give to the housing policy of the government. I think what I have already said proves that there is a relationship between housing policy and employment, just as there is a relationship between the fiscal policy of the government and the extent to which it has to engage in the housing business.

I am sorry that the Minister of National Revenue is not here to listen to this, since he questioned my statement last night. In 1960, the last year for which we had a percentage breakdown by provinces, unemployment in the Atlantic provinces was 14.4 per cent of the work force. That was in the winter months. I believe in January, and probably not at the worst period. At that particular time when the average for the Atlantic provinces was 14.4 per cent the average for the province of Newfoundland was 25 per cent, and the situation got worse.

The figures released by the bureau of statistics a short time ago give the percentages as of the 13th of January, which is not the peak so far as unemployment is concerned, and the percentage for the Atlantic provinces was 14.7 per cent. If there were 25 per cent unemployed in Newfoundland in 1960, when the average for the Atlantic provinces was 14.4 per cent, surely it is reasonable to assume that the figure was at least 25 per cent and perhaps worse for Newfoundland when the average for the Atlantic provinces was 14.7 per cent as of January 13.

Mr. McGrath: What percentage of that 25 per cent were fishermen?

Mr. Carter: Well, are fishermen not people? Are they not workers?

Mr. McGrath: My hon. friend knows that fishermen cannot draw unemployment insurance and fish at the same time. They cannot fish at certain periods because it is a seasonal occupation. My hon. friend knows that the figures are not in proportion to the facts.

Mr. Carter: I want to support my statement with some figures compiled by the Atlantic provinces economic council, and the source of their figures is the special surveys division of the dominion bureau of statistics. I ask the hon. member for St. John's East to listen to this, because I am now talking about averages for the whole year and not seasonal unemployment when the fishermen are included. In 1958 there were 20,000 unemployed Newfoundlanders out of a work force of 111,000. In 1959, according to the government's own publication, there were 22,000 Newfoundlanders out of work for the whole year out of a work force of 115,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Carter: In 1960 there were 21,000 out of work out of a work force of 118,000.

The Deputy Chairman: I see the Solicitor General is rising on a point of order. I think I can anticipate what his point of order is. The statistics that are being placed on the record by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo relate to unemployment, and they would be more appropriately discussed on the estimates of the Department of Labour. I do not want to be unfair or unduly restrictive to the hon. member, but I do feel that his suggestion that he would relate these figures to item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Public Works has not come through to me at this stage. I would ask him to move in that direction as soon as possible.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would you let me say a word on this point, Mr. Chairman? I submit that the minister should be ashamed of himself when he contends that these estimates for public works have no relationship whatever to unemployment. I think the minister should be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I did not say what the hon. member has just stated I said. When the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo is talking about unemployment he should relate it to this Department of Public Works, and not give us a long harangue about it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to address myself to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, Your Honour will recall that the minister, in the opening statement he made yesterday on housing, in particular, mentioned that the consequence of government policy was that it had a direct effect on unemployment. If the minister was able to make that kind of argument I am sure that Your Honour, on reconsideration, will agree it is open to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to make a reply. That is all he has been doing.

Mr. Carter: I think the record will show that these figures are related to the housing policy of the government, and the government has gone into the housing question in a big way, as the minister pointed out, to prime the economic pump. Last night the minister made the statement that this government spent three times as much on public works in Newfoundland as did the Liberal government. If that is so that is as it should be, because—

An hon. Member: Give us credit for it, then.

Mr. Carter: It is as it should be, because of the need to create employment in Newfoundland and also the need to even out the disparities in our economic development. If the housing policy of the government cannot achieve that, then certainly the public works program of this government should be operated in such a way as to make up for that lack. I am afraid that the minister's statements are not borne out by the facts.

We have raised the question of urban development in the northern section of St. John's for at least two years during the consideration of the estimates of this department. So far as I have been able to find out, that development has not taken place as yet. For a whole year the premier of Newfoundland was blamed for this situation. Over a year ago the premier went to the extent of making changes in the legislation so that the municipality of St. John's could cooperate with the federal government and leave the province out of the picture. However, this development is proceeding very slowly, and certainly there are no houses being built even though the project has been under consideration for at least two years and possibly longer.

If I may come back to the minister's statement about having spent three times as much in Newfoundland as his predecessors, I should like to take the figures for expenditures on public buildings in the years 1959-1960 to 1961-1962 inclusive. This government has spent $1.3 million on public buildings during that time, whereas their predecessors in the three years from 1954-1955 to 1957-1958, spent $8.5 million on public buildings, at a time when there was less disparity in the economic development of the various parts of our province. If we take the money spent on harbour development in the same period, we find that the total spent by this government according to the estimates, and I have only had time to go back three years, was $16.3 million as compared with $7.7 million under the Liberals. Now, that looks like a tremendous difference, but it is still not three times as great. If it were three times as great it would be $22 million. However, the figure of $16.3 million does not give the correct picture, because of that $16.3 million at least $9 million has been spent on the harbour of St. John's.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Carter: There is nothing wrong with that; I should like to see more spent on improving the harbour of St. John's. However, there is this to be said about it. This $9 million that is being spent on the harbour of St. John's is not going into the pockets of Newfoundlanders. It is not increasing to any appreciable extent the purchasing power of the people of Newfoundland. This work is being done by a mainland contractor, and most of that money is going to benefit people on the mainland. I doubt if more than 20 per cent to 25 per cent of it is going into the pockets of the people of my province to increase their purchasing power.

If we take out this special amount for St John's, which as I said is not an important factor in the priming of our economic pump, then the average amount of money spent on public works per year by this government works out at a little under $3 million as compared with $4 million under the Liberal government from the years 1954-1955 to 1956-1957.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it not correct that the official figures for 1952 to 1956 are $27,320,000 and for 1957 to 1961, $75,258,000 for expenditures on public works? This does not include housing, but is the amount that we have in our estimates.

Mr. Carter: These are not the estimates You included 1952 to 1956, and you compared 1952-56—

Mr. Walker: It is 1952-53 to 1956-57, $27,-320,000, and 1957-58 to 1961-62, $75,258,000 which was spent in Newfoundland on public works.

Mr. Carter: I don't know whether the minister's figures are correct or not.

Mr. Walker: I take them from the estimates.

Mr. Carter: I also took the figures from the estimates, and if you want a breakdown I have plenty of time to put it on the record or, if the house will permit me, I shall table it. However, if you go back to 1952-56 why don't you go back to 1867?

Mr. Walker: You were not in confederation at that time.

Mr. Carter: The figures I am referring to are the figures in the minister's estimates relating to public buildings and harbour improvements, and I am sure the $75 million which the minister has mentioned does not relate solely to public buildings and harbour improvements. He is probably taking the moneys spent on public highways and on the trans-Canada highway, and when he replies I would like him to give a detailed account. I am talking about the two items under the direct control of the minister's department, the money spent on public buildings and on harbour improvements. I know there are also moneys spent on operations, maintenance, dredging and other things.

Mr. Walker: You are quite right. I have included all public works including our contributions to the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Carter: There was no trans-Canada highway in 1867 or 1949.

Mr. Walker: But there was in 1952-56.

Mr. Carter: There were very good reasons why that money could not be spent.

Mr. Bourget: Tell him the public works program was planned by the Liberal government, including the St. John's harbour and the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, and it was shelved.

Mr. Bourget: You were not shelved.

Mr. Walker: You had better stick to Levis.

The Deputy Chairman: I am hearing several speakers at the same time, and I think we should allow the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to speak for himself, which he can do very well as we all know.

Mr. Carter: Yesterday the minister mentioned the winter works program dealing with post offices, but there has not been very much money included in his estimates for that kind of work in my province. There was only $156,000 in 1960-61, $205,000 in 1961-62 and I think $180,000 for the coming fiscal year. That is a cause of complaint in my province, as we have certainly as great a need as any other province. The minister did not make it clear whether this winter works program constituted a change in policy. We have been trying to get post offices built in many communities, but the projects have been turned down because the community revenues do not warrant them. I think we should change that policy and make our decisions not on the basis of revenue but on the basis of need of the number of people to be served, and particularly on the need to create employment in provinces which economically are lagging behind.

The work on St. John's harbour will soon be completed, and the minister tells us he is looking around for new projects. That being so I suggest to him that he give consideration to building a transshipment port in Newfoundland. There is a good site for such a port at Mortier bay. I believe it has been refered to in the MacPherson report on transportation, and I know the western grain shippers are interested in linking up shipping facilities at Mortier bay with the shipping facilities in Fort Churchill. This could be of great benefit both to Newfoundland and the western farmers in allowing them to ship their wheat more cheaply, and I would ask the minister to give consideration to the project.

I want to thank the minister for the increase this year in the harbours vote. It is $7.2 million as compared with $6.6 million last year, and when we make the deduction for the special project at St. John's harbour that works out to about $2.9 million for the rest of Newfoundland as compared with $1.8 million last year. There is only one disappointment in this so far as I am concerned, and that is that the minister has not seen fit to include anything in the estimates for the settlement of Seal Cove. I have requested this for the last four years, and in 1958 the minister's predecessor said he hoped something would be done within the following year. Correspondence which I had with his predecessor and himself went so far as to say that $90,000 would be listed for consideration in the 1960-61 estimates, but we are now dealing with the 1962-63 estimates and there is still no appropriation for this community.

There must be some misunderstanding about it, because this is a very urgent need. This little community of 600 or 700 people is completely isolated during the winter. If they need the services of a doctor or want to bring in food supplies their only communication is by sea, and they have no decent harbour whatsoever. Not only that, the economy of the community depends on the fishery, and without a harbour they cannot engage in fishing. When I was there last fall there was a provincial bulldozer in the place and, through the co-operation of the district engineer at St. John's, I made arrangements to have the bulldozer scoop out the sand in the harbour. This meant that 30 fishermen were able to do some fishing whenever the weather permitted last fall, but that was too late in the year.

We had a debate on forestry a couple of days ago, and we were told the trend now is toward more mechanization in the woods. Therefore the alternative employment which this community has in the forests is going to disappear, and there will be less and less work for fewer people. This leaves them with the fishery. In any event, there are many people in that community who are now too old to go into the woods, and they must have some other form of livelihood apart from relief. This is an urgent matter, and I would not be raising it if I did not think it was urgent. I hope the minister will find time to consider it and include some appropriation in the supplementary estimates for this community.

There are just two other matters I want to refer to, and one of these is dredging. I am very glad to see that $594,000 has been appropriated for dredging in Newfoundland. That is a large item compared with other provinces, but it is still small in relation to the need because we have so many harbours that have not been dredged for 50 or 60 years.

The $560,000 for new equipment pleases me very much. I hope the minister will tell the committee when he replies just what equipment is going to be purchased with this sum. It does not seem large enough to buy the big, heavy suction dredge that is so badly needed. I have a situation in my riding, in the town of St. Lawrence, where they have been waiting now for five years for the harbour to be dredged out. This work has been postponed year after year in the hope that we can obtain the services of the suction dredge employed in Nova Scotia, but so far we have not been successful. In the meantime this situation is getting worse and worse with every passing week. Therefore there is a great need for a heavy suction dredge to be assigned to Newfoundland, which with Labrador has a tremendous coast line; we have 1,300 coastal harbours to be serviced.

In addition to this need for heavy dredging equipment, we have a need for shallow dredging equipment. I have urged this year after year, but the government seems to prefer to have this work done by private dredging firms. However, the fact is that there are not enough of these firms to do the work that requires to be done. This is not expensive equipment. We have so many small harbours where ordinary dredges cannot enter and operate, and perhaps there is a greater need for this type of equipment in Newfoundland than elsewhere. I ask the minister to keep this in mind.

The only other comment I wish to make is in connection with the miscellaneous vote. I was very happy when I looked at it and saw the amount to be voted was $2.4 million, but when I looked more closely I discovered that only $1,250,000 of this amount was going to be allocated for harbour improvement. That really is not enough in view of the drain on this vote which will be caused by projects that will cost up to $15,000 without treasury approval and can go as high as $25,000 with treasury approval. The amount is only $1,125,000 for the whole of Canada. Newfoundland's share of that is not going to be very much, and it will certainly all be used up on about a dozen projects costing $15,000 to $25,000. We are now reaching the point when we have a greater need for these small works, so I do hope the minister will give prompt consideration to increasing the amount of this vote.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the committee for listening to me so patiently, and once more I would pay tribute to the minister and his staff in Ottawa for the co-operation they have extended in the past. I hope the same degree of co-operation will be forthcoming with respect to the few items that I have drawn to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, in answer to my hon. friend's question about the miscellaneous vote of $1,125,000 for Canada, of this amount more than one third is being spent in Newfoundland; the actual amount is $376,000. Is that enough?

Mr. Carter: I am not complaining on behalf of Newfoundland; what I am saying is that the vote for the whole of Canada is not enough. The $376,000 represents only a small share for Newfoundland if you divide that amount among the seven ridings, because you only have $50,000 per riding; and with a project cost of $15,000 to $25,000 you can only finance three or four works in each riding, whereas there are perhaps 30 or 40 projects which need to be taken care of and can only be taken care of out of this vote.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to thank the minister for his courteous attention to any problem related to my constituency which I have brought to his notice. I must say that he has given every case careful consideration, whether the result has been positive or negative. I extend the same appreciation to the deputy minister, the senior officials in Ottawa, the district officials and the local officials of his department.

As I have said before, this is a rather unusual department as far as I am concerned. I can say this because I have lived in very close relationship with the public works of Canada for over 56 years. When you live in the wilderness you do depend on them to put in a few dolphins or something of that nature to prevent you being shipwrecked, and so on.

I have inquired around over the years and have noticed there has been a steady improvement in the administration of this department since the reorganization into divisions some years ago. I was distinctly under the impression prior to the 1950's that the department was, in the first place, carrying too heavy a load for the staff and organization, and was trying to carry on in ways that were only suitable for a much smaller amount of work and responsibility. I think there has been a steady improvement in the administration. One division which has improved a great deal has been the property division and the placing of responsibility upon certain people's shoulders for the administration of buildings, and so on.

