Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure this morning to speak to Bill C–88, a bill to establish Canada's participation in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

In speaking for the Liberal Party, in general I must say that we support the establishment of this bank and Canada's participation in the bank, but we would like to hear the government be on record as to a couple of particular concerns that we have.

The bill that is before us this morning, establishing Canada's participation in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, is understood as important because it is addressing a very urgent critical situation which exists in East European countries and the Soviet Union today. Even this week, day by day, we are becoming more aware of the very crisis that exists in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, which in some ways has the possibility of rivalling the Gulf crisis in its severity.

We are hearing, and we know, that Mr. Gorbatchev, the President of the Soviet Union, is committed to glasnost and perestroika. We support his policy initiatives and his desire to see the region become more democratic. But we understand, as well, that the upheaval of that change is enormous and we see the consequences of that upheaval today with a breakdown in the delivery of food to the citizens of the Soviet Union, in particular, and the difficult attempts that are being made to change the Soviet Union from a state-oriented economy to a free market economy. We see on a rather regular basis the results of racial and ethnic tensions erupting in the region. We realize that, if we in the western world are going to keep the lid on this critical situation and keep the process that Mr. Gorbatchev has in mind progressing, then we must do our part in Canada to assist the process.

In April and May of this year, I had the opportunity of visiting the Soviet Union and East Germany. It was very evident from that visit that a lot of assistance was required and certainly the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade recommended that Canada establish new ways of relating and supporting the transition process in the Soviet Union and east European countries, as well as opening up new avenues of our involvement in the area.

The bill before us today, not only authorizes Canada to participate in the bank as a member of the executive board of the bank, but also authorizes an expenditure by Canada of Canadian dollars in support of the capital base of the bank.

The total capital base of the bank will be $10 billion European currency units, or approximately $14 billion Canadian, with 30 per cent of that amount to be paid in initially. The Canadian share of the bank, as my colleague across the floor said, will be 3.4 per cent, entailing a paid-in investment of approximately $30 million Canadian each year for five years. This share ensures Canada a seat on the executive board of the bank as the eighth largest contributor behind the U.S.A.

What is worthy of note with this particular bank that makes it different from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund—which people have suggested could fulfil the role of the EBRD—is that the U.S.A. will hold only a 10 per cent share of the proposed European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It holds the majority share of the the World Bank and the IMF. The other G-7 countries will each share approximately 8 per cent and the Soviet Union will share 6 per cent of the shares in the EBRD.

Beyond, I think the Canadian public would want to know who will hold shares in the bank. That would include most of the countries of Europe and the G-7. They would also want to know who the recipient countries are going to be when this bank is set up and functioning. The recipient countries will be Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and Yugoslavia. Given the difficult circumstances that exist in those countries, especially the Soviet Union today, it is important that Canada support this bank.

This morning there was a newspaper article from Moscow. It stated: "Last night in Moscow, a Soviet transport plane landed with 37 tonnes of food for Germany, a load of margarine, and 63,000 meals of lentils, noodles and a pea and meat soup will be distributed to orphans' homes, children's hospitals, and among ethnic German groups." It goes on to say that a Russian major, "an army officer and veteran of the Afghanistan war, said he felt ashamed that his country had to accept hand-outs from the Germans, the nation the Soviet Union and its allies defeated in 1945."

Although it is essential right now that the Soviet Union receive the food assistance necessary, it is important for us to formalize a process that allows the Soviet Union and east European countries to receive the support from the western world in a more dignified fashion.

One of the concerns that I have has to do with the crisis in the Soviet Union and East Germany and our need to address and highlight the need in that area. In doing this, we must not forget the extremely serious concerns of Third World countries. Because of the Middle East crisis that exists at the present time, the burden of coping for Third World countries has increased enormously. It is not just the Soviet Union and east European countries that are experiencing increased problems economically and politically these days. It is also Third World countries which are also showing some signs of moving to more democratic regimes, but because of the severe impact of the gulf crisis, on top of the international debt crisis that they have been experiencing for the last years, they are also in a very precarious situation.

The Government of Canada has said—I would like to have it on the record in the House—that the budget for what is termed official development assistance, that which goes from Canada to assist Third World developing nations, will not experience any further cutbacks. We want to ensure that official development assistance dollars will not be used to help fund the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

We have to recognize that here in Canada we have our own economic difficulties. It is also important that Canadians understand the linkages of Canada's well-being to the well-being of the world as a whole. One of the worst things that could happen to the world today would be for the richer western nations of the world to become isolationist in their policies. In the long run, Canada would suffer grievously from taking those types of policy initiatives.

Looking at the bill, there are some very positive aspects. I would like to just speak for a moment to the preamble of the bill which I think is important for one very significant reason. In the preamble, it states:

> Welcoming the intent of Central and Eastern European countries to further the practical implementation of multiparty democracy, strengthening democratic institutions, the rule of law and respect for human rights and their willingness to implement reforms in order to evolve towards market-oriented economies;

That specific reference to human rights is not in the statement of purpose. Why that is not so is not clear, but the fact that the reference to human rights exists in the preamble to the bill is important and significant.

There has been a proposal from the lawyers committee for human rights in the United States that this preamble notion of protection of human rights be given emphasis. The lawyers committee suggests that there should be developed within the structure of the bank a human rights department which would assess the human rights implications of proposed bank loans and investments through the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

It is unfortunate that the same emphasis on human rights is not given to making loans and investments through our other development banks around the world, but we hope the proposed department will be received positively and be set up. Hopefully, it could be a precedent for the other banks that exist in the world.

The lawyers committee for human rights suggests that the proposed department would provide expertise during the pre-project review and appraisal stages to enable the bank to consider, one, the effects of human rights observance in a country on the purpose or likely success of the proposed loans and investments and, two, the general and potentially reciprocal relationship between human rights observance in a country and economic development.

The results of a human rights review would be considered along with other economic factors in evaluating a proposed project. To quote their document: "The drafters of the proposed charter for the European bank for Reconstruction and Development understood that economic development in Canada and eastern Europe has been seriously impaired by the denials of basic civil, political, social and economic rights". This, I applaud; this statement, I applaud; this fact, I applaud. But why the drafters of this bank would see that very important relationship and not give full credence to the same view and value to the other development banks, including the IMF and the World Bank, is beyond me to understand.

The proposal of the lawyers committee for human rights is supported in Canada by the task force on churches and corporate responsibility. In a letter to the Minister of Finance by that group, they commented that they are hopeful that Canada, if it becomes a shareholder in the new bank, will be in agreement with the proposal to set up a human rights department, and that a similar move on human rights criteria would be possible.

A concern that we have on this side of the House with regard to the institution of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development is the fact that this will be the first of the development banks to have our Minister of Finance sit as the director rather than the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Personally, I feel that that distinction is significant because the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have a much broader view of Canadian policy vis–à–vis east European countries and the Soviet Union than the Minister of Finance who basically has shown us so many times that it does not matter what other policy or program in this country exists, or might exist, that economically it is cash that is the bottom line. It is of great concern to us really that this change has been made and we ask why would the government have done this.

One other aspect that is important and which we support on this side of the House is article 2 (vii) which states that one of the bank's purposes is to promote in the full range of its activities environmentally sound and sustainable development. I can just say again that having visited the region earlier this year, certainly the very first and impressive impact that confronts one when landing in that area is the severe and critical environmental damage that has occurred in the Soviet Union and east European countries at this very point. It is a serious crisis. If we as Canadians want to really understand the importance of cleaning up our own environmental act, one only needs to see the consequences of not acting, as they exist at this point in time in the Soviet Union and east European countries.

Certainly if western nations which will be members of the European Bank of Reconstruction and Development are going to be involved in helping the Soviet Union and east European countries to become successful democratic societies, we must give importance to all of the projects which are funded being environmentally sustainabale.

To conclude, we on this side of the House are in support of this bill. There are aspects of it which we feel are very important. The last one, that I just mentioned, the bank's funding would support only environmentally sustainable projects and programs. The second is that for the first time we have a bill that suggests and recommends that funding given to countries by western nations to developing democracies take human rights considerations into account as an important factor. I hope that factor will be seen as important wherever this country lends and invests Canadians funds.

My final word is that we support this bill, but would like the government to go on record saying that our representation on this bank will reflect Canada's total foreign policy vis–à–vis these countries and not merely dollars as the bottom line, that there is other conditionality to the funds that we will make available through the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. As well, we would like to have the government on record to say that funding for this bank will not in any way impact upon the current funding that is provided to official development assistance by this government.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I too welcome participation in the debate this morning with respect to Bill C–88, an act to provide for the membership of Canada on the board of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

It has already been mentioned by the two previous speakers. We are looking at a situation which has taken a long time to develop but which has been thrust upon the international stage in a relatively short period of time. Of course I am referring here to the dire economic situation in eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union.

After some 45 years of oppressive Marxist–Leninism, highly centralized economies, economies that could not function in the post smokestack industrial world in which we live today, industries and economic systems that could not adapt themselves to modern technology or to the electronic age, in short to the modern marketplace, have left a legacy of not only bitterness at the human level, but chaos at the economic level and in the marketplace.

Let us just pause for a moment and take a look at the central and eastern European and Soviet Union situations today. We may indeed be almost too late at this moment to assist some or many of those economies. For example, in the Soviet Union under perestroika absolute chaos reigns today. It is not that the Soviets cannot produce, they have never been able to produce enough in many areas such as food, but they cannot transport their goods and services from source to market. Consequently there is a tremendous lack of goods and foodstuffs in the Soviet Union that is creating tremendous hardship.

Indeed, this winter it is estimated that between unemployment and inflation there will probably be upward of 10 million citizens wandering the countryside looking for shelter and clothing and food alone, to say nothing of the many more millions who will be unemployed.

In eastern Europe the situation is not that much better. In areas of Poland, eastern Czechoslovakia, even in parts of Hungary, and particularly in Romania and Bulgaria, we have a growing danger and unless we can get the economic systems kick-started, there may indeed be a resort to coups d'état for the re-establishment of oppressive regimes not of the left but of the right, military, quasi-Fascist in other words.

Eastern Europeans and people in the Soviet Union have lived under such oppression for so long that they are extremely anxious to get moving and to get into the process of liberalization and democratization. Hundreds of thousands, indeed millions, may not be prepared to wait for the normal market adjustments and for the normal regulation and change from the old system to the new. This will manifest itself, I suggest, in many different ways.

As I alluded to a moment ago, I think there is going to be a period in some areas of some of those countries of extreme social chaos. I think there may be some political activism that is of an extremely unsavoury nature.

I also think that many of these younger people who do not have the ties that older family people have in central and eastern Europe may decide, as many of them already have, to pick up and move west. This is going to create tremendous stress on the economies of central and western Europe because these people know no national boundaries today in eastern Europe. They are simply moving from Poland into what is now eastern Germany, from Czechoslovakia into Germany, from Hungary into Germany and so on. It is creating a very large pool, a sort of a floating population, in central and eastern Europe that is potentially explosive. I suggest that unless we can get a handle on the orderly development and transition from the old Soviet-style economy to the more modern industrial market-oriented and liberal economies of western Europe, we may be in for a very rough time.

Madam Speaker, my party is pleased to participate in this debate. We wish to point out that we first of all do not oppose Canada's participation in this new regional development bank. We think it is extremely worth while, but we do have a few reservations.

As has already been stated, the purpose of this legislation will enable Canada to become a founding member of a regional bank for the modernization and development of eastern and central Europe. Nations potentially eligible for funding are Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the former G.D.R., Hungary, Poland, Romania, the U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia.

Yugoslavia, incidentally, is a country that is on the brink, I believe, of civil war; certainly some kind of civil disruption at this time, not based so much on its economy but because of the ethnic tensions and stresses in that area.

Canada is contributing 3.4 per cent or $479 million of the bank's capital, which ensures it a seat on the board of directors. The agreement must be in place by March 31, 1991. The EBRD will control $15 billion Canadian in funds.

This is a wonderful idea. As I said earlier, my party supports it. It was mainly the brain child of Francois Mitterrand, the President of France, and indeed the first president of the bank will be a French banker.

We have some reservations—and I will get to them in a few moments—in that the constraints being placed upon these various countries will limit the kind of enterprise into which individuals, groups and corporations can enter.

For example, public enterprises of a democratic nature will be virtually excluded. Co-operatives may indeed be excluded. There will be an overemphasis on purely private owned operations. As we know, throughout the world, economies are much healthier when there is a mix between privately owned, co-operatively owned, and publicly owned but working with the parameters of a free market in those areas, regions, and countries.

I would like to give a little background as to how Bill C-88 came about. The articles of agreement to create the EBRD was signed in Paris on May 29, 1990 by our own Minister of State for Finance at that time, along with 39 other founding countries, specifically the European Economic Community and the European Investment Bank. This bank is the result of a proposal presented, as I said a few moments ago, by French President Francois Mitterrand during a session of the European Parliament held in November 1989.

The headquarters of the bank will be located in London, England. The first president of the bank will be, as I mentioned earlier, Mr. Jacques Attali from France, an of course the agreement must be ratified by March 31, 1991.

Even though time is of the essence, we in this party would hope that the bill will go to a committee where it can be properly analysed, scrutinized and debated, so that perhaps there could conceivably be some important, positive, added input by Canada into the financial arrangements and into the construction of this kind of enterprise.

EBRD will control $10 million ECU, which is approximately $15 billion Canadian in funds. The original authorized capital stock shall be divided into paid-in shares, 30 per cent or $3 billion ECU, and into callable shares, 70 per cent or $7 billion ECU.

Prospective subscribing members are divided into four groups. The first group includes the member companies of the European Community, the European Community itself as distinct from its membership, and the European Investment Bank. This group of members would control $5.1 billion ECU or 51 per cent of the total. In this group, France, Germany, Italy and Great Britain each control 8.5 per cent of the shares.

Another group contains members of the European Free Trade Association, other European countries such as Turkey, and a middle eastern country, the state of Israel. This group will control $1.137 billion ECU or 11.37 per cent.

• (1050)

The third group includes recipient countries of central and eastern Europe and control 1.35 million ECU or 13.5 per cent.

The fourth group includes Canada, which will control 3.4 per cent of the shares, the United States, which will control 10 per cent—and this makes the United States the largest shareholder—and Japan with 8.5 per cent.

The initial paid-in capital by Canada amounts to 120 million ECU or 3.4 per cent of 3 billion ECU or U.S. $119.04 million, with payments spread over five years. Under article 6 of the agreement, payment must be in ECU, U.S. dollars or Japanese yen, based on the average exchange rate for ECU between September 30, 1989 and March 1990.

Nations potentially eligible for funding are Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the former G.D.R., Hungary, Poland, Romania, the U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia.

There are two articles of importance, particularly to me and to the New Democratic Party Article 1 states the purpose. The purpose of the EBRD is to foster the transition toward open market oriented economies and to promote private and entrepreneurial initiative in the central and eastern European countries committed to and applying the principles of multi-party pluralism and market economics. I would have hoped that in that article, along with the stress on the free marketplace and the liberalized marketplace, human rights would have been put at the top of the list because that has always been the major problem, certainly since the 1940s, in those countries. Human rights were virtually non-existent. Another clause that should have been included in article 1, as was mentioned by my Liberal colleague, was a direct and specific reference to environmental impacts. As a modern banking document, human rights and environmental concerns should have been right up there at the top of the list, along with specific market mechanisms and financial and economic mechanisms, in the article. It would have signalled a modern, contemporary approach to banking, if in the act itself setting up a new regional bank the governors of that bank would have put at the top of the list, along with banking mechanisms and instruments, respect for human rights and respect for the environment.

That to me would have been a giant step forward, but it is not there and it is unfortunate it is not there. I call upon the government to attempt to put it there in its continuing negotiations with their American, Japanese and European counterparts as we move on toward March 1991.

Turning to article 2, the activities of the EBRD are listed in this article. It is for the purposes of implementing economic reforms, including demonopolization, decentralization and privatization, promoting productive, competitive and private sector activity, to provide technical assistance for relevant projects, stimulating development of capital markets, and promoting environmentally sound activities and sustainable development. It comes in the second article, but it is not specified or emphasized.

So far so good, in our view. As I alluded to a few moments ago, we do have very serious reservations about the exclusivity of the trust and philosophy behind the setting up of this regional bank for reconstruction. It places total emphasis on the private sector in a liberalized marketplace and does not make accommodation for such things as co-operatives and state owned enterprises, which exist and flourish in many democratic countries. They used to flourish in this country in many respects, although we are doing everything we can right now to privatize those that are the most productive, effective, and efficient in their management and organization.

We would like to see some movement, some accommodation, so that this bank would simply not reflect or be a mirror image of the American, the German or the U.K. marketplace but would be broad enough and flexible enough to allow individual eastern European countries and individual republics within the Soviet Union to develop their own kinds of market oriented economies and their own kinds of market oriented enterprises. Therefore we would not restrict them or make it exclusively a private ownership kind of approach. Co-ops and even state owned enterprises would be included in this whole area of economic and commercial development.

After all, there is still a majority of international airlines in the world which are state owned. they have not all been privatized, by any stretch of the imagination. Most of the railroads, for example, in western Europe today are publicly owned; they are state owned. One has to be flexible here to allow greater latitude in the type of commercial enterprise anticipated by the EBRD.

The use of the resources and facilities of the EBRD is exclusively tied to the implementation of articles 1 and 2. This is basically what I have been talking about. The EBRD may not provide more than 40 per cent of its total committed funds to the state sector. We would like to see more committed to the state sector, including state owned enterprises.

In each individual state, no more than 40 per cent of the bank's committed funds may be provided to the state sector, and that of course is in article 11. The EBRD is required to work in close collaboration with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, as well as the OECD.

What we are doing here is perpetuating financial institutions of a totally western hue and colour. We are not allowing, I would suggest, enough creative latitude on the part of the eastern Europeans and the various republics in the Soviet Union. One should keep in mind that it is unlikely that we will be dealing with the U.S.S.R. for very much longer. As far as I can understand at this moment, the U.S.S.R. no longer exists, except in name, in the office of its president, and in the Soviet military. Within very short order we are going to be dealing with at least five or six former Soviet republics as more or less independent nations. I think that is a good thing. That is the way things are going over there, so we have to make certain that this act is amenable to accommodate those new republics which may very well become independent nations.

I understand my time is up for now. I do not know how much time I will have left following Question Period, but I will call it eleven o'clock at this time, if I may.

Madam Deputy Speaker: To answer the hon. member's question, he was allowed 40 minutes so he has a lot of time left yet. Does the House agree to calling it eleven o'clock?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 30(5), the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

BILL C-210

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Madam Speaker, Canadians are appalled at the number of foreign criminals, using Canada as a haven from justice. Our present extradition law, with its lengthy procedure, enables these fugitives to remain in Canada for years. Canadians are demanding that the extradition law be changed.

I welcomed the recent announcement of the Minister of Justice that the goal of the government was to introduce new, comprehensive extradition legislation.

A private member's bill which would limit the number of appeals available was introduced into the House of Commons by the member for Peterborough. It deserves the support of all members. The government and the Official Opposition have agreed to move this bill forward. However, the NDP is blocking the speedy passage of this legislation. I urge all hon. members to support Bill C-210.

Canadians are demanding an immediate change to the Extradition Act. Foreign criminals are not wanted in Canada.

MINING

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Madam Speaker, today it's official: we are in a recession. Its effects are particularly severe in our northern regions where the government has systematically cut assistance for resource development. I am referring to the unfortunate demise of the flow-through shares program, a Liberal policy that literally caused the rebirth of the mining industry in Canada. This program has proved be one of the best tools for regional and entrepreneurial development, which is probably why the NDP was initially against it.

Tax benefits linked to flow-through shares should be reinstated to help northern residents get their economy started again. These are dynamic people, people with vision, and they should be given the tools they need. The Tories have never understood the problems of our northern regions, and by cancelling this program, they once again demonstrate their lack of understanding.

WORLD AIDS DAY

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, tomorrow, December 1 is World AIDS Day. This year's focus, women and AIDS, recognizes the very important contribution women make in fighting this disease. While a great deal of progress has been made, anyone can be at risk. The incidence of HIV infection among women in Canada and around the world is on the rise.

In addition to becoming increasingly vulnerable to AIDS, women face an added burden. As the principal caregivers in most societies, both in the helping professions and in their traditional role as nurturers, women are called upon to bear a heavy load in this struggle.

Women are one of the identified target groups in the national strategy on AIDS. Health and Welfare is working closely with community organizations to produce education and prevention materials specifically designed for women.

This government is committed to protecting all Canadians from the further spread of this deadly disease. We are pleased to support Canada's participation in World AIDS Day.

WORLD AIDS DAY

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, tomorrow is World AIDS Day. While I would like to express my support for the thrust of this government's response to the AIDS epidemic in the form of the National AIDS Strategy released in June, it is important to realize that the strategy leaves many issues unaddressed.

The principles contained within the strategy and its direction are sound. Unfortunately, the lack of resources threatens the strategy's implementation.

The government needs to increase funding for AIDS education, research and prevention. It needs to increase funding for community groups and for human resources within the Department of National Health and Welfare. It needs to do so over the long term so that long-range planning can take place. Stronger government effort is needed to educate and inform the public. In particular, the federal government must fulfil its commitment to add sexual orientation to the human rights code.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration should remove the restrictions on travel and immigration in Canada for persons with HIV or AIDS, and resources must be made available to address the growing problem of AIDS in Canada's prisons. The federal government must also collaborate with the provinces to ensure adequate resourcing of provincial plans, anonymous AIDS testing, increased support to community groups and access to affordable treatment.

In conclusion, it is important to recognize that the minister has taken an important step forward with the National AIDS Strategy.

BILL C–210

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, Charles Ng, wanted for mass murder in California, is fighting extradition proceedings. Already he has spent five years in a Canadian prison.

Thousands of Canadians want changes to the Extradition Act. Our procedure now allows foreign fugitives to remain in Canadian custody rather than face justice at home. A bill presented by the member from Peterborough would reduce the extradition proceedings up to a year and a half.

We had the opportunity to vote and the NDP delayed the vote. The means are here to improve the act but the NDP has thwarted these efforts.

The bill should be voted on and sent to committee.

WORLD AIDS DAY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, it is not without reason that World AIDS Day on December 1 has for its focus the increasing impact of AIDS on women, for 5.2 per cent of all adult AIDS cases in our country are women.

This may appear to be a small percentage. However reports show that new cases of AIDS for women are increasing at about the same rate as that of men, an alarming and unforeseen new concern.

Women who come into contact with AIDS and HIV infection face many stresses and forms of guilt like their male counterparts. Additional harmful psychosocial effects includes blame for the risk of transmission of HIV infection to their newborn and a lack of power in negotiating sexual practice which often results in violence and abuse.

These problems will not solve themselves. It is our responsibility to do everything in our power to initiate and maintain programs that will encourage behaviour changes in both sexes, particularly education toward safer sex, responsible sex, the use of condoms, the right to advertise information on our television channels and the right and choice to just say no.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jean–Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, Mr. André R. Nadeau, president of Pinard and Nadeau, the Ford Mercury Lincoln dealer in Drummondville, in my riding, recently sent me a copy of a letter adressed to Mr. Jean Chrétien, regarding the GST.

In his letter, Mr. Nadeau points out that in anticipations of the GST, his business has taken the necessary steps to prepare for its implementation, which was done at considerable cost. He even advised his customers that the price of cars would go down after January 1, which has caused many prospective buyers to postpone their purchases.

It seems, however, that the Liberal senators are prepared to go to great lengths to further postpone the final vote on the GST.

Mr. Nadeau is very concerned. Postponing the coming into force of the GST would be a potential disaster for his business, especially now that we are experiencing an economic slowdown. He therefore urges Mr. Chrétien to allow the immediate passage of Bill C–62.

Madam Speaker, this is tangible proof of irresponsible behaviour by the Liberal Party, at the expense of Canadian men and women.

ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, the headlines in today's newspapers say it is official. We are in a recession. That is no news to Atlantic Canada. To prove my point let us review some headlines from Atlantic Canada on this government's economic mismanagement over the last two years. "New Brunswick to be hardest hit by VIA cuts"; "Military cuts, closures will hurt Nova Scotia"; "Federal funding cuts threaten troubled provinces"; "Change in grant policy another blow to ACOA"; "Maritime lads starve as Ontario gets fat"; "Atlantic chill"; "APEC sees $72 million yearly loss for Maritimes in military cuts"; "GST already damaging Nova Scotia economy"; "Federal policy hard on Atlantic economy"; "Nova Scotia to lose $40 million in UI benefits"; "Ottawa's bad–news downpour has Atlantic residents reeling"; "Atlantic Canada, the nation's economic wasteland gets wasted again".

This is a consequential headline: "Tory support in Atlantic Canada at an all-time low".

However, there is one headline that is about to be written for December 11 that offers hope. That headline will read: "Jean Chrétien elected member of Parliament for the riding of Beauséjour". For the sake of Canada, that headline cannot come quickly enough.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Madam Speaker, I want to assure veterans and their dependants that the expenditure reductions announced last Friday will not affect their programs and benefits in any way whatsoever.

True, the veterans affairs ministry is having to bear its fair share of the cuts revealed in the supplementary estimates and has had to budget for $3.26 million in reductions. However, veterans affairs is managing to tighten its belt without touching direct services to veterans.

Mr. Cliff Chadderton, President of the War Amputations of Canada has applauded the approach taken by the ministry. In a news release Mr. Chadderton said the ministry's plan which includes a freeze on hiring is "a very gutsy decision by Veterans Affairs Minister Gerry Merrithew" and "is in keeping with the promise that the level of veterans benefits will not be disturbed".

I also congratulate the minister for ensuring that it will be business as usual for veterans and their families.

UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, 43 years ago on November 29 the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted resolution 181 (II). Known as the "partition resolution", it provided for a Jewish state and an Arab state, with Jerusalem under special international regime.

Since only the Jewish state came into being, the UN General Assembly in 1979, by resolution 34/65(D) requested member states to observe November 29 as the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. The President and Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the Security Council lead a meeting of governmental and NGO representatives, and a message is read from the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The objectives are: one, to draw the urgent attention of the international community to the continuing plight of the Palestinian people; and, two, to mobilize international public opinion in support of a just and peaceful settlement that recognizes the right of Palestinians to return home and to establish their own state in Palestine.

FISHERIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, quillback rock cod tops the culinary list of Vancouver's Chinese Canadian community and is enjoyed by residents of Vancouver and tourists alike throughout the Pacific Rim.

The Chinese community in Vancouver is concerned about the Department of Fisheries proposal to reallocate quillback to the sportfishing sector and to impose a 300 tonne commercial quota without limiting entry requirements for full-time vessels. Without limited entry, the planned commercial cap will lead to a three-month season, making this fresh seafood available only from May to August.

While the volume production of quillback is relatively small, the social and economic returns are high. This labour-intensive fishery employs many people who maintain the live fish until sale, as well as supply wholesale and retail outlets.

The industry warns that the quillback stock could die within two years. On behalf of my constituents, supported by petitions which we will table later, I ask the minister to impose a limited entry program on vessels, to establish an eight-month season on all Gulf fishing to protect the stock during spawning season, and to reverse the quillback allocation from commercial to sport by introducing the factors of culture and employment to the decision-making process.

Most important, I remind the minister, and of course the Speaker knows as well, of the unique importance of this fragile industry to the cultural mosaic of Vancouver and the British Columbia coast.

FLEUVE ET MUSIQUE FESTIVAL

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Madam Speaker, environmental awareness remains essential if we want to change our habits. This year, over 15,000 people took part in the Fleuve et Musique festival in Repentigny, in my riding, a successful event that was made possible partly thanks to federal support.

This week, Fleuve et Musique received support from the United Nations, through the UN Environmental Program, for the fourth edition of a festival that has become both national and international in scope.

I support the organizers of this great ecological happening, especially Mr. Pierre Lussier and his team. I urge them to keep up the good work and I want to congratulate them on their dedication to this worthy cause. As in the past, they can count on my support, and I hope the Canadian government will support a project that makes a vital contribution to environmental awareness in this country.

LANDFILL SITES

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, the Keele Valley landfill site in the federal riding of York North is expected to reach capacity in 14 months. To the shock and amazement of North York residents, the provincial NDP environment minister last week cancelled plans for two alternate landfill sites in favour of overfilling the Keele Valley site.

Keele Valley is part of the environmentally sensitive Oakridges moraine where area residents and environmentalists are struggling to ensure the protection of wildlife and fresh water spawning, and to stop development that would destroy the area's sensitive habitat forever.

Toronto's waste disposal problem is even ending up in the national capital region, as garbage is shipped to landfill sites just outside the city of Ottawa. For a government that wants to come across as the great green defender, the provincial NDP are looking more and more like the grey federal Tories.

EDUCATION

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Madam Speaker, more and more Canadians are recognizing the true value of higher education to both individual and national development. Mark Gerson, a Toronto journalist, is a good example. In his recent Globe and Mail article "Stop Squawking and Start Thinking" he raises a number of interesting considerations on the subject.

For example, should we consider a trimester system which ensures year-round use of university facilities and spread the student labour pool beyond the summer months, or should we actually merge or close some facilities or programs, to name just two.

In the end, the article's central theme is that we do not need some sort of knee-jerk exercise. Rather, what we need is an all-encompassing review of the future of higher education based on critical thinking.

He also proposes that such a review should include whether there is a need for a stronger federal presence in higher education.

Madam Speaker, Mr. Gerson adds his voice to the growing number of Canadians who are seeking more from our educational system. Canadians need and deserve a system which prepares them for productive employment and lifelong learning opportunities.

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it is not often that a New Democrat has the opportunity to get up in this House and thank corporate Canada for its donations to the country, but I would specifically like to thank the Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company, the Empire Life Insurance Company and Beatrice Foods company and Curragh Resources Inc. for allowing the member for Vancouver Quadra to be in the House today.

I am sure his constituents and members of Parliament are very glad that he has had this opportunity. We would like to thank the corporation specifically for replacing Jean Chrétien who had exactly the same type of attendance in the House of Commons when he was on so many boards of directors and when he was in opposition, and felt no need to attend the House of Commons.

WORLD AIDS DAY

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, tomorrow is World AIDS Day. This year, the emphasis is on women and AIDS.

The World Health Organization estimated that one third of the 8 to 10 millions infected with HIV worldwide are women. In the year 2000, there will probably be an equal number of new AIDS cases among women and men every year. On some 4,500 AIDS cases reported in Canada, nearly 5 p. 100 are women.

In Canada as everywhere in the world, women are increasingly affected by this pandemic disease. There are indeed the women who are themselves infected with HIV, those whose child or spouse are as well as all women health care workers, teachers, social workers and counsellors.

Women do play a key role in preventing the spread of HIV and they have been identified as a target group in our National AIDS Strategy.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time is up. We shall now move to oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Today, Statistics Canada has confirmed what thousands of Canadians who have been losing their jobs, farms, homes, and businesses have known for months. Statistics Canada has told us that the economy has actually shrunk for a total of the past six months, and that is the official definition of a recession.

Will the Minister of Finance finally use the dreaded r word and admit what everybody else in the country has known for months, that we are in a recession? Will he take steps today to get us out of this recession, the economic mess that his policies have created for all too many Canadians?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that I have been quite forthright with the Canadian people in talking about the weakness that we can expect in the economy this year. I mentioned that first in my budget of February of this year.

We are in a recession. The numbers in the Statistics Canada release today confirm that. This is something that has been apparent for some while now. I think it is significant, though, to observe that the numbers today are not as negative as what some economists had been calling for. There was some reduction in the level of negative activity in the second quarter, from minus 1.6 to minus 1.2. It is important to keep these statistics in perspective here.

There is weakness in the economy. That is very clear. But it is important that we not overdo this by excessive rhetoric about the state of that weakness. We are certainly not anything like we were in 1981–82, but it does mean that we have to do what we can to get interest rates down. As I have indicated on many occasions in the House, when we can see the easing of the inflationary pressures continue, we will be able to get interest rates down further.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, Canadians will find it astounding that the minister, in effect, says that he is sticking with the very policies that have gotten us into the economic mess that Statistics Canada has confirmed today.

Statistics Canada has identified high interest rates and the high dollar as major contributors to the massacre now under way in the manufacturing sector and, in fact, in just about every sector of the Canadian economy. This minister is sleep-walking to economic disaster, and he is dragging Canadians unwillingly along with him.

Will the Minister of Finance admit that his budget of last February was totally wrong and is now out of date, and that, in fact, his projections of growth and interest rates were totally wrong? Therefore, will he bring in a new budget right away to end the economic nightmare that his policies of recession, which he admits he has been putting in place, have been creating for Canadians and the economy? Will he do this today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this underscores the point that I have just made. We said in the budget that we are expecting an increase in the economy over the course of this year of 1.3 per cent. In fact, these numbers confirms that we are at about 1.0 per cent. That is very little change from what the projection was at the time of the budget.

I have commented on the deficit in the House. We are on track for something slightly less than $30 billion for this fiscal year. The deviation from my projection in the budget is equivalent to about 1 per cent of total spending. So, it is not a major deviation.

I do want to point out that consumer spending in the third quarter rose by 1.1 per cent. Residential investment and the non-residential investment, while off significantly, are coming off at extremely high levels of activity. In the case of housing, for four years running we were in excess of 200,000 housing starts a year. We had a huge investment boom in 1987 through 1989.

Another key factor here, going into this recession, is that interest rates were about 14 per cent whereas, in 1981-82, they were 21 per cent. The inventory balance is much better this time around than was the case in 1981-82.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, when the minister talked about the projections in his budget, he did not say a word about his projections on interest rates, and how the facts show the extent to which he is going to be off base on those.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance can no longer ignore the facts. Statistics Canada confirmed today that we are in a full-scale recession. I therefore want to ask the Minister of Finance to tell us exactly how long this recession will last and how much longer the minister intends to hide his head in the sand, instead of facing the facts and introducing new policies that will get us out of a recession that was brought about by the Minister of Finance in the first place.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is very frustrating to listen to the misleading statements that the Leader of the Opposition continues to make. I have commented on these on a number of occasions and I will continue to state what our best judgment is. I would match the record of our recommendations, our estimates, and our deficit projections of the economic and interest rate activity against the government of which he was a part any day, at any time of day.

The hon. member asks how long do we expect this recession to continue. I have said on many occasions that one of the key elements here is the inflationary pressures. We have seen some easing of inflationary pressures and we have been able to match that by close to 200 basis points drop in interest rates. We will continue to see those interest rates drop as we see inflationary pressures ease. Our expectations for the second half of next year is that we will see a recovery. But what we are putting in place now is a base for a return to non-inflationary growth on a solid basis well into the 1990s.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, so we are in a recession. This comes as no surprise to the thousands of Canadians who have lost their homes, farms, jobs, and their businesses.

There are only two possibilities: either the government has deliberately driven us into recession, or the government simply did not know what it was doing. Which is it?

An hon. member: Give it to him, Mike.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we have had seven and a half years of strong economic activity in the country. As we have gone through this period of strong economic activity, there have been inflationary pressures building up. We have seen that in the investment boom and the housing boom we had in the 1987–88–89 period. The economy reached a point where there needed to be some catching of its breath.

We also saw, during the course of this period, significant inflationary pressures. We have had to take action to lean against those inflationary pressures and that resulted in higher interest rates. We are seeing some signs that those inflationary pressures are easing, but they are still there.

Mr. Martin: You're strangling the economy.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member from LaSalle—Émard is saying that the inflationary pressures are not there. They are very clearly there.

The inflationary pressures are clearly there. I have commented on these on a number of occasions. We are committed to getting these inflationary pressures turned down. If we are able to get the inflationary pressures easing further, we will see further reductions in interest rates.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of the economy catching its breath, it is a question of the government having put a noose around the neck of Canadians.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peterson: The minister predicted in his budget a growth rate of 1.3 per cent for this calendar year. In order to reach this figure, we will have to have a growth rate of about 5 per cent in the last three months which we are now in.

Will the minister admit today that his growth forecast, just like his interest rate forecast, is way off the mark? Will he admit today his incompetence?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I will say is the hon. member's figures are wrong. The projection that we are making for economic growth for this current calendar year is 1 per cent. That compares to 1.3 per cent in the budget that I brought down in February of this year.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): That's a 25 per cent drop.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Point three of 1 per cent in an economy of about $600 billion is not a very large reduction.

An hon. member: Tell that to all those people who have lost their jobs.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, it is official. Just like the Liberals in 1981–82, this government has led us into a recession. What is scary is that investment has decreased, exports have decreased, and the worst figures on economic growth are from the most recent months, August and September. I quote from Statistics Canada: "These were the largest back-to-back declines since April, 1982."

Will the Minister of Finance now admit that we are heading into a severe recession, hurting older workers, hurting young people, hurting women, and hurting poor people right across the country? Will he admit that this is a serious and important recession to which he has to respond?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this is precisely the excessive rhetoric that I think hon. members should avoid.

We are not in the same type of recession as 1981–82. We went into 1981–82 with interest rates in excess of 21 per cent. This time the peak in the interest rate was 14 per cent. In 1981–82, we had a major imbalance, a major build-up of inventories and in the recession there was a huge drop. We are not in an imbalanced inventory position anything near what we were in in 1981–82.

That does not take away from the fact that we are in a recession, that businesses are hurting, and that people are hurting. That is why we brought interest rates down by close to two percentage points. As I have indicated on many occasions in the House, we will see a continuation of that if we are confident that we can keep our inflationary pressures under control.

I remind the hon. member that there is a recession under way in the United States, the United Kingdom, and Australia, so that this is not something that is purely a Canadian phenomenon. The difference between now and 1981–82 is that the Japanese and German economies are growing quite strongly.

• (1130 )

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I am not certain why the Minister of Finance thinks he can get away with that kind of nonsense.

He says that the United States is in recession. In fact, the third quarter figures in the United States showed a significant advance in economic growth, whereas the figures that have just come out show a decline. That is the reality and the minister knows it.

Like many members of Parliament, I have had—

Madam Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member might want to put a question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Your lights are out.

Mr. Langdon: Joe, if you stood up, perhaps you would be even smarter.

My question to the minister is this: Across this country, there are people weeping because of the jobs they have lost, because of the farms they have lost and because of the businesses they have lost. Is the minister prepared to take some action to change his policy thrust? Is he prepared—

Madam Deputy Speaker: There was a question, I think.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have made statements in this House on many occasions. The basis for which we kept interest rates high up until the spring of this year was because we had significant inflationary pressures that, if we had let stand, they would have got out of control as they have in the United Kingdom today, where their inflation rate for 2 months running has been just short of 11 per cent.

In 1988, the British inflation rate and the Canadian inflation rate were about the same. That is the problem that we have avoided. The United Kingdom is going into its recession starting at much higher levels of inflation and much higher levels of interest rates. If I were in the shoes of my counterpart over there, I would not be very happy.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, it is the minister's responsibility to deal with this country and he has done a very poor job of it, as these statistics today show.

Canadians right across the country are feeling the impact of this very deep recession. So I ask the minister whether he is now prepared to change his policies? Is he prepared to lower the unduly high interest rates in this country? Is he prepared to reduce the value of our dollar to help Canadian exporters?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can understand why the hon. member would insist on choosing the kind of excessive words he used in his question. We are in a recession, but it is not as severe as the 1981–82 recession. Current interest rates stand at 12 per cent, but in 1981 they reached 21 per cent and even more. The balance of inventories is now better than it was during the previous recession. My colleague would be well advised to weigh his comments and avoid using overly excessive words.

PERSIAN GULF

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some states, notably the Soviet Union, have conditioned their support for yesterday's Security Council resolution authorizing force against Iraq on the need for the international community to try one more time to seek a peaceful resolution to the crisis.

Here in Canada, both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the choice of peace or war in the Persian Gulf is entirely in the hands of Iraq. Will Canadians be hearing from the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister about a Canadian initiative to encourage a peaceful resolution in the gulf or is it the government's position that we leave that role to others?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is inadvertent I am sure that the hon. member misleads the House.

The Security Council resolution that was voted yesterday, supported and indeed sponsored by Canada along with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and others, talks about a pause of goodwill.

As I indicated yesterday in some comments, that pause of goodwill proposal was in fact proposed by Mr. Gorbatchev on behalf of the Soviet Union in negotiations of which Canada was a very active and full partner. We were seeking to have a resolution which could send a very clear, unmistakable signal to Saddam Hussein that force would be used but that it would not be triggered with the adoption of the resolution yesterday.

What would begin with the adoption of the resolution yesterday was a period of time, some 47 days, in which it would be possible for all of us to try to seek some basis on which the Security Council resolutions could be respected, Kuwait could be restored to her sovereignty and the world could get on with the rest of its business.

Has Canada been involved in taking initiatives of this kind? Of course we have. I have just returned from extensive consultations in the Middle East. My colleague, the Minister of National Defence, was doing the same thing. During those discussions, we had conversations about, for example, the possibility of the kind of force that might be placed in Kuwait in a period after there had been a withdrawal of Iraqi forces were that to be the result of discussions between Iraq and Kuwait.

We have talked about a range of means by which the world, including with some help from a respected middle power like Canada, may be able to persuade Saddam Hussein that the rest of the world is very serious about the position that we have taken.

We are taking a number of initiatives. We will continue to take them, and I would hope that in future we, and the United Nations, might have the support of the Liberal Party in this House.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I was trying to ask the Secretary of State what our next step was, not are we taking a pause to do nothing.

The UN resolution supported yesterday in the Security Council authorizes: "that member states use all necessary means to uphold and implement Security Council resolution 660 and all subsequent relevant resolutions and to restore international peace and security in the area."

Is the Government of Canada concerned that all necessary means, in effect, can encourage any country to use, for example, chemical weapons against Iraq, claiming justification on the basis of this resolution?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am aware of international conventions signed by Canada and by the other countries that supported that resolution.

They have been breached by one country, Iraq. It would be an absurd distortion of the work of the United Nations for the hon. member to try to have the interpretation she has just put forward on behalf of the Liberal Party apply.

I was surprised, frankly, that the member did not ask me questions about sanctions. I have read about those questions being asked, but they have never been put to me in this House. Sanctions are the thin veil behind which the Liberal Party is hiding its failure to support the United Nations.

I am quite prepared to answer questions on that matter in this House. I am also quite prepared to put in place arrangements—if I have the attention of the House leader of the Official Opposition—that will ensure very full briefings for members of Parliament.

I can do that on two bases. I can do that on a basis that is available to all members of Parliament, or in addition to that, I can do it on the basis of a briefing available to Privy Councillors.

The House will understand that some of the information that is available is highly sensitive. I am prepared to do everything within my power, as this government has been from the beginning, to ensure that the House of Commons can make fully informed decisions about this issue which is critical to Canada, not only because we want to achieve peace in the gulf, but also because we want to maintain the momentum that we have built up for the United Nations.

For the United Nations to fail, for it to be backed away from as it was in this House yesterday, would be a tragedy for all that Canada has stood for over more than 40 years in foreign policy.

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, prior to my question to the Minister of National Defence, I would point out to the Secretary of State for External Affairs why he is not forcing Committee 661, of which we are vice-chair, to give us a report on economic sanctions. They have been in existence for how long?

Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The minister knows that the Order in Council passed September 15 sending our forces to the Persian Gulf cited only those Security Council resolutions related to the enforcement of economic sanctions against Iraq.

Can the minister say whether this government will bring forward a new Order in Council to cover the resolutions passed yesterday at the UN, calling for the use of "all necessary means" to get Iraq out of Kuwait?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member forgot to mention that in the Order in Council which dispatched Canadian men and women to serve in the multinational effort was the deterrence of aggression.

I informed the House during the debate that took place the day before yesterday that if there was a change in the commitment of the Canadian forces, if there was a need to bring about that change, it would be brought forward to the House at that time.

This time what is covered in the Order in Council, the presence of the Canadian forces there and their capability and the tasks they have assumed, are perfectly concurrent and will remain that way. If there is any change, we will inform the House in due time.

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): My supplementary is to the Minister of National Defence. Again, it is a question of interpretation, I am sure. Yes, the Order in Council used military forces, but it was to enforce economic sanctions of resolution 665.

We have had many resolutions since that, particularly yesterday's. The National Defence Act says that there must be an Order in Council specifying why our forces are going over there, particularly in light of yesterday, whereby after January 15 we will be sending them into a forum of war.

Will we at least have a debate in this House before January 15? Will he assure us that there will be a debate. He knows that the recess is coming. Will he assure us that there will be a debate on the change of our forces' role in the Persian Gulf after January 15, 1990?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would ask my hon. colleague to review the National Defence Act. What the government did was comply with convention. We felt it was important to have a debate that would allow us to bring forward the Order in Council. It was not a legal requirement. It was something the government did because we believed it was important that the House put its signature on what we were doing at the time.

As I said earlier to the hon. member, if there is a change in the role of the Canadian forces, we have said, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, the Prime Minister has said, that we would bring it forward to the House for debate in due course.

I can assure the hon. member that there has been no change in the role of the Canadian forces in their function, in reality and in practice. They are there to enforce the world's condemnation of Iraq. They are there to bring about peace and security in a region where it is important, and I would hope that the Liberal Party would support them.

Madam Deputy Speaker: We are getting into speeches today when this is a very important matter.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the gulf crisis.

Reports from Washington now state that the United States pushed the United Nations Security Council for a January 15 deadline because of declining troop morale, loss of domestic political support, changing weather conditions in the gulf and the approaching religious holidays. None of these reasons justify a deadline for war.

Are these the reasons the United States government gave to Canada for the necessity of the January 15 deadline?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member unfortunately is misinformed.

The idea of the pause did not come from the United States. The idea of the pause came from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. It was proposed personally by President Gorbatchev in the discussions involving a number of world leaders with regard to the most effective way in which this matter could be dealt with in the United Nations.

Nor is it a deadline, nor is it an ultimatum. As the language of the resolution makes very clear, language voted for by everyone there except China, Yemen, and Cuba, it is a pause of goodwill. It is designed very explicitly—and the debate in the Security Council made that clear yesterday—to provide Saddam Hussein with a strong incentive to consider his options and to look for a way to peace.

I have just been informed—I have not confirmed this myself—that President Bush, in pursuance of this initiative, has just invited Tariq Aziz, the foreign minister of Iraq, to come to Washington and has indicated his willingness to have Secretary Baker go to Baghdad as one of several steps; some that Canada is taking, some that other countries are taking, to try to ensure that we use this pause productively so that we can end this situation peacefully in accordance with the resolution of the Security Council.

It was clear that before yesterday' action Saddam Hussein thought the world was bluffing and he was not prepared to seek a peaceful solution. We hope that that illusion has now been swept away and that he too will join the rest of us in seeking a peaceful solution.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister.

Canadians are not only facing a war crisis. We are facing an information crisis. Yesterday the government gave no information on the effectiveness of sanctions, and now it refuses to admit the real reasons for justifying the January 15 deadline.

This government continually talks of a pause of goodwill. Is not January 15 nothing more than an artificial and arbitrary deadline for war?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, it is not. I am sorry to have to repeat this several times to the member; I think the rest of the House understands.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What it does is create a period in which it is possible first for the world to signal its seriousness to Saddam Hussein. The colleagues of the hon. member who put the question are shouting so that he cannot hear my answer.

First, it was seeking to send a very serious message to Saddam Hussein so that he would be prepared to enter into the kind of serious work that could lead to a peaceful solution but, second, it very explicitly declined to follow the normal practice which would have made the capacity to use force effective yesterday, and instead of yesterday it will be effective some time in the future.

This gives the world 47 days to work for peace. I think that is considerably better than having a situation in which there could have been the threat of force, the use of force, triggered yesterday. What was triggered yesterday was a process that can lead to peace if Saddam Hussein seeks peace.

I would hope that members of this House of Commons will put aside whatever ideology is driving them and join us in trying to find a solution to one of the most serious crises the world has faced in the last 40 years.

HEALTH

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the seroprevalence studies which have just been made public and which indicate the presence of HIV infection in women, and considering that this year's theme for World AIDS Day is «Women and AIDS», would the minister tell the House what the government is doing to protect women against this fearful disease?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As the hon. member said, Madam Speaker,

December 1 is World AIDS Day and the theme is "Women and AIDS". According to the World Health Organization, one third of AIDS-infected people in the world are women.

[English]

We have taken a number of actions in Canada to try to address this problem, including the distribution of information kits to AIDS organizations and women's groups, the production of posters to help to educate people, the funding of a national conference and local workshops, the distribution of a special pamphlet on women and AIDS, and the development of a discussion paper on preventive strategies for women.

• (1150)

In this way we hope that we can stop this needless tragedy before more lives are lost.

BÉLANGER-CAMPEAU COMMISSION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We know that the Prime Minister had a private meeting with co-chairmen Bélanger and Campeau. We also know that the Meech Lake failure was largely due to the closed doors process. Why is the Prime Minister now making the same mistake? Why is he not prepared to appear publicly before the Bélanger-Campeau Commission?

[English]

Mr. Andre: The failure was due to Jean Chrétien and Pierre Trudeau.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, my understanding is that under the terms of reference of the Bélanger-Campeau Commission it is not entertaining representations by elected members of Parliament and elected officials. That is my understanding. I may stand to be corrected on that but, if that is the case, then it obviously speaks for itself.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is not aware of the fact that members of Parliament have already appeared before the commission. Surely the Prime Minister of Canada has the right to speak publicly for Canada before that commission. The public is tired of secret meetings and closed door, back-room politics.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister commit the government today to a public appearance by the Prime Minister to speak for Canada before the Bélanger-Campeau Commission?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we have set up the Spicer commission to obtain the views of all Canadians about the future of Canada. There are various commissions undertaking studies and assessments into Canada's future that are being conducted by all of the provinces. Is the hon. member suggesting that the Prime Minister should appear before all of them?

My sense is that the federal government's leadership is being demonstrated in the establishment of the Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future. Obviously, on the basis of the input that is going to be received, the federal government will take further action down the road.

It has been pretty clear that what has been lacking in this whole process is the lack of opportunity for individual Canadians to participate in the process. We have provided that vehicle. Why doesn't the hon. member give it a chance to work? I think it deserves a fair chance.

MINING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is for his parliamentary secretary.

The parliamentary secretary knows that in the community of Elliot Lake this year the mining industry has lost some 2,200 direct jobs and many more in the secondary sector. Similar losses were suffered in other areas of northeastern Ontario last year, representing over 15 per cent of all the direct mining jobs in the region.

Do the parliamentary secretary and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources agree with their estimate in 1988 that at least $1.3 billion a year has to be spent on exploration in the mining sector in order to maintain this sector and maintain the employment?

Does the parliamentary secretary, on behalf of the government, agree with that estimate of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I can certainly agree with the hon. member for Algoma that his community, along with mine and other parts of northeastern Ontario, is going through a very difficult time in terms of mining.

The fact is that resources are mined and they come to depletion. There are also other pressures out there. The world price dictates the price of material not only in northeastern Ontario, but across Canada.

As a department we have certainly been monitoring and looking to see what can help not only Algoma and Timiskaming but other parts of the country. As well, through Employment and Immigration and through federal government committees chaired by ministers, we are looking at economic development and we will certainly continue to do that.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance.

The minister will be meeting today with some mayors and reeves from municipalities in northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec representing 40 mining communities.

For 1991 the projection of exploration and development will fall to about one-third of what the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources estimates is needed in order to maintain the mining industry.

Would the minister make a commitment today to bring in new incentives to promote mineral exploration and development and ensure the very future of these mining communities, so that there will be adequate exploration taking place and the haemorrhaging and loss of jobs will be stopped?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am looking forward to meeting the mayors from northern Ontario and listening to the points of view they will be expressing to me.

We are concerned, as the parliamentary secretary has just expressed. This matter is a world-wide problem. We have looked at our incentives in relation to other countries. We believe a very competitive set of incentives is in place now. The price of gold has been under pressure. This is affecting the willingness of companies to spend money in new exploration.

The fact that northwestern Quebec has a significantly higher rate of depletion supports the flow-through share concept and is not drawing large amounts of moneys from investors. I think that is a significant element in this whole problem.

As the parliamentary secretary and I said, we are looking at various alternatives here. I am looking forward to my meeting.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Farmers do not have to see the figures today from Statistics Canada to know that for some time they have been in a recession. In fact farmers across the country are suffering.

In Saskatchewan we are facing the worst situation we have seen since the 1930s, with an average of four new foreclosure notices going on every single day.

What we need in this country is a permanent agricultural farm bill, which the minister has promised but has not yet delivered.

Will the minister be introducing a farm bill in this House before Christmas so that we can begin to give it the detailed study and debate required to have it in place for the 1991 crop year?

Discussions have been continuing with the provinces, because it will be a shared responsibility. We are pleased to report to the hon. member that we have reached agreement in principle on the major components of the program. It is our intention, hopefully, to work out the details so that we can have in place an improved safety net and stabilization program for the 1991-92 crop year.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, that is important, but it is also important that the bill is thoroughly debated in the House. If it is to be in place for the 1990–91 crop year, it should come to the House shortly.

Some 24 farm and rural groups from across the province of Saskatchewan will meet tomorrow in Grayson to search for solutions to this tragic situation, and a strong viable agricultural base is crucial to the future.

Will the minister give a message to the people who will meet in Grayson that in fact the bill will be in the House before Christmas so that we can begin the debate and have the bill and a program in place for farmers for the 1991 crop year? Will he give some assurance that bill will be in the House before Christmas?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, indeed it is a tragic situation. One of the issues we will be pursuing collectively as the government and with other like-minded agriculture exporting nations is the negotiations at Brussels involving the GATT, where we are firmly committed to ending the grain subsidy war by the reduction and indeed the removal of all export subsidies, along with greater market orientation and improved market access.

We believe this strikes at the very heart and core of the problems that western Canadian oilseed and grain producers are facing. We are clearly attacking this issue on two fronts: the international front and the domestic front. I would hope we will be in a position to provide those words of encouragement to which the hon. member has referred.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns the case of a Quebec minor, Maxime Gariépy, who has been held in a Florida prison for the past few months. The young man pleaded guilty and was sentenced to life imprisonment for a crime involving rather unusual circumstances. Could the Minister of Justice confirm that the government has been asked to consider a transfer to Canada and that it has the necessary information? Could she inform the House when, approximately, she will decide to allow this Canadian to serve his sentence in the country? Furthermore, since we have been informed that this young man suffered a severe beating in the U.S. prison, I would like to ask the Minister whether she could arrange with U.S. authorities to have this Canadian and Quebecer given the necessary protection.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I understand that the Solicitor General is aware of Mr. Gariépy's situation and is closely monitoring the request for a transfer to Canada. We are trying to accelerate the process in order to pursue the investigation by the Solicitor General.

POINT OF ORDER

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS—QUESTIONS ABOUT ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, on a point of order. During Oral Question Period, the Secretary of State for External Affairs seemed surprised and even critical in his remarks about questions the opposition has been asking for nearly two weeks about current economic sanctions, in connection with the situation and the crisis in the Middle East.

[English]

We have asked for the information on the investigations or whatever the government has in its possession on the sanctions for several weeks. The member for Winnipeg South Centre asked for the information two or three weeks ago. This week alone my leader asked for it five times and the member who asked the question today asked for it at least four times.

Therefore, I am asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the interest of open government, and in the interest of giving Canadians the information they require and need to assess the situation. We know that Canada is vice-chair of the sanction committee of the United Nations. We know that the government has those facts. I took it today that the minister is disposed to share information with the House of Commons, at least with the standing committees on external affairs and defence.

I was wondering if I could ask the minister for his co-operation. I feel that he wants to give some information to us. Will he do it either in a statement on motions today or Monday or by officially briefing members of Parliament at an appropriate time or by briefing the external affairs committee, at which time all members could attend?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, on the point of order, I simply found it curious that the opposition was putting questions to me on days when I was not in the House and when I was in the House did not put any questions, but that is perhaps their interpretation of parliamentary behaviour.

However, I think I gave an undertaking to the House. Let me repeat it. I want the members of the House to be as fully informed as possible about the impact of sanctions. Speaking generally, some impact of sanctions is being felt by the people of Iraq. There is no evidence that in the next several months there will be any impact upon the decision makers in Iraq.

If we were to rely only on sanctions, the consequence would be that over that period of time we would run the risk of more children dying, we would run the risk of Kuwait being sacked even more than it is now. We would run the terrible risk in that highly volatile region of some mistake being made which could inspire a conflagration that no one in this world wants.

It is important that as much detail as is possible be known to members. I indicated two categories of briefing that are imposed upon me by the circumstance. One has to do with information that can be generally available. Certainly I will find ways to have that organized and made available regularly to members of the House. Probably it would be easier to do that through either a general briefing or an appearance before the standing committee.

There is another problem. Some of the information with which we are dealing is highly confidential. Members would understand why that is the case. Some members of this House have sworn an oath as Privy Councillors. I would be prepared to try to work out some arrangement, if it is acceptable to members of the House and it may not be for good reasons, in which there could be another level of briefing on that basis of confidentiality to members who have sworn the oath as Privy Councillors. If the Official Opposition has other suggestions as to how this information can be made available more efficiently, I am prepared to consider that.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to address the same point of order. I think Canadians should realize that there is no time in the Question Period, if one sticks to the conventions as to how long a minister is permitted to answer, to provide the kind of complete detail that we have been seeking repeatedly over the past several weeks about how the sanctions are working.

I do not think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should leave the impression that there was time today or any time in Question Period for the kind of detailed information we have been seeking and that Canadians want.

Furthermore, contrary to his suggestion that the answers had to come from him, Canadians should know that the answers could have come from the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister or any one of a number of other ministers during his absence. The answers did not have to come only from him, especially when we wanted the information before the time came for the government to vote at the United Nations yesterday.

Therefore, we again say that we should consult and work out the best way to inform, not just a limited number of members who may be Privy Councillors, but Canadians generally. They have a right to know as much as possible about how sanctions are working to be able to make up their minds about the appropriateness of the conduct of the government.

That is why we asked for a statement on motions to which we could reply. That is why we asked for briefings open to all members and to the public, likely through the external affairs committee. Let's get on with that, rather than the minister being concerned that he did not get a chance to make a statement, which he would not be allowed to do in any event, during Question Period.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on the point of order. I will be as brief as possible.

The impression I am interested in leaving, because it is the fact, is that I am looking for a way to inform fully as many members of this House as possible. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not casually disregard the problem that I face. He, as a Privy Councillor, knows that some of this information is highly confidential and cannot be broadcast on the CBC. It should be held to members who have taken an oath in this House. I am prepared to take the extraordinary step of making that available.

I was a Leader of the Opposition myself and I know there are circumstances and reasons sometimes why an opposition does not want to accept an arrangement of that kind. That is fine. Within the limits of the possible, I will try to make all of the information that is available to us and that an be circulated, available to members of Parliament. If it is acceptable to brief Privy Councillors separately, I think I can make additional information available. In any event, we will do the best we can.

If the member wants a statement in the House so there can be a debate, that is a different kind of question. I am prepared to enter into debate. We have done it regularly on this issue. I think what he is asking for, if I understand him, is a calm, detailed outline of the information that we have, so that all members of the House can come to some understanding of the effectiveness of sanctions. I am really in his hands as to the way that can be done. I think it should be done in a way that encourages the presentation and consideration of objective information, rather than something that might simply be an occasion for debate. As he knows, I am always ready for debate.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: I accepted the question by the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order, although it was not exactly a point of order. We listened to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Leader of the Opposition. However, I don't think this is the proper venue for getting the kind of results the various parties would like to see, with respect to getting answers to questions as well as giving answers to certain questions. I think it would perhaps be wise to resume our proceedings and let those responsible get together and find a normal way to get answers to their questions.

• (1210)

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the spirit with which he put forward the suggestions. I did want to remind him and the House that not all parties in the House have Privy Councillors.

It would be useful and helpful, and in fact it seems to me necessary, for the briefing that he suggests to be available to all members of the House of Commons, whether they be Privy Councillors or not. I look forward to the discussions which will lead to a fruitful resolution of this issue.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to 47 petitions.

BILL C-84

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the report of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-84, an Act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada, without amendments.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

IMMIGRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-345, an act to amend the Immigration Act (visitors visas). He said: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague from Northumberland for seconding this private member's bill which will propose an amendment to the Immigration Act.

An increasing segment of Canada's population was born outside Canada. These fellow Canadians all have parents, brothers and sisters, and other relatives and friends in their countries of origin. Some years ago, in an attempt to stem the stream of fake refugee claimants—and there are many true refugees in addition to those—Canada initiated travel visa requirements for visitors from a number of countries including China, India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Jamaica, Guyana and Philippines.

Because of the new visa procedures, even bona fide family visitors are being denied visas. This has been the case for some time. Our visa officers are simply gun shy and feel they must refuse visas.

My bill would permit an individual Canadian to personally stand for and become a surety or guarantor of the proposed visitor. This specific procedure does not now exist in the act for visa applicants. Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by many citizens of Nova Scotia calling upon the government to axe the GST. The petitioners wish Parliament to cause the government to cease with a proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions. The first one concerns the GST and was sent by Canadians in Quebec City—there are 183 signatures—and, according to a letter I received from Mr. Alfred Hunter, they are anxious to express to the House their objections to the government introducing a goods and services tax as of January 1991. Madam Speaker, your petitioners are basically repeating the same arguments we have used in this House for several months.

They maintain that this tax is not only regressive and unfair and will cause serious problems for low—middle-income Canadians; it also constitutes an attack, and I will read what it says here: "—an unprecedented attack on the incomes of Canadians and will force them not only to pay higher taxes but also to contend with higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment".

Madam Speaker, with these 183 Canadians who I represent, and there are many others, I ask the government to refrain from imposing a goods and services tax on Canadians.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, my second petition deals with a more local issue, since it is in my riding, and I am referring to the Rideau River. This is a very important environmental issue, and Parliament should be aware of the importance of this river, which is polluted.

Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament and the federal government to become equal partners with provincial and municipal authorities in implementing an action plan for the clean-up and maintenance of the Rideau River.

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to add a petition of 51 names to the thousands of names included in previous petitions from residents of the city of Port Alberni in my riding. The petitioners are fed up with the government's mismanagement of Canada Post and Canada Post's management which is ignoring its 1981 mandate to improve customer service and employee relations.

Specifically, my constituents object to the closing of the drive-through mail facility in Port Alberni, the long delays in local mail delivery as a result of the closing of the local sorting facility, and moving mail sorting to Nanaimo and Victoria.

My constituents request that Canada Post Corporation be instructed to keep existing outlets, operate longer hours, expand revenue generating services, stop privatizing, and start increasing services to raise revenues.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling petitions signed by voters in the beautiful riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, who of course object to the Tory government's GST, and rightly so, I may add. They are residents of Alexandria, Dunvegan, Dalkeith, Alfred and Embrun, in the riding I have the honour and the privilege to represent, Madam Speaker.

GANNET ROCK LIGHTHOUSE

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition from the residents of Grand Manan Island.

This is yet another petition protesting the destaffing of Gannet Rock Lighthouse. To let Canadian people know, this lighthouse is in the Bay of Fundy in a very strategic spot. We do not want that lighthouse de-manned.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the current staffing of the Gannet Rock Lighthouse.

RADIO LICENCE FEES

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure today, under Standing Order 36, to present petitions collected by the members of the Trumanville Volunteer Fire Department in Amherst, the Shelburne Volunteer Fire Department in Shelburne, and the Pomquet Volunteer Fire Department in Nova Scotia.

In each of these cases, the petitioners are asking the government to review its policy of increasing the radio licence fees and having the radio licence fees apply to volunteer fire departments. They believe very strongly that the government is misguided in this endeavour and are asking the government to go back to the initial commitment given by the previous Minister of Communications not to tax volunteer fire departments with these licence fees.

The petitioners ask the government to review its current regulations and withdraw it so that they can get on with the business of protecting the lives and property of those communities that they serve.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the great pleasure to table a petition to this House on behalf of people from my riding of Ottawa Centre and people from the Ottawa-Carleton region who are opposed to the GST on books and magazines. They call upon the government to withdraw this tax.

• (1220)

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition in the House of Commons, pursuant to Standing Order 36. My colleagues and I have presented literally thousands of petitions on behalf of Canadians who are opposed to the tax on reading material.

These petitioners are from Toronto and just immediately north of Toronto. There are 100 names on this petition. These people would like the government to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHT TESTING

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present three petitions, pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The first is from a number of people from across Canada who are concerned about the low-level flights that the government orders and allows in Labrador and eastern Quebec. They ask this Parliament to join with the Assembly of First Nations, the Innu of Labrador, and other aboriginal peoples of northern Canada, in opposing use of their lands for this attack training. They demand that the low-level flights be ended and that the funding for the NATO-NORAD training there, as far as it comes from Canada, be redirected to the benefit of the aboriginal people and to promoting sustainable development for all Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, the second petition is signed by a number of Canadians, primarily from Toronto, who are concerned about the goods and services tax.

These petitioners ask Parliament, not only to reject that tax, but also to reduce the need for a sales tax by reducing the bank interest rate so as to improve the economy and by increasing employment in useful work, such as protection of the environment, restoration of needed roads, improvement of VIA service, and industrial research and development.

The final petition is signed by a number of residents of Gloucester, North York, Ottawa, Nepean, Kingston, Hull, Montreal, and other places in central Canada, who are concerned particularly that the goods and services tax hits books, music lessons, and live entertainment.

Therefore, the petitioners ask the government to scrap the tax and bring in taxation which will tax the people who have money, instead of those who have none.

RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition, certified as to form. These petitioners are mainly from Ta Ta Creek in my riding.

They state that the government's policy of closing rural post offices discriminates against people living in non-urban centres and thus violates the established principles of fairness, and that the government's policy has hurt seniors, farmers, and low-income Canadians the hardest.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to stop immediately the policy of closing rural post offices and direct Canada Post to put service ahead of profits.

The community of Ta Ta Creek is a small farming community and its post office is the most viable centre within their community

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise today to present a petition given to me by farmers from the towns of Plunkett and Viscount in the province of Saskatchewan.

The petitioners call upon the government to replace oats under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. They also call upon the government to give oats and barley the same protection that wheat now enjoys under the Canadian Wheat Board, meaning that those commodities could not be removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board unless Parliament decided that they should be removed.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, again I rise, day after day, month after month, to ask the government, particularly in the light of the decision taken by the province of Quebec, not to tax intellectual thought, reading, books, magazines, and literature.

I hope the government is giving serious consideration to the implications of taxing the kinds of information that will affect the literacy and the educational potential of our young people and our reading interests in Canada. I deposit such petitions from Quebec and British Columbia.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I would like to file a petition of nearly 100 names, mainly from my own riding of Surrey North, but also from Burnaby, Delta, and New Westminster.

These petitioners point out that in countries where visitors' visas are required, it is taking two to three years for spouses to be able to join their spouse in Canada. This creates a tremendous strain on the family and is rather cruel.

They are suggesting that Canada undertake to devise a system whereby spouses in bona fide marriages from countries where visitors' visas restrictions apply, particularly areas such as the Punjab in India, would be able to enter Canada immediately, pending the processing of their landed immigrant applications.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to present a total of seven petitions from individuals in Kingston, Napanee, Odessa, and in metropolitan Toronto, whereby the petitioners recognize the importance of the printed word for freedom of expression, and as a corner-stone of our economic prosperity.

These petitioners call on the government to delete its plan to tax books and periodicals under the goods and services tax.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question Nos. 381 and 382.

[Text]

"IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT CANADA'S ECONOMIC PLAN AND HOW IT AFFECTS YOU"—BUDGETED COSTS

*Questions No. 381—Mr. Karpoff:

Did the government publish a document entitled "Important information about Canada's economic plan and how it affects you" and, if so, what were the budgeted costs for (a) creative and editorial work (b) production (c) distribution (d) postage (e) entire project (f) any other costs?

Hon. Michael Holcombe Wilson (Minister of Finance): In response to the hundreds of thousand of requests from Canadians for information about its economic policies, the government published an information guide entitled "Important information about Canada's economic plan and how it affects you".

The budgeted cost for the (a) creative work, (b) production and (c) distribution (preparation for postage) was $765,000. The actual cost was $761,810 which breaks down as follows:

| (a) Creative work and (b) Production | $486,874 |
| (c) Distribution | $ 84,046 |
| Agency Commision | $ 97,237 |
| Federal and provincial sales tax | $ 93,653 |

The budgeted cost for (d) postage was $625,000. The actual cost was $594,915.

The budgeted cost for (e) the entire project was $1.39 million. The actual cost was $1.35 million.

Additional money was budgeted for (f) advertising: $57,000 by the Department of Finance for print adds in daily newspapers and $350,000 by the Secretary of State for their Community/Ethnic/Aboriginal Newspaper Program.

The editorial work on the information guide was done by public servants in the Department of Finance.

"IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT CANADA'S ECONOMIC PLAN AND HOW IT AFFECTS YOU"—BUDGETED COSTS

*Question No. 382—Mr. Karpoff:

Did the government publish a document entitled "Important information about Canada's economic plan and how it affects you" and, if so, was any of the (a) creative and editorial (b) production (c) distribution (d) mailing work performed by individuals or groups not employed as public servants and, if so, how much were they paid?

Hon. Michael Holcombe Wilson (Minister of Finance): In response to the hundreds of thousands of requests from Canadians for information about its economic policies, the government published an information guide entitled "Important information about Canada's economic plan and how it affects you".

The production of this information guide, including the creative work, the distribution and preparation for postage, was performed by Publitel Communications of Montreal. For their services, they were paid $761,810. The mailing of the information guide was done by Canada Post for $594,915.

The editorial work on the information guide was done by public servants in the Department of Finance.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Due to the length of these responses, I ask that they be printed in Hansard as if read.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

PARLIAMENT OF CANADA ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-79, an act to amend the Parliament of Canada Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Madam Deputy Speaker: There are 14 report stage motions set down on the Order Paper, in amendment to Bill C-79, an act to amend the Parliament of Canada Act.

Motions nos. 1 and 8 standing in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier are in order. They will be grouped and the vote on Motion no. 1 will also apply to Motion no. 8.

Motions nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11 and 12, standing in the name of the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead, are in order and will be grouped for debate and voted upon as follows: if Motions no. 5 is agreed to, no vote will be necessary on Motions nos. 3, 4 and 6. However, if Motions no. 5 is negatived, separate votes will be taken on Motions nos. 3, 4 and 6. If Motion no. 11 is agreed to, no vote will be necessary on Motions nos. 9, 10 and 12, and if Motion no. 11 is negatived, separate votes will be taken on Motions nos. 9, 10 and 12.

[English]

Motions Nos. 7, 13 and 14, standing in the names of the hon. members for Churchill and Ottawa—Vanier, are acceptable. They will be grouped for debate and voted upon as follows. The vote on Motion No. 7 will apply to Motion No. 13, and a separate vote will be taken on Motion No. 14.

• (1230)

Therefore, I will now put Motions Nos. 1 and 8 to the House.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Gauthier moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-79 be amended in the French version in Clause 1 by striking out lines 9 and 10 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor: "alors réputés avoir été déposés devant le Sénat."

That Bill C-79 be amended in Clause 1 by adding immediately after line 16 at page 2 the following: "(5) Where a member of the Board participates in the exercice of the powers or the carrying out of the functions of the Board, the member shall not be held personally liable for the actions of the Board."

He said: Madam Speaker, the members of the Special Committee on the Review of Parliament have spent nearly a year examining the problems referred to them by the House of Commons. I must say I am very glad today that we are nearing the end. We are at the report stage, that is after the stage when amendments to the bill have been studied in committee. I hope the bill will finally be given third reading by the House so we may complete that important aspect of our work and, I imagine, go on to something else under the expert chairmanship of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, Marcel Danis, whom I commend for a job well done.

Madam Speaker, Motion No. 1 is a simple amendment to make the French and English versions the same.

[English]

In English, Madam Speaker, the text is quite correct. It says that any bylaws adopted by the board, or made under the section, will be deposited by the Clerk and they shall be deemed to have been tabled.

In the English text, it says "before the Senate". In the French text, it says "before the board". We are just trying here to correct the French text to make it of equal importance and to make it exact.

[Translation]

This is a very simple motion, Madam Speaker. It will amend part (3) of subclause 20.2 so that the wording will be the same. That is all I have to say about it, except that I hope members— I see the minister is leaving. I must not bore him, but this is an important stage of the debate and this matter concerns us all, even senior members and senior ministers.

[English]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 agreed to.

Madam Deputy Speaker: On to Motion No. 8. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, just a word to say that this amendment will make the French version the same as the English.

[English]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion No. 8 agreed to.

Madam Deputy Speaker: We will now call Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10 and 11. Motion No. 2 will be voted on separately.

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Motions Nos. 5 and 11 will not be presented.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister, on a point of order.

Mr. Danis: Madam Speaker, I understand that motions Nos. 5 and 11 will not be presented. I also understand, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton-Stanstead wishes to replace motions Nos. 3 and 9. Perhaps it would be appropriate at this time to ask the unanimous consent of the House for the hon. member to replace these motions, so that you will not have to read the original motions which are not to be moved in the House.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I believe all members heard what the minister suggested. The Chair agrees to let the hon. member present these motions, and I would ask him to lay copies on the Table as soon as possible so that I can substitute those for the copies I have here. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): After discussions among members of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-79 and after consultations with the experts, Motion No. 3 and the same applies to Motion No. 9, except that one applies to the House of Commons and the other applies to the Senate—reads as follows and I move:

That Bill C-79 be amended in Clause 1:

a) by striking out line 37 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"peace officer may apply to the Board for, or the Board may, on its own initiative, provide the peace officer with"

b) by striking out lines 46 and 47 at page 3 and lines 1 to 3 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"20.4(1), the Board may, if it considers it appropriate to do so, make any of its opinions, including opinions issued under section 20.3, available to the peace officer."

Madam Speaker, I have a copy here for the Clerk's office. Basically, this amendment is intended to cover a situation where, if a peace officer conducts an investigation which concerns the manner in which the member's or senator's budget was spent, he decides to go to the Board of Internal Economy and ask whether, in the opinion of the Board, the expenditure made by the member is in order or lawful or proper. By this amendment we want to add that the Board of Internal Economy may make available, to the peace officer who so requests, any of its opinions, so that the peace officer may know the Board's opinion on the use of a budget item by a member or senator. Once he has this information, the peace officer can decide whether he intends to pursue his investigation or perhaps initiate proceedings. If he decides to initiate proceedings, however, he will have to make available, to the judge who will rule on the case, the opinion of the Board of Internal Economy. I believe that is a compromise everyone is prepared to accept. So this is the proposed amendment.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I will now put all motions before the House and we can then proceed with debate.

[English]

Mr. Danis: Madam Speaker, with regard to Motion No. 6, I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to change the last word in English. It says: "authorized by a judge of a provincial court within the". It should be "meaning" instead of "remaining".

If I could get unanimous consent to that, it would allow the Chair to put the motion.

• (1240)

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead) moved:

That Bill C-79 be amended in Clause 1 by adding immediately after line 16 at page 2 the following:

"(5) Where a member of the Board participates in the exercise of the powers or the carrying out of the functions of the Boards, the member shall not be help personaly liable for the actions of the Board."

That Bill C-79 be amended in clause:

a) by striking out line 37 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"peace officer may apply to the Board for, or the Board may, on its own initiative, provide the peace officer with,"

That Bill C-79 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 45 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"or the peace officer has been advised by the Board that an application under subsection 52.6(2) has been made by the member of the House of Commons to whom the investigation relates and where an application for a process is".

That Bill C-79 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 29 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"judge of a provincial court within the meaning of section 2 of".

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I am prepared to yield to the mover of Motion No. 2, but I also intend to take part in the debate on these amendments.

Perhaps we should consider the historical context, Madam Speaker, to have a better understanding of the scope of the amendments before the House.

[English]

On December 12, 1989, members of the House will remember that many of us were surprised, to use the term mildly, to hear from RCMP Commissioner Norman Inkster that 15 parliamentarians were currently being investigated by the RCMP: 11 were being investigated for alleged Criminal Code infractions and 4 others for alleged election law violations. The revelation broke with traditional RCMP policy of not commenting on investigations while they were under process and before charges were laid. It many of us, to say the least.

The press coverage at the time reflected the reaction of many parliamentarians, including myself. It is no exaggeration to say that we were somewhat angered by the news, given that the conduct of police investigations, whether or not a conviction results, can hinder and, we can appreciate, can ruin a parliamentary career. Just the fact that one is under investigation by the police leaves a bad taste out there. We always believe that elected officials should be open to scrutiny and should be available to answer questions, but we never suspected that the police forces would reveal to the public of Canada that indeed they were investigating 15 Canadians. That kind of created a situation in this House that was requiring of some actions. The House felt it was in its good judgment to strike the committee. The committee looked at this whole situation and the possibility of reforming or amending the laws dealing with this House and the Senate in a way to make them more possibly adaptable to modern circumstances.

We also appreciate—and I am sure, Madam Speaker, you will understand—the changing times and the reform of the House following the McGrath commission report. The McGrath commission suggested in-depth reform of our procedures and our practices here. It gave the Board of Internal Economy, which is the administrative body of the House of Commons composed in the old days of strictly ministers of the Crown, an enlarged composition. It included members of the opposition on the new board, gave it new powers, and changed the whole way it operated.

Members of the House were surprised to hear all of a sudden that the rules of the game we had changed here were being interpreted by way of a manual of instructions as to what members interpreted in terms of the expenditures that they were allowed to administer their offices and render their services as elected representatives to the people of Canada. Therefore, the manual was becoming some kind of bible for the police, and the interpretation of some of those sections was indeed difficult and possibly misleading to many people.

Therefore we took it upon ourselves that we should amend the Parliament of Canada Act. One of the important subjects that we had to deal with was the role of the board in determining what expenditures would be allowed under the budgetary expenditures of members of Parliament authority. Another important factor was how we could make sure that police forces and the justice system operate in an open, fair and just manner.

We recognize the duty of the police to investigate possible charges of misuse of public funds by MPs. Unfortunately some members of Parliament have abused the system. We recognize that this is far from being a perfect world and that the House of Commons is a reflection of Canada as a whole. The system is there, and sometimes people abuse it. We must have checks and balances. We did not want to impede in any way the justice system and how it operates.

We also had to balance the privileges we claim as members of Parliament to decide how to use the funds allocated to the members to represent their constituencies in an open and fair manner.

The committee looked at many things. We narrowed in on the authority of the board's rulings and opinions as to why or how the members should be expending public funds. We had to deal with a very difficult subject. I must admit that it took some time for many of us to make clear to our colleagues in the committee that we were not trying to impede police work but that we were trying to make it possible for members of the House of Commons and the Senate to obtain from the board clear and written opinions, directives that are easy to interpret, as to how we could expend the moneys in trust to us for administering our offices on the Hill and in the constituencies.

We dealt with a very contentious article at the time, which indeed many of us felt could be improved and was improved eventually. The motions and amendments before us today, as well as the bill as amended in committee, reflect an awful lot of understanding by all members in relation to the important matters as to how the funds will be expended, who has jurisdiction over the expenditures, how members of Parliament are to behave in terms of getting instructions from the board as to what is available, and how such things should be done.

Motion No. 2 indicates that members of the board who participate in the exercise and the powers of the board shall not be held personally liable for the actions of the board. The rest of the amendments all deal with the specific exclusive authority of the board to determine exactly how members of Parliament spend the funds made available to them.

We have reached a fair compromise. We have reached a good balance in terms of allowing police forces to ask the board—it is permissive, I admit; they do not have to, but if they want to have a good case I think they should—for an opinion if it is alleged that a member of Parliament has misused the funds that he or she has to administer his or her offices. In turn, if the police force gets an opinion from the board, that officer must make it available to the judge when in the process it has asked for either a warrant or the police force believes that it has reasons to require more information and wants a search warrant or something else. That opinion must be made available because it is essential to the process. We want it to be open. We want it to be as clear and limpid, if I may use that word, as possible. We also want to make sure that it is fair. To be fair, I think police forces now have the facility to ask the Board of Internal Economy for an opinion as to the expenditures of funds.

I hope all members of the House would take very seriously that members of Parliament who have doubt, who want a directive or need to be told more clearly how to interpret a certain rule or a certain disposition, should in turn ask the board for an opinion before they dispense public funds. Possibly we have allowed for a little more largess, if I may use that word. We have allowed for past expenditures to be included in that. Sometimes things change and sometimes there are oversights; members did not think about it or did not know about it. The amendments would allow that members to ask for an opinion from the board on past expenditures, on present expenditures, and on future expenditures.

If members ask the board for its advice, I am sure we will have little difficulty in keeping this place open and clearly in public view. I do not think that anything in these amendments could be seen or could be taken as an effort of the House of Commons and the Senate to put themselves above the law.

We are trying to maintain a system here of transparence.

We are not here to draft special legislation for members. We are here to try and clarify the situation, and the amendments we have before us do just that.

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Madam Speaker, the Special Committee on the Parliament of Canada Act, which subsequently became the Legislative Committee on Bill C-79, met about fifty times, with some sittings lasting two or three days. During that time we saw committee members make a special point of being present themselves, despite changes in their duties. For instance, I went from being a Conservative Member to sitting as an independent member, and I am now with the Bloc québécois, but I am still a member of the committee.

The Deputy Speaker of the House chaired the committee, and this was an honour for the committee. He was appointed minister, but continued to chair the committee nevertheless. The Government Chief Whip, the House Leader and the opposition's Chief Whip, people with extremely important duties here in the House, decided to spend an enormous amount of time—over 50 meetings—on this committee, to deal with an extremely difficult problem that arose last year. It does not make life easy for members when they are told by the Chief Commissioner of the RCMP that 15 members of Parliament are under investigation. Fifteen members means 5 per cent. If we apply this percentage to the population of Canada, it would mean that about one million people are under investigation. There is something disproportionate about all this.

We asked ourselves: Where is the problem? And throughout the proceedings of the committee, for one year, we enjoyed the extraordinary co-operation of the Clerk of the House and his staff—especially Mr. Kirby—and also the co-operation of the Chief Administrator of the House, Mr. Riedel and our Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, Mr. Pelletier, with their respective teams. Without them it would have been impossible to finish the job.

Fifteen members of Parliament under investigation, and a year later, I don't think a single one has been convicted—maybe one. In most cases, investigations did not lead to charges being laid. In some case, charges were laid but were ultimately dismissed by the court. In some cases, there were searches, but the court subsequently decided that there had been no grounds for authorizing a search. In all cases, however, irreparable harm was done, not to the member personally, because there is always the possibility that compensation might be discussed, but irreparable harm was done to the voters who gave this person a specific mandate, because his ability to represent his riding, his constituents, in the House of Commons has been diminished.

We must consider, Madam Speaker, that a member, who suddenly is the subject of a public inquiry or allegations by the RCMP, can hardly be expected to be able to perform his duties as well as any other member. Obviously, it hampers the member in his ability to act as a member here in the Parliament of Canada as well as in his own riding. Fifteen of our colleagues were in this kind of situation. For most of them, it was like being the subject of a public inquiry. Their names were all over the newspapers.

This means that hundreds of thousands of Canadians were represented by members whose powers had been diminished because a police officer happened to decide to conduct an investigation, often as a result of allegations by a political enemy or whoever. However in most cases, absolutely nothing was found. However, reputations had been sullied, constituents had not been well represented, or not as well as they would have wished, and we definitely had an abnormal situation.

Where is the problem? Madam Speaker, I think there are two sides to this question. Members of the House of Commons, as represented by the Board of Internal Economy, have not done a good job of being absolutely open about their activities. The Board of Internal Economy, which is supposed to represent them, has operated like a private, exclusive club that does not have to act with the openness that we tend to demand of this type of organization today.

The Board of Internal Economy revealed its decisions to no one. They did not become public until they were tabled in the first ten days of the following session, and in some cases this meant three years later. How could a member have personal knowledge of a decision of the Board of Internal Economy if it was not made public until three years later? And how was a Canadian citizen, an officer of the peace or an RCMP officer supposed to know about the decision? He did not, through no fault of the RCMP. It wasn't the fault of the average member of this House but of the Board of Internal Economy which had not done its job. The bill will remedy this.

Perhaps some background information would be in order. Formerly, the Board of Internal Economy consisted only of members of the government in power. It consisted of the Speaker of the House and four government ministers. However, as part of the 1985 parliamentry reform, it was decided to make the Board less partisan, and membership was changed to include two members of the Official Opposition and one member of the third party in the House of Commons, so that today, we can say that the Board fairly adequately represents the members of this House. There is good representation, Madam Speaker, but the Board neglected to change its rules of procedure and create a secretariat, for instance. It forgot to appoint someone to act on behalf of the Board. It did not have the power to adopt by–laws and it did not publish them.

We had police officers who argued, showning their complete ignorance of the role of a member of Parliament, that a member was like a public servant. That is false, Madam Speaker. A member is not a public servant. A public servant can ask permission from his superior. But as a member of Parliament, whom do I ask for permission? I have said repeatedly, and I still say, that I take orders from no one except from the people in my riding. I have no superior. There is not a single member in this House who can claim to be my boss, certainly not! I am here on behalf of the people of my riding, in a very special situation. No other Canadian citizen has those duties.

So we are not public servants, as RCMP officers and peace officers in general say we are. Madam Speaker, even the Chief Commissioner told the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General on December 12, 1989, that he did not know the Parliament of Canada Act.

He did not know what the Parliament of Canada Act was all about. On the other hand, he said that there were 15 members of Parliament being investigated because of expenses made under the Parliament of Canada Act. You can imagine that we ended up in a real mess: the Board of Internal Economy, which has rules which are not published; a RCMP officer who thinks that a member of the House is a civil servant; a RCMP officer who refers to the explanation manual, which is neither the Act nor the Regulations, and who decides to institute proceedings against 15 members of the House and the Senate. That was quite a mess. That is why we ended up with so many people. That is also the reason why I moved all these amendments which are not mine alone. I discussed these amendments with the other committee members and they were in agreement.

To summarize, if I may, the whole legislation that we wanted to introduce would try to solve the problem in two ways. On the one hand, in the future, the Board of Internal Economy would have a secretary under the Head Clerk of the House of Commons. It would get a sort of a head office. There would be a person there to whom people could address their complaints and where members could direct questions. There would be someone there. There would be an office.

Second, the Board of Internal Economy would have the power to draft its own administrative regulations. That was necessary.

Third, the Board of Internal Economy would have to publish its decisions within thirty days whether the House is sitting or not. People would no longer have to wait as long as three years. If its members agreed, the Board of Internal Economy would have the power to straighten out a situation which it should not have allowed to deteriorate that much.

On the other hand, the RCMP will of course continue its investigations of members of Parliament, except that, before starting one it should begin by looking into the Act, and I will make sure that it does by personally sending a copy of it to Mr. Inkster, for I should like him to read section 52.6 which reads as follows:

The Board –

—meaning, the Board of Internal Economy—

—has the exclusive authority to determine whether any previous, current or proposed use by a member of the House of Commons of any funds, goods, services or premises made available to that member for the carrying out of parliamentary functions is or was proper, given the discharge of the parliamentary functions of members of the House of Commons, including whether any such use is or was proper having regard to the intent and purpose of the by-laws made under subsection 52.5(1).

(2) Any member of the House of Commons may apply to the Board for an opinion with respect to any use by that member of funds, goods, services or premises referred to in——a previous sub-section.

The Board of Internal Economy, therefore, has the power. Will it exercise it? As members of this House, we will deal with this issue later on. I hope so. It has to. It has the legal and moral obligation to do so, not only in the interest of the members of this House, but of all Canadians. So the police officer who is informed by a citizen—in bad faith in those cases, but often in good faith—that the member has committed an infraction concerning his budget will now be able to go the Board of Internal Economy and seek an opinion on the matter. If the officer is acting in bad faith and wants to act without going through the Board of Internal Economy, then the board will send him the opinion if he does not have the courage to seek it himself. But once the police officer has the opinion, served by whoever, he will be legally obliged to send it to the judge to whom he will submit any kind of legal request—search warrant, wiretapping, accusation, another warrant—and that is spelled out in the legislation. And not a justice of the peace but a judge so that members of Parliament will not be above the law. But members will be protected in the sense that the judge will have to take into account the opinion of the Board of Internal Economy which authorizes our expenses. If it authorizes our expenses, it will say whether the expense was correct or not.

Madam Speaker, that was the object of the amendments, most of them presented on behalf of the members of the committee, and I thank them all. In conclusion, I would say to my colleagues that what is being proposed today is probably the best piece of legislation we could have. It had been suggested to include something like "notwithstanding any section of the Criminal Code". That did not respect the principles which must guide us here in the House of Commons. But this bill provides enough guarantees for members, if the Board of Internal Economy does its job and if the RCMP act in good faith in their investigation by calling upon the Board of Internal Economy.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I too wish to speak to the bill. At the end of June when this bill received second reading I, on behalf of the New Democratic Party caucus, rose to explain that we could not accept the bill as it was worded at that time.

The wording at second reading certainly gave a different situation from the bill than is before us in its amended form today. At that time the bill required an investigating officer to go before the Board of Internal Economy to get the opinion of the board before that officer received a search warrant or took any of the actions among those listed in the bill.

It did not stop an investigation, but if that officer did want a search warrant, did want a wiretap, or did want to take some other action, he or she was required to go before the Board of Internal Economy. The board then had 30 days in which to respond. That created, quite legitimately in my mind, a number of concerns. First, that we were being treated differently from other citizens in Canada and, second, that there was every opportunity, if an investigation was going on and an officer had to come to the Board of Internal Economy, there might be a leak and an investigation could be interfered with in that manner.

I do not think it was ever the intent of members of the House to tamper with a legitimate RCMP investigation. What we wanted was to cover some of the problems that had occurred as a result of the investigations which have gone on in the past and were referred to earlier.

Also, as a result of having the Commissioner of the RCMP appear before us a number of times, we heard that he and his officers had a number of problems when it came to dealing with members of Parliament. For example, if a complaint was made against a Canadian citizen with regard to a possible fraud or misuse of funds, then it would be normal for the investigating officer to go to the department concerned or the employer of that person. Through that means, the RCMP would probably receive the information it needed to determine whether an investigation should go forward.

The RCMP and the Commissioner appearing before our committee indicated that when it was a member of Parliament, and with our perceived parliamentary immunity in a number of areas, the RCMP believed it was necessary to get a search warrant in order to get any information with regard to what was going on within the budgetary controls or in the offices of a member of Parliament.

They themselves suggested that we look for some other mechanism which would enable the RCMP to do its duties and at the same time respect the traditional rights of members of Parliament to do their work, not only as members of Parliament, but on behalf of their constituents. Often, we have very confidential information in the same way as a lawyer or a doctor would, because people have come to us expecting us to act on their behalf on issues which are very important and confidential to them. They are often in areas of complaints against the RCMP and certain government officials.

Often, as members of Parliament, we act as ombudsman for our constituents. If those files can be opened, without any protection, then it is not just members of Parliament who would feel threatened, but, obviously, any constituent or citizen of Canada who was working through a member of Parliament who could find that those files would be in the public domain.

There was a need to balance our rights on behalf of ourselves and on behalf of our constituents and other Canadians, and at the same time, to allow the RCMP and other investigating authorities the information they require in order to conduct an investigation or even to discover whether or not an investigation is required.

As a result of the very long and often repeated committee discussions and deliberations, the bill we have now balances those two concerns. Our constituents are protected, but at the same time the RCMP is able to go forward, just like any other law enforcement agency, and get the information it requires. There is no way, with the wording of the amendments that have come forward today as a result of the most recent committee deliberations, that we are inhibiting an investigation.

Now an RCMP officer or another investigator has the right, if he or she chooses, to go to the board and get information that they may require. That is their option. It is not a decision that is imposed upon them.

I know, Madam Speaker, that my time has lapsed for this particular part of the debate. I will explain later some of the other ramifications of the legislation at the appropriate time.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

Madam Deputy Speaker: There are questions to be put on Motions Nos. 2, 3, as amended, 4, 6, as amended, 9, as amended, 10 and 12.

Madam Deputy Speaker: We will proceed now to Motions Nos. 7, 13, and 14. I remind hon. members that a vote on Motion No. 7 will apply to Motion No. 13, and a separate vote will be taken on Motion No. 14.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved:

That Bill C–79 be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 19 at page 5 the following:

"(6) For greater certainty, the oath or affirmation referred to in subsection (5) only relates to matters of security, employment and staff relations, tenders and investigations in relation to a member of the House of Commons and nothing in subsection (5) shall be construed as preventing the communication of any information relating to other matters to a party caucus."

That Bill C–79 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 9 and 10 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"matters of employment and staff relations, tenders, security, and investigations in relation to a member of the House of Commons, nor will I allow".

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved:

That Bill C–79 be amended in the French version in Clause 3 by striking out lines 10 and 11 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"Chambre des communes, ni de lui permettre (ni ne lui".

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the House will be aware that in committee review of the legislation a new clause was added to the bill, which is an unusual procedure. Normally, it would not be allowed in this manner. However, as a result of events that have occurred over the last little while, there is a feeling that members of the board often dealt with matters that should remain in private.

There is, I think, in the case of any board of directors or any management group, a need to have some matters dealt with in private and in confidence. However, the wording that came down from committee was not acceptable to our caucus. I had indicated so during the meetings of the committee. Therefore, we have put forward this amendment, which I understand will be agreed to later on today, which helps to clarify and restrict those areas in which the Board of Internal Economy would have the right to expect its members to keep confidences.

To be more clear on that matter, I will refer to some of the areas. The amendment states:

—The oath or affirmation—relates to matters of security, employment and staff relations, tenders and investigations in relation to a member of the House of Commons and nothing in subsection (5) shall be construed as preventing the communication of any information relating to other matters to a party caucus."

The Board of Internal Economy has a right and obligation to make certain decisions behind closed doors. It cannot discuss the relations of an employee in public. That is not fair to the board, but more importantly, it is not fair to the employee. In terms of matters of security of the House of Commons and the people working in the House of Commons, again, it would not do much for security matters to have them discussed in public. However, I do remind people that it would have to be real security matters and not just perceived security matters or matters of inconveniences which often occur in the House of Commons or on the grounds of Parliament. They have to be matters of real security before the oath could bind members of the Board of Internal Economy.

For those areas, and for the purposes of collective bargaining, the board does need the right to expect that its members will not break confidences.

However, there are a number of other areas in which the board is the servant of the individual members of the House and the members of the various caucuses. We have to expect as members of Parliament that we have a right to go to our board members and ask what is happening on areas that we have raised with the Board of Internal Economy. As mangers of our own offices, we have been asking for computers and we have been asking for clarifications of travel rights and privileges within our own riding. We have the right to go to our board members and get that type of information.

We have, I think, through the amendment put forward, guaranteed the right of the board to deal with those matters that they must deal with behind closed doors. However, we have made sure that the oath is not so encompassing that it binds members of the Board of Internal Economy to perpetual silence on matters that should be in the public domain. In addition to that, it prevents the board members from becoming so isolated from the other members of the House of Commons that they no longer work on their behalf, serve them, and communicate with other members of the House of Commons.

I hope that the wording proposed here will resolve that problem. I hope it will receive the support of all members of the House.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have but a few comments to make. I agree with my friend with regard to the oath of allegiance. Responsible administrators would not want to prejudice discussions by going out after every meeting and revealing certain information to the public. An example, would be the mandate that is used to negotiate salaries. One would certainly not want to go out and reveal its strategy.

There are other circumstances where there are situations requesting a certain amount of discretion. I agree with the member that the oath of affirmation referred to in the bill is essential. I agree also with the amendment, although I would have preferred that the wording be a little more related to the actual subject matter.

Instead of saying, for example:

> For greater certainty, the oath or affirmation referred to in subsection (5) only relates to matters of security, employment and staff relations—

—which I agree with. It continues:

> —investigations in relation to a member of the House of Commons—

—or the Senate for that matter, in the section dealing with the Senate. I would have preferred that it deal with matters relating to the operational budgets of specific members. That would have been more in keeping with the intent that I see in this oath.

I do not think that it is appropriate for us to be involved in investigations in relation to a member of the House of Commons. Investigations is a term that is used for many purposes. It could be investigations from outside sources, police, for example, or auditors, or something. Or, it could be investigations by the board itself into circumstances in the administration of the board.

A responsible board would want to pay very serious and close attention to how members are disposing and dispensing the public funds. Therefore, I would take it that the board would sometimes have reasons to call in members and say: "We are not so sure of what you are doing or what is being done is correct" without bringing in police or any other outside element. I do think that the word "investigations" is a wide word, but nevertheless I am willing to accept that.

I also would like to make sure that anything that is related to the operational budgets of members of Parliament is what we are talking about here, and not anything else. We are not talking about anything outside of matters relating to the expenditures now, past, or future of members of Parliament.

Motion No. 13 agreed to.

Motion No. 14 agreed to.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister, on a point of order.

Mr. Danis: Madam Speaker, if the representatives of the Bloc québécois, either Mr. Rocheleau or Mr. Gérin, and the members of the New Democratic Party and of the Official Opposition agree, I suggest, if there is unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the third time.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the hon. minister. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)) (for Mr. Andre) moved that Bill C-79, An Act to amend the Parliament of Canada Act, as amended, be concurred in at the report stage with further amendments.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Bill, as amended, concurred in.

Madam Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations) (for Mr. Andre) moved that Bill C-79, An Act to amend the Parliament of Canada Act, be now read the third time and passed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? Debate. The hon. Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House has the floor.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to move for third reading of a bill that has been discussed on more than 50 occasions by the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act. At this time, I would like to thank committee members, especially the Whips of all three parties, the hon. member for Churchill who was whip at the time, the Official Opposition Whip who was subsequently promoted and is now Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, the government's Chief Whip, and also another member who has done an extraordinary job since the committee started its proceedings, the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead.

Madam Speaker, I also wish to thank the committee's research staff, especially Margaret Young and Jimmy Robertson, who did an excellent job for us for many months; the principal Clerk of the Committee, Mr. Kirby; and Mr. Sandy Birch, and also the many lawyers on Mr. Pelletier's team whom we consulted since we started our proceedings; Diane Davidson, and Gabriel Lapointe, who was hired by the committee.

As we all know, this bill represents a consensus formed by all members of this House and of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. I think we seldom have before us a bill as important as this one, and, as we saw in Hansard, a bill that was debated in this House with a complete absence of political partisanship.

I would like to thank all members who participated as well as the witnesses who appeared before the committee, and I would also like to say, Madam Speaker, that although today we are discussing Bill C-79, that does not mean the committee's work is finished. The committee still has a number of questions to consider, and we will continue to hold our meetings. In fact, the next item on the agenda is the matter of disclosure of funds made available to members.

We still have a lot of work to do, and I hope that my colleagues and I will be able to table many more reports and that these, like our first five reports, will receive the unanimous consent of this House.

I would also like to tell my honourable colleagues in this House that, when I say the bill was obtained by an exceptional consensus, I tell the truth. I would like especially to quote the words of the RCMP commissioner. We all know, as the member from Ottawa—Vanier said before, as well as the member from Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead and the member from Churchill, that this committee was established after the RCMP commissioner said a number of members of Parliament were under investigation. After studying the bill, the commissioner appeared twice before our committee. I would like to quote the words he used during his testimony on September 25th:

[English]

—where the commissioner says: "On a closing comment, Mr. Chairman, that, as the commissioner of the RCMP, I am absolutely delighted with all the work that has been done, with all of the attempts towards self-regulation, with all of the attempts to clarify the privileges and the disbursements to which members of Parliament have entitlement. I think all of that will go a long way to clarifying the issues of concern."

So, I would also like to thank the RCMP and its commissioner for their co-operation with the committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to join the minister in thanking all of those who helped us and who worked hard to try to keep the committee productive. I think that, inadvertently, the minister may have forgotten to mention some members who worked with us for several months. I simply wanted to mention my good friend, and his good friend, Marcel Prud'homme, the member for Saint-Denis, Howard Crosby, the member for Halifax West, and Dorothy Dobbie, the member for Winnipeg South. There is also Mr. Iain Angus who, from time to time, was standing in for Mr. Murphy. To all these people, to all these colleagues of the House, I would like to extend my many thanks, because they helped me to perhaps understand a little better the solutions to the problems that seemed to be of concern to us all around this time last year.

Madam Speaker, I would have some comments to make. First of all, I want to make things clear. The situation is not the same anymore. Once the bill is passed, Madam Speaker, the Board of Internal Economy will have some work to do, some challenges to meet. And I want to put on the record right now in the House that, as a member of the Board of Internal Economy, I will take my responsabilities. We will do all we can to try to respond to the expectations in the bill and to give members the views that they will ask for. We will also give them the support that they need to make sure that, in all cases, we are straightforward and totally capable of meeting the challenge, that is, that the Canadian public must be satisfied that their representatives work openly and do not hide behind systems, laws or measures that could perhaps protect them.

Madam Speaker, nowadays people have a very cynical attitude towards politics, and that is unfortunate. But there is one thing I know for sure, we are going to work very hard in this House, on both sides of the House, to correct that, to restore confidence and to change the atmosphere, so that people will not see politics as something dirty. In politics, the citizens chose some people to represent them to the best of their ability. We are not perfect, but we do our best. As far as I am concerned, I want to say, on behalf of our caucus, that we will do our best to try and be as open as we can, Madam Speaker, so that Canadians know there is no partisanship on either side of the House, that we are open, that we can all say:

We are not here to get rich, or to abuse the system, we are here to serve the Canadian people and this is the way we want to be seen. We want to put an end to the cynicism so apparent in the media and in the public towards politics. That has to stop, Madam Speaker, and that is why this bill is so important. The bill will give hon. members a well-known, easy-to-manage system, as well as the transparency and responsibility all of us have been looking for.

Having said that, I am sorry I got carried away a little, but it is so very important that this bill be considered as a major piece of legislation, quite essential for the proper management of our country.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, throughout the entire exercise, I think this is the first time I have stood in the House relating to Bill C-79, but I spent many hours in committee. I am going to spend just a few minutes with my colleagues in the Chamber today.

In many ways in my eleven and a half years in the Parliament of Canada, this has been the most difficult assignment that I have accepted on behalf of the Chamber itself because you cannot move a word, comma or whatever in relationship to this bill without dealing with a conflict of interest. It is the bill which guides our lives as members of Parliament and members of the Senate.

It is a statute that deals with the House of Commons and our responsibilities within it. In particular, the amendments that are proposed in Bill C–79 deal with our utilization of public funds on behalf of what we hope is a strengthening of the democratic process rather than a weakening.

It has been an exercise for me. There is a tendency to want to speak about the bill and all the marvellous things that it will do, including providing greater clarity to members and society, things that my colleague has mentioned. I am going to spend most of my time today talking about this experience in relation to the press and the role of journalists in our society related to an institution this important in our society.

I would like to say to journalists' schools around the country that this may be a case study. Material in the last 12 months related to this issue would constitute case material for a university class. I say that somewhat knowingly because my career prior to coming here was as a university teacher and a full professor.

Out of the real world, Madam Speaker, you sometimes get your best learning material. I would challenge every editorial writer in the country to review their own conscience. When they write an editorial and say that Parliament is trying to pass a law that will stop the RCMP from investigating members of Parliament, I simply say to them: "Find something in the law that we are passing today or in the previous versions or in the June report of the committee, that was designed to stop the RCMP from investigating members."

They will not find it, because it does not exist.

That does not stop senior editorial writers and editors of newspapers and journalists in broadcast from telling Canadian people that is what we are about.

It makes me angry, but it also makes me sad.

I arrived in this place in May 1979, like most Canadians a believer in democracy and with a feel for the importance of democracy. In 1984 I went to the United Nations for three months during the fall sitting of the General Assembly. I discovered that I knew nothing about the importance of democracy when I arrived.

By the end of three months, looking at a world body where most are not democracies and really getting a feel for what it would be like to live in a place that is not democratically run, I came back to this country with a different and, I hope, a better appreciation of the importance of democracy.

When you look at the way journalists have treated this issue, you see they are eroding and destroying the confidence of Canadians in their democratic institution. This Chamber in which I speak today is more important than any one of us is or could ever be, because it represents the hopes and aspirations and the dreams of Canadians.

It is the place where we try to resolve the very serious problems of the nation to provide a better future for our children and their children. When our character is attacked collectively or individually by people who do not know what they are talking about but who have absolutely no difficulty in writing or reporting the most nefarious kinds of things about members of Parliament, my blood boils and my democracy is weakened.

I do not know what we are going to do about that over time, but my natural inclination as a Conservative is always self–regulation. The journalists of this country and the journalism schools had better get off the mark and do something about the accuracy of reporting and editorial writing in this country.

Just because we choose to put our names forward in our communities, with a willingness to sit in public office, does not mean that our characters can be assassinated at will by the public press in this country. Throughout this exercise, that was done. Some of us in this Chamber aid and abet that from time to time in the heat of the moment, and that is wrong too. That is simply wrong. Democracy and the institution are far too important for us collectively to tolerate this ad infinitum.

This bill deals with a problem and I will say it as clearly as I can. The RCMP, without the passage of this bill, has to go through a court process with a judge and everything else and put all kinds of allegations in writing to be able to get the simplest piece of information from this democratic institution. That is nothing that anybody in this Chamber decided on; it is required by 100, 200 and 300 years of history. The publication of those allegations that go about behind the scenes in a search warrant is destroying people's lives: families, kids, children, MPs—all kinds of people. They make a laughing stock of the RCMP itself sometimes, with the absurdity of what is alleged.

This bill and the motivation of every single member of the committee from the start was to provide a simpler, cleaner way for an investigator in our society to get information about the people in this institution. That will save the RCMP embarrassment, that will save the members' embarrassment, that will save the members' families embarrassment, and that will save the institution embarrassment in the final analysis. That is what it has been about. Anybody who tells you anything different, Madam Speaker, simply does not understand or has some other goal or motivation in life such as to sell a newspaper.

Some people believe to sell a newspaper is the finest goal they can have in life. Well, it isn't. A newspaper should be accurate. The journalists have a responsibility to discipline themselves in the name of accuracy.

That is in another sense what the bill is about. There is no way that police forces in this country can ignore an allegation made against a member of Parliament. They have an obligation to investigate. What this bill is about is giving them accurate information so that there is no misunderstanding that can arise and no damage that can be done.

I will end in just a few moments so that my colleagues can have their chance to say something, but I stand here with pride because I know how hard the members of the committee worked and under what difficult circumstances. The biggest sense of pride is the sense that we have almost unanimous approval of 293 very special people: leaders in their home communities who were selected by the voters of this country and sent here. To say that members of Parliament are like everybody else is nonsense. They are special. They were elected to be special. They are handed special responsibilities, and there is no greater responsibility than the protection of the democratic institution itself so that it can function and it can be self–correcting.

The bill we pass today is a contribution to that activity, to that goal and that end. I am pleased to have been able to be part of that process.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I was almost ready to get up and accuse the chief government Whip of filibustering the legislation.

I also wish to rise, at this time, to speak about the proposed legislation. I decided, more than a year and a half ago, that I was no longer going to serve as Whip of this caucus. Last December, a month before my term of office ended, I agreed to be on this committee for a few short weeks to clean up some problems that existed with the present legislation.

Here we are, one year later, and we are finally having the proposed legislation put through the House of Commons. I am glad to see that it has happened. I think it helps to clarify the role of the Board of Internal Economy and, more important, it helps to make sure that there are open investigations of members of Parliament that we as a House can provide information where it is required and we are not perceived to be impeding any investigation. I think that is very important.

I also think it is important that other parts of this legislation, which have received a lot less public scrutiny, have been put into place. It is important that the role of the board is clarified. It is important that the by–laws that the board enacts be tabled in the House of Commons, so that not only members of Parliament are aware of what the rules are but, in addition, the public is aware of them.

This committee was established with the intention of doing a few short weeks of work, but it has taken a long time. I would also like to point out, in the very few minutes I have left, that other things have to be done as well. The committee, in its deliberations, has dealt with some of the problems that we face. It has helped to ensure that the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services is revising the manual, which more or less sets the ground rules for how we spend money and what are legitimate usages of the public purse by members of parliament, and that is important.

That is very important ongoing work by members of that committee, because our bible, if one wants to call it that, had become archaic and had a number of clauses which were not only unenforceable but which denied the reality all of us faced. I always cringed when I saw lines in it which said that we should not use our printing privileges for partisan purposes, that we should not be using any of our privileges for partisan purposes. When I rise in the House, I quite often have some partisan purpose for doing so. I was elected as a member of one political party. I expect to get up and speak, on behalf of that particular, partisan viewpoint. If I do so, I also expect that I will perhaps mail out literature stating that I am a New Democrat, that this is what I stand for, that this is what I believe, and that this is what I have said in the House of Commons on those very issues. We have helped to clarify some of the silly rules that we had in place. We have recognized that within limitations we are here as partisans and that we use our resources for legitimate communication of those partisan opinions to the public.

We also have other things which have to be done. The committee has recognized that it is important that we have disclosure of what we spend from the public purse and how that money has been spent. A lot of the problems we have faced result from the fact that the public does not have access to our information. Other legislatures around the world have a form of disclosure which enables the public to know what has been spent from public funds. It is only reasonable that happened for this House of Commons as well. I hope that the committee has the opportunity to finish its work in that area.

In addition, it is time that the government forced through tough, enforceable conflict of interest legislation. That should be in place. It is one of the things that will help to make sure the public understands that what we do is on behalf of the public, not for any personal benefit or gain.

There are things yet to be done, but I am proud of the work of the committee in the end. I also would like, in the very few seconds I have left, to thank the people who have worked on behalf of the committee, the researchers and others. I hope we will take a look at this legislation in a year's time. I hope we will not say that was the end of the process but that it was only the beginning of the process of helping to make sure that what we do in Parliament, how we spend money and we do on behalf of the public, is open to real and complete public scrutiny.

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Madam Speaker, as we are coming to the end of this debate, I will make a wish, a very important wish for democracy. I wish that policemen thoughout this country do their duty so that we never have to intervene into their role which is extremely important for democracy. But I also wish that members of Parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate, and the Parliament of Canada as a whole could do their duty without the improper interventions of the police or of a policeman in particular. However, the House of Commons as much as its members or the policemen will have to understand that this bill must take a little while to get over its teething troubles. I wish that policemen co–operate very closely with the Board of Internal Economy. I also want members to realize that self–discipline in any constituted body, including the House of Commons, is absolutely necessary and often convinces people who are watching us and all Canadians that it is as such the best guarantee.

I also ask that the Board of Internal Economy not seek unanimity all the time, but rather consensus. With the self–discipline we will all exercise together, I am convinced we will never again experience the problems we have been through lately.

I wish the Special Committee on the Parliament of Canada Act will immediately consider the whole question of total and complete disclosure of members of Parliament budget expenditures.

[English]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: It being two o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PLACE DU PORTAGE BUILDINGS DESIGNATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer) moved that Bill C-315, an Act to change the designations of the buildings known as Place du Portage, Phase I, II, III and IV, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure today to present this legislation to give a new designation to the buildings known as Place du Portage, Phase I, II, III and IV, located in the City of Hull.

I have accepted to present this private bill at the request of the City of Hull. This is an initiative led by city councillor Pierre Chénier and you are seeing today the outcome of a long process to change the present designation of Place du Portage because it does not reflect the specific nature of the buildings, but merely the construction stages of the complex. I must point out that, contrary to what some might be tempted to think, the names chosen by the City have nothing to do with political partisanship.

Representatives from the city of Hull wish that these buildings be now named after famous persons of national significance. So, it is with this in mind that they directed their research in order to submit the names of two famous persons who were involved in national politics and whose names would be consistent with the francophone reality of that city's territory. That is why they decided to choose Mr. Jean Marchand and Mrs. Thérèse Casgrain. The city council referred the matter to the Hull Identity Committee, a committee made up of elected representatives and citizens, which unanimously recommended the names of Jean Marchand and Therese Casgrain. The City of Hull received a lot of support for its choices, notably from the children of Mr. Marchand and Mrs. Casgrain.

Why Jean Marchand? People will remember that Jean Marchand, when he was the first Minister of Regional Economic Development, worked relentlessly to make sure that the Quebec side of the National Capital would get some federal buildings. Jean Marchand was, indeed, the key architect of the decision of the Ottawa government to move to Hull one fourth of the federal Civil Service in spite of the indignation that you remember. It is even more important now to give this tribute to him because close to 21 000 federal civil servants work today on the Quebec side of the Ottawa valley. And, soon, when Quebec takes a decision concerning its political future, those jobs in the Outaouais will still be an important factor.

Why Thérèse Casgrain? Because she played an important role in our country by spending her life fighting in favor of women's right to vote and because she is considered a leader among 20th century Canadian women who advanced the cause of reform. Wouldn't it be a good occasion to pay homage to her also, particularly since we are celebrating this year the 50th anniversary of women's right to vote.

We must also take into account the fact that federal buildings in the National Capital Region are all identified with different names such as l'Esplanade Laurier, Louis Saint-Laurent, Jules Léger, Jean Talon, Vanier, etc. To keep up with that spirit the city of Hull has made that request and also to avoid any confusion, as is the case with Place du Portage Phase I, II, III and IV. The Information Services sometimes receive many calls from people wanting to know the location of one of them.

Phases I and II of Place du Portage will now be known as Jean Marchand Building, South Tower, and Jean Marchand Buiding, North Tower. As for Phases III and IV, they will be known as Thérèse Casgrain Building, West Tower, and Thérèse Casgrain Building, East Tower. For all these reasons, I dare wish that my colleagues in the House of Commons will agree to refer this bill to a legislative committee, so that, before long, we can name these buildings on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River after these two great Canadians.

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, at the federal level, the designation of public buildings is the responsibility of Public Works. There is nothing wrong with that, since it owns most government buildings.

As a matter of fact, Public Works is not only responsible for a hundred or so federal office buildings, but also for cultural centres, employment centres, research laboratories, harbours, farms and others facilities. Public Works is also responsible for the accomodations used by 135 departments and agencies. In fact, some 150,000 civil servants go to work everyday in buildings Public Works is responsible for. Finding an appropriate name for the buildings is an important task it carries out with great care.

The policy on the designation of federal facilities is the following: Choose a prestigious name that will be readily recognized and respected; give recognition to one person or a group of persons who contributed to the well–being of Canada, the community or the customer department; finally, remind a historical event to the community or the client department.

This policy includes a number of criteria Public Works used to determine the merit of the proposals. For instance, it goes without saying that the person it is suggested to name a building after must be deceased, but it can also be named after a place or an event of historical importance, if there is a connexion between the name and the building. The names proposed must also have some prominence in the region.

It seems clear to me that the name Place du Portage is quite appropriate. It reminds us of the days when explorers travelled our rivers in canoes discovering Canada. It reminds us not only of those courageous explorers but also of traders and missionaries who travelled those rivers during decades. Place du Portage brings back to mind not only certain events but also a historic site and a lot of people instead of only two.

According to our policy on the names of federal buildings, any individual or group can make suggestions. Department officials can recommend a name themselves or ask for suggestions. These consulted persons could be the public in general, historical societies, historians, universities, municipal councils or people who have lived in the community for a long time and know the subject well. In the case of property acquired through a lease–option agreement, the promoter also has his say concerning the proposed name.

It is then up to the region's chief manager, an official of Public Works Canada, to check the proposition. To that end, he can consult with the Secretary of State, the Privy Council or any other ressource group he sees fit. The regional chief manager then presents a report on the results of the study to the deputy minister, who in turn presents it to the minister.

Finally, it is the minister who decides if the name can be given to the facilities or building. At first sight, this system seems complicated or overly prudent. But the government believes that it is worth it, that it ensures that these assets are properly named. Once the name is chosen, it is extremeley difficult to backtrack. Also, a building's name should mean something and be appreciated not only by its tenants, but the community at large and all interested parties.

For years, Mr. Speaker, buildings have been named after distinguished Canadians. As mentioned by my colleague we have, in the National Capital Region, the Jules Léger Building and the Lester B. Pearson Building. I could mention the Champlain Maritime Terminal in Quebec City or the Guy Favreau Complex in Montreal, both named after famous Canadians. That does not mean that buildings are necessarily named after politicians. Many commemorate people who distinguished themselves in other fields of activity.

I suggest to my colleague who made some proposals here, today, Mr. Speaker, that he tells the group he represents—the City of Hull, that he mentioned a few times if I am not mistaken—that we could forget politicians and look for other names.

I am proposing that, Mr. Speaker, because as Mao said, women support half of the sky, but I noticed that in the political arena they are denied access to some fame which is justly theirs.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is high time that we recognize famous women and pay tribute to those who, in the end, contributed to the history of Canada and were part of it. It is clear that if we limit ourselves to politicians we would restrict the pool of names dramatically, since it is a well known fact that women gained access to this venerable institution only recently, when in reality women had a major role in the settlement and development of Canada.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I would like for my honorable colleague that he goes back to his constituents and suggests to them that they think about the role of women in our society, without restricting themselves to political roles, which would limit too much the pool of available names. And if he needs help finding names of very important and distinguished women, I will personally assist him if his group can't. We have exceptional women in Canada as well as in Quebec.

In conclusion— I hear chauvinist comments, Mr. Speaker. I hope you did not hear them, because it is horrible to hear such things in 1990! I repeat, I find the name Place du Portage fully satisfactory. It is a very important historic site and, I repeat, I don't believe it is a good thing to change something just for the sake of it, especially according to the recommandations that have been made. I see no improvement whatsoever in it.

I would like to say finally that if the department wishes once more to change the building's name, I would hope it would choose something other than the name of a political figure. If my colleague would listen, I would suggest further that consultations be held not only in Hull, but elsewhere. Consultations should be held as well as studies made before a decision is taken on the matter.

I believe we should follow the process used previously, and succesfully, Mr. Speaker, under the supervision of different departments and several Public Works ministers.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, not only will I not support the motion, I say that the bill should be withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ferland): I thank the Hon. Member for Bourassa. I will now hear the hon. member for Gatineau—La Lièvre.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to commend the Hull City Council for the initiative it has taken through their servant, the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer. After hearing the explanations of the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer, one can only support that intitiative.

First, I would like to say to the hon. member for Bourassa that there is much ado about nothing. The city of Hull, which represents the people of the region, has taken the initiative to have the Place du Portage complex built—that place has a historical meaning since it is indeed there that portages were made for hundreds of years—and to have the towers of Phases I, II, III and IV erected. What we wanted to do was simply to give these buildings a proper name. There is nothing wrong with that as far as I am concerned.

The City of Hull should be congratulated for its choice of names because a simple glance at Mrs. Thérèse Casgrain's career shows her exceptionnal involment in various movements in Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec. Nobody can deny that she has played an important role. Many of us here have witnessed the work she has done and they know her for her sense of moderation, her kindness and her great skill. Therefore, I suggest that the Hull City Council has displayed good taste in choosing her name and I congratulate them.

I come now to Jean Marchand, the other proposed name. I believe the hon. member for Hull–Aylmer is more aware than I am of Mr. Marchand's role in the region as a former mayor of Hull, he knows Mr. Marchand was paramount to the expansion of the federal presence in Hull during the construction of the various phases of those buildings.

Now the City of Hull wants to complete this effort by giving those buildings a name that will identify them with a significant person. The names it has proposed are excellent and I need not repeat what the hon. member for Hull–Aylmer has already said on the subject. We support him, Madam Speaker, but if I may, I would have a suggestion that I am sure he could convey to the city council in Hull. Since the site bears a historic significance as a place of portaging—in fact, for hundreds of years, our first settlers who came from France to establish themselves here, in Nouvelle-France, have used this place as such—I was wondering if we could this is only a suggestion, mind you, because I don't have any advice to give to Hull city council—could we not call the whole structure "Complexe Place du Portage", and rename the Phases I and II as the Jean Marchand Building, North and South Towers respectively, phases III and IV being renamed Thérèse Casgrain Building, North and South Towers—or East and West, if such is the wish of the member for Hull—Aylmer.

That is my suggestion to the hon. member, and I ask him to give it to the city administration. In this way, we could recognize the historical aspect of the site, considering it as a whole, called Place du Portage, and nevertheless improving it with the names suggested by Hull, that is Thérèse Casgrain and Jean Marchand.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, the suggestion made today by the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer is very interesting. I think the Conservative member, who recommended that we should turn down this suggestion, call it a bill or a motion, based her remarks on a very simple argument. As far as I am concerned, I think it best to provide a building with a specific designation, in order to show the respect we have for people who have served this country. For all these reasons, this suggestion seems to me like a good idea.

And there is another reason for that as well, Madam Speaker. The Hull residents have themselves expressed the wish to change the designations of the Place du Portage buildings to honour the memory of Jean Marchand and Thérèse Casgrain. I do think personally that it is very fitting to honour these two key figures in this way.

For all of us, Madam Speaker, there is a concern to serve our community's needs and expressed concerns. In the case of this particular Private Members' Bill before us, if I understand the argument correctly, that is precisely what the member for Hull—Aylmer is attempting to do.

He is attempting to bring before the House something that will reflect the wishes of his community to see the two individuals of whom he has spoken, Jean Marchand and Thérèse Casgrain, showing the honour of which I think they are quite deserving for many reasons. They are reasons that have to do with the risks which they took in the fight for social justice in the Province of Quebec and with the contribution which both have made in the Parliament of Canada.

From my personal point of view, I am particularly pleased to see the suggestion that Thérèse Casgrain be given a sign of honour and respect here in the National Capital Region. Her work as a leader in the fight for women's rights in Quebec was, of course, extremely important. But her work as leader of the party which was the predecessor to our party, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, is also something which certainly I respect considerably, and which I think should be respected by people across the country. She was one of the very first women leaders of a political party anywhere in the country and that was not a very easy task. It was not an easy task to be a path breaker.

The names that have been suggested by the community of Hull are appropriate names and names that deserve to be honoured. As a House of Commons, we should respect the expressed wishes of the community of Hull and accept the motion which has been put forward by the member for Hull—Aylmer, to have it pass to a legislative committee, and have representatives from the community of Hull come to speak to us about their reasons for this particular choice of names. In other words, we should not stand in the way of the expressed concern and desire which has come from the city of Hull to honour two important Canadians.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today to speak in the House on behalf of the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer.

I understand very clearly the motives and rationale for placing before the House of Commons the legislation that he has placed before us today.

Mr. Boudria: But—

Mr. Malone: The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell says: "But", presuming for a moment that somehow I might automatically, as he would, be of the opposite of the view for no other reason than that I am on the other side of the House. I want to say to the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer, who is a reasoned and rational person, that he will know that is not automatically my position.

We look at the edifice that is across the river, a large structure of buildings, with that beautiful name. I am not sure what particular nuances it has for French-speaking Canadians, but I know that for English-speaking Canadians, names such as Portage la Prairie and Place du Portage have a very special ring for which we have a deep sense of our national history.

We know that the country was discovered from east to west along the highways of the rivers, the portages, and all that infers. It beckons back to the earliest days of the foundation of the country.

I would agree with the hon. member who spoke earlier, a member of the Liberal Party, who said that that whole complex should retain and contain that name, Place du Portage. But then we have these towers that I submit could only have been named after a national committee of accountants put together a thorough analysis and study and came up with the picturesque, descriptive, and accurate titles of Tower I, II, III, and IV. I commend that presumed committee of accountants, wherever it might be, for its accuracy.

I submit that if there is anything that is in need in our country today, it is the need for national symbols that will make us hearken to and recognize the heritage and the great people who built the country. Names should be honoured and recognized.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that having looked at the names that have been put forward, I would want to make two comments. First, I would want the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer to know that in no way for either of those two names could I find any justifiable reason to say that those names ought not to be utilized. Second, if I could, it probably would be inappropriate for me to say no to those names to the hon. member who is the representative of that city, after his city council has said that these are the names that it wants. That would very much impinge on the local community from which he comes and which he represents.

I will, however, put forward this thought, because I think there is in the country a need to advance more symbols. There is a need to advance more recognition to our history. Instead of naming two towers for one person, here is a possibility to name all four towers after Canadians and for Canadians who have demonstrated purpose.

I am an advantaged member of this House because I sit right down at this end. I do not know which camera is on me at the moment, but if it is the far one, the pages will be seen right beside me.

In preparing to speak today, I turned to the pages and asked them to name for me a famous Canadian. They did. They said Rick Hansen. I asked them to name another one and they said Terry Fox. I asked them to name another, and they said Lester Pearson, then Billy Bishop, Karen Kain, Brian Orser, and Margaret Atwood. The civil service is going to go plum nuts when it hears this one. The hon. member for Prescott—Glengarry—Russell might even put the motion forward. They said Wayne and Shuster. How do you like that, Madam Speaker? 'Where do you work?" "I am over at the Wayne and Shuster Building".

What I found intriguing about the list given to me by the pages is that of the nine names, one is a politician. It is important that politicians be recognized, but that it is also important that we recognize this country was built to a very large and significant extent, not by what took place in this building, but what took place as a result of men and women from all parts of Canada who helped to make the country great.

I know everyone in this House is sensitive to the fact that we have come through a tumultuous summer in terms of native affairs in this country. When I look at the situation with native persons in Canada and when I put in balance the fact that I know so many native leaders of extraordinary quality, of extraordinary skill, with far above average capacity for articulation, I am perplexed at why North America, both Canada and the United States, has so few native heroes.

We have Buffy Sainte-Marie, a folk singer who is nationally and internationally known. I put that in the context of the black movement in the United States. I was a student at the University of Montana. One of the most moving days of my life was to be in San Francisco among a group of 22,000 blacks to listen to a speech by Martin Luther King. It will, as long as I live, be a highlight of my life.

The blacks advanced to a significant extent because of national heroes in their country. The first such person was probably Jackie Robinson, the first black to play professional baseball. Today television broadcasts of Bill Cosby warms the hearts of virtually every person around the world. With national heroes, we soon do what we ought to do in race relations. We fail to see that the person's skin is a different colour. That is important.

Across the river in the city of Hull is probably one of Canada's proudest buildings, the Museum of Civilization. It will probably live with that name forever. It may be all too soon forgotten that that building was designed by an Albertan from my home province, a full blood native Canadian and one of Canada's most exceptional architects.

It might well be in the community of Hull since we have four towers to name that there would be some appropriateness, especially in these times, to reach out and say to the native community: "We will place the name of one of your people on one of our national buildings". I submit that that consideration might be undertaken. I think of the name of the person who my constituency was named after, Crowfoot.

Chief Crowfoot was born a Blood. He migrated north with his grandfather at the age of five, walking from what is now Montana into what is now southern Alberta. He became chief of the Black Foot and he adopted a Cree son, the first test of multiculturalism. That person, who spoke only his native tongue, at the time of the signing of treaty seven, spoke in English. He said this as an elderly chief: "In a little while I will be gone from among you. Wither I come and wither I go, I do not know. What is life? It is like the flash of the firefly in the night. It is like the breath of the buffalo in the wintertime. It is like the little shadow that races across the grass and loses itself in the sunset." That, by a nomad, who travelled with the buffalo, who learned the language late in mid life, to give that kind of poetic expression, written by the Northwest Mounted Police, needs somewhere in this country his name on an edifice, a building, to signal his importance.

I commend the hon. member for Aylmer—Hull. I simply ask that we only take that time to do the job fully and completely so that all towers can be appropriately named and that we enhance in the process the naming of more places after good Canadians, wherever they may come from.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I did not intend to speak this afternoon. I simply wanted to support the bill presented by the hon. member for Hull—Aylmer, and I am delighted to do so.

But I feel compelled to take the floor because of comments by the hon. member for Bourassa. She said in this House earlier today that we should not recognize political figures only when it comes to naming our buildings.

That is what the hon. member for Bourassa said. She does not want a certain building to be named after Thérèse Casgrain. Madam Speaker, here is what the Canadian Encyclopedia says about her:

Thérèse Casgrain, née Forget, reformer, born at Montréal 10 July 1896. Best remembered for her leadership of the campaign for women's suffrage in Québec.

An hon. member: If it were not for her, you would not even be here!

Mr. Boudria: Still, the hon. member for Bourassa is against that appointment!

An hon. member: That is incredible. Really!

Mr. Boudria: It continues: "[—[ before WWII, she was a leading 20th-century Canadian reformer. [—[A founding member of the Provincial Franchise Committee for women's suffrage in 1921, [—[and hosted a popular Radio Canada program in the 1930s, "Fémina"." I am skipping a lot, Madam Speaker. "In 1961 she founded the Quebec branch—

Mrs. Gibeau: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bourassa on a question of privilege.

Mrs. Gibeau: Madam Speaker, if I am to be quoted, I should be in context. What I said—

Mr. Boudria: That is not a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Mrs. Gibeau: I insist, Madam Speaker. If he is going to quote me, he should give the complete quote instead of being so selective. He is worse than a reporter. Honestly. That is disgusting.

• (1440)

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, if I were the member for Bourassa I would also want to retract an earlier statement when she was saying things like that. I do not blame her for wanting to withdraw what she said earlier this afternoon because it was a shame, Madam Speaker!

Madam Deputy Speaker: This is Friday afternoon and I should think that everybody is anxious to leave these hallowed precincts. Still I think that, on either side, members would not be well advised to impute motives as a result of statements made by one colleague or another.

I would therefore ask the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to continue his remarks but without making accusations which might not indeed be directly related to what the hon. member for Bourassa may have said.

Mr. Boudria: I shall address this point some other time, Madam Speaker. Just the same, I want to tell you that I am not at all satisfied with what we have just heard.

Madam Speaker, I want to talk about Hon. Jean Marchand. The Hon. Member opposite said that she was against designating a building in honour of Hon. Jean Marchand. I am not imputing motives; the reason she is against it does not matter. What matters is that she is against it and for that, she should be ashamed of herself! I have the rigth to say so in this House. I suggest she should be ashamed of herself for being against the designation of a building in honour of Thérèse Casgrain and Jean Marchand and I suggest that Hull—Aylmer constituents and all the other Canadians share my views, Madam Speaker. I am prepared to say so in front of anyone. The City of Hull has submitted an application through its elected representatives, and they are not just nobodies! They were people chosen by the Hull electorate both at the federal and municipal levels.

Here is part of the record of proceedings of a Hull Municipal Council meeting dealing deals with this issue. I should like to quote from a resolution adopted on March 20, 1990: "It is resolved that the council is asking the Government of Canada to designate Place du Portage, Phase I, as Jean Marchand Building, North Tower, Phase II as Jean Marchand Building, South Tower, Phase III, as Thérèse Casgrain Building, East Tower, and Phase IV, as the Thérèse Casgrain Building, West Tower".

The councillors of the city of Hull are the ones who asked for this, Madam Speaker. The federal representatives, more particularly the member for that riding, asked for this in the House and I had the privilege of seconding the motion in the House today.

If members opposite are against such a designation, let them say so. But in fifteen minutes, Madam Speaker, we will know for sure. If Conservative members decide not to allow us our right to vote on this motion today, that is their privilege. They can kill the bill, talk it out. They might do it; that is their privilege.

And I would dare say that they do, it will only be for political partisanship. It is not mere coincidence that Mrs. Casgrain was a New Democrat, and Mr. Marchand a Liberal. A few years ago, when the time came to erect a statue in honour of Mr. Diefenbaker, I gladly supported the motion here in Parliament, and it was done. Two years later, we tried to do the same for Mr. Pearson, and what took just a few months for Mr. Diefenbaker took two years for Mr. Pearson. But we got our wish although it took much more time. I did not blame the government then because we finally got what we were asking for.

But today, Madam Speaker, what the Conservatives are displaying is partisanship of the worse kind. When I see the hon. member for Bourassa act as she did today, Madam Speaker, I am outraged. I hope the constituents from Hull and all Canadians, but especially women, will remember what the hon. member for Bourassa said today and the decision this House is about to make.

[English]

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour and Minister of State (Transport)): Madam Speaker, the name Place du Portage goes deep into the heart of the city of Hull as I understand, and for many people it invokes memories of the voyageurs who passed this way in quest of their furs and other riches as they moved westward and opened up this country.

The portage was, of course, the overland route taken to avoid the Chaudière Rapids as the tradesmen moved up and down the Ottawa River.

Writing of the trail which the Indians used to cut off the long way around the bend in the river, the hon. F. R. Latchman said: "In order to get ahead of the voyageurs as they came up the river in their canoes, the Indian runners took a trail across the country, leaving the river at a point where the city of Hull now stands".

They bore northwesterly until they reached the mountain this side of the Eardley Line and then followed by foot across Eardley and thence to the river again.

By this means they could let their tribe know of the approach of the voyageurs as they came up and down the river. At first it was to prepare their tribe for a hostile reception of the voyageurs and later to meet them for barter and trade in furs and do commerce with the voyageurs.

The traditional portage paths that skirted the Chaudière Rapids were on the north shore. They first crossed the present day Eddy Company yards and at Little Chaudière Rapids, a short distance upstream, another carry was necessary.

Today in the Hull suburb of Val-Tetreau, beside the Ottawa River and a short walk downstream from the statue of the martyred priest, Saint Jean de Brébeuf, there is a monument showing the old path over which the missionaries, explorers and traders trod.

Before the great days of the timber industry, many fortunes in furs were floated up and down the River.

As the traders went, settlers appeared, things changed.

In 1800 the arrival of Philemon Wright marked the beginning of the lumber trade which was to bring growth, prosperity and many fortunes to the area in the century that followed.

I mention these historical events because this history is very important in our country, important to this area, and important to all of Canada. Certainly the name Place du Portage sticks out.

The name was selected with care when the buildings were built. It preserves the memory of a stretch of ground that was important in the building of this country. It is a reminder to citizens of Hull and all of us in the national capital region of our beginnings and our heritage.

It is important that we do not in any way dilute or obscure the name Place du Portage as it relates to the complex of buildings which have transformed the city of Hull over the past several years to be a thriving, growing and important part of the national capital region.

The proposal put forward by the hon. member for Aylmer in Bill C-315 merits consideration. It is the practice of the federal government to name some government buildings after distinguished Canadians when such action is deemed suitable and doable.

As other speakers have pointed out, M. Marchand and Mme Casgrain both served with some major distinction in Canadian public life.

But in the case of Place du Portage I think it is important that no precipitous action be taken that might detract from the eminently suitable and well-established name that the complex now bears.

The name is well established and well known. Maybe it has some simplicity to it, as the member for Crowfoot mentioned, that they just went "one, two, three, and four", but it does sit well over-all with the citizens of the national capital region.

It is also a rather simple nomenclature. Place du Portage' is a very large complex and houses a myriad of federal government departments and agencies.

Its tenants include Supply and Services Canada, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Employment and Immigration Canada. It houses all or parts of the National Capital Commission—

Mr. Boudria: We know that. Come on.

Mr. James: Well maybe some Canadians do not know that. The member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is yelling out: "Come on". Maybe all Canadians watching do not know that. Maybe it is kind of important and interesting that they do. You do, we do, because we are all here. It is amazing what other people do not know, so maybe it will not hurt to tell them what departments are there. Canada Post Corporation is there and so is Labour Canada, Public Works Canada and other departments and agencies, including Health and Welfare Canada, Agriculture Canada, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, and some of the offices of National Defence. In short, it is a microcosm of the federal government itself.

Over the past decade and a half, it has become a familiar address to thousands of Canadians who do business with the government and who receive services from the complex. Members of the public have a difficult enough time working out how and under what name they can reach a certain department or agency. All of us have problems now and again, and we work here every day.

We should be very careful to avoid making things even more complicated. I am not saying that changing the name is going to do that but I think we should think about all of this. The present nomenclature is quite clear, the complex is named Place du Portage and its main buildings are designated in a very simplistic way, I, II, III and IV. This is simply for mailing purposes and facilitates giving directions to those wishing to visit a government office there.

Mr. Boudria: Oh, yes.

Mr. James: The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell keeps saying a lot of words. I think I always sit here very quietly. I do not interrupt him, I am a very quiet member of Parliament who does not yell across at anybody—

Mr. Boudria: I will resist.

Mr. James: So I will expect, on this Friday afternoon, that he gives me the same respect.

The proposal put forward in Bill C-315, would add another layer to the designations already in place. It would call one building the Jean Marchand building, north tower and another the Jean Marchand building, south tower and the same in connection with Thérèse Casgrain. Then we get into east towers, west towers and that sort of thing.

It has been a consistent policy of the government that when buildings are named after specific persons, it gives the name only to one physical structure. That is the way it has been done. No one is saying that these particular names should not be used. It was suggested by the city of Hull and by the member of Parliament for Hull—Aylmer. I do not think anyone is indicating that these people are not great Canadians. But I think that giving two separate and distinct edifices the name of the same person might invite confusion so maybe we should think about this. For this reason alone, it could be that we should reflect upon it.

However, it does not mean that the government rejects out of hand, as maybe it was indicated by some people across the way, the idea of giving names of the prominent Canadians to these buildings. I do not think there would be any disagreement from members opposite that there are other important Canadians, other than politicians, some names were mentioned, for instance, by the Pages to the member for Crowfoot. I am sure if we gave the question to the young people of Quebec, they would come up with another long list that would have a lot of other names on it and they would not all be politicians.

In fact, the Prime Minister received a similar proposal from Le Conseil de la municipalité de la ville de Hull earlier this year, as the hon. member probably knows, and he has referred it to the Minister of Public Works for his study and consideration. The minister, as members hopefully know, has the responsibility for the naming of federal buildings and structures and he will certainly do so.

This is not an undertaking that is entered into lightly by the government. I hope that we would all take that into consideration here today. It is normal for the matter to be thoroughly researched and that there be extensive consultation for the naming of buildings. Certainly the minister and the government will do that, taking into account the submission made by the city of Hull and the member of Parliament for that constituency and the discussions that were held here today.

A building is a thing of some permanence and it is important that all those directly affected have ample opportunity to express their views. For these reasons, and without precluding the possibility of assigning names to the structure at this point, the position of the government will be that we should take under advisement the names that have been put forward and look at naming all four buildings in the future.

Madam Speaker, I thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on this important bill put forward by the member from Hull.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I will be brief, because my colleague also wants to speak to this matter. I would like to make just one point. One of my first experiences in this field, when I was elected mayor of Beauharnois, was that people wanted to change the name of the Beauharnois Municipal Hall, which had been known as such since time immemorial, and it so happened that they wanted to name it after my political opponent who was the outgoing mayor of Beauharnois at the time. However, I had a good excuse which was that he wasn't dead yet and so they did not have the right to do that. However, I still felt somewhat guilty about possible political overtones, and that is what I have been feeling during the last fifteen or twenty minutes, and that is the point I wanted to make. Clearly, if someone had suggested that the four towers be named after four Indian chiefs and if we had opposed it, we would have been accused of being anti-Indians.

We have the names of two prominent Canadians, a man and a woman. I suppose that one can be accused of being "blue" and not "red", or of not willing to recognize the achievements of women. That is not true because I believe they both had a political career that I admire, and I would love, at some point, to have the political career they enjoyed.

Personally, I believe that we cannot make things simpler than they are now. Place du Portage, Phase I, II, III or IV, the name this complex has been carrying for 15 years now, might not be very poetic, but it seems easier to me than Jean Marchand North Tower, Jean Marchand South Tower, Thérèse Casgrain East Tower, Thérèse Casgrain West Tower. I used to be the Paliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and each year we received thousands of letters. There is also Employment and Immigration and Consumer and Corporate Affairs. All addresses would have to be changed. I was impressed by my colleague's speech earlier. I also think we should keep things simple and maintain some continuity. It has been there for 15 years and it should be kept for future generations. I am not saying that the proposed names do not mean anything, but I still think that what is being suggested lacks in simplicity.

I would have had more to say, Madam Speaker, but I will yield to my colleague who has a few words to say about this bill.

[English]

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on Bill C–315 as put forward by the member from Hull. I can understand why he did this. It is his home constituency. He is an individual who has very strong feelings about the designation of names for the particular buildings in question. The two people mentioned are without doubt two famous Canadians, Thérèse Casgrain and Jean Marchand.

I think all of us in this House are very familiar with their careers and particularly myself—

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved that Bill C-314, an act to amend the Criminal Records Act and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is brought before the House today to remedy a situation that should have been corrected, but unfortunately was not, when the concurrent provisions of the Criminal Code were created in 1972.

• (1310 )

In 1972, it was decided, after a long series of hearings before the Law Reform Commission, that under certain circumstances a judge, instead of convicting an accused, should be able to order and direct that the accused be discharged absolutely or on conditions prescribed in a probation order. The result of that discharge in effect was that there was to be no conviction at all.

Unfortunately, under the criminal records provision, we like keeping records on people. When we keep records, we can keep the record that they were discharged from their criminal charge. The judge ordered that they not be convicted, yet we keep a record that they were not convicted.

As a consequence, in order to get a clean criminal record, these people are now required, after five years—because they cannot do anything without a five-year wait—to proceed to the National Parole Board to make an application. Because the Parole Board is overstuffed with work and cannot get at its work, it takes a year and a half longer to get absolved of a conviction that the act says they were not convicted of.

So, we have the absolute stupidity of it all in the way the criminal record system operates. We have all sorts of people in our constituency, Sir, carrying with them a record that makes it difficult sometimes for them to get employment because they have a criminal record, or at least there is a record of their activities. Sometimes they have a difficult time with immigration. They have a difficult time generally because they have this record and we keep records of people who were not convicted, because the act says that the judge can discharge them and the judge has discharged them.

Let me read some of the debates that took place when this matter was proposed by the Hon. Otto Lang. I am reading from the Commons Debate of April 27, 1972, at page 1700.

> First of all, we propose to put into the hands of judges and magistrates the power to give an absolute or conditional discharge to persons who either plead guilty or are found guilty by them. This, of course, means that the offender will not be convicted. This means that in certain cases, particularly of young offenders who have transgressed in a technical way without in any malicious sense having attempted to injure society, the judge or magistrate is given the power to use this approach instead of rendering a suspended sentence which might otherwise have been the next least severe penalty available to him.

That was the whole intent of the statute. I can go on further and tell you what the critic for the New Democratic Party said. Having analysed the bill, I found that no one from the Progressive Conservative Party spoke on this section. In the usual course, this was an omnibus bill that covered a whole lot of other matters, including airline hijacking, and most of the attention of the debate was, of course, focused on airline hijacking.

I will read to you from page 1705 of Hansard of April 27, 1972 as to what the New Democratic Party said. Mr. Gilbert is, of course, now a judge of a court and he certainly was pretty interested in this particular matter. He said:

> The Minister of Justice waxed eloquent with regard to the changes concerning conditional and absolute discharge, and I thought he was right in doing so, and taking a great step forward from the approach of suspended sentence to that of conditional or absolute discharge. This is a giant step forward. I was happy to see that not only if a person pleads guilty, but when a person is found guilty and a conviction is registered we will give the judge discretion to grant an absolute or a conditional discharge if it is in the best interest of the accused and is not contrary to the public interest. The result will be that in time the offence will be deemed not to have been committed.

We have here a situation where it was intended that there be no conviction and, clearly, no conviction registered. The matter came before committee. I will read from the meeting of the justice and legal affairs committee of this House on May 11, 1972. Mr. Lang appeared before the committee to explain the bill. He said:

> These clauses allow the judge additional latitude where a person pleads guilty or is found guilty to discharge conditionally or absolutely. The person then is deemed not to be convicted with consequences which follow both for, say, the immigration law and sometimes perhaps for motor vehicle law in the provinces and in other places.

Mr. Gilbert replied:

> Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the minister for introducing these sections. It is a great step forward and I think he should be recognized for having the courage and the progressive attitude that applies to these sections. I hope they work. I think he is very familiar with what has happened in the past even though the judge had the power to impose suspended sentence it still carried grave consequences with regard to a person's job or travel or bonding. This may alleviate some of those problems.

That is exactly what ought to happen.

It seems to me a travesty of all justice that a person goes before a court and that court says: "You may have sinned young man but go, there is no conviction against you. You are absolutely discharged or you are discharged conditionally on certain things happening." He walks out of the courtroom relieved. He may apply to become a police officer two or three years later. He cannot, because he has a conviction registered against him, even though the statute says no conviction. He applies for a job where a bond is required. They draw a criminal record. There it is, large as life. Even though the judge intended no conviction, even though the Criminal Code says no conviction on those circumstances, there is no job and no future. That was exactly what this provision was intended to remedy.

If you could somehow clean up a matter like this easily, it would be fine. Our criminal record system requires you to appear before or make an application to the National Parole Board. That board is busy. It is overloaded with these kinds of cases. There has not been a single case since conditional or absolute discharges were imposed where the board has refused to remove the record of these convictions. The board treats them as non-existent. They were not intended to be there. The judge treated them as non-existent, yet our statute carries them on because somewhere along the line police departments and others in law enforcement like to keep records. It is time we stopped keeping these records. It is time the judge who is in charge of the case says that there be an absolute or conditional discharge and that should be the end of it.