However, I have a few suggestions. I make them not in a critical spirit, but I place them before the minister in a co-operative mood, shall I say. I notice that the minister, the deputy minister and some of the senior officials of the department have visited the larger centres in Canada. I can only speak from my experience in British Columbia, but they have visited only the district offices in the main. I go into the district office, which is in Vancouver—I have known some of those chaps for a good many years—and I find that the minister and deputy minister have been to Vancouver and possibly up the coast in connection with reviewing the work of the branch. I might mention that I have a complaint in this regard. The British Columbia district office is known as the Vancouver district office. That is far too limited a connotation; it should be known as the British Columbia region of the Department of Public Works of Canada.

I do suggest that the minister, the deputy minister and the senior officials, particularly under the present circumstances, should stray rather further afield. They should personally and more frequently visit some of these districts where problems are developing. I have particular reference to, say, the Arrow lakes region. I am sure the minister has heard of the treaty known as the Columbia river treaty. If unfortunately the provisions of that treaty were carried out as they are written at the present time it would have a most unfortunate impact upon the property of the public works of Canada for a distance of 145 miles on the Arrow lakes. It would mean the destruction of 20 docks and innumerable dolphins and other facilities which, if that situation did develop, would have to be replaced.

I think the problem is of such magnitude that the senior officials of this department should be giving it consideration so they may have the answers. I am quite sure that at the present time there is no firm estimate on the part of the Department of Public Works as to what it would cost to replace these facilities. And do not forget this; these would be replaced at ten times the cost of the present docks and wharfs and landing facilities because of the great variation of water levels and the longer docks that would be required.

I should like to bring another matter to the attention of the minister. This department has been spending money on the upper Duncan river for 20 years, but a senior official has never visited the Duncan river to study the problem there for himself. I do not think it is fair to local officials that these decisions should be left entirely to them. It is a heavy responsibility at times. It is the same on the lower Duncan. There has been some $5,000 a year spent there for years, and to good effect, but there are problems arising with respect to other developments in that area and I suggest the situation is one which should be considered by the deputy minister and the senior engineers.

To illustrate this, I would refer to the Trail river wall situation. The people of the district appreciate very much the government grant of 37½ per cent of the cost of the reconstruction of the Trail river wall. But this is an important project, a project of such a type in relation to other developments on the river that I think the deputy minister or senior officials should pay very close attention to it and not leave the responsibilty entirely to one engineer. There are serious problems with respect to foundations and so on which were not anticipated in the first estimate, and others will develop as time goes on.

Another problem is the question of the pollution of the Kootenay and Columbia rivers. I will deal with that matter later, but this is a problem that will have to be faced in the years ahead, and I think it is a problem which should be on the agenda of the minister and his senior officials so they may have the background from personal knowledge, as a result of visiting this area, before they undertake any concrete action. I hope the minister will find it possible in between his engagements on television to visit the Kootenay district. This remark applies equally to the deputy minister and some of the senior officials, because there are some growing problems which involve other departments.

Another suggestion I wish to make is this. I think there should be increasing co-operation among the various departments, namely the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Agriculture, because some of these things are directly related to the development of agriculture in the area. Once again I suggest that the local people in the district should be kept informed of what the department is doing.

I think this should be undertaken in two ways. I think there should be authorized press releases. It is amazing the amount of misinformation that can be given out as a result of speculation and rumour. I have even found men coming into the district expecting employment on a certain project because of false information which has been retailed in the press and elsewhere. I do think there is a place for factual information with respect to the work being undertaken by the department, and I think this is a necessary aspect of public relations. You would be surprised to know, Mr. Chairman, that although the government of Canada is contributing a certain percentage of the cost of certain projects, because of the lack of these periodic press releases containing factual information the public is not aware of the fact that the government of Canada is investing so much money in certain developments in co-operation with provincial and municipal authorities. I do suggest that this proposal of mine should be given further consideration.

Now I am going to repeat a suggestion which I think I have made on previous occasions, and one which I think is possible. In the first instance we should like the minister to come to the district and give us a television show or even address a public meeting and meet the local people. I want to thank the minister for a most enjoyable 30 minutes recently on the Toronto program which should be called "Financial Fantasy," I enjoyed it, and every time there was a close up of the minister's face I loved looking at that cherubic expression. My old landlady said "You know, that there old fellow couldn't do any wrong. He looks too innocent". Anyway, I do hope he gives consideration to this suggestion.

These are matters of importance to local communities. The people who live in larger centres such as Vancouver, Toronto, Peterborough and places like that are possibly not so greatly affected, but when you live in a district where there are a lot of small and isolated communities near which there is considerable expenditure of public funds by this department, it has an effect on the lives of the people in those communities. I do urge that even more consultation should take place between officials of the department and local organizations such as chambers of commerce, farmers' institutes and, in some cases, women's institutes; because you will find that in some cases the activities of the department are affecting a beach on which the women's institute has been spending money for years as a playground for the children of the district.

When contact is made with these and other groups it should be on the basis of calling on the executive, or on the committee. I am not one who believes in trotting around seeing one or two people, regardless of political opinions, who claim to represent the opinion of the community. Very often they represent only themselves. I realize there has been a tremendous improvement in recent years, but I think this co-operation should be developed further.

Now I come to my fourth suggestion, and that is that there should be more concern shown for casual or temporary employees. This is a most unusual use of the term, because a man may be a temporary employee after he has been working for the department for 30 years. As I say, more concern should be shown for the so-called casual or temporary employees. May I illustrate this by saying we have a dredge on the Arrow lakes known as Dredge Arrow Lakes which does this work of dredging, pile driving and things of that sort. There is a crew which has been on that dredge for many years. Some of these men have worked for the department for years and years. They are very capable. They understand the operation of the dredge. In a number of cases they have refused, shall I say, more profitable employment because they have been with the department for years, they like the work, and they have a sense of loyalty to the department, a certain esprit de corps. On occasions the work of this dredge is discontinued. It was discontinued in November of this year and the men were simply laid off without reason being given. I suggest we should retain this crew of good employees in these circumstances by an arrangement of the work done on certain projects and by timing so as to make it possible for them to continue doing some work, whether it is repairs on the wharves, river bank work or something else of that kind.

I do urge that further consideration be given to providing continuous employment for men who are in reality permanent employees of the department. I do not think it is good enough that they should be ditched at the beginning of November and told there will not be anything doing until the spring. There have been occasions when men were taken from other jobs to assist with certain projects, but I think those tasks could have been delayed and these men used for that purpose. The number involved is not large; the total is eight or ten at the most.

When the minister replies I wish some information with respect to the policy of the department concerning the design of public buildings. I believe we can arrive at a policy which provides in every respect for the functional and the beautiful. We have had no information to date which clearly outlines the department's policy with respect to the design of certain types of buildings, certain sizes of buildings, for certain types of sites, various communities and so on. I hope the minister will give us information in that respect before his estimates are completed.

The question of the trans-Canada highway has been raised. We are all pleased that the Rogers pass section of the highway will be opened some time this year. That will be a great achievement for the department and of great advantage to the people of Canada. Could the minister give us information concerning the latest dispatches from the front? In this connection I wish to direct attention to an article in the Revelstoke Review of February 15 which is not very enthusiastic about the hon. member for Kootenay West. The editor is a prominent Social Crediter; a nice chap but very misguided. I quote:

> Gunners fight glacier slides.
> Gunners of 2nd field regiment Royal Canadian Horse Artillery from Winnipeg, Manitoba, have had their busiest winter yet with their program of firing at potential avalanches in Glacier national park.
> The avalanche control program is a co-operative project of the Department of National Defence and the national parks branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources designed to reduce avalanche danger to a minimum in the Rogers pass area where the trans-Canada highway is in its last stages of construction. The highway is expected to open in the summer of 1962.
> The artillery detachment from the regular army use a 105-millimeter gun-howitzer and a 75 millimeter pack-howitzer to fire at specified potential avalanches. The gunfire either stabilizes the snow, or brings it down as a "controlled" avalanche.

It goes on to give the details of what was done in this respect. We would like a report from the minister concerning this interesting development. The minister is fortunate in having a former general as deputy minister. Years ago I had little love for generals, but I have since met one or two of whom I am very fond. The deputy minister, being a former general, should be in a position to give us the latest dispatches from the front and report on the success which this attack has achieved to date. I trust we will hear from him in this respect.

Mr. Pallett: The N.D.P. has a love of general confusion.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Herridge: I did not hear that interjection. We will soon be completing the trans-Canada highway. Others have mentioned the necessity of a second trans-Canada highway, and naturally most people support the route that would serve their district best. I am not parochial in my attitude. I always support the point of view which I think is of advantage to Canada. The hon. member for Cariboo may want the second highway to go beside his ranch. I do not go along with that point of view.

I suggest that the southern transprovincial highway in British Columbia should be a portion of the second trans-Canada highway for several sound reasons. First of all there is the population in the southern part of the province. There is also the production of the area and the tax revenues. Also it is an all weather route. I shall not speak at great length on the subject at this time. However, it is time the government gave consideration to the second trans-Canada highway. While it is doing so I trust the minister will give consideration to the many arguments that have been advanced with respect to the southern transprovincial highway in British Columbia being a part of the second trans-Canada highway.

There is another problem to which consideration should be given. Under the minister's jurisdiction there is the beneficent legislation with respect to grants to municipalities for the construction of sewage disposal plants, etc. We will have to broaden the base of this excellent legislation if we are to meet successfully the increasing problem of the pollution of our rivers and lakes across the country.

This provides a tremendous opportunity for co-operation among the federal, provincial and municipal authorities. I hope the co-operation is of such a nature that the results will be evident. It should be a co-operation which people can understand and in which they may participate in spirit. There is a growing problem on the Kootenay and the Columbia rivers caused by the increasing population. No individual industry or community is directly involved, and the problem has increased in recent years because of growing industrial development and the expanding population. The department will have to consider introducing legislation and improving existing measures to remedy the situation while it still can be remedied.

We have sewage disposal from the city of Nelson going into the Kootenay river. We have industrial waste and other limited disposal of wastes. There is industrial waste going into the river in East Kootenay. I hope my friend the hon. member for Kootenay

East is not aroused by my comments. All this waste is going into the Kootenay river. The municipalities are unable to meet the problem unaided because they lack the financial resources. I urge the department to give consideration to a study of the pollution problem on the Kootenay and Columbia rivers. Action cannot be taken without knowledge and facts. Then an effort should be made to interest the provincial government and local authorities. As a result of the co-operation among the three levels of government a solution to the problem must be found before it becomes more serious.

In connection with this problem I was interested to read in a recent issue of the Ottawa Citizen—the one containing a sketch of our recent leader—an editorial dealing with this subject:

A full-scale attack on water pollution.

This country is far from coming really to grips with the problem of pollution of its waters. Isolated steps have been taken, all of a commendable nature, but there is yet no vigorous and comprehensive national policy.

I am in complete agreement with that editorial statement.

The international joint commission has to its credit a co-operative program of several years' standing in restoring and maintaining the purity, as far as possible, of streams on both sides of the international boundary in the great lakes region.

I know from reading reports and sitting on committees of this house that the commission has done an excellent job with the co-operation of industry and municipalities in the area. I see that the hon. member for Essex East is listening to my remarks with great attention.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I always like to listen to the hon. member, even when in error.

Mr. Herridge: We have the same approach in that respect. I continue:

The federal government can point to its inducements to municipalities to build sewage treatment and disposal plants; this is a constructive step and represents one of the best things the present government has done in any field.

Yet much more needs to be done. The Ottawa river is still in a disgraceful condition. This has been pointed out many times but never more forcefully or with more detailed documentation than by Mr. Gustave Prevost, chairman of the recently published Quebec water purification board, in a paper prepared for the resources for tomorrow conference last fall.

The latest body to express concern about pollution of water—and in the air and on land as well—is the health officers of British Columbia, in an appearance before the royal commission on health services.

I bring this to the attention of the minister.

The health officers submit that Canadian municipalities—and perhaps even provinces—are unable to cope with the problem, and that it should be attacked on a national scale.

In the commons recently a private bill introduced by H. W. Herridge of Kootenay West to levy heavy penalties on industrial firms polluting interprovincial waters met the usual fate of such bills and was talked out.

Even though the Prime Minister had introduced a similar bill in 1955.

Everyone who spoke was as much opposed to pollution as to sin, but no one seemed ready to do anything.

The government itself appears content for the time being to rest on its far from adequate anti-pollution measure which is hoped will result in the construction of more municipal sewage disposal systems. If the measure is effective, well and good, but the industrial wastes aspect will still remain. It is doubtful whether the mere imposition of penalties is going to bring desired results.

I do urge that serious consideration be given to having a study made of the major problems with respect to water pollution across Canada with a view to approaching the provincial and municipal governments for joint action by all governments so that this very dangerous situation which will face us in the years ahead can be corrected. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, once again here is a problem that requires local participation, in that you have to have local understanding of the problem and local support for the solving of it so that municipalities and other governing bodies will receive support for any taxation measures they wish to introduce to meet the cost of these very desirable works.

That is all I have to say at the present time on item No. 1. I have a few remarks to make with respect to particular items when they come before the house, but I shall now resume my seat.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks on item No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. Inasmuch as the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre is in the middle of the city of Winnipeg, it is not favoured with too many public works projects, but I should like to thank the Minister of Public Works for the construction of a fine building last year which now houses the unemployment insurance commission. Although there were some difficulties with regard to the provision of public facilities, I understand that these have now been overcome.

I do not think there is anything in the estimates for the forthcoming year for the construction of further public buildings in my constituency, although there is some hope that sooner or later we may perhaps get a post office building constructed in the Weston section. However, I should like to thank the minister and the federal government for the announcement made last fall with regard to slum clearance in the city of Winnipeg, and in particular in my constituency. This is something that has been talked about by my predecessors in the house for the past 16 to 20 years, but nothing was ever done about it.

The fact of the matter simply is that in October of last year the federal government announced a plan to participate in a slum clearance project in Winnipeg North Centre in the amount of approximately $4 million. As I say, this is a major step forward, because in Winnipeg North Centre we have some areas that certainly deserve such treatment. I understand that the project itself still has not been approved by the provincial legislature, and so far there is no agreement between the city of Winnipeg and the province which would enable the minister to tell the house when a start can be made on the project.

I should also like to ask the minister if anything further has been done with relation to slum clearance in the area just south of the C.P.R. tracks and west of Main street. In the planning stage this was to have been the No. 1 project in slum clearance, but for some reason or other it has now become the No. 2 project. I should also like the minister to tell me, if he can, just how far negotiations have proceeded on this aspect of the matter.

I should also like to make one further point having to do with housing for our senior citizens. When we are dealing with such housing it is necessary now to go through the National Housing Act and pick out the applicable sections. I might say that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has done a good deal in this regard. In the city of Winnipeg many C.M.H.C. projects have been constructed which have certainly served the needs of some of our senior citizens. But the fact still remains that there is a need of accommodation for single old age pensioners, particularly for those who are just barely existing on the old age pension and have no other assets or alternative income. The C.M.H.C. projects already constructed for the benefit of senior citizens make provision for married couples and only those couples who are able to pay rent, which sometimes takes all their old age pension cheque.

I have in mind consideration of that type of construction known as hostel type accommodation. The minister is familiar with this. He has received representations from myself and other members from the city of Winnipeg with regard to the project undertaken by the aged and opportunity bureau in the city of Winnipeg two years ago. There is a crying need for it in my constituency because it contains a large low rental rooming house area where senior citizens who are single and have no relatives, exist, and I do mean exist.

The government has seen fit to do more for the old people of our country by way of old age pensions than any other government in our history, and I submit that it is time we took a look at housing for our senior citizens on a separate level entirely. Perhaps there should be a separate act with regard to housing for senior citizens, or if not a separate act there should certainly be a section in the National Housing Act dealing solely with the provision of housing for our senior citizens.

The hostel type of accommodation would fulfil a dire need, and when the minister replies I would ask him to advise me with regard to anything that has been done in the way of setting up, either under C.M.H.C. or in his department, a division to deal with this subject. I conclude by commending the minister and the government again for their direct attention after assuming power to the matter of slum clearance in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, I rise this morning to participate very briefly in the debate on a subject that interests a great many members of the house no matter on which side they sit, and I refer to the question of housing. I was interested in the minister's speech yesterday. I watched him as he began, and he seemed to be flushed by the effect of the rather heady wine of the personal praise of the Prime Minister—

Mr. Walker: My speech had not arrived.

Mr. Garland: —for his recent television extravaganza. The minister made yet another presentation to the house yesterday and, as he knows, I listened very carefully. In fact I have read his speech this morning. I believe this is an attempt to create a new image of him as a sort of great producer, now. I hope perhaps to show that this is a new interest, a new flair.

I have marked a few things in his speech upon which I should like to comment. According to page 1374 of Hansard, the minister referred in very glowing terms to the impact of house building and related industries on the national economy. He said that it had been revealed in all its sharpness and clarity by the giant forward steps taken, and so on.

I hope to be able to show that this was a period of feast or famine in the house building industry.

Further down on the same page I find the minister used a new term which sounds very well. He said:

—woven into the whole fabric of housing, bright and chromatic in its colours—

I thought perhaps yesterday I had misunderstood his language, and when he said "chromatic" I thought he said "aromatic". I think that would be a little more appropriate according to some assessments of the situation. In another sentence the minister makes reference to the lower income families in a very complimentary way so far as the government is concerned. Yet I think it can be shown that last year some 92 per cent of the people who borrowed under N.H.A. were earning more than $80 per week, which is more than the national average. I believe this statement in itself is an answer to the government's extravagant claims.

In the next sentence I find another term the minister used "most vividly impart to hon. members something of the drama of housing in Canada..." The drama of housing interests me. Here the minister shows he is not satisfied with just being an actor on T.V., as I said a moment ago; he now wants to be the producer. Another item that attracted my attention was his reference, on the following page, to the 2.5 million Canadians who now have new homes as the result of the present government's action. Well, that points up the 16 million Canadians who have houses that they acquired under more favourable interest rates and costs under the previous administrations.

I was rather intrigued by his reference further along to the unoccupied houses. The minister referred to 36 major Canadian urban centres in which there were 4,223 unoccupied houses. I know the minister's regard for figures, an interest that he displayed the other evening on television. Those figures used by the minister refer to the situation as of December 31, 1961. I should like to point to an article appearing in the Montreal Gazette just ten weeks earlier, which stated that there were 1,600 C.M.H.C. homes and 10,000 private units vacant in that area alone.

Without making any further comment, I just wanted to refer to that situation. Again, further down I find this:

> —it has been necessary at the same time to maintain the lowest possible interest rate so that borrowers do not find themselves confronted by unnecessarily excessive costs for the money they have obtained.

Well, now, that is a strange observation. I should like to do something I have never done before, and that is refer to something I said in this house on an earlier occasion. I am going back to June 15 of last year, and I quote from page 6382 of Hansard:

> As I mentioned earlier, today's main deterrent is not the scarcity of mortgage funds but rather the high cost of mortgage funds. In an earlier debate I dealt in some detail with this 6¾ per cent N.H.A. rate. Suffice it to say today that a person buying a $15,000 home over a 35 year period will pay $22,476 in interest.

How any one can associate that with keeping interest rates down so that borrowers will not find themselves confronted by unnecessary excessive costs for money, is indeed difficult to understand.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the one point that really struck me was the minister's reluctance to make a forecast of the situation for the present year. I suppose he has his reasons. I can think back to 1960, when a forecast was made by the then minister of trade and commerce to the effect that there would be 140,000 new homes in 1960. As we know, unfortunately the year ended with only 108,000 new homes started. The minister went on to use another phrase that interested me. He said there were too many imponderables. I thought to myself, what an accurate assessment of the fickle whims and fancies of some of his government colleagues.

The minister ended his speech on a very high note, and I think that reflects his broadening interest resulting from his travels. He referred to his travels in Europe and southeast Asia. As I say, he closed that section of his remarks yesterday on a very high plane indeed, for which we are all glad because, like most members of the house, I like the minister. We like him personally, and I certainly have received nothing but the best co-operation from his department, from his officials and from the minister himself. I sometimes feel a little bit sorry that he inherited the situation he did from his predecessor, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I should like to begin now, Mr. Chairman, where I left off in this house last June. Having regard for the requirements of the next decade, which I am sure will demand more and more of our attention and resources, and having in mind the social and economic ramifications of such a great program, I suggested that future governments might well give consideration to giving separate cabinet status to this important area of government responsibility. In this way the housing needs of our people and the economic influences resulting from an adequate program would be assured a strong voice in government, and would not be left to another division tagged on to another department as it is at the present time.

Now, I know the minister would like, especially if this is to be an election year, to have the public believe that all is well in housing under this newly developed Progressive Conservative socialist regime. The minister, encouraged by the Prime Minister, never misses an opportunity to make extravagant claims and try to create the impression that the Tories rescued the house building industry.

What are the facts? In the past two years under this minister housing starts totalled 234,000, while in 1955-56, the last two years of Liberal administration, housing starts totalled 265,000. These are the facts, 32,000 fewer starts in the last two years under the Diefenbaker government. Yet, from the Prime Minister down, all government supporters have said during the past four years, from every platform where an audience could be found, that housing under the Liberal administration was at a standstill. If that be a proper description, then housing under the Tories in 1960-61 could be described as at a standstill minus 32,000.

Yesterday we had the minister pointing, as he has every right to do, to the employment resulting from housing, but on that basis there is a difference here of 80,000 fewer jobs. What better example could we find of a government misjudging the situation than to have housing, which is admittedly a good work providing program, grinding to its lowest ebb during 1960-61 when at one point over 700,000 of our people were looking for work? No amount of campaigning or campaign literature will ever get this government off the hook for such a blunder and miscalculation.

Let us examine the record further. First there was a frantic overstimulation of the house building industry by a nervous, inexperienced government, building the wrong houses in many cases for the wrong people in the wrong areas, a situation brought to the nation's attention by a prominent Canadian banker, Mr. Ashforth. This period, under the minister's predecessor, the present minister of external affairs, was described as a Tory housing binge; but following the binge comes the sobering up period, and that was handed over to the present minister which brought us to the greatest period of slack in house building, 108,000 starts in 1960, which served to aggravate the unemployment situation of 1960-61, the period of highest unemployment in our history.

Throughout this whole affair the ministry jointly must take the blame. We cannot accuse the Minister of Public Works of being solely responsible for this, not by any stretch of the imagination. The ministry talked and travelled and doodled. I just got the dictionary off the table a few minutes ago, Mr. Chairman, and I think "doodling" is the best description we can have. It says "an aimless scrawl while one's attention is engaged elsewhere," and I think this word is properly applicable to the ministry.

Under this government the period to which I have referred in the housing field has been one of the highest interest rates since the N.H.A. has been in effect. It has been a period of turning on and turning off the tap on mortgage funds. It has been a period of overstimulation of the house building industry, which resulted in higher costs through many inefficient would-be builders being artificially encouraged, and it has been a period of overpricing of land to keep pace with the overstimulation of the industry. It has also led to periods of slowdown. Without detracting from the number of houses built by this government during that period, may I say that in general it has been a period of high costs and uncertainty, a situation for which the government must take its full share of the blame.

I have one further observation to make of interest to Canadians. In their attempts to administer during this period, these self-styled champions of free enterprise in four years, have had to use approximately $1,500 million to support their on again off again housing program; while the former Liberal administration in an earlier period of greater economic buoyancy, with an extra drain on funds, was able to build a comparable number of houses and used only $100 million of public funds. Do you get the picture, Mr. Chairman; $1,500 million by the Tories and $100 million by the Liberals? What an example of Tory free enterprise.

Now, let us examine the present situation. After the war many small homes were built of the two bedroom style, but today the family which occupied one of these has grown and more space is required. The need for larger quarters is very real in thousands of cases across the country. The occupant of one of these homes is a prospective house buyer, but he is discouraged or unable to build or buy for several reasons which I would like to refer to briefly.

First of all, he is unable to get his equity out of the original house. Hence the need for extending N.H.A. lending facilities to assist him, and this is something we have been talking about on this side of the house for the past three years. There is another factor, and probably equally important, in that he is only paying 4.5 per cent or 5 per cent on his existing N.H.A. mortgage entered into during the days of Liberal administration. He is naturally reluctant to increase the size of the mortgage which under this administration would mean paying an increased charge of 6.5 per cent. In the back of his mind he knows that the present high interest rates are not necessarily permanent, and that is another factor. He remembers the lower interest rates of earlier days when the economy was buoyant and competition for funds was keen.

There is a further reason, and I believe a very real one. It is his lack of confidence and reluctance to take on added financial responsibility in view of this government's record of failure to keep the economy rolling. We have seen a period of retrenchment, a recession, a slackening in job opportunities under this administration, and this is a matter of real concern to the prospective buyer when he is considering taking on new responsibilities. This government, despite increased spending and increased taxation, has not faced up to the unemployment problem, a problem which is worse in this rich young land than in any industrial nation in the free world. It is little wonder then that the prospective home buyer, despite his need for larger accommodation, is reluctant at the present time to take on added financial obligations.

The current year, 1962, without further encouragement may well be a year no better in terms of housing starts than 1961, which could be considered good only by comparison with the standstill year of 1960. We were naturally pleased by the government's effort to encourage the establishment of a secondary market for mortgages. The minister knows our feelings on this subject. For three years we have talked and argued about them in this house, and for the success they have had we are glad. If my memory serves me right something like $41 million worth have been sold. This is a small amount when we consider the amounts that are available, but when one considers the problem of disposing of mortgages at lower interest rates than those that have been disposed of, then one can have a fuller appreciation of the problem. Having taken this first little timorous step I think it is now time to give consideration to our second recommendation that envisages participation by small investors. This is something that we have talked about for a long time. I think it would have a very real effect in reaching the objectives that are so desirable.

We also noted with interest the reduction of one quarter of one per cent in the N.H.A. interest rate last fall. The minister knows our opposition to high interest rates and to the folly of his government's policies that led them to high interest rates, so he will understand me when I say that in regard to this one quarter of one per cent reduction, if ever the term "too little, too late" applied, it is here.

Last year saw another unfortunate development as a result of this government's policies and action. I refer to the Ontario sales tax. The committee will remember the scene at Massey hall, where our Prime Minister and the premier of Ontario stood arm in arm. The Prime Minister was introduced as the man who was going to give Ontario its just dues. When we look back to see what he has given Ontario; he has given that province a do it yourself kit. Now Mr. Frost has gone, but the sales tax remains and is adding to the cost of housing every day.

I should now like to make a few suggestions, if I may.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I was just going to point out that the hon. gentleman was straying momentarily from the subject matter before the committee in the sales tax part of his address.

Mr. Garland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just about to make some suggestions. I make them without in any way trying to minimize or detract from the efforts of the government. I think the first matter that should be given consideration—I referred to it earlier—is the extension of National Housing Act lending facilities to older homes. I have referred to homes that have been bought relatively recently, but I am now thinking of those thousands of older homes—I have referred already to this matter and I apologize to the committee for referring to it again, but I think it is important enough to bear repetition—occupied across this country by elderly couples whose families have grown up and left. This is a great waste of housing accommodation. These people would be very anxious to dispose of their large homes and purchase something more in keeping with their present requirements. The problem, of course, is to finance the sale of these homes. I think there is room for great improvement in this field by the extension of lending facilities to older homes such as now exist for the construction of new homes. The present situation means a lack of sales and, the longer we wait, a lack of jobs.