This bill goes on to declare that there should be a record kept while the appeal is pending, if there is an appeal from the Crown. Of course, that should be there. After the period for appeal is expired, there should be no further blotch on the person's career. That was the intention of the statute and that is what ought to occur. One does not get an absolute discharge or a conditional discharge easily. You only get it under very rare circumstances. It is not the kind of thing that judges hand out willy-nilly .The judge wants to make sure, if there is a record, he can give a suspended sentence or a minor fine. They can handle it in all sorts of other ways. The intent of an absolute or conditional discharge is that people not be deemed convicted. That is the kind of thing this bill is trying to remedy.

This matter has caused me, as a member of Parliament, a lot of problems with my constituents.

When I spoke to the committee in terms of what bills should come up for voting, other members of Parliament on the committee, in looking at the matter, declared that they had the same problem as I had. We are solving problems for our constituents who, somewhere along the line in their young lives, committed an offence against society and the judge gave an absolute discharge. They come into our office wondering why the system is destroying them. It was not intended to do so, and we ought to remedy that.

If the government wants to oppose this or delay the vote, we ought to look at that. I ask government members, why mouth speeches opposed to this, why not support it and get on with it, and solve the problem that we all face when people come to our offices in need of help?

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to speak today to this Private Members' Bill C-314.

This particular bill directs its attention to an area of criminal law that very much deserves our attention. The government has already introduced one bill in this session to deal with an aspect of the Criminal Records Act and with the period of time that a person must wait before he or she can apply for a pardon for a drug offence.

The intent of the member's bill is pretty clear. Where there is an absolute discharge or conditional discharge granted by a court, where the record of conviction or non-conviction would be destroyed so that that record does not dog the balance of the life of the person who went through the court process, it just means simple destruction and non-reference to it in the years to come. While I respect that intent, I can see some practical problems in implementation. I would like to touch on a few of those without in any way detracting from the integrity of the intention of the bill, and I believe it should be dealt with by the justice minister in this Parliament.

The first item is that the Criminal Records Act styles itself as an act to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences and have subsequently rehabilitated, et cetera. That is a bit of an illusion because the short name for the act is the Criminal Records Act. In real life, I suppose, it should have been called the criminal pardons act. When you look closely at this act, it really does not deal very well with criminal records. It should not be called the Criminal Records Act. In fact, it does not even have a definition of the term criminal record. That is a very serious problem in an act purporting to deal with criminal records when it deals with pardons.

The result is that when you deal with criminal records in that act, or under the Criminal Code, you do not really have an idea of what the criminal record is. Is it the certificate in the original court file? Is it a secondary record that merely states the existence of a record? Is it a notation in an electronic file? Is it a statement in a police file? A statement in a police force's correspondence? Is it a computer record? Is it a secondary record that has been transmitted to a third party? How far down the line does it reach?

We have never taken the time to define that. It is an area that does cry out for our attention. We just do not know what we are dealing with here in terms of these records.

Not only do we not know exactly how that criminal record is constituted, but we do not have a comprehensive statute governed registry of criminal records in this country. We do have CPIC run by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, that does provide pretty reasonable information for police forces, but it is not the comprehensive registry I have just referred to.

I remember in my previous incarnation as a practising lawyer trying to get a record of a criminal record from a court in another part of Canada. I believe it was the province of New Brunswick. Eventually I found the record in a court in a small town in New Brunswick. I was fortunate in having a bit of an indication from the parties involved as to where I might locate the record, but it did not seem like much of a national system of criminal records to me.

How can we have a national system of justice when it is broken into 11 separate parts, and we do not have this comprehensive system or procedure for dealing with records? I submit there is a burden on the federal government to deal with that. It is an omission of ours as a country.

Two of the more dramatic manifestations of that lack of leadership and problems in the judicial system are the recent Askov decision where the Supreme Court of Canada decision is causing indirectly, or even directly, the dismissal of thousands of criminal charges in the province of Ontario. There has been no action or response on the part of the justice minister here in this Parliament. The other one is the Charles Ng case, and it is not the only one, where after the expiry of two-thirds of the man's sentence under a section in the Immigration Act, the man could easily have been deported. But no, that was too easy for us. We let the man serve his whole sentence. Even now, his sentence is complete and we keep him in protective custody while we try to figure out if he can be extradited.

There is a clear abdication of responsibility and leadership here in the justice field in governing the interplay of the Extradition Act, the Immigration Act and the Corrections Act.

Going back to the member's bill, as to the issue of destruction of criminal records, aside from the absence of a definition of what a criminal record is, the member's bill provides a right to an individual to be present when the record is destroyed. I would submit if that is an absolute right, then the bill should be dealing with how we go about contacting the individual. If you cannot get the individual there to view the destruction, do you delay the destruction until you find him or her? I submit that some people in this country who do have criminal records can be very difficult to locate. They have learned to do that. That is another minor problem with this bill.

Last, the reference in the bill to section 736(3)(c) of the Criminal Code dealing with autre fois convict produces an odd result with the way this bill deals with that section. The purpose of that plea of autre fois convict is to provide to an accused a package plea to show the court that he or she has already been convicted of an offence arising out of the same facts, in fact the same offence. If one is discharged of that conviction, the act deems you not to have been ever convicted. The section proposed by the hon. member would prevent one from pleading autre fois convict later. That takes away the benefit of the plea which should be there for all of us. I do not think that was the intended result. Whether or not one has actually been convicted or discharged, one still has to have the right to plead autre fois convict. That is another minor problem.

In summation, I thank the member for his obvious caring about this issue and for his constructive approach to rectifying an area of omission in our criminal records and criminal justice system.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very brief. I have to assume that government members are prepared to allow this private member's bill to pass at second reading and to go to a legislative committee, as I think it should. First of all, I commend the hon. member for Mississauga South for bringing forward Bill C-314.

The purpose of this bill, according to a notation in the bill itself, is to provide where a person is discharged under the Criminal Code in respect of an offence that all records relating to that offence must be destroyed. I also agree with the member who brought the bill forward that it is long overdue. This kind of rectifying legislation should have been brought forward by governments back in the 1970s, let alone the 1980s and now here we are in 1990, the beginning of a whole new decade.

I too have had some experience as a member of Parliament in trying to assist constituents to get pardons for a non-crime, as it were, as the hon. member so ably described in his opening remarks. It struck me at that time that what I was doing was not only a waste of time for me, but it was an unnecessary worry and burden for the constituent. That constituent had already been discharged from any criminal liability at the time by the presiding judge, and yet his or her record or non-record in the criminal records files had continued for years. We in the New Democratic Party welcome this bill this afternoon. We sincerely hope that it will pass. Obviously no vote is necessary. We are not going to talk it out, because there is no point in talking it out if we want it to pass.

I am still very concerned—and I know this is not totally relevant to this bill—about the length of time it takes to achieve pardons from the National Parole Board for relatively minor offences that took place many years in the past. It is an absolute shame that for a minor offence a citizen of this country, even if convicted, has to wait a minimum of five years before he or she can initiate this time consuming procedure to obtain that pardon.

We support Bill C-314 at second reading. We hope there are no hitches or glitches when it goes to a legislative committee, and we look forward to this bill becoming law as expeditiously as is humanly possible.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the hon. member for Mississauga South. I commend him for the time and effort he has put into preparing his bill for our consideration.

Before proceeding to the specifics of amending the Criminal Records Act, I believe members of the House would welcome some further background information as a basis for discussion. In Canada federal clemency powers are exercised by means of three distinct yet interrelated mechanisms: the royal prerogative of mercy, section 683 and section 686 of the Criminal Code, and the Criminal Records Act. Both the royal prerogative, which is exercised by the Governor General, and the Criminal Code provisions, which are exercised by the Governor in Council, are largely unfettered, discretionary powers which permit the application of exceptional remedies, pardons, remissions, or respite in extraordinary circumstances. Stemming from the ancient privilege of monarchs to dispense mercy in deserving cases, these mechanisms are used as a last resort to ensure that justice can be tempered with compassion.

By comparison, the Criminal Records Act formally recognizes that an offender has satisfied the sentence imposed by the court and has demonstrated substantially that he or she is a responsible citizen. As such, the pardon granted by virtue of this legislation seeks to remove the social and legal disabilities which flow from conviction and, at the same time, to symbolize the ex-offender's successful social reintegration.

An individual convicted of a federal offence may apply under the Criminal Records Act to the Solicitor General for a pardon after a waiting period following completion of sentence. The waiting periods are as follows for the various levels of offences. When an offender has been convicted of an indictable offence, he or she will not be eligible to apply for a pardon until five years have elapsed after sentence expiry. An individual convicted of a summary offence must wait three years before applying.

As the legislation now stands—and this is the object of the amendments today—those charged with summary or indictable offences, who upon being found guilty receive absolute or conditional discharges, are ineligible to apply for pardons until one or three years respectively have elapsed after the decision of the court.

I will be moving to these particulars a little later in my discourse. At the moment, after the application for pardon is received, inquiries into the behaviour of the applicant since the date of his or her conviction are made by officials of the National Parole Board, which as we all know is an agency of the Ministry of the Solicitor General.

The Governor in Council may grant the pardon acting on the recommendation received from the Solicitor General. A pardon has the effect of vacating the conviction. The applicant's criminal record is sealed, that is set apart, and cannot be divulged without the written approval of the Solicitor General. The pardon can be revoked, however, if the recipient is no longer of good conduct, is convicted of a subsequent federal offence, or obtained the pardon on the basis of knowingly concealed or fraudulent information.

To build on this background, I believe that we should have some concept of the significance of the legislation that the member for Mississauga South is proposing to amend. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I will outline the impact of the Criminal Records Act through a brief statistical account, because many Canadians have availed themselves of its provisions and many more will in years to come.

The annual number of pardon applications referred to the National Parole Board has risen virtually without interruption since the Criminal Records Act was proclaimed in 1970: from 380 applications in 1970 to 8,010 in 1981 and to some 23,000 in 1988-89. While some of the forms must be returned to applicants because they are premature or lacking essential data and others are ultimately discontinued as in cases of ineligibility, for example, the vast majority of legitimate requests are granted. This may simply indicate that those who correctly anticipate refusal do not apply, but approximately 98 per cent of all applications are approved. Notwithstanding the rapid increase in applications and the high grant rate, the number of pardon requests submitted represents a very small portion of the total population of ex-offenders eligible for pardons. Although an exact number of potential pardoned candidates cannot be determined precisely, the RCMP reported last year that 2.5 million Canadians—and that is almost one in every ten Canadians— have criminal records. More than one-half of these represents summary convictions and is usually indicative of lesser crimes and infractions.

By the way, I did want to mention that many of us are unaware that pardons are obtainable through a somewhat challenging but nonetheless straightforward process. There are no exorbitant fees to be paid, and it is not necessary that an applicant retain a lawyer. The number of applications might also rise considerably, should these facts gain wider recognition.

A sample of National Parole Board files covering the 1976-1980 period has been analysed to provide a more complete description of pardons. In this sample group of 17,700 applicants, employment was the major reason cited for submitting an application. Some 48 per cent of applicants stated that a pardon would improve their prospects of gaining employment, advancement or security in their current job. A desire to start literally with a clean slate is an obvious consideration. The desire to achieve peace of mind is another, as indicated by the 84 per cent of applicants who were employed when their request was submitted since, in a majority of these cases, the employers were unaware of the applicant's criminal conviction.

To summarize, rather than trying Your Honour's patience and the patience of this House with an endless stream of numbers, the typical offence for which a pardon was requested was a property offence and the typical penalty was a fine. Some 52 per cent of the applicants had only been convicted once and a further 17 per cent had been convicted twice. However, during the sample period more than 2,000 pardons were granted after extensive investigation to persons with six or more convictions.

Nonetheless, applicants with several convictions or who had received sentences that entailed imprisonment were more likely to have been denied a pardon. Almost one-half or 46 per cent of all denials were for attitudinal reasons; whereas a much smaller proportion, 6 per cent, was rejected because of a recent conviction. Outstanding or repeated charges amounted to a total of 5 per cent or suspicion of criminal involvement amounted to 4 per cent.

As I mentioned, the Solicitor General on the advice of the National Parole Board, which is the agency that makes recommendations regarding pardons, is equally empowered to execute revocation. Of the approximately 17,700 pardons granted from 1976 to 1980, only 2 per cent were considered for revocation and, of these, roughly half were ultimately recommended for revocation. Although pardons can be revoked because the recipient is no longer of good conduct, the board in practice has based its recommendations solely on the occurrence of subsequent criminal convictions or repeated charges.

We have before us a proposition to correct potential and current injustices. I again commend the member who has brought it forward. To deal expeditiously and more or less automatically to remove the class of applicant designated by Bill C-314 from the pardon granting process would ease the burden on the National Parole Board whose efforts would be more productively directed to the consideration of cases of greater gravity.

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the hon. member for Mississauga South on the impressive job he did in another area, as chairman of the finance committee. I would like to draw the attention of Canadians to the impressive amount of work done by the hon. member for a number of years on this committee, working steadily on changes to the entire Canadian tax system, to make it an instrument that will help the neediest among us. The abolition of tax shelters, Bill C-23, for instance, on the minimum tax for the rich, which met with the opposition of the Liberals and the NDP, all this was achieved thanks to the perseverance of the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the Criminal Records Act, in 1969, the Ouimet Committee recognized the need for legislation that would ease the legal disabilities and social stigma of a criminal record for those ex-offenders who had demonstrated over an appropriate number of years that they could lead crime-free lives. The committee's recommendations were largely responsible for the enactment of the Criminal Records Act in 1970. This legislation was subsequently revisited when examined in conjunction with the Criminal Law Review, approved by cabinet in 1981. Two important principles contained in the policy statement produced by this review were that the criminal justice system should be governed by economy, necessity and restraint, and that whenever appropriate, the criminal law should provide for opportunities aimed at the personal reformation of the offender and his reintegration into the community.

In the period following the promulgation of the Criminal Records Act, deficiencies in the system for granting pardons had been identified by the government officials responsible for the implementation of the legislation. It had become evident that not enough eligible ex-offenders were receiving pardons and that the system of application, review and decision was too complicated. Law enforcement officials, for example, were unhappy with the complicated system of having to apply for access to "sealed" pardoned criminal records. More recently, the Nielsen Task Force Report characterized the current system as "costly, cumbersome and counterproductive".

Reform undertaken in light of these criticisms would require balancing of the three competing objectives of providing relief from a criminal record to increased numbers of eligible ex-offenders, ensuring that the public is protected and creating a more efficient criminal records system. Moreover, the affected constituencies are varied and their interests conflict to a certain extent. These factors suggest that simple solutions are unlikely.

Most opinion expressed in consultations to date supports the view that the primary aim of the pardon should be the removal, as completely as possible, of all the negative consequences of conviction once the offender has paid the debt owed society and enough time has elapsed to establish, with some degree of certainty, his law-abiding behaviour.

It should be noted that the bill drafted by the hon. member for Mississauga South calls for the "destruction" of pardoned records whereas the existing legislation provides for "sealing" this information. This is a very important point, to which I intend to return. Consultations have also revealed support for increased granting of pardons in a more simplified process, as long as there is not undue leniency or increased risk to the public.

The Nielsen Task Force on Improved Program Delivery in the Justice System examined the functioning of the Criminal Records Act, and included the scrutiny of eligibility criteria, benefits provided to the pardoned individual and access to and destruction of records. The task force recognized in 1985, when their study was conducted, that the existing method was slow—an average of 13 months per application processed; costly—91 person-years distributed between the RCMP and the National Parole Board; cumbersome—requiring a decision by the Governor in Council; and sometimes counter productive—after the RCMP had completed the necessary community assessment, employers, neighbours and relatives may have been given the knowledge that the applicant has a criminal record.

The possibility of cost reductions and savings of person-years as a consequence of implementation of a more efficient system of pardoning motivated the Nielsen Task Force to propose a "records management" approach. The task force report predicted that a saving of $2.4 million and 57.5 p/y's could be achieved under a system where the initiation of the records management process became an internal government responsibility without the need for a formal application from the ex-offender and where the criteria for eligibility for pardon was restricted, in all cases, solely to a specified number of years of crime—free behaviour in the community. This allocation of money and person-years was the total amount which the Parole Board had available for the delivery of its responsibilities under the Criminal Records Act.

It is difficult to determine the exact nature of all assumptions which were used to arrive at this estimate of potential savings. An approximation of resource implications of this magnitude could only be achieved under a system which precluded all community investigations. It is important to analyse the savings which could be achieved under the various options for reform which have been proposed. It is also important to ascertain whether the savings are for the government as a whole or whether costs are simply being shifted to other agencies, departments or governments.

The Nielsen findings, Mr. Speaker, are most relevant to the bill put forward for our consideration today. The possibility of streamlining the present pardoning process then explored was contingent upon an integrated country-wide system of record management. The hon. member for Mississauga South is calling for the destruction of the criminal records of those individuals who have received conditional or absolute discharges. I fear that the realization of the intent of Bill C-314 will run into the same problems as the Nielsen proposal for economy had it been pursued. Neither clearly defined central record-keeping functions nor a central file registry exist to administer criminal records in Canada. To be sure, the RCMP maintains a data bank that contains the records of all convictions for indictable offences. However, no such centralized system contains records proceeding from summary convictions, and Bill C-314 would entail the search for even more nebulous entities: records of conditional and absolute discharges.

Ideally there would be a registry that would include records of convictions for both summary and indictable offences as well as the class of record to which the currently proposed reforms refer. The registry would integrate the overlapping responsibilities of local, municipal, provincial and national police forces and the courts for keeping documents which refer to the investigation, prosecution and conviction of offenders.

The passage of Bill C-314 would have the effect that records thereafter: created through the direction by the courts for conditional or absolute discharges would subsequently be destroyed. Under the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, however, it might well be mandatory that the force of the amendments be retroactive. There are two ways in which the objectives of amendments as applied to existing records might be realized. In the first case, the current procedure of application for pardon could be maintained, but relief would be granted automatically and swiftly to those who wished to erase their records of absolute or conditional discharge. A "hands-on" involvement of government officials would remain a necessary part of the pardoning process. The other method of implementation would be the erasure of all records that fall within the categories in question. While the decision-making process would be replaced by the mere identification of eligible individuals, to be fully effective, it would be necessary to create the complex centralized system I have mentioned because the records in question are not gathered within the confines of a single repository.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is almost up. I shall, of course, continue until you indicate that I have used up the entire period of time I am allowed.

It has been noted, Mr. Speaker, that the lack of public awareness of the pardon process and the very small percentage of potential beneficiaries who now use the provisions of the Criminal Records Act raise questions about the utility of the current law. If either procedure that I have mentioned was pursued to implement retroactively the amendments brought about by Bill C-314, the intent of the legislation could only be achieved through publicity campaigns: in one case, to educate the sizable number of Canadians that speedy relief had become available; and in the other, to notify those who might even be unaware of the existence of a negative record, that all had been forgiven.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure I will have an opportunity to get back to this subject again, and I should be glad to lay the last part of my speech on the table as an addition to this debate.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in participating in this debate. I must tell you that, when the Criminal Records Act was passed, about 20 years ago, it was felt that the consequences of a verdict of guilty which resulted in an absolute or conditional discharge should be dealt with as if a criminal record had been created, although no conviction was registered.

At the time, this process was considered necessary to ensure that information pertaining to conditional or absolute discharges could be identified and sealed in those cases where pardons were requested and subsequently granted. It is realized today, however, that the purpose of a discharge is to be less detrimental to the offender than if no discharge was granted. This decision is made by a judge having regard for the nature of the offence, the circumstances surrounding its commission and whether the offender deserves this special treatment.

One can argue that the provisions of the current legislation that create the necessity of applying for a pardon for a crime that has not resulted in a conviction, have also created an anomaly which should be rectified. And this position, Mr. Speaker, is ably put forward by the Member for Mississauga South through the Bill before us to-day for second reading.

It is my belief that in the absence of demonstrable harm to public safety, a pardon should be considered as a common procedure which follows a specified amount of time after a discharge has been granted. That this relief would be of direct benefit to those individuals whose reputations would otherwise be compromised is beyond question, Mr. Speaker. In addition, this procedure could result in a saving of resources for the National Parole Board which is responsible for advising the Solicitor General in regard to granting pardons.

It must be noted, however, that 80 per cent of applicants for pardons have more than one entry on their criminal record, which might, therefore, include a summary conviction, for example, as well as a discharge. The separation of the charges and identification of relevant offences to be dealt with would involve considerable time and a sophisticated records retrieval system. It might be anticipated that greater demands on the officials charged with the investigations prompted by applications for pardon—the RCMP, for the most part—would be increased substantially.

This is but one example of the problems now being considered by a committee within the Ministry of the Solicitor General involving representatives of the RCMP, the National Parole Board and the Police and Security Branch of the ministry secretariat, in consultation with other relevant Ministries and meeting under the chairmanship of the Corrections Branch of the secretariat.

The work of this committee—more properly designated the Criminal Records Management Review—involves reviewing two separate yet interrelated reform options. It will review past achievements and suggest future options for administrative changes to achieve greater efficiencies and savings in the process of granting of pardons and record keeping. It will also consider possible options for future legislative and programming initiatives aimed at better achieving the objectives of the Criminal Records Act.

Before you call me to order, Mr. Speaker, I think I could table the rest of my speech and ask that it be put on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): No, please carry on.

Mrs. Bertrand: If you tell me that I can carry on, Mr. Speaker, I will although I know that my time is limited.

However, I think that, before addressing the legislative changes which might be considered by the committee and those before us to-day, it would be relevant to review what has been achieved through positive changes in the administration of the Criminal Records Act. These reforms were prompted by earlier reviews of the Act, broad consultations and, in part, the recommendations of the Nielsen.

PORK PRODUCERS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean pork producers have recently been talking to members and ministers about the many problems they face when trying to maintain production. The fact that our region lacks slaughter houses and our remoteness from large centres does not help our pork producers whose production costs exceed sale prices.

The crisis is acute, Mr. Speaker, and the government should intervene immediately if we are to maintain a healthy sector in our region and save our pork producers. Mr. Speaker, since 170 jobs are on the line, allow me to draw your attention to an important point. There is no overproduction in our region, for we produce about 35,000 hogs a year and our consumption is up to 110,000.

Again I emphasize to my colleagues, the Minister of State for Agriculture and the minister responsible for regional development that urgent action is required.

PAPER INDUSTRY

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, the closure of the James MacLaren saw mill in Thurso, Quebec, leaves us unable to deal with the impact of the recession, the overly high interest rates, and above all a surplus of sawn lumber.

How come the company was unable to predict such a disastrous situation for Thurso area workers? A company spokesman simply told me that unexpected rising interest rates, contrary to what the Minister of Finance told us eight months ago, were the main cause of their deficit and that the company could no longer operate under the repeated deficits incurred by the mill these past few years.

I hope the saw mill workers will have the support of Employment Canada and benefit from retraining programs to help them find new jobs.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, today the GATT talks are heating up in Brussels. The next few days are critical to the future of agriculture.

Canadian negotiators should work hard to reach a settlement, but not at the expense of Canadian farmers. Despite a difficult growing season, high transportation costs, Canadian farmers have been able to produce a world class agricultural system. However, because of predatory practices by other countries, many of our farm families are having a great difficulty surviving from harvest to harvest. We want our rural communities to flourish, we want to stop farm bankruptcies, and we want to be as self-sufficient as possible.

We wish our GATT negotiators well and we urge the Europeans and Americans to be more flexible. Nonetheless, there is a chance that the GATT talks will fail.

We therefore call upon the government to be prepared to act very quickly to put in place contingency plans, should the talks fail. The U.S. farm bill contains contingency plans for a GATT failure. Our farmers deserve nothing less.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the 36th Annual North Atlantic Assembly was held in London, England, from November 26 to November 30. The conference was outstanding in that it was set in the atmosphere of the new openness which, in little over a year, has blossomed in Europe and around the world. In addition to the representatives from the 16 NATO member countries, there were delegations from five of the six Warsaw Pact countries, as well as from Japan and Australia, who had observer status.

Many frank discussions took place and major addresses were given by the Secretary of NATO, Manfred Worner, and also the foreign minister of Poland, Krzysztof Skubiszewski, the former President of Czechoslovakia, Alexander Dubcek, the Hon. Neil Kinnock, leader of the British Labour Party, as well as the Right Hon. Tom King, Secretary of Defence for the United Kingdom.

The assembly was the most successful ever held, and I believe reflected the new and growing realities of a post-cold war international order.

Congratulations are also to be given to our colleague, Bob Hicks, the MP for Scarborough East, who was elected a vice-president of the North Atlantic Assembly in London.

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, as the member of Parliament for Etobicoke North, I would like to express my opposition to the plans to add three additional runways at Pearson International Airport, as outlined by Transport Canada on November 12.

Although aware of the need to address the future transport requirements of metro Toronto, the citizens of Etobicoke North and other areas around Pearson International Airport have already sacrificed more than their share in terms of their quality of life.

In March, 1990 the residents were informed that, pending the outcome of an environmental assessment, Transport Canada proposed two additional runways at Pearson International Airport. Now, not eight months later, the residents have been informed that three additional runways are contemplated. It is evident that Transport Canada has no equitable, long-term plan for metro Toronto's transport needs, merely a series of ad hoc expediencies which serve only to aggravate the fundamental problems.

I call upon Transport Canada to re-evaluate plans for Pearson International Airport so that the residents of Etobicoke North and surrounding areas are not being asked to carry a disproportionate burden of future metro Toronto transport requirements.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wild Rose): Mr. Speaker, Alberta's diversification efforts are working. According to a survey of private sector forecasters, Alberta can expect real growth rates of about 2 per cent in 1990 and 1991, about double the expected national rate.

A major reason for this growth is that diversification efforts are succeeding. There are now 750 technology intensive companies in Alberta and they employ 78,000 people. They also generate more than $4 billion in annual revenues. Manufacturing output is expected to increase by 3 per cent both this year and next and exports in goods and services are expected to rise 8.2 per cent in 1990, and another 6.3 per cent in 1991. This will translate into increased employment opportunities.

The federal government's Western Diversification Initiative has assisted in this growth. Above all, it has put the decision-making powers in the hands of those who know best, the people of Alberta.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, for too long VIA Rail has been a half-measure of a company whose corporate motto has been, "Yes, but—".

Yes, it exists, but it has no mandate.

Yes, it owns equipment, but it owns no track.

Yes, there is service, but, in many cases, only on some days, and with unreliable equipment and agonizing delays.

Yes, it runs a transcontinental service, but not where there is real demand, and not along the historic Canadian route.

Yes, VIA is running, but it is not running to win. It is not designed to.

That is why we have launched a national campaign to get Canada back on track.

Canadians will remember the broken promises of the government and they will remember what the Liberals and their recycled leader did to VIA when they were in power.

Time is running out. The fight to put Canada back on track has started, and we are not going to stop until Canadians have a national rail passenger system and a government that we can be proud of.

INCOME AND POVERTY

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, data released Thursday by Statistics Canada on income and poverty has revealed positive news for Canadians.

When the Conservatives came to power in 1984, there were four million Canadians living below the poverty line, which, for example, was just over $20,000 for a family of four in an urban area. Today, there are only 3 million people living below the current poverty line which, for the same family of four, is $24,706. This means that one million Canadians have been able to move out of the poverty levels in the past six years.

For Canadian families, the government's policies have also meant that the percentage living below the poverty line has decreased from 13.5 per cent in 1984 to 9.6 per cent in 1989. This drop also corresponds with a $5,000 increase after inflation in the average income for a family of four from $45,000 in 1984 to just over $50,000 today.

These statistics clearly illustrate our government's strong commitment to helping those less fortunate Canadians find their way out of the despair of poverty. We still have a long way to go in our efforts to eliminate poverty in the country, but these statistics show that the Conservative government is indeed on the right path to achieve this goal.

GUN CONTROL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, once again this past weekend, a semi-automatic rifle was used in Vancouver to kill two men at a public meeting, while the government has put its gun control bill on the back-burner.

On December 6 this week, we will remember the 14 women who were selectively massacred with a semi-automatic weapon in Montreal one year ago. In April, the Minister of Justice went to the École Polytechnique where she was presented with 25 boxes of petitions with over 500 names asking for stricter gun laws. She promised legislation but now we are getting a study instead of a law. We do not need another study to tell us that semi-automatics should not be sold over the counter like fishing rods.

Whenever we have tightened our gun laws, we have lowered the rate of crime with guns. Why then is the government sabotaging its own bill? Why is it breaking faith with the students at École Polytechnique and millions of other Canadians?

INCOMES AND POVERTY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, on November 29, Statistics Canada published the 1989 data on incomes and poverty. Here are some of the highlights:

Last year, 199,000 people ceased to live below the poverty line, which makes for a total reduction of 956,000 since 1984. During the past few years, 104,000 women and 38,000 children left the ranks of the poor. Since 1984, the number of poor women dropped by 333,000, and the number of poor children by 297,000, a reduction of more than 25 per cent. Since 1984, the average family income, adjusted for inflation, has increased by more than $5,000. Even the proportion of family poverty dropped from 13.9 per cent in 1984 to 9.6 per cent last year. Among single Canadians, the poverty rate dropped from 37.7 per cent in 1984 to 30.5 per cent last year. The overall poverty rate dropped from 16.8 per cent in 1984 to 12.2 per cent last year, a reduction of one quarter since 1984.

Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree we are still on the right track!

AIR TRANSPORTATION SAFETY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to first associate myself with the views of my colleague from Etobicoke North in terms of runway expansion plans at Pearson International Airport, because for the surrounding communities enough is enough. There are also safety overtones to that.

Last week, the department's inspection supervisor said that the effectiveness of air safety inspectors will be reduced by 60 per cent due to a manpower shortage and that, as a result, safety rules are routinely being waived.

To make matters worse, there are plans to phase out the emergency back-up system for radar units across Canada in order to save $500,000.

I do not know about you, Mr. Speaker, but when I fly, as do many Canadians, I want an assurance that all radar safety units are in working order all the time, not only when the government decides to allocate the necessary funds. Moreover, with the advent of the government's deregulation and privatization policy, there is a need for more air safety measures and not fewer. Safety in the skies is a price worth paying.

AIDS

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in April, 1990 the film Talkin' about AIDS was aired nationally. Talkin' about AIDS was developed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and received much critical recognition, including nominations for two prestigious Gemini Awards to be decided this evening.

Designed to inform young people of the facts about AIDS in a straightforward manner, people with AIDS, including a 17-year-old, talked openly about their struggles and experiences. Dramatic skits were used to demonstrate some of the social skills and assertiveness techniques that our young people can use to encourage responsible sexual behaviour.

The films were accompanied by teacher and student guides and have been distributed to high schools and school boards across Canada by the Canadian Association of Principals.

These AIDS education initiatives for youth demonstrate the Department of National Health and Welfare's continued commitment to the national strategy on AIDS and to preventing the spread of HIV infection in Canada.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, today the Canadian Advanced Technology Association asked the government to adopt the following policy statement: "Canada must shift to a higher percentage of national investment in the production and marketing of advanced technology goods and services into the production of higher value-added products in all sectors and to the application and use of technology to build competitiveness and into the development of human resource capability to facilitate these shifts."

These are the indispensable steps to industrial restructuring to which the government has given lip service, while in fact adopting monetary policies that make them impossible to achieve.

CATA says that the finance minister must scrap his high interest policies now because not just the short-term but the long-term future of Canada is at stake. With that New Democrats agree.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PERSIAN GULF

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to be home. I can say one thing after what I have seen in the past two weeks. Question Period is like having a picnic in a rose garden. We can now get on with the menu, I expect.

I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday the minister indicated that either he or the Prime Minister would be prepared to go to Baghdad as part of the proposed peace negotiation.

Is the government willing to review its policy of making direct representations to the Iraqi officials on behalf of the Canadian hostages still held in that country? In particular, could I ask the minister if the government would be prepared to provide direct support for families or other private groups which are also prepared to go to that country to make representations on behalf of Canadians still held there? If I could make a specific plea, I would ask the minister if he would be prepared to make representations on behalf of Mr. Rustom who is the elderly pilgrim who is being held there even though Iraqi officials have said that he is free to go but has not been given his visa as yet?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I welcome the hon. member back. He made reference to a news report that I am sure surprised him as much as it surprised the Prime Minister and me. My exact language from the transcript when the question was put to me as to whether I was looking at going to that part of the world quotes: "Well, we rule nothing out. I think that the roles that Canada can play at this stage are more likely more private than that, although it goes without saying that I am prepared to go, the Prime Minister is, other ministers are, anywhere it would be constructive". That was the context in which I made those comments. Indeed, that kind of action by the Government of Canada, the Prime Minister, myself and others, wherever it can be constructive in this context is the practice that we have been following.

With respect to the Rustom situation, our ambassador, Chris Poole, has been in again. We have sent seven diplomatic notes. There have been 20 meetings with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. There have been three personal letters from Mr. Rustom to Saddam Hussein. We intend to continue to press vigorously to have him released.

With respect to support that might be given to others, the hon. member knows very well and has respected with a faithfulness, which I very much appreciate, the distinction between official and unofficial missions with respect to persons held captive in Iraq. We would continue to respect that distinction.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, I want to ask the minister about the question of sanctions. In August the United Nations indicated that the most effective means of securing the Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait was a program of sanctions. We have followed it up to now.

I can say, from direct experience, that the sanctions are having an incredibly strong impact on that country. Health care services and transportation are deteriorating. There is incredible inflation. Spare parts are running out. Even the military capacity is being affected.

In light of that, I want to ask the minister why it is that the government keeps insisting that it has to support a military option, when in fact it is clear the continuation of economic sanctions against Iraq will have, and can have, the desired result of having them withdraw.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the option that this government is pursuing and will continue to pursue is the United Nations option. That is the option that gave rise to sanctions. We intend to continue with the sanctions program. We intend to continue as vigorously as we can.

The United Nations also, with the support of most of the world and the majority of this House, excluding the Liberal and New Democratic parties which decided not to vote for continued United Nations action in the gulf on that particular matter—

Our position is that we have now taken through the United Nations actions involving the clear signal that force will be used, but also involving a pause for peace, a pause of good will, on which action has already begun, as has been evidenced by the statements by the Americans and by the Iraqis.

With respect to sanctions, I certainly cannot dispute the fact that they are having an impact upon social services. I have no doubt that they are having an impact upon the children of Iraq. I have no doubt that they are having an impact upon the poor of Iraq, but there is very little reason for us to believe that they are having an effect on the military planners or the military capacity of Iraq.

What we are trying to do is have a range of measures that will cause changes in the military plans of Iraq so that there will be respect for the United Nations resolutions, and so that it will move back from Kuwait.

I look forward to the opportunity to meet with the hon. member and other members of this House who have just come back from Baghdad. I understand because of their collective schedules, that cannot occur for another week. I look forward to having the advantage of their personal experiences. I also look forward to meeting with the standing committee.

I believe a meeting is scheduled now or being discussed for Thursday morning in which we will have the opportunity to discuss at some length and in as much detail as circumstances allow our assessment of the impact of sanctions on various elements of Iraqi society.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to that exchange.

I think that we can provide the minister with pretty clear evidence that his thesis about what is working and what is not working is wrong. In fact, we can affect the military capacity of that country.

As a follow-up supplementary, I would like to put this question.

[Translation]

President Bush said that several members of the multinational force would be asked to take part in discussions with the Iraqi Minister of Foreign Affairs. Will Canada be part of this group? Will the United States consult our allies before this meeting? And what peace alternatives does the Canadian government intend to suggest before the meeting, to deal with the conflict?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are ongoing consultations between Canada and the other members of the coalition who are trying, by peaceful means, to get Saddam Hussein to leave Kuwait. Today, for instance, the Prime Minister spoke directly to Secretary of State Baker, to communicate information we had that was not available to the Americans, about a certain aspect of the situation in the gulf. When I went to the Middle East last week, I had some worthwhile discussions with ministers, presidents and kings of certain countries in the area about approaches that could be effective and in which Canada could play a part. We have a pretty solid reputation in the area, and it would be a mistake for Canadians to underestimate Canada's impact in the area and in the crisis. We are now considering, identifying and putting into practice all the ways in which we as Canadians can bring our influence to bear to achieve a peaceful solution in line with the UN resolutions.

IMMIGRATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On the weekend, the Prime Minister referred to an increasingly sovereignist climate in Quebec. I would like him to tell the House whether he realizes how important it is for his government to take concrete action to deal effectively with the situation. In this respect, is the Prime Minister prepared to instruct his Minister of Employment and Immigration to conclude as soon as possible an agreement with her provincial counterpart, as the previous administration did with the Cullen-Couture Agreement, in order to get rid of at least one of the irritants in the Canada-Quebec dossier?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker. The government is working actively with the Government of Quebec and other provincial governments on agreements in the difficult area of immigration, an area that is particularly important to Quebec, considering its demographic impact on the francophone part of our country. I think both governments will have more news on the subject in the not too distant future.

My hon. friend alluded to my comments that there was a sovereignist wind blowing in Quebec and that this was particularly obvious from the proceedings of the Bélanger–Campeau Commission. In fact, I have urged Quebecers to be very prudent and to ensure that the process is not skewed, considering this, probably short-lived, phenomenon in Quebec. In any case, I would like to point out, since we find this phenomenon at all levels in our society, that it started mainly because the Leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. Chrétien, said that Meech could be killed without serious consequences. Today, we see the consequences in Quebec and Canada, which can be laid squarely at the door of Jean Chrétien.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the encouraging remarks of the Prime Minister with regard to the settlement of the immigration issue. I hope that the minister who is now in this House has heard the very precise and urgent indications in this regard.

As to the second part of the Prime Minister's reply, I can say that the failure of the Meech Lake Accord could not be attributed to someone who sat neither in this House of Commons, nor in any of the provincial legislatures.

Mr. Blais: Say it again with a straight face!

Mr. Ouellet: In this connection, I should like to ask the Prime Minister to demonstrate the same good will and to describe for Quebec men and women the benefits and significance of belonging to Canada. Is he planning to appear before the Bélanger–Campeau Commission, as Mr. Chrétien will?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, I want to very sincerely praise the Hon. Member for Papineau—Saint-Michel for his unfailing support of the Meech Lake Accord during the three long years of debates and discussions. All hon. members will recognize, however, that my hon. friend is somewhat stretching the point when he says that someone outside this House has had no impact on the ultimate result. They will remember that, last January, Mr. Chrétien said: "The failure of the Meech Lake Accord is of no consequence; it is like when you are stuck in a snowbank: You move forward, you move backward, then you do it all over again, and again, until eventually you manage to get out." Such was Mr. Chrétien's position. We saw the high point of all this when Mr. Chrétien embraced Mr. Wells in Calgary and said:

[English]

Thanks Clyde for all your good work.

All Canadians are aware that this new impulse given to the sovereignty option is the result of Mr. Chrétien's move. Now it is the responsibility of all other hon. members of this House to rebuild national unity.

THE CONSTITUTION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. According to an article in La Presse the Prime Minister is reported to have a constitutional plan. Yesterday, the Prime Minister announced the setting up of a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate whose mandate would be to develop a new amending formula. There is no indication that the Prime Minister consulted anyone and, what is more, the Prime Minister chose to make this announcement in front of Tory supporters. I am somewhat concerned about the whole process.

My question to the Prime Minister is this: Before my party can support this initiative, could the Prime Minister assure us that this process will include the participation of the Canadian public, that this is an honest exercise, and that so far no decision has been made?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is blaming me for coming out openly in dealing with this issue. I mentioned it last Friday when I met with the editorial team of La Presse, and I mentioned it again yesterday in Montreal before 1,400 Conservative supporters. I might have done that before NDP supporters, but it would have been difficult in Montreal.

I mentioned the setting up of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. I know that the Government House Leader intends to consult tomorrow with his two opposite numbers and later on with various senators. If I understand the Standing Orders correctly, the committees themselves are responsible for establishing their own rules and regulations.

Therefore let the NDP Leader be reassured, that this committee will be totally independent. Our purpose is to remedy a major deficiency in the current process which hinders any progress in the area of constitutional reform. This deficiency came to light between 1987 and 1990, and we must absolutely find a way to remedy it for the future.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. No one is in disagreement that constitutional talks need to continue. No one is in disagreement that the amending formula must be discussed. What this party is in disagreement with is that the Prime Minister's idea of consultation is making announcements at $500 a plate Conservative dinners.

The Prime Minister has made an announcement that he is going to take further initiative on the Constitution, and we welcome that the Prime Minister has a plan. I would also ask the Prime Minister if he is prepared as well to make good his promises that he has made to aboriginal people, both during the Meech lake process and during the summer.

What is the Prime Minister prepared to do to keep his promises to the aboriginal people of Canada concerning both the Constitution and the other promises which he has made to that group?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we of course are in the process of working as well in regard to those particular commitments which we view as very serious and most important for the well–being of the country. There have been undertakings made thus far, and there will be others made in the course of the next few months.

My hon. friend apparently is angry with me for making a statement at a $500 a plate Conservative dinner. We have never been angry with her when she has gone to make a statement at the CLC at $1 million a plate.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could share the Prime Minister's optimism about the kind of dinners I attend.

The Constitution is crucial. It is crucial for aboriginal people. It is crucial for all Canadians. It is crucial for the future of Quebec and for the provinces within the country. I think it is important that all Canadians be concerned about the future of our country and the Constitution.

There are many Canadians whose primary preoccupation now is how they can find a job or how they can keep a job. The recession is hurting all sectors of our economy: farmers, people in the manufacturing sector, workers in the logging industry—every sector of our economy.

The Prime Minister is prepared to establish a committee on the Constitution. This is important, but surely the economy deserves the same kind of attention because people are just trying to keep bread on the table, to keep their job, house, clothe and feed their children.

Would the Prime Minister also support the establishment of an all-party House of Commons committee on combating the recession, on positive measures to get Canadians back to work?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to examine any ideas my hon. friends have in regard to working with the government. We are in difficult economic times, and obviously any good concrete proposals will be looked at and studied very carefully.

I point out to my hon. friend that, while we are going through difficult times, there were numbers published by Statistics Canada on Thursday which I know she will find both interesting and encouraging.

Since 1984 real family income has increased 11.5 per cent. The proportion of people below Statistics Canada's low income line has declined in 1989 for the sixth consecutive year, for example from 20.1 per cent to 14.6 per cent among children. Since 1984—and I know this is of particular interest to my hon. friend—956,000 Canadians have been taken off the poverty roles in Canada.

That to me is the sign of an economy that is working in a socially positive way.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the constitutional issue and direct my question to the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has the bad habit of blaming others for his unsuccessful ventures. First I would say to him that we welcome the proposition he made over the weekend to change the constitutional amendment process. As it happened, Liberal leader Jean Chrétien rejected the unanimity rule on January 16, 1990 and advocated a more flexible formula.

Given the Meech Lake Accord experiment, is the Prime Minister now prepared to invite all Canadians to play an active role with the parliamentary committee he has proposed so as to take a closer look at the whole issue of the amending formula?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, yesterday I formally announced that no later than tomorrow the government leader will consult with my friend to follow up on the propositions I made public precisely to look into the serious problem of the paralysis flowing from section 38 of the Constitution Act, 1982. If my friend has specific suggestions or comments to make either on the establishment of the commission itself or on its on-going or future proceedings, we will be pleased to hear them.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing that every time the Prime Minister goes into the province of Quebec he announces a new constitutional procedure.

It came as no surprise to us that at Mont Ste. Anne, for example, he announced the Spicer commission. Yesterday in Montreal he announced the new parliamentary committee.

As of today it is true that the opposition has not been consulted. We wish we were. Yet the Prime Minister promised to set up before Christmas—that is in a few weeks—a committee to look into this whole procedural question.

Can the Prime Minister share today with us in this House some of his thoughts and plans on setting up this commission? How soon? Who will be on it, and who will be involved in it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gather the House leaders will meet tomorrow and agree upon the manner in which this committee will function.

• (1440)

My hon. friend seems to express some concern that I would go into Quebec or elsewhere and announce the creation of the Spicer commission and then subsequently announce the creation of a parliamentary committee to examine the paralysis that has resulted from section 38. I can only assume, because he is unfavourably impressed, that he disagrees with these two approaches: the Spicer commission approach and the parliamentary commission. The question is: Why are they required?

An hon. member: Right on.

Mr. Mulroney: My friend says "Right on". On June 9, when we signed the Meech Lake Accord at the Conference Centre, Premier Bourassa said that with the 1981 Constitution Quebecers were part of a legal Constitution but, with the conclusion of the Meech Lake Accord, Quebecers for the first time felt they were part of a real Constitution and a real country. Those were very important and significant times: a commitment by the government of the province of Quebec and its premier to profound Canadian unity.

This was dashed a few days later because some people believed the statement by Mr. Chrétien that Meech Lake could be rejected without consequences. His short-sighted partisanship prevented him from endorsing Meech Lake. We as Canadians have to work hard now to maintain the unity of Canada that he placed—

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister is aware of the serious allegations made by his former industry minister regarding a secret deal struck with Washington to increase the value of the Canadian dollar in order to get a free trade agreement. The Minister of Finance disagrees with this.

If there was no such deal, why has the value of the Canadian dollar risen so dramatically since the free trade agreement was signed? Will the Prime Minister move today to drop the value of the Canadian dollar so that Canadian companies can compete on a level playing field?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I commented publicly yesterday on that. I said that the statement was absurd speculation, but it is simply also not true.

I would remind my hon. friend that Mr. Stevens was basing his speculative comments on a conversation that he had with a man who was not involved in the negotiations and a conversation that was held some two years before the final negotiations were completed.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that the allegations are untrue, but the policy outcome is the same.

The solution to Canada's current economic problems, including its deficit and inflation, lies in improving Canada's international competitiveness. Yet this government persists in a high interest rate policy, which drives up the Canadian dollar, which in turn reduces our ability to compete, especially with the United States.

How can the government claim to be making Canada competitive when its own policies are at the root of the problem?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is saying that we should have ignored the inflationary pressures that have clearly been in the economy over the last three years, I do not know what he thinks that would do to our competitive position.

What would have happened had we ignored the inflationary problem as has been the case, as an example, with the United Kingdom? We both had an inflation rate at about the same level in 1988. Its most recently has been just short of 11 per cent; ours has been in the 4 per cent range for a number of months now.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance as well who has denied the allegation of his former cabinet colleague that there was a secret deal with the United States to boost the value of the Canadian dollar in connection with the free trade agreement.

Would the Minister of Finance not agree that it is the U.S. trade balance which has improved while the Canadian trade balance has deteriorated; that it is American goods that have become less expensive while Canadian goods have become more expensive; and that in fact such results of the free trade agreement and this government's monetary policy, that is the high dollar, have the characteristics of a smoking gun with which Canada has shot itself in the foot?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it surprises me that my hon. friend would attach such significance to a speculative statement made by someone who was not at the table.

Simon Reisman, the number one trade negotiator, has said on a number of occasions that there was no such deal and no such understanding. Gordon Ritchie, the number two man in the negotiations said exactly the same thing. Derek Burney, who was present at the final negotiations, within the last few months has made the same statement also. I do not know where my hon. friend is getting the support for the deal that he is alleging was made.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Too much, Mr. Speaker. Today, StatsCan reports that a composite leading indicator has dropped for the eighth consecutive month, this time at the accelerated rate of one-half of a percentage point. Thus, we have one more indicator confirming what so many Canadian workers know: that the country has been plunged into a recession by its own government.

If there was no deal with United States to keep the dollar high, what possible explanation can there be for this government's refusal to change a policy that is a cause of a national economic crisis? Why not lower interest rates? Why not lower the value of the dollar? Why not put Canadians back to work? Why not look after the long-term interests of the economy of this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what we have been doing. Interest rates have come down two percentage points over the last few months as a reflection of the weakness in the economy.

I call my hon. member's attention to the fact that there have been increasing inflationary pressures. They are still in the economy and have been there since the third quarter of this year. If we ignore them, we will go back to the same sort of problem that we had in 1970s and early 1980s when governments ignored the problem.

Inflation surged from about 5.5 per cent in the mid-seventies to 13 per cent in 1981. This resulted in interest rates that were in the 21, 22, 23 per cent range. Unemployment in some parts of the country was in excess of 25 per cent.

That is what we are trying to avoid with the policies we have been following. We have been able to control the rate of inflation. We have a healthier economy today going into a recession than was the case in 1981-82. Certainly it is the case with the United Kingdom.

BÉLANGER-CAMPEAU COMMISSION

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

A few minutes ago, he said: "We have to work hard for a united Canada." We all agree with him on this. If that is the case, why won't the Prime Minister go before the Bélanger-Campeau commission and speak for a united Canada? This may be hard work, but is Canada not worth it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the smile on the face of the hon. member for Papineau tells you, there may be things that are hard work in Canada, but going before the Bélanger-Campeau commission to read a brief is not among them.

What is and was hard work was trying to bring 10 provincial premiers together to agree on a method of amending the Canadian Constitution, which was endorsed by the Liberal Party, the NDP and many Canadians.

We have been across the country discussing outlines of the manner in which Canada can evolve in the future. I have just come back from making two or three major speeches in the province of Quebec. We will be doing many other things as a government and as a Parliament to work together for Canadian unity.

There are all kinds of ways in which members and ministers can contribute. But in the circumstances, I believe that the representation of my party and of the party of the opposition on that commission are appropriate. I think it would be inappropriate in the circumstances for the Prime Minister of Canada to appear before a provincial commission.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are precedents of provincial ministers, in fact provincial premiers, appearing before committees of this House of Commons to speak for Canada. I ask the Prime Minister, why is it not a good precedent for the Prime Minister of Canada to go before a provincial commission to speak for Canada? Hon. Jean Chrétien has the guts to do it. Why doesn't the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment in regard to Mr. Chrétien's decision, if he wishes to go before that commission. He is presently a private citizen. If, indeed, at that point in time he is a member of Parliament, God bless him. He is entitled to do whatever he wants and if he wishes to go before that commission to speak out clearly, that is his privilege, and we will respect him for it.

Perhaps we would have respected him a little more if when the occasion arose and his voice was needed in June, rather than choosing to hide under his pool table in his residence in Ottawa, he had spoken out clearly on behalf of the Meech Lake Accord which would have brought unity to Canada.

PERSIAN GULF

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday I asked the Secretary of State about initiatives which Canada would take to bring about a peaceful resolution to the gulf crisis before January 15. A few hours later, President Bush took the important step of calling for high level talks between Iraq and the United States. Immediately the Secretary of State offered supportive Canadian initiatives.

Why did the government wait until after President Bush's announcement on Friday to support other peace-making initiatives? Why are Canadians not privy to strategies discussed by our Prime Minister and Mr. Baker, or is this government only taking action after the U.S. leads?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a particularly silly question—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —from a member of Parliament who, if she could put aside her partisanship, has demonstrated that she can make a substantive contribution to deliberations in the House. Her timing, for one thing, is wrong. I referred to the Bush initiative during Question Period on Friday.

I wonder if the hon. member is aware of the work that was begun by the Prime Minister, for example, at the children's summit of the United Nations. He talked to the leaders of countries who are involved in organizations that by their nature have a different kind of relation with, a different kind of potential impact upon Saddam Hussein: leaders of the non-aligned movement, leaders of underdeveloped countries in the Commonwealth and la francophonie, leaders of the Islamic conference, and leaders of organizations active in OPEC.

I have myself been involved in discussions. I have just come back from extensive conversations in the Middle East with regard to a range of ways in which Canadian expertise or Canada's very good reputation might be applied to try to find ways in which we can achieve a peaceful solution to the situation in the gulf. This is a time for a little more statespersonship than the hon. member has been showing.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that we heard anything about Mr. Bush's announcement in this House on Friday.

My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The UN resolution passed last Thursday by the UN Security Council is very vague and potentially dangerous in its call to member states to use all necessary means to restore international peace and security in the gulf area.

Will Canada immediately put another resolution to the UN to assure that individual member states cannot take unilateral action, allegedly pursuant to the UN resolution, which might jeopardize western alliance peace-making options in the Middle East?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me refer the hon. member to page 16042 of Hansard for last Friday. Let me refer her also to the undertakings that were given in the Security Council, the general view expressed by nations that there would not be other action taken in that council between now and the period in January that was stipulated by the Security Council resolution. Let me also, and I think most to the point, indicate to her that while there had been some uncertainty on the Thursday, or while some members of the House claimed there was some uncertainty on Thursday as to the purpose of the UN resolution, whether it was to threaten war or to arrange time for peace, that surely now must be resolved because it is already in the process of using this pause to seek peace that is being joined.

The Americans have taken an initiative and Saddam Hussein—and this is not an unremarkable comment—indicated that he thought that the American initiative was helpful. That is the tone in the debate, as there was a tone in the discussion in the Security Council, that is altogether helpful.

Canada has been playing, and intends to continue to play, a very active and constructive role. The hon. member asks me if I am going to advertise on the floor of the House of Commons every initiative that Canada is taking, which could succeed only if it proceeded privately. Am I going to, for the purposes of a television camera in Canada, jeopardize the diplomatic initiative that Canada might undertake? No, I am not prepared to do that and I hope the hon. member would not be.

MEDICARE

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

The provincial ministers of finance will be meeting in Winnipeg this week. Some of the western ministers, including Mel Couvelier of B.C., are seeking the withdrawal of the federal government from direct financing of national medicare and seeking the transfer of tax points and jurisdiction to the provinces.

The federal government has remained silent on this threat which would mean the death of our national medicare program.

Will the minister guarantee that his government will continue to directly fund national medicare?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is one of a number of options that has been discussed by the provincial finance ministers. It has not been endorsed by any of their governments. I am sure that they will have that as well as a number of other options on the table today and in their meetings this week.

The simple response to the hon. member's question is that we have no intention of relinquishing any sense of responsibility that we have for the National Health Act. We have every intention of continuing to assist provinces and in particular, assist those provinces who are low-income provinces to assure that they can continue to provide the services that are available in the wealthier provinces of the country.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The federal government has the authority and responsibility to set national standards for medicare in the Canada Health Act. There are continuing reports that amendments are now being prepared that will weaken this authority.

Will the minister assure Canadians that no amendments to the act are being prepared by either the Department of National Health and Welfare or the Department of Finance which would allow the provinces to undermine national standards through extra billing or user fees?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no changes to the Canada Health Act are currently being contemplated.

It is important to recognize the fact that full discretion in terms of delivery of health care services is given to the provinces under our Constitution.

What the Canada Health Act does is provide that any program has to be universal in its coverage, provides reasonable access to insured persons, is publicly run on a non-profit basis, covers all necessary health services and provides coverage to those who are temporarily absent from their province or country.

Beyond that, the provincial governments have considerable scope in terms of the delivery of the services. One cannot imagine how medicare or how health care services to Canadians would be strengthened by derogating from any of those principles which exist in the Canada Health Act.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, CBC radio and television remain one of the nation's last institutional links for Canadians from coast to coast to coast.

The parliamentary channel is for many Canadians their only direct access to see and know what is the nation's business and what their MPs are doing.

My question is for the Minister of Communications. Will he recognize the importance of the parliamentary channel? Will he promise to seek direct parliamentary appropriation to pay for this democratic, open and informative channel? Will he make that commitment today and save this service?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that, in spite of the budget cuts it is facing, the CBC remains a national institution coast to coast, which is more than we can say about the Liberal Party.

It must be noted that, since November or December of 1936, there has always been restlessness about the future of one CBC service or the other. The same is happening again this year, Mr. Speaker.

• (1500 )

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the minister well knows this is not one of the mandated services under CBC and so I would ask him a supplementary question.

Will he ensure that the parliamentary channel will remain by approving the inclusion of this service in the new Broadcasting Act called for in the liberal amendment? Will he approve it today?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no!

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration have indicated they intend to invite you again to testify before them about the difficulty of reaching an agreement with the Quebec government on immigration.

This issue really concerns the members representing Quebec ridings. It is important for the survival of the francophone culture that newcomers be well integrated to the francophone community in Quebec. My question is the following: What is going on? Are discussions ongoing with the government of Quebec? Is progress being made or is there a freeze with Quebec?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister already stated today in response to the hon. member for Papineau—Saint-Michel, the government is still strongly committed to this. Yes, I spoke with the Quebec Immigration Minister, Mrs. Gagnon-Tremblay, and discussions between officials from our two governments will begin shortly.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSES

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's responses to five petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

EFFECTS OF ECONOMY ON FAMILIES

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there might be consent for me to present at this time a motion which has been distributed among the parties.

I would like to move, seconded by the member for Churchill:

That a Special Committee of the House of Commons to study the current recession and its effect on Canadian families and to offer recommendations on measures to counter its effects be appointed;

That 15 members of the House of Commons be appointed to serve on the Special Committee, to be appointed no later than three sitting days after the adoption of this motion, upon report of the Striking Committee;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have the power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the House of Commons, when in the parliamentary precincts and to the extent possible when outside these precincts;

That the Committee have the power to travel within Canada;

That the Committee submit its report no later than February 15, 1991 provided that, if the House is not sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons, in which case the Clerk shall immediately notify each Party Leader of the receipt of such report;

That substitutions be authorized according to normal procedures for Legislative Committees; and

That the quorum of the Committee be eight Members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The House has heard the terms of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam. Is it the pleasure of the House to consider the hon. member's motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that I was one of the members who said no to this motion on the basis that these kinds of things are discussed between House leaders. We are discussing business of the House from now until Christmas and beyond—endeavouring to, that is.

The request for a special committee and work for members of Parliament to do comes as a surprise. What I think all members of Parliament will be doing over Christmas is talking to their constituents, hearing their concerns, and talking about the economic situation in the future. We can all do that.

In the meantime, if the hon. member has suggestions to make through her House leader that we might discuss together with other House leaders as the future business for members of Parliament, we are of course always delighted to receive them in the proper form.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Since the consent is not unanimous, the House cannot debate the motion.

[English]

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to respond to the intervention by the House leader.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but we cannot act indirectly against the rules. The House did not give unanimous consent. Therefore, the hon. member's motion cannot be considered and we shall proceed to the next item.

PETITIONS

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table today a petition signed by several Canadians from Ottawa, Nepean and Gloucester who are opposed to the GST. They point out that never since Confederation have the printed word and books been taxed in our country. Now, this government plans to tax these items. Like the Liberal senators in the other place, we are against this unfair and regressive tax and we join these petitioners in asking the government to withdraw this tax.

[English]

URANIUM MINING

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions that I have the honour to present today. The first is signed by petitioners from many locations in Canada, such as Edmonton, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Toronto, Willowdale, and others.

These people point out that we still do not have adequate answers to the questions raised by the spill of radioactive wastes in Wallaston Lake a year ago. They are calling upon the government to convene immediately a comprehensive independent public inquiry into uranium mining in Saskatchewan and northern Canada, to involve effectively aboriginal people and northerners in the inquiry, and to provide them with the resources to do so.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHT TRAINING

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): The second petition I have is signed by people from places such as St. Catharines, Burlington, Mississauga, London, Ontario, Edmonton, Alberta, and others.

These people are supporting the call by the Assembly of First Nations and the Innu of Labrador for an end to low-level flights over their territory and that of other aboriginal peoples. They call on Canada to redirect NATO-NORAD funding toward enabling Canada's aboriginal people to regain control of their lands and livelihood and toward promoting sustainable development for all Canadians.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the pleasure to present a petition to this House on behalf of people from the city of Ottawa, from my riding of Ottawa Centre as well as from Nepean and the whole region who are opposed to the concept of taxing books and magazines. They call upon the government to withdraw the proposed tax on books and magazines.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 339 and 359.

[Text]

PSSA REDRAFTING

Question No. 339—Mr. Harvard:

Further to the government response to Question No. 312, answered on June 20, 1990, (a) does the 60 percent minimum apply to the Public Service Superannuation Act (b) has a period of grace been given regarding the P.S.S.A. redrafting and, if so when will that period terminate?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): a) The Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985 (PBSA) does not apply to the Public Service Superannuation Act (PSSA). Under the PSSA a surviving spouse's allowance is equal to one-half of the contributor's pension. This is an add-on benefit, which means that the initial amount of the contributor's pension is not actuarially reduced to finance the survivor benefit.

b) One of the objectives of public service pension is conformity with the requirements of the PBSA. The reform process is well underway and it is hoped to introduce appropriate legislation early in the New Year.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL MARINE PARK IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 359—Mr. Simmons:

Since the Minister of the Environment announced a National Marine Parks Policy for Canada in 1987 (a) have any sites been targeted in the Province of Newfoundland for a Marine Park and, if so, which sites (b) have any discussions been held with the provincial government for the establishment of a National Marine Park in Newfoundland?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): a) Two of the four marine regions adjacent to Newfoundland territory have been the subject of regional analysis studies, namely the Labrador coast and the eastern coast of insular Newfoundland. As a result of these reports, several sites in each region have been suggested as potential areas for marine parks.

National Parks personnel undertook a field study of the Labrador coast in August of this year. Selection of one of the suggested sites as a candidate for a future National Marine Park is underway. The eastern coast of Newfoundland will be the subject of a field study sometime in 1991.

b) As the process of establishing a National Marine Park in these regions has only barely begun, even within the Canadian Parks Service, no discussions have as yet been held with the Newfoundland provincial government. As soon as the conclusions of the Labrador coast field report have been studied within the Service, discussions with the Newfoundland government will be initiated.

BROADCASTING ACT

The House resumed from November 29 consideration of Bill C-40, An Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, as reported (with amendment) from a Legislative Committee; and Motion No. 17 of Mr. Waddell (p. 15801); and Motion No. 30 of Mrs. Finestone (p. 15801).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in the debate on Motions Nos. 17 and 30 of my colleague and good friend, Mrs. Finestone. Basically the amendments to Bill C-40 advocate maintaining the CBC role as promoter of national unity. This is clear enough, simple enough and very important.

Bill C-40 now before the House and as proposed by the government cancels this mandate, this mission given to the CBC in 1968. Members will recall that in 1968 Parliament saw fit to include these words in the mandate or mission, namely that the CBC "—should contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity".

Mr. Speaker, the deletion of these words stems from recommendations contained in the 1986 Caplan-Sauvageau report and in the 1987 report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Both commissions were concerned that this section might prevent the CBC from ensuring that programming would fairly and faithfully reflect Canada's various cultural, social, political, economic and linguistic realities.

Hon. members will recall that former CBC President Pierre Juneau did not feel that the words "national unity" had created problems during the many years he headed the corporation.

The Canadian Radio-Television and Communications Commission, CRTC for short, also said that the interpretation given to this expression had never prevented nor thwarted a political debate where all views were heard.

At a time when Canada is facing serious challenges—the post-Meech situation, free trade, inter-regional rivalries; remember what happened last summer in Oka and the important role which some people say the CBC played in these sad incidents—we feel it has become ever more urgent and important that the public radio and television network take part in and contribute to the promotion of national unity.

All regions, all social partners must work together to build our country's identity. A few years ago, Parliament voted massively in favour of a resolution to promote Canada's linguistic duality. Not long ago, it also voted in favour of a bill to protect and promote language minorities in this country: Anglophones in Quebec as well as Francophones outside Quebec.

Why should it now deliberately decide to withdraw one of the tools that helped to achieve these objectives? National unity and Canada's linguistic duality should not be relegated to the realm of good intentions. They should be defined and involve firm commitments and concrete action. To remove from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's mission its mandate to promote national unity would, in our opinion, remove part of its soul, of what sets it apart from other public networks.

Some people claim, and I am one of them, that broadcasting has done as much for this country's unity and cohesion in the 20th century as the railways did in the 19th century. This has been the century of communications. We in Canada have become experts in communications. And as I see it, our national network has done more than any other network to keep this country together. I experienced this in 1973, when I came here as a member of Parliament. I asked for a policy of accelerated coverage so that Canadians communities in the North, in Western Canada and Eastern Canada, in fact across the country, would have access to French radio and television.

At the time, the government agreed to spend the money and give the CBC this clear mandate to accelerate its coverage of every community of 500 people or more, so that Canadians in this country would have access to television in their own language, in English in Quebec and in French outide Quebec. This was done, Mr. Speaker, and it provided the glue that cemented Canadians, born in this country or new Canadians, whether they were anglophones or francophones, together. We knew that when travelling across the country, we could tune in to a station that would give us the news and programs in our own language. East or west, centre, south or north, this system made it possible for us to see each other, hear each other, and speak to each other. It helped us understand each other and build a culture and a society in our own image. It wasn't easy, considering the vast expanse of this country, and the way this country was built, on an east-west axis instead of north and south. It's not easy, when you have to cover thousands of kilometres both ways. Mr. Speaker, it has helped us to be Canadians and to further develop our understanding of who we are.

Mr. Speaker, the role played by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is vital for Canada, and for the French Canada I know, which is culturally isolated and in a minority position everywhere on this continent, except in Quebec. Spread out as we are, we are extremely vulnerable. We are constantly in danger of being assimilated. We depend a lot on the CBC to give us balanced programming, and Mr. Speaker, the CBC contributes to the survival and development of French and English culture, and it is very important to have access to this kind of broadcasting across the country in order to keep this country together. As I said, it acts as a cultural, social and educational link, and it is one of the linchpins of French survival in Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is why it is so important to have access to this service from coast to coast.

If I paid tribute to the CBC, Mr. Speaker, it is because I think the corporation plays an important role in national unity. Still the fact remains that the network does not reach all Canadians, and I am prepared to admit that. Too often francophones outside Quebec, particularly in remote areas, have to be cultural beggars in their own country. In too many places inadequate services are tantamount to no service at all. Where there are no transmitters nor cable service Radio-Canada is not heard nor seen. In other regions, francophones are at the mercy of cable companies if they want to see French programs. In most cases French signals originate from the Montreal region. In many cases francophones outside Quebec must rely on English channels to tune in to local and regional news.

If you talk to the CBC head he invariably brings up the issue of shortage of funds. Mr. Speaker, if we turn to the minister to make the same request he refers us back to the CBC. One thing for sure, Mr. Speaker, is that any budget cutback made by the government— and I have some doubts about it because after checking the figures I am not sure that the budget cutbacks have been severe enough to justify the lack of services we have experienced over the past five years. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we will have to want to maintain in this country a national radio and television network readily accessible to all Canadians regardless of the language they speak.

[English]

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague from Port Moody—Coquitlam and our Liberal colleague from Mount Royal for their excellent impassioned plea for a most worthy of all causes, the CBC.

I will begin with a quotation from 1962 by a philosopher. I will wend my way down to some grass roots individuals who also speak out in 1990 in defence of CBC and the proposed cuts to it.

Owing to Canada's size, communications have always meant more to us than to most other countries. We have proceeded and still proceed less by settlement than by communications. Very little of Canada has really been settled. The great gaps of northern Quebec and Ontario and the British Columbia mountains amaze transcontinental travellers. Even more astonishing are the vast emptinesses of our immense northern hinterlands. The emergence of the electronic mass media offers Canada the best prospect it has ever had of becoming a genuine national community.

That was in the sixties. In 1974 an executive or a television critic said: "It should be possible to turn on one's television set and know what country one is in. One would almost never be in doubt in the United States. One is frequently in doubt in Canada." Some people from my community have written to me and voiced their concerns with cutbacks to the CBC.

Miss Noble says: "I am writing as a friend of public broadcasting to ask that you and your party support increasing funding and the continuance of public broadcasting."

Mr. Houston says it better, certainly, than I ever could: "I am writing you to express my concern over proposed cuts to the budget of CBC. Over this summer I have travelled the east coast of our country and was pleased to be able to listen to CBC all the way. I was equally pleased to have this contact with our country when I travelled to B.C. a few years ago. It is hard to express my feelings when, in every province in our country, I found people listening to, and sharing in the culture of every other province. It is more than just being part of our country because the people would not be listening if it weren't also quality programming. It is radio that we are truly proud of and radio that is unique in the world. We must continue this excellence and we must expand our support to spread this quality into our television. I am sure if these budget cuts go through, we will lose out to American culture."

Grace McEwan says: "I am pleased with recent additions to CBC programming on TV.

The 24-hour Newsworld channel is a helpful addition to enable the viewing public to become aware and to keep up with current affairs in our country." Mr. McIntyre: "I want to add my voice to the thousands who deplore the extreme cuts in the CBC's budget in recent years, and in particular in the next five years."

Mr. Tully: "I know you are concerned about the erosion of Canada's economic independence as a consequence of free trade, but what good is economic independence to Canadians if our very cultural identity is in danger of being submerged in the overwhelming swell of American broadcasting media that is engulfing Canada."

There are more, Mr. Speaker, but I just wanted to cite those few. The present president of CBC has some interesting turns of words. He suggests that we are going to have to do some "constructive damage" to the CBC. Those two words together are an antithesis and a paradox. They just do not fit together. How one can go about making constructive damage to the CBC, I think is beyond the comprehension of just about anyone.

How severe are the cuts? They are $140 million over four years, on top of the cuts that have taken place over the past eight or nine years. I believe the funding for operations has gone from $1 billion and conceivably it will drop to about $675,000 by the years 1993-94. The cuts are, indeed, very severe.

It seems strange at this point in time to be talking about cuts when the ratings in fact have gone up. I cite a column from The Toronto Star, Gina Mallet, who suggests that it is funny and sad just when CBC's radio ratings are higher than ever, 11.9 per cent of the audience for AM, 3.5 per cent for FM seems the most inopportune time to make cuts when, in fact, the ratings are increasing.

The amendments proposed by my colleague, and also by the Liberals, are very noteworthy. The one that we have highlighted and the one that gives us the most concern is the deletion of the unity clause, if you will, in the mandate of CBC.

We have deleted many other Canadian symbols like VIA Rail. The post office is under attack. Petro-Canada and Air Canada are being sold off. Is the CBC next? I think the minister has suggested that some people are saying the CBC is too aggressive with the private corporations.

We resent that. Let us be ever more aggressive and competitive to maintain our cultural sovereignty. We appreciate that the deficit is a huge and difficult one to handle for the government, but the incessant cutting of everything across the board is not acceptable. Surely it would latch onto one last vestige of something that speaks for Canadian unity.

What better medium than the CBC, a transmitted message of unity that is most natural? It is instant and effective. It can be powerful. It has a captive audience. If the material is credible, it is informative, unbiased and thought provoking. The CBC had the opportunity of distributing a passionate, poignant message to Canadians, not editorializing on the view of Canadian unity, but presenting a view from across Canada.

Canadians desire and even long for a voice to speak out on behalf of Canadian unity. The division of the one complete board into two separate boards in the CBC apparently is endorsed by no one. One cannot present a unified message by division. It is impossible. This is our Custer's last stand, and we have to always go back to American statements. Let us make CBC the last vestige of hope for a message to the Canadian people on Canadian unity.

The minister says that the unity clause will lead to propaganda, an artificial political notion of unity. That is truly the epitome of hypocrisy when the government is able to spend millions of dollars selling propaganda on the GST that nobody wants to accept. There is propaganda, and there is a disunifying message.

What about Mr. Watson, who is longing to become the true chair of the CBC? Is my time running out, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Yes.

Mr. Butland: So quickly. I am going to have to bypass most of my comments and get to the point.

I do not accept the CBC indicating that it may cut the parliamentary channel. I think that is a most unfortunate way of drawing attention to the severe cuts which have been brought about by the government. I do not accept the fact that it should have to cut $4.5 million from allowing Canadians to view Parliament at work, especially when not several months ago the CBC was forming a contract to present to this House of Commons—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please! I want to remind you that according to the rules and unless the Speaker gets the unanimous consent of the House to do otherwise, speeches last 10 minutes at this stage.

[English]

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure this afternoon to be able to speak to Bill C-40, dealing with CBC communications.

In 1968 the Broadcasting Act required that the CBC contribute to the development of national unity. What we are concerned about in particular in this debate this afternoon is the fact that Bill C-40 drops the CBC's 1968 mandated role to contribute to national unity and provide for continuing expression of Canadian identity.

Across this country there are hundreds of thousands of people who listen CBC radio and television broadcasts regularly. Among those many hundreds of thousands of people, there are thousands who reside in my riding of Northumberland. Many of them have expressed to me their deep concern about the cutbacks the government has imposed on the CBC. In fact, since 1984 the government has cut CBC's parliamentary grants by over $240 million, which includes severe reductions to CBC technology as well.

Many people in my riding come from rural areas. They need to be kept in communication with the reality of this country. Some of them, those who reside in the more urban areas, have the benefit of cable television into their homes. One of the problems with the particular bill in front of us is the fact that it does not say that those who transmit by cable into homes across this country are subject to the same regulations as individual broadcasters. Individual broadcasters are subject to a percentage of Canadian content, and that content has to be accessible.

Through the cable system, depending on what area the system is going into and the type of programming, sometimes those who subscribe to cable broadcast have to use expensive and more sophisticated technologies to receive. It is important that cable broadcasters be subject to the same provisions as individual broadcasters. Also it is important that those who subscribe not be subject to having to purchase high cost technology in order to receive Canadian content.

Since this government came into being the Canadian public has been alarmed with the many ways in which disunity has been imposed upon the country. We recognize that the CBC, our national communications system, is one of the most important factors in uniting this country and keeping it together. We have seen the erosion of other national communications systems which have contributed to an unacceptable regionalization of Canada.

The 1968 bill respecting the Broadcast Act supported contributing to the development of national unity. It in no way prevented the CBC from focusing on particular regional issues, whether it were issues that concerned the economy on the east coast or the west coast, whether it was industrial concerns in the mid-provinces of Canada, Quebec and Ontario, or whether it was northern programming. We all learned and grew to appreciate much more what Canada stood for, by seeing either news broadcasting or situation programming that showed what life was in the diverse regions that make Canada one.

There is no reason that we should drop this particular focus and role for the CBC in the present Broadcasting Act. This is all the more reason that at the present time in Canada, when we are suffering from extreme pressures of national breakdown, we should be concerned about the development of national unity. If ever there was a time when that was important, that time is now. This is no time to be ruling out the importance of developing national unity.

Some of the programs and agencies of the CBC which contribute to the national unity are not protected and mandated through this legislation, Bill C-40. In particular, as other members of Parliament have raised, it is my concern that the northern service, the all-news service that we now have, Newsworld, our parliamentary channel, and Radio Canada International will no longer be mandated and protected specifically in legislation. When we see the enormous cutbacks that CBC has experienced and hear suggestions that it is special programs and agencies such as Radio Canada International and the parliamentary channel that should be dropped, I find it totally unsatisfactory and a great disservice to Canada as one nation.

I have travelled outside Canada to regions of the world where there is very little international broadcasting, areas of the world that do not experience the security that we do here in Canada. It was very important to be able to sit down with a short-wave radio and pick up Canadian news, to get what seemed to us to be an objective view of what was going on in the world.

It was important as well for the Canadian public to understand that non-Canadians, foreigners, also looked forward to the programming and broadcasting of Radio Canada International. They too perceived our broadcasting as objective, full and good reporting on many international issues. However, for Canadians who were travelling abroad like us, no matter what region of Canada we came from, no matter what our racial or ethnic origin, no matter what our language background, French or English, it helped to be able to communicate with each other and to feel proud and unified as Canadian citizens.

Certainly, since I have become a member of Parliament, I have been astonished to learn of the number of people who tune in to the parliamentary channel. These people depend on the parliamentary channel to understand more fully what is going on in our world.

The same applies to Newsworld. Rather than getting the seven-minute clip on our regular CBC daily news programs, they get the full coverage of events and issues and are helped in making their own objective decisions about the important issues of the day.

This is a freedom that Canadians must be able to benefit from. It contributes to a sense of national unity when people are able to come to a consensus of understanding of what is happening in the different regions of this country.

In discussing Bill C-40 as we are today, it is very important that we address the national unity clause and ensure, through proposed amendments, that the CBC continues to contribute to the development of national unity and that there be a specific clause to this effect in the final bill approved by this House of Commons.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak in favour of the Motion No. 17 in the name of the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam, which reads as follows:

> That Bill C-40 be amended in clause 3 by striking out lines 39 and 40 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:
> "(vi) contribute to national unity, shared national consciousness and identity,".

Bill C-40, in describing the CBC's mandate, sets out that CBC programming should:

> (i) be predominantly and distinctively Canadian,
> (ii) reflect Canada and its regions to national and regional audiences, while serving the special needs of those regions,
> (iii) actively contribute to the flow and exchange of cultural expression,
> (iv) be in English and in French,—

Yet the government has removed one particular obligation from the CBC in this legislation, and that is the promotion of Canadian unity. The removal of this clause, combined with the division of the CBC board into both English and French standing committees, in fact weakens the CBC as a national institution. This in particular is a time when more than ever Canadians need national institutions to keep the country together. Surely it is reasonable at this time for the national broadcaster of Canada to play a pivotal role in maintaining our country and our national unity.

I would like to go back and reflect upon the traditional role that the CBC has played, as it has been a very important component in pulling this country together from coast to coast. It has been traditional that the CBC links all parts of Canada, whether the west coast, the Arctic coastline, or the east coast. It was also set up to provide a complete service for Canadians, covering a whole range of programming and day-to-day news so that people could and can keep in touch with events that were happening throughout this land. It was part of its mandate to serve, equitably, both official languages and to be predominantly Canadian in content. The amendment submitted by my colleague is fully consistent with that objective. Actually both amendments represent social goals, essentially something that our Canadian society can strive to achieve. The process is more important than the end because the end will be constantly evaluated and re-evaluated and therefore can change.

As Canadian society matures, norms and values can be challenged, and attitudes can change. But this process in itself, to be meaningful, requires information, it requires discussion and debate.

I want to ask the question as to whether there is something about a publicly-owned, yet autonomously operated broadcast system that can contribute to the very goals which we pursue. In fact, the CBC as a national institution, is ideally suited to contribute to national unity, to contribute to a shared national consensus and identity.

Let me return for a moment to the point that I was trying to emphasize about our goals. These goals can be broadly defined as being perhaps some, but certainly not all, of the components of a nation. I wonder whether the government's objection to this particular amendment begins with the goals themselves, and whether the government members must actually question that very point themselves.

The over-all strategy of this government, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, is exemplified through the funding cuts and through the bifurcation of the management structure of the corporation. In fact, it suggests that this government is simply not willing to fully endorse CBC's pursuit of these goals.

Let me return to the question. Is there something about a publicly-owned, yet autonomously operated broadcasting system that can contribute significantly to the goals of national unity, shared national conscience and a true Canadian identity?

I would like to submit, Sir, that the answer is yes. How do we achieve that? First, we can achieve it by having CBC's operations based across the country, sharing information, commentary and analysis. We can have that by bringing the artistic and the entertainment achievements of the nation to the nation. We can achieve it by sending Canadian journalists abroad to report and analyse events around the world, with consideration for the impact and importance of these events in Canada.

Second, we can achieve this by operating two unique national radio networks, by operating a first rate national television network, and by operating an around the clock all news television channel.

This government seems to have an antipathy for publicly-owned enterprises. That has become pretty obvious. It has been quick to point out the weaknesses and just as quick to sell off those enterprises to the private sector.

I wonder if it is prepared to point to a successful, publicly-owned enterprise and actually perpetuate it, because, Mr. Speaker, the CBC is that kind of success. The success of the CBC is also a measure of its contribution to the goals contained in the amendments that are being discussed at this very moment.

The CBC makes what is Canadian available to Canadians across this country and across the world. It gives Canadians a chance to listen to the country's own heart beat. Some examples of unique CBC's initiatives are Morningside, The House, Sunday Morning, and Newsworld's This Country.

These are examples where local reporting events are transmitted across the nation in a popular format. They are events, I might add, that are widely respected and widely listened to. The CBC has been a model. It has been a pioneer and trendsetter in broadcasting in this country. In so doing, it has assisted the nation in its search for a shared national consciousness and identity and has also contributed, I think significantly, to that national unity.

There are program formats, Mr. Speaker, that are unique to CBC, such as television's Marketplace, Man Alive and The Nature of Things; radio's Arts Tonight, The Food Show, Media File, and Inside Track.

These are unique programming formats which have been made possible because this nation some time ago made a commitment to a national broadcasting service to bring Canada in touch with itself, not unlike other commitments in nation-wide communications, our national rail service, national postal service, and our national telephone service, although I submit, Mr. Speaker, all of those are under severe attack by this present administration.

Sir, I see my time is very limited and I have much more to say on this. I want to summarize by placing the emphasis on the point of national unity. National unity is not something imposed, not something positioned or structured. If this is the government's view of national unity and the goal contained in this amendment, then it is no wonder this country has landed in the kind of mess it has.

National unity is an elusive quality of our life. It is constantly evolving, and like informed judgment it requires information and a means to broadcast that information.

This amendment, if adopted, will confirm a commitment to publicly-owned and operated broadcasting services that can assist in the pursuit and realization of our goals of national unity, shared national consciousness and identity. I would urge the members of the House to seriously consider supporting this amendment to the legislation.

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to speak to Bill C-40, an Act respecting broadcasting and in relation to radiocommunication in Canada.

[English]

This is an extremely complex bill comprised of three parts: the goals and objectives of a broadcasting act in Canada, the role of the CRTC, and the role of the CBC.

[Translation]

Recently the Prime Minister has insisted on the importance of national unity, stating with passion that all that has been accomplished so far can be attributed to our spirit of national solidarity, to our national unity. If the Prime Minister is so convinced of that, why does he want to take away CBC's mandate relating to the promotion of national unity?

[English]

Many have spoken on this bill at the various stages. This has been a supposed priority of the government since the beginning of this Parliament. There are many issues that have been addressed, for example the regionalization of the CRTC and the need for an educational service. However——the main objective here, according to me, is the unity of our country.

[English]

According to the 1968 Broadcasting Act under which the CBC now operates, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is required to be specifically Canadian or precisely to contribute the development of national unity.

At this particular time in the history of Canada—

—with the Meech aftermath, with the native versus Canadians problem, the Middle-East crisis, the lingusitic problem across the country, the dissension problem, the West versus Centre problem and that of the Centre versus the Atlantic provinces, we need instrument to promote national unity. And what better intrument of national unity than the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation could there be? It is important to note that, in the preamble to the bill, we can read and I quote: "the Canadian broadcasting system, operating primarily in the English and French languages and comprising public, private and community elements, makes use of radio frequencies that are public property and provides, through its programming, a public service essential to the maintenance and enhancement of national identity and cultural sovereignty." We, in the Liberal Party, are in agreement with this statement.

[English]

The airways are public and belong to the public. There can be no better instrument of national unity than a public broadcasting service promoting the issue of national unity and reflecting the truly national flavour which is Canada.

What needs to be changed in the bill is section 3(m)(vi), which reads:

"contribute to shared national consciousness and identity".

It should be replaced by "promote national unity"!

[English]

By removing the expressed national unity mandate, the government is neglecting a very significant role for broadcasting, that is, to assist Canadians in developing a national personality and consciousness. Let us use this vehicle to highlight our diversities and to educate ourselves about our uniqueness.

The Ottawa Citizen of May 16, 1990 says: "The CBC is an agent of Canadian unity. It must remain that way as a bulwark against various decentralization forces." Do we need to state explicitly that the CBC has an obligation to promote national unity when it does so every day? Does the obvious fact that Quebec is a distinct society need to be written down in a Constitution?

These days, I would suggest—

Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

[English]

The member for Portage—Interlake, a Conservative member of the government and also chairman of the Standing Committee on Communications expressed some concerns in that committee. A number of Conservative MPs oppose the federal government's plan to abandon national unity as a mandate of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

"Removing the pursuit of national unity as an objective of the Crown-owned radio and television network has a negative connotation," says the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Communications, the member I just mentioned from Portage—Interlake.

The government is proposing that, from now on, there be two standing committees, one English and one French, both reporting to the Board.

So, there will be an English and a French side to the CBC, but they will not communicate with one another. Each will serve their separate clientele, have their own definitions of different words, themes, objectives and goals in Canada. The word "national" is a good example of the case in point. That word is given a different meaning in some parts of the country.

I congratulate the hon. member for Mount Royal who has been fighting for Canadian unity in the Committee on Communications for many years. She wants the CBC to be an agent of national unity.

Mr. Speaker, why change the part of the law dealing with national unity? Why endeavour to change and correct something, if all we are doing is tampering? We are not repairing anything and we could do a lot of damage in the process. First and foremost, we must give ourselves the tools to foster national unity. We are proud of our CBC. After having been away and having immersed ourselves in another culture, we are twice as proud to see that the CBC is there to protect us, to help us grow and become better Canadians, as francophones or as anglophones. The CBC is there to promote the linguistic duality. We are so very proud to hear the French language spoken, whether on Baffin Island, in a Vancouver high school or in a Toronto elementary school, in support of our national unity.

• (1600)

We are proud as well to hear English spoken in Three Rivers. So, linguistic duality and national unity are essential, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in speaking in the debate focusing around Bill C-40. It is a piece of legislation that not only ought to grip this Chamber, but also be taken account of by Canadians from coast to coast.

I would like to preface my brief remarks this afternoon by complimenting the communications critic for our party, the hon. member for Mount Royal, not in jest, but because of the substance of her arguments. The good work that she has done on Bill C-40 and the battle she has waged which, I think, is in concert with the thinking of the vast majority of Canadians and hopefully averting a piece of legislation being put through as written.

Previous speakers have made reference to the fact that, in 1968, as part of the official mandate of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, was the role "to contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity". That was part of the mandated role in 1968. It was a good mandate then and, on this side of the House, we believe that it is a mandate, not only worth keeping but in fact it is crucial and drives at the very heart and essence of the existence of the CBC. Yet, Bill C-40, in its present form, would suggest dropping that portion of the CBC mandate.

We, on this side of the House, and many Canadians are asking: why should we be dropping that essential form of the CBC mandate? The previous president of the CBC, Pierre Juneau, suggested that there was no handicap in having that particular mandate. Many Canadians would agree with me that that should not only be part of the mandate but an essential requirement. And yet, the Minister of Communications, who is in the House today, has been quoted as saying that this 22-year-old clause, the national unity mandate, "is intolerable interference because the CBC was maintaining this political value artificially and it was a constraint on the freedom of expression".

We ought to remind the minister that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is funded thanks to the taxpayers of the country and that the CBC, regardless of where one lives, reaches the livingrooms of the nations. As such, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if there was ever a need to keep national unity as part of the CBC mandate, it is right now.

The country is yearning for that thread of identity and it is going through the advent of a post free trade agreement. People are wondering what this country is all about in terms of its sovereignty; in terms of the decisions being taken south of the border, when we are losing our economic levers, if you will; and in the advent of the situation in the Middle East, where it seems that our foreign policy is a carbon copy of that of the United States. We are talking about the various pulls and tugs of various provinces in the country which are contemplating doing without Canada and contemplating going out on their own. It is also a time when Canadians are more apt to identify with the regions than with that term called Canadianism. We are talking about adopting immigration programs, first to the provinces, then to the regions, and third, if there is time, to the country. There is no thought that the immigrants are coming first to a country, then to a region, and finally to a provincial context.

VIA Rail was gutted, Mr. Speaker. You know, as well as I, the historic role that the railway has played in the country in terms of keeping the east, west and north symmetry together and not giving into the pressures that normally would have an easier time flowing north and south.

The government is talking, in the transportation sector again, about an open skies concept, allowing American air carriers to come into our airspace at will and with freedom, when in fact our industry cannot compete head to head with the Americans. In the end, I think Canadians do give a damn about what kind of air carrier transports them between point A and point B. They do care whether the emblem on the tail of that airplane is the Maple Leaf or Stars and Stripes.

With the advent of all these forces unleashed at this very time in our history, I believe that it is important for our medium of communication, for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to do all it can to try to enhance the forces of unity and to try to rally Canadians from coast to coast. Therefore, there has never been a better time and a greater need to foster the cause of national unity through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

For the government even to be contemplating dropping this clause is not only wrong, but an absolutely incomprehensible abdication of responsibility. The government is going against the very grain of why, in part, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was established and has existed.

Rather than weakening the cause of national unity through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, we in this Chamber, and members on the other side of the House, namely the government, ought to look for ways of strengthening the resolve, strengthening the tools, strengthening the commitment of national unity, and not undermining the fabric of national unity and undermining the cause for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Otherwise, when combined with all the other policies of government, we wonder what the federal government will be doing in a few years, other than delivering the mail and doing a bad job at that.

I think, therefore, that it is most important for the House and the government to recognize that the CBC and Radio-Canada have a major role to play in the promotion of national unity. That this government should refuse to promote national unity throughout our country is entirely inexplicable. I believe that one of the functions of the CBC and Radio-Canada is to advance unity, and together with the co-operation of the Canadian people, to promote our own Canadian values as Canadians, not as Quebecers, Ontarians or Albertans, and to transmit them with pride and justice to the whole country. I suggest, therefore, that in addition to promoting these Canadian values, we must be proud of our country and, instead of depriving it of its role, to allow the CBC to reinforce national unity.

• (1610 )

[English]

I am pleased that I have this opportunity. Mr. Speaker, I see that you are indicating that my time is up. I am very hopeful that by the end of this debate, the government will see fit to change this important clause and to stand up for Canadian unity and Canada, and not be scared of promoting national unity at a time when it is badly needed.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support my colleague's amendments that would preserve the national unity objective of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I might point out that if one lives in a west coast riding such as mine, which is on the far west coast, on the Pacific Ocean, this is exactly the kind of concern that my constituents would have.

For example, a small community like Ucluelet has a population of somewhere between 1,100 and 1,500 people, depending on what time of the year it is. Because of the policy of CBC, they are entitled to get the CBC radio in Ucluelet. Previously, because Ucluelet was located on the far west coast, we received our radio transmissions from places such as Los Angeles, California which had a direct line of sight between Los Angeles and Ucluelet. We also received our radio in Spanish from Tijuana, Mexico. If you recall, Mr. Speaker, the programs of Wolfman Jack were the kind of programs we received from pirate radio stations in Tijuana, Mexico.

As a result of CBC's national unity policy, translators are now placed in places like Ucluelet so that we can receive those CBC AM and FM stations and we can receive CBC French and English programming. That kind of thing helps to keep the nation together. Whereas when I was teaching in Ucluelet many years ago, the kids in my class knew far more about what was happening in Los Angeles, the American political system, and American culture and music than about what was happening in Canada. As residents of the far west coast, they did not receive Canadian programming. They were too remote from Canadian centres to receive Canadian radio and television programming.

It is a serious problem. If we drop the commitment to national unity, does this mean that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation can give up its obligation of locating translators and stations in remote communities on the west coast of Vancouver Island? I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, that is not what people on the west coast of Vancouver Island want. They prefer to be Canadians, to remain Canadian, and to be in touch with Canada. The major link between the west coast of Vancouver Island and the west coast communities of British Columbia is that CBC link. They would like to retain it.

If the government abandons as an objective of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the objective of retaining and promoting national unity, that is exactly the fear that the people on the west coast of Vancouver Island have, that they are going to lose CBC services and end up hearing the radio stations of the west coast of the United States and Mexico. That is not what people on the west coast want for themselves or for their children. They want to be Canadians, and they want the government to respect their desire to remain Canadians.

It is a dangerous action on the part of the government to eliminate this section which, as other speakers have pointed out and as has been mentioned by the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, has been absolutely no impediment to the kind of programming it does, the quality of programming it does, or the independence and the impartiality of the programming it does. In fact, it is an important objective and it should be stated in the legislation governing the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

When I look at a community such as the one I live in which is Port Alberni in central Vancouver Island, it is surrounded by mountains. We cannot receive radio from outside the Alberni Valley because of the problems with line of sight transmission. It is very difficult to receive radio transmissions from outside the valley. We have difficulty in receiving Canadian Broadcasting Corporation programs. It is only because there is an obligation on the part of CBC to protect and promote national unity that we receive and have installed transmitters that transmit CBC programs through the mountains and into the Alberni Valley where they are received by the 19,000 to 25,000 residents who live in that valley.

Without this objective to protect and to enhance national unity, I believe that those kinds of transmitters would be pulled out of those communities because they do not make money, do not earn advertising in the Alberni Valley or support in the Alberni Valley. These are things that are done as part of a national obligation to make sure that this country holds together.

My constituents are concerned that if we drop this clause to promote national unity from the objectives of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation then places like Ucluelet on the west coast of Vancouver Island and places like Port Alberni in central Vancouver Island will simply be ignored. Their transmitters will be cut as part of their cost-cutting measures because once this objective of promoting and protecting national unity is dropped from the CBC's objectives then the CBC is going to say: "Who cares about these small communities; who cares about protecting?"

My constituents are concerned about retaining this section as one of the objectives of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to preserve national unity. I think it is an objective that every Canadian institution should have.

I am beginning to doubt the institution of the Conservative Party as to whether they have, as a fundamental objective, the national unity of this country, because when I see what the Conservative Party has done, this wrecking crew of Canada, since it took office in 1984, it has virtually destroyed every link that connects this country from ocean to ocean to ocean. That has been a serious problem with this wrecking crew of a Conservative Party that does not have built into its objectives the national unity of this country.

Phil Edmonston has more concern about this country in his little finger than you or any other member of that caucus and I can guarantee it.

I will tell you, the actions of this government demonstrate it.

At least I got 42 per cent of the popular vote and never, ever—

Mr. McDermid: I got 56.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): My party got 42 per cent of the popular vote and you guys cannot even scratch up 14 no matter what you do in this country.

It would be good to see an objective of national unity as part of the Conservative Party, this party that has destroyed the cross-Canada links of VIA Rail, one of the institutions that brought our country together, held our country together and was respected by Canadians all across the country as a link that kept our country together from sea to sea.

Air Canada is another link that was developed by the Government of Canada. When other airlines refused to do a trans-national, across-the-country service because they felt it would not make a profit this government stepped in, developed the Trans-Canada Airlines that later grew into Air Canada, served communities that were uneconomic to serve and used a system of cross-subsidization between the lucrative runs to subsidize other runs so that everybody in Canada could enjoy an air service.

One gentleman here mentioned that the post office is the last remaining Canadian institution. In my riding they wonder who runs the post office in this country. If you want to buy stamps or get parcel service in the country, you do not go to a community centre that flies the Canadian flag and says this is your national postal service. You go to a 7-Eleven store or a Quickie store. They wonder whether the symbol of Canada is Shoppers Drug Mart or 7-Eleven, an American store. That is the problem with the Conservative Party. It has spent all of the last eight years undermining and tearing apart all of the links that keep this country together from sea to sea. Then they start setting up committees to try to help pull us back together again.

I will give them a hint. All they have to do is respect those national institutions and to preserve as their objective the objective of retaining national unity in this country. That is what the people of Canada want. Unfortunately, it is not what the Conservative Party has been shooting for.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to take part in this debate. I should like to deal also with national unity, but first of all, I will start with the subject matter of Motion No. 30, which is perhaps closer to ordinary people.

[English]

This motion would amend the bill to require the CRTC to establish priorities for the Canadian Broadcasting system based upon the national interest. As I say, I am referring to somewhat ordinary pedestrian concerns. I would like to bring the attention of the House to simply the matter of regulation of cable distribution systems within Canada and make a plea for the emphasis of the national interest being pursued when the regulation of cable systems is brought forward.

Let me give the House a couple of examples. First of all, with respect to the nature of the channels that are provided on basic cable service, many of us, certainly in the urban areas of Canada, paying a basic fee, receive a certain cable service. At the moment it is up to the cable companies to decide the nature of the programming that is going to be provided in that basic service.

It seems to me that the CRTC in pursuing the national interest ought to require that very careful consideration be given to the nature of the basic cable service in Canada. Clearly, Canadian channels, local stations as well as national networks need to receive first-run priority in the basic cable service everywhere in Canada. Clearly, Canadians also want the service of the three networks from the United States, together with public broadcasting. That is certainly within the band of the basic cable service. However, in addition to those, any other non-Canadian services surely should be looked at from the point of view of what national interest is being served.

Another example on the same point with respect to the parliamentary channel, that service is one, which I think has been noted earlier in the debate here this afternoon, of great importance to many Canadians who sit at home and watch the debate that we have here. They learn a great deal about our institutions and about what is happening in public affairs in Canada by following the parliamentary channel.

In my area of Ottawa South, there are two cable distribution companies. Their practice with respect to the parliamentary channel differs. In one part of my constituency, the basic cable coverage includes only the English version of our debates here in the House of Commons. In the other part of my constituency, the floor sound, in other words the language that is being spoken by the people participating in debate, is broadcast to my constituents. Neither is particularly satisfactory. In the former case, my francophone constituents, who live in one part of my riding, are unable to acquire the parliamentary channel in their language. The other part of my riding, where certainly the predominant language is English, the floor sound precludes my constituents from understanding the debate that is occurring in this Chamber in their own language.

It seems to me that as part of the pursuit of the national interest, the parliamentary channel not only should be available to all Canadians, but it should be available to all Canadians in French or in English, whichever is their language of choice.

I think that is a very important characteristic that should be pursued in the national interest of broadcasting in Canada.

I would also like to speak briefly about the amendment that would restore to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation a mandate to contribute to national unity, shared national consciousness and identity.

This point is of profound importance. I do not think that there is a Canadian who would say that since 1984, when this government was elected, that national unity has been enhanced or improved in any degree. In fact, what we face is probably the greatest crisis of national unity in our history.

The Prime Minister is quoted as having said: "Everything that we have accomplished as a country can be traced back to our sense of national purpose, to our national unity". If we think back over the great accomplishments of the last 123 and a half years, there are many. All of them relate to this sense of national purpose, whether it is the founding of the country in the first place by the Fathers of Confederation, or the construction of the CPR that brought together the extremities of the country.

The establishment of the CBC itself was an expression of national purpose. Now, we have the very idea that this part of the CBC's mandate would be stripped from it. Surely, with the climate of division, strife, anger and frustration that we have in the country at the present moment, this is not the time to reduce any measure that we have at our disposal to promote national unity.

I do not say this lightly. The minister made the comment in the past that giving a national unity mandate to a broadcasting system is somewhat perilous in a democracy. I understand what he is saying. Particularly in the reporting of news and currents events, it can be difficult to say the least, to say that we want to convey a certain purpose in the broadcasting of news and current events coverage.

That is not all that the CBC does. What we are debating here is not a mandate on a broadcasting authority, to somehow repress certain kinds of news or to emphasize other kinds of news in order to produce a certain result. That is not what we are talking about.

We are talking about the kind of broadcasting that the CBC has become known for, the broadcasting of special events, the coverage of Canadian events, the emphasis on Canadian broadcasters, the programming that we hear on our radios and see on our televisions that is uniquely Canadian and that brings us together as a nation. We understand one another a little better each time that we hear and see this kind of broadcasting. That is what we are talking about here.

That surely needs to be part of the mandate of our entire broadcasting system; the CBC itself as a national broadcasting outlet and other broadcasters to the extent that they are regulated by the CRTC.

Unfortunately, what we have is a government led by a Prime Minister who stood before the people of Canada and said that the Constitution of the country was not worth the paper that it is written on. In making that kind of provocative statement, which should be denounced not only here but across the land, he set the tone for national division that is tearing our country apart.

Now is not the time to be stripping our national broadcasting authority of its power and its responsibility with respect to national unity. Now is the time to be building it up. Now is the time for Canadians to recognize at this moment what it is that they have that is so important and so valuable. As members of Parliament we all know that there are hundreds of thousands of people around the world wanting to come to Canada. What we have here is precious. What we need is a modern broadcasting vehicle to help Canadians remember and understand the uniqueness of what we have, the importance of it, the values that we share in common as Canadians. That is what the CBC should be doing. Its mandate must not be changed.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq):

[Editor's Note: Member spoke in Inuktitut.]

I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak to this very important Bill C-40 respecting the CBC and the issue of national unity.

The government has said that under the new Broadcasting Act the CBC will no longer have a role in contributing to the development of national unity. In 1968 the Broadcasting Act, which Bill C-40 will replace, gave the CBC a mandate "to contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity". Bill C-40 now requires only that the CBC "contribute to the shared national consciousness and identity".

I find it rather disturbing that the government would want to try to distance itself from a bill which in the past had done so much to keep Canada together. We understand why the government has done what it has done. I do not think it really has an idea of what national unity is all about. It has done more to divide Canada in the six years it has been in power than in the 117 previous years that Canada as we know it today has existed.

I would like to touch on a few issues that have done more to divide the nation: free trade, railroad cuts, the proposed goods and services tax, Meech Lake, and now we have the Spicer commission and another parliamentary committee to look into amending the Constitution.

We should also talk a bit about the gun control bill that the government would like to scrap because its backbenchers do not want to see it passed. It would have done a lot toward easing the concerns of a lot of women today in Canada. They just want to follow the gun lobbyists as is done in the United States of America.

I want to touch a bit on national unity and the government. I do not think the government has any concept of how to keep national unity intact. I say this because its policy seems to be that one way to keep Canada together is to roll the dice. Is that how we keep Canada together, by the roll of the dice? No wonder Canada is splitting at the seams when national unity depends on how the dice come up.

Even when the majority of Canadians disagrees with a measure on how to keep Canada together, government members insist that it is their way or no way. They will not agree on who killed the Meech Lake Accord in the end. The majority of Canadians knows that it was our good friend, Elijah Harper, from the Manitoba legislature who said no three times to a request for unanimous consent, and effectively killed Meech Lake.

The government would have us believe that anybody but the very people who were here to welcome those who sailed across the ocean effectively killed Meech Lake. It was the agreement of the aboriginal people because they did not like the Meech Lake Accord. We all know that the government does not want to place the blame where it lies because we might get too much sympathy. Instead, it places the blame on people who did not really have a role in determining the death of Meech Lake.

The minister has decided to relieve the CBC of the obligation to promote Canadian unity and to substitute therefor the obligation to report on the cultural reality of this country. Even some of his own caucus members do not necessarily agree with him.

The chairman of the communications committee, the hon. member for Portage—Interlake, on May 9, 1990 said: "Removing the pursuit of national unity as an objective of the Crown owned radio and television network has a negative connotation about unity. Dropping such a phrase now would indicate we are going in two separate ways. It would be most unfortunate." There is a person who knows what the rest of Canadians are thinking. There is a person to whom this minister should be listening, as he should be listening to others from this side of the House.

When will the minister realize that people need this Crown corporation to promote national unity and that this is a very small way of showing that the House is serious about keeping and promoting national unity?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale—High Park—External Affairs; the hon. member for Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville—Housing; the hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River—Cameco.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and participate in this important debate on Bill C-40.

First, I want to acknowledge the magnificent work being done on our behalf by my colleague and friend from Mount Royal on matters relating not only to this bill but to communications. She is in every respect our guiding light on those issues. She does a very remarkable job, as does her staff.

This debate is an important one because it goes right to the very heart of what this country is all about. The bill itself addresses just one particular aspect of that debate, but it is symbolic of the larger agenda of this government. Much as been said in the past few days during the course of debate about the matter of national unity and how the bill not only ignores but seeks to undo part of the CBC's mandate.

The Prime Minister of the day, R. B. Bennett, not a man of my party but the man who introduced this bill, set forth in very clear, concise and precise terms exactly what he wanted a piece of broadcasting legislation to achieve. Not only did he say it well, but the instrument he crafted, together with his cabinet colleagues in the House of Commons at that time and in Parliament generally, has served us well in the intervening years. One wonders first of all why there is a need to fix something that is not broken.

Mr. Benjamin: I am listening to the Liberals stealing my stuff.

Mr. Simmons: It is nice to have the gentleman from Regina here. We are here every day at this time. He should come more often and speak in his turn.

An hon. member: Order.

Mr. Simmons: As I was saying a moment ago, this issue goes to the very heart of the government's agenda. I remember very well the Prime Minister talking about how his mandate was a national reconciliation. There is a phrase he has had to eat a few times. Can we think of any time, since R. B. Bennett in 1932 who brought in the broadcast bill, under any Prime Minister of whatever party stripe when a leader has so crafted his public policy as to get an effect which is absolutely opposite to national reconciliation?

It is significant that today, with a broadcast bill before the Chamber, one of the only two ministers in sight is the minister responsible for privatization, the paid wrecking ball of this government. He is also the paid heckler today, and he does not even do a good job at that.

Mr. McDermid: Former broadcaster, that is what I am.

Mr. Simmons: Emphasis on former. As I was saying before the paid heckler decided to get eloquent, instead of being here and behaving like a 12-year old, why does he not find his cowardly minister, the Minister of Communications, who does not even have the courtesy to come in here and talk to the bill? Where is his minister?

Mr. McDermid: Order, order.

Mr. Simmons: Suddenly I am out of order, am I? Let me be completely in order.

Instead of just beating his gums over there, will the minister go out and tell his colleague his responsibility to be here and to tell us where he stands on this bill? Or, does he still stand on both sides of it as he did in the press clippings that I have here? Is that where he stands?

An hon. member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Simmons: The Minister of Labour has just made his maiden speech in the House. We should hear from that minister more often too.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I think we have got them all worked up for some reason.

Mr. McDermid: Who's worked up?

Mr. Simmons: Not me.

Mr. Speaker, if one phrase would characterize this particular Prime Minister, it has nothing to do with national reconciliation. It has more to do with a wrecking ball. If ever there was a wrecking ball abroad in the country—maybe the Minister of Labour takes some credit. Maybe he takes some satisfaction in that. As a Newfoundlander and as a Canadian, I take no satisfaction that I have a Prime Minister who is going around as a wrecking ball, who is wrecking this country every day, whether it is through CBC or anything else. I take no pride in that. He can smirk, he can laugh. I take no pride in that, none whatsoever. A wrecking ball.

Mr. Corbeil: Where does Chrétien stand?

Mr. Simmons: If the minister would stop shouting long enough, I would tell him where Chrétien stands because at least Chrétien knows where he stands.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Simmons: Also, unlike his leader the Prime Minister, and unlike the Minister of Communications, Chrétien stands in only one place. He is not having trouble with a picket fence. He doesn't have to worry about being injured by a picket fence. Is there anything else the minister would like to get off his chest before we go on?

Mr. Corbeil: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Simmons: I think, Mr. Speaker, he wants me to speak to the bill.

As I was saying, this bill is symbolic of the Prime Minister's wrecking ball approach to Canada. A wrecking ball, contrary to popular view, is not something that is out of control and just wildly swinging around. Oh, no. A wrecking ball in its best sense is something that is the result of pre-planning, premeditation. The people who own that ball, who rent it out, know exactly what they want done with it. By applying it properly and with pre-planning they can have it do exactly what is intended.

When I say that the Prime Minister is a wrecking ball, I do not suggest that he is flailing around without an agenda. No, Mr. Speaker. Like every other wrecking ball that ever was rented, he is rented by people who know exactly what it is they want to have wrecked. They want this country wrecked. They apply every strike of the ball with precision.

One day they go after the CBC, another day they go after various Crown corporations like Petro-Canada, and another day they go after some other institution. They go after regional development. They undermine the less populated parts of this country. They close post offices in rural Newfoundland. Day in day out they attack unemployment insurance. Every day, they attack fisheries policy. Everything to do with rural Canada has to go under the wrecking ball. Everything to do with identity in this country has to go under the wrecking ball.

Mr. Speaker, do you realize that if this government's policies in this general area had been applied some time back, the way they are going now, we would not have certain gifts in this country. I will give you one quick example, because I see your signal, Sir, that I am just about out of time. One example is that marvellous godsend to Nova Scotia, Rita MacNeil. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, but for Canadian content requirements she would have never got her break. This woman has just come back from a very successful sold-out tour in Australia. She is about to tour the British Isles, which is all sold out before she even gets there. She is a credit to Canada, but she is flying on her own. That is more than we can say for this Prime Minister. If he was not trying to fly on somebody's coat-tails, if he was not taking his orders from Georgie Bush all the time, he would not be such a wrecking ball.

That is the guy paying the rent, George Bush, on this particular wrecking ball. We are paying for the consequences, for the premeditated, pre-planned wrecking of this country through the CBC, through UI, through fisheries policy and the many other things I could mention. They are all orchestrated by people who are not without an agenda. They have a diabolical agenda all right, but it is not an agenda that will serve this country very well.

That Bill C-40 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 17 and 19 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canadian broadcasting system;".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the House for giving unanimous consent for me to present the motions that had been submitted by my colleague. We feel these amendments are extremely important in strengthening the intent of the broadcast bill.

Motion No. 18 reads:

That Bill C-40 be amended in clause 3 by adding immediately after line 9 at page 6 the following:

"(o) broadcasting services reflecting aboriginal cultures and representative native languages shall be provided where numbers warrant;".

Motion No. 20 also states that the proposed legislation be amended. These motions are intended, as I mentioned, to strengthen aboriginal broadcasting provisions in Bill C-40. The bill states that "programming that reflects the aboriginal cultures of Canada should be provided within the Canadian broadcasting system as resources become available".

However, this bill gives little priority to the communications difficulties of Canada's aboriginal communities. As the Canadian Broadcasting League noted before the committee on Bill C-136, the government's proposal "gives provision of broadcasting services for aboriginal people, no priority at all".

The government's proposal reflects its basic lack of support for aboriginal communications in Canada. The most recent budget singled out aboriginal communications societies for particular attack and I want to cite some specific examples.

The Northern Native Broadcast Access Program, which was established in 1983, has been repeatedly cut by this government. The program was created to ensure that northern native people have fair access to distribution systems to maintain their cultures and languages, that programming relevant to native concerns be produced and that northern native representatives be consulted regularly by government agencies. In fact the Northern Native Broadcast Access Program funds over 13 communications societies. Those societies have a significant impact on the communications of our native peoples up north.

When it was created, this program was given a budget of some $40 million over four years. However, the government has cut this in 1985 and in 1986 to reduce the four-year payment to only $33.7 million. In 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 funding was cut and frozen. In the budget this year, the government again took the hatchet to the program and cut it back to $11.3 million. This represents a cutback of some 15 per cent. This was done to a program which, according to the Nielsen task force report, shows promise as an effective tool for meeting special native broadcast needs and should be considered.

The government also cut the aboriginal friendship centre by some 6.8 per cent, the Native Communications Program by 100 per cent and the Aboriginal Representative Organization Program by some $2.5 million. We submit to you that this constitutes a virtual attack on the cultural expression of aboriginal peoples at the worst possible time.

• (1700)

The approach reflected in the amendments before the House at this time are much more positive than those found in the currently proposed bill. It states that broadcasting services, not just programming, shall be provided in Canada. In doing so, the amendments adopt the language found in the standing committee report which was supported by all parties and in fact included a majority of Conservative members. The amendments would ensure that aboriginal peoples have access, whether it be in the north or the south, to broadcasting services that they themselves control. This reflects comments made before the Bill C-136 committee by the Wawatay Native Communications Society when they noted the importance of having a native communications system in the north.

We need a new broadcasting policy that meets the concerns, objectives, and aspirations of aboriginal peoples, not only in the north, but in virtually all parts of Canada. The inclusion of this amendment we think would be a positive step along the road.

As the standing committee recognized in its unanimous report, there could be no way of underestimating the importance of broadcasting on the future of aboriginal communities. The communications media are essential to the preservation of the cultural heritage of Canada's aboriginal peoples. Broadcasting policy cannot ensure the survival of native languages. We recognize that, but it can and should play a key and fundamental role in helping to mitigate the threats that currently exist with regard to native cultures. I urge all members of the House to consider and support these recommendations.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to address a few remarks to the matter of aboriginal communications.

It comes as no surprise when I say that aboriginal people in Canada feel alienated. They feel left out of so many of the important affairs and matters in the country. I can go back just a few weeks or months and relate what happened at places like Oka and Chateauguay last summer. These were very disturbing and traumatizing events and for the first time in a long period Canadians got some sense of native grievances in the country. These grievances have run extremely deep for centuries. It is little wonder that we had the kind of blow-up or explosion in the province of Quebec last summer.

It seems to me that one way to deal with aboriginal grievances is to address the matter of communications in a very serious way. There is no doubt in my mind that Bill C-40 in no way gives any kind of priority to aboriginal language broadcasts.

I cannot think of anything that is more alienating or traumatizing than to never see one's own culture, values or life styles reflected in mainstream communications around one. Can you imagine if you turned on a radio or television set and never heard anyone speak in your own language? Perhaps you did not see anyone carry out the kind of work that you carry out, speak the kind of language that you speak, or express the kinds of values that you embrace. Can you imagine that if almost everything you saw on the television screen, almost everything you heard on the radio was kind of foreign. Can you imagine how out of place you would feel, how alienated? It would be as if you had travelled to a foreign land, some land far away with a strange and rather foreboding culture, a landscape, where you really did not feel you belonged. Yet, I would submit that that is how many of our aboriginal people feel today.

When you are in that kind of milieu it must say to you, not only that you do not belong, but perhaps you are not even wanted. It seems to me that if we really want to bring about a much better relationship between aboriginal peoples and the rest of the country that we have to start speaking to each other and developing all our communication system in such a way that our aboriginal people feel they belong, that they can stand up and say: "That's me. That belongs to me. That's my country. Those are my people. That's what makes me proud. That makes me proud as a Canadian, proud as an aboriginal".

Anything we can do to foster that kind of development in our communication system is not only good for aboriginal people, it is good for Canadians and good for the country.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, again, I would like to congratulate the member for Port Moody for advancing this amendment which calls on the CBC to broadcast in aboriginal languages, or as the amendment states:

As the House knows, there are 53 aboriginal languages existing in Canada today and, of those 53, only three are expected to survive for the next 20 years. The other 50, in many cases, have only one speaker, and when that speaker dies, that language will cease to exist.

We all know as a result of the linguistic debates that have taken place in the country over the last several decades, and perhaps back centuries, that language is really the medium of culture and once language goes, then the culture tends to disintegrate.

One of the things that has happened in the Northwest Territories is that a number of their aboriginal languages have been declared as official languages and that territory now has simultaneous translation of those languages in its legislature. Laws are translated into those languages so that the native people in the Northwest Territories, as a result of their languages becoming the official languages of the territory, have now become full participants, recognized by the law, recognized by the legislature, and recognized by the institutions of that territory. I believe that the same thing should happen with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The aboriginal affairs committee of the House has delayed introducing its last report on native language and literacy into the House until it can be translated into the three major aboriginal languages spoken in Canada, as well as the two official languages of the House. It is important that natives are involved with the business of the House, especially with the aboriginal committee, and are involved to the extent that they can read the reports of the House in their own languages. The same thing applies to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Native Canadians demonstrated last summer, not simply in the crisis at Kanesatake and Kahnawake, that they are frustrated with the process of debate on their issues in the country, and frustrated with the delays that are taking place in recognizing and settling their claims. They also demonstrated, through the person of Elijah Harper and his ability to thwart the passage of the Meech Lake Accord in the Manitoba legislature, that Canada cannot proceed on its constitutional programs until the role of our native people, the role of their cultures, and especially the role of their language as the medium of their cultures is recognized. It should be recognized, not at the end of the constitutional debate, but in the same place that the native people came in the history of the country and that is, in the first place in our constitutional debate.

It would be worth-while on the part of Parliament and a gesture on its part to have the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, where numbers warrant, use aboriginal languages as the language of broadcasting in those regions of the country where that method would be an effective one of communicating with the people resident in those parts of the country.

I would like to congratulate my colleague from Port Moody—Coquitlam who introduced this legislation and to recognize the statements made just a few minutes ago by the member for Winnipeg and the member from the Okanagan. They pointed out that in the last year or two native people have seen attacks on their language and on their culture by the government. They have seen cutbacks in the native communication program that provided native newspapers all across Canada. The budgets of those newspapers were cut by the Secretary of State by 100 per cent. As a result, many of those newspapers closed down.

For example, the Micmac News, was a newspaper that made a point of communicating with the Micmac people of Canada in their own language. It was a newspaper that made a point of communicating native concerns to the dominant society and addressing native people and others in the country who suffer from literacy problems in a language that they could understand and in a way that would help build their understanding of literacy so that they could become more functional citizens of the country.

Another thing the Micmac News did before it was cut off by the cancellation of funding by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was to expose injustices to native people; cases such as the one involving Donald Marshall, who was put in jail for 11 years for a crime he did not commit. These are the kind of things that have increased the frustration of native people over the last year or two and that frustration has built up and ultimately resulted in the situation at Kanesatake and Kahnawake.

I hope that Conservative members will read this amendment carefully and will recognize that there are problems in preserving native languages in the country. The government has done next to nothing in a positive way to support native language. In fact, through the budget cuts of the Secretary of State, it has done a great deal in a negative way to prevent the survival of native languages over the next 20 years.

Here is an opportunity, working through the national agency of the CBC, one of the main communications agencies of the Canadian people, to bring some of its people back into the communications stream by allowing them to communicate to their own people in their own languages. At the same time, it can use those languages as a conduit for their culture and communicate with each other as every other Canadian has the right to use the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to communicate between themselves, whether they speak French or English. This is an opportunity to extend it to the languages which have not yet been considered and that is the aboriginal languages of Canada.

I would urge the Conservative members to consider this amendment carefully and to consider what they have done over the last year. I hope that they will vote for this amendment and make it possible for native people to communicate with each other in their own native language and at the same time preserve their native language by doing so.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq):

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today in support of Motion No. 19 put forward by my colleague for Mount Royal, which would recognize aboriginal languages in Bill C-40.

I congratulate her for her recognition and understanding of the importance of aboriginal people having their language recognized in the Canadian broadcasting policy. I regret that the government has not chosen to put aboriginal languages in this bill.

The motion would amend clause 3(o) of the bill. That clause now reads:

> 3.(1) It is hereby declared as the broadcasting policy for Canada that
> (o) programming that reflects the aboriginal cultures of Canada should be provided within the Canadian broadcasting system as resources become available for the purpose;

My colleague's amendment would add "representative native languages should be provided" to this clause.

This amendment is consistent with the recommendations of the 1986 report of the task force on broadcasting policy, also known as the Caplan-Sauvageau report. That report recommended that:

> The Broadcasting Act should affirm the right of native peoples to broadcasting services in aboriginal languages considered to be representative where numbers warrant and to the extent public funds permit.

It went on to say that the term "representative" was used to suggest broadcasting service in the dominant aboriginal dialects of those aboriginal people concerned with the preservation of their language.

When the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture examined the task force report in 1987, it supported this recommendation.

The standing committee, in its sixth report to the House in May of 1987, noted that the aboriginal peoples have a special status in Canada, a fact recognized in the Canadian Constitution.

They commented that in recent years, the policies of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission had encouraged and promoted native broadcasting. They concluded that the inclusion of a provision regarding broadcasting in representative native languages in a new Broadcasting Act would therefore be consistent with recent policy initiatives.

Accordingly, the committee recommended, and I quote:

> The Broadcasting Act would include the right of aboriginal peoples to broadcasting services in representative native languages, where numbers warrant and as public funds become available.

The government has taken a step in the right direction by referring to aboriginal cultures. There is some recognition. I want to acknowledge that. But the government has still held back. It has not gone as far as it could have, or should have, in my view.

I fail to understand why the government has ignored aboriginal languages in this bill, despite the numerous recommendations made to it to include these languages; recommendations made by aboriginal people, by its own task force, and by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

There is great concern expressed by members of this House about the foreign cultural domination of this country. That reality is even more stark for aboriginal people.

A year ago, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications said the government's challenge with respect to broadcasting was:

> —to equip our system with the means to generate Canadian programming which addresses the needs of Canadians to see themselves on our screens, to see our stories and our creators amid the sea of imported products.

I happen to agree with his comments. I wish the government would see fit to extend that sentiment and understanding to aboriginal people.

How often do the aboriginal people of this country get to see themselves on their TV screens, hear the stories of their people and see their creative citizens on their screens?

North American non-aboriginal cultures dominate almost 100 per cent. Aboriginal people have developed aboriginal communications societies. There is aboriginal TV, aboriginal radio and aboriginal newspapers, but the numbers are small.

• (1720)

These aboriginal communication societies have had their funding cut by this very same government. Nice words will not restore the lost funds or cancelled programs.

Our languages are fragile. The threat of extinction is far more real and pressing for aboriginal languages than for any other language in this country.

There are millions of people in this country who speak French. There are millions of people in this country who speak English.

The people in Canada who speak aboriginal languages number in the thousands, the hundreds and sometimes the tens, depending on the language.

Of the 53 aboriginal languages in this country, only three have excellent chances of survival. Thirteen are moderately endangered and eight are on the verge of extinction.

Does Bill C-40 do anything substantial to ensure these languages survive and thrive? Unfortunately, it does not. Clause 3 does not mention aboriginal languages.

What all the MPs in this House and all Canadians must remember is that our languages, the way they are spoken here, do not exist anywhere else in the world. We do not have a mother country across the oceans to go back to where we can hear our own languages spoken on the radio, on TV, on the streets and in the stores, see it written in books, magazines and newspapers. There is no other place in this world where we can practice our cultures.

Our mother country is Canada. We are from here. We are of here. There is no other place in this world where we can go and communicate in our languages and be understood.

As linguistic and cultural minorities, swamped by communications of a foreign language and culture, it is absolutely vital to our cultural survival that our aboriginal languages and cultures receive the support they deserve from the Canadian government.

I call on the government to accept this motion. I urge the government to demonstrate that it really means what it says about supporting aboriginal cultures. Aboriginal cultures cannot survive without protection of the aboriginal language that is part of that culture.

On February 22, 1990, the following press release was noted: "IBC's 5.5 weekly hours of programming are watched by 95 per cent of Canadian Inuit according to the 1988 survey by Concordia University. Its programs have been broadcast internationally and have won many awards in Canada and the United States.

IBC's programming has received much more than popularity. It has helped retain the rich culture and language of Canada's most northern people. Over half of the IBC viewers said they had developed better language and traditional skills by watching IBC."

I urge the Government of Canada and members opposite to accept my colleague's motion, Motion No. 19, to ensure that aboriginal languages survive and that aboriginal languages are part of our daily lives in this country.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I ask you a question I put to all members of the House, particularly to the Minister of Communications. Would he not like to have access to information, to entertainment and to informative programs? Would he not like that? Whether referring to a native person or somebody who is deaf and mute, that person would automatically be in the minority, be it a linguistic and cultural minority or a minority whose members suffer from certain deficiencies, and he or she would not be able to have access to certain services like all other Canadians.

[English]

In that light, both my colleague from the NDP and myself argued quite vigorously, and I think in the interests of minority Canadians, those who have been disenfranchised—if I may put it that way—because of their language and their culture, the aboriginal peoples who are the founding peoples of this country who help define us as a people, as well as those people—a large percentage of our population—who suffer from hearing impairment. Both those groups have appeared before us. We know well that there has been little attempt to answer each of these particular constituencies' needs. I have asked the minister to give serious consideration to the concerns of aboriginal peoples. If there is a minister who should understand the link and the relationship, and as he is chatting with another of his francophone minister colleagues, the two of them should understand how—

Mr. Charest: Ex-colleague.

Mrs. Finestone: No, you are not an ex-colleague. You are just an ex-minister, but you will soon be back in the ranks, they tell me. At least, I think so. If it was up to me, Jean, you could get reappointed.

As far as I can see, those two ministers who are chatting away over there—at least the Minister of Communications is here in the House, which is wonderful—know how language and culture are interrelated. If there are any people in this House who should be sensitive to that issue, it is these two gentlemen.

I would suggest that is not understanding when you cut off access to aboriginal languages. I know there are a lot of them but there are some that should certainly survive. It is very important for the transmission, particularly in that society, from grandparents, to parents, to children. My colleague from Winnipeg and myself saw that and heard about that when we were up in Iqaluit. We were very impressed with what we saw with respect to the aboriginal peoples, what they can do, the number of people they have trained and the wonderful creativity that has come across. The Secretary of State has cut them out and now the Minister of Communications within this bill is ignoring their needs.

I would like to focus for a moment on the disabled with respect to the hearing impaired. Not only have we in our broadcasting bill, but prior to that in the report by the task force—on which I had the privilege of sitting—Equality For All, we addressed the concerns of the hearing impaired in our society at great length. We heard from many of them, because we are not supposed to discriminate based on a series, race, culture and language, et cetera. Within that list of people we should not discriminate against are those who are hearing impaired.

The report of that special task force was then picked up and addressed by the standing committee, interestingly enough, chaired for the first time by the same person who had chaired the task force, namely the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That standing committee on the status of the disabled in a report on the media and disabled people recommended that the CRTC require that 50 per cent of all Canadian programming be captioned.

That is what it is all about with respect to the disabled. It is captioning. It is the quantity of programming that is available.

In the instance of our aboriginal peoples, they are cut off, period, because of language. In the instance of the hearing impaired, and their numbers are almost equivalent—in fact, there are many more in the hearing impaired—the quantity of captioning is only in prime time. They can only turn on news at various times in the evening. Mind you, I should not say that because there are game shows in the afternoon which do have some captioning and there are some religious services and gardening programs, as I recall. Basically it is the prime time network series, newscasts at various levels and national commercials. It is fascinating how if one wants to sell something one can find the mechanism in the marketing principles. However, when wants to sell one's values as a Canadian and as a member of society, we cut that out.

I would ask the minister to stop being so stubborn and so narrow-minded and start accepting some very worthwhile amendments that are being placed before him in this House. They are not being placed because it is the Liberal Party or because it is the NDP party. They are being placed because constituents have come and pleaded before this minister. Unfortunately, through either lack of thought and foresight or a plain lack of understanding, these issues have not been covered.

Now that he has been enlightened, perhaps he will see the light and in terms of enlightenment, entertainment and information, he will make the necessary corrections and will accept the recommendations in Motions Nos. 18, 19, 20 and 21.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House today to speak to these three motions put forward by both opposition parties in relation to broadcasting and Bill C-40.

Motions Nos. 18, 19, and 20 really strike at the heart of communications, particularly in my part of Canada. In my area aboriginal people constitute the majority. We have 54,000 people, and the majority of the population is aboriginal. This is reflected in almost everything that is carried out in terms of government services. The purpose of Motions Nos. 18, 19, and 20 is to ensure that services will be provided, where relevant, to reflect aboriginal cultures and languages.

When I spoke on the national unity motion last week, I referred to the cuts that have been made to the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation. If these trends continue, most of Canada's aboriginal languages are destined to become extinct in the very near future. I do not want to be repetitive by going over the same information that was given, but Canadians should know that out of the 53 aboriginal languages only 3, Cree, Inuktitut and Ojibway, have the strength to survive and be preserved. The rest have individual speakers and once they die, that is it. The aboriginal languages are indigenous to this country. There is nowhere to go to revitalize these languages and bring them back. It is truly a loss to what Canada's history should be and what Canadian heritage is all about.

The goal of Canada's aboriginal people is to participate equally in the economic, social, political and cultural life of Canada. They recognize the need to reinforce their cultural identities. That is why language is so important. We know that, because the major political battles in the last 20 years have been won over language rights or linguistic rights.

What does a person hold dearer to his heart than the way he or she thinks? The psychology of that person is reflected in the language he or she speaks and in the particular ideas put forward.

You think in your own language first. If you are a French speaker, you do not think in English; you think en français. If you are an aboriginal language speaker, you think in your language first. Those ideas that are prominent are those values and principles which you are raised with and which the language you have learned has taught you all of your life. It is the means of transmitting the uniqueness of the culture of aboriginal peoples.

In the north we say that language is simply about understanding one another. If we understand the importance of another person's language, we understand why it is so important to that person to be able to communicate in that language, why language is held so dear, and why it is a true reflection of that person's culture. We have gone to great lengths to ensure that we accommodate what is important to enhance the quality of life.

The north is the model of the promotion of languages. There are nine official languages in the Northwest Territories. If you were to visit the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Speaker, you would find that the majority of MLAs are native and that the proceedings are being simultaneously translated into seven aboriginal languages, French, and English. This service is unique in North America and is worth preserving.

I want to take a few minutes to explain the cultural linguistic groups in the Northwest Territories. The Dene, which means people in our tradition, are comprised of several groups of people depending on where they live, each with their own dialect. The Chippewan, the Dog Rib, the Loucheux each has aboriginal culture which is really quite distinct from one another. Inuit means people in Inuit, the language of a people inhabiting the circumpolar world from Siberia to Greenland. There are three major dialects of Inuit languages. They are the Inuvialuktun, Innuinuktun, and Inuktitut. The Inuit cultural linguistic groups in N.W.T. include the Salliq people, the South Baffin Inuit, the Iglulik Inuit, the Netsilik, the Caribou, and the Copper.

In general the Inuit language is highly viable, with most Inuit children learning Inuktitut as their mother tongue. Inuivialutun is the Inuit language in the western region which uses Roman orthography. Syllabic script is used to write Inuktitut in the eastern Arctic.

As the former Assistant Deputy Minister of Culture and Communication for the Government of the Northwest Territories, I am proud to have been involved in the development of these language services in the Northwest Territories. I am proud to say that it is something worth continuing, with some persistent endeavour. The federal government has in fact taken the unspent moneys from the 1984 agreement and reprofiled them for further use so that the total budget that was given, $16 million, is not entirely expended toward aboriginal languages.

When we speak about national unity we do not just talk about a concept that is held in books or documents or a concept that lives within the walls of the House of Parliament. We talk about a concept of where Canadians from one coast to the other, from all three coastal regions of Canada, can hear the same message, the same ideas, and the same programs being broadcast. There is a connection there.

There is also the sharing of major events. When the Berlin Wall came down, surely every part of Canada heard through CBC the news that came forward. When John F. Kennedy was killed, I can remember living in a very small, isolated community in the Northwest Territories where we had one or two radios. It was the CBC that brought the news to us that this great human being had been lost to the world. I can remember the effect it had on our community. We had no power. We had no running water. I guess we had the very rudimentary lifestyle which many people enjoyed at the time in a hunting and trapping economy. But we did get the message. We did receive messages through this thin wire of accommodation, I guess, that went from one side of the country to the other.

There are many ways in which the whole essence of aboriginal languages can be preserved. Bill C-269 was prepared. It was a private member's bill. It was an attempt, not by one private member but by aboriginal groups across Canada, to preserve their languages and to develop the Aboriginal Languages Foundation in private member's Bill C-269.

It was Chief Mike Mitchell from Akwesasne who stated:

> Language is a gift from the creator. Embodied in aboriginal languages is our unique relationship to the creator, our attitudes, our beliefs, values and the fundamental notion of what is truth.

I believe the establishment of an Aboriginal Language Foundation would help to ensure the preservation, revitalization, and perpetuation of aboriginal languages and cultures across Canada.

In order for aboriginal peoples of Canada to take their rightful place in society, it is necessary to ensure the survival, development and transmission of aboriginal languages which are the lifeblood of culture, the necessary element for our advancement.

These motions are simply trying to accomplish what other Canadians take for granted, that people can expect service in their own language. In many areas, particularly the north, it is critical that vital information be communicated in languages which serve the majority of people.

Aboriginal languages are indigenous to Canada. In one of the smaller fishing communities messages can come over the radio which mean nothing to other parts of Canada, but it could tell one fisherman or one trapper that there is a plane on the way to pick up someone who is sick, that there is someone bringing in supplies for the winter stay in the bush, or that something as important as medicine, shells or any other needed supply is coming in on the plane and what time it would arrive.

It is important for people, specifically large populations of aboriginal people, where they are located, to preserve a service which CBC has started in many areas. It has persevered without policy to continue this service for the aboriginal people of Canada. It is very important. It would aid national unity to a great extent.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 23 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"(i), educational television programming".

That Bill C-40 be amended in clause 3 by striking out lines 30 to 48 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"(r) the programming provided by an educational television service should

(i) provide innovative programming that stimulates and encourages learning across many sectors for all ages,

(ii) be complementary to existing programming,

(iii) reflect Canada's regional and multicultural and multiracial nature,

(iv) include programming exploring social concerns,

(v) be predominantly from independent educational authorities as contemplated in paragraph (j) as well as international co-productions;"

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few remarks to this matter of the alternative programming service. I would like to start off by saying that it is really one of the more curious pieces of Bill C-40. I say that because to some extent it comes out of nowhere.

If anything, I think it belongs to another era. It comes from another ministerial era. It was a notion belonging to a previous minister, and a notion that certainly has not been articulated very well by the current Minister of Communications. I am not too sure whether he knows that much about it. He did not go the extra mile to define what this alternative programming service was to be all about. Certainly Bill C-40 does not in any way tell us how an alternative programming service would be financed.

As you already know, Mr. Speaker, broadcasting is very expensive. The CBC, in a financial sense, is under siege. I find it curious that this government would want to put into Bill C-40 something called an alternative programming service.

If we are to have an alternative programming service, what is the CBC all about? Is that not what the CBC is there for? The CBC is providing a pretty good service despite its financial constraints. It seems to me that the CBC can handle the alternative broadcasting service quite well.

If the government wants an extra service of some kind, it certainly could get into the business of educational broadcasting. Before I touch on that, I should remind you, Mr. Speaker, that, of course, education comes within the jurisdiction of the provinces. But if the federal government really wants to provide a service in education, it can ably assist the provinces.

First of all, let me touch on what I might call the plethora of services that we already have now. We have a veritable profusion of television and broadcast services in the country. I was just thinking a few moments ago about the number and the kind of services that I have on my own home television set.

Just to use my memory, we can start with the CBC television and then we can go to PBS, the American Public Broadcast System that is readily available in most parts of the country. Of course, there is CBS, ABC and NBC. Those are the three major American broadcast systems, not to mention CNN, which is available to a lot of subscribers in the country in all provinces and territories.

I can go further. There are community channels. In my own area there are three French television services. Not one, not two, but three, which is not bad for the western part of the country. Of course, there is home shopping. There is the sports network.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, there is this proliferation of broadcast services. Yet, in a curious way, the government has placed in Bill C-40 this alternative programming service, ill-defined and certainly with no budget.

If the government really wants to do something extra, I think it should think about education. Never before has education been so important to our lives. Nowadays, if you do not have a good education, perhaps you are doomed, certainly doomed in making a good living, a good income.

It seems to me that by using television and radio, the modern broadcast technologies, we can teach basic skills; teach literacy.

We can foster a greater awareness in scientific subjects. I think it has to be done. When our parents and grandparents were alive and making a living, when they were starting out in their careers, they could assume that when they started a career, they would stay in that career for the rest of their lives—30, 40 or perhaps 50 years.

That is not the case anymore. We live in this rapidly changing world of rapidly changing technologies. Young people who start a career now cannot expect that they are going to be in those careers for the next 10, 20, 30 or 40 years. They are going to have to change careers perhaps two, three or four times. They are going to have to learn to adapt to new ideas, new technologies and new careers.

It brings into focus the importance of education. I think we would be remiss as a country and as a federal government if we did not address this problem and if we did not use television in a much more efficient way to provide a better educational service.

I do not think at this particular juncture that we should be talking about an alternative program service because after all, I think the CBC is quite well equipped in that regard. We should be talking about education.

I remember reading an article some time ago about and including remarks by the chairman of TV Ontario, Mr. Ostry. He was speaking to this matter of how important it is to make better use of our broadcast services to promote education. After all, it would be done for the benefit of our children and future generations.

At this particular point, I would like to introduce an amendment to Motion No. 22. I move:

That Motion No. 22 be amended by striking out everything after the word "out" and inserting the following:

lines 23 to 29 at page 26.

I would also like to introduce an amendment to Motion No. 23. I move:

That Motion No. 23 be amended by deleting all words after page 6 and inserting:

period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): While the Chair considers the motion introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James, the House will resume debate. The hon. member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Chair will accept the amendment moved by my colleague because I think it makes a lot of sense. It is along the same line as alternative television programming. Even the name or the words used are wrong.

[English]

During the course of the study and legislative hearings, an ardent plea was heard from ATEC, the Association of Tele Education in Canada. That group, as we well know, represents the public educational broadcasters in Canada. They have very finely tuned and carefully honed programming that is presented in each province and for which we are all very proud. They win awards across this world, whether it is TV Ontario, Radio-Quebec, Access Network, and hopefully SCN—the new program that is coming in from Saskatchewan—and the knowledge network out of B.C.

They have wonderful experience in bringing before the public, issues and social concerns such as criticisms of the current educational standards. Mr. Stuart Smith is presently presiding over a committee put together by the universities. He is very concerned about the quality of our manpower and womanpower as it comes out of our universities and collegiate systems. Are they really empowered through the teaching, the programs and through the materials that we have within our system to be able to supply the international talent skills, research and development to the Canadian workforce that will enable us to be true competitors on the international scene? There is an emphasis on the delivery and the capacity for education in Canada.

There is a tremendously high rate of drop-outs from our school system. You, Mr. Speaker, as a former broadcaster from Quebec, know this. You have heard the reports and you have seen those concerns presented on the airwaves. It is a very serious issue. It costs millions of dollars to our employment agencies and to the business forces when there are illiterate and ill-prepared students going into the workforce who cannot, with their shockingly high level of illiteracy, handle the modern technology of today. There is ignorance in science and technology. There is the need for teacher in-service for the upgrading and renewal of all kinds of skills.

We can use that incredible force that Marshall McLuhan has talked about to educate people on prevention with respect to their own personal health. AIDS is a serious issue in today's society. Proper care and respect of oneself and understanding of the use of condoms and the use of self-prevention within that sphere can be used on a program that would be on an educational channel. Substance abuse, whether it be drugs or alcohol, has a tremendous impact and is very damaging to our society.

A Canadian learning channel would have been a wonderful opportunity. I must say that it was not my idea. I wish I could credit myself with such a bright and intelligent observation. The ideas came from Mr. Bernard Ostry and ATEC. They proposed that any promotion, pursuit and financing of new initiatives be directed to establishing a viable learning channel for all Canadians facilitated by ATEC members, based on existing financial and institutional resources. That was presented on April 23, 1990. It was very clever, intelligent, open-mined, and very Canadian in spirit. There was a problem about copyright and I understood that. Had the minister been willing to understand and support this group, we might have been seeing today a different kind of approach to alternate programming.

However, on June 19, I received another letter from Mr. Ostry, where he points out that they had a subsequent meeting with Access Network, Knowledge Network, Radio-Quebec, and SCN Saskatchewan. In looking at Bill C-40, they decided that it would be difficult because if education is a provincial mandate, we should not be able to participate in such an undertaking.

It is a ruddy shame that boundaries, which are just lines drawn on a map as far as Canadians are concerned, constrain the educational concerns that should be directed from the national level. However, I must respect the will of ATEC because I think they would be fundamental to this particular project. The reason I want to support the amendment that has been brought by my colleague from Winnipeg is because behind this alternate programming were funds. Originally, there was $100 million behind that programming. The previous Minister of Communications had committed those funds so that we could do target marketing, something the CBC already does.

It occurred to me and to my colleague that, as we move into another period of recession, there is a crisis in the CBC. We have heard about the challenge to the existence of this parliamentary channel and I hope people who are watching will recognize that this minister who is sitting in front of me said "no" today to considering saving the parliamentary channel which is not a mandated service of the CBC.

Radio Canada International is not a mandated service, neither is Northern Services. If the minister would get rid of the alternate programming which has a $100 million budget behind it—it has probably shrunk now but it was supposed to be $100 million so even if it shrank to $50 million—it could certainly enable these services and the cuts to the CBC to be offset.

It is not promoting and going ahead with my concerns for a learning channel, and recognizing that we are allowing the Americans to take up this space through the increased subscriptions that they have of the American system, the American learning channel. I think that is a little bit sad because it is important for our children to have a Canadian connection, and our adults for that matter. Notwithstanding all that, I support the withdrawal of my amendment and I support the amendment that will remove the alternate services completely, sections 3, 2, and (r) from this bill.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): After a short deliberation the Chair is now in a position to rule on the motions introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James.

To begin with it is rather unusual for a member to present two amendment motions and, according to the Standing Orders, only one can be introduced. That being so, the amendment to Motion No. 22, which is a new motion and for which notice should have been given, is not in order. The Standing Orders are rather strict on that point, for it is not an amendment to Motion No. 22 but indeed a new motion.

On the other hand the motion to amend Motion No. 23 is quite in order. Therefore we will resume the debate if other speakers seek the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate on the amendment motion. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The next vote is on Motion No. 22 in the name of Mrs. Finestone. May I dispense?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Some hon. members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Motion No. 22 is negatived, on division.

Motion No. 22 negatived, on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The next question is on the amendment to Motion No. 23, standing in the name of Mrs. Finestone. Shall the Chair be dispensed from reading the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I declare the amendment to Motion No. 23 negatived on division.

Amendment to motion No. 23 negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The amendment to Motion No. 23 having been negatived, the House will now vote on the main motion, that is to say Motion No. 23 in the name of Mrs. Finestone. Is the Chair dispensed from reading the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am reminded by the Table Officers, in their wisdom, that the vote on Motion No. 22 also applies to Motion No. 23. The latter is therefore negatived.

Motion No. 23 negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Let us call the next group of motions, that is to say Motions Nos. 24, 26, 27 and 28.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 12 to 14 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"of Canadian broadcasting undertakings in French and English with first priority given to publicly mandated services; followed by independent educational authorities, in their province of origin; and then by private sector Canadian broadcasting undertakings.

That Bill C-40 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 14 at page 7 the following:

"(ii) should carry foreign originated programming services where the programming they provide is complementary to programming offered by existing Canadian broadcasting undertakings or where those foreign programming services were already carried by distribution undertakings;"

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 15 to 18 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) shall provide efficient delivery of programming at rates that are at all times just and reasonable,"

That Bill C-40 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 26 to 34 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(iv) may, where appropriate, originate a community channel as defined by the Commission, under terms and conditions set out by the Commission."

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I want to confine my remarks to the matter of priority carriage. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I shall be moving an amendment at the close of my remarks. I will not be talking very long, but I want to point this out.

• (1810)

Television has certainly changed a lot in the last 20 to 30 years and it certainly has changed since the 1968 Broadcasting Act. Every facet of television has changed since 1968 and certainly its delivery.

I can remember when television first came to southern Manitoba where I grew up. It was 1955. We got our first television service which consisted of one channel, the Canadian Broadcasting Television Network. That was it. In fact, the first year or two the service was pretty snowy. It was quite difficult at times to see the images on the screen. The images looked more like ghosts than they did like human beings. That was television in its infancy, in its embryonic stage. Certainly, television has come a long way since 1955 when it was first delivered to the southern part of Manitoba.

At that time, one did not have to worry about priority of carriage. All you could get was one channel, one simple service. We did not have to worry about priority.

After I had taken up a radio and television career, I moved to the city of Winnipeg. At that time, there were only two channels, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation network and CTV, which was really in its infancy in 1960. After that came a private television station and then somewhat after that came the cable services and, of course, with the cable services came the American broadcasting services, Global, and so on.

Today, we have a wide range of television services. This brings us to this matter of what is called priority of carriage. We just cannot ignore what is being served up first on the television screen. Television technology is changing so rapidly that even things like tiers are rapidly fading from our vocabulary. At one time, our television sets started at channel 2 and went up to channel 13. Now, with the new technology, they go up to about channel 99.

It seems to me, and certainly on this side of the House, that there should be a priority given to certain services. In our opinion, the first priority should go to public television services, publicly funded, publicly supported television services. For example, the CBC should certainly be given top priority. I am talking not only here of the English service, but French service as well. In our considered opinion, that is first. Public television services should have top priority.

Number two should be the provincial educational services. For example, TV Ontario here in the province of Ontario has to be given priority consideration. Put it on the first tier, to use this fast-fading television language. After that comes, in our opinion, the Canadian privately owned services, Global, CTV, and other private services.

After those services have been given first priority on the television system—CBC, provincial educational services and the private Canadian services—then the rest can come, be it specialty services, American services, community channels, whatever.

I perhaps failed to mention that we feel that community access channels or community access services should be given a major priority at the top of the channel. There is no doubt about it, if a service shows up on those first channels, on those beginning channels, say channels 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10, they are going to be watched more. They are going to be exposed more, if I can use that word, to the viewing public than those channels that may be up at 30, 40 and 50. At least that is the kind of thinking that I would have on that.

As I said in my beginning words, priority at one time was not a big deal in television because there were only one or two services. That is not the case any more. We as parliamentarians have to make sure these priority services are given top treatment, first treatment.

I would like to move an amendment now to Motion No. 24. It is a very simple amendment. I move:

That Motion No. 24 be amended by deleting lines 12 to 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"line 12".

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The Chair will take the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James under advisement.