I also suggest that the government give consideration to granting a rebate of the sales tax on house building materials used during the winter months. We not only have a problem of extremes in the financing situation in this country—the scarcity of funds and periods of plenty—but we also have extremes as far as the weather is concerned. I think anything that recognizes and helps to solve this problem would be useful.

I also return to another old complaint of this party. I refer to reducing or removing the 2 per cent premium which has been stubbornly clung to by the government to insure its own mortgages. This fund must be nearing $80 million. I think it was $72 million last year, and it would be about $80 million now. If that is not correct I am sure the minister will correct me. This may have been a necessary precaution in the beginning, but all it is now doing is adding about $300 to the cost of the average home.

Of course I should not let the opportunity pass without a plea for lower interest rates.

The minister knows our views on this subject, and I am not going to delay the committee by repeating them now. At least we are consistent in this complaint; I am sure the minister would agree with that. I would refer the minister, for spare time reading, to the pages and pages of Hansard when his colleague the present Minister of Finance was on this side of the chamber, and to the outbursts from him to which we used to listen when there was an increase of perhaps only a quarter of one per cent. I remember that on one occasion the increase was one quarter of one per cent.

I should now like to say a few words about urban redevelopment and our hard pressed municipalities. The Canadian problem is not only to clear up slum areas, but as I see it it is also to prevent slums developing whenever possible. This calls for more planning, more land assembly, more municipal planning, more technical assistance. Here I return to where I began. This is the sort of thing that could be carried out even better with the full attention of a ministry of housing. This is a tremendous problem and as such it is a great challenge, especially against the background of the financial need of our municipalities.

I should like to refer to some public financing statistics published by the dominion bureau of statistics, which point out that in 1960 the municipalities incurred a net deficit of more than double the 1956 level; in 1956 the defiicit was $295 million and in 1960 it was $506 million.

The federal government contributes to the cost of blight areas only if the land is used for housing development. Often, however, a good, sound renewal project requires other kinds of development. A new Liberal approach would be to contribute to the cost of clearing land for any appropriate use and would include sharing the cost of renewing and improving basic services such as water, sewers and streets in the development areas.

The Liberal policy for municipal development would operate as part of a national development program. For the last four years the Liberal party has recommended the establishment of a municipal loan fund. This fund would be organized in consultation with provincial and municipal representatives. It would not conflict with existing sources of capital, and it would provide loans for sound municipal improvements of which the provincial governments approve but for which capital is unobtainable on reasonable terms from existing Canadian sources. These loans would create new jobs all across Canada.

To sum up, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the Liberal approach in this municipal loan fund program, in co-operation with the provinces, would provide money for municipal services and would do a great deal for housing in this country. We would increase the federal government's contribution to slum clearance; we would broaden the federal government's contribution to all kinds of urban renewal costs; we would provide special aid to municipalities and distressed areas; we would provide capital for rural redevelopment plans, and in co-operation with the provinces we would increase the construction of low rental homes.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief, the more so as their implications are of a more local nature.

As the representative of a rural constituency, I want to point out that, sometimes, people living in those ridings are sorry that circumstances do not enable the Department of Public Works to be as generous with them as it can be with the large centres. Nonetheless, the people living in rural constituencies have an equal right to generous treatment by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker). That is why I would like to deal with one particular point, and I think that the minister will see the need for amending some regulations now in force in the Department of Public Works.

First of all, I should point out that before 1956 the outgoing members of parliament—I refer of course to those on the government side—always came to their constituents with some election bait which took the form of retaining walls.

Thus, in my own riding, which is on the banks of the St. Lawrence river, it was possible to identify the residence of a supporter of the government candidate by the retaining wall behind his property, with the result that at certain times the river banks looked like a toothless comb because at some places there were retaining walls while in other spots, there were none.

I think there has been a lot of abuse in that field in the past, and I submit that the Department of Public Works is justified in laying down and enforcing regulations, but those regulations should also be interpreted according to circumstances.

In that same line, I want to ask the Minister of Public Works to consider a project which is very dear to me. The most important centre of the constituency I represent in this house is the town of Montmagny, which is on the St. Lawrence.

Like all Canadian cities, Montmagny wants to expand, to progress, to have its citizens benefit from the same advantages enjoyed by other Canadians, that is to say, find more healthy housing and have the advantage of buying houses slightly off city limits.

The most logical place for the development of Montmagny is of course towards the river, for several reasons. First, on account of the possible sewer and water system facilities and especially—and that is the main point, in my opinion—because a residential development along the river, like around a lake, has much more value than inside land.

Now, in the town of Montmagny, on the St. Lawrence side, a vast territory is now developing. The lots have all been subdivided, and there are certainly 200 of them. Many are those who are interested in buying those lots to build a home, but a regulation of the Department of Public Works prohibits the building of a retaining wall at that place so that this project of several million dollars is now in abeyance, and will not be carried out until the Department of Public Works has agreed to spend about $20,000 on a small retaining wall to prevent the disintegration of the land and consequently to allow the people concerned to build houses on those lots.

Mr. Chairman, if we consider the generosity shown by the Department of Public Works to my predecessor, who was of course a member of the cabinet, I think the department should show at least the same generosity towards the people of my constituency.

I feel that circumstances must be taken into account when that regulation is enforced because in certain areas it does not apply since the erosion is not exclusively the result of navigation. Thus I was happy to find that, in the constituency of Levis where I was born and which is represented by my hon. friend the member for Levis (Mr. Bourget), a large retaining wall was built at St. Nicolas which certainly did cost at least $50,000.

That wall is built along the river in a bay. Navigation did not cause any or very little damage there in the past because there are in the area only small cottages valued at between $1,000 and $3,000. I went to see the owners of those cottages and 90 per cent told me they were not interested in that wall and did not want it. It was forced upon them even though they were incurring no damage whatever.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Fortin: Certainly.

Mr. Bourget: The hon. member just stated that a retaining wall was built at St. Nicolas and that the owners there did not want any. Did the hon. member really say that, because I do not want to put in his mouth words he did not say?

Mr. Fortin: Many owners did not want any; at least, that is what they told me.

Mr. Bourget: I must tell the hon. member that this wall was not erected under the Liberal administration, but rather under the present government. Moreover, the minister has on hand the requests from the property owners. Therefore, he can see that the minister did not show himself more generous to me than to others.

Mr. Fortin: It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget), who had told his constituents that they had obtained that wall thanks to his efforts, should have destroyed in a few words what little credit he had claimed.

Mr. Bourget: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: The hon. member for Levis can do so when I have completed my remarks.

Mr. Bourget: I think the rules allow a member to rise immediately when he is being credited with remarks he never made. I never went to St. Nicolas to say that it was as a result of my efforts. The member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) is wrong once more.

Mr. Fortin: I am happy to hear that. I know that he probably did not say that, and even if he had, he would probably have said something contrary to the truth because I am not sure that it is as a result of his work.

In any case, I want to point out to the Minister of Public Works that even if some riparian owners asked that the wall be erected, I still think it was not needed at that place. I am convinced that it was throwing money away.

As for me, I am asking today for something that will be to the economic benefit of the district I represent. As I said, I have here the plans of a housing development that may number up to 300 or 400 houses.

At the present time, nobody will buy property for fear of erosion. That being the case, I am asking the minister to relieve unemployment which, fortunately, is not too severe in my constituency. I am asking him to assist in that development by giving consideration to the construction of a retaining wall even where it is forbidden by the regulations.

I am asking that the regulations be given a broader interpretation, so that just to save approximately $20,000, a project worth two or three million dollars will not be blocked.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in answer to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet who asked the minister to have a retaining wall built in the district of Montmagny-L'Islet.

He also said that the previous administration had been generous to the former member for that riding, the then minister of northern affairs and natural resources, now premier of the province of Quebec. I believe that wall was justified since that part of the land in Montmagny-L'Islet is located along the river.

Mr. Fortin: Things have not changed.

Mr. Bourget: I should like to point out to the hon. member that I am not opposed to his request. Furthermore, if he would read my previous remarks in that respect he would find out that I wanted the minister to change the regulations, providing for the building of a retaining wall only when damage is due to erosion.

However, I find it odd that that retaining wall was refused the member for Montmagny-L'Islet while the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) had one built on a river not used for navigation, which means that there was no justification for it under the regulations. I am wondering how the member for Montmagny-L'Islet managed that. He let the member for St. Hyacinthe take advantage of his suggestions and have a wall built in a non-admissible area according to the regulations while he cannot get one himself for land located along the river.

(Text):

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, as much as I respect my hon. friend, we have not yet reached the item relating to harbours and rivers. We are still on item 1. I appreciate that my hon. friend is answering a question, but could we not proceed with item 1? Perhaps if everyone has spoken on item 1 we could proceed with the other items.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, since when are we not entitled as members of this committee to say what we wish to concerning these items? Never in the 22 years during which I have been a member of this house has a minister asked any member to refrain from speaking about the items in the blue book. I feel I am fully entitled to speak to this subject and I believe the point of order raised by the minister is not a real point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been the practice in the committee to consider the first vote of any department as a catch all item. Accordingly it is difficult to restrict the debate within narrow confines. I shall not rule that the hon. member is out of order in view of the past practice.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to add one or two words to my reply to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

(Translation):

I come back now to the matter of the construction of a retaining wall at St. Nicolas. As I was saying, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, who comes from Levis, knows the place very well. He knows that this part of the St. Lawrence river is the narrowest, the channel being only five or six hundred feet wide. Surely, if there is one place where the construction of a retaining wall is justified, it is at St. Nicolas.

Mr. Fortin: The waves do not even reach the land but stop at the beach; the hon. member should know that because we went swimming there together.

Mr. Bourget: I am not going to embark on a controversy with the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. But if he looks at the estimates for this year 1962-63, he will see another ground for my argument because there is a $70,000 item provided for the construction of a wall in a community of the Lotbiniere riding which, I think, is surely justified.

I certainly fail to see why the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet should say that the construction of a retaining wall at St. Nicolas is not justified.

That is all I had to say, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, since we are dealing with the estimates submitted by the Minister of Public Works, I shall take this opportunity to fulfil an obligation on behalf of the people I have the honour to represent here, that is to thank him and his staff for the generosity and kind attention bestowed upon me each time I have had to deal with any member of public works personnel.

Through the co-operation of the departmental staff and with the approval of the minister himself, federal buildings have been built in my district. To begin with, a building to house the various services was provided in St. Hyacinthe. Post offices were also built in two of the most beautiful villages in my constituency. And one should not forget to mention the great many retaining walls which were also erected.

As opposed to what was done in the past, our political friends were not the only ones to obtain retaining walls along their properties.

Through the length of the village of St. Denis, for instance, as well as at St. Charles, we have put up retaining walls along all properties regardless of the owners' party affiliation. This was not done in the past. Just three or four weeks ago, I was glad to hear that, in the village of St. Charles, the department intended to complete the job by erecting a wall at those places still unprotected.

Speaking of retaining walls, and since my hon. friend from Levis, the former parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Public Works, if I am not mistaken, has had his say in this matter, I myself should like to take a few minutes to refer in particular to the retaining wall at St. Joseph in Yamaska.

I must at once acknowledge the word of commendation extended to me by the hon. member for Levis for having obtained that which, he himself, backed by the minister whose parliamentary assistant he was, did not succeed in getting during the many years he held that post. But the whole truth of the matter must also come to light and the whole story should be told about what happened concerning this St. Joseph retaining wall.

The hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) must know or at least he should know that in 1939-40, a retaining wall was built near St. Hyacinthe to prevent the floods which used to cause damage in that city every year.

Under the act, there are two reasons for which a retaining wall may be erected: when erosion is caused by navigation or when it is due to the presence of a federal structure.

That is precisely what happened at St. Hyacinthe. The construction of a retaining wall on the city side resulted in the deviation of the Yamaska river thus causing erosion of the properties on the St. Joseph side.

The previous government never could understand the situation. That is why the present Conservative government whose characteristic it is to see things as they should be seen asked the Minister of Public Works to visit the site at my request.

I should like to say a few words also about the trans-Canada highway.

Anyone who is familiar with the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot is aware that my constituency and the surrounding district are known as the "garden of the province of Quebec".

Very few districts in the province have as good farm land as that area.

That is why when the Department of Public Works' estimates were under consideration last year, I called the public's attention to the fact that the provincial government, by the new route it was suggesting for the trans-Canada highway, was going to cut in half the finest farm land of my riding and of the whole province.

This point is most important if you consider that only 4½ per cent of the whole area of the province of Quebec is suitable for farming.

That is why—and also because farmers asked me to make representations on their behalf—I raised this matter last year as I am doing now. In so doing, I feel that I am fulfilling my obligation to look after the best interests of my constituents.

Our farmers in St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, more particularly in the parishes of La Presentation, St. Thomas d'Aquin, Ste. Rosalie, St. Simon and St. Hugues, have the best dairy herds not only in the area but, I would venture to say, in the whole province of Quebec.

I feel it is my duty, in view of the importance of agriculture, to bring the representations of my friends, the farmers, to the attention of whom they concern.

In October 1960, a quick survey had been made, but the present government of Quebec, more out of spite than for any other reason, I would say, decided to disregard all that had been done previously and to adopt a new system. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, the new route of the trans-Canada highway will not only force the people of St. Hyacinthe to travel an additional 15 miles to get to the heart of the city of Montreal, but it will cut the best land in my riding in two. I submit that, from the agricultural point of view, it is a shame to go through the best land of the province of Quebec in this way. So I am asking those who can bring common sense to that team now in Quebec—

Mr. Pigeon: The wonder team.

Mr. Ricard: —to exert all their influence to have that wonderful district of ours protected, for in a few years from now, I believe it will be very difficult to develop those farms, because they will be bisected.

Mr. Deschatelets: Ask for elevated highways over your lands.

Mr. Ricard: There are probably many other methods that the member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, who just made this interruption, probably does not understand, but which are nevertheless good.

Mr. Chairman, in order to show that I am not the only one to be conscious of that situation, I should like to read into Hansard a resolution passed by the municipal council of La Presentation, on December 4, 1961:

Whereas in St. Hyacinthe the opinion does not as yet justify the construction of the section of the trans-Canada highway and the completion of highway No. 9 with two lanes between the town of St. Hyacinthe and St. Hilaire.

Whereas the preliminary route of the highway affects about 20 of the best farms in the municipality of La Presentation since these farms would be completely disorganized as a result of the construction.

Whereas the municipality of La Presentation would be affected by a loss of value of such uneconomic farms.

Whereas our farmers need sufficient security and income to adequately practice their profession.

Be it moved by alderman Adrien Beauregard, seconded by alderman Philibert Poirier, and unanimously resolved that the municipal council of the parish of La Presentation supports the request of the taxpayers in connection with completion of highway No. 9.

That is the two lane highway between St. Hyacinthe and St. Hilaire.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the minister's attention some information which I received and which, is a cause of concern not only to myself, but to my fellow citizens as well.

With respect to the construction of the trans-Canada highway, in my constituency and in others through which the highway will run, so-called good patronage is at work. I understand that in the province of Quebec, there are two kinds of patronage: good patronage, that is the one practised by the "wonder team", and bad patronage, that is anything that does not come from the provincial government.

I made inquiries, and I shall prove in due course, with supporting evidence, that no one can work on the trans-Canada highway project without having his membership card with the Liberal association or without having been recommended in one way or another by the organizer of the Liberal party in the riding or parish concerned. I would ask the minister to look into the matter and see that the situation is corrected, because, Mr. Chairman, you will agree that it is not fitting that only a selected few be allowed to work on the trans-Canada highway. Recognition should be given here to the principle we followed for the construction of retaining walls and for other federal projects in St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. On those projects, we never showed any preference because of political affiliation, we always employed anyone who wanted or needed work and we always relied on the local unemployment insurance office for labour.

I feel it is my duty to draw this matter to attention once again. If the present proposed route in the parishes of St. Thomas d'Aquin, La Presentation, St. Charles and elsewhere is adhered to, an agricultural abomination will be committed and future generations will not easily forget it. As I said earlier, only 4½ per cent of the whole area of the province is suitable for farming and, considering the general industrialization which is taking place in Canada, legislators have a duty to ensure that every inch of farm land is preserved.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to challenge any of the assertions made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), but since, once again, he proved to be much less serious than we thought he was, it is my duty to set the facts in their proper light.

When the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot talks about patronage and pretends that membership cards are required before jobs can be obtained on the trans-Canada highway construction, well, I must say he is not serious. He is not serious, because if the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot had evidence of all this, he had the opportunity of stating his case in this house today. But he has been relaying the assertions of the leader of the opposition in the Quebec legislature, and let me tell him today that he may rest assured that the shameless patronage which so often used to take place under the Union Nationale is now a thing of the past in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Ricard: I have 20 affidavits or so to attest to what I have been saying.

Mr. Deschatelets: The hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) examined yesterday the items we are being asked to approve by the Minister of Public Works for 1962-63. That examination was made in the minister's presence and he did not in any way question the accuracy of the figures quoted by the official opposition critic for that department.

It is obvious from that analysis of the facts that the department is not taken seriously and that it does not play its part in the difficult situation we are in at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, those departmental estimates are being decreased at a time when over-all government expenditures have reached astronomical figures.

That examination has definitely shown that we now have a second government orphan. The Department of Labour was one and there is a second one now, the Department of Public Works. The first to suffer from this state of affairs are the thousands of Canadians who have been suffering from a shameful unemployment situation for the last four years.

I have no intention of going into details about the problem of unemployment but, as it is directly linked to this department, I will just mention some figures that were published in La Presse on February 16. I quote:

> Unemployment insurance: 601,200 people registered at the end of 1961.

And further on:

> The benefits paid out totalled $29,400,000 in December. They stood at $20,900,000 in November.

What else but inaction, neglect or misjudging of the situation would explain the fact that the expenditures of that department, which totalled $220 million in 1958-59, were reduced to $203.8 million in 1959-60?

What else but unconcern would explain the fact that in 1960-61 we were asked to vote $195.9 million, another decrease in the estimates compared with those for the previous year?

Yesterday the hon. member for Levis made this comparison which is much more eloquent than any speech. If we do not take into account the expenditures for the construction of the trans-Canada highway—statutory expenditures that can increase or decrease according to needs—we find that those estimates of $195.9 million for the fiscal year 1960-61—that is a year of unemployment and want—were in fact only $7.9 million higher than those for the year 1956-57, a year of prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, what explanation is there for the fact that for the next fiscal year, 1962-63, there is a decrease of $463,343 in comparison with the previous year? What explanation is there—

Mr. Flynn: That is quite an argument.

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes, that is quite an argument except for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who is certainly blindfolded and buries his head in the sand in order not to see the truth.

Mr. Flynn: The hon. member sings to himself; he is telling himself stories.

Mr. Deschatelets: How can that be reconciled with the fact that during the last two years of Liberal regime, in 1956 and 1957, there were more housing starts across the country than during these last two years of Conservative administration? And at this point let me quote the following figures: for 1955 and 1956, 265,000 houses; for 1960 and 1961, 234,000 houses, a decrease of 31,000 houses. Represented in employment figures, that means 80,000 less jobs than in 1955 and 1956.

Well, Mr. Chairman, one wonders—

(Text):

Mr. Walker: Does the hon. member want an answer to that at the moment?

Mr. Deschatelets: Oh, no. The minister had an opportunity to make a speech explaining everything, but instead of making the speech which he should have made, his was only a childish effort. He did not give us the accounting of his department that he should have done. He may have the opportunity later on to discuss this and comment on it.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, one wonders—

Mr. Fortin: If you are not afraid of an answer, sit down and listen.

Mr. Deschatelets: One may wonder whether Conservative members, the Minister of Public Works and his colleagues from the cabinet are aware of the people's urgent needs—or is the Minister of Public Works not taken seriously by his fellow members of the cabinet.

Mr. Chevrier: That is obvious.

Mr. Deschatelets: I just quoted some figures according to which in 1955-56, that is in a year of prosperity, more houses were started than during the last two years, where, because of the economic difficulties we experienced, we should have gone ahead in that field. But the Minister of Public Works was not up to the situation.

(Text):

In fact we are wondering what he is doing. We can ask ourselves who does he think he is? What does he think he is paid for—to sit tight in his big chair all day long and do nothing? The minister has even forgotten the promises of 1958.

(Translation):

That attitude of the Minister of Public Works is found again in an extraordinary statement he made, as reported by the Toronto daily Star of September 13, 1960, and which indicated an unexplainable irresponsibility. I hope that the minister will not tell us that he was misquoted. The title of that statement is:

(Text):

Public works poor way to make jobs: Walker. Federal public works minister, David J. Walker, said last night it is uneconomical to construct public buildings to fight unemployment.

"We can only justify the expense of any such building if Canada needs it," he said. Public works for the sake of providing jobs he termed "one of the most expensive ways" of creating employment.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I say this shows only too well not only the attitude of the Minister of Public Works, but that of the government.

However, there is a thing for which I give the Minister of Public Works full credit, and that is his frankness. But he will understand if I disagree with him.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Chairman, if the unemployment situation is alarming today—and we know it is—I submit that we should all make an effort to lessen the hardships resulting from such a situation. I believe that all departments should tackle the problem and resort to every possible means, long term and short term measures, and we know the Department of Public Works could take some short term measures which would partly relieve the unemployment situation. But that statement of the Minister of Public Works indicates that he and the government do not care to spend the necessary amounts to check unemployment.

Mr. Ricard: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: As for us in the Liberal party, our policy is well known. We are ready to pay whatever it will cost to put back to work Canadians who are unemployed. And it is easy to note the difference between the attitude of the present government and that of the Liberal party. We are consistent and we have the right to speak here, for during the years when we administered the country—

Mr. Pigeon: There was unemployment.

Mr. Deschatelets: —unemployment only stood at an average of 2.8 per cent for the ten year period extending from 1946 to 1956.

Mr. Ricard: Order, order.

Mr. Deschatelets: It so happens that this average was equivalent to full employment.

Mr. Chairman, at the request of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), who does not like to hear about unemployment, no more than his colleagues, I will leave this subject—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Since we are now considering the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I believe that an hon. member is not entitled to start a discussion on unemployment. Unemployment is an altogether different thing from the estimates of the Department of Public Works and I submit that we should stick to the consideration of the estimates now before the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, my opinion is that the member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) was not dealing with the unemployment situation as a whole, and that he was fully entitled to discuss the subject since the Minister of Public Works himself dealt with it during the course of his remarks yesterday. I therefore believe that the hon. member was fully entitled to speak the way he did.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: I am referring to the minister's statement on page 1376 of Hansard earlier today, when I was dealing with a similar point of order. In that statement he said, among other things—and I am not using his exact words—that house building had provided so many man years of employment. To that extent, by way of analogy I am sure the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is in order in dealing with this matter.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. However, I want to be fair with the minister. If his department lacks enthusiasm, vision and ideas, I am not ready to put upon him alone the burden of his failure.

When a man has done everything he could, when he has reached the limits of his capacities, his failure is noted but the blame cannot be cast upon him.

We must be fair. It may be that the Minister of Public Works, having been connected with the courts of law for many years, could have been an excellent solicitor general. It is not his fault if he is not in the right place at the head of the Department of Public Works. I believe his outbursts of temper, which sometimes hide arrogance, should be forgiven. I think he rather deserves our sympathy and that we should attempt to assist him, for the sake of everybody.

I should like to say a few words on the trans-Canada highway as part of the joint projects. Yesterday, when the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) had the floor, some Conservative members raised the question of joint programs. They tried to show a difference between our stand now concerning those joint programs and the stand we had in the past. Well, I wish at this point to put on record a statement by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) which was published in Le Soleil of November 7, 1961:

> The Liberal leader said he thought the federal government should withdraw from joint plans of a permanent nature. That suggestion applies especially in the field of social security.
> Upon ending its financial participation in those programs, the federal government should compensate the provinces by giving them more room in the field of direct taxation and by adding equalization in order not to increase their financial burden. Such a system does not mean however that the Liberal party will not put forward in the future any new joint program, but it means that those new plans, if they require a permanent and rather regular expenditure, will not be in effect for more than five years before being handed over to the exclusive control of the provinces.

Mr. Chairman, having read that statement of the Leader of the Opposition, I should like to read also into the record a sentence from the speech made by the present premier of the province of Quebec at the federal-provincial conference last year. That quotation may be found on page 35 of the proceedings of that conference. I quote Mr. Jean Lesage:

> In our opinion, this situation has become undesirable. The existing joint programs have played a stimulating role in the economic and social development of the country; in several cases, they have supplemented provincial initiatives. But these programs are now sufficiently well established on the provincial scale to enable the federal government to cease taking part in them and to vacate these fields. The federal government should be prepared to accept this request. Obviously, in such a case, it would be necessary to compensate the provinces fully for the additional financial responsibilities assumed by them. This financial compensation should take the form of additional taxation rights specifically reserved for the provincial governments and of correspondent equalization payments. If this were done, each province would be free to use its revenues as it sees fit in the fields of jurisdiction that belong to it.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that our position has now been made clear, as well as that of the government of the province of Quebec, about those joint plans.

I should like to add this. It is quite obvious that for those works or undertakings of a national character, we must consider both the constitutional aspect of the situation and the public welfare.

No one will deny that a trans-Canada highway was essential to this country, that such a project involved provincial problems and that it could not be undertaken otherwise than on the basis of federal-provincial cooperation. That is my view, as it has always been. There is nothing new in the fact that when those plans are set up they must in no way be permanent, and that the sooner we get out of them the better.

Mr. Chairman, I should now like to draw the conclusion that naturally evolves from the consideration of those estimates by saying this. The government is not taking this department seriously. It does not give the Minister of Public Works, in the present circumstances, the important and essential part that should be his. And finally, it is quite obvious that the government has no plan nor any specific policy to solve the economic problems we are now facing.

(Text):

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member—and I will only be very brief and will not trade insults with him—the actual total expenditures in the Department of Public Works for 1955-56 to 1956-57 inclusive averaged $82.1 million; for 1956-58 and 1960 to 1961 inclusive they averaged $204.7 million. No matter how you insult or exaggerate, the figures speak for themselves.

In housing it is the same record. If in 1960 and 1961 the figures were not as high as before, it is because in the two years 1958 and 1959 they reached the enormous and astronomical number of 164,632 starts in 1958, and in 1959 the figure was 141,345. As a matter of fact I have gone into those figures before to indicate that the housing under our administration so far exceeded the housing under the Liberal administration that it is only an hon. member such as comes from Maisonneuve-Rosemont who would even have the audacity to get up and compare the figures. No matter how he uses that virulent tongue of his and no matter how he dishes it out, the departmental figures do not lie and they speak for themselves. Is it not about time that we had an end to all this nonsense?

Mr. McFarlane: First, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on the excellent showing that has been made in this past year. I would be very remiss if I did not also pass along my thanks to the officials of the department for their assistance during the year.

I should like to support the hon. member for Kootenay West in what he had to say about the contentious question of sewage disposal. At the present time this problem is not too serious in my area but with the expansion that is going on I can see that within a very few years we shall be facing the same situation. Likewise, I should like to mention my support for a southern trans-Canada highway. This will be classed as our number two highway. We have just about completed the first highway and with any luck it should be opened this year. What we need now is a trans-Canada highway running through the southern section of the province of British Columbia.

I should like to bring the minister's attention to some of our problems in British Columbia; they may be a little different from those which have been raised so far. I realize that British Columbia is not too popular a province at the present time—

Mr. Walker: It is with this government.