The hon. member for Mount Royal has the floor.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, if you look at this particular amendment and all the amendments brought forward by my colleague, it is merely a matter of the line on which the amendment is to be completed, because we would certainly not, in any sense of the word, wish to remove the carriage of local Canadian stations. Therefore the numbering on the line was inaccurate. All we have asked for in this amendment is instead of lines 12 to 14, just line 12. It has nothing to do with the content of the wording whatsoever.

What we are really talking about is empowering the CRTC in this bill which, in a sense, is defining the relationship between the regulator and the body politic. That is really what we are talking about.

We are saying that all elements must collaborate, must work together, and play a role in ensuring that the Canadian broadcasting system and its Canadian content be a reflection of this particular act, which is the Canadian Broadcasting Act.

One of the ways that we can ensure the appropriate application of a Canadian Broadcasting Act is to ensure that this system works effectively and efficiently, and that we ensure windows or accesses so that the public can see what is on that screen.

In amendment 30, I had addressed the issue of ensuring that the CRTC, as the regulator, would have the responsibility for applying the principle of an orderly and organized Canadian broadcasting system. In this particular amendment, I am ensuring, hopefully, that the distribution undertaking —that is the cable company— will similarly have that responsibility.

I am very sensitive to the fact that a nation that overly restricts its citizens access to information and to entertainment could not be considered or claim to be a free society. Certainly we know all about that. We have seen the walls crumble in those societies that have not allowed ordinary citizens to have access to information, education and programming.

On the other hand, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that a nation that relinquishes control over its communications policy to extra-territorial forces will ultimately cede its sovereignty as well over much of its affairs.

I know that this minister has been very sensitive in many, many areas to the concerns of artistic integrity, artistic merit, and artistic productivity in the field of the arts within our society, particularly to those who are writers, singers, performers and certainly those who can prepare the scenarios that appear on film on our screens, either on video or in the theatres. So I find it quite surprising that the holes in this bill allow for much more Americanization than I believe this minister was prepared to allow in the first place. Whether that is a fallout from free trade or something else, I am not sure. But, as there is no more pervasive medium than that of broadcasting to ensure enlightenment, entertainment and information, and no more powerful way of getting one's message across, I wonder if the minister realized the impact of first of all not ensuring that all programs that appear on our cable need to have a sanction and go through the CRTC.

There are marvellous ways in which the CRTC through article 9.4 can exempt, but everything that goes on that screen should be under the charge of the regulator. It should not be up to the cable operators to decide what and who shall get onto our screens, but it should be brought before the regulator for permission.

I would like to point out that at the present time the majority of the programs that are heard are from sources outside of Canada. It has been emphasized to us time and time again that continued reception of these has a tendency to mould the minds of young people to ideas and opinions that are not necessarily Canadian. We saw that happening through the kind of broadcasting and the input into China and Tiananmen Square and we saw, when access was closed down, what happened.

We saw what happened in Berlin with the newly emerging democracy. It was hit constantly by the Voice of America, by Radio Canada International and the BBC, and the spark of man's normal wish for freedom of expression and freedom of action comes through when a role model is seen. The Canadian role model is different from the role models one might see in Britain, in France, or in the United States, our largest cousin to the south. Although there is nothing wrong with the United States, it is a different country. I think we want to maintain who we are and what we are. When we consider this medium and the geographic dimensions of Canada which are enormous, broadcasting can be that great force in fostering that national spirit and interpreting national citizenship and leading to national unity.

Given that an average of 10,000 hours of mostly American television are watched by our children as they grow up it is vital, in the national interest, to ensure access to a larger percentage of those 10,000 hours as Canadian. This does not mean to say that one should close his eyes or ears to the rest of the world. What it is saying is to affirm and reaffirm our future through the presentation of those kinds of information and entertainment that tells the story of who we are no matter on which coast of the three we live.

I would say that our national realities in both taste and in culture are properly reflected and accessible when our programming and the operations of our Canadian broadcasting system are in conformity and cable has the responsibility, as much as broadcasters, to ensure that we get access to that kind of programming.

I have indicated in Motion No. 24 that I want to see us put an orderly process within our regulatory structures so that our cable priority rankings would include the publicly-mandated services, which would include the public educators as well and followed by those independent educational authorities, we would have the private sector and the local level, following of course the retention of the three plus one, PBS, ABC, NBC and CBS.

Those are important. Then you add on above that, Mr. Speaker, anything else that is deemed through consultation and the regulator as advisable.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you that if we do not make affordable and accessible to the general population through cable the kinds of programs I am talking about and you allow complete access to anything, we make a big mistake.

Cable rates are going up. People do not have options and choices on those cable rates. If the cable people are not careful and do not pay attention, and if the regulator does not pay attention, we are going to be in a serious dilemma. Then we will need to have a serious public debate.

Shall we open up cable so that we can have an open Sesame situation where cable shall have competition? Or, shall we look at them as public utilities and regulate them like we do Bell Canada and our telephone companies? Is that what cable wants?

There is a serious concern about the profits. There is a new thing out there that is not even addressed in this bill which is very disquieting. It is called Skypix. I do not have the time to talk about this incredible United States satellite service that is coming in and is going to block every single window and for which we are going to have a problem.

I just want to put on record—this will be the last point—that Statistics Canada gave us some extraordinary figures with respect to the Canadian communications industry.

In 1988, the gross revenue for Canadian cable companies was just over $1.2 billion. During the same year, the gross revenue of all Canadian radio and television stations was just under $1.2 billion. The after tax profit for cable was $173 million and for broadcasters $77 million.

In 1989,—look at the change—when cable's after tax profit rose to $218 million, broadcasters' after tax profits declined to $51 million. I would suggest that in these circumstances it is ironic that the CRTC continues to look to broadcasters for the most stringent requirements to provide support for our cultural and industrial policy objectives and the cable people have only the responsibility for the community channel.

There is something wrong, and I think we are going to have to address that in a much more significant way. I would like to strongly recommend that we support Motion No. 24, for organization; Motion No. 25 on foreign services and Motion No. 27 that would look at cable rates. I think then we would do a good job for the Canadian broadcasting system.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Having considered the amendment to Motion No. 24 proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James, the Chair rules the amendment in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The first vote is on the amendment to Motion No. 24. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to Motion No. 24 moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James? I have no indication from the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to Motion No. 24 moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the amendment to Motion No. 24 is deferred.

• (1830)

The vote is on Motion No. 26 standing in the name of Mrs. Finestone. Should I dispense with the reading of the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt said motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Motion negatived on division.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended in clause 6 by striking out line 40 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"but no such guidelines or".

She said: Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting issue. Notwithstanding the non-democratic approach of this government across the floor, and recognizing how important it is not only to have democracy work but to have it proceed to work, I am proposing this amendment. What we are discussing in clause 6, which in part deals with the powers of the CRTC in relation to broadcasting. It is found on page 9.

Hundreds of people wrote in and asked for copies of this bill. They were following this debate. I find that quite fascinating. I hope for them that it is satisfying and that they are pleased we are trying to improve this bill in their interest.

It is a good bill and it contains many changes, but it is also a bad bill. If the minister were not so stubborn, he would have the consent of this entire House to put into place a good broadcast bill, but he just will not listen.

He is incredibly narrow-minded! He is sitting there, wearing blinkers and with his ears plugged!

An hon. member: Narrow-minded and with his ears plugged!

Mrs. Finestone: He has his mind, his ears and his eyes blocked.

[English]

It says in clause 6 that the commission may from time to time issue guidelines and statements with respect to any matter within its jurisdiction under this act, but no such guidelines or statements issued by the commission are binding on the commission.

Essentially I have asked the minister to consider removing "under this act" .If the minister would stop reading his paper and listen, he might understand why this is important.

Mr. Lewis: When you start making sense he will stop reading.

Mrs. Finestone: Doug, even you would understand this.

What we are really referring to here is the serious concern that constrains the CRTC to being enabled to issue guidelines, regulations or behaviour under certain terms and conditions that are not already outlined in this act. I think every member of the House should realize that the CRTC will no longer be in a position to give rules and regulations and terms and conditions under the Elections Act. All members are interested in getting re-elected. All members are interested in the democratic process. All members are interested in fairness under the law. Members should not laugh; it is a serious matter.

Now we are going to leave it to the government of the day, through cabinet, to issue a direction as to how the election shall be run. It was bad enough under the CRTC running it, and we did not win. However, if they are going to put the Governor in Council in charge, I think that is a serious matter.

I am suggesting to the minister that he remove the three little words "under this Act" and allow the CRTC to continue the responsibility that it has had over many years for setting the terms and conditions under the Elections Act.

There are other areas, but I thought that one might hit home, where it hurts us most in our heart and particularly where it would be of concern to the government of the day. That is the extent of my concern under the amendment we are proposing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): So, the vote will be on Motion No. 31. Dispense.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The motion is negatived on division.

Motion No. 31 is negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): We now move to another group of motions, that is Motions Nos. 32, 33 and 34.

Does the House agree to let Mr. MacWilliam propose the motion for Mr. Waddell?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-40 be amended in clause 9 by adding immediately after line 14 at page 12 the following:

"(i) determine whether the rates charged by cable companies are at all times just and reasonable and, if they are not, revise them accordingly."

That Bill C-40 be amended by deleting clause 11.

• (1840 )

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended by adding immediately after line 43 at page 17 the following new clause:

"20. The Chairman of the Commission may direct that a public hearing under this Act be heard on behalf of the Commission by two or more members designated by the Chairman, of whom at least one shall be a full-time member, and the members so designated have and may exercise for the purpose of that hearing the powers of the Commission set out in section 16."

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal specifically with Motion No. 34 in this particular grouping of motions and talk about the proposed reorganization of the CRTC.

We on this side of the House feel very strongly about this, because the ultimate effect of this part of the bill will be to balkanize the CRTC: balkanize, break it up and render it unable to give a real national pan-Canadian focus and views to its decisions.

We have said many times that this government is dangerous. It has, in a very systematic way, begun to destroy the traditions of the country, to destroy the institutions of the country, to break apart the very fabric of this country and to undermine the very foundations of this country. We see it in this bill; we see it in spades.

Up until now the CRTC could take a pan-Canadian view. It could take a very wide perspective of this country because its decisions had to reflect the entire body, that is the entire commission. If Bill C-40 goes through, that will not be the case any more. The effect of this bill will be to to break up CRTC into panels and to turn each little panel into its own fiefdom. That is what will happen.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you have a panel for Atlantic Canada, a panel for the province of Quebec, a panel for Ontario, a panel for the prairies, and perhaps a panel for British Columbia? You are going to have a panel of the CRTC for each region of the country. How is it possible that over a long period of time those panels are going to employ, exhibit and express a consistent point of view? It is impossible. It is inevitable that they will reflect their own regions. Over a period of time you will find an inconsistency in the opinions and decisions of the CRTC.

That is not good for this country. It is certainly not good for the unity of this country. Somebody has to speak for the country. Somebody has to render decisions that have a pan-Canadian view. The CRTC is an absolutely, crucial, important institution. If the CRTC is going to be balkanized, if it is going to be broken up, that is going to hurt this country. It is going to hurt national unity. We already have enough disunity in this country as a result of this government's policies. I am sure there are some people, certainly the Conservatives on that side and some viewers would say that this is just a partisan view, this is just a Liberal speaking, this is just the opposition speaking. After all, the opposition could never find anything good about what the Tories put forward so they have to find something wrong with almost every part of the bill.

Mr. Lewis: You've got that right.

Mr. Harvard: The Minister of Transport says that I have it right.

Let me put before him some comments concerning this balkanization of the CRTC, what is called, "he who hears decides". There are some very eminent persons in this country who do not like the balkanization of the CRTC. I could name names like Keith Spicer, Patrick Watson, and others.

Let me read some comments. This is what Mr. Spicer, now the head of the Citizens Forum said on February 22 of this year:

I do not think "they who hear decide" at all helps strengthen the national will or the national identity. It can be argued that, psychologically, if you make the regions feel more secure or powerful, and they are doing things for themselves, this in itself makes them accept the country more. I think that is a little bit of a side argument.

That is what Keith Spicer said on February 22, 1990. Western International Communications said:

The principle of "he who hears decides" might further destabilize policy making. Individual panels would make binding decisions inconsistent with one or another or with broader policy objectives.

CFCF in Montreal said on February 8 of this year:

With the "he who hears decides" rule, we are running the risk of contradicting one of the fundamental objectives of the system, to maintain a "single" system.

I want to quote one more source, Mr. Speaker. This is what TV Ontario said:

> The regionalization of the Commission and the initiation of the "s/he who hears decides" rule will lead to fragmentation of national policy and general confusion as to the guiding principles of regulations in all parts of the country.

That is what Keith Spicer and some rather important bodies have said about this particular part of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the name Patrick Watson a moment ago. Maybe I should not have said that. I do not have a quote of his so I will withdraw that reference to Mr. Watson.

In summation, this is a bad precedent, a terrible mistake, and I think we are going to pay for this mistake in the years to come. It is about time that we started giving more consideration to this whole country. We have become too parochial. We have become too provincial. We have become too regional. Somebody has to offer a Canadian perspective. If we do not, if we withdraw, if we go back into our regions and if we only express those things which we deem important for the regions, for our own narrow turfs, if I can put it that way, that is going to harm this country irreparably.

I would hope that the government would come to its senses and withdraw this aspect of the bill because it will serve no good. It will not serve broadcasting in a positive way, Mr. Speaker. What I would like to see are those issues which the chairman deems important.

I think that under the Broadcasting Act the chairman of the CRTC should be able to deem certain issues of national importance and that decisions made concerning those issues cannot be made by panels but only by the full body of the CRTC. That would give the chairman more power and give him or her the opportunity to say to the CRTC that we, in this particular case, are going to render a national decision, a decision with a national perspective, with a pan-Canadian view.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam who has moved Motion No. 32.

I should point out before I begin that it was unfortunate in the previous proceedings of the House that when I understood the amendment to Motion No. 24 was being presented, it was to be voted on separately. I did not understand at the time that having voted on the amending motion, in fact the whole group would be voted on. Unfortunately, I did not get an opportunity to speak to Motions Nos. 27 and 28, which have also been submitted by my colleague, but because the motions are reflected in Motion No. 32, I think the comments will be pertinent to all of those motions described.

The amendment basically establishes or provides assurance that there will be efficient delivery of programming in the cable industry at rates that are at all times justifiable and reasonable. I want to point out that the cable industry is the only territorial monopoly whose profits are unregulated.

In the opinion of many, the cable industry has been a virtual licence to print money. This amendment, along with others, would apply the same kinds of pricing rules to cable companies to establish sensibility and sensitivity in pricing that have been established in other jurisdictions, for example, to telephone companies under the Railway Act.

The Railway Act states that all tolls must be "just and reasonable". Just and reasonable has been, I submit, interpreted to mean that the rates must be profit regulated. The cable industry earns on the average close to 30 per cent profit on its fixed net assets according to the 1989 commission, and in our judgment the appropriate rate of return for this industry should be closer to the 16 per cent range on net fixed assets. This would be roughly equivalent to Bell Telephone's range of 12.25 per cent to 13.25 per cent profit on average common equity.

The cable industry's profits are very healthy indeed. I think these amendments would ensure that there is not the kind of price gouging which can take place in an industry that remains as yet completely unregulated. Cable rates have risen astronomically in Canada in recent years. Cable increases averaged about 6 per cent a year between 1984 and 1988. They rose 29 per cent in the 18 months since 1989, a 29 per cent increase in their rate structures. That is a pretty significant wallop in the pocketbooks of consumers in Canada. It has occurred at a time when average telephone rates in Canada have actually been on the decline. As a result, consumers of

Telephone rates are just and reasonable, as I mentioned before, because the Railway Act, in fact, says they have to be. It specifically instructs the regulator to enforce rate of return provisions. It is in the legislation. In contrast, the CRTC presently has full discretion in setting cable rates and the result of this has been very plain to see. As I mentioned, there has been a 29 per cent increase in rates in the past 18 months.

Given that Canadians pay over $1 billion annually in cable fees, they would be interested to know just how rates are set by the commission. Before 1986, the main criteria used by the commission in setting rates was how much other cable companies were charging in the same general area.

The Public Interest Advocacy Centre has pointed out that this meant the greediest or the least efficient operators would apply first for a rate increase and then others would follow shortly. That has been the situation.

In effect, less efficient systems were used by the larger ones as an excuse to overcharge Canadian consumers. In 1986, a new formula was developed by the CRTC. Cable companies were given automatic increases of 80 per cent of the Consumer Price Index increase, plus an additional increase to cover the cost of capital investment in the system, an extraordinary increase based on need.

This formula was modified in May of 1990, but it remains basically intact.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons asks to be recognized. The hon. parliamentary secretary.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for interrupting, but we are close to seven o'clock. You will find that there is consent for the following House order:

> That the House continue to sit, with quorum calls and dilatory motions not receivable, until no later than 11 o'clock p.m. today to consider report stage of Bill C-40 at or before which time (as the case may be) the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then under way and all deferred recorded divisions and all questions on all motions in amendment to the said bill not yet put at the time of such interruption, shall at such time be forthwith deemed deferred for recorded divisions or questions being put (as the case may be) until 3 o'clock p.m. on Tuesday, December 4, 1990, at which time, at the request of Whips of the recognized parties, votes will be applied among motions in accordance with an agreement announced by such Whips at such time;
> That, following such interruption later this day, the House shall adjourn until 11 o'clock a.m. on Tuesday, December 4, 1990; and
> That on Tuesday, December 4, 1990, the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, with quorum calls and dilatory motions not receivable during such period of continued sitting, for the purpose of considering and completing third reading stage of Bill C-40 and, when no member rises to speak in debate on the main motion, or on any amendment thereto, the vote or votes on such question or questions shall be deemed deferred until 3 o'clock p.m., on Wednesday, December 5, 1990.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we have been consulted on this House order. Given the disposition of my critic and members of my caucus, we agree to extend the hours to pass the report stage of this bill to show our co-operation and in the spirit of trying to get this House moving in the right direction.

We do not agree with all the amendments the government is proposing but we certainly hope that this will be a step in the right direction. Therefore, we agree.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, yes, I will comment that we have also been consulted on this matter. Due to inclement weather and the difficulty in pulling people back for any possible votes this evening, it seems reasonable to proceed on this basis and to hold recorded votes as has been described by my colleague.

There is consent from us in that regard.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Does the hon. parliamentary secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, just on a quick point of order. I wish to advise the House that tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m., we will commence with Bill C-88, which would then be followed by Bill C-91, should time permit.

• (1900)

Mr. Flis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just like clarification from you whether the proceedings on the Adjournment Motion, pursuant to Standing Order 38, will continue following the completion of tonight's debate on Bill C-40.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): To answer the question raised by the hon. member, one of the consequences of the motion just adopted by the House is that the adjournment debate, commonly referred to as the late show, has been cancelled.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in a spirit of co-operation, there would be unanimous consent, in recognition of the importance of these adjournment debates. The hon. member for Parkdale—High Park would have the assurance that as soon as the House finishes the report stage, it would allow him to make his speech at the usual time. I think the government would agree to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The House has heard the suggestion of the Parliamentary House Leader. Is the House agreed?

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that the government, as usual, bends over backwards to give every opportunity to every member. We are happy to give our consent to this, as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Therefore, we will have debate on the adjournment motion when the House has disposed of the report stage of Bill C-40.

The hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap had four minutes left. First, the Government Whip, on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. All of those comments took quite a bit of time and I know there are many members out there who are watching their televisions but may have missed a little bit. The votes that everybody thought would occur tonight, will now occur tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock. There will be no stand up votes, but there will, indeed, be voice votes on the different amendments as the evening progresses from now until 11 o'clock.

The stand up votes that everybody has been looking forward to and getting their winter overshoes ready to carry them back to the hill, will not occur until three o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Members who happen to be at home, watching television, can rest easy for the rest of the evening.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Hon. members have heard the message of the Government Whip. I again recognize the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap. You have four minutes left.

[English]

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where I was, but I will try to get back to where I left off.

I think the argument I was making, at the time when I was interrupted by a point of order, was that the cable industry in Canada is a virtual monopoly. Canadians cannot simply go out and start their own cable company business to compete with one that is already established. If consumers are unhappy with the service of their local cable company, they cannot switch companies because there is only one cable company serving that particular neighbourhood. They are stuck. It is as simple as that. Moreover, notwithstanding the claims of cable operators, other technologies such as satellite dishes and so forth are effectively beyond the reach of most Canadians. They are simply too expensive to consider putting in for a single network.

The Public Interest Advocacy Centre stated some time ago, before the legislative committee, that "approximately 80 per cent of households subscribe where cable TV is, in fact, available, usually in urban areas. This high rate of penetration is not affected significantly by the income level of subscribers. Households below the poverty line allocate a relatively large portion of their income for receiving cable TV services." The reason is simple. The quote continues: "Cable TV provides the only form of entertainment that is remotely within the reach of low income Canadians."

It is significant that we have, in Canada, a situation which is allowed to be an unregulated monopoly in the cable industry. It is a situation which I have mentioned before. It has shown dramatic price increases of 29 per cent in the last 18 months alone. I think that speaks very clearly that there needs to be some form of regulatory authority in determining the rate structure for cable TV services.

The amendments that my colleague from Port Moody—Coquitlam proposed merely seek to provide cable subscribers with some form of fairness. It seeks to limit, to a degree, the profits of a monopoly industry and ensure that Canadians will get a much deserved break in their cable bills. The amendments would ensure that companies applied for rate increases only on the basis of a legitimate financial need. This is the same standard, I might add, that is applied to telephone companies and other monopolies.

Profit regulation has not denied the telephone or pipeline companies from making a fair profit. It has not undermined the investment in the system and, indeed, Canada has retained one of the finest telecommunication systems in the world.

Let me conclude by saying that the amendments proposed would simply provide the appropriate basis for setting cable rates in the future so that consumers, as well as the cable operators, are protected by a system that is both fair and equitable.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with in this section of the bill is essentially the Balkanization or the regionalization of the CRTC.

What we had before was known as "they who hear decide". In the past, we have established, through the CRTC, the reputation of fair regulator, an intelligent regulator, and one that has a good solid record of being connected with a common view across this land.

I had a letter that came from TVA in which TVA pointed out that it had had some experience internationally. The way in which regulation is handled in France is something of serious concern, and we would not want something such as that to happen here. I will come back to that perhaps a little later in this debate.

Right now, we are talking about no longer requiring the taking of decisions in the national interest. We are going to take an approach rather than the collegial one, where a panel may have gone out, heard, come to a conclusion, and came back to the executive committee, reported the hearings and the views, concerns and considerations and gave a recommendation. The executive of the CRTC would then put this into balance with everything that had been happening across the country. In this way, there was a potential for a less fragmented policy, and we would certainly have more even and fairer decision making across this land.

This particular issue has been one of serious concern. Many witnesses appeared before the committee and spoke at great length and from depth of heart about the disintegration of a national regulator through this kind of a process called panels of "he who hears decides". Of course, in the changing dynamics that is Canada today, it becomes all the more sensitive to have these kinds of decisions that may be irregular across this land and may not always be in the best interests of all Canadians, of both language groups and of minority status across the land.

One of the things that caused some reaction was a decision to award a new country music FM radio station in Toronto. There was a difference of point of view between the panellists and the regulators on the executive committee. There was some feeling that perhaps the black dance group ought to have received the mandate, rather than the country music format. The merits of the case were what the cabinet reviewed.

We now see that there was a frequency available and the case presented before the CRTC was a case that was offering incredible benefits to Canadian country music and artists. They are prepared to expend $800,000 a year on developing and promoting Canadian country music, with special emphasis on local performers and on radio programs and events. That is more than double what any other station in the market spends on talent development.

Certainly the Minister of Communications has been very sensitive to the development of musical talent in the country, the recording industry, and the distribution of Canadian songs. He should feel very comforted when he sees something of this nature. They made a commitment that 32 per cent of the new station's play list in the first year of operation will be Canadian content, rising to 40 per cent in the fifth year.

These proportions are very stunning if you realize that we have had between 20 and 30 per cent. On the French side, we had to have a big battle. We had to put money in and have sorts of support mechanisms and measures to ensure that the French song industry survived and grew, all the while knowing that we have fabulous artists and talent out there.

There were other things that were being done by that group that allowed them to win this particular request for a radio station. It is regrettable. There is a new frequency opening and new decisions will be made. I hope that the multi-racial, multicultural reality of Canada will be further reflected on our air waves when this new channel comes up. Notwithstanding, fair is fair, and one has to follow the rule of the commitments that were asked for by the CRTC.

With this "he who hears decides", when the idea of a resident regional commissioner is combined with those "who hears decides", one runs the risk of creating fiefdoms across the country and capturing the local industry. I quote Mr. Keith Spicer, who stated: "In broadcasting you have to look at the whole matrix of issues, many of them very subtle cultural issues, and I mean regional cultural issues. It is not only a matter of law, it is a matter of common sense sensitivity, as well as law. That is why in the broadcasting area, we think it is much better to have one national consensus so we can compare what we are doing in Newfoundland and Saskatchewan, and make sure that all Canadians feel they are being treated the same way recognizing their differences. At a time when there are some regional inter-ethnic tensions in Canada, we ought to be looking for some of these mechanisms to have a strong national view, but with much greater sensitivity to regional concerns. We all know that it is like squaring a circle but that is what we are trying to do and in our honest opinion, we think it could occur and be better done that way, rather than applying the "he who hears decides."

There was no question that Wick Communications felt that the principle was wrong. It was a destabilizing policy. There would be inconsistent results coming out of this. CFCF stated that it runs the risk of contradicting one of the fundamental objectives of the system to maintain a single system. TV Ontario said the regionalization of the commission and the initiation of the "he who hears decides" rule will lead to fragmentation of national policy and a general confusion as to the guiding principles of regulations in all parts of the country. The CRTC in its brief to the legislative committee on February 22 made an impassioned statement with respect to what it felt would be an ineffective and very improper approach.

I forgot to mention that Rogers believes that one of the overriding strengths of the CRTC since its establishment has been its ability to bring a broad range of national and regional concerns to bear on its decision-making. It felt it was very important, and were very deeply concerned that a more decentralized structure, even with the provisions requiring informal consultation, will result in the loss of this national dimension in the decision-making process. As a result, policies could diverge from region to region. We have heard from many with respect to this.

The commission, which has had experience in this particular regard with both the collegial and the small task forces, has made it very clear that basically, in a cultural industry and cultural regulation, one has to recognize that in the broadcasting industry, being an evolving one, highly sensitive and complex, decisions must be taken in full awareness of its impact on the entire system. Decisions involving individual licencees should find their anchor in and be consistent with a national overview.

There are many other aspects that the CRTC addressed; the fact that they have fact-finding bodies, the fact that it makes little sense when applied to a body whose function it is to apply a parliamentary policy in order to ensure that the cultural identity of a nation is preserved and strengthened. In broadcasting matters generally facts are seldom at issue. It is the consequences which flow from those facts which must be determined.

In closing, I would like to read into the record what the Canadian Bar Association, Media and Communication Law Section said, because they really are the experts, as well as the CRTC in this matter. They said: "We believe that the decision should not be required to be made by an ad hoc panel sitting in a particular city, rather where the commission deems it appropriate, it should be possible under the act for such matters to be discussed and determined on a collegial basis in that by the full commission based on their collective experience. While it is true that a hearing panel could consult with the commission staff or with other commissioners pursuant to subsection 19(4), we believe that rule-making proceedings of this kind should involve the full commission".

I sincerely hope that the minister will look at this favourably and consider adopting an amendment called for by all sectors in this field.

Motion No. 36. Is the House agreed that Mr. MacWilliam will move the motion for Mr. Waddell?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended by deleting Clause 28.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The motion reads:

That Bill C-40 be amended by deleting Clause 28.

In this legislation the government has taken a new power vis-à-vis the CRTC, namely the broad power of policy direction. This allows the government to provide leadership and direction in broadcasting from time to time.

The power of policy direction was in fact recommended by many committees on broadcasting and we fully support it. At the same time, the government kept its power to review every CRTC decision. The various committee reports recommended that if the government took the power of policy direction, it should in fact give up its power of review. In fact, this joint power seriously tilts, we submit, the delicate balance between the government and the regulator too strongly in favour of the government.

It risks undermining the independence of the commission and as a result we have moved this motion to delete the power of review. In support of this motion, I would ask the consideration of the House. I think the concern is a legitimate one. I ask the government to consider the overwhelming view of the witnesses that were called before the committee and accept the amendment standing in the name of the member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this motion. I will make my comments brief because I know I have the undivided attention of the minister across the way who is listening attentively to my remarks, and will no doubt reconsider what his position on this issue is in light of what I am about to say. At least I am so convinced I will be able to do that that I am taking the liberty now to assume that the minister will be correct in his views after hearing the representations from the Official Opposition.

I say that, of course, knowing the minister to be one who listens attentively to the contributions of members on this side of the House.

Ms. Clancy: Normally, yes.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-40 would jeopardize the CRTC's ability to carry out its role as an expert independent quasi-judicial body because it would grant a new power to the Governor in Council while retaining the existing one. Basically, it would permit the cabinet to issue policy directions to the CRTC, but it would retain its ability to set aside decisions of the commission on the basis that the decisions derogate from the attainment of objectives of the broadcasting policy.

These dual powers of cabinet in the view of our party, that is the power of review over the CRTC and the power to establish the general policy directions of the CRTC, are quite excessive. We believe that our cabinet review should be removed and in that way the government—and I say this for the benefit of the minister across the way—will ensure, or at least we believe it would assist greatly, in ridding the uninvited political interference that could perhaps jeopardize the independence of the commission.

I wonder if the minister is aware that the Friends of Canadian Broadcasting in their brief to the legislative committee said that the cabinet review powers would "undermine the independence of the CRTC in licensing matters, opens the way for policy political interference, and encourages licensees and applicants to bypass the CRTC if they think politically directed appeals will be more cogent."

What this means of course—and I say this to the minister across the way—is he is creating a situation whereby he is going to invite lobbyists from all over the place to his office. I challenge the minister: does he want to see the Frank Moores of this world and all those people all over his office? Would you want that, Mr.

Speaker? I do not think I would. I think the member for Mount Royal, were she at this moment the Minister of Communications—which she will be after the next election, of course—she would not want that kind of proposition.

Let the minister think for a moment of the next government, the next Liberal government, which is going to be charged with straightening things out after they are finished messing things up, is going to want to have this bill done properly. I say to the minister, you might as well fix this now, pursuant to recommendations that we are making on this side of the House.

I would like to read a few more quotes. The Canadian Institute of Adult Education had this to say: "The power of review threatens the independence of the CRTC because, apart from dictating to the CRTC— its major directions— the government will also prescribe the procedures for implementing its own policies." Thus the government defines the operating policy of the CRTC then, of course, it also has the power to take a second look after each case is completed.

In other words, the government acts as if it was itself some kind of a CRTC by taking away many of its powers, thus opening the door to the lobbyists.

[English]

Finally, I would like to read a quote from ACTRA:

> The power to review should be removed.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the minister will now be convinced to correct the wrong of his previous views and to straighten things out pursuant to the recommendation which I make to him now on behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal Party.

• (1930 )

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is quite a simple matter. We are just talking about removing ministers and the cabinet. In this particular article the powers that are being accorded the Governor in Council allows for interference, favouritism, and cronyism. It is very unhealthy. Ministers across the way must recognize by now that that is very unhealthy. Why subject themselves to the potential for pressure where it is unnecessary?

I have said to the minister's face that he has done a good job with this bill, except for the few significant errors in here which make it an untenable bill. In general, if he would change a few little things, four little amendments, he would have a good bill. This is one of the four.

Perhaps the minister did not think it through and would like to change his mind. His parliamentary secretary has been incredible. I am sure the Minister of Communications recognizes the role his parliamentary secretary has played in carrying the ball with this bill for such a long time. In this particular section the minister gives the power of direction to the regulator. I think it is an excellent idea. After all, Parliament should decide how this very sensitive instrument of public policy should work.

Once the government decides and directs, then it is up to the CRTC to hold the hearings, to have the parliamentary committees do the listening, and to come back with an answer. That answer should not then be subject to review by cabinet. It is a very dangerous precedent.

If it is to be subject to review by cabinet, I hope, while the minister does not seem to be constraining himself or his cabinet, that he will at least make sure that this is a very narrow power of review. I happen to think that it is a very bad power of review and that is why my colleague, the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam, and I have called for this particular removal.

This is essentially the bottom line as far as I am concerned. Serge Gouin, president and chief executive officer of Télé-Métropole, points out how important and detrimental the power of review can be. He says something very interesting which perhaps we would all like to know. Télé-Métropole is the largest television broadcaster in Quebec. It owns, as we all know, CFTM, channel 10 in Montreal, CJPM-TV in Chicoutimi, and numerous other subsidiaries producing films and videos. It has over 1,000 employees. It employs 2,000 people on a temporary basis, and it has the highest viewing time per week in Canada. This is a competent, well managed, forceful and innovative broadcaster who knows what he is talking about.

In talking about the CRTC and the impact of these two powers at both ends, this broadcaster wrote:

> I am one of the few Canadians to have been through the experience of obtaining an operating licence for a television network abroad and I am certainly the only Canadian to have done so in France.

That is up to the time that he wrote this. He goes on to write:

> I played a very active part in the project for the privatization of TF-1 and in the issuing of operating licences for two national channels, La Cinq and M-6. In addition, I am one of the three shareholders who appeared before the CNCL, the equivalent of the CRTC in France, to obtain the licence for La Cinq.
> The CNCL was established relatively recently, and at that time the French government indicated that it fully intended to ensure the independence of the organization by means of clear, precise regulations. Despite that statement of principle, the door remained open to political interference and this did not take long to materialize.
> Consequently, no procedural rules established by the CNCL were taken seriously and even the conditions opposed when operating licences were issued are openly flouted today. Eighteen months after the decisions were handed down on these three national channels, a number of people are still contesting these decisions and making representations to the political authorities in order to reopen the cases even though they resulted in investments of hundreds of millions of dollars.

We know that it takes that kind of money to prepare and to be ready. What he is bringing to our attention, and I think wisely, to try to save us a lot of heartache, is that through this bill we in Canada are preparing to create the same climate, with all the consequences that one could have easily observed if one had examined the impact of such policies in other countries.

I suggest to the minister and to the Governor in Council that before they take the vote on this amendment they should listen to Télé-Métropole and its experience. They should listen to the people who appeared before us. They should listen to the report that goes as far back as the Aird report in 1928 when it talked about the independence of the government of the day and ensuring that no political pressures could be exerted. It asked that we weigh arguments dispassionately through this arm's length regulator so that we would not have the parochial political pressures which are inevitable when big money and big businesses are involved this way.

I hope they will protect the ministers and the arm's length aspect. I also hope they will stay out of both power direction and power review. These tandem powers are very dangerous.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate we have quite successfully made efforts to show where the government has made some serious errors, where it has been quite misguided in the crafting of this bill.

When it comes to the dual powers that this bill proposes to give to the government, it really smacks of a power hungry government which says that it is not good enough to have just the power of direction over the CRTC but that it must also have the power of review.

In effect the government is saying that it will tell the CRTC what to do, that the CRTC will go out and do its job, but that if it has second thoughts, or if in its opinion the so-called arm's length independent commission does not do a very good job, it will have the power of review and it will correct the mistakes.

It is a major mistake. This is a blunder of the first rank of this government, to take unto itself both the power of direction and the power of review. It makes no sense whatsoever.

In a way it suggests that the government is politically masochistic. It really wants to injure and bring grief to itself, because we can imagine what will happen if there are parties out there in the broadcast field who know that if the CRTC renders a decision they do not like the government has the power of review. What will they do? I am talking about the parties now. In effect they will ignore the decision of the CRTC. They will bypass the CRTC and go to the political headmasters at the top to appeal or argue before the government that the CRTC has made a terrible decision that is not in the national interests and certainly not in their interest. They will ask the politicians to review this decision and change it in their interest.

It makes no sense whatsoever, unless you are a government that is power hungry, wants to have control over every facet of the process and really does not respect for one minute the independence of the CRTC.

We must have a commission that we have faith in and that we respect, one that we feel has some competence. Sure, the government has the responsibility to set down broad policy and to give direction. There is nothing wrong with that whatsoever. It is a way of saying that the democratically elected people rule, but surely the power of direction is enough.

What more do they want? Having the responsibility and the power to set policy, to set direction, and then to say to these people who comprise the CRTC "go ahead and do your job within the ambit of the directions that we give you", is that not enough? I would think that is enough.

I talked about political masochism earlier. As part and parcel of that, we talk about and are concerned about political interference. There is enough political interference, as it is, in this whole business of governing a country. One will never stop political interference, but surely we do not go out to invite it; surely we do not go out and ask for political interference.

Yet, this section of the bill does exactly that. You can interfere with this commission because it does not have to be taken that seriously. After all, its decisions are not final. You can make an end run around it. You can bypass it. Or, if you do not like to think of it that way, you can indulge in some political interference, talk to the people whom you know and exercise some political muscle; you can interfere with what should be a process that cannot be easily violated. This is a serious mistake. This government does not need dual powers. It does not need both policy direction and review. One is enough.

We have looked at this bill from a to z. We have explored it very well. When it came to this part which was studied over and over again, we came to the conclusion that the government does not need both powers. The government does not need direction and review. Direction is enough. The government does not have to go any further than that to do a good job.

My esteemed colleague from Montreal pointed out earlier that a number of respected people in this country also agree with us on this side that to ask for this is dangerous government practice.

I do not know how much time I have left. Perhaps I have just a minute or two, but I want to refer to a statement made by the Friends of Canadian Broadcasting. What it has done is buttress our argument; it has given support to our arguments. The Friends of Canadian Broadcasting made a statement in its brief to the legislative committee which at that particular time was studying the power of review on the part of the government. The Friends of Canadian Broadcasting said "that the cabinet review power undermines the independence of the CRTC in licensing matters, opens the way for political interference, and encourages licensees and applicants to bypass the CRTC if they think politically directed appeals will be more cogent".

There it is in just a few words. The Friends of Canadian Broadcasting put it in a nutshell. They have summarized what I have tried to say in the last eight or nine minutes.

I really wish that the government would re-examine this part of the bill and take a good look at it. If the government really tried to be objective, it would come to one decision, that all it needs is the power of direction. It does not need also the power of review. It does not need dual powers.

Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on Motion No. 36 stands deferred.

Mr. Marcel Masse (for Mr. Edwards) moved:

Motion No. 39.

That Bill C-40 be amended in Clause 36 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 26 the following:

"(5) Notwithstanding subsections (3) and (4), if a director is not appointed to take office on the expiration of the term of office of an incumbent director, the incumbent director continues in office until a successor is appointed."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate. The hon. member for Mount Royal has the floor.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Ah, but you should be impressed. Come on, it is not so bad!

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the minister to address this question. Perhaps I should have called upon the Prime Minister as it is his amendment.

It is extremely interesting. If I were the Prime Minister or Mr. Patrick Watson, I would certainly understand why we are bringing in this kind of amendment. Do you know what the amendment says? The amendment says that notwithstanding certain articles, if a director is not appointed to take office on the expiration of the term of office of an incumbent director, the incumbent director continues in office until a successor is appointed. That just makes good common sense. Up until now we have had an enormous number of vacancies, I believe, up to six, if not seven vacancies, at a very serious time in the development and history of the CBC.

We are very pleased that the minister has brought in this amendment. Once the opportunity to make a nomination was there, why did he not have to wait for this clause to have nominated Mr. Patrick Watson to the board of the CBC. Why did he not nominate him to the board where he could contribute in the manner which only this man can contribute, instead of leaving him on the outside looking in? What I would like to know from the minister is why was Mr. Patrick Watson not appointed to the board? There were so many vacancies. We even had to fill that hole with an amendment. I compliment him on the amendment, but I wish he would explain to us why Mr. Watson was not appointed?

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the motion has been put forward in the name of the parliamentary secretary to the minister, but as a matter of fact, as we can all see, we actually have the minister here tonight. I find it rather perplexing that although the motion has been put forward, we hear no comment, no rationale or no explanation as to the precise reasons for this particular amendment.

With the minister in the House tonight, with his full authority to suggest changes, that amendments be made, that he at least explain the particular reason for those amendments. I think it is justifiable. He is asking us to vote on something that is somewhat confusing. Some argument has been made by my colleague in the Liberal Party and I have to support her on that. I think we need a fuller explanation than just the silence that pervades the Chamber.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of things to say on this particular matter. I too find it rather galling that the minister sits there and says nothing. Now, he gets up and walks away. He turns his back to us. It is really galling to have the Conservatives sit over there, not saying a word, never coming to the defence of the bill, never explaining any clauses, just sitting there saying nothing and doing nothing.

They might think that that is taunting us on this side of the House. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the taunting does not work. What it does is to show how foolish they have been during the whole course of this debate. They sit there like bumps on a log, saying nothing and doing nothing.

If they are that proud of the bill, what does it say about them? What does it say about the bill? I think that the concern raised by my colleague from Mount Royal, which really is the concern of the chairman of the CBC board of directors, is a very legitimate concern. We know that the CBC board of directors has to live with vacancies. It is only realistic and pragmatic that if the CBC board finds itself in that situation, the board should be able to continue its directors working, keeping them in place until a successor is named. To me, that is eminently reasonable and makes a lot of sense. I wish the government would listen to this suggestion, but as usual it is not listening.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to intervene in this debate as well. What is at stake here is a very important parliamentary principle. The government needs to be held accountable for legislation that it proposes to this House. Certainly, in the case of this broadcasting bill, it has huge implications for the future development of a major industry in this country. It is not only an industry but something that is part of the very fabric of this country.

When this debate is taking place in this House, especially at a time when the ties that bind us nationally are fraying, it seems unbelievable that the government would not stand and come to the defence of its own legislation. The minister has been sitting here for a long time. He was challenged repeatedly by several members of the House to come to the defence of the legislation and has refused to do so. That is simply unacceptable. I think it is one of the reasons that this government languishes so low in the polls.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the minister is ready to respond, at least he seems to be. I realize we are not supposed to comment on a member's absence or presence in the House, but let us say I am pleased to see the minister is in a position to respond to what I have to say.

There are two points I would like to make. First, I am concerned about the fact the government seems unwilling to address either the bill or the amendments this evening. The minister is here in the House. Neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary have responded either to amendments proposed by hon. members opposite or even defended their own amendments.

When the minister is in a position to comment on what I am saying, Mr. Speaker since I cannot comment on his presence or absence, otherwise I would but when the minister is in a position to respond to my question later on, I hope he will deal with this point. In fact, I would have liked to know why we still have no response from the government. Why doesn't the minister even defend the government's amendments?

[English]

I have another question regarding this particular amendment. If someone sits on the board of directors of the CBC and is reappointed, in conformity with our Standing Orders that nomination is then reviewable by a parliamentary committee of this House. Under the McGrath Commission report that we established, any Order in Council appointment of the government can be reviewed by a parliamentary committee. By structuring this the way they did, I have a concern. By reappointing the same individual or rather, not reappointing the same individual, it allows the individual to serve another term, bypassing the Order in Council review process. That is a concern of mine.

I am wondering if the government is prepared to answer in that regard. We changed the Standing Orders of this House to reflect this concern some years ago. After several accusations of political patronage, the Prime Minister decided he wanted to get rid of them, that he wanted to offer, according to him, a new transparency to the system. He decided to go along with the recommendations of the McGrath Commission to establish the Order in Council review process.

In this particular case we may have found a way in which the government is attempting to bypass the process. I would like for the government minister—speaking of ministers, I do not see very many in the Chamber at this particular moment—who is responsible in answering for cabinet in the House—because a minister has to be in the House all the time when we speak—to immediately respond to that. I want to know the answer to this because I fear greatly that we might have uncovered something that the government is attempting to do which might just be slightly untoward.

If that is not the case, I hope that the minister will stand up immediately and place on the record of this House just what it is that this amendment will be doing. Now that the minister is in a position to answer, I would hope that he would address that issue. If he wants me to repeat it, I gladly will.

Mr. McCurdy: Repeat it.

Mr. Boudria: There is some interest here. Did I make this perfectly clear to the minister? I know the Speaker understands everything quite well. Mr. Speaker always does.

I want the minister to clarify for us how it is that the Order in Council review process will work in the case of the amendment that is offered to us now. In other words, what stops the government from simply allowing all Order in Council nominations—the appointments to the board of directors—to lapse and simply not appoint anyone to any of them? It would thereby permit all the members who are on it to be automatically reappointed de facto by this process and none of them could ever be interviewed by their respective parliamentary committee.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the interventions of my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, because I think he is onto something. There seems to be something untoward here that he has uncovered. It seems that, whenever we address the minister, he goes for a walk. I cannot say that he leaves the Chamber, but he does go for a walk.

Mr. Boudria: But if you could say it, you would.

Mr. Butland: If I could, I would.

I notice that he has some briefing notes and I know he is eager to speak. He has 10 or 12 colleagues who are present and I am sure they are very competent and able to explain the amendments, not only to us on the opposite side of the House, but to all Canadians.

I think that the minister has been told that he should show up for this bill as this is his bill and I do not think that he has been all that eager. His meandering in and around the House indicates that his presence here is not something that he really wants. We are really eager to hear the minister speak to this amendment and to the bill, in general.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, one might have gotten the notion that the minister was being contemptuous of the House by virtue of his meandering around the Chamber. One might have been given a similar impression by the fact that, on one such departure from his place, he engaged in singular jocularity with members of his caucus, including his parliamentary secretary whom we thought might say something in response to the questions that have been raised. This was only a suspicion.

As the member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has pointed out, the amendment that has been presented here would suggest that the impression that the minister and his government are contemptuous of the House is given substantiation by the nature of this amendment. As that member indicated, it would provide a circumstance in which a member of the board could continue as such ad infinitum without review, thus circumventing the House of Commons once more. This suggests, in fact, that the minister is contemptuous of the House.

However, by the urgency with which the minister has been reading when he has not been gone, it may be that he does not understand what has been said. I would urge upon him that he reflect as carefully as he might. We will give him as much time as he needs to read it over carefully to see if he cannot find a spark of understanding and respond to the interventions made from this side of the House which ask and plead with him to demonstrate to those of us here, as well as to the people of Canada, that he just does not think that this place is a waste of time, that it is taking too much of his time, and that he would rather be somewhere else than explaining his own bill, his own amendment to us and the people of Canada.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps inadvertently or perhaps otherwise, I think we have uncovered something that I want to submit to the House that may be a breach of our Standing Orders.

This will take a moment or two, but I want to outline to the House that clause 36 of the bill expresses how individuals are to be appointed or reappointed to the board of directors. That is perfectly in order. However, there is an amendment proposed in Motion 39 by the minister. I am glad the government House leader is listening attentively, because I think he might be inclined to agree with me. Motion No. 39 describes that notwithstanding any other measures that if someone else is not appointed to take his or her place, the incumbent director already on the board remains a director even after his office has expired.

Obviously, this bypasses Standing Order 110 of the House of Commons which states that anyone who is appointed to the board of directors in this way, that his or her appointment has to be laid upon the table of the House and be referred to a parliamentary committee under the Order in Council review process. There is no mechanism to make it happen.

Standing Order 110(1) states:

> A Minister of the Crown shall lay upon the Table a certified copy of an Order in Council,—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, but all his remarks could be interpreted as questionning the Chair's decision concerning the motions. Because of the way the Chair made its decision, it is now too late and I must indicate to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that his point of order is really not one and I cannot accept it at this time.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I believe under our rules, when the Chair rules on the acceptability of an amendment, he rules as to whether or not they are procedurally acceptable; in other words, whether or not they are correct as to form. I am not questioning whether the amendments were in their proper form. I am bringing in new information to the House which I hope to share very briefly with the Speaker, and ask the Speaker and his advisers to review perhaps over the next few hours in order to ensure that not the form but that in fact the content of one of these motions is such that it could in fact subvert Standing Order 110 of the House.

Briefly, that is the point that I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, and I do believe that there is no point in beleaguering it any longer. I have made that case to the Speaker and I invite the Speaker to review it once again, because that is in fact what could happen.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I must regretfully interrupt the hon. member, but the Chair had already looked into this point which was raised before making its decision concerning the grouping of motions. I can no longer listen to the hon. member although I find his remarks quite interesting and relevant.

Is the House ready to vote on Motion No. 39?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, in light of the lack of clarity, and I know you say that the Chair has already ruled, if we were to be that finicky about this bill, I can bring three other errors to your attention. I would be pleased to do so, if you would care to have me do so, Mr. Speaker.

Having said that, I would just like to point out that my colleague from Winnipeg and myself withdraw our support of that motion until there is clarity brought to the issue.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The vote is on Motion No. 39 in the name of Mr. Edwards. May I dispense from reading the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those opposed will please say nay?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it agreed that the motion of Mr. Waddell be moved by Mr. MacWilliam?

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

That Bill C-40 be amended by deleting Clause 45.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion submitted by my colleague from Port Moody—Coquitlam states that Bill C-40 be amended by deleting Clause 45. That clause is the government's proposal to divide the CBC board into English and French standing committees.

• (2010)

I want to point out that we oppose this proposal and are moving its deletion through this amendment for two reasons. First, the CBC itself has strongly opposed this measure. It views it as a direct interference in its affairs and also as being potentially divisive. In its brief, the CBC stated the following:

> This section provides that the CBC's Board of Directors "shall establish a standing committee of directors on English language broadcasting and a standing committee of directors on French language broadcasting, each consisting of the Chairperson, the President and such other directors as the Board may appoint".
> In its submission to the Committee formed to study Bill C-136, the Corporation noted its objections to this provision and wishes now to reiterate them. In Section 3(1)(1) of the Bill, the Corporation is called upon to serve the interests of all Canadians, by reflecting Canada and its regions and contributing to shared national consciousness and identity.
> In our view, the creation of such committees would run counter to the spirit of those objectives and, as well, counter to the programming independence provided in Section 44(4). We believe it should be left to the Board of the CBC to determine the most appropriate means of meeting the goals set for the CBC and that this provision of Section 43 of the Bill represents an infringement of that necessary freedom. Further, we feel that the exercise of responsibility for French and English language programming by these committees would run counter to the proper responsibilities of the Board as a whole. Accordingly, we make the following recommendation:
> Recommendation 1: That Section 43(1), requiring the creation of standing committees of Directors on English and French language broadcasting, be deleted from the bill.

Those were the comments made in the brief by the CBC.

In carrying forth that argument, the second reason we oppose this proposal is that it is part of the government's plan to divide the CBC and to remove its role as a unifying instrument in the country.

As was said before by my colleague from Port Moody—Coquitlam, the government is meeching and leeching the CBC. First, it contends to strip the corporation's mandate to promote Canadian unity. Second, and this is the subject of this motion, it divides the CBC unto itself. This, combined with its massive budget cuts of some $130 million annually over the next four years, is serving to destroy the CBC and to transform it into a public broadcaster that is essentially indistinguishable from its private sector competitors.

First, it divides the board into two standing committees. Then, it creates two corporations; one in French, the other in English. Finally, as a result of this and other policies of this government, we have two Canadas. This is what the government has been doing with VIA Rail and Petro-Canada, and now this is what it is doing with the CBC. We are committed on this side of the House to fighting for a single Canada.

I want to end by quoting a recent comment in Cross Current by Stephen Godfrey. He states:

> The proposed changes are a sad commentary on the fact that there remains no area in which the very words "national unity" can be spoken without inviting attack from members of the federal government itself. There is no longer the imagination or the will to accept two concepts: that Quebec is a distinct society; and that there still might be an over-all plan and vision for the country that we still—so haltingly—refer to as one.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, that last debate warmed me up so much, I was able to remove my House leader's sweater. I can now perhaps box a little bit better with our stubborn colleagues across the floor, and they might see the light of day at least in this amendment.

We are at a time of great uncertainty in Canada, a time of division, and this is not the time to destroy the infrastructures that are in place.

With respect to the board of the CBC, any of you in this House who have ever served on a board of directors, be it of a voluntary association, a business corporation, mergers that take place, know that there is one head and they have a board of directors who have a common interest and concern in the well-being of that corporation.

As, if and when they need to address particular subjects, they split the board up according to the internal needs of that particular organization, organism, company or corporation, as the case may be. Could you give me a reason, Mr. Speaker, why within the standards and norms of the functioning of an organism, one would expect a corporation of this size, having to deal with unequal balance throughout this country in French and English services—language sensitive issues—for, Mr. Speaker, you must recognize that within the English and French strata, there is not one mould.

There are French-speaking people from all over the world in this country of ours, and they are spread across the country. Whether they came from Belgian, French or North African, or Quebec stock does not matter. The same thing goes for the English constituencies. There is no homogeneity within the structures of the roles and responsibilities that this board must address.

The board of the CBC which handles radio and television in English, French and northern services that were in Inuit languages before they got cut had to be sensitive to all these issues. They had to be sensitive to the race, language and creed and try to portray the interests and concerns of Canada to the three coasts so there would be better understanding.

Now, what do you want to do? You want to take this board and divide it in half so that never the twain shall meet. They should become rubber stamps when serious financial concerns are facing this board.

Mr. Speaker, you realize that we are close to $240 million cuts within the CBC. You heard my question to the minister this morning with respect to the parliamentary channel when he made it very clear that this government, House, Parliament is not going to finance the parliamentary channel.

I invite the members opposite to take part in the debate. It will not be very long before they will not get their faces on the picture screen, because there will not be a parliamentary channel. It is not one of the mandated services of the CBC. It has other responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, you heard the debate last week on Radio Canada International at a time when we are so interested in having our values and democratic procedures explained, become part of and help what is going on in the Persian Gulf and in Iraq where the Kuwaiti and Iraqi people only hear the voice of Saddam Hussein and listen to a middle world voice like ours with a great deal of respect. No, we are going to cut that off too.

We are cutting off our nose to spite our face. The real problem is not splitting the board of the CBC. The real problem is putting some money in so that it can do the job it was mandated to do.

I refer back to a woman who I knew and admired. I think everyone in this House who knew Judy LaMarsh knew that she was a woman of great principle regardless of party or affiliation. She knew her business. She was a hard working person who was very sensitive to the country in which she lived.

She looked at the question of dividing the CBC into statutory committees. She said almost 23 years to the month, on November 1, 1967: "A statutory requirement that the board should split itself up into two would in the opinion of this government be undesirable. If the CBC is to be an instrument for the development of national unity and the continuing expression of Canadian identity, it must have a clear identity of its own that is neither English nor French, it's just plain Canadian".

Does that not make good sense? If they want to look at the problems internally, they will set up their own committees. Why should we dictate the disrupting of what is a very important structure?

Let me just tell you what Patrick Watson, speaking for the CBC board, had to say.

> This is perhaps the most outstanding and strongly felt concern of our board on the proposal that there be created a French and English programming standing committee within the board of the CBC.

He spoke to us at committee in a very strong way saying that they disagreed, that each of those directors, whether they were French speaking or English speaking, felt that the honour conferred on them by being nominated by Order in Council through the recommendation of the Minister of Communications to the Prime Minister were there in persona for Canada. They did not come to represent a language structure, they came to represent Canadian programming, Canadian content, Canadian ingress, Canadian music, song and dance, Canadian artists, Canadian intellectual property, not to speak in a tongue dissimilar one from the other.

Gerard Veilleux said: "I do want to tell you that I do not look forward with a great deal of enthusiasm to having to split my staff, the staff of CBC Radio-Canada. I say to you that this is very dangerous."

Keith Spicer, and these are the people who are running this public sector, said: "I spent a good part of the last 25 years working on both French and English networks and I am touched by what you say." He was answering a question I had asked him. "Personally I would not be in favour of creating two separate committees. Therefore I think that at some point, in addition to a very strong secure representation of the English and French side of things, we have to have a national view as well".

I could go on and on. I could indicate to you the cuts and the way the money is spread between the English language network and the French language network, particularly on the TV side. On the English side we have $576 million being spent, in round figures $577 million, and on the French side about $406 million. Mr. Speaker, there is not that much difference when you look at the percentage of difference of French speaking people, both in Quebec and in the rest of Canada, and English speaking people, both in Quebec and in the rest of Canada.

That is not the way you want to measure the service. You want to measure the service: "Is the program good? Is the content good? Will it sell? Is it world-class?" because that is what Canadians want and should expect.

Mr. Speaker, it is not to say there is not schlock both on the American and Canadian side. There is. But I think that CBC has a quality and a voice of its own and I think there is nothing worse that we could do than divide it up at this very sensitive time in the history of Canada.

I suggest, I recommend, I plead, I cajole, I ask the backbench, I ask the minister, speak to the minister, speak to the parliamentary secretary, get them to see the wisdom of not splitting it at this sensitive time.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to try again. I know there is a prohibition against referring to the absence of a member or minister from this House. I do not know whether there is a particular regulation that prevents reference to the absence of a minister's brain from this House.

As the member for Okanagan—Shuswap was talking about the issue of national unity, the hon. minister, who has demonstrated his contempt before, showed even more contempt. His back was turned to the hon. member. If he was engaged in any active mental activity at all, it must have been telling jokes because he was laughing vigorously, as were those around him. We have called attention to the fact that this bill refuses to endorse national unity. Here we have an amendment that would attempt to stop a deliberate attempt on the part of this minister and of this government to enhance national division.

I think it is about time this minister had his brain present here, that he turn his face to those of us who question the reasonableness of this provision and give an explanation, a justification, for heaping this new division upon this country by a government that is already going to be known in history as the government that was possibly responsible, if not for the destruction of the basic unity of this country, perhaps for the destruction of the country itself.

This is only a small part of it. It would seek to be able to justify dividing the board of directors at CBC. Let the minister get up on his feet and justify it.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that my colleagues for Mount Royal in Montreal and Windsor—St. Clair are very hard acts to follow.

I want to point out something, and perhaps this has not been recognized by those of us in this Chamber, particularly those Canadians watching on television from coast to coast.

I want the record to show that this debate started shortly after three o'clock eastern standard time this afternoon. It is now about 8.25 eastern standard time and not one Progressive Conservative, not one Tory, has deigned, has condescended to stand up and say anything in this debate. You people have not come to the defence of this bill.

You have not used one word. The minister sits there stoically without flinching, without moving anything. Is he dead? Maybe we should call in the doctor. He has not moved an inch. None of them have moved. Can you imagine five hours of debate and the Tories have not said one word?

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Harvard: Shame on the whole lot. It really is a despicable non-performance.

We know that this government has made it abundantly clear and has told Canadians over and over again that it is their way or no way, that it is not going to listen to Canadians. It said that in spades. It said clearly in the free trade debate that it was not going to listen to Canadians. It certainly was not going to listen to Canadians when it came to Meech Lake. It certainly has not listened when it comes to the GST.

Bill C–21 is another example. Here we have the broadcast bill. It never listened. I think we should conduct some kind of investigation. Maybe Tories have all gone deaf. Maybe their ears are not operative any more. Is it possible that we have over 160 MPs elected who were once human beings? Who actually had blood in their veins, people who actually listened, who had ears, but somehow after the 1988 election they all went stone deaf? Is it possible?

The evidence would suggest it. There is the minister. He has not flinched an inch. He has set some kind of a record.

Let me get to the substance of this section of Bill C–40 because if Tories on that side of the House cannot listen to us on this side of the House, maybe they can listen to the people who are in their employ, especially those people who are major figures in communications in this country.

My esteemed colleague for Mount Royal has already pointed out the comments made by the president of the CBC, the chairman of the board of the CBC and Mr. Spicer. They have all expressed deep concern. In fact, it is more than concern. They have expressed alarm about taking the CBC board and splitting it in two. They do not listen. At least one thing you can say is that Tories are consistent. They are consistently deaf. They are consistently non-listeners.

If you take the CBC board and divide it into two, it is like taking two horses and sending one this way and the other that way. That is the beginning of the end of the CBC. If you split the corporation in two, one part will go that way and one part will go the other way.

We should be, particularly at this juncture in our political history, doing things to bring us closer together, to tie us together, to bind us together. But, no, this government is absolutely hell-bent on doing the opposite. It does not matter how many alarm bells you ring or what you say: you can yell, you can bring forward the best kinds of arguments, you can beg, you can beseech, you can employ.

There is the minister, sitting stoically. I am afraid we are going to have to call in some kind of medical doctor because the man has not moved an inch.

In conclusion, let me say that this is a terrible mistake that the government has made. If we want to keep this country together, if we want a public broadcast system that can work on behalf of national unity, the last thing we want to do is to take the board of directors and divide it into two. I rest my case.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, as I sit here and listen to the hon. member for Winnipeg—St. James, I cannot help but feel that he is perhaps exaggerating, that there is perhaps a bit of rhetoric in what he says. We in the NDP have compassion for the minister. I am starting to feel a bit sorry for some of the things that have been said about him and some of his colleagues who also have remained somewhat stoic, but they are flinching.

Rather than continue the onslaught, I would like to ask the minister if it is of his own volition that he says nothing, or has he been told or ordered not to say anything. That is what I would like to know.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The question is on Motion No. 40 standing in the name of Mr. Waddell. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those opposed will be please say nay.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is just a perfect example of the arrogance of this government and particularly at this time of the minister. I cannot believe that they are not feeling the responsibility, not one single member across the floor. Most particularly, the minister is not prepared to explain the reason for his amendments that direct how reports should be written, how the annual report should be done, and how Treasury Board should make its voice heard and have its decisions looked at.

It is interesting that the government does not and is not prepared, through its minister, to defend this particular motion. In a sense this indicates why the government did not accept an amendment and a discussion which I had with the minister and the parliamentary secretary during the course of the debate, during the course of this legislative procedure, without forgetting the fact that this bill was brought into the House in March. We could have had this debate any time from March 20 on. This is December. The government decided not to bring this bill in until the very last moment.

Mrs. Finestone: Not only did it delay bringing in this bill, which is supposedly a key and important bill, the parliamentary secretary made phone calls all around to the constituencies to say that we were delaying the bill.

Mr. Milliken: What rubbish.

Mrs. Finestone: He never once acknowledged that his own government House leader, his own government Whip, and his own ministers were not interested in bringing in this bill. He tried to dump responsibility on the Official Opposition. That did not wash with the constituency. The CAB did not buy it. The CCTA did not buy it. The Media Watch people did not buy it. I heard from all of them.

I know what the government across the way tried to do. Let the public know that this government had this bill and the prior Bill C-136 available for debate for months and months and months. It chose to bring in Bill C-136 two or three days before the House adjourned. It then prorogued, so the bill died on the Order Paper. That was the government's fault; no one else's.

Mr. Milliken: It tried to blame the Senate. It did before.

Mrs. Finestone: Again in this bill it is the same situation. Now the government wants to dump on the Senate for holding up the bill when it decides to prorogue or do whatever it plans to do after the Senate finishes its work.

This indicates the conundrum that I was in. The government did nothing to allay the fears of the CBC. It has given journalistic freedom to the CBC, but it gave no management rights. What it did was interpret the responsibilities of the CBC in clause 35 to protect and enhance the freedom of expression and the journalistic creative and programming independence enjoyed by the corporation in the pursuit of its object and in the exercise of its powers, but it forgot to give it managerial freedom of the corporation in pursuit of the objects and exercise of its powers.

The managerial freedom has been removed from the CBC. Cuts, yes, $240 million. It will bring about closing of stations. It will bring about the loss of all kinds of important roles for the CBC, both in radio and television but particularly in television. Then, in this amendment, which is supposedly a technical amendment, it ends up determining how it will do its bookkeeping, how it will make reports, and how the Treasury Board can make its voice heard and make its decisions felt. This government knows, as anyone who knows anything about Parliament, that the CBC has to go to Treasury Board. It cannot borrow. It cannot invest. It has to get permission.

These are important amendments. Not one person on the government side has been prepared to defend or speak out or support of his or her own vision of the radio broadcasting system for Canada. It just sits there mute, dumb, struck dumb by a minister who will not allow a word. Obviously the House leader, the Whip, and the Prime Minister support this on the government side.

I find this totally reprehensible, certainly a mockery of democracy, and quite strange in a broadcasting bill which talks about freedom of expression and the freedom of speech in, what is supposed to be, an important democracy on the world scene. Shame on the government in this particular instance.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to stand to reflect on the comments that have been made a number of times in this House.

I find it nothing short of incredible that not a single government member has stood to give any reason or rationale as to the proposed amendments which are before us. This is an extremely important bill, not only for the future of broadcasting in Canada, but for the future of the identity of Canada itself. The minister responsible for this legislation has the audacity and the arrogance of power to walk out in the middle of this debate, to refuse to comment in this debate, or to have any of his colleagues comment in this debate. It has made an absolute mockery of the entire legislative process. It is simply, completely, and utterly unacceptable that this minister be allowed to get away with this kind of mockery of participatory democracy and to play the kinds of antics that he has played in the House tonight. He has turned into the Marcel Marceau of the House and he has become a clown. It is absolutely despicable that he has been allowed to do that.

The fact is that this is a piece of legislation that has over 50 detailed and complex amendments, some of which are technological amendments. It takes time to digest, to rationalize, to debate, and to come to an understanding of the details of this legislation. That minister, across the way, has refused to allow us the opportunity to participate and to understand the very reasons for making the kinds of proposals that the government has made.

This is an abuse of the House. This is an abuse of the system. It is a demonstration of the total arrogance of power of the government and it will do it no good in the long run.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have not participated in this lengthy debate yet and I am delighted to take the opportunity to do so.

I am equally delighted that the silent Minister of Communications is in the House to hear my remarks because as my hon. friend, the hon. member for Mount Royal, has stated, this debate has turned into a somewhat contemptuous mockery of Parliament. The minister has failed to participate in it and any members of the House who support the minister have failed to participate in it. They have simply indicated an unwillingness to agree to any reasonable amendment to this bill, proposed by anyone on this side of the House.

Needless to say, there are 50 proposed amendments and the only ones the government appears willing to accept are the ones moved by the parliamentary secretary. No one is willing to stand up even to say what those amendments mean, explain their purpose to the House or, in any way defend them. It really is a shocking example of contempt. The hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap has made similar comments and I appreciate them because I think they are deadly accurate.

What I wanted to talk about was the government's contempt for the Canadian people in this. It is not just the ignoring of the wishes of members of the House that is at stake here, but it is the dismantling of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by legislation.

What we had expected in Bill C–40, especially in light of the serious constitutional crisis that Canada found itself in this year, was some effort on the part of the government to infuse something into Canada that would lead to national unity. The CBC had a mandate in Canada to foster national unity in the country and that mandate is being removed from the act so that the CBC is free to go its own way. What is worse is the division of the board of directors. The resultant damage to the CBC is going to be irreparable.

It is a deliberate attempt, in my submission, by the government to further dismantle the portions of the administrative structure of Canada that are designed to help hold Canada together. This government is the worst government in Canadian history when it comes to issues of national unity. It has failed Canadians at every turn. It is dismantling Canada's national structure. It has weakened the federal Government of Canada at the expense of the provinces, at the expense of the Canadian people. It is continuing to destroy the Government of Canada as a national institution by its continuation in office.

The sooner this government gets out of office, the better off Canadians are going to be from coast to coast. There is not a single province in Canada that has benefited from the policies of this government. Every single province, the whole of Canada, has suffered because of its incompetence and its inability to provide effective national leadership in Canada.

This bill is only the tip of the iceberg, but it is a very important tip. This bill is supposed to support a national institution, an institution that supported Canada's cultural industry, the cultural diversity of Canada from coast to coast. It was mandated specifically—and it still is today, before this bill gets through, if it ever does— to foster national unity in Canada. That is what we need in Canada.

This government has been so effective in dividing Canadians and pitting region against region, that it has seriously weakened the national unity of our country. Never before have we been in such a mess as has been brought about by this incompetent group. Now, instead of supporting a body that was mandated to foster national unity in Canada, this government is trying to break it into two pieces at least, and weaken its authority in dealing with national unity issues.

I call on the minister to come out here and defend these policies that are so rotten, fix this bill up and agree to some of the amendments that try to improve it, even in limited ways. He should accept some of them instead of this absolute silent, sphinx–like approach. The inscrutable minister sits there and says, "I am not agreeing to anything but my own proposals". That is what is going on here. I say it is a contempt of Parliament. It is a contempt of the people of Canada. It is typical of a government that has shown itself totally unfit to govern in this country.

"work feed, by virtue of copyright ownership or a licence granted by a copyright owner,".

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the government decided on this Motion No.

49 which opens up the whole question of piracy, of stealing intellectual property. This is a very good amendment. What we are doing here is looking at the serious problems we have in this country concerning the stealing of intellectual property through the piracy of stolen signals.

I have a private member's bill before the House concerning what is happening. What we are trying to do in this clause is to tighten up the kinds of infractions that are taking place on a daily basis across this land by TVRO companies which install master antennae systems of one kind or another or direct broadcast signals.

They are bypassing the cable companies and thereby bypassing the Canadian broadcast undertakings such as CBC, CTV, Global and other independents which have an obligation to provide, through profits hopefully, new investments and therefore Canadian products for our television screen.

The programmer, through the programming rights—this is a copyright issue in a sense—are being deprived of the kind of income which they essentially could have from this very fine system if only we had some controls within the CRTC, within the broadcasting milieu, to define adequately those who are stealing signals and presenting programs that are in competition with Canadian programs. HBO is an example against Super Écran, First Choice, Super Channel.

These are companies that have tremendous financial obligations, but their revenues have been falling steadily as their signals are being stolen from the satellites with these little black box converters. It is being done knowingly and in complicity with the people who are doing the installation.

I will recall for the minister and the parliamentary secretary the group who appeared before us and who felt that they were doing nothing wrong. They are not doing anything wrong except that they are depriving the CBC, CTV, Global, the independent stations, the sports network, Much Music, the movie channels. What they are doing is beaming from that satellite into these tens of thousands of homes the products of American companies who pay absolutely nothing into the Canadian system.

It is important what we are doing here. There are legitimate private cable SMATV suppliers, I know, but there are too many multi-unit suppliers who are absolutely ignoring the law. These penalties should be applied through the Federal Court and should allow companies to take these people who are stealing to court.

I have a letter from Multi-Unit Cable Corporation which brings this to our attention. Mr. Ronald Bothwell said, "I visited many multi-unit properties on a weekly basis and unfortunately I can show you that not only do properties consistently proliferate satellite delivered American premium and specialty services by circumventing the coding process, but further, they do not bother to carry local Canadians off air broadcast services, such as Global, CBLFT or TV systems. Rather they install home satellite systems which are proliferating hundreds of American services, including HBO, Showtime, Cinemax, Playboy, Family Channel, ESPN, et cetera.

Less than six months ago, satellite dealers were scrambling to purchase old video cypher boards. It is a mechanism that can unlock the satellite cyphered code.

As I write this letter, a local distributor in Tillsonburg is selling what is commonly called the black box that defeats all scrambling methods without infringing on video cypher systems, on video cypher technologies. Each and every box sold defeats not only the scrambling system, but further, and more importantly, the Canadian Broadcasting System itself.

Under this you will have the right to charge for committing an offence and it will be subject to summary conviction. In fact, we go on to even further convictions of a stronger nature for this signal theft, this piracy, these unlawful black box decoders that take the encrypted signals and make them available to people. Many of these people do not even know that they are using an illegal system.

Satellite trade magazines report monthly the progress of this bill because they are very concerned. I am regularly in contact with the CRTC, with the culture and communications department, and most, if not all, our Canadian pay and specialty programmers. The common comment to the signal theft problem is that they need this bill. If we do not pass this bill, if we can defeat this bill, or if this minister would listen a little bit and make the proper amendments, then I would not have to bring forward my private member's bill.

Mr. Milliken: Use his head.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, there is a very serious issue out there. There is a very serious problem.

I have some interesting figures here coming from the remarks of the vice president and general manager of Alacom Pay Television, who spoke to the B.C. and Yukon regional cable people at a luncheon in Vancouver on Thursday, October 18. He said: "We have seen the growth of a TVRO industry that is totally unregulated and untaxed. In spite of the fact that it competes with your industry, that is the broadcasters and the cable people, for subscribers or viewers, it continues to make absolutely no contribution whatsoever toward cultural and industrial objectives that must be supported by licensees".

This industry has now begun to speak about itself as an important part of the Canadian broadcasting system. I recall at a House of Commons committee the TVRO industry said that about two million Canadians watched their satellite system every night. There was no mention of the fact that more than 95 per cent of these viewers are using their satellite systems to watch programming that cannot be offered by licensed cable exhibitors to Canadians. There was no mention of the effect on the ratings and the bottom lines of licensed broadcasters. Broadcasters have watched helplessly as each year the BBM and Nielson surveys record the viewing habits of these two million Canadian households.

For example, in the Edmonton 1989 fall BBM ratings, a large number of respondents wrote in in their viewing of HBO and Showtime even though the American premium services were not even listed on the survey ballot. The survey showed that the total number of viewing hours dedicated to the United States premium services were just slightly less than the total viewing hours of licensed Canadian premium services.

We know what that does when it comes to selling advertising so that our broadcasters can produce proper Canadian programming. In total, the viewing habits of residents in these bulk buildings have deleted even basic service in favour of a menu of exclusively foreign satellite signals.

The government should be speaking to this issue.

Mr. Milliken: That's right.

Mrs. Finestone: It should make Canadians understand so that they can complain to the CRTC, understand why it is impossible for our broadcasters to perform the way they should perform. People go out, buy a $700 dish and a decoder from Sears or from one of the people who install these systems and then they just steal, steal, and steal the intellectual property of many American performers and certainly Canadian performers.

The result is that the TVRO industry announces that it now provides service to four or six million people, instead of the current two million. Just add up what the cost of this—

An hon. member: Time.

Mrs. Finestone: You don't like to hear the reality of what you are doing? Well, that is just too bad. It is a problem of a matter of balance, Mr. Speaker, and I think that we really must do something.

I therefore support the government's initiative in this area but if the bill does not pass my private member's bill will.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Milliken: They are quite useless.

Mrs. Blondin: Speechless and useless.

• (2100 )

Mrs. Finestone: What is so sad about all this is the fact that the government could have brought in this bill and these amendments by no later than the month of April. The broadcasters and the cable people would not have had to lose revenue because of the way the government has delayed this bill. It has expanded, and we have caused tremendous loss in this industry, particularly to pay-TV.

In this particular instance, we have another example of the fine stewardship of the government in the interests of keeping a Canadian broadcasting system. This amendment takes us back to the free trade agreement that was not supposed to touch culture. Culture was supposed to be exempt. We were not going to have anything that was going to hurt our cultural industries. Not much!

So many things are related to free trade. In this particular instance, we are talking about retransmission rights that were negotiated in the free trade agreement and were given to the government through Order in Council to determine the regulations that would set the fees that were to be paid through retransmission.

I am sure that everyone in the House and in TV land knows that cable has to pay close to $50 million to American intellectual property, because we did not use a proper definition. We avoided using the definition that the Americans are using, saving themselves millions and millions of unnecessary dollars flowing out in duplicate funds.

No one wants our creative artists, our intellectual property, and the people who produce, direct, create, think, and speak for us as Canadians not to get their just due. That is not the object. Its object was to throw away our money unnecessarily and diminish our own resources, because the government was so foolish in the way it defined retransmission rights. There are two tests on retransmission. They are the grade B contour plus 30 kilometres, and whether or not there is a significant local viewing that can be received off-air. That is called the local signal. That is the American definition, and that is what we left out.

It is just a shame, because the amount that we are paying out is over twice as much as American cable systems pay for the same thing. U.S. cable systems pay approximately 2 per cent of gross revenues to the copyright collectives. The copyright decision means for ourselves, here, that the Canadian cable systems will pay approximately 8 per cent of gross revenue to copyright holders.

It is like the spread on our money and why we have got such a growing debt. The government does not know how to manage. It is doing the same thing to our cable people, causing them all kinds of unnecessary costs.

Over 85 per cent of the money that is going out will go directly to U.S. copyright holders. Canadian copyright holders will receive only $7 million out of the $51 million collected from cable companies this year. That is going to go up. The Canadian cable consumer will eventually bear this expense. It is unfortunate that they will have to pay such a high price to the Americans in order to remit such a proportionately low amount to Canadian talent and copyright holders, because the government did such a rotten job in defining this whole bill.

I have a letter here from Mountain Cablevision, sent to me on November 26, which explains what is happening in this situation. It states, among other things, that this decision of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to copyright tariffs being imposed, would have the Canadian cable industry pay almost $51 million to retransmit distant television signals to subscribers.

> As a result of this decision, my own cable system will be faced with a royalty burden of over $330,000 per year for the next two years, after which the rates may increase. This amount is greater than our after tax profit for the last three years, as our company is in the midst of a major system rebuild in order to improve the technical quality of the cable service we provide to our customers. Mountain Cablevision is also in the process of expanding Cable TV service to less economic and sparsely populated rural areas in our vicinity.

This burden is absolutely unacceptable:

> We do not take issue with the principle of providing fair compensation to copyright holders. Do take issue with royalties which, on a per subscriber basis, will be more than double what American Cable Operators pay to retransmit distant signals.
> The Free Trade Agreement provides that distant signal copyright liability should be "equitable and non-discriminatory". The Copyright Act states that our liability should be "fair" and "equitable". We believe, however, that the Copyright Board's decision ignores both the spirit and the letter of these governing documents. For this reason we are asking for your support in our appeal of the decision.

> We wish to make it clear that this economic burden will have a significant impact upon the Cable Industry's financial health, and place many Cable companies, including ourselves—

—the small ones in particular—there are only about 10 or 12 biggies in the whole field, so the small ones are really going to suffer. He says that placing them—> —in a position to apply and be successful in obtaining a rate increase based upon economic need. Many cable companies, including Mountain Cablevision, are presently in the process of preparing these applications.

> The CRTC regulations stipulate that all subscribers must be notified of the components and reason for any rate increase.
> The result of the pass-through to subscribers of these copyright fees (over $9 per year) will place Cable TV beyond the reach of some senior citizens and low income families.
> This no doubt will result in tremendous subscriber outcry which we would prefer to avoid.

Furthermore, I think it is going to involve a lot of disconnects.

The implication is that they are going to have to cut their staff and freeze new hiring. Based on the American formula, they are going to have to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. The money that it will have to pay for copyright will come from the company, reducing the rebuilding of its system. The cable system is presently a full-channel capacity. It cannot improve that because it is going to have an impact on its copyright payments.

Mountain Cablevision states:

> It will impact on our bottom line to make us eligible for a rate increase due to special economic circumstances.

It is ridiculous if it has to go to that extent.

If 85 per cent of this money goes directly to U.S. copyright holders, the Canadian copyright holder will receive only $7 million out of this $51 million. Unfortunately, it will have a very deleterious effect on the whole industry.

I would ask that the copyright decision be reviewed once again. The two yardsticks of measure that are used by the Americans in this instance should be applied in Canada. Let the government, through its cabinet, take the responsibility for what it has done.

It would very much like to see itself as the wonders of the television industry of the Canadian broadcasting system for all the wonderful things it has done. Well, much of it has been smoke and mirrors. That is what we have been talking about here today. It is unfortunate that the silent crew across the floor has not seen fit to defend the minister's bill. If I were the minister, I would feel very badly.

I have been honoured by the support and collaboration of the members on this side of the House who have participated actively to explain to the minister, to the government, and to the people of Canada, particularly in this industry, why changes had to be made. However, the minister has zipped the lips of all members of his side of the House. It has been a disservice to the Canadian broadcasting system and to Canadian subscribers. I do believe that the government should feel a great sense of discomfort for its behaviour. I would say, shame on the government.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, when I rose in the House on March 5, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs what steps he had taken to obtain a guarantee that, subsequent to German unification, post World War II borders between Germany and Poland would be respected.

Since that day Chancellor Kohl has offered assurances that seem to be satisfactory to Poland. For those assurances that were very important to Poland, I would like to congratulate Mr. Kohl, not only on his conciliatory position, but also on his decisive victory on Sunday, December 2 which will allow him an opportunity to see the historic unification through a successful transition.

For all the internal turmoil and economic challenge of restructuring that some experts are speculating will cost approximately $1 trillion, Germany has still offered some $13 billion of assistance to the Soviet Union this year, and is said to be ready to extend credits to Poland in context of a general framework treaty expected to be signed earlier next year.

This is all happening amidst the movement towards a new Europe of 1992. In time for Europe 1992, each east European country will be expected to get involved, to contribute, and to be an active member of the new community. For this they are going to need the support from the west.

Last week I attended a conference on the changing Soviet Union where, among other distinguished speakers, we had the honour to hear Mr. Brzezinski, a former adviser to President Carter, speak to the state of the economy of the Soviet Union. I must say that the one positive statement he had to make on the situation was on the creation of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Mr. Brzezinski felt that this was a first sign that the west was treating the economic reality of eastern Europe seriously.

Yet, Canada's commitment to the bank remains confusing. We know what the figures are in terms of our monetary contribution. We know what our contribution is in terms of our proportion of the total commitment. What we do not know is the extent of our commitment. We throw a few words and a few dollars around hoping that at least our gestures will keep the real issues at bay.

In his speech at the conference I referred to earlier, the Secretary of State for External Affairs talked about the bilateral relationship launched by the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union last November. He talked of formal treaties for more co-operation. He talked of less restrictive trade agreements. He talked of environmental co-operation in the Arctic. All these initiatives have been talked about at length. In fact, that is all that has happened to date, talk and more talk about the talk.

We have yet to hear how these initiatives will come about when we face budget cutbacks to almost all our programs. We have yet to hear how they will be followed through with the limited and, in fact, decreasing budget of the Department of External Affairs.

The paradox in the government is woefully apparent when one reads the text of some of the speeches given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On one hand, he offers no real support. On the other hand, he uses, and I must add in this case, appropriate dramatic language to describe the dire needs of east European countries. In speaking about the Soviet Union at the conference, for example, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said: "The Soviet Union is at a profoundly important point. That point can be a turning point or a breaking point. Opportunity is present, but so too, is danger. It is Canada's profound interest that opportunity become accomplishment—".

Let us take the opportunity. Let us take the bull by the horns and follow through with our commitments. For a start, how about considering the suggestion made by the vice-president of Barclays Bank of Canada—U.S.S.R. Business Council's first annual meeting. Charles Attard suggests that the risks of doing business in the Soviet Union are getting worse. There is a general consensus about this statement. Instead of throwing bits and pieces here and there, let us consider joint action with the federal government and the Export Development Corporation. Make it easier for banks to invest by simply insuring their investments. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this makes better business sense.

The problem with this government is that it lacks creativity, it lacks the political will, and its commitment is weak.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): In reply to my colleague for Parkdale—High Park, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer him to page 87 of the Hansard of March 5, 1990. Not to take up the time of the House, I will not repeat what was said then, but that is where he will find the Secretary of State's reply. May I take this opportunity to remind him that the unification of the two Germanys took part on October 3. It was the happy ending to the 2 plus 4 negotiations which took place in Moscow on September 12 which brought the four powers to forego their rights over Germany and give it full sovereignty. Previously, in June 1990, the Parliaments of both the Federal Republic of Germany and the Democratic Republic of Germany had passed a resolution which recognized the existence of the Oder-Neisse border. The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Poland had taken part in the 2 plus 4 negotiations concerning the borders with Poland and the conditions connected with a treaty in that regard.

The treaty between Poland and the united Germany was signed in Warsaw on November 14. It was to be ratified in due time by both parliaments. Canada is very pleased with the conclusion of the November 14 treaty relating to the German-Polish border, as well as with the success of the German union which took place calmly, in consultation with all interested parties, including Poland and Canada, and in full respect of international law.

HOUSING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, on October 29, 1990, I rose in this House to ask a question of the Minister of State for Housing regarding the federal co-operative housing program in Canada. When I rose in the House,in October to address the need for changes in the income qualification rule of the co-op program, I raised the issue of MPs such as the NDP member for Trinity—Spadina and the NDP member for Edmonton East who are living in federally-subsidized housing. The fact that well paid politicians are living in government-subsidized housing illustrates the urgent need for changes in the housing program.

When the non-profit co-operative housing program was introduced to Canada about 25 years ago, assistance was associated with rent-geared-to-income subsidies for low-income households who were unable to find affordable housing. Studies show that 15 per cent of Canadians must rely on some form of government assistance to meet their shelter needs. I am talking of families, of women with children, the elderly, and the handicapped who, through no fault of their own, do not have decent affordable housing. Many are paying 40, 50, 60 and even 75 per cent of their income each month for rent and heat.

There is an enormous demand for affordable housing. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation estimates that the demand for co-op units is between 164,000 and 400,000 renter households. Furthermore, there are over 40,000 names on co-op waiting lists across Canada, and co-ops have virtually no vacancies. Yet there are examples of well-to-do Canadians living in subsidized housing units, shutting out those most in need. High income earners should not be taking advantage of these funds. For example, the NDP member for Edmonton East is a resident of the Sundance Housing Co-op of Edmonton.

Sundance was given a federal cash grant of $280,000 when built and enjoys a special preferential mortgage rate of 8 per cent for 50 years, well below the current rate.

The member for Edmonton East shares the five bedroom apartment with four other people. The member's share of rent is less than $200 a month. There is a list of more than 30 people waiting to get into the Sundance development.

Does the leader of the New Democratic Party approve of her NDP members depriving lower income Canadians from much needed shelter? Would Premier Bob Rae approve? Would Bob White or Shirley Carr approve?

In Toronto, where more than 17,000 people are on lists waiting for public housing, the NDP member for Trinity-Spadina lives in subsidized housing.

According to the research compiled in the greater Toronto area by the Ontario Ministry of Housing, an activist member of the NDP is almost nine times more likely to live in a co-op than any other renter. NDP supporters appear to take generous advantage of the very government housing programs they fight for on behalf of the poor.

Surely politicians who earn $88,000 a year, with $26,000 of that being tax-free, should not be taking advantage of the federal Co-operative Housing Program, as well as taking units away from those in greater need.

All federal members of Parliament are barred from personally participating in any federal programs. The members from Edmonton East and Trinity-Spadina, as public officials, are benefiting through low-cost housing resulting from public funds. I firmly believe that these public officials must comply with the legislation which bars federal MPs from participating in federal government programs.

Co-op housing serves low and moderate income families who cannot afford home ownership. It is deplorable that with such an obvious demand for affordable housing, politicians such as the named NDP members are taking space from the needy.

I understand that one of the arguments in favour of high income earners in the co-ops is to promote social integration. In fact, a CMHC evaluation notes:

> —that co-operatives had been highly successful in achieving income-mixing without polarisation of income groups. Mixes of family types, age, race and people with various backgrounds were perceived as healthy and a strength of co-operative living.

However, I believe that this type of social integration can still be accomplished even if the high end income earners, those making over $60,000 a year, were denied occupancy in federally supported housing programs.

The latest figures show that 65 per cent of the households currently living under the co-operative program have incomes below $30,000 a year and 31.3 per cent of the households have incomes between $30,000 and $60,000. Only 3.7 per cent of the households have incomes in excess of $60,000.

The point I wish to make is that the social integration which co-op housing achieves through income-mixing would still occur if the high-end income earners were dropped from the program. The fact is, only 3.7 per cent of the households have incomes over $60,000, hardly a substantial figure, a figure which the NDP members trying to justify their occupancy would like us to believe contributes greatly to social integration.

I am certain that by dropping high income earners from federal co-op housing programs, social integration will not be threatened. Instead, it will help alleviate the shortage of affordable housing we are facing in this country. A 40,000 name waiting list speaks for itself.

I also point out that the middle income group, those making between $30,000 and $60,000, now occupy 31.3 per cent of co-op housing and this rather high percentage would still ensure the goal of mixed income is met.

I want to make clear I am not advocating strictly low income public housing. We must get away from the concept of the old poverty ridden public housing ghettos of the 1950s and 1960s. However, there needs to be a cut-off point. Is it right to have high income earners taking away availability in co-op units from families in greater need? Surely politicians should not abuse and take advantage of a federally subsidized housing program.

I very much hope that the minister, who is going to reply shortly, will take this issue under control and bring in some type of legislation that would bar politicians at any level of government from participating in co-op development.

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a concern which is on the minds of a great many Canadians these days. The hon. member is not alone in raising this concern. Mr. Speaker, you may be aware that a great number of people have been quoted with respect to this issue. One of them, for instance, a retiree by the name of Freddie Caplan has said: "Get them out now and let the needy in".

Another resident of public housing, Gail Grieve, has been quoted as saying: "Evicting the politicians is not enough. They should be heavily fined. Retroactive back rent might be a good idea, too.

An unemployed man by the name of Mark Carter said: "Throw them out and put me in there—there's too many homeless people on the street".

Those are examples of some of the comments that have been coming to me with respect to this issue. I might say as well that I have also heard people suggest that even the co-op housing movement itself might be a lot better off and that there could very well be a greater groundswell of public support for co-op housing if all politicians were in fact banned from co-operative housing.

I think it is important at the same time for you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member and all of us, all Canadians, to understand that the federal government has been formally involved now in various co-operative housing programs since 1973. Prior to 1973 there was, of course, co-op housing that was being built. It was inspired to a large extent in the maritimes by St. Francis Xavier University. At that time it was on the basis of self-help and self-financing and there was no subsidization by the public or by Canadian taxpayers.

However, since 1973 we have had three separate programs that have been assisted by the public at the federal level, two of them under the previous Liberal government and one of them under the present government. The first two generated some 45,000 or more units of co-op housing and the most recent one, some 13,000 of co-op housing. In each of those there was an income mix, as the hon. member has referred to.

In the earlier two programs, there was only a minimum of some 15 per cent of those units that were targeted for low-income people. In the present program up to 50 per cent of the units can be targeted to low income people. I am sure that the hon. member and all Canadians realize that it is very difficult to change the rules in the middle of the game for programs that have already been put in place. It is very difficult to put a ban on politicians, very difficult to enforce rules retroactively.

However, I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to assure the hon. member and all Canadians that as I go forward with recommendations to the cabinet very shortly, I will be taking all of those concerns into very serious consideration.

CAMECO

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased, I suppose, to be able to rise in the House and pose again a question I raised on November 21 to the Minister of Energy. However, I have to say that I am not pleased with the fact that this is probably the fifth or sixth time that I have raised this particular question in the House of Commons and I still do not have a satisfactory answer.

The question I asked on that date had to do with the spill of radioactive waste into Wallaston Lake about a year ago, in fact more than a year, the first week of November 1989. What happened since then has been indicative of a lot that is wrong with our whole environmental process in this country. Certainly, we still have not seen the facts come to light in this case. The reason I asked that question was because Cameco, the operating company, on that day pleaded guilty in court in Saskatoon. It changed its plea from not guilty to guilty with regard to provincial environmental charges that were laid in the province of Saskatchewan.

The reason I raise that question is, first of all, the minister turned down our request for a public inquiry, so there was no way the issues would be laid before the public in a public forum through the mechanism of an inquiry. There had been federal charges laid but the company pleaded guilty to those as well. When the company pleaded guilty to provincial charges, it meant there was no longer any mechanism whatsoever whereby the important questions that had been raised along the way could be raised again.

I did regret that day the fact that I had listened to some colleagues before whom I had raised the question of how I should pose my question. I wanted to ask, since the minister turned down an inquiry, how we get the answers to all these other questions. Instead, I asked the question in the form of these questions: Would the minister reconsider an inquiry? Of course, the minister simply said no to that, leaving the question dangling. I should have asked: How will we ever find out what was the role of the regulators in this fiasco? What impact will this industry have on northern people and their environment? Does the 1946 legislation which governs this industry have any relevance in today's world? I think those are the key questions here.

I do not particularly care how we get answers to those questions as long as we get them because, with respect to the role of the regulators, we have heard a lot said about the role of the company but very little about the role of the AECB under whose jurisdiction the inspection of this facility fell during the period of time that this whole safety system was unravelling.

It raises a whole series of conflict of interest questions because there is a perception in this country, if not a reality, that the industry, the regulators and the government are all too close together, that there is an interchange of personnel and ideas.

I do not want to call into question the integrity of the minister. Even he is in a peculiar situation in that both Cameco, the company in this case, and the AECB, the regulator, answer to the same minister.

Then there is the question of the impact on northern people in their environment. That question has never been satisfactorily addressed although the minister indicated to the chief of the Wollaston band that it had. The chief wrote back and the minister, in fact, conceded that this huge question, which is before the Supreme Court in other forms of the role of aboriginal peoples in the control of the environment, has not been addressed.

There is the fact that we are proceeding under a 1946 act of Parliament, the Atomic Energy Control Act. Certainly technology has evolved a long, long way in our ability to monitor technology since 1946. In fact, the question remains, what are we going to do with this obsolete regulatory regime that we have in this country? The people want answers to these questions. It is not just me.

I would like to quote from the Prince Albert Daily Herald of November 28, where it states in an editorial: "Ray Funk is correct over uranium probe". This is a Thomson paper, not a house organ of my local constituency organization or anything like that. It states:

> Ray Funk is absolutely correct in saying there should be a public inquiry into the safety of uranium mining in this country.
> Funk has been pressing Energy Minister Jake Epp for the inquiry since the accident. Epp, so far, has refused, leaving Funk and many other people frustrated by the lack of answers to a number of questions.
> Funk's has been a lonely voice in Ottawa on this issue. However, the MP should know he carries the support of much of his constituency, in particular its northern reaches, in this fight.

I am saying to you, Mr. Speaker, and pleading to the parliamentary secretary, through you, to please answer the questions. What is the role of the regulators? What is the impact on northern people? When will we receive new legislation on this very important industry? We need these answers. People are demanding them and I hope that the parliamentary secretary will be forthcoming.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for giving me this opportunity again on behalf of the government to answer the question recently raised in the House by the hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River.

As the hon. member reported, Cameco pleaded guilty on November 21 to the charge under section 17(a) of the Saskatchewan Environmental Management and Protection Act. It was alleged that Cameco had allowed the discharge of mine water without a permit in circumstances where there was a reasonable possibility that the discharge could result in a change in the water quality.

The maximum fine under this legislation is $1 million. The prosecutor for the provincial Crown recommended that a fine of $50,000 be given. The judge reserved his decision until Tuesday, November 27, 1990. On that date, the provincial court judge Albert Lavoie announced his decision to impose a fine of $50,000 on Cameco relating to the charge to which Cameco had pleaded guilty.

The hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River has repeated his call for a public inquiry into uranium mining in Canada since the prosecution of Cameco. He says that there is no longer a forum to answer the remaining questions on the issue. What question, I ask, Mr. Speaker?

The situation is very clear. It is clear that fortunately there has been no environmental damage as a result of the Rabbit Lake mine water spill. Reports prepared by Saskatchewan Environment and by Saskatchewan Research Council have each come to this conclusion, as did the Atomic Energy Control Board after it completed its investigation of the spill. The people have their answer.

The role of the regulators is clear. They investigated the incident, laid charges and followed up by reviewing their licensing and inspection practices. Follow-up action included the frequency of inspections, adding more task to the inspections such as checking the log book of the company operators and increasing the lines of communication with members of the public, especially with the natives of the Hatchet Lake band.

In addition, the Atomic Energy Control Board has recognized the need to update the 1946 Atomic Energy Control Act. As part of the revision to update this act, consideration would be given to increasing the fines and penalties to make them comparable to those in current legislation such as the federal Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

Legal procedures have made it clear that Cameco was negligent in executing certain operations related to the protection of the environment. The AECB instructed Cameco to clean up the spill; the company has spent several millions in carrying out clean-up operations. In addition, the AECB instructed the company to install a new alarm system to detect any spill of mine water and to train its staff in proper inspection practices.

With regard to the hon. member's request for a public inquiry into uranium mining, I re-emphasize that in view of the several public inquiries already conducted on uranium mining in Canada, of the negligible environmental impact of the Rabbit Lake spill, of the tightening of licensing and inspection practices of regulators, and of the opportunities for public input into the Environmental Assessment Review Process for any new uranium mining facilities, the government still considers that another public inquiry into uranium mining would not be in the best interest of Canada at the present time.

No, the minister has not changed his mind.

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government response to 29 petitions.

STRIKING

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the 57th report of the Striking Committee.

This report deals with the membership of legislative committees and, pursuant to Standing Order 113(1), upon presentation such reports are deemed adopted.

PETITIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table an important petition today, signed by several dozens of Canadians, objecting strongly to the government's intentions to impose the GST on books.

Hope springs eternal with all Canadians that the government will come to its senses and abandon its project to tax reading. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

These petitioners and I would plead with the government to come to its senses and to not tax reading.

An hon. member: Let's do it now.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing order 36, I, too, have the honour and duty to table more petitions from Canadians protesting against the government's intention to tax magazines, books and newspapers through their GST legislation, presently being debated in the Senate. We hope that is as far as the bill will get and that it will be defeated.

The petitioners are from remote areas in Saskatchewan where reading is very important. These petitioners call upon the government to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, today I stand to table petitions signed by residents of Toronto, Ontario against the proposed goods and services tax to be applied to books and magazines.

The petitioners feel that this will make the industry very hard-pressed and that the dissemination of Canadian literature, in particular, to Canadians will be far costlier. It will prevent education and it goes against all principles of democracy and our own principles of educating our own people.

I would ask that the government please reconsider its stand and alter its goods and services tax or, perhaps, not pass it.

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, thank you for your kindness. I must say I appreciate your smiles of encouragement. As a former journalist, you will agree it is an absolute aberration to tax newspapers or any reading matter, whether we are talking about Canadians with a good education or even worse, Canadians who are trying to learn to read.

I got in touch with people in the Kitchener area, where this petition was circulated, and I spoke to a member of the library committee in Brantford, Ontario, who reminded me that now fines for overdue books would be taxed and explained that this would make the system very complicated. It is already a problem to recover overdue textbooks and books, but if we now have to collect a tax on fines—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. I appreciate the hon. member's kindness, but speaking objectively, I must remind him that tabling of petitions should be more or less succinct, without engaging in debate. The hon. member for Carleton—Gloucester, very briefly, so that he can finish his petition.

Mr. Bellemare: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your kindness, and in concluding, I want to say that the obligation to collect a tax on fines for overdue books will be incredibly complex and a disastrer for Canada's libraries.

[English]

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to rise, in accordance with the relevant standing order, to present a petition from 49 Canadians from across the country.

They feel that after 123 years of Confederation we have had some strange taxes in the country, but this is the first time we have ever contemplated taxing education and culture which are the corner-stones of democracy.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to abolish the GST but, if that is not possible, at least to abolish the GST on reading materials.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition containing several dozens of names which were very readily attained by a constituent of mine, Mrs. Margot Downing of Woodstock.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Ottawa and Hamilton in their applications to obtain an National Hockey League franchise.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the hon. member for Mount Royal, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling a petition in this House from thousands and thousands of Canadians who want to ensure that reading is not taxed, and who humbly pray and call upon the government to read these petitions, if it can, before they are taxed as well. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I hope this petition will have a decisive impact on the government and cause it to reverse its decision.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to urge this government to give serious reconsideration to the tax on reading. I say to the government as the thousands and thousands of petitions continue to flow in that it really has to start to listen to the people. We have set up all kinds of commissions so that we know what the people think. Well, here is a perfect example. They want the Government of Canada not to tax books, to apply a zero rate of tax to magazines, books and newspapers and to exclude them from the GST. The dissemination of the printed word as a cornerstone of democracy, culture, and education in a literate and productive society will be negatively affected by the GST.

I am reading. I hope you are listening on the other side. I would reaffirm the historic principles they say are embodied in the tax-free status of the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations. The petition is signed by hundreds of petitioners, and I shall send copies to the members across the floor, particularly the ministers, so they can see that it was read fidèlement.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I too rise pursuant to Standing Order 36. It is an honour, duty and privilege to present to this House a petition certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. These four petitions contain the signatures of over 100 concerned Canadians from the constituencies of Kitchener, Cambridge, and Guelph. In part of this petition we have heard about the tax the government wants to impose on the printed word. But the interesting part at the beginning of the petition where it states that the Government of Canada has seen fit since Confederation and without hiatus to apply a zero rate of tax to magazines, books and newspapers, and now proposes to include them in the goods and services tax is totally shameful.

These petitioners call upon Parliament, but in particular the government, to not tax the printed word.

URANIUM MINING

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and duty pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present this petition signed by people from communities in Saskatchewan such as La Loche and Saskatoon, people from Winnipeg, the Northwest Territories; Yellowknife, Rankin Inlet, and Lake Harbour.

These people are not happy with the answers so far with regard to the spill of radioactive waste water at Wollaston Lake last November. They think the major questions have not been addressed. Therefore, they ask the Parliament of Canada to immediately convene a comprehensive independent public inquiry into uranium mining in Saskatchewan in Northern Canada and to effectively involve aboriginal peoples and northerners in this inquiry and provide them with the resources to do so.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which I would like to present pursuant to Standing Order 36. It is against the taxing of books and urges the government to abandon the GST, at least with regard to books, but preferably to abandon the GST altogether. Why stop there? Let us go all the way.

I am pleased to present this petition in view of the fact that the Minister of Supply and Services is listening attentively and I know that he cares about people who are functionally illiterate and who need to improve their education. He has expressed an interest in that issue in the past and I know, of course, that he will want to associate himself with me and other members of Parliament who want the GST to be removed from books.

As I said, why stop at books? Why not just abandon the GST altogether? It is a lot simpler.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to present a petition. I would like to read it. It is a short petition addressed to the honourable House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled.

The petitioners indicate in the recitals that the Government of Canada has seen fit since Confederation, without hiatus, to apply a zero rate of tax to magazines, books and newspapers and now proposes to include them in the goods and services tax.

The petitioners go on to say that whereas uninhibited dissemination of the printed word as a cornerstone of democracy, culture, education and a literate and productive society will be negatively affected by the GST application, wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I was able to read this because while I was growing up there was no tax on books, there was no tax on reading. Future generations of Canadians might not be able to stand in this House of Commons to read because this government is hell-bent on taxing reading. It ought to be ashamed of itself and it ought to withdraw the GST immediately.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 and present another petition, giving the earlier intervention of the Minister of Supply and Services. I am particularly pleased to note that this petition contains signatures from Dunrobin, Woodlawn, Kanata and various other community names with which you, Mr. Speaker, will be very familiar.

This petition is based on the fundamental belief that to enjoy one's free participation in a democratic society, access to information, knowledge and understanding are essential, and that the GST is simply another death blow on top of cutting grants to women's organizations to disseminate information and cutting grants to native broadcasting and newspapers to disseminate information.

The zero tax rate on reading is a democratic measure and the petitioners ask the government to return the zero rate to reading materials.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the persons who signed this petition must be cheering on the valiant Liberal senators who are fighting the government's goods and services tax in the other place. The senators are having a tough go of it having to sit night and day, but they are doing their best in the face of insuperable odds that this government has made by stacking the Senate with a bunch of Tory hacks.

What I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is these petitioners have signed this petition objecting to the tax on books and the printed word. They are opposed to that aspect of the goods and services tax.

I find it intriguing that I have not heard one petition in support of the goods and services tax presented in this House by one of the members opposite, and none against either. They obviously have been told by the government House leader that they are not allowed to present such petitions. Therefore, it falls on us on this side of the House to defend the interests of these thousands and thousands of Canadians who object to this tax and have signed this petition asking Parliament to reject the goods and services tax.

CHALLENGE GRANTS

Question No. 385—Mr. Robinson:

1. Since its inception, has money been given for Challenge Grants in British Columbia by the Department of Employment and Immigration, and if so (a) what amount (b) which electoral districts received funds?

2. For each electoral district receiving funds, what was the (a) total amount (b) name of organizations receiving funds (c) amount given to each organization?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): 1. Yes, Challenge grants have been given to the British Columbia region. Grants through the Challenge program are provided through its Business Drive for Jobs component.

a) $44,780

b) Nanaimo–Cowichan, Richmond, Vancouver–Centre, Delta and Vancouver–East

2. a, b, c)

| Electoral District | $ | Organization |
|---|---|---|
| Nanaimo–Cowichan | $5,600 | Duncan–Cowichan Chamber of Commerce |
| Richmond | $4,800 | Richmond Chamber of Commerce |
| Vancouver–Centre | $5,680 | Pacific National Exhibition |
| Delta | $15,000 | Delta Chamber of Commerce* |
| Vancouver–East | $13,700 | Kiwassa Neighbourhood House |

* Project to begin January, 1991.

 Proposal withdrawn by organization after EIC approval of funds.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The question as enumerated by the parliamentary secretary has been answered.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

EUROPEAN BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-88, an act to provide for the membership of Canada in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to participate in this bill. I do want to thank my colleague from Northumberland who, on Friday, when this bill was introduced gave our party's response and our willingness to support the bill in principle.

I notice that the bill was introduced on Friday by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I do not know what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs has to do with the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Again this shows the lack of commitment that this government has to many of the proposals put forth in this House.

Although we support this bill in principle, there are many questions that need to be answered before we would consider full and unequivocal support for Canada's participation in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. We have yet to be told who will be making the final decisions, who will be accountable to the contributing countries, what Canada's role will be in terms of our contribution to the bank, where the money will come from, how this money will fit in with other programs directed at Eastern Europe and whether our contribution will affect our already deficient aid in the Third World.

Yesterday and today we have the Prime Minister of Latvia in Ottawa and tomorrow we will have the President of Lithuania in Ottawa. I am pleased that this time the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are not afraid to meet these people. They still have not clarified whether they will be meeting these people officially or just as parliamentarians; I hope it is in an official capacity. These countries will be asking if they will be able to benefit from this bank. I notice in the bill in annex "A" the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is listed under recipient countries category "c" but we have no clarification whether the republics will be able to negotiate directly with the bank or will they have to go and negotiate everything through the Supreme Soviet in Moscow? When the world finally wakes up and recognizes that the three Baltic states should be given back their independence which they did have and which was taken away from them illegally, what will be their status in relationship to this bank because this is the kind of assistance that these countries can use.

These questions ought to be answered at the outset of our involvement so that mistakes that have been made are not repeated and changes can be made that would improve the over-all effectiveness of this initiative. We should be fielding questions and inviting comments from organizations and individuals who are already involved in ventures in Eastern Europe or those who at least have some knowledge of the cultural and social differences between east and west. We have those resources right here in Canada and although the Secretary of State keeps referring to Canadians of Eastern European origin in his press releases, we have yet to see any of the input taken seriously.

I should clarify at this point that I am not referring to those officials at External Affairs who carry out the minister's instructions. Considering what they have to deal with, they do an excellent job. I am referring to the vague rhetoric that these people get as directives, rhetoric that they somehow have to translate and finely juggle without additional budgets and without additional personnel into real programs. Where is the commitment?

This is not the first time that Canada has joined an organization simply to get the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs the headlines. Much fanfare surrounded our membership in the Organization of American States. What do we hear about that now? Absolutely nothing. There was no consultation prior to the decision and some nominal moneys were spent on joining. What have we done with our membership? Are we making an impact? Are we making a difference? Are we playing a more effective role in Latin America and the Caribbean since we joined? No we are not. And if we are, we certainly are not hearing about it. Canadians are not hearing about it. We are simply cutting budgets across the board and rendering the department impotent in every area for the sake of a few headlines. I wish this was not the case, but I am afraid if one looks at the confusion that already surrounds the existing programs for development aid for Eastern Europe, it is undeniable that this government is not interested in making a difference.

Look at what we have done to our Official Development Assistance. Not only have we cut back on our prior commitments, but we have imposed on the remaining funds conditions that are starving whole populations.

We impose structural adjustment. We insist they balance their books at the expense of food, shelter and health care. We tell them to modernize, to industrialize and to export. Then we have the audacity to tell them that we do not like what they are doing to the environment and threaten to cut back even more.

We suggest as an afterthought the concept of sustainable development and expect attitudinal and program changes overnight. Maybe we in the west are learning that this type of attitude is not working and that we are at the very heart of the cause of the increased poverty and political instability in these countries.

We cannot afford to make those same mistakes again, but if we look at the mentions made regarding basic human rights and sustainable development, we find only passing reference somewhere in the heart of the text versus being built right into an uncompromisable condition.

I know the presenter of this bill stressed how it would cover sustainable development in all transactions, but why was that not built into the purpose of the bill? Why is it hidden in section 1(7), one little phrase pertaining to sustainable development?

What we need is commitment. As is obvious to each one of us, that requires not only money but foresight, well thought out strategies, and objectives. Most of all we need follow through. How long will this bank be in operation? During its existence, do we envision its role expanding to embrace the co–ordination of the various aid programs?

Recently in this House we debated the future role of the Conference for Security and Co–operation in Europe. We talked about the scope of the conference and how it included, among other things, an economic dimension. How will we avoid a duplication of the role carried out by the CSCE, the OECD, the IMF, and the World Bank?

Maybe the bank should be incorporated with the conference. It would seem that in this way duplication may be avoided. In fact a central forum for discussion and responsibility may clear up some of the confusion caused by other initiatives of other economic institutions.

I cannot help but feel that a streamlined, managed process would be much more effective not only in directing the funds, but in monitoring, evaluating and, if necessary, reconstructing aspects that may prove inefficient.

These types of suggestions should be made at the committee level, before the decision for joining the bank is made. I am sure many members of this House, especially members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, would make very constructive suggestions.

Ideally those suggestions would then be tabled in a report to the government, which would receive serious consideration and would subsequently be acted upon as we as a country consider joining this bank, but that is of course in a perfect world, especially where this government is concerned.

This government seldom consults with Canadians before making major policy decisions. In the event that it would ask for opinions from the public, it has been purely for political reasons, not paying any heed to the recommendations made.

I would like to conclude by urging the government, at the very least, to commit to this House that forums and round tables will be held on a regular basis so that there can be ongoing discussions to try to put some sense into all the various initiatives that we are involved with in Eastern and central Europe, hopefully with the result that there will be some real benefit from the Canadian contribution to the bank.

As I said, our party supports this bill in principle but, before giving it final passage, we would like many of the questions raised by my colleague from Northumberland on Friday, raised by me, and then raised further by my colleague from Mount Royal to be answered. I hope, unlike yesterday in the debate on Bill C–40 when the minister refused to get off his butt and speak to his own bill, that today the government will stand up and participate in the debate on Bill C–88. If it does not, we should then pull out of all activities in central and Eastern Europe and not make false promises to the people who are trying to get on their feet, people who have changed from communist forms of government to democratic forms of government, people whose economies for 50 years have been downtrodden and now want to make it. They do not want handouts. They want to become self–sufficient.

If the entire western world looks seriously at a proposal such as this bank, I think we can help the economic recovery in the Soviet Union and in central and Eastern Europe come to fruition much more quickly. And who will be the beneficiaries? Every person on this globe.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Shefford on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I was so impressed by the speech my hon. colleague made that I would call for a quorum count. I note there are not only ministers, but also members missing on the government side.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): There being a quorum, I shall now give the floor to the hon. member for Mount Royal.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am really quite pleased to rise this morning to speak to a very creative and innovative approach to enabling the newly emerging democracies of Europe to flourish and grow. To do so is really in the self–interest of Canada at the same as it expands and expounds on our humanitarian interest in the growth and development of this area.

There is a strong linkage between this bank and Canada's help and Canadian long–term interests with those of the newly emerging democracies to see them succeed and succeed well in the gigantic task of rebuilding toward tomorrow.

One of the things that Canada and these newly emerging democratic societies will have to take into account is that they will have to be able to compete effectively with the newly industrialized countries of the world, particularly Korea, Singapore, and Taiwan.

I have been privileged to be involved at the international level through the interparliamentary union with many of these countries in terms of policy decisions and political, economic, social and cultural developments. Those acronyms have become part of the lexicon of language to those of us who have an interest, not only in Canada but Canada's relationship with the rest of the world, the NEDS and the NICs of the world.

If that language creeps into the remarks I am about to make, I hope it will be quite clear that the NEDS are the newly emerging democratic societies in Europe, not to say that we are not interested in those that are happening in Latin America, Africa, Asia, and the other parts of the world. Of course the NICs are the newly industrialized countries of the world.

I also want to point out that I was particularly privileged to be on a private trip to Germany to visit my son in northern Germany, in Wolfsburg and Brauschweig, where he works with the Volkswagen people. The day I landed in Germany was the day the wall fell. I can only express my impression of the euphoria in that nation. I happened with my husband to get on a train.

By the way, we should only have such a wonderful train system. If we had not broken down our VIA Rail system, we could all have enjoyed the incredible transportation facilities that linked that country from east to west and north to south. It is true that one may compare quite well the size of that country, but if each one of our districts had that infrastructure we might be better served too.

Mr. Blais: And the population too?

Mrs. Finestone: It is too bad the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is so sensitive this morning. Go out and have a sweet cup of coffee.

Mr. Dick: He is not here.

Mrs. Finestone: Are you supply and services? He might be sweetened by this whole process.

Mr. Dick: You don't know much. You're cantankerous.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Dick, I do not know what portfolio you have, but go and have a cup of coffee and a little sweet sugar. It might help your personality this morning.

I was talking about taking this train with my husband. One of the things that was so personal—and I think it is so important to recognize it—was the impact of the breaking down of that wall.

There was a gentleman sitting beside us who was coming from Zurich, Switzerland. He was quite agitated and quite excited at the same time. He kept saying: "We've got to see where the wire starts, where the wall starts". As we were looking out of the window going north of Frankfurt, we could see that high barbed wire fence. We could see the towers with manpower overlooking these particular parts of the German landscape. Just the sense of the separation of people and families was difficult for me. This was my first trip to Germany and I had some personal problems, but I also had a sense of participation in history unfolding before our eyes.

Tears sprang to this man's eyes as he looked at that frontier. He said: "I am going to go to visit my family in Hamburg. I have had a call from them. I haven't seen them in 40 years". I could sense the emotion of this man.

Then, when I arrived in Brauschweig the following day with my son, daughter-in-law and grandchildren, we went into the centre of town. There were these cars, the Treblinkas I think they call them, little trebs, coming through by the hundreds from this northeast corner. We went to see the border crossing point and could see this huge wall that extended for hundreds and hundreds of yards and then the barbed wire fence that was linking this place. I chatted with the guards on both sides. We could see friendship between the two sides, even though they had been enemies just the day before. It was a very moving experience.

I went back just this past month to revisit for a second trip. There were no rights to cross just outside Wolfsburg. There was nothing in its way. We went to East Berlin, and the shops looked like those of West Berlin. It is true one could see the traces and one could feel that there was tremendous work to be done, but one could also sense that feeling of hope for a people.

It is very important that we use caution and care as we move in this direction. It is a very important role that we have as Canadians, as do other western democracies, to ensure that this is not just a pipe dream, that this is not just an euphoric moment in the history of time, but that we put behind it the substance and the thinking that is required to help these emerging democracies. Life is not easy there.

As I drove through the countryside of East Germany and through the countryside of Hungary, I could see that it was like the 1920s. The infrastructure was not there. The technology was not there. The buildings were ancient and in need of repair. By the way, we can also see that in other parts of the world, that is true, but we are concentrating our efforts and our hopes on implementing those matters which mean so much to us as a nation, as a people, and as written into the Helsinki Accord, with which I will deal in a moment.

This founding of the European Bank of Reconstruction and Development represents a very important step for Canada in terms of its economic support for these newly emerging countries. These kinds of initiatives are very rare in the history of nations and in the history of our world. Some examples are the Marshall Plan after the Second World War, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. We should be proud that Canada is playing a role in solidifying the foundations of freedom and economic opportunity with this bill.

I listened with great care to my colleague from Malpeque the other day. She pointed out that, as a Liberal Party, we have some reservations about the soundness of the over-all government's approach to this new and very challenging region and world economy.

I listened to the member from Parkdale—High Park as he raised some additional issues of concern. The government should pay attention because it is very important. Without question, the principle of support for Bill C-88 has been enunciated quite clearly by these colleagues. This bank will help spur economic opportunity and economic freedom. It goes a long way to renew human and political freedoms in Europe.

One just has to pick up this bill and read the introduction which is set out in the European banks' schedule. It is an agreement to establish the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It states who the contracting parties are, and I will come to that in a moment.

This bill, developed by the European nations and ourselves, states that we are committed to the fundamental principles of multi-party democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights and market economics. That is very important. Where have we heard that before in a monetary situation and as a banking bottom-line principle? It is very exciting. It is interesting that we are going to be sending our Minister of Finance, rather than the Minister for International Trade to sit on the board representing Canada. That is also a new initiative.

The second paragraph of the Schedule says:

> Recalling the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and in particular its Declaration on Principles;

There are four baskets in the Helsinki Accord. One of those baskets is significantly, that to deal with human rights. You would not deal with a country unless it respects and upholds individual rights, freedoms and liberty. I think that that is wonderful. To see this in a banking act is quite extraordinary.

It goes on to say that:

> Welcoming the intent of Central and Eastern European countries to further the practical implementation of multiparty democracy, strengthening democratic institutions, the rule of law and respect for human rights and their willingness to implement reforms in order to evolve towards market-oriented economies;

That means there has to be the kinds of communications and literature that will enable that to happen. I do not think they will be taxed like this government is doing with our literature.

It goes on:

> Considering the importance of close and co-ordinated co-operation in order to promote the economic progress of Central and Eastern European countries to help their economies become more internationally competitive and assist them in their reconstruction and development and thus to reduce, where appropriate, any risks related to the financing of their economies;

This is very unique legislation. I am very excited to read this in a banking act.

The shackles of communist rule have been crumbling throughout most of Eastern European. Countries like Canada, who have benefited for more than a century from such freedom should help and support these newly emerging democracies. It is in our long-term interest to continue in this vein.

As well, we have incredible talent here in Canada which can give help and support to these countries, so that while we are pursuing the economic needs, we can take some comfort in the political gains that have already been won.

While we pursue the economic freedom of these people from Eastern Europe, we must remain optimistic by remembering just how far they have come in terms of the political freedom they have already won. There seems to be a tendency to forget the political gains that have just been won: political freedom, the right to speak one's mind, the right to associate, the right to disagree and, increasingly, the right to practise one's own religion. As we move forward and pursue the economic needs, we should keep that in mind. We have to remember that we cannot remain silent on any of the issues that would fight against the principles found in the Helsinki Accords. Silence might mean condoning actions which are unacceptable in the west.

Let us remember that up until a year ago we were still making the case for the kind of political freedom being enjoyed today on so many street corners in so many cities, towns and villages, behind that barrier we now hear so little about these days, the Iron Curtain. Although the need for jobs in factories, technology, and education, remains great, let us hope that building a strong economic foundation will banish into memory the days of stifling censorship, secret police, and underground movements which kept the hope of freedom alive.

Surely we can do nothing but support economically and politically the changes that create competing publications, a marketplace for ideas, the end to secret police arresting anyone with an opinion and the movement for more freedom, organization of elections and running in elections.

With the establishment of this new bank, the economic link between the Government of Canada and the governments of Eastern Europe, we will start to look at the relationships that our two peoples, through families and friends, have had for generations. In fact, I am told that one in 10 Canadians has origins in central and Eastern Europe.

Certainly that is the case in my riding, Mr. Speaker. We have people from all corners of the globe but, in particular, one will find people from Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, The Ukraine, Armenia, Germany, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. I hope that this government is profiting from the presence of these people, who came here mostly after the Second World War, and will be using their expertise, not just in language which enables communication, but in culture and in business expertise because that is what these people have developed. They have brought the desire to succeed to this country, at all levels. They are to be found at every level in this country, political, economic, and social. They have enabled this country to grow and flourish. Now they can bring that expertise to the Canadian government, to this bank, and to the industry which will be developed. I hope we do not forget these people or ignore them.

My colleague, the hon. member for Malpeque, has pointed out that there are some serious areas of scattered government approach. My experience has been with very consolidated approaches in the cultural domain and in communications. Radio–Canada International has been very helpful in assisting the communication industries of the newly emerged democracies of the east. It has hosted their broadcasters here, and has shown them how the public and the private sector works and, to them, we owe a great vote of thanks. You, Mr. Speaker, the Table, and the House, have helped the political process, in terms of the work that is done by Mr. Philip Laundy and the Speaker's Office, in enabling the officers of the House to help those newly emerging democracies function. We have had groups here from Romania, Hungary, and Poland and we are helping establish that kind of work. I know that the parties are helping them to understand how political parties function, from the grassroots up and how one proceeds in the democratic process to have multi–party systems.

All these are very important initiatives and efforts. However, when it comes to loans, there is a problem. We commit food on the one hand, which is money. We commit money to the International Monetary Fund. We work through the World Bank and now we are going to work through this bank.

Canada does not have a lot of money, we have a lot of goodwill. Those banking institutions reflect the constituents' dollars, the dollars of people who live and work in Canada. The banks do not manufacture money; the banks use the money from the ordinary citizen to aid these efforts. It is in our interest, that is true, because when we have a stable world then we have a stable democracy and we can grow and prosper. In the meantime, these are dollars from Canadians, through Canadian banks, which will enable these things to happen.

I would sincerely hope that the concerns raised so eloquently by the hon. member for Malpeque and other speakers to this bill will be taken into account as well as the concerns about the government's scattered approach.

It is my sincere hope that what we are doing will make sense, that we will enable the economic, political, and social development and the rebuilding of the infrastructure in those countries that will help all the world, not just ourselves.

As I looked at the buildings in the east that need so much and as we hear and know about the initiatives that will be required, I hope that this creative expression in terms of culture, new enterprises and economic links with the west will provide the channels for ideas and help so the strong roots of democracy will develop in this region. This is why the Liberal Party supports this kind of initiative in principle, to help these countries and their economies come back to life after nearly half a century of stagnation and in many cases decay. We hope, as this process moves forward at legislative committee, that a more comprehensive plan will emerge from this government to help Eastern Europe today. It is only then that Canadians can be proud to lend their money with great pleasure and joy so that the role we play in the emerging of a new Eastern Europe will reflect that of our own history of commitment to social justice, economic opportunity for the individual, freedom and human rights around the world.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a very short comment and ask a question of my colleague.

I have two concerns. The first is to ensure that as we direct, in whatever form, more assistance toward central and Eastern Europe, as we should, that at the same time we do not forget the other needy people of the world. There is a concern in the Third World that this might happen.

I am a member of l'Association internationale des parlementaires de langue française and when we go to Europe, this is often a subject raised by our colleagues from the poorer nations. Those Third World nations need our assistance so very much. I think particularly of some of the African countries. I want to express first of all that concern and invite my colleague to comment. Second, if we can come back to the central and Eastern European region, these new emerging democracies—and some of them are not quite democracies yet, some are well on their way and others might get there—and I thinking of Romania, for instance, on which the jury is still out on whether or not it has succeeded. We hope, of course, that it still can. Romania, in particular, is one of the poorer nations of the new group of countries and very much in need of assistance. It certainly has not satisfied me yet that it is a democracy but hopefully, it will be on its way there.

The thought I had about central and Eastern European countries is that there is a responsibility incumbent upon all of us in the western democracies to ensure that we do everything we can to make those countries into democracies and to provide assistance so they do not fail in the process, particularly economically.

I cannot help but think of what is going on right now in the Soviet Union in respect to food rationing. I heard a comment recently on the radio about an interview with a Moscow woman who had gone to no fewer than 10 drugstores to find cough medicine for her child and had not been able to find any.

If we fail to provide assistance, and hopefully this will not happen, but one wonders if, through our non-assistance if we do not provide help, we are giving the opportunity for some other totalitarian group to seize power in those countries on the pretext that: "Democracy is obviously not working. Look at how badly it has failed you so far and the prospects of improving are no better."

Those are the two concerns that I had and I invite my colleague to comment on those.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. He always has both interesting remarks and intelligent questions to pose.

With respect to Eastern Europe, as a last closing remark on that particular issue, one of the concerns on the scattered approach that the government has developed is the fact that it will not know which door to knock on. Should it be the IMF door, the door that leads to the World Bank, or the door that is going to lead to the European Bank.

Yes, there are some problems and certainly we are well aware of what is going on in terms of food, medicine, and infrastructure, and it is a growing concern. It is such a new phenomenon that we are mobilizing as best we can and I hope as effectively as we can.

With respect to the Third World countries, it is very interesting to note that Canada became a partner of the Organization of American States and took up its seat which would enable our better input into the Latin American scene. I was pleased to note that.

I know quite well that excellent programs are going on and our help is being given through the IDRF, which is the International Development Research Fund, headed by Mr. Ivan Head.

I personally visited in the barios in the slums of Chile and saw an incredible project which is funded by Canadians on children's diarrhoea. The dehydration and the diarrhoea which is of long-term effect is one of the major causes of the high death rate among children in Third World countries. The research being done, funded by Canada and others, is very important and I hope we will keep that up. It was a very interesting look at how Chile and how Canada, in this instance, have worked together in the interest of the people malgré, comme on dit, given the political situation at that time.

I have visited and am well aware of the CIDA programs in places in Africa. When I was critic for the status of women and in Nairobi for the 10th anniversary, I saw some incredible projects which Canada is financing with respect to agriculture, with the integration of young women into the decision-making processes at different levels. I saw the work being done by Match-International which is a wonderful volunteer agency that builds wells, and helps small projects such as tie-dying in marketing and merchandising the products of women in those countries.

Yes, there is lots to do. There is lots to do here in Canada so that we can be economically stronger, so that we can then add more and help more, both through example as well as in concrete goods and services.

I think we are trying our best. There are still things to be done. The world is far from perfect and on this planet of ours some day, perhaps—like the Little Prince, we will see a beautiful garden blossom.

[English]

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the member for Mount Royal mentioned her involvement in IPU. Could she share with us her position on the IPU and whether the IPU has discussed how to help the Soviet Union and eastern Europe in its recovery?

Briefly, I have a second question. She mentioned that in her riding, like mine, she has Canadians of Russian, Polish, Ukrainian, Yugoslav, Bulgarian, Hungarian descent and made an excellent recommendation to the government. Why not use their expertise because they know the culture and they speak the language? In her many years in the House, does she recall any examples of where the government of the day has actually used that expertise from her riding?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Mount Royal. You have two minutes.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the member's last question, yes, I do know of some. Particularly in relation to Poland, one of my constituents has been very involved and very helpful as a matter of fact. Other constituents came during the elections to help in Romania, in particular, and in Poland and in Hungary. I do not know that we used their expertise in that case.

With respect to the international organization, I have been fortunate enough to have the support of my colleagues of the House and am the vice-president of the Canadian Interparliamentary Union. I take very seriously that commitment and I thank my colleagues for their support in that regard.

At what is known as the western caucus, the 12-plus, we have spent two full meetings looking at how we can collaborate and co-operate together in the interest of the emerging democracies. That is where I hear the word NEDS, the newly emerging democratic societies, and where I hear the new word NIC, the newly industrialized countries.

It has been my particular privilege to chair two committees. One was on the Bulgarian-Turkish situation, in fact, where I was asked to come back and monitor the borders because we did such a good job.

I have also chaired the decolonization committee on the world level, which has not been an easy thing to do, but I must say we have had great forward movement. We have seen Namibia, South Africa, and we are looking at the Malvinas in terms of the islands off of Argentina. There was an agreement on the western Sahara by Algeria and Morocco which was very moving and important. The nomination came from Turkey, supported by Indonesia and Iran.

I find all this ironic and wonderful. Yes, I have enjoyed very much IPU and yes, it is very interested in this issue.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to be able to speak in favour of seconding reading of Bill C-88 and referring it to a legislative committee.

This bill would ratify Canada's participation as a founding member in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. This legislation raises many important issues and many important questions dealing both with economic policy and foreign policy. Today, I want to deal generally with the economic or financial issues raised by Canada's membership in the bank. I will leave foreign policy questions to other speakers from this side.

I want to say from the outset that we in the Liberal Party strongly support the principle of helping Eastern Europe reconstruct and develop. In this respect, we support the principle in Bill C-88. However, we are not satisfied with the government's approach to explaining to the opposition and to Canadians what this new regional bank will do for Eastern Europe and how it will change Canada's economic policy on this region.

The issue of keeping parliamentarians informed is crucial, because we have a duty to ensure that our approach to helping Eastern Europe is the best and most efficient one possible. The urgency and seriousness of the problems there require nothing less than our best effort. The government's financial situation also requires nothing less than a well thought-out plan.

Certainly, the events which have taken place in central and Eastern Europe over the past year or so have been remarkable. The year 1989 will long be remembered as the year of European revolution. The Berlin Wall crumbled, the Iron Curtain disintegrated, authoritarian governments collapsed, and a new Europe was born.

New democracies are being created as we speak. These new democracies require new political, social, and of course economic institutions if they are to fulfil the promise held out by those remarkable events of 1989. Canada has a special relationship with the people of this region. We want to see them succeed in their task of building a strong and prosperous Europe.

Eastern Europeans themselves, to be sure, are working hard to realize their vision of a free and prosperous land. Internationally, countries such as Canada have a role to play in helping them to their feet, especially economically.

The Canadian approach has been somewhat scattered with respect to helping Eastern Europe develop and rebuild. With the establishment of this new bank, there will be no fewer than four different sources of Canadian funds flowing into this region: through the bank itself; through the G-24 group of countries; through the G-7 group of countries; and through bilateral programs.

The G-7, as we know, includes not only Canada and the U.S., but also Japan and other major industrialized economies. The G-24, of course, is a larger group and generally includes European, North American, and other countries that belong to the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development.

There are many questions that must be raised about the effectiveness of using such a scattered approach to development funding, such as how do we maintain control and co-ordination of these efforts.

We certainly have a lot of questions about this legislation. We are looking forward to reviewing it when it gets to a legislative committee. I must say that one of the reasons that we have so many questions is the government's apparent reluctance to inform adequately the opposition with respect to the bill. No effort was made on the government side to offer the traditional briefing for opposition members of the legislature. We had to ask for one. There was very little information that we received by way of background notes, and we also had to ask for those.

We understand that the creation of this new bank has occurred very quickly. Just one year ago, it was only an idea. Departments involved have been very busy co-ordinating Canada's participation, but there is really no excuse for not keeping the opposition informed.

As I said earlier, we certainly support the principle of the bill, of helping reconstruct and develop central and Eastern Europe. Nevertheless, we have a number of questions about this legislation. These questions deal with the reasons for creating a new bank specifically for that region and the government's approach to Canada's participation in that institution. I believe that these questions must be answered, and the best possible approach must be taken by the government because of the tremendous importance that I attach to our efforts in Eastern Europe.

The remarkable events of this region are intensely personal for millions of Canadians who have roots there. Many have ties of language and family. Few other nations possess the web of intense personal connections to Eastern and central Europe which we have in Canada and, to some extent, in my province of Prince Edward Island.

In my riding alone, there are families who come from Poland, Ukraine and Hungary. In fact, one in 10 Canadians have origins in central or Eastern Europe. This gives us a special interest and a special capacity in helping these countries become prosperous and free.

We also have a large social and economic interest in the success of central and Eastern Europe. Canada's prosperity and our peace of mind depends to a large extent on this success. As a trading nation, for example, we are dependent on trade for 30 per cent of our economy. While most of this trade is with the United States, the markets of both Eastern and western Europe will be important to Canada's economic future. The unifying market of western Europe and the vast and untapped markets of Eastern Europe both hold immense economic potential.

This is why I raise many questions about this legislation, not because we oppose the spirit of helping the reconstruction and development of Eastern Europe, but because Parliament has a right to be informed and to debate fully Canada's economic strategy for this region.

The government's share of this new bank is worth about $460 million. Although the government says it will only have to pay about $150 million over five years, Parliament should be aware that we are looking at a potential investment of close to half a billion dollars.

These dollar figures themselves should highlight the importance of getting complete answers to these questions and others that Parliament may wish to raise.

The first question obviously is "Why a new bank"? Before Canada commits itself to participating in a new institution, with an expected bureaucracy of anywhere from 250 to 1,000 employees, dependent on your source, Parliament should ask why existing institutions cannot do the job.

There are several international banks and other financial institutions already established, such as the International Monetary Fund, the European Investment Bank, the Bank for International Settlements and the World Bank, which would seem to serve the purpose given to the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development which this legislation is setting up.

The World Bank is actually the short name given to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, a name which suggests a purpose similar to that of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

I have heard several reasons why this separate bank is required. Some argue that these other international bodies are often dominated too much by the United States, while they note that in this new bank, the United States will only hold 10 per cent.

Some also say that this new European Bank will be able to develop an understanding and expertise with respect to Eastern European banking that no other commercial or outside institution could hope to match.

Finally, the argument is raised that institutions like the International Monetary Fund deal mainly with Third World countries and that their expertise is not really adapted to Eastern Europe.

I would like the government to explain, in the context of a legislative committee, why it thinks a new bank should be started from scratch. I want it to explain why an institution like the European Investment Bank, which is already operating in Europe, could not have a better understanding of the local economy than an institution like this European Bank, which is starting from scratch. As for American influence, the United States will be the largest single shareholder of the new bank. The American government has already played the central role in writing the bank's constitution.

• (1220)

A second question is not just why a new bank, but why a bank at all? In other words, now that Eastern European countries are opening up to private investment, could western companies and financial institutions not help these countries jump-start their economies? It is interesting to note that even before the dramatic effects in this region in 1989, official aid to the region, for example, loans guaranteed by government and government-established institutions had started to decline and the level of loans which were not guaranteed by governments started to increase. We are also seeing increases in the private sector investment in the region. As recently as the beginning of 1988, there were only 165 joint ventures involving western businesses in central and Eastern Europe. By the fall of 1989, there were 2,100. That is a large increase. In 1988, it was 165 joint ventures but in 1989, we had 2,100.

Now that Poland and Hungary have allowed foreign companies to own a majority of the shares in a project they are involved with, the number of joint ventures and private investment should increase.

Clearly, the government must explain to Parliament why some combination of these existing institutions and private investments would not be sufficient to help Eastern Europe before we give them the okay to create another institution with its large bureaucracy.

I would now like to briefly summarize and conclude. Not long ago, we observed Remembrance Day. Canadians could reflect on what is happening now all across Europe. In doing so, they could not help but acknowledge the historic role our war veterans played in making possible what we see today.

I would like to repeat my party's support for the principle of Bill C-88. I want to emphasize that we in the opposition have a number of important concerns about how the government is going to participate in this new bank. We would like to see these concerns addressed in a legislative committee.

We believe that Canada has a special role to play in Eastern Europe and that our participation is necessary, not only for that region's success but for our country's long-term prosperity as well. I look forward to a thorough and productive examination of this bill in committee.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Malpeque for such an in-depth analysis of this proposed bill.

We heard how the government side refused to share any information with the opposition. Yet, it wants speedy passage. I do not understand its strategy because if it wanted speedy passage, surely it would have shared full information with both parties on the opposition side.

My question is: Why does she feel the government wants to railroad this bill through so quickly? It was brought in on a Friday and there was no minister to introduce or explain it. There were no speakers put up and no questions were answered today. They are all sitting there like bumps on a log.

I do not know why they are sitting here. They should not collect their pay for yesterday and today. That is what taxpayers sent them here for, to debate important bills like this. Not one has opened his or her mouth. As I say, when they sign that monthly salary sheet, I hope they will deduct the appropriate salary for themselves in all honesty and credibility.

I ask the hon. member why she feels there is this urgency to pass this bill through and her frustrations of not receiving the information. Does she have any other concerns such as some of the money siphoned off for Third World countries? She mentioned all the existing financial institutions already. What about the loans to Eastern Europe that are outstanding?

I know she only has eight minutes to answer all of these, but I would appreciate her views on some of these questions and concerns.

Mrs. Callbeck: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question.

As I said earlier, it certainly has been very difficult to get information on this legislation. This is why I am really looking forward to getting it into a legislative committee. I have many questions that I want to get answers for. I look forward to that.

I also have some concerns. He has asked me if I have other concerns. Yes, I have, but I did not have time to address them in my main speech. I will address some of them now.

Certainly, I know that the government has said that the $150 million will not come out of the official development assistance budget. Does it represent $150 million that Canada cannot invest in regional banks that help poor countries in Latin America and Africa?

I think that question is very important, because the standard of living in those regions has actually decreased during the 1980s by 10 per cent in Latin America and 25 per cent in Africa. If we look more closely at Latin America, we see that its debt problems are sometimes far worse than Eastern Europe, except for countries like Poland and Hungary.

Some Latin American countries have debt to GNP ratios of four times those of Eastern European countries. That is a very high level of indebtedness combined with a reluctance to lend by private banks which lost a great deal of money in the regions during the 1980s making Latin America a region which appears to need our help at least as much as Eastern Europe, if not more.

That certainly is one of my main concerns that I want to address in the legislative committee.

Another question that I certainly will want to propose is what effect Canada's participation in this bank will have on our existing loans to countries in central and Eastern Europe. I think before setting up a new bank that will lend even more money to these countries, we have to ask how they are going to manage the old debt, and what is their capacity to handle new debt.

I think these are important questions because these countries already have incredible debt loads. As a whole, Eastern Europe has a gross debt of almost $100 billion. Poland alone has a gross debt of at least $40 billion and Hungary, more than $20 billion; Bulgaria, $9 billion.

Canada with at least $3 billion outstanding is Poland's fourth largest creditor. Canada also has agreed to reschedule part of this debt, representing a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in forgone payments.

Certainly the extreme economic problems in Poland and in these other countries demanded such extreme measures. I think before we go ahead and lend hundreds of millions more, Parliament should ask about the state of our existing loans to countries of this region.

We recognize the change of government in many of the east European countries but we also have a duty to Canadians to ensure that good money does not follow bad. When we are looking at the issue from the point of view of the lenders, we have to ask how Canada will manage and co–ordinate its aid to Eastern Europe.

As I noted earlier, there were at least three different ways, and with this bank four different ways, in which this government is giving aid to countries in this region. This scattered approach with regard to various types of departments and organizations is quite evident, for example, when one reads the press clippings put out by the governments of Eastern Europe. We had a press clipping on May 25, 1990 wherein the government announced participation in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and that the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs were to play key roles.

Then, on May 29, we had a statement about the line of credit established between Canada and the U.S.S.R. Canada's trade minister announced a new agreement. There we had the involvement of another minister.

On July 4, 1990, we had the statement that Canada expanded assistance to central and Eastern Europe. Canada's external affairs minister announced new funding for this region through the G–24 group of countries.

Here we have ministers from three different departments and two different organizations, all making announcements that affect Eastern Europe. This seems to be typical of the government's scattered approach in this area.

I repeat, as I said earlier, my agreement with the principle of helping the newly freed countries of Europe to get on their feet, but I must say that before the House gives permission to create another level of aid to central and Eastern Europe, the government must explain how well its current system is working and how it fits into the setting up of this new bank. We should also ask how much of an investment the government thinks that our participation is going to be.

I know my time is running short. The hon. member asked if I had any other concerns about this legislation. I hope that what I have outlined here has answered his question. I have other points which time does not allow me to elaborate on, but I will look forward to raising them in the legislative committee.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a unique opportunity for me to stand in this House to speak on a very important matter such as the development and reconstruction of central and Eastern Europe. It is for each and every one of us to play a part in seeing something come to reality such as the economic rejuvenation of central and Eastern Europe.

Many of us in our constituencies across this country have people who have come from Eastern and central Europe, namely Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and Bulgaria. They have come here at various times in our history to contribute much to the multicultural fabric of this country. Of course we have been pleased with the fact that they have brought their unique cultures and their energy to help us build our own country. We have been very fortunate.

I have been very fortunate in London, Ontario to have people from across central and Eastern Europe come who have come to our various communities to help build the country. Yet all of us, over the past number of years, know about the conditions their families and friends have had to put up with in Eastern and central Europe, the kinds of politics they have had to put up with, and the kinds of undemocratic principles that their governments essentially put upon them.

This really is a unique opportunity not only to help our own citizens in this country and their families and friends, but it is a unique opportunity for this country to do essentially what it did for western Europe. It is another opportunity to help, to put out a helping hand to Eastern and central Europe.

Therefore, it is a pleasure for me to stand and support Bill C–88, which will ratify Canada's participation as a founding member in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. With the historic crumbling of the east bloc military alliance and the fall of modern communism in the east central and Eastern European nations, Canada welcomes the creation of a new bank which we hope will finance the transition of Eastern Europe from communism to capitalism. Now that we have taken down the fences that have divided us for so many decades, we must not turn our backs on our neighbours during this crucial and critical time in their existence.

Economic problems will plague central and Eastern European nations as they struggle to make the transition from a command economy to a totally private economy. This bank will not be the panacea, but it will be the spark toward international co–operation and development for Eastern and central Europe. Each and every person in Eastern and central Europe has gone through many difficult years. The road to recovery and economic prosperity, as we understand it in Canada, will not be an easy one for them. That is why it is essential to see this new financial mechanism in terms of being able to provide support to the governments that have now renounced their political and economic philosophies and to the people who overturned these autocratic and dictatorial regimes, in their efforts toward economic prosperity for themselves and their families. A strong Eastern and central Europe will make for a stronger world and a stronger Canada, because we will do an awful lot of trading and business with people from Eastern and central Europe.

Economic difficulties should not sabotage the historic changes that are currently taking place in central and Eastern Europe. The developed countries of the world are creating a bank that hopefully will act as the catalyst toward the evolution of economic development. Canadians welcome the opportunity to be part of this endeavour to aid central and Eastern Europe.

Bill C–88 is the enabling legislation for Canada's participation in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The bank will be capitalized, as we understand it, at $12 billion, contributed by 40 countries. Canada would contribute $30 million each year for five years. Even though this is not clear, hopefully the legislative committee, when it has the opportunity to study the bill, will ask some very pointed and direct questions of the government in terms of our true contribution.

That $30 million each year for five years will represent 3.4 per cent of the EBRD's capital base. This will ensure Canada at least a seat on the board of directors of the bank.

The EBRD is really the first major international capitalist institution that includes the Soviet Union as a full member. The bank is the only institution of its kind in which shareholders include governments of both east and west. Therefore it is a unique endeavour by the international community to co-operate in the reconstruction of central and Eastern Europe. Perhaps this may be a model by which the world can deal with other areas of the world in terms of bringing forward economic development and prosperity. It is an important first step toward integrating reform-minded eastern countries into the world economy.

The EBRD will direct investment dollars to the development of private business in those central and Eastern European countries that are reforming their political institutions. Only 40 per cent of the funds available from the bank will be available to government borrowers, as we understand it. This money can be used for the development of infrastructure, such as road, rail, telecommunications, and construction, especially transportation infrastructure necessary to carry their food to the marketplace so that the people of eastern and central Europe have food at the table.

By limiting the amount available to the government planners, the EBRD is trying to avoid the problems that arose in the 1970s when central and Eastern European countries directed their loans to unproductive enterprises that left them crippled with debt. As has been previously mentioned, Hungary and Poland are still struggling under the burden of these debt payments. Poland has the worst debt load, with payments on principal and interest accounting for 88 per cent of that country's exports in 1989.

Given that the debt problem in these countries is serious, it is heartening to see that 40 nations are willing to pool their resources in order to finance the economic changes that are taking place in central and Eastern Europe. I will give one example. Mexico, a country with a significant debt problem of its own, is one of the 40 investing nations that will participate in this European bank.

The goals of Bill C-88 are worth-while ones. However, there are a number of questions and concerns that this government has failed to answer. As members on this side of the House have tried to point out to this government, it is rather curious that the government has had only one speaker on this bill. It essentially wanted to ram it through the House, without consideration by a legislative committee.

Let us hope that it is not this government's intent to pull the wool over Canadians' eyes with respect to their hard earned tax dollars going into this European bank. Hopefully the government really wants to get on with moving this legislation through in the most expedient way.

However, it is rather curious that the government has not at least answered some of our questions and concerns. As we have previously indicated, this House is in favour of this bill because it has some fundamental principles that we agree with. It is rather curious to see that the government has not tried to help us support it, but in fact it has tried to pull the wool over our eyes and in turn over Canadians' eyes.

The sole function of the bank, as we understand it, is to finance Eastern European countries and their fledgling markets. Canadians accept that such a financial institution will develop a specialized expertise and knowledge of the region which no other commercial bank or financial institution can match.

As my friend from Parkdale—High Park indicated, perhaps we ought to use the unique characteristics of our own country and the contacts of people living here who have bridges in Eastern Europe. In this way we can make sure that the dollars Canadians are contributing to this bank and through that bank to the people will go toward helping the men and women in those countries in terms of their own private economic development or private sector development which will hopefully provide the necessary jobs that eastern and central Europeans will need.

What is not clear is whether the work of the EBRD will be matched by work that has already been undertaken on a bilateral basis and by a number of other financial institutions. I think that point has been made over and over again. There needs to be a discussion as to whether or not we are creating another massive bureaucracy and whether or not we can truly co-operate and co-ordinate our activities in a number of ways to ensure that the dollars in the bureaucracy will not be eaten up by duplication and triplication of function and purpose.

A number of financial agencies are actively involved in lending in the central and Eastern European region, as we know, today. The World Bank plans to lend up to $7.5 billion over the next three years. The International Monetary Fund is prepared to provide $1.5 billion U.S. in loan and stand-by agreements to address the debt problems. The OECD countries have pledged billions of dollars in financial aid to central and Eastern European countries. Therefore, we have a number of questions. Will the EBRD's activities interfere with these efforts in any way? Will the EBRD's activities affect the the amount of aid being made available by these other organizations? Is the EBRD simply a European-run financial institution that will mimic the functions of other international organizations?

These are serious questions which should be answered before Canada commits millions of dollars to this bank. If the government knows the answers to these important questions, why is it operating in a closet and keeping Canadians uninformed about their own investments? Hopefully the legislative committee will give the government and the people an opportunity to look through this window of opportunity in Europe that we all seem to agree is absolutely necessary.

The bank, as we understand it, with the staff of 1,000, will be located in London, England. A full time 23-member board of directors will manage the day-to-day operations of the bank, and will represent the shareholders.

As now planned, salaries paid to the directors and their staff will represent fully 25 per cent of the bank's salaries. Surely we want some definite answers to questions with respect to this area of the bill.

It would be a waste of time and money to create the EBRD if the aid from all 40 nations could just as easily have gone through one of the already existing international financial institutions. Guarantees should exist that the organization's mandate will ensure no duplication of effort.

As I said before, this is a unique instrument and a unique opportunity. Perhaps one could clarify and even use it as a role model in the future.

Canadians want guarantees that the functions of this financial institution will not be identical with any other already existing institutions. In providing this aid to central and eastern European countries, are we taking away much-needed assistance that would have gone to the developing countries.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, while this country talks generosity and caring, this government over the past four or five years has reduced its commitment to the developing countries around the world. Let us hope that the $150 million which has been pledged over the next five years is not going to be taken away from our programs and policies for helping those in the developing world.

Therefore, why is the government not being clear on this issue? We would hope that the government will be forthcoming during the committee hearings and address this important issue also.

Canadians also want to know where this money is coming from. Is this aid being taken at the expense, as I indicated before, of other countries?

Another issue that has not been addressed even though it is in the functions of the bill is sustainable development. I think my friend for Parkdale—High Park has indicated that if we are serious about the environment, if we are serious about the kinds of development dollars that will go to central and Eastern Europe, then surely the idea of sustainable development should be in the purpose of the bill, and not necessarily as No. 7 on the functions of the bill.

Surely we have matured to the point that sustainable development must be key in terms of development. Therefore, it must be made clear that any dollars that this bank will be lending to central and Eastern Europe will support a sustainable environment.

Currently central and Eastern Europe have a number of serious environmental problems. Those problems endanger the health of its own citizens and in fact of other citizens of the world.

Economic development of these countries cannot continue if it will ignore the environmental issues that are currently being addressed internationally. Economic development cannot occur at the expense of good health. Economic development cannot occur at the expense of the environment. Investments and loans should be tired to sustainable development. Hopefully, our person on the board of directors will carry that message strongly and firmly. Mr. Speaker, despite certain clarifications that I am sure will be addressed by the legislative committee, we have a unique opportunity to support the people and the grassroots movements across eastern and central Europe in the countries that in fact brought about the political changes, the changes to the governments of these countries.

The people of eastern and central Europe have suffered for 45 years under undemocratic, dictatorial governments. They need to be shown that the rest of the world is behind what they have done. It is these people who have borne the brunt of political and economic philosophies that have failed miserably over the past 45 years. One only has to witness the long lines to get food for the table of most of these central European countries. One only need look into the eyes of the people who have been deprived of hope, dreams and freedom for years.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see that the bill addresses and ensures that the contracting parties must be committed to democratic principles, multi-party democracies and human rights and other principles that this country believes in and was built on.

In addition, the bill in purpose and function addresses those certain principles that are absolutely important to the proper and orderly function of this particular bank.

Mr. Speaker, that purpose and those functions talk about sustainable development. I hope it is not merely the small print but really is the philosophy that will be taken seriously by the board of directors of this new bank.

It is important for us to offer that helping hand, not to make these countries and the people yet dependent on another group, but to provide them with the necessary assistance to help them help themselves. If they were denied freedom, hope, and dreams before, let them understand and know that we are there so that they can believe in hope, believe in dreams, and believe in freedom and democracy. This may be one small way of showing we are serious and are with them and are prepared to help and fight with them.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for London East for his excellent speech. The member has indicated in clear and unequivocal terms the reasons why he is supporting Bill C-88, an act to provide for the membership of Canada in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Unfortunately, due to arrangements that have been made by representatives of all three political parties not all of us will be permitted the opportunity to indicate the reasons why we individually support Bill C-88.

In the few moments I do have prior to members of Parliament dispersing to have their lunches in the opulent parliamentary restaurant, I would like to associate myself with the comments of the hon. member for London East and perhaps to put a very brief question to him with respect to this bill.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and you are in another life associated with the Conservative Party, the government has chosen for some inexplicable reason not to participate in this debate. This bill was given first reading on October 22, 1990. Here we are on December 4, 21 days to Christmas, about 15 shopping days left to Christmas, and—

Mr. Boudria: And a partridge in a pear tree.

Mr. Nunziata: —the government is anxious now to have this bill sent to a legislative committee. Over the period of time since this bill was introduced in the House, the government has not provided the opposition with information necessary for the opposition to formulate its position.

Granted the opposition will have opportunities at the legislative committee stage to consider the full ramifications of this bill.

The government has in a very deliberate and inexplicable fashion failed to provide essential and vital information to the opposition. In order to secure the support of the opposition, the government ought to be more forthcoming not only with the Liberal Party but also with the New Democratic Party and the Bloc quebecois, the Reform Party, and the independent members in the House. They have the prerogative not to put up any speakers. We see a number of Conservative members in the House today. They have chosen to remain silent and not to contribute.

I would like to ask my colleague from London East, who has articulated my views to a t on this particular bill, to explain why the government is not participating, contributing, or co-operating in the passage of this legislation. As he put it, it is a significant step forward in showing how Canada is ready, willing, able and prepared to assist in the reconstruction and development of Eastern Europe. Canada has a significant role to play.

Canada has always been at the forefront in the democratization of Eastern Europe. Now Canada, with this bill, will provide for its membership in the European Bank for the Reconstruction and Development. Perhaps the member can, in the 30 or 40 seconds that he has, explain why the government is not co-operating.

Mr. Fontana: Mr. Speaker, I sometimes would like to be a fly on the wall of the caucus room of the government to see exactly how it thinks and operates. I am sure a number of Canadians would also like to do that. In fact, I wish I was their group therapy counsellor from time to time. I am sure that I could help them out.

There are two ways of looking at the question. One is that the government is very supportive and therefore, does not feel that it needs to do anything but allow this to go to a legislative committee, even though we were told that it did not want to do that.

Second, if we wanted to be cynical, some of us might think that this government is embarrassed by this bill and it really does not want to talk about it because it silently does not support the bank, and therefore support the people of central and Eastern Europe.

I tend to think that the government is very supportive. It has been curious that it has not stood up and really talked about this great opportunity for this country to wave the flag in central and Eastern Europe. You would have thought the members would be very proud to do so. I am hopeful that they will see the light, and at third reading, a great number of them will speak very proudly about their own bill and about the fact that Canada will stand with the eastern and central European people as they develop into a strong and democratic society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

PUBLIC SERVICE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is producing a white paper on Public Service 2000 to be released in the near future and a new round of consultations will begin. The glaring question is: Will this round be the same one-sided, cynical, dictatorial exercise the task force process has been?

I want to remind the government that any initiative to overhaul the Public Service will only be successful if the employees are on side, and if they are allowed to take their rightful places as partners in reform. PS 2000 is doomed to failure if the government continues to charge ahead with its own agenda, imposing on employees what it thinks is good for them. The government's patronizing "trust us, we know best" attitude only feeds employees' cynicism.

Since the Prime Minister sees such benefits in setting up committees, I suggest he turn over the white paper on Public Service 2000 to a special committee of Parliament for third-party review, as recommended by the Public Accounts Committee. Only then will PS 2000 be a truly democratic process.

VISUALLY IMPAIRED

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec Est): Mr. Speaker, I trust you will forgive this departure from my usual modesty if I inform my colleagues in this House of an idea that, though I say so myself, is original, useful and humanitarian.

S. O. 31

On November 26, I had the pleasure of launching my new business card which has the distinction of being printed in French, English and braille. When I saw the reactions of the people at the Louis-Hébert Centre, a rehabilitation centre for the visually impaired in my riding, and especially after hearing their comments, I realized how moved they were by this gesture.

Mr. Speaker, I think my colleagues would do well to follow this example and help the visually handicapped become more independent.

MADAM JUSTICE BERTHA WILSON

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is with pride and sadness that my caucus colleagues and I pay tribute to outgoing Supreme Court Justice, Madam Justice Bertha Wilson.

Time and time again this crusader used the law to benefit those Canadians who most need it, the traditionally discriminated against. She did not apologize for helping to feminize those aspects of Canadian law in which she found "gender-based myths, biases and stereotypes", and there are many. The flurry of sexist remarks recently spouted by male judges from the Northwest Territories to the Maritimes only bears out Madam Justice Wilson's observation.

That is why, whether or not the Prime Minister appoints a woman to fill her shoes—and he would be wise to do so—I call on him to see Madam Justice Wilson's retirement as an occasion to announce mandatory gender-sensitization training for all Canadian judges. This would be a real tribute to a woman of real vision.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, for a long time the GST has been criticized and treated with contempt, and this was largely because of a slur campaign conducted by Jean Chrétien and his party members, in the Senate and the House of Commons, and the scare tactics they used.

However, we have seen some positive reversals of positions on the GST quite recently. For instance, the Consumers Association of Canada has just recognized the benefits of a tax that is both visible and fair. Furthermore, the Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations of Canada is circulating petitions asking Mr. Chrétien and his followers to end the filibuster in the Senate because of the substantial savings they will enjoy under the GST.

And finally, quite recently, several senior citizens federations from Eastern Quebec have been circulating petitions in support of the GST. The idea is gaining ground, Mr. Speaker, that the GST will be good for everyone, for Canadians and for Canada.

IRAQ

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, in Chatham, Ontario, yellow ribbons are being tied on trees and placed in restaurants until the Canadian hostages are home from Iraq.

Linda Titus from my riding has a brother, Jim Squire, who is a hostage at the Canadian Embassy in Baghdad. Linda is urging us not to forget the human element in the Persian Gulf crisis. She has written the Prime Minister and President Bush to do whatever it takes to help our hostages home.

We also praise the mercy mission by the three MPs whose fine efforts got five hostages out, while more than 40 remain.

As the world community combines forces to see a resolution, the yellow ribbons in Chatham signify to Jim Squire and the other hostages that "we haven't forgot about you". As the military build-up continues, I urge the government to remember the human side, the families and people like Linda Titus, who are personally affected by this crisis in a far off land.

TEXTILE AND GARMENT INDUSTRY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear that an agreement is expected in the textile and garment sector, at the GATT talks. This is a very important area, because the textile and garment industry, which is considered extremely vulnerable to international competition, generates 160,000 jobs in this country. It is the driving force of the economy in my riding, with 5,000 jobs involved.

Mr. Speaker, during these talks we must ensure that the Canadian position is harmonized as much as possible with that of the United States, since the industry faces three major trade challenges. It is already at a disadvantage because of our exchange rate, interest rates and inflation.

As a result of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States and elimination of the Multi-Fibre Arrangement by July 1991, the degree of integration of the textile and garment sector achieved at the GATT talks should guarantee producers a climate of stability so that we can safeguard our investments and attract new investment to Canada.

FORESTRY INDUSTRY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, logging practices in British Columbia are so bad that a few months ago a forester from Europe was prompted to say that if such practices were adopted there, foresters would be put in jail.

Forests are not there to be plundered, leaving wildlife suddenly without food and shelter, and leaving rain to wash away topsoil and property, threatening human lives and highways. Forests are more than just supplies of lumber. Once cut, new forests take a long time to grow again and under certain conditions do not renew themselves at all.

When will decision-makers in forestry practise what they preach about sustainable development? When will governments learn to manage Canada's forest resources for future generations? When will the "cut and run" philosophy at last be replaced by the "manage and sustain" philosophy?

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, at a press conference yesterday, the Consumers Association of Quebec acknowledged that the Canadian and Quebec GST and the accompanying tax credits will make the tax system fairer to many families.

For instance, a family with two incomes totalling $30,000 will spend $1,125 less in 1992.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, in a letter to Jean Chrétien, Mr. Pierre Ratté, assistant manager of Qué-Bourg Auto in Charlesbourg, focussed on the reprehensible attitude of Liberal senators and stressed that this legislation must come into force on January 1, 1991, as planned.

In the present economic situation, the delays caused by the Liberal senators have increased the level of uncertainty among business people and consumers and seem to make light of the substantial investments already made to conform to GST requirements.

[English]

Let the message go directly to the Liberal senators. It is the last chance for them to get back to Charles Dickens' Christmas Carol and, like Scrooge, stop blocking the delivery of GST rebate cheques worth $600 million to some eight million low and middle-income Canadians. It is time to act now for the economic benefit of all Canadians.

THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are disgusted by the tactics used by the Prime Minister in trying to impose his constitutional solutions on the country. The scare tactics, the back-room dealing, the blackmail that was used to pressure Canadians into accepting a deal on which they had never been consulted—all of these have brought about the cynicism that we see in Canada today.

Yesterday's exchange between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition only reinforces this sense of malaise. The sight of two old buffaloes trying to gore each other makes me sad.

The old parties have never trusted Canadians to give them a say on their own Constitution. For 123 years Liberal and Tory executive federalism has assumed that only the elite count in this country. We have progressed from the royal decrees that used to issue from Pierre Trudeau to the Atlantic City tactics of the present Prime Minister.

The Liberals and Conservatives have played out their favourite games, one guy hiding under the pool table while the other one rolled dice. It is time they started to stand up for Canada first ahead of their schoolyard games.

CHILD POVERTY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Social Planning Council of Ottawa-Carleton released stunning statistics this fall. These statistics are based on the 1986 census before we entered this made-by-the-Tories recession. Things are worse than in 1986.

Fourteen per cent of all children under the age of 18 years in Ottawa-Carleton live in poverty without enough money for basic requirements. This figure rises to 24 per cent in the city of Ottawa and 31 per cent in the city of Vanier in my riding. Almost one in every three children lives in poverty in the city of Vanier.

Further, 29 per cent of all single-parent families in Ottawa-Carleton are poor, and among single-mother families, 33 per cent are poor.

As a long winter approaches and storms begin to howl around us, it is necessary to take steps to help these children and their families who live in poverty in the Ottawa area. To combat child poverty, the federal government should, first, reform policies to better support working families; second, establish a national day-care system; third, fully index children's benefits, including refundable and non-refundable child tax credits and the family allowance; and last, change its regressive child care expense deduction into a tax credit.

TRIBUTE TO MARTIN NOËL

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to our young university students, especially those in business administration, commerce and accounting.

I particularly wish to congratulate Martin Noël, of the municipality of Bernières in the riding of Lévis, who ranked first in Quebec on the examination of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

My congratulations also extend to those who, directly or indirectly, helped him achieve this level of excellence.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the government a report by the accounting firm of Ernst and Young released yesterday which states something I and other New Democrats have been saying for a long time—the GST will be particularly harmful to Canada's north.

In conjunction with the Brunelle commission which will eliminate the northern tax allowance for thousands of northern communities, the effects of the GST will make living in Canada's north a very difficult task.

In case the Minister of Finance did not know, the cost of basic goods and services is much more expensive in northern Canada, which means that the GST will cost more to residents of the north.

In light of this report, I call on the government to scrap plans to eliminate the northern tax allowance for many northern communities effective January 1, and to scrap the GST altogether.

HOUSING

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that housing is the corner-stone of a decent and liveable city. I do not have to tell you that in the city of Toronto, we do not have enough decent housing that people can afford. Demand for housing has far outstripped the supply, particularly the supply of modest housing the people of metro can afford to buy or rent.

I am pleased to say that the federal government, through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, along with the Ontario government, are each giving the Housing Exposition Corporation, Housexco, a $40,000 grant to examine the feasibility of organizing a world housing exposition to be held in Toronto in 1997.

With the $80,000 in grant money, Housexco proposes to work with community leaders, builders, and architects to explore the idea that in 1997 Toronto could be the site of a world housing exposition that would show creative and innovative housing designs drawn from Canada and throughout the world.

Who in the world could question Toronto as the site of a world housing exposition?

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Bramalea—Gore—Malton): Mr. Speaker, landing fees at Pearson International Airport are a bargain compared to their international counterparts which charge from two to four times our price. But space, after all, is an airport's most valuable resource.

Several of my colleagues have recently risen in the House to ask the minister to decrease landing fees so that smaller aircraft from other regions of Ontario can continue to fly into Pearson. Where should the priority lie? It is not a question of big business rolling over the little guy. It is about common sense and developing alternatives. It is time to accept that Pearson can no longer accommodate all air traffic in the region.

I encourage the Minister of Transport to look toward the development of airports outside of Pearson, which will create an efficient aviation system and will generate additional benefits for the region. These airports are willing and, with the right development, capable of accommodating the air traffic that Pearson International can no longer serve. It just makes sense.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the deceptive practices of the government are disgraceful. Since tabling the Supplementary Estimates on November 23, the government has consistently stated that extra moneys were required to fund the gulf war.

The President of the Treasury Board has tried to suggest that everything in the Supplementary Estimates had been planned, including over half the money, $2.5 billion required to pay the additional interest on the public debt. Why was this required? Because the Minister of Finance in his budget speech ignored opposition advice that high interest rates would continue throughout this year.

Manpower Temporary Service, which prepares employment forecasts, says that predicted hiring trends in January, February, and March 1991 present the most dismal picture in its 13 years of conducting its employment outlook surveys. This government-induced recession, which the minister seeks to conceal behind a shower of press releases, is a disgrace that should be consistently exposed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CONSTITUTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

In his announcement last Sunday, the Prime Minister indicated that he intends to set up a special joint committee of the House and Senate to look into changing the formula for amending our Constitution. Just a few weeks previous, the Prime Minister in this House announced the creation of a royal commission, headed by Mr. Spicer, to hear Canadians on the whole area and manner of constitutional change.

Does the Prime Minister's announcement last Sunday about setting up a new special joint committee of the House and the Senate mean that Canadians will not be able to express their views to the Spicer commission on the matter of constitutional amendment and the commission will not be able to consider this aspect of constitutional change? If so, is this not contrary to the spirit in which the Prime Minister spoke in this House when he created the commission headed by Mr. Spicer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. In fact, when the Spicer commission was appointed, I think I discussed in the House a number of fundamental questions that I thought the commission would be interested in considering, some of the most fundamental questions of Canadian values and the matters that continue to bind the nation together. They ranged from institutional change which was strongly requested from western Canada to the appropriateness of the existence of a notwithstanding clause in a constitutional document which is designed to protect minority rights. These were fundamental questions that I thought, among others, would be examined by the Spicer commission.

There is nothing at all in that mandate which precludes the possibility of consideration there or opinions expressed there relating to section 38 of the Constitution Act, 1982. But I always felt that it would be appropriate that that problem be given special attention. The idea of appointing a joint Senate–House of Commons committee to consider the matter and to invite participation, criticism, and observations from Canadians across the country surely is consistent with what my hon. friend and, I think, all members want, namely, the greatest degree of public participation in the parliamentary and constitutional process.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister speaks of public participation. Will he assure this House and the Canadian people that Canadians will be able to appear as witnesses before the special joint committee of the House and Senate that he has proposed and that it will not be another closed–door operation? Furthermore, will he assure this House and the Canadian people that if Canadians are able to appear before the special joint committee and they wish to express their views on constitutional change, in addition to the matter of amending the Constitution and the formula for it, they will not be limited to that narrow question and will be able to express their views on the whole area of constitutional change and development for this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary committee will be established with a difficult question in mind. For those of us who have been through it, the question of amending a constitution during the three–year time period raises a great deal of difficulties. This has been expressed by most, if not all, of the participants in constitutional reform over the last seven or eight years.

The object of the exercise is to deal specifically with this very serious problem, but committees of the House can establish their own rules. I know that no one is interested in cutting off anybody's input in regard to improvements to the Constitution or to the parliamentary process.

I understand that the House leader is meeting this afternoon with other House leaders to agree upon its composition and the manner in which it might operate. I am sure that all parliamentarians would welcome the input of Canadians both on this and on other matters.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since the procedure for changing the amending formula for our Constitution requires the unanimous consent of all the provinces, how does the Prime Minister intend to go about obtaining this unanimous consent once the joint committee's report is tabled? Furthermore, does the Prime Minister promise to act on this report, in addition to giving it his approval, or is he going to shelve it as he did with the Charest Committee's report?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): How, Mr. Speaker? I assume there are several ways to obtain unanimity. In 1987, we obtained unanimity when 10 provincial premiers, the Prime Minister and the three major parties in the House of Commons agreed to support the Meech Lake Accord. So it was practically unanimous.

The problem at the time was not how to obtain unanimity but how to preserve that unanimity over a three–year period, during which provincial governments might change. In fact, new premiers came on the scene and rejected the agreement approved previously by their predecessors. This is a serious dilemna for anyone who wants to see Quebec become part of the Canadian Constitution, on reasonable and honourable terms. Obviously, a different procedure is required. We obtained unanimity on the Meech Lake Accord in 1987. The problem was to preserve it, as changes occurred at the provincial level, and that is what the parliamentary committee will have to deal with.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The new initiative announced by the Prime Minister on the weekend did not, unfortunately, meet with the kind of unanimous support he hoped to see. In some circles there was even a certain amount of scepticism about this new government initiative. I realize the Prime Minister either did not have time or did not think it appropriate to consult the Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the New Democratic Party on creating this new committee.

However, I would like to know whether he took the time to consult with some of his provincial counterparts, and more specifically, whether he received some indication from the Government of Quebec of its political will and its support for this new initiative by the government.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our decision was based on a number of recommendations and observations that have been made by provincial premiers and members of this House for quite some time regarding the strictures of Section 38 of the present Constitution. For years, many parties have stressed the paralysis that ensues as a result of implementing this provision.

We had an example quite recently, and I am referring to last June, when we had a quasi-unanimous consent. One of the premiers refused to put the question to a vote before his legislative assembly. Hence the consequences we see today. We must avoid this in future, if at all possible. Because of this concern, which I am sure the hon. member shares, the parliamentary committee will start sitting as soon as possible.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows full well that over and above the amendment formula issue there is another basic question in the minds of Canadians from coast to coast, in Quebec, out west or elsewhere in the country: changing the distribution of responsibilities, dealing now with a new distribution of powers between the central government, the provinces, and even the municipalities. That is where the problem lies and I wonder why the Prime Minister would establish a parliamentary committee to debate the amending formula when he should strike a parliamentary committee to look into the real, problem, which is the distribution of responsibilities. Why did he not appoint such a committee? Will he not reconsider his decision and make sure that the parliamentary committee tackles the real issue, that is the redistribution of powers between the federal government and the provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my friend that indeed the country has to come to grips with a new and very important question of distribution of responsibilities. I share my friend's point of view. Still we must not lose sight of the fact that hardly a few months ago the five modest and minimal conditions spelled out by Quebec were considerd by some Canadian leaders as being much too revolutionary to be acceptable to the central government or to other provinces, and therefore that minimum was rejected at the time.

So we are looking at two issues, one fundamental, the other procedural. First of all we must deal with the procedural matter in the coming days, and I quite agree with my friend that in due time in the not too distant future the Parliament of Canada will have to deal with a much more pressing issue. Those people who barely a few months ago said that the Meech Lake Accord contained overly expensive conditions will now have to re-examine the problem from a different perspective.

POVERTY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister said the number of children living in poverty has gone down. Yet ever more people across Canada rely on food banks to be able to feed their family until the end of the month.

Mr. Speaker, whatever the Prime Minister may suggest, one out of six children in Canada still lives in poverty. In Montreal, St. John's, Halifax, Winnipeg, the number of people lining up at food banks has increased since summer's end.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, because this situation is alarming. What will the Prime Minister do to avoid this catastrophy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend the Leader of the New Democratic Party raised this issue yesterday, and I would suggest that the statistics I gave concerning the downward trend in poverty in Canada are encouraging. Some 956,000 Canadians have benefitted from government policies and now live above the poverty threshold—333,000 women and 299,000 children. Can we do more? Yes, of course. As far as I am concerned, one Canadian child living in poverty is one too many. Our national commitment should be to do everything we can to make sure that our children grow up in economically sound conditions, and this can be done by eliminating problems associated with poverty.

THE ECONOMY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am in agreement with the Prime Minister that there is a need to have a plan to fight poverty in this country and to fight the recession in this country that this government's policies have created.

About a year ago I stood in this House and brought to the attention of the government that it must act immediately on behalf of Canadian farmers who at that time were facing economic devastation. Agriculture Canada has predicted a 25 per cent decline in farm incomes and a staggering 68 per cent decline in Saskatchewan alone.

If we are to attack poverty in this country and if we are to attack the recession in all of the sectors of this economy, will the Prime Minister start by committing his government today to a permanent sensible income support program for farmers, including debt restructuring? In the event of the collapse or the breakdown in the GATT talks for farmers, will he tell this House if he has a contingency plan for farmers as the U.S. does?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague raised an important question, but I must remind her that a federal-provincial conference was held in Winnipeg a few weeks ago to look at all aspects of the Canadian farmers' income. In that regard, we have already put in place a plan for the Advance Payment Enhancement Programs and the farmers will receive money very soon.

We also launched two programs, Mr. Speaker: the GRIP and the NISA, that had been more than a year in the making as part of the comprehensive review of agricultural policy.

We had discussions with the provinces and we are about to sign agreements with each of the provinces that have agreed to share with us the long term financing of the programs, for the benefit of the Canadian farmers.

You must realize that agriculture is a divided jurisdiction. By that we mean that the provinces have to do their fair share. Over the past few years, we responded very positively to the farm producers' requests, Mr. Speaker. As we speak, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds are defending the interests of our farm producers in Brussels.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister.

There is a serious question about child poverty in this country. There is a serious question about the fate of farmers, whether we are even going to be able to have food self-sufficiency in this country. There is no question that the recession is deepening. Unemployment rates are predicted to climb to over 9 per cent.

When the Prime Minister looks at the figures which indicate that we could even be in a worse position now than in the Liberal-created recession of 1981-82, what is he going to do? What kind of a plan is he going to propose to get us out of this recession? Will he consider establishing an all-party committee to attack the recession in this country and to talk about a real economic plan for this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to my hon. friend that if she has any concrete ideas in regard to the manner in which the economy can be improved, the House and the government would be more than delighted to hear from her.

Mr. Murphy: Stop the GST.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says: "Stop the GST". That is typical NDP. Anything to modernize the economy and to make Canada more competitive internationally, the NDP is against. That is why it is going to stay in opposition forever.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend does a very serious disservice to the House by suggesting that the difficult times we are in have equalled or surpassed the recession and depression of 1981–82.

We are talking right now about an 8 per cent or an 8.5 per cent unemployment rate, which compared with some 13 per cent or 14 per cent then; a 4.2 per cent inflation rate, which compared with 13 per cent or 14 per cent then; and a 12.5 per cent bank rate, which compared with 22 per cent and 23 per cent then.

What we have going now are some difficult economic times that we are in the process of working our way out of, while maintaining a non-inflationary climate. It is very important that inflation be wrung out of the economy because otherwise, if we followed some of the ideas of my hon. friend, the people who would be most hurt—

Mr. Speaker: I think it is time. We should go on.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services.

The unemployment rate in the city of Cornwall has risen to 15.5 per cent. We all know that the Canadian economy is in a recession, the deficit is soaring, interest rates are high, and the GST will boost inflation further.

I want to ask the minister who represents eastern Ontario what new programs he is prepared to announce to help the people of this region who lost their jobs through the economic mismanagement of his government.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that in eastern Ontario alone over $20 million have been put into that region this last year for Community Futures.

We have had expansions at various areas in northern Ontario and eastern Ontario; northern Ontario thanks to FEDNOR and eastern Ontario thanks to a series of initiatives that have been taken by the department of industry, for example. We have the Goodrich expansion. We have high-tech expansion along the suburbs of the Ottawa perimeter. Above all, we have also created in eastern Ontario more jobs in the last two years than were created in the first two years of the 1980s.

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): It is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker!

I will try again to ask a question of the minister responsible for eastern Ontario. We asked the government repeatedly to come up with an economic development plan for eastern Ontario. Given the 15.5 per cent unemployment rate in Cornwall, the loss of over 3,000 full time jobs in the communities of Cornwall, Hawkesbury and Renfrew in the past two years, will the minister tell us when his government is going to implement an economic recovery plan for eastern Ontario?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks about Cornwall specifically. Under the Community Development Program and the Community Futures Program, approximately $12 million have been earmarked for Cornwall, Hawkesbury, Prescott, Russell, Renfrew, and the Smiths Falls area.

I can be more precise about ISTC programs. The department of industry has committed in the last year more than $18 million toward economic development in eastern Ontario. This is a good record, a record that this government can be proud of.

CIDA

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the absence of the minister responsible for international aid.

In its annual report CIDA has long claimed that its relationship with non-governmental organizations is based "on mutual respect and equality". Yet today one of its major suppliers, one of its major partners, the World University Services of Canada, was forced into receivership.

Since CIDA knew for several weeks of the difficulty this organization was in, will the minister please explain to the House why the government was not able to assist this organization through some difficult times?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, representatives of CIDA did in fact have extension discussions with representatives of the World University Services of Canada. We very much regret that this has happened to the organization.

The hon. member will understand that despite the closeness of our relations with non-governmental organizations and our determination to rely on them and to help them, we cannot take responsibility for the finances of independent organizations.

What we have done is work very closely to ensure that necessary steps are in place to ensure that students in Canada under WUSC auspices and WUSC volunteers overseas are not adversely affected.

• (1440 )

If the hon. member has other practical suggestions as to steps that might be taken which recognize the independent financial status of WUSC Canada and other non-governmental organizations, I would certainly be interested in hearing them.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister.

Although there is an independence involved in the organization, there is also a responsibility on behalf of the government to the Canadian taxpayer and a responsibility to the international aid community to protect the reputation of Canadian groups. In this light CIDA failed to do both.

Will the minister reiterate his commitment that people working for this organization overseas will not be stranded and that students studying in Canada will be protected in terms of their incomes, air fares, and other expenses?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I reject the hon. member's observation about CIDA, as I am sure he will on reflection. I repeat the undertakings that I have given.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment.

The minister knows that the federal government has just slapped massive new closures on the harvest and consumption of fish, shellfish, and waterfowl around six B.C. pulp mills due to dangerous levels of dioxins and furans, costing both jobs and food.

Since it is known that these poisons are dangerous, since there are 106 pulp mills in Canada outside British Columbia pumping the same contaminants into the water, and since these poisons are finding their way up to 1,000 kilometres downstream and in other areas of Canada, would the minister explain why it is that the public in no other province has been given similar health alerts to those given in B.C. last week?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I can tell you that this program has been done co-operatively with the province. It is a program that we are doing elsewhere in the country.

In the case of B.C., the decision was reached after the studies were concluded. We can also say that quite a bit of progress has been accomplished over the last few years, but these studies are coming at this point and we are taking steps to ensure that public safety is maintained.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I take it the minister is telling Canadians that the dioxins and furan levels in fish, shellfish, and waterfowl in other areas of the country are safe.

My supplementary question is for the same minister. Since the former Minister of the Environment promised this House on June 16, 1989 new pulp mill regulations "no later than 1990" and that "there would be no concessions for violators", how does the minister justify violating both promises and allowing all pulp mills to continue dumping poison until 1994, and loopholes for some that will carry them beyond 1994?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are not doing that.

HEALTH

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In reply to a question yesterday raised in this House on user fees and extra billing, the minister of health failed to assure Canadians explicitly that these were not future options for Canada.

Would the minister now stand and explicitly assure Canadians that they do not have to worry about ever paying user fees and extra medical bills?

No evasive answer, please; just a simple reassurance to Canadians.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may have missed the answer yesterday. The question was: "Did we have any plans whatsoever to change the Canada Health Act as it related to extra billing?". The answer was no.

What the Minister of Finance assured the House yesterday—and it was the assurance that I gave the House as well—was that there was a continuing, strong federal role for medicare for the future.

We believe that the system of shared responsibility for health care in Canada, where provinces have the priority and responsibility in terms of delivery of services but where national standards are met, is a good system for Canada, something that we are determined to preserve.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased to hear that the minister is equally convinced of the virtues of medicare.

Since the Canadian Council on Social Development in its most recent publication said: "Bill C-69, (forced by this government through this House last June 12), would accelerate funding cutbacks for medicare so that federal money to the provinces for this program would be reduced to about zero by the year 2004", thereby killing medicare, would the minister, to be both convinced and convincing to Canadians, pledge to this House today that he would prevail on his cabinet colleagues to abandon Bill C-69?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance made it quite clear yesterday, and it was quite unequivocal, that there was a continuing federal responsibility in the funding of medicare. We continue to feel that it is important for the federal government to be present and for national standards to be set. As well, we want to stress the fact that the federal government has shown leadership in a whole range of areas in order to protect the health of Canadians.

I was expecting, frankly, when the hon. member got up today, that he was going to ask a question with regard to the Gemini that was won last night by the Federal Centre for AIDS, among others for the superb video talking about AIDS, as an example of leadership that is shown by the federal government in health care.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. A report commissioned by provincial and territorial ministers and released yesterday confirms what northerners and my colleagues on this side of the House have been saying all along about the GST; the GST will unfairly punish northern residents.

Municipalities, schools, hospitals, small businesses, and consumers in the north will be harder hit by the GST than elsewhere in Canada.

Will the minister admit today that northern Canadians will pay more of this unfair tax, and will he agree to reduce this unfair tax burden on northerners by exempting northern energy and transportation costs from the GST?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the report here and I quote from it: "Most resource and export based industries in the north will gain from the zero rating of exports and the elimination of taxes on business imports".

They go on to say that these gains could, not be offset by inflation induced by the GST, a rise in the Canadian dollar or other matters.

But the conclusion we have come to is that the GST over-all, not focusing in on individual aspects of the GST but taking the over-all impact of the GST, is that it will be beneficial to those people living in the north.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. First of all, let us get it straight. There is not exactly booming resource development in the Northwest Territories at this point. Next, we live in a very pre-industrialized area so those tax credits do not really apply to the north.

My supplementary question has to do with the essential expenditures in the north on transportation, energy, and housing which will be more costly. As well, the tax credit is clearly inadequate for northern residents who pay 40 per cent more for the cost of living.

Will the minister admit that the tax will have an extra cost burden on the north, and will the minister take immediate action to exempt the north from this tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of projects that are quite healthy these days. We are talking about Norman Wells, Cyprus Anvil Echo Mining, and a number of other projects.

I am not suggesting for a minute that everything is going as well as my hon. friend would like it to go. What we are working on right now with the land claims, with the fact that the GST will reduce the cost of new investment, will make it easier to bring on new projects. These projects in aggregate are going to be major beneficiaries of the GST. It will generate income. It will generate new jobs. It will generate even greater activity. That is the impact and the benefit we believe the GST will have over-all on those people who are living in northern communities.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Canada's position with respect to science and technology is already among the worst in the industrial world. Now Roy Woodbridge, who is the president of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association, has said that this government's high interest policy has made investment in new advanced technology almost impossible in Canada, and it is making it necessary for many high-tech firms to consider moving from the country, as many already have.

Now that the Minister of Finance has succeeded in causing a recession, is it also his intention to destroy the scientific and technological restructuring necessary for long-term industrial recovery?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement by my hon. friend would come as a very serious surprise to the 40 members of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology with whom I spent three or four hours last week. They represent the research and development, business and university communities across Canada. They recognize that while Canada does lag behind some of our important competitors in terms of productivity and in some areas of research and development, they indicated at that meeting the remarkable strides that had been made by this government with Centres of Excellence, the Canada scholars program, and the general funding programs since 1984.

Bill C-22, for example, is a classic illustration where $1.3 billion of new investment will go into the pharmaceutical industries in Canada in research and development simply as a result of an important piece of legislation that passed this House and eventually passed the Senate. They indicated to us their desire to work closely with the government and with all parliamentarians to improve Canada's competitiveness. This is an important factor and I know that I can enlist the support of my hon. friend in that very important national objective.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, it appears we are making some progress. At least now we are getting the top guns on the other side talking about science and technology. We hope that there will be performance.

My question is for the Prime Minister. Is he familiar with the fact that two government reports have pointed out that in the Canadian automobile industry, first of all, there is a $1 billion deficit in the amount of R and D required to make the Canadian auto parts industry competitive and the second report points out that the reason for a lack of investment now has become the high value of the dollar.

Does this government have in place a program or a plan of action that will correct the situation that this government's monetary policy has caused which is hurting the development of research and development in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear part of that.

Some hon. member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mulroney: In the part that I did hear, my hon. friend expressed surprise that as Prime Minister I would be dealing with science and technology. I am the first Prime Minister to have created and chaired a National Advisory Board on Science and Technology. In fact, at most meetings they say: "Where's Howard?"

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister could answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, there are deficiencies in terms of Canada's competitiveness that the National Advisory Board has pointed out. We are working very closely with them and the universities and research centres to correct these. There are areas of deep worry in regard to our productivity enhancement programs across Canada. That concerns all Canadians because it involves our job-creation capacity which is of great importance.

They did point out the fact, and I know my hon. friend would want me to conclude by mentioning this, that in terms of the federal government's fiscal policy, Canada has with the exception of Australia, the most generous fiscal situation for the attraction of investment capital for research and development in Canada.

PORK PRODUCERS

Mr. Jean Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): My question is for the Minister of State for Agriculture. The entire pork industry in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region has fallen upon hard times and some 170 jobs are at stake. The federal government must act to save this industry.

My question is this: How are the discussions with the pork producers coming along? The idea of an exploratory market study was brought up, but it could take three or four months. What is being done to provide support to the producers and to the flour mills pending the results of the study?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague did indeed submit this question to us a few weeks ago. I have since met personally with producers from the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean. I met representatives—

Mr. Lapierre: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I did. I think that I visited that area of the country more regularly than the members of the Bloc québécois, Mr. Speaker. At any rate, I do not need to take lessons from them.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blais: I do visit each area in Quebec and I think that our farm producers were never better represented than they have been by our government in the past six years.

Going back to my hon. colleague's question, representatives from the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, from Agriculture Canada and from the Farm Debt Review Board are presently in the Jonquière area to get together with producers and look at the steps that could be taken in the short term to help them as we did in the past, Mr. Speaker.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

There has been much talk and attention on the current impasse between the European Community and other countries over subsidy proposals in the GATT negotiations. All Canadians are concerned about the implications for Canada should the current impasse continue.

What action is Canada taking to break the current impasse? What are the government's plans should these talks fail?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture called me this morning from Brussels where these talks are ongoing.

He, like a lot of others, is discouraged somewhat by the attitude of the European Community whose position, put on the table again yesterday, does not vary substantially from the disappointing position that it put out with regard to agricultural subsidies some months ago.

Last night, under the leadership of the Swedish minister who is chairing that subcommittee, there were a number of bilaterals in which our Minister of Agriculture is actively involved. We hope that this will break the deadlock of the unfair trade distorting subsidy attitudes that the community has adopted, which then provokes a counterpoint from the United States and places Canadian farmers in very serious jeopardy.

The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture is working very carefully with all of his colleagues from the Cairns group to provoke a new offer from the Europeans which hopefully will get us out of this unacceptable cycle of heavy subsidies with which Canadian farmers and the Canadian treasury cannot realistically compete.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, we have heard nothing about the discussions concerning supply-management, despite the fact that the European Community and Canada seemed to have a basis for agreement.

The European Community has said that it wants to have a definition of Article XI that would allow countries with production quotas to maintain import controls.

Given the similarity between the European and the Canadian positions on supply-management, what has the Prime Minister done to get his American friends on side?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Article XI was specifically discussed yesterday in Brussels. The Japanese, the Koreans, the entire Cairns group and most of the world's agricultural traders agreed with the position set forward by Canada in respect of Article XI.

That is the position that the Minister of State for Agriculture and the Minister of Agriculture worked out in intimate consultation with Canadian agricultural producers. This is the one we have been defending around the world, and this is the one that is now achieving a wide degree of acceptance at Brussels.

If we maintain that degree of solidarity, Canada will prevail with its important position.

THE CONSTITUTION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the mandate of the Joint Committee on the Constitution. Will the committee, to be at all useful, prepare, as part of its mandate, a process for negotiations with a sovereign Quebec? Will the committee consider how one-on-one negotiations would be conducted, as demanded by the Government of Quebec? Will the committee be able to determine who will speak for English Canada when Quebec makes use of its right to self-determination?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my answers to the hon. member for Papineau—Saint-Michel and the Leader of the Opposition, I described what I felt was an acceptable mandate for the commitee. It is understood, however, that leaders of the various political parties will meet this afternoon to consider the details. Our purpose is to render more flexible a section in the Constitution which so far has tended to paralyze negotiations in this country. The ultimate goal, of course, for most members in this House is to find a flexible formula for the reintegration of Quebec as a full member of the Canadian family. All members in this House, with a few exceptions, support a united Canada.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's answer is pretty much the same as Jean Chrétien's would have been.

What I want to ask the Prime Minister is this: Will he be realistic and give this committee a specific mandate to consider a scenario in which Quebec becomes master of its own destiny, to prepare English Canada for the reality he knows is imminent in Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, personally, as a Quebecer and as a Canadian, my position has always been that the best role for Quebec and for Francophones in Quebec— The best way to protect their aspirations is within a united Canada. That has been the case for 125 years. I think that if everyone showed a little more openness and leadership, this country would be able to find new formulas to protect and respect and promote this French fact which is very much alive and well on this continent.

Personally, with my colleagues from the various parties in this House, I wish to seek an appropriate and acceptable way for Quebec to say yes, of course, to Canada, and a formula that would enable Canada to say yes, once and for all, to Quebec.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): My question is directed to the Minister of State for Agriculture and concerns the GATT talks. The outcome of the present talks will have a major impact on the economy of this country and especially on agriculture. Some countries have threatened to leave the negotiating table if more substantial progress is not achieved. Could the minister tell us what Canada expects will happen during the next few days which are supposed to be critical?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister mentioned earlier, talks in Brussels have reached an impasse. Only two hours ago, the chairman of the GATT negotiating committee called another meeting of all parties to try and break the deadlock.

Like the Prime Minister, I had a conversation with the Minister of Agriculture a few hours ago, and we are very hopeful, because I believe that all of us, with the support of farm producers— Canadian farm producers were briefed by the Minister of Agriculture a few hours ago and they all support us at this time. The Canadian position is a balanced one that is in line with the expectations of Canadian farm producers, and we all hope the deadlock will be broken within the next few hours, Mr. Speaker.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of members, the presence in the gallery of Mr. Ivars Godmanis, Prime Minister of the Republic of Latvia, who is accompanied by Mr. Janis Jurkans, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Latvia.

PRIVILEGE

POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, according to Standing Order 48(1), regarding a question of privilege, the standing order states, and I quote:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I gave you notice this morning about my question of privilege which pertains to two letters which I received this morning, bearing an Ottawa stamp of December 3, 1990. I sent these two letters to my constituents in Parkdale—High Park one year ago less two days, December 6, 1989.

The government boasts about Canada Post being in the black and about its efficiency and yet it took one year for my letters to get to Toronto. The resident had moved. It took one year for the letters to be returned to me.

My question of privilege is that my work as a member of Parliament is being undermined when it takes Canada Post one year to return my letters from my constituents. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to look into this because this clearly is a denial of my privileges as a member of Parliament. Somehow, my frank was being totally ignored on these two letters.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised a matter which I think ought to be of considerable embarrassment. I wonder if the hon. member would let me take a look at the material. I may even have to have a further discussion about the matter.

I will take it under consideration and I will return back to the hon. member of the House if appropriate.

BROADCASTING ACT

The House resumed from Monday, December 3rd, consideration of Bill C–40, an Act respecting Broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Speaker: It being 3 p.m., pursuant to an order adopted on Monday, December 3rd, 1990, the House will now proceed to the deferred recorded divisions on the motions at the report stage of Bill C–40.

Call in the members.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: In effect, you are asking the House to proceed to a recorded division under a consent given on December 3rd.

I should like you to look closely at the procedure and the text of this motion which was adopted to the effect that at this time, upon request from the whips of the recognized parties, the result of some divisions would apply to a number of motions, according to the agreement announced by the said whips at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this type of agreement does not reflect at all the reality of the House. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to look into this very closely.

It may have been possible at a time when the three whips could get together as a privileged few and speak on behalf of ordinary members who, in some cases, were nothing more than voting machines. But this is no longer possible because there are in the House about a dozen members without any authorized whip to represent them.

Therefore, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to look again at the value of motions of this type within the context of the House and its membership as it is now. I refuse to be taken for granted by the whips of those other parties who are not authorized to speak on our behalf.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with the Whips. There will be ample opportunity for every member of the House to express their opinion on each of the motions. What the Whips have dealt with is the sense of the motion and about how many times we would actually have to collectively stand up.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you have called in the members and that we proceed with that 15–minute bell, at the conclusion of which my colleague across the way from the Official Opposition, will indicate the decision which the Whips are recommending to the House. If an argument must take place, that might be the appropriate time for it. I think we should proceed with calling in the members.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the government whip behaves as though he owned the right to vote of all the members of this House and as though the whip of the Official Opposition represented his party and tried to come to an agreement.

Mr. Speaker, what I am asking you to do is to look into the notion that we have to abide by the arbitrary decision of the Whips. Mr. Speaker, it is clear that I would not want to embarrass the House which is about to vote on such an important bill. I know that the Minister of Communication wants to use his time in Canada doing something other than spending his afternoon in the House. The fact is, however, that I feel this type of motion is unacceptable, in view of the current conditions prevailing in this House and I would not want ever again to be bound by such an agreement between three individuals who do not speak on behalf of independent members.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, let us not get carried away. Yesterday, in this Chamber, we gave unanimous consent to a procedural order. I will not comment on the attendance of the hon. member, but I know that I was here, Mr. Speaker, and that the House gave its consent, recognizing that there must be some arrangement on the question of voting. The question now is whether or not we should vote, and I think we should. Then, we will have to decide if the vote just held should apply to another one. We will see then, Mr. Speaker, but I remind the hon. member that whips—and I am one of them—are responsible for the orderly conduct of the business of the House.

[English]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I just want to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Shefford the fact that the motion last night is totally consistent with the rules and procedures of the House. Perhaps he would want to read citations 78(1), (2), and (3) of our Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. members for their assistance to the Chair. The hon. member for Shefford is complaining.

He is complaining about the motions which, yesterday, received unanimous consent.

[English]

The hon. member may not be happy about it, but the fact of the matter is that the House passed the motion unanimously and I am not at all sure that there needs to be any further discussion about it. As a consequence I must proceed.

Call in the members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the unanimous order which was adopted yesterday, there have been discussions among the Whips of the three respective parties, and there has been agreement that a vote on Motion No. 1 would apply to Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, the amendment to 24, 24, 26, 27, 30, 32, 34, 36, 40, the amendment to 42, and 42.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. The first question is on Motion No. 1. The result of the vote on this motion will apply to Motions No. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24 and amendment, 26, 27, 30, 32, 34, 36, 40 and amendment, and 42.

• (1540)

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I declare the motion negatived.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, considering that it was decided that some motions should be grouped for the question, I have no choice but to respect that decision. However, if Motion No. 14, which deals with an all-news service in French, had been put separately, I would have voted in favour of it.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since that same procedure prevented us from voting directly on some of the motions, I wish to advise you that I had to vote the way I did—and not specifically because of the national unity amendment—when, in fact, I would have voted in favour of Motions No. 8, 13, 14 and 15, as well as Motions No. 18 and 24.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I know they do not like it, but they should be glad to see democracy in action. I would have also voted in favour of Motion No. 42, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Miss Grey: Mr. Speaker, I also would like to express my regrets at not being asked as a member of the House about what I would feel.

I would like to change my vote. In the interest of saving time, I would like to have it on the record that I would have voted yes for Motions Nos. 19, 26, 27, 32 and 42.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the discussions which have occurred with the whips of the three parties, I think you would find that there be disposition to move to Motion No. 33 at this time for a vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I declare the motion negatived.

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, again pursuant to the special order of the House, I think you would find that there is a disposition among the respective whips of the parties that Motions 39 and 42 respectively would be adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The next question is on Motion No. 42. A vote on this motion also applies to Motion No. 39.

Mr. Hawkes: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): A point of order. The member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I concur with my colleague across the way that the decision of the Whips was to adopt these two motions, No. 42 which would apply to No. 39, without a recorded division. We could then move to the concurrence motion.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motions Nos. 42 and 39?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motions Nos. 39 and 42 agreed to on division.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C–40, as amended, be concurred in with further amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. members: Now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Pursuant to order made on Monday, December 3, 1990, the bill will be read the third time now.

Government Orders

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications) moves:

—That Bill C–40, An Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, be now read a third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I know that I speak for many Canadians in saying that I am both reassured and very pleased to see Bill C–40, a new Broadcasting Act for Canada, receive Third Reading in this House. I know, because many Canadians have written to me from all across the country, urging Government to proceed rapidly with third reading and passage of this bill.

• (1600)

One such letter expressed, in my view both clearly and cogently, the most important reasons why this legislation should become law. The letter read in part and I quote: "Canadians want made–in–Canada programs; we want our special cultural differences and similarities promoted on radio and TV, not submerged; we want more Canadian programs, not fewer, for better choice; we want our Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and our CRTC to be strong and independent, with the public's interests given precedence."

I can think of no better summary of Bill C–49's objectives.

The Canadian broadcasting system is in a period of accelerated change. New technologies, such as high definition television, digital radio, direct broadcast satellites and fiber optics, offer the possibility of an ever–widening range of high quality programming services. Yet, the majority of these services are of foreign origin and the escalating costs of program production make producers think in terms of global rather than local or even national audiences.

Time and time again, and despite the wealth of foreign programming already available to us, Canadians have responded positively to those Canadian programs which are competitive with the best the world has to offer. And such programs are increasing in number and variety.

Canadian broadcasters are realizing that to compete with foreign services, they have to be different. To recapture their Canadian audiences, they have to offer programming of high quality. To quote Michael McCabe, President of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters: "In the one–hundred channel universe, you've got to be good or they'll switch channels".

Broadcasters increasingly are producing distinctively Canadian programs which will hold their audience and which are finding international as well as Canadian markets.

This Bill will encourage public and private broadcasters to continue to produce not only more but better Canadian programs. We believe that this is the most appropriate way to respond to the challenges facing Canadian broadcasting.

But there are other reasons why we need this legislation.

Bill C–40 will replace the outdated legal definitions in the current Broadcasting Act of 1968 with definitions appropriate to current, and hopefully future, realities in the broadcasting system so that the CRTC may regulate all types of broadcasting activities in the public interest without fear of its authority being challenged in the courts.

Technology always has been a driving force in broadcasting, but the only thing that really matters is program content; all the rest is housekeeping. Bill C–40 is the first legislation to fully recognize this truism of broadcasting policy.

The current Broadcasting Act ties the definition of broadcasting to over–the–air transmission, yet today most Canadians receive programming services by cable and satellite. Some of these services are not even directly available over the air and some are available only in return for payment.

Bill C–40 recasts the legal definitions in the Act to focus on the transmission of programs to the public, regardless of the technology used. In this way, the bill establishes an appropriate balance among all the components of the Canadian broadcasting system.

I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that the new definitions in Bill C–40 are intended to ensure that all Canadian programming services—present or future—will operate under comparable regulations and conditions regardless of the nature of the service or the technology used to transmit their programs to the public.

At the same time, however, the Broadcasting Act must recognize that the same technologies used to transmit broadcast programs are also used to deliver other kinds of services. Broadcasting legislation should not become an intrument for inhibiting the evolution of services which do not properly fall within its scope.

Bill C–40 is about television and radio programming. These activities have traditionally been regulated because they are cultural in nature and they provide a public service essential to the maintenance and enhancement of Canadian identity and cultural sovereignty.

Information–based services such as shopping and real estate services, data base services, home security services and the like are of a different nature. Most are not now regulated. Furthermore, unlike broadcasting, the vast majority of these new services are not of such a high cultural impact.

By dealing with the transmission of programs to the public, rather than on a particular technology, this bill gives the CRTC clear guidance about which activities are to be regulated, such as broadcasting. It also gives the commission the latitude it needs to determine how best to regulate those undertakings which eventually become involved in different types of activity.

The technologies used for broadcasting and telecommunications are converging rapidly. Bill C–40 recognizes this reality and gives the CRTC the powers it needs to regulate broadcasting well into the twenty–first century.

The bill also recognizes that newer technologies allow programming services to encode their signals for distribution to paying suscribers only. For this reason, it provides a right of civil action against theft of encoded signals, a provision which has found support from the cablevision and satellite direct–to–home television industries.

The CRTC has served Canadians well. Under its supervision, the broadcasting system has witnessed extraordinary growth. The commission has tried to ensure that the range and variety of Canadian programming kept pace with this growth. More recently, the commission has taken initiatives to streamline its activities and lighten the regulatory burden.

The CRTC has largely deregulated AM radio, recognizing the particular problems of that important medium; it has introduced new approaches to the regulation of Canadian content on television, and it has launched major reviews of the regulations governing FM radio as well as cable rates. These activities are commendable. Bill C–40 will enable the CRTC to serve Canadians even better. It will encourage the commission to take initiatives and give it more flexibility to find innovative and creative ways of pursuing the objectives of the Broadcasting Act with a lighter regulatory touch.

Bill C–40 also will change the commission in several ways.

The bill gives to the Governor in Council authority to issue broad policy directions to the CRTC and will establish clearly the Government's role in setting general guidelines for the broadcasting system on broad policy matters.

Additionally, the bill will allow restructuring of the commission, bringing more openness and accessibility to its public hearing process and greater sensitivity to regional needs.

CRTC decision–making will be decentralized so that panels of commissioners appointed to public hearings across Canada will no longer only hear the matters before them, but also reach decisions. Broadcasters and the public attending these hearings will know that the commissioners they address will be those who decide the issues before them. This is in keeping with the basic principles of justice. The Government recognizes, however, that the commission's mandate requires its decisions to reflect country–wide policies and objectives. For this reason, the bill requires that panels of commissioners shall consult with the commission to ensure consistent interpretation of broadcasting policy and regulations.

We believe that decentralized decision–making with mandatory consultation, provides for an appropriate balance between, on the one hand, a more open, accessible and efficient regulatory process and, on the other hand, consistent interpretation of policies by panels of commissioners operating across Canada.

In the same spirit, the establishement of regional offices of the CRTC provided for in this legislation will foster a greater sense that all Canadians have access to the commission and that it is aware of regional issues and concerns.

Through its decisions, the CRTC affects individual Canadians directly. Its regulations and decisions determine the range and even the selection of programming services Canadians can receive and the cost of receiving those services. Accordingly, we believe that the CRTC should have a regional presence in Canada.

Recently, the former chairman of the commission, Keith Spicer, supported passage of the Bill, saying that, on balance, the result will be very positive. "In practical terms", he said, "C–40 will give the CRTC much stronger and more credible enforcement powers."

Mr. Speaker, I now turn to the centrepiece of Canadian Broadcasting Policy, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. As the national public broadcaster, the CBC, under this bill, will remain a strong and independent voice and the foremost producer of Canadian radio and television programming.

The bill reformulates the CBC's mandate to place greater emphasis on the distinctively Canadian character of CBC programming.

[English]

For the first time, this mandate includes specific references to the important role that the CBC has in reflecting Canada, in providing English and French programming services, in meeting the needs of official language minorities, in reflecting Canadian society in all its aspects, in actively contributing to the flow and exchange of cultural expression, and, in all these ways, contributing to a shared Canadian consciousness and identity.

Certain critics have lamented the removal of the phrase "national unity" from the CBC's mandate. Yet, there can be no doubt that the objectives which I have just stated will indeed contribute to Canadian unity. For how can there be unity without the flow and exchange of cultural expression, in English and French, among all the component parts of Canada, as is foreseen by this bill? How can there be unity without a shared awareness of Canadian identity?

Bill C–40 reinterprets the objective of Canadian unity now in the CBC's mandate in terms which are more appropriate to a truly independent public broadcaster.

In considering this issue, Mr. Speaker, an all–party committee of this House unanimoulsy concluded that: "there must be no suggestion in the act that the CBC has any obligation to serve as a propagandist, even for a cause as legitimate as national unity."

I believe that this was and remains the right conclusion. If there is any doubt that an objective to promote "national unity" could be interpreted in a political way, then such wording has no place in the legal mandate of and independent public broadcaster like the CBC.

Most comments, including those of the new president and of the chairman designate of the CBC, concur that the new wording is a significant improvement. As to the CBC's operations and administration, Bill C–40 rationalizes the corporation's management structure, by separating the quite different functions of president and chief executive officer from those of the Chairman of the board of directors. In addition, the bill clarifies the nature of the CBC's accountability to Parliament while, for the first time, stating in law the CBC's journalistic, creative and programming independence.

Among its many other benefits, passage of this bill will allow the chairman designate to assume his long-delayed rightful title and responsibilities at the head of Canada's foremost cultural institution.

Mr. Speaker, I launched the long process that has led to third reading of Bill C–40, with the appointment of the Caplan–Sauvageau Task Force on Broadcasting Policy in May 1985. It was one of the first iniatives I undertook as Minister of Communications. Mr. Speaker, the government has had occasion to say before that Bill C–40 is fundamentally a consensus document. As we prepare to vote on its third reading, this bill has obtained the support of the CRTC, the CBC, most private broadcasters and a wide cross-section of the Canadian public. It is high time that this bill was passed into law.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what our Minister of Communications had to say. I certainly would hope his introductory remarks would be listened to with a great deal of care and then be analysed.

I will leave that analysis to the people of Canada, to the instruments that are to put into effect this particular bill, and I believe time and history will prove that the words were right. The message was right, but the application of the message is sadly lacking. And so it is with a sense of sadness that I stand to speak at third reading of this bill.

It is a very important bill. It is a very important instrument and I would, in the time that I have, do a review and an analysis of where we are in the broadcasting industry, the broadcasting services in Canada. The purpose of Bill C–40 was to update the 1968 Broadcasting Act and is essentially identical to Bill C–136 which died on the Order Paper prior to the 1988 federal election.

The legislation had its genesis in the task force on broadcast policy. It had extensive review by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture with hearings across this land. It resulted in four reports containing recommendations for new broadcasting legislation. The committee and the members of that committee listened to the people, and our report reflected the people. We on this side of the House spoke for the interested parties, while from the government benches we heard barely a word; the parliamentary secretary and now, for the first time, a speech by the minister.

While no persons on the government side spoke to or supported this bill, I have been privileged the other way. In fact, I have been more than privileged. I have been well treated by the members of my caucus.

Bill C–40 was introduced for first reading, I would remind this House, on October 11, 1989. It received second reading in December 1989, was studied in legislative committee from January to March, 1990. It was reported to this House on March 20, 1990, and it languished on the Order Paper until October 31 when it was finally called for report stage.

Rumours that were spread by the government about delays, dilatory amendments, filibustering by this side of the House, were unfounded. I would venture to say they were a gross exaggeration, in fact, if not untrue.

The real story of this bill was the reluctance of this government, the reluctance and lack of commitment by its cabinet, and by its members, and opposition by many of the backbench to the contents of this bill. Otherwise why did we have all those zipped lips where no one stood to speak, support, or defend the minister and his bill. I think that was eloquent silence that indicated a lack of support.

The reluctance on the part of the government because of the badly flawed state of this bill is one thing, I would remind the population and the involved and interested parties, many of whom called me and agreed with me when I explained the process, that I should continue the good fight. They recognize, as this House should recognize, and as the public recognizes that the government controls the action in this House, determines the calling of the bills and the procedure of the bills. We, on this side, do not have control of the legislative agenda as much as we would like to do so.

When Bill C–136 died, Liberals had hoped that the new Minister of Communications would have taken time to reshape a new bill and put his own imprint upon that bill. Again, because the government delayed, Bill C–136 came in at the last minute and it died on the Order Paper. We had hoped that when the minister put his own imprint on it, he might fix the major flaws. Not only has he not done that, he has shown absolutely little interest in this bill. He did not speak at second reading. He appeared briefly at legislative committee and never uttered a sound at report stage to defend his bill. He made up for part of that in a very eloquent speech to defend his point of view right now during third reading. That is the only time we have really heard from him in this House.

Liberals are pleased to see the following provisions included in Bill C–40, from Bill C–136: Women, children, cultural minorities, aboriginal peoples and the disabled are specifically mentioned in the legislation and the need to portray more accurately the multicultural and multiracial nature of our society; originators of program signals and their authorized agents, such as cable operators, will be able to take action in the courts against commercial pirates stealing their scrambled signals and thereby stealing intellectual property, creative products, which is so much a key to the well–being and the functioning of this system; provisions making educational broadcasting an integral part of the law.

Liberals are particularly pleased that the government accepted the following Liberal amendments: recognition of community broadcasting as one of the elements of the Canadian broadcasting system, along with the public and the private; mandatory requirement that the Canadian broadcasting system be owned and controlled by Canadians; that the programming of Canadian broadcasters also include children and reflection of the multiracial nature of Canada, ensuring that television and radio more accurately portray the reality of Canada in its multiracial as well as the multicultural nature.

There are flaws that remain, however. Earlier I presented on behalf of my party a range of substantive amendments which we believe necessary to make this bill the legislative instrument required to meet Canada's needs in the future.

A number of the amendments we proposed in Bill C–40's predecessor bill, C–136, were accepted, and some during legislative committee study of Bill C–40. We appreciate that. Nevertheless, the changes which have been accepted do not address some of the most fundamental concerns which we have raised throughout this debate.

Let me just remind you that the concerns we have about this bill include, in addition to those I wish to concentrate on today, many additional important policy matters. Among them are the following: we do not ensure that federal jurisdiction will not be challenged to the changes in definition section; the need to make provisions for broadcast programming in representative native languages, as well as increased access to post–captioning for the hearing impaired; the urgent requirement to avoid unfair competition and conflicts of interests by incorporating in the law provisions limiting the role of cable television systems to providing programming complementary to that offered by licensed Canadian stations and networks; the act fails to provide obligatory priority for the carriage on cable of public sector broadcasting services in both English and French, including those provided by both federal and provincial–public broadcasters; recognition of the National Film Board in the Broadcast Act, providing electronic window for Canadians to access our Crown corporation National Film Board productions, financed by our taxpayers' money; assurance of managerial freedom for the CBC.

Let me step back for a moment and look a bit more at the bigger picture, focusing on the specifics I wish to address.

In our modern communications age, the role and impact of broadcasting cannot be underscored enough. It impacts everything around us. It is the way most people get their news and information. It is how many of us get much out of our entertainment. It is a source of educational learning and provides support for our multicultural and ethnic diversity.

Of course, with its power to reach instantaneously into millions of homes from coast to coast to coast, if you want to express from Labrador to Victoria, B.C. and up through the great north, Mr. Speaker, we can reach there in a single moment.

Its potential for supporting our sense of shared values and national unity is fundamental to the role of broadcasting, especially in the trying times we find ourselves in today.

Historically, broadcasting has always been recognized as not just another industry like cars or clothing; instead, it is the central vehicle through which Canadians communicate with one another, a major instrument for Canadian creative and artistic expression in the arts and entertainment and an essential means for providing a Canadian perspective in news and information programming.

It is a powerful instrument that defines us among the nations of the world. Broadcasting has been so important because, as has been said so often, we have a very large country. We are geographically very far apart. We have different languages and different cultures. Our economic problems are difficult because our population is relatively small compared to that of our land mass.

We are strung like lights across the borders of this land and do not spread into the interior in very large numbers. We do, therefore, form a very small market and we need one another. We need to know and appreciate one another in spite of these differences and in spite of these distances.

Broadcasting is our powerful link in this respect. News and information programs are indispensable in keeping us open-minded and informed about what is going on here and around the world. Stories, fiction and drama, deal with our past, our emotions, our dreams, our passions, our weaknesses and our strengths as people and as individuals while they form our thoughts and our attitudes toward the future.

Broadcasting is a powerful means of communications, not just with adults but also with children for they spend about 24 hours a week in front of the television screen. After all, children spend more time in front of that little box than in school. I know they often refer to it as the "boob tube".

It may not be as important as all of our universities and our entire school system, but it rivals their impact on time, interest and attitudes of our children. I often wonder what will be the thinking pattern and the appreciation of my grandchildren about their Canadian heritage.

Will they be North Americanized or will they remain proud, strong Canadians, knowing and understanding their roots and moving this country forward? Stories help see behind the appearance that make us different and help us to understand our disparities and our similarities. For children they explain the past, the world around them and stir the imagination for the future.

We also need to have fun together. We need to laugh together. I am not suggesting that we legislate fun or laughter, nor am I suggesting that we can legislate good novels, plays or short stories. We do not have to.

We have much talent in every part of this land and we shine across the globe. Any country, and especially a great democracy like ours, should quite naturally encourage its print or television dramatists and other story tellers. One of the ways of providing that encouragement is to ensure that the private sector broadcasters as well as the cable system and the CBC, the national broadcasting service, have the funds and the economic wherewithal to play their part.

There is also a need these days to call for reconciliation and national unity in Canada. Quite rightly so. Yes, there is a need. I believe broadcasting can be one of the most effective means to help Canadians better appreciate their distinctiveness, their differences, and respect and love all aspects of our daily life; not by preaching and not by keeping all others out, but by telling their stories, showing their talent with sensitivity, with understanding, with its character, and with its particularity. What we need is imagination.

The challenge of broadcasting is it reflecting Canada to Canadians, which we tried to find in this bill, to reshape our Canadian broadcasting system for the 1990s and into the next century. The whole point was to enhance our ability to reflect Canada to Canadians. That is the whole point of a Canadian broadcasting bill. This is not the North American broadcasting bill; this is the Canadian Broadcasting Act.

The paragraphs of the proposed Broadcasting Act restate the 68 principles which have been enduring and endured: "that the Canadian broadcasting system shall be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada". They newly add that the system should "encourage the development of Canadian expression, providing a wide range of programming that reflects Canadian attitudes, opinions, ideas, values and artistic creativity, displaying Canadian talent in entertainment programming, and offering information and analysis concerning Canada and other countries from a Canadian point of view".

Throughout this bill it is clear that as Canadians we will continue to require, as we have for decades, that broadcasting stations and networks both provide programming that is Canadian in its character and that will be owned and controlled by Canadians.

Where will these nice words really take us? How have the 68 promises been enacted? Unfortunately not in terms of making broadcasting the effective tool for the development of Canadian identity that could have been realized. Some have said that all we had to do was not to develop a new bill and spend millions of dollars in so doing, that all we needed to do was to apply the 1968 Broadcasting Act and tell the instruments that were to apply it that this time we really meant it. We have not done that. While we have been developing this new act, we have diluted certain very important aspects.

Let me tell the House what the 1968 act allowed, because we did not apply its thought and its meaning. The result is that in total a maximum of 4 per cent to 5 per cent of the stories presented to Canadians, jointly on both English and French public and private sector networks, is Canadian. It is only 4 per cent to 5 per cent; no more than one in twenty. Almost 95 per cent of them is American. That is what we see on our television screens; that is what our children see.

I am not suggesting that watching American programs is wrong, not at all. There are just as many—in fact there are more—wonderful, excellent programs being produced across the United States, but there are also poor products. They are often called in the industry schlock. There are poor products on many channels. There are in Canada as well. I do not think our percentage is any worse than that being produced in the United States.

What I am saying is that Canadians watch Canadian productions, but they do not watch them as much because they do not have the selection or the choices they really would like to have. I would say that when we get Canadian products Canadians watch them because they are good. In fact, many do not even realize that they are watching good, solid Canadian productions: Street Legal, E.N.G., Love and Hate, Neon Rider, Max Glick, or the ever popular Degrassi High or The Road to Avonlea. In looking at another aspect with respect to the new technologies, the question is: Who is going to control this system, the technology or the Canadian people? Ownership and programming content are not the only fundamental issues which the new broadcasting bill must address if it is to prove effective in the future.

As the former Minister of Communications pointed out, broadcasting has been changed enormously by evolving technologies since the 1968 Broadcasting Act was passed and will continue to change. Among those technologies are satellites, fibre-optics, cable, and even the VCRs which we all plug in and rent films for. With the arrival of satellite communication and other new technologies, the distinction between different media and the boundaries and frontiers between nations have become blurred. Broadcasting has become global. Europeans are now addressing this issue, both at the Council of Europe and in the new cultural commission which has been established in Brussels, the new capital of Europe. Once it was organized within countries and regulated because of the finite spectrum of wave bands.

Mr. Speaker, as a former broadcaster, I am sure you are aware of and appreciate the dilemma that this technology has presented. The new technologies destroy the rationale for the distinctions we had before with the wave bands. Above all, they make possible the distribution of signals and programming. These new technologies are being built by the few, the sky barons, as the media call them. Through mergers and takeovers they are fighting for control of what the world will see, read, and hear in the coming century. That control includes the creative artists who define and describe the images we will see. The control extends, therefore, to the imagination of individuals. It affects how we will see ourselves.

Therefore I believe that the content of programming becomes key. As we see technology ever developing and further globalization during the next decade, we will no longer be able to regulate Canadian content on our airwaves. The window of opportunity is very small. If we want to establish a firm and solid base on which to grow in the future, the infrastructure must be in place, and now is not too soon. Canadian programming is going to have to compete, not only with American, but with Australian, British, French, Belgian, and Italian. Subtitling will become part of our normal day. As I said, we must create opportunities so that Canadian programs will be developed and will help define us on the world screen.

Part of the solution lies with the development of the public and private sector, which have important, complementary roles to play in the Canadian feature film industry and in the area of regulation before these sky barons and skypix take over. In addressing the issue of the present and the future of our system, the crucial test will not just be the extent to which the provisions of the 1968 act are retained. The key test will be the extent to which in a more complex situation we continue to retain control by Canadians over the system and to provide a reasonable balance between Canadian and foreign programming.

There are two quite different and quite separate aspects of this issue of foreign versus domestic programming balance. First, what proportion of the programming offered by individual stations or networks should be Canadian? Second, what proportion of the programming offered by distribution undertakings such as cable systems should be Canadian?

This question of how Canadian the programming offered should be was much simpler in the past. The 1968 act provided that each broadcaster should use predominantly Canadian creative and other resources. At that time it was not considered necessary to deal with cable television. Until the early eighties, not so long ago, this provision was interpreted to mean that over half of the programming provided by each station or network should be Canadian. In light of the lack of clarity in the law and the financial difficulty for some services of providing predominantly Canadian programming, the CRTC allowed a number of such services to operate with more limited levels of Canadian programming.

In response to this situation the standing committee proposed two changes. The first would clarify the meaning of predominantly Canadian so that it would be obvious that it meant 60 per cent or more of the programming provided should be Canadian; not just the channel, but the content of the channel, the programming.

The second proposed change would permit the CRTC to exempt from this requirement specialized, limited audience services for which such a requirement was just not practical. When Bill C–136 was introduced, this recommendation was rejected, and again in Bill C–40. Subsequently, in response to extensive criticism from many quarters including the CRTC, the government amended the clause to reintroduce the concept of predominantly Canadian.

However, the redrafting has been done so badly that it remains unclear whether the intent is that the programming provided by Canadian broadcasters should, unless subject to exemption provisions, be predominantly Canadian programming.

Given the importance of this provision, the bill should not be passed, in my view, without further amendment. If it is not amended to require that programming be predominantly Canadian, there will be no legislative basis for the CRTC to maintain such requirements. This is a very straightforward drafting issue.

If the government indeed agrees that such a requirement is justified, it should have amended the bill to make this clear. Or, tell me: Do you think it is possible that it was fear of American reprisals under section 2005 of the free trade agreement? Was that the reason for fuzzing the issue? I wonder whether I need answer my own question.

Mr. Nunziata: Oh, please do.

Mrs. Finestone: No, I am going to leave that to all of you. I believe it speaks for itself.

There is little point, however, in maintaining a requirement that most of the programming provided by individual Canadian stations and networks should be Canadian, if at the same time the programming content offered by the cable systems is to be overwhelmingly and increasingly foreign.

Turn on your set, go station by station, count the number of Canadian systems, and then count the number of American outside the three plus one, the national networks of the United States, CBS, NBC, ABC, and PBS. Just count them and see for yourself how the system has been diluted with access to an abundance of independent stations from the U.S.A.

Then look at the content of our Canadian CTV, Global, CBC, as well as some of the independents to see how many of those programs are duplicated on the Canadian channels. Their presence on the Canadian channels are quite welcome. They are important so that we have points of view from other parts of the world. We share in their fun, laughter, et cetera, but there is a reason that they are there. It is important that those channels be heard and seen. They also add to the Canadian programming content funds available for the promotion of Canadian programming. It is an important role. Duplicating that at different hours through other channels and other means is just not a constructive way to ensure Canadian programming.

Today, therefore, it has become evident that the role of cable is equally important as that of the programmers and the broadcasters to the maintenance of a Canadian broadcasting system. Choices on their system make the difference. Their contribution must go beyond human resources, hardware, and the obligation to provide for community channels. Quite properly the expanded choice offered by cable television has been viewed as positive to the extent that it actually made available to Canadians a wider range of programming that they had previously been able to receive only from off-air sources, and often not clearly or not able to receive at all.

Genuine increase in programming variety is clearly a good thing. At the same time, however, to the extent that cable systems were simply bringing in programming already available from Canadian sources, as I said before, and undermining Canadian broadcasters, the way cable has functioned was and is of concern. There are a number of measures, particularly simultaneous program substitution, that have been enacted to partially offset these negative effects. There has been virtually unanimous agreement that a new act must at last provide the CRTC with a proper legislative basis for regulating cable television.

Indeed, the communications minister has emphasized again and again that a major inadequacy of the 1968 bill was its failure to deal adequately with technology, particularly with cable. Yet the government has, against the unanimous advice of both the 1986 report of the Task Force on Broadcasting Policy and the Standing Committee of Communications and Culture, failed to provide any effective legislative basis for the operation of cable systems in the future.

The simple amendments that we as a party brought forward could have easily remedied this issue, but the government and particularly this minister were too stubborn to admit that they were wrong. That deficiency in the legislation has the potential to completely undermine all other provisions in this important legislation. It is in fact the Achilles heel of the Conservative proposals for this new law. This issue is so fundamental that I want to review the background to it.

After 18 months of extensive research and consultations with the public and the broadcasting industry, the government's $3 million Task Force on Broadcasting Policy reached the following conclusions: that radio and television, public and private, to the extent that foreign broadcasting signals are carried, should complement programming from Canadian sources, any kind of new programs. We recognize that an exception must be made for the at least 17 foreign television signals that are already an established part of the system. In other words, we have grandfathered what exists today. We are not changing that which is available. However, the presence of a particular foreign signal in the system should never be allowed to preclude the development of new Canadian services. Priority must always be given to the development of our own broadcasting services.

In the public hearings which our standing committee held, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the CBC and the Canadian producers expressed strong support for the approach the task force had proposed. You, yourself Mr. Speaker, were a member of that committee. The test in the future of whether to permit the importation of any additional foreign service should be that it actually adds something significant to the mix of programming available to Canadians.

Specifically, the test proposed was that the service should offer programming complementary to that already available from licensed Canadian broadcasters. In response to this recommendation the CRTC has stated that "it agrees generally with this recommendation", while the Canadian Cable Association said that it agreed in principle. To the extent that they expressed concerns, these were related only to the carriage of stations already available off air. In the case of the CRTC, concern was also expressed about including in the new act provisions related to carriage of the foreign television signals in the Canadian broadcasting system.

In our judgment, this issue is at least as important as any other that has been addressed in Bill C–40, and as legislators it is an issue that now must be addressed. I want to emphasize here that the government is not assuming the CRTC will implement this reasonable and necessary policy of protecting our own Canadian broadcasting system. Instead, astonishing as it may seem, the Government of Canada has categorically rejected these policy recommendations, although they were widely perceived to be both moderate and essential to the maintenance of a strong and separate Canadian broadcasting system. Instead, the position the government has taken is that any restriction whatsoever on the entry into Canada of American stations and networks is in principle unacceptable. I call this Americanization of the Canadian broadcasting system.

This position, which is inconsistent with over 50 years of broadcasting policy, is clearly stated in the government's June 1988 response to the fifth, sixth and fifteenth reports of the standing committee. In responding to this recommendation the government has stated that, "The prohibition of foreign radio and television services other than those whose programming is complementary to that available from Canadian sources has not been included in the legislation, since it would unduly restrict Canadians' access to a new range of international broadcasting services". That is to be found at page 90 of the government response in June 1988.

Elsewhere the response states: "The government's policy is not to restrict access to foreign services". That is on page 28.

The government has explicitly rejected proposed amendments which would have implemented the unanimous recommendations of the standing committee.

We on this side of the House are not saying, Mr. Speaker, restrict access. What we are saying is that in our view new channels should add something new as a choice. What will this position mean in the future? It will lay the basis in Canadian law for allowing all American broadcasters to extend their reach into Canada. The result will be to make it far more difficult for Canadian broadcasters to acquire the right to show the best U.S. programming in Canada, even though it costs a heck of a lot less to buy it than it would for us to produce it.

Even when they are able to purchase these programs, it will reduce their ability to earn revenue where they could be found on other channels at other times. There is no exclusivity. There is no protection of their investment and that is grossly unfair.

Revenues from showing foreign programs are now crucial to the successful operation of Canada's private broadcasters. Just speak to CTV, Global, CBC and see what they have to say about this aspect of the lack of exclusivity of their purchases. The resulting loss of revenue will in turn undermine Canadian broadcasters' ability to finance Canadian programming.

The implications of creating a single Canada–U.S. market are obvious already in the film and theatrical business. In that sector there has been a continental market for decades. The Americans have seen us as their back yard. The result is that most of the revenues earned in the Canadian market flow south to finance more American films, while Canada's own film companies lack sufficient resources and, in fact, often lack sufficient window time and space to substantially contribute to financing Canadian films and the ability to distribute and market them effectively.

The same thing will happen in the future if the government carries out its plan to give the U.S. broadcasters almost unrestricted access to the Canadian market.

Why this radical and far-reaching departure from a tradition of building a separate Canadian broadcasting system, a tradition begun in the 1930s by a Conservative government? Why the refusal to provide a sure legislative basis for maintaining and strengthening Canada's own off air broadcasting services, and developing a strong and separate system of Canadian pay and specialty services?

The only answer that can explain this decision by the government is surely that it knows that any new provisions which restrict the entry of American broadcasters into Canada would contravene the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. I think that is an answer to my colleague from York South—Weston.

That is the key. I did not want to give it away too soon. I wanted people to think about it—if it was not already self-evident.

We have of course already seen evidence in the areas of cultural policy of the way the government is acting since the signing of that free trade agreement. We saw the gutting of the Minister of Communications' original film importations bill, and we have Simon Reisman's public assurance that the revised and eviscerated bill has at least been made consistent with the free trade agreement. That, of course, is why the film legislation will do nothing effective to protect Canadian interests.

We know that the government suppressed an independent consultant's study of the sound recording industry which, in its leaked form, warned of serious consequences for Canadian song writers and performers and the Canadian record industry under the trade agreement. The consequences of a weakened Canadian record industry for Canadian content quotas in radio is obvious, but it is also obvious how wonderful it is for those outside of Canada, for foreign influence.

We have seen the government reject as well the central proposals of its own 1985 task force on film policy related to the use of the Investment Canada Act to strengthen Canadian ownership and control over film distribution.

Indeed, in the book industry, which after all is one of the basic and fundamental sources of material to produce film for VCRs, as well as stage productions for that matter, and where the government had already established a very strong policy in 1985 to strengthen Canadian participation in this vitally important book industry, we saw in the 1988 new American library decision, the abandoning of that essential Baie Comeau policy.

At the present time the government seems to be avoiding making decisions on a number of Investment Canada cases which will again test the 1985 Baie Comeau policy.

Will those decisions now wait until after the election in order to avoid the embarrassment of having a further withdrawal from protecting Canada's cultural sovereignty and identity? There is, of course, further evidence for this interpretation of the government's actions since other new legislative initiatives which might have contravened the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement have also been rejected.

For example, the government refused to include in Bill C-40 any requirement that foreign pay television or specialty services carrying on business through affiliates in Canada should do so through a Canadian entity licensed by the CRTC. I remind members of this House that this unanimous, all-party recommendation of the standing committee was endorsed by the Canadian Cable Television Association as well.

Failure to act on this recommendation will result in two classes of broadcasting networks carrying on business here: one, those which require a licence and must contribute to achieving Canadian programming objectives and those which can extract money from the Canadian market without a licence and with no obligation to contribute to Canadian programming. For them, Canada is strictly a cash cow.

The result will be a growing sense of unfairness and a resulting undermining of the legitimacy of the regulations applied to Canadian services. The result will also be a reduced ability to meet Canadian programming objectives.

It has been our view that anything that has access to our home television set should have been considered by the CRTC and exempted where deemed acceptable, but not necessary to contribute to Canadian broadcasting.

That includes this new alphanumeric channels that we have got that no longer fall under the Broadcast Act.

There is a threat to federal jurisdiction and the national capacity of broadcasting in Canada. The combination of increasing pressure from American broadcasters for access to Canada, and an absolute refusal by the government to include in Bill C–40 any legislative basis whatsoever for limiting their access to Canada is a sure recipe for the rapid erosion of Canada's own broadcasting system.

The government has further weakened Canada's broadcasting system by putting federal jurisdiction over broadcasting at risk and by diluting the national structure of the CRTC. Let us look at this.

Since the 1930s, broadcasting has fallen under federal jurisdiction, reflecting the recognition that this is a prerequisite to maintaining an effective, integrated national broadcasting system. However, Bill C–40 redefines "broadcasting" to include hard wire or closed circuit services hitherto deemed to be under provincial control.

The bill also dictates that broadcasters and cablecasters should now have their services separated into programming and non–programming functions, a rejection of existing legal practice which argued that these changes could only lead to a questioning self–inflicted vulnerability.

Furthermore, Bill C–40 provides the foundation for an argument that a cable company may be subject to two regulatory regimes: one in accordance with which its broadcasting business is regulated, and another, possibly a provincial one in accordance with obligations to maintain different sets of books for different regulators, perhaps using different accounting practices, depreciation methods and cost separation techniques. This is all very costly, and add to that the GST, retransmission payments, and many other aspects and see what is happening in this field.

Second, with the passage of Bill C–40, all full–time CRTC commissioners, now known as the executive committee, will no longer be required for the taking of its decisions. This approach was known as collegial decision making and has been replaced with a concept that is called "who hears decides" whereby panels of three will be empowered to make decisions binding on the entire commission. The introduction of those who hear decide—Mr. Speaker, did you want me to finish this?

ENVIRONMENT AUDITOR GENERAL

PROPOSAL FOR ESTABLISHMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing the position of Environmental Auditor General, whose purpose would be to conduct an audit of all government operations on a rotational basis to ensure that any activity, program or initiative of the government is conducted in a manner that is compatible with a policy of protection and enhancement of the environment.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move this motion today on an idea whose time has truly come.

The concept of introducing environmental audit as an integral part of government operations and decision making has been promoted and supported by, among others, the minister in introducing the discussion paper on the Green Plan, the consultation on the discussion paper, the Standing Committee on Environment unanimously, the C. D. Howe Institute, the Rawson Academy of Aquatic Science, the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy, and the Auditor General.

Like value for money or operational audit, environmental audit is an indispensable tool for management control of spending, for the effectiveness of the use of public resources, and for decision making. In addition, accountability to Parliament and to the public on environmental matters simply cannot be carried out or ensured without environmental audit.

In times of tight budgets and rising public debt, environmental audit presents opportunities for substantial savings on government operating costs. As a new field of knowledge, environmental audit methodology has the potential to be a major international market opportunity for Canadian expertise and knowledge. As well, this initiative by government will ensure that businesses seeking to be more environmentally responsible and more competitive and productive in a global economy will have the tools they need to reach these objectives.

This year for the first time the Auditor General chose to address the question of environmental audit in the first chapter of his 1990 annual report to Parliament. The chapter is entitled: "Matters of Special Importance and Interest". In that chapter, on page 23, the Auditor General talks about "the protection of the natural environment, a prime example of the need for accountability". He talks about the responsibilities for protection of our natural environment as being major and shared, and that accountability for them should be exacted.

Section 1.46 states:

> One can look at the environment as a fund: a fund of paramount importance to all. It is shrinking while the number of people who must share it is growing. The share of each person, especially those coming after us, is being reduced—for practical purposes it is governments that have been given the operating responsibility (for the environment)—
> The federal government deals with national concerns for the environment—Parliament should expect governments to devise acceptable means of being held accountable for the conduct of its environmental responsibilities—
> Here then is a case where government's accountability for—the total government effort on the environment—is more important than focusing on the individual performance of departments—

On the question of the environment, the Auditor General finishes up by asking, in terms of responsibility for Canada's environmental well-being: "Who is minding the store?" That is the purpose of this motion today.

I want to make a few other references and indicate to the House why I say that this is an idea whose time has come.

It was in late 1970, that the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States first asked for disclosure to investors of present and future costs of complying with environmental regulations. That was when companies had to begin doing environmental audits.

In 1986, New Zealand introduced the position of parliamentary commissioner for the environment, one of whose main functions is the audit and surveillance of government operations for their impact on the environment and holding government accountable for those operations.

In 1988, the enforcement and compliance policy accompanying the Canadian Environmental Protection Act recognized the effectiveness of environmental audit as a management tool for companies and government agencies.

In the spring, the discussion paper on the Green Plan stated with regard to about environmental audit that the objective "to make Canada by the year 2000, the industrial world's most environmentally friendly country" can be achieved if we lead by example. "As the largest single business in Canada, the government has important responsibilities related to the environmental impact of its own decisions. Good environmental management will increasingly make good business sense." It went on to state that "a number of businesses have already developed environmental audit procedures and put the question, should businesses and governments be required to perform environmental audits?"

The answer from the consultations on the green plan discussion paper was a resounding yes. The August report recommends that all government departments be required to undertake annual environmental audits and make the results public, which is exactly what this motion is proposing.

Those businesses, environmental organizations, and ordinary citizens with whom the government consulted again suggested that "all government departments should be required to conduct annual environmental audits and that the government should develop a code of environmental stewardship to govern the operations of all federal departments". The trend continues from there.

The C. D. Howe Institute, in its July publication, talked about the need for good information and cost benefit analysis for decision making to integrate economic and environmental considerations.

We had the Eco Source magazine in August, 1990, calling "the environmental audit the road map to a greener corporation". For the largest corporations in the country, environmental audit is fast becoming a senior management issue and that "companies are realizing they have to factor the environment into business operations. You'd have to be dumb to be in business in North America today and not be taking on these issues."

The certified general accountants' magazine similarly described the importance of environmental audit as an idea whose time has come. It stated that the "International Chamber of Commerce and various industry associations in Canada are exploring how they can best assist their members in the use of environmental audits."

Finally, in October, 1990, the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy, with the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Finance both present and not dissenting, recommended to government that an environmental auditor should be named. I emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of the Environment were present at that meeting when that recommendation was adopted.

• (1710)

The Rawson Academy on Aquatic Sciences, when it was before the environment committee on Bill C-78 on November 8 of this year, talked in very serious terms about the need for environmental audit, pointing out that such an office would be responsible for monitoring the performance of government agencies and departments according to designated standards of environmental protection or resource conservation.

Most of the sources I have quoted have been within the last year. There is an obvious ground swell of support for the recognition that, to truly integrate environmental decision making and economic decision making, environmental audit is an essential tool.

I will refer to only one last source and that is the interim report of the Standing Committee on Environment. The report is entitled: No time to Lose—The Challenge of Global Warming. Recommendation 16 states that "the committee recommends that the Auditor General, working in conjunction with the Departments of Environment and Finance, establish an environmental audit function to ensure that all federal departments and agencies have implemented environmental assessment processes and to monitor the effectiveness of environmental programs".

Recommendation 17 states that "the committee recommends that all federal departments and agencies, as part of their budget submissions, report on the direct and indirect impacts of their operations on global warming and set annual targets for reductions".

These things cannot happen without the tools to let them happen. As the single-largest employer in the country, government must set the example. The green task force on the Hill, the Greening of the Hill, has been a symbol and a beacon to Canadians that we, as parliamentarians, are serious about our concerns for the environment and are determined to examine our own environment and to make it as friendly towards the survival of life on this planet as we possibly can. Canadians expect the same thing throughout government.

We cannot sit here and decide that we will impose regulations, laws, green taxes, and horrendous reporting requirements on everybody else in the country, and then exempt ourselves from what we require others to do at some cost to them.

However, I do want to point out that a number of sources have told us that what we are looking at here in environmental audit is not an expense, but a significant opportunity for cost-savings. I will give just one indicator. The DPA report estimated that in energy conservation alone, this country could save $150 billion.

Again, I quote from Eco Source magazine. "The new audit is a matter of performance. It examines the environmental details not normally of concern to engineers and lawyers, such as the lighting system, the heating system, recycling practices, purchasing habits, packaging systems, supplier and investment policies. The auditors check washrooms and cafeterias, interview groundskeepers and cleaning staff, and discuss packaging alternatives, employee car poolings, staff training programs, and codes of conduct."

In this government, we do not even know how much we spend on vehicles every year, how much we spend on gasoline, how much we spend on electricity, how much we spend on heating our buildings, how much we spend to have garbage carted away, and how much unnecessary money we spend on paper. We have no system of accounting for those things.

The Green Plan consultations talked about the importance of investing in technology. What better way than for the government, as the largest corporation in the country, to start looking at its own operations, getting its own house in order, looking at what technologies it needs to do that, and then being in the forefront of developing those technologies? Just as a customer for new products, the government has the opportunity to influence the marketplace in a positive way rather than imposing requirements and to ensure that the kinds of products and services that are developed will not only make government but the private sector more environmentally friendly.

Many companies want to be environmentally friendly, but especially the small ones need the tools to do it. Environmental audit in government can help those tools be developed.

I want to talk about environmental audit as a major international opportunity for Canada. As I said, in 1986 the government of New Zealand was the first, and is still the only country in the world, to establish environmental audit in its parliament. I want to quote again from Eco Source where it says:

> No government standards exist anywhere in the world for environmental audit.

It also says there are real commercial advantages in turning out a better than average environmental performance. Finally, it says that "the implications of a full-blown greening commitment on the part of a major multinational or government agency would be impressive, primarily for its ripple effect".

We have in Canada some of the best raw talent to develop the methodologies and techniques of environmental audit anywhere in the world. When New Zealand set up its audit function, it did so with the help of Canadian officials. We need to put that talent to work, develop skills and knowledge that will give us a major product to market internationally, to help other countries and private sector operations become as environmentally friendly as they can.

That is why I say to get into environmental audit is a major business opportunity for Canada.

I want to conclude by saying that we have been trying to tell households, individuals and companies how to be more environmentally friendly, how to cut down their use of energy, how to cut down their production of garbage. Now we are looking at regulations, legislation and green taxes. Why not lead by example?

In the 1970s we were forced into energy conservation, and now again in the 1990s the Minister of Energy is telling Canadians to cut back on the use of energy. What have we done in government to demonstrate how that can be done? The major need now is to do it in business, in industrial operations, not in households.

Certainly the idea of an environmental auditor as such needs more exploration. There are many options as to how environmental audit can be started and carried on. The establishment of a specific position may or may not be the best way to do it. But until we take the first step along the road to ensuring that every government department has the skills, the tools, the knowledge and the necessity to monitor its environmental impacts, we will not get anywhere. We will never decide how best to do it. We will never develop those tools of knowledge that our companies, our private sector, and the public sector at all levels of government need.

Next week the green plan will be tabled. I hope it will not ignore the advice it got from over $6 million worth of consultation. I will only point out that for less than half that amount, the office of an environmental auditor general could have been established.

I hope the government will include environmental audit in its Green Plan to be tabled next week. I would hope that if it intends to do so, it will make a point of allowing this motion to go to committee. All that needs to happen for this motion to receive further discussion and for us to start along that long road to being environmentally responsible as a government, as a Parliament, as a nation, is for government members not to continue talking until six o'clock.

If this debate ends before six o'clock, this motion can then be examined and acted on by a committee. We will have taken one important step down the road.

I ask members opposite who are going to speak on this bill to give serious consideration to speaking very briefly, allowing the debate to terminate before six o'clock and allowing this motion to go before a committee for study.

Mr. J.W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, although I am not a member opposite in a geographic sense, I would have to say that I probably will be deemed to be a member opposite when I am finished speaking to this motion.

First of all, I congratulate the hon. member for putting her motion. I have the privilege to serve with her on the environment committee of the House of Commons where she makes a major contribution. Generally speaking, we and other members of that committee are in consensus not only about the importance of the environment to Canada and to the world, but also about the measures that we must take to enhance and protect our environment in this country.

I would have to say that, in reading the hon. member's motion to appoint an environmental auditor general, I believe as well intentioned as her resolution may be, in my view it goes in the wrong direction to the ultimate resolution of sustainable development in the sense that sustainable development means the reconciliation of both economic and environmental factors.

To isolate an auditor general strictly in an environmental sense is to miss the point that we cannot ignore the environmental without considering the economic and vice versa. In fact, I would refer the hon. member to a resolution in which she shared in our interim report on global warming, which was published just before the Geneva convention when, in recommendation 16, the environment committee said that we recommended the auditor general—

Mrs. Catterall: I said that.

Mr. Bird: Did you? I missed that.

Perhaps it is worth reading again, because frankly it underlines the weakness in the concept of an environmental auditor general.

It does recommend an auditor general who works in conjunction with both the departments of environment and finance to establish an environmental audit function. I do not think there can be any dispute about the need and the concept for an audit of environmental considerations, as is the case for an audit of economic considerations.

Again, I say that in the concept of sustainable development, the two very much go together.

I would also like to say that one of the areas that has been of concern to the environment committee and to another committee on which I sit, the forestry and fisheries committee, is the organization of environment departments themselves whether they are operating departments, regulatory departments or policy departments.

I think a general consensus has developed and is recommended in this report by the environment committee and also by the forestry subcommittee, that environment departments generally be policy and regulatory departments whose disciplines and policies permeate the operating decisions and criteria of all government departments wherever they may fall, be they provincial environment departments and other provincial departments, or federal government departments and the federal environment department.

The concept of environmental administration should be approached in very much the same manner that economic and financial considerations are approached in a policy and regulatory sense, and not in an operating sense.

I would like to refer to the forestry report in brief, if I may, because this report which addresses the federal role in the forests of Canada is very much an environmental document. It touches on the commercial importance of forestry, but it also underlines the fact that the forests are the essence of the environment of this country. It expresses concerns, as I have said, that environmental policies and disciplines should permeate every operating entity and every operating decision, just as do financial and economic considerations. But it also underlines the fact that operating agencies should conduct the operations.

There is an area of concern that I would like to mention in respect of the initiatives we are taking to enhance our environmental disciplines in Canada, specifically with respect to Bill C–78, which is itself a move in a direction of more intensive environmental audit. I have expressed a concern publicly in the environment committee, and I would like to express the concern again here today that the Department of the Environment, in its environmental assessment review process, does not become a master operator, a font of wisdom in all directions and in all disciplines.

I think it is extremely important that while the environment assessment review process addresses the environment broadly, those disciplines which are affected, such as forestry, fisheries, mining, energy or agriculture very clearly have a statutory obligation and a statutory right to be involved in the environmental assessment process, whatever direction it may take at any given time.

This government addressed the need originally for environmental assessment review guidelines with Bill C–78, to enhance those disciplines, to make not only the initiating minister responsible for environmental assessment of departmental actions, in whatever department they may occur, but also giving the environment minister the authority to oversee and overrule the environmental planning of specific initiatives.

The government has placed a great cloak of security around the environmental process in this country and I applaud it and support it while expressing the caveat that it contain very clear and mandatory provisions for the operating entities, professions and disciplines to be involved in their specific areas of activity.

Another area where this government has made significant progress and, as the hon. member has mentioned will make an announcement next Tuesday, is in the area of Canada's Green Plan. It was on March 29, 1990, that the Government of Canada released the framework for discussion on the environment which began the process of the Green Plan, called "Our National Challenge". Its long–term objective was stated to be to make Canada the industrial world's most environmentally friendly country by the year 2000. There is a lot of evidence that we are making progress in that direction. It was to do that by ensuring that the activities of business, individuals, communities and governments are consistent with the concept of sustainable development. I believe that it has done that.

Canadians responded to the government's invitation to that discussion and, during the first phase, more than 6,000 people attended 41 information sessions held across the country. They asked questions, expressed concerns and they identified needs for action. In phase two, more than 3,500 people participated in two–day consultation workshops, in 17 capital cities and major centres in the provinces and the territories. I participated in one of those in Fredericton and I want to tell you that it was a good consultation. It was the kind of dialogue that gave you confidence that this government really is in touch with the people.

I believe that when we see the green plan unveiled next week, it will reveal that that, in fact, is what has happened, that there has been close, intensive dialogue, there has been effective consultation, and we shall have a national environmental plan, a green plan that will truly address the needs, the aspirations, the goals and objectives of all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, that is consistent with the undertakings and the obligations of this government.

Mr. Caccia: Time is up.

Mr. Bird: As much as my hon. friend may really hate to hear this, this government in its throne speech in early 1989 said, and it was a major pillar of the throne speech, that we were going to address the environmental imperative.

• (1730 )

With Bill C–78, with the Green Plan, with the environment committee report, in which my hon. colleagues have participated, on global warming and on climate change, and in this excellent document which I would particularly recommend to your attention, Mr. Speaker, with the Commons subcommittee on forestry addressing the federal role in the forests of Canada, one that even my hon. friend from Toronto would endorse, I am sure the government has truly endorsed, addressed, sustained, and is moving on an environmental imperative for Canada.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand to speak to the private member's motion put forward today by the member for Ottawa West. Her proposal to have this House and this government consider the advisability of establishing the position of environmental auditor general is a very welcome proposition to those of us in the New Democratic Party for many reasons. I think it is welcomed by all Canadians. There is no question that we have to hold the government and Canadians accountable for their actions relating to the environment.

We do have, as the hon. member for Ottawa West said in her initial remarks, a government financial auditor to protect or at least alert the taxpayers to possible abuses by the government of taxpayers' dollars. We also need a government auditor, more importantly an independent auditor on the environment, to protect our air, land, water, and indeed our future from the activities of the human race that in the quest for greater development of this planet is in fact jeopardizing our future.

In June 1989, the New Democratic Party task force on the environment presented a report to the House entitled Towards a Sustainable Future. In that report there is a couple of very important quotes which I would like to put on record. One is dealing with why the environment is a difficult matter. It reads: "The existing relationship between the federal government and most development is fundamentally flawed. Despite the government's endorsement of the Brundtland report and the increasingly frequent addition of the words sustainable development to projects across Canada, government and industry have failed to act decisively on that report's recommendations. To date, the federal government has not implemented the policies, measures or targets needed to facilitate the transition to a genuinely sustainable society".

Later in the report Towards a Sustainable Future the New Democratic Party talks about the transition to a sustainable society as undeniably and enormous one. "Fundamental changes are required in the way we weigh costs and benefits to make decisions. The federal government must be prepared to demonstrate leadership in adopting these changes, not just in matters of national policy but in its own day-to-day operations. Implementing the Brundtland report entails more than just mouthing the words sustainable development and attaching environmentally friendly stickers to everything in sight".

The report envisaged a whole new approach to economic development, not just tinkering at the edges. The federal government must begin an immediate re-evaluation of all its policies and programs, asking if each is in environmentally sound. The federal government must also show leadership by ensuring that the federal government departments, agencies, and Crown corporations practise the principles of sustainability in purchasing, waste management, and other aspects of their operation. Their compliance would be monitored by a federal environmental auditor.

Our recommendation is that the House of Commons immediately adopt legislation which would establish an environmental auditor to review the sustainability and environmental soundness of all federal projects and undertakings. That report, as I said, was tabled in the House in June 1989.

In May 1990 a regional conference at the ministerial level was held in Bergen, Norway on the follow-up to the report on the World Commission on Environment and Development in the ECE region. The following report was issued: "Action for a Common Future".

In that report they talked about the accountability of this process and the needs of the environment. I would like to quote from the report "Action for a Common Future" presented in Bergen, Norway. They talked about awareness of the public and public participation in the process of environmental assessment. One of their recommendations was: "To undertaking the prior assessment and public reporting of the environmental impact of projects which are likely to have a significant effect on human health and the environment and, so far as practicable, the policies, programs and plans which underlie each project".

They go on to say: "To reaffirm and build on the CSCE conclusions regarding the rights of individuals, groups and organizations concerned with environmental issues and, in addition, to safeguard the rights of individuals and concerned groups to have access to all relevant information and to be consulted and participate in the planning and decision making concerning activities which may affect health and environment, with reasonable access to appropriate legal and administrative remedies."

More important, they go to say: "To develop rules for free and open access to information on the environment. Such rules can increase public participation in the procedures to control pollution and prevent damage to the environment".

These matters, all very important to what we are talking about when we are dealing with the environment, will require the attention of an independent auditor. Only the Canadian government, through legislation here, can ensure that an independent auditor is in place.

Also at that conference in Bergen, Norway had a report entitled "Bridging the Gap: An Agenda for Action", drafted by the delegates of the Non-Governmental Conference on the Environment and Development held in March 1990. They had a number of recommendations, again stressing the need for awareness raising and public participation. Most clearly they said that the public is very important in all of this process and that "the full recognition and legal protection of the environmental rights of individuals, groups and organizations, including unrestrained access to environmental information, is an essential requirement for the achievement of sustainable development". In other words, there has to be someone who can have access to that information and can make it available to the public who is not tainted by industry or government interests.

"By 1992", this group suggested, "national sustainable development audits and progress reports should be prepared, publicly financed and published annually by an independent body". That means in every single jurisdiction, including Canada. These audits should focus on the quality of a nation's environmental health, its natural resources and endangered ecosystems and species. Resource centres and data banks should be established. All this could be done in Canada under the auspices of an environmental auditor.

As the hon. member for Ottawa West indicated in her remarks, the Auditor General, the financial auditor of Canada, has indicated a great need for environmental auditing in this country. In his report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1990, he has a scathing report on the Department of the Environment which should be examined carefully by an independent body whose interests lie with the Canadian environment.

All sorts of industry representations are made to government, but the environment needs a voice at the cabinet table and needs a voice to the public. The Auditor General said that the department's program evaluation coverage was inadequate and that it had evaluated less than 10 per cent of its programs. For example, it had not evaluated any of the Canadian parks service programs, even though it had half the department's person-years and a $387 million budget.

The Auditor General also talked about the Minister of the Environment being required to report annually to Parliament on the administration and the enforcement of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. No report has been presented from the time the act was proclaimed in June 1988 until June 30, 1990, when the Auditor General wrote this report.

I see you signalling my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I respect that. Thank you for much for the opportunity to address this important initiative. I wish the member for Ottawa West the best of luck in gaining support for this motion from the government side.

[Translation]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief, but first of all, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa West.

[English]

She has put forward a very interesting proposition upon which she has already very clearly elaborated. In essence, she is telling us that the government, any government for that matter, would be well served by the services provided by an environmental auditor general who would, by virtue of the work carried out under such auspices, offer the government of the day a very important tool in the decision-making process. Nothing would be more desirable at this point when governments, ministers, and decision makers are embracing the concept of sustainable development than to proceed by adopting this specific proposal.

The hon. member for Ottawa West has elaborated on how the environmental auditor would operate. It is interesting to note that the Auditor General noted in his report: "Parliament should expect government to devise acceptable means of being held accountable for the conduct of its environmental responsibilities." This is in a letter that the member for Ottawa West has written, alerting us to her motion.

The Auditor General is very precise, accurate and timely in that particular remark. The private member's motion of the member for Ottawa West reflects that timing. We congratulate her and hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment will give us the good news that the government has no objection to having this method proceed to committee for an appropriate and thorough examination.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in debate on this private member's motion initiated by my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa West.

At first blush it is an interesting proposal. The member's motion requests that in the opinion of the House the government should consider the appointment of an environmental auditor general who would conduct an audit of all government operations on a rotational basis to ensure any activity, program or initiative of the government is conducted in a manner that is compatible with a policy of protection and enhancement of the environment.

It is not a bad idea, but let me make it clear that protection and enhancement of the environment are already high priorities of this government. Our record clearly shows our commitment from the passage of the Canadian Environment Protection Act in 1988, to the clean-up of orphaned waste sites, one part of which the Minister of the Environment announced in British Columbia just last week, and the soon to be completed negotiations on an acid rain accord with the United States. While our past actions are bearing fruit, we are now clearly looking to the future with the publication next week of the government's environmental Green Plan for a healthy environment.

Before we rush to create yet another new bureaucracy, we should review what we have in place now to ensure that environmental consideration are fully reflected in the decisions of government. The Government Organization Act of 1979 gives the Minister of the Environment the power to implement the policy of the Government of Canada with respect to the environment.

This act requires the minister to initiate, recommend, undertake and co-ordinate programs and policies to promote the establishment or adoption of objectives and standards relating to the environmental quality, or to control pollution; and to ensure that new federal projects are reviewed and assessed for their environmental impacts. That is a pretty wide-ranging mandate.

The Minister of the Environment is also required to provide the heads of departments, boards and agencies with advice on environmental issues and may, with the approval of cabinet, establish guidelines for federal departments, agencies and Crown corporations with respect to activities that have a potential impact on the environment.

In addition to the legislated base, the Prime Minister has clearly committed this government to consider the environment as a priority in all of its policy and program decision-making. The Prime Minister has played a key role in making Canada a world leader in promoting environmental concerns by, for example, ensuring a prominent place for the environment on the agenda of the annual meeting of the G-7 countries.

This government's commitment to the environment is also enshrined in legislation. Bill C-78, an act to establish a federal environment assessment process, affirms in its preamble a commitment to, and I ask the hon. member to listen carefully, "achieve an appropriate balance between economic development and the preservation and enhancement of environmental quality".

Bill C-78, the Canadian environment assessment bill will ensure that all federal departments and agencies conduct environmental assessments of all project proposals, for which they have a decision-making authority and gives the Minister of the Environment substantial powers to ensure that this process is fair, efficient, transparent and allows for a high level of public input into decisions of projects which have a potentially significant impact on the natural environment.

As a government we realize that the activities of government touch Canadians in many ways which are not directly linked to projects. That is why it is government policy to require that an environmental statement accompany any proposal considered by cabinet dealing with policies or programs which may have a significant effect on the Canadian environment.

Together, Bill C-78 and the policies of the Government of Canada will ensure that virtually every significant action considered by government will be reviewed for its environmental implications and that Canadians will have the right to either participate directly in the process or to have access to the results.

In addition to Bill C-78 and the policies of the government, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment has the responsibility to administer the Canadian Environment Protection Act. This act gives the minister substantial power to establish regulations protecting Canada's air, water and land. More than this, the act creates for the minister the obligation to report to Canadians at regular intervals on the state of the Canadian environment. The next state of the environment report will be published early next year.

Environmental information is an area to which this government attaches a great deal of importance. During the process of consulting with Canadians as part of the development of the government's Green Plan, individual Canadians stressed repeatedly that a major priority of the government must be the regular provision and wide dissemination of readily understandable information on the state of the environment and how it is changing.

Canadians told us that they wanted a sound basis to make their own decisions about the environment. They wanted a basis to understand whether the actions they were taking as individuals would help to reduce environmental degradation. They want to be able to judge whether the private sector is doing its part to contribute to a healthy and sustainable environmental legacy for our children. Of course Canadians want to have a basis to make judgments about the environmental performance of their governments.

The routine provision of high quality environmental information will be a major commitment included in the Green Plan when it is made public next week. There is much work to be done in this complex area, but the government is committed to providing Canadians with the information they need to make informed decisions about their own activities and about the environmental performance of others, including governments.

In the view of the government, the measures we have already put in place and are contemplating as part of the Green Plan are, we believe, the best way to ensure that environmental impacts are always considered as part of the government decision–making.

In my view, an environmental auditor general would needlessly duplicate many of the functions which already rest with the Minister of the Environment. Such an institution is simply not an effective substitute for an environmentally aware electorate making fully informed decisions about government performance. This is true accountability and we are committed to the public as auditors general of our environmental performance.

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in a debate that not only gives hon. members a chance to propose a number of concepts that are praiseworthy, attractive and generous, but also gives other members a chance to respond to the concepts that one of our members, in this case the hon. member for Ottawa West, has presented in the House today. Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the contents of motion M–456 are very interesting and attractive, and I would like to read the motion, and I quote:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing the position of Environmental Auditor General —

I am going to skip some of this, since the focus of our comments is now clear, and the motion goes on to read:

> — to ensure that any activity, program or initiative of the government is conducted in a manner that is compatible with a policy of protection and enhancement of the environment.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting and attractive approach for anyone who is environmentally aware. The motives underlying this proposal are indeed generous and praiseworthy, and I believe we share those motives as a matter of principle. However, I am not sure it would be appropriate to proceed immediately to discuss establishing a position as novel as that of environmental auditor. I want to demonstrate that it is perhaps premature to develop and establish this kind of responsibility.

I was saying that the purpose of the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa West was to establish the position of Environmental Auditor General, whose main role would consist in monitoring the government's progress in protecting the environment. This is very attractive, I agree, but this concept would merely weaken the government's responsibility in a very important area, because the government already has well defined responsibilities in this respect. Authority is already well established at various levels and reflected in various position.

Establishing this position might involve bureaucrats identifying new and increasingly complex criteria and procedures, which only bureaucrats would be able to understand. We would be on the outside looking in, we who were officially appointed by the people to manage our public affairs which includes a responsibility for the environment where we have a major contribution to make. I do not think we should appoint an auditor now or even in the near future. I think that appointing an auditor general immediately would be putting the cart before the horse. It would be like hiring a truck driver without knowing whether he is supposed to drive a heavy truck or a light truck, whether he will carry bulk or people or whatever. Mr. Speaker, I think it is premature to commit the government to establishing this kind of position right away, because as you know, the environment is a very complex and very broad field. When we consider the scope of the operations the incumbent would have to administer, when we consider the scope of activities under federal jurisdiction, which means the government we represent, it boggles the mind.

I would like to take this opportunity to explain the problems this might create. As you know, the federal government's activities which are very wide ranging and complex employ as many as 585,000 Canadians. This means 30,000 buildings to manage, and these people with the federal government represent a market that is worth $10 billion in terms of consumer goods and industrial products, divided into over 17,000 categories. This is an enormous area the auditor would have to monitor, and he would not be an elected official. As a public servant, the auditor would not be elected, and he would be asked to manage all that and to set standards and have his own staff. I think it is clear that because of the scope and variety of the activities in question, the government's actions have a considerable impact on the environment. Canadians have every right to expect their government, and only their government, to act responsibly in protecting the environment.

Mr. Speaker, the government is no ordinary business. In fact, that is exactly why the impact of this government's activities on the environment is a factor that is beyond the normal scope of those activities. As a result, the government must set rules and regulations that control the manner in which a large number of private sector businesses operate. And these rules and regulations which are all contained in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, determine those conditions. In addition, however, there are other acts, regulations and programs that, although they focus on a wider range of socio-economic objectives, nevertheless support the government's legitimate policies.

Considering the scope and the impact of government activities, what tools do we actually have to protect the environment? Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is quite simple. Protecting the environment must become a priority throughout the government. Through legislation, sustainable development should become the expressed goal of every minister in managing his department. The Minister of the Environment must have the necessary resources to be effective in his role.

You know, it is like safety and security, As long as we felt that safety and security was a matter for the police, there was a lot of insecurity. Today, we realize that ordinary citizens also have to be involved. We all have to participate and share the responsibility.

• (1800)

Mr. Speaker, the question is, how would an auditor, with complex legislation and public servants, be able to monitor Canada's environment and all government operations? I think the answer is pretty obvious.

Like my hon. colleague, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that this government has demonstrated its ability to manage the environment for a number of years, and especially during the past year, with the Green Plan and Bill C-78.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The time for provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

Pursuant to order made on Monday, December 3, 1990, the House will now resume debate on the motion of Mr. Masse for third reading of Bill C-40.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C–40, an act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it was extremely interesting to debate on the environment that interrupted my speech. Certainly, it is a key player in every aspect of anything we undertake to do. The media and communicating those concerns are vital and key to an understanding by the population and by business people of the role that the environment plays in all our lives, whether one is young or old, in business or just at leisure.

I would like to welcome the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Edmonton Southwest, and congratulate him upon his daughter's recent marriage.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Finestone: He has today, I believe, returned from Australia and we welcome him. He will be probably the only voice heard from the other side of the floor, and a welcomed and knowledgeable one at that. Certainly his voice has been the one we have heard most consistently. We do congratulate him and welcome him back.

Previously, I was talking about the CRTC's executive committee and the collegial decision–making process on those issues of very serious importance to an even broadcasting environment across the land. This has now been replaced with the principle of "who hears decides", whereby panels of three will be empowered to make binding decisions on the entire commission. The introduction of the "who hears decides" concept, together with the ability of the cabinet to direct the CRTC to establish regional offices, will profoundly change the way the commission goes about its hearings and decision making.

The new regionalization concept, coupled with binding panel decisions, will erode the consistency, uniformity and quality of the decision–making process and could lead to the Balkanization of the CRTC.

Keith Spicer, the temporary chairman of the CRTC, who I believe will return this mandate later, appearing before the legislative committee, recommended against this approach. I know he changed his song. However, I think the circumstances on which he changed that song might well be examined. I will not go into that any further at this moment.

He said in essence at committee that "In broadcasting you have to look at the whole matrix of issues, many of them very subtle, cultural issues, and I mean regional cultural issues. It is not only a matter of law, it is a matter of common sense, sensitivity, as well as law. That is why in the broadcasting area we think it is much better to have one national consensus so that we can compare what we are doing in Newfoundland" to that which is being done in Saskatchewan or up in Iqaluit or anywhere across this land and to "make sure that all Canadians feel they are being treated in the same way. And at a time when there are some regional inter–ethnic tensions in Canada we ought to be looking for some of these mechanisms to have a strong national view, but with much greater sensitivity to regional concerns."

I think that that is happening, Mr. Speaker, and we do not have to change the mechanism to have that sensitivity to regional concerns. He went on to say: "We all know that this whole process is like squaring a circle, but that is what we are trying to do, and in our honest opinion we think it could be done better that way." The way it was done before, in other words.

Mr. Edwards: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to abuse the charity and goodwill which the hon. member for Mount Royal acknowledged when she welcomed me into the House. However, I did want to have some clarification as to whether the Official Opposition has signalled a departure from House practice in the use of a podium for a debate. I believe that the Official Opposition has denied the Prime Minister the opportunity to use a podium in this House and that indeed the House practice is that the only occasion on which such use is made of a podium is when the Minister of Finance is delivering the Budget.

What really piqued my interest was that I usually have an unobstructed view of this very distinguished member and I was deprived of this on tonight's occasion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Unless the hon. member for Mount Royal wants to make a comment, the Chair would be ready to give the hon. parliamentary secretary the clarification he requested.

Mrs. Finestone: I do have a comment to make, Mr. Speaker. I was offered to try this podium and, when I raised the question, I was told that the Minister of Justice used it the other day and even at an earlier occasion, I believe. I thought I was entitled to do the same, but if you think it is contrary to the rules, I will do without. I wanted you to know that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the Chair is now in a position to make a ruling. The House practice and tradition is indeed that none shall use such a podium but the Minister of Finance for delivering the Budget speech. Another member may have used it. Personally, I was inclined to be tolerant. However, another member having raised the question, I have no choice but to enforce the rules. I would therefore ask you to remove this podium and revert to the usual method.

Mrs. Finestone: Since this government was never big on tolerance, I will respect your decision. I hope this will allow my hon. friend opposite to see me and hear me, but foremost, to listen to me because the problem with the government of the day is that it does not listen.

[English]

Mr. MacWilliam: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not intend to interrupt the member's presentation certainly any further, but I am more or less seeking clarification in terms of the definition of your ruling. As you well know, many members have used, for example, stacked books, just to place their reference notes on. I am not sure, in light of your ruling, whether in fact using those stacked notations are in fact a violation of the House. I may provide for you, Mr. Speaker, the fact that many of the provincial legislatures, including the legislature in British Columbia of which I am a former member, makes common everyday use of the podium simply as an instrument to allow a little more flexibility in the presentation of written notes.

• (1810)

It is simply a matter of being able to have the notes a little more accessible to the glance of the eye as one is making those presentations.

So, I am somewhat confused in terms of your current ruling and whether in fact it rules out the use of any elevation whatsoever.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): You have to understand that, in such cases, parliamentary procedure and tradition are of the utmost importance, and usually hon. members are allowed extensive material. However, the House has been pretty strict on the use of lecterns, and once again, I am bound by the rules of this House. If the House wants to amend the rules, it can do so, but for now, according to parliamentary practise, only the Minister of Finance can use a lectern to make his speech.

Having said that, the House can make appropriate changes, if it so wishes, but for now, I must stick to tradition, according to which no one can use a lectern to make a speech at the House of Commons, although books and other reading material are allowed.

The hon. member for Mount Royal has the floor.

Mrs. Finestone: I will use no material, and no books, just my hands.

[English]

If I ever get around to discussing the problems of the CRTC with "he who hears decides" between the podium and the interruptions and the arrival—not unexpected, I would like to say—of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications. It was not the surprise, it was just the pleasure of the arrival of the parliamentary secretary who fundamentally believes in this bill but who has certainly missed my opening comments when I indicated—

Mr. Edwards: No.

Mrs. Finestone: Oh, no? You were here to hear them? Then the hon. member knows the government has had since March to bring this bill in. The fact that his House leader did not was one of the problems in the pushing through of this bill and the zipped-lips across the way, with the exception of his.

To return to this whole question of the regionalization through the "she/he who hears decides," the CRTC is not alone in its concerns about this matter. As a matter of fact, I would quote Bernard Ostry of TV Ontario who told the committee that "the regionalization of the commission and the initiation of the 'she/he who hears decides' rule will lead to fragmentation of national policy and general confusion as to the guiding principles of regulation in all parts of the country".

CFCF from Montreal argued that with this particular rule "we are running the risk of contradicting one of the fundamental objectives of the system, to maintain a single system".

Let us look further at what is happening with the CRTC. This bill seriously jeopardizes its ability to carry out its role as an expert and an independent quasi-judicial body because it will grant new power to the cabinet while retaining an existing one. It would permit the cabinet to issue policy directions to the CRTC, but it would also retain the ability to set aside a decision of the commission on the basis that the decision derogates from the attainment of the objectives of the broadcasting policy or the objectives of a direction issued to the commission.

The Liberal Party argues that the dual powers of cabinet review over CRTC decisions and the power of general policy direction to the CRTC are excessive. These tandem powers allow for government interference particularly through the cabinet and that is most unhealthy. Whatever side of the House a minister comes from, they should be wary of this particular move.

Therefore, Liberals believe that the power of cabinet review should be removed to uninvite—if I may put it that way—political interference that would jeopardize the independence of the commission.

The commission and its predecessors were created precisely because it was recognized that there was a need for a body characterized by continuity of expertise and independence from everyday political pressures. As far back as 1928, the Aird Report noted that this independence also protected the government of the day from the political pressures inevitably exerted upon it as it ensures that the competing arguments put forward to the decision-makers are weighed as dispassionately as possible and in the interests of the communication system as a whole, and are not dictated or influenced by parochial political pressures.

If there is a member of this House who understands that, it is the parliamentary secretary of the day who at the time of the all news channel hearings felt very compelled to push for an understanding of the proposal of one of his riding people, Allard in this instance, and so resigned as the chairman of the standing committee in order to promote his own constituent's interest. I understand that he felt both a sense of commitment and obligation to promote that particular presentation before the CRTC, but he had the good sense to resign from the standing committee. I do not know that this would allow ministers to resign from the cabinet as they are pressured in the interests of their own particular self interests.

Let us turn to the heart of the broadcast bill, which this government is cutting to the quick bit by bit. I do not know if four bypasses would even save or be able to reinstate the CBC to the power, influence and importance that it does hold within the hearts and minds of Canada as it links and communicates across this land.

Bill C-40 undermines the central role of the CBC as Canada's national broadcaster. On the television side, the CBC's traditional mandate to reflect all regions of Canada and to meet special interest or minority group programming responsibilities is assigned to the non-existent alternative programmer. However, while the bill permits the creation of this new national broadcaster, it does not mandate or require its creation, which appears very unlikely.

In fact, while the government said in June 1988 that the alternate programmer should be operational within two years, as of December 1990, which is here, not one single step has been taken toward its creation. Instead, the CBC, now stripped as well of its mandate to serve Canadian unity, continues to have its budget slashed out of all proportion to overall government budget reductions, thus cutting its voice and the potential for the extension of its voice across this land.

Cuts to the CBC with this Conservative government began in 1985-86 with $85 million; 1986-87, $5.6 million; 1987-88, $21.1 million; 1988-89, $5.6 million; 1989-90, $5.8 million; and for the year 1990-91, $25.9 million.

Last week, when I asked the minister to assure no further cuts to the CBC, he refused to say no. His only words were: "It is with great pleasure that I note the member's suggestion".

We know that when you start to cut, the retirement packages are expensive and difficult to manage. It becomes a rolling stone that cannot stop, which has a wide impact on us all, radio and television, French and English across this land. It is a very serious matter.

For six years the government has been using major budget cuts to force the CBC to focus strictly on programming for mass audiences, to expand its dependence on advertising and to radically cut its regional services. As well, there is the potential jeopardy to the maintenance of the parliamentary channel, to the northern service and to Radio Canada International.

The role of these non-mandated services is important in the spectrum of what we see on the sets that we turn on. This past week we have heard the challenge to their survival. CBC has been so badly wounded, so cut, that in trying to meet its own personal mandate it is going to have to cut services dramatically across this land.

One such service is that of the parliamentary channel, and I would invite the public to let their voices be heard if they want to continue to watch this House discuss and debate the issues of the day. Call for a parliamentary appropriation to ensure the survival of the parliamentary channel. Let the people's voice be heard. This government is mean-spirited. If it thinks that its popularity at 14 per cent can go any lower because their voice is being heard on the channel, that is a pretty sad reason for cutting the parliamentary channel. There are some reasoned debates that go on in this House. I must say from the mute forces across the floor these days, one would presume that they have already decided that the television service of the parliamentary channel is cut out, so they do not have to bother with any form of democracy or multiparty programming responses to the issues of the day.

That is a pretty sad commentary on democracy. When you let it slip, it can slip away. If it does, it is the fault of this government across the floor for its mean-spirited and unparliamentary approach to reasoned and sensible debate. It has not even opened its mind to the arguments that have come to them that are logical and well reasoned. Certainly some of them are.

With the passage of this bill, the CBC will no longer be required to contribute to the development of national unity. It has been dropped from their mandate. The parliamentary secretary loves to say that I voted against including the national unity in this bill. He, like many others on his side, forget to look at society and determine if they have done things inaccurately, incorrectly and be prepared to stand up and say: "I was wrong and we were wrong in that standing committee."

The illusion to this being a propaganda state like South Africa, which was used by the parliamentary secretary, is far from acceptable in this House or as a description of parliamentary democracy or democracy as expressed over the last many years through CBC. I could go on and explain that this was propaganda. There were some things that took place that perhaps should have been cut out of the CBC, the Sault Ste. Marie being an example. But they were not.

Journalistic freedom has grown and is respected in this House and across this land. I think that illusion to propaganda is totally unacceptable, whether it comes from Patrick Watson, Jim Edwards or anyone else. It is an incorrect reading of the right to report and reporters to report. It certainly does not speak highly for respect for leadership across this land.

When Canadians are being pulled in so many directions over trade, the GST, the Constitution, just at a time when the government should be doing everything in its power to give each and every Canadian a sense of belonging and of participation, this is the wrong time to cut out national unity. What better role is there for the CBC as the country's national broadcaster than to help unify Canadians through understanding, through an accessible voice all through this land at this critical point in our history.

The Liberal Party's goal for Canada is developing the national personality, giving access to its expression, building a sense of national identity by giving access and consciousness to that sense. If building access and a sense of national identity and expressing one's personality does not develop a sense of national unity, then what does it do? We believe we need national institutions like the CBC, which is one of the few that are left after they have absolutely sabred most of them across this way, to weave all the regions and all the diverse participants in Canadian society into a unified voice.

National unity also means money behind infrastructure and money behind rebroadcasters. You, Mr. Speaker, come from an area and a lot of your colleagues are from areas where you need to have that kind of reinforcement of the voice across those wires so that they can reach the farthest reaches of this land. We heard from the English-speaking people of Sherbrooke where they cannot get a proper CBC voice because we need improvement of that service.

We heard in parliamentary committee of areas in this country—they are few—where they feel the loss of the Canadian voice as heard through the national broadcaster. How did that voice get there? We had a responsibility when we put CBC into place to put the kind of infrastructure that would lead to national unity so that we could build this sense of consciousness and national identity. There is something very nefarious when this government removes the national unity clause.

Recently, the Prime Minister highlighted the importance of national unity by saying: "Everything that we have accomplished as a country can be traced back to our sense of national purpose, to our national unity." If the Prime Minister believes this and says this with all this emotion and feeling, why has that not been carried through? Why has he allowed, at the table of the cabinet, the removal of national unity along with other very important aspects of this bill?

I think the lack of any ministers to sit in this House while the bill was being debated, the lack of any single, solitary person to sit behind the minister as he spoke and the lack of any voice from across this floor to support the government's bill in steering the debate of the findings after second reading in the legislative committee is indicative that either they were so busy with their GST and so busy with the Constitution that they paid absolutely no attention to the contents of this bill when it came to the cabinet for ratification, or they just do not care.

With respect to the two separate CBC standing committees, the government plan to create these two committees, one for English-language programs and the second for French-language programs, will only isolate Canadians from Canadians and create an atmosphere of two Canadas at the CBC.

The Liberal Party believes that dividing the CBC based upon language runs counter not only to the goal of national unity, national interest, national understanding or exchange but to the interest of all Canadians in both official languages which the CBC has always served.

I will not go into the detail of budgeting and the division of the budget, but certainly the sectors on both sides have gained rather than lost in that expression of voice.

The two separate standing committees for the CBC is not a new concept. It has its roots in a recommendation of the 1965 parliamentary committee on broadcasting. However, the Liberal government in 1967 rejected that recommendation.

I would like to remind this House that the Conservative government accepted that as that bill passed unanimously through the House. The Hon. Judy LaMarsh on November 1, 1967 explained why to the House of Commons this was not an acceptable procedure.

She said: "A statutory requirement that the board should split itself up into two would, in the opinion of the government, be undesirable. If the CBC is to be an instrument for the continuing expression of Canadian identity, it must have a clear identity of its own that is neither English nor French but is Canadian."

That is what we have lost, that whole mentality that it is Canadian, the role and function of the heart and soul of this bill, the CBC.

I would like to finish my remarks with the following observations. I really am quite sad. My heart is heavy because I believe that we have missed a wonderful opportunity. A most important cultural instrument in law has been lost. It will impact on our own artists, singers, dancers, writers, actors and our actresses.

It will be a negative, long term impact on this country, and that is what is so sad. There is no vision of this country by the government at this time.

Let me reassure the minister that when I said my heart was sad, it is in due measure to what he has done with this bill: Meechified it, balkanized it and ignored the importance of Canadian programming. I find that in contradiction to many of the things which he does in other areas.

I believe that many of the amendments that we have made were worth-while to make this bill fitting for the kind of Canada that we see and, when we look back on our history and down the road to where we were headed, the road to this day has been a very long one.

I would take up too much time thanking all who have helped make this process work for me, my party and, I think to be fair, in the interests of getting a better broadcast bill for all Canadians.

Indeed, I could not even attempt to count the witnesses I have seen, all the meetings I have attended, all the briefs I have read, all the submissions I have heard, all the lawyers who have offered their advice, all the representatives of industry who have done their lobbying, all the experts who have graciously come forward to make their contribution to the creation of a better broadcasting bill.

We also cannot forget the members of this House and the staff of the committees in this Parliament and the last Parliament on the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and the legislative committees that joined us in this exercise. I would also like particularly to thank the parliamentary secretary, the member for Edmonton Southwest, whose knowledge of this bill, as government spokesman and previously as chairman of the standing committee, and explanations have been clear and unequivocal. He has the right to his opinion as we have the right to ours. He has been helpful on many occasions while maintaining full commitment to his government's points of view.

I want to thank Nancy Jean Waugh, who is my legislative assistant, for her hard work and dedication. She was diligent and gave great commitment, exemplary and of immeasurable help.

I should, as well, acknowledge all the Canadians who have been moved to join in this debate, writing to me and to members on all sides of this House about this chapter in the history of Canadian broadcasting that the government seems intent on closing today. They obviously cared enough about their country to sit down and write a letter about it.

The bill, as it stands, is seriously flawed. I want to bring to your attention what was said by Mr. Serge Gouin , President and Chief Executive Officer of Télé-Métropole. He says:

> I therefore add my voice to those of all the other representatives of the industry who have come to you to express their concerns and to ask you to postpone passing the bill in order to ensure that the final version is in line with the conditions prevailing in this sector and represents a positive change rather than a giant step backwards.

In summary, the bill fails to address important policy matters. It could do more to ensure that our system better reflects Canada to Canadians in terms of greater Canadian content. It could do better to prevent global technologies from wrestling control of our broadcasting system away from Canadians. It should do more to avoid the North Americanization of all that we see on our screens. It should not allow the Balkanization of our system into regional ones. It should better entrench the CBC as our unifying, national broadcaster.

I and my party plan to continue our fight, a fight in which we said in the very beginning that if a new broadcasting bill was proposed by this government then it would have to be true to its its roots as we know it could be, and true to a vision of Canada that goes right back to the time when a Conservative government created the CBC.

This government has listened at times and, at other times, found it easy to say no. I believe it has made some obvious mistakes. This bill, to be very simple, is flawed. It is not true enough to ensure a Canadian system for tomorrow. But pass it, it will, for the last time I checked the government held the majority in this place.

I just want the record to show that I and my fellow Liberals did everything we could; studied the bill, listened to witnesses and proposed amendments, while trying to improve it, better support our shared set of values, and better enhance our shared sense of national unity and national purpose. If we have achieved that in some small measure then the effort has not been in vain.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this particular bill in somewhat of a pinch-hitting capacity because even though I am the newly appointed critic for communications, arts and culture, much of the detailed work in this piece of legislation, many of the reasoned amendments that have been put before the House that we have debated and discussed through the months, were essentially brought forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

I want to say that a great deal of credit for the attempts to improve and strengthen this piece of legislation have to go to the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam. He has a great deal of work and I hope I can do him justice in presenting the summary debate at third reading stage of Bill C–40.

All of us in the New Democratic Party were delighted when the government brought forward a broadcast bill, a communications policy, because we recognized for some time that there was a real need to upgrade, update, or modernize what was essentially an outmoded and outdated policy with regard to broadcasting in Canada.

We were excited about the prospects of the bill and even more excited about the opportunity to address many of the outstanding concerns regarding the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the CRTC, and native broadcasting. There are many aspects to this legislation. It is a large bill, a large piece of legislation. As we saw, there was some 42 different amendments, many of them proposed by the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam on behalf of the New Democrats and many proposed by the Liberals.

At the outset I want to say that it is somewhat perplexing because we wanted so much to be able to support this legislation, to give it the strong mandate that we feel it requires. It was very disappointing—and I think I speak for all members of the opposition—to find that virtually every amendment, every reason to change that we tried to bring in through committee and through report stage debates, was essentially turned down. The government turned a deaf ear toward these amendments; not all 42 of them because some were actually the government's amendments, but certainly all of them put forward by the opposition parties.

It was very disappointing to find that a piece of legislation which could have been a hallmark of this legislative Chamber, a piece of legislation which could have set the future of broadcasting in Canada, had been left severely compromised because last night the government reacted with stony silence on the amendments and essentially voted every one of them down.

It is with some discomfort that we in the opposition, even though we so much want to support the legislation, find that we simply cannot do that without the amendments to strengthen it. I want to present the reasons for that.

Essentially the bill attempts to chart the future of broadcasting in Canada. It represents some very fine work by the officials in the Department of Communications, some very fine work by the standing committee, and some fine work by all those people— government members as well as opposition members—who have participated in its formulation at all stages. Yet, despite that and the prime opportunity that we have to make this a top notch piece of legislation, it remains essentially flawed. It is deficient in five crucial areas of broadcasting.

First, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is brought essentially under siege by this legislation. As has been mentioned numerous times in this assembly, the CBC through Bill C–40 is being leeched and it is being meeched. It is being cut back in its expenditures in terms of fulfilling a national mandate of communications in Canada and of binding this country from coast to coast to coast, and as a national voice, a national symbol of Canadian identity. It is being meeched. It is being divided into two realities: the reality of French broadcasting and the reality of English broadcasting, an essential duality in communications in Canada. We think that is wrong.

Second, with respect to the cable television industry, which is a virtual monopoly in Canada, under this bill the industry remains unregulated in terms of profits and the ability to import foreign programming, essentially the only monopoly in Canada that has absolutely no price structure regulation brought to it. We will speak more about that later.

Third, private broadcasters are still not doing enough in the creation of Canadian programming, and this bill does precious little to rectify that weakness in our communications policy.

Fourth, in terms of the weakness of this particular bill, through this legislation the government is threatening the independence of the Canadian Radio–Television and Telecommunications Commission, the CRTC. The CRTC requires specific legislative remedies to give it the kind of direction and the kind of mandate it needs to set firm policies for the future. Instead, it is being weakened and emasculated by direct ministerial control.

Let me turn specifically to the CBC, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I want to say that the CBC is ideally suited to contribute to our goals of national unity. It is suited to developing a shared national consensus and a national identity. It plays an extremely important role in that regard. It is perhaps more difficult to see in central Canada but, speaking as a member who comes from the west, I can say that there are many areas in my province of British Columbia where the CBC is the voice of Canada. It speaks to the people in the hinterlands, in the communities that because of geographic location and what-not simply cannot receive other signals unless they are signals from Tijuana, Mexico or Los Angeles, California. It is the CBC that presents a distinct image of Canadianism from Victoria to St. John's. It is an extremely important function that this organization must fulfil.

This bill does not support that idea. The over-all strategy of this government toward the CBC has been characterized by funding cuts, by neglect of specific initiatives, and by the bifurcation of the management structure of the corporation, by splitting it into two entities, essentially. This legislation puts it clearly on that road.

The government has demonstrated an antipathy for publicly owned enterprises. We have seen this with the privatization of Air Canada, with the privatization of Petro-Canada, and with the move which is well on the way to privatizing our postal service. The government is quick to point out the weaknesses and just as quick to sell those enterprises off to the private sector.

As I speak this evening and talk about the future of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Canada, as we talk about the effects of the funding cuts facing the corporation and the impact that this legislation will have on the future of the CBC, I have been notified that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has just announced a major lay-off. That spells serious problems for the future of this industry and serious problems for the future of developing that unique Canadian identity. Exactly what the impact of those lay-offs will be, I do not have the details, but that announcement has just come through.

The government is prepared to cut, to privatize, to emasculate, but is it prepared to point to a successful, publicly owned enterprise and perpetuate that enterprise? This legislation, I submit, suggests that it is not.

The main threat to the independence and the integrity of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is not a commitment to national unity, shared national consciousness and identity, not according to this legislation. The main threat to the CBC is inadequate funding, insufficient commitment to public broadcasting, and essentially an unwillingness to fund innovation through a publicly owned enterprise.

It comes down to the simple ideology of the government that everything in this country must be market driven, that there is no role for the government in terms of a vehicle for national unity if it does not fit with the bottom line structure of the market system. We have seen the result of a market-driven economy in our neighbour to the south. That is what makes Canada a uniquely different country from the United States. Thank God for that.

The CBC will, can and, I would submit, is doing what private enterprise either cannot do or simply will not do and that is its uniqueness. I think the quality of this publicly-owned enterprise is in terms of defining a sense of national unity, a sense of national identity.

I wonder whether this government will cease hindering the corporation as it seems wont to do and actually give it a hand. This legislation drags its feet in a commitment to public broadcasting. The CBC is a national and, I would submit, a nation-building institution. Through first-rate television, radio services and the all news channel, the CBC reflects a Canada that is more than simply the sum of the regions. The sum is greater than the simple addition of all the parts.

The CBC is a buffer against the kind of continentalism that has driven this government's ideological rigidity. In this continentalist view by this government, Canada's destiny lies in a continental bloc led by the United States. To that end our policy on trade, our policy on foreign affairs, our policy on defence have been harmonized with those of the United States in order to fit into this continentalist bloc ideology.

We have seen the process take place already with the advent of the free trade agreement, the artificially elevated high interest rates, the dollar inflating policies of this administration, the abandonment of a search for an independent foreign policy, and the lock-step with the United States on security issues.

The CBC is not easily harmonized with American institutions and that is what is causing some problems for this government. Its history, its development, its function, its mandate, its role do not fit with the concept of harmonizing with our neighbour to the south. The CBC is quintessentially Canadian. It is a Canadian achievement and we should be proud of it. It evokes a Canadian style in broadcasting. It is not, I submit, a private enterprise achievement but it is a public one.

The CBC is not easily harmonized but it can be, and it will be. It is being underfunded. It is being organizationally neutered. It is being economically emasculated as a first step in its demise. The division of the CBC board into English and into French weakens the CBC as a national institution. If the government sees no value in a publicly-owned and autonomously operated public broadcasting service, then it will do what it can to lessen the distinctiveness of that service. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what is happening.

Under this strategy the national broadcasting service comes more and more to resemble the private networks, until essentially the rationale for having the service in the first place is lost and then, "what the heck, guys? We may as well privatize it". It becomes a distant memory.

The legislation advances a strategy that sees little value in public broadcasting and sees no point in perpetuating something that is vigorously and quintessentially Canadian.

I would like to turn to native broadcasting because I think that this legislation seriously erodes the initiatives in that regard. The objective should have been to strengthen aboriginal broadcasting provisions through this legislation. Many of the amendments we had proposed in fact pointed in that very specific direction. Those amendments were voted down.

This bill reads that "programming that reflects the aboriginal cultures of Canada should be provided within the Canadian broadcasting system as resources become available". Fine. But then this bill gives little priority to communications difficulties and realities of Canada's aboriginal communities, particularly our northern communities.

The Broadcasting League noted that the government's proposal makes no provision at all for broadcasting services for aboriginal people. Examining the government record does not inspire confidence. The northern native broadcast access program funds 13 communications societies. Since it was established in 1983, it has had its funding cut, and cut, and cut again. The Northern Native Broadcast Access Program was created to ensure that northern native people would have fair access to distribution systems. This was given in order to maintain a native culture, a native identity, and to maintain the native languages. The aim was also to help create programming that is relevant to native communities and to reflect their concerns.

How has it fared? In 1983, the program was given a budget of over $40 million for four years. In 1985 and 1986, the government reduced the funding to $33 million. In 1987-88 and 1988-89 and, again in 1989-90, funding was frozen at $13.2 million, down from $40 million to $13 million. In this year's budget, the Conservative government cut back the program to $11.3 million. It has completely knee-capped this program. It has completely emasculated its ability to serve our native communities.

The proposed legislation reflects a basic lack of support for aboriginal communications. This government is attacking aboriginal cultural expression and is attacking aboriginal peoples at the worst possible time. The legislation simply does not go far enough in ensuring access and control of communications by our aboriginal peoples.

My time is limited but I want to make a few comments with regard to the cable television industry. Cable TV in Canada is a territorial monopoly but it is not regulated by other communications industries. The bill simply does not undertake to regulate the profits made by these companies in an industry that earns, on an average, 30 per cent of its net fixed assets annually. It is completely unregulated in that regard.

Does this bill provide cable television rates for Canadians that are just and fair? We submit that the answer is no. Many amendments were made to try to strengthen that part of the proposed legislation and all of those amendments were defeated.

I have much more to say in that regard but my time has almost expired. Let me just summarize. This bill charts the future of broadcasting in Canada but it is basically flawed. The course that this government has set is insupportable. National unity, cultural development and regulatory independence are not well served by this legislation. This country, I submit, is not well served by this legislation. The government has failed to provide a Broadcasting Act that Canada needs and needs desperately to survive.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague, the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap a question but, first of all, I would like to compliment him on the very nice job he has done in carrying through this very complex bill in the absence of the critic. I know that the critic was not pleased about not being in this House, but I am sure he will be very delighted to know that the hon. member has done a very fine piece of work and so I congratulate the hon. member. I know it was not easy.

I would like to know if the hon. member feels comfortable enough to answer a question with respect to cable, which was one of the very strong points raised by the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

Not many of the members of the New Democratic Party took the opportunity to speak to the bill. I know that my friend from Windsor and a few others did but certainly they were not overly numerous in their exercise of concern in this House. Could the hon. member tell us what is the view of the NDP in respect of cable? The hon. member was talking about the rates of return which they enjoy. I thought it was much closer to about 24 per cent but the hon. member says it is closer to 30 per cent and that is not net profits, either. What does the hon. member think would be the answer and what would be the best route to enable them to contribute more effectively to the Canadian broadcasting system?

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, the member raises a very legitimate point. Because of the time limitations I did not have the opportunity to go fully into that matter.

I want to reiterate that the cable industry in Canada is basically an unregulated monopoly. Although we may have a slight dispute concerning the net profits received by the industry, I think my hon. colleague would agree with me that it does pretty well for itself. As a matter of fact, in the past 18 months alone, the increase in the price structure has been some 29 per cent. That is a very substantial increase in pricing.

We are saying that essentially we have a monopoly situation. Why do I say that it is a monopoly situation? Very simply, one cannot go into my riding or any place in British Columbia or Canada and start up a competitive cable company. You cannot do it. The cable companies that are serving that market virtually have a hammerlock on the market. Therefore, they become a monopoly.

That is not necessarily a bad thing. I think it makes everyone slightly uncomfortable when we hear talk of monopolies. Do not forget that our telephone systems province-wide are essentially monopolies. These are monopolies that are structured in terms of the pricing increases they are allowed to implement. We do not have this situation in the cable industry. Perhaps if we had some mechanism to tie it to a reasonable and justifiable profit margin, then we would not see the kind of price gouging that I submit we have seen recently with the industry. They are making a very tidy profit indeed.

In terms of consumers across Canada whose income levels make it very difficult for them to go out to see a movie or to spend their disposable income in entertainment because they have virtually no disposable income, cable television is one of the few tools that they have to relax and enjoy some culture with. It is very difficult for these lower-income people to afford those kinds of price increases.

In summarizing my comments, I suggest that because it is an unregulated monopoly, and because it has demonstrated its unwillingness to moderate its price increases, there should be a mechanism developed to establish some pricing guidelines as we have in other monopolies in Canada.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap for his very balanced presentation and to take this opportunity to welcome him to the role of official critic for communications and culture for his party.

He has already demonstrated a great interest in the issues and is seriously addressing them. He follows in the steps of two distinguished predecessors, the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam and Lynn MacDonald, who was a member of this previous House and who made a real contribution towards the bill that we have before us.

I would like to ask the hon. member, with reference to the cable industry, an industry which, incidentally, I hold no brief for, because I was a conventional broadcaster. Back in those days, we considered them to be newcomers, and that was the kindest thing we could say about them. He is quite correct that they do enjoy a territorial monopoly and that they do not have the kind of rate regulation that public utilities have which, I understand, is the position his party is advocating.

I just wanted to reflect and pose a question to the hon. member. Is he aware that there are a great many very small cable companies in the country, as well as some giants? Is he aware of the efforts that cable companies have made in recent years with community channels and the preparations that they are having to make in allocating capital budget for upgrading of systems and preparations for HDTV?

I am familiar myself with a situation of a system in Hinton, Alberta where the regulator, in good faith, ordered the independent operator of a cable system there to wire four subdivisions with underground cable in anticipation of the growth of that community. The growth never came and that load had to be carried. Eventually, the operator had to sell to a larger cable company, a good operator, albeit, but it had to get out of the business.