Mr. McFarlane: We are going to make some changes. Our problem at the present time has to do with flooding conditions, and I will begin at the top end of the constituency of East Kootenay. East Kootenay has generally been considered as the lost lamb of the province of British Columbia; it was too far from Victoria to be considered, and it was too far away from Ottawa to be known about. My difficulty at the present time is to present the facts about the needs of East Kootenay and bring them to the attention of this committee. First I should like to begin at the northern end of the district where we have a flooding problem. It is in the municipality of Golden, which is steadily expanding. The village of Golden is situated on an ancient flood plain or small delta, mainly built up from materials brought down by the Kicking Horse river to its confluence with the Columbia river. It consists of firmly packed coarse gravel overlaid by a thin mantle of silt. As such, in an area with limited land suitable for building purposes, the delta of the Kicking Horse river has become a valuable townsite building area. On the other hand, the Columbia river, north and south of Golden flows in a swampy silt filled valley, where the waters easily seek new channels and courses. In the environ of Golden the river maintains a permanent position along the rim rock of the west side of the valley. Though this advantage exists, making it possible to build a town at Golden, the condition is in delicate balance. During the three months of summer freshet the Columbia spills over its channel on to part of the townsite, and the water table rises over a large area to an undesirable height.

Flooding in this area has become periodic in recent years and the situation is gradually becoming worse. The main cause would appear to be the influence of the Kicking Horse river upon the free flow of the Columbia river. The alluvial deposits, mostly pebbles and round rock up to six inches in diameter, spill into the Columbia and have built up bars and shoals for several hundred yards downstream. This action has slowed the free flow of the river so that the Columbia is filling its channel with gravel and silt above the confluence with the Kicking Horse river.

Another factor which congests the flood waters of the Columbia in the environ of Golden is a narrow reef of bed rock which crosses the river a few hundred yards below the Kicking Horse junction and which outcrops on the east bank of the Columbia in the form of a small obstructive island.

We have made several recommendations to the departments concerned, both federal and provincial, but so far we have not been able to get any government to accept the responsibility for alleviating this flooding condition. I have with me today a brief submitted by the people of Golden. We are asking for the assistance of the government, and the question that arises is: which government is responsible? Is it the provincial government, is it the federal government or is it both? I feel it is up to this government as the senior government in the dominion of Canada to take the lead in this matter and, if necessary, to put it on a fifty-fifty basis. Let us do this so that the people in the area can be assured that they are not going to be flooded out year after year.

A similar situation exists in the village of Athalmer further down the Columbia river. Streams running into the Columbia bring down shale and rocks, and have built up the river to such an extent that in some cases the water is actually running up hill. This can easily be seen. The people in this area have built up a certain amount of equity in their homes, businesses, motels, and so on, and the problem today is to prevent the flooding which threatens the existence of much of this property each spring.

I am going further down the valley, and we now come to the Kootenay river. Similar flooding conditions are encountered there, especially where the Goat river runs into the Kootenay. This government is very interested in the Kootenay because it will be part of our power project as soon as the necessary arrangements can be concluded.

I have brought up these three points as a matter of interest and I should like to ask the minister if he will consider taking action on a fifty-fifty basis. As I said earlier, I believe we should take the lead in bringing this matter to a satisfactory conclusion. I notice that a proposal has been made to spend approximately $63 million this year on a flood control program around greater Winnipeg and that the federal government is to pay approximately 60 per cent of the cost. A similar plan was undertaken a few years ago when Vancouver was experiencing flooding difficulties. Many millions were spent in order to control these floods. It seems to me that although the large centres are provided for, the smaller centres are not being given the consideration to which they are entitled.

I do not think there is anything I should like to add at the present time. I should be pleased to discuss this matter either with the minister or with his officials to see whether this problem can be approached in such a way that the people of this area can be assured that their land, their property and their belongings are not going to be washed out during the freshet season. I have received numerous letters from the department in which it is claimed that this is not a national emergency. Believe me, when a man sees his home and his business going down the river he knows it is a national emergency for him.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, in answer to my hon. friend who asked me to reply may I say this. As this is a municipal and provincial question—and I am shocked to think they have provided no relief up to the present time to my hon. friend's area—there is no possible way in which the Department of Public Works could intervene.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the minister on being such a nice, co-operative gentleman with whom to deal during the years he has held his present office. At the same time I think the minister is a complex fellow. We have had two exhibitions of his complexity within the last week. The first was on television the other night. The program was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone I spoke to who had seen it. The second demonstration was the performance we witnessed in the house yesterday. As a result I find it almost impossible to understand why, when he is such a capable fellow privately, the minister must try to make a public idiot of himself.

Mr. Caron: And succeeds.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The minister appears to have a split personality. His schizophrenia is so extensive that I have known him to privately apologize for public insults.

Mr. Walker: That will be the day.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In any event I do not think I should pursue this subject or I shall be guilty of indulging in the same language that the minister used yesterday, which I do not think is in the best interests of the discussion in this committee.

Yesterday he attempted to drown the committee with figures. He attempted to lay claim on behalf of the government for every house and building constructed in Canada by federal governments, provincial governments, municipal governments, co-operatives, school boards, credit unions, private citizens, and so on. In view of his television performance I would not be surprised if the minister had a count made of all the beaver houses built last year in order to place a value on them and claim them, too. I do not wish to take away from the minister any credit of which he is deserving. I am perfectly willing to admit there has been a marked improvement in his department, particularly compared with his record during the first year he served in that portfolio. Speaking in this house at that time I remember pointing out that the minister regretfully did not follow the excellent example of his illustrious predecessor in the department. The first year there was a considerable falling away and I am pleased to see the minister is now attempting to take up the slack. I think it would be advantageous if he were to spend less effort patting himself on the back and more energy attempting to determine what remains to be done.

There are three matters in which he should take more interest in the future than he appears to have taken in the past. The first is the shameless exploitation of labour in the housing field, especially that coming under his jurisdiction. There has been a shameless exploitation of immigrant labour. I fully realize that the minister and government members may say that a large part of this matter comes under provincial jurisdiction. That is true but the fact remains that in the public mind and in the eyes of the people involved the federal government is responsible and will receive the blame for it. People consider that because these houses are being built with the taxpayers' money the government must assume some of the responsibility and manifest a keener interest to ensure that these conditions are corrected.

Another aspect of this problem has been brought to my attention as it affects my own and other ridings where people building houses through various means are attempting to evade the responsibilities which our society requires employers to assume. Instead of letting out contracts, some are attempting to evade responsibility such as that of providing for workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance and so on. Again in the eyes of the public and those concerned the blame is laid squarely at the door of the minister and the government. Even when you explain the federal government is not directly involved, people take the position that it is federal government money that is being expended and the government should ensure that these conditions do not prevail. This will reflect on the federal government until the minister shows more interest than he has in the past.

Another way of looking at it is this. If the minister wishes to take credit for every building constructed in Canada he will also have to accept the responsibility and blame arising from any problems in the construction field.

Another matter in which the minister should express more interest is that of the calibre of the housing being built across the country particularly when public funds are involved directly or indirectly. There is a growing list of complaints in this regard. People are becoming increasingly critical of the calibre of material being used in buildings. They do not want the building to collapse before the mortgage is cleared off.

On two occasions, through the present minister and his predecessor, I have had to call for investigations into public housing built with public funds in my area. On both occasions while the construction appeared to meet minimum standards I can assure the minister the people blamed the federal government and were far from satisfied with the calibre of materials.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

It is significant that although the minister had extended time yesterday to present his estimates neither of the points I have raised was mentioned during the course of his remarks.

A third matter deserving more attention is that of slum clearance. No mention was made of present or future plans in this field. The minister outlined the department's plans for the construction of public buildings, post offices, harbours, bridges, and wharves across the country but gave no indication of recognition of the problem of slum clearance let alone mentioning any plans to deal with it.

With that in mind I wish to read from the daily Star of June 3, 1961 an article entitled "Ottawa Should Lead" which accuses the minister of doing little more than lecturing the municipalities in this regard, and knowing the minister that is perhaps a correct assessment. The article reads:

> Scoldings don't clear any slums, not even when the scoldings come from Canada's public works minister himself.
> In Halifax this week, Mr. David Walker complained that Canadian municipalities were "not making nearly enough progress" in getting rid of slums and halting the spread of blight. He said that Ottawa offered "generous assistance" to the municipalities for these purposes, but the municipalities weren't making full use of it.

Then it goes on to say:

> But the municipalities know from experience—for example, Toronto with Moss park—that being offered this kind of assistance is one thing; actually getting it is another. Because Ottawa has a big financial commitment in projects of this nature, Ottawa tightly regulates them and is painfully slow to approve them—if and when it does, in fact, approve them.
> The proof of this legislation, as of any other, is in what it accomplishes. For all the years that slum clearance and public housing have been on Ottawa's statute books, scarcely anything has been done to clear slums or to build public housing. (For the last ten years, construction of public housing in Canada has averaged fewer than 800 units a year.)
> The trouble is not just in one quarter, but all along the federal-provincial-municipal line—too little in the way of leadership; too much in the way of governmental and intergovernmental complexities.
> As for leadership, it should come mainly from Ottawa, which is the main source of money and authority in this field. Rather than rail at the municipalities, let Mr. Walker rally them to the cause of self-improvement.

I have spoken on many occasions in the house about the blight of slums on our society in every city and town in our country, and I do not intend to go into the details at this time. But I should like to point out once more that slums are responsible for enormous costs, for crime, social problems and degradation for fire traps, sickness, unemployment and additional welfare costs. Until such time as the federal government really takes the lead in this field and gives some leadership to the provinces and municipalities in the form of a long term program we will not have met the problem. It is no use just taking one area, tackling the problem, meeting it there and thinking the job is done because while you are doing that slums are growing up all around you. This is not something you can do once and forget about it. It is a long term project. That is the only way the problem can be met, and the costs involved would be more than offset by the savings in other fields if and when the problem is met. Before the debate ends I hope we will hear something from the minister with regard to this field. I think he would be much better advised to spend his energies in this field rather than in a back-patting exhibition such as we saw yesterday.

Mr. Henderson: First of all, I should like to compliment the minister. He is one of the best we have ever had at Ottawa. He has done a great deal for the region from which I come. The people there did not know anything about housing until he became the minister but now we are getting plenty of houses. Let a Liberal, a Social Crediter or what have you run in my riding and he will see what the people who live there think. The minister has done a real job. We have a suburban development with good houses and people are living in the houses they really want.

But that is not what I want to talk about. I want to talk about a road to provide means of communication for one of the most beautiful towns you ever saw, the town of McBride. The town nestles against the Rocky mountains but there is no road out. There is a highway six miles away which stops abruptly. I have spoken to the Department of Public Works and tried to get some action to have the road finished. Thousands of people live in that beautiful country, one of the richest parts of Canada. I hear talk about the countryside around Ottawa and in Quebec. You have not seen anything until you have seen McBride. The people are prosperous but they are cooped up against Mount Robson. Any of you who have traveled west by the C.N.R. know that the train stops on the way through the Rockies so that the passengers can look at the mountains and the guest camp that has been there for years. It was there when I was a child.

There are ranches in that area, plenty of timber and beautiful dairy farms. When you get a chance to go west you should take a look at McBride. People from the United States are coming in there. We Canadians seem to be asleep because the Americans are buying land there. There is an influx of settlers from the United States at the present time.

As I say, it is magnificent dairy country but we need a road so that people can go to Edmonton or through to Prince Rupert. I am not going to waste the whole afternoon talking about this matter. I hope the minister will take a look at the situation and see that we get a road, because we need it badly. Talk about Newfoundland, Ontario or Quebec; here is a wonderful place, but without a road—and you have got to have roads in that country. You cannot go through there with an automobile at all. Forty years ago work was being done on the railroad but there has been no advance so far as a road for automobiles is concerned.

When I first came here I thought I would have no trouble getting a road. I have not succeeded yet, but I am not going to waste good time by talking all afternoon because the minister knows the problem and I am sure he will do something for us. As I say, he is the best public works minister we have had for many a day.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister some questions which he can answer when he replies. First of all, I should like to ask him if there is any chance in the immediate future of a reduction in the interest rate on N.H.A. mortgage loans. When the minister announced the reduction from 6¾ per cent to 6½ per cent he put on record the amount of the saving to the home owner paying off a mortgage.

I maintain that the mortgage rate is too high at the present time and I think the minister will probably agree with that. However, I believe he said yesterday that mortgage money was being obtained at a reasonable rate. When the Minister of Finance and other members opposite were in the opposition I have a vivid recollection of hearing them lament in long speeches in the house about the high rate of interest on N.H.A. loans when the rate at that time was in fact 5¼ per cent. When the rate was increased to 5½ per cent they really became frothy about it. They claimed they were speaking for those people who were paying on mortgages, the little man who was paying off his mortgage.

Members of the government party patted the minister on the back when he reduced the interest rate from 6¾ to 6½ per cent. Under the former government by far the great majority of N.H.A. mortgage loans were made at 5¼ per cent, but under this government the great majority have been made at the rate of 6¾ per cent over a 25 year term. I might say that the mortgages carrying a 5¼ per cent interest rate were for a term of 20 years.

If we take a $10,000 mortgage, apart from taxes and other charges against the property the owner will have paid in 25 years $20,551.46 for his house, whereas at an interest rate of 5¼ per cent over 20 years he would pay $16,196.40. In other words at a rate of 5¼ per cent over 20 years he would save $4,455.06.

These are some of the benefits this government has handed the people who are buying homes. I have similar calculations worked out on the basis of 5½ per cent, 6¼ per cent and so forth. At the present time, this saving of $4,455.06 would be decreased by an amount of $467.10 if we took into consideration the present 6½ per cent rate. These calculations do not take into consideration all the extra charges that have been put on the new home buyer as a result of the fiscal policy of this government because of capitalized costs for new sewers, new roads, and so forth. The new home buyer also has to pay more in general taxes. I feel that every new home owner in Canada should be acquainted with these figures because they will show him how much more he is paying. I would predict, Mr. Chairman, that none of these figures will appear in that new magazine, the Conservative Canadian.

I should like also to ask the minister if he can tell us what rate of interest the universities are being charged for their new building projects, and also what rate of interest the municipalities are being charged for their new sewage disposal projects. About a year ago there was an article in the Halifax Chronicle complaining about the fact there was a decrease in the estimates providing for new federal public buildings in the province of Nova Scotia. I note that this year the estimates contain less for the construction of new public buildings, not only in Nova Scotia but in nine out of the ten provinces across Canada. I know that at one time the Prime Minister said, that there are different measures that might be taken to overcome unemployment. He had this to say:

> As long as I am Prime Minister, no man or woman is going to suffer from unemployment so long as public works will provide them the assistance they require.

I obtained some figures from this book of estimates for 1956-57, and I just wanted to compare them with the estimates for 1962-63. The amount provided for the construction of public buildings in all the provinces in 1956-57 was $57.6 million and this year it is $35.9 million, down 40 per cent. If you deduct the amount provided for new public buildings in Ottawa, you will see it is down practically 50 per cent. In the 1955-56 estimates, the amount provided for construction of public buildings in Nova Scotia was $3.5 million, and this year it is $1.3 million, down 65 per cent. New Brunswick stands about the same. Quebec is down from $10.4 million to $4.5 million, over 50 per cent. Ontario, apart from Ottawa, is down from $9.99 million to $6.8 million, down about 33 per cent. Manitoba is down from $2.7 million to $338,000, about 85 to 90 per cent. The same situation applies to Saskatchewan, and it is down 85 per cent to 90 per cent. Alberta is down from $4.1 million to $1.4 million, down about 60 per cent. British Columbia is down from $6.1 million to $2.3 million, about 60 per cent. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, this department is doing very much, so far as new buildings are concerned, to help cure unemployment.

Last year I was interested in a vote of $50,000 provided for investigating the feasibility of building a causeway from Prince Edward Island to the mainland. I notice there is another $50,000 provided in the estimates this year. I understand this brings the total amount for the engineering of that project up to $700,000. I might say that I crossed from Cape Tormentine to Borden about four or five years ago and I thought it was a very beautiful part of the country. I hoped the minister or some of the members from Prince Edward Island might bring this subject up for discussion because I feel we should get some interim report from the minister. I met somebody who was down there soon after the last election and he said he had gained the impression from talking to people down there that the project was to start the very next week. I do not know whether or not this was one of the promises the Prime Minister made. I do recall not long ago reading an article in a heavy construction magazine, from Toronto I think it was, under this heading, "Is P.E.I. Crossing Any Closer?" The article mentioned the engineering problems in connection with the project and raised such questions as the ice hazard. The pros and cons were given with regard to building a bridge all the way across, building a causeway with a swing bridge in the centre or building bridge approaches from either side and then having a tunnel in between. Reference was also made to the problem of a rail line going through the tunnel. Nobody seemed to know too much about the movement of the ice if a causeway were constructed across this strait.

Now, I wonder if the minister could bring us up to date on the feasibility of the project? He must have some information now after spending $700,000. I hope, since it is getting close to election time, the minister has not made up his mind that it might be more feasible to build it now and then reverse his decision after the election.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak briefly on item 1 and mention what we regard as an urgent problem in Canada, the need for community growth. We believe that there must be a responsible and well conceived national plan which will help municipal development. It would appear, sir, that some years ago the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Diefenbaker, felt this to be of importance.

I have been checking back on some of the statements that were made in 1957. The Globe and Mail of April 26, 1957, quotes Mr. Diefenbaker as saying:

> We cannot face complacently the fact that we have rising tax bills, rising debt both provincially and municipally.

In his opening campaign speech on April 25, 1957, one of the arguments which he made was:

> We believe there can be no national unity in this nation until there is a realization that the federal-provincial matters have handcuffed the provinces of this nation; have denied the municipalities adequate sources of revenue; have placed the provinces and the municipalities in a position where they cannot discharge their constitutional responsibilites.

Then, on April 26, 1957, a Canadian Press report in the Winnipeg Free Press indicated that Mr. Diefenbaker pledged to work out new tax sharing arrangements with the provinces which would strengthen Canada's federal system and give provinces and municipalities the funds to carry out their responsibilities.

Probably there is no area of government labouring under greater difficulty at the present time than our municipal governments. We all know that there are plenty of useful things waiting to be done in this field. I live in an old part of Canada which was developed many years ago. It is along perhaps what could become the most beautiful riverfront in the world, with a community extending pretty well from Kingston to Cornwall, all of which was developed in the very early pioneering days. With some sort of assistance much could be done to improve living conditions in that part of the country, particularly at a time when we have an urgent unemployment problem.

Mr. J. J. Deutsch, speaking on Canada's economic problems in the winter edition of the Queen's Quarterly mentions the fact that the first half of 1961 indicates an average rate of unemployment of about 7.5 per cent of the labour force. It is clear from this article, and other articles published by economists, that during the past five years the Canadian labour force has grown twice as rapidly as in the preceding five year period. These are conditions which this administration has to face, and the problems are not going to end there because the projection appears to indicate that the expansion in the Canadian labour force over the next five years will be equally as large as in the last five years, and here to compound the problem is automation.

If you are really serious about recovery, and we believe recovery can take place with foresight, thought and direction, then serious attention must be given to the problems of municipal governments as well as those of provincial governments. This seems to be a need which is quoted by a great many publications. The Listening Post of February, 1962, which is the organ of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, asks a question which I think would not have been asked a few decades ago, perhaps not even 10 years ago. Its editorial is titled "What will the federal government do about municipal borrowing" and it says:

> In the fulfilment of this need—for public transit, water supply, sewage disposal, roads, bridges, schools, hospitals, recreation facilities and the renewal of blighted areas in the central cores of our cities and towns—there exists one of the greatest potential opportunities for increasing the employment of Canadian plant capacity and Canadian manpower in the years ahead. Surely, in any well-conceived government policy, one of the nation's primary efforts should be focused on such basic programs of development in our cities and towns.

The editor of the paper indicates that this would of course be beneficial to all segments of the nation's economy, and it is sound and responsible, particularly because it is largely self-liquidating. He speaks of borrowing being "an indivisible responsibility" and says:

> The chief obstacle to community development is not the reluctance of senior governments to make outright grants to local authorities. It is the lack of co-operation among the three levels of government in examining together the whole range of their capital requirements and in arranging the necessary borrowing.

It is the problem of paying. How are these municipalities going to pay for the things we know should be done in each of our towns and cities in Canada, and which can be done with a little bit of help? What these municipalities are asking for now is the full and continuing co-operation of the federal government in mobilizing the capital needed for such works, and that is why the comments made from this side of the house are so germane to the growth problems facing the local municipalities.

The N.H.A. amending legislation relating to sewers is the kind of thing for which we commend the minister and his department. We know this is important and we can see the results of it in small towns and cities. However, this major step in the right direction has got to be extended to cover a good many other basic needs such as roads, subways, bridges, water supplies and conservation projects. It is not a policy of handouts which is being sought. It is the mobilization of capital as a national responsibility and this is the place where we must make this demand understood and known.

It is the attitude of the Liberal party that loans from a municipal loan fund in Ottawa would create new jobs all across Canada and will help to get our economy moving again on sound projects. The improved community services which we need are largely the responsibility of the municipalities and most of our municipalities have adequate plans for further development. In the area which I represent we have the community of Westport where it would be of great benefit to have better dock facilities. The city of Brockville, the town of Gananoque and the village of Athens all have plans for water supplies, schools and so on, and these projects could be implemented if there were a possibility of these municipalities borrowing at some advantageous rate.

In my riding I have been concerned to see that we have not used the winter works program in the fullest sense that might be possible, but I find it is simply impossible because the municipalities are stretched to the limit in their expenditures and cannot go beyond them.

The January, 1962, edition of Local Finance, which is published by the Canadian tax foundation, a wise and helpful organization for citizens who are interested in better government has an article dealing with "The changing pattern of responsibilities". It says that what were once thought to be municipal responsibilities are no longer thought to be simply that. This article indicates that most of the essential local services which originally were the responsibility of local governments alone can no longer be precisely defined, and that government action in response to an increasing public demand for more government services and for better standards of performance for existing services has served to obscure the division of responsibility between governments.

When one studies what local governments do today in their executive and administrative problems in fire protection, law enforcement, street lighting, public works, streets, bridges, roads, sanitation, waste and in many health services and social welfare agencies, and add to that the obligations of education and recreational facilities and the problem of debt charges and utilities, their appropriation reserves for all the contingencies that are necessary with respect to uncollectable taxes and accounts receivable and property acquired for taxes, we see the great burden placed on this level of local government in country and urban places in the provinces.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Referring to the winter, 1961, edition of Queen's Quarterly, and an article called "Urban Communities" written by Stewart Fyfe, the author talks about the expansion of the urban community, which is of course the principal reason why there has been this great increase of debt on our local governments.

Inevitably we see new demands on municipal government to provide new services and to raise the standards of existing services. We see the growth of our communities, a growth beyond the boundaries that existed five or ten years ago. In the United States the complexity and scale of the problems of urban growth have brought suggestions that the federal government establish a department of urban affairs. While suggestions have been made in Canada that the federal government should devote more attention to urban problems, there has been no suggestion of such a department being established. That is why we look to this genial and dedicated minister to solve these problems. He has told us of his efforts and interests and we have evidence of this. We know that this is the department and the place where we must properly raise these demands before the country.

We have to take a new look at urban development. We know that if real action is to be taken to improve this unemployment situation, it has to be done with the assistance of Ottawa; it is not enough simply to pass it on to the provinces.

A few days ago I was speaking to a man who had considerable experience of unemployment in the 1930's. He was discussing unemployment in the 1930's and comparing it with the situation today. He said that one of the great cushioning effects that we have in the 1960's to a serious unemployment situation—which has become aggravated, particularly in the last two years—is the fact that with our system of unemployment insurance people do not travel, and therefore we do not have them riding freight trains and hitchhiking across the country in one manner or another. We do not find, therefore, the long queues of men gathered for assistance and relief, because they are kept and contained in their own areas.

However, if we had something like 719,000 people last year, and 609,000 a few days ago looking for work—and we know that in our own areas this work problem is very serious—then surely this is the place and the department to whom we must look for assistance with respect to an expanded public works program.

I have found it difficult to believe that in an area as wealthy as the one I have the honour to represent,—from Cornwall to Kingston—we have pockets that are serious indeed with respect to the extent of unemployment. The unemployment situation in Cornwall is perhaps a special case, but it is frightening in its size. Prescott is very, very bad when we consider that the average unemployment last year was over 800 people in a town of that size. I would indicate to the committee, sir, that the unemployment figure reached 15.5 per cent of the population.

Gananoque is one of the most attractive little towns in the country, and yet we have had an increasing unemployment situation. It has increased regularly from 1959 to a degree that is alarming, but at the same time there are many things that need to be done in Gananoque and the local government knows what these things are.

We see even with this somewhat stagnant condition of our economy the "awesome appetite" as it has been described, of the towns and cities. The author J. Campbell Merrett takes a look at urban development in "Canadian Chartered Accountant", volume 78, 1961 and speaks of the wanton wastefulness of agricultural land, the deplorable destruction of rural amenties and the unnecessarily expensive servicing of municipal undertakings.

This problem must be dealt with, and there is no place where direction and guidance can be given better than from this particular department in a broad sharing of responsibility and effort. We look to this department for that quality of leadership.

I was reading on the microfilm a few moments ago an article in the Financial Post of September 13, 1961 entitled "Are we really trying to get rid of slums." S. L. Buckwold, who was president of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, argued a very strong case in 1960 before the Senate manpower committee and said that city planners and officials agree that N.H.A. is not nearly generous enough; that all major Canadian cities and many towns are suffering from a condition of "suburban sprawl" and "centre town blight". This problem could well be given more attention.

Our Minister of Public Works said at that time, as reported in the Financial Post of September 30, 1961:

> I do not think enough use is being made of the very generous provisions of the N.H.A.

I wonder whether the minister can now report a more favourable use of the provisions of the N.H.A. Are these provisions sufficiently generous, or is the judgment of Mr. Buckwold correct when he says they are not?

Mr. K. Grant Crawford, in a study on the aspects of provincial-municipal relations says this:

> —With increased financial assistance from the provinces came increased supervision and increased direction . . . They—

He was speaking of local municipalities:

> —have seen that ever increasing provincial contributions will mean loss of local control and at the same time have been forced by their financial plight to make persistent appeals to the province for more and more assistance.

I think there is a genuine concern on the part of some of our municipalities right now lest they become too dependant upon provincial governments. They want to grow; they want to develop. They have at their helm and in their local councils, I know, some of the best brains we have available in our communities. Sometimes it is easier to get a good man to serve on a municipal council than it is to have him run for provincial or federal office. We have many competent, able and dedicated people prepared to give hundreds of hours in the year to thinking out wise developments at the municipal level, but they need assistance.

Mr. Crawford says:

> To accomplish these purposes the municipalities must not be merely agencies of a higher level of government—

That, sir, is not what we are suggesting at this point.

To resume the quotation. The municipalities—

> —rather must have ultimate responsibility within their sphere of jurisdiction and must have a sphere of jurisdiction sufficiently broad to make them seem significant to the citizens and thus attract into public service competent men and women in both elective and appointive offices.

I must say that over the past number of years we have seen excellent local government in the areas I represent. I know that these people have given earnest thought to development and improvements. I hope they can be encouraged by the kind of assistance at the federal level which I have suggested.

Mr. John Pratt spoke about Canada's centenary in an article in Maclean's magazine recently. He said: Let's clean up our littered countryside. He was referring to what Canada might hope for, and he suggested that there was nothing better we could do than to clean up our towns and cities and beautify this country.