I think it is, perhaps, unfair to generalize and the CRTC recognizes the situation that there are variations within cable companies. That is why it is so healthy to have an independent regulator so that it can distinguish between the situation of a very profitable, large operator and that of a small operator.

I am sure that the hon. member, coming from where he does, is aware of the contribution that small cable operators make to the broadcasting system as a whole.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the member for his very kind comments.

Understandably, he has recognized that, as a newcomer in this very complex area of legislation, it is difficult to be completely up to speed in all aspects of the industry. If I appear to stumble about somewhat from time to time, it is simply a matter of coming to terms with the many intricate details that the member has already pointed out.

To answer the member's question, first, yes, I am aware, of course, of the smaller cable companies whose profit margins may not be anywhere near the larger monopolies that we have such as Rogers Cable and what-not.

The bottom line criteria has to be fairness to the public. I am particularly concerned, as I mentioned, about the lower income Canadians who do not have the option of going out to see a movie or to a theatrical production simply because they cannot afford it.

What we have seen demonstrated by the industry, on average—and I am not pointing any fingers to any particular company or entity—are some very hefty price hikes. Perhaps some of those price increases have been justified. I do not question that, and there has to be flexibility allowed for justified price increases in terms of expansion of service and the upgrading of the technologies, et cetera.

I think the member would agree with me that, if the industry fails to demonstrate a sensitivity to the economic aspects of our Canadian life-style and to the fact that our lower income Canadians may not be able to afford those price increases, then it comes time for the government, through some mechanism—I am not sure exactly what mechanism would be provided—to be able to influence that price structuring to some small degree.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to participate in tonight's debate—

[English]

It is a wonderful opportunity. To me, it is closing the circle. When I first had the privilege of speaking in the House in November, 1984 I drew to the House's attention the need for a new broadcasting bill, one which would contain, among other elements, the power of direction of the government of the day to the CRTC, with appropriate safeguards.

I take some pride—and I am sure members opposite can share in that—in the realization that tonight we have before us the final stages of debate in third reading of a broadcasting bill. The previous administration sought perhaps to bite off more than could realistically be chewed at the time when it had an omnibus communications bill which did not pass when the Thirty-Second Parliament was dissolved.

Then, of course, in the Thirty-Third Parliament there was Bill C-136. Bill C-136 was the fruit of the labours of the Caplan-Sauvageau Task Force and the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in which the hon. member from Mount Royal laboured so diligently and made such a signal contribution, as did Lynn McDonald, the former New Democratic Party critic.

I appreciate the graciousness which members have extended to me in their comments about my involvement in this work. If anyone is going to "vix merbs" tonight I think it may be me because I left Sydney, Australia at ten o'clock this morning, Australia time, when I learned that there was a possibility of participating in this debate.

There have been reports in the press that the government had sought to delay this bill and I just wanted to allay those beliefs. That is speculation and I am happy to say that the speculation is totally unfounded. It is true that the bill was reported back to this House in March of this year. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, participated well in the legislative committee that dealt with the bill. We had a very distinguished chairman of the committee.

Then, of course, we entered into a phase of national debate, having to do with the very future of our country, focused on the Meech Lake Accord. I respect that the hon. member for Mount Royal and I hold totally different views on many aspects of that now defunct accord. It was not my decision, but in my judgement it would have been wholly inappropriate to have subjected the country to the kind of filibuster that was suggested would be upon us if that bill were put through the House in the months of May and June of this year, having to do with aspects of the bill which the hon. member for Mount Royal and others disagreed with profoundly.

So, we have the bill back before us now. We had two half days in late October in which we managed to get 12 per cent of the amendments dealt with at report stage and I must confess that before I departed on my family errand to Australia, I despaired of getting the bill through during the life of this Parliament, because of the sincere expression by members opposite that they wanted to "destroy a bad bill", to quote directly from one of them. I am grateful to the minister who was here last week and yesterday to shepherd this bill through report stage. I am sorry that I was not here to assist him in that regard, but he managed rather well I am given to understand.

When we were beginning report stage in late October, there was a rather strong barrage of support for the bill and I want to refer to one distinguished Canadian who said that there are both symbolic and practical reasons for passing C-40 now. Symbolically, it will send a much needed signal of hope to Canadians that parliament believes in some civilized future for the Canadian family and in a rich more realistic dialogue among Canadians who, at this time in our history, want to find again a sense of reconnection and mutual self-respect.

He went on to say: "In practical terms, C-40 will give the CRTC much stronger and more credible enforcement powers such as court orders and fines. Even though we maintain our position as to the tandem powers of direction and review, on balance I think the result is very positive. The regulatory watch-dog may have a slightly shorter leash in theory, but it will have much longer teeth." That is a quotation from Keith Spicer who, at that time, was serving as chairman of the CRTC. He made the remarks in Vancouver on October 26 of this year.

There was a good deal said by the hon. member for Mount Royal, in her very thorough contribution to today's debate, about a number of aspects of the bill. In particular, one aspect that piqued my interest was her despairing of what she saw as a lack of commitment to Canada in the bill.

I recall the labours of the standing committee where I think all of us were unanimously committed to seeing broadcasting policy and broadcasting legislation that would truly enhance the Canadianness of all of the components of the Canadian broadcasting system, public and private.

I think tangentially that this bill recognizes that a very significant portion of the Canadian broadcasting industry, the private broadcasting industry, including its cable component, has come of age and is pulling its weight with reference to a commitment to Canada. Time after time, with the cudgel behind the back, the regulator has been able to encourage through various creative suggestions private broadcasters to make a contribution to Canada.

I should add that many of these private broadcasters have spontaneously—and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James can acknowledge this—made contributions to the Canadian broadcasting system, including some significant contributions made by broadcasters based in his own home city.

I feel that the letter, for example, which the hon. member for Mount Royal had published in The Toronto Star on May 17 on the opinions page, may have—

Mrs. Finestone: You've read it.

Mr. Edwards: Yes, I did and I responded to it, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, but I got a bizarre response from the editor of The Toronto Star who said, "Although your article has merit, it is not appropriate for our Op-Ed page at this time. We receive a great volume of unsolicited manuscripts and must perforce reject many." That was my response to my rebuttal of the hon. member for Mount Royal's contribution in The Toronto Star.

Seriously, she makes quite a number of charges in that particular article and she touched on some of them tonight in debate. I suggest that some of the comments that my hon. friend makes are based on an honest difference of opinion on what the bill provides. I would say perhaps even a misunderstanding of what the bill provides. In fact, the article in The Toronto Star suggested that there might be some sort of a conspiracy on the part of the government, perhaps connected with the free trade agreement, to gut the Canadian broadcasting system.

This new act is designed to increase Canadian choices, not to restrict them. Technological advances, including direct broadcasting from high powered satellites to which my hon. friend referred, have made available new services over which the government and the CRTC technically have no control. Canadians are embracing that progress and, indeed, it has such power and momentum that in some situations no government or people can stop it, even if they wished to. Therefore, the role of government is then to provide Canadian choices, Canadian voices, in the words of the distinguished predecessor to the present Minister of Communications, the Hon. Flora MacDonald.

The hon. member for Mount Royal criticizes this bill for not restricting foreign access to the Canadian market. In doing so, I submit that she ignores the fact that the act gives the CRTC the power to supervise and regulate the entire Canadian broadcasting system, including those carrying foreign or other programming services. Under this legislation the only foreign signals which can be legally retransmitted in Canada are those authorized by the CRTC, which is also empowered to set the terms under which such signals are retransmitted. The CRTC will continue to control entry of foreign specialty services that compete with Canadian services.

In the past my hon. friend has suggested that foreign services be licensed by the CRTC. I should point out that no Canadian laws requiring licensing can apply outside Canada. If she were to achieve this objective, Canadian cable operators would be forced to drop all their U.S. signals or to ask foreign broadcasters to set up shell Canadian companies for the purpose of holding a licence. I do not believe that Canadians would find such a proposal acceptable.

There are many charges to the Canadian broadcasting system in this bill to reflect Canada and its regions to national and regional audiences by serving the special needs of the region. Our national broadcaster, the CBC, is mandated to serve the needs of our official language minorities and to reflect the multicultural nature of Canada. That, I submit, enhances our Canadianism. As a matter of fact, we on the government side accepted an amendment from the opposition which even broadened that definition to include the multiracial aspect of our society, which is an important consideration when one considers the fact that we are dealing in large measure with television.

I would also like to mention a couple of points that are included in this bill to which the hon. member has not referred, and neither of the opposition critics have referred to this so far.

First, the private right of action for theft of signal is a very important aspect of this bill and something for which the industry has been craving and, indeed, those outside the industry have as well. I have in my hand an ad from the Hinton Parklander of July 30, 1990. The ad reads: "Farmers, ranchers and acreage owners; Live out of town? No cable TV? The home cable network invites you to a preview of rural satellite television. One hundred and fifty channels for $79.99 a month for equipment only. An open house will be held at the Hinton Legion conference room. Eight music video channels, 30 sports channels, 21 movie channels".

Many of these services that are being openly advertised are not available in Canada legally because the owners of those signals did not intend that they would be distributed in Canada except under proper business arrangements. This bill will provide a private right-of-action for the owners of those signals as it would for any Canadian owner of any signals for the unauthorized distribution, not the unlicensed, but the unauthorized distribution of those signals.

I also want to point out and to give reassurance to those members who have condominiums in their ridings that this bill does give the CRTC the option of declining to license a condominium operator of a system provided that that operator, in the CRTC's judgment, is playing within the rules of the Canadian broadcasting system.

The hon. Minister of State for Housing and other members, including the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine, have drawn to my attention the concerns of condominium operators in the metro Toronto area, those who live at 75 Graydon Hall in Don Valley East and those who live elsewhere in that area. I want to give them my assurance that, to the best of my knowledge, most of these operators are now playing within the spirit of the Canadian system and there will be no need for the heavy hand of the law to come down upon them.

If, on the other hand, they are starting to do the kind of thing that is being promoted in Hinton by satellite operators, obviously, they then become those who are playing outside the rules of the Canadian system and the powers will be there within this bill to act upon it.

Mrs. Finestone: Isn't that the matter we have heard before?

Mr. Edwards: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker, the individual who appeared before us.

I would like to go quickly to some of the points made by my hon. friend from Mount Royal on the issue of they who hear decide. I understand her concern, but from discussions I have had with those inside and outside the CRTC, I am satisfied that not only the chairman of the commission but others within the commission now feel that the system can be made to work well as it is drafted now. The hon. member for Mount Royal was concerned about the cumulative effect of they who hear decide and the setting up of the regional commissioners. I believe her concern would be Balkanization.

On the surface there may be some cause for concern, but I believe that those within the CRTC and certainly those in government who would, after all, have the power to give some direction under this bill to the CRTC are determined to see that there will be consistency of decision-making but on the other hand that there will be the undoubted benefits of regional application and considerations when decisions are made.

We are committed to the unity of this country, but we also I think arrive at that unity through a sense of being treated fairly across the country. Fairness I believe has one of its roots in the opportunity to assess fairly, to judge sensitively local conditions and to apply consistent national policies in a regionally sensitive way.

The hon. member for Mount Royal was concerned about what she called the dual powers and advocated the removal of the cabinet review power while maintaining the power of direction. I do not think it is necessarily appropriate to rub in the fact that the hon. member did support the dual power when she served on the standing committee. But as she has said, circumstances change and re-evaluations occur. I take it that she has re-evaluated her position in this regard.

I would go back to what I quoted Mr. Spicer as saying, that there will be a slightly shorter leash, but the commission will have much longer teeth. I think that just about says it all.

The hon. member for Mount Royal suggested that the CBC's central position is removed from the broadcasting system. I am sorry that I fail to understand just what she is driving at. The CBC remains the public instrument of broadcasting in the country and whatever one may say about budget allocations and so on, I would point out that the most severe budget cuts ever in the history of the CBC occurred in the year 1982. In fact in real dollar terms since 1984, the CBC budget has been maintained on a slightly increasing basis each year.

Whatever one may say about that, I believe that the CBC's central position in the system is maintained and, in fact, the CBC has recently been showing some rather creative solutions to the problems that beset their system. I believe that once the position of Mr. Patrick Watson is legitimized through the passage of this bill that we will see a flourishing of the CBC. I have great faith in that individual as the chairman designate of the corporation and, indeed, in the president of the company, Mr. Veilleux, as well as in the board itself.

Mr. Speaker, referring to the question of the CBC committees of the board, I know that the hon. member for Mount Royal finds that as problematic as any aspect, including the national unity issue. But I would say to her once more, and I have said it many times, look at it as a creative exercise. Look at it as an opportunity to bridge the two solitudes which I know she and I agree desperately need to be bridged.

Finally, on the question of national unity, we cannot have unity in this country until we have a shared sense of national consciousness and identity. When I made my remark about South Africa—and by the way I have written to the South African ambassador saying that the use of the word totalitarian in describing South Africa is inappropriate because it is a multi-party state—the point that I was making is that a broadcasting system should never be a propaganda instrument of the state or have the least opportunity to be used or have used as such whether it has been or has not been.

I find that there are distinguished broadcasters in this country, including Mr. Spicer, who can give you arguments that this clause ought to be changed and that national unity does not belong in the CBC's mandate. This is based on his experience with Radio-Canada in the 1970s and we must go to basics and have national consciousness and the promotion of that identity as the fundamental basis of the CBC's mandate. Mr. Speaker, I, as an Albertan and as a proud Canadian, am comfortable with that.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say how much I appreciated the remarks of the hon. parliamentary secretary. I can say, with deep sincerity, that he is a gentleman to the core and that our dealings with him were always most pleasant. However, we are here to transact some very hard political business.

I have a couple of questions for the hon. parliamentary secretary but, first, I want to deliver to him, if he does not already know, some news. This is news to this House and news to the viewers from coast to coast. The news is this: the CBC is about to be savaged by another round of horrible cuts. As I speak, press reports are circulating that the CBC may undergo, and it will be announced tomorrow, cuts to the tune of $100 million. I am told by sources that the president of the CBC was on the phone all day, speaking to regional directors across the country. The president will be making a formal announcement tomorrow at a news conference. I am told that perhaps up to 10 CBC regional stations will have to be closed as a result of these savage cuts. According to the CBC's all news channel, some of the other regional stations will be turned into mere store-front operations. That is the magnitude of these cuts that are to be announced tomorrow.

Mr. Nunziata: It is $200 million, John.

Mr. Harvard: Now I am told by one of my colleagues that it could be $200 million. One hundred million dollars is horrible, $200 million is, in my mind, absolutely unthinkable.

According to what I have been told, maybe all of Radio Canada International will be chucked or at least a portion of it will be. I am also told that the CBC is almost bound to get out of the parliamentary service. The parliamentary service may be continued on by the hon. Mr. Speaker, but what I am told is that the CBC will be getting out of the parliamentary service.

I am told that if I live in a province with two CBC outlets, and I think of provinces like Ontario and Quebec, the hon. parliamentary secretary's own province of Alberta, and the province of Saskatchewan, four Canadian provinces which each have two CBC outlets, I am not going to be very comfortable because, from what I understand, there is going to be some kind of rejigging of the operations, a so-called rationalization that will devastate at least one of the operations in each of those four provinces.

As I lead up to my question to the parliamentary secretary, let me say this: I find it to be a cruel irony that, on the very day that the hon. Minister of Communications stands in his place and talks about strengthening the CBC, in a week when this House of Commons is on the verge of passing a broadcasting bill that is there ostensibly to strengthen broadcasting in the country, we are told that the CBC is going to suffer another round of savage cuts. That is an affront to every CBC-loving person in this country and there are millions; it is an affront to this magnificent institution that has made this country so great.

Ever since this government assumed power in 1984, it has made it a national pastime, a habit, that every time it touches one of our treasured national institutions, to demean those institutions, to diminish those institutions.

• (1930)

Do those people opposite find nothing sacred about this country any more? Is there nothing sacred about our institutions? Shame on all of them. Now that I have said that, I want to know: Are all these reports true?

The parliamentary secretary is in the upper echelons of government. I think it behoves him to answer these questions now.

Mr. Edwards: For a moment there, Mr. Speaker, I thought it must be 2.15 in the afternoon and that the hon. member had a rare opportunity to pose a question in Question Period, which is the proper spot for this question to be posed.

However, he raises some serious questions, and I will endeavour to answer them. I think it was significant that he said that the president of the CBC was to make some announcement tomorrow. If the president of the CBC is making the announcement, obviously he is talking about a CBC decision. I think the CBC, being an arm's length institution which we all want to preserve, should be best positioned—

An hon. member: He is with Treasury Board.

Mr. Edwards: No, he is no longer with the Treasury Board. He is president of the CBC.

I do not feel it is appropriate to comment on some speculative reports that may be on the air, in some newspaper, or wherever the hon. member has heard them.

There was an announcement before the standing committee the other day by the president of the CBC with reference to the parliamentary channel. I believe that what Mr. Veilleux said at that time was in line with recommendations by the Caplan-Sauvageau task force, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as well as the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, and the McGrath committee. They all recommended at one time or another over a period of about five years that a more comprehensive parliamentary service should be provided and that the cost of providing such a service, including distribution, should be borne by the House of Commons. Except for minor changes in the CBC's packaging of the House of Commons service, no action has been taken on those recommendations over the five years.

Apparently, from the announcement that the president of the CBC made, the corporation is willing to continue providing distribution of the House of Commons service, but to do so would require Parliament to pay all costs, the same way it pays for Hansard. In today's day and age, it is probably appropriate that it be done that way.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the parliamentary secretary, in light of the fact that he was out of the country, to know that that question was asked in the House yesterday morning. The minister, in response to my question as to whether or not the House of Commons would handle the parliamentary channel through its parliamentary appropriations, made an unequivocal answer. The answer was no.

As he continues to speak, I want him at least to be up to date with the information that has been given to this House in that regard.

Mr. Edwards: I am grateful for that piece of information, Mr. Speaker, but I think my answer would remain the same, my response on the issue of the parliamentary channel.

If the CBC has made this decision with reference to the parliamentary channel—and I understand it has—then it is up to the House of Commons and the Speaker to decide what to do about it. It would be inappropriate for me to suggest to you, Sir, sitting in that chair, what the appropriate course of action would be. It is up to us on both sides as members of the House, with the assistance of the Speaker and through his wise judgment, to arrive at these decisions.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue this question on the parliamentary channel just a bit further.

As we speak, Canadians have the opportunity from one coast to the other and in the north as well, as I understand it, to watch the proceedings of Parliament live.

We on this side of the House consider it essential that Canadians continue to have the opportunity to watch democracy in action live, not that it makes for great television, but it permits constituents to view first-hand what is going on in the House of Commons.

His minister has unequivocally stated that the government would not subsidize or pay for this particular parliamentary channel. I would like to ask the hon. member, as parliamentary secretary to the minister, whether he considers it essential that this service continue to be provided. If so, is he prepared to speak to his minister and to the government to urge them to provide the necessary resources? He seems to be passing the buck, Mr. Speaker, to you and to the House, as if the Speaker has some oil well in the back of Parliament or some vault full of money. Ultimately, the taxpayers will have to pay for it.

Can the member indicate whether he is prepared to urge his minister and the rest of the ministers to provide the necessary resources to the CBC, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to continue this very essential service?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the CBC does not want to continue to provide this service. It is clear that the position of the CBC has been for some time that the service ought to be in the hands of the House of Commons where it properly resides. Therefore I stand by my earlier statement that it is an appropriate decision for the House of Commons to make as to whether it wants to come up with the funds to provide the service.

The hon. member asked what my view was. My view is yes, this is a very worth-while service and it ought to continue. However, to ask the Department of Communications to cough up $4.5 million at this time to provide the service is perhaps inappropriate. It is really a decision of the House of Commons. For the Department of Communications to finance it, I think, would be an inappropriate exercise by the government of control over the affairs of the House of Commons.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to take part in third reading debate in the House of Commons tonight. It gives me an opportunity to place some of my thoughts on the record. I must say that I have expressed some of these thoughts in earlier debates, but I hope they are worth repeating.

Bill C-40 has undergone a long examination. There have been many debates. However, despite the fact that we have just heard from the hon. parliamentary secretary and despite the fact that we heard from the Minister of Communications earlier this day, there has been very little Conservative participation in debates on this bill.

To give some idea of how scarce and how sparse Tory participation has been in the debate, I want to remind you that yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we had six hours of debate. On many occasions we had some worth-while questions. Not one Conservative, including the Minister of Communications, stood in his or her place and responded either to questions or gave some of their thoughts or gave any support to the bill. I find that kind of non-performance—and that is what it is, a non-performance—rather disgusting.

If the Tories are proud of this bill—and when they do speak they claim that it is a good bill, that it is good legislation—I find it rather strange that they do not come forward and speak in defence of it.

Normally it is for us on this side of the House to say a few things positive about the bill, particularly at third reading stage. However, when the Tories refused to rise in their places and say anything about this bill, apart from a few exceptions, it made it even more difficult for us to come out and say something good about the bill.

• (1940)

There are some good things about the bill. It has been already stated that women, children, cultural minorities, aboriginal peoples, and the disabled have all been cited in this legislation. That is good. That is positive. I hope something very good comes of it.

My esteemed colleague for Mount Royal in Montreal has examined this bill in minute detail. She has done an outstanding job. She has absolutely no peer. There is no one who knows this bill like the member for Mount Royal.

I do not want to cover much of the ground that she has covered. However, I do want to spend some time on this matter of national unity as it relates to broadcasting in general and to this bill in particular. I want to do so because broadcasting is and can be a very powerful force for national unity. I really feel that this government does not understand that. It just does not understand the kind of instrument for national unity broadcasting can be.

If the government really understood about broadcasting and national unity, would it take away the national unity mandate from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? I think not. If the government had understood the linkage between broadcasting and national unity, would the government have gone ahead and divided the CBC board of directors into two standing committees: one for English and one for French? I think not. If the government really understood the kind of force broadcasting can be for national unity, would the government in this legislation, in this bill, attempt to balkanize and regionalize the CRTC? I think not.

I want to talk about broadcasting in general and television in particular, especially the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, because it really forms the very foundation and the fulcrum of broadcasting in this country.

The power of television goes well beyond providing information. I am talking about the kind of information that we pick up on newscasts. Television does a very good job of imparting information. I am a great fan, for example, of The National on the CBC.

However, television goes well beyond that. It does a very good job, if it is given the opportunity, of really getting inside the psyche of this country, the psyche of Canadians and of reaching into what I would call the deepest recesses of our emotions, thoughts and imaginations. Television is good at reflecting Canadian culture in all its forms, in all its multiculturalism. It is very good at reflecting our values. It does a super job of showing our sorrows and joys, our loves and hates, our strengths and weaknesses, our disputes and agreements, our divisions and ties. I could go on. Television really does a good job of telling the story of the Canadian family, and I am talking about a family of over 26 million people.

If given the opportunity and the proper supports of government, television can do a much better job. What happens if we support television, especially the CBC, and we go out of our way, in particular, to support Canadian productions, drama, music, dance programs, and the like? I think if we do that it naturally follows that national unity will be strengthened. We are going through another what one might call constitutional spasm, a constitutional trauma, which we seem to go through about every 10 or 15 years in this country. I think it is partly because we do not know enough of each other and this is where broadcasting and, television in particular can help.

Let me raise some questions: Do we really know what eats away at those people in the province of Quebec who embrace what we call nationalism, who some would would call separatists? Do we really know the aches and pains of prairie farmers, particularly the current aches and pains? Do we know what goes on in the minds and the hearts of fishermen on the east coast or the west coast? What do we know about miners in Alberta and British Columbia, woodworkers in Northern Ontario, single mothers in Toronto? I could go on and on.

Television should be given the opportunity, particularly television drama because I recognize there are severe limitations to information programming. I think government support is paramount in this area. If television is given the opportunity, we will get those inside glimpses of the Canadian family.

How can television do the job? It can do the job if we give it the proper supports. it cannot do it if we continually cut supports to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I spoke earlier about the news reports that are circulating tonight. I was told about an hour ago that the cuts would be in the neighbourhood of $100 million and now I am told they are around $200 million. I only hope that those news accounts are wrong, because the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will be absolutely devastated if $200 million is cut. It seems that the government just does not understand that the CBC is really an investment in Canadian unity. Yet, the government takes away the national unity mandate.

I respect the hon. parliamentary secretary because I take him as very sincere, but when he expresses this concern about the national unity mandate of the CBC somehow turning it into a propaganda machine, I find that just absurd. I find it difficult that the hon. parliamentary secretary, whom I respect, can even say that kind of thing.

If you ask the CBC to be this national unity instrument, you are not telling news editors and news directors to somehow warp the news, you are not asking these people who write the news to manufacture good, happy stories about the CBC. You are not doing that at all.

It seems to me that assigning a national unity mandate to the CBC is, first, recognizing that a public broadcasting system like the CBC can be a force for national unity and, that being the case, we must make resources available to it. In turn, this gives the CBC more clout. With such a national unity mandate the president or chairman of CBC could tell the government politicians that they cannot have it both ways. They cannot ask us to be a force for national unity and, at the same time, cut the legs from under us. You cannot do it. It is not consistent. If we are right in saying that broadcasting can be this instrument for national unity, how could the government, in am arm's length relationship, starve the corporation to the tune of say $200 million? I do not think it is possible.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): They want to kill it, John.

Mr. Harvard: Yes. One of my colleagues says that this government wants to kill the CBC and I, unfortunately, have to come to that conclusion. It certainly would be consistent with this government's behaviour because the CBC would not be the only institution that this government has harmed.

Taking away the national unity mandate is a serious mistake and it certainly sends out wrong signals to certain groups and individuals in this country who would be more than happy to see the country broken up.

When we talk about national unity and the government's role in that, we are not only talking about removing the national unity mandate from the CBC, we are also talking about the splitting of the CBC Board of Directors into two committees, one for the French language and one for the English language. The hon. parliamentary secretary spoke earlier about it.

Surely we must have one public broadcasting system that serves what is called the two solitudes in this country. Surely we must have a public broadcasting system that straddles the two solitudes but, somewhere at the top comes together under a board of directors, under a chairman or under a president who make the decisions for both French and English. Yet, you can be almost sure as God made little green apples that if the government goes ahead with these two committees, as it will, it will drive a wedge through the CBC. The two language groups will be driven farther and farther apart. I just cannot understand why the government cannot understand that. I believe it is the beginning of the end of the CBC as we know it and it is the beginning of two separate networks.

We have Radio–Canada right now and we have the English service, but they are really one because they come together at the top. I think the two committee system is the precedent that will result eventually in the two arms going separate ways, that these two arms of the CBC will eventually become separate broadcast arms and never the twain shall meet.

As I talk about this national unity matter as it relates to broadcasting, I also have to be concerned about the balkanization or the regionalization of the CRTC.

I listened to the hon. Minister for Communications this afternoon and, again, I take him sincerely. He talks about setting up panels. He who hears decides. He talks about increasing the regional sensitivity. I can understand that from one perspective; that if you have, for example, a panel that serves only Ontario or British Columbia, there is no doubt that in their own narrow parochial way, not in a denigrating way, they will know their region and they will become very sensitive to that. That is fine in itself, but what about the bigger picture? Who is going to be concerned about all of the country? Who is going to be concerned about what I call the pan-Canadian view of the country?

I know it was already pointed out and the hon. Minister for Communications mentioned this afternoon that under the legislation the panels will be charged with the responsibility of consulting the full body of the CRTC. Somehow or other, through consultation, each panel will have this national view. So there will not be an inconsistency between a panel that is rendering decisions on matters relating to Quebec and a panel rendering decisions for British Columbia. I asked the question, Mr. Speaker. The legislation is not clear as to how they will consult, or how someone is forced to consult. What is consultation? Does consultation mean picking up the phone and saying "Hey, Joe, we have this matter down in Toronto. This is how it is going to go. What do you think of that? Good, wonderful, thank you". End of speech, end of conversation, end of consultation. I am perhaps a little sardonic in my description but I think my point is made. The legislation does not really define consultation.

Let me just finish by saying—and again I want to paraphrase the Minister for Communications— that the essence of broadcasting is programming and that the rest is really housekeeping. He is right. Mr. Speaker, you are a former broadcaster. The hon. parliamentary secretary is a former broadcaster. We know if you take programming out of broadcasting, you have nothing left.

It seems to me that what this bill fails to do is to address the very essence of broadcasting, which is programming. I think it does address the matter of housekeeping. I hope I am wrong. I would really like to see a proliferation of Canadian programming. We know that we are in a sea of American programming. We know that in many cases Canadian broadcasters, at least those on the private side, would find it financially impossible to continue without American programming. If we are going to have the kind of broadcast system of which we can be proud, one that will truly serve this country, and when you serve the country you serve national unity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired. But just like a true professional broadcaster, you brought it right up to the second.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see you in the chair tonight. I know you will listen attentively to the debate because you have a very deep concern about the issue at hand.

I want to add a few remarks to the comments made by my hon. colleague from Winnipeg. My hon. colleague and I have discussed this many times and we are of a like mind. I think his views tonight represent the views of someone that not only has been in the broadcast industry with CBC but a view from a Canadian who understands the role of the CBC and national unity.

One of the things I am really concerned about is the loss of the mandate by the CBC under Bill C-40 to promote national unity in this country. I have heard some members opposite, and I think the hon. parliamentary secretary inferred that this was a dangerous clause because it could lead to propaganda. I do not think that anything a Crown corporation or a public corporation can do to foster greater understanding between Canadians, no matter where they live in this country, should ever be considered propaganda. It is necessary education so that the tolerance we used to have as Canadians can return and grow and foster.

My hon. colleague from Winnipeg, in all of his speeches has certainly underlined that. He showed the bankruptcy of ideas of the government opposite and particularly the minister opposite, who I challenged the other night to stand up after I spoke and give a rousing speech about national unity, about Canada, because I could not find any other reason why a minister of the Crown would tamper with a clause that was benign, that was doing no harm and actually was doing a lot of good in the country.

Everyone knows that, when I get up to speak, I say I am from Atlantic Canada. I do that because I am proud of the fact that I am from Atlantic Canada.

There is something wrong here. The news that we have heard—and the rumours are rushing through the halls of Parliament here tonight—is that there are going to be major cuts in regional services to the CBC. I heard out in the lobby, and it is probably good conjecture, that there could be four stations closed down in Atlantic Canada.

I refer back to my colleague's comments about national unity. At the very time that there is a debate going on as to whether or not the country has the wherewithal to stay together, what in the name of goodness is the government trying to perpetrate, when it takes one of the few remaining vestiges of national unity and guts it? What does this mean? It has now used the lever of fiscal control before they brought in Bill C-40? It took the mandate away from the CBC for national unity. Now it is taking the resources away from CBC to perform that very necessary service of trying to represent all of the country.

My hon. colleague also talked about the panels that are being set up because they will be more regionally sensitive. I can tell my hon. colleagues in the Chamber that what I do not need to see on CBC in Atlantic Canada are more shows about Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canadians needs to see CBC shows produced in northern Canada that are run on our national network, the CBC, so that we gain a greater understanding of the problems of the north.

People in western Canada do not necessarily have to become more sensitized to the fact of life of being a western Canadian. What they do need is to produce shows locally in their own stations in some small community where there is a CBC station right now, so that people in Ontario can learn to be tolerant and have a greater understanding of the wonderful diversity that is Canada.

I know that members opposite must be getting calls on this because members on this side are getting calls. I am just absolutely stunned, after the debate that has taken place, that the parliamentary secretary could possibly stand there and say he believes—and I am sure that he does believe—what the Conservatives are doing is in the best interest of the CBC. What they have effectively done is neutered the CBC as a vehicle for national unity.

When I wake up tomorrow I hope that I do not find out that the comments to which my hon. friend alluded earlier, and the rumours that are bouncing off the walls here, that the CBC, because of the budget cuts which have been forced upon it, is going to be shutting down stations from coast to coast in the country.

I hope that those members opposite, who are in a position to change things because they are the majority in this place, have a good solid reflection of what the government through this policy is doing to the country and to the CBC.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, it is marvellous what broadcasters and former broadcasters can do with rumour and, I should add, unfounded rumour.

Ms. Clancy: He's not a broadcaster.

Mr. Edwards: He ought to be one. He is not a humble Liberal.

Very quickly on the question of Conservative participation in debates on this bill, a question raised by my friend from Winnipeg St. James, I should point out that we spent just under 11 hours on clause-by-clause study of the bill. The member was there throughout most of it, if not all of it.

I answered every question that was put to me on behalf of the government. I then found that many of those amendments which I had responded to in full were withdrawn and then reintroduced at report stage. Therefore, I think there has been a very, very full government participation in debate on this bill.

With regard to the question of the national unity issue, I am compelled to quote very briefly from an editorial in The Toronto Star—a newspaper which is not generally favourable to this government—which appeared exactly four weeks after the member for Mount Royal's letter was published on the opinion page. I quote: "A decade ago, CBC president Al Johnson ordered CBC journalists to cover the Quebec referendum debate on sovereignty association as a news story and avoid the role of government propagandist. Johnson's fairness order respected a sound journalistic principle and was heeded. But it plainly disregarded the public broadcasters legal mandate to 'contribute to the development of national unity'."

It goes on: "Opposition Liberal critic, Sheila Finestone, has argued forcefully that it is wrong to drop the clause when Canada's future is in doubt, but she's mistaken. Canada doesn't need a cheerleader CBC. What it does need is a CBC with enough independence to tell the truth and a government with a thick enough hide to let it be told."

On the issue of the CBC's standing committees of the board, I wish members opposite would stop using the expression, "splitting the board". What is proposed is a unifying mechanism with standing committees of the board, on which the president and the chairman would serve. That is the bridging. Those are standing committees only.

On the issue of "he who hears decides", I feel compelled to point out to my hon. friend that the bill specifically requires that members of panels consult with the commission for the purpose of ensuring consistent interpretations of broadcasting policy and regulations. This will enable panels to avoid inconsistent decision making.

The chairman selects panel members and could decide that issues of national significance, such as network licences, would be decided by a very large panel, representing the commission as a whole. Decisions affecting regulations and over-all policy matters would continue to be made by the whole commission. That should allay the concerns about Balkanization.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, at long last, I am pleased to participate in this third and final reading of Bill C-40, a major and welcome overhaul of the 1968 Broadcasting Act.

As a broadcast journalist with more than 20 years experience before I jumped from the third floor parliamentary press gallery to the floor of the House of Commons in 1978, I have listened with great care to the thoughtful contributions of my friends opposite during report stage of this debate. Indeed, sometimes I thought their interminable interventions got a might repetitive, but hon. members of both opposition parties hammered home their points with passion and eloquence.

I particularly want to pay tribute to the hon. member for Mount Royal—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): —and her cohort, the hon. member for Winnipeg St. James, and to the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam, for their commitment to the preservation and strengthening of a distinctive Canadian broadcasting system.

Indeed, more and better Canadian programming designed to enrich Canadian life and, above all, to safeguard our precious Canadian identity is a goal we all share, regardless of party affiliation in the House.

No one, Sir, epitomizes the true spirit of the Canadian identity from both founding cultures' point of view than the minister in whose name this bill will soon become law, my friend, the distinguished hon. member for Frontenac. I am sure, as others have done, he would allow me to pay particular attention to the yeoman efforts of his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Edmonton Southwest, who laboured for months in committee and in the House to help fine-tune Bill C-40 to the flexible state it is in now and to pilot this piece of legislation to its worth-while conclusion.

Like others who have spoken in this debate, I could wax enthusiastic about all of the positive aspects of Bill C-40 which I consider to be tremendous improvements over the 1968 Broadcasting Act. We have here measures designed to bring both public and private players in the broadcasting system into line with the challenging new technological realities of the 1990s. There are measures here to portray more accurately the multicultural nature of our society and to enshrine in the legislation for the first time programming priorities for aboriginal peoples, the disabled, women, children, and cultural minorities.

Above all, I applaud the thrust of this bill to move the CBC toward more distinctively Canadian programming and especially measures to strengthen the CBC's management structure and financial accountability to Parliament. For obvious reasons, Sir, I am delighted that this bill guarantees the journalistic freedoms and artistic independence of the CBC.

There is so much good stuff in this new Broadcasting Act that time will not permit me to dwell at length on the merits which the Minister of Communications and others have so eloquently set forth in this debate.

Rather, as one of the final speakers on this third and final reading, I would like to take an overview of one fundamental and recurring theme throughout these many days of discussion about the Canadian broadcasting industry, namely the very real need to preserve a distinct Canadian program identity. When I say overview, I mean that literally.

I heard expressed many times, both in committee and privately, the hope that this 1990 version of the Broadcasting Act will serve Canadians for the next 20 years as well as the 1968 act did.

Well, in one key respect, I am deeply concerned that this act could last until about 1993. The overview I was referring to will be whoever owns and operates the satellite over the skies of North America. From the television standpoint, in a worst-case scenario, direct satellite-to-home broadcasting over 108 channels, such as that proposed by Rupert Murdoch and his consortium, could render the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission obsolete.

The 60 per cent Canadian content regulations, 50 per cent in prime time between 6 p.m. and midnight, could be meaningless. There is no way in the world any number of CRTC commissioners can regulate a Canadian broadcasting system in that environment, with every kind of high-definition programming in the world, covering every time zone you can imagine, available in high-definition television on a direct satellite-to-home basis, simply by buying a dish—a dish the size of your handkerchief—sticking it in your kitchen window. One can see the monumental challenge that this represents to this Parliament and, indeed, to the very soul of the Canadian broadcasting industry.

The 1993 doomsday scenario is the worst one, although I fear, not unrealistic. Let me back up for a moment and suggest that one of the most valuable features of this bill is the far greater flexibility that it endows to the regulatory authority in giving the CRTC more tools and more mobility to cope with this technology from the sky.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, as a former broadcaster and, more immediately, the spouse of a Canadian recording artist, I am keenly aware of the need for keeping the regulatory authority to protect and strengthen our Canadian broadcasting system.

Let me add parenthetically that, while any discussion about broadcasting invariably focuses on television because of its immediacy and its importance, let us not forget that radio is an integral part of our lives. Canadian radio, both public and private, is unquestionably the best in the world and radio serves Canadians well thanks to the vigilance of the CRTC. May the commission continue to ensure that the widest possible number of choices for Canadian listeners is maintained and the distinctive Canadian identity in radio, along with a viable Canadian recording industry, be central to the CRTC's mandate. Our AM and FM programming is too precious to be swallowed up in the profusion of American and other international signals.

Canadian television, however, is a different and potentially more devastating story. It is a serious issue, this survival of a distinctive Canadian television broadcasting system. In my view it is the greatest challenge of Bill C-40 and, ultimately, of this Parliament. Trying to ignore the phenomenal pace of technology, trying to believe that the Canadian television broadcasting system can remain hermetically sealed off from what is happening out there, and it is happening fast, is about as realistic as going back to rabbit ears and watching CBC English and French channels, CTV, and Global, and letting the rest of the world go by.

As I see it, there are two realistic options open to this and future Parliaments if a truly distinctive broadcasting system is to survive the tremendous competition, and this Bill C-40 touches on both of them. The first imperative is that Parliament will have the power to give policy direction to the CRTC for the first time. This is so important, particularly since cable television is now formally recognized in this legislation.

The bill will permit Canadian cable television operators to create programming services but now the CRTC can require the priority of carriage of local Canadian television services. This is a key step toward combating all that U.S. programming up in the sky. Once the entire country is cabled, then Parliament will have the power to see that our homegrown, Canadian programming is protected to the maximum extent possible. I realize that cabling this whole, far-flung nation, from sea to sea to sea, especially in the outer regions, is a long-term proposition. But it is not beyond the range of possibility to see the vast majority of Canadians reached by cable and that capability is already going ahead by leaps and bounds, even in beautiful downtown Hinton, Alberta.

In the meantime, we still have a chance to compete in this new world of sky channels on a level playing field. As Canada cannot ignore participating in an interdependent trading world, and we go it alone at our peril, so Canadian broadcasters cannot avoid the inevitability of having our product viewed around the world and, indeed, that is a highly desirable goal. Here again, Bill C–40, formally foresees this prospect in one of the most significant provisions. The bill gives the CRTC power to set up an incentive system to encourage broadcasters to produce more high–quality Canadian programming.

Every private broadcaster I know has his or her heart in the right place when it comes to wanting to preserve and promote a distinctive Canadian broadcasting system, but a Canadian programming strategy has to be rooted in sound economics as well as profound conviction. Any Canadian broadcaster I know would surely prefer our Canadian programming to be watched by 300 million viewers in preference to three million. Well, it can be done.

I have not got the time, in the few minutes remaining to me, to go into detail but I can see the very real prospect of a flexibly–minded CRTC allowing Canadian broadcasters to invest, say 20 per cent or 33 per cent, in European television; there would, of course, have to be some ceiling; and they may be able to invest in our system too. It could be a very positive way for the regulatory authority to use its loosely–worded incentive system to tremendous advantage, to allow a good deal of Canadian broadcasting to be profitably seen in Europe and elsewhere around the world. Because, in the short run, the only way to safeguard our distinctive Canadian programming identity is to make it good enough so that Canadians will want to watch it and others, around the world, will want to buy it, Canadian broadcasters want to produce more, first–class and relevant Canadian programming. With proper funding, they can do it better and better and better; we know that. Given the proper financial environment, we Canadians can turn out a product which can compete with anything the world can fling at us. This is our challenge and Bill C–40 is, in many ways, an important step toward reaching it.

The industry wants this bill. It knows and we know and heaven knows the hon. members opposite know that it is not perfect but it is a start. Officially, as of the vote tomorrow, Bill C–40 will be in place as a piece of legislation from which the industry can base its activities. The Broadcasting Act sets objectives, guidelines, and the rules of the system. It is up to the players themselves, the broadcasters, distribution services, producers, consumers, and it is up to the CRTC and, above all, it is up to Parliament itself to make sure that this Broadcasting Act works in the name of a truly viable, Canadian broadcasting system. It may be that we only have two years to do it.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am really pleased to rise to pre–empt my question with a number of concerns I have about this broadcasting legislation, Bill C–40.

On February 22, 1990, the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation stated, after a $600,000 cut was announced, that the $600,000 cut will have an immediate and devastating impact on Canada's leading aboriginal television network. It went on to say that some of the best aboriginal producers and journalists in Canada will be victims of this budget.

There is no where else for them to go. I think, with the rumoured $200 million cut for CBC—even if it is $100 million—the impact will be equally devastating. There is a lot of competition with regard to the opportunities that exist in the CBC.

For people who have numerous years of experience, the aboriginal producers and journalists are relatively new to this game. They are few in numbers. As we all know, many of the aboriginal people who are employed in the public services and in central agencies or corporations are small in number. They are very small and are grossly under–represented.

Having said that, I want to know how it is that if the hon. member across the way believes in the level playing field, he can support a bill that essentially gives no legislative reference for CBC northern services and that gives no legislative reference or base for use of aboriginal languages.

Is it that the government would be encouraging CBC to review and look at the viability of broadcasting in aboriginal languages, even in areas where there are many unilingual individuals who depend on that service in their own language? How is it that an individual who has as much pride in Canada as I do—his identity as a Canadian is very important—the member opposite, can support not having an amendment in there for CBC's contribution to the development of national unity?

I just feel that this is morally indefensible. It does not speak well for a government that should be supporting a mandate for CBC northern service. Every single job in the north is important. We are in an area with one of the highest unemployment rates. People who train in journalism in the north are very employable. They do an excellent job in the areas that they are employed in.

The majority of those people who get training in the north are aboriginal people. How is it that they can call this a level playing field? How is it that they can justify and morally defend a broadcasting act that basically negates a legislative base for CBC northern service, the use of aboriginal languages and also the development of national unity?

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Western Arctic for her very sincerely put question.

I just point out that the last time I looked at this new broadcasting bill, Bill C–40, I saw for the very first time that aboriginal language rights and programming is recognized for the very first time in a broadcasting act.

One of the significant guidelines to the CRTC through Bill C–40 is by way of policy directive through the commission to give absolute priority to aboriginal programming rights, particularly in northern Canada. I think that this itself is testimony to the far greater importance that this Parliament and all future Parliaments must place on aboriginal peoples and programming rights.

I sense a whole new thrust here, through Bill C–40, toward preservation of Canadian programming and nothing could be more Canadian than the aboriginal rights and languages of which the hon. member speaks so eloquently.

I think the parliamentary secretary covered this point very effectively, on the national unity aspect of Bill C–40. Many motions were defeated in the committee to include and incorporate the words "national unity". The phrase was deliberately removed from the CBC's mandate in this bill based on recommendations from the Caplan–Sauvageau Task Force and the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Both concurred that the phrase national unity implied a political bias which was inappropriate to a public broadcaster.

Again, let me just assure the hon. member for Western Arctic that the whole purpose of Bill C–40 is to do the very best we can. It is not perfect. Nobody is suggesting that this bill covers all bases and that it cannot be subject to amendment down the road, as a government or the CRTC itself sees fit, but let me just reassure her that the whole thrust of this bill is to preserve and protect a distinctive Canadian cultural identity and that, first and foremost, includes the aboriginal languages and peoples of which the hon. member speaks so proudly and represents so significantly in this House.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I put this question to the hon. member for Hamilton—Wentworth whose speech I admired and whose contribution to this whole process I have admired since the days when he was a journalist and, beyond that, to opposition critic and later parliamentary secretary for Communications. I know he still has his ear to the ground and it is a very well tuned ear. Is he aware that not only are there no CBC budget cuts contemplated by the Government of Canada, but that the Government of Canada will be putting some funds into the CBC and that that will be part of the announcement to be made by the President of the CBC tomorrow.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): I thank the hon. parliamentary secretary for his question. I have been locked into the House of Commons all this afternoon and this evening and, like the parliamentary secretary, any rumoured cuts to the CBC, I believe, should be more appropriately dealt with by the President of the CBC when they hold their formal announcements tomorrow.

I am a fan of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and I regret, as we all do, cuts when they have to come to this magnificent symbol of national importance and national unity in Canada, but cuts may have to come. They have come and gone over the years, the CBC has still survived and I have no doubt that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will survive as one of the finest corporations in the world. I applaud whatever the CBC can do and I know it will survive, cuts or no cuts.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): I compliment the hon. member for Hamilton—Wentworth on his sentiment. I just wish that I could believe that it will be followed through. I, too, am a long-time fan of the CBC, but I have great fear for its future. I also say to both the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Hamilton—Wentworth, if the hon. member for Hamilton—Wentworth has his ear to the ground, his shoulder to the wheel and his nose to the grindstone, he may soon need the services of the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier who, as you know, is a chiropractor. I want to talk about my sorrow at this bill and the fact that this debate is winding to its close on an issue of such incredible importance to all Canadians.

I have spoken several times on this bill, at the amendment stage, at second reading, and so on. I keep coming back to the question of the national unity mandate in the Broadcasting Act and national unity as a mandate for the CBC.

The first example that comes to mind is the question of two standing committees of the board of directors of the CBC: one in French and one in English. Why? With all of the difficulties we are experiencing in this country in understanding each other, why should our government legislate to make that understanding even more difficult? Why are we institutionalizing a particularly Canadian kind of apartheid within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and doing it at the behest of government? It is insanity. It is unacceptable, and Canadians do not want to see it.

The kind of cutbacks that we are looking at can result in the cancellation of the parliamentary channel. The cutbacks that are being reported by Newsworld, the cutbacks that are being reported by The World at Six—

Mr. Edwards: That is false.

Ms. Clancy: False, you tell me they are false? Perhaps the hon. parliamentary secretary can stand in this House and tell me that Radio Canada International is safe. Perhaps he can tell me that the parliamentary channel is safe and, most particularly, perhaps he can tell me that regional stations such as Charlottetown, Sydney, Yellowknife, western stations and Inuvik are safe. I do not mean just safe until tomorrow. I do not mean just safe until Christmas Eve or until old Christmas Day in January. This is not some twelfth night safety we are looking at. We want to know that they are safe in some form of perpetuity. Safe is not safe for two weeks. We want to know they are safe. The parliamentary secretary will get his chance. We want to know that they are safe, and I will talk more about the dangers to regional programming.

Ms. Blondin: Blame the CBC.

Ms. Clancy: Yes, blame the CBC. Here we go with the old arm's length again.

According to clause 31(m) of this bill, programming provided by the CBC is supposed to reflect Canada and its regions. We will no doubt hear from the parliamentary secretary during questions and comments. I look forward to that with great alacrity. However, tonight Canadians heard via the CBC, via Newsworld on television and The Word at Six on radio, that there was a very strong rumour that 10 regional stations were going to be cut.

Those of us in the Atlantic have a paranoia about this government. I use the word paranoia perhaps advisedly, because it is a well-known saying in Atlantic Canada that just because you are paranoid does not mean they are not out to get you. We have discovered that, to our sorrow.

Mr. Edwards: Try western Canada.

Ms. Clancy: Western Canada. If the gentleman opposite would care to come and spend some time in Atlantic Canada, he would know what true hardship is. I love western Canada and I greatly admire members from western Canada but, believe me, we can show the problems that government neglect or, God forbid, direct government action against you can do to your economy and to your faith in what government is supposed to do.

I want to talk about what could happen in Atlantic Canada. I will give one example. What if Sydney is cut? Sydney on Cape Breton Island, the home of my ancestors, the place where I first learned to listen to CBC radio as a small child. One of the things that comes out of CBI in Sydney is Celtic programming, part of the regional reflection provided by the CBC. A certain number of hours per week has contributed quite significantly to the Celtic revival on Cape Breton Island. Indeed, more people on Cape Breton speak the Gaelic than speak it in Scotland where it originated. It was carried on by oral tradition down through the generations and then with the help of the CBC and St. Francis Xavier University and the University College of Cape Breton, the language has been revived and brought back.

This is a wonderful reflection of respect for one of the many diverse cultures in this country.

The fact that it happens to be part of my culture is something that makes me feel very good. If CBC in Sydney is cut, what happens to that programming? Somehow I have the feeling that there are not a whole lot of Gaelic speakers floating around Jarvis Street in Toronto who would be prepared to take up the slack.

You may think I am being facetious here, but I am not. Aside from a number of members on this side of the House and even a few members on that side of the House, one of the ways that the Celtic culture has enriched Canadian public life is by producing one of the greatest political leaders in this country, who is currently showing his great political leadership and his tremendous support for the views of the Canadian people. I refer, of course, to the hon. opposition leader in the other place, Senator Allan J. MacEachen.

I am waiting for the parliamentary secretary when he gets his turn to tell me not to worry, that this is not going to happen, that Sydney is safe, that Gander is safe, that all sorts of regional stations are safe. I want to hear this and I will heave a great sigh of relief. Without these regional stations, how will the west understand the Atlantic?

The parliamentary secretary made it clear that he did not quite understand until I explained it to him. How will central Canada understand the regions? Who will speak for Canada in its diversity?

Diversity is not a dirty word. Diversity is a word that reflects our strength. It is not disunity. Two languages and many cultures are not disunity. They are not and do not have to be forces that break us up. They can be forces that bring us together and give us a magnificent cultural resources upon which to draw and with which to educate our children. I resent this deeply, that diversity should be looked upon as something that should then be compartmentalized instead of used to pull us together.

My life has been enriched by the CBC. It was enriched in childhood with programs like Uncle Chichimus—

An hon. member: Chez Helene.

Ms. Clancy: I am going to get to her, but not for a bit yet.

Mr. Edwards: Just Mary Stories.

Ms. Clancy: Just Mary Stories, absolutely. Maggie Muggins and Farmer McGarrity. Did you watch it too? Hidden Pages, with Beth Philanders, that introduced Canadian children to the great classics in English literature. I understand there were comparable programs in Radio-Canada to introduce children to classics in French literature.

On radio, even before the advent of television—I hate to admit that I can remember this, but I can—there was a program Cuckoo Clock House where children again were read to by wonderful actors who made the stories and the richness of our cultural past come alive to us. We hear about Susanna Moodie and we heard about Katherine Partrayal, women who helped build Canada. We heard about the great Entendent in Quebec. We heard about Jeanne Mance on these programs. We heard about Canadian history and that was a force for Canadian unity. I remembered when I was lucky enough to make my first visit to Quebec City in university. I remembered the stories that I had heard on CBC radio about the early days of Quebec being told to me as an anglophone child in one of the other regions of the country, and that made me know that Quebec was a very special part of my country too.

CBC enriched my life because as a small child home from school through snowstorms or through illnesses, I developed my lifelong devotion to news programs, listening in the early 1950s to a great big console radio and hearing the horrific reports from the wars in Korea and Indochina. This gave me and a lot of other people of my generation a life-long commitment to the cause of peace. That came from the CBC as well.

As a teenager I was becoming aware of my country and its differences, watching the various programs that came from different parts of the country, whether it was Land and Sea from the Atlantic, whether it was broadcasts relating to farms and agriculture from the west, whether it was programs relating to different cultural events in the north—not as many as we should have had but enough—whether it was Front Page Challenge or Hockey Night in Canada, it gave you a sense of being Canadian.

The CBC enriched my life when I was a graduate student in the United Kingdom. We would stay up—there were about 10 of us at the London School of Economics in the mid-1970s—to listen to Radio Canada International, because it was our connection to our country, to find out what was going on, to hear the day-to-day news of the country, and to listen to the hockey games. Also, because our friends from other countries came to listen, it gave a certain portrait of our country to others who got a better understanding in the international sense of what it was to be a Canadian.

Earlier the parliamentary secretary mentioned in his comments that Al Johnson in 1980, under the national unity mandate, kept integrity in CBC's journalism and covered the issue of Quebec and the referendum fairly.

This does not surprise me. You do not need to take national unity out of the Broadcasting Act, out of CBC's mandate, to ensure that CBC will cover things fairly. I know the member for Hamilton—Wentworth agrees with that, but the mistake is that you are putting the cart before the horse. You are saying that national unity somehow hampers journalistic integrity. In all the years of the CBC's existence it has not done that. Why should it start doing it now?

Mr. Speaker, you know, I know, and every member of this House knows that no one wants the CBC to slant news. We do not want the CBC to interpret the national unity mandate in its news coverage. The argument that it would do so is specious. It is not fair or worthy of the kind of news coverage CBC radio and television have given us as Canadians over the years. It is not worthy of any member of this House, and I do not think any member of this House truly believes it.

What we are talking about in a national unity mandate has always been handled well within the context of news coverage. What really happens within the context of news coverage on national unity is that the CBC reports events and thoughts of one region of the country to another and back and forth to the centre.

National unity also equals cultural programming in music, drama, and public affairs. It is in effect saying: "Winnipeg, this is what Halifax thinks", "Yellowknife, this is what Shawinigan cares about", "Vancouver, listen to what is irritating St. John's, Newfoundland," and today it is quite a bit.

I resent this evisceration of yet another cornerstone of our nation's infrastructure. I resent the pious mouthings of the government that by breaking down we improve. We have an expression in Nova Scotia that I think the rest of you in this country have heard: "if it ain't broke, don't fix it." Well, CBC ain't broke yet, try as some people have.

Ms. Blondin: It will be.

Ms. Clancy: And Canadians do not want the government to fix it.

The member for Hamilton—Wentworth talked about competition and whether we can compete. I am astounded at this member who is a journalist and has been a journalist whom I have admired and respected and still do for many years. He is certainly much more senior to me. We can compete. We do compete. We compete now, and we compete internationally in every possible facet of the CBC's production. Degrassi High competes. Street Legal competes. CBC news and The Journal compete. Sports coverage competes. The world acknowledges that no one, for example, films and presents ballet better than the CBC.

Ms. Blondin: Or hockey.

Ms. Clancy: Hockey, of course. That goes without saying.

As the member for Hamilton—Wentworth said, CBC radio is the finest in the world. I agree, absolutely. I received what little journalistic experience I have had in training on CBC radio, and it remains one of the fondest memories of my previous existence.

What is this ridiculous contention that we are not competitive, that we need that ghastly phrase which I hope will soon be wiped from the Canadian lexicon, a level playing field. We do not need a level playing field. If we are at the bottom of the hill and they are at the top, we can still get over the top faster than they can. We compete. We do better.

I hate to sound like a Torontonian, but the CBC is truly world-class. Are we to give up our kind of programming for some sort of Bart Armstrong of Arnprior or Roseanne of Rosedale? Is this what you want? Is this what competition means? Good heavens, Mr. Speaker, this cannot be true.

I said before I was going to mention Chez Helene. I have to admit that by the time Chez Helene came on television, I was a little too old for that kind of programming, but I frequently watched it with the children I baby sat, and I watched it later with my godchildren and other younger members of my family.

I think the cancellation of Chez Helene shows a particular tragedy in our Canadian communication and culture experience. Chez Helene was an example of how the CBC could be used for us to speak to each other. What better vehicle to promote national unity than to have small children right across this country start learning communication skills so that they can use those communication skills to talk to each other—the two major language groups in this country.

That is what we need to do, to settle this distemper of our times that we are living in. We need to talk to each other. We need to listen to each other. We need to understand each other's terms of reference. We need to understand each other's hopes and aspirations.

We particularly need to know that they are not very different, that what brings us together is so much stronger than what pulls us apart. What we need to know is that there are institutions that can help us do that. We know, because it has been proven, that the CBC is one of the institutions that has always helped us do that.

This is one of the most important bills that we will see in this House in this session. It goes to the very root and heart of what Canadianism is and it goes to the very root and heart of whether Canadianism is going to grow, thrive and blossom, or whether it is going to wither on the vine.

I do not want to see it wither on the vine. I know you do not, Mr. Speaker. The member for Hamilton—Wentworth does not; the parliamentary secretary does not; my colleagues on both sides of the House do not. We are all here in this Chamber because we want to see our country and its citizens enrich themselves and thrive.

It does that by knowing why we are here and not being afraid to say that national unity is not only something each one of us subscribes to; not only something that each one of us prays for every night; but it is something that we are prepared to look at our national institutions and say, "Yes, you have a mandate to assist and foster national unity for all Canadians from coast to coast to coast".

I hope, Mr. Speaker, in this year of grace 1990, words like that are not said too late. I hope that words like that will not fall on deaf ears.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to hear from our lady of sorrows, the hon. member for Halifax who was lamenting about the damage that could be done to national unity by Bill C-40.

[Translation]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this narrow-minded opinion is the manifestation of a Christian inspired cult.

[English]

That having been said, I think that it is up to the committees of the boards of the CBC. I stress that no one is proposing splitting the boards. I know the hon. member has studied the bill well enough to know that any such committees would be governed according to the bylaws of the corporation, and that they would be participated in by the president and the chairman of the corporation.

• (2050)

I would submit to the hon. member for Halifax that it is in those committees of the boards that we can best put our hopes for a restoration of programs like Chez Helene, or perhaps something more appropriate for today's time.

I was intrigued to listen to the hon. member, who brought back a number of memories of some of my favourite shows. Many of the examples,—with two exceptions—Front Page Challenge and Hockey Night in Canada are programs which have been on the air since 1968.

I picked that year very deliberately, not to get personal about ages here or viewing habits connected with ages, because we all age at roughly the same rate I think, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Clancy: Some of us started earlier.

Mr. Edwards: Some start earlier.

The point is that the programs that my hon. friend referred to have not been on the air since 1968. It was in 1968 that the phrase "national unity" was put in as part of the CBC's mandate. We have not had a flourishing of the kinds of programs that show one of us to another during the run of the Broadcasting Act of 1968.

Obviously it has not been taken seriously by those who would want to unite the country. I put my question to my hon. friend: Is the problem not a lack of access to network time rather than anything else?

That was the finding the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture arrived at when it travelled the country in 1986 and 1987 holding hearings into broadcasting policy and legislation in this country. Would it not be sensible to have another look at the structure of the corporation and how it delivers its programs to see if there is not a better way of serving regional needs, perhaps through satellite to cable networks, showing the regions of the country one to another?

I would like to know whether the hon. member has, for example, examined the West German system where you can indeed, Mr. Speaker, see a regional service in one region and in another region. The common system is an alliance of all the regions. I wonder if the hon. member has examined that and whether she has another model to propose that would better overcome the regionality difficulty that we have.

The issue is not unity, because unity will flow from an understanding of each other. I think we are on the same wave length there. Unity will definitely flow if we understand and appreciate each other. When the Hon. Flora MacDonald, with her Gaelic roots, brought in Bill C–136 she put forward the idea that we should stimulate national consciousness and identity rather than compelling a commitment to national unity.

It was her authorship and not the current minister's authorship that brought about that change. Would she not agree that it is putting the cart before the horse to demand that national unity occur as a precondition when, in fact, you cannot even conceive of unity unless you have an appreciation one of the other.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, actually there are so many questions in the hon. parliamentary secretary's intervention that I am wondering if we can get unanimous consent to give me another 20 minutes. Just kidding.

I certainly will get to his comments and his question, but I also am a little disappointed because I did not hear a denial of the cuts to the regions. I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, and through you, all my colleagues in the House that I did say I was prepared to take his denial. We did not get it, and I guess here I am again being a typical Nova Scotian remembering that just because we are paranoid, it does not mean they are not out to get us.

I have actually seen the west German system. My German is not good enough to really make a comment. I have done some reading on the particular system. I think it is interesting, but I would not be prepared at this point to suggest whether that system could replace the system that has evolved.

I am not quite sure what the hon. parliamentary secretary was on about when he talked about Front Page Challenge and Hockey Night in Canada vis–à–vis 1968. The fact that the national unity mandate came into existence in 1968 does not mean that it was not being followed in spirit before. The problem with removing it is that when we take something away, particularly in these troubled times in this country, we are making a statement. Whether the government admits it, whether the parliamentary secretary admits it, we are making a statement that speaks volumes.

The former member for Kingston and the Islands is not here now. It is not the same time that it was when she brought in her bill. I am not discussing that bill. I am discussing this one. I think every one of us knows that the removal of the term "national unity" from the CBC's mandate has and will continue to have a pejorative for Canadians. It will continue to make Canadians say, "If the government does not believe that CBC has to have a mandate for national unity, what does that say for the government's view of this country?"

Are we a community of communities or are we a nation? I believe we are a nation. I believe we are a nation that is going through a very difficult time. I do not want us to be a community of communities. I want us to be a bilingual, multicultural, diverse, intense, exciting, flourishing Canada. I want us to be a country that looks after and fosters every Canadian's response to the communication and the culture of this country.

I remind the member for Hamilton—Wentworth that in spite of his comments about aboriginal issues, and the fact that he seems to think that this bill does so much, Motions Nos. 18, 19 and 20 were turned down by the government. Motion No. 18 says, "Broadcasting services reflecting aboriginal cultures and representative native languages shall be provided where numbers warrant". It was defeated. "Native cultures and representative native languages should be provided" was defeated. Motion No. 20, proposed by the New Democratic Party also relating to the protection and preservation of an aboriginal presence was defeated.

We can say many things but in our hearts every one of us knows the question is: is there a commitment to national unity, is there a willingness to stand up and be counted, is there a willingness to say, "This is what we want as Canadians"? I am afraid not, not in this bill, and that is very sad.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, it has been a long day for us all and I wish to thank you for providing me with this opportunity to participate in the third reading debate of Bill C–40. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, this bill comes to us as a result of the Caplan–Sauvageau commission's report, as well as four reports tabled by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

The purpose of the bill is to replace the 1968 Broadcasting Act, a law which no longer reflects the rapidly evolving nature of the communications industry. However, the bill is seriously flawed. As we have seen in the report stage debate, it is in bad need of amendments. Indeed, Bill C–40, if passed will seriously undermine Canada's national fabric and it will help divide and balkanize Canadians at a crucial moment in our history. Moreover, our broadcasting system will become one more casualty in the long list of Tory blunders. In fact, the new definition of broadcasting, contained in clause 2 of the bill, is defined broadly to include the transmission and reception of programs, other than by means of radiocommunication. In other words, the hard–wire or closed–circuit transmissions previously considered to be under provincial jurisdiction will now be covered by the new broadcasting law.

As well, undertakings by cable companies or broadcasters will be divided into programming and non–programming functions. This is a rejection of conventional legal practice which has regarded such undertakings as indivisible. You will surely agree, Mr. Speaker, that this change promises to be a source of major headaches in the future.

The 1968 Broadcasting Act required that the CBC, and I quote, "contribute to the development of national unity". We have heard a lot about that clause today and over the past days in debate. Unfortunately, all reference to this has been eliminated from Bill C–40. As Liberals, we believe that the developing of a national personality, identity, and consciousness are best brought about with the help of broadcasting agency, mandated to contribute to the development of national unity.

Given its geographic, demographic and cultural characteristics, Canada needs strong national institutions such as the CBC to weave all the regions and all the diverse participants in our society into a unified network. It is obvious that Canada could never have become a distinct, sovereign, and prosperous nation from coast to coast had we not had government involvement and institutions to help offset the permanent attraction of the United States.

As I said during the report stage debate, this country is the fruit of the efforts of our forefathers to build a nation, from east to west. To overcome the daunting task of uniting the country, successive governments gave us a national railway, a post office, a national radio and television network, a national airline, as well as a variety of measures which contributed to the development of the Canada that we know and the Canada that we love. A rapid overview of the institutions which I have just mentioned reveals nothing but the scorched earth which the Tories have left behind them.

Another serious flaw of Bill C–40—one which I might add also undermines national unity—is the creation of separate standing committees on English and French–language broadcasting at the CBC. The result of this change will only serve to isolate Canadians from each other. Furthermore, it is contrary to clause 3(1)(i) which confirms that the CBC programming should, and I quote, "contribute to shared national consciousness and identity".

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian government, back in 1967, rejected the concept of two separate standing committees at the CBC. At that time the then minister, the hon. Judy LaMarsh, explained why this was a policy of the Liberal government. She said, and I quote:

> A statutory requirement that the Board should split up into two, would, in the opinion of the Government, be undesirable. If the CBC is to be an instrument for the development of national unity and the continuing expression of Canadian identity, it must have a clear identity of its own that is neither French nor English but Canadian.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that the Conservative government could indeed learn a number of important lessons from this great Canadian. As a matter of fact, even new CBC Board Chairman Patrick Watson said to the standing committee last March that such separation would be harmful because it would be telling one and all that English and French programming would meet different needs and policies.

He went on to say, and I quote: "Such is not the case, and we want to be able to say that we do have co-operation, a series of policies". As we have explained before, one of the most serious flaws of this bill it that it refuses to acknowledge the various CBC services. That is the approach taken by the government and, this needs to be emphasized, it is contrary to the recommendations made in the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture released in 1987.

Not only does the government refuse to acknowledge these services, but it has completely forgotten all about my own province, New Brunswick. This province is the only one in Canada which does not have its own televison station wholly owned and operated by the CBC English network.

This is why New Brunswickers have to be satisfied with listening to the CBC English programs over Saint John's station CHSJ.

Given the francophone and anglophone make-up of the population of New Brunswick and the mandate of the CBC, it does not seem very fair that the province not be allowed to have a network station. In fact the situation is clearly intolerable.

Even though the CBC appropriations have been slashed, the fact remains that New Brunswick still needs a CBC station. The federal government still has to show the political will to respond to that need.

Mr. Speaker, another harmful aspect of this bill is the Balkanization, so to speak, and regionalization of the CRTC. This legislation provides that the executive of the CRTC, that is to say all the permanent members, will no longer be involved in the decision-making process. Instead, his power will be put in the hands of groups of three people. Such decentralized and regionalized decision structure will result in a loss of national consciousness, political fragmentation between regions and the creation of an environment that will not be favourable to the development of a national broadcasting system.

Another serious shortcoming of this legislation is that it would foster the Americanization of our broadcasting system. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our broadcasting was always organized along an East-West axis to make it truly Canadian.

Unfortunately, Bill C-40 imposes no limit to the importation of bradcasting services from the United-States. That too goes against the recommendations of the Standing Committe on Communications and Culture.

As we have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, this legislation contains several flaws. However, the amendments we proposed would have improved it considerably. The government, in its wisdom, did not see fit to accept these amendments and Canada stands to loose the most in the end.

[English]

In closing, I would like to just reiterate two major points. One is that we have heard a lot about national unity this evening and in previous debates. We have heard the position of the Conservative government and Conservative members talking about taking out the national unity mandate from the CBC. We have heard that it wanted it out because it was a propaganda clause and it did not think it was suitable.

We have heard the Liberal position, that we thought it was a must, seeing that the country was so divided and that it was good to see some national institutions trying to promote national unity.

The NDP. Well, we know it is just a tag-along party anyway and we would like to look at them as the great pretenders. That is what we do with them. We do not know what its positions are on national unity. It depends upon whether they are speaking in Quebec or outside Quebec. It depends upon whether they are speaking English or whether they are speaking French. It is very confusing.

I would speak a little bit about the national unity issue and whether or not it should be in the Broadcasting Act. I sat back here and asked: "What's wrong with a little bit of propaganda about national unity? What's wrong with an agency promoting national unity?"

• (2110)

We all know that the right hon. Prime Minister does not really want to come out and defend Canada in certain provinces. We know that he does not want to promote national unity in some cases. Is he now putting out that philosophy to his members and asking them to make sure that the institutions do not promote national unity either? Is this why they are taking the national unity clause out of the mandate of the CBC? I wonder about that.

The other question I want to address in closing is the government's strategy with regard to CBC. Whenever things get tough, it has a policy of saying that the CBC and the government are at arm's length and that it cannot do anything about it.

We have heard rumours tonight that there could be cuts of over $200 million to CBC. We have heard rumours that this would lead to cutbacks in the regional stations throughout Canada. In fact, the number 10 was used, four of them in Atlantic Canada.

I note with a little bit of sadness the strategy that the members from the government side seem to want to expound during difficult times and that is that it is not the government that is cutting programming at CBC. No, it is not the government. The CBC is making those decisions. Well, let us make it very clear. The government provides the funding for the CBC. The government is saying: "Your funds are being cut." The CBC then has to make a commitment with what it has have left to work with. That is what the situation is.

I will end on that note. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for being so attentive. I hope in all wisdom that all hon. members in the House will vote against this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Restigouche—Chaleur on his appointment as assistant critic for his party.

[English]

I very briefly want to correct the record, Mr. Speaker. I know the hon. member did not intend it this way, but the record needs to be corrected. The Prime Minister does want to promote Canadianism and national unity and his very actions speak to that. It was Caplan and Sauvageau who made the recommendation that the change take place. They were supported by a former CBC president, Al Johnson, and by the standing committee, including the hon. member for Mount Royal.

On this question of these putative cuts, I think the record needs to be corrected as well, in that sense. The impression sought to be portrayed here tonight—and it is an unfortunate situation—is that the government has somehow intended, or will cut, the CBC's budget by figures of up to $200 million. That is absolute nonsense.

Whatever announcement the CBC makes tomorrow or tonight—whenever the CBC management chooses to make it—does not involve any government cuts in government funding. The only cut in government funding to CBC that is contemplated to take place is the $1.7 million in funding for the Persian Gulf activity of our armed forces. That was announced last week. I might say that CBC was less affected by that proportionately than many other government agencies and departments.

Those are my comments. I just wanted to conclude by again congratulating the hon. member on his appointment as associate critic for his party for communications.

Mr. Arseneault: I have a few short comments, Mr. Speaker. I must thank the parliamentary secretary for his kind words, but there are two things that I want to reiterate. I suppose we could debate all night and I would not mind actually.

I am not going to debate the point about the Prime Minister. That is very debatable and a lot of people across Canada share my view. The hon. parliamentary secretary mentioned there was a recommendation in one of the reports which said that we take out the national unity mandate. It is fine to pick and choose here and there. There were many more recommendations in those reports that were never instituted. In fact, some of those recommendations were brought forth as amendments by the Liberal Party and the hon. members voted against them.

The other thing I would like to point out is in regard to CBC cuts. I guess we should look at the record of the government. The cuts were made in the last budget and what could be happening is the announcements are working their way out right now. The cuts were made in the past and now the CBC has to contend with those cuts. They find they are having a difficult time. The government is forcing them to cut back on programs by not giving them the proper funding.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for giving such an eloquent speech and for his very thoughtful comments.

I would like to ask him in comparison to the comments made by the spokesperson for the Friends of Canadian Broadcasting, Mr. Ian Morrison, in an article he wrote indicates that 80 per cent of the time a Canadian child watches television is spent watching American programs. For almost as much time as that child goes to school he or she is exposed to a foreign culture, to someone else's values, to another country's views about what is right and what is wrong, to life in Los Angeles, New York, or Miami. Is that what we really want for our children? Absorbing the pictures, scenes, and viewpoints of another people is no way to build a sense of belonging in Canada.

All American television is not bad, but what about our own country, our dreams, our values? What about life in Halifax, Sudbury, or Edmonton?

He also suggests a necessary signal would be the appointment of new leadership to the corporation combining non-partisanship, public broadcasting experience, management flare, an ability to capture the public's imagination. But much more important, the new leadership must be given the resources to fill the CBC's statutory mandate.

Having said that, I think in the appointment of the president, Mr. Veilleux, we have many of those qualities, but the only thing that is completely out of kilter with this whole suggestion is this. Mr. Veilleux is not being given the resources to see out the CBC statutory mandate. He is being put into a corner where he has threatened to cut the parliamentary channel. He has pressed the right buttons because this is a president who is very astute politically, who knows where the raw nerve of politicians and governments are.

I ask the hon. member what he feels about my suggestion that we indeed have the kind of leadership we need and the expertise and the valued experience of the president, Mr. Veilleux, but we do not have the commitment of government for him to see out that mandate of CBC.

Mr. Arseneault: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Western Arctic for her comments and her questions.

I quite agree with most of what she had to say. When we look at some of the problems we are having in Canada today in national unity, part of it is a lack of understanding of other cultures that exist in Canada. Part of that lack of understanding comes from not knowing enough information.

Part of the information that come to our children come via television. I think it is very important that we get more Canadian programming. It is fine to say that 80 per cent of our viewing time for small children is Americanized. I do not want to put down the Americans, do not get me wrong. They have some good programs, but what about our own culture? What about the cultures of other people that exist in Canada? What about the far north, the far west? I come from eastern Canada. If my children cannot experience it in person, they should at least have the opportunity of being able to experience it through the media.

We are world leaders in telecommunications. We always were. I am afraid to say that with this Bill C-40 we are taking a step backwards.

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): It gives me great pleasure to stand in the House tonight and give my views on Bill C–40, the Broadcasting Act. There is absolutely no doubt that we need to introduce new legislation to modernize regulations that affect that particular industry. The technology in this industry has advanced at an incredible pace in the last 20 years without any major reforms to the laws that regulate it.

I have to be honest and say that Bill C–40 will bring some good changes. However, it fails in many other aspects. I am specifically making reference to the elimination of the national unity clause for CBC, the creation of two programming committees for French and English within CBC's board and the duality of powers by the Governor in Council over the CRTC. These are three major concerns that I want to bring forward to the House regarding this bill.

The 1969 Broadcasting Act required that the CBC contribute to the development of national unity. This reference has been dropped in Bill C–40. I believe that developing its national personality and building its sense of national identity and consciousness are factors needed to build Canadian national unity. We need a strong national institution like the CBC to weave all regions and the diverse participants in Canadian society into one unified force.

Arguments have been made that the national unity laws will cause what the Minister of Communications called intolerable interference and a constrain on freedom of expression.

We have seen in the last year extensive coverage by the CBC on issues which have severely divided our country. Examples are the Meech Lake Accord, the Brockville incident and, obviously, the clause on national unity did not interfere in any way with the coverage CBC gave to these events.

Pierre Juneau, the former President of the CBC, said he had no trouble with the national unity mandate during the time that he held his post. I fail to see any credible reason for eliminating the present national mandate of the CBC.

The Chairman of the Communications and Culture Committee has said: "Removing the pursuit of national unity as an objective of the Crown owned radio and television network has a negative connotation about unity. Dropping such a phrase now would indicate we are going in two separate ways. It would be most unfortunate.". He said that on May 9, 1990.

Now, if the government will not listen to the opposition or industry experts perhaps it should listen to the member of its own caucus and also the Chairman of the Communications and Culture Committee.

To remove the national unity clause is to say that there is no Canadian unity and, therefore, no common values that Canadians share from coast to coast to coast. I do not believe that that is the case. We certainly have our differences and that is healthy. However, the share of values that we hold as a nation have to be well represented through our national institutions and that is what CBC is, a national institution. Let us keep the national unity clause where it is.

I also want to state that I disagree with the creation of two separate standing committees on English and French language programming at the CBC. CBC executives have also expressed their disagreement with this form of management. Why create two committees to administer the CBC? While the CBC is trying to cut operation costs because of this government's budget slashing, I fail to see how this committee system will aid CBC management in its own objective of cutting costs. In fact, I think that it will probably cause an overlapping of work and increased administrative costs. I do not see any particular purpose to this two–committee system, other than it seems to continue promoting division within the country.

Patrick Watson, the Chairman of CBC, had this to say about the two–committee system: "This is perhaps the most outstanding and strongly felt concern of our board on the proposal that there be created a French and English programing standing committee within the board of CBC."

Gerard Veilleux stated the following regarding the same issue: "I do not know how to tell you that I do not look forward with a great deal of enthusiasm to having to split my staff, the staff of the CBC and Radio–Canada, and I say to you that this is very, very dangerous."

Finally, Keith Spicer, who said: "Personally, I would not be in favour of creating two separate committees." Therefore, I think at some point, in addition to a very strong, secure representative and representation of the English and French sides of things, we must have a national view as well.

The last thing Canadians need at this point in time is a further erosion of national institutions like the CBC which plays an integral role in unifying this country by promoting our common values.

I also object to provisions of Bill C–40 which will reduce the term of office for the president of CBC and the chairman of the CRTC to five years compared to the previous seven–year term. It is important that both these agencies keep their ability to operate at arm's length from the government.

Furthermore, a seven–year term brings more stability and consistency with both organizations. I believe that the seven–year term should be restored.

The government has also failed to ensure, in Bill C–40, the continued presence of the parliamentary service, Radio Canada International, an all news service and a northern service. All these services are important to a country which is geographically large and serves to unite Canadians from one region to another.

Furthermore, the submission is contrary to the unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in its 1987 sixth report. I am particularly concerned about the parliamentary channel which is considered a key window for Canadians to view Parliament and its proceedings.

Through this particular service, all Canadians have the ability to examine what their representatives are saying in our national forum, the House of Commons. I believe that it helps Canadians to better understand the issues and events that shape our country and our world.

Bill C–40 also fails to recognize the right to Canada's aboriginal peoples to receive service and representative native languages where numbers warrant and as public funds become available.

Liberals believe that the maintenance and support of the aboriginal languages and, through them, the transmission of native cultures is so important that the new broadcasting act must provide such a strong affirmation.

The northern services which extend to 98 per cent of all Canadians living in northern Canada is omitted from Bill C–40. In the northern region of our country, this channel provides services to 100,000 natives and non–natives in seven different languages. As well, CBC northern services produce recordings of native singers and musicians.

Many of the native languages and cultures are being forgotten and threatened by extinction. This government has the duty to do everything in its power to help aboriginal people to preserve and promote their language and culture. Also, I am particularly perturbed about the dual powers of review by cabinet over CRTC decisions.

This new power will jeopardize CRTC's ability to carry out its role as an expert in an independent, quasi–judicial body. If Bill C–40 becomes law, the cabinet will have the right to issue policy direction to the CRTC while retaining the right to set aside a decision of the commission on the basis that the decision derogates the attainment of the objectives of the broadcasting policy or of a direction issue to the commission.

Giving these dual powers to cabinet is potentially very dangerous to the Canadian broadcasting system. The power to review CRTC decisions puts the independence of the commission in jeopardy. It is extremely crucial for the commission to be independent and appear independent from any political interference.

It is not acceptable to leave the impression that the CRTC is being directly or indirectly controlled by the government. The commission was created because there was a need for a body to regulate in a consistent and non–political approach.

As far back as 1928, the Aird Report noted that this independence would also protect the government of the day from any political pressure inevitably exerted upon it as it ensures that the competing arguments put forward to the decision makers are weighed as objectively as possible.

If Bill C–40 is adopted, it will create a very dangerous precedent in the way the government establishes its relationship with organizations functioning at arm's length with the government.

I believe that the independence of the CRTC is seriously undermined through this legislation. The loss of independence will result in a disruption of the present functioning of the system. The government is placing itself in a position that will promote the perception in the general public and in the industry of favouritism through political means. The public and the industry expect the CRTC to look at all views without interference. This objective is compromised under this new legislation.

• (2130)

The CRTC is strongly opposed to the dual power of cabinet. In its presentation to the legislative committee it pointed out the consequences of giving these powers to cabinet, and I quote: "The government of the day needs an independent regulator in broadcasting if it does not want to find itself besieged by long lines of petitioners and complainants who, perceiving the commission to have become a mere anti-chamber of power, would ignore the commission's public procedures in favour of lobbying within private cabinet corridors. It could also lead to a belief that decisions, some of them of fundamental consequences, are not being made in a dispassionate way, openly, and in the interests of the communications system as a whole, but are being dictated or influenced by parochial political pressures".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I apologize but I am not sure if the member intends to speak for 20 minutes or to split his time with his colleague.

Mr. Wood: I intend to speak for 10 minutes and I would like to share the time with my fellow member from the Arctic.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): One moment please! I would like to make sure that this is understood. You want to speak for ten minutes and your colleague as well. In that case, I must cut you short and recognize the other member, if that is what was agreed. Does the House agree?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): In that case, I recognize the hon. member for Western Arctic for a 10-minute period.

[English]

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to defer to my colleague because he is so learned and eloquent on the matters of broadcasting, being a former broadcaster, if one can ever be a former broadcaster, for that matter.

In relation to Bill C-40, I have three major concerns with this new broadcasting legislation. There is no legislative base because the amendments were defeated in three areas: the CBC northern services, no legislation or amendment for the use of aboriginal languages although there is reference in the text of the Broadcasting Act to it, and no legislation for CBC's contribution to the development of national unity. I find that quite sad and quite a sorry statement for the institution of national unity.

I would like to establish a case for there being an amendment with reference to CBC northern services. I cannot understand why there is no legislation for the CBC northern services. CBC northern services are responsible for CBC services throughout Yukon, Northwest Territories, and northern Quebec, over one-quarter of the land mass of Canada. What does that include in the Northwest Territories? Most communities in the N.W.T. receive both radio and television service. Anti D satellite capacity is leased by the CBC to carry radio and television signals for the Northwest Territories. Through CBC's accelerated coverage program, all communities with a population of over 500 now have a satellite receiving dish and low-level transmitter. Similar equipment is supplied to communities of under 500 through the Government of the Northwest Territories Department of Culture and Communications.

The CBC operates four radio production stations in the Northwest Territories. Programming is produced in Yellowknife for the Mackenzie region, Inuvik for the Mackenzie Delta, Iqaluit for Baffin Island and Eastern Arctic, and Rankin Inlet for the Keewatin.

Yellowknife, Inuvik, and Iqaluit produce daily northern newscasts and current affairs programs in English and a variety of northern aboriginal languages. General programming is a mix of northern and national production. The CBC access policy provides equipment, training, and access to CBC radio transmitters to allow remote communities to turn off CBC and substitute their own programming.

Some 30 community radio services are in operation. There is one commercial AM radio station in the Northwest Territories, in Yellowknife. A commercial cable television company also operates in Yellowknife with 10 channels supplied to subscribe to through satellite. Local programming is produced and pay television is available in Hay River, Fort Smith, Iqaluit, Inuvik who also have cable television. CBC television has northern production studios in Yellowknife, and national programming is uplinked from Toronto on two channels. Inuit Broadcasting Corporation with production studios in Iqaluit has been given access to the eastern Arctic, Keewatin channel at various times during the week. Some programs are simultaneously broadcasted in English and northern native languages through the use of CBC Radio.

In the spring of 1981, native organizations in the western N.W.T. received CRTC approval to broadcast through the Cancom system. The Native Communication Society of the western Arctic in Yellowknife subsequently developed a training program for native people interested in radio and television. They now have a full-scale operational radio studio and full day broadcast, including three hours in live programming with the news and aboriginal programming.

Inuvialuit Communication Society in the Inuvik region established in 1983, has the television production studio in Inuvik and has broadcast through the CBC network since 1985.

With all this, the government does not believe legislation is required. This is very confusing for many people, with the amount of activity and the amount of resources that have been expended to train people to deliver programs in a very challenging field, the field of aboriginal languages. Even developing the terminology to accommodate modern concepts is being denied the opportunity to flourish.

My specific concern with regard to national unity is best expressed by one of my constituents who on July 24, 1989 wrote a letter to the Prime Minister. She wrote: "I am writing to protest the budget cuts to the CBC contained in your government's Budget". Even at that time, that was a concern. She said that the CBC plays an essential role in maintaining Canada's identity as a separate nation from the United States and that this role would become even more important as free trade erodes our identity as Canadians. "Please reconsider your intent to slash the CBC's funding and ensure the CBC receives the resources required to continue to act as a strong, cultural unifying force for Canada." This was put forward by one of my constituents.

I have received numerous concerns from my constituents, one of whom is a broadcaster and a person who works in the field of broadcasting. He takes much exception to the whole idea of privatization of CBC. This constituent is not only a broadcaster, but also an artist and has had the opportunity to express some northern interpretations of his artistic endeavours through a recording by CBC.

So have other renowned northern artists such as Charlie Panagoniak. There are many other young artists who I can think of from the communities who have had the opportunity to produce records and to express in their aboriginal languages the very essence of who they are in the songs and in the music of their people.

We have had numerous applications that have been put forward to numerous sources for moneys to produce recordings of Inuit music or Dene music that express the cultures of the north. These are the kinds of things that were supported by CBC. Many of the people who are trained and dedicated to the whole idea of broadcasting for the north are fearful if in fact there are cuts. I know that it is being denied across the way by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications that in fact there will not be those kinds of cuts.

Well, it is very good to hear because for many of the people who are trained and dedicated to working for the northern broadcasting service it is more than just a job for them. It is a labour of love. It is something they believe in and something they are very studied in. It is a commitment on their part to bring to southern Canada and to bring to northerners, not just news and information from the south but from the whole world. It is also a commitment to bring knowledge from the various parts of the north.

When we speak about the north, we are at the stage in development of the north that is very important. I guess we are on the brink of our true constitutional development, where northerners will take their true place in Confederation. There is lots of talk about many issues that are important to the north.

Who brings to the north the importance of what happens at the national level or what happens in the Persian Gulf? It is CBC. Usually it is CBC television and CBC radio. Who brings to the north the importance of what happens in one region? In Nunavut, it brings the news of what is happening with the land claims in the eastern Arctic to the west. Who brings the news from the west to the east? It is CBC. It has always been so.

In years gone by we have had limited capacity. We relied heavily on radio. Now we have CBC television broadcasting. Many of the communities get Newsworld. It has been a plus for northerners who do not have the opportunity to get out into mainstream Canadian society by way of travel, because it is very isolated and very remote. We have the opportunity through CBC to share with the rest of Canada what the north is all about and also to get the message to the north of what Canada is all about, in all parts of the country.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry but I cannot recognize the hon. member for Mount Royal because she is not in her seat.

[English]

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say just a very few words in connection with Bill C-40, as it proceeds on third reading to final passage and on to the Senate.

You may not recall it, Mr. Speaker, because as I recall you were not with us during the last Parliament. However, all of your associates in the chair will recall very well the fact that during the last Parliament a very similar bill was put forward by the government with many similar provisions relating to broadcasting. That bill proceeded through the House, was finally passed by the House, went on to the Senate, and then, when the election of 1988 was called, it died because it had not been passed by the Senate prior to the election call.

That bill contained some provisions which caused some great concern to a good many constituents of mine, particularly residents of condominiums. They felt that the provisions of that former bill—and I must say that I agree with them—were discriminatory with respect to condominium owners because of the fact that they were treated differently than those who were the owners of single family detached dwellings. In fact they opposed that bill quite vehemently. They presented their views on many occasion, sometimes by letter, sometimes by telephone calls, and ultimately by representations before the legislative committee that considered that bill, asking for amendments that would have placed condominium owners in the same position as those who were single family detached home owners.

Mr. Speaker, others who sat in the chair that you are sitting in at the present time,will recall that I took a very strong position on behalf of my constituents at that time. I too put forward amendments to that bill in an effort to try to bring about some changes which would put condominium owners on an equal footing with those in single family homes, to the extent that when that bill was at report stage and notwithstanding the fact that I was a strong supporter of the government and continue to be, I did not vote for the bill at report stage. Today we have a brand new bill before us but it has provisions which are very, very similar to the provisions contained in the previous bill that was presented before the Thirty-third Parliament.

I have a great many constituents who are very supportive of this particular bill. In fact, they have written urging me to support it. I have received some 18 letters with respect to this bill from people who are my constituents and who are also members of an association which you are familiar with, Mr. Speaker, known as the Friends of the CBC. Understandably, they want to see this bill passed because it has been a long time since we have had new legislation governing either the CBC or broadcasting in this country.

The previous Minister of Communications in the last government brought the bill forward because it had been years and years since we had had legislation to catch up with the many technological changes, if nothing else, that had occurred in broadcasting since the passage of the last legislation with respect to broadcasting.

Notwithstanding the support that this bill receives and the understandable feelings that we need new legislation, I still truly believe that the owners of condominiums have a legitimate concern with this bill, as they had with the last bill, concerning the impact of satellite receivers. With the prior bill and with this bill, condominium owners feel it is discriminatory and that they are not treated the same way as single family home owners.

If they are regulated under this legislation, they will have no alternative but to become captive receivers and captive subscribers to cable television, whereas the single family home owner is not in that position. If the single family home owner was regulated, he or she could very well drop the subscription to cable television, set up a satellite receiver in their own backyard and have no problems whatsoever.

Very kindly, the parliamentary secretary in his remarks this evening has pointed out that there is some protection, if not in the legislation, at least in the hearts of the government, the minister, the parliamentary secretary and the department for the condominium owners in this situation. I have no reason to doubt the words of the parliamentary secretary. I applaud his words and I thank him for them.

However, you and I know that he will not always be the parliamentary secretary, the present minister will not always be the minister and the present government will not always be the government. With great respect, I fully understand that with a democratic system, Mr. Speaker, from time to time—it may be a long time and, hopefully, as far as you and I are concerned, it will be a long time—one of these days there will be another government, another minister, another parliamentary secretary and who knows what their views may be.

And so tonight, while I speak in support of the bill, I want to voice my concerns and the concerns of my constituents who are condominium owners, and there are a great many of them. I want to point out as well with respect to the bill in the Thirty-third Parliament, there were some 266 individual residents of my riding who voiced personal concerns about that bill.

• (2150)

With respect to this bill, some 158 of my constituents in the York Valley condominiums in particular have voiced concerns. I want to put it on the record that they have very legitimate concerns. I will be continuing to work with the minister, the parliamentary secretary, and the government to ensure that their concerns are met and that the government continues to make sure that they are treated equally with other homeowners. Regardless of what happens with this bill, condominium owners will not have to fear discriminatory treatment and I will continue to work on their behalf.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the member talks about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its functions as a national entity.

I just want to point out that one of the main problems we have seen with respect to this government's direction over the last few years has been the consistent cutbacks to the CBC budget.

I point out that in 1984–85, the operations budget was some $943 million. In 1989–90, that has been cut to $812 million. In terms of the total budget, about $140 million will be cut over four years starting in 1990–91.

I want to point out that the CRTC said in its most recent licence renewal that the CBC could not fulfil its mandate at current funding levels. Since then we have seen further declines in the expenditures.

I would like to quote a comment from the CBC vice-president, Mr. MacEwen, who said: "You're right. We are getting squeezed each year. We have to factor in how we are going to do that. This year, which is 1989–90, they lost a 1 per cent real cut across the radio system. They managed to sustain their activity for one more year, but if we keep going, something is going to have to give."

As I mentioned to you earlier tonight, we heard announcements of major lay-offs in the CBC. I have the Library of Parliament at this time trying to find the details of just what are the extent of those lay-offs, but we understand they were announced tonight.

I would like to ask the member how he can justify the government's supposed commitment to a national broadcasting system in this country, a system that is responsible for defining our national unity and our national identity as a symbol of Canadianism. How can we continue to do this when in fact these substantial cuts in budget allocations to the CBC are being now realized in major job lay-offs? They are already short in terms of their ability to fulfil their mandate. How do you suppose they can continue to do it when they have to lay off even more workers?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the member's question. Regardless of my own personal views on the matter, and regardless of the member's personal views on the matter, he and I both recognize that there is a difference of opinion with respect to the budgetary matters relating to the CBC.

That was pointed out very vividly on November 27 in a column written in the Ottawa Citizen by Marjorie Nichols in which she said that this fiscal year the CBC's budget is $1.4 billion of which $1 billion is a direct grant from the federal treasury. To put the CBC into perspective, it costs Canadian taxpayers as much as the RCMP, which received $1.2 billion this year. Actually the federal police generates more revenue, $526 million, than does the CBC, $439 million. The 10,500 CBC jobs theoretically cost the taxpayers of Canada about $100,000 each. If the CBC were sold, many of those jobs would be transferred to the private sector. If the CBC were privatized, absolutely everybody would be better off.

Marjorie Nichols goes on to say: "Given the new broadcasting act that provides the federal cabinet with expanded powers over broadcasting, the need for action is urgent. For the sake of Canadian democracy, the CBC ought to be put on the auction block."

I do not think everybody agrees with Marjorie Nichols, but that is the view of some Canadians. There is a difference of opinion with respect to this matter, and I think that is what democracy is all about. We are here to debate the various points of view. Marjorie Nichols' opinion is one thing, and the hon. member's opinion is another.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could inform the House what radio or television stations are being closed by the CBC and how many people are being laid off by the corporation?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, it is very kind of the hon. member from Newfoundland to ask me a question of that sort. I am afraid I do not have those figures. Perhaps the hon. member has them himself, but I have to say that my concern with this bill does not really rest with the CBC although many of my constituents are most concerned about it. They want to see it continue and that is understandable.

As the hon. member knows, the CBC was put into effect originally by the Conservative government of former Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, and it has continued to flourish since that time. It continues to carry on its good work to the present time.

What I am really concerned about with this bill is its impact on condominium owners. The hon. member well knows that because he was here in the last Parliament. I am sure he sat there with bated breath listening to my comments.

He realizes as well that I have the same concerns with the impact of this current bill on condominium owners. I am sure that he applauds my actions, and that he agrees wholeheartedly with me. If and when he is ever part of a government in this country, I hope he will ensure that condominium owners are not discriminated against, but will be fully protected as single family detached home owners are.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was in the prior Parliament with the hon. minister. I can recall with a great deal of precision many of his interventions which were very enlightened and very well formulated.

I also remember that Stan Graham and Jack Scowen who used to be in this House shared his views. Behind the curtains, we had many little conversations as to how we could have the Minister of Communications, the then member for Kingston and the Islands, Flora MacDonald, try to include this in the bill.

I bring to the member's attention that we did debate MATV systems, and those concerns for condominiums in this House under Motion No. 6 which the government, as you know, Mr. Speaker, did not accept.

I would like to believe that we could count on the goodwill and the interest of the government to ensure that condominium owners and private dwellings or apartment buildings, and the hotels would not have any further problems.

I would like to bring to his attention that, right now even though we have the private right of action in this bill for which I am very appreciative, in my own city in the Westmount riding there is a very large condominium and apartment complex that is at this very moment in CF Cable territory but is not using the CF Cable services.

CF Cable has been asked many times to come in because the MATV system is working outside of the law. The MATV system is bringing in HBO and ESPN, and all the programs that we say have no place on our system as we have complementary services. It does not bring in the parliamentary channel. It does not bring in many of the other services that are so important such as the educational channels, et cetera.

With what kind of sense of comfort does he feel that he can depend on the CRTC that never bothered to use the Holiday Inn decision that came down in Winnipeg effectively? There does not seem to have anything in this bill that would direct the CRTC at this time. Does the hon. minister think that he is comfortable enough with the new provisions under the private right of action that they can answer that question?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me if I feel comfortable with the situation as it now stands. I must say that thinking back to the situation in the last Parliament, I can recall many discussions with the hon. member then as the critic for communications, as she is now, on this very subject. My recollection is that she was not supportive of condominium owners at that time and, in fact, she voted against it. My motions that were put forward at that time were not supported by the opposition or we would have had a vote and I would have had a chance to get on the record formally on that issue at that time. I have the Hansard from those debates of August, 1988 right here, as a matter of fact, and I can tell you that I see no evidence that the hon. member was supportive at that time.

It is quite surprising now that she should be taking the position that there is some problem with the bill, particularly because I do not recall any motion that she moved. The hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine moved a motion in support of condominium owners in the debate at report stage, but I do not recall any motion that the hon. member moved in support of condominium owners.

To the best of my knowledge, based on the comments she made in the past and the comments that I recollect she has made in this debate, she is not supportive of equal rights for condominium owners. I hope that if she ever gets a chance to form a part of a government that she will change her mind and be supportive of the rights of condominium owners and not discriminate in that regard.

Mrs. Finestone: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not like to contradict my hon. friend, the minister, in the House, but it was with persistent questions to the minister of the day, both in committee and in the House, that we were able to get—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but this is a matter of opinion, not a point of order. I will therefore have to revert to debate.

Resuming debate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[English]

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on third reading of Bill C–40, an act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunications.

Before I proceed, allow me to thank my colleague, the hon. member for Mount Royal, for her leadership on this issue on behalf of our Liberal caucus.

This bill, in essence, should shape what we see on the television landscape in the future. It should make sure television will promote a sense of Canadian unity, a sense of our character as a people, of a people proud of our different origins and of a people with common shared values. But the bill is not clear in its vision and the government lacks the courage to commit funds to achieve the goal of promoting the Canadian nation on television.

This bill would have the power to change what Canadians see on their television sets. This is very important since broadcasting impacts on the way most people get their news, their entertainment, and their understanding of our multicultural diversity. The medium of television should support a sense of shared values and a sense of national being. But there can be no genuine national being if we do not insist that the CBC is, at all times, to foster national unity. A renewal of this national mission as a mandate of CBC is vital to the continued survival of our nation.

Reaffirming national unity as a mandate is most relevant today, particularly when we witness segments of our country feeling alienated from each other and from a common whole. Our geography, our different languages and cultures and our common economic problems require a link if we are to continue to survive as a people and as a nation. Broadcasting serves as this essential linkage to bring together our aboriginal peoples, our founding settlers and our new citizens, adults and children, as Canadians.

Hence, I am pleased to see the retention in the proposed Broadcasting Act of the principle enunciated in the original Broadcasting Act of 1968:

> The Canadian Broadcasting system shall be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada.

Unfortunately, only about 5 per cent of the programs presented to Canadians today on English television are Canadian in content. That is what we see, that is what our children see.

Since most of our children spend a lot of time watching television and learning from it, I fear that our children do not see enough programs that reinforce to them what it really means to be a Canadian.

Hence, ownership and programming content are two of the fundamental issues which a new broadcasting bill must address if it is to prove effective in the future. This bill fails in these twin challenges.

We have already seen the arrival of satellite communication and other technologies. The boundaries between nations have blurred. Broadcasting has made our planet truly a global village.

At the same time, there is palpable concern that these new technologies are being built only by a privileged few. This is not inherently wrong, but a danger lurks nearby. What the world will see, read and hear in the coming century could be coming from the hands of a few through mergers and take-overs. For example, new on-demand television services will likely fall in the control of a few, and if not licensed and regulated for Canadian content, would unduly profile and promote American and not Canadian programs.

Today, we have a watchdog organization that is supposed to ensure that the television medium is not concentrated in the hands of a few who can ignore important Canadian programming. That watchdog is the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, the CRTC. But the CRTC has long been acknowledged as being somewhat of a toothless watchdog. Although it has the mandate to punish broadcasters who do not adhere to Canadian content standards by revoking their broadcasting license, the commission has never been strict with broadcasters who break the rules.

Bill C-40, instead of strengthening the watchdog duty of the CRTC, weakens that punitive power by adopting the approach of performance incentives. That is, it will reward networks who broadcast a sufficient number of programs with the stipulated Canadian content quota by waiving the annual license fee, which can be as much as one-third of a million dollars based on advertising revenues of $10 million. It will punish those who do not fulfil their obligations by making them pay part or all of the license fee.

But let us be realistic. The CRTC was always reluctant to use its power before, what reason do we have to believe that it will change now? Worse, the government will now have more veto powers over the commission's decisions. Hence, the networks can lobby the government to overrule unwelcome CRTC decisions. Besides, we all know that one-third of a million dollars fee is not enough to scare potential delinquent networks into showing more Canadian programs. These networks are some of the top money-making corporations in North America today. "The big networks can well afford to pay a $300,000 slap on the wrist", said Matthew Fraser of the Montreal Gazette in his column recently.

I believe the underlying issue behind this debate is money. Under Bill C-40, the CBC must "contribute to shared national conscience and identity", and make space for more cultural programs as opposed to commercial shows. These are admirable objectives, but I do not think the government has given much thought to the price-tag of its goals.

During its past four years in power, the Conservative government has cut $140 million from the already suffering network. Tonight in debate, we heard from the hon. member for Winnipeg—St. James, based on some advance information he has, that at least another $100 million will be cut by the CBC affecting at least 10 radio stations, Radio Canada International, and the parliamentary channels.

One way in which the CBC has coped with these heartless cuts has been from the income the corporation gets from airing commercial programs. Now the government is telling the CBC to produce more cultural programs and move away from commercial programming. It costs a lot more to create a program than to buy one. One doubts that in this time of economic recession the government is going to give the CBC more funding in its next budget. I only hope that this pessimism would prove to be wrong.

Verily, I do not think the government is taking the important role of the CBC seriously. Telling the network to do more with fewer financial resources is unacceptable.

In conclusion, the CRTC and the CBC have very important roles to play in promoting a Canadian soul. The CRTC must be a watchdog with teeth. It must be able to ensure Canadian content quotas are filled and that the power of the television medium does not rest in the hands of a privileged few. The CBC must be given ample funding to produce good Canadian programming as well.

Bill C-40 does not properly address these issues. It should be a bill which promotes our sense of Canadian unity. We need a Broadcasting Act to make a difference to our airwaves. There will continue to be a deficit of programs showing who Canadians really are unless the government gives more power to the CRTC and more money to the CBC.

Canadians need to be shown the vision and the leadership with which to attain that vision. This side of the House is ready to form the government and to lead Canadians to a united country and people, linked via a new Broadcasting Act, an act that will broadcast to the whole world the true Canadian soul—united, caring, compassionate, and just.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the member on his fine presentation. I think he had a lot of very salient points to make.

I was particularly interested in the comments he was making on the CBC and its mandated function to serve as an instrument of national unity. He referred to these consistent cutbacks, $140 million more dollars slated over the next few years, and now we hear earlier tonight of even greater cuts in the offing. He raised the question as to how the CBC can possibly fulfil its mandate when it is essentially being knee-capped economically by the government that is looking to emasculate the corporation in terms of the role that it has to fulfil.

I do not know whether or not the member was here earlier tonight when I was speaking, but we had learned of just recently announced lay-offs in the CBC.

They were announced tonight. We did not have many details at that point. A little bit more has filtered in. In my discussions with the Canadian Press I found that these cuts are going to result in the closure of 10 regional stations that will either close completely or will be reduced to storefront operations. These are regional stations, regional centres, which have fulfilled a very important function in getting the Canadian news out to the scattered regions of this country.

I would like to ask the member the question I have been trying to ask the government. They certainly will not answer me. Perhaps the hon. member from the Liberal Party would care to comment on how these cutbacks and resultant layoffs can possibly be helpful to a corporation that is struggling to fulfil the mandate it has been given when it already knows it is short of funds and now, obviously, short of manpower.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his comments and for his question. He has truly identified the hypocrisy of this government, on the one hand trying to tell us that it is promoting the broadcasting institution in our country, and on the other hand trying to amputate it by cutting the financial resources necessary to support such an undertaking.

I cannot help but fully agree with my colleague and his concerns and I hope that before we vote on this bill the government will make a commitment, renew itself, change its heart, restore funding to this institution so that truly we can promote Canadian unity in this country.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my friend's intervention in this debate and I thank him and congratulate him for it. It was very thoughtful and well presented. I hesitated even to make an intervention, but I do it in a spirit of collegiality. I think I may have misunderstood the hon. member.

What I understood him to say is that, in the context of the financial crunch in which the CBC finds itself with declining commercial revenues, the government was telling the CBC to program more cultural offerings.

Perhaps I have missed something, but I am not aware that the government has ever told the CBC what to program.

I wonder if the hon. member could answer that.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, what I meant when I said that the CBC must be mandated to have Canadian content in its programming is that with this kind of mandate it has to create new programs of Canadian content. As yet we have very little of that in Canada. That type of undertaking will need support from the Canadian government. That is what I meant, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to one side of broadcasting and later about the erosion of the CBC.

Broadcasting is a powerful, unifying medium.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, is there anyone in this government who believes in the unity of this country? If so, why do they not stand up and defend federalism? Canada is falling apart, and nobody on the government side seems to care.

Mr. Speaker, withdrawing from the CBC's mission its mandate to promote national unity and to provide a forum for expressing our Canadian identity is only the tip of the iceberg.

[English]

Recently the Prime Minister highlighted the importance of national unity by saying: "Everything that we have accomplished as a country can be traced back to our sense of national purpose, to our national unity". If he really believes this, why did he remove the CBC's national unity goal? That is a quote from the hon. member for Mount Royal, who has led our party through this bill.

Why have we not heard of the Prime Minister going to his province and fighting for his country? He is willing to send Canadians to fight for Kuwait but he is too scared to venture into his own riding to fight for its place in Canada. The same goes for other ministers from Quebec. I find it completely reprehensible that ministers of the Crown have a half-hearted defence for the country they are sworn to defend and represent. I am tired of Conservative double-talk that tries to pander to both Canadian unity and Quebec independence.

The Conservatives and the New Democrats seem to be in the same boat on this issue. Their leaders cannot rely on their members from Quebec to stand up for their province's role in confederation. Mr. Speaker, I and my leader, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, stand for a strong Canada with Quebec as a strong and prosperous partner in confederation. It would be a symbol of good faith to all Canadians, which includes the citizens of Saint-Laurent—Cartierville, to reinstate the CBC's role of promoting national unity.

It is the legitimate interest of a national body, such as the CBC, to make sure that our country is united and strong. It is for this reason that, without this mandate, I cannot support this bill at third reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, is that the way this government expects to create some harmony? Is it because the country is in such a mess that the government insists on removing from the CBC mandate the development of national unity and the broadcasting of some sense of Canadian identity? Is it because this government no longer believes in Canada, that it is gradually removing the development of national unity from the mandate? Naturally, the Minister will deny that it is his objective, but the facts tend to show that the reverse is true.

[English]

At a time when Canadians are divided over issues such as free trade, the GST, and the Constitution of the country, the country's national public broadcaster should be the purveyor of national unity. If we are to have a national personality, we have to weave all regions into a unified force. It is not by cutting funds that this government is helping Canada stay together. But, could that be its hidden agenda, letting Canada split apart and saying, "we did our best", knowing full well that they did not?

It is indeed sad to see that while this country is on the brink of disintegration, its national leadership has shirked its responsibility of fighting for a strong and unified Canada. Instead of the Prime Minister going on the road to hear how this country feels, instead of him going into Quebec and fighting for this country, he has reneged on his responsibility. It seems that the Minister of Communications has shirked his responsibility as well. He has withdrawn from the fight for Canada. He is obliged, by his duty to this country, to fight for Canada's unity. It is for this reason that he must reintroduce the national unity objective of the CBC.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, how can the government ask the Canadian people to weave a stronger seamless web of national unity, when it does everything it can to tear it? Canadians are already offered very little cultural programming, especially outside Quebec. Does the government think that by cutting funds to the CBC and removing the development of national unity from its mandate, it will be able to offer better cultural programming to the French-speaking population of this country, and in particular better local cultural programming? Is the government genuinely interested in it or is it only a façade?

Why now, Mr. Speaker? The unity of the country is holding only by a thread and it is now that this government wants to remove from the CBC's mandate the promotion of national unity and the expression of the forum to express Canadian identity. What is going on? What is this government afraid of? To take a stand?

Mr. Speaker, Quebec is already very seriously questioning its place within this country. If the state broadcaster is withdrawing from its promotion of national unity because this mandate is taken away from it, does that imply that this government has also decided to let Quebec go adrift? Is this the beginning of the quiet changes to allow for the possible break-up of this country?

[English]

It may seem like a small issue but it is with negative small issues that we break up a country. Liberals do not want this, nor do the Canadian people. You know who will be the person who is remembered for the dismantling of this country, this Prime Minister.

We need someone who will be committed to Canada. That is the Liberal Party and Jean Chrétien. We can offer this vision to all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we heard a lot from the members of the Bloc Québécois. They told us that promotion of national unity is Canadian propaganda. I am sure the majority of Quebecers disagree with them. More than ever, Mr. Speaker, we have to create ties across Canada if we really care about this country. This move to take away the mandate for the development of national unity is a step in the wrong direction. We, in the Liberal Party, want to put the government back in the right direction. That is why we are absolutely against Bill C-40.

[English]

I would just like to touch on the gradual erosion of the CBC. The parliamentary secretary talked earlier about tax and sort of glossed over that there were not any, and that the CBC was servicing regional needs.

I quote the hon. member for Mount Royal again: "In 1985, this Conservative government began by cutting $85 million. In 1986-87, $5.6 million; 1987-88, $21.1 million; 1988-89, it came to 5.6 million; 1989-90, $5.8 million; and for the year 1991, $25.9 million".

When the hon. member for Mount Royal asked the minister to assure that there would be no further cuts to the CBC, he refused to say no. His only remarks to her were "It is with great pleasure that I note the member's suggestion".

One other point that the parliamentary secretary raised was the decision about national unity. I am not quite sure of his exact words, but he talked about the division of the board with a francophone committee and an anglophone committee. He said that this was approved by the chairman of the board. I wonder if he was talking about the chairman of the board of the CBC, Patrick Watson. I understand that when he appeared before the legislative committee, he expressed grave concern about dividing the CBC along linguistic lines. He is the chairman designate, and speaking with unequivocal and unanimous support of the CBC board of directors, he said: "Let me say that the board unanimously felt that this was both divisive in terms of the obligation of the corporation to be one".

I would be interested in hearing what the parliamentary secretary means when he says that we are not dividing the board of the CBC and that there were no parliamentary cuts planned. I hope the parliamentary secretary is right but we have yet to hear him say there will be no cuts. Could you please elucidate on this point?

• (2230)

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have been speaking back and forth all night about the impact of the government's legislation and the impact of the government's continued expenditure cuts on CBC.

As we have been talking, the news has been filtering in and it has just become dramatically clear to us, startlingly clear to us, that the cuts that we are seeing take place tonight, that have just been announced, are the most severe cuts to take place in the history of the CBC.

It is estimated that the cuts are going to axe 1,200 people. They are going to eliminate local programs and are going to result in the closure of some 10 regional centres. This is just coming through the news now. The big loss will apparently be in local services. We already lost some 472 jobs earlier in the year. If the cuts go through, by next April a total of 1,600 jobs in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will have been axed.

The stations that will be axed, according to reports, are the regional stations in Calgary, in Saskatoon, in Windsor, Radio-Canada in Toronto, Quebec operations, the Goose Bay operation and operations in Newfoundland. It is a response to this government's $140 million cutting of the budget for CBC that is forcing the CBC board to have to take these kinds of drastic measures in order to make ends meet.

The argument that we placed earlier and the argument that is made ever more clearer tonight, is that this government is emasculating the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is essentially kneecapping it economically so that it can no longer fulfil its function. I wonder if my colleague who has just been speaking may wish to question the government as to how the CBC can continue to fulfil its mandate when this is the scenario that is facing the corporation right now.

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, since I did not hear the news that were just announced—I hope that it is not the CBC—I am astonished. If the parliamentary secretary could explain another time what he meant when he said that there would be no cuts, because five minutes later, we heard that 1,200 jobs were cut and that 10 television stations would close. What does that mean? Could it be possible that he unintentionally mislead the House? Or is he trying to make Canadians believe that the government is not really interested in national unity?

[English]

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked a question and I will, by way of question and comment, endeavour to respond to it. I did make it clear earlier this evening that whatever announcements CBC will make tonight or tomorrow—I do not believe any announcement has been made.

Ms. Clancy: It was on the news.

Mr. Edwards: Lots of things are on the news. That does not mean that they have been announced or that they are factual. Mr. Speaker, as an expert former newsman yourself, I ask you where in the world would news people be if only facts got on the news. There would be a lot of dead air. But, the fact of the matter is, as I understand it, and I believe the record should be very clear on this matter, although members opposite seem to enjoy suggesting that the government is proposing to apply some cuts to the CBC, the only cuts that the government has applied to the CBC since April of 1989 were the $140 million in the April 1989 budget and the $1.7 million last week to aid in the financing of the Persian Gulf operation.

Further cuts are not contemplated today, tomorrow, or in the foreseeable future. Indeed, if hon. members have the patience to wait for the announcement that it is believed will be made by the president of the CBC tomorrow, they may find that the government is assisting the CBC in its current difficulties.

Therefore I think it would be very inappropriate to cry havoc and raise alarms to the extent that it is implied that the government is butchering the CBC. The government is doing nothing of the sort. The government is endeavouring, in a time of difficult financial restraint, to nurture the CBC as best it can.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the cuts referred to by the parliamentary secretary are absolutely outrageous. It is an outrage in Canada for the CBC to be announcing tomorrow the closure of two operations in the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Just imagine, a total closure of one station and a partial closure of another station. Of 10 cuts in Canada, two are in the province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Could the parliamentary secretary or the minister, if he intends to come along to the House, explain why the Government of Canada is allowing the CBC totally to destroy its service to a great portion of Newfoundland and Labrador?

We have taken more cuts than any other province in Canada. It is an absolute outrage. Somebody from the government side should make an announcement tonight that it is going to object to those cuts and it is going to cancel them.

[Translation]

Mrs. Maheu: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because since it is our 20 minute period, I do not want to give the minister the opportunity to take the floor again.

[English]

He is the parliamentary secretary, I apologize.

We say that Tory times are tough times. When I listened to the parliamentary secretary talking earlier about no budget cuts, he was saying: "Don't worry, be happy". How can we be happy if indeed it is true that there are 1,200 jobs on the line and 10 stations? I hope for once the government will be ready to stop cutting and this time start giving a little.

Mr. Edwards: We are giving; we are not cutting.

Mrs. Maheu: I accept that.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I realize the debate is getting rather circular, but many comments have been made reflecting the recently announced cuts which the media brought forward tonight.

The parliamentary secretary has essentially said that the government has had no part in these cuts. This is an argument that has gone back and forth between the two sides of the House tonight.

I wanted to make clear to the House and to the people of Canada that it was indicated in the newscast that these cuts were the response of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in terms of a necessary plan of action to follow through with the $140 million reduction in government spending the corporation must incur in the next four years. It is responding to this $140 million budgetary shortfall with these job cutbacks.

It was very clear tonight in terms of the newscast. I think the parliamentary secretary should reconsider the comments he has made in that regard.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Does the hon. parliamentary secretary want to conclude his remarks?

Mrs. Maheu: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I will recognize the hon. member for Saint-Laurent—Cartierville for 30 seconds.

• (2240 )

[English]

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to put on the record again that the parliamentary secretary just told us that this government is not cutting but indeed is giving. Thank you again.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-40 and the essence and the soul of this country as seen through communications.

Just before my hon. colleague from Saint-Laurent—Cartierville finished speaking, we had announcements on national television. We had what I would consider to be a near disaster in terms of communications, in terms of the means by which we not only bring the country together, and in terms of how we give an indication to all Canadians nation-wide what we are about. We are also talking about letting go 1,200 men and women with great expertise and experience in the communications field, in the electronics field, and in all other fields central and integral to the development of a high-tech, ultra-modern communications system, art system, and dramatic art system which identify and express for Canadians that element of Canadianism. All those people will be let go. The parliamentary secretary said that the government—and I think I am quoting him correctly; the "blues" will bear me out—is aiding, not cutting funds to the CBC.

It is almost outrageous that we should hear those kinds of statements. His colleague, the former parliamentary secretary for communications, earlier in the evening said: "I regret that there will be cuts"—and again I am sure that the "blues" will bear me out—"but when they come it is because they have to come".

Two hours later they came. They came with a slash. They came with a bang. Some 1,200 people, in addition to the 476 who have already been let go, will be let go by April 1, 1991 in order to make up a shortfall of $100 million, thanks to this government's lack of commitment, desire to kill the CBC, and any national means of communication, any national means of news, any national means of bringing Canadians together on a cultural point, on a news point, or on an information sharing point that was already there. The mechanism was there, and the government has decided that it is no longer worth maintaining.

We are seeing that through this Bill C–40. It is ironic that these announcements would have come on the eve of third reading of Bill C–40, which has been designed through this institution to bring awareness to all Canadians of the value of all institutions and instruments which make up our soul and our character. To have this kind of announcement tonight of all nights tells us that in essence what is being debated this evening is all for nought.

Parliamentarians will be unable to bring to the attention of all Canadians or convince them of the significance of this debate by bringing forth all important elements for consideration. In fact one of the lambs that will be sacrificed in these cuts will be the parliamentary channel, the vehicle for bringing our debates into the homes of each and every Canadian.

In addition, we can see from some of the cuts that the government is giving up on its sense of what Canada must be. I refer with great regret to one of the stations that will be cut. As a result of this government's action, one service that will no longer be available is Radio–Canada emanating in French from my own city of Toronto. There is nothing worse that one can say about establishing the whole concept of bilingual Canada, a Canada that is enriched by the differences that make up its whole, than to say that Radio–Canada will no longer be able to function out of the city of Toronto. It is a shame that this government would be associated with that kind of decision. It is an absolute criminal shame that the CBC would be put in a position where it has to make that kind of cut, because in addition to having to make up the shortfall of government finances toward the operation of this national institution, we learn through this report just a mere one–half hour ago that we have to make up for a shortage of advertising revenues.

Advertising revenues that this government was mandating will no longer be allowed to go to the CBC because, of course, what we have to do is encourage the private local entrepreneur, the local broadcasters, who have been asking for that rich advertising dollar. I think it runs in the vicinity of $200 million in the province of Quebec alone and is at least equal to that throughout the rest of the country.

With the cuts we have seen this evening, we take a look at where we are going with Bill C–40. We can see that we are no longer engaged in an academic discussion. We are no longer talking about the esoteric merits of a communications system that may or may not satisfy the arts community, that may or may not satisfy those people who are in the broadcasting industry as journalists, as reporters and other announcers. No, we are talking about Canadians, each and every one of us, and when the government decides that it must take a cold, hard look which it suggests is the method with which it approaches everything because it is a good financial manager and, as a good financial manager, what it will do to make sure the bottom line is black. As always, what will happen is it will tear this country apart.

It was not that long ago that nations throughout the world decided that what they needed to do in the interests of establishing a national character is they would have to devote the energies and the resources of their nations toward the education of their people, to give them the sense of what each other was like. They did that through an education system.

They did it as well through a military system in order to bring people from various regions together through military service. They exchanged ideas, let everybody understand what the other was like. This gave them a sense of closeness through the regions, a sense of familiarity about culture. It broke down the barriers that come with linguistic differences, and encouraged and nourished and, in fact, cultivated all of those expressions of individual aspirations, community aspirations, regional and cultural aspirations that come through the expression of literature, prose, drama and theatre, all of those things which we would have hoped would have firmly imprinted themselves on the character of this country that we have all come to love.

We have all come to love this country, because for someone like me who had to come to this country thanks to the good decisions of his parents, but who now has his own children rooted deeply into the country and who now must decide on their own as to the Canadian character. Thanks to this government we no longer will have a vehicle to serve the interests that once were identified through an education system that would have imprinted a character.

Now, through this high-tech age, we see it is the communications system, a national system like the CBC that would have given us the opportunity, not only through the news, but through the arts, dramatic arts, prose and even through dubbing some of the productions emanating from the various regions, such as those from Quebec, southern Ontario and western Canada, and to be able to allow us to see each other as we are and as we would want others to see us and provide us with an opportunity to be sensitive to the issues of the day in Canada.

They are not only constitutional issues, they are economic issues, they are environmental issues. They are the issues that will determine how we will live in this country tomorrow and how we will see each other in the next century through that medium that could produce the appropriate documentaries, programs and bring together the experts who have the interests of this country at heart, to bring them together and to allow our children to allow us to be able to become informed and make the decisions that are environmentally appropriate, economically sound and culturally homogeneous for all of us, homogeneous in the sense of people who in their differences could still remain united. Mr. Speaker, the kind of cuts we have seen this evening bear out what Bill C-40 was intending to do, essentially balkanize and allow the regionalization of Canada by doing the same thing to the one system that held Canada together.

I do not need to remind my hon. colleagues on this side of the House. They have been most vigilant throughout this debate. I say that without appearing fawning, but most members in the House, not just from my caucus, have developed a great respect and admiration for our critic who has been absolutely terrific in bringing out all of those discussions, the technical components of this bill, and who has as well pointed out the philosophical repercussions of each and every one of the motions, of all of the changes, that are being applied through this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to lose the opportunity, thanks to Bill C-40 and the government's action, negative, or inaction, which is at least dilatory, on issues that show the world what we as Canadians are. We have had some indication that perhaps, for example, Radio-Canada International might survive. We do not know for how long, but certainly it is a half-hearted commitment. It is no longer in the country's interest as far as the government is concerned.

Yes, there is the all-news service, but with the cuts we are going to find we will be unable to keep up with the demands and the rigours required in order to make sure that all Canadians receive the news on time, all the time, and in the fashion that would do professionalism honour, and in a fashion that would give an indication that the cultural differences, linguistic differences, regional differences, are put in the light which gives them the most favourable impression to all Canadians.

That is what has been missing in this country over the course of the last year and a half. We have not been given the opportunity to have the kinds of favourable impression we ought to have about each other, about each and every one of us, all of us, neighbours, friends and brothers and sisters in this country.

The government has not wanted to provide the appropriate legislative guarantees for such a mechanism. As I said earlier, it is interested more in ensuring that the regional approach to communication and through the ways we regulate, observe, and monitor that communication system, the CRTC, take place.

My colleagues have already pointed out how we have regionalized and balkanized the operations of the CRTC and we have essentially said we do not need nor do we want a national dimension to the kinds of decisions they will bring to bear on the broadcasting and communications system. I do not know how many ways that a parliamentary secretary, minister, or members of the government side can try to hide that fact, but the fact of the matter is that when we no longer require a full executive of the CRTC to engage in decisions that relate to the communications system of this country, then we are essentially washing our hands of any kind of commitment that we ought to have to the national character of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I know you will be at one with me in this, a national character that allows for differences. It nurtures those differences and it recognizes that those differences actually provide energy and vigour to the character of Canada.

Bill C–40 for me, prior to hearing the cuts of this evening, already had meant that essentially the government, in addition to washing its hands of the duty, the obligation, the mandate to engage in establishing the national dimensions of this country was essentially opening the doors to what is already an insidious and all too pervasive effect on Canadian communication. That is the Americanization of both our culture, our language, our habits, and our views and perspectives on how the world should unfold, let alone how we as Canadians should develop our own potential. Colleagues on this side of the House have pointed out the vast majority of programming entering into this country viewed by our children. Maybe our children do not know enough yet, but at least we are in a position to make a choice. In making that choice we are offered few options; we have the American view of North America and we have the North American view of the world.

Thanks to Bill C–40, we no longer have the one unifying means, the financial resources and the mandate required to ensure that those resources bear themselves out in the kinds of programs that will give us a truly Canadian perspective, no matter from what region that Canadian perspective comes, a Canadian perspective nonetheless.

It has been of great sorrow to me to hear that the government, with Bill C–40, no longer feels that it is necessary to have any cautions in legislation to the infusion of more and more American broadcasting services, and yet there was a unanimous recommendation of the Communications and Cultural Committee of a mere three years ago that additional foreign networks not be allowed unless, of course, their programming was complementary to that of licensed Canadian services already.

No. It seems that the government is unwilling to strengthen the one instrument that would be there to enhance the Canadian character and in reneging on that opportunity it is essentially, deliberately weakening the possibility of a Canadian character.

We see that it is almost a logical consequence that the government would remove from Bill C–40 the national unity clause that was part of the CBC mandate.

I might remind the members, colleagues and one and all, those who feel especially strong about the CBC, about its potential. I do not want to get involved in the discussions of the mechanisms and the details one by one of the CBC programming and the hierarchy and the structure of the organization. I refer to the concept, to the potential that exists with that means of communication. That mandate that we are dropping from C–40 essentially told the CBC that it had to contribute to the development of national unity and to provide for a continuing expression of the Canadian identity.

By removing that clause, by no longer keeping us there, we are losing an opportunity to identify that Canada that is emerging. We are refusing to recognize the merits of those nations that have been part and parcel to the Canadian character as it has emerged through its first century of creation and, in fact, we are going to lose that umbrella organization that could reach out to all the emergence of a new Canada that is there, that is going to take its rightful place in the 21st century. Despite what this government would like to think, it is not the Canadian way to be immersed solely and simply in a parochial atmosphere of a North American environment with a very aggressive and very large neighbour. We have a country that is emerging because of the kinds of demographics that are allowing us to develop.

We have an opportunity to identify this new Canada. I cite, for example, just my own city of Toronto new Canadians see all of their news through three channels—Chinese, Portuguese and Italian. In combination, those three, on one local television area, represent more viewers than there are for the highest viewership of English language news. The CBC has an opportunity to focus in on that emerging type of Canada, to bring that and integrate it in with the already established mainstream cultures of Canada and, thereby, impress more of a new Canadian character on it. It can integrate the four together, all the other new elements that come and without danger to each and any one of them, to give us an opportunity, through a vehicle such as the CBC, to learn more about each other, to identify each other, to familiarize each other with ourselves and to recognize all those common aspirations which we call Canada.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member for Eglinton—Lawrence who, in a passionate way, covered a lot of bases.

First, I would like to ask him: Who said Radio-Canada would not operate out of Toronto? Those were the words he used, that Radio-Canada would not operate out of Toronto. I think he will find, since our only currency in this place is credibility, that that statement is not credible and perhaps he should check again.

Again, I would caution that it is pretty exciting, when we have a broadcasting debate going on and there is a big broadcasting story out there, to bring it in here. That is part of the game. We do those things. But I think we ought to be careful about the rumours or the stories that we present as facts in this place, because maybe this channel is being watched too tonight. We should, I think, give the CBC a break in terms of giving it some credit for its capability in managing its affairs which is, what I think, it is in the process of doing at this particular time.

The CBC is not the only instrument for Canadianization. It is the prime instrument, but not the only instrument.

I listened with some wry amusement to my friend when he was talking about the necessity to dub shows. I am sure he really did not intend it this way, but he was talking about dubbing shows from Quebec so that they could be understood and appreciated in English Canada. He went on to say that perhaps some from southern Ontario and even western Canada could be dubbed as well. He did not use those words, but the implication was there. I think I do not need dubbing to be understood by the hon. member.

The Americanization of the country, he felt, through the airwaves, would follow from the Balkanization that would exist within the CRTC. That is, I believe, the string of logic that we were offered and challenged to follow. More and more Canadian programs are being viewed and many of those are produced by the private sector. Most of them are produced by the CBC, but many are produced by the private sector. I think we ought to give credit where credit is due.

I give just one example which was originated, with the help of Telefilm, by a broadcaster in my own community and that was Bye, Bye Blues, one of the finest Canadian films to have been produced in recent years.

Finally, I do want to comment on the hon. member's challenge, which I share, and that is that the Canadian broadcasting system, as a whole—and he singled out the CBC—ought to reflect the new Canada and its various components. Well, there may be some things that the framers of this legislation—and I include my friend, the hon. member for Mount Royal, as one of the framers of this legislation.

Mrs. Finestone: I'm feeling uncomfortable.

Mr. Edwards: She is getting uncomfortable.

There is one thing that we succeeded in doing and of which we can all be proud and it is that the system—not just the CBC, but all components of the system—is mandated by this bill to reflect Canada in all its diverse glory, but at the same time to stimulate a national consciousness and identity.

I come now to the multicultural reality of our country and the multicultural mandate which is imposed on the system, for the first time, in this bill. I would say, Mr. Speaker, not only in that which is portrayed on the air, in radio and in television, but more particularly and most significantly—and my friend from Mount Royal fought with me on this, and Lynn McDonald fought with us at the outset, on the same side I should rush to say—that the operations clause of this bill mandates that stations in their operations will also reflect the reality of the new Canada. That means that there is no escape by way of the floor of 100 employees such as with the federal employment equity legislation. There is no such floor. Every broadcast operation—be it cable, radio, television, or whatever—must follow the appropriate methods to make sure that the operations of that station and what goes on the air reflect the reality of the new Canada.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, one is almost encouraged by the manner, if not the content, of the hon. parliamentary secretary because he has essentially been saying this is a very credible bill. He has pointed out—and I want to start from the last point, to do him credit—that there is an element to the bill that is encouraging, and has been received positively by all members of the House. That is that the CBC be required to reflect the new ethnocultural, multicultural, multi-racial character that is Canada.

Mrs. Finestone: In the private sector as well.

Mr. Volpe: Yes, in the private sector as well, as my colleague for Mount Royal says. That is a positive step.

I know that the parliamentary secretary will recognize that by the turn of the century, close to 50 per cent of the population will no longer be associated with the initial two founding nations, in the constitutional sense, of the country. I know that there is much debate about that and that is why I say, in a constitutional sense. This is no aside to the groups of aboriginal Canadians who are very much a part of the Canadian character.

We have to move from that point which is acceptable and I thank the parliamentary secretary for having worked hard to ensure that that that be one of the items in Bill C-40.

On the others, I think we have to come back to a word that he used earlier on and that is the question of credibility. The government has its own vacuum of credibility when it comes to many of the issues that the parliamentary secretary is attempting to defend.

When I made reference to the newscast of about 20 minutes prior to my intervention, I have very good reason to believe that that national broadcast was based on information that all of us will share once again tomorrow morning. The retelling those facts as they were projected gives us an opportunity to enrich the debate. If some of those broadcast facts are not correct, then I think that the debate tomorrow will point that out, just as the debate today is pointing out all the vacuums and shortcomings of the government's position on this bill.

One of the things that is important for us to understand is that, if all of the consequences of Bill C-40 come to pass, as we have been given an indication that they are already coming to pass, we will not be favourably served by small private sector corporations that will fill in the vacuums of CBC at a local level, if in fact they will have the potential for so doing. What will those people from Calgary, Corner Brook or Windsor do? They are accustomed to getting a first-class news service, a first-class exchange of the character of Canada. What will they do and to whom will they turn?

One can see that once we remove another Canadian channel, another component, a subsidiary of CBC, from our dial, the vacuum is quickly filled. It is a fact of life, because we live along the American border, that many of the American stations will receive much more attention than they normally would. We will suffer as a result because we will not have the same access to that which is essentially Canadian that we had a mere few hours ago.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq):

[Editor's Note: Member spoke in Inuktitut.]

• (2310)

[English]

I am very pleased to speak on this Bill C-40, the new Broadcasting Act for Canada. I am pleased to participate in this debate, because it has taken the government several years to get to this point.

In 1985 the Ministry of Communications established a task force on broadcasting policy. Its report, also known as the Caplan-Sauvageau Report, was reviewed by the Standing Committee on Culture and Communications. That committee submitted four reports with numerous recommendations to the government for the drafting of the new legislation.

In the last Parliament in June of 1988, the government brought forward Bill C-136, but because a federal election was called Bill C-136 did not get through the Senate. Bill C-40, introduced in October 1989, is virtually identical to Bill C-136 which died on the Order Paper.

There is a general consensus that a new Broadcasting Act is needed. The current Broadcasting Act goes back to 1968. Communication technology has outpaced the 1968 act in many ways and in many respects. There is a need to take into account technological developments since 1968 and the present global realities.

This bill, however, is not perfect. It has flaws and deficiencies which my colleague, the hon. member for Mount Royal, has tried to correct by proposing amendments both in the legislative committee which studied this bill and at report stage over the past several weeks.

My colleague from Mount Royal, my party's spokesperson on the communications issue, has spoken ably and eloquently about the concerns we have about Bill C–40. I will touch on some of them briefly.

We are concerned about the possible constitutional challenges to this bill. We are concerned about the government's decision to drop the CBC's mandate to contribute to the development of national unity and to provide for a continuing expression of national identity. The government instead wants the CBC to contribute to national consciousness. That is a cop–out. This government is copping out on Canada.

It is no wonder this country has gone through so much constitutional agony and turmoil under this government. This government does not want the country's national broadcasting agency to contribute to the national unity. Unity encompasses so much more than a simple consciousness. We can be conscious of a lot without being unified.

We regret as well that this bill will not make Radio Canada International, the parliamentary television network, or the CBC northern service part of its mandate. Both the Caplan–Sauvageau report and the Standing Committee on Culture and Communications have recommended that these services be incorporated into new broadcasting legislation. Each of these services is a vital component of our Canadian broadcasting system and incorporating them specifically in this bill would have given them official recognition and a parliamentary confirmation of continuity.

I would like to take a moment to elaborate on the CBC northern service. This service is absolutely vital to the northern communities, some of which have no other available broadcast service. We do not want to see any reduction in the northern service. CBC's northern service covers the Yukon, N.W.T. and the James Bay and Nunavik regions of northern Quebec. The service spans four time zones and more than one–third of the total land mass of Canada.

There are 100,000 northerners living in the northern service region, most of them aboriginal peoples. Cree people constitute 90 per cent of the James Bay population. The Inuit are 85 per cent of the population in the Beaufort, Central, Keewatin and the Baffin regions of the Eastern Arctic, and also of northern Quebec.

In the rest of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, native people make up about 30 per cent of the population and are the majority in most of the smaller communities in the far north.

CBC northern service radio produces more than 200 hours of programs each week. Half of those hours are produced in seven aboriginal languages: Inuktitut, Slavey, Dogrib, Chipewyan, Inuvialuktun, Gwich'in and Cree.

CBC northern service television produces four weekly program series: Focus North, which is a weekly northern current affairs program; Denendeh K'eh, a multilingual Dene language program which combines life style features with topical current affairs; Aqsarniit, an Inuktitut language current affairs information program based in Iqaluit; and Maamuitaau, a Cree language program of features and issues produced by northern service in Montreal.

CBC northern service also assists six northern native broadcasting societies in distributing their programming. One is IBC, the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation for the Eastern Arctic, which just recently had a $600,000 cut to its budget and is now in danger of cutting more programming. It has already cut one regional office in Cambridge Bay in my riding. It is also in danger of cutting a very popular TV series which is produced in Baker Lake and is enjoyed by many, many children in the eastern Arctic because it is in the Inuktitut language.

We have also received support from various people from the north, including the regional director for the government of the Northwest Territories in the Keewatin region. He would like us to make sure that there are no cuts to any Inuktitut programming in the CBC northern service as well as other people from Iqaluit and elsewhere in the eastern Arctic.

These aboriginal communications societies are essential components of the Canadian broadcasting system because they do a lot to promote the cultural identity of the aboriginal people in the far north.

We appreciate the references made to the aboriginal people in the bill, but we fear this government is just paying lip service to aboriginal communications needs. We found two references to aboriginal people in Bill C–40. One reference says that the Canadian broadcasting system should reflect the special place of aboriginal peoples within Canadian society.

The second reference says that programming which reflects the aboriginal culture of Canada should be provided "as resources become available for the purpose". There are two points that I would like to make on this comment: Why has the government refused to include aboriginal languages in this bill? Why is programming reflecting aboriginal culture limited by available resources when throughout the last number of months the emphasis by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and by the Prime Minister of Canada has been that it is doing more for the aboriginal people than has ever been done. On the other hand the government is cutting aboriginal languages programming and also cutting the means of communicating among the aboriginal people.

I would like to comment that the National Aboriginal Communications Society's office had to close because of cutbacks.

• (2320 )

Their Micmac News has been shut down. Those are some of the aboriginal means of communications which have been cut by this government.

This clause that I pointed out earlier means nothing in the light of massive cutbacks that the government made to the aboriginal communications in last April's budget.

I repeat: Budgets have been cut. Papers have folded. Offices have closed, and employees have lost their jobs.

The impact of the cuts have been devastating. Why did the government do this? We cannot believe this government is sincere about supporting aboriginal culture with this bill when it is directly responsible for the demise of several aboriginal media, since this bill was introduced in October 1989.

It is a sad but telling fact that the government restored almost all of the funding it cut to women's centres in last April's budget but would not do the same for the Aboriginal Communications Society.

I am glad that the women's centres got their funding back, but women voters outnumber aboriginal voters. The women had an ally in this instance in the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. She intervened.

Aboriginal people, unfortunately, had no such advocate. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who should have intervened on our behalf, did nothing. In fact, he said that aboriginal communications had enough funding. Meanwhile, they are closing their offices, newspapers, and programming on radio and television were being cut.

It is because of situations like this that aboriginal people have no faith in the government's words. This government says one thing and does the opposite. This government professes support for the aboriginal people out of one side of its mouth, while on the other side it is cutting and slashing that support.

In conclusion, I can only be cynical about this bill. I am cynical about this government's commitment to aboriginal communications, to the CBC and the CBC's northern service.

We want to see the components of our national broadcasting system protected and enhanced. We want to preserve national unity within the CBC's mandate.

The CBC has for years been a bond which linked us from sea to sea to sea, and we share it like we share no other Canadian Constitution. The railway went east to west. CBC went east, west and north. Removing national unity from the CBC's mandate is a big mistake.

I urge the Government of Canada to rethink its position through this bill, and realize that it helps in a small way in keeping national unity by retaining the promotion of national unity as part of its mandate.

I stress that the national unity component has to be retained because this government does not understand how to promote national unity. Its concept of promoting national unity is by rolling the dice. I do not think that is a very good way of promoting national unity.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments that my colleague in the Liberal Party has made with regard to the implications of Bill C–40 respecting the native broadcasting programs.

It is this, in particular, that I wanted to go into depth a little more with. Since the Northern Native Access Program was established in 1983, it has been cut back substantially. I should point out that it was created at that time to ensure that northern native people have fair access to the distribution systems to help maintain their languages, cultures and that programming that was relevant to native concerns to ensure that these programs could be produced and provided in the northern communities. When it was originally created, it had a budget of almost $40.3 million over four years. In 1985 and 1986, this was reduced to less than $34 million and in subsequent years was reduced again and again. The 1989-90 funding was frozen at $13.2 million and now in this last hatchet job to the program, it has been cut back to $11.3 million. We have seen a drop from $40 million for the native northern broadcast access program to $11.3 million, an incredible decrease in expenditures for what should be a priority commitment of this government in terms of allowing the expression of a native identity in our north country.

According to the Nielsen task force when it made comment on the program, it stated with regard to the program: "It shows promise as an effective tool for meeting special native broadcast needs and should be continued".

I just want to quote comments made by the Waterways Native Communication Society when they were discussing with the communications committee on a previous bill, Bill C-126, but it reflects on this particular bill. They noted the importance of having a native communications system in the north. They said:, "It is the Waterways' view that there needs to be more aboriginal language productions, programs produced by aboriginal people for aboriginal audiences. Special emphasis must be given to the production of children's programming. The production of more aboriginal language programs should at least begin to counter balance the heavy influx of irrelevant southern programming".

That is a pretty significant statement. In reference to that statement, and also in reference to the drastic budgetary cuts that we have seen take place, I want to ask the member, because I think he has perhaps very particular knowledge of the impact of these budgetary cuts, just how specifically can he see the latest round of cuts and the over-all strategy of sort of economically strangling this northern native broadcasting system? How does he see it impacting with this Bill C-40 legislation?

Mr. Anawak: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. One of the things that we have often heard in this House through my colleague from Western Arctic and myself as well is the danger of something like 38 aboriginal languages being forgotten because of the assimilation of the English and French languages. I would like to stress that there are a few languages that have a very good chance of surviving, of which Inuktitut, my language, is one. However, that too can be in danger of going if the aboriginal language programming by the CBC is cut any further.

As my hon. colleague pointed out, a cut of something like $28 million in a seven year period does not only reflect that it has gone down to $11.3 million. Over the years the cost of living, the cost of services, everything has gone up but the funding has gone down. As much as we appreciate the hard work that our regional directors in the north in the aboriginal communities have done to ensure aboriginal communications programming within the CBC within their ability to promote aboriginal languages, it is getting extremely difficult to keep going, especially among the communities which are a minority within their province or within their regions. We are very lucky in the eastern Arctic that we are a majority and, unless there are more drastic cuts in the CBC northern programming—which I would dearly hope not—we have a good chance of keeping on with our Inuktituk programming.

As I pointed out earlier, programs that are closely associated with the CBC northern service have been cut because of the government's willingness to cut, through the Secretary of State, the programs that were very popular among the children. I again would like to refer to that children's program and another program where there was a character called Johnny in the IBC program. It is in danger of being cut as well.

As I pointed out earlier, there has been offices closed. I, again, thank the hon. member for his question and I would like to stress how important it is that not only should the government not cut any more, it should raise the funding to more acceptable levels within the aboriginal communications societies and communications programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate. The hon. member for Malpeque.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): I appreciate this opportunity to participate in this very important debate on Bill C–40, an act that removes the CBC's mandate to promote national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity.

Throughout my lifetime and, I am sure, for generations, dating back to Confederation, Canadians have often posed the questions: What is a Canadian? What is our identity? Are we any different from the British or the Americans? What is there to being a Canadian, and what is it that binds us together?

These are questions on which a thesis could be written and they are questions to which certainly I cannot do justice tonight in this short period of time, but I would like to share with this House some of my thoughts on Canadian identity and why it is essential that we continue to protect and promote it through vehicles such as CBC.

We are certainly unique from all other peoples and all other nations. For instance, there are few Canadians who would accept being considered one and the same with Americans. Now this should not be mistaken as anti–American. It is simply that Canadians consider themselves somehow distinct from our neighbours to the south.

Canadians have a reputation for being a tolerant people, exacting, even welcoming diversity, a people who love the land and the outdoors, a nation that promotes individual freedom yet respects the rule of law.

Some people have said that Canada lacks a common culture or identity because we are too diverse. I disagree with that statement. In fact, I believe that diversity has traditionally been a major component of our identity, while tolerance is our Canadian way of life.

We have heard an analogy of the quilt made of rags. Alone, a rag does not produce warmth or protection from the elements. When each rag is sewn together by a common thread to make up a quilt, what was once a pile of rags is now a quilt capable of keeping a child warm and secure on a cold winter's night. Like that quilt, our country is made up of many diverse cultures. When these cultures are woven together by a common thread, they make up one of the most beautiful countries of the world. However, if one removes that common thread, the quilt will fall apart. If we remove the common threads that hold us together as Canadians, we may well cause our country to fall apart.

CBC is a common thread that links Canadians together across our land. Because of our geography, there are few means at our disposal to link the dairy farmer in Prince Edward Island with the plight of Pacific coast fishermen, the lumberjack in British Columbia to the fishermen in my riding in Malpeque, or the anglophone Albertan oil rig worker with the francophone shopkeeper in Quebec, northern Ontario or New Brunswick.

If it were not for the CBC in my riding of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, Islanders would be less likely to identify with the concerns and problems of other Canadians. In fact, we would be less likely even to be aware of those problems.

As The National news on CBC unites Canadians from coast to coast, in my province of Prince Edward Island the supper hour show Compass links Islanders from North Cape to East Point, the farmer from Clyde River to the business person in Charlottetown, the fisherman in Rustico to the tourist operator in Brudenell. What I am really saying here is that it creates a better understanding, a sense of community, where disparity seems to be the order of the day.

The province of Prince Edward Island is completely surrounded by water. Besides the ferry and the airplane, perhaps our most important link to the rest of Canada is the media and the CBC. The CBC provides Islanders with a national and provincial perspective on the issues of the day.

The federal presence in our province has already been diminished by the policies of this government. The Tories have already taken away CFB Summerside. They have closed some of our rural post offices. They have abandoned the CN freight rail services. They have cancelled our direct flight to the nation's capital from Prince Edward Island through Air Canada. They have cut our ferry subsidies which link us to the rest of the country. They have cut transfer payments to the province, reducing the federal commitment to our schools, hospitals, and social services. Now they want to remove from the CBC its mandate to promote national unity, which in this time of intense parochial and regional disparity may have the effect of further isolating Islanders from the rest of the country.

This government which has jeopardized the future of our country through its leader's roll the dice approach to national unity now wants to further put at risk our ability to come together as Canadians. The approach that this government has taken with this legislation is indicative of the government's over-all approach to national unity and its abdication of responsibility and leadership. Removing the promotion of national unity from CBC's mandate is not required, is not desired, and its timing could not be worse.

I am proud tonight to say that the Liberal Party is opposed to removing CBC's mandate to promote national unity. I thank you for the opportunity to stand in my place tonight to state my views on the ramifications that Bill C-40 may have for the people of Prince Edward Island and for all Canadians.

• (2340)

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on third reading of this bill respecting broadcasting and to express my concern about this bill, as I did very briefly last evening at report stage.

In my view this is a most ill-conceived measure. We recognize in our party that the bill contains some good points. We needed a new Broadcasting Act in Canada, and this bill provides some assistance in that regard. However, there are serious shortcomings in the bill that we as an opposition, and particularly the hon. member for Mount Royal, has sought to correct by moving numerous amendments to this bill.

Today we witnessed the spectacle of the government voting down every one of those amendments. None was agreed to today; they were all voted down. Only amendments to this bill proposed by the government were accepted. I think I am correct in saying that, in every case. I find that a shocking contempt of Parliament, a shocking abuse of the rights of members to participate and discuss government measures and to try to correct them.

Certainly there is lots to correct in this bill. Even the parliamentary secretary, who I know missed that because he was very busy with other matters, would agree with me that this was a very high-handed approach on the part of his minister. Throughout the debate at the report stage, the minister refused to participate in the discussions, refused to propose the government's amendments by way of explanation to the House, and refused to comment on the very reasoned statements and speeches made by members on this side of the House. I think it showed a contempt of Parliament that we have not witnessed in this House for many years, and I am disappointed that the government took that approach.

Another indication of that contempt, I submit, is the requirement that we be sitting here at this hour of the night discussing this bill. The rules for parliamentary debate are pretty clear that the House normally adjourns at six o'clock. We were unable to obtain agreement from the government that a reasonable amount of time, that is more than one day, would be allowed for third reading debate on this bill. It was made clear that if we could not make such an arrangement time allocation would be used, and so we agreed to it.

As a measure to allow members on this side who wanted to express their concerns to participate in the debate, we had a motion passed yesterday. The government said: "We will agree to allow you to sit after six o'clock. You can debate this bill to your heart's content, but there will be terms".

What were the terms? Let us just look at the little motion passed in this House yesterday afternoon by unanimous consent. In part it read:

Mr. MacWilliam: They wanted to get it out of the way.

Mr. Milliken: What does that mean? What does it mean that there will be no quorum calls or dilatory motions? What it means is that the government does not have to ensure that there are 20 members in this House to keep the House sitting. That is what it means. That is why there is almost no one here. It also means that government members can all go home and go to bed, because they are not interested in participating in the debate. There has only been a handful of them participating tonight. I congratulate the parliamentary secretary for his efforts in that regard. He is the last one here. I congratulate him for participating, and I am glad he did, but his colleagues might have and they chose not to do so.

The reason they chose not to do so was that they did not want to sit here and listen to the criticisms of this bill, which this opposition is entitled to bring forward and raise in this House. Members of the government have fled because they do not want to listen to those criticisms. I submit again that that displays an enormous contempt of this institution, an enormous Tory arrogance of the worst kind.

They do not want to listen to criticisms. They say: "What we have proposed is perfect or as close to it as we are going to get, and no one in Canada can tell us that this could be improved in a way that we have to listen to or that we will make any changes". That is exactly what has happened.

The hon. member for Mount Royal has tried to make changes and even members of the New Democratic Party have tried to make changes. We have proposed amendments to this bill, and the government does not even want to sit and listen to the discussion. The government says: "You people can talk until nine o'clock tomorrow morning, all night if you want, but we are not going to be here and listen to you. You cannot move a dilatory motion, so there are no naughty tricks you can play on us. There are no quorum calls, so our members go home and go to bed", as they have done, "nothing can happen that will upset the House. It will continue to sit and we will not lose our bill".

That, Mr. Speaker, is contempt of Parliament. It is a disgrace. It is unfortunate that the opposition, in order to get its day in court on this bill has to agree to those kinds of terms and conditions to keep the government happy, to allow us to have a fair and reasoned debate.

I want to turn to my concerns about the changes this bill proposes to the CBC, particularly to the division of the CBC into two parts, the English wing and the French wing. That is exactly what the government has proposed in this iniquitous legislation.

This government is the architect of disunity in Canada. Never ever, since the conscription crisis in 1917 has there been so much discord and disharmony in Canada as we have today. The sole reason for that discord and disharmony is the actions of the Prime Minister and his cabinet who are incompetent, who are divisive, who have no idea how to govern this country, and who, since June, have been sitting here twiddling their thumbs, wondering, "What do we now?". They have no more sense of direction than the man in the moon.

Mr. MacWilliam: The roll of the dice.

Mr. Milliken: The roll of the dice signifies their policy. They divide the country. They pit region against region. They are tearing apart the federal government. They will give anything to the provinces. They will sell us all to the United States. They have done it all. They have done all of it in the name of trying to govern the country. They say they are a government. I say they are a disgrace. They should resign immediately because they are such a disgraceful government.

Mr. Edwards: Are you having trouble keeping a straight face?

Mr. Milliken: I have no trouble keeping a straight face on that one. The parliamentary secretary thinks this is a joke. This government is a disgrace.

As I say, the amazing thing was to listen to the Prime Minister in Question Period yesterday. I could quote him, Mr. Speaker, but I will not.

Mr. Edwards: Please do.

Mr. Milliken: He was trying to blame Jean Chrétien, the leader of the Liberal Party for discord in Canada. Of all the outrageous claims! Everyone else is to blame except the Prime Minister. It was the Prime Minister who weakened this country. It was the Prime Minister who started dismantling the federal government.

Let us go through the list of organs of the state that have been dismantled under this government. VIA Rail, slashed and cut. It was one of the first national enterprises we ever had in Canada.

Mr. Edwards: In 1977.

Mr. Milliken: 1997, my foot. VIA Rail was established by Sir John A. Macdonald, the Father of Confederation. It was built as a term of Confederation. VIA Rail has been slashed and cut by this government in a way that it has never been slashed and cut before.

Petro–Canada is now being sold. We have the bill before this House. It will be back here shortly, if it is not now. Fire sale prices for selling off the national assets of Canada for which Canadians paid millions of dollars.

Air Canada. Canada's national airline that provided essential transportation services across this country—sold off. The Post Office. Rural closures right across the country—slash, slash, slash, cut out rural services for Canadians. It created two classes of Canadians, those who in live in urban municipalities with door-to-door delivery and those who deal with supermailboxes because they live in new subdivisions; and those in rural Canada who had their service slashed and cut. That is what this government is doing.

Mr. MacWilliam: That's harmonization.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap says it is harmonization. It may be, but it creates a great deal of disharmony in the country. I am sure he would agree that that is so.

Then we have the free trade agreement where everything is sold to the United States. Give away our energy resources. Give everything away. I could go through that at length, Mr. Speaker, but I will not—

Mrs. Finestone: Even our water.

Mr. Milliken: Even our water, as the hon. member for Mount Royal says, is being given away.

Then we have the Prime Minister giving away the CBC by slashing and cutting. We heard about the cuts tonight. Ten stations across the country about to be closed and the parliamentary secretary says that these are not cuts. He says the government is giving.

I am afraid that his trip abroad has deranged him. He must have got something mixed up because when we hear these rumours on the radio, on the CBC particularly, they invariably turn out to be true, it seems to me.

I have hardly ever heard a CBC news account of rumours and stories about government cuts and slashes that have not turned out to be true. Usually they are on the light side. Usually the cuts are worse than were proposed in the story. If we on this side have been wrong in talking about the cuts tonight, we will hear about it in the morning. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will stand up and apologize to the House tomorrow if, in fact, all these cuts and slashes that have been announced tonight happen. I look forward to hearing him eat his words if that is the case.

Finally, if that list of destruction of federal government programs is not enough, then we can turn to the Prime Minister's roll of the dice for Canadians last summer. Talk about hypocrisy, talk about blaming the leader of the Liberal Party, who is not even a member of Parliament at the moment, for the problems that Canada faced last June.

The Prime Minister is the one who had the responsibility to lead this country, but he insisted on raising the stakes. Instead of saying yes, there may be a problem with the Meech Lake Accord we have negotiated, we may have to try and do something else, he said, it is sign or else. That was his message. That is what drove the wedge between the premiers. That is what so sowed disunity in Canadians hearts, because they said they are being forced into a take it or leave it proposition in respect of their Constitution and they did not like it. Canadians from coast to coast were up in arms about it and the Prime Minister kept denying it. He said everybody supports this.

There was serious disunity on the issue, but the facts never bothered our Prime Minister. He says, "I am not bothered by the facts, I don't care what Canadians think. All I care is that I got the votes from the premiers, they all signed, they have to then follow through and it is sign or else, it is sign or else!" He said it for weeks and weeks and weeks, right up until the last minute and then he did his roll of the dice and it did not work.

Now he is saying the reason it did not work is because of Jean Chrétien. What did he do, weight the dice? What did he do, jump on the dice when they were in mid-air? Did he catch them and throw them another way? What utter rubbish! Yet the Prime Minister has the nerve to stand in this House, of all places, and make that kind of palpable nonsense of a statement.

The parliamentary secretary says it is quite true. I think he needs his head examined, because I do not think there is another reasonable person in this room who thinks that that is quite true and I ask him to find one. Find another person in this room who agrees that the Prime Minister's statement is true. The hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap does not think so. The hon. member for Mount Royal does not think so. I am sure that the Speaker, learned as he is, does not think so. So who does? No one else thinks so. The parliamentary secretary is outnumbered and outvoted on that one.

In my submission, the government is absolutely incapable of achieving or working toward national unity in Canada. This bill is just another example of its abject failure in that regard. What the government has done by this bill is say that it is not going to even try to pull Canada together. It is not going to even try to keep the national broadcasting system of Canada as a national institution. It is going to divide it in half along linguistic lines, just what Canada needs. Instead of trying to create a bilingual, bicultural country that operates as a national unit, it is going to divide the CBC so that one group can speak one language and listen to broadcasts in one language and the other can do the other. It will simply tailor the broadcasting systems to suit the audiences and forget the idea of a national audience of national appeal, of a national system, of a system that tries in some small measure to unite the two language groups so that we share the common culture, we share some common values, we share some of the advantages of having two languages and two cultures operating in a country. I am not meaning to exclude any others by that statement.

This government is incapable of that kind of vision. It is incapable of that kind of understanding of Canada, if you like, and it has been an understanding that has been ingrained in thousands of Canadians for all of my lifetime. I have no trouble with the concept. I think it is a great concept. I think it is a great country we live in, but this government seems hell bent on breaking it up. Their whole attitude is cut services, break the federal government down so that Canada's constituent parts can go and do their own thing, weaken the ties that bind us from east to west, weaken the national ties that help hold us together through things like the CBC and let every province just go off and do its own thing, do it with the United States so everything will be north and south, forget about the east-west tie, make all trade deals south of the border and do not worry about trading with the other provinces. We are not concerned about a lack of free trade between the provinces is this government's approach. Why should it care? Because it is quite prepared to have us do all our trade with the United States, that is why.

It is quite prepared to say: "Well, if Americans come in and buy up all of Canada that is too bad for Canadians. It is the best thing because it is the marketplace at work". That is its approach.

It is not the right approach. It is not the way Liberal governments have done it and they have been in power for most of this century and have done an extremely good job of governing Canada.

What we have had since 1984 is the destruction of the fabric of Canada that has been built up through generations of governments in the past. The hon. member who is here must know that the CBC was, after all, a creation of a Conservative government, one of the few on the list. Nevertheless, it is there.

Mr. Edwards: Unemployment insurance.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. member says unemployment insurance. I do not think he is right in that. I think he will find that unemployment insurance was in fact done by a Liberal government. My recollection is that the amendment to the British North America Act as it was at the time which made unemployment insurance possible for the federal government was in fact passed at Westminster as a result of a request from this Parliament when it was under the control of the Liberal government. I believe it was in 1949. I may be wrong in my date. It was certainly post-war and it certainly was not a Conservative government. The first one after the war in my recollection was in 1957, and we all know what a disaster that government was. It was the worst one we have had in Canada before this one.

Mr. MacWilliam: Almost as bad as this one.

Mr. Milliken: Almost as bad as this one. To look at it from the other perspective, as the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap has so ably put it. It is almost as bad as this one.

Mrs. Finestone: He doesn't agree.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. parliamentary secretary looks as though he does not agree. Probably the realization has just hit him as to how bad this government is. I am glad he has been sitting and paying such close attention to my speech so that message can sink in.

Mr. Speaker, I think my pleas in this case are falling on deaf ears. I would like to say "no ears" but the parliamentary secretary is here and I appreciate that. But I am afraid that even he will not be able to convince the minister that urgent changes are needed to this bill if it is going to be acceptable.

We can only hope that when the bill gets to the other place, if and when it passes on the vote tomorrow—and perhaps some of his colleagues will see the folly of their ways and vote with us to defeat it—we can hope there will be significant changes made by the other place and the bill will come back here and we can adopt those changes.

Sober second thought, Mr. Speaker, seems to work in some cases and possibly, although this bill has been before this House since what, March?

Mrs. Finestone: March 19.

Mr. Milliken: You would have thought that the government might have drawn a sober breath some time between March and now and realized that this bill needed change and might have adopted some of the amendments we proposed, but it has not worked.

Perhaps in the other place reason will prevail and we will see some significant changes to get rid of the more odious provisions in this bill, particularly the one that, in my submission, will lead to further division and discord in Canada by dividing the CBC effectively into two corporations. I submit that is not in the best interests of Canadian unity. It is not in the best interests of Canada. It is not in the best interests of the CBC, and it is definitely not in the best interests of a government which believes that Canada is worth saving as a single entity.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not know quite where to begin but I am going to try to respond to some of the points my hon. friend from Kingston and the Islands has made.

It was his predecessor from that constituency who essentially was the architect of the bill that is now before us, and a wise and sage minister she was.

It is not proposed that the CBC be divided into two parts, and I think the hon. member knows it. The CBC is proposed to have two standing committees of its one board of directors, in each of which committee would participate the president and the chairman, in order to bridge the two solitudes in this country. That is the sole and only purpose of that particular proposal in the bill.

I did not say that cuts would not be happening to the CBC tomorrow. What I did say is that the government was not imposing any cuts on the CBC. In fact the government would be helping the CBC financially in the dilemma that it is now confronting.

On the question of national unity we heard again, Mr. Speaker, the line tonight that he or she who opposes the idea of liberal and socialist interventionism and statism is somehow not patriotic. That, Sir, is just unworthy of response. It is contemptuous of millions and millions of Canadians who have shucked off the idea of statism and intervention and say: "Let us stand on our own two feet in the world" and, yes, in partnership with the United States if we choose but not if we choose not.

Turning to the question having to do with the conduct of this bill through its various stages in our Parliament, I will not go through the history of it again because I have done so already tonight. However, to have it proposed to us that it is a shocking contempt of Parliament to allocate seven hours to third reading of this very significant bill is an unfair accusation. This bill, in the mother of Parliaments, would have had two or three hours maximum, but this is not the mother of Parliaments. This is a Parliament where the opposition has the maximum opportunity to make its point, and I think that nourishes democracy.

I find it rather strange and somehow shocking and disappointing that the hon. member who holds a responsible position within his party and who is something of an expert in the rules of Parliament has abused the terms of an agreement which his party entered into. He is abusing the very terms of an agreement which his party entered into. He suggested that the government has fled because it did not want to hear the arguments of the opposition.

I have already gone on record tonight as having said that I responded to every one of the opposition amendments fully. I explained and defended fully every one of the government amendments in the 11 hours that we spent going through detailed clause by clause study of this bill. Many of those amendments, in fact the vast majority of them, were withdrawn after that agonizing process had been gone through so that they could be reintroduced at report stage to tie up the business of the House further, after the issues had been thoroughly aired.

We have had this described by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands as somehow constituting Tory arrogance, this allocation of so much quite properly to the study of a bill and the opportunity for the opposition to have its views made known on the bill and its provisions.

I knew the Tory great-uncle of this man. He would be spinning in his grave to hear history being rewritten and redescribed as it is being described here today. That distinguished great-uncle of the member for Kingston and the Islands married a lovely lady who remains my constituent in her late nineties. She is the daughter of the founding premier of the province of Alberta, a Liberal premier who later saw the error of his ways and became a distinguished Conservative.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the parliamentary secretary's sentiments in respect of my relatives who live in his riding, but I assure the House that there will be no spinning in any graves except for the misconceptions that the parliamentary secretary is spreading.

Let us turn to one of the points. I do not want to deal with all of them. My arguments stand firmly on their own two feet.

Mr. Edwards: You cannot remember them.

Mr. Milliken: There is that difficulty, but never mind that. The fact is that the parliamentary secretary suggested in respect of the committee that he spent 11 hours slugging it out, as I admit he did. He worked. There is no question that when the parliamentary secretary is here he works. He worked away in this committee, slugging it out for 11 hours discussing these amendments. That may be so, but the fact is that those hours were spent when the committee was in clause by clause study. From what the hon. member for Mount Royal has indicated to me, that was in closed session.

Mr. Edwards: No, it was open.

Mr. Milliken: It was open but, as the hon. member knows, very few people attend those sittings. The committee hearings were not televised. Debate on report stage of this bill was on national television, so Canadians could see what the government was planning to do to the CBC. They could see what the government was planning to do by changing the rules under the Broadcast Act. That was the purpose of bringing the amendments in the House of Commons, so Canadians could see what was going on and make a public display of the despicable way the government is acting in respect of this bill and in respect of the CBC. That is why it was done this way and surely the parliamentary secretary knows that.

Yet, he says that seven hours of debate on third reading is generous. Rubbish, that is generous. This government, since this Parliament began, has taken it into its head—and the government House leader is largely responsible for this—that it somehow can limit debate to whatever it thinks is appropriate.

We can hear the government House leader say: "I think more than one day on that bill is too long." That is his view, but that is not our view. It was not our view when we were in government.

We gave the hon. members opposite all kinds of time when this party was in government. I have read Hansard where debates went on for weeks and weeks and weeks.

The hon. member for Saint-Denis is here. He can testify as to how many weeks the Conservative Party, when it was in opposition, dragged out debates—weeks and weeks.

The hon. parliamentary secretary thinks that seven hours is excessive. He said they would not allow seven hours in the U.K. Big deal. I do not care whether they allow seven hours in the U.K. As I said, this is not the United Kingdom. This is Canada and the hon. member should learn the difference. He cannot always cite the other for examples of how it works. The United Kingdom's parliament is a unitary parliament. There are no provinces. There is no provincial legislature. It passes all the legislation that we do in all legislatures and here for the whole U.K. It is a different kettle of fish. It is a different ball game and the hon. member should realize that.

The second point I wanted to make was that he suggested that somehow I was critical—I have forgotten his words—and that I did not agree with the agreement we had already agreed to.

I am saying we agreed to it because the choice was to have a two or three hour debate or have one that went on into the night. That is why I criticized it and I was very careful to criticize it on that basis. I am not being critical because we got the time or because we agreed to take the time. I am being critical because what we are doing to get the time is saying: "We will suspend all the normal rules and you guys do not have to stay around and listen. We just want to have our day in court and have our chat."

The attitude of the government is: "As long as you just want to talk, we will let you go. But if we have to sit here and keep order in the House and maintain an interest in the debate, then we do not want any part of it and we will not agree." That is the approach of the government, and I am saying that is a bad approach and it shows arrogance, Tory arrogance, pure and simple. It is arrogant, with respect, Mr. Speaker. It is arrogant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): For only one minute, the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the debate tonight and watching the debates with regard to Bill C–40 take place over the last number of months, it is all becoming very clear what the government strategy has been.

We were debating Bill C–40 back in the spring when suddenly it was pulled. It was pulled when the government went into the Meech Lake crisis. I think it was pulled very specifically because the government did not want to be criticized for doing exactly what it is doing, undermining the national unity clause with this legislation.

Suddenly, it went silent and remained silent until the dust settled, until Meech was settled, and until Oka was over. Then, it brought it back in, only to pull it again and to bring it back in a third time. Suddenly, there is such a rush for debate that we had to cram it all into a few days.

The government sat absolutely silent during that debate yesterday. Not even the minister would stand up and defend the amendments and defend the legislation. We got absolute silence. Only tonight did we get the parliamentary secretary commenting, to his credit.

What has been the strategy here? What is the hurry for this sudden rush to put this bill through? It became clear tonight with the recognition of the fact that we have 1,200 people being laid off in the near future with the cuts to CBC, the cuts that had been instituted by the government. That was the strategy. They wanted to ram this legislation through to get it out of the House, to be dispensed with, so that when the cuts came down, when the axe fell, it was already finished.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Thirty seconds, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap. There was an attempt by the government to hold this legislation back last June when it knew that it would be disruptive to national unity. The parliamentary secretary knows that was the reason it was held up last June.

The attempt was to jam this thing through tonight before these cuts got out. The government knew the cuts were coming. It may be that it was the CBC that did the cuts, not the government, but the only reason the CBC did them was because the government reduced the money it had available. It is as simple as that, and that is what has gone on. For the parliamentary secretary to suggest otherwise is palpable nonsense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate? Since no other hon. member wishes to rise, pursuant to the order at adopted on Monday, December 3rd, 1990, the division on all necessary question to dispose of third reading of Bill C–40 is deemed to have been deferred until 3 p.m., Wednesday, December 5, 1990.

Before I conclude, I wish to thank all the support staff who have worked very hard until this late hour.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint–Denis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Saint–Denis rises on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I simply wish, at this late hour, to thank you for chairing so patiently this very long debate.

Mr. Milliken: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It now being 12 minutes past midnight, pursuant to the order adopted on Monday, December 3rd, 1990, the House adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 00.12 a.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, for six long years the government has taken a meat cleaver to Canada's national institutions. It has slashed and hacked away indiscriminately at passenger rail service, health care services, old age pensions, Air Canada, youth employment programs, and the unemployment insurance program. Now it is the CBC that is on the chopping block.

Canadians are learning today that the CBC is closing as many as 10 of its regional TV stations, including a station in Sydney, Nova Scotia, that serves my entire riding, and a French language station outside Quebec, both of which are building blocks of national unity. As many as 2,000 jobs may be cut.

Surely the federal government has a duty and an obligation to enhance the quality of Canadian life and not a licence to dismantle those institutions that bind Canadians together. The people of Canada will remember this government for years and years, the black days of this government and the butcher from Baie Comeau.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, the issue of male violence against women is the foremost and most urgent issue confronting women in our society.

In Metro Toronto from 1984 to 1989, there has been a 48.4 per cent increase in violent crime and a 62.4 per cent increase in family violence. Weapons are now used in 45.7 per cent of domestic cases, compared to 30.9 per cent in 1985. To November 30 of this year, there have been 513 family violence incidents involving firearms, compared to 465 for the whole year of 1989.

Are large urban centres unique? No. StatsCan reports that in communities with a population of 5,000 or less, the homicide rate for the last 10 years was 3.1 per 100,000, as compared to 3.14 in communities of 500,000 or more.

Security of person is a fundamental human right denied to most women in our society everywhere.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, for 18 weeks several thousand families in my community have been trying to eke out an existence on $100 a week or less. We have failed to reduce the callback threshold so that employees will be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

The mood of steelworkers has gone from frustration to desperation to anger. These people are victims of an arbitrary, unjust, inconsistent unemployment insurance program which defies interpretation by even the federal courts of the country.

We ask Algoma to call back 1,870 people as soon as possible. We ask the local UI office to have staff available for the extra workload. We ask the minister to expedite the process, as she indicated to me the other day that she would. Perhaps she could delete the waiting period so that these families in Sault Ste. Marie can enjoy Christmas just like the rest of Canadians.

COMMENTS MADE BY MR. LAWRENCE WILSON

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I have always said there were smart people in the Liberal Party. Mr. Lawrence Wilson just confirmed this today in the Journal de Montréal. Chrétien's chief party organizer feels more comfortable with the ideas of Brian Mulroney. Last Sunday, Mr. Wilson was seen at the Conservative Party brunch, and this is what he said: "I like what I hear. I like the direction Brian Mulroney is taking."

Mr. Wilson also said that Mr. Chrétien was afraid to run in Quebec. He also objects to the Liberal leader's stand on the GST, and I will quote what he said: "I am in favour of the GST; Mr. Chrétien is against the GST, and I don't like the way the Liberal senators are behaving under the leadership of Mr. Chrétien."

Bravo, Mr. Wilson! Welcome to the Conservative Party. Again, I am sure the Liberals will finally get the message. Welcome to the Conservative Party, next to my leader, Brian Mulroney!

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, the CBC is going to announce later this hour the most severe budget cuts in its history.

[Translation]

One employee out of ten will be out of a job, which means a total of 1,200 jobs lost. That is what this government has done, by forcing the CBC to cut its budget by more than $100 million.

The CBC is the latest victim of Tory attacks against our national institutions.

This action by the government has caused 10 regional television stations to be closed, four of which are in the Atlantic region.

[English]

These cuts will hinder national unity, prevent the CBC from operating effectively, and strangle the future development of the corporation. This is yet another blatant attempt by the Conservative government to manipulate and censor the media outlets in the nation.

It is also about time the national media wakes up and calls off the honeymoon with the Conservative government, as the Canadian people already have.

THE LEADER OF THE NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment today about leadership.

The majority of Canadians are calling for lower interest rates. The NDP leader says she wants lower interest rates.

The majority of Canadians wish to see the GST cancelled. The NDP leader called for the GST to be cancelled.

The majority of Canadians want more money spent on the environment. The NDP leader wants more money spent on the environment.

The member for Yukon states she would like leadership, but she is prepared only to show Canadians leadership by followship. Like a hyper pup chasing its own tail, the NDP leader gets herself dizzy just by thinking about leadership.

WORLD UNIVERSITY SERVICE OF CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my regret at the collapse of the World University Service of Canada and at the government's policy on it. It is not enough for the government to pay for the funeral. The World University Service of Canada needs to be sustained and kept going.

• (1410 )

However much bad luck of management is responsible for the problem, there is no suggestion of wrongdoing by WUSC or anything other than its long-standing dedication to service to humanity in a great Canadian tradition. That service has benefited both people abroad and thousands of Canadians, often young Canadians whose commitment to service is validated.

I was a WUSC student myself when I was at the University of Toronto and so were many others in the House, including my seat-mate, the hon. member for Papineau. Nothing I did in school shaped my future as much as my WUSC time in West Africa.

It is more than an error, it is absurd for the government to allow WUSC to go under, and it is certainly not too late for the government to reverse its stand.

NEW REPRODUCTIVE TECHNOLOGIES

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Mr. Speaker, on November 26, Dr. John Stephens appeared before the Royal Commission on New Reproductive Technologies. The services offered by Dr. Stephens consist in identifying the sex of the fetus. Unfortunately, some of his patients have used his expertise to abort female fetuses.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Stephens has decided to take advantage of the perception among some cultural communities that a male child is preferable to a female child. In a country like ours, where women are supposed to be equal to men, it is unacceptable that such practices should be tolerated, and I strongly condemn this application of a medical technique that equates the life of a woman with that of an animal.

CORPORATION TAXATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is time once again for the corporate welfare bum of the week award.

This week's nominees are Empire Life Insurance, which paid no taxes in 1989 and made $8 million in profits, plus received $500,000 in government hand-outs; Insurance Corporation of B.C., which in 1989 paid zero tax with a profit of $90.1 million; and the third nominee is Sovereign Life Insurance Company, which in 1989 made $6.5 million in profits, plus received $500,000 in government hand-outs.

The envelope, please.

The winner is the Insurance Corporation of B.C.

Congratulations to all our life insurance nominees for this unrivalled longevity as the most successful tax busters. They are shining examples of how to live long, prosperous, and tax-free corporate lives.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the NHL Board of Governors will select which North American city will receive an NHL franchise.

On any given weekend, I can visit hockey arenas on Hamilton Mountain and find dozens of young aspiring Wayne Gretzkys honing their hockey skills.

If there is any truly Canadian symbol, it is the sport of hockey. For these reasons, I urge the NHL board of governors to select a Canadian city as the new home of the NHL team. What Canadian city? Well, Hamilton, of course.

As chair of the Hamilton Wentworth regional caucus, I am pleased to inform the House that Hamilton's was the only bid to meet virtually every criteria set out by the NHL. The recently built Copps Coliseum seats 17,000 people. The level of enthusiasm in our city is so great that in a 72-hour period organizers sold over 13,000 season tickets.

An NHL franchise would relieve some of the pressure that the people of Hamilton are currently feeling under this made-in-Canada recession. Members of the city council estimate that a franchise would create over 200 jobs and bring $79 million into our local economy.

I call on the Prime Minister to publicly announce his support for a new Canadian NHL franchise.

INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Clément Couture (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the meeting of the Committee on Industry, Science and Technology, Regional and Northern Development held yesterday morning had been scheduled several days ago. The committee had to cancel its meetings twice last week because opposition members were absent. Yesterday morning, none of the opposition members were present at the specified time, which was 9 a.m. All government members were present. Finally, forty minutes later, one of the opposition members had the decency to report to the committee.

Mr. Speaker, this committee was going through a very important phase because it had to finalize its report and submit it to the House. This is one more example of the careless attitude of the opposition.

FISHERIES

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Fisheries confirmed to the House for the first time that in Atlantic Canada there would be a quota assigned to the inshore fishery. That is going to affect adversely tens of thousands of people in Quebec in particular, as well as in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. On top of that we have the Dunn report which calls for further cuts in northern cod. In short, we have a fisheries in absolute crisis, the inshore fishery. We have a minister who is not lifting a finger. I never thought I would have to say this, but he is not lifting a single finger. People out there are in agony. They are hurting. They are looking to him and to the government for some help in this crisis situation, and he is basically thumbing his nose at them. That is sad. It is uncalled for.

I ask him to return to his earlier attitude when he was a freshly-minted minister and do something for those people who are looking to him at this particular time.

AIR TRANSPORT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada increased the operating hours of the regional control tower at Val-d'Or in March 1989 in response to complaints from the airlines, but today, public servants in Ottawa and the Canadian government prefer a reduction in services and a commensurate reduction in wage costs.

From now on, the Val-d'Or control tower will start operations at eight o'clock, local time, to avoid overtime. The tower will close Saturday evening at 6.15, always in order to save money, with no regard for quality of service.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to congratulate the Solicitor General of Canada on his handling of the Maxime Gariépy case. As you know, two days ago, the Solicitor General signed Maxime's transfer to Canada. It is now up to the U.S. authorities to approve Maxime's transfer to our country.

Mr. Speaker, even when members do not rise in the House, it does not mean they are not doing a good job. We have the necessary tools to put pressure on ministers and senior officials, and I am thinking of our regional, national and provincial caucuses. In addition, the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General, of which I am a member, has discussed Maxime's case. So, chin up, Maxime, and don't despair. Soon you will be back in Canada!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Today Canadians were shocked to learn that the CBC is shutting down stations and services in the Atlantic, Ontario, Quebec and the west, including places like Windsor, Ontario, that have no other Canadian broadcasting station. This is part of this government's effort, its campaign to dismantle vital national institutions and unravel the very fabric of this country.

The Prime Minister goes around making speeches about national unity. He spends millions of dollars setting up committees on national unity all over the place. When he has a chance to do something tangible about it, he goes in the opposition direction.

If the Prime Minister believes in the unity of this country, will his government give the CBC today the money required to maintain these vital services it is cutting, or is he saying to the people of Matane, Windsor and Sydney that to him they are not part of Canada? If so, I say to the Prime Minister that they and other Canadians will never, ever accept this from him and his government.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is confusing the issue, as he so often does in most of his statements.

In a few minutes, the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will announce a restructuring of the Corporation in order to cover a shortfall caused by a drop in advertising revenue and additional costs due to inflation, and also by operating costs incurred through exhaustive and unscheduled coverage of major international events and national crises.

I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that the Government of Canada did not make any new cuts in the CBC's budget.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications talks of restructuring. It is not the restructuring of the CBC, it is the dismembering of the CBC, and this is being done because of this government. It is this government that told the CBC to cut $140 million from its budget in three years. It is this government that approved the corporate plan of the CBC. And, Mr. Speaker, this morning the president of the CBC met privately with the Conservative caucus and cabinet, which undoubtedly approved those cuts, just like they approved the slashing of VIA Rail, another vital national institution. I ask the Prime Minister again will he, today, provide the funding to the CBC to keep these services going or is he saying that what is going on is just a step toward the privatization of the CBC and the ending of it as a vital national institution?

• (1420)

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the opposition mentioned that the President of the CBC met with government members. I think that the President of the CBC is willing to meet all parliamentarians, collectively or individually, to explain CBC's policy and its managerial responsibility. He would be honored and pleased to meet the leader of the opposition or members of the Liberal Party.

The leader of the opposition also suggested that the government made unwarranted cuts in the CBC. Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker! In 1988–1989 for instance, the government provided the corporation with extra funding, some $65 million, for its rebroadcasting station project in Toronto. In 1988–1989, the CBC received another $130 million or so from the government for its broadcasting policy.

These new funds, Mr. Speaker, combined with the regular increases for salaries and other requirements, will add up to over $300 million for the next five years. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government would not do that were it not confident of the CBC. On the contrary, the government reaffirmed repeatedly its confidence in the CBC and will keep doing just that.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people will have no confidence in the government in view of the cuts it ordered.

This government recently struck a blow to communities like Matane, Rimouski and Sept-Îles when it closed down their television stations. If it is really concerned with the well-being of these communities, then why not provide the funding required to allow the stations to survive? Is the Prime Minister serious when he says he wants to secure the future of these communities and that of the whole country?

[English]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Leader of the Opposition is totally wrong. First of all, this government, year after year, had a greater percentage of augmentation for the CBC than for the general government as a whole. So when the Leader of the Opposition says that the government has been unfair to the CBC, I think this is false.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the bill before this House states, and I quote, that "the programming provided by the Corporation should be in English and in French, reflecting the different needs and circumstances of each official language community, including the particular needs and circumstances of English and French linguistic minorities". In that regard, it will become a real joke if this legislation is passed.

Here is the question I would like to ask the Prime Minister: Does the government intend to withdraw the bill respecting bradcasting until such time as the conflicting mandates have been sorted out? Or is the government prepared to provide sufficient funding to the radio and television networks of the CBC?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, every Canadian community will continue to be served by a CBC television station. The budget cuts will not affect the range of the broadcasting services. The Corporation will remain, as always, the mouthpiece by excellence of the Canadian people. In 1990, it is producing better programs directed to larger audiences than it did six years ago, when the Liberal Party was in power.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Anything to not take responsibility for their actions, that is this government's approach to leadership.

As the cuts announced today by the CBC make it impossible for this vital national public broadcaster to fulfil its legal mandate toward the special needs of the region as spelled out in the new broadcasting act scheduled to be imposed today, all we are now going to get is the voice of English from Toronto—

—and the voice of Quebec, of French, from Montreal.

[English]

Will the government restore the necessary funds for CBC to get to take on its regional mandate and to fill its legal commitments, or is it prepared to withdraw the bill until it can be properly concurrent with the needs?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, we have the mandate Parliament gives the CBC, renewed by the bill now before this House. On the other hand, there are problems with a shortfall in the CBC's operating budget. Regarding this shortfall, first of all, the CBC estimated that this year, advertising revenues would total $395 million. Recently, however, this estimate had to be revised downwards to $300 million. This shortfall is one of the problems facing the CBC, and all television companies in Canada are facing these problems, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister.

On November 7, 1984, just after the Prime Minister was elected to this House, in his first speech he said: "Give us 20 years and you will not recognize this country."

In less than six years, the awful truth of those words is becoming abundantly clear: VIA Rail, Canada Post, Petro–Canada and now CBC.

Important national institutions have been underfunded and privatized. Tools for building a better Canada have been abandoned, and now today's announcement of 1,200 jobs lost and 10 regional stations at CBC.

With the widening swath that this government has cut through the heart of this nation's achievements, what is the Prime Minister prepared to do to assist the CBC in retaining its objective of serving as an instrument of this nation's identity and unity?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the member of the opposition has every right to recall the commitments made by the Prime Minister of Canada. A few years from now, this country will be quite different because the economic situation will be different and the government will be in full control of its spending. By taking economic measures we will be able to develop our social services and provide for the cultural, economic and social development of this country, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during last night's debate on Bill C–40, the Broadcast Act, the parliamentary secretary said in the House that this government was doing everything it could to help the CBC.

I wonder if the Prime Minister might answer this question: Can the Prime Minister explain to the House how the hatchet job of $140 million cut over the next four years and the loss of 1,200 jobs is going to do anything to help the CBC?

Can he explain how the closure of regional stations in Corner Brook, Goose Bay, Sydney, Sept Iles, Toronto, Saskatoon and Windsor as well as other areas will help the CBC to fulfil its mandate and its role as the heartbeat of Canada?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to the serious question raised by my hon. friend. This year the Government of Canada will provide over $1 billion in grants to the CBC, in addition to which the CBC has advertising revenue which, as the minister has pointed out, is in the neighbourhood of $400 million.

There is a shortfall on that which accounts in substantial measure for some of the CBC's problems this year, as there are shortfalls in private sector broadcasting, newspapers, and all media outlets across Canada.

Mr. Tobin: There's a recession, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend yells at me that there is a recession. Indeed there is a recession, and all elements of society including the CBC must deal with this new reality, which means tightening our belts.

The total resources of the CBC, including commercial sales, have increased to nearly $1.5 billion this year. This is an increase of nearly 30 per cent since 1984. I think that every year since this government has been here we have given more money on a yearly basis to the CBC. We have proceeded with the construction of a new CBC headquarters in Toronto. We have authorized the creation of Newsworld.

I know my hon. friend is offended by the idea of privatization, but he is probably more offended by the fact that the post office is now making money.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the 103 people in Windsor who have just been told their jobs are dead were told that the major reason for it was the lack of funding from this government. That is what they were told.

How can this Prime Minister and this government possibly justify the destruction of community news in a part of this country where there is no option, where there is a saturation of TV coverage from the United States?

Why is this government not prepared to keep 500,000 Canadians as part of our country by preserving community news in Windsor?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with my hon. friend, if that is the decision that was announced by Mr. Gerard Veilleux, the president of the CBC.

I point out to my hon. friend, and I hope he will agree, that in the six years since we have been here we have increased the amounts of grants to the CBC every single year. They are in excess of $1 billion a year.

The CBC's anticipated revenues from sales are down, but my hon. friend would acknowledge that they are down in the private sector in all areas of the media.

I point out to my friend that the total resources of the CBC have increased in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent over the last six years, while other government operations, which account for $17 billion—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to point out to my hon. friend, so that he can put it in some kind of fair comparison, that the cost of government operations, basically the cost of running the government which includes the personnel costs of public servants, administering government programs, and so on, in 1984 were $17.4 billion. This year they are $17.3 billion, a decrease of $100 million.

While the contributions to the CBC were going up by over $100 million, the entire cost of running the Government of Canada because of the frugality of the approach of this government has gone down by $100 million, and I think that is fair.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it is about the CBC crisis.

At the very time when Canadians are concerned about the future of this country, this government is taking away from the CBC its mandate to contribute to national unity.

But it does not stop there. We are told today that due to lack of funding certain regional operations of the CBC will have to be closed. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this will impair the ability of the CBC to keep this country together.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harvard: I know the Prime Minister has been—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Harvard: I know that the Prime Minister is a bit run down these days, but I want to ask him: Has he lost all faith in public broadcasting? Have he lost all faith in the CBC, and has he lost all faith in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt my friend, the Minister of Communications, but this was the political party that founded the CBC. Because of the management we are trying to bring to the public finances of the country, we are going to return sanity to the public finances so that the CBC can stay alive, grow, and prosper in the years to come. That is what it is all about.

My hon. friend can judge by the fact that when we were keeping our own governmental expenditures down by $100 million over six years, this government found in difficult times the money to build the broadcasting centre for the CBC in Toronto and we found the money to fund Newsworld. Those were major innovations for the CBC and for Canadians.

I think this indicates our commitment to public broadcasting in Canada. Gerard Veilleux is the first to recognize, as the former secretary of the Treasury Board, that the CBC or any other government agency cannot function in isolation. We are all in this together, and we all must control expenditures so as to strengthen the economy in the longer haul.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives started the CBC and it looks like they are going to end it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harvard: We have all seen the rise of western alienation, but still CBC operations in Calgary and Saskatoon will have to be—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. I would ask members to give him the courtesy to allow him to ask his question.

Mr. Harvard: CBC operations in Calgary and Saskatoon will have to sacrifice programs throughout the west. They will be lost as a result of these cuts today. Western Canadians will lose yet another means of expressing to other Canadians their feelings and their concerns.

If the Prime Minister will not allow his own Tory MPs from western Canada to express the concerns of western Canadians, why will he not let the CBC do it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the hon. member that across Canada, in both western and eastern Canada, all Canadian communities will continue to be served by a CBC television station.

The CBC's budget problems are largely linked to advertising. I may remind the hon. member that about 30 per cent of the CBC's budget consists of advertising revenue, and I would also like to remind him that the corporation had budgeted $395 million in revenues this year, and it now has to revise this downwards to $300 million. This is not due to the impact of the economic situation but also to the fact that Canadians have more and more television services, and that the competition and specialized services will tend to fragment TV audiences, as they are indeed doing today.

In the Montreal area, the English network has lost 20 per cent of its audience in the past 2 years, and the French network has lost 17 per cent, because there are more television programs and more TV networks, and because more interests are involved in the television sector in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications.

How could the minister possibly say that there are more and more television shows in Cape Breton? CBC is the only network operating out of Cape Breton. How would he know, anyway? He is never in the country.

• (1440)

I remind him that the station in Sydney is closing. Why is this government trying to create two levels of Canadians? Will he accept the fact that people in Cape Breton and in the other regions of this country do not want to be second level Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in the region of Sydney, like in other regions of Canada, there are more televison channels than in 1984. The residents of Sydney have more opportunities to watch television because there are more television services, including specialized services that did not even exist before. The fact that the same number of viewers have more televison channels to choose from translates into a loss of advertising revenue for the CBC. In the region of Sydney as elsewhere, the CBC will continue to offer services as it does to all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the CBC in Sydney will be lucky to be left with a mobile unit. The problem is that this is not about services to the people. The government is systematically cutting back the revenues of the CBC until it reduces its operations and programming to such a level that the government feels it can be privatized.

Why does the government not admit that this is not about people, that the government is not concerned about the interests and the welfare of Canadians, that all it wants to do is get rid of the CBC?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that the government is systematically cutting back on revenues to the CBC. He has it exactly wrong.

The government has been systematically increasing its contribution to the CBC every year since it has been here. The Government of Canada now contributes in a lump sum a cash amount in excess of $1 billion a year to the CBC.

As the minister has pointed out, CBC's anticipated commercial revenues have encountered a shortfall, as has the private sector station in Sydney, as has CJOH, CFTO and all other stations across Canada. It is part and parcel of the difficult economic times that we are going through.

The actions of the Government of Canada are not designed to minimize the CBC. They are designed to strengthen the economy so that as the economy strengthens we can continue to do more for the CBC and the CBC can continue to play its important role in contributing to national unity and strengthening the fibre of the nation.

GUN CONTROL

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

As early as the spring of 1989, this government promised Canadians stronger gun control laws. Then came the winter of 1989 and Marc Lepine made gun control a woman's issue. Since then the women of Canada have seen nothing from this government but the spectacle of a self-described 'feminist' sidelining her own bill.

On this first eve of the Montreal massacre, the women of Canada want action on gun control. They want action now. Where is that promised action?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was aware of the package that I deposited in the House of Commons in June of this year, she would be aware that the gun control initiative consisted of three parts: Bill C-80, legislative changes proposed to the Criminal Code of Canada, and proposed use of the regulatory power. That included some existing regulatory power and some use of regulatory power that would come into being with Bill C-80. Third, the proposal to create a national advisory council on firearms to provide me with a plan to implement the training provisions, which have been in the Criminal Code of Canada since 1978 and have never been proclaimed, and to provide me with advice on criteria by which we might implement some of the advice that students at École Polytechnique gave me and was reconfirmed by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to outlaw military and paramilitary firearms. That does not require new legislative authority, but what it does require is very careful consideration of what criteria we would use to designate military and paramilitary firearms.

The legislation and the proposed regulatory changes are now in front of a special committee. I am sure the member is aware that if we had confined ourselves purely to dealing with second reading in a legislative committee, the scope of the regulations would not be appropriate for that committee to consider. In this contentious area my proposed legislative and regulatory changes are now in a public forum.

I announced yesterday the make-up of the National Advisory Council on Firearms, under the chairmanship of the Hon. Jacques Flynn, which will address itself to the question of the training provisions, which I think are very important, to assure all Canadians that those who purchase firearms in this country have satisfied a requirement of competence and safe handling of those firearms.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, last April when the minister was appointed she said: "I hope people will be able to identify a difference that was made by a woman justice minister." There does not appear to be any difference.

My supplementary question is for the same minister. Is she comfortable knowing that because of government inaction, a 30-round clip, similar to the clip used by Marc Lepine, is advertised in catalogues across this country, and is available at neighbourhood hardware store catalogues, right next to kids' sleighs and camping gear. Is the minister comfortable with that?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I propose to limit the size of clips and magazines which are available for semi-automatic firearms. That is one of the proposed regulatory changes which I will be empowered to make by virtue of the provisions of Bill C-80. She also knows it is very contentious.

The question of 30-shot clips is not so much one of contention as the level of threshold that we have suggested in the proposed regulatory changes. I expect to be able to bring into effect provisions limiting the availability of those large high-powered magazines for semi-automatic firearms.

The short answer to her question is no, I am not satisfied with that. That is why it is part of my proposal for change. I also believe in the democratic process. I also believe in a process—

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

The province of Newfoundland and Labrador is being devastated by the largest per capita cuts in jobs and programming by the CBC anywhere in Canada.

Seventy of 315 positions are being permanently eliminated. Two out of three TV production facilities, one in Corner Brook and one in Goose Bay, are being permanently closed. All local programming is being cancelled and cut of some $5.6 million in Newfoundland and Labrador alone.

In recent weeks the Prime Minister has expressed serious concern about the state of national unity. Does he realize that when you tear Air Canada, when you tear VIA Rail, when you tear the post office and now, the CBC, out of the regions of this country, you destroy the unity and the glue that has traditionally kept us together. Is he concerned about that? Will he address it now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to address it.

The fact that Air Canada has been privatized and is now found in the hands of Canadians, including many of its employees, and its unionized employees, was a gesture that was widely encouraged, not only by the employees of Air Canada but by most Canadians.

The fact that we have had to act to reduce a subsidy to VIA Rail that was approaching $700 million a year, to try to restore a degree of balance to that, is not something I hope that will offend my hon. friend.

From time to time, there are periods of retrenchment and this happens to be one of them. In the 15 years that preceded 1984, program spending in Ottawa increased at an average rate of 14.1 per cent every year, irrespective of declines in productivity and irrespective of declines in trade. That is 14 per cent a year in program spending every year for 15 years.

Under this government we have reduced program spending increases to below the rate of inflation, 3.6 per cent, which is one of the reasons why we are in the process of being able to restore a degree of sanity because the 14 per cent a year annual program increase would have really resulted in disaster for Canada.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the legacy of this Prime Minister will not be that he presided over the disintegration of VIA Rail, or the disintegration of the Post Office or the disintegration of the CBC, but that he presided over the disintegration of a country because he did not understand the importance of national institutions.

• (1450)

Earlier today the Prime Minister talked about the privatization of the post office. I want to ask the Prime Minister, is it not the real objective of this government, that sees the country as a Monopoly board, to privatize the CBC?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again I apologize to my hon. friend but the question was really addressed specifically to me in regard to previous actions by other departments. Whether I have any regrets about the actions we have taken, for example with regard to the post office, the answer is no. The post office, after 15 years of losses, is now functioning in the black.

Mr. Tobin: It does not exist in the regions any more.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says it does not exist in the regions. Of course it exists in the regions.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

[Translation]

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, we are more than one million francophones outside Quebec. Radio-Canada is the only French national network, I repeat, the only French national network outside Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Why cut-backs in the Radio-Canada French network? Why reduce regional services? Why abandon francophones outside Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, again I can say that Radio-Canada does not plan to cut off televison services to francophones. As it has always done, it will continue to make sure that, through its services, francophones will enjoy everything it can offer in terms of cultural and informative programs.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, it does not make sense to shut down the Toronto TV station and reduce services to francophones outside Quebec without notice and without consultations! How heartless, Mr. Speaker!

I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Why destroy French Canada in the regions?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): First, Mr. Speaker, the government is dealing with this matter today rather than in April or at the end of March because this serves as a three-month notice. That is why we brought the matter up today. The hon. member should not say there has been no prior notification, quite the contrary.

Second, the hon. member will have a severe cultural shock in three months because she will come to realize that there will still be French services for francophones outside Quebec.

WORLD UNIVERSITY SERVICES OF CANADA

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs relative to the World University Services of Canada. If WUSC is forced into bankruptcy, the government will likely have to assume significant extra costs in order to hire experts from other NGOs or the private sector to take over the administration of WUSC's Canadian government funded development projects, overseas volunteer payments and student payments.

Can the minister indicate what those extra costs to the government will be, and how those costs compare with the cost of the government measures to help WUSC restructure its operation on to a sound financial footing?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member would understand, that is a question which requires some detail in response. I will take it as notice and try to get that detailed information.

He would also know that a principle is at issue here, which is whether or not the Government of Canada should accept responsibility for the financial standing of companies or of non-governmental organizations with which it has relations. We naturally try to ensure that those companies or non-governmental organizations are in a sound financial position.

Occasionally, very unfortunate events arise, as was the case with WUSCanada. We are trying to deal with that in a sensitive and comprehensive way, and in a way that looks after people who, in Canada or abroad, are relying upon WUSCanada.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, WUSCanada is not looking for a bailout, just for restructuring money.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hovdebo: Just for restructuring time, not money. WUSC just needs time to get its structure in order.

Does the government realize how badly it will appear in the eyes of the developing nations when, just after CIDA has been ordered to hand over nearly $2 million to the government's Persian Gulf fund, it is seen to stand idly by while WUSC is forced into bankruptcy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no fair-minded person, including the hon. member when he has an opportunity to acquaint himself with all the facts, would accuse me or the government of standing idly by.

We have tried to help WUSC. My colleague, the minister responsible for international development, announced some of the steps that we were taking the other day. Unfortunately they have failed.

With regard to the question of the crisis in the gulf, the hon. member must surely know that among the people who are suffering most seriously from this continuing state of uncertainty, with its impact upon increased oil prices, are precisely the poor of the world.

One of the ways in which we could help them most dramatically would be to bring a peaceful end to the crisis in the gulf, which is what Canada is trying to do.

Mr. Karpoff: Declare war.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The hon. member says, "declare war." I do not think that is the position of his party. It certainly is not the position of ours.

Our view is to support the United Nations, and we would appreciate the support of the New Democratic Party for the United Nations in practice as well as in theory.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada who, last Monday, signed and approved the transfer of Maxime Gariépy, so that he may serve his time in a Canadian penal institution. This is my second question, Mr. Speaker, for we know already the reply to the first, thanks to Mr. Jean-Luc Mongrain: Maxime Gariépy will be 18 years old next January 22nd. It is therefore imperative for Maxime to be transferred to Canada before this fateful date. Could the Solicitor General confirm first the exact date of this transfer and, second, that it will occur before next January 22nd?

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): I want to thank the member for the interest she has shown in this case.

The Solicitor General has shown personal interest in it, and yesterday signed the approval of the application to have Mr. Gariepy transferred to Canada.

That application is now going through the various levels of government and authorities in the United States. We hope he will be transferred as soon as possible.

AIR CANADA

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has cut and will cut 150 jobs in Halifax by next spring.

Customer care is history, and Atlantic Canadians get it in the neck again. Will the Minister of Transport undertake today to use his considerable influence with Air

Canada's board to revoke its decision to close Air Canada's reservation centre in Halifax.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will know that Air Canada is now a public corporation. The shares are widely held.

I think the last thing in the world the shareholders of Air Canada want is the government telling it which reservation counters to keep open and which ones to close.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the shareholders of Air Canada, but I can tell you that the people of Atlantic Canada would like a government minister to speak for them just once in a while.

One hundred and fifty jobs are gone from Halifax. There has been a ruinous increase in landing costs. Our trains are gone. The ferries are going. Our planes are next, and we will not have CBC to tell us about it.

• (1500)

Air Canada and Air Nova have a 60 per cent market share in the Atlantic. The government's privatization policy and deregulation policy are strangling a profitable endeavour.

When will this minister move to normalize this industry and protect our vital transportation links in the Atlantic?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will know that under deregulation the number of flights in Atlantic Canada has increased some 20 per cent over the last five years.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend asked what we could do to help Atlantic Canada in terms of transport. My hon. friend will know that we have approved the increases in the holding room capacity at Halifax airport and just last week I announced a new taxi-way for Moncton and the first gate at the Moncton airport.

We are doing what we can with limited funds where we belong and that is in the infrastructure, not flying the airplanes.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

FIGHT AGAINST DRUGS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A few days ago, the police force of the Montreal Urban Community announced that is 1991 they would step up their effort against drug trafficking and drug abuse with the slogan "Zero-Tolerance".

Is the minister planning to do the same, since it has been clearly established that following the arrival of "crack" on the market and the establishment of many shooting galleries, violent crime has increased by 40 per cent in my riding and everywhere else in Canada?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian strategy is to attack both supply and demand. The government has increased its control and seizure capabilities at the borders. We have updated our information collecting methods and reinforced our contacts with the various police forces throughout Canada. Thanks to the new Proceeds of Crime Act, the various police forces will have better tools to fight against organized crime and money laundering operations.

PRIVILEGE

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION BRIEFING

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my capacity as both member of Parliament for York West and chair of the parliamentary Liberal caucus on a question of privilege. I believe that my rights as a member of Parliament and those rights enjoyed by my colleagues in the Liberal caucus have been seriously breached because of the comportment of the CBC vis-à-vis the national government caucus.

Upon my return from the usual Wednesday caucus meeting today, at 12.30 p.m. I returned to find a message from Mr. Pierre Blaine of the CBC, offering a full briefing to my parliamentary caucus colleagues in the Liberal Party. The message as very clear and concise and was basically that the briefing would not be available before 2.30 p.m. today—2.30 being the time of the press conference by the CBC—with a preference that the CBC would do a full briefing for the Liberal caucus next week.

I find that absolutely offensive, in light of the fact that the government caucus, at their regular caucus meeting this morning, received a full briefing from the CBC, in terms of the cut-backs that have savaged the CBC.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Marchi: I wish to say to Your Honour that all members of Parliament, irrespective of where they sit in this illustrious Chamber, are equals and that the CBC, as a Crown corporation, should not be allowed to discriminate between supporters of the government and supporters of the Official Opposition. The CBC, as a Crown corporation, belongs to 26 million shareholders who happen to be Canadian citizens and it is responsible to them through this parliamentary Chamber.

Not only have we been discriminated against, but the information that I have received from the CBC, as the chair of the parliamentary Liberal caucus, has been completely mischievous and misleading in terms of any sense of equality. I find this treatment of our caucus, and perhaps of the New Democratic caucus, absolutely unacceptable and irresponsible.

It would be my respectful submission that in order to stop this from being a precedent, that you, Sir, kindly look into this situation, because it is absolutely intolerable. We will not accept this on the face of it.

The CBC does not belong in the government's back pocket. The CBC belongs to Canadians and we have every right to be informed on an equal basis about the affairs of the nation, which includes the affairs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the same point, I believe if you will review the Question Period proceedings you will be aware of the fact that the Minister of Communications, in answering a question from this side about the cuts that are going to be made, started to read from a statement on his desk about what the president of the CBC was about to say at a press conference that had not yet occurred.

I think if you review the tapes of Question Period, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that Marcel Masse had a copy—

Some hon. members: Order.

Ms. Copps: —of the statement that was about to be made. That also is a clear breach of the arm's length relationship that should be existing between the CBC and the government.

If you review the "blues", Mr. Speaker, you will see that the Minister of Communications stated in the House that there were comments about to be made by the president of the CBC.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in light of the revelation by the Minister of Communications that he had forewarned knowledge about communiqués coming from the CBC, clearly the arm's length relationship has been breached by this Minister of Communications. He is directing the CBC and he is further directing the CBC—

Mr. Speaker: I have the point of privilege raised by the hon. member. The hon. minister may want to respond.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I find all this very strange, especially the comments by the last member to speak.

First of all, I do not have any statement or press release from the CBC, none whatsoever.

Second, the hon. member should expect the Minister of Communications, who is responsible for the CBC in the House, to have, at the very least, some information on the developments over the last five years and on the projections, which are available to the member if she would care to look at the documents regularly delivered to members.

I am quite surprised, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry for the hon. member's credibility, but I did not use any press release that the President of the CBC might have been about to publish. We already knew at 2 p.m., and even a few hours before, that he was going to hold a press conference at 2.30 p.m. It was in the papers. If the hon. member had read the papers, she would have known.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would never dare say, like the hon. member on the other side, that the party in power has more information. I would never dare, Mr. Speaker.

I do say to her that the President of the CBC, as I already said in the House, would be willing to meet with individual members or groups of members regardless of their political affiliation.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on the same question, I would like to rise to explain the deep concern that we in the New Democratic Party also have with regard to this particular issue.

As my colleague from York West has indicated, the government had previously met with the directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It was provided with the intricate details earlier this morning, well before the press conference, while both opposition parties—the Liberal opposition party and the New Democratic opposition party—have not been allowed that same privilege.

• (1510)

This has placed the opposition parties at a distinct disadvantage to the government in terms of finding out the details of the very serious situation with regard to the CBC cuts. It has in large measure inhibited our capacity to represent the situation, as well as to represent our constituents fairly and effectively.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton—East Richmond is rising on a point of order and I will deal with that in just a moment.

Mr. Dingwall: It has to do with the same matter raised by my colleague from Hamilton East.

Mr. Speaker: I think from a procedural point of view we should be fairly careful here. The hon. member for York West has risen on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Hamilton East has spoken on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap has spoken on a question of privilege and I would like to deal with that first. The hon. member for Cape Breton—East Richmond has a point of order and I, of course, will hear it, but I think I have to deal with the question of privilege first.

I have listened carefully to the hon. member for York West and I will consider the matter. By saying I will consider it, I am not saying that it is necessarily a question of privilege, but I will look at the practice very carefully and perhaps I can report back to the House for the assistance of all members.

The hon. member for Cape Breton—East Richmond on a point of order.

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us listened very carefully to the words of the Minister of Communications today and, as alluded to by my colleague from Hamilton East, reference was made to a particular document that he certainly had in his possession which obviously other members of Parliament did not have in their possession.

I wish to remind the Chair of the provisions of Beauchesne's, particularly paragraph 327 which states:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

I would hope that just out of courtesy to all members of Parliament, since we all saw—and I am sure the television cameras would reaffirm what I am saying—the minister read from a document which ought to be tabled so members on all sides of the House would then have a full opportunity to examine it.

I hope the minister would comply with Beauchesne's, paragraph 327.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can show you all the documents. Not one of these documents belongs to the CBC. This document here is the budget of Telefilm Canada about which no question was raised. The hon. member could have learned that in 1984 Telefilm Canada had a budget of $51 million and that, thanks to the interest this government has taken in Canada's cultural endeavours, the 1990 budget now amounts to $150 million. I have this document and I can table it. It can be found in all official papers, particularly those of Telefilm Canada.

Second, this is written at the bottom of the document: "CBC building in Toronto. Total cost of building: $385 million". It goes to show that Canadians and the government are interested in the future of the CBC and that to that extent the contribution of our government—your government, I mean—to the future of the CBC in that building has been $65.5 million, Mr. Speaker.

I can also refer to another document here which has to do with the over-all resources of the CBC and which can be found in all budget documents tabled here in the House. For instance the hon. member would learn—

Mr. Speaker: I think the remarks of the minister are very interesting, but we do have a very specific question.

[English]

I would ask the hon. minister if he read from a document, as has been suggested by the hon. member. If his response is no, then that is the end of the issue.

BROADCASTING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-40, an act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 3.15 o'clock p.m., pursuant to order made Monday, December 3, 1990, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion at the third reading stage of Bill C-40, an act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to clarify for the House that members of my party did not vote—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dingwall: —because they wish to register their total disgust with the Minister of Communications and the Prime Minister, not only for the content of Bill C–40 but because of the massive cutbacks to CBC; totally disgusting.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that this government holds Parliament in complete contempt. What it has done—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is this a point of order?

Mr. Murphy: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member is not allowed to comment on the vote but, if there is another point of order, I would like to hear it.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I guess the question on which in the New Democratic Party have to ask you to rule on: What is the purpose of parliamentary debate if the government—

Some hon. members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to hear the point of order of the hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the point of order I would like a chance to address is this: The purpose of Parliament is quite clear. We are here to vote on legislation.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

An hon. member: Why didn't you?

Point of Order

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to hear this point of order, please.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose for debate and for voting is being denied in any practical sense—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Murphy: —if a government deliberately announces its decisions, which are effective cuts to CBC throughout this country, after all possibility of debate is ended.

Mr. Langdon: That's right. Absolutely.

Mr. Murphy: This party and the Liberal Party went to great lengths on Monday and Tuesday nights in order to debate the Broadcasting Act, only to find out that after all possibility of debate is ended, the axe falls the following morning.

It affected community after community which members of Parliament represent. They were not given a chance to speak on the legislation after the government made the announcements.

Our whole purpose as a Parliament is being destroyed by the deliberate actions of this government. It is not acceptable. It is certainly more than a point of order. It is a point on the whole question of what Parliament is here for, and why it is important that government respect Parliament.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to say that the member may have a grievance but that is debate. The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

POINT OF ORDER

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very serious point of order. On November 23, 1990 the House was given Supplementary Estimates (B). The rules of this House allow for committees to immediately upon receipt of those supplementary estimates begin study of those estimates.

We had a total of $1,841,442,306 of budgetary estimates to be voted. The vote is to be taken next Monday, December 10, as stated in our standing orders, that being the last day of this supply period.

The standing orders also say that the estimates must be reported to the House, or at least to have been deemed reported five days prior to that, which is today.

My point of order is simple. No committee has met on those estimates. Over $1,800 million has not been looked at by this House. There has been no examination of those estimates because basically the chairpersons of those committees did not call meetings.

Mr. Speaker, I think that you would recognize that this is most important. The purpose at hand is to look at expenditures. That is what this House does best. That is what ought to be done in Parliament. That is what we do with the estimates.

I will quote Beauchesne.

I am quoting from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition: "The purpose of the estimates is to present to Parliament the budgetary and non-budgetary expenditure proposals of the government for the current fiscal year."

Humbly but forcefully, Mr. Speaker, I submit that Parliament does not operate smoothly when the estimates are not seriously examined by the committees. Since no committee sat to study these estimates, I make the following suggestion, Mr. Speaker. There are three possible solutions. First, that the vote not be taken Monday on the last allotted day, but that that day be deferred to Thursday, December 13.

Mr. Ricard: Send it to the Senate.

Mr. Gauthier: If you want to speak, stand up!

An hon. member: He would not know what to say.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: The second solution would be for this House to recognize that since the process has not been the best, we should not today take it as the last day for the estimates to be deemed to have been returned to the House. Therefore, we would wait until Monday at three o'clock. That would be acceptable to us if the committees were to meet today, tomorrow and Friday. We would have no objection to that.

The third possibility would be that by consent, this House would recognize the importance of this process and would not at this time have Monday next, the last day in this period—and I have a motion to that effect which I have given to the government and to the NDP.

By the way, the NDP agrees with me that this order should be adopted by this House. That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 81, (1) the last allotted day for the business of supply for the present supply period shall be Thursday, December 13, 1990. (2) Supplementary Estimates (B) 1990–91 shall be deemed to have been reported from the several standing committees at 6 p.m. on Wednesday, December 12, 1990. (3) All of the provisions of the said standing order shall apply mutatis mutandis.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider seriously this problem. If you do not see yourself in a position to find a solution now, may I suggest you do what you do best, which is protect minorities, protect the opposition in its right to look at these estimates by ordering the committees to sit today. If you do not want to do that, Mr. Speaker, then I would put it to you that you should at least ask the House if there would be a disposition to accept my motion to resolve this problem today.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the House leader of the Liberal Party certainly gave a creative description of the estimates' procedure and what is involved.

The procedure for spending estimates predates both his and my entry into Parliament some 18 years ago. It was brought in by a Liberal government. It provides for fixed supply periods, for estimates to be tabled and to be deemed referred to committees, and then to be reported back on specific days when the supply period ends. This supply period currently ends December 10 and that is very clear in the Standing Orders.

The procedure provides, interestingly enough, in each supply period for the opposition to have allotted days, or opposition days, when they can raise and debate in the House the expenditures in these estimates. They have the opportunity to argue about the estimates, to claim that we are spending too much or too little—it is usually too little we are spending, they always want us to spend more and more—they have the opportunity to do that. Not once, on any of the opposition days, have they chosen to take that opportunity. They have chosen to debate every other subject under the sun except expenditures. Then the accusation is made that committees would not meet.

I made a very quick survey of those within earshot. The Standing Committee on Industry, Science and Technology intended to meet but did not have a quorum because no opposition members showed up. At the defence committee, the opposition members agreed they would not meet because they were all attending the Future of Russia conference. Those are the only two committees I was able to very quickly discuss.

I reject absolutely the accusation that no committees have met. I reject absolutely the contention members have not had an opportunity to discuss the estimates. On any one of the supply or allotted days they could have discussed the estimates.

I wait with bated breath to hear one single suggestion from any opposition member of any significant cuts to government spending because all day long today I heard, "We want more money for the CBC, we want more money for VIA Rail, we want more money spent on the post office. We want more money spent on everything." To hear the opposition complain that they do not have an opportunity to examine expenditures and cutbacks is an absurdity.

The Standing Orders are very clear. The hon. House leader of the opposition is always after me to "stick to the rules". Well, let's "stick to the rules."

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if for once the government wouldn't give Parliament some credit and give us an opportunity to look at these estimates.

The government House leader says that it is not true to say, "no committees have been meeting." That is true. It is also true to say that the consumer and corporate affairs committee has not been meeting and has not had an opportunity to consider estimates because they do not have a chairperson who can call them to meet.

We do at least have one committee which cannot meet. We have another committee, the defence committee, which has not been able to look at these estimates to date.

I do not want to take too much time but there are large numbers of dollars involved. It is appropriate for Parliament and for committees to consider the estimates. It is appropriate for us to have enough time to give serious consideration to those estimates. All that the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier is suggesting is that we extend by about three days the opportunity for committees to give proper and due consideration to the estimates. Surely this is a reasonable proposition, one which would help the process along and for once show some respect on the part of the government to Parliament and Parliament's processes, rather than trying to ram these things through without proper consideration.

I wish to support the resolution of the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier and ask the government, for once, to do something reasonable and give us an opportunity to consider these estimates. Three more days is surely not of great inconvenience to anyone in this process.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think the facts should also be put on the record. The minister got carried away in his arguments and his facts were completely wrong. There have been no opposition days or supply days since the estimates were tabled on November 23, 1990. I made that point in my remarks. Therefore, his argument that we could have debated these things in the House is completely wrong and absolutely beside the point.

Mr. Speaker, I can give you a list of committees; aboriginal affairs, agriculture, communications and culture, multiculturalism and citizenship, the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, and so on. All these committees were given estimates to study. None of them have met. I think that is absolutely uncalled for and I resent the government House leader's arguments. They are completely wrong and misleading.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, just a very brief point. The government House leader suggested that the Standing Committee on National Defence and Veterans Affairs somehow has an opposition agreement not to discuss the estimates. That is not entirely correct. It is important that we have an opportunity. The committee is meeting this afternoon. It has a witness on another subject, but it would be important, and I do intend to raise with the committee even at this eleventh hour, the importance of having witnesses appear on the estimates themselves. But until now, we have had no opportunity to consider the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, there is a particular case that I want to bring to your attention in relation to the supplementary estimates. The Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations cannot meet. It does not have a chairman.

I wrote a letter, along with three other colleagues in the Liberal caucus, the hon. member for Burin—St. George's being one of them, and two other members, asking the clerk of that committee to cause this committee to meet. We wanted to study, among other things, issues involving Canada Post as well as the estimates.

I received a letter from the clerk of the committee, which I am willing to lay on the table of the House, which says that our committee cannot meet. The clerk is unable to make it meet as we do not have a chairman and the government will not appoint one. So in that particular case, we cannot study the estimates. There is nothing we can do about it because the government will not and has not appointed the chairman.

I am willing to table this letter in the House of Commons to prove the point. In at least that particular situation, the case is even stronger why the estimates cannot be deemed to have been reported because the committee could not have sat no matter what it had decided to do. That has been caused by an action, or rather an inaction, of the government across the way.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments to this debate with regard to the lack of committee meetings that has pervaded this place.

When I was first given the critic's responsibility for communications, arts and culture, which was just before the session began, I was quite anxious to have an opportunity to take part in the committee meetings that would be taking place.

Since that time, there has not been a single committee meeting, to discuss estimates, to discuss concentration of the media, to discuss the budgetary cutbacks to the CBC, to discuss nothing. I looked at the options that I had as a member in order to force the committee to meet and I ran up against exactly the same roadblock as the hon. member just pointed out.

The fact is that the communications, arts and culture committee has no chairperson. The former chairperson does not want to play chairperson any longer. We have no chairman. Therefore there is no procedural way that we can put in a legitimate request for this committee to meet to address the very important needs that we need to address.

• (1600)

This is an abdication of the democratic responsibility of the House and it is a shameful misuse of the privileges of the House by the government. It has to stop, and it has to stop now.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the members' arguments with great interest.

There are a few points that I think are essential to put on the record. First, the issue has been discussed at House leaders' meetings and there were some discussions about specific concerns, one of which was the committee on defence. At that point, I talked to the chairman of the committee and asked him about what was going on in the committee and their intention to look at the Estimates or the opportunity to meet. It was he who advised me at that time that there had been an agreement among all parties not to have the committee sit, I think last week or a part of this week—I have forgotten the exact dates—so that they could attend this conference on the future of Russia.

I also know that several other committees, including the aboriginal affairs committee which the House leader for the official opposition has mentioned, have been meeting. In fact, just the other day it recommended a study on the issue that arose on the Oka situation this summer.

Mr. Speaker, my point is this. First—

Ms. Blondin: That's not the estimates. You stole them before we could study them.

Mr. Cooper: Oh, I see. It is really interesting, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the opposition who are very quick to play both sides of the fence.

In fact what has been happening is that a number of the committees have been meeting, but the members of the committee have preferred to look into issues rather than study the estimates. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that is a habit the House been tending to fall into for some time now.

It is very clear. Committees are masters of their own destinies. They have had an opportunity in most cases to study those estimates, with a few exceptions. In those few exceptions, we have advocated—and I renew the offer again today, if we can by unanimous consent—has to proceed with the report of the Striking Committee of the House of Commons and in fact we can have all of those committees up and running very quickly and allow them to do what has to be done.

In fact, what we are seeing instead is that the opposition continues to try to score political points, while at the same time taking full advantage of committee meetings to pursue other issues which they consider to be of importance.

Mr. Gauthier: I just want to wrap up. Having heard what the government has to say, I believe that we should put some facts. There were 108 votes in these estimates—and these figures come from the Table, by the way, so they must have some element of truth—referred to 17 committees. None have met on these 108 votes and none were called to discuss the estimates.

Mr. Speaker, I plead with you to use your authority and to order, today, those committees to meet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have listened to hon. members and I think that I should say something about this at this time.

The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier may well have a grievance. Committees are masters of their own agenda. It may well be that the committees have not reported the estimates, but the House will have an opportunity to consider the Supplementary Estimates B when they are before the House on December 10, next.

If the hon. member would like to propose the motion, we will ask for unanimous consent.

The motion reads as follows:

Point of Order

1. That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 81(1), the last allotted day for the business of supply for the present supply period shall be Thursday, December 13, 1990;

2. That Supplementary Estimates (B) 1990–1991 shall be deemed to have been reported from the several standing committees at 6 p.m. on Wednesday, December 12, 1990; and

3. That all other provisions of the said standing order shall apply mutatis mutandis.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, there is not unanimous consent.

I will listen to a point of order from the hon. opposition Whip.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would just supplement what my colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has said.

Mr. Cooper: We've dealt with the point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: I understand that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is very nervous, very touchy, and very sensitive when it comes to matters of this nature, particularly when the preponderance of evidence is so clear and which will dispute any thesis that he wishes to put before the House.

It is very clear here, Mr. Speaker, that on November 26, 1990, four members of our caucus did, in fact, write a letter to Mr. Fournier, Clerk of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I quite agree with the parliamentary secretary that committees are the masters of their own destinies, but there is a restriction on that. It has to be done in accordance with the provisions of the Standing Orders. This is the response that came back. It states:

> Standing Order 106(3) is quite explicit and it provides that the meeting being requested is to be convened by "the Chairman of that committee". As you are aware, Mr. Garth Turner, M.P., resigned as Chairman of the Committee on September 18, 1990 and a new Chairman has not been elected.
> In accordance with Standing Order 106(3), it would appear that only the Chairman of a committee may convene a meeting pursuant to the said Standing Order—

Yes, Mr. Speaker, committees are masters of their own destinies, in accordance with the standing orders. But now you have a clear example, which we wish to table for all members to see, that this committee is being precluded from considering matters which it believes to be important because the government Whip and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader refuse to appoint a chairman for that committee.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

The Environment Committee as well has not been meeting and has not had an opportunity to consider supplementary estimates simply because, at the initiation of the chair of that committee, those meetings have been cancelled. That committee has not held a regular meeting since the supplementary estimates were tabled. It has held meetings only to consider future business of the committee. There was no meeting on Tuesday. There is no meeting scheduled for tomorrow. Therefore, there is no opportunity for the committee to consider the supplementary estimates.

This is especially serious, Mr. Speaker, given that the Committee on the Environment sought, week after week last spring, to meet with the new Minister of the Environment and the previous Minister of the Environment. In fact, our first meeting with the new Minister of the Environment was last week. Because of the inability of the committee to have those previous meetings, this committee did not even table a report to Parliament on the Main Estimates. Therefore, it is doubly crucial that it have a look at the supplementary estimates and how the priorities of the Department of the Environment are being revised, in light of changing government spending priorities and particularly in anticipation of the green plan being tabled next week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think we should get on with the Routine Proceedings. Tabling of documents.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to 31 petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

POINT OF ORDER

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the earlier point of order. I only want another 30 seconds of the time of the Speaker.

I referred to a document earlier on which I said I would be glad to table. I have now received the document and I want to share only one sentence of it with the House. I do not intend to beleaguer the point, I assure you, Mr. Speaker.

The document which I have received, from the clerk of the committee in question, states that our committee cannot meet, and I quote from the letter, "until a Chairman has been duly elected". It states further that "the only person authorized to convene a committee for the election of a chairman is the Chief Government Whip". In other words, it is only the government Whip who can allow us to study the Estimates because only he can cause the appointment of the chairman.

I have that letter, Mr. Speaker. I will now table it, if the House agrees so that the whole House can see that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there agreement to have it tabled?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BILL C-81—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present a report from the legislative committee on Bill C-81, an act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, with amendments. I have the honour to chair that committee, having been appointed by the Speaker.

I would like to thank my colleagues of all parties for their co-operation. What looked to be a very long process was rapidly terminated.

Therefore, it is my pleasure to table the report and to thank the Speaker for his confidence.

HEALTH AND WELFARE, SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SENIORS AND STATUS OF WOMEN—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour of presenting a report today from a committee.

On behalf of the chairman, the hon. member for Medicine Hat, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the second report of the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare, Social Affairs, Seniors and Status of Women. This report, entitled Amateur Sport: Future Challenges, has been agreed to unanimously by the Subcommittee on Fitness and Amateur Sport and also by the Standing Committee.

It has been an honour to chair this committee and it certainly has been a pleasure.

Pursuant to Standing Order 109, the committee requests that the government table a response to this report.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if this procedure is correct, but I see the vice-chairman of the finance committee here and I wonder if he might like to give a report on the extensive meetings we have been holding in the last week or so.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is not unanimous consent.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, Thursday will be the anniversary of the tragedy of the murder of 14 young ladies in Quebec. On Thursday morning a number of members from all sides of the House are going to be in Montreal for that particular occasion. As a result of that, we would ask that there be consent given for the following motion:

> That on Thursday, December 6, 1990, that at three o'clock p.m., the House will revert to Statements by Ministers, with the usual responses.

This will simply allow members to attend the events in Montreal and yet to come back to the House at three o'clock that afternoon for the ministerial statement rather than the usual time, so that we can pay our respects in the House as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Hon. members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have five petitions to present in opposition to the goods and services tax.

The petitioners are from across Canada and in particular from here in Ontario. They too find that the proposed goods and services tax with regard to magazines, books, and newspapers to be totally unacceptable.

The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw the goods and services tax immediately.

CANADA POST

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present petitions from 537 residents of the community of Port Alberni in British Columbia to add to hundreds of names previously submitted criticizing the government's destructive mismanagement of Canada Post Corporation and its tendency to ignore Canada Post Corporation's 1981 mandate to improve customer service and labour relations.

In the Comox—Alberni riding, Canada Post shut down rural post offices, closed down sorting facilities, privatized parcel and counter services, and the result has been a decline in employee morale and customer services.

Specifically, my constituents request that Canada Post Corporation be instructed to keep existing outlets, operate longer hours, expand revenue generating services, stop privatizing and start increasing services to raise revenues.

FOOD AND DRUGS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present this petition today that is signed by residents who live in Scarborough, Ajax, Etobicoke, Oakville, Mississauga, Toronto, Whitby, Whitevale, Pickering and London.

The petitioners are most concerned about the packaging of food and the labelling on the packaging as a result of the death in Scarborough of a young 15 year old. The mother of the 15 year old lady who passed away has instituted petitions across the country to try to get some changes made to the regulations relating to packaging so that other young people will not have the same result of this severe allergy reaction that Robyn Allen had a few months ago.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to enact legislation amending the food and drug regulations in order to require manufacturers to list specific food ingredients and additives used in pre-packaged foods.

Additionally to this is to require restaurateurs and food retailers to provide to customers the list of all ingredients that are used in the prepared foods.

[Translation]

PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I wish to table a petition from residents of Senneterre and Belcourt, in which your petitioners humbly pray and call upon the Government of Canada to scrap the so-called Hill project which would spend $68 million on an underground parking garage and shopping mall under the Parliament Buildings, and to acknowledge the need for preserving the environment and historical character of the buildings and the Parliament Hill site in Ottawa.

Your petitioners also state that members should continue to park as they do now, behind the Parliament Buildings and outside, like factory workers, and that the Government of Canada has more important priorities than building an underground parking garage and shopping mall on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Prud'homme: What a harangue!

[English]

FOOD AND DRUGS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of citizens of the greater Toronto area who spend their lives with life threatening allergies and whose health and possibility of normal living would be improved if packaging legislation listed the ingredients in those packages.

The petitioners humbly pray that Parliament will enact legislation that would give them that protection.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Questions Nos. 336 and 364.

Due to the length of these questions, I ask that they be printed in Hansard as if read.

A FLOOD CONTROL STUDY INVOLVING THE TOWN OF MALARTIC

*Question No. 336—Mr. Saint-Julien:

1. Have Transport Canada, CN and Environment Canada conducted a flood control study involving the town of Malartic (Malartic River) and, if so, what was the cost of this study?

2. Have any flood control programs been funded and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): I am informed as follows:

1. Transport Canada, CN and Environment Canada have not conducted a flood control study concerning the town of Malartic (Rivière Malartic).

2. Transport Canada, CN and Environment Canada have not funded any flood control programs involving the town of Malartic (Rivière Malartic).

WORK DONE BY THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

*Question No. 364—Mr. MacWilliam:

Is any work done by the Department of Communications for the Department of National Defence and, if so (a) what is its nature (b) in particular, is any work done for the Communications Security Establishment and, if so (i) what is its nature (ii) out of which departmental or agency budget is it paid for (c) in particular, is any work done for the Canadian Armed Forces Supplementary Radio System and, if so (i) what is its nature (ii) out of which departmental or agency budget is it paid for (d) do any representatives of the Department of Communications serve as members of the Communications Research Technical Group (CRTG) or successor bodies to the CRTG and, if so, what is (i) the name of the body (ii) the specific purpose of the DOC representative on such a body?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): In January 1969, it was agreed between the Postmaster General and the Minister of National Defence that the newly-created Department of Communications would carry out defence-oriented projects. Research and development activities have been carried out on behalf of the Department of National Defence since that time.

a) The nature of the work is defence-oriented communications research and development, with emphasis on communications which do not rely on satellites.

b) All of the work done by the Department of Communications for the Communications Security Establishment is negotiated with and sponsored by the Chief of Research and Development at the Department of National Defence, through the Defence Research Establishment—Ottawa.

c) All of the work done by the Department of Communications for the Canadian Armed Forces Supplementary Radio System is negotiated with and sponsored by the Chief of Research and Development at the Department of National Defence, through the Defence Research Establishment—Ottawa.

d) The Department of Communications has no involvement with the Communications Research Technical Group or any successor bodies.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Ms. Copps: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have two questions on the Order Paper, questions Nos. 379 and 380 that were tabled on October 15.

They result from a lay-off of several hundreds of people across this country from various companies that have received government bailouts, including Varity Corp. and Tridon. The list goes on.

• (1620 )

All I have asked for is a simple listing of all four profit corporations that have received government funds, under what programs have they received these funds and for what purposes.

The government is muzzling this issue because it is hiding the true fiscal facts from the Canadian taxpayers. I want an answer to these questions. Canadian taxpayers deserve to know why the millions of dollars that they use to prop up companies like Varity Corporation and Tridon are now being used to subsidize companies' hasty exit from Canada as they go to the United States.

I need this information to do my job as industry critic. I resent the fact that the ministry of industry and the government is preventing me from doing my work by keeping these figures secret. I would hope that at the earliest opportunity my Order Paper questions will be responded to.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member is getting so upset. Her rather simple question requires us going through 16 departments to pursue this information. As a result of that, the questions are being looked at at the moment. The answers are being prepared, but it does take a fair amount of time to go through 16 departments.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr.

Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers P–33 standing in the name of the hon. member for Northumberland.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all documents related to the report prepared by the Canadian International Development Agency in August 1990 for Treasury Board regarding CIDA's decentralization program.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the documents requested cannot be released because they contain cabinet confidences as defined under section 69 of the Access to Information Act.

I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw her motion.

An hon. member: Transfer for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Transferred for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have a letter of notice under Standing Order 52 from the hon. member for Okanagan–Shuswap that arrived before notice from the hon. member for Mount Royal. I will listen to the on. member for Okanagan—Shuswap first and then I will recognize the hon. member for Mount Royal.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as you know, earlier today I served notice by way of written letter that I intended to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 52 to seek the adjournment of the House for the purposes of debating the imminent closure of the CBC broadcasting facilities in a number of Canadian municipalities.

Although the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reports to Parliament through the Ministry of Communications, in fact, Mr. Speaker, as you know, it operates at arm's length from the government.

The only appropriate way for parliamentarians to direct the CBC in its use of public funds is, of course, through parliamentary debate, not through direct government intervention. While some parliamentarians, I submit, had an opportunity to debate this issue directly with the president of the CBC this morning, they did so in a private meeting with the government caucus earlier today, that same privilege and courtesy was not extended to the members of the opposition. The president did not seek the opportunity in the morning to speak to the concerns of parliamentarians on the opposition side of the House. Nor has the right of Canadians to open public debate on this issue of national importance been fulfilled.

In summarizing, and for that reason, Sir, I ask that the House provide an opportunity for this most urgent debate to occur. For that reason, I beseech you, Sir, with the request that this house do adjourn for that purpose.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the new critic in the NDP Party took my suggestion to heart and wrote a few moments before I did. He pleaded very well for the consideration of the House to adjourn and address a very serious and urgent national issue, the stricken condition of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I believe that with respect to the parliamentary channel which will be affected by these decisions, Radio Canada International, which will be affected by this decision, as well as the people from coast to coast, it is up to this House to debate this very serious issue and I hope you will favourably consider this request.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have listened to both hon. members and have had an opportunity to consider this. I do not feel that I can allow an emergency debate at this time.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, November 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C–91, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act and other acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this bill that seeks to amend the Financial Administration Act.

The bill, because of its fairly wide sweeping nature, gives us the opportunity to make a few points about this government's performance and, Lord knows, there is much that can be said about the performance of this government, and not very much of it complimentary.

My friend from Calgary Southeast nods his approval to every word I say. Or, is he just so glad that he is still on the backbench at this particular time and not on the frontbench where he would have to bear direct responsibility for it? He is not completely absolved of course because he is still at least nominally a supporter of the government, and I stress "nominally" because I know his commitment to his constituents and to Canada, a commitment which I suggest prevents him from being a very enthusiastic supporter of some of the things this government is doing at this particular time.

As I said, Bill C-91 seeks to amend the Financial Administration Act in several ways. It allows me the opportunity to pick up where I left off a few days ago when we were discussing another related matter. I was explaining to you, Mr. Speaker, rather concisely, as is my usual form, and to my good friend from Gander—Grand Falls and others who were in the Chamber, as he is always in the Chamber, why it was that I chose to characterize our beloved Prime Minister as a wrecking ball. I was saying that in a somewhat warped sense it was some kind of a compliment. My friend from St. John's East will know exactly what I am talking about here.

A wrecking ball is not something that is flayed without direction. That is a loose cannon. A loose cannon on a deck can do a lot of damage because it has nobody orchestrating its movements but the weather, the wind, and itself. It can go in any direction at any time, depending on the whim of the wind, the slant on the deck, and the direction of it. The result is that it can do untold damage to any above deck structure. A loose cannon is not to be confused with a wrecking ball.

A wrecking ball, contrary to the image that it conjures up, is a very precise instrument. In the right hands and with the right pre-planning it can damage, yes, but damage in a predetermined way. The controllers of that wrecking ball know exactly what it is they want done. By appropriate orchestration and pre-planning, they can see that that ball does only the damage intended and no other damage. That is the basic difference between a loose cannon, I submit, and a wrecking ball.

• (1630)

Why, then, do I not just go all hog and call the Prime Minister a loose cannon? That would be wrong. He is no loose cannon. He is not just rolling around out of control. He knows exactly what he is up to. He is a wrecking ball, yes. He is doing damage, yes, but it is prescribed and predetermined damage. It is the damage that says, as it did recently when the government decided to reduce expenditures by $350 million, to rural Canada: "We are going to take away from you $12 million in agricultural funding". It is the damage that says to fisheries: "We are going to take away $11 million". It is the damage that says to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency: "We are going to take away $640,000". So it goes. It is that kind of pre-planned wrecking ball damage.

If we talk about fisheries—and I am delighted to see my friend, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in the House—and about finding another $11 million, the question is: How do we find another $11 million without cutting into essential programs?

I will use an analogy that will be understood by most members of this House. Certainly it will be understood in parts of this country where they still use the soup bone to get a last bit of nourishment from the bit of beef they had the day before for dinner. I say to my friend from Gander—Grand Falls that this is the kind of analogy with which he and his people would identify with. They, like my people in Burin—St. George's, often resort to the soup bone. This is not because they are all poverty stricken, although many of them are hurting, but because they are resourceful. They do not believe in throwing away anything. The analogy I am reaching for is that however good the soup bone is and the bit of meat that might be left on it and the pot of soup it might make, you cannot have a steak dinner on a soup bone.

In the same context, you cannot find in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, money that is no longer there. You cannot have the luxury of cutting from fisheries and oceans money that is so desperately needed. Indeed, at this particular time there ought to be a fairly massive shift of funding into fisheries and oceans and other departments.

Let me address the expenditure cuts of last week amounting to $350 million in the context that the Prime Minister brought them forward. In fairness to him, he said that these cutbacks were being implemented in relation to the expenditures we were incurring in the Persian Gulf.

He will find no argument from this member. I believe he will find no argument from any member of this Chamber that we must pay our way if we incur certain expenses in the Persian Gulf or wherever. We must have a financial plan to ensure that we are not out spending like a drunken sailor but that we are spending in a way that we know we can pay the bills when they become due. I have no argument whatsoever with the marvellous concept that if we are to incur expenditures in the Persian Gulf or wherever, we ought to be there with a plan as to how we are to pay the bills.

I also say to the Prime Minister and others who are saddled with the need to find ways to pay the bills in the Persian Gulf, that these are commitments that every Canadian would proudly stand behind. There is a need to ensure that our interests in the Persian Gulf are adequately protected. However there is a but.

I understand that the government has to find ways to meet the financial obligations in the Persian Gulf, and with that I have no argument. I have great difficulty with the way it is being done. I believe it is unconscionable that at a time when fisheries is hurting it cuts even more deeply into the soup bone I mentioned earlier. At a time when agriculture is on its knees, the government is wanting to take another $12 million. At a time when the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is already strapped for funds, it is reaching out once more to take money from it. At a time when we need infrastructure and expenditures in transport in Atlantic Canada, it is reaching in and taking out $31 million. At a time when the government has already cut the guts out of its commitment to unemployment insurance, it is now going to the Department of Employment and Immigration and reaching in for another $25 million.

I have no difficulty with the idea that there is a need to meet our commitments in the gulf. I have much difficulty with the way it is being done. If the government wants a way to find that $500 million, it is fairly simple. It can renege on that cowardly and secret commitment it made to the Americans. The former member for York–Peel, Mr. Sinclair Stevens, mentioned it a few days ago in the press. He publicly confirmed what we have been saying for four or five years, that there had to be a cooked deal on interest rates. There is no other explanation why our interest rates are 5 percentage points higher. I say to my friend from St. John's East that there is no explanation for that. I have always understood the idea that they ought to be maybe marginally higher.

Mr. Reid: You told us that we can't manage the economy, and we stabilized the interest rate.

Mr. Simmons: I missed the brunt of what my friend from St. John's East was saying. I invite him one more time.

Mr. Reid: You never understood me.

Mr. Simmons: I understand him all too well. I just do not agree with him. There is the difference. I even admire the way he defends his stands, however wrongly arrived at.

Mr. Richardson: That's the Christmas season.

Mr. Simmons: As I was saying, the member has no worries about his intellectual stature. It is well up there. I have no difficulty with that at all. The physical height was not of his doing, but what he has done with what he had is marvellous and I congratulate him.

Let us get back to the subject at hand. I have something to say to the hon. member for St. John's East and to others. My good friend from Burlington is chafing at the bit to respond to what I have to say, but would he hear first what I have to say. There is no earthly reason he can give this House as to why our interest rates ought to be 5 percentage points higher than they are in the States.

I can buy the idea that maybe they ought to be marginally higher, a point or point and a half, to attract some investment over the border. However, they ought not to be 5 per cent. There had to be some convoluted reason why they were, and Sinc Stevens gave us that convoluted reason the other day when he said publicly that there was a deal back there, something that many of us have felt for a long time. Otherwise, in the absence of an undertaking to artificially keep those rates high, there is no market reason why they would be as high. There had to be tampering, and that is what Sinc Stevens told us the other day. I understand that his former colleagues now want to disown him on that, but that is between him and them. I am not here to make the brief for him. What I am saying is that unwittingly or otherwise he let the cat out of the bag the other day. We now know. We now have confirmed what a lot of us suspected for a long time.

I come to the point as it relates to today's debate. If the government wants to find $500 million or whatever amount to finance its gulf operation, I have a suggestion for it. Cut interest rates by 1 per cent, and it will find not $500 million but $1.7 billion, because that is what will be generated. As my hon. friend from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell well knows, what will be generated by 1 percentage point cut in the interest rate will be $1.7 billion.

• (1640)

Let me say it differently. Our commitment in terms of deficit reduction will go down. Our required commitment will go down by $1.7 billion just by cutting our interest rates 1 per cent. If the government wants a sure way, a quick way and a painless way of paying the bills in the gulf, I give that one to my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, without charge.

Mr. Boudria: Carried. Let's do it now.

Mr. Simmons: My friend from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, being a charitable man, jumps to the conclusion that the government will take it because it is sensible. I say to him that had it been of the inclination long ago to take things that are sensible, we would be in a lot less trouble in this country than we are.

The reason for which we are in the financial mess we are in is that this government paid lip service right back in the fall of 1984 when the minister brought down his first budget after the September election. It is worth reading. I went back the other night and read it again. I got a kick out of Grimm's Fairy Tales when I was younger, but this one really turns you on. If you want to read a modern day myth, you should hear what the Minister of Finance actually said with a straight face. He said to all of Canada back in late 1984 what he was going to do to bring down the deficit, how it was going to be a new world, how it was going to be marvellous out there, and everything was going to be hunky-dory.

We are in 1990 and we know what hunky-dory is. Hunky-dory is an unemployment rate of 18 per cent in Newfoundland, higher than it has been in years. The unemployment rate is skyrocketing all over the country. People are being pummelled in terms of their own unemployment insurance. People are being pummelled in terms of their jobs in the fishery. The government allowed overfishing to get completely out of hand before it even began to pay lip service.

I stood in this House in December 1988, soon after the November election that year, and I raised the question of foreign overfishing. My hon. friend from St. John's West, the Minister for International Trade and the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the now Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, laughed me out of the place. They literally laughed me out of the Chamber because I would suggest that there was a problem. More to the point, they tried to laugh me out of the place because I suggested that the solution was to start getting tough with the European Community about the overfishing by Spain and Portugal in particular.

That year, 1988, was the fourth year of scandalous, criminal overfishing. The Portuguese and the Spanish as part of the European Community were allowed in 1985 to take 23,200 tonnes. In that year, they took 172,000 tonnes. The next year they took 12 times their quota, and so it went on. Four years after, I was the first person in four years to raise it in this House. Not one person raised it publicly in 1985, 1986, 1987 or 1988; it was not raised publicly. I raised it here for the first time in December 1988, and I was told I did not know what I was talking about.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask you to go back and read the words of the member for St. John's West and the minister of fisheries as he then was. Then read the press release put out last week by the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans from New Brunswick and the Minister for International Trade. Do you know what they said? Almost word for word, they said what I was saying in December 1988 about the nature of the problem over there and what needs to be done about it. They were saying what my hon. friend from Gander—Grand Falls has been saying and what my hon. friend from Bona-vista—Trinity—Conception has been saying. We three, not to ignore the others from Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada, sit literally on the ocean; our ridings sit facing the ocean. What happens out there very seriously impacts the ability of our people to earn a livelihood because their livelihood is the ocean. If the Portuguese, the Spanish and the French take it, our people cannot have the same fish the next day. You cannot catch it twice.

If a government of whatever political stripe stands idly by, or aids and abets the process by silence for four years, then our people suffer and our plants close, not because the resource is not there but because somebody else is getting their claws on it before our people do, aided and abetted by a government that ought to be protecting our interests.

Mr. Speaker, I see from your signal that I am getting close to the end of my allotted time. I know that before you became a very able Acting Speaker, you were a very able football player and I suspect that some of the signals I am getting now are about football. I do not know much about football, but I think the general message is I should sit down fairly soon. I will try to do that within a minute. My friend from St. John's is much more direct. He wants more.

I am sure he will recognize the truth of what I said about the overfishing and the fact that, as they say in French, Mieux vaut tard que jamais, better late than never. Even if my friend from St. John's West and the Minister of Fisheries have come lately to the job, lately to the need, lately to the realization that something has to be done about the overfishing, I say to them, better late than never. A lot of damage has been done, a lot of jobs have been lost, but at least by getting in now, five years late, they are not going to be 10 years late, and for that we can be thankful.

This Financial Administration Act needs amendment. All the amendments in the world are absolutely useless, absolutely beside the point, if we do not have in government somebody who administers that act competently. That right now is the crux of the problem. It is why our people are suffering. It is why the government is going in all the wrong directions to fund our overseas commitment in the Persian Gulf.

If it would instead get a sensible interest rate policy, fire John Crow and get someone there who understands how people are hurting, who understands that government is not first a business. It is an enterprise which ought to look after the needs of people. If government were a business alone, we would not need a government. We would just have one of the big multinational corporations run the whole thing for us. We need government, but by that, we need a government worthy of the name. That is our problem right now.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burin—St. George's in the course of his comments made the remark that someone had said to him that he did not know what he was talking about. I have to concur with whoever that was.

In the course of his remarks he said that Mr. Stevens had made some comment about interest rates. He should read the newspapers again. There was no comment made about interest rates at all. Mr. Stevens apparently was reflecting on a conversation he had with the former Secretary of Commerce of the United States, Mr. Baldrige. They were talking about the level of the dollar, not the level of interest rates.

They were not talking about interest rates at all and that was confirmed by the Minister for International Trade of the day who is now in the Senate, the Minister of Finance, the chief negotiator for the government, the deputy negotiator for the government and several others who were involved in it. There was no mention of interest rates whatever, no mention of the dollar whatever.

Mr. Simmons: I thank my friend from Burlington. As usual he is half right. Let me deal with the first half first and then I will come to the matter about the interest rate versus the dollar. On the first half he said that I had said that I was told that I did not know what I was talking about. The answer to his question as to who told me was in my earlier speech. The member for St. John's West and the then Minister of Fisheries said I did not know what I was talking about when I talked about the damage overfishing was doing.

If he wants to stand in front of 100,000 fishermen in Atlantic Canada and tell them there is no overfishing, then he had better try harder and shout louder because the message is going to be difficult getting through when people sit in their homes in Seal Cove—I know he does not want to hear this, but I am going to tell him anyway—people sit in their homes in Seal Cove. They see their stocks being raped by fishermen from France, Spain and Portugal. Yes, I knew what I was talking about. Whether the member for Burlington agrees that I knew does not bother me. Let me thank him and say that he is absolutely right on the second. I made an error. I was inadvertently saying interest rates. Of course, what Mr. Stevens had to say was about the dollar. I thank him very much for correcting the record on that.

• (1650)

I believe he will agree that if you follow the argument through that I was making, it applies equally to the dollar as it does to interest rates because the two matters are related.

The argument basically was that there had been a convoluted undertaking by the Government of Canada to a foreign power to give that government a say, leverage, in our internal affairs. The level of our dollar is wiping out the exports in Newfoundland on fish, pulp and paper, and mining. It is wiping them out because of the level of the dollar.

Now we know what we have suspected for a long time, that our jobs in Newfoundland and elsewhere in Atlantic Canada—wherever there are resource industries with exports flowing from them—are being sacrificed because according to Mr. Stevens, and confirmed by the minister as the member for Burnaby has reminded us, there was a deal to artificially peg the level of the dollar up around 85 cents to 90 cents—85 at the moment but the objective was close to 90.

Mr. Boudria: By increasing interest rates.

Mr. Simmons: In the process, they sacrificed thousands of jobs. Of course, as my friend for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell reminds me, and the member for Burlington will well know, the matter of how the dollar got to be up close to 90 is not exactly unrelated to interest rates and their level, and vice-versa.

I thank the member very much for correcting me. It goes to show that once in awhile one can make a mistake in this House. There is somebody alert here, like the member for Burlington to put me on the right track. I thank him for that. In the process, I thank him for allowing me to make the point that the high dollar is also killing jobs in Newfoundland the rest of Canada.

Mr. Kempling: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, near the end of the member's speech, he mentioned the word "competence", I believe it was. I am honestly surprised that anyone who was in a Liberal government with any knowledge of the spending habits of that party could even talk about restraint.

Let me just give you a couple of figures, Mr. Speaker. In the five years prior to us assuming power in 1984, the average level of spending by the Liberal government, excluding interest rates, if I recall correctly, was over 14 per cent. It doubles in about five years at that rate of expenses. The previous five years to that was a little over 10 per cent as I recall. The previous five years to that, again under the Liberal government was over 17 per cent a year.

In six years, our average annual increase has been a marvellous 3.5 per cent, under the rate of inflation. We never hear them mention that type of thing because they are too embarrassed about their 15-year record—and they should be—when spending got totally out of control by that previous government.

We have turned from an operating deficit to an operating surplus, a turnaround of about $25 billion. They have the nerve to question the competence of the track record of this government. I wish he would look back on his own and maybe we could chat a bit about that when I see him in the gym tomorrow morning.

Mr. Simmons: I say to my friend for Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville all of that was fair play except the last sentence. The last sentence is getting dangerously into my personal life when he talks about our being in the gym at seven o'clock in the morning trying to keep in shape. He is very good company. We do not always agree, as I am sure you have just seen, but he is very good company.

I thank the hon. member also for bringing to the debate—and this is the beauty of this period, this 10-minute question and answer—it puts another flavour on the debate. He has brought the debate to another side of the issue.

He talks about not having the courage—whatever word he used—to put forward the argument. No. He knows the process very well. My job is not to stand here and praise the government for any good things it might do. It is not what I am sent here for at all. I am sent here to keep the government accountable. I fully expect that if the government does some good things I can depend on the competence of the gentleman from Markham to make sure that it is known. Listen to our title—Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. We are here to poke holes in what that crowd does, and it is an easy job because there are so many places to poke the holes. We are not here as acolytes for the fellow from Baie Comeau.

Do not ever be under the impression that I am going to be out singing the praises of this government. If it does something that is particularly laudable, I will get up and swallow my pride and congratulate them. But I do not find it laudable that it went off and cooked the Canadian dollar up around 85 cents to satisfy the Americans on the free trade issue. I do not find it laudable that high interest rates are artificially pegged. My people in Burin—St. George's and elsewhere are hurting because they are paying a much higher mortgage than they ought to be.

The gentleman from Markham and I are not really at odds to the degree that he might suggest. He happens to be in a party where he has to be an acolyte. He has to say all the good things about that crowd and shut up about the rest. That is his problem, not mine.

In my case, I happen to be part of the Official Opposition whose job it is to point out that the cutbacks this government has inflicted over the past six years are hurting the poor, are robbing people of their jobs. If he thinks I am going to stand here and ignore what it is doing to my people, I will not. He might shout, but he might keep his cool as well because the effect will be the same on me.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question. First of all, I want to congratulate my colleague for his excellent remarks. I am sure I speak on behalf of most members of this House who probably inadvertently forgot to mention that when they rose to ask a question of my colleague.

Does he not find that the argument of the government that it needed the supplementary estimates in order to pay for the gulf war just a little shallow when, in fact, far more money will be spent to administer the GST than will ever be used in any effort that is presently contemplated in the Persian Gulf? Does he not agree with me that the funds that will be used to collect the GST, just that surplus portion of $365 million, could be far better used to assist either the fishermen in his riding or the unemployed people in Hawkesbury and elsewhere in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell because he hits the nail right on the head, as he usually does. Of course, it is a very shallow argument. When he mentions the GST, he reminds me, because he has made the first argument so well, I need not repeat it. Let me give him a parallel argument which reinforces the very point that he makes rhetorically in his question.

I heard the other day that the government wants to pay all the people out there the tax credit before Christmas. But it cannot do it unless the big, bad Liberal senators stop filibustering and pass the bill. The government cannot pay or draw money until the bill is passed.

Now, what kind of double-talk is that when the same government that cannot pay tax credits to people who are wondering whether they will have a Christmas or not, sitting on the edge of their chairs waiting to know if they will get the tax return in time for Christmas, and are being held to ransom, being blackmailed by this government, the same government that cannot find the money to pay the tax credit, is actually spending equivalent amounts of money renting four floors in the hotel over here to administer the GST? It had to pay money down for that, did it not? It is spending millions on TV. What Canadian, even those waiting for the cheques out there, has not seen those foolish ads on TV? Do you think they get them for nothing? They cost money. How come? I ask you, Mr. Speaker—and I am just about through—how come the government that cannot find money to pay the tax credit before the bill goes through can find globs of money to rent four floors of a hotel to administer the GST, and for all the other foolish reasons, the hot line and so on. What hypocrisy! What shallowness!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The hon. member for Essex—Windsor. I have to recognize the NDP. The last five speakers have been from the Liberal Party so I will recognize the hon. member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am spurred, I guess, by the comments of the previous speaker and by the question which the hon. member for Burlington put before this House with respect to the whole question of the value of our dollar and the relationship of that to the free trade agreement.

This is, of course, something which is, one would have to concede, only tendentiously connected to the piece of legislation which is in front of us. But since it has come up in debate, I wanted to add just a few comments in respect of some of the exchanges which have been taking place.

We have not had a chance in the House actually to debate the rather extraordinary comments which a former Minister of Industry in this government made this past weekend with respect to a gentleman's agreement, as he put it, to see to it that the value of the Canadian dollar was raised quite significantly. There was some exchange which took place in Question Period and I happened to be in my constituency at that time. It has been only since my return that I have had a chance to see some of the comments of the Minister of Finance with respect to these comments of the former Minister of Industry of the Conservative government, Mr. Stevens.

Mr. Stevens suggested, on the basis of his discussions with Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, who was essentially in many respects Mr. Stevens' counterpart in the U.S. administration. He suggested in 1985, according to Mr. Stevens, that it was going to be essential that the dollar be raised in value if a free trade deal was going to take place.

This suggestion by the former Minister of Industry in the Conservative government was met by the Minister of Finance with statements of complete dismissal. On Monday, he put it in the following terms. He said:

> —that the statement was absurd speculation, but it is simply also not true.

He went on from that to say:

> I would remind my hon. friend that Mr. Stevens was basing his speculative comments on a conversation that he had with a man who was not involved in the negotiations and a conversation that was held some two years before the final negotiations were completed.

That might seem to put an end to this whole issue very clearly and to any speculation that might exist on this side of the House. In tracing this issue through the past five years—since the time that the supposed conversation took place between Mr. Stevens and the U.S. Commerce Secretary—we found that in fact this was not the only occasion on which this question of the value of the Canadian dollar was raised in prominent terms in the context of discussion of the Canadian trade deal, not by Canadians, not by the opposition attempting to suggest that something underhanded was taking place, but instead by senior Americans who were in fact, unlike the reference in Mr. Wilson's statement, deeply involved in the negotiations with respect to free trade. These questions were raised, not just by such people, but they were raised after negotiations had already started with the United States with respect to a free trade deal.

Unfortunately, many of us would have to put a lack of strong faith into the recollections, five years after the fact, of a former minister of industry of this government who, after all, did have to resign in rather unfortunate circumstances. Despite our scepticism about that minister, the fact of the matter is that in the aftermath of that 1985 period there continued to be right up to 1987, the year in which the free trade negotiations were concluded, continuing comments on the part of key American officials with respect to this issue.

I want to note some of these for Canadians who are perhaps perplexed at the very quick way in which the serious suggestions of the former minister of industry were dismissed by the Minister of Finance. I will first quote from the person who was the negotiator from the United States, Peter Murphy, who wrote a memo in April of 1986. This was considerably after the discussions with Mr. Baldrige. He directed this memo to the members of the Canadian task force senior staff, that is, the people who were in charge of negotiating with the Canadian delegation with respect to free trade.

The memo came from Ambassador Murphy and the subject was Canadian negotiations. It stated: "Now that we have squeaked by in the Senate, the hard part starts. We have to prepare for the negotiations." He went on to review a number of key points which would be important to consider in the course of the negotiations. He noted only six points, so this was one of quite a small number of important points that he made. One of the important issues to consider was "the direction and situation of exchange rates over the last 10 years, and efforts, if any, to change it, both in Canada and the United States." That might be seen simply as a small point and simply a review of what past exchange rates had been.

It is interesting that at the same time, virtually, in fact about a month later, James Baker, the United States Treasury Secretary at that point, had this to say. We all know that he is now the Foreign Secretary, but at that point he was the Treasury Secretary. The following appeared in a story by Alan Toulin, who now works for The Financial Post: "Yesterday Baker told a Senate committee that entry of Canada and Italy into the G–5 could swing the spotlight on to the economic policies of both countries and require them to meet policy goals set by the G–5."

Again, it was a relatively innocuous comment, one might think, until further on in the story one gets the following comment: "'Re–evaluating the Canadian dollar could also figure in the free trade negotiations slated to begin today,' U.S. Senator Daniel Evans said yesterday in a CBC interview."

One might think that this, again, is a relatively insignificant act, but what is fascinating is that these kinds of comments continue throughout 1986. In a story from September 10, 1986 written by Jonathan Ferguson who reported on U.S. Secretary Malcolm Baldrige speaking before a committee of the House of Representatives in Washington. This is precisely the same person who the former minister of industry in this Conservative government said in 1985 had told him that it was essential to get the Canadian dollar higher. A year later, September 10, 1986, after the free trade negotiations had started, he is saying precisely the same thing and I quote from this story by Jonathan Ferguson: "U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige told a committee of the House of Representatives in Washington yesterday that an increase in the value of the Canadian dollar would help ease the record U.S. trade deficit."

Well, again, one might say this is just an idle comment by somebody who was not deeply involved in these issues.

Then there is a front page story from The Ottawa Citizen of November 21, 1986 in which Peter Murphy, who was the chief United States negotiator in these free trade negotiations, speaks out. This story, written by Wendy Warburton, starts as follows: "'The U.S. Congress would likely want changes in Canada's exchange rate, the value of the Canadian dollar compared to the U.S. dollar, before it would pass a free trade agreement,' American trade negotiator Peter Murphy said Thursday."

He went on to say that this was being looked at by Treasury Secretary James Baker. That is a direct quote. "Secretary Baker is dealing with that, but what you cannot do is separate that in the mind–set of the Congress who will vote for a deal, that is for a free trade deal, or vote against it". Here we have Mr. Murphy talking in these terms.

We followed up on some of these comments by these various people who have been noted here. There are, for instance, Malcolm Baldrige's comments from the testimony which he presented to the House of Representatives which has been quoted here from September. It is quite clear. He is talking about the United States dollar and he said: "The U.S. dollar remains strong against the currencies of countries accounting for over half of our total trade, including our largest trading partner, Canada". He went on to say: "We are seeking discussions with a number of countries on the exchange rate issue. Progress there would be beneficial".

James Baker, in his testimony to the committee on finance in the United States Senate said: "There is not a lot we can do about those countries that tie their currencies to ours", and he goes on to talk about other countries, "but I think the fact there has been a depreciation of the dollar, that is the U.S. dollar, will help our trading relationship with those countries by putting more pressure on their markets and less on ours".

Finally, I would stress that despite the fact that Mr. Reisman, the Canadian negotiator in 1987, said: "We will not discuss the dollar in any way, shape or form", January 17, 1987, he did this in the aftermath of the comments by Mr. Murphy, the U.S. negotiator, in which he made it quite clear that the value of the Canadian dollar was quite important in consideration of the U.S. trade deal.

I have to conclude with two observations. The first observation is that Mr. Reisman walked out of the negotiations at a very late stage. It was never entirely clear and he never entirely indicated why he had walked out of those negotiations. I wonder if it was because something which he had said would not be on the table suddenly became crucial in the latter stages of that negotiation. I wonder if that is the case.

Finally, I think we have to conclude that Mr. Wilson's comments that this is not something to consider seriously, what Mr. Sinclair Stevens suggested last Sunday, because it took place well before the trade negotiations started and because it was based on conversations with someone who was not even in those negotiations, that that denial in fact itself holds no water. We can see from these comments that I have quoted to the House today that after that time, in fact after the negotiations had started with the United States, senior figures on the United States side, who were in charge of those negotiations, such as Peter Murphy and James Baker, did in fact talk directly and in terms of joining the question of the value of our dollar with whether or not the free trade deal would be accepted. Given the fact that they spoke in those terms, is there in fact any reason to reject the suggestions which Mr. Stevens made this past Sunday?

• (1720 )

I think there may not be a clear smoking gun here, but there certainly is a great deal of evidence from the period when negotiations were taking place, from people who were part of those negotiations that in fact the United States saw the value of our dollar as a key component with respect to the free trade deal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired. Questions or comments.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the contribution that the member from Windsor has made to this debate.

There is no question in my mind that the exchange rates between Canada and the United States were a key component throughout the trade discussions between Canada and the United States. I wonder how a so-called free trade agreement can possibly exist, unless there are arrangements made to stabilize the relationships between currencies.

As I recall from the discussions we had in British Columbia around the softwood lumber problem and the threat of American trade retaliation against our softwood lumber, the currency was the major issue.

Even though the Americans used the excuse of the stumpage rates in a number of Canadian provinces, American senators and congressmen whom I met when the Gibbons committee travelled to Vancouver indicated to us that, when they saw Canadian lumber coming into places like Little Rock, Arkansas and selling at a price, because of the value of the Canadian dollar, far below what Arkansas lumber fetched in the Little Rock market, their sawmills shut down.

Their lumber workers were out of work, and they, as U.S. congressmen and senators, were going to take any action necessary, legal or otherwise, in order to reverse the situation.

The specific problem that they identified was the decline in Canadian currency relative to the American currency. That precipitated a retaliation by the American softwood lumber industry against Canada.

I cannot see how it is possible that free trade discussions took place between Canada and the U.S. without some currency pegging arrangements being made, whether it was an insistence by the Americans that the government in Canada raised interest rates in order to keep the value of our dollar propped, or whether some other arrangements were made behind the curtain between the Conservative government's negotiators and the American negotiators.

I just cannot understand a free trade arrangement existing without some currency pegging arrangements existing at the same time. I would appreciate if the member would respond to that.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think that the member is quite right in pointing to the fact that the exchange rate was the common issue which American politicians, in discussing trade issues with Canada throughout that whole period, emphasized in their discussions.

We certainly found that to be the case. For example, when a delegation of American congressmen came here to talk about grain issues, it was the low value of the Canadian dollar at that stage which was of particular concern to them.

Precisely the same thing is true with respect to the objections under the auto pact which were put forward from Michigan. The various congressmen and senators from the state of Michigan who were concerned about Canadian exports under the auto pact into the United States emphasized the low value of the Canadian dollar.

I think that one has that set of evidence to look at. One has the set of evidence that I have talked about today. One has as well the fact that ever since the trade deal has come into effect, a gap has grown between interest rates in this country and in the United States, which is something which we have never seen historically in this country at that kind of level.

We are talking about a percentage point difference of from four to five percentage points which, given the fact that inflation rates are very similar between the two countries, means that the only conceivable consequence of that huge gap in interest rates would be to raise the value of the Canadian dollar.

We have not seen a reduction in the Canadian inflation rate relative to the American inflation rate. What we have seen is what all these people were suggesting was necessary for the free trade deal and that is a marked increase in the value of the Canadian dollar from the level of about 73 cents, which it was in 1985, to the level of approximately 86 cents, which it presently is.

Of course, that is damaging in the extreme to all of our exporters no matter which part of the country they are in; British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec, or Atlantic Canada. It is an incredibly damaging blow to our potential as a country to provide jobs and incomes.

The facts, therefore, speak for themselves. It is those facts that we have to look at in judging whether or not Mr. Stevens' comments this past weekend should be taken seriously or not. Do the facts conform with what Mr. Stevens suggested? Unfortunately, for the government, and unfortunately for its suggestions that this is not the case, the facts indeed do conform exactly with what one would expect to have taken place if Mr. Stevens had indeed been telling the truth.

I have to say that the statement of this past week demonstrates yet again the irresponsibility of this government which has led to the damage which this economy is now suffering, the first made in Canada recession which Canada has ever experienced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I understand that I am the last speaker on this particular bill before the House which is the Financial Administration Act.

I have just a couple of points concerning provisions in the bill that are, quite frankly, bad legislation for the people of Canada. One of them deals with collection agencies. One deals with saltfish, and the other one could deal with air traffic control centres in Vancouver and in eastern Canada.

The first one concerns collection agencies. Clause 5 of the bill enables the Government of Canada to hire collection agencies in any department, in any Crown corporation, in any agency of the federal government to collect moneys that are owed the Government of Canada. Collection agencies.

The Minister of Justice is sitting here. The minister knows the procedure today whereby a department of government collects it money.

• (1730 )

First, a person is given a reasonable opportunity to make the payment. If that fails and if the person defaults on his or her payments, then perhaps through a third party attachment the wages are attached. Or, the person who is due money by that agency or that department has it taken off a bit at a time.

That is the standard procedure used by the Government of Canada and its departments. In legislation passed by this Chamber we have clauses in certain bills that terminate moneys owed to the Government of Canada over certain periods of time. In other words, there are two ways in which something can be forgiven. One is, in certain legislation, if it imposes undue hardship on the person involved. Second, in some legislation there is a time limit. In other words, in some legislation it is set out that moneys cannot be collected beyond three years from the date at which the individual was notified that he or she owed money to the department.

Now that is the jurisprudence we have in Canada today. That is reasonable law. What is the Minister of Justice and the Government of Canada doing by putting forward this proposed legislation and saying throughout the legislation that collection agencies are now to be used by the Government of Canada, not only in the restricted sense that we have today to collect the student loans that are overdue but in every agency of the Government of Canada and in every department? Now, circumventing the system, we have the imposition of collection agencies. Shame on the Minister of Justice for permitting this to pass through cabinet.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I don't chew my cabbage twice.

Mr. Baker: I hope that is on the record. The Minister of Justice has just made a statement; she says she does not chew her cabbage twice. I hope that she chews it at least once. This entire bill is enough to give anybody indigestion.

The second portion of the bill which is really objectionable is a new imposition on Crown corporations listed in schedule 3 of part X of the Financial Administration Act. There are three schedules, Mr. Speaker, as you know.

The first schedule includes government departments. The second schedule includes Crown corporations that are part of government departments, and the third schedule is wholly owned Crown corporations, owned by the Government of Canada. This bill imposes upon those Crown corporations an obligation to collect money and have a reasonable expectation that the corporation will pay dividends.

In other words, the whole intent of the legislation is that the Crown corporation becomes, through another part of the bill and using user fees in some cases, a money maker. That is the philosophy of the Government of Canada. CBC is not included in schedule 3 of the Financial Administration Act because it is considered to be a cultural institution which remains autonomous from section 3.

What will happen if we take the established Crown corporations of today to deal with the natural resources of Canada? I use as an example the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. Last week half of the people employed by that Crown corporation received their lay-off notices. The function of that Crown corporation was to provide marketing, to be the sole buyer and marketer of what we call saltfish, which is a fish that is cut open and then there is salt put on it. It is dried with salt on it.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Is that a recipe?

Mr. Baker: Back in my day, we used to dry them on what we called flakes, but now it is automatic drying machines.

The Canadian Saltfish Corporation fulfilled that vital function. Now it is in trouble because it owes a lot of money to the Government of Canada. That is a relatively new phenomenon. What caused it? The Government of Canada caused it. The Government of Canada, to my way of thinking, in my estimation, caused the crisis in the fishing industry in Canada.

An hon. member: How did it do that?

Mr. Baker: The member asks how the government caused the problem. Today I received an update on the numbers of licences issued to foreign interests in Canadian waters so far this year. It comes to 135 factory ship licences issued to Cuba, Japan, U.S.S.R., Bulgaria, Norway, Poland, and the U.S.A. That is an increase over last year. That is an increase over the year before last.

Who caused the crisis in the fishery in eastern Canada? If we have a larger fleet from a foreign nation fishing inside our 200-mile zone, licensed by the Government of Canada, a larger offshore fleet than we have in Canada, then we know that something is wrong. I am not talking about outside the 200-mile zone that the hon. member spoke about a few moments ago. I was going to mention to him about the Namibia connection, a recent phenomenon in Canada. Namibia, a country in the southern portion of Africa, declared about three weeks ago that it was going to tell every foreign nation to get out of its waters. It did it. Imagine, the Government of Namibia. I checked and I found that there were about 100 factory ships from Europe in its zone in Namibia. Namibia threatened them. They left about two and one-half weeks ago, and they steamed right up through the Atlantic Ocean. Where did they go, some of them? They went right up, off the east coast of Canada, and they started to fish just outside the 200-mile zone in the shallow water.

Our search planes and survey planes for the last two weeks have been flying over these ships. They take photographs. They have very sophisticated machinery aboard to observe what these vessels are doing. They discovered that some of the ships that were chased from Namibia were out off the east coast of Canada, and they were catching a type of flatfish. They will destroy that particular species. I am not talking about the disaster that is happening outside, because even countries in Africa that do not have our expertise in the fishery and do not have advanced fishing technology in place, are kicking out those foreign nations. Those foreign boats do not have very many places to go now, so one of the places they pick on is our Canadian east coast.

• (1740)

I am not talking about outside 200 miles, because we do not have jurisdiction, but we have jurisdiction for these licences granted to Cuba, Japan, the U.S.S.R., Bulgaria, Norway, Poland, and the U.S.A. We have jurisdiction tomorrow when a Japanese vessel comes in to port in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and gets from fisheries and oceans tomorrow afternoon a licence to fish what we commonly call turbot inside our 200-mile zone in areas called 2-G and 2-H off the Labrador coast.

What does that have to do with the bill? That has everything to do with the bill, because the Canadian Saltfish Corporation is paying for the follies of the Government of Canada. It is in a position where it owes money. It is being disbanded. Why else would the Government of Canada issue half or 50 per cent lay-off notices to all its staff in eastern Canada? It is an outrage.

Another portion of the bill authorizes the collection of user fees from the federal government. Imagine one government department charging another government department for use of its services. That is what it says in this bill. Another portion of the bill gives authority to charge provincial governments user fees for their services.

In the last intervention I said that I would mention in conclusion the authority given, as the government had announced prior to this bill, to government departments to collect revenues and to use those revenues as expenditures in their own departments. That is what it does in section 12 of the act. It allows a department to do it. It says that a department may be authorized to do it.

We are faced today in Canada with the probable closure of air traffic control services in western Canada, in British Columbia, and in the far east of our great country. We are facing that because the Government of Canada and the Auditor General, I believe, determined that the work being done in those control centres could be done in a control centre in downtown Montreal.

That is one side of the picture, but that department of the Government of Canada collects revenues that far exceed their expenditures. What happens to those revenues? They go into what we call the Consolidated Revenue Fund. They do not go into the Department of Transport to keep these operations going. If we examine the figures of air traffic control stations in British Columbia and in eastern Canada, in Newfoundland or New Brunswick, we would discover an interesting fact. The system is that a foreign aircraft carrier which comes within a national airspace pays a fee for the air traffic control services it gets. It is about $85 per initial contact. That is the way it is worded. Then it pays another fee, about $50 I believe—it used to be $40—for what we used to call radio services. That is when you speak to somebody about weather conditions and the like.

The average fee is $100 per initial contact for these trans-Pacific and trans-oceanic flights. There are about 500 a day on average, west coast, and east coast. That would cost approximately $50,000 a day. Air traffic control generates about $15 million to $20 million a year in eastern and western Canada. That money goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. They make more than they spend. They are not only making their salaries, they are making double their salaries. But that does not show up in the department. That is not what this means. What this means is that where the government so wishes, a government department may be encouraged to charge fees which will then become a part of a pot of money within that department that can be spent as they see fit.

The legislation, Mr. Speaker, is incomplete. The legislation should say that each government department which generates revenue will receive that revenue and will be responsible for that revenue.

In conclusion, let me say that this is a very bad piece of legislation. It is a terrible piece of legislation. It will increase charges on the general public, on provincial governments, and it will lead the Government of Canada down some very poor paths as far as collecting money is concerned from a lot of poor people in this country.

FISHERIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, November 28, consideration of Bill C-74, an act to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING—MOTIONS IN AMENDMENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are three report stage motions on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-74, an act to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

There is an error for which the Chair and the Table apologize. Four motions were received prior to six o'clock p.m. last night. The motion omitted is in the name of the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley. Copies of this motion are available at the Table. It becomes Motion No. 4.

Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Gander—Grand Falls causes the Chair some concern because it seeks to introduce into the bill the licensing of fishing vessels, a subject which goes beyond the scope of Bill C-74, as agreed to at second reading. By doing so the hon. member is reaching into the Fisheries Act to amend Section 7, in contravention of Citation 773, paragraph (8) (a) and (b) of Beauchesne's fifth edition, which reads as follows:

> (a) An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee.
> (b) An amendment may not amend sections from the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before the committee.

For this reason, it is with regret that I must rule the amendment out of order.

Motion No. 2, standing in the name of the hon. member for Cardigan is in order. It will be debated and voted on separately.

• (1750 )

Motion No. 3, standing in the name of the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley, deals with the tabling of the annual report by the minister on administration and enforcement of the provisions relating to fish habitat. While this motion is similar to an amendment that was moved, debated and defeated in committee, as a result of representations, I have decided to give the member the benefit of the doubt and allow the motion to go forward for debate in the House. It will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 4 deals with a matter dealt with in committee. It is my understanding that, as a result of consultations and representations, this motion may now be more acceptable to the House. Motion No. 4 will be proposed to the House for a separate debate and vote.

I shall put Motion No. 2 to the House.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 6

(a) by striking out lines 10 and 11 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"remove it within forty-eight hours after the com-";

(b) by striking out lines 15 to 17 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"along a beach or within a fishery for such a period exceeding forty-eight hours after the commencement of a close time as the fishery officer considers neces-".

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak to this motion that I have put forward.

What my amendment will do is restore the 48-hour time period for the removal of fishing gear, especially lobster traps, from the water. When I was reading the bill, this clause eliminating the 48-hour grace period was one that stuck in my mind.

When I went home to Prince Edward Island and spoke to the lobster fishermen in my riding, I asked them how this would affect them and received the same reply over and over. "It just won't work", they said. What happens when the weather is bad? What happens if the fisheries officer will not let their gear stay in the water past the closing time of the season?

I told the fishermen that I was not sure what would happen but I would bring their concerns to the committee hearings and to the House of Commons. On two separate occasions I raised the issue in committee and both times my questions and the questions of my fishermen were not answered.

When we heard the assistant deputy minister, Mr. Haché, before the committee, I asked him if it would follow that at the end of the lobster season the traps, buoys and all would have to be out of the water; if the season ends on Saturday, everything must be removed by Saturday, which the ADM responded, that is correct. Later on, I asked Mr. Haché again, if we have a stormy day on Saturday, unless the fisheries officer desires, the traps would have to come out on Friday. I can see where this would create a problem in the lobster fishery where we come from. We have always had a couple of days, 48 hours, to remove the traps from the water. Again, the ADM responded by saying, "This is correct, Mr. Chairman. There has always been an additional day or two, depending on the weather, for the fishermen to haul their gear at the end of the season".

The government has gone on and on about how this amendment to the bill will allow more flexibility in the removal of gear. Indeed, I must have heard the word hundreds of times from the government in committee. However, fishermen in my riding see this as being anything but flexible. Fishermen say that it leaves them at the mercy of the fisheries officer who may or may not look kindly upon the fishermen. Fishermen are afraid of being put in the position that they can be harassed.

During the committee hearings we heard from witnesses who said that fisheries officers are also being harassed and I agree. There are fisheries officers who are being harassed by fishermen who deliberately break the law. However, there are instances where fishermen are also harassed by fisheries officers.

This clause which says that "a fisheries officer may permit" is just another way for our fishermen to be harassed. The problem is they may or may not permit them to leave their traps in the water for another 48 hours or if it is going to be stormy on the day the season closes, they could be forced to remove their traps possibly a day early.

It is my belief that the government's amendment to this section of the act is unnecessary. I asked the government officials if there were any problems under the old section, and they did not give me one example. They could not give me an example of any time this 48-hour grace period that our lobster fishermen had in order to have a reasonable amount of time at the end of the season to remove their traps caused difficulties.

Why was this done by the government? There is no answer. I think it could cause a problem for our fishermen. The fisheries officer might decide to give them the time, and he might not. Indeed, most fisheries officers that I deal with, or know, certainly would.

It puts the responsibility on the fishery officer, and the word "may" in the clause is very important: "They may, or they may not."

The official from the department could not point out a case. An old quote says: "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." I think this is the situation in this case. There is not a problem, so why do we here in this House create a problem for the lobster fishermen?

This government amendment is unnecessary and unwarranted. The fishermen in my riding say this will limit their flexibility in removing their gear. Of course, it certainly will complicate their flexibility.

My amendment will prevent harassment and provide greater flexibility by restoring the 48-hour time limit for the removal of fishing gear.

I urge the government members, some of whom truly understand how hard the fishermen work and how difficult it is on the sea to not place this extra burden on the fishermen and let's leave the 48-hour time period that we have had over the last number of years and treat our fishermen with respect.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly to let you and the House know that our party will be supporting the amendment being proposed by the member for Cardigan.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief.

I do have some empathy for my friend from Cardigan. As was discussed in the committee, the problem is that section 25 now deals not with fishing gear per se but with stakes, posts, buoys and other materials placed for fishing purposes. There is quite a difference.

The flexibility that he talks about, unfortunately, is not there. For that reason, I regret to say that, despite discussions and attempts, we cannot accept this amendment. The government will vote against it.

In the interests of dealing with report stage, I think you will find unanimous consent that we not see the clock at six o'clock, and agreement that we can be through this probably by 6.20 p.m. or 6.30 p.m., finish report stage and move on after that.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, our party is prepared to agree with that with the one proviso: that there be a time limit on this extension for the purposes of dealing with report stage only, that it not extend beyond 6.30 p.m. If by any chance, it would not be completed by then, we can further consult.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Mr. Gardiner: We will agree to that.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, just for the record, the hon. member for Cardigan who brought in this amendment is absolutely correct.

Everything that the member said is absolutely correct. There is not one reason that the government can cite for not accepting his amendment. It is an outrage to make every fisherman a criminal if a season closes while he has gear in the water.

In other words, if the season closes at midnight and the announcement is made at 6 p.m., the fisherman is a criminal if the fisheries officer does not extend him the privilege of picking up his gear.

If it is bad weather, how bad? How big is his boat? Does he feel he can make it while another guy feels he cannot make it? Suppose Sunday is the next day. A lot of people respect Sunday and they will not go on the water. A lot of people. That is why the two-day notice was there in the first place in the act. It is outrageous, it is unbelievable. It really is an absolute outrage for the Government of Canada to place fishermen in Canada in the position that it is doing under this bill.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Negatived on division.

Motion No. 2 negatived.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley) moved:

That Bill C-74 be amended by adding immediately after line 6 at page 5 the following new clause:

"11.(1) The said Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 42 thereof, the following section:

"42.(1) The Minister shall, as soon as possible after the end of each fiscal year, prepare and cause to be laid before Parliament a report on the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this Act relating to fish habitat protection and pollution prevention for that year.

(2) The annual report shall include a statistical summary of convictions under section 40 for that year."

He said: Mr. Speaker, it certainly is a pleasure to have a chance to speak on Bill C-74 in the House today. I will be as brief as I can to make some of the points on my Motion No. 3, which you so graciously considered to present before the House, and, of course, I look forward to future debate and discussion on this bill when it returns to the House for third reading.

First, I would like to say how very interesting the witnesses we heard were when we were discussing this bill. We had witnesses from both coasts who gave us a firsthand account of their views about the fishing industry and, in particular, their concerns and comments on Bill C-74. That ranged from discussions about general offences, catch reporting, and what have you. A number of representations from the west coast in particular included concerns regarding habitat protection, which is the particular reference that I make in my amendment to the bill.

I am pleased to see that the government has seen fit to support this amendment. We did debate it in committee. There were some differences, but I am glad to see that on second thought the government can see the importance of my amendment. It will require the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to table in Parliament, annually, a report "on the administration and enforcement of the provisions of the act relating to fish habitat protection and pollution prevention". It will also provide for a statistical summary of conviction under section 40 of the act.

It is very important that be included, because all of the witnesses who appeared before our committee agree—and it certainly has been a subject of public debate in British Columbia—about the need to ensure that the Fisheries Act and its rules and regulations are followed and complied with in the Pacific region and, of course, in the inland waters and on the east coast because there is concern that that in fact has not happened.

I asked questions of the witnesses based on the information and background material provided by the minister. In 1988, of some 959 fines in the Pacific region, 11 related to habitat protection and there was not a witness who thought that that adequately reflected the concerns that we have about protecting our salmon habitat on the west coast. By calling upon the minister to ensure that we have an annual report on this section, it is going to make it very clear for all members of the House and the general public to see exactly how we are dealing with that situation.

I am pleased with the government support. Tuesday, in the Environment Committee, the Minister of the Environment from British Columbia supported a full public hearing of the Alcan project which we have talked about in the House before. That is another example of the considerable debate around fish habitat and the need to ensure that we have the enforcement and compliance in the law by the fisheries officers carrying out the rules and regulations that we pass in this House.

This provision for an annual report is an important one, and I am glad to see that the House will be supporting it.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I have a small problem that I discussed with my colleague on which I would like your direction.

First, yes, the government does support this. I think it is an important step. It is not inconsistent with a number of other pieces of legislation, but I want it recognized that this information has to be gathered from a number of different departments, agencies, and provincial governments.

What I have discussed with my colleagues is probably an amendment to the amendment. I do not know quite how to proceed. It is a question of numbering. The new clause motion refers to 11(1). It should be 11.1. The proposed section reads 42(1). In fact, it should read 42.1(1). I think there is unanimous consent to make that change. It is purely a number change and I do not think there is any problem. I can certainly provide it to the Table if it is of any assistance.

Apart from that, we certainly support the motion of the hon member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, it is just a matter of changing 11(1) to 11.1 and a matter of changing 42(1) to 42.1(1). It is quite clear and understood in the bill itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would just put on the record that if you overfish and you catch fish that you are not licensed to catch, you will be convicted unless you do it on a foreign boat in Canadian waters.

Not only that, but what is happening off our coast is that, if a foreign nation catches more than it is legally allowed to catch, the observer comes in two weeks hence, reports it, and the ship is then moved either north, south, east or west. They do not have to throw away the incidental catch or the catch which is in excess of the buy catch. Shame! Shame on the Government of Canada.

The Canadian will come in and he will be arrested. But, if you have a good lawyer, Mr. Speaker, here is a great clause in the bill. "No person shall be convicted of an offence under the act if the person establishes that the person (a) exercised all due diligence to prevent the commission of an offence or (b) reasonably and honestly believed"—and the Minister of Justice should be overjoyed with this one—"in the existence of facts that if true would render the person's conduct innocent."

That is pretty clear, is it not? You get a big lawyer. You have to have the money to pay for your lawyer, like the Government of Canada thinks most people have. It will cost you a lot of dough. No problem getting over this act. But the poor fisherman who is brought in, who is supposed to be represented by members of Parliament, will get it right between the teeth with this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 24

(a) by striking out, in the English version, line 24 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"control of fisheries or fish habitat or the";

(b) by striking out lines 33 to 48 at page 18 and substituting the following:

"(h) directing the person to submit to the Minister, on application by the Minister within three years after the date of the conviction, any information respecting the activities of the person that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances; and

(i) requiring the person to comply with any other conditions that the court considers appropriate for securing the person's good conduct and for preventing the person from repeating the offence or committing other offences under this Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on Motion No. 4, this particular amendment to Bill C-74, and to comment about how soon we will be debating at third reading this legislation. The amendment is going to require a person convicted, if the court so orders, to pay for promoting the proper management and control of fisheries or fish habitat.

When the bill first came to committee it just talked about fish. We have included fish habitat in this amendment, and the government is supporting it. That is particularly important, given all the concerns we have in terms of protecting our creeks and rivers from logging operations, pulp mill pollution and others and of ensuring that more than just a balance among our resource industries happen and that we are successful in extracting our resources in a sustainable way which not only protects the environment but ensures that the resources will continue in perpetuity for all of us to benefit from.

An interesting aspect of this amendment is the fact that we are not only talking about paying for the damage, which I find very difficult to accept as a principle. It is like having people take over your house for the weekend and they wreck the place, and then when you come back on Sunday night they say: "That is okay. We will pay for it". That is not the way to go about inviting any of your friends or guests over, if they are still friends. Nor is it any way to allow the destruction of our fish habitat.

This amendment goes beyond asking people to fess up and to provide some dollars. Witnesses said to us in committee that it would be just a cost of doing business, that it was going to be another couple of hundred dollars and on we go; there was no change. This amendment will ensure that damages are paid from what the courts order. It will also ensure that there is emphasis on the fisheries officers being out there and that they have confidence that their department realizes the importance of the rules and regulations they are policing. As well it will ensure that anyone convicted of a crime will understand how important that is and that they will participate in helping to promote the protection and enhancement of our fish habitat.

It is a positive amendment. It is moving in the right direction, and I hope the House will support it.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this amendment was accepted in committee. I think it is important to put on record that there were some minor legal changes, some wording changes which my friend opposite has reintroduced. The government supports this amendment and thinks it is a good step as well.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief comment. It is fine and dandy to talk about fish habitat. It is fine and dandy to talk about fines. It is fine and dandy to have such glorious words about protecting the fishing environment and the fishing habitat.

However, 135 gigantic, monstrous vessels from nine foreign nations are raking the grounds around the coast of Canada, while we sit in this Chamber and figure out what fines to put on Canadian fishermen who might be violating the fish habitat of Canada.

A lot of things have to change in this country, and that is one of them. Canadians vessels are not allowed to go into the waters or any one of those countries; not one of those countries. It is not allowed. There would be a war. We would be chased out. They are in our waters with all of this gigantic gear, all computerized, raking all of the grounds on the continental shelf, ignored by the Government of Canada. In fact, the numbers are going up every year. No wonder the fishing resource is destroyed together with the fishing habitat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Kim Campbell (for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that the bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House.

It being 6.17 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1)

At 6.17 p.m. the House adjourned.

PETITIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions which I wish to lay on the table, pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The petitions are signed by residents of the province of Ontario from places such as Ottawa, Markham, Toronto, and other communities throughout the province.

All the petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to exercise prudent judgment and withdraw the goods and services tax, particularly as it applies to the tax on magazines, books and newspapers. These petitioners, like other Canadians, are appalled at the fact that the Government of Canada would move forward with the goods and services tax which they believe to be very negative in view of the state of the economy at the present time.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition under Standing Order 36 which has been certified by the Clerk of Petitions. This is another in a series of petitions that I have had the pleasure of presenting for members of the public from across Canada against the goods and services tax.

The petitioners have not given up hope that the government will come to its senses and withdraw this unfair tax and bring in a tax system that is fair to all Canadians.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have additional petitions against the GST. These are from my home province of Saskatchewan. Others are from Ontario and Quebec. These petitions in addition to the thousands that I have already tabled in the House.

The petitioners are asking the government not to put the GST on magazines, books and newspapers.

I table these as the senators are trying to kill the GST with 16 and 18-hour marathon speeches. All the senators are doing is reflecting—

Mr. Speaker: I do have to remind the hon. member that he is to present his petition and not get into speeches.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to table a petition along the lines of the many petitions that have been tabled with respect to the goods and services tax. Your petitioners strenuously object to taxing books. They maintain that the free distribution of printed matter constitutes the corner-stone of our democracy, culture and education. They claim that an educated and productive society will suffer as a result of this decision.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to recall the fundamental principles underlying the exemption of printed matter and ensure that the legislation and regulations contain an exemption for books. Like myself, these people maintain that taxing books means imposing ignorance.

• (1110 )

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by a number of Canadians against the goods and services tax.

These people in their petition have called for Parliament to reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax. They call for a reform of the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

The petitioners also ask that the House of Commons ensure that, if and when there is a broad public consensus on a sales tax measure, that that be used to replace the manufacturers' sales tax and that this reform not be used as an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab. They believe that this would cause an undue burden on ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax and they call upon Parliament to have real tax reform.

I should point out that this petition is signed by a number of people from various parts of Ontario. Unfortunately, after the CBC cuts announced yesterday many of them will not realize that their petition was presented in the House of Commons, since they no longer have any local news coverage.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to present a petition in the House signed by numerous Canadians from the Ottawa area who are opposed to the goods and services tax insofar as it applies to the printed word and to books. They recite that uninhibited dissemination of the printed word is a corner-stone of democracy, culture, and education in our society and will be negatively affected by the goods and services tax.

These petitioners must rejoice in the valiant efforts of Liberal senators to save the country from this iniquitous tax.

FOOD AND DRUGS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present this petition today that concerns a serious health issue as it relates to allergic reactions to foods.

The petitioners are joined by the Allergy Information Association. These petitioners are from Scarborough, Brampton, and Ajax.

For the protection of the citizens of Canada, they are calling on the Parliament of Canada to enact legislation amending the food and drugs regulations in order to require manufacturers to list specific food ingredients and additives used in pre-packaged food. As well, they require restauranteurs and food retailers to provide to customers a list of all ingredients and additives in prepared foods.

GASOLINE ADDITIVES

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am rising again to present petitions signed by over 600 residents of southwestern Ontario who are among the thousands of petitioners asking the government to ban MMT, an automotive fuel additive which was banned in the United States 12 years ago.

The U.S. subcommittee on health and the environment found that the manganese component of MMT is capable of serious neuro-toxic effects. Studies have shown that manganese damages the human brain causing dementia and severe mental disorder.

Many of these petitions were signed at CJBK Radio, London, Ontario. These petitioners are asking the government to ban MMT and replace it with a non-hazardous octane enhancer such as ethanol.

LITERACY

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present two petitions today. The first is about literacy. The petitioners are from Ontario, as well as from my riding of Mission—Coquitlam.

Because 25 per cent of the Canadian adult population is illiterate, and in some regions illiteracy reaches and exceeds 40 per cent, the petitioners humbly pray that the government will consider undertaking a major national campaign against illiteracy and create community-based remedial and preventive illiteracy programs which respond to the needs of those individuals and groups involved.

BANKING

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the second petition that I wish to present is with regard to bank service charges. This petition, too, is from my riding of Mission—Coquitlam.

The petitioners ask the government to present legislation that would regulate and control bank service charges and provide consumer protection to banking Canadians, in view of the fact that, in the past five years, bank service charges have been increasing at an average rate of 19 per cent per year, five times the rate of inflation.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicted by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 398 will be answered today.

[Text]

ELECTRONIC BAGGAGE SCANNERS

Question No. 398—Mr. Worthy:

Do any Canadian airports with a yearly passenger volume of less than 75,000 persons have electronic baggage scanners and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Douglas Grinslade Lewis (Minister of Transport): Yes; Stephenville, Yarmouth, Rouyn-Noranda, Val d'Or, Sarnia, Fort McMurray and Prince Rupert.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 387 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 387 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Text]

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE OF CANADA

Question No. 387—Mr. Nunziata:

Since June 7, 1988, how many contracts, including amendments, has the Correctional Service of Canada awarded to former federal correctional employees and in each case (a) what was the date of the contract award (b) what was the purpose of the contract (c) what was the name of the individual and/or company awarded the contract (d) what was the amount of the contract (e) was the contract awarded with or without tender?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

PETRO-CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-84, an Act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada, as reported without amendment from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On the Order Paper there are 45 amendment motions at the report stage of Bill C-84, an Act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada. They are in the names of the hon. members for Edmonton East, Nickel Belt, Essex—Windsor, Scarborough—Rouge River, and Ottawa—Vanier.

[English]

There are a number of duplicate motions in the names of members of the New Democratic Party. As the House knows, duplicate questions cannot be proposed for debate.

After consultation, the Chair wishes to announce that it will select, where they are otherwise in order, the motions standing in the name of the hon. member for Essex—Windsor rather than the motions set down by the hon. members for Nickel Belt or Edmonton East. I think hon. members understand the reason behind this.

Motion Nos. 2A, 14A and 19, are in order and will be grouped for debate but they will be voted on separately. Motion Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 31 and 32 are not selected since they are identical to Motion Nos. 2A, 4A, 6A, 8A, 12A, 14A and 32A, respectively.

[Translation]

Motion Nos. 4A, 6A, 8A, 12A and 23 are in order and will all be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motion Nos. 9, 10 and 10A, standing in the names of the hon. member for Edmonton East, the hon. member for Nickel Belt and the hon. member for Essex—Windsor are identical. They are also beyond the scope of the bill and constitute an attempt to do indirectly what cannot be done directly. Hon. members are aware that this is not in accordance with parliamentary practice. Thus, it is not competent to introduce into the bill an oath of office which contains conditions foreign to the bill, since introducing these conditions would otherwise be out of order. I would refer hon. members to citation 773, paragraph (1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, and I quote: "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, [or[ beyond its scope—". The 21st edition of May's Parliamentary Practice makes the same point in almost the same words at page 491. These three motions will therefore not be selected for debate.