Mr. Jones: It is usual to refer to hon. members by their constituencies.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Saskatoon has drawn attention to the point that has bothered the chair this afternoon, that is, that hon. members from both sides of the committee have been referring to other hon. members by name rather than by their constituencies.

Mr. Chevrier: On that point of order, the point which has been raised is a correct one; it is the practice of the house to do that, but it is also the practice that when an hon. member wishes to raise a point of order he does so by rising in his place and not sitting down as the hon. member for Saskatoon has just done. I think Your Honour should have taken notice of that.

Mr. Jones: On that point of order, which is absolutely spurious in view of the continual interruptions which are made, usually from the Liberal ranks, by hon. members always speaking from their seats, with the exception of this last intervention, may I say that the question raised had to do with whether or not members should call other hon. members by their names or refer to them by their constituencies. That is the point I raised, and I think it was a proper point.

Mr. Howard: Before you proceed to deal with this matter, Mr. Chairman, I think I heard the hon. member for Saskatoon use the word "scurrilous"—

Mr. Jones: I am afraid your hearing is not too good. It was "spurious".

Mr. Walker: Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Mr. Matheson: I thank the hon. member for Saskatoon for calling attention to the fact that the author of this article is a member of parliament. I was reading from Maclean's magazine. It was an excellent article and I was thinking of the author not as a member of this house but, rather, as an able journalist. The article says that we might well—> —devote the next six years to cleaning up, putting our house in order, and establishing the necessary routines that will ensure that our country will ever after remain one of beauty and cleanliness.

To this, I subscribe.

One thing which can help toward the beautification of an area is the presence of suitable public works, and we look forward in the town of Brockville to the federal building, provision for which I find in these estimates. I thank the minister for the co-operation and the courtesy extended to the opposition member for Leeds by his department and by some of the kind and helpful members of his staff.

The importance of this building to our community is very great. Architects have been doing things in Canada which give us hope that there may be a revitalising of many of our cities. The federal building at Brockville is to be built on a location which might well be called a gray area of the town. It is something which could alter and change the character of our new city. It will bring with it a great deal of neighbourhood pride. Margaret Fullerton has written recently on "the new amenity" in the Canadian Architect of September of 1961. She speaks of the importance to a community of a building the size of the federal building which we are anticipating, as well as the importance of a park area. We are fortunate that through the recent beneficence of the Hon. Arthur C. Hardy we are to have a beautifully landscaped piece of open space on the river. We are expecting this proposed federal building at Brockville will alter the face of an older area of the city. Perhaps, seeing that a general election may not be so imminent as was once thought, there may be an opportunity in the spring or summer months for the minister to forget politics and come on down to the most beautiful waterfront in Canada, and travel with me by boat from Gananoque to Brockville and look at the parts of our community that lie along the shoreline and form a picture of all the tremendous things which could be done there.

Mr. Regier: You have not been in Burnaby.

Mr. Matheson: Perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would join us. We would certainly like to see him there, too.

Mr. Regier: I do not intend to be very long Mr. Chairman. However, I am a little disturbed to note that the total proposed expenditure outlined to us in the estimates of the Department of Public Works reveals a decline exceeding $4 million.

I should like to think that this government would use, as one of its instruments of stabilizing the Canadian economy, the Department of Public Works. We still have a regrettably high measure of unemployment in our country. Economic activity needs every stimulant we can possibly find at this time. I feel this is the wrong time for a government to reveal a decline in expenditures in the field of public works. I believe that this department is one of the most important instruments the government has at its disposal to regulate the economy. At a time of business expansion I believe a decrease in expenditure on the part of the Department of Public Works might well be warranted. However, at a time when our economy is either declining or stagnating, I believe that an increase in the expenditures of this department would serve a very useful purpose. In the light of the willingness of the government to incur huge budgetary deficits I cannot understand why the estimates now before us should indicate an expenditure less than the expenditure of a year ago. I believe, as I said before, that a decrease in the proposed expenditures of the department as a whole is not, in existing circumstances, in line with the best interests of our nation. I noticed the very limited proposals in regard to public buildings. I recommend to the minister that a careful examination be made of the rentals being paid by the federal government for buildings owned by private individuals or corporations. I do not recommend that these necessarily be replaced by new buildings but I do know of a few instances where the interests of the government and the taxpayers would be well served if the existing premises were purchased upon expiration of the leases that now obtain. The government is paying fantastic rentals in ever so many cases and the interests of the taxpayers are not well served. The possibilities of purchasing existing premises or erecting new buildings ought to be explored. I believe the problem I now raise warrants the appointment of a special investigator, if necessary, to carefully review each and every instance where the Canadian government pays rent.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question? Could he give us some instances of exorbitant rents? Otherwise I would respectfully suggest he should withdraw.

Mr. Regier: No. With deference to the minister I have the right to express my opinion in the committee without the minister asking me to withdraw what I have stated as my belief.

Mr. Walker: I ask the hon. member to state facts.

Mr. Regier: I will give the minister the facts.

Mr. Walker: Go ahead.

Mr. Regier: Let the minister investigate the rental the taxpayers pay for the post office at Port Moody. It is one of the highest rentals paid on a square footage basis by any business in the country.

Mr. Walker: How much is it a foot?

Mr. Regier: I will not bother the minister with the details.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regier: The minister has resources at his command by which means he can obtain the information.

Mr. Walker: More socialistic bluff.

Mr. Regier: I happen to know the rental. I happen to know all the details.

Mr. Walker: Let us have them. Put them on the record.

Mr. Regier: The minister is not doing the taxpayers a service when he asks me to involve the committee in a controversy because hon. members of the committee do not know the local situation and would not be competent to determine whether the rental is economic or uneconomic. This government ought to buy that post office or as an alternative build one. The owner of the post office—

Mr. Walker: Is a friend of yours?

Mr. Regier: —is willing to sell but is also happy to continue to accept the extraordinarily high rental to which this government is committed.

Mr. Walker: Words, words, words.

Mr. Regier: It is a reflection on the efficiency of the federal government. However, this government is not initially to blame because the agreement was arrived at by the previous administration. This government inherited the situation.

Mr. Walker: It is not our fault then.

Mr. Regier: I have repeatedly called the attention of the government to this particular situation. I will not give another example because I have other things to say. The minister asked for a specific example and I have given him one. I know the minister has good intentions and is patriotic, and will investigate this situation. I will be proved right or wrong.

In dealing with harbours and rivers I have difficulty distinguishing between the responsibilities of the Minister of Public Works and his colleague the Minister of Transport. I may be completely out of line in saying this. I notice there is a division in the minister's department called the harbours and rivers engineering services. I am happy to note that within recent months the Minister of Transport and the Secretary of State for External Affairs—I hope the minister can spare a moment to listen to the complimentary remarks I wish to make—have lent a sympathetic ear to the proposal that an engineering survey be conducted to determine the feasibility of a canal being built along the ancient river bed of the Fraser to connect the Pitt river to Burrard inlet. I know that representations have been made to the minister in this regard by a number of his colleagues one of whom has given great assurances to the citizens back home.

I do not wish to publicly endorse the canal project which lately has been labelled the Kilmer canal. Miss Jane Kilmer was my opponent representing the Conservative party in a recent federal election. I admire her integrity and the useful service she has rendered the people of my constituency for many years. I wish her continued success in her efforts on behalf of the community as a whole. I know that many years ago a close relative of hers first proposed the canal. We have had assurances that the federal government is prepared to undertake an engineering survey in line with the recommendation of the Fraser river board in 1945 indicating such a survey might well be warranted.

I speak for people of all shades of political opinion when I say I hope this request that has been made by so many organizations in the constituency will be taken seriously. This is not a political football. If the canal is proved feasible it will be of tremendous benefit to the province of British Columbia and particularly the lower mainland.

I hope the minister after adequate consultation with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who knows every road if indeed not every little alley in the area, will ensure that the feasibility of this project will be explored and that we will have a feasibility study and a detailed and scientific report. I am not advocating that a specific sum be spent on the canal. I am not prepared to endorse this project but I do feel that the potentialities are so great that the minister should heed the advice of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and make sure that a full engineering report will be available very shortly.

In the matter of housing I noted with interest yesterday the remarks of the hon. member for Hamilton South when he spoke on these estimates. He referred to activities under the National Housing Act with regard to limited dividend housing. We regret that in British Columbia there has been practically no action. As a matter of fact, I believe I can safely say that within the last three or four years there has been no action whatsoever under this particular section of the National Housing Act.

The basic reason is obvious. The permissible returns to the investor are below the earnings that can be obtained by the purchase of government bonds. I happen to be involved in housing in our province and I have had a number of regrettable experiences where a lot of housing might have been constructed if we could have interested individuals and corporations in the limited dividend housing section of the act. The limits that now prevail under the terms of the act are such as not to encourage investors to take any interest in this aspect.

I should like the government to reconsider this matter carefully. I do not like high interest rates and in principle am opposed to them. However, when the government offers bonds that yield a higher return than an investment under the National Housing Act which involves a certain degree of risk and returns a maximum yield lower than that provided by bonds, I believe that the government might be warranted in reconsidering the existing legislation.

There is another matter I wish to raise. I notice there is an additional vote with respect to water supply for Churchill, Manitoba. When we are spending the taxpayers' money on this project I hope that the installation of the new services will be of benefit to the citizens of Churchill generally and not merely to those in the military camps in that area.

So far as the national capital commission is concerned, I ought to be the last person in the world to advocate that citizens be limited in their right to self-determination. I am not now speaking for my party but only for myself. I am afraid my own personal conviction is that, in the light of the heavy contribution made by the taxpayers of all of Canada and considering that the city of Ottawa belongs to all Canadians, the local civic administration has shown itself repeatedly as being so thoroughly incompetent that the government would be entitled to take a very close look at the situation to see whether or not, in the interests of national pride and in the interests of protecting the investment in their national capital being made by the taxpayers of Canada as a whole, it might be advisable for the government of Canada to establish a department or commission to operate the civic affairs of the city of Ottawa. I have been in many cities of Canada and I have yet to see a more disgraceful civic administration.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is utter rot.

Mr. Regier: Look at the snow situation and the potholes. There is a lack of civic responsibility. You only have to read the press to become aware of the goings on at the local city hall. It is a disgrace to Canada. While I say again that I ought to be the last one to advocate such action—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): You certainly should be.

Mr. Regier: —and while not advocating at this time that the government of Canada move in on behalf of the people of Canada, I do say that the local situation can stand real consideration because obviously those who administer the affairs of Ottawa are more interested in their local petty parish pump politics than they are in developing a capital city of which all Canadians can be proud.

Mr. Walker: May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it is only because it is five o'clock that I do not reply to the outrageous attack by the hon. member on the city of Ottawa.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE ELECTORAL DISTRICTS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Representation Act (Title changed from "An Act to amend the Representation Act and the Canada Elections Act").

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly and leave a thought with the government with respect to this bill in the light of the discussion we had yesterday. There was some thought expressed yesterday that perhaps the powers of the chief electoral officer were sufficiently broad to allow him to make the necessary appointment of additional election clerks and other officers without the necessity of making a specific amendment to the Canada Elections Act. I find that the only such power of this sort is contained in section 5, subsection 2 of the Canada Elections Act, where specific and extraordinary powers are given to the chief electoral officer. I would point out that he can only exercise those particular powers to appoint additional people after the election has been called. I think that the vast area covered in the electoral district mentioned in the bill before us, would make it clearly impossible to conduct an election with any degree of efficiency and provide for these people, if the necessary steps could only be taken during this period between the calling of the election and election day.

There is one other point I should like to leave with the government. The proposed clause 4 in the bill which preceded this one, and which sought to amend the Canada Elections Act, made reference to the delegation of authority. At the present time there is no such authority in the Canada Elections Act. I pass these thoughts along and perhaps we could get an indication from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) as to whether or not the government has looked further into this matter, and whether or not we could expect a resolution and bill introducing an amendment such as that which we had to delete yesterday.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The matters of law to which the hon. member has referred are within the knowledge of the government. We are consulting the law officers of the crown with respect to them, but we have not yet received a formal opinion. I would not be surprised if a layman's opinion woud be just as correct as a written, legal opinion would be. If the opinion is as suggested, then the government will have to give careful consideration to the action it will take if this bill is to be implemented. It appears to me to be the desire of all hon. members in this house that the bill shall be implemented.

Mr. Howard: Will the minister permit a question before he resumes his seat? Can he indicate whether or not discussions have also taken place with the chief electoral officer, because I think he would have intimate knowledge of his responsibilities and the possibility of implementing the bill before us.

Mr. Nowlan: There have been no discussions, so far as I know, with the chief electoral officer, although I think possibly Mr. Speaker may have been in touch with him with respect to the ruling he gave yesterday. He is, therefore, fully conversant with the circumstances.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Nielsen: May I just impose upon the good nature of the house for a moment to express the gratitude of all northern residents in these two districts for the fine cooperation of all members of the house in seeing that the franchise, which for many years was denied, has been finally granted to these northern Canadians.

Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE AGE OF VOTERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-16, to amend the Canadian Elections Act (Age of voters).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the house has been so agreeable on three separate occasions now to extending the franchise to a group of people who live in the northern part of the country, that I am quite sure it will be equally agreeable in giving passage to this bill in order that another group of people in the country may have the franchise extended to them. I am talking of that group of people who are between the ages of 18 and 21. The bill before us has the one principle of extending the right to vote in federal elections to citizens in the country who are 18 years of age and over.

This matter was raised by me—I do not say this was the first time it was raised—during the time the standing committee on privilege and elections was considering amendments and revisions to the Canada Elections Act in 1960. It was in that committee in May 19, 1960, that the proposal I made then, the same one as I am making now, was considered and defeated by a vote of 8 to 2. Subsequent to that, in the same session of 1960, when the bill was reported from the committee, we moved a procedural motion on third reading with the clear intent of providing the right to vote to people of 18 years of age. This amendment did not receive the support of the majority of the members of the house. The Liberals voted with us on that occasion, even though they had voted against us in the committee.