[Translation]

A motion quite similar to Motion No. 15 was debated and rejected by the legislative committee. After consideration I decided to let the House debate this motion. It will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion Nos. 16, 17 and 17A in the names of the hon. members for Edmonton East, Nickel Belt and Essex—Windsor go beyond the scope of the bill and therefore are out of order. As I pointed out before, this basic principle can be found in the fifth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms and in the 21st edition of Erskine May.

• (1120 )

[English]

Motion Nos. 18 and 24 attempt to introduce provisions of the Official Languages Act into the bill. These provisions are also beyond the scope of this bill, so I must regretfully rule them out of order.

Motion Nos. 20 and 32A are in order and will be debated together, but they will be voted on separately.

Motion Nos. 21, 22, 22A, 25, 26, 26A, 27, 28, 28A, 29, 30 and 30A also standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton East, the hon. member for Nickel Belt and the hon. member for Essex-Windsor are all variations of an amendment that was debated and negatived in the legislative committee. They will not be selected for that reason.

As the explanatory note to section 5 of Standing Order 76 points out, the report stage "is not meant to be a reconsideration of the committee stage of the bill".

I advise hon. members that a recapitulation of this ruling is available at the table.

I know the hon. member for Churchill wishes to comment, and I of course will hear him. It may be of assistance to the Chair.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is always a difficult issue in getting up after a Speaker's ruling.

However, Sir, you in your wisdom have ruled a number of motions standing in the name of a number of our members, including the hon. member for Edmonton East, the hon. member for Nickel Belt and the hon. member for Essex–Windsor, out of order.

Some of these deal with environmental legislation. Others deal with an oath of office to be signed by members of the board of directors of the new Petro–Canada Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, you have also ruled out amendments which would have the effect of applying the provisions of the Official Languages Act in the bill. You have been quite correct in citing the citations and history in terms of the rulings that have been made in the past with regard to having new items brought in.

Normally, they have been ruled out of order. I would submit that that has not always been the case. I can point to Bill C–79 which was passed by this House last Friday.

At that time, in a report from committee, new amendments were introduced and, ironically, one of the new motions that was brought forward from the committee was on an oath to be sworn by the members of the Board of Internal Economy.

I refer to page 16060 of Hansard. At that time, I said:

> —the House will be aware that in committee review of the legislation a new clause was added to the bill, which is an unusual procedure. Normally, it would not be allowed in this manner.

The House was made aware at that time that a new clause was being added that went beyond the scope of the bill.

What we are asking and what the hon. members in the New Democratic Party have done with their amendments here is to have a similar oath put in place for a company.

I think we are talking about a ruling. If it was in order Friday to have a new clause requiring an oath for members of the board of directors of the House of Commons, if I may use that term with regard to the Board of Internal Economy, then certainly in terms of procedure it is just as in order today, four sitting days later, to have a similar oath put into a bill. Certainly in terms of procedure, it is in order today, less than four sitting days later, to have a similar oath put into a bill. We are not talking about private corporations versus public corporations, House of Commons, or outside the House of Commons. We are talking about procedure. If it is acceptable in one incident, it is certainly acceptable in this incident.

I would also point out that in terms of the Official Languages Act, this is a situation where the government is, by changing a corporation from public to private, basically saying that the Official Languages Act no longer applies. I am surprised that government members would allow the government to take that position. I do submit, Sir, that if we are going to allow new clauses in one bill, without the objection of the Chair, that should be the case for other bills as well.

If government members wish to defeat our amendments on the environment, on official languages, and on an oath for the board of directors, that is their privilege and right. But I do believe we should be allowed to make that presentation and to bring those amendments forward for debate and for a vote.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Churchill for the intervention and also for his courtesy to the Chair in letting me know earlier this morning that he would want to make the point which he has made. He also understands, and he has indicated this to me, that the point he is making is not likely to result in a change in the ruling which the Chair has just given.

I wonder if I could take the House again into confidence with respect to these amendments. We have as much as possible been trying to have a process whereby the amendments would be the subject of very extensive discussion in some cases, certainly between the member who is filing the amendment and the table officers.

When there is sufficient notice, that is a very practical and useful practice, and I thank all hon. members for having co–operated as much as they have. Unhappily in this particular case there was very little notice for a lot of the amendments. I must tell the House that the table officers were working very late last night and also early this morning.

I anticipated there would perhaps be some discontent. I want to assure the hon. member for Churchill that earlier this morning I went over all these amendments and I could anticipate perhaps the hon. member's feelings. Without getting into it in great detail here because I do not want to set precedents where I am required after having given a ruling to then go into a great explanation about it, there are distinctions that can be drawn, and had to be drawn, between the quite accurate observations the hon. member for Churchill made with respect to Bill C–79 and the oath in that case and the oath in this particular bill.

If one examines the oath very carefully, it is not a simple oath. It is an oath with a very great deal of detail in it. It is those details which I felt clearly distinguished it from the oath in Bill C–79.

However, the hon. member has in a very concise way put forward his feelings on this matter. They have been heard. I hope that on other occasions there will be time for more discussion than there was in this case because there was obviously very little.

I thank the hon. member for his comments and also again his courtesy for giving the Chair notice that he wanted to make these points on the floor of the House.

The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier seeks the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to make a comment, without wishing in any way to reflect on the Chair's ruling with respect to the amendments. I realize the clerks had their work cut out for them, considering the limited amount of time they had to examine the amendments, which in turn was largely due to the fact that the government called the bill so soon after the committee report was tabled in the House of Commons. It is not against parliamentary procedure, but it sometimes makes things very hectic.

Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to see in your ruling that amendment No. 24, standing in my name, whose purpose is to add to the bill a provision that would commit Petro–Canada to serving Canadians in the official language of their choice—in the language of the customer—was ruled out of order. I am astonished, because we did the same thing with the bill to privatize Air Canada, and as you know, Air Canada is bound by the Official Languages Act and must comply with into provisions.

• (1130)

I am somewhat puzzled, now it seems we cannot do the same with Petro–Canada. Of course, I accept the Chair's ruling. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say and that Motion No. 23, which was ruled in order, is somewhat deficient in that the English and French versions do not read the same. I would therefore like to make the necessary corrections.

[English]

In English it says:

That Bill C–84 be amended by adding immediately line 44 at page 12 the following new clause:

"18. All undertakings and works constructed by Petro–Canada are, and each of them is declared to be, works or a work for the general advantage of Canada."

[Translation]

In French, Mr. Speaker, the same amendment reads as follows:

"18. Les ouvrages de Petro–Canada –

I think we should say: "Les ouvrages et les entreprises de Petro–Canada sont déclarés à l'avantage général du Canada".

Mr. Speaker, if this amendment, or should I say motion, is accepted, it will have the same effect as the one on official languages which you ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier indicated there may be a problem with the two versions—the English version and the French version. Perhaps this amendment could be discussed with the Table officers later this morning.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, because of the time factor there was a problem with communications. I notified the Clerk of this change yesterday, because I noticed there was something wrong. I think my letter did not reach him soon enough for the corrections to be incorporated in the amendments. I simply wish to inform the House that I wanted to get these corrections in before you handed down your ruling. I think the Clerk will inform you that he has the letter.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier. Regarding the other point he raised, it is a very simple problem. His reasons for including the use of both official languages in the Petro-Canada Bill are good, and that is why I said it was regrettable that I could not accept this amendment. For the time being, perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier could have a discussion with the Clerk and the other officers.

[English]

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if my friend was on a point of order or not when he was discussing the motion that was, by your ruling, taken out of the amendments to the bill. However, a lot of information was left hanging by the hon. member when he compared Air Canada with Petro-Canada.

An hon. member: The Official Languages Act does apply.

Mr. McDermid: That is right, the Official Languages Act did apply to Air Canada because it is a national company and does come under the act. Petro-Canada, once privatized, comes under provincial jurisdiction, under provincial law.

An hon. member: Order, he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. McDermid: This morning the hon. member left a lot of things hanging in his point of order that should be clarified. Perhaps the hon. member can tell me where, in the debate that will be taking place this morning, we might be able to explain that to the public. The hon. member left things things hanging, and I think that needs explanation.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. minister for his intervention. I thought that I had made it clear that for procedural reasons there is a difference between a Crown corporation and what will become a privatized company. For that reason, procedurally I could not allow the amendment. I did say in my reasons "regrettably". There it is; it is a procedural thing. It is not for me to speculate on how the matter could be remedied. That is a matter for members and not a matter for the Chair to comment upon.

The appropriate thing to do now is to complete my ruling. I remind hon. members that there is a recapitulation at the table. I will now propose Motion Nos. 2A, 14A, and 19. to the House.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Steven Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 2A

That Bill C-84 be amended in clause 9 by adding immediately after line 26 at page 3 the following:

"(a) provisions insuring that the positions of the Chairperson and directors of Petro-Canada shall not be held by non-residents;'

Motion No. 14A

That Bill Bill C-84 be amended in clause 9

(a) by striking out line 5 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"than one per cent of the votes that";

(b) by striking out line 17 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"more than one per cent of the total".

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River) moved:

Motion No. 19

That Bill C-84 be amended in clause 9

(a) by adding immediately after line 49 at page 4 the following:

"(h) provisions prohibiting the direct or indirect ownership of voting shares of Petro-Canada by a foreign government or any agency thereof;"

(b) by striking out lines 15 and 16 at page 8.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, we have a whole set of amendments in front of us today, which I suspect we will spend considerable time in this House debating, because they deal with some of the critical weaknesses in the present bill respecting the privatization of Petro-Canada.

We had hoped to be able to persuade the government to accept a number of other important suggestions not included in the set of amendments before us. For instance, we stressed that in these days of environmental concern it was extremely important that Petro-Canada reflect the concerns and aspirations of many Canadians with respect to environmental matters. We have raised this question in committee and actually had a fairly positive response from the chairman of Petro-Canada, Mr. Wilfred Hopper. However, it has not been possible to persuade the government that some of these environmental considerations which we consider central to Petro-Canada's future should be permitted to be in front of us for debate.

Therefore we moved to a set of proposals which aimed to do a number of things. First, this company had been paid for by the people of Canada. In fact it had been paid for in significant part through a specific tax at the pumps which people paid, the Canadianization tax expressly and explicitly designed by the government of this country to establish a more Canadianized oil industry. We had hoped that this could be incorporated in the bill more effectively than is presently the case. The particular set of amendments in front of us at this stage is the set of amendments which attempts to do that in two ways.

• (1140)

First, with Motion No. 2A, we set out that the chairperson and members of the board of directors of Petro-Canada must be Canadian residents. I note that this is a very mild provision, because it does not even suggest that they must be Canadian citizens. It suggests instead that they must be Canadian residents. From our point of view, if the minister is prepared to put into the bill a limitation with respect to foreign ownership, a limitation which we think is not tight enough but nevertheless a limitation, it follows that there should also be as a principle, as a key point, that the directors and the chairperson of this important company, which will be Canadian by the minister's edict or by the government's edict, must also be Canadian residents. That is why we have moved that particular motion.

We have also moved Motion No. 14A, which would have the effect of changing the limit with respect to foreign ownership of Petro-Canada in the future from the 25 per cent the government is prepared to accept to 1 per cent of all shares.

Frankly, our concern in this case is that as the legislation presently stands it is possible for the bill to permit foreign firms to take effective control of Petro-Canada. With three foreign companies, for instance in a widely held share basis within this company, it would be possible for one such company to have 10 per cent; another, 10 per cent; and another, 5 per cent. Foreign companies would then control 25 per cent and would have effective control of Petro-Canada in a context in which the remaining 75 per cent of shares would be held widely by Canadians, with no concentration.

Mr. McDermid: That's not true.

Mr. Langdon: The minister says that it is not true, but it is absolutely true.

Therefore we feel there must be a reduction in the 25 per cent limit. We appreciate the fact that the minister has included in the bill the 25 per cent limit, but we say, if he is serious about keeping this company Canadian-controlled, that limit has to be reduced from 25 per cent to 1 per cent.

With respect to the other motion which has been grouped for debate in this particular category, Motion No. 19, it would prohibit foreign governments or their agencies from owning Petro-Canada shares. This becomes especially significant, given the sellout permitted by the government of de Havilland to foreign government controlled companies from Italy and France. For instance, Aérospatiale of France and Alitalia of Italy will be able to control the future of an important aircraft company in this country. We do not think that makes sense. We will therefore as a party support Motion No. 19.

However, the basic point to keep in front of us on this whole set of amendments is the following, Mr. Speaker. Petro-Canada was created from the resources of the people of Canada. There is no earthly reason why we as a House of Commons should pass legislation which permits the control of this company to slip into the hands of foreign firms. For this reason we hope very much that the majority in this House will see fit to adopt the various motions that are grouped together for debate in this particular category.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak in favour of the amendment outlined by Motion No. 19.

This motion proposes that there be an explicit restriction on ownership of shares of the privatized Petro-Canada, or the semi-privatized Petro-Canada, as it goes through transition, a prohibition against ownership by a foreign government or an agency thereof.

The general purpose stated by the government in connection with this privatization is that common shares and ownership of Petro-Canada be placed in the hands of Canadians. In doing so, the government has also permitted explicitly in the bill shares of Petro-Canada to be owned by non-Canadians, by non-residents.

The proposed limit is 25 per cent. There is also a limit of 10 per cent being held by any one individual. With reference to this specific motion, it means that a foreign government, or an agency thereof—a national oil company of another government—would be restricted to 10 per cent ownership of the privatized Petro-Canada. Why is that relevant? Why is that an issue for Canadians?

I want to point out that a few months ago a Crown corporation, Connaught Laboratories, was privatized and sold, and notwithstanding the close relationship that had existed between Connaught and the Government of Canada over the years and the great work that Connaught had done, it became necessary to accept a merger with a French corporation which was owned in part by the French government.

I found that to be a step backward for Canadians. If the thrust of what we are doing in terms of privatization includes a policy of Canadianization, and that policy was confirmed by the minister of energy when he appeared before the legislative committee on Bill C-84, then any procedure, any statute which provides or acquiesces in the ownership of shares by a foreign government runs completely contrary to that.

Let me place a hypothetical situation before the House. We might be looking at this type of problem here. I do not wish to cast aspersions on the Venezuelan state oil companies, but they may have an interest in marketing their petroleum products in Canada. They may deem it in their interest to acquire a 10 per cent interest in Petro-Canada. I suggest to the House that that ownership would influence Petro-Canada greatly in a marketing decision that would remove Canadian oil products from eastern Canada and replace them with Venezuelan oil products. That may be totally inconsistent with Canadian strategic energy planning. It may not be, it may be completely consistent. We do not know. What we do not want to have is a state oil company of another country influencing strategic energy decision-making here in Canada.

I suggest that the provisions of the bill, as they are constituted now, would permit or even invite this to happen. I would not be the first to stand and say that an interest in Petro-Canada is an automatically appealing investment for another state oil company, but you never know. Certainly in this world we never know. We do not know what is going to come up tomorrow.

We have placed millions and millions of dollars of taxpayers' money in Hiberia. Would it not be embarrassing to have another government that had a great interest in the energy sector pick up a piece of the Hibernia development? One is for sale. A few days after the passage by this House of the Hibernia legislation authorizing all of that money to be put into Hibernia, the other Canadian partner, the non-Petro-Canada partner, indicated publicly that it had a desire to sell.

Perhaps I do not have to comment strategically on why they waited until after the bill was passed in this House. The prospect of Hibernia being less than 50 per cent owned would have had an impact, I know, on the decision of all the members in this House. Let us hope that Hibernia is not the first test case for the absence of a prohibition on foreign government or foreign agency ownership of Petro-Canada shares.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to speak in the debate on the privatization of Petro-Canada, although not happy that we are having the debate in the first place. In my own view, the privatization of Petro-Canada is part of an over-all process by which the Conservative government is systematically dismantling the country.

I do not know that it actually realizes this. I like to think that it does not realize it. I like to think that it is a form of ideological naivety that is not malicious in its intent. However, I am sure that it is malicious in the boardrooms of some of the corporations which fund the Conservative Party, which give it direction and which take great delight in the fact that Petro-Canada and other Crown corporations have been and are to be privatized. Canada is to be left entirely open and vulnerable to the dictates of the marketplace, which is just an euphemism for being open and vulnerable to the dictates of the multinational corporations.

For many years Canadians were very concerned about the question of foreign ownership of various sectors in our country. They were concerned about foreign ownership in the energy sector, particularly in the oil and gas industry. One of the solutions that has long been advocated for that problem, particularly by my party, was a measure of public ownership in the energy industry.

We had the opportunity to make that happen in the minority Parliament of 1972–74, when in conjunction with the fact that we held the balance of power in Parliament and the fact that the world was experiencing the first oil shock of 1973, the common sense of having Canadians own a measure of their own oil and gas industry, through the instrument of a Crown corporation, appeared obvious to everyone. I say everyone, but obviously it did not. It was opposed at the time by the Conservative Party. They are now living out the opposition which they expressed at that time by moving to privatize Petro–Canada, precisely at a time in the world of energy politics in a global situation is similar to the context in which Petro–Canada was created in the first place. That is to say, the oil crisis of 1973.

Once again we are very sensitive to our dependence on oil and to the fact that a country without the ability to control its own energy resources may well find itself in a very difficult situation.

It is for these reasons that we moved a series of amendments, one of them having to do with the limit on foreign ownership in the bill the minister has put forward. On the question of the provision in the privatization bill which limits foreign ownership to 25 per cent of all shares, we moved that that be reduced to 1 per cent.

This is our way of saying that we feel 25 per cent is far too high a limit with respect to the provision for foreign ownership of this privatized Petro–Canada. We would, of course, prefer that it not be privatized in the first place. What we are engaged in here is a sort of last ditch argument for real Canadian control over this privatized Petro–Canada.

Ministers on the government side have been known to say, and I understand the minister for privatization has said this in the past, that he would prefer 100 per cent Canadian ownership. But the fact of the matter is, if foreign ownership is set, this 25 per cent, once achieved, it will be very hard to go back on.

What we are talking about here is whether we actually have the will as a country to control our own resources, to control our own economic destiny. Surely energy is a very crucial part of our economy. I think it was Tommy Douglas who said any set of corporations or people who own all the energy resources of a particular country literally has its finger on the windpipe of that particular country.

That was the situation in which we found ourselves for years when all our energy resources were owned basically by the seven sisters of the multinational oil corporations. We are being sent all the way back to that period of time by this government and joyfully so, in its view. This is not something of which it seems to be particularly ashamed. It did not say it was doing this because it has to and it regrets it. It is all part of the kind of Canada that it wants.

I submit to the government, it is a Canada that Canadians do not want. There was no outcry. There was no public demand for the privatization of Petro–Canada, no particular reason to go ahead with this. In fact, I think one would find that there is overwhelming support for the notion of a publicly–owned oil and gas corporation.

One of the reasons I suspect support has declined somewhat, or at least the excitement about the notion of a publicly–owned oil and gas corporation has declined, is that Petro–Canada, since 1984, has been advised to act like any other oil company.

If Crown corporations are advised, in fact are required to act like any other business in that particular sector, sooner or later, of course, Canadians will not perceive any difference between the Crown corporation and its competitors. So at some point they will not be as upset as they might otherwise have been by the privatization of that particular Crown corporation.

As a strategy, I have to commend the government. It instructed the Crown corporation to act like any other company. Several years down the road Canadians will be at a point where they will not see any difference between that Crown corporation and other corporations in the same sector.

• (1200 )

The notion of privatization does not set off the same public reaction as it did, for instance, in 1979 when the Conservatives suggested that they would privatize Petro–Canada. That became a major issue and, I think, one of the major reasons for the downfall of the Conservative government at that time.

Why? Because in 1979, Petro-Canada was very new. At that time, there was still the hope that what we had was a Crown corporation that would develop into something entirely different and superior to the kinds of oil and gas companies that we had known in the past.

I am thinking of the hope that Petro-Canada would become an oil and gas company which would, unlike other oil and gas companies, not gouge the consumer at the first opportunity, that it would become a company through which we could determine what the real cost of oil and gas should be and what a fair price might be.

In 1979 there was still the hope that Petro-Canada might become exemplary in its dealings with its employees, native peoples in the north, and the environment. I can remember making speeches myself in the House in the early 1980s in which we called upon the Liberal government of that time to do more to make Petro-Canada into that exemplary oil and gas corporation that the NDP had in mind in the early 1970s when we called for its creation.

That did not happen, and things got worse after 1984 when a government hostile to the very existence of Petro-Canada took over the government of the country. It proceeded to have Petro-Canada operate in such a way that now, frankly, it is able to privatize it without much public ado.

I think these are the reasons. The other reason, of course, is that the country is pre-occupied with the GST, the Senate, the Bloc quebecois, Meech Lake, and everything else. As my comrade from Edmonton East says, if the government is busy hitting you over the head with a sledge hammer, sometimes you do not notice the knife that is being slipped into your back. The knife that is being slipped into our back is the privatization of Petro-Canada. Unfortunately, that goes along quite nicely with what we experienced yesterday with the gutting of the CBC.

I can see my colleague from the Bloc quebecois shaking his head. If one wanted to destroy the country, these guys over here are doing a better job of it than anything that my colleague from the Bloc quebecois would like to do. They are doing it by gutting the CBC, privatizing Petro-Canada, devastating VIA Rail, eliminating all kinds of postal services particularly in rural Canada—you name it, Mr. Speaker, all the things that have bound the country together. Pretty soon it will not be a big deal for the Bloc quebecois or anybody to advocate the dismemberment of Canada, because there will not be anything left that resembles the kind of Canada that many of us wanted to protect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired. Debate.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is interesting and I should comment as I start that there is a basic, fundamental philosophical difference between many of the members on the other side of the House and the government.

The whole world recognizes that, as country after country is working as hard as they can to become competitive on a global basis, we see these countries taking moves to privatize many of their industries. In so doing, they become more competitive.

From the other side of the House, we tend to hear that the government should, in fact, be getting into more industries, that we should be creating more Crown corporations, and that the government should, in fact, be playing a bigger role in running the country. Those are fundamentally opposite objectives and of course this government—and I believe this government with the support of the majority of Canadians— is attempting to become responsible economically. Part of this process will involve the proper privatization of many of the companies.

In so doing, obviously we have to get the best return possible for the taxpayers. Many people seem to forget that, in fact, the taxpayers out there fund everything the government spends or invests, or anything that the government loses money on. If the government makes money, the taxpayers benefit. So, it is critical that we get maximum return for our investment. In so doing, the minister and the government is seeing that the shares are going to be widely held and widely held by Canadians. There are not going to be more than 10 per cent of shares controlled by one group and no more than 25 per cent of the shares can be held by people who are not Canadian residents.

In that light, I would like to address the three amendments that we are looking at right now. The first is the amendment to try to control the numbers of directors or the composition of the board of directors of PetroCan. The motion would indicate that none of the directors could be non-resident. On the surface this may seem to be attractive but, I think, quite unnecessary.

I would like to emphasize, first, that the company will be Canadian-controlled and that Canadians who own those shares will be able to control who the directors are. I would like to point out, as an example, that Imperial Oil which does not have this restriction has all Canadian directors. It did not require a piece of legislation to ensure that that would happen. The other point, of course, is that the CBCA ensures that a majority of the directors will, in fact, be Canadians.

From a practical point of view, if we have a Canadian-controlled company and these shareholders want to have somebody who is very competent on their board of directors who happens not to be a Canadian resident, it would be quite improper for us to try to impose that restriction on that board of directors.

The second amendment would reduce foreign ownership in Petro-Canada from the limit we set at 25 per cent to 1 per cent. We have had expert witness after expert witness indicate that, if it is going to try to realize the maximum return for our taxpayers, the government should put the fewest number of restrictions possible on the privatization of Air Canada. In fact, we have had some witnesses recommend that we increase or remove the 25 per cent limit. Others have said that, with the 25 per cent limit, they do not feel that there will any undue restriction on the market. But, obviously, to reduce it to 1 per cent is precluding so many shareholders or potential shareholders that we should be trying to encourage to invest in Petro-Canada if, in fact, we are going to get the best return for the taxpayer and the government wants to get that best return.

As to the last amendment which has been proposed, the hon. member indicated his arguments were based on many hypothetical situations. I would first point out that it has not happened to any of the other oil companies in Canada, large or small, where we have seen any undue control by foreign agents.

• (1210)

There would be some very practical and I think quite logical repercussions if we did try to impose this. Most of the investors we would be affecting are in fact pension funds from Canadians. For instance, Canadian National Railway, as a pension fund, invests in many other international companies' shares and other countries' shares. If we were to start to impose restrictions on ours, obviously we would expect some retaliation from these other nations. It is not something that, as a government, we should be entering into.

Another point that I would like to make is that Petro-Canada itself deals internationally with many other countries. Although in most cases other countries are not interested in investing in Petro-Canada, the mere fact that we would be trying to impose these restrictions would lead to us being perceived as attacking those countries and their ability to invest. It would be seen as a very negative thing.

For these reasons, I would recommend that members of the House not support these motions.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we listened stoically to the parliamentary secretary's intervention in the last few minutes and his brilliant commercial on behalf of Exxon, Shell, and the major multinationals which dominate the field of petroleum the world over.

He was somehow attempting to tell us that there is no role for the public and for the public interest in the field of petroleum. The wise thing to do, according to the Conservative theology, is to withdraw from the public interest. In that sense, the Tories are quite consistent. They are doing it with VIA, Air Canada, the CBC, and now effectively so with this bill and through this bill with Petro-Canada. We are told to leave it to the seven sisters, or the five now. Leave it to the private sector. They will take care of Canada's energetic future.

We also hear the parliamentary secretary suddenly defending the taxpayers' interest by way of this bill. That is rather amusing since he belongs to a party and a government that has doubled the national debt between 1984 and 1989, from some $165 billion to some $380 billion.

All of a sudden, it is the bottom line that counts after six years of mismanagement. This is the message that comes these days from the Tory government benches, including the dinosaur from Brampton who is otherwise known as the so-called Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs. He is dismantling Canada and here he produces a bill which is the classic product of a dinosaur who never learns and who is about to die because the citizens of Brampton will only give him another couple of years. Then he is gone down the drain as all dinosaurs should go and deserve to go.

We hear now this fantastic concern for the public debt. At the end of 1990, all of sudden we have to cut in the interest of the public. What a shame! What a distortion if one looks at the performance of this government, from the time it was elected until very recently, in doubling that very same public debt. Canadians, however, will not be fooled.

In looking at this bill, in particular Motion Nos. 2A and 19, the parliamentary secretary of course feels that these go too far and that these are not measures that ought to be adopted. They sound perhaps too patriotic for this government. I do not blame him because he has to carry out orders on behalf of the dinosaurs over there. He is telling us to be careful, that we should not impose a Canadian presence on the board of Petro-Canada. This is something that you do not do. It is improper. It is not necessary because it is being done through other means, perhaps through an association of some sort, but not through the bill because it could backfire and be counter-productive.

It is really difficult to believe that the section we are examining now, section 9, goes on for six pages to identify provisions, mostly of a technical nature, without statements that relate to the environment, to sustainable development, and without a statement of mandate in general. Actually, it is a bill without a preamble which these days is quite unusual. This is an old fashioned type of bill in which it is not indicated overall in which direction you intend to go. That is usually what a preamble does in a bill. But this government does not trouble to indicate to the public the mandate or the general philosophy which the government intends to pursue. It probably would be too embarrassing to reveal to the public in a few lines what this bill is all about. That is perhaps the reason why we cannot find in the short introduction to the bill what it intends to produce.

We thought that the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Essex—Windsor and the hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River, whom I congratulate for their initiative, would have fallen on sensitive and receptive ears, particularly the two motions put forward this morning. The reason being that there has to be in an organization, which was launched and funded over the years, which performed a valuable service to the Canadian public, and established a presence which is so popular, as witnessed by the efficient operation of the Petro-Canada stations across the country, a sense of substantial Canadian ownership which would be made a part of this legislative measure.

We never would have thought we would hear an intervention of the kind that the parliamentary secretary made a moment ago in defending the importance of the private sector. The private sector would not be in danger at all if Petro-Canada were to continue under the present mandate. It would not be in danger if the mandate of Petro-Canada were to be expanded, which is unthinkable in the dinosauric mentality of the Tories across the aisle here today and for the past few years. It is inconceivable for them to even think in terms of the fact that Canada needs a long-term energy plan and within that plan to devise a bill of a different content that would fit within the general plan.

We are perhaps the only nation in the industrialized northern hemisphere which does not have an energy plan, policy or sense of direction, let alone the vaguest idea as to what we should be doing to reduce our dependency on fossil fuels. The dinosaurs over there are not even trying to tackle that in their wildest mornings when they wake up with their foggy minds. In fact, they do not have minds. They are just creeping creatures, they have nothing in their brains except spinach, perhaps, at best. On the eve of 1991, we are debating this bill with its puny little sections which are really meaningless in terms of long term environmental and sustainable development and climate change. We are trying to tell this bunch of idiots that they are out of sync with the rest of the world. That's what they are because, Mr. Speaker, at every scientific conference that you attend throughout the world these days scientists are telling us: "Damn it, reduce your dependence on fossil fuels because there is a climate change danger at the door". And what does this government happily do? It just ignores it.

It is very hard to take seriously a bill like this. When the government comes here and the dinosaur has his chance to speak, if he wants to get up in his seat today, if he has the courage to defend this bill, we will listen to him. We will be glad to hear the drivel he has to offer.

The fact is that we are not even dealing with the fringes of the issue as to what Petro-Canada should be all about. Actually Petro-Canada is being gradually, systematically phased out and with it also Petro-Canada International.

I challenge the minister to get up in this House today and confirm or give us assurance that eventually Petro-Canada International will not be wiped out as a long-term consequence of this bill. I challenge the minister to get up in this House and give us this assurance. He will not, Mr. Speaker, because he cannot give it and he knows it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired. The hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have an opportunity to speak at report stage to a couple of amendments to Bill C-84, the legislation introduced, as a previous speaker said, by the dinosaurs on the other side of this House, these right-wing zealots, these extremists across the way, who are doing their best to remake and destroy this country as we have come to know it. The list has been repeated on a couple of occasions in the last few days. Yesterday the CBC. Before that, VIA Rail and Canada Post, particularly in rural areas. I think what this government is trying to do is remake this country so we will never recognize it again and for that all Canadians, all taxpayers, are going to pay.

We have to take a look at what I think are three very reasonable amendments to this legislation to privatize Petro-Canada, three very reasonable recommendations. The first one is an amendment saying that the chairperson and members of the board of directors of Petro-Canada must be Canadian residents. What is the big deal? Why be afraid of an amendment like that? We could even have put in that they had to be Canadian citizens. We thought members opposite might come part way and support an amendment like that. What are they doing? They are opposing that. What are they afraid of?

Second, under the amendments we are also suggesting that they change the limit of foreign ownership from 25 per cent being allowed by this government to 1 per cent, to make the message and the point that we think Canadians should own Petro-Canada. With that kind of arrangement I am suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, Saddam Hussein could come in here after the embargo and start buying up Petro-Canada. That is how illogical this legislation is.

As an individual he could come in after the embargo and buy up 10 per cent of Petro-Canada. Who over there is an agent for Saddam Hussein? That is what I would like to know, Mr. Speaker.

The third amendment being proposed by the Liberal Party also is an attempt to prevent Saddam Hussein from buying up Petro-Canada. This amendment will deny foreign governments and their agents buying up parts of Petro-Canada. It is important for the government to hear this message so that we do not allow our oil company to fall into the hands of Saddam Hussein, Exxon, and that ilk. That is what the Tories across the way are really trying to do. They are the front shock troops for Saddam Hussein and the huge multinational oil corporations which are going to come in and buy up PetroCan.

What they are going to do is tell all Canadians who are patriotic to Canada, who are patriotic to their oil companies, to have one of these in their wallets, Mr. Speaker—Petro-Can credit cards.

An hon. member: Not here.

Mr. Gardiner: These guys are going to issue one to Saddam Hussein, and he is not going to have a credit limit on his credit card so he can come in and buy up our oil reserves. It is shocking what this government is doing. It should listen to some good sense and vote for these three amendments. Let's keep Petro-Canada a Canadian oil company. Let us be sure that Canadian taxpayers recognize and play a role in the energy development in our country.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Surely, Mr. Speaker, you know that I would not miss an opportunity to have a few words on this issue. As a matter of fact, Sir, you will remember this well. It is like the wheel going full circle because we were here. We saw it all. We saw the creation of Petro-Canada in 1972. There was a minority government. Lo and behold we ended up with an energy crisis in 1973.

We had the big sisters in the oil industry telling us one day that we had enough reserves for the next 3,000 years. The next day we only had reserves for 10 years. And then the National Energy Board could not provide Canadians with the facts. It had no information about the reserves, and no other information about the way the oil industry operated in this country.

As the price for our support of a Liberal government, we forced upon them the establishment of a national energy company called Petro-Canada. We all remember that well. Liberals were not interested in establishing energy policy in this country. They were not interested in Canada having a window on the energy industry of this country. It was the New Democratic Party. We gave our support to that minority Liberal government and one of the prices was the establishment of Petro-Canada.

The government says that Petro-Canada should be privatized because it serves no public policy role. Can you believe that? In a resource that is so vital to the success of Canadian industry and to Canadians as a whole, this government says there is no public policy. This is a government of ideologues. We saw where the last government of ideologues—Margaret Thatcher's government—ended up.

Mr. McDermid: Are you speaking of ideologues?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. The minister has pointed the finger at the NDP, but I want to tell you to look at what your government is doing. All it wants is some corporate agenda. All it wants to do is to run Canada as if if were running the Iron Ore Company of Canada. The last one out will put the lights out. That is not the way it is going to be.

If the minister thinks we are wrong, I wish his government would call an election tomorrow and see where it will end up. It will end up in the ash can of history and never again for the next 100 years will a Conservative government be elected in this country. Ever.

Mr. Langdon: Ten seats. They'd get 10 seats.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not even 10 seats.

Mr. Langdon: I am generous.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is embarked on a corporate agenda. It does not care about people. All that matters is some sort of idea that it is an accounting book and that there is a philosophy that you can have competition. Not only competition within Canada, but it is now talking about global competition. If ever Petro-Canada could play a public policy role, it is now.

Second, the government says: "Oh, we have to do this because we need the cash".

Mr. McDermid: No, the government never said that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, you said that. You said you need the cash. There is a thinking out there among Canadians that we sold off Air Canada, that we have sold off de Havilland, that we have sold off Canadair, and that we have sold off a whole host of Crown corporations. Do you know what Canadians think? Canadians really think that when these are sold a cheque is written by the purchaser, it is handed to the government and goes into the Treasury.

• (1230)

I want to say to Canadians who are watching that not one plug nickel has been collected from any of the Crown corporations this government has privatized. It has all gone back to the companies.

Mr. McDermid: That's not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: Your minister says that it is not true. Show me the cheque. Where is it? Get it out of your pocket and show it to us. You did not put it in the Consolidated Revenue Fund. You put it into the consolidated revenue fund of the purchasers of de Havilland; you put into Boeing. That is who has it.

France has a very dynamic role in the financial institutions of France. The government itself owns the bank. In Italy, the government owns the airline industry which employs thousands upon thousands of workers. They are doing the research and development in airplane design and manufacturing. It is the same in France. They do it.

We have the spectacle or the possibility of de Havilland actually being nationalized by foreign countries. France and Italy might end up buying de Havilland. Do you want to tell me that these people are not ideologically bent? They are so ideologically bent that if they stood behind a corkscrew at noon they would not throw a shadow. They are motivated strictly by the board room and some cockamamie concept that you can run Canada as you run a corporation.

We have seen how they run a corporation. Let us look at how they run the CBC? Yesterday, CBC just simply announced lay-offs of people immediately. That is the way that the Incos and Falconbridges of this world run their companies in relationship to their workers. That is not the way a government should be run. It is run by these ideologues from the Stone Age.

The government has also said that it will reduce the deficit. Petro-Canada has been quite a profitable company. Now, after it has written down the value of Petro-Canada, it wants to sell it off.

Here is an example of a government that gives billions to private oil companies to develop Hibernia; $5 billion, $3 billion of which we will never see. Now it is handing money out to private corporations. This is a corporate welfare state. This government is handing out to corporate welfare bums a whole pile of money. The government is pretty tough on old age pensioners who have overpayments on their Old Age Supplement. It collects every dollar back and dime back. By the same token, it has all these corporate types lining up at the trough and it simply shells out the money.

In the case of Hibernia, not one litre of that oil will be refined in Canada. We have a refinery at Come-by-Chance. A previous government handed out to a corporate welfare character a whole pile of money to build that refinery at Come-by-Chance.

Mr. Langdon: It was the Liberals.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, it was the Liberals. I am talking about that other gang. What is the difference between them? Here we have quite a spectacle.

We remember when Petro-Canada bought Petrofina. We never did get the true story of that. When the Tories were in opposition they were demanding under access to information certain rules. When they became the government, the Auditor General demanded the information, and these guys were as forthcoming as a clam on giving the public the information.

Here we have the spectacle of Petro-Canada being used to pay top buck for a company that maybe was not worth that at the time. We have this gang now selling it off. This government is selling off the family jewels, all of those investments that the Canadian public has made. The Canadian public invested in building up Petro-Canada. It must have put in about $6.5 billion toward developing Petro-Canada and the government, having written down its value, will sell it off. It is an investment which the people of Canada have made in a national oil company with a role to play in the public interest.

The fact of the matter is the government says it needs the cash. This government knows that it does not receive one penny from all those companies that it has nationalized. It has misled Canadians to think that somehow or other by selling all this off the government is accruing billions of dollars which it can apply to the deficit.

The other question is whether it will reduce the deficit. Look at what it has nationalized so far. This company has made money for the people of Canada. What it wants to do is sell off something that is finally starting to return money to the people of Canada. I think it is a disgrace. It is too bad we cannot put this government out of its misery. I appeal to Tory backbenchers to get up on their hind legs and do to the present Prime Minister what the Tories at Westminster did to Margaret Thatcher.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, we do not have a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will ask the Clerk Assistant to count the members present.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

And the bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being a quorum, not including the occupant of the chair, debate shall accordingly continue.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I have sat and listened to the members of the two opposition parties this morning. It is quite interesting what they are explaining with regard to the amendments they have put forth to Bill C-84. They talked about, in total, a national petroleum company that is government regulated, government involvement and government controlled.

I would just like to draw to the attention of my colleagues that I come from the province of Alberta. One of the most devastating things that happened to us was the National Energy Program which was passed through this House, with the co-operation of the NDP. It devastated our province in the latter part of 1980 and 1981. I am not sure if too many people here today understand what happened when the PGRT was applied, which was a 16 per cent tax at the well head. There was absolutely no permissibility to have that reduced from one's income tax. We were double taxed to the point where there was between $60 million and $65 million taken out of our province over a period of four or five years. What we are describing today in regard to Bill C-84 is exactly the old National Energy Program. One of the reasons that I ran as a member of Parliament and came down here was to dismantle that program.

They talk about foreign ownership. They believe that the board of directors should be only Canadian residents. This should not be a prerequisite. We want the very best people, with the smartest brains, to be the directors. If one looks at the major oil and gas companies, the majority of the directors in our country are Canadian residents. However, if one goes back far enough to the time of Leduc, some of our friends from south of the border who came up from Tulsa, used their resources and helped bring onstream some of the major developments in the country.

I welcome foreign participation; there is no problem. We have limited ownership to the 25 per cent, and no one person can own more than 10 per cent. If we restrict the shares with too many items, we are not even going to be able to sell them in the marketplace, which is the reason for the bill.

The bill is to untie the strings of Petro-Canada and allow it to operate as a totally independent company that can go to the marketplace for equity. It has involvement in Hibernia, where there is a large commitment. It has involvement in the Beaufort, in Syncrude, and the OSLO project, which is still under review.

No matter where you go, it takes money to make money. This government has a major goal, and it happens to be deficit debt reduction.

An hon. member: Oh.

Mrs. Sparrow: Absolutely. No matter what you people say—and you are all socialists over there, absolutely every one of you—Petro-Canada is going to be operating as a private, independent company that can prove itself. It has an excellent board of directors today, with no problem whatsoever. It runs a very good company. Its findings have been excellent, but its main problem is its inability to access capital to fulfil its future objectives, future objectives that will bring onstream supplies of oil and gas for this country, supplies that we will need, supplies that even Ontario will need.

I could not help but hear my colleague from the New Democratic Party absolutely berating us for allowing Petro-Canada to be privatized. What did his premier do, in his province? He allowed British Gas to come in and take Consumers Gas, which is exactly the right way to do it. He agreed to Investment Canada's recommendation that foreign capital was going to help the province of Ontario.

What we need to do is agree that in order to help all Canadians, if you want to sell a barrel of oil or an mcf. of gas, you have to replace it. And, if you are going to replace it, you need capital to do the exploration, the development, and the production. That is exactly what we are going to give to Petro-Canada to allow it to be the best player.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, what we have here is more smoke and mirrors. I think they set fire to all Petro-Canada reserves in the country, because I cannot see through this smoke, I will tell you.

We have had the member for Cariboo—Chilcotin telling us that this is a strictly ideological move on the part of the government. Then we had a member telling us that the only reason the government is doing this is to reduce the debt. I really am at a loss to know which it is. I suspect the truth is that it is neither.

What is really happening here, as with so many other things this government has done, is that it has taken anything in which the government has any kind of an interest and which is profitable and done the very best it could to transfer it from the general Canadian population into the hands of those who definitely do not need it. They already have more money than they could possibly figure out what to do with. I make that assumption purely on the basis that people other than people like myself are going to be buying those shares. Whether it is to be 25 per cent foreign owned or 75 per cent Canadian owned is rather irrelevant. The fact of the matter is that what it is doing is taking profitable Canadian-owned, publicly-owned institutions and giving them away to their rich friends so that their rich friends can become even more rich than they already are.

We have in this country at the present time the first made-in-Canada depression, recession I suppose is the word that they would use across the floor. I suggest that what we have in this country right now also is the first instance in world history where the scorched-earth policy has been applied to a nation's own population.

I can understand the Russians during the Second World War scorching the earth so that their enemies would not to have a food supply at a time when they were retreating. When I look at what has been happening to this country since this government was elected a mere six years ago, and how much devastation it has caused to the identity, to the entity, to that geographical, to that philosophical, to the description which the world knows as Canada, it is obvious that what we have is a scorched-earth policy. After it is through, after it has left office, there will be no possibility of anyone ever being able to identify anything as being Canadian again.

The free trade deal was certainly an example of the scorched-earth policy being put into effect. When we look at what happened to Bill C-21, when we look at the privatization of the airplane manufacturing companies, which we have already had reference to, it is obvious what is happening. Anything that has any kind of a Canadian identity is being destroyed for reasons other than debt reduction or that it is good for Canada.

That is something we keep hearing all the time. The government is doing these things because they are good for Canada. I guess the government must have a different vision of what Canada is than certainly I or the members of my party have. I have a hard time relating to a Canada that no longer has a sharing, caring unemployment insurance scheme. I have trouble with a Canada that no longer has a VIA Rail. I have trouble with a Canada that no longer has an identifiable publicly-owned airline such Air Canada. I have trouble with a Canada where with one of the major funding institutions in the country, the government has done the very best it can to diminish the well-being of Canadians. I am referring to the medicare system and also the federal funding of post-secondary education.

What we have is a scorched-earth policy. What we are debating right now, the privatization of Petro-Canada, is nothing more or nothing less than that.

Mr. Speaker, when the history of this nation is written, I assure you that the name of the minister of privatization on December 6, 1990 will not appear in the history books for good reason. If I was doing what that minister is doing, I would not want it to appear there. I am sure there are very few historians who would even give what he is doing a passing glance. Yet we have the confession of the government that this is being done for ideological reasons.

Hopefully, this is some kind of an aberration in the history of this country, that we should have something as disastrous as this happening to a nation. I suggest, as one of the previous speakers said, this is probably going to be the last Progressive Conservative government, hopefully with any connotation of Conservative, in this country for the next 100 years.

Getting closer to the amendments themselves, the idea is to reduce foreign ownership to zero, 1 per cent actually. Margaret Thatcher in her conservative wisdom set the number in many instances at zero. So it really is not that outrageous for us to suggest that the foreign ownership level be reduced from 25 per cent to 1 per cent.

Let us talk about the country with which we have a free trade agreement, the good old U.S.A. The Americans are becoming tremendously concerned about the level of foreign ownership of their economy. The level of foreign ownership of the United States economy is somewhere between 4 per cent and 5 per cent.

Manufacturing in Canada has 50 per cent foreign ownership. In the resource industries we have a foreign ownership level of 70 per cent to 80 per cent. In the oil industry we have foreign ownership levels of somewhere around 45 per cent, and that is up from a level of 37 per cent when these scorched earthers assumed power in 1984.

We had a confession from the hon. member for Cariboo—Chilcotin that this is an ideological battle, and I think it is nothing more than that. I think we owe a great deal of thanks to that member for having identified it as such.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, I rise today without some of the exuberance shown by other members on both sides of the House when speaking to this particular bill. I rise with the feeling of some depression, and I bring that depression with me, having just come back from a number of days in British Columbia. People in that province—and I have also seen this in Alberta, Newfoundland and other places in the country that I have been over the last little while—have a depressed feeling. It is not a depression in economic terms, although certainly the government has pushed us in that direction, it is an emotional depression where people are asking what is happening to our country.

During the last election, we were promised certain things. The government of the day talked about leading us into the economic future. But the feeling, which is reflected fairly accurately in the recent polls which show the government at an all-time low of 14 per cent, is here for a good reason.

People to whom I have spoken, life-time members until recently of the Conservative Party, have said they could not, and never would again, support the party into which they were essentially born and with which they have lived and fought for all these years, are now fighting with the party. I use the analogy of a family that has lost everything in a fire. They have worked their complete lives building up their assets and all of a sudden they see a total loss.

These people point out to me the problems with VIA Rail. They tell me our country is no longer the vision of the Conservative John A. Macdonald, of keeping this country together from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast. They see the breaking down of that under the government with the gutting of the VIA Rail lines and the privatization of Air Canada.

Yesterday, some of the worst fears of the people of Canada came about with the total devastation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by this government. That corporation was built over a period of time and has become what people from every region of Canada look upon as part of what keeps us together. It gives us the opportunity in cross-Canada programs for the east coast to talk to the west coast to talk to northern Canadians.

We have seen over the past six years a whittling away by this government of that particular method of communication. But what do we have today? Once again, we are back to what is depressing the people that I speak to; Air Canada, VIA Rail, Canada Post, and now Petro-Canada.

People have looked on Petro-Canada as our opportunity to keep the foreign oil companies who seem to control us somewhat honest. It was pointed out in an earlier speech by one of the members of my party that what has happened over the last period of time is a program by this government to ensure that Petro-Canada is more and more like every other corporation, instead of that leader which people in Canada have looked for.

Over the past month or so, I have had hundreds of letters from people in my riding and from various other parts of Canada, copies of letters to the Prime Minister, and copies of letters to the minister of privatization, asking me to stand up and fight for Canada, to fight against the privatization of Petro-Canada, the last vestige of control we have as far as retailing or refining of oil is concerned.

It is interesting to look at history and see what happened, what the people in our history have said. Some of our recent history, I think, is worth looking at. The minister of privatization who has been so vocal in his heckling and what not this morning, said in this House on December 11, 1979, at page 2255 of Hansard:

> —only eligible Canadians—eligible Canadians—should be permitted to own shares in Petro-Canada and only eligible Canadians—Canadians, I repeat—should be entitled to buy shares in the after-market. I have stated many times that the shares must go to and remain in Canadian hands.

That is the same minister who now brings forward a plan to turn over 25 per cent of Petro-Canada to anybody who wants it, to foreign interests. The particular amendments we are looking at, and that our party is pushing for, are to ensure that if this government is bent on privatizing this corporation, that the privatization remain minimal and the control of that corporation remain in Canadian hands, as the minister of privatization himself argued for in 1979.

But, Mr. Speaker, he is not the only one. The present Conservative House leader from Calgary stated on June 20, 1978, "I was a founding member of the committee for an independent Canada and I believe that far too much of our economy is owned by foreigners. I know why that is so. It is because the oil industry is owned primarily by foreigners".

What is the House leader doing? He is supporting a bill that will put that control back in the hands of the foreigners.

This bill cannot go forward without our amendments, but I would suggest on behalf of the people in my riding that this bill should not go forward at all, but should be withdrawn by this government for the sake of Canadian unity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chamber until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, oyster dealers in P.E.I. have encountered a problem trying to sell their oysters in the Quebec market. This problem arises because there are two different levels of inspections which are in effect in that province and which could be put into effect in any province.

If these oysters had come from the U.S., rather than a Canadian province, they would not have been subject to provincial inspection at all. However, because of interprovincial trade barriers, oyster dealers are faced with meeting different standards in different provinces.

The oysters in question passed federal inspection in P.E.I. before they left, passed federal inspection in Quebec after they arrived, but were rejected and returned by provincial inspectors. Our oyster dealers and fishermen are being badly hurt.

We have signed a free trade agreement with the U.S. We are considering joining free trade discussions with the U.S. and Mexico. Yet, within our own country, we are faced with restrictive trade practices which in instances such as the one involving oysters can actually discriminate against products from another part of our own country.

We need to put our own house in order before we get involved in another free trade deal, especially one which has the potential to be even more disastrous than the one the government has already gotten us into.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today is the anniversary of the murder of 14 women at the École polytechnique in Montreal. It is a day of mourning for all women and men of conscience for it reminds us all that misogyny, the blind hatred of women, can only end in tragedy.

This was not an isolated incident and the murderer was not acting at random. He and hundreds like him are the logical results of a society which too often degrades and dehumanizes women. In Ontario alone dozens of women have died over the last two years. Today we remember just a few of them by name: Annette Orrico, Valerie McKay, Sakina Pabani, Jane Cunningham, Heather Pelletier, Nancy Simansky, Gabriella Christian, and Monique Girard.

Today, we are reminded that mourning is not enough. We must all work for change.

TRAGEDY AT L'ÉCOLE POLYTECHNIQUE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Science): Mr. Speaker, this is a very sad day, a reminder of a frightening drama that took the lives of 14 young women and future engineers. All these students had a brilliant career ahead of them, but only a few seconds is all that a distraught individual needed to destroy everything. The wound is still there a year later, and we realize that never will Quebecers and Canadians forget this terrible incident.

In the name of the Minister of Science and personally I want to extend again my deepest sympathy to the parents who had to learn to live again after losing their daughter. To the directors of the École polytechnique and to all students I express my respect and admiration for managing to overcome such a trying experience.

I hope that everywhere in Canada and throughout the world we will never again witness such cruel and aberrant incidents.

HIVER EN NORD FESTIVAL

Mr. Jacques Vien (Laurentides): A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, eastern Canada was blanketed under the winter's first snow fall. The people of my riding were rejoicing, for it marked the beginning of the new winter tourist season.

This winter Sainte-Agathe-des-Monts will celebrate the 50th anniversary of its festivities. This year's Hiver en Nord festival will be held from January 26 to February 24 next. This festival provides a number of activities for the whole family, regardless of age and personal preferences. This winter feast is organized by a group of very dynamic volunteers who will extend the warmest welcome to all visitors.

I invite all Canadians to come and celebrate Saint-Agathe's Hiver en Nord festival. The Laurentians are well known for spectacular scenery, unrivalled hospitality and proven enjoyment of Canadian winters in northern country.

BALTIC STATES

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, I would like to welcome the President of Lithuania who is with us in Ottawa today. My leader and members of our caucus met with the President this morning and were presented with a document of the Joint Session of the Baltic Supreme Councils addressed to the parliaments of the world.

In this document the Supreme Councils, reaffirming their nations' will to restore the complete independence of the three Baltic States and adhering to the fundamental principles of the Helsinki Final Act, appeal to the parliaments of the world to fully employ their influence in helping to assure that the Soviet Union end all threats and begin interstate negotiations with the States on the recognition of their independence.

We on this side of the House would like to urge the Government of Canada, in keeping with the spirit of the all-party resolution unanimously passed by the House last March, that full consideration be given to this document, as a member of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, to endorse the inclusion of the Baltic States on the future agenda of the executive bodies of the CSCE.

Once again, we would like to welcome President Landsbergis and wish him a successful and fruitful visit in Canada.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, the CBC wants to restructure its operations, and the government wants to cut spending. I have no objections, but if it means closing down all television stations in Eastern Quebec, that is unacceptable and intolerable. It means depriving the people of my riding of their sole means of communicating with the rest of the country.

I therefore want to ask the President of the CBC and the Minister of Communications to review this decision, and to consider the geographical circumstances, the catastrophic state of the economy and the increasingly alarming demographics of this part of the country as grounds for excempting the Gaspé from these vicious cutbacks.

The people of the Gaspé are not asking for miracles. They want the right to be informed. Mr. Speaker, at this stage, a cut in the Senate budget would have been a much wiser decision.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I have some great news for hockey fans across Canada. We just learned a few minutes ago that the city of Ottawa has been awarded a National Hockey League franchise.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kilger: I would like to congratulate Terrace Investments and everyone who backed the franchise bid.

I also want to commend the people who backed the application for the city of Hamilton. We hope that Hamilton will be included in the next round of expansion in the national hockey league.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, Canadians want a united Canada. Working together we have been building a tolerant, democratic, peaceful, and prosperous country and we have made tremendous progress. Together Canadians must continue this task.

While some spread doom and gloom and promote disunity and discord, our Prime Minister has shown initiative and leadership with his creation of the Citizen's Forum and his invitation for all Canadians to be heard.

One group in Alberta speaking out loudly and clearly for Canadian unity is the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. At its recent convention it resolved that to "support those leaders whose goals are to develop a constitution for all Canadians, for one nation, united by our land and spirit, respecting our country, our flag, our home, our Canada."

Canadians want a united Canada.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today marks a memorial of sorrow. One year ago, Canada witnessed the brutal massacre of 14 young women at the École polytechnique in Montreal, a most terrifying example of violence against women.

Sexual assault, emotional abuse, battering, and murder of women continue to escalate. Battering of women is now a major public health problem. Indeed, women of all ages are scared, and rightly so. There is no sanctuary from the fear.

Is it not within our mandate to legislate for a secure future for Canadian women and to pass strict gun control laws? Let us support the call for a royal commission on violence against women.

As we mourn today those precious lives lost one year ago, please remember our Canadian obligation to keep Canadian women and all Canadians safe from harm and free of fear.

RIDING OF CHÂTEAUGUAY

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, the riding of Châteauguay was severely affected by the Amerindian crisis last summer and, unfortunately, it is not over yet.

I want to ask the government to provide special economic assistance that will help the riding recover from the aftermath of these events.

I also want to ask the government to clarify the status of Indian land claims and give investors and the people of Châteauguay the assurance that these claims will not block the area's economic development, which badly needs a boost.

QUEBEC SOVEREIGNTY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, today I rise in the House to pay tribute to a government that is helping us achieve sovereignty. The federal government is withdrawing from most areas that affect the lives of this country's citizens. It has cut postal services and railway transportation; it is making cutbacks at the CBC and privatizing Petro-Canada; it will shut off the Sarnia—Montreal pipe-line, cut back unemployment insurance and cut back regional development.

Mr. Speaker, in addition they cannot agree with the Government of Quebec on immigration. They cannot agree on occupational training, they cannot agree on regional development and they cannot agree on communications.

Mr. Speaker, initially, we said that sovereignty was desirable. Now, we realize it is necessary. And the evidence is mounting that the sooner it happens, the better.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, one year ago today 14 women lost their lives to one man's hate. Today we mourn, but we must also work for change. We must work to end the glorification of violence against women so that we can end the violence.

We will truly have made progress when we can no longer remember the murderer's name, but only the names of the women he killed. With that in mind, today we remember Geneviève Bergeron, Hélène Colgan, Nathalie Croteau, Barbara Daigeneault, Anne Marie Edward, Maud Haviernick, Barbara Maria Klucznik, Maryse Laganière, Maryse Leclair, Anne Marie Lemay, Sonia Pelletier, Michèle Richard, Annie St-Arneault, and Annie Turcotte.

In their memory, members of the House are asked to support the establishment by the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of 14 science scholarships in the names of the 14 who died at the École polytechnique.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate the tragic killings of 14 young women at the École polytechnique. I would like to say that eliminating violence against women is one of this government's priorities, a commitment reflected in the Lake Louise declaration signed last May by the Hon. Mary Collins and her provincial counterparts. The declaration reads as follows:

"We, the Ministers Responsible for the Status of Women in Canada, are committed to achieving full equality for women in all aspects of life. As Canadians, we value the inherent worth and dignity of every individual and we expect all persons to treat one another with respect. Since violence and its threat are depriving many women of their ability to achieve equality, we declare that:

1. Violence against women is a crime and punishable under the law.
2. Women are entitled to live in a safe environment.
3. Offenders must be held accountable for their behavior.
4. The elimination of violence against women requires a response including prevention, public education, services and enforcement of the law.
5. Every individual, community and government in Canada must do everything possible to help the women, children and families affected by violence; we must all work together to achieve a society free of violence."

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, at a time when Canada begs for unity and leadership, once again Canadians have been dealt a mean blow by the Conservative government.

Cruel and harsh cuts to local CBC programming across Canada will eliminate whole stations. Local productions, such as Ottawa's Metro, are gone.

[Translation]

Francophones in the Toronto—Windsor corridor have lost their French station, in an area where local programming is important to their survival. Thanks to the Conservative government, from now on Francophones outside Quebec will have only one station which they will continue to share with West Quebec. CBOFT and its English-language counterpart, CBOT, will suffer cuts of over $4 million and lose 75 employees.

Is the government really trying to destroy the Canadian dialogue and promote the Americanization of our airways?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the president of the CBC announced how the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will be restructured and be able to operate within its federal budget combined with reduced commercial revenue.

There continues to be in excess of $1 billion of taxpayers' money flowing into the CBC every year. It is obvious to most intellectuals that the communications technology today allows continued coverage from coast to coast. It is also important to recognize that the private TV networks and independent stations after 50 years are providing considerable Canadian coverage by Canadians for Canadians, sometimes even better than the CBC.

I wish to announce to the House that I have instructed the clerk of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture to invite the management of CBC to appear before the committee Tuesday next at 9 a.m. I suspect there may be some opposition members who may wish to attend.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today I rise in this House to mark the tragic anniversary of the murder of 14 women and to remind the House that violence against women happens everywhere, every day. The real tragedy of violence against women is that it is so commonplace. One woman in Canada is assaulted every six minutes.

Across the country, there are those who would like to deny the reality of violence against women. The Speaker of the legislature in Alberta refused to allow any remembrance of the event. He said it would not be an appropriate observation for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. In Newfoundland, the male Status of Women Minister felt that the murders were an isolated incident which had nothing to do with women in Newfoundland. Today, an angry man called the Newfoundland Advisory Council on the Status of Women and told the woman who answered the phone that he wished there were more Marc Lepines. Violence affects every region of Canada.

Flags fly at half-mast in the Yukon today to mark the anniversary of the occurrence at the École polytechnique, and the tragic deaths of 106 Canadian women who have died of family violence in the last 12 months.

In memory of women victims of violence everywhere, I urge all Canadians to first mourn and then work for change.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, recently I read the following article in one of our papers: "Savings as a result of GST—A commitment to Canadians! More than 100 companies have agreed to let you take advantage of their savings once the GST comes into force." And I believe that, Mr. Speaker!

This week, upon finishing a roll of paper, I found this bilingual coupon:

> Message re goods and services tax.
> On January 1, 1991, we expect the federal manufacturers' sales tax to be abolished and replaced by a 7 per cent tax on goods and services (GST).
> We take pleasure in announcing that Facelle Limited will reduce the price to distributors of all brand name consumer products on January 1, 1991, to fully reflect the fact that the manufacturers' sales tax now in effect has been abolished. Facelle products will then be subject to the new GST. The transition should have no inflationary effect on the price of Facelle products.

Mr. Speaker, my message to the senators is: Stop fooling around and pass the GST—step on it!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A year ago today, a tragic event made a lasting impact on the École polytechnique in Montreal and the entire country. In a matter of minutes, 14 women with a promising future lost their lives as a result of violence. Throughout the country we see a disturbing increase in violence against women. Considering these terrible and shocking facts, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether today he will announce the appointment of a royal commission on violence against women in this country.

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us grieve and remember that event of a year ago today and we will, after Question Period, have an opportunity to express our concerns.

The suggestion that the Leader of the Opposition has made has been made to the government by a group of women's organizations in the last few days. I am looking forward to meeting with them and discussing it with them. I have also asked the special subcommittee dealing with violence against women to advise us as well on an appropriate mechanism, whether a royal commission or some other mechanism, that will enable us to move forward as a government, as a society, to try to finally reduce and eliminate violence against women.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all across this country, women's hopes are being blighted by their legitimate concern about their personal safety. I regret that the government has not seen fit to announce today the creation of a royal commission on violence against women, something my party strongly supports.

• (1420)

Will the Prime Minister at least make a commitment today that there will be no cuts in funding for those centres which provide vital support services for women? In fact, will he make a commitment today, not simply to maintain, but to substantially increase the funding for these centres that provide services that are so important, so vital, to the women of this country?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member is aware that there are a variety of initiatives and programs through the federal government working on fighting against violence against women.

Among those, of course, is the family violence program. We have been reviewing that program and as the Prime Minister has indicated, we are looking forward to new and extensive initiatives over the coming months.

In addition, through my colleague the Secretary of State's women's programs, we will continue to fund the efforts of many women's organizations and women's groups throughout the country which are also involved as one of the partners in trying to deal with this very difficult issue. This is going to require the efforts of all levels of government, of men and women across society and of educators, teachers and families.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I also address my second supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I hope he will get up and agree with me that the rights and aspirations of women are more than just another entry on a government balance sheet.

If so, will he commit today to provide substantial funding for new programs that will help eliminate violence against the women of this country.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, and I know that this view is shared by hon. colleagues on all sides of the House, we all want to work toward that end objective.

There have been some 700 projects funded through the family violence program over the last few years. I look forward, as I know my colleagues do, to extension enhancements of those initiatives and those programs so that the federal government can play its role along with other partners in society to eliminate this tragic incidence in our society. If there was one way to eliminate it, I am sure we would all be able to do it quickly. There is not one way. It is multifaceted. It will require effort and understanding of the reasons why, and efforts on prevention, education and support for those women who are victims of violence.

I hope my colleague will join with us in working toward that goal of eliminating violence against women in Canadian society.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, one year ago we mourned a massacre and called for a royal commission into violence against women. Thousands of voices now echo that call.

Will the Prime Minister, in whose sole purview this is, offer dignity and legitimacy to the millions of Canadian women who spend part of every single day in fear, and announce the commencement of this royal commission immediately.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, as I addressed my hon. colleague's leader, this proposal has been made to us in the last few days. I am looking forward to meeting with those who are suggesting a royal commission to discuss with them what its goals and objectives might be.

We are also looking forward to the report from the committee upon which the hon. member sits as to its suggestions on an appropriate mechanism which would ensure that we move forward with initiatives. We will also continue to address the root causes and find whatever might be the most appropriate way to deal with this terrible scourge in Canadian society.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I know and I appreciate the comments of the hon. Minister responsible for the Status of Women, but I repeat, I asked and I want to know the views of the Prime Minister in this matter.

In these days with the threat of guns, the threatened closure of women's centres, ruinous cuts to women's research and development, and over-all, a recession that we all know clearly aggravates domestic violence, can we expect the announcement of a royal commission from the Prime Minister? If we cannot expect a royal commission, what does the Prime Minister believe? What is he prepared to announce today to give hope to Canadian women? Is he prepared to say that all of the women who have died—not just those in Montreal, but all of the women who have died—have not died in vain?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague recognizes, as we all recognize in this House, that we have to continue our work toward full equality for women in all aspects of society. That is a challenge for all of us. It requires legislative measures. It also requires some fundamental changes in many of the attitudes that we have entrenched within our system for so many years.

We will be addressing all of these issues, and I know I speak not only on behalf of myself but for all of my colleagues and the Prime Minister, that we will seek new measures and new ways to achieve that fundamental goal of equality for women enabling Canadian women to live without fear.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. With all due respect to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, who I feel is trying very hard to work on behalf of women, I ask the Prime Minister a question today because I think Canadians would like to know what the Prime Minister's commitment is.

This is the one-year anniversary of the tragic killing of 14 women in Montreal. We all, men and women, grieve for those victims and for their families. We also grieve for the one in ten women who are beaten by their partners, for the one in four women who are assaulted, or for the women, one of whom is raped every 17 minutes in Canada, and for women who experience sexual harassment in the workplace and on campuses. One year after this massacre in Montreal, there is still not a woman in this House of Commons, not a woman in this country who can walk in the streets of a city in Canada and not feel fear.

This is not a social issue, this is a political issue. Will the Prime Minister acknowledge that we have to begin addressing the real problem of violence against women by addressing the issues of unemployment, poverty and programs affecting women in our society?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I know that when the Leader of the NDP talks about those frightening statistics, she shares with all of us the grief that is felt by not only the families of the women who were killed at École polytechnique but the families and friends of women who are victims of violence in this country. Part of understanding the issue is talking about it, admitting that it exists. It is important that all members in this House recognize the extent of this problem.

We do know that there are links between violence against women and other issues affecting women's economic and social status in this country. That is why this government will continue its effort to ensure that women are able not only to improve their economic status in this country by ensuring that we work toward full employment and a viable economy, but that we work on the other issues of concern to women as well, work to ensure language training for immigrant women, work on new programs dealing with family violence and work in a whole variety of ways so that women finally can achieve that full equality, not only in the House of Commons and legislatures across the country but throughout Canadian society.

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. In its last Budget, the government decided to cut funding for women's centres. Next March, many women's centres across Canada will again be affected, including 42 in Quebec. The government must be aware of the fact that without women's centres, many battered women and victims of sexual assault will not know where to turn and have no one they can rely on. Will the Prime Minister change his policy and promise the women of Canada that these centres will receive permanent and adequate funding?

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, am very much aware of the situation in five of the provinces with women's centres where federal funding helps to ensure their continued role, and where much of their role is to help support women who are victims of violence, or women trying to access various government services. That, indeed, is why the government continued its funding of government centres last year. Since that time my colleague, the Secretary of State, has had discussions with his provincial counterparts, the ministers responsible for the status of women. We have been in the discussions with them and are working toward a resolution of this matter which would ensure that women's centres continue to thrive and continue to provide support and services for women in all provinces and territories of the country.

• (1430)

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I believe the women of Canada deserve to know from the Prime Minister where the government stands on behalf of women in this country. I appreciate the comments of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

There are many causes leading to violence against women in this society: structural, fundamental, political, social, and cultural. Will the Prime Minister commit today to the establishment of a royal commission on violence against women which will address all these issues, which will show his government's commitment to address these issues, and which will give a commitment to the women of Canada on this very sad anniversary?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. member that in my portfolio as the Minister responsible for the Status of Women I have responsibility within this government to speak on behalf of the interests of women. I am very pleased that I have the support of my colleagues on these issues that are so fundamentally important to women.

As my hon. colleague has raised once again the issue of a royal commission and as I have responded earlier, we are looking forward to discussions about this proposal both from the women's organizations that have put it forward and from colleagues in the House who are examining the issue of violence against women.

I am sure that we will have in place mechanisms to ensure that we move forward with not only developing a greater understanding of the causes of violence against women but also reaching the solutions which will ensure over a period of time that women will be able to look forward to a brighter society and that violence can be reduced and ultimately eradicated from Canadian society.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Since in 1988 the federal government announced it would invest $40 million over four years in local initiative projects against family violence, could the Minister explain to the House why, in Quebec, 40 centres had to close their doors because of lack of funding?

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague knows, this government did continue its funding for women's centres in Quebec. It has, through the Family Violence Program, provided funding for some 700 projects across the country involving a variety of initiatives from prevention to education and to programs like the recently announced Canadian Teachers Federation curriculum program "Thumbs Down" to bring into our schools with our teachers the ability to educate our children more effectively on issues relating to violence in our society.

Those kinds of initiatives, along with initiatives from the Minister of State for Housing to provide capital funding for shelters for women who have been abused across the country, are evidence of this government's commitment.

I work along with my provincial colleagues responsible for the status of women in our intent to ensure that we work jointly to reduce the incidence of violence and to work toward full equality for women in Canadian society.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, that is all very well, but it has no connection at all with the subject of my question.

Considering the remarkable ease with which the government cut $1.6 million in funding for women centres, and considering it was forced to reinstate that funding, if only for one year, will the Minister give the House the assurance today that this funding will again be available next year and the year after?

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. colleague has recognized that the funding of women's centres has continued during this year in Quebec, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Yukon, the Territories, and Newfoundland.

As I indicated to her colleague earlier, the Secretary of State is having ongoing discussions with the ministers responsible for the status of women in each of those provinces to work toward appropriate sharing of responsibilities for the further continuation of financial support to those centres throughout Canada.

GUN CONTROL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice.

Strong, effective gun control legislation is an issue for women, but it is also an issue for the whole of society. As long as young women are killed by angry men with guns, this House must press for stricter gun control legislation.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacLellan: The minister had an opportunity to honour the victims of the Montreal massacre in a very constructive way by bringing forward quickly strong, effective gun control legislation. Instead she sidetracked her own bill.

Why, when Bill C-80 was introduced in June, did she wait until November to bring the matter before the House, a time when it became obvious that this bill would not pass in this session?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have made it very clear in this House that I would have preferred to have the package before the same kind of special committee during the summer. I have been working very closely with my colleagues on the issue since the bill was tabled.

As I have said before, I am absolutely committed to the fundamental principles that are contained in our gun control measures. I intend to see these changes made into law.

As the hon. member will know, this is a contentious issue. If I can quote his colleague from his party who sits on the special committee, he has expressed the view that the government's proposals for gun control stink. He said that in rural Canada we do not understand some of the difficulties that are taking place and what urban Canada is asking for. He also said that Bill C-80 would deny rural Canadians a long-standing right to hunt, shoot at targets in a gun club or merely collect weapons. That is in fact a misconstruction of what is in Bill C-80.

I am very concerned about violence. I am also concerned about democracy and think it is important that those who are affected by the legislation understand what is in it. That is why I am very pleased to see it before the committee.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, we must fight acts of anti-feminism such as the massacre the way we fight racism. We can never ignore the social context in which these murders took place.

As the first woman Minister of Justice, will she please honour the thousands of females who die as victims of violence and bring forward, in the event that Bill C-80 dies on the Order Paper, new, stricter gun control legislation by March 15?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already made it very clear that I am committed to bringing forward such legislation. I hope that I will have the support of the hon. member and his colleague from Kenora—Rainy River.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same minister. Of course the minister did have the support of the previous member and this member on behalf of this party, and she withdrew her gun control legislation.

[Translation]

My question is again directed to the Minister of Justice. Tory members are proud of the fact they managed to kill the proposed gun control legislation. Young women at the École polytechnique in Montreal are campaigning for much stricter legislation. Why didn't the minister listen to the women of Canada and the women of Montreal? Why did she prefer to listen to the Tory members?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I did not withdraw my bill. It is still before the House, and I fully support the fundamental principles of the changes I proposed with respect to the control of firearms, and I intend to see to it that the necessary amendments are made to the Criminal Code.

• (1440)

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister.

Would the minister agree with me that women are not the gun owners, the hunters, or even the collectors? Although some of them are, by and large they are not. When it comes to statistics about guns, women are the victims of these guns. That is the problem.

In the spirit we are taking this House on this day, a day when we are reflecting on the first anniversary of this terrible incident, would the minister and the government commit themselves to bringing back before the House good gun control legislation, strong gun control legislation, well before this same time next year, the time when we will have the second anniversary of this terrible massacre?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already presented to this House what I believe is good gun control legislation. I am looking forward to the constructive comments of the hon. member and other colleagues in this House on this proposal, because it is in fact the first time that the proposals of the government have been in a public forum.

I do not for one moment want to downplay the significance of firearms as it reflects violence with respect to women, but I think it is also important to understand that there is a difference between urban and rural outlets on this particular issue.

I have recently named my National Advisory Council on Firearms. The vice-chair people happen to be a man who is as former chief of police of Regina and an Olympic gold medalist in shooting competition who happens to be a woman.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Violence should have no place in the Canadian family or community, yet every week two women are violently murdered in Canada. One in ten women are abused, be it sexually, emotionally, or psychologically.

I want to ask my question of the Prime Minister, not the Minister of Justice, not the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, but the Prime Minister because he is a man.

Some hon. members: Order.

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister of Canada give his assurance to all the women of Canada that his government will not cut funding for those badly needed services which battered and abused women depend on?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member, I think she knows that there is a number of federal government programs that work toward support of women who are abused: from my colleague, the Minister of State for Housing, support for transition houses; the Minister of National Health and Welfare, through the family violence program, provides a great deal of support to organizations; and the Secretary of State. Of course the provinces play a very major role in providing support through social services with transition houses and other resources to help women who are victims of abuse.

I can assure my colleague that my provincial ministers responsible for the status of women and I, at our meeting at Lake Louise, issued a declaration against violence on women. We are now in the process of developing a national strategy, a strategy that will take into account the need for prevention, for education, and for support to women and women's organizations to assist women who are victims of abuse.

I think all 10 provinces, the two territories, and the federal government have made that commitment. We will ensure that we follow through on it.

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, I really wish we had heard from the Prime Minister. The women of Canada would have liked to have heard from the Prime Minister.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Blondin: That would have expressed a real commitment from this government.

JUSTICE

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians have come to know that in northern Canada there have been sentences frequently given for offences against women that have been too light. I ask the Minister of Justice, without prejudice and with fair-mindedness: Will she commit to a full review in the Northwest Territories of gender bias in the court system?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to address that question because, as the hon. member may know, it has been raised a number of other times in this House.

There is a number of projects under way to address that problem, projects that have been initiated by the Canadian Judicial Centre, with support from the Government of Canada. In the spring of 1991 there will be a national conference on women and the justice system. One of the issues that it will address will be the question of women as they are treated in the courts. That will be an opportunity for us to bring together the results of a great deal of ongoing research.

One of the most important things about the conference is that members of the judiciary will be participating. It is important that these problems not simply be brought to the attention of the public, but that those who actually administer the law and sit in judgment understand and have their outlooks changed. I am deeply committed to that process and to encouraging it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people find dramatic the cuts affecting the mandate of the CBC. It is so bad, hacking away like that at the CBC, that Jean Dufresne, of the Journal de Montréal, called it a political crime today. So, here is my question to the Prime Minister: Is he prepared to put at least a moratorium on the cuts at the CBC and to set up an inquiry on the new role announced for the CBC yesterday by its president, Mr. Veilleux.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, neither the CBC nor the government were happy to make such a major decision, but we felt it had to be done for the various reasons given yesterday. We could also come up with quotes from other people who approve of the government's move and think it was wise and called for under the circumstances.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the problem with the government is its vision and its sight, and it is not on Canada.

My question concerns the remarks made by the CBC president, who stated just a few hours ago that he had been in constant contact with the ministers and this government, that they were fully informed. Therefore, they knew the CBC had had cuts of up to 15 per cent in their budgets in real terms over the last five years.

Will the Prime Minister admit today that it is the cuts of his government that caused this dreadful shutdown at the CBC and such misery to so many people?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that in the case of a corporation as important as the CBC, as for all the corporations that come under the Government of Canada in one way or another, major decisions affecting them are always made in consultation and in view of the overall objectives and means of the government.

This government has been making tremendous efforts since 1984 for the CBC as for all others sectors. It is clear, however, that the CBC, with nearly 30 percent of its budget coming from commercial income, especially in television, is affected by the whole market as are all other television networks.

The communications critic should take a look at the statement made yesterday by the president of the Canadian Broadcasters Association, who stated, and I quote in the language the statement was made, i.e. English:

[English]

"Everybody is hurting because the market is more and more fragmented. Inevitably, CBC was going to have to change", as we will.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Status of Women.

Today, the minister said that she has the support of her colleagues in advancing the cause of the status of women. Is it the minister who asked for cutbacks to womens' centres? Is it the minister who asked for cutbacks to womens' publications? Is it the minister who asked for cutbacks to the Canadian Research Institute for the Advancement of Women? Is it the minister who asked her colleagues to cut back on these programs?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague is aware of the difficult financial situation which this government finds itself in and its desire to reduce the deficit. Along with that, all departments of government obviously have had to provide some contribution to that.

I have ensured that when we discuss any reductions which have to take place with all of my colleagues, they must not affect women adversely or differentially. As we proceed with our programs, we must ensure that our support for women throughout the government, both in our laws and in our programs, is full in all areas of the government's mandate.

I can assure the hon. member of the Prime Minister's commitment to that and to the commitment of all my colleagues.

• (1450 )

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister. The women and men of Canada would like to hear that commitment from the Prime Minister himself. He speaks on many issues of concern to Canadians in this House.

Will the Prime Minister today give his commitment to fight violence against women by committing permanent funding for women's centres, and a royal commission on violence against women which will speak for the women of Canada? Will he do it now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I respond simply because they are such serious questions. I am dismayed to hear the leader of the New Democratic Party refuse to accept as authoritative the voice of a woman speaking for the Government of Canada.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: The distinguished minister responsible for the status of women has the complete support of all of her colleagues in the government. That is why this government was able to increase to three the number of women on the Supreme Court of Canada, to increase by 300 per cent the number of women serving as deputy ministers, to increase from two to 14, the number of women serving as ambassadors, to increase from 37 to—

Ms. McLaughlin: What has that to do with women?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says, "What has that to do with women?". —to increase from 37 to 81, the number of women serving in the federal judiciary, to increase, since 1984, the amounts contributed to the protection of women and children against violence and sexual abuse. Clearly, there are deficiencies. We have a long way to go but we have made progress on a number of very important fronts, including the fact that this government contains the largest number of women ever to serve in a federal cabinet.

AIR TRANSPORT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. There are rumours that public servants at Transport Canada in Ottawa are about to shorten working hours at the control tower at the Val-D'Or airport, which opens at 6.30 a.m. Does the minister intend to change the schedule of air traffic controllers at Val D'Or for the next twelve months just to save a few pennies, while every morning service quality and safety are diminished?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are no plans to change business hours at Val d'Or Airport.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation announced the sudden shutdown of three regional stations in Quebec, including one in the riding where he was born. The mayor of Matane said the federal government was antagonizing an entire region. My question is this: How can the Prime Minister justify abandoning his birthplace, his former riding? How can the Prime Minister justify abandoning eastern Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to make it clear to the hon. member that the decisions he just described were made independently by the CBC, without partisan interference from the Prime Minister.

Second, I would like to quote from a newspaper article, a public, not a secret document, for the benefit of the hon. member from Hamilton. In Le Soleil, a newspaper that covers these regions—and I hope the hon. member is listening—an article on the editorial page explains that although the decision made by the CBC was painful, it was very similar, at least as far as the French network was concerned, to what was recommended by the Caplan-Sauvageau Commission in 1986. Caplan—Sauvageau wanted to restrict the role of stations at Matane, Rimouski and Sept-Îles to news coverage only and recommended concentrating French language services in Montreal, Quebec City, Moncton and Ottawa. The conclusions of this commission or this task force were reached after wide-ranging consultations and published three years ago, and the hon. member must have had time to read them.

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my second question is again directed to the Prime Minister. It is really too bad he doesn't care about his region.

The CBC was the only network broadcasting local and regional programming in the Gaspé and on the North Shore. You want to quote people? So can I! The Mayor of Rimouski says their link with the rest of the country has been cut off. You want some more? Let me quote the Conservative Member for Matane, a member of your own caucus, who says that closing stations throughout an area that is already disadvantaged is unacceptable.

My question is this: Is the hon. member wrong? Is the mayor wrong? Are 500,000 viewers wrong? Could an entire region be wrong? Is the whole region out to lunch or is this government out to lunch?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any budgetary cutback is painful for the people or the individual affected. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Matane, like the hon. member from Calgary or Windsor, knew what he was talking about and did so with a great deal of sincerity. The fact is that the general public realizes we have an enormous fiscal problem, a legacy whose antecedents my hon. friend knows full well.

The CBC acted independently, which, and I refer to the facts mentioned by my hon. friend, is quite clear since the cutbacks were made in a region I know very well and which I represent. This is conclusive evidence that there was no political interference by the government and that Mr. Veilleux and his colleagues made their decisions in the national interest.

[English]

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, 1,100 dedicated, professional people have now found their jobs abruptly terminated. One might say exterminated, so vicious was the manner in which these lay-offs took place.

Is the Minister of Labour aware that employees were told to leave the premises immediately, that some crews who wanted to finish a little bit of editing, to finish their programs, free of charge, were told, "Don't touch a button. Get out".

Will the Minister of Labour investigate this callous and inhumane treatment on the part of the CBC?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CBC is very much aware of any legal implications there might be as result of decisions made by the corporation. I am convinced that these decisions were made after a thorough analysis. If for some reason, a member of Parliament or anyone affected by these cutbacks believes that the CBC erred in its handling of labour relations, there are all kinds of mechanisms for filing complaints, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundland suffered far more than its fair share of this government's cuts. Two of the 11 stations being cut are in Newfoundland, 22.5 per cent of all CBC employees in Newfoundland were laid off.

Will the Minister of Communications tell me how the government can accept the claims of the president and the chairman of the CBC that "The mandate of the corporation can still be served", when in the same sweep they have cancelled regional programs like Land and Sea which won the Wilderness Award, which has 53 per cent of the viewing audience? Why axe these programs? Why not axe the chairman and the president of the CBC? That would be money well saved.

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the decisions made regarding the CBC were based on a number of principles. One of these was that there should be at least one regional bureau in each province where there were some. The lead writer of the Globe and Mail understood the intent of the decision when he wrote, and I quote:

[English]

> —the CBC will be no less a national network than it is today. Regional news bureaus will still be in place across the country—

This is true from Vancouver to St. John's.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in a meeting earlier today with the New Democratic Party caucus, the president of the CBC confirmed that the government has been kept fully apprised of the actions of the CBC every step of the way. He said that the political will was lacking to do anything about it. The government has obviously approved and encouraged these cuts, just like it took the broad-axe to VIA Rail.

In the Prime Minister's rush to dismantle and privatize yet another symbol of Canadian identity, has he considered that the resulting ten regional closures may, in fact, be a violation of the CRTC regulations, an abandonment of CBC's requirement for the provision of regional services in Canada?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention, as I said yesterday, that the President of the CBC would have gladly met the members, collectively or individually, and I think that the NDP member's statement confirms that.

Second, I agree with the President of the CBC who said that the corporation and the government consulted each other about their respective objectives and responsibilities.

Third, I would caution against taking for granted what the member just said when he quoted the President of the CBC.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to members' attention the presence in the gallery of Mr. Vytautas Landsbergis, President of the Republic of Lithuania.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made on Wednesday, December 5, 1990, the House will now revert to Statements by Ministers.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

TRAGEDY AT ÉCOLE POLYTECHNIQUE

COMMEMORATION OF FIRST ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of sadness that I rise today on behalf of the Government of Canada to remind the House that one year ago today, 14 young women were murdered at École polytechnique in Montreal.

As we recall that tragedy, we remember those young women: Geneviève Bergeron, Nathalie Croteau, Anne Marie Edward, Maryse Laganière, Anne Marie Lemay, Michèle Richard, Annie Turcotte, Hélène Colgan, Barbara Daigneault, Maud Haviernick, Maryse Leclair, Sonia Pelletier, Annie St-Arneault, and Barbara Kluczniк Widajewicz.

That brutal act has left deep scars on the memories of Canadians. Nowhere is the pain and the loss felt more deeply than by the families and the loved ones of the women who were murdered.

[Translation]

Today, we offer our most heartfelt sympathy to the families and friends who lost a dear one in this tragedy.

I attended this morning with the members for Bourassa, Halifax and New-Westminster a ceremony at the Notre-Dame-de-Montréal Cathedral where, along with hundreds of men and women, we deplored this tragedy again.

[English]

Today is a day for commemoration and reflection on our loss. But it is also a time to consider how the spirit that enlivened those women has not been lost. Our initial shock at this senseless violence, our anger, and our anguish must now turn to a commitment to action.

I believe, as I know do all members of this House, that violence is unacceptable in our society. For any person to resort to such violence, wherever it may take place, is deplorable. As legislators and as a society, we must work together to convey the message that these actions will not and cannot be tolerated.

Throughout the past decades there have been many incidents of violent killings of innocent victims. Some were killed because of their colour, because of their religion, or simply because they were in the wrong place at the wrong time, but the innocent victims struck down a year ago at École polytechnique were killed because they were women. As we condemn their murderer, we must also better understand and deal with the attitudes which led to this tragedy and to all acts of violence against women.

To change attitudes one must start with the beginning, with our children. By working together, families and teachers, we must teach children that violence against women—indeed violence of any kind—is wrong, building a new set of attitudes among our children to take their place in a better society.

In co-operation with women's organizations, research organizations, educational institutions, and thousands of women and men across the country, we must continue to work for women's full partnerships in all spheres of endeavour, in all spheres of society. Let us work for a time when violence against women will be an historical fact, rather than a tragic reality.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the members of this House were elected to put forward the aspirations of the Canadian people. Therefore, in memory of these 14 young women and all other victims of violence, we must work together to put an end to violence.

[English]

Let the House, by our actions in our laws and policies, and through the ideals to which we aspire, let us work together towards that ultimate goal, to eliminate violence against women and to eradicate violence against all innocent victims in Canadian society.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the cold horror of the Montreal massacre remains with us all and will remain with us all, all our lives. Fourteen young lives snuffed out. Fourteen young women singled out for death because they chose a non-traditional career, and because a disturbed and unhappy young man—himself a victim of domestic upheaval—decided that feminists were to blame for his failures.

In the year past, we have heard many pundits tell us that Marc Lepine was a psychotic killer and therefore there was no significance to the victims being women. The women of this House, the men of this House, and the women of Canada know differently. They know that those young engineering students were killed because of their gender and because there is a tragic sickness alive in our society that places every woman in jeopardy and causes every woman daily moments of fear.

The hazards are everywhere: poorly lit streets, deserted parking lots, empty office buildings, lonely apartment entrances, and on and on. Every woman driver knows the experience of unlocking her car and switching on the dome light to check the back seat before she gets in. Every woman who has spent a night alone in her house or apartment has had the jolting experience of an unexplained noise or a ringing doorbell after midnight. Every woman knows the worry over adequate security in her own home.

Since the Montreal massacre we have seen an increase, not a decrease, in violence against women. We have seen an increase in the domestic murder rate, an increase in sexual assaults in our cities and, most particularly and most frighteningly, on our university campuses.

We are all angry. We are all, as women, afraid. Attitudes must change, yes, but so must laws, so must judges, and so must legislators. Gun control, judicial response, programs for the abused and a royal commission on violence against women would be a start.

• (1510 )

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the award-winning article by Stevie Cameron which appeared in The Globe and Mail a year ago today and is reprinted today:

> Fourteen of our bright and shining daughters won places in engineering schools doing things we, their mothers, only dreamed of. That we lost them has broken our hearts. What is worse is that we are not surprised.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in formulating this statement for today I faced a very difficult dilemma. Given the solemn nature of today's ceremony, do I soften my words to ensure that the House feels comfortable with what I say? Or, do I tell it like it is?

Well, I think the House would agree that I must tell it like it is.

The event we are commemorating today is just too horrific to feel comfortable about. It is not so much the Montreal massacre that parliamentarians need to be reminded of. That would lend itself to a feeling of comfort. The massacre is behind us and life has, indeed, gone on.

Rather, parliamentarians need to be reminded that the incident represented the most extreme form of sexism in our society. For if the massacre is over and done with, the aftermath of the massacre is not. There has been graffiti saying that the women deserved what they got, clubhouse skits ridiculing the massacre, banners proclaiming "no means yes", and, just two months ago in my own province of British Columbia, invitations to women university students to partake in campus frolics or to risk being raped and mutilated. All this, Mr. Speaker, not before, but in the wake of the massacre.

So what are we parliamentarians doing to stamp out hate for the sake of hate against women? Five among us attended a vigil this morning in Montreal. Others in the House may do that tonight. But to what end? To remember? Mr. Speaker, who could forget?

It is not enough for us simply to remember. Legislators have to act. We have to enact. That is precisely why last summer I introduced a bill calling on the House to declare December 6 a national day of remembrance and action on the issue of violence against women. All members, no matter what their political persuasions, surely can unite behind this initiative. Many of us have offered to unite behind other initiatives. Most recently, we offered to unite behind gun control.

We parliamentarians enjoy a privileged role in today's society. We have the power to improve the quality of life; in this case, to disprove the inherent inequality of over half of our population.

My caucus colleagues and I urge parliamentarians to spend the approaching minute of silence thinking about their mothers, their wives, their daughters, and their sisters. Let those thoughts inspire December 6 to become, not only the day Canada's legislators realized that we had sacrificed 14 promising minds to the barrel of a gun, but also the day that Canada's legislators resolved not to trade another promising mind for mindless promises.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask hon. members to stand.

[Editor's Note: The House stood in silence.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, would the government House leader indicate to members of the House what the business of the House will be tomorrow and the remaining days of next week.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like to call Bill C-93 dealing with the Bretton Woods agreement for second reading, as well as Bill C-71 dealing with the UN convention on contracts, to complete the final stages, and Bill C-82, Port Wardens Act which has to do with Quebec harbours.

Monday will be the last allotted day, an opposition day. Tuesday, at this point I probably will call Bill C-84, Petro-Canada, although there is a possibility of calling Bill C-74. We will engage in discussions in that regard.

At this point in time, I am unable to give any indications for Wednesday, but the usual discussions among House leaders will ococur over the next few days.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might put a supplementary question to the government House leader. As he knows, my own House leader presented to him on behalf of the government a resolution dealing with the release of hostages in Iraq.

As we know, the news today indicated that the President of Iraq has submitted to the Iraqi National Assembly a request that they approve the release of all nationals.

It would seem to me very appropriate that the resolution that was put forward by my colleagues from the New Democratic Party, the Conservative Party and from my party, the Liberal Party—a tri-party level—would be very timely in terms of endorsing that kind of move and to transmit a message to the Iraqi Assembly that we would like to see that action take place forthwith.

I wonder if the House leader could give us some commitment of time, perhaps on Monday. I am sure it would not take away from the House time because I think there would be an all-party agreement on that resolution.

Mr. Andre: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I know, has possession of a draft of the resolution. I understand it is just a question of looking at the language and assuring himself, along with his officials, that in fact it would be helpful.

Along with the hon. member, I certainly welcome the news from Iraq. I hope that it turns out to be true and that all hostages, Canadians included, will be home soon.

Any actions that could be contemplated by this House that would facilitate that, I can assure the hon. member will get as expeditious treatment as possible and the full co-operation from this side of the House.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on the same point, I just want to indicate on behalf of my colleagues from the New Democratic party that we, too, fully support a resolution. Indeed, the member for Fundy Royal, the member for Winnipeg South Centre and myself did together draft a resolution.

There have been discussions. I hope that there will be an opportunity for this resolution to come before the House, particularly given the very encouraging news today that the Iraqi president, Saddam Hussein has agreed to the release of all foreign nationals, and, I might say, to the encouraging news from the Canadian perspective that the elderly Muslim couple, the Rustins, will be coming home tomorrow from Iraq.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that there would be an opportunity for this House to speak to this important matter very early in the coming week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of ministerial statements, Government Orders will be extended 11 minutes. Therefore Private Members' Business will begin at 5.11 o'clock p.m. Orders of the Day.

PETRO-CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-84, an act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee and Motion No. 2A (Mr. Langdon), Motion No. 14A (Mr. Langdon) and Motion No. 19 (Mr. Lee).

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to engage in the debate on Bill C-84 now before us.

This is a bill which, described very simply, is an act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada.

In looking through the bill, and I recognize that we are dealing particularly with Motion Nos. 2A, 14A and 19, -it is interesting to note that in the pages opposite the proposed legislation itself, there is not a single word of explanation, but simply the recommendation that His Excellency, the Governor General, recommends to the House of Commons: the appropriation of public revenues under the circumstances and for the manner and purposes set out in a measure entitled: "an act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada."

There is no explanation. There is nothing other than our own experience—we have a wealth of experience with this government and its intent over the last number of years—setting out in layman's language exactly what the purpose and impact of the legislation as a whole or its various component parts are.

We have seen in the years since the election of this government in 1984 a series of actions, probably commencing with the emasculation of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, now called Investment Canada, so as to completely detooth it and render it absolutely ineffective to deal with the question of foreign ownership of our economy.

We have seen the systematic emasculation of VIA Rail, the rail transportation system in this country. It began under the previous Liberal administration and has proceeded under this government with ever increasing regularity and severity.

We have seen what surely is going to lead to almost the complete destruction of the Canada Post Corporation. The philosophy seems to be: Make its services unacceptable to the public; make the corporation behave in such a way that nobody has much use for it any more because it does not do its job effectively. It does not provide the services in the communities that demand them. Sooner or later, we will end up privatizing the whole of that as well.

We have seen the selling off of Air Canada. We have seen airline deregulation, and we can see the beginning of moves that are going to result in the isolation of one community after another outside of the major metropolitan areas.

We now hear of the open skies policy of the government, which again will serve to place many of our more isolated communities in jeopardy in terms of air service.

Just yesterday we had the announcement of the severe emasculation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, tearing its roots out of many of the communities that make this country what it is, a nation not just of urban dwellers and of cities, but of people with close links to the resources and the land who have a feeling for what makes this country.

One thing after another, the government wants to destroy, sell off, deregulate or emasculate almost every agency in every institution that can hold this country together. What is behind it? What kind of blind faith, dogma, doctrine and ideology does this government have that is causing it to proceed on a course that can have no other final result than the disintegration of Canada? The Conservative Party obviously believes in the positive power of the private and unregulated marketplace, in free market forces to produce beneficial results, despite all the evidence to the contrary.

It is fine to have a philosophy; it is fine to have a principle to operate from but if it blinds you to the actual result of specific policies, that is simply blind dogma and doctrine which can lead down a path to our entire destruction as a nation. This country was built in spite of market forces and in spite of the marketplace. Nobody looking at a map and knowing the demographics of Canada could believe that this country was ever created because it made economic sense; it never has; it was an act of political will for social, political and philosophical reasons. A number of people from sea to sea decided that they wanted to build a nation in this half of the North American continent that was somewhat different in its priorities and principles from its neighbour to the south. It was built in spite of those market forces that tend to pull all the links north and south. If we give up yet another instrument that allows us to develop our own resources for our own use and profit as a people, then we are led to believe that this doctrine and this dogma are leading us down the path of disintegration and the government ought to know better.

There are three amendments currently before us. One is that the chairperson and members of the board of directors of the corporation must be Canadian residents. Surely, in this day and age, that is not too much to ask. It does not guarantee anything but at least it is a beginning.

Motion No. 14A would change the limit of foreign ownership from 25 per cent to 1 per cent of all shares. Now members opposite may say: "Well, that is unrealistic, given their purpose", but what is their purpose? Should the Canadian energy industry, or at least a significant part of it, serve the interests of Canadians or not? There is the principle of its development at stake.

Motion No. 19 prohibits foreign governments or their agencies from owning Petro-Canada shares. We have seen a number of examples, over the period of just the last few weeks of how other corporations which have been sold off by this government, now have applications for ownership or, in fact, have been sold to agencies of the German government, the French government, almost any government, except the Canadian government. That has happened in the research and development area, airline industries, and a number of other areas.

Why do we have a country? What is next? Is it telephones tomorrow? We know about the hearings that are going to take place in a few short months, apparently having to do with introducing competition into the area of telephone services across the country. Where does that lead us? It will likely mean that rural Canada, once more, is going to pay the price for this government's dogma and doctrine.

As a social democrat, I have always believed that if it works, do it; if it could work better, change it, and if it does not work, scrap it. That is the nature of my philosophy as long as it is consistent with responsible government , belief in a democracy. It is not the kind of blind faith, blind doctrine and blind dogma that we see from the other side of the House. The most dangerous kind of politician is the one who believes in his own b.s. Those guys tend to do it; they are a danger to Canada. It is ending with this kind of legislation that we have before us and sooner or later somebody has to put a stop to them.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening for a few hours now to members of the opposition and I got a big charge out of the last speaker. His philosophy is: if it ain't workin' scrap it. If that were the case, they would have got rid of the post office a long time ago.

What has happened is this government came to power and put in people to run it. It is running much better now. Its efficiency rate has grown dramatically. The number of outlets in Canada has grown dramatically. Service is far better and it is making a profit.

I know members of the NDP hate that. It is a swear word to them. They plug their ears. Every time they hear the word profit, they say: "Oh, horrors". In any event, had we adopted the hon. member's philosophy of if it ain't working scrap it, I am afraid we would not have a national postal system today.

I have listened to the ideologues on the other side talking about Petro-Canada, our national oil company, and how important it is in the over-all scheme of things. I remind the House of a few facts. Petro-Canada is one of between 2,500 and 3,000 energy companies in Canada. I want that to be very clearly understood. It is not a monopoly on the industry. I know members of the NDP would like it to be a monopoly on the industry. That is their philosophy: one oil company in the country. That is what they would like. It is responsible for 6 per cent of the upstream activity and about 19 per cent of the downstream activity. They should understand those facts as well.

They should also understand that it has a number of reserves in hand today that it wants to bring onstream. It is a very expensive proposition. This will allow Petro-Canada to obtain money in the capital markets, like the other companies do, to bring on its known reserves and to look for more energy in this country. This will allow this Canadian company to grow, prosper, create employment, and secure energy for Canada and for Canadians.

I hear members talking about the ideology of the Conservatives. I find that rather interesting when I take a look around the world today at the governments of all political stripes. Even the socialists, heaven bless them, are taking the lead in many areas. Communist countries and countries of all political stripes are realizing that governments cannot be all things to all people and are getting out of businesses. Mexico has privatized 260 companies over the last period of time. It is selling its telephone company now to the public. As a matter of fact, it is allowing 49 per cent foreign ownership in its telephone company.

In this legislation we have assured the people of Canada that this company will be controlled, directed, and managed by Canadians. Control over this company will be maintained by Canadians. These amendments today do absolutely nothing to improve the bill whatsoever.

For example, the Canadian Business Corporations Act, which Petro-Canada falls under, says that the majority of directors must be Canadian residents. It says that in there, and they are governed by that. This is already covered. We are assured that it will be controlled and directed by Canadians.

I tell hon. gentlemen across the way that sometimes it is to the advantage of a company to bring in directors offshore if they can provide good, sound, solid advice. Many Canadian companies do that.

Northern Telecom is one of the finest examples of a Canadian company there is. It has R and D expenditures at 12 per cent of its sales. Its chief operating officer happens to be an American. He is resident in Canada, a very fine gentleman, and is very dedicated to this Canadian company. What they would do is prevent the company from getting some of the best talent available.

These particular amendments have been discussed at great length today. I am told that negotiations have taken place with the opposition, with the idea of reasonably debating the amendments that they have brought forward, because I believe they need to be debated in a reasonable and timely manner. But I understand that negotiations have taken place, so I am going to read this very carefully. I do not want to get caught like I did the last time. I give notice that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 78(1) or 78(2) with respect to an allocation of time to the report stage of Bill C-84, an act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada, and, under the provisions of Standing Order 78(3), I give notice of my intention to move a time allocation motion at the next sitting of the House for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage of the bill, and at the third reading stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is fascinating to hear that. The minister has suggested that discussions have taken place, which, as I understand it, are a requisite for such a motion.

As the person who is responsible for this legislation on the part of our party, indeed no discussions have been communicated to me, which I would suggest means that this particular motion is simply out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Any minister can move a motion. I see no problem with that.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, which motion are we debating? Could I just have some clarification? A motion was just put to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It was just notice. Debate is on Motion Nos. 2A, 14A, and 19.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I have waited for some time to be able to contribute to the debate on this piece of legislation which, if passed, will have the effect of privatizing the national energy company of Canada, in effect, Petro–Canada.

Petro–Canada legislation was passed in days gone by because the government of the day felt that it was in the best interest of the Canadian public to have a window on the energy market. There used to be a feeling in this country that the resources of the nation belonged to the people of the nation, no matter where they lived. In certain areas such as energy supply and security of supply it was important that the government, through programs or departments or in this particular case through a Crown corporation, have some input and a window on that particular aspect of Canadian sovereignty.

Through the years Petro–Canada has played a very important role in energy development in this country. It started with a lot of criticism from members opposite. It came in at a time when the government of the day felt that it was important to do so. This country has been blessed with a great energy resource, oil and gas, particularly in our western provinces and off the Atlantic coast, although that is not as fully developed as we would like it to be. There was a responsibility of the government to ensure that the Canadian interest was paramount in the development of that particular resource. That was in keeping with the way we used to think about this country. Many of us on this side still think that way, that this country is here for all of us and that it is the job of government to manage, as best as it can, those resources to the benefit of all Canadians.

I want to speak to these three amendments, but I feel I have to give a bit of background. When the Minister of State for Privatization came in with this latest scheme to try to take away something that was uniquely Canadian called Petro–Canada, he met with a lot of criticism. I know that many editorial writers, such as Geoffrey Simpson and many at The Globe and Mail and other newspapers from coast to coast, including some of the western papers in places like Alberta, said that this government was proceeding with a plan of privatization of a very necessary Crown corporation, one whose history, I will agree, was very controversial, especially in parts of western Canada. Maybe some of that was for the right reasons, but perhaps this was not the right time to pursue this particular policy.

If we go back to the late 1970s, particularly 1979, we see that the previous Conservative government, when the right hon. member for Yellowhead was Prime Minister, had a different position on the national energy corporation, PetroCan, every second week. Those Conservatives were going to do away with it during the campaign. Then they came into power and they were not going to do away with it. They were going to privatize it; then they were going to abolish it. They were going to restrict it; then they were going to restructure it because they did not know what in the name of goodness to do.

At one point the current Minister for International Trade, after he was elected to this House in a by–election, took a tour of the west. He was one of those people who thought it was absolutely crazy that we had a company called Petro–Canada in the energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what happened? It was like the conversion on the road to Damascus. He got back in this place, and he could not say enough good about Petro–Canada and the important role it was playing in ensuring energy self–sufficiency in this country. He loved it. He could not say enough about it.

The current Governor General, in his former capacity as minister in this House, flip–flopped a number of times. When he was a minister, when he had some responsibilities in this place, particularly to the energy sector, he did not quite know what he stood for at any point in time.

We see that members of the government have almost been obsessed with Petro–Canada. In the beginning they got into typical Tory rhetoric that, if it cannot be done efficiently in the private sector, the public sector has no right to participate. That is typical Tory philosophy. We have seen it, particularly so in the last few days while they go in like a demolition derby and break apart national institutions such as CBC. They have gutted VIA. I listened with interest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications today saying something which I am sure the minister of energy or the minister of privatization could have just as easily said about this particular bill on Petro–Canada. He said: "We had to cut it to make it better". It is like saying that we have to kill you to cure you. That is basically what they are doing here.

The amendments that are before us right now dealing with Petro-Canada are important amendments. Canadians believe that our energy sector is one that has implications on our sovereignty. In the east coast of this country we have to rely on imported oil, gas, and crude oil even though this country is a net exporter of oil. Petro-Canada has played a major role in the development of Hibernia. It has played a major role in the Syncrude projects in western Canada. It has taken the leading edge because Petro-Canada's mandate was to look after the interests of Canadians, not to look after the interests of those in the corporate boardrooms in New York or over in some capital of Europe.

The amendments that we have before us are very important because of this crazy piece of legislation. I find it very difficult to listen to the minister of privatization at the best of times, but I tried very hard to listen to him because I figured that maybe there were some pearls of wisdom.

The only pearl of wisdom I could find was one that I had to sift through the sheets on: the reason it is going forward with the privatization of Petro-Canada at this point in time. When we have a major crisis in the Persian Gulf, when the very supply of crude oil to Atlantic Canada and other places is in question, and when Canadians once again are getting concerned about having a window in the energy sector so that they can direct and develop the energy sector, out of the blue the government, after many abortive attempts to do something with Petro-Canada—goodness knows what it wants to do; I am not sure—came in with a bill to privatize it.

One would have to come to the conclusion, after listening to the minister and watching what is happening across this country to Tory fortunes, that this bone was thrown out as a diversion for some caucus members, particularly the western caucus, who were getting their butts kicked solidly because of their support of this government's crazy GST, which has put them at 7 per cent in the polls. They will do anything for a diversion. I think this Petro-Canada privatization legislation at this point is such a diversion.

The minister opposite laughs. I think it is a nervous laugh. I do not think it is a belly laugh. I have seen a lot of ministers on the other side of the House doing a lot of nervous laughs the last little while. Every time a piece of legislation comes in that the Canadian public does not want, they all get the giggles over there. They say: "Gee, isn't it funny? The opposition is getting up and telling us the truth. It is telling us that we are doing something again that the public doesn't want". It is like a siege mentality, particularly on this bill. They really believe that everybody in the country is wrong and they are right. If they just put their faith in Brian, at some point in time everything will come out fine and smelling like roses. That is what they believe over there. It is little wonder they get kind of giddy at times.

The proposed amendments which we are speaking to today are important. If this government is going to pursue this crazy policy at the very time the people of Canada are seeing the energy reserves and resources as a national resource that can affect our sovereignty as a nation, they are going too far with it.

These amendments simply try to point out some difficulties. The motion that has been put forward by my colleague from Scarborough—Rouge River, who has done a tremendous job, an absolutely phenomenal job of exposing this government for what it is and for what it is trying to do in the energy sector, shows that the government is bankrupt on policies. It does not have an national energy policy and wants to base everything on the marketplace. If it can be sold to the highest bidder it does not matter if it is a Canadian resource, just get rid of it. Get a few bucks in the coffers. If we cannot manage the economy, we cannot manage the government, we certainly need more money in the coffers. Forget about preserving and managing a national resource such as energy, oil and gas, for the benefit of everybody.

If the government wanted to do something perhaps it could have brought in some amendments to Petro-Canada to make sure that Petro-Canada was serving the interests of the consumers and the producers in western Canada.

The particular amendment, Motion No. 19, put forward by my colleague, who has piloted this legislation for us on this side of the House, the member for Scarborough—Rouge River who has done a great job, basically says that the effect of this would be to prevent the ownership of shares in Petro-Canada while the Government of Canada still has shares.

What he is clearly trying to do is keep the government from an embarrassing situation where it will probably have some banana republic somewhere in the nether-nether land come in and see what a great deal Petro-Canada is and they can actually get a handle on Canadian energy reserves and resources. We just do not want the government to have other people in the energy sector and across the world sitting down comparing this government to one of those small banana republics because in this case that banana republic and its administrators will look a heck of a lot better than this government would.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that over the last number of months I have never felt so depressed and distressed about the welfare and good order of my country and its survival, its independence and sovereignty and nationhood, as I have under this government, and I have been here under several governments.

I must say to be fair that the present Conservative government and the Prime Minister have accomplished some things. Their main one is that they have contributed more to anger and outrage, alienation, than any other government since Confederation if not before.

Mr. Speaker, you can make a list as long as your arm, whether it was the Crow rate, the at and east rates, the two-price system on grain, whether it was the post office, VIA Rail, Petro-Canada, or anything else they have privatized. All they have done is remove from our society and our country the kind of things that kept us together and working. Of course, the CBC yesterday was just as bad a tragedy.

I would not mind if it could not help it, if it did not know better. It is when the government works at it that I get angry and depressed.

Motion No. 2A states that the chairman and members of the board must be Canadian residents. Well, Sir, I would rather they had to be Canadian citizens, but residents if they qualify under the appropriate regulation I guess is better than nothing. So I will buy that.

• (1550)

Motion No. 14A changes the limit of foreign ownership from 25 per cent to 1 per cent. I will buy that, too. If we had to compromise somewhere in between that, well, let's talk it over.

I want to quote the present minister of privatization—I am sorry he had to step out for a minute—because in the late unlamented nine months of the Clark government in 1979, he took great pains to emphasize the Canadian ownership line.

On December 11, 1979, at page 2255 of Hansard he is quoted as saying:

> —only eligible Canadians—eligible Canadians—should be permitted to own shares in Petro-Canada and only eligible Canadians—Canadians, I repeat—should be entitled to buy shares in the after-market. I have stated many times that the shares must go to and remain in Canadian hands.

I do not know what happened to him since then, because obviously he knew better in 1979. In fact, he was applauded when he made that statement in the House. I do not know what happened to him. He was not on the road to Damascus. He was on the road to Sodom and Gomorrah since then.

There is something else I want to point out. I hate to use these words. Anything that impinges upon and hurts, that cuts down Canadian independence, sovereignty and nationhood, that destroys many decades of traditional behaviour by Canadians to be something more than and different from other countries—particularly our neighbour to the south—is a betrayal. We have adopted and implemented measures and laws in Canada that are unique.

Some are the envy of many other countries. I will not go into a long list of them. Anybody who flies in the face of that—I am prepared to make changes in accordance with that history—I have to say and I do not want to but I will, I call that nothing more than traitorous behaviour. It is a betrayal even of the present Conservative members' forefathers in Parliament; Mr. Diefenbaker and Sir John A. will be rolling over. Maybe they are now, I have no way of knowing.

They sure as heck would not have stood for this. No way. I am not one noted for applauding Mrs. Thatcher, the former Prime Minister of Great Britain, but even in her privatizations, and there were a bunch of them, she always kept a back-up provision so that if the privatized company misbehaved, she could correct it.

Of 10 companies she privatized, she kept what is called "a golden share", only one share. That one share allowed her and her government to over-rule any privatized corporation from doing something that in her view and in her government's view was not in the national interest. She kept that golden share for a good reason. History and experience in our country and that of the United Kingdom have shown that if you turn a private corporation—whether it is multinational or national—loose to operate on their own, without any checks and balances, they are going to do what is best for them in the first place. What is best for their country takes second place, if that high. In fact, it probably takes third place. They will put the interests of the shareholders in second place. The country in which they have the privilege—not the right—to do business, takes a lower priority.

I do not understand why the minister will not accept amendments. Maybe he will. I hope I am wrong, but I do not think he will do the things outlined in these three amendments.

The third amendment would prohibit a foreign government or an agency of a foreign government, be it a Crown corporation, board, or anything else, from owning any Petro-Canada shares. Surely that makes some sense, which the minister was heckling my colleague about.

It makes common sense, because you are either master in your own house, or you are not. If you are going to turn this over to anyone and everyone to do with as they please for the sake of making a buck, and to hell with the welfare and the good order of Canada and its people, then they have no business here. They lose their privileges. No corporation has the right to exploit resources and ignore the welfare and good order of my country.

I hope these amendments will pass and that we can get on to the other ones.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before I make some remarks on the proposed amendments to Bill C-84, respecting the privatization of Petro-Canada, I would like to bring to the attention of the House one matter because it is a day of commemorating tragedies.

We have heard our colleagues in the House remark on the sad events which took place last year in Montreal on December 6. I just want to remind the House of another very tragic event that took place in the city of Halifax 73 years ago on this same date, December 6. That was the Halifax explosion which resulted in the tragic loss of 1,600 lives and over 9,000 injuries. Over 20 per cent of the population of Halifax was directly affected by that tragic event.

Without detracting in any way from the remarks made on the tragic event in Montreal, I think it is well to record that again in the House and remind members of it. I hope 83 years from now we will again remember both events because they are sad days for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, may I now address Bill C-84 which before the House of Commons.

I would like to deal with the facts because we hear a great deal of rhetoric about national corporations like Petro-Canada, as we hear about Air Canada, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and so on, and it is now said without feeling, I hope. I respect the views of those who regard these organizations as national institutions which should be preserved at whatever cost. It is simply that I do not share that view.

I believe these are utilitarian organizations which perform a function and if we can perform the function in a way that saves taxpayers' money, that provides services, then we should look at those possibilities. That is, indeed, what we are doing with Bill C-84. We believe that Petro-Canada has served its function. It can continue as a utilitarian corporation providing services to Canada in another way.

For those reasons I want to deal with some facts, because when Petro-Canada was created, it was intended to give a window on the industry for reasons that occurred at that time. But let us look at some of the evolutionary aspects of Petro-Canada. When they took over Canadian Petrofina, what happened? Vast amounts of money were spent on that acquisition. They were never properly accounted for. We do not know who received the benefits of those extensive payments. We never did get a clear financial picture.

• (1600)

As the member well knows, the courts have made decisions on this subject. The files are closed. They are sealed. They are not available to Parliamentarians, nor to the Auditor General. So we do not know what really is the history of Petro-Canada. We do not know what chicanery took place among supporters of the Liberal Party who were shareholders of Petrofina and who were engaged in this exercise.

It is not as if Petro-Canada had a clean history among Canadians and in the business field. It might have been conceived in good faith, but it evolved into infamy. That is why I want to look at Petro-Canada, in terms of whether it has performed any function for the people of Canada. They may ask: "What has it done for Canadians?"

If one was to go to a Petro-Canada dealer, one would find that he enters into the same kind of contract with the corporation as any other commercial petroleum dealer does. He is required to buy tires, batteries, and accessories from the company at inflated prices.

I can tell you of a specific case, Mr. Speaker, where a Petro-Canada dealer was forced to buy window washing material at a price higher than it was available for at Zellers. As you know, Zellers makes the boast that it has the lowest prices, but it is a retail outfit. The Petro-Canada dealer could get a lower price at a commercial retail store than he could from Petro-Canada. Why? Because Petro-Canada was profiteering at the expense of its dealers. In that respect it is no different, in its operation and its management, from any other company. Members opposite know that the government, Liberal or Conservative, did not ever interfere in the day-to-day management of the company. It was left to function like any other petroleum corporation.

I assure you that if you go to a Petro-Canada station anywhere in Canada, you will pay the same price that you pay at other stations. You will get the same lack of guarantee, if you get repairs, and you will have the same kinds of arguments. Do not tell me, as a Canadian consumer, that Petro-Canada has done anything for me. It has functioned simply as a commercial corporation. The window that we thought was there is not there. Thus, the raison d'être for Petro-Canada has been diminished, if not eliminated altogether.

Let me get on to some of the other rhetoric that we have heard in the House of Commons. There is a great fear of foreign takeovers. Every time the New Democratic Party members get upset about kind of a transaction, they bring in the myth, the bogey, of the foreigners who are going to come in and take over Canada. That makes an interesting point because a business writer for The Daily News of Halifax, one John McLeod, has made this point about our friends in the New Democratic Party. In an article today, December 6, 1990 he states, and I quote:

> It's instructive to note the difference between New Democratic Party economic policy as espoused by an out-of-power federal leader, and the economic policy of the new NDP government in Ontario.

Let me tell you what has happened in Ontario, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding this great fear of foreign takeovers, and notwithstanding "Canada for Canadians", "Let us own all of our corporations", "Let us have restrictions on ownership", and "Let us make ownership available only to Canadians", what happens when the Ontario government under Premier Bob Rae gets its first test? It approves the sale of Consumer's Gas to British Gas, PLC. Why did it approve the sale of a Canadian corporation in the energy field to a foreign corporation? Because it was in the best interests of the people of Ontario, so it said.

All of the ideology that it spoke of in the House in this very debate, that went out of the window because it had to face the practical problem of: What are we going to do? We have a request from a foreign company, British Gas, to take over a Canadian company, Consumer's Gas, so what are we going to do? Are we going to decide it on ideology, like our federal friends do? No. No ideology for us. It is out the window. We are in government now. We have to decide it on the practicalities of the case and the practicalities of the case dictate that the right decision is to approve the sale. That is what Bob Rae did and I do not know what the New Democratic leader is going to say about it when they meet. They had better get together.

I hear they have a television set over there in the lobby to keep on eye on the legislature. The reason they have two television sets is because they know they are saying two different things in the two different places and they are trying to bring them together. The ideology they espouse in this Chamber clashes with the practical facts. It was right and proper to allow British Gas to take over Consumer's Gas. That is the decision the Ontario government made.

The Financial Times has some advice for Bob Rae, as well as John McLeod. It is saying, "Listen, Mr. Bob Rae, listen Mr. New Democratic Party and Mrs. New Democratic Party, you will have to find a better way to preserve domestic control of strategic companies and sectors." There must be a better way. It has nothing to do with shareholdings. It has nothing to do with ownership. It has to do with legislative control. You can control corporations, as Bob Rae now knows, by legislation. You can make corporations do what is in the public interest by legislation. You do not have to worry about ownership.

We found out with Petro-Canada that it does not make a bit of difference. Petro-Canada explores where Petro-Canada wants to explore. Petro-Canada sells what Petro-Canada wants to sell. Petro-Canada charges what Petro-Canada wants to charge. It did not do us any good in the Parliament of Canada or across Canada to have this window in the industry. We might as well recognize it and let the commercial forces take control as they have in the past.

I hope the New Democratic members have learned a lesson from their friend, Bob Rae. I hope they will be practical. Ideology is nice, but let us face facts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the hon. member for Comox—Alberni, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Haldimand—Norfolk—Supply Management; the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby—Status of Women; the hon. member for Saint-Henri—Westmount—Health.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I feel very much like the previous New Democratic speaker and the member for Winnipeg—Transcona did in speaking on this privatization bill. Having seen what the Conservative government has done to the country and to its fundamental institutions over the last several years, a lot of people in the country have serious and grave doubts as to whether the country is going to continue to exist for much longer after the systematic attack that has been taken on the fundamental institutions of Canada.

Before I get into the actual detail of the amendments and the bill itself, I would like to talk a bit about the comments that have been made about ideology by the last few speakers on the Conservative side. It might be worth-while to recall to those speakers that the New Democratic Party has not nationalized a single corporation or set up a single corporation federally in the country.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as the Tories admitted in the debate yesterday and in previous days, was set up by the R. B. Bennett Tory government back in the 1920s and 1930s. Canadian National Railways, back in 1923, was set up, I believe, by a Liberal government of the day. Air Canada was set up as one of the projects of C. D. Howe, a Liberal cabinet minister.

In looking at the provincial story, Mr. Speaker, you will recall as a member from Alberta, that the Pacific Western Airlines was at one time nationalized by Peter Lougheed, one of the great free enterprisers of Canada.

In my recollection of British Columbia history, B.C. Electric, which is an offshoot of the Power Corporation of Canada, was nationalized by W. A. C. Bennett and his Social Credit Party, the so-called free enterprise party of British Columbia, which was formed back in the early 1950s when the Liberals and the Tories jumped into bed with each other and nationalized the power company.

The simple fact is that Crown corporations are not set up on the basis of ideology. The vast majority of Crown corporations in Canada were set up because the government of the day, regardless of political stripe, recognized a need that was not being fulfilled by the private sector. It said that in the absence of investment by the private sector, the government has to take action in order to develop the country, move the country ahead, and achieve the kind of progress that we are looking for. As a result, those governments of those days—whether Conservative, Liberal, Social Credit, or even New Democrat—got involved in the nationalization or the establishment of Crown corporations.

We did the same thing in British Columbia when we were in government. We set up an insurance corporation. That insurance corporation in fact brought a financial centre to Vancouver based on hundreds of millions of dollars of premiums that in the past went to Zurich, New York, or Hartford, Connecticut. We repatriated that money to the benefit of British Columbians and it was the basis of a financial centre in Vancouver that has grown and thrived to this present day. It was done strictly on a pragmatic basis. It has nothing to do with ideology.

I remember meeting with the minister of agriculture for Sweden, Mats Hellstrom, who is playing a role in the GATT talks in Brussels this very day. He advised me that when the democratic socialist government was in power in Sweden, it did not nationalize a single corporation and its policy was opposed to it. It preferred that the corporations operated in a tightly regulated free enterprise sector.

However, when the right-wing government took over from the social democrats, it nationalized some corporations that were held by a lot of its friends and financial supporters who had gone broke. They persuaded the right-wing government to take those corporations over and the taxpayers ended up bailing out those corporations.

In some cases, that is exactly what happened here in Canada. The government of the day recognized the need of some of its financial donors to have these corporations taken off their hands. After all, Canadian National was not nationalized. Its private operators bankrupted it and then the government was forced to take it over.

The same thing happened, as my colleague reminded me, in British Columbia with the B.C. rail system, the former Pacific Great Eastern Railway. When the railway sold off all the land grants that were given to it by the province and ran the railway into the ground because it started from nowhere and ended nowhere, the government of the day took over the Pacific Great Eastern Railway and completed it from terminus to terminus. Now it operates as one of the great railways of the country, performing a service to developing the central and northern part of British Columbia and shipping our lumber out into export markets. It was done strictly for pragmatic reasons in some cases, but also it was done by Liberal and Tory governments to bail out their bankrupt supporters and to use taxpayers' funds to take over these corporations.

I am more concerned right now about what this government is doing to our national institutions. I am concerned about the destruction of the post office as a community centre and as a means of communication that represents Canada in virtually every single community in every single riding in the country. There is the destruction of Canada's national airline, Air Canada, which was sold off by the Conservative government through a privatization process and now Air Canada is in the process of selling off its assets, its share of an aircraft leasing corporation based in Ireland, selling off its aircraft, cutting down on its services, and cutting down on the communities that it serves in the country. It is now in the private sector and it does not have to have a commitment to the Canadian people and to each and every community in Canada.

The government has done the same thing with VIA Rail. Railways were the first things that brought the country together. When my family came from Ireland in 1819 to the country, they came as many Irish people did, to build the railways in the country that were the initial ties that bound the provinces and ultimately the country together. Now, this government has severed those ties. It has broken up the rail system and this major institution of Canada that brought the country together, and continues to hold the country together, is now in jeopardy as a result of what the Conservative government is doing.

I do not think the Conservative government is privatizing Petro-Canada because it is going to improve the corporation's operations. I think it is going to operate the same way as they have instructed it to operate now. If it is gouging people, it is going to continue to do so, but it is only doing so now because it has been instructed or permitted by the Conservative Party in government to do so, so that the people of Canada will lose their respect for the institution of a national petroleum company and refuse to support it.

Basically what they are doing is following their ideological bent. This is a new ideological bent. This is not the old Conservatism of John A. Macdonald, R. B. Borden, or Meighen, all of whom had as their goal and as their objective the progress of Canada and the progress of its institutions.

This is Conservatism that derives itself from the new-right Republicanism of the United States, a Republicanism exemplified by the presidency of Ronald Reagan. He talked about fighting the deficit, yet he ran the deficit of the United States higher than any other president, any other political party in history. He talked about privatization. He talked about deregulation and we know exactly what happened to the thrifts and the savings and loans institutions in the United States. Deregulation meant that every crook and gouger who could get into the savings and loan industry could gouge money out of the savings of citizens in the United States, spend it on useless projects, and totally enrich themselves at the expense of the United States. That is precisely what this party and its friends in private business are doing.

They are draining the cup of Canada. They are draining the assets of government, and they are destroying the fundamental institutions of this country, and that is exactly the meaning of this bill.

Mr. Mike Breaugh (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly of the three amendments to Bill C–84. I spent some time this morning going through the work of the committee. First of all it struck me as odd that in the middle of an oil crisis the Government of Canada is selling off one of its assets.

It struck me even more strangely that in the deliberations before the committee, it was very anxious to sell off this company but it did not seem to have any idea how much money it would get for it.

I spent a fair amount of time in the Ontario legislature. There I became accustomed to a group of Tories who were extremely pragmatic people. They did not have an ideological bone in their body; whatever was good for Ontario at the moment they would do.

If you wanted to nationalize something and they thought that would be popular, that is precisely what they would do. Ideology had nothing to do with the way they made a government function. If it needed to be done, they would do it.

I notice that there is a lot of discussion in this Chamber about the Ontario legislature and things that are happening there these days. I was there for 15 years and I think I can relate to members a fairly good sense of what that place is all about. I heard a member somewhat shocked that the new government in Ontario allowed a business decision to be made.

Well, I think the government in Ontario is simply acknowledging that it might like to do a lot of things these days but the federal government has put the province of Ontario in a very bad recession. They do not have the money, frankly, to do a lot of the things they want so they made again a very pragmatic decision to allow for the takeover of Consumers Gas by British Gas.

Mr. Boyer: You can blame the Liberals who were in power and left a $3 billion deficit.

Mr. Breaugh: There is an interjection here about the Liberals leaving a big debt. That is true. As I went through the committee deliberations on these amendments, one of the things that struck me was when you search for a reason for why this government is trying to privatize this particular corporation at the moment, one eludes you.

As you read through the deliberations in committee, it seems that a pretty comprehensive argument was being made that this would be a sensible corporation to retain, that there were things that could be done with Petro–Canada that would assist us in terms of making the environment of Canada a better place, and that we had concerns now about our own energy needs. I disregard totally the old cliché that you need a window on the industry because it seems that one of the faults of Petro–Canada is that that is about all it ever was—people standing at a window looking at the private sector at work.

There is a lot more potential that was there that should have been realized. One of the things that surprises me about these amendments that are before us now is that this appears to be the last little thread. Even Maggie Thatcher on her worst day when she was selling off the assets of the British government, at least had the common sense and the common decency to say that at least it ought to be retained in the hands of people from this country.

This government seems to reject that notion. I do not know why it would be so anxious to reject that. I am not certain at all why it would take a business decision at the moment. It appears to me, at least, to be a very bad business decision. In the middle of an energy crisis, it seems to me you would look at something like Petro–Canada as an asset, not a liability. It seems to be making money. That is my definition of a good business proposition.

As strange a notion as this is, there are those who believe in the world of corporate socialism. I am not one of them. Obviously the members opposite on the government side believe in that kind of socialism. They believe that all taxpayers in Canada ought to fund the corporate sector somehow.

If you look at the government's tax policies, it certainly does that. If you look at this particular bill, it seems to follow in the same vein. The government feels that somehow the people of Canada had an obligation to set up an oil company; to bear all of the costs, trials and tribulations it would take to get that set up, then at the point where that company might make some money, it ought to be sold off to the private sector. I do not understand that.

Petro-Canada seems to be a corporation that has developed a role for itself. It is certainly not the role that I would want it to play. I have a much higher set of expectations for it than the government does.

It seems to me that during the committee proceedings members from all three parties and people from Petro-Canada accepted the notion that we could do some very good things with this oil company, that this would give us an opportunity to develop things that are environmentally sound, to make our people more conscious of their energy use. It would make sure that we had a constant supply of energy. We certainly have gone to great pains all across the country to see that there is a network in place to do something for this corporation and for this country; that it would ensure our constant energy supply.

I do not know why the government would reject amendments such as these. It seems to me that they are minimal at best. It seems to me they simply address that this is a company which the people of Canada put a lot of money into. I do not think anyone has an accurate total of what the total taxpayer investment is in Petro-Canada, but it has to be huge.

It does seem that there is a vendetta here; that this current government still is chasing Pierre Elliott Trudeau around. It might gather up some sympathy from me on that, but it does seem to me that it has not used common sense. Here is an opportunity to retain a corporation with great potential that is beginning to do something useful, and it ought to try to retain it. I am not sure that it is their ideology. I am not sure that that is the right word. This is certainly Tories of a different stripe at work than the ones that I am used to.

The amendments that are before us are amendments that ought to be supported by all members. They are certainly minimal. They are amendments which attempt to keep some Canadian connection in Petro-Canada. It seems to me that this government, even in privatizing it, wants to do that.

I read the proceedings of the committee and I looked for the arguments that said why the government would not accept these amendments. To tell you the truth, I did not find them. Perhaps they are here. Perhaps during the remainder of this debate, one of the things the minister might do for us is instead of standing in his place and giving us a little diatribe about ideology, he could address the amendments that are before us and provide the House with some rationale as to why the government is not prepared to accept the amendments that are currently before the House.

Mr. McDermid: I did.

Mr. Breaugh: The minister is yelling across the House that he did. I followed the proceedings in committee and the debate in the Chamber this afternoon, and I have not heard that. There is at least an obligation on the part of the minister at some time during the course of the proceeding to intervene and provide us with a logical, rational explanation of what the government is up to. I do not believe we have heard that so far and I would appreciate it if the minister would do that before we finish up this particular part of the debate.

I want to conclude on this note. I have never been much of a fan of Petro-Canada, to tell you the truth. It has never done the things that I wanted it to do in my community. It has not exactly been a great asset. What it has been is an oil company, like any other oil company, charging the same amount of money, putting small operators out of business, tearing down service stations and putting up self-service gas stations. That is not exactly my version of what Petro-Canada should have done.

There were good arguments made during the course of the committee proceedings and good arguments here on these amendments which indicate to me that we ought to retain this. We ought at the very least to accept the amendments that are before us and see if we could take something, even if the government feels in its own heart of hearts that it does not belong there. They have it. It is an asset, and it is beyond me why this government does not try to utilize that asset for the people of Canada.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the amendments to Bill C–84, an act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada.

I am very pleased to see that the Minister of State for Privatization is in the House. Perhaps I could comment with regard to what the minister said in 1979.

The Conservative minority government at that time was in an election. It talked about privatizing Petro–Canada, and half way through the election campaign decided that the Canadian people did not want that, and so reversed its decision.

I will start off by stating what the late Tommy Douglas, New Democratic Party Leader, said in the House of Commons on November 15, 1978:

> Every person who has looked at the situation knows that any industry which controls the energy resources of a nation has its fingers on the windpipe of that nation's economy.

Petro–Canada itself represents the clear choice, in his words:

> —the choice in this country is whether or not we are going to develop the petroleum resources of Canada for the benefit of Canadian people, or whether we are going to continue to be the economic colony of which our vital energy resources are owned and controlled by foreign multinational corporations.

I am alarmed at what has happened this term in this House of Commons since I came back in 1988. We have seen the privatization minister involved with the privatization of Air Canada, VIA Rail cutbacks, Canada Post cutbacks in our small rural areas, shut–downs and signing contracts in other areas of Canada Post without legislation.

This is privatization without legislation of the worst kind where people cannot even discuss or work out the policies.

What we have is a government that is incompetent, one that has found itself in financial difficulty with its high interest rate policies and high Canadian dollar, and is finding itself in financial straits and starting to sell off its assets.

As a New Democrat, I find that very offensive, because not only has it put us deeper and deeper into debt but it is now selling off its assets at a whirlwind rate so that there will be nothing when other governments come and try to take over after it has left.

It is going to cause future governments some very serious problems with regard to the privatization that has taken place in trying to bring it all back.

Now, I would like to, if I may, quote what the Minister of State for Privatization said in 1979. Even the current privatization minister took great pains to emphasize the Canadian ownership line on December 11, 1979, and I quote:

> —only eligible Canadians—eligible Canadians—should be permitted to own shares in Petro–Canada and only eligible Canadians—Canadians, I repeat—should be entitled—

• (1630)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is quoting me out of context. I have the page from Hansard here. I will pass it over to him. I want him to read the entire quote so that it makes abundant sense. He is misleading—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order; it is a point of debate. The hon. member for Kootenay East has the floor on debate.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the minister would be sensitive to my remarks. He wants 25 per cent to be sold to anyone and this amendment is calling for 1 per cent, so I am sure he minister would be very disturbed at this.

Let me continue to quote from Hansard of December 11, 1979, at page 2255:

> —Canadians, I repeat—should be entitled to buy shares in the after–market. I have stated many times that the shares must go to and remain in Canadian hands.

This indeed is a reversal to what the minister was saying in 1979. It shows the rationale for the legislation that this government is bringing forth and putting before this House.

I want to commend both the New Democrats and the Liberals for bringing in amendments. We cannot stop the government from attempting to privatize, but surely to goodness we can protect the interests of Canadians to ensure that we are not going to be dominated by foreign capital and foreign investment coming in and taking over something as important as the energy of our country. We just cannot stand idly by. We must speak out against this. We must urge this government to support our amendments. We must also urge this government to start paying attention.

This government passed a bill for $1 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money to be invested in Petro–Canada, in the Hibernia oilfields. We asked at that time that refining be done in Canada if we were going to be spending that kind of money. The biggest and most profitable part of this industry would be in refining and, if Petro–Canada was able to do its job, it would enter into the refining process instead of letting it be done in the United States and having the Americans get all of the benefits of the large investments that were made.

We have a government that is determined to privatize. We have a government that is not listening to the people and to what their concerns are about where we are going. The last I heard, oil was selling on the market at somewhere around $30 to $33 a barrel and large profits are being made by the oil companies. This government decides it is time to sell off a portion of Petro–Canada. That is not acceptable to us.

If it is going to happen and if this government is determined to go ahead with the policy, then we are saying: accept our amendments and ensure that the Canadian people will be the shareholders and that 25 per cent of the ownership will not go outside Canadian hands. We are asking this government to reconsider and to support our amendments.

There is another amendment to the bill regarding the president and the officials of the company. It requests that they also be Canadians so that the top people of the industry will be making decisions in interest of Canadians because it is headed by Canadian people. Again we urge the government to support that amendment.

The government is not always correct when it drafts a bill. Surely it can admit there is some improvement it can bring about to upgrade a bill. Perhaps it could sometimes accept some of the good amendments that the opposition on the other side puts forward. I urge the government to consider not only the amendments but to reconsider the bill itself. I urge the Minister of State for Privatization to take a back seat on this one and withdraw Bill C–84.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I am one of the people who has had a life–long fascination with the oil industry, having grown up in one of the original oil patches in Alberta in the Black Diamond Turner Valley oilfield. I can remember, as a child growing up, that the whole discussion in that community focused on the development of our oil and gas industry in Canada. I lived there at the time the Leduc oilfield was discovered. The shift from the town was almost wholesale as it moved from the Turner Valley Black Diamond area to Leduc.

Even at that time people were concerned about who was controlling our industry, who was going to benefit from our industry. Would it be foreign oil companies? Would it be the average resident of Alberta? Would it be the Canadian public with reliable, cheap energy resources? Or, would it be turned over to the free enterprise international marketplace?

Unfortunately, over the years a far too great percentage of our petroleum industry has been controlled by foreign capital and foreign investment, where the profits have been taken out of the country and where the decisions being made are being made not in the interests of Canadians, but in the interests of the profits of a foreign company.

Of all times for Canada to be surrendering its only instrument in policy in the petroleum industry, now could not be a worse time. Right now we are in the middle of the gulf crisis, and the gulf crisis is about oil. Anyone who thinks it is about anything else other than the control of oil fields is sadly mistaken.

Last winter I had the opportunity to spend two weeks in the gulf area, in the United Arab Emirates, another one of the Arab countries much like Kuwait. It is an oil producing country wherein the oil productivity is only benefiting a very select group of people; not the average person and not the workers of which 80 per cent are imported, but the wealthy sheikh families.

This is basically what we have done in this country, only we call them corporations. We have let the large multinational corporations control and direct our oil industry, not for Canadians but for the benefit of themselves.

We have a piece of legislation before the House that is bad. It is wrong. It is fundamentally wrong, particularly at this point in time. We are trying to get the government to show some reason, some understanding, and accept some amendments that would at least make sure that, even if it were privatized, it would still be in the control of Canadians.

We are suggesting two or three amendments. First, the people on the board of directors must at least be residents of Canada; not even Canadians but at least residents of Canada so that hopefully the decisions will continue to be made in Canada, not in the boardrooms of the United States.

Second, we are suggesting that we must reduce the percentage of permissible foreign ownership. Right now under the present set-up we could end up with the effective control of Petro-Canada being outside Canada. If you have three foreign owned blocks, two of them with 10 per cent and one with 5 per cent, 25 per cent controlled by three co-ordinated companies that were foreign, and the rest of the shares dispersed across the Canadian public, with a 25 per cent block you could control that company effectively. There are many corporations in this country that are effectively controlled by a 25 per cent block of shares.

We are willing to pass legislation that says we will let effective control be in the hands of foreign companies. That is shameful. It is a total bewilderment to me as to why the government would do this, particularly in light of the free trade agreement which says that once you establish a maximum that becomes the minimum base. We can never bring that percentage back down. It can only go up. It is very critical that we look not only to the immediate future but to the long term. We must be able to regain control of the petroleum industry and ensure that it is very minimal, that no more than 1 per cent is controlled outside of Canada.

One of the things the Conservatives talk about is that this privatization is a part of their great economic plan. Their great economic plan has led this country into a depression, an economic slump. It is very interesting to note that both free enterprise parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives, have in the last 10 years brought this country twice to its knees. In 10 years they have brought the country twice to its knees in the form of recessions.

Quite frankly we sometimes forget that is what the free market is all about. It is a manipulation of the economy. It is throwing the economy open to all the manipulations that take place without protecting individuals. We saw the results of it in this country when the Liberals brought us into a depression in 1981 and 1982. Now the Conservatives are doing it again.

This privatization is part of that. It is a blind privatization. Many of the industries in this country that have been government run and government sponsored have been some of the best businesses and industries. Particularly I look to British Columbia where the B.C. government had to take over B.C. hydro and it became a Crown corporation, a very effective Crown corporation.

An hon. member: There are lots of good examples in British Columbia.

Mr. Karpoff: Yes, I have lots of examples from British Columbia of where the private companies could not run ferries economically, efficiently, or any other way. Finally the B.C. government had to take over Black Ball Ferries and form the B.C. Ferry Corporation, which is now being run on a very service oriented basis and is providing a vital link and service to the people in that province. It is one of the biggest ferry fleets in the world.

We have the whole insurance system in B.C. We have mentioned earlier that it was brought in as a Crown corporation and now provides the best, the most efficient, and the most effective automobile insurance in all North America. It also retains its earnings in British Columbia. It does not send its earnings to Hartford or Zurich or Allstate or wherever else they have their headquarters. It has all its offices in the province. It has all its assets in the province. It has been a vital economic boon to that province.

What we are going to lose with the privatization—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions have to be put on Motion Nos. 2A, 14A and 19. I will put the question first on Motion No. 2A. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 14A. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recording division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 19. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motion Nos. 4A, 6A, 8A, 12A, 15 and 23 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 4A

That Bill C-84 be amended in Clause 9 by adding immediately after line 26 at page 3 the following:

"(a) provisions requiring that all unrefined hydrocarbon product produced by Petro-Canada be refined at a refinery located in Canada;".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this particular motion is to suggest yet again a way in which we can see to it in the future that Petro-Canada contributes more fully to the country than if simply left to marketplace dictates. A private company, which had not been paid for, whose creation had not been established by the people of Canada, could not be expected to simply follow a course which required refining of unrefined hydrocarbons products produced by Petro-Canada in this country.

This motion attempts to set out a requirement for Petro-Canada that all hydrocarbon products which are pumped out by Petro-Canada will have to be used for refining purposes within this country.

I think it is important that the contribution of this company to this country be constrained, that it be required in the future to be as great as possible to the people of Canada.

How do you do that? You do it through a number of mechanisms. You do it by some of the mechanisms which we have been debating about ownership, which I hope will ultimately be accepted by this House. You do it through suggestions on the important environmental role which Petro-Canada can play in the future. You also do it by emphasizing a Canada-based refining policy for this company. It is not, it seems to me, something that runs against the previously expressed views of the Conservative Party.

The minister of privatization got into an exchange with one of my colleagues about a quotation which he claimed had been wrongly quoted, taken out of context by my colleague, and indeed by a number of my other colleagues earlier today. In fact, what my colleague was quoting when he quoted the statement of the minister was that Petro-Canada should be owned only by eligible Canadians.

What he was quoting was the minister's reference to a task force of the Conservative Party which had been established. It was a task force whose recommendations had been endorsed by the minister and other members of the Conservative Party. One would have thought, therefore, implemented at this stage by this government, it would be a Canada-first approach to Petro-Canada privatization.

In practice, however, that is not the approach which has been taken by this government. When my colleague, the member for Edmonton East, brought forward suggestions such as this within committee, these suggestions were rejected by the Conservative government majority within that committee.

It has been very clear that what we are talking about here is seeing to it that the Canadian resources which are produced and extracted by Petro-Canada create downstream jobs in this country; jobs in the refining industry, indeed jobs beyond the refining industry. Specifically, the jobs within the refining industry should be expanded by a commitment that Petro-Canada will see to it that all refining take place in a refinery located in Canada.

It is especially important at this stage because we are talking about a period in our country where the Conservative government, as it has done in the past when it has been in power, has led us into an economic slump.

We recall the period of John Diefenbaker's government when the Conservatives were last in power for a six-year period. At that stage it was successful, as usual, in reducing economic activities in this country, in leading us into an economic slump, in creating levels of significant unemployment through this country, and in exacerbating the economic inequalities among regions throughout this country. Now, once again, with this Conservative government that we now have back in power under the Prime Minister that we presently have, we see precisely the same devastation to our economic situation taking place in 1990 as took place under the Diefenbaker government in the early 1960s.

It seems every generation or so, it is necessary for Canadians to elect a Conservative government, go through the devastation, the learning experience which is required to teach them that the Conservatives should be kept out of power for yet another generation. I am certain that this will be the case with respect to this government.

One of the reasons that it will be the case is that our unemployment rate is approaching 9 per cent. It is likely to go over 9 per cent this Friday. In the context where that is taking place this government is, nevertheless, not prepared to accept an amendment which creates jobs in Canada by seeing to it that downstream refining activity by Petro-Canada is a requirement of this legislation.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, it will come as no surprise to you that we cannot possibly support this amendment which has been proposed by the New Democratic Party. I am not sure if the hon. member was at committee at the time, but it was indicated very clearly by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that this amendment would be a direct violation of GATT.

As a matter of fact, the New Democratic Party is always talking about GATT and how important it is. It says that we should abide by GATT, we should not have a free trade agreement and we should deal with GATT. Yet, GATT said that this particular clause would be inconsistent with the GATT. That is the first reason why we would not bring it in.

The second reason we would not accept it is because we would be tying the hands of Petro-Canada. If they could not export oil they discovered but cannot use economically in its own facilities, sometimes heavy oils or whatever it may be, can be exported for refinery elsewhere.

The other problem is that he does not describe what refinery is. How far down the process does the New Democratic Party want this to go? There are many products that are made as feedstocks from petroleum products down the line, that are not made in this country, for example. Therefore, he would be tying the hands of the Canadian company. All the other Canadian companies could export but Petro-Canada could not. That is silly. That type of thing, I would assume, not being a lawyer, would not be allowed by the Supreme Court of Canada. That is discrimination of one private company over all the other Canadian private companies. Let's face it, we cannot accept this particular amendment.

I am enjoying this debate so much that I would like to see it continue. Therefore, I move:

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of report stage of government Bill C-84, an act respecting the privatization of the national petroleum company of Canada.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Will those members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

And more than 15 members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are more than 15 members. Therefore, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Waddell: I was rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, but I think it has been answered. I wanted to find out about Private Members' Hour, but I gather it will go on after this. Is it at 5.11 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, at 5.11 p.m. The hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River has the floor on debate.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly to this amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party, Motion No. 4A.

When there is a bill before the House and you sit in opposition and you want very much to see the bill not passed, you sometimes have difficulty participating in some of the debate surrounding the bill. You propose amendments in the hope of making the bill better, even though you do not like the general thrust of the bill. That is where I find myself today.

This particular amendment is pretty bold in its intent. I see the purpose, but I find that the amendment as it is drafted falls very far short of the standard of precision that is necessary for a statute here in this country.

The first thing I would note is that the amendment is very unclear and very unrefined in what it means by "an unrefined hydro-carbon product". One starts with the crude that is pumped from the ground, which may or may not already have an additive to help bring it to the surface. Maybe that is unrefined-minus-one. In any event that additive must be taken out and this particular phrase "unrefined hydro-carbon product" does not make it clear whether one is free to deal with a semi-refined or semi-unrefined product. It really is not workable.

The second item is that the amendment as it is worded would require Petro-Canada to bring back to Canada all of the hydro-carbon product that it would pull out of the ground from anywhere in the world. Petro-Canada is participating in oil development plays all around the world, including southeast Asia. I hate to think it would have to build one of its own refineries just to deal with a level of production somewhere else in the world. It is not a good amendment from that point of view.

Another example, related to the same thing, is what does this require Petro-Canada to do with the product produced in Hibernia, where Petro-Canada is about a one-quarter partner? Does this require Petro-Canada's one-quarter share of the Hibernia product to be refined in Canada? Right now, that one-quarter share or its undivided interest in the whole production would be shipped to a refinery, I understand, in the United States. Given that the Newfoundland refinery at Come-By-Chance is not geared up and properly built to refine the crude product being pumped at Hibernia, I appreciate the thrust of this amendment. It is an attempt to make us have a fully, completely comprehensively, vertically-integrated oil company in Canada and it falls short of the mark of accuracy and precision that we should have here in the House.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to follow up on some of the things that the minister has been saying during the course of the afternoon with respect to this motion and also on his other comments. He has made general comments about the ideological nature of the debate, regardless of what amendment we happened to be debating at the time.

It seems to me that the minister labours under an illusion with respect to the nature of ideology. Ideology is a word for the general concepts out of which a particular political party or an individual works. One generally develops one's ideology out of an analysis of what will most readily achieve the goals a society, or a particular country, has set for itself. In that sense, ideology is not a bad word. It just means that there are differing ideologies and differing analyses about how we achieve these goals.

Ideology is only a bad word when it seems that people are no longer operating out of an analysis any more but out of a commitment to an analysis that may have been developed in a different situation but no longer applies to the current situation. On that basis, I would say that it is the government, and not the opposition, which is operating in the negative ideological sense.

As the minister himself has indicated, Petro-Canada is involved in only 6 per cent of the oil and gas activity in the country. If that is the case, why would the government be obsessed with getting rid of Petro-Canada unless it had an ideological commitment—in the negative sense of what it means to be ideological—to get rid of any and all forms of public ownership? If it is not ideological in that negative sense of being committed to a particular analysis, regardless of the fact that in this case public ownership is hardly massive in the oil industry in Canada, why would it not allow that Crown corporation to exist even as a form of strategic insurance so that should the day come when we wish we did have a publicly-owned oil corporation for strategic purposes in an energy vulnerable world, it would exist? Surely, this should have been the intelligent option for a government committed to privatization.

It could have kept an umbrella corporation called Petro-Canada and privatized elements of the activity of Petro-Canada. It could have kept that strategic capability by still having a form of Petro-Canada that it could activate and use in future if that sort of action was required on the part of the government. But the government did not do that. The reason it did not do that is because it is the government that is operating out of an ideology, in the negative sense of what it means to be ideological, not the opposition.

All we are suggesting here is that it makes good sense. It is practical to keep PetroCan as a possible future instrument of public policy. If the government wanted to put that instrument of public policy into a state of suspended animation for reasons of its own pursuant to how it perceives the current context, that would be up to the government. What it is doing here is writing off, for good, the possibility of that public policy instrument ever being revived. That is a very serious mistake, but typical of the kinds of things that this government has done over the last six years.

• (1710)

Instead of making judgments and formulating policies which embody its will for the moment, it has done things such as signing the free trade agreement, privatizing Petro-Canada, and a variety of other things. It is implementing its view of the appropriate policy for the moment which proscribes forever various other options that other political parties, other governments, and other Canadians might want to take in the future. That is the most serious political crime committed by this government, the proscribing of future options.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.11 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE AND SUPREME COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Domm that Bill C-210, an act to amend the Criminal Code and the Supreme Court Act (habeas corpus) be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the hon. member for Peterborough for presenting his private members' bill, Bill C-210, to improve the extradition process. I have received comments from many people commending the hon. member for his perseverance on this issue and his over-all dedication to the cause of justice in Canada.

I regret the necessity to make amendments to our Extradition Act. As a Canadian, I am embarrassed that we have such a slow and cumbersome procedure, one that appears to allow foreign fugitives to languish in Canadian custody at Canadian expense, rather than face justice in their own country.

Many members of that public have become discouraged, disillusioned, and even mad about what they see about a lengthy and expensive process that seems to deny justice, rather than expedite it. For this reason, these amendments have been applauded by the media and public alike.

The hon. member for Peterborough did a good job of explaining what the bill accomplishes and how it can shorten the time from initial requests to final decision by up to a year and a half.

There has now been close to a month elapsed and, very briefly, I would like to go into how the extradition process works right now. To begin with, when an individual who is suspected or convicted of a crime in another country crosses a border into Canada, and authorities of that country become aware that he is here, they would make an official request to Canadian authorities to extradite him. The Canadian authorities would then have to ask a judge of a county or superior court to issue a warrant to arrest that fugitive and place him in detention before surrendering. The judge would issue that warrant if the other nation's conviction of the fugitive is proven or if the offence he is accused of in the other nation is an offence in Canada.

At this point, the individual may apply for a writ of habeas corpus to another superior court judge to be removed from prison. That is, in effect, to block the extradition. The individual at that point would be questioning his liability for extradition. A judgment would be issued on that writ of habeas corpus which the individual can then appeal to the court of appeal of the province he or she happens to be in. In this appeal hearing, there is no production of evidence, no witnesses, and no cross examination, but simply discussion of the legal issues. Assuming the appeal is denied, in the present system the individual can then request permission to appeal that decision to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The case would then, assuming it is upheld again, be referred to the Minister of Justice who must wait at least 15 days from the expiration of the date of the final appeal before indicating his or her decision as to whether or not to surrender the fugitive to the other nation's authorities.

It goes on, because the individual can then attempt to challenge the decision of the minister to surrender or extradite him.

The second stage of recourse is much narrower in scope. The individual may apply to the Federal Court and then appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal. If unsuccessful, the individual can ask permission to appeal that judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada again. This is an extraordinary remedy.

I do not want to comment on the specifics of the Charles Ng case, but it is significant to recognize the desire of the Minister of Justice to expedite a final decision in this case, which has been dragging on in the Canadian courts for far too long.

The minister has referred the appeal of the minister's decision directly to the Supreme Court, thereby significantly shortening the second level of appeal.

In future cases, we do not want the minister to have to make direct referrals. We want to improve the system. Bill C–210 does that by removing two levels of appeals, one to the provincial court and the other to the Supreme Court.

The minister since our last debate in this House has made a response to the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. Quoting from that, she has offered serious consideration and discussion leading to a new act or significant amendments to the present law.

I applaud her decision, but I do not feel they should preclude the interim improvements such as those proposed in this bill. The study will take some time. We have the opportunity for action and improvements now. Passing this bill will signal our resolve to improve the Extradition Act and help restore some waning confidence in our justice system.

The minister's study may well offer more substantial improvements, but if we can act on this bill we will show our determination to tighten the system and make our country with its legal system less appealing to foreign fugitives.

I do not see any reason at all why this House should not unanimously agree with the principle in this bill and get on with it. In fact, if the New Democratic Party had not filibustered last month when the bill was first introduced, it could have been off to committee and possibly even back here for third reading and approval today.

The principle in this bill has the support of tens of thousands of Canadians. From my own riding I presented thousands of signatures on petitions calling on the Government of Canada to do exactly what this bill proposes. These petitioners do not want Canada to become a haven for foreign fugitives from justice. I have not met or heard from a single Canadian who supports the status quo. These people want an indication that we are prepared to act, and act now.

It is important to keep in mind that the individuals affected by these amendments will still have the opportunity to appear before Canadian courts. They will still have due process available to them. An individual who is not a citizen of this country will still have their rights protected. They will still be entitled to have their cases heard and appealed.

This bill simply limits the number of those appeals and it will make Canada slightly less appealing as a haven for foreign fugitives.

I would also suggest that the average Canadian, and I include myself in this group, cannot comprehend why we have such a problem and why we allow it to continue. How can a non-Canadian charged, accused, or even convicted under the laws of another sovereign nation, tie up our legal system for five to six years.

Why are we willing to spend so much money and time to keep them from answering charges in their own country? I cannot answer, and I do not understand.

I am not a lawyer. However, my understanding of law has always been that the purpose of law is to establish order in society and to protect the values, safety and security of that society.

I would suggest that if the law goes too far in protecting the rights of the individual without requiring any responsibilities, there is a very real danger that the law is going to have the effect of destroying the very society that it sets out to protect.

That destruction starts when the members of society lose confidence in the law, begin to ridicule it and hold it up to contempt. This act and recent cases involving it are one instance where to protect individual rights, we have allowed a situation where the law is attracting abuse and contempt. We cannot allow this to continue.

The present system takes too long. The chances of convicting a guilty person must reasonably decrease with the passage of time. It is wrong to allow someone to use the Canadian legal system to stall for time while witnesses' memories fade or witnesses move or die. Even more significant, while our system slowly moves, victims and victims' families wait for justice.

I am sure that we are all agreed that everyone is entitled to due process, but justice is not served by delaying resolution. The Canadian taxpayer is not served by allowing foreign fugitives to languish in Canadian jails at Canadian expense. Let us pass this bill.

Let us improve our system of extradition and show Canadians that we are reasonable; that we believe in and accept the need for due process; but also that we believe in the responsibility of the individual to answer for his or her actions and that we refuse to allow foreign fugitives to hide out in the Canadian judicial system. Let us approve this bill.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise to speak to this private members' bill of the hon. member for Peterborough.

It deals with an area of law that a number of us in Parliament have been looking at very closely over the last year or two.

• (1720 )

I recall in January of this year the former justice minister addressing the issue publicly as an item of very compelling public interest. On the one hand he had certain function quasi judicial to take care of which prevented him from speaking too much on the issue but, on the other hand, he had his public responsibilities here to the people of Canada and to us in the House of Commons.

Certain commitments were made at that time to address the area of the Extradition Act and the Fugitive Offenders Act. A few months later in the justice committee, the current justice minister and officials appeared and indicated that the matter was under study. We all know that the matter has been under study for a long time and it is still being studied and I, for one, cannot figure out why approximately three statutes are taking so long to decipher and a solution so long to be generated.

The hon. member for Peterborough with this private member's bill has provided the House of Commons with an opportunity to address this problem area directly and concisely. I gather that if the bill is passed by members, it can go to either a legislative committee or the justice committee which would take a closer look at some of the administrative implications.

The way this area of law is structured now—it is not embarrassing to stand here because it is a public issue—if the public was truly aware of the duplications, the complications, the conflicts, the redundancies, the absurdities, in the four federal statutes that govern this area, people might be lined up at the front door here. I do not get a sense of good management here; I get a sense of terrible management and a lack of interest. I grant that there have been other public issues in the justice area, that have kept the justice minister busy like gun control, the Meech Lake Constitution process, the abortion issue and other very compelling national matters, but these provisions in the Extradition Act and the Fugitive Offenders Act, the Corrections Act, and the Immigration Act are starting to embarrass us and, as my friend, the hon. member for Red Deer, just mentioned, there are 25 or 30 million people in the state of California trying to figure out what 25 million people here in Canada are doing. They cannot figure out how someone who is a U.S. citizen can suddenly show up on our doorstep and camp out until we no longer have any use for him.

I have read the provisions of the Immigration Act which state very clearly that an individual who is incarcerated can be removed or deported, it is very simple, upon the expiration of the period of time which he must serve in an institution, and that is approximately two-thirds of one's sentence.

I do not want to mention the individual's name, there is not need to, it has been mentioned in the House, but why the immigration officials did not go to the penitentiary in which that convicted person was and have him dealt with at a deportation hearing the day after two-thirds of the sentence had passed, I do not know. Since that time we have been participating, along with him, in what has become a growth industry involving our legal aid system, our judicial system, up and down, back and forth, to and from, the Supreme Court. This is costing us all money, not to mention the embarrassment. We do not seem to be able to move a body out of this country when it is obvious from our Immigration Act that we have the authority to do so. We just continue to sit back and do nothing.

We can remove an individual who has not committed a crime, but we cannot get rid of an individual who has committed a crime. This is an absurdity. I know in other parts of the world, if an individual of this type were to show up in another country and officials in that country were aware of it, that person would have a hearing. Depending on how the hearing turned out, the person would be taken to the airport and sent back home where he or she belongs.

People in this country are tired of providing safe haven to criminals. We do not mind being the haven to convention refugees under the United Nations Charter. We have done an admirable job and we are justifiably proud of what we have done. It has cost us dearly but we are happy to do that. But we are not happy to be a safe haven for criminals.

This particular bill gives us an opportunity, if I may use the term, on a fast-track basis, to take that narrow focus of extradition law, the focus of the difficulty we are having now, pass it at second reading, move it to a committee and then, hopefully, pass it into law and assist the justice officials and the Minister of Justice in completing this area of badly-needed homework.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga West): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise in the House today to support this private member's initiative from the member for Peterborough.

This is only one of a number of issues that the member for Peterborough has taken on and, believe me, he has great tenacity. I believe that something has to come of this bill. I would like to see the bill put to a vote today. I would like to see the bill referred to the justice committee. I do not see why we have to re-invent the wheel. We have already submitted a report with recommendations to the minister. I could read part of this report. Before I do that, I realize that I only have 10 minutes, and I would like to discuss the emotional issue of this. I heard my friend from Scarborough—Rouge River discussing 25 million people in California who cannot understand what 25 million people in Canada are doing. He is absolutely right.

I know the Department of Justice is very concerned about extradition and the length of time that these things take. It is hard to talk about these things without referring to the cases of Mr. Ng and Mr. Kindler. What we are doing here in the House today may not affect those cases but may affect future cases which will come before this country and cause us to be a total embarrassment and a safe haven for fugitives all over the world. We know that people in prisons in the United States plan their escapes to Canada because they know they are not going to go back.

What has happened in the second week of November? Mr. Bruce McLaughlin, an assistant deputy minister in the Department of Justice, along with other government officials, went to Sacramento, California. They talked with people. They spoke with Paul Cummings, the District Attorney from San Francisco. They spoke with John Martin, the District Attorney from Calaveras County. They spoke with Mr. Eidelberger from the California State Attorney General's department, plus people on the Ng task force. There are people in the United States who want this man to go back and face a trial in that country. They are saying that if you are going to send him back with conditions that apply to your country and do not apply to ours and if you are going to send him back with conditions that the capital punishment situation can never come to pass, we do not want him. It is costing the taxpayers of this country $100,000 a year to keep that man here.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that the Ng case is before the Supreme Court of Canada for decision right now. We are not supposed to be commenting on cases. As the member knows, this bill does not affect the Ng case at all. The Ng case is almost totally irrelevant to this bill.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must suggest to the hon. member that if he would not mention the case that would be sufficient.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the intervention will not be taken off my time. I did mention that I realized that the provisions of this bill do not apply to the Ng case.

This afternoon representatives of Victims of Violence, a fine organization in this city, telephoned some of the victims. I have always in my political career, when I talked to someone, tried to put myself in their position. I would like members of this House to put themselves in the position of the people who have lost loved ones, who do not know where their loved ones are, who have no idea where the bodies are hidden. They spoke to different people. I will name a few. They spoke to Richard and Sharon O'Connor in California, and they said they support the California stand. They spoke to Virginia and David Nestle, and they support the California stand. They spoke to Dwight Lola of Stapley and Joy Ireland, and they support the California resolution. They spoke to Roger and Marlene Geraldton and family, and they support the California resolution. I could go on and on. This is a very emotional issue.

Let us get to the mechanics of the bill that were very well explained by my colleague from Red Deer. The NDP does not like this bill. I congratulate the Liberal Party for supporting us on this. What we have here is the current extradition process: the extradition hearing and it moves to a writ of habeas corpus. From there it goes to an appeal, a relevant provincial court appeal. From there it goes to appeal to the Supreme Court. Then it goes to the Minister of Justice for a decision. The minister's decision is appealed then to the Federal Court Trials Division. Then it is appealed to the Federal Court of Canada Appeals Division. Then it is appealed to the Supreme Court, and they start over again. This is absolutely ridiculous. It has to be fast-tracked in some way.

All we are asking to do is to remove two parts. The NDP says: "We don't want these parts removed because you must have an appeal to the relevant provincial court of appeal". However, what I am informed is that when you take away that appeal you have to put something in its place. You have to put in an appeal to a three-judge tribunal.

We are not asking for a big thing. We are asking for a small step to make Canada have some respect in its laws. We have submitted in the third report of the justice committee four recommendations to the minister. I could read from it: "The committee has considered aspects of the law and the process of extradition", and so on. We go on with four recommendations. The NDP says: "We support these recommendations".

However, our recommendations were not accepted at this time by the minister. The minister stated her reasons. She goes on to say in the conclusion as well: "The recommendations raise broader issues which require thorough consideration". Fine, let us take one small step. Let us support this private member's initiative.

We all remember the times when private members did not have a say in this House. They did not have very much say at all. The McGrath commission changed that, and now we have private members' bills that pass. In the last Parliament we had five private members' bills of great significance that passed. In this Parliament I want to see one pass, and I want to see this one pass.

I know that the NDP caucus members have great deep feelings for these victims. I know that they feel as deeply as I do. However, they cannot take a stand against this bill in all good conscience and I can tell you why. I have in my possession a letter from the former justice critic of the New Democratic Party, the member for Burnaby—Kingsway. I would like to read this letter into the record. The letter is to George Bears, Director, Victims of Violence. It reads:

> Dear Mr. Bears:
> My colleague, Audrey McLaughlin, has passed your memo on to me expressing your concern about the lengthy process of extradition in the Charles Ng case.

I am sorry to mention the case, but it is in the letter. It continues:

> I share your concern on this question. I believe that current provisions of the Extradition Act lead to inordinate delays in extradition. There are too many steps in the appeal process. The legal requirement that a fugitive who has been accused of an offence in Canada (not the extradition offence) or who has been convicted and sentenced for a crime in Canada, cannot be surrendered until after he or she has either been acquitted or has finished serving the sentence imposed by the Canadian court is unacceptable. Indeed, in contrast with this mandatory wording, the treaty with the United States provides that surrender in such a situation is discretionary.

This was from the justice critic of the New Democratic Party. In his last paragraph he writes:

> In light of these weaknesses in the Act, I am preparing a Private Member's bill to respond to these concerns and to tighten the Act. I will be pleased to send you a copy of my bill when it has been drafted.

I have never seen it. I have checked. There is no such bill, but there is a bill from the member for Peterborough. I ask for the NDP to support this bill, put it to a vote, refer it to the justice committee, and let us get things done in this Parliament.

Mr. Lee: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the ordinary course of the rotation in the House, I think it would have been a turn when a member from the Liberal caucus would have spoken. Having spoken with the hon. member for Peterborough and others, we feel that in the interest of attempting to expedite the process and not delay it we would defer at this time. Perhaps the Speaker would want to move to the next spot in rotation.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, let me reply to some of these points. We want to speed up the extradition process too. We think it is a flawed process. That is what the former critic said.

First of all, I want to point out that the Ng case does not affect this bill or this bill does not affect the Ng case. The Ng case is before the Supreme Court of Canada. It is going to decide. It has nothing to do right now with this bill. We are talking about the future.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that member of the New Democratic Party would respect the concerns spoken in this House earlier and try, whenever possible, not to refer to the Ng case.

Mr. Waddell: Touché, touché. That is right, but this bill is dealing with the future. That is what we are dealing with, so let us deal with this bill.

The process needs streamlining. We all agree with that. There is a solution to that. The solution is the report of the justice committee, signed by the member for Mississauga West, who was the last speaker for the Conservatives. As the member said in his own speech, it was not accepted by the Minister of Justice. That was a three-stage procedure.

Now the member for Peterborough comes along and introduces a two-stage procedure. Does the member for Mississauga West really believe that the Minister of Justice is going to accept a two-stage procedure when she thought a three-stage procedure was too fast? Come on now, let us not have hypocrisy here. Come on, let us be honest with the Canadian people. Let us quit scoring cheap politics. This is cheap politics. The solution is in the justice committee report. We want a streamlined system. We want a legal system.

Let me tell you about the flaw in the bill. I will go through the procedure, as did the member who first spoke suggested. Right now there is an extradition hearing. There is an appeal by a writ of habeas corpus. That is not anywhere in our law. That is a common law right. Then there is an appeal from the habeas corpus. The reason there is an appeal from the habeas corpus is that the habeas corpus is heard by a judge at the same court level that hears extradition cases. It could even be the same judge. That is why there is an appeal from that. That is why, if this bill goes through, the courts are liable to declare the bill unconstitutional. The courts are liable to declare the bill as violating the charter of rights.

• (1740)

You ask me what is my authority for that. My authority is the legal opinion of the justice department of the federal government which states exactly that on page 6 of the report.

Mr. Domm: It is different entirely.

Mr. Waddell: No, it is not different entirely. It is exactly on that. It makes sense too. It makes sense because how can you not restrict an appeal from a habeas corpus? If you start restricting that, you will be in some deep constitutional problems. What will happen—I won't mention the name Ng—and hopefully it will not happen is that if another fugitive comes here and gets a smart lawyer, the lawyer will go to court on this bill and delay it even further. If we pass this bill we will be in a bigger legal morass. We will be in deeper.

What we have to do is get smart. We have to put the onus on the Minister of Justice and follow the recommendations of the justice committee, which was a unanimous report that made legal sense. It streamlined the process.

Let me go back again in this process. Right now there is an extradition hearing, a writ of habeas corpus, an appeal from that, then an appeal to the Supreme Court, then a decision of the minister, and then there has been appeals. That was what Mr. Ng was doing, appealing that to the Federal Court and to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court is going to make a decision soon and likely, whichever way it decides, that will eliminate about three steps because that case will already be decided; the issue being: How does the charter of rights apply if you want to send someone out of the country where there is capital punishment in the other jurisdiction or there is harsh and unconscionable punishment? That will be decided. If we were smart, we would wait for the Supreme Court. The decision is pending now. We should wait for that decision. That will likely eliminate three parts of the procedure. Then what will we be left with? The member for Peterborough's bill, which will be an extradition hearing, a quick habeas corpus, and then out of the country. That is too fast, and it may be illegal and unconstitutional.

There are all kinds of future cases we may have on extradition. Remember Leonard Pelletier? He is now languishing in a jail in the States through trumped-up evidence, which legal scholars now agree was a pretty unfair hearing. We have to get a procedure that is streamlined but fair. My colleagues and I do not like what is going on with Mr. Ng and so on in those kinds of cases. We want to streamline the procedure, but we want it to be constitutional and legal.

I said there was hypocrisy. The government put up more speakers than the NDP. The Liberals have almost put up more speakers than the NDP, but we are getting blamed and they are putting up the speakers. The minister, who told me personally that she was against the bill, and the parliamentary secretary, who is against the bill but does not want to speak, will put it off to this committee and then prorogue Parliament. That will get the best of both worlds. They will claim to the victims of violence that they let it go through. Then they will claim to the justice department and the lawyers that it did not really go through. That is hypocrisy. The victims of violence are owed better by this government and by members of Parliament. We have to be honest and straightforward.

It is not easy to stand here and take the flak that is going around. I believe it is the truth, that this is a flawed bill, that it will get us into deeper legal morass, that there is a better way of doing it, and that the better way is the justice committee report itself which is legal, streamlined and the way to go.

If we were the government over there, in two months we would have a government bill and we would streamline this process. We would not engage in this hypocrisy.

I am surprised that the Liberals are falling for it, quite frankly.

Mr. Keyes: Then the Liberals should be government.

Mr. Waddell: Well, we will see. I just want to read what the committee said in its third report: "The committee believes that the Extradition Act can and must be streamlined by eliminating some of the steps available in the process, but this must be done in a manner consistent with Canada's international obligations and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms".

Right on, and here is what you do. You take that and you have an extradition hearing. You cannot stop a writ of habeas corpus. It is in English common law. It has been there forever. You have the writ of habeas corpus, and there has to be an appeal from that. You cannot stop that but you can have one appeal, not two appeals. You do not allow two appeals, you allow one appeal from that and then you have the minister's decision. The Ng case, when it is decided, will have dealt with most of the other points about sending them to the United States. When we have dealt with that, we will have a streamlined procedure which works.

Mr. Lee: We'll do it in committee.

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member says, "We'll do it in committee". We cannot amend this bill in committee.

Mr. Lee: Nonsense.

Mr. Waddell: It is not nonsense. You cannot add to a bill. I have just been in committee this afternoon trying to add to the young offenders bill and had all my amendments ruled out of order. You cannot add to a bill.

The way to do it is to have the government bring in a bill. This bill is going to die anyway because the House is going to prorogue. Let us be honest with the people, the victims of violence. Why do we not put our efforts into getting a government bill that works? Bring in a government bill that works early in the next session of Parliament. We will put up a speaker, and we will put that bill through. You know that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, at the outset, speaking in favour of the bill, that the member who just spoke, the member for Port Moody—Coquitlam, I have known for a long time as a prosecuting counsel. I think we started the same week or month in Vancouver together down on Main Street. I want members on all sides of the House to know that I have high respect for his intellectual honesty, both as a lawyer and as a parliamentarian.

I am confident that he is speaking from the heart and from the head on this issue. He genuinely disagrees with the bill for reasons which he has just stated. In fact, he was kind enough to make available to me a copy of the justice department opinion which was tabled some time ago, and I understand fully the complaint and the concern which he is expressing.

I would remind the member that former Senator Eugene Forsey, in his memoirs, A Life on the Fringe, has made it clear—and I think all members should read that book, particularly the chapter where he talks about some of the legal opinions which came from the justice department in his career. The member for Port Moody—Coquitlam knows perfectly well that a lot of opinions coming from the justice department, and I speak as someone who used to work in that department, are full of holes and are rubbish. It depends, as he knows, on who has prepared the opinion. Maybe he knows who did the opinion but I don't. Perhaps he knows whether it is worth the powder to blow it to Hades.

If this bill goes ahead today, the legislative committee considering it will be able to call for legal opinions of all kinds, including, of course, the justice department. We will be able to amend the bill to take out any probable unconstitutionality in it. The member may think that is impossible but I submit that it is worth trying.

The situation is sufficiently serious that this is at least a step forward and, if it is unconstitutional, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member, we can try to take out any possible problems with unconstitutionality under the Charter of Rights. I would urge the member and his colleagues not to talk the bill out at 6.10 p.m. today, which is in about 20 minutes.

I would like to pay my respects to the member for Peterborough, to all of the members who have taken part in this issue, and to the about 100,000 people who have signed petitions in favour of the principle of this bill.

I also would point out, although it has now gone by the boards, that the member for Peterborough asked each party to speak for 10 minutes and not longer today and then, by unanimous consent, we could have a vote. As an independent member, I will not speak for the full 10 minutes. I would simply make a plea to members of the New Democratic Party, because I think all other members here are agreed to let the bill go to committee, not to filibuster the proposal and I would give them three reasons. Earlier today we heard eloquent tributes in this House to the women who were killed in the tragedy at École polytechnique in Montreal exactly a year ago today. How is it consistent for us in the same afternoon not to try to push this bill into committee, at the same we are all very distressed about what has happened in Montreal, across the country, and probably in every one of our constituencies?

• (1750)

I gather we are not to mention the name of one of the accused. That again is the sort of mythology that goes forward. That is considered to be improper. I know the member for Burnaby—Coquitlam is aware that so many of the victims of these kinds of violence are women. How can we do something to light a small candle for these victims? Is it not better to push this bill into committee than to talk it out and say that we will bring in a better one next time?

I would point out to the members of the New Democratic Party that a recent New York Times article has estimated that there have been 250,000 homicides in the United States over the last 10 or 15 years. Would sending this bill to committee not speed up the day to come when people like the two people I am not to mention will find it harder to seek refuge in Canada, or sanctuary in Canada, than many have found it today?

Mr. Speaker, I might say as a former prosecutor of a number of homicide cases that there is now considerable dissymmetry between Canada and the United States, as I think the member for Scarborough—Rouge River pointed out. I recall a murder case in Alberta where the accused fled to California, her co-accused was tried in Fort McMurray. When she was found in California, as far as I can determine, the immigration authorities simply put her on an airplane, told the RCMP in Vancouver when she would be landing, and she was arrested at the airport and brought back to Alberta for trial.

That may not be pretty, it may offend all of us who believe in the rule of law, but that is the kind of dissymmetry that operates now between our two countries on matters like this. Do any of the members think that if the unmentionable person had committed these alleged crimes in British Columbia that the authorities in California would have waited very long before they would have shipped him back to face trial in Vancouver?

Something is wildly out of whack, I put it to the member. If the bill is not perfect it is better than what we have now, and it is a step forward, I put it to them.

Mr. Speaker, I think my time is up. I would urge the three members of the New Democratic Party who have not yet spoken in this debate, but have the remaining time following the speaker from the government side, to think seriously and recognize, I believe—although I am not allowed to refer to people in the gallery—that there are thousands and thousands of concerned people in Canada who think this is a step forward, not a measure that might be unconstitutional. I would urge them to think very seriously of what they are doing before they talk this bill out in the next few minutes.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly to this bill and do so from the perspective of someone who is not a lawyer. I do not apologize for not being a lawyer—

Ms. Blondin: Thank God.

Mr. Boudria: My colleague behind me says "thank god I am not". I can reassure her that that is not the purpose of this intervention.

The reason I mention those words is because to the average constituent that each of us has, the fact that someone can be a convicted murderer, enter this country, be arrested and have more rights as it were—perhaps not technically, but in reality—because he or she was arrested as opposed to not being, is just a little beyond the comprehension, I would suspect, of a number of our constituents.

Frankly, it is beyond logic simply because, as some people have indicated in the past, if you catch someone at the border you just send them back. If you catch someone in Canada who is here illegally, you send them away, Mr. Speaker.

But if they are arrested and put in jail, they seem to have means of appeal available to them that they would not otherwise have. That is very disturbing.

Some colleagues today are discussing whether or not this bill has a chance of being law. Others are mentioning that it does not really have a chance. Maybe we should talk it out instead, because if we do give this bill a chance, it might die in committee because the House will likely prorogue if the government gets some of the legislation that it is looking to get, namely, the government perhaps launching its goods and services tax bill and then proroguing Parliament.

Whether that will happen or not, Mr. Speaker, frankly I do not know. It might very well, but what do we have to lose by giving this bill a chance in committee. The bill could proceed to a committee. We could deal with the issue there, and if the bill is not satisfactory, perhaps we can amend it.

My colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River has mentioned that the bill, in his opinion, is fine the way it is. Witnesses will no doubt contribute. Members will contribute their knowledge. The justice department will give its advice and so on, once it reaches committee stage.

That being said, what if we arrive at a situation where we discover this bill does not do all those wonderful things that we expect. Incidentally, it does not dramatically change that many things. It might remove a few levels of appeal, but there are still a number of them left.

Even if we deem it at that point to be unacceptable, what on earth stops us from defeating the bill at report stage or at third reading? There is nothing at all that stops us from doing that later. That is only if the bill does not work at all and if this bill is worse than the present condition.

There is no proof that I have heard today or the other day that convinces me that we should absolutely talk this bill out to ensure that it is not discussed in committee in case it passes afterwards and in the unlikely event that it is worse than what we have now.

I have heard no such evidence. What I have heard from the vast majority of members of this House is that this bill is an improvement over what it is now. For those who do not think that it is an improvement, there is ample opportunity to make that case and to convince other members at committee and to act accordingly, of course, once the bill comes back to this House.

Mr. Waddell: I hesitate to interrupt my friend, but I just want to check with the Chair. I understand this will be a votable bill after so many hours of debate here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In another hour it would be.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I suppose our friend is technically correct. This bill is a votable bill, but it is not necessarily votable today.

Individuals could talk it out with, of course, the hope that by the time the bill comes up again in the House of Commons for debate, Parliament might have prorogued by then.

The issue of prorogation might come in again, but from an entirely different angle. There might be those who would like the bill to be talked out one more time in the hope that it will not come back up.

In any case, we will see a little later if the vote is permitted today. Of course, there are two means by which we could complete this bill today: first, we could, of course, extend the hours. That is certainly possible, and everyone could speak to his or her heart's content.

• (1800 )

Second, the other way of doing it is simply for a member who would not wish for this bill to proceed to talk it past the hour of termination, which I believe is 6.14 p.m. or thereabouts today. Of course, that process will delay the bill until next time.

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The member might be inadvertently misleading the House, but I understood this is a votable bill. The member is indicating that for some reason it may never come to a vote. It will come to a vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is debate. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, if the member was not knowledgeable on procedure, those points of order would be almost excusable. But he is, of course, far more knowledgeable than that and his points of order are totally ridiculous.

He knows of course that the bill will be votable, but not necessarily today. I was just explaining how one could ensure that the bill was not votable today by either talking it out or using some other means, in the hope that Parliament will have prorogued before the next time it comes up. That is not today. Of course, we can vote on it today. In a few minutes from now, we will have that tool available to us.

The hon. member from Port Moody—Coquitlam a little earlier today said that this bill might not be amendable in committee. That depends. Under rule 773 of Beauchesne, even if his amendment which he says is required, is in fact required—and that is yet to be determined— it would be out of order only if it went beyond the scope of the present bill. I am not convinced that his amendment would bring the bill, as amended, beyond the scope of what it is already. That is to be determined.

In any case, I am not even convinced that the amendment is required. That is to be determined at parliamentary committee, as our colleague I am sure knows. He knows far better than some of the things he has been telling us.

Other members could perhaps convince us that they are not very knowledgeable. For this member to pretend that is just a bit much because we know him well. We know of course he is very clever and very knowledgeable, in terms of parliamentary procedure, the law, and everything else. Therefore, I do have some difficulty with some of the arguments that he is putting before us today in terms of the reasons why we should not proceed with a vote today on the bill and continue talking on it for some time to come.

The ideal situation for us today would be to terminate this debate prior to talking out the time— talking out the time for today, I want to add, so that I am not again interrupted on a point of order by our colleague from Port Moody—Coquitlam. Before that talking out time today, which I believe to be 6.11 p.m., we should vote on this bill. We should vote at that point before 6.11 p.m. this afternoon.

If some members do not want the bill to proceed to committee, they can vote against it. I happen to think it should go to committee. The people who have sent me here are fed up with seeing what we see now. The convicted murderers of other countries come here because this is a way that they can delay, or possibly evade altogether, trials or sentences that they would otherwise be subjected to in their own countries.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here with a great deal of perplexity because I have found out that the Liberals and the Conservatives are accusing the New Democrats of talking the bill out, but then I find out that all of the discussion has been by Conservatives and Liberals.

The last time this came up the NDP got one speaker in two minutes. Today we are going to get one speaker and I guess I am going to get five or six minutes. If the members wanted it to proceed, why did the Conservatives put up two speakers again today? The Liberals put up two speakers, and an independent person, who cannot decide whether he is a Liberal or a Tory, spoke.

The issue of extradition is an emotional one. I want to make it very clear that the New Democratic Party supports the recommendations made by the committee. It was an all-party committee which reported unanimously. Many of the people who spoke today were on that committee.

The committee stated that it believes that the Extradition Act can and must be streamlined by eliminating some of the steps available in the process. But this must be done in a manner consistent with Canada's international obligation and Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It recommended a three-stage proposal.

What we cannot understand is why the minister simply has not brought forward a bill based on the committee's recommendation. It is the responsibility of the minister to bring forward legislation.

We are beginning to be perplexed about this new justice minister, particularly those of us from British Columbia, because we have seen her fumble every piece of legislation she has been responsible for. There was the abortion legislation which nobody likes; the gun control legislation which she basically had to withdraw by shuffling it off to a special committee; and now, her inability to draft proper legislation that will streamline the extradition procedures that will hold up in court.

It is very nice for people to pass a bill such as this, but the result may be that it would delay extradition. We have seen in Canada where flawed legislation simply goes before the court and delays and delays. All sorts of constitutional arguments come forward that delay the process for years.

If we are going to have proper extradition procedure, let us do it right. Let us make sure that we have legislation that will accomplish what we want, which is a speedy extradition procedure, streamlined and legal which will hold up in court and protect individual's rights. There are times when people come to Canada who are being extradited, where their rights have not been protected in other countries. We must guarantee that this kind of thing does not happen.

One of the things that is now happening, and it would be arguable, is that the legal opinions simply say that the bill would be unconstitutional and that we are then going to have litigation again.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you would want to ask the House if we could get unanimous consent to proceed with the remainder of the time at second reading today so that we could have a vote today on this bill. In other words, that all five hours of this bill be dealt with today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe this is particularly in order and my friend is more of an expert than I am. But it seems to me we have a process for dealing with a bill. We deal with a bill for three hours, as I understand it. We have a vote at the end of that period. That is the procedure we see. We are quite prepared to have a vote at the end of that period.

We would prefer to push the Minister of Justice into a bill that really works. I think this is out of order, but I am waiting for a ruling from the Chair.

Mr. Domm: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Well, we only have a minute left before 6.11. The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Domm: I do not wish to delay this matter, but by way of correction, we have three hours at second reading. We now have completed almost two. What is being asked is for the third hour that is before second reading vote take place now. Any member who wanted to speak could speak, and then we would refer it to committee. I turn it over to you, Mr. Speaker.

• (1810 )

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam is right. So are the other members. The House can do anything it wants, if we get unanimous consent. We did not get unanimous consent. Therefore, we cannot do it.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to know if it was in order to do this. It seems to me we are changing the procedure. I have not had any experience of this procedure of ever being changed. I do not know if it is in order. You cannot get unanimous consent for certain things if they are already in the rules, it seems to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We could agree not to see the clock and continue for another hour to complete the bill, but we did not get unanimous consent. Therefore, there is no sense in talking about something that is hypothetical. I heard a no.

It being 6.11 p.m., the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(3), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

In accordance with Standing Order 38, a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been moved.

SUPPLY MANAGEMENT

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I, and many others who value our Canadian agriculture industry, take strong objection to the answer of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to my question of November 22, 1990.

The minister took no time to refute recent editorials, consumer groups, and foreign governments which have been attacking supply management. He is leaving it to us alone to set the record straight. Let's be truthful and get the facts straight.

Prior to the 1970s and the establishment of marketing boards in Canada, the dairy industry and prices of dairy products to consumers were continuously experiencing roller coaster highs and lows. Farmers could never rely on a stable income and the consumers' food budget was always fluctuating, creating financial instability for all concerned.

Economic policies based on the vicious laws of supply and demand are responsible for the surpluses and create the prices below the cost of production that we find in the United States and Europe. With no controls the market is flooded with surpluses and milk producers begin consistently to overproduce, creating huge stockpiles of butter, cheese, and non-fat dairy products.

Producers finally concluded that the only way for them to provide high quality products to consumers and achieve stability and a fair return for their labour and investment was to implement a production program to manage supply. Most importantly, our supply-managed system was implemented within international law, under Article XI of GATT.

Our dairy production is regulated to meet Canadian demand for dairy products, with adjustments for traditional imports and exports. Under supply management, the dairy industry produces a high quality product at a fair and reasonable price. Perhaps equally as important, Canada is now nearly self-sufficient in dairy products.

To say that dairy farmers are inefficient is a blatant lie. Since the introduction of supply management, milk yields have increased about 70 per cent in Canada, compared to 46 per cent in the U.S. and 31 per cent in New Zealand.

These groups continually talk about Canadian consumers being penalized by higher prices. Those who talk about the inefficiency of supply management neglect to mention that, while milk may be cheaper in the U.S. than in Canada, American milk is sold below the cost of production. U.S. producers are subsidized with tax dollars through surplus and herd buy-outs. The consumer pays in the end.

A popular conception by the media is that marketing boards and supply management systems are actually a form of subsidization. Supply management provides a fair return for producers from the marketplace without using huge amounts of taxpayers' dollars.

When supply management was first implemented under GATT, it was understood that subsidies were something that came out of the tax base.

Now the U.S. in particular is trying to argue that if consumers pay more than world price, that is a subsidy.

The GATT aggregate measure of support is a calculation used to qualify all government support programs for an industry and give these programs a monetary value. This calculation supposedly allows GATT to determine which support programs are trade distorting and which ones are not.

For the Canadian dairy industry, the AMS calculation considers both the domestic world price differential and the direct payment to producers. Such a calculation is misleading as the basis for 86 per cent of AMS calculation as it applies to the Canadian dairy industry is simply the difference between Canadian milk prices and world prices.

Such a calculation is irrelevant, and it is unfair because world prices reflect dumping by countries of the subsidized surplus production. The fact is that world prices are far below the actual production costs for most dairy producing countries.

The sensible marketing strategy these economic wizards appear to suggest is for our dairy farmers to produce huge surpluses below the cost of production. Yes, dairy producers and those who raise products under supply management in Canada have viable and successful operations, but does anyone ever stop to think of the huge investment they have had in their operations, or the 75-plus hours a week? They work milking cows twice a day like clockwork for 365 days a year.

It appears instead that these groups believe that dairy producers, and for that matter all farmers, do not deserve to earn a decent living for their families. Do they not have the right to a stable income? Do these groups expect them to accept a lower standard of living than other Canadians, living off the land?

Those agricultural sectors without supply management are continually plagued by boom and bust. Would these people like to have their salary go up and down like a yo-yo? The Department of Agriculture has predicted that farm incomes will fall by 25 per cent this year. What would these people do if their salaries were decreased by a quarter? How would they manage?

For that matter, how would we manage without a healthy food sector? On condemning supply management in our agricultural industry, these people all too often forget the importance of agriculture to our total economy.

For example, today there are some 35,000 dairy farmers in Canada. Each of these farmers supports two families; hence, there are some 70,000 farm families that depend on the dairy industry.

In addition, there are approximately 25,000 Canadians working in the dairy processing industry at nearly 400 plants located across this nation. The total number of people directly employed by the dairy industry is close to 100,000 Canadians, which represents approximately 14 per cent of the total aggregate business and employment.

Critics of supply management in agriculture forget that other sectors also have management of supply. Do you think General Motors or any other auto manufacturers produce an unlimited number of cars? What about subsidies and safety nets? If everything was based at world price and it is going to be considered a subsidy in agriculture, how long would it be before our social programs, old age pensions, CPP, OHIP, et cetera and other types of safety nets will also be considered as subsidies?

In conclusion, farmers are only asking for what other Canadians want, the right to earn a good living and support their families by hard work and struggling. We have built an agricultural industry that is envied the world over. We must not allow it to be destroyed.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to respond to the member's concerns and the indication that they stand alone.

That is certainly not the case. This government has demonstrated many times how it supported supply managed sectors and the farm industry in this country. We recognize that supply management is a very important part of the Canadian long term agricultural policy.

I can assure everyone that the federal government is very committed to supply management, and that commitment is very firm. It is also clearly endorsed in our discussion paper Growing Together that we are all very familiar with.

The supply management in Canada has been very highly successful in reducing market risk to producers, and I am sure the member agrees with that, preserving the family farm and ensuring that consumers have access to high quality food products at reasonable costs.

Since the introduction of supply management, price instability has become a thing of the past and Canadians have been assured of products of the highest quality and safety in the world, which are very important.

Price increases for supply managed products have generally been lower than for other foods and products. Over the last four years, the average increase in the Consumer Price Index for dairy products, turkey and eggs was less than 3 per cent. This compares favourably to that for all food at 3.9 per cent and for all items 4.4 per cent.

• (1820)

Canada's support for supply management is embodied in our position in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade talks in these negotiations. We all know that we tabled our position last March to clarify and strengthen article 11, and we know how important that is to the supply management sector.

The agrifood sector has a lot at stake in these talks, and we are hoping and working very diligently to make sure that we have a successful outcome to those negotiations and the GATT talks.

With regard to the dairy industry which we believe is the best in the world, this government has put in a five-year dairy policy that previous governments had failed to do. We have a poultry task force working with the farmers as well. But our position of maintaining supply management is firm and very well known.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have stood in this place many times stating sobering statistics on violence against women, and here I am again tonight.

Tonight, let us forget the figures. Let us philosophize about a theme: the penalization of feminism. That is exactly what the Montreal massacre was about. It was about killing women who considered it natural to study a profession that interested them; women who did not realize that they would be physically punished for being feminists, unwitting feminists.

Like them, thousands of other Canadian women are punished for wanting self-sufficiency. Why did Chantal Daigle have to resort to wearing a disguise, sneaking out of the country and sleeping at a campground in order to access a medical service? Why, despite Supreme Court opinion, do Canadian women now face the possibility of being forced to reproduce by having to deal with doctors who could be branded criminals at someone else's whim? Why are women, who demand to exercise their own priorities, being in the words of a former chief justice, "profoundly interfered with"? Because these women are becoming too revealing. They are revealing their feminism. So, they seem to deserve punishment.

How bizarre it is that this government can criminalize a perfectly safe medical function and yet deliberately resist criminalizing the unwarranted possession of guns, whose prime function is to slaughter? One-third of these victims are women.

Why such blatant hypocrisy? Because, in each case women chose to choose, to practise feminism, something which unless punished enough, I suppose, might become a habit.

No wonder this government turns a blind eye to the lawmakers, interpreters, and enforcers who explain away violence against women by citing a number of things. They cite temporary loss of control, or work-related stress, or misunderstood signals from women, or my personal favourite, "She got what she asked for". Of course she did. She stood up for herself. She sought help. She fought back. She was a feminist. She was wrong. She had to be told.

If feminism is so wrong in the eyes of this government, why bother reprimanding anti-feminists at all? Why bother giving three day sentences to confirmed wife batterers? I stand corrected. In some instances only a weekend sentence follows; the compassionate judge having made allowances for men who cannot miss their Friday night rituals. Mind you, I am not really complaining. Feminists have rituals, too. We have vigils. We call them vigils to help us remember those whom the judges forget.

Why even consider issuing demerit points, you know, the kind of demerit points that are issued to school yard bullies to university men who threaten their female colleagues with rape. Is it my mistake again, Mr. Speaker? In the University of B.C. case, none of the men has been officially sanctioned, nor are there signs of a formal inquiry in the works. Forgive me for suggesting that there should be. What can I say? Perhaps I want too much.

Why should we give so-called street women an economic break by allowing them to communicate the sale of their bodies in private? Or is once more my feminism leading me astray? To give credit where credit is due, this government has ensured that even those women who want out of prostitution will have problems finding decent work, thanks to their criminal records and a pitiful lack of reform programs.

The insults of women having to sneak around, sneak across the border for abortions; of prostitutes having to consider themselves outlaws except under the wink-wink, nudge-nudge circumstances; of women having to see their efforts undermined in a gun control bill whose very introduction came because of their efforts; of women having to get handcuffed to keep women's centres open; of women having to beg police officers to charge the accused, or plead with judges to sentence offenders adequately, and of women's votes being lured with hollow promises of a national child care program while domestic violence continues to dig the graves of Canadian women and children.

These realities contain two messages. First, that feminism has become such an integral part of the consciousness of Canadian women that it now threatens established power. If a threat cannot be destroyed, it must be disciplined. It must be punished.

The second message is that under this government the early 1990s are echoing the early 1890s, when the Criminal Code made birth control, and advising about birth control, illegal, and when etiquette manuals proclaimed that "women who overtax their vital energies by intellectual strain are self-made invalids and must accept the penalties of their position."

Penalizing feminism, Mr. Speaker, will not make it go away. It will only make it stronger. Female enrolment in engineering programs across Canada is higher than ever. Feminist resolve to amplify voices until government stops punishing them is greater than ever. The ultimate goal is clearer than ever: to liberate men as much as to liberate women so that "feminism" can be uttered by both sexes without anticipation of penalty.

This feminist will now await her penalty: three minutes of watching the government apologize first and give select information to puff up a pathetic record on action on violence against women.

Mr. Speaker, the penalty hardly suits the crime.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member realizes and recognizes that it is difficult to respond to all of her concerns in three minutes on the very delicate and very sincere situation and the concerns she has raised.

The government and the judiciary are keenly aware of the problem of judicial attitudes to issues such as gender equality and child sexual assault which may result in the making of ill-considered remarks. This was one of the reasons why the federal Minister of Justice of the day, along with his provincial and territorial counterparts, and the Canadian Judicial Counsel, agreed to establish the Canadian Judicial Centre in 1987.

One of its core functions is to respond to the educational requirements of both the federally and provincially appointed judiciary in Canada by designing judicial educational services to meet the requirements of the Canadian Judiciary and Skills Training, continuing professional education and professional enrichment.

The centre has become a central forum for the development of educational programs on gender equality for all levels of judges in this country. The centre is jointly funded by the federal, provincial and territorial governments. The commitment of the federal government to the work of the centre is demonstrated by the fact that the level of financial support to the centre has recently been doubled.

The Minister of Justice considers the centre to be an appropriate body to assist the judiciary in developing a better appreciation of issues such as equality of the sexes, child abuse, and family violence, issues in which it has thus far shown considerable interest and concern.

The Canadian Judicial Council in conjunction with the Canadian Judicial Centre provided a course on gender equality at its 1990 summer seminar for federally appointed judges. This course was mandatory for those attending the seminar and focused on gender issues in the court room and in the application of the law.

Furthermore, the training seminar is given to all newly appointed judges and includes mandatory sessions dealing with gender issues. The Minister of Justice has called a National Conference on Women and the Law to be held in late 1991.

Continuing traditional education is an effective way of impressing upon members of the judiciary the need for the courts to reflect the changes in societal attitudes to gender issues, including child and spousal assault, which have occurred over the past few years.

• (1830 )

With the increasing enrolment of women in law schools and especially with the presence of more women judges at all levels of court, attitudes are changing. Judges and law makers are more aware of women's concerns and more responsive to them. Indeed, with 81 women currently holding federal judicial office, including three members of the Supreme Court of Canada, the courts of every province and all the federally constituted courts are to an increasing extent being exposed to the presence and the views of women.

HEALTH

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, everyone is familiar with the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. If one applies this adage to health care, I suppose one would say that preventing disease is better and less expensive than treating sick people. Yet as a society we spend billions on curing sick people and relatively little on preventing disease. This was the crux of the question which I raised in the House last Thursday and which I had raised on previous occasions in June and earlier this fall.

The federal government spends $216 million on medical research, while it spends only $28 million on health care research which includes prevention of disease and health promotion. While the government spends relatively little on health care research, this is precisely the area that was cut by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in recent months.

In last year's budget, the minister was directed to reduce the expenditures of his department by $12 million. As was pointed out to me by one researcher, this amounts to 4–100ths of 1 per cent of the Department of National Health and Welfare's total budget of some $35 billion. As this researcher suggested to me, when one is asked to cut $12 million out of a budget of $35 billion or $40 billion, the largest budget of any department of the Government of Canada, surely there are ways that this could be done, surely there are ways that the pain could be spread around, rather than cutting the budget of the health care research program by some $4 million, which is what the minister chose to do.

The National Health Research and Development Program is the only funding source for applied health care research. It is the only funding source for areas of research such as cancer prevention, native health care, care for Alzheimer's sufferers, women's health care, health promotion, prevention of child sexual abuse, and prevention of family violence. Again I specify research into all these areas. Yet the minister reduced the budget of this program by $4 million and froze the budget for five years.

As a result of these cuts this fiscal year's competition was cancelled. In other words, no new projects will receive funding this year. And next year, when the competition is re-opened, the budget will be 13 per cent smaller.

[Translation]

To try and understand the impact of this cutback, Mr. Speaker, I recently spent some time meeting and listening to researchers involved in health care research. I met members of the interdisciplinary health research group at the Université de Montréal. These people were doing research on emergency facilities. It is a known fact that crowded emergency wards are a problem that is very difficult to deal with. I met another researcher who is analysing decisive factors in the use of preventive services, such as the use of mammograms and Pap tests for cancer detection in women.

Mr. Speaker, many women do not take advantage of these tests. The point is to find out why and to convince them they should use these services.

Because of the cutbacks, these research projects have been postponed for one year, and researchers told me how negative the impact will be. Entire research teams will be lost because research assistants, doctorate-level students and programmers will decide to go on to something else, which means either working for the private sector or pursuing a career in medicine, which is more lucrative than research. Mr. Speaker, these cutbacks are also detrimental to the careers of researchers, since they are evaluated on productivity, the amounts of money they can raise and the number of articles they publish.

[English]

I spoke as well to a researcher from the University of Toronto who explained to me how two years ago many health care researchers underwent the difficult task of altering their areas of specialty to come into line with the government's stated priority at that time. The government sets up a program, people move into the field, they develop some expertise and then the government shuts off the funds. Research, this person told me, just does not work that way.

I am disappointed with the minister's reply to my question of why he chose to single out health care research for such harsh treatment. The minister said that this program is 55 per cent larger than it was in 1984. I never said that he cut 100 per cent of the budget. I only asked him why he cut 13 per cent. That he has not explained.

I will conclude by saying that this sorry episode demonstrates two things: first, the need to restore the funding to this health care research program. I hope that somehow researchers in the field and members of Parliament can convince the minister to do so. Second, we have to give the national health research and development program an independent status similar to that of the other research councils so that cuts of this nature, which are very damaging to research, to health care in Canada and to the careers of researchers will not occur again.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say at the outset, there is no doubt that the federal government is strongly committed to funding health and medical research in this country.

The National Health Research and Development Program of the Department of National Health and Welfare plays a major role in the over–all federal effort, but the NHRDP is not the only federal funding source for health and medical research in Canada. Others include the Medical Research Council, the networks of Centres of Excellence Program, payments under clause 31 of Bill C–22 and other federal departments. Additionally, an extra $5 million is being provided in federal funds over five years to ensure the funding of an additional network addressing research problems related to seniors entirely in the research area normally supported by the NHRDP.

Furthermore, on Friday, November 30, 1990, the Deputy Minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare announced a new $2.5 million joint program with the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council to stimulate the creation of centres for health promotion research.

Since we came to office the NHRDP budget has increased by 55 per cent. It was this government that recognized the need for more research related to seniors, AIDS, alcohol and drugs, family violence and child sexual abuse. The number of projects and awards supported by the NHRDP has increased from 640 in 1985–86 to over 1,000 in 1989–90. Since April, over $8 million has been approved for new public health and health service research in addition to the $7 million study on Alzheimer's disease.

I would like to remind the hon. member since it may have escaped his notice that health services and public health research are alive and well in the Montreal area. As well, in the member's own riding $3 million, or more than 10 per cent of the current NHRDP budget is being spent this fiscal year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at ten o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.40 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marcel Danis (for Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C–93, an act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, it is surprising that Bill C–93 is not being spoken to by a member of the government to introduce to the House and to the people watching us the importance of this piece of legislation.

It is a bill which brings into effect certain amendments made to an international agreement to which Canada is a party, establishing the International Monetary Fund. The effect of the legislation and of that agreement entered into earlier this year by members of the International Monetary Fund is to increase Canada's quota, as well as the quota of many other nations, to the fund and to provide certain additional sanctions for borrowers from the International Monetary Fund who failed to meet their obligations.

I am sure that all members of the House are well aware of the success of the International Monetary Fund, as an international institution, in providing a means of funding the balance of payments of nations around the world. It has been a useful institution in providing advice and direction to many countries, both developing countries as well as developed countries, in the context of providing the financial services that it does.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the beginning of Government Orders today, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance did stand, but was not seen at that point and the opposition was seen first.

I gather the opposition would prefer to have the government's speech, in introduction of the bill, occur first and, if that is the case, we would certainly give unanimous consent to begin with the parliamentary secretary and then move to the member who is now speaking. Of course, the member who is now speaking has the right to continue, but it would be the choice of the opposition as far as we are concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say that the hon. parliamentary secretary was not rising. The Chair did not see him. But, with consent, if there is agreement, I would be glad to recognize the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks by the Chief Government Whip, we would like to know which minister will be introducing this particular bill at second reading before we give our unanimous consent.

Mr. Hawkes: It will be the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Finance who would proceed to explain the bill to the House on behalf of the government.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, we had hoped that the traditions of the House would be adhered to and that a Minister of the Crown, who has taken an oath of office, would stand in his or her place to provide the government position in regard to second reading. However, in view of the fact that that cannot be, because either there is no minister readily available or they refuse to introduce this particular bill, we on this side of the House, in the spirit of Christmas, would want to be unanimous in allowing, on one hand, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance to commence his remarks if, on the other hand, the time which is allotted to our speaker will revert to the normal provisions of the Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see no problem with that. Does the House agree?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank our colleagues on the other side of the House. I guess it is because of my inexperience that I was bobbing up and down here, two or three times. I am not just sure exactly when you have to have your head up and when you have to have your head down. I can assure the hon. Whip of the Liberal Party that I also have taken an oath of office and I will try to fulfil my responsibilities to the best of my ability.

I would like to begin today's debate on Bill C-93, proposing amendments to the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, by reminding members of the International Monetary Fund's role in the world financial system. The International Monetary Fund, or IMF, is a central institution of the international monetary system.

The IMF has two central roles. First, it monitors the economic policies of all its member countries, assessing the consistency of policies among countries and providing policy advice. Second, it provides credit to countries facing balance of payments financing problems. For the most part, financing is provided on the condition that countries undertake policy reforms designed to eliminate the imbalances within their economies, thus creating the conditions necessary for sustainable, non-inflationary growth.

The IMF's continuing ability to operate effectively is crucial to the smooth operation of the world monetary and financial system. This is particularly the case in the early 1990s, when the international financial situation is facing difficult and challenging conditions. There is uncertainty about the world economic outlook and prospects for further sustained global economic growth arising from a number of factors. Foremost among these is the crisis in the Persian Gulf. The evolution of global payments imbalances necessitates a continuing need for balance of payments financing, possibly on a substantial scale.

An agreement was reached last spring by the fund's interim committee—the major policy advisory body of the Fund which, to our honour, is chaired by the hon. Minister of Finance—to increase total fund capital subscriptions by 50 per cent. Quotas are an important feature of the IMF. They serve three purposes in its operations.

First, the quotas which members subscribe are the major source of funds which the IMF lends to countries in balance of payments difficulties in order to correct their imbalances, without resorting to protectionist or other disruptive measures.

Second, quotas serve to determine the amounts which members can borrow under the various facilities of the IMF. Finally, quotas determine the voting strength of members and the composition of the executive board.

The proposed increase in IMF quotas is part of a regular cycle for reviewing fund quotas. The higher level of total IMF quotas is required to ensure a better balance between the resources available to the IMF, and the needs of members for balance of payments financing over the next few years.

While other institutions will provide the bulk of development financing for the developing world, the IMF has the specific responsibility to use its resources in support of growth-oriented economic adjustment programs, for both developing and developed countries. In turn, IMF financing should catalyze additional financing from private and official sources.

There will be a need for the fund to continue to play a major role in the international debt strategy by supporting countries which are having problems servicing their external debts in their efforts to restore creditworthiness. Developing countries have made extensive use of IMF funding in recent years, and will likely continue to do so.

For its part, the fund has shown innovation and flexibility in its policies in response to the special needs of the major debtor countries. One clear example of that innovation was the decision to use IMF resources and those of the World Bank to permit developing countries to buy back a portion of their commercial debt at a discount in the secondary market, thus reducing their over-all debt burden. The proposed increase in IMF quotas would create scope for similar innovation in response to future needs.

But fund resources are not restricted simply to the developing countries. An important element of the fund's activities in the period ahead will be to facilitate market oriented reforms in east European countries. In fact, the emerging democracies of eastern Europe are already looking to the IMF for advice and financial support. Poland, Hungary and Yugoslavia currently have fund programs, including policy guidance as well as financial support. Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria have recently joined the fund and have already begun policy discussions with the IMF staff. We expect close co-operation among the IMF, the World Bank, and the new European Bank for Reconstruction and Development in support of the economic transformation that is now taking place and will be required in eastern Europe.

The last increase in fund quotas was seven years ago. That increase served to support in conjunction with large-scale borrowing the fund's policies on the use of its resources in responding to the debt problems of many developing countries. During that period, however, arrears to the IMF accumulated and it started to threaten the fund's continued ability to assist members in dealing with their balance of payments problems. The reason for the accumulation of arrears by countries such as Sudan, Liberia, Peru and Vietnam are many and complex.

However, one characteristic is shared by all these countries. Each has suffered from a fundamental failure to deal with its economic problems head on through a commitment to sustained economic policy reform.

In response to its mounting arrears problem, the fund has undertaken policies to prevent arrears from increasing and to promote the elimination of existing arrears. As a further measure to strengthen the funds arrears strategy, it was agreed during the quota negotiations that the quota increase would be conditional upon the passage of an amendment to the articles of the agreement, allowing for suspension of the voting rights of members in arrears.

This would be an intermediate step between powers which the IMF already has under the articles. The articles it has now is an initial sanction of suspension of borrowing rights and the ultimate sanction of expulsion. The new quotas will come into effect when members having 85 per cent of present quotas have consented to the increases in their quotas and to the suspension amendment.

I would also note for the House that at the Houston economic summit last July, the Prime Minister and the leaders of the other major industrial countries called on the IMF, the World Bank, the OECD and the New European Bank for Reconstruction and Development to conduct an extensive evaluation of the economic situation of the Soviet Union. This study is now progressing, reinforcing the vital and central role of the IMF in the entire world economy.

The fund must also stand ready to deal with crisis situations, both with regard to individual members as well as more systemic threats to the international monetary system. The fund has recently demonstrated its flexibility in responding to countries affected by the events in the Middle East and will be a key player in helping these countries adjust to changed economic circumstances.

It is in this context, Mr. Speaker, that I propose the legislation before us today, Bill C-93, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act. Bill C-93 is a central element in Canada's continuing commitment to the smooth functioning of the international monetary system. It provides for an increase in Canada's quota subscription in the International Monetary Fund from 2,941 million special drawing rights, or SDRS, to 4,320.3 million SDRS.

This is confusing, Mr. Speaker, to most people in the House and I am sure to most people following. In Canadian dollars this would mean an increase in Canada's quota from approximately $4.9 billion to $7.2 billion, an increase of $2.3 billion.

I would note here, Mr. Speaker, that although our subscription in terms of Canadian dollars will increase by $2.3 billion, the actual Canadian dollar payment is $5.8 million.

This payment is a non-budgetary expenditure. Of the remainder, 25 per cent will be paid in special drawing rights from our international reserves, while the balance of our commitment is held in reserve in the event that the IMF needs to draw upon additional resources. Commensurately, the larger IMF quota adds to the resources available to Canada in the event of balance of payments needs.

The increase in Canada's quota will allow us to continue to lead a constituency at the fund, composed of Ireland and a number of Caribbean countries.

More important, agreement by Parliament to the proposed amendments to the IMF articles will allow Canada to maintain an effective voice on the IMF issues.

Canada has been a full participant in the activities of the IMF and strongly supports its role as a central institution in the international monetary system. In order for the IMF to continue to play a critical and an effective role in the system, and in order to Canada to show leadership on international financial matters, Canada must act to ratify the quota increase and suspension amendment.

Recent developments in the Gulf and uncertainties in the world economy makes it desirable to bring the quota increase into effect at the earliest possible date. I believe strongly that it is important that Canada show leadership by earlier ratification of the amendment.

Our legislative approval of the quota increase and a suspension amendment will demonstrate the importance Canada attaches to the role of the fund.

I urge my hon. colleagues in the House to give timely consideration and early passage to this bill.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should, under the agreement whereby I interrupted my previous introduction of the bill, remind the government that we are back to the usual time.

As government members may be aware, one of our colleagues down the corridor in the other place is endeavouring to set a record for the longest participation in debate. It is something like 45 hours. I would like the government to know that I do not intend to be outdone by a senator. Since I have unlimited time, I intend to do my best to exceed 45 hours in discussing Bill C-93.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like the hon. member to know that it is now 27 minutes after 10 by these clocks.

Mr. Manley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the parliamentary secretary for providing me with a copy of his remarks. With respect to his comments concerning the IMF and Canada's role in it, I am pleased to associate myself with those remarks.

As I was saying earlier, the IMF has performed a very useful and distinguished role in the world economy. Canada has been an active participant in the activities of this fund since it was established after the Second World War. I believe we should continue to strongly support the IMF in its central position in international financial matters. Consequently, I do not see that there will be any difficulty in the Official Opposition supporting the proposed amendments to the agreement, as Canada has already agreed to these, because they make ultimate sense in the context of the international arrangements.

I would like, though, to draw out one point that the parliamentary secretary did refer to in his remarks. This would be of concern to many of our constituents. In increasing Canada's quota in the fund, there is no impact on the budgetary position of the Government of Canada.

Essentially, what we are being asked to do is to increase the amount of special drawing rights that are held on account in the International Monetary Fund for Canada. It is as though we are putting additional funds into a different bank account. It is not an expenditure. It does not affect our ability to pay for other things. I think it is important that Canadians understand that.

What we are doing here is agreeing to an increased commitment to international financial stability in not committing ourselves to an increased expenditure of Canadian taxpayers' money.

As I understand it, the actual amount of cash to move from Canada into the fund which would be on deposit for Canada is in the order of $6 million which, while a lot for an individual, is not a lot for the Government of Canada, nor is it an expenditure by the Government of Canada. The only thing I can say about this bill that gives me any cause for concern is the fact that the Minister of Finance for Canada played a role in negotiating these amendments to the agreement. That gives me cause to pause, given the condition of our economy at the present time. Despite that reservation that I expressed, I can say on behalf of the Official Opposition that we will be supporting this bill.

• (1030)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am slightly shocked that the member from the Liberal Party that will, without question, support this kind of a bill. We recognize the need for this and the need for it being in place.

His party and the party across the way were both signatories to a report which was established by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade called Securing our Global Future which indicated very specific concern with the method that the World Bank and the IMF are following.

Although this bill has a very innocuous name, the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, it is a very misleading title. Perhaps when these institutions were put in place in 1944 they had some specific value. They operated at that time to aid the world.

This act has done a lot to enslave much of the Third World. It was not intended to do this. Enslavement is not in the mandate of either the international bank for reconstruction and development, nor is it in the list of purposes for the International Monetary Fund. After all these years, enslavement has been the result for millions of people in countries which have taken the bait and thought that they were on their way to prosperity and health by borrowing from these august institutions.

In fact, most of the Third World countries which have accepted this process are harvesting death, hunger and increasing poverty. I am not suggesting that was the mandate, but that is the result. Canada has not helped to alleviate that result. We are being asked here today to acquiesce once more, without thought or without analysis, to being part of the failure of this world financial structure. Should Canada yield to the world financial institutions and put its signature to the disaster of unmanageable Third World debt? Should it stay part of this structure?

This debt is having the effect, as I said before, of killing children, starving people and devastating the countries which have accepted it. For what? It is designed to protect the financial system from its own failure. Failure is the only term that I can really apply to the impact of the Third World debt and the relationship of those Third World countries to the Bretton Woods institution.

On Thursday, June 7, 1990, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade passed its fifth report entitled Securing our Global Future, Canada's stake in the unfinished business of Third World debt. That committee requested a comprehensive response in accordance with Standing Order 109 from the Government of Canada.

The report was an invitation to the Government of Canada to take some leadership in solving the problems of Third World debt. It was a plea from the members of the committee, members of every party in this House, to the Government of Canada to take some action to break the tradition of accepting the World Bank and IMF domination and say that people are more important than some myth which these financial institutions perpetrate, a myth that the world will fall apart if these debts are not paid back to the IMF or the World Bank, and if they are not paid on time and paid in full.

What this bill does is add to the quota and make more money available to Third World countries because they are in trouble as a result of having borrowed previously.

The committee recommended and specifically urged Canada to seek the support of other governments for an international conference on debt and sustainable global adjustment. Such a conference would aim for negotiated commitments to policy reform by all countries, not only the poor and indebted. One of the things that our international financial structure has done to these Third World countries is to enslave them by saying: "If you want money to pay your debt, you must follow certain requirements", and certain conditions are put in place.

The subsequent recommendation of this committee spelled out the principles and directions that it thought should be the basis of the process of global reform in handling Third World debt. Canada was asked by the committee to take a leadership role, and Canada came up lacking. The response to this report, which was required under the regulations, did not pick up any of the recommendations. Instead of a world conference which would look at world debt, it suggested a seminar. It denied the Third World countries a forum in which they could share the information as to how these institutions are affecting their economies. It refused to give these Third World countries an opportunity to share information about the pain and distress that they are feeling. Canada denied them this opportunity.

What does this have to do with the bill? I quote the committee report:

> The sub-committee does not offer a blueprint, a perestroika, in a Bretton Woods institution such as the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. But we are convinced of the need for structural adjustments here, not just in developing countries, and not on the basis of some utopian ideal, but as a pragmatic necessity for the future of the planet.
> There is no alternative to concerted political action among the major developed-country governments. Canada is a respected member of that group and active in many international organizations. We have a seat on the United Nations Security Council. Finance Minister Michael Wilson now chairs the key policy-advisory committee of the IMF's executive board. It is time for Canada to use its international position and influence to maximum advantage.

• (1040)

That was part of the report of an all-party committee of this House, its recommendations and its discussion with the government.

What is this debt that we have been discussing? There is a $1.3 trillion debt which has been accumulated by the developing countries. Sixty-seven of these countries, roughly one-half of all the so-called Third World countries, are experiencing debt servicing difficulties. It means that their debt has become unmanageable relative to their economies. Their indebtedness has threatened their economic development and political stability.

In most debtor nations, real per capita income has eroded in absolute terms to the position where their standard of living is at 1960s levels. The World Bank, but particularly the IMF, have invested in scheduling this $1.3 trillion worth of debt. That is what this money that we are talking about here today is for. The $1.378 billion that Canada is expected to come up with is for rescheduling by the IMF. It is intended to allow these countries to reschedule their debt. If one already has no possibility of paying the debt that one has, what value is rescheduling? It is fairly obvious that no amount of rescheduling can possibly resolve the problem.

In most of the debtor countries, the total national debt exceeds the total national income by several times. Also, debt services, that is interest paid on the debt and other services, are more—and this is an average across the board—for these countries than two-thirds of these debtor countries' export earnings. Export earnings are the only way they can get the money. If the services take up two-thirds of those export earnings and they need something to live on, what is left? Therefore, the payment capacity of most debtor countries is declining even as the IMF is rescheduling their debt.

Mr. Speaker, do you get the feeling that this bill might just be asking us to throw some good money after bad? If we continue to use the structure that is in place, as far as the World Bank and the IMF is concerned, that is the only thing that we can assume. This seems to be an almost bottomless pit under these circumstances, a bottomless pit which is soaking up whatever funding is served up and will continue to do so.

The IMF and the World Bank are both institutions which are considered business-like in their approach. But what they have done, as do all banks—at least I am told—is through initial loans and rescheduling loaned at least $4 for every dollar that these institutions have received from their donors. Canada, of course, is one of those donors.

They have loaned out $4 for every dollar they have received from the donor. If this thing suddenly collapsed, not only would they lose the donors' contribution, but they would have to go to those donors and find another $3. They do not think that would happen. So they go on perpetuating their structure and hoping that some day it will clear itself up. I am not at all sure that that will happen.

When the World Bank and the IMF cannot collect from an impoverished country with an unmanageable debt, they impose what these institutions call structural adjustment. The World Bank and the IMF, and possibly commercial banks because they work through the IMF, will decide how a nation generates its wealth from now on.

For instance, if a country needs yams to feed its people, but it can sell bananas, it grows bananas because it will be able to sell those bananas and get some money. The people will go hungry. The World Bank and the IMF decide how people will spend any wealth that they manage to produce.

The first thing a country must do is pay the interest on its debt, whether the people are hungry or not. Then a country is required to pay, if possible, some of the principle but it is not supposed to any of that wealth that it has created to increase the people's productivity, such as on health and on education.

The World Bank and the IMF will tell these countries how to invest any wealth that they might have. They invest only in more banana fields, not in something which might, in the long term, increase their productivity. What the IMF and the World Bank want is short-term cash tomorrow. A country produces bananas and sells them. There is no investment that might increase the standard of living of the people of that particular country.

Debtor countries are not free to set monetary or fiscal policy. They are not free to set export or import quantities. They are not free to set social and health programs, or wage and price policies. In other words, the structural adjustment has enslaved this nation, not only enslaved it, but removed democracy; democracy being the ability of the people of a country to make its own decisions. So they have eliminated democracy to a certain extent.

The debtor nation has by this process of structural adjustment given up its sovereignty and exchanged it for, what? Prosperity? No. It changed it for economic slavery.

Adolfo Perez Esquivel made a very worth-while statement. Esquivel is a broadcaster and a journalist in Costa Rica. He is also an 1980 Nobel Peace Prize winner. He puts it this way.

> It isn't possible to think about real democracy if the economy of a country is oriented only towards satisfying the demands of the international banks.
> Perez Esquivel worries that debt not only diminishes democracy, it also requires repression. Policies designed to pay the debt hurt the people; the people protest—and then governments turn to police and military forces to keep the lid on. Even civilian rulers use repression—when the belt has to be tightened more than the waistline permits.

• (1050)

That article is called "Low Intensity Democracy" and I commend it to anybody who is interested in this.

The article goes on to talk about the drain from Latin America and it says:

> —creditor nations drained an estimated $500-billion out of Latin America in the form of debt service, profits, royalties and capital flight. That haemorrhage reduced living standards to the levels they were 12 years ago; in some countries, per capita income has gone back two or three decades past—
> But more common is the spread of hunger and disease that kills a thousand children a day in Brazil alone. Will millions of abandoned street kids believe in a democracy that does not believe in them?

That is part of an article about Latin America by Bob Carty.

The choice seems to be democracy or economic enslavement. The NGOs across Canada, in the United States and some of the other NGOs of the world have a position paper which they call "Working Group on the World Bank". This group has actually attempted to work with the World Bank. It has been in place for 10 years but has not been particularly successful. Hopefully in the last couple of years it is making a little bit of headway because I think the World Bank and the IMF are recognizing their failure.

It commends the World Bank for doing certain things and I would recommend again that anyone who is interested in this particular area should take a look at the position paper of the NGO working group on the World Bank because it makes a number of recommendations. It comments on the structural adjustment. It comments on conditionality. It comments on the World Bank and IMF effect on the environment. It abhors the lack of participation by Third World countries and the people of Third Work countries. It also abhors the lack of information given by people who are most affected by the decisions made by the World Bank and the IMF. I could spend a long time on the recommendations of the NGOs.

Our external affairs committee unanimously, everyone from all parties in this House, gave our government an opportunity to take a leading role. As I said earlier, the committee did establish Canadian principles upon which it believed that our government could develop a world strategy which would deal with debt, not only with Canada's relation to the rest of the world or to Third World countries, but that it should take a leadership role within the the IMF and the World Bank in which we have a certain amount of commitment and into which we have put a certain amount of money. We should take this opportunity to develop some kind of world leadership and use it. I want to just briefly cover a little bit of the guiding principles which the committee said Canada should look at when it started dealing with Third World debt. The committee suggested that the Third World debt must allow sustainable human development in the debtor countries. It suggested that the creditor countries reduce the debt service on old debt and not impose it on any new debt. It suggested that poverty and debt are the enemies of development and, if you want development, you must eliminate both poverty and debt. Adjustment can only be successful and should be supported as part of the holistic development approach in co-operation with the debtor country. In other words, it is suggesting that maybe we should pay some attention to the people who are the recipients and that they be part of the decision-making process.

I know, when you walk into a bank, you are told that you can have money under certain conditions, and if you do not like these conditions, no money. That is almost exactly the way these institutions are dealing with the Third World countries. It suggests also that social impacts of adjustment programs must be assessed. A country should not be so constrained that it cannot maintain its basic social programs. Support for debt relief and structural adjustment should be determined, case by case, but according to consistent criteria which reflect Canadian values. This means the values of the Canadian public, I hasten to say, not the values of Canadian banks and financial institutions. Those values are: the commitment of debtor countries to reform to benefit the poor and the vulnerable groups, respect international norms of human rights, encourage democratic traditions, and eliminate the linkage of economic recovery and the debt so that there can be some kind of sustainable development allowed. That is the approach that the all-party committee recommended to the Government of Canada. Again, I have to say that the government came up lacking. Our friends in the opposition supported this as well.

Instead, what is the government doing? The government is asking us to pass this Bretton Woods bill and accept the old, unsuccessful methods of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. The government is asking us to allow the kinds of things that have been done, for at least the last 20 years, to continue to be done. The original Bretton Woods institutions were established in 1944, as part of the reconstruction of Europe after the war and did, at that time, a considerable amount of good. But they do not fit the present structure and they should not be the bodies responsible for the "elimination", and that is the only word I can use, of Third World debt.

The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have failed in their mandate. They have failed to do what their mandate insists they should do. These institutions have shown they were a failure as long ago as 20 years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 35, the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, having doubled the national debt between 1984 and 1989, from $160 billion to $320 billion, the government now uses the excuse of the bottom line to lay off 1,100 CBC employees, just like that. Yesterday, there was a job; today, there is not, compliments of Prime Minister Grinch just before Christmas. It is cold comfort to hear on the air the President of the CBC say that he is sorry.

When will the government learn that people and their lives are not pawns, that it cannot cut left, right and centre CBC, VIA Rail, Air Canada, putting people on the street and using the excuse of the balance sheet. What hypocrisy. To lay off 1,100 CBC employees means a terrible shock to each of them, and beyond them, a shock to the creative and technical community which supports them.

The government's march towards the virtual dismantling of the nation through step-by-step weakening of Canadian unity continues inexorably. What a shame.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes I will go back to my riding in Abitibi, and I do so with pride, now that a new tax benefits plan for northern and isolated areas has been announced. By extending tax benefits to a transitional zone, Canada's Minister of Finance has shown he understands the needs of workers in northern Quebec, including the communities of Matagami, Lebel-sur-Quévillon, Joutel, Desmaraisville, Waswanipi, Miquelon and Mines Selbaie.

Today, I want to thank the council of northern municipalities, all economic partners, members municipal organizations, workers, unions and the people of these communities who supported me since the very beginning of this tax revolt.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Government of Canada, on behalf of the people of Northern Abitibi.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise today once again to provide the House with a demonstration of the general public's outrage at this government's goods and services tax.

I wish to inform the House that I will be forwarding today to the Ministers of Finance and National Revenue a list of several hundred names from my riding of Prince Edward—Hastings of persons who are particularly annoyed over the government's recent advertising campaign, that cartoon fiasco, which among other faults took direct aim at the restaurant industry by encouraging people to avoid paying the GST by eating at home.

Not only does it seem that the government wants to put Canada's restaurant owners out of business by slapping a disgraceful tax on them, it now also seems to be waging an advertising campaign against this industry. It is just one more indication of the government's uncaring attitude toward small business in Canada.

MARGUERITE D'YOUVILLE

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, Marguerite D'Youville will be cannonized by His Holiness Pope John Paul II on December 9. A large number of residents from the St. Albert riding will join hundreds of Canadians in Rome for this historic event.

Marguerite D'Youville is the first Canadian born saint. She was born in Varennes, Quebec in 1701 and founded the Sisters of Charity, the Grey Nuns. This order has contributed to the early development of our country by educating the young and by caring for the sick and the less fortunate.

Under the leadership of Father Lacombe and Bishop Vital Grandin, the Grey Nuns were responsible for the first school and orphanage, and the first seniors' home in St. Albert. These were followed by hospitals in the province of Alberta.

Today, I join with Canadians from coast to coast to pay tribute to the Grey Nuns and their founder, Marguerite D'Youville.

EAST TIMOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today marks the 15th anniversary of the illegal Indonesian invasion of East Timor. Nearly one third of the population of East Timor have been killed or starved since this brutal invasion.

The UN General Assembly and the UN Security Council adopted resolutions demanding Indonesia's immediate withdrawal from East Timor. Indonesia continues to defy the United Nations.

Canada abstained from the UN General Assembly resolution and has voted against resolutions endorsing East Timor's right to self-determination and humanitarian assistance. Since 1980, Canada has voted against the withdrawal of Indonesian forces from East Timor. Canada, of course, has more than $1 billion invested in Indonesia, being the third-largest foreign investor.

Canada's failure to support East Timor contradicts the position Canada has taken against the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq.

SUPPLY MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, farmers from my province of Prince Edward Island are following the GATT talks with baited breath in concern over the future of our supply management system.

There are over 600 dairy, egg and poultry farmers in Prince Edward Island whose livelihoods may be significantly altered by the results of the GATT negotiations taking place in Brussels. Both the National Farmers' Union and the P.E.I. Federation of Agriculture have expressed concern about the possibility of our supply management system being significantly altered by these negotiations.

Canada's system of orderly marketing has created the most efficient producers in the world. Our system is not geared to create surplus and has not contributed to the current trade distortions in agriculture.

I call on the government to consider the interests of the dairy, poultry and egg farmers in its negotiations in Brussels and I ask it to maintain its position to strengthen Article XI.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the fate of our garment workers is now in the hands of GATT. The results of the GATT talks have left the future of the Multi-Fibre Arrangement in limbo. With the recession, high interest rates, loss of consumer confidence, free trade, Mexico, the GST, GATT and the Multi-Fibre Arrangement, Canada's garment industry has more than enough on its plate.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has about 2,500 clothing manufacturers. In Quebec, this means 63,000 direct jobs and 100,000 indirect jobs. The industry generates sales totalling $8.5 billion in this country. The rules of international trade in the garment industry are changing too fast and on too many fronts at once.

Mr. Speaker, if the Multi-Fibre Arrangement is ever abolished, we must have a fairly long period of transition to allow the industry to adapt at the same rate as the United States, our principal trading partner.

BÉLANGER-CAMPEAU COMMISSION

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, appearing before the parliamentary commission on the constitutional future of Quebec which held a hearing in Hull on Wednesday, December 5, several witnesses stressed the lack of communication or co-operation, if you prefer, between the Government of Quebec and the federal government in a number of important areas.

Here in the Outaouais, one of the most important dossiers is the completion of highway 50 from the Outaouais to Montreal. Perhaps I may remind the people in our area that the agreements signed with the federal government go back to 1972, in which year the section from Hull to Masson was completed.

When the Parti Quebecois came to power in 1976, no funds were allocated by the Government of Quebec to complete the highway. In 1985, once again the Government of Quebec refused to invest any more money in completing the highway in the Outaouais. We are now in 1990, and the differences are political rather than constitutional. The reason why highway 50 in the Outaouais area is not being completed is because of political differences between both levels of government. We urge the federal government and the Quebec government to agree on an item that is extremely important to economic development in the Outaouais.

GOODS ANS SERVICES TAX

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I always knew there were some very smart Liberals. In an article I read recently, Raymond Garneau, ex-Finance critic of the federal Liberal Party, said that the goods and services tax proposed by the federal government was probably the fairest and least harmful tax to be found in this day and age of global markets.

Mr. Garneau explained that the existing federal tax on manufactured products was a disaster for Canadian industry because it was exported along with the products themselves, which made Canadian companies less competitive.

Mr. Garneau said that this tax was fair to everyone and would certainly prevent tax evasion to a considerable degree. He said it was the only solution the government had to raise more money, especially among big consumers.

As for the attitude taken by the Liberal senators, Mr. Garneau said it was unconscionable and an incredible example of political partisanship. Nobody in his right mind believes that people welcome new taxes.

Mr. Speaker, here is another federal Liberal who finally saw the light. Liberal senators, stop fooling around and pass the GST—hurry up!

RAILWAY SAFETY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, there is growing concern among railway workers and the general public about recent changes in rail safety policy, changes which are increasing the risk to the public and worker safety.

CP Rail is allowing unsafe or bad order freight cars to leave Winnipeg for further destinations, instead of being repaired in Winnipeg where and when the defective components are discovered.

VIA Rail has done away with visual inspections of its passenger trains in Winnipeg, meaning that there are no inspections between Toronto and Vancouver, in spite of the fact that since May 11 rail workers have detected 15 defects on VIA trains.

CN Rail is violating Uniform Code of Operating Rules No. 104 by instructing its conductors to leave rail switches in the open position, instead of returning them to the appropriate configuration following the train movement.

The 1989 Summary of Railway Accidents and Incidents prepared by the Transportation Safety Board shows an 11.9 per cent increase in derailments on the main line tracks of CN and CP. This report indicates that approximately 40 per cent of the train derailments that have occurred on the main track over the past five years have resulted from defects on the track itself. Do you remember all the section gangs, Mr. Speaker, that were eliminated? The report also made the observation that "derailments due to equipment failure increased significantly in 1989".

There's more to come, thanks to the negligence of this government.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the employees of CBC have once again been dealt a harsh blow. The recent announcement of spending cuts of $100 million dollars means close to 1,200 Canadians are out of a job.

It is saddening that a national institution like the CBC has to struggle to survive. Perhaps the government does not realize that it is cutting out the very heart of Canada.

Canadians last year were hit by VIA Rail cutbacks and now the government is cutting off CBC. With no transportation and no communication, how does the government expect to keep the country together?

Next Thursday, at noon on Parliament Hill, my colleagues and I will be joining other Canadians in a rally in support of our national institutions. I call on Canadians all across Canada to rally in support of the CBC.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

THE LATE JEAN DUCEPPE

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the memory of Jean Duceppe who died last night in Montreal.

Mr. Duceppe was a great Quebecer. Of humble origins, he played all the great roles on the stage. On radio, he was well known for his energy, humour, warmth and passionate feeling. On television, he played in some of our most popular "téléromans". On the stage, he acted in some of our best "beaux dimanches" offerings, and he even founded a theatre group which bears his name and which, I imagine, will continue to exist as living testimony to his talent.

As a union organizer, a nationalist and a performing artist, Jean Duceppe made a tremendous contribution to the world of the performing arts in Quebec. He leaves us a rich and challenging cultural heritage. With Jean Duceppe, our cultural roots have blossomed.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, yesterday across Canada we remembered last year's horror in Montreal. We remembered with grief and outrage the unnecessary death of 14 women. We remembered the hate and violence that caused those tragic deaths.

We must also remember that the hate and sickness that led to those murders occur to varying degrees every day in the country. It is simply not enough to remember that one horrible day. We must act to ensure that such a tragedy never occurs again. We must work to eliminate the ongoing abuse of women that occurs daily in our society.

This is not just a women's issue. As men, we have a particular responsibility. It is our daughters, our sisters, our wives, our mothers, and our friends who are at risk. For their sakes, and for those who are yet unborn, we must work together to guarantee them safe and secure futures.

The government must proceed as a minimum with tighter gun control legislation.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to join the Minister responsible for the Status of Women in marking the 20th anniversary of the release of the Royal Commission's Report on the Status of Women.

I would like to commend the efforts of the many groups and individuals who, over the past 20 years, have helped bring Canada to the level of equality we know today.

Women's groups across Canada were instrumental in the establishment of the royal commission and in providing input to it. They continue to be important agents for change in our country.

Following on the recommendations of the commission, women's directorates in all provinces and territories have been working hard over the years to improve the situation for women in their jurisdictions. Status of Women Canada has helped bring about change since 1976 by advising the minister and other federal departments and agencies on a wide range of issues affecting women. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has also played a critical role in identifying and publicizing issues of concern to women since its establishment in 1973.

Let us recognize the collaborative efforts of these organizations.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with regret to call attention to the continued problem of family violence that unfortunately characterizes our society.

On the same day that Canada and the House of Commons was commemorating 14 victims of violence in Montreal, we learned that a judge in Quebec City gave a man a suspended sentence for killing his wife. The judge commented on the wife's aggressiveness and vindictive personality as a cause. I regret, and I am certain this House regrets that once again a woman victim has been blamed for an act of violence that resulted in her death.

Those of us who have worked in social services and family court realize that domestic violence is rarely started by women. Yet, they are almost always the casualties of physical violence.

Yesterday, we showed our collective grief in commemorating 14 victims. Today, we must start dealing with violence, whenever we find it and wherever we find it, as a social problem to be attacked and eradicated.

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Supreme Court ruled that the violation against the charter is justified in a free and democratic society. We either respect the charter or we do not.

Recently, on the basis of the charter, the justice system has protected the rights of women to have access to abortion, the rights of religious groups to wear turbans and carry kirpans, and the rights of refugees to have lengthy hearings. But when it comes to senior citizens who have contributed the most to the building of this country, all of a sudden the justice system has double standards.

The justices of the Supreme Court have made a political decision and should be censured. I hope this House, which is the highest court of the land, will bring forward a motion showing the will of its members that this decision is unacceptable.

THE LATE JEAN DUCEPPE

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, a very sad news for Quebec this morning, the loss of Jean Duceppe, an outstanding artist who made his mark in Quebec history, a man who never left anyone indifferent. I felt a pang of anguish when I heard the sad news this morning. To me, Jean Duceppe was an artisan of Quebec proudness, for he made an exceptional contribution and used his remarquable talent to promote our culture. His heart-felt dedication, his love for Quebec will be our full inheritance. Wherever he is now I am sure he knows he can rely on his son Gilles, our colleague the hon. member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie, to uphold the legitimate aspirations of Quebec here in this House.

To his wife, to Gilles, to his children and grandchildren, to all the artists who will continue his work in Quebec, may I say on behalf of all Quebecers: Thank you, Jean, thank you for everything!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today is another sad day for working people in the country because Statistics Canada has reported that in the past month the rate of unemployment has climbed to 9.1 per cent. Sixty-two thousand more Canadian workers lost their jobs in the past four weeks alone.

• (1120 )

These figures may be cold, hard, anonymous numbers on a page for this government, but they represent thousands of real people, Canadians who have lost their jobs, who will not be able to meet their mortgage or rent payments, who will be having increasing difficulty in feeding and clothing their children and families.

When will the Prime Minister and his government recognize the misery that their policies are bringing to thousands and thousands more Canadian families? When will this government drop its policies that create unemployment and move to new policies that will create jobs; policies of full employment for all of this country?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, no one takes pleasure in reading unemployment statistics. No one appreciates losing their job. Anyone who has, knows the difficult periods that you must go through. We understand that.

This was not unexpected. The Minister of Finance said there would be a slowdown in the economy this year. Most of the jobs that have been lost are in the manufacturing and construction sectors.

I can say to the hon. member that interest rates have dropped almost two percentage points since the end of May. Mortgage interest payments now are at the rate they were approximately two years ago. As inflation is wrung out of the economy, those rates can continue to fall.

As far as the manufacturing industry is concerned, we have, after taking advice that has been given to numerous governments over 50 years, changed the tax system which was penalizing Canadian manufacturers.

If the hon. member wants to do something about that, he can stop his friends in the Senate from speaking 40 hours at a time.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this government raised the current manufacturers' sales tax four times since it got into office.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Its policies which it is defending have created the current economic mess. All across this country we see the price Canadians are paying for the economic mismanagement of this government.

Already five out of 10 provinces have unemployment rates at double digit levels, above 10 per cent. Is this government pushing for a perfect 10 out of 10, to have every province with double digit unemployment rates above 10 per cent? That is not even counting the 1,000 workers in the CBC who have lost their jobs in places like Windsor, Matane and Sept-Îles.

Why will the government not wake up and see the damage it's policies are doing to this country? Why will it not bring in today new policies of job creation and not job destruction?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): The hon. leader of the party opposite is talking about provinces. There was some good news in the statistics as well.

For example, the unemployment rate fell in four provinces: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Employment rose in four provinces. The number of unemployed fell in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Saskatchewan. There are areas of light in this country.

I might tell the hon. member that if we start comparing the unemployment figures today with what went on in the period of time when he sat in the cabinet of another government, we are not going to break those records. I can assure him of that.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): As I just said, Mr. Speaker, in five provinces—Quebec included—the unemployment rate is already over 10 per cent and, last month, more that 39,000 workers were laid off in the Province of Quebec. So I ask the Prime Minister where are the policies he had promised which were supposed to create jobs? Why is he so intent on making life ever more difficult for workers throughout this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend refers to Quebec as an example. Let me point out that the current unemployment rate in Quebec is 11.4 per cent as against more than 13 per cent when the Liberals left office in September 1984. Almost 400,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec.

As the minister just said, despite the hardships we are experiencing with respect to employment, we learned this morning that four provinces did make substantial gains in that sector. That has to be an encouraging sign, given the difficult national and international context.

As the Minister of Finance stated on a number of occasions, there is still hope and every indication is that this decline will push interest rates down. This will eventually pave the way for an economic recovery which in turn will reduce unemployment, which is what we and all political factions in this House are striving for.

[English]

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The result of the induced economic slowdown in the Prime Minister's own words has been the rise in unemployment that is recorded in today's statistics.

When is the government going to come forward with policies to help those Canadians who are hurting and suffering as a result of this economic slowdown? Canadians want to know whether the Prime Minister knows that Canadians are hurting, and if he does know, what is he going to do to help them?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): I find it passing strange, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member whose party held up an unemployment insurance bill that is providing training and retraining money to the tune of $800 million would ask a question like that. Of course we are bringing policies forward to help people for training and retraining who are unemployed. But it was held up in the Senate for almost a year.

He stands up and asks what policies we are bringing forward. That is one. Another is the GST. If the hon. member will shake up his friends across the hall in the red Chamber and tell them to get on with taking a final vote on the GST, businesses which are planning for it will proceed with that and we can restructure our tax programs to help companies and businesses in this country, not hinder them, and create economic activity and employment. That is how he could help us.

We have introduced the policies. The Grits in the Senate are holding it up.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, if there was any mystery about why this government is at 14 per cent in the polls it has got to be answered when the question "What will the government do to help Canadians?" is answered by "We'll bring in the GST". Who is going to believe that?

The monetary policy that this government has pursued so far has resulted in two things, the high unemployment rate that we see today and the government's budgetary deficit going further out of control so that it needs to borrow another $2.5 billion.

I ask the Prime Minister how the government can justify a monetary policy that one and the same time increases unemployment and increases the deficit?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we were left with a $200 billion debt and any additions to the debt today are compounded interest from the debt that was left when we took office in 1984. That is fact number one.

Second, the hon. member knows full well that the inflationary pressures in this country were at alarming proportions. They talk about the senior citizens and the low-income people. They are the ones who are hurt most by high inflation. When the Grits ignored high inflation, it went up to 13 per cent and 14 per cent, and who hurt the most? The unemployed, the poor in our economy, those on fixed incomes, and senior citizens.

This government was determined not to let that happen. Inflationary pressures are dropping. Interest rates are dropping. We want to get them down on a permanent basis. That is what this is all about for the economy of this country and its future.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. the Prime Minister. We are aware this morning that the unemployment rate has jumped again. The recession now has taken root nation-wide in pretty well all regions of this country, with tremendous increases in unemployment. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, since we have in this country a made in Canada recession that was deliberately and methodically created by the Government of Canada to fight inflation by increasing interest rates and increasing the value of the Canadian dollar, what is the plan to fight the recession? What is the plan to put people back to work? We, in this party, have suggested a five-point program. What has he, as Prime Minister of Canada, going to do?

• (1130)

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party proposed a five-point program in a press release. There was no back-up material and no costing. Every single legitimate economist who has taken a look at it laughed, and said it would put this country into a recession like they have never seen before, causing very high interest rates and high inflation. Every economist has said that that is what would happen if the NDP brought in its policies. We do not plan to do that.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is about time the Prime Minister fired this minister. We call for a reduction, not an increase in interest rates.

As the leader of this country, I want to know from the Prime Minister of Canada whether in the last five or six months he has been to the unemployment lines that are getting longer and longer? Has he been to see the unemployed? Has he been to food banks in this country? Has he seen some of the almost million kids who are in poverty in Canada? What is going to say to all those people? Will he go down to those lines and talk to those poor people instead of spending all of his time sipping champagne, eating caviar, with his wealthy friends on Bay Street in Toronto?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last time that I sipped champagne and had caviar was at a Socialist International convention, and I was an observer.

I share the sincere concern of my hon. friend about any increase in unemployment rates. I think he would acknowledge that when this government was sworn in, unemployment was at 11.6 per cent. It is now down to 9.1 per cent. In almost all of the provinces of Canada, including his own, unemployment has decreased very substantially over the period of time and employment has increased very dramatically.

For example, in the case of youth unemployment, which is a particular concern, it is down over 4 percentage points over the period of economic growth. It could not be otherwise because in the last six years, 1.5 million new jobs have been created in Canada, 83 per cent of them have been full time and 64 per cent of them have gone to women. During this period of time, Canada has led all of the OECD countries in terms of job creation. It is a very impressive job creation record.

We are going through a period, along with others, of economic difficulties. We recognize that. We are seeking to bring about lower interest rates to re-energize the economy to make sure that we go through another sustained period of impressive economic growth. We cannot do it artificially. We cannot do it by repealing the laws of economics and instructing anybody, tomorrow morning, to lower interest rates by 3.5 per cent. We must reduce the deficit, obtain the confidence of the international investment community, attract those investment funds and create the employment. That is the way the economy moves and that is what we are trying to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister is aware, the situation is worse now than it was last year. Canada is now in a full-scale recession. In Quebec, the unemployment rate has now reached 11.4 per cent.

What is the Prime Minister going to do now to create—and this is very important, Mr. Speaker—to create jobs for the unemployed in Baie Comeau and for welfare recipients in Montreal? What is he going to do now for people in Canada who are living in poverty? This is a question many thousands of Canadian men and women across this country are forced to ask. What is he going to do now? Figures are not enough. What kind of concrete action is he going to take for the benefit of those Canadians who are now living in poverty?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is perfectly right. Figures as such don't mean a thing when we are talking about an individual or a family. That is why the economic progress we have experienced for six years is particularly encouraging. The nature of this progression is such that today, 956,000 Canadians are no longer living in poverty; 333,000 women and 297,000 children and 83,000 senior citizens are no longer living in poverty.

So I think that, although our programs still leave much to be desired, we have made progress towards a fairer and more equitable deal for Canadians. Job creation and the resulting prosperity have been relatively equally distributed throughout our society. These figures are still quite substantial. Nearly one million Canadians more managed to get out of the poverty cycle during the past six years, including children, the elderly and families.

Last Saturday, some new figures came out, which indicate:

[English]

"Average family income in Canada now exceeds $50,000 for the first time in our history." This is the kind of sustained economic growth that we have been working on, and I think my hon. friend would agree with me that, while we have difficulties, there are areas of substantial encouragement.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Prime Minister should brag about these figures, because they show that in the past year, nearly 24 per cent of our jobs were lost—232,000 Canadians less are working this year compared with last year, in other words, 1,217,000 Canadians and their families will not be able to afford Christmas because they are out of work. I therefore want to ask the Prime Minister and his government exactly what kind of policy they have that will give hope to these millions of Canadians and their families who can't even think about buying Christmas presents for their children.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we want to ensure that programs are aligned with dropping interest rates. We now see the beneficial effects of these reductions, which although they are relatively modest, are being sustained and are starting to have a beneficial impact on the economy. Once this impact has been absorbed by the economy, we will see a drop in the deficit, and we will experience sustained economic recovery. What we see this morning is what we are seeing in the United States and in many countries throughout the world.

I agree with my hon. friend that figures as such don't mean a lot, and with the hon. member I also deplore the existence of these very human problems in a society like ours. However, as I just mentioned to my NDP friend from Saskatchewan, today, nearly one million Canadians less are living in poverty, thanks to the economic growth we experienced in Canada during the past six years. And

I believe that by maintaining our policies, we will be able to do more for the neediest in our society.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is not listening.

In the last month alone, 48,000 fewer people are working in the manufacturing industry and 47,000 jobs have been lost in the construction industry. His own government is predicting a further job loss in the construction industry of over 70,000 people beginning next year.

I want to ask this question of the Prime Minister, three weeks before Christmas, on behalf of those thousands of Canadians because Canada has been bleeding jobs in the last month. What hope is he going to give to those Canadians and their families that his government will introduce specific programs before Christmas to give them a chance to get back as productive members of the workforce? What hope is he giving to those 1.2 million Canadians who are forced to go on unemployment insurance to survive this Christmas?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there would be no members of the House who would expect us to devise economic policy based on the statistics of a given month or even of two months. There are international trends and currents with which any government must deal. We are in the process of seeking to deal as best and effectively as we can with the problems that have been visited upon the nation by an extremely high debt and a very high cost of servicing that debt.

For example, and it is very important, the United States spends roughly 15 cents on the dollar to service its debt. The province of British Columbia would spend four cents. A have-not province, like New Brunswick, spends 16 cents. The Government of Canada inherited a situation where 35 cents on every dollar—one of the worst records in the industrialized world—has to go to pay the interest on the debt.

This, of course, very severely limits the kinds of government programs that can be initiated. Inasmuch as my hon. friends in the Liberal Party are being particularly aggressive in regard to this this morning—

Ms. Copps: We should be.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says she should be and I agree with her. I point out to her that eight years ago this morning, when the leader of the Opposition, who is sitting next to her, was the President of the Treasury Board, inflation, which is today 4.8 per cent, was then 9.9 per cent and unemployment which is this morning 9.1 per cent was then 2.6 per cent and the hon. member did not have a word to say.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Maheu: This is no joke, sir!

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Maheu: My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Statistics Canada has just revealed that in Montreal alone, the number of jobless increased by 58,000 during the past year and that this trend continues. Of that number, 51,000 were from the manufacturing sector. What is the government doing about this particular case and what is being done by the minister responsible for Montreal?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear a question about Montreal's economy being raised by the Official Opposition.

I remember that in 1984, when I ran for election, the Liberals who were in power at the time did everything to kill the economy in Montreal. The then Minister of Finance, Mr. Marc Lalonde, wanted to kill the petrochemical industry in Montreal. Without the personal intervention of the Prime Minister, we would have lost about 20,000 jobs in Montreal, both downstream and upstream.

Since it is common knowledge that the Liberal Party wanted to block Bill C-22 on the pharmaceutical industry, I fail to see how today, it would dare to criticize our policies. You killed Montreal and we are trying to save it!

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): It's wonderful to live in the past, Mr. Speaker!

My question is again directed to the Prime Mnister. There are at least 386,000 jobless in Quebec, including 184,000 in Montreal. When and how does the Prime Minister intend to put a stop to this crisis before there is a depression?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, we have signed a number of agreements with the Government of Quebec, including one that will involve investing $500 million in regional development. Under Bill C-21, as was said earlier by my hon. colleague, we will invest $800 million in training programs for Canadians, and Quebec will, of course, get its fair share.

We have also investesd $350 million in a project to keep young people from dropping out of high school. What Canada lacks, of course, is training programs. This government has, I think, come up with the best training programs in the history of this country, in the form of Bill C-21. And who blocked Bill C-21? The Liberals!

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for whoever is answering on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Fourteen months after receiving the task force study on northern tax benefits, the Minister of finance 45 minutes ago released his new plan.

Under the old system, there were 3,200 communities in this country that received northern tax benefits. Under the proposal of the task force that was going to be reduced to 400 communities.

No one in the Department of Finance can tell us how many communities are still going to receive the northern tax benefit. We do know from our own work on this that over 40,000 individuals in Newfoundland alone will lose their northern tax benefit.

Can the government come clean and state how many communities will lose their northern tax benefit, and how many Canadian citizens will lose that benefit?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did release the tax benefits for northerners today.

As you know, there was a tremendous amount of study done. A task force looked into this and came in with a recommendation which caused a great deal of discussion in the country.

The Minister of Finance spent a considerable amount of time working with municipalities, with members of Parliament from the various areas, consulting with many people across this country to try and come to a solution that was both fair and equitable.

I believe that the announcement that he released today was a very good one, a very fair one. As the minister has said, and I will quote, "We are accepting the task force recommendation for a single northern zone and adding to it an intermediate zone that bridges the gap between the northern zone and the less isolated areas of the country. This will put an end to the arbitrary and divisive community by community approach, while continuing to ensure that communities which are both northern and truly isolated continue to have the tax assistance that they need."

I think the hon. member will agree that it is a far better system. I can remember his House leader standing up and complaining about the old system.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the minister, by his own definition, would say that there is absolutely no remote, or no isolated community on the island of Newfoundland. That, by his own definition and by the map that we have is how the government looks at this country. None of those communities will receive the full tax benefit. None will receive half the tax benefit under the government's proposal.

The government took 14 months before it put out a press release 45 minutes ago in reaction to the task force report. A number of Conservative MPs counselled their mayors, the city councillors, the media, their citizens, not to complain.

As the government took 14 months to come up with its response, will it give the thousands upon thousands of Canadians who are going to be cut off a chance to appeal this process?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that the reason it took 14 months from the time the task force delivered its report to the government and was made public was for the very reasons that he stated, we had consultations with municipalities from one coast to the other, including Churchill, I might add. It is the hon. member's own riding, I believe. I am sure he is pleased with the results that were released today by the Minister of Finance. I can tell the hon. member that tremendous consultation has gone into the northern benefits tax package. I think it is a very fair one. I think it is very equitable, and I believe that it will benefit numerous Canadians who live in isolated areas of this country.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications or for whoever is answering for him in the House today.

With the closing of CBC TV in Goose Bay, Labrador has been cut adrift from the rest of Canada because there is no alternative TV as there is in many parts of northern Canada.

Why, in the remote, unique part of Canada that has a story to tell, that has a voice to raise in this important national debate, is the government allowing that TV station to close at this time in our nation's history?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should inform the hon. member that not one of the 1,600 CBC transmitters across the country will be shutting down, including the one in Labrador.

What is happening is that there is a reallocation of scarce resources going on within the CBC with emphasis on regional and national programming. I think it is entirely reasonable to consider that the province of Newfoundland and Labrador is a region in the context of the CBC, and that the regional coverage will continue along with news gathering taking place within Labrador and being seen on the screens of Labradorians.

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is a broadcaster. He knows that a transmitter is not a voice, a transmitter does not make up newscasts, it does not throw out TV films, and you cannot send a broadcaster from St. John's, Newfoundland to Goose Bay or the remote coast of Labrador to gather the news. It is unreasonable. It is unthinkable. It is incredible that the government should think of that.

Will the parliamentary secretary ask the CBC to reinstate stations like Goose Bay that are remote, that are unique, that are in northern Canada where there is no alternative. Will he give an assurance that in the further cuts to come, radio in the north, including Labrador, will be protected because this is just the tip of the iceberg?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the CBC plan for Labrador, there is no intention to stop having news coverage emanating from Labrador. That is, there will be news gatherers within Labrador.

With reference to the radio part of this question, the reduction of radio affected by this restructuring within the CBC amounts to 1 per cent of the total and will not adversely affect service in any part of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister deals also with the cuts in the CBC's budget. Yesterday, the President of ACFO, the Association canadienne-française de l'Ontario, remarked concerning these cuts, and I quote: "The CBC has just wiped out French Ontario from the map".

In view of the alarming rate of assimilation of francophones outside Quebec, why does the government allow these major cuts in the CBC's budget which represent an additional threat for francophones in this country?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the organization has conveyed to the government its concern about the CBC situation. I must answer the hon. member the same way the minister did yesterday the hon. member for Sudbury, namely that he should wait for the annual report which the CBC is expected to table within the next three months to find out about the funding of the French network.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, there is lots of money for GST advertising, but it seems no money to protect linguistic minorities.

[Translation]

Since the Prime Minister refuses to protect linguistic minorities, I will direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that it is the Secretary of State's responsability to protect and promote linguistic minorities in Canada, is he prepared to protect these minorities which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Communications refuse to do? Is he prepared to do that?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): As far as linguistic minorities from coast to coast are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the services to linguistic minorities will be maintained in all towns and communities throughout Canada.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this government's argument for the hatchet job on Air Canada, Petro-Canada, VIA Rail, and now the CBC, has repeatedly been the need to rein in the federal debt.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister where his priorities are when, this year alone, the government will commit $600 million on an air defence anti-tank system and in excess of $1 billion, on a gold-plated, radiocommunications system for our land based forces in Europe? It is my understanding that these systems are no longer even necessary. At the same time, the government pleads poverty as it takes the broad-axe to the heartbeat of Canada.

Is he calling into question the fact that members of our armed forces should have modern, up-to-date equipment, in order to do the kind of professional job which they are called upon to do? I can certainly assure my hon. colleague that both of the projects which he refers to, the ADATS system and the TCCS system, will provide the most up-to-date technology, to enable our land forces to continue their functions in Canada, when they are called to help serve in the Persian Gulf or in peacekeeping operations in any other part of the world.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. After years of negotiating, the Uruguay round of GATT is in danger of breaking down. What contingency plan does the Prime Minister have if these talks fail? What action is he prepared to take to save the livelihoods of Canadian farmers? Is he prepared to give back to Canadian farmers the management tools that he took away from them so that they can compete internationally?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a very silly question. I think it is generally recognized, even by most members of the opposition, not my hon. friend, that this government has done more for farmers across this country than any other government in history. The deputy—

An hon. member: How?

Mr. Mulroney: Well my hon. friend says, "how". One way is by increasing assistance to farmers by 650 per cent in five and a half years, that is how.

The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture, with many others, are working very carefully in Brussels to seek to avert a collapse of the talks.

This government placed agricultural subsidies on the table of the G-7 at the Tokyo summit in 1986. It was as a result of that beginning, sustained then by the Cairns Group, that the question of trade-distorting agricultural subsidies has managed to make it to this part of the GATT talks.

There is clearly a very serious conflict between the European Community and pretty well all the rest of the producers, including Canada, the United States, and members of the Cairns group. There does not appear to have been enough movement, at this point in time, by the Europeans to save this particular part of the round, although the Minister of Agriculture and Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade and their colleagues are pressing on in the hope that perhaps a formula can be found which will avert a disaster, preclude the possibility of an ongoing trade war on agricultural subsidies between the community and the United States and restore a degree of sanity which will benefit all Canadian farmers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I start Tabling of Documents, I must say that there has been a problem with the clocks in the Chamber. My clock here is in good shape, so I know exactly what is going on. We started at five minutes after and we ended up now, as you can see, the clock is back to 12 o'clock again. We ended up at 12 o'clock. Unfortunately, when there is a Question Period dealing with economic problems, sometimes it takes a little longer for members and ministers both to produce their questions and answer them. I hope that next week will be a lot better.

• (1200)

We will start with a point of order, the hon. chief Whip for the opposition.

LENGTH OF ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we were five minutes late in starting, I would hope that the Chair would want to give serious consideration to extending the length of Question Period by five minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): What I said is that it started at five minutes late and it ended at five minutes late.

COMMENTS DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to correct an impression that I left with the House. I said that eight years ago this morning, when the Liberals were in office, the inflation rate was 9.9 per cent and today it is 4.8 per cent. I indicated that the unemployment rate today was 9.1 per cent and that it was 2.6 per cent under the Liberals. In point of fact that was a grave error. It was 12.6 per cent.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: I know that all members, particularly the member for Hamilton East, would want me to correct that inadvertent error.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the government members may be laughing about these numbers today. Canadians are not laughing.

I am rising on a point of order because on more than one occasion the Prime Minister and his colleagues have claimed falsely that the refusal of the Senators to pass Bill C–21 has resulted in the lack of job funds being made available.

Some hon. members: Order.

Ms. Copps: This statement should be corrected on two counts. First, the number of people who have been cut off as a result of the implementation of Bill C–21 is driving up the welfare rolls across the country.

Some hon. members: Debate.

Some hon. members: Order.

Ms. Copps: The second point, according to the public affairs spokesperson for the ministry of employment and immigration, the job fund will—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. On a point of order the hon. chief Whip for the Opposition.

LENGTH OF ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the Chair the provision of Standing Order 30, particularly subsection (5). I presume the Chair is fully aware of it, but it refers to Question Period which is to commence on Fridays at 11.15 and, of course, it is to terminate at 12 o'clock.

It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the fact—perhaps because the clocks are not working properly today—that you allowed the right hon. Prime Minister some two minutes and 13 seconds to respond to a question from a colleague from the New Democratic Party, you would have given some consideration to the request that was being made by this party to extend the Question Period by a minimum of five minutes.

I would ask the Chair, in the spirit in which that rule is written and the way in which we operate in this particular Chamber, if the Chair would indicate as to why the Chair refuses to grant that request, in view of the facts that have been put before the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to comment to the hon. member. I said that I know we started at about 11.19 according to my clock. My clock right here is the one I look at. At 11.19 we started, and we finished at five minutes after 12. We did a minute over the 45 minutes. We had 45 minutes of Question Period.

An hon. member: No, we didn't.

An hon. member: Yes, we did.

Mr. Hawkes: Listen to him.

An hon. member: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In a spirit of Christmas, again I would like to repeat to the hon. members that I have knowledge of the time we commenced Question Period, and I know exactly the time that we finished Question Period. I made sure that hon. members had an extra minute over the 45 minutes. It was exactly 46 minutes.

If there is difficulty between the chair's clocks and my clock which is up here, then I am sorry about that. I must just say that the watches will have to be cleared up next week in order to facilitate this.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I am surprised that the Official Opposition would be complaining about the time that they have for Question Period when, indeed, the government members did not have one opportunity to raise a question.

I think that needs to be put in context.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will obviously have to accept your ruling, but I would hope, as a courtesy to members on this side, that you would undertake to check with the clerks at the Table to see whether or not in actual fact the clocks have been synchronised between you have, Mr. Speaker, and as to what they have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will be glad to do that. The hon. member for Hamilton East.

REMARKS DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in light of the 1.2 million Canadians who are without jobs today, I hope you will hear this point of order out—

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Malone: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: —because the government spokesperson today claimed on more than one occasion that the passage of Bill C-21 would result in job funds being made available.

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Crowfoot, on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I had the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Hamilton East has twice now risen.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would you put the point of order, please.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that funds that should have been available, according to government statements in the House, will not be available according to the spokesperson for employment and immigration until at least April of next year.

The government members are deliberately misleading the House on moneys available. That is a point of order, because a member cannot stand up in the House and deliberately mislead us on funds which are being held back for the 1.2 million people in this country who need jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Crowfoot, on a point of order.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the question that was raised by the Whip of the Official Opposition in part asked about the rules of the House and how we conduct ourselves here.

One of the rules of the House which we all should be cognizant of and obey is that it is inappropriate and wrong in this House to say that anyone deliberately misled anyone. That, too, is a rule that ought to be given some attention.

Mr. Speaker, you have already ruled on the question of time. There should be no argument, because you have that big clock at your feet.

Since the question of rules in Question Period has been raised, let me also submit that there are rules that say that there should be no preambles to questions in the House. There is also a rule that is found in Erskine May and Beauchesne's that would indicate that no question ought to be argumentative.

In being here, I think that in recent times I may have heard a question that might have been argumentative. Sometimes, it seems to me, that there are preambles to questions.

Since you have ruled on the one, Mr. Speaker, I might ask the Chair if you could reflect upon, since we have the electronic media, the nature of Question Period for the whole purpose of instituting the rules that we do have, such that Question Period gives us the kind of decorum in the House that the people of the country would expect us to have.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, on a different point of order, you permitted the Prime Minister to clarify his comparative unemployment statistics when he referred to the rate of unemployment eight years ago today.

I feel that it is appropriate, so that the record is clear, to say that the Prime Minister was comparing two recessionary periods in Canadian economic history at a point at which—

Some hon. members: Debate.

Mr. Manley: The Prime Minister did have the opportunity to make his point. I would like to explain that the recession in 1981–82 began at a different point in the year. Perhaps the Prime Minister would like to take advantage of the opportunity to compare statistics later on when the—

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to 59 petitions.

58TH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the 58th report of the Striking Committee. This report deals with membership of a legislative committee. Pursuant to Standing Order 113(1), upon presentation such reports are deemed adopted.

PETITIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, now that the chief government whip has now joined us, I am sure that he would want to support me in the presenting of this petition, pursuant to Standing Order 36, which calls upon the Government of Canada to withdraw the goods and services tax.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, the petitions that I have here, which I believe number seven in total, are primarily from the province of Ontario from Ottawa, Gloucester, and surrounding areas. The petitioners have impressed upon the Government of Canada that the proposed goods and services tax, which is to be implemented with regard to books, magazines and newspapers, ought to be withdrawn.

They also believe that the goods and services tax at this time, in view of the fact that we are in a Canadian-made recession, with which I am sure my colleague would agree, that it would not be appropriate for us to proceed with the implementation of the goods and services tax because it will have a negative impact upon all Canadian consumers, as well as small businesses.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several dozen Canadians in which the petitioners lament and call on the government to roll back the goods and services tax as it affects books, magazines, and newspapers.

They point out that, in a free and democratic society, the printed word is the corner-stone of democracy, culture, education, and literature in a productive society, and that the GST will have a negative impact on these sectors of our economy.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it gives me great pleasure to present to the House a petition signed by many of my constituents, as well as many other residents of the national capital region, who are adamantly opposed to the imposition of the goods and services tax as it relates to books, newspapers, and magazines.

The petitioners are calling on the House to withdraw this unfair tax on education.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions signed by many people from across Ontario who are very much opposed to putting any GST on newspapers, books, et cetera.

We have never had a tax on reading in this country since Confederation. Today, when there is so much emphasis being put on literacy in the country, it is not only unfair, but totally unreasonable, to be imposing a tax on reading, whether it be newspapers, periodicals, or whatever.

These constituents from several ridings across Ontario are requesting the government not to impose any GST on reading.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition from a number of Canadians from across Canada and such places as Chapleau, Ontario; Tofino, British Columbia; Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; Edmonton, Alberta; and communities all across the country.

These are people who have heard with some concern that the Secretary of State, in next year's budget, is planning even further rounds of cuts to aboriginal programs such as aboriginal friendship centres, aboriginal broadcasting, and aboriginal representative organizations.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to consider the advisability of reinstating both the Native Communications Program and the Northern Native Broadcast Access Program at full funding levels.

Further, they humbly pray that the said Department of the Secretary of State conduct consultations with groups funded under the said programs to devise plans for the future that will serve the needs of the department, as well as the aboriginal people and their media.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition signed by residents of various Ontario communities, including Toronto, Port Colborne, Fenwick, Welland and Niagara Falls. They oppose the GST and especially disagree with the government concerning the application of this unjust tax on the printed word. They ask Parliament to reject this unfair tax.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

INTERNATIONAL SALE OF GOODS CONTRACTS CONVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of report stage of Bill C–81, an act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, as reported (with an amendment) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Dingwall: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that we are proceeding with this particular bill and will deal with it in all stages. Thereafter, upon its completion, we will revert back to Bill C–93, for the continuation for the remainder of the day? Is that correct?

Mr. Danis: Mr. Speaker, yes it is.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to begin third reading debate on this bill.

This bill was introduced to implement the Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods which was adopted in Vienna in 1980 under the auspices of the United Nations so as to allow federal entities to benefit from its provisions.

The convention came into force on January 1, 1988. Twenty–eight states are party to it, including some of our principal trading partners, such as the United States, France, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany, and China.

[Translation]

The convention constitutes an optional regime that defines the right of the seller and buyer in international sales of goods between parties whose places of business are in different states, when the states are contracting States, or when the rules of private international law governing the transaction lead to the application of the law of a contracting state.

[English]

The convention applies to contracts of sale between parties having their place of business in different states where at least one is party to the convention. It does not apply to contracts for the sale of goods for personal use or such items as electricity, ships, and securities.

The convention applies automatically to contracts subject to it, but as the parties retain the right to make an express derogation, their will always prevails.

• (1220 )

The convention establishes rules for the formation of contracts, including rules governing the conclusion of contracts, the periods of time available to offers and the acceptance of offers, as well as formal requirements.

By providing a uniform set of legal rules, the convention addresses a need that has become more acute with the increasing volume of international transactions in goods. It provides greater certainty as to which law governs the contract, facilitates trade between parties in different states and promotes as equitable a relationship as possible between the parties.

[Translation]

As the law of contracts is largely a matter of provincial or territorial jurisdiction, eight provinces and one territory have already passed legislation to implement the convention. They are Ontario, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Newfoundland, Alberta, British Columbia and the Northwest Territories.

The convention includes a clause allowing federal states to accede even if all its territorial units have not passed implementing legislation. The federal implementing legislation will allow all federal entities, even those located in provinces that have not implemented the convention, to benefit from its provisions. Moreover, it will ensure that federal entities are governed by a uniform regime for the international sale of goods.

[English]

The convention provides for four reservations or declarations.

Article 92 allows a state to declare that it will not be bound by the convention provisions relating to the formation of the contract or by the material provisions relating to contracts for the sale of goods, for example the obligations of the seller and buyer and the passing of risk.

Article 94 allows two or more contracting states with similar legal rules to declare that the convention will not apply between them.

Article 95 allows a state to declare that the convention will not apply to transactions between parties within its territory and parties within the territory of a non–contracting state, even where the rules of private international law lead to the application of the law of the contracting state.

Finally, article 96 allows a state to declare that the provision allowing contracts to be made in any form other than in writing does not apply to transactions involving a party having its place of business within its territory. Following consultations with the provinces and several experts, the Government of Canada has decided not to make any reservations or declarations so that the convention can be given its fullest application.

The Federal Court and all higher courts are courts of competent jurisdiction for the enforcement of the International Sale of Goods Contracts Convention Act. The convention offers several benefits.

First, it standardizes the rules governing the international sale of goods by establishing an international system. However, it does not restrict the freedom of contract because it allows the parties to exempt any contract from the rules of the convention through an expressed derogation clause.

Second, as the convention applies automatically, it can facilitate trade by resolving the issue of which law governs the transaction. This provision is particularly advantageous in goods transactions with states whose commercial law is unfamiliar or even unfavourable to us.

Finally, the convention can reduce the effects of any inequality between trading partners because the weaker partner can ensure application of the convention more easily than the law of its state.

The business community has expressed support for Canada's accession to the convention precisely because of these benefits. In the opinion of experts in civil law and common law the convention is compatible with Canadian law.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in short, passage of the bill implementing the Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods will enable federal departments, departmental corporations and agent Crown corporations, at their option, to benefit from the provisions of the convention in transactions involving the international sale of goods. The convention will likely be applicable for a substantial number of contracts as it is in force for most of our main trading partners.

[English]

I would like to thank the members of the opposition for their co–operation in dealing with this legislation and simply to conclude by saying that sometimes the most important—

An hon. member: And members of the government.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Yes, and members of the government. I am sorry. Forgive me. I am taking for granted the high quality of his co–operation and assistance, and I am grateful to my colleagues for the work they have done. It is just that so seldom one has the opportunity to express one's appreciation to members of the opposition, I feel that, as Mr. Speaker has suggested, in the spirit of Christmas one should take the opportunity to express generosity when you can.

I also want to point out, as my hon. colleague who has just spoken knows very well, that sometimes the significant things we do in this House are not particularly exciting in terms of news coverage. There are not throngs of people in the galleries to watch. But for a country like Canada, which is a trading nation second only to Germany in its need to trade to survive, any kind of legislation that facilitates our ability to carry out that international trade in a fair manner and with some certainty and protection for our own traders is very significant.

I would like to thank the members of this House for their support of this legislation.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for her kind words. I know we on this side will not allow ourselves to believe that it is going to be a common occurrence, but they are much appreciated.

We feel that this is a good bill. The minister has stated quite accurately that this is a bill in the interest of Canada. Although it is something which we have been dealing with for some period of time, it is something which we have got to pass quite quickly. As I think we all know, there are 28 countries that have already signed this accord. As a prominent trading country we must not waste any more time in becoming members of this convention. It is not only in the interest of Canada that it be passed, but in the interest of all countries.

The problem of international trade has been with the western world for quite some time. Canada and other countries first played a role in addressing this problem in 1930 with the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law. They began at that point to try to get a harmonization of trade rules and their efforts brought forward some results. They were interrupted of course by World War II. They continued their efforts until the early 1960s when they came out with some results.

Unfortunately the differences in the legal systems of countries, particularly the differences between the capitalist countries of the western world and the socialist countries in the eastern bloc, did not allow these rules to work. There were too many differences to allow the system that was instituted to be brought into effect.

We went back and through the United Nations, the agency which we have come to depend on more and more in recent years, pushed to develop what we have in Bill C–81. As the minister stated, this is a good bill. It is in the interest of Canada. It is in harmony with Canadian laws. We can support this bill without any difficulty whatsoever.

I think the reason we are number 29 in ratifying this bill probably has little to do with our not moving quickly on it. That might have been the case but I really do not have any evidence to indicate that. It may be a result of the fact that Canada is a federal country and we had to have the ratification of the provinces. This bill not only deals with trade and commerce, a federal role under the Constitution Act, 1867, but because it also deals with sales it comes under section 92(13) of the property and civil rights provisions of the Constitution. As a result, we had to have the ratification of the provinces.

As the minister has stated, we now have eight provinces which have agreed to it and one territory. It is my understanding that the remaining provinces, Saskatchewan and Quebec, and the remaining territory, the Yukon, have all agreed to ratify it. I commend the minister and the department for bringing this all together. In a federal country it is not always easy to bring things together and to have a consensus.

I would like to reiterate as well that while this is a bill that may not receive a lot of attention, it is very important.

• (1230 )

We, as a country, have come to depend very heavily on their national trade. We are also a country that has come to depend very heavily on our trading partners. We have been a country that has helped a lot of countries that have not been as economically successful as we have been.

This is going to be very important to these countries, because it is going to be able to give them a common denominator.

There are ways of accepting countries negotiating a contract under the provisions of this act, either in whole or in part, through the agreement of the countries, but it does provide unless the parties agree otherwise a common denominator that has not only international law behind it, but an international reputation.

To say that this is going to provide all the answers on international trade would be simplistic and misleading. We still have to give interpretation to this convention in the respective courts of the various countries. That is going to provide some difficulties, but I do feel that this has come a long way in helping international trade.

Because it is helping international trade, it is going to help Canada and the Canadian economy. I am very pleased, on behalf of the Liberal Party, to support this bill.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset it appears to be the impact of an early Yuletide spirit.

I am humbled by the comments of the minister and pleased that she is able, through you Mr. Speaker, to suggest that we have been co-operative. I tried to count the times, but nonetheless if the government is interpreting that as our action, I appreciate the very thoughtful comments.

Mr. Boyer: You did not come to the committee meetings.

Mr. Barrett: No, I did not go to the committee meetings because I was, of course, tied up in other committee meetings of the external affairs and trade committee.

I want to talk about one section, and I will come to that in a minute, but I want to say a few words generally in the context of what has happened in the last few days in Brussels.

It is extremely regrettable that, as we debate this bill that enjoys the sympathy of all the members of this House, it comes in the atmosphere and a context in which this bill will be applied on those GATT hearings.

I regret very much that those hearings have collapsed. I am pleased that they have extended the dates on the hearings. Hopefully, some compromise will be reached.

It is important that in the context of this legislation the kind of decisions that GATT makes will, of course, allow this legislation to speed up what decisions are made privately and publicly in this country relative to business.

Although we are the 29th nation to sign, the reality is with the GATT collapse, the fact that it was that far behind has not hurt that much.

I want to address my attention particularly to the minister's comments, and correctly so, on article 94 about the legislation having no impact between two unitary states. In our case, we are not a unitary state, but certainly in terms of the federal basis we make the decisions on international trade at the federal level.

What I am concerned about is in the context of Canada's position at this moment, which is extremely unclear, with regard to the Canada-U.S.-Mexico talks and the application of this UN framework for legalization of contracts relative to those talks.

We have made the agreement with the United States through a free trade agreement. I do not wish to repeat all of my criticisms of that, especially since my criticisms are coming true. They were not self-fulfilling wishes. I regret very much that the warning sounded by many people in my party and in the Liberal Party—yes, even some Conservatives—who were concerned about the impact of the FTA.

Nonetheless, that is there and we leave that for another arena and another time.

In the context of signing unilateral agreements, we are witnessing now a debate going on without a clear-cut explanation for the government's position as to how this would apply to protecting what it says we have gained in the free trade agreement and a unilateral agreement between Mexico and the United States.

Should we be sanctioning this legislation on the basis that we may be tied into some of the contracts because of accepting a universal approach? Are we going to be bound by the United States unilateral action with Mexico that would impede us in developing unilateral talks with Mexico should we so desire that, and stay out?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): What part of the contract was that?

Mr. Barrett: What part of the contract is that? Section 94, where you clearly said that this does not apply to agreements between two states.

I have used this particular bill for a forum on my arguments against the free trade agreement in the past. I know that the minister is confused, but I have a tenuous link to that article to allow me to speak to the bill on this particular action. Should the minister desire the help of a lawyer to interpret that particular argument, I will assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have not consulted one international lawyer on this particular point. I have used my political acumen as an anchor to make the point that I am making now. If the minister would not be prepared to debate me in court over this matter, I will continue with my political argument.

I think it is a serious mistake for us to take the position that we have to go to the table with Mexico to protect what we have gained under the free trade agreement and, at the same time, put ourselves at risk—

Mr. Boyer: Relevance.

Mr. Barrett: Relevance, it is relevant under section 94 and extending your own interpretation, through you Mr. Speaker, about unilateral agreements between states. I am sticking very closely to this bedrock and fundamental article in this legislation to deal with my arguments against the Canada–U.S.–Mexico talks.

There is not even a quorum in the House, Mr. Speaker, to hear what I have to say. I call for a quorum count, Mr. Speaker.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being 21 members present, not including the occupant of the chair, the debate shall accordingly continue. The hon. government Whip, on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out to the House that the NDP in calling a quorum was as blind as they usually are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In the spirit of Christmas, on debate please.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the members for allowing the Chair to have such a slow count. Were this a world boxing championship, I am sure that a dispute would take place with the WBC. Nonetheless, the count was accurate, although slow.

Now that I have the attention of all those members who have come back to create a quorum, the point I am trying to make is while we signed this kind of legislation, the research, the technical information and the detailed knowledge that we need before we enter into any further international agreements has not been evidenced here in this debate on this legislation or anywhere else during this session.

It is all very well to praise legislation that allows the contracts to take place, but without the specific information of what the government is doing in contracts makes the argument hollow. That is the point that I am trying to make.

If the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, refuses to understand that it is necessary to do research and to back up knowledge before one rushes into international agreements, that is on their head. I feel compelled, as a matter of fact, impelled to make the point it is necessary for the work—

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Impaled might be more like it.

Mr. Barrett: Impaled, as it be. Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that business–like governments are the first ones to make dumb business decisions. Where is the research? Where is the detail? Where is the back–up?

I know that on a Friday afternoon, I have not stirred the very entrails of this nation over this debate, nor has it appeared to the government that this is a seminal discussion. Nonetheless, I convinced you more than anyone else that unless this government is serious in doing some hard research and some background information gathering before it signs agreements, this is a hollow piece of legislation that is done purely for bureaucratic purposes and does not serve the needs of all Canadians unless that work is done. Why is that work not done? I will tell you why, because the government's agenda rushes us into some kind of trade agreement that does not take into account the needs of all the provinces and all the jurisdictions, municipal and otherwise in this country. So while the bill glides through the House, and while we have this overwhelming majority of members witnessing this intelligent debate, and why we have a slow count to get a quorum, the fact is that the government has not done its job.

• (1240)

Does it want to do the job? If it wants to postpone the bill for a while and reveal all the research papers it has that it has not revealed, if it wants to table the documents, if it wants to provide us with the material that specifically proves that this particular legislation will go a long way to facilitate the kind of trade talks that it thinks will be beneficial to Canadians, then let it table the documents. But, it has not. We have lost 160,000 jobs already on one of those trade agreements, and Lord knows how many more we will lose on the second one.

It is all very well to talk about facilitating the contractual arrangements and the necessity of being number 29th and catching up with the world, but what does it matter a fig if we are not protecting Canadian interests and Canadian jobs?

This is the kind of debate we should have. I am glad to hear the minister interject, and I know her comments about co-operation from the opposition are slowly dissipating. I hope that by the time I am through, they will be completely gone. We are not a rubber stamp like the Liberal Party which represents the same interests as the Conservatives. There is no difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): We're not rubber stamping anything.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, of all the provinces of Canada, British Columbia knows that best. It is in British Columbia where they change stripes from Social Credit, Conservative or Liberal depending on what day of the week it is. I do not want to give a specific illustration to this minister, but I am sure she is familiar with it. No further comment.

I understand clearly how there is this love affair between the Liberals and the Conservatives on this issue, particularly with the loss of the former leader of the Liberal Party who was a clear spokesperson against the original free trade agreement.

Article 94 of this legislation has captured my attention, my riveted focus. It is the area under which I make these comments. So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if anybody thinks that goodwill in this Chamber is going to create the kinds of jobs or the protection necessary for Canada, they are wrong. They are wrong again. We cannot do anything about it, but I just want to go on the record to voice my opinion. The government has been a failure in international trade negotiations, has caused havoc in this country because of it, and this bill will not help one whit.

Thank you for your rapt attention, Mr. Speaker, and if you want my signature on a copy of my comments, I will make it available to you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-93, an act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member Saskatoon—Humboldt had the floor. He has ten minutes remaining in debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to complete my remarks, and I will take only a few minutes of the time that you have allocated to me.

The roots of the Third World debt crisis lie in a development approach that increases the relationship between the local economies and that of the world and the World Bank system. That is why we have a great concern about continued support, or at least the kind of support as long as the World Bank and the IMF are on the track that they have followed in the last years.

The debt crisis currently is being exacerbated by the requirements of the World Bank and the IMF to adjust measures in order to gain further access for their lending.

By putting on Third World countries or debtor countries, conditions which are detrimental to their economies, the financial institutions have increased the possibility, or the likelihood, that the structure will continue to fail as it has for the last five to ten years.

There is enough evidence out there for this government to take some action, to lead the world in a direction which would make the value of IMF and World Bank funds greater and contribute to the fulfilment of the humanitarian dreams in some cases, humanitarian hopes of debtor countries of the world.

There is evidence to suggest that the IMF's confidence in the structural adjustment process is not too great. There is hope that some place along the way, these institutions will take a good hard look at their method of recalling or eliminating the structural adjustments that they have put in place.

In 1944 and at various times since, the IMF and the World Bank have come together to provide assistance to the Third World. They have become those countries' worst enemies; the worst enemy of real human progress in those countries, because loans that were intended to help are now unmanageable and are causing more disaster than they are help.

I am greatly concerned that we are caught in a systemic malfunction of the world's financial structure and that no one has the guts to admit it, let alone the guts to try and fix it.

We need to take a good look at the structure of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. We recognize that they have failed in their mandate. These institutions have known this for as long as 12 and 15 years, when I spent some time in Third World countries and worked with the World Bank.

At that time they were recognizing the failures of their policies. Here we are 15 years later, and in the last five years there has been a recognition of the tremendous failure of these two institutions.

In the last five years they have done more harm than good; some good, I recognize, but much harm. They have perpetuated themselves mainly by becoming sacred cows, whose structure and decisions are not questioned by the member countries. The structure and decisions are omnipotent in the eyes of the donor countries. They have convinced the donor countries that if these debts are not paid in full and on time, the world financial structure will collapse. They have forced us as Canadians to choose between the fluidity of the financial institutions and our humanitarian values, the values which we in Canada have tried to make the major values of our community.

This institution, which we are helping to fund, is forcing us as Canadians to choose between the fluidity of that institution and our humanitarian values.

We have to question whether we should go on supporting the World Bank and the IMF, because as they provide assistance to the Third World they have, as I said before, become its worst enemy, and the enemy of real human progress. The loans that were intended to help are now unmanageable. The systemic malfunction of the financial institution is coming back to roost and we do not have the courage to fix it.

Canada was given a chance by the recommendations in the committee report to do something about it, to show some leadership in alleviating world debt, but Canada was found wanting.

In conclusion, I can only grieve for the millions in the Third World who have not been given the help they need, and I can grieve also for those of us in the industrial, so-called first world countries who have not been courageous enough to help.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-93 provides increased funding under the International Monetary Fund from $2,941 million special drawing rights to some $4,000 special drawing rights and relates to the over-all operation of the Bretton Woods agreement as it affects and assists Third World countries.

I am conscious as well that the negotiations which have been taking place in Brussels this past week are designed to ultimately provide access for the Third World countries to the markets of the United States and European Economic Community countries and other nations around the world. It seems that the agreement or the negotiations have now been suspended and hopefully they will start up again early in the new year.

I think it is most unfortunate that these negotiations took place one day after the German elections when Helmut Kohl was re-elected as the chancellor of the new united Germany. It is difficult to expect that he would be able to reverse the position of Germany two or three days later at the GATT negotiations in Brussels after the commitments he made during the election campaign.

Canadian producers are very vulnerable at these negotiations, as are Third World countries, if no agreement is reached. In fact, there was already a decision by the GATT, almost a year ago that would open up processed dairy products to the United States producers without a reciprocal agreement on the American side. The decision on ice-cream and yogurt and has been accepted by the Canadian government and is supposed to be implemented as soon as the GATT negotiations are complete.

If the negotiations do not continue in the new year, then I guess they are complete now. In fact, the United States would have a perfect right to go ahead and demand access to the Canadian market for ice-cream and yogurt. It will be able to do the same thing with other processed dairy products such as cheese, butter, and skimmed milk powder. That represents something like 63 per cent of the full dairy production in this country of processed dairy products, so we are extremely vulnerable if these talks are not resumed early in the new year. We have to hope for that.

It is interesting when we look at those negotiations, in terms of international development, the Bretton Woods agreement, and the vulnerability and the difficulty of access for the Third World countries to European countries, the U.S., and developed countries' markets. When we look at it from that perspective, I am conscious of a statement by the Prime Minister today that Canadian producers of agricultural commodities receive something like 600 per cent higher support and assistance now than they did in 1984. In fact, support programs in 1984 were $1.483 billion and, in 1991 they are projected to be $1.533 billion. So what is happening is that even though agricultural producers' pricing, commodity prices and the world price war have totally ravaged this industry for the last five or six years, that in fact the government's own projections of support and assistance are exactly or very close to where they were in 1984, when we were coming off of some very high prices and the international trade war had not even started. The Prime Minister's statement, if one looks at the exact figures of the Department of Agriculture, simply is not true.

I think he is in the habit of quoting things like that from the relatively higher payments that were made in 1987 and 1988. In fact, in western Canada, the support programs have been reduced from some $2.4 billion in 1988 to $1.2 billion in 1990. That is a reduction of exactly 50 per cent. They are further scheduled to be reduced to something over $900 million next year, in western Canada alone, at a time when world prices, in real terms, are the lowest in history, while the trade war rages on, and debt levels are very high. So our producers are in an incredibly vulnerable position.

The part that really concerns me is the last proposal to be put before the negotiations, according to a wire service story this morning from Brussels, that was proposed by the chairman of the agriculture working committee, Mr. Hellstrom from Sweden. He proposes that in fact the rollback of support programs, access, and the rollback of export subsidies, be 30 per cent, which was what was originally proposed by the EEC.

The unfortunate part for Canada, if this is accepted in a renewed round in early January, is that it is based on support programs commencing in January of 1991. Over that five-year period it would be looking at support programs based on $1.5 billion for Canadian producers. A reduction of that magnitude would reduce the support programs to something less than $1 billion over the five years. This would be devastating when you take into account that programs such as the western grain transportation Crow benefit amount to some $700 million. Therefore, it would not leave very much for anything else across the nation with some five distinct geographical areas of agriculture production.

Similarly, if we increase the access to our diary and poultry industry to 30 per cent—it is 2 or 3 per cent now—then the industry as we know it would collapse. The 30 per cent reduction likewise on export enhancement assistance would not have a very great effect on our Canadian producers because we do not have a program of any magnitude similar to the Export Enhancement Program of the United States or the export subsidies of the EEC which reduce relatively high levels of cost of production and domestic prices to world price levels.

The Prime Minister needs to take a very close look at support programs. These programs, as planned by the Department of Agriculture last year, are very close to what they were in 1984. The ability of farmers to survive and the price of commodities in the marketplace are dramatically down. In fact, they are the lowest in real terms since the 1930s in the present crop year. The demand is very low because of a massive crop. Our producers are extremely vulnerable in this.

We appreciate some of the difficulties which Third World countries face. The international negotiations can take place possibly in about a month's time or early in the new year to re-establish the world trading arrangements for agriculture. We will have to hope that they will take place and that the dramatic removal of support programs that has taken place in the last two years by this government will not leave us in an unbelievably vulnerable position for the survival of Canadian agriculture in those negotiations.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his remarks and his real concerns for the plight of the agricultural communities across Canada.

The member will be aware that a few months ago the Prime Minister and his government caved in at the GATT on a decision regarding ice cream and yogurt. They hoped, I guess, that the GATT negotiations would be successful and that they could hide this decision behind some sort of GATT agreement.

Could the hon. member tell the House why the government has refused, as even today the Prime Minister has refused, to say what it will do now to help dairy farmers, given the fact of this GATT decision on ice and yoghurt, as well as the effect the free trade agreement is going to have on our diary industry, and indeed on our whole supply-managed areas.

Could he outline to the House his feelings in this area and what he would do to help solve the plight of Canadian farmers?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Haldimand—Norfolk for the important question.

It seems to me there are two distinct areas in the negotiations which are important. One area which I have spent some time speaking about is the terrible vulnerability of western grain producers because the government has effectively slashed support programs in the west by 50 per cent during the last two years. Of course, farmers cannot survive at that level.

With regard to the ice cream and yoghurt decision which was made just a year ago, essentially it grew out of the FTA—or, as the Minister of Agriculture likes to call it, the CUSTA agreement—where we essentially open our markets to access from the United States. The United States maintains its GATT waiver from 1954. We did not get any agreement in the FTA to limit the imports of commodities such as ice cream, yogurt, or other processed dairy products under that agreement.

Immediately the agreement was signed in January, 1988, the government assured us that we would be able to control imports—processed dairy products, for example—by simply putting them on the import control list.

It was rather interesting that Senator Bensten from Texas, immediately after the deal was initialled, said: "We will immediately petition you before a panel of GATT and we will have access to those products." This was after the initialling of the agreement.

The government sat back and did nothing in spite of the warnings by the chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate. As soon as the deal was consummated in 1988, the government put these commodities such as ice cream, yogurt and other commodities on the import control list.

True to their word, the United States immediately took us to GATT and it got a favourable decision in September of 1989. The government hemmed, hawed, and fumed for two or three months, but ultimately accepted that decision. It said it would not implement it until the end of the GATT negotiations.

The question is: Have we got to the end of the GATT negotiations? We hope not. We hope that there will be an agreement that they will only be suspended and that they will come back with an agreement in January. Hopefully, that agreement will sweep up this massive breach in our whole dairy industry.

If the negotiations are complete, then the United States has full access and the government will have to implement it, or the United States could take retaliatory action. It could slap a special duty or tariff on commodities coming from Canada to the United States.

• (1310)

One thing is clear. The dairy industry, Carla Hills, and the entire United States administration are determined they are going to have access, while at the same time maintaining a complete lack of access for our producers. This seems to be the unfairness of the whole FTA. They maintain full embargo or lack of access for our products, while they have gained access to our markets for processed dairy products.

It is little wonder, when the Prime Minister was questioned by the hon. member for Haldimand—Norfolk, that he launched into one of his usual tirades about how much he has done for agriculture. Farmers across the country, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, are asking the government, the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Agriculture: "What have you done for me lately?" There is no answer.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. I know that the hon. member is an honourable member and he was quoting some figures in his comment about assistance to agriculture. I do not recall them exactly, but I believe he indicated it was $1.1 billion in 1984 and $1.6 billion projected for 1991.

I am sure he has used accurate figures, but I also know that the assistance to the agricultural community in Canada in the last five years has exceeded $20 billion. I think the hon. member would want to acknowledge that that is a vastly different number than the numbers he was quoting. I am sure he would want to give credit for the assistance that has been given.

Unfortunately, there have been situations around the world with the subsidies that are going on in Europe that have put the industry in such a perilous plight that the government has had to provide that support. Ideally, we would not have had it. But I am sure the hon. member will want to acknowledge that there has been very significant assistance to the agricultural community over the last five years.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cariboo—Chilcotin has talked about the significant assistance to agriculture in 1987 and 1988. The argument that I am trying to put to him is that we are in the worst part of the world trade war of any time since 1986–1987 when it first started, and the government, for whatever reason, has dramatically reduced support programs in western Canada last year from $2.4 billion to $1.2 billion this year. This is a 50 per cent reduction. That is very different from the 600 per cent increase that the Prime Minister was talking about.

At a time when we should be going with all our armament to the GATT negotiations, in fact we are going with our producers totally disarmed. Programs have been slashed since the 1988–1989 budget. We would be totally snookered if we have reduced our support programs from a high in 1987 of $3.3 billion down to $1.5 billion next year. Assuming that the GATT negotiations continue in January, that would be the base year and we would be talking about a 30 per cent reduction using that new base year. All the figures that have been put before the GATT negotiations are based on 1987–1988 which were peak years.

We saw the Minister for International Trade buffooning in the House and complaining to the Minister of Agriculture that he was supporting $8.8 billion, when producers know that the net support this year was $1.9 billion, that the government plans to reduce it in 1991 to $1.5 billion. It is going down and down at a time when commodity prices are the lowest in history in real terms. The markets are very thin and skimpy.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief on this topic. It is one that, quite clearly, a lot of members have a lot of concern over and is quite complex, involving not only the international monetary organizations but the groups that report to them and do work for them and also the complexities of international trade, as we have seen laterally with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the ongoing discussions that are held around the world in dealing with trade.

It is important that we recognize that trade is an important component on what we, the north, the west, the developed world, or the First World can do collectively to assist those nations that need our help as they emerge and begin to be able to develop economies that bring stability and added value into the countries where, in the past, we have been so quick to remove merely resources and put nothing back.

These are countries that traditionally we have not turned our focus to to see that contributions can be made, not only in terms of money, but also in terms of advice and substance to turn economies around, to help develop industry, and to help governments be able to provide even the most meagre services. It is important that we recognize that the agencies that do that, be it the World Bank or the International Monetary Fund, be able to provide those resources and that advice, and be able to provide parameters in which economies can work as we put money into them, based on some solid but flexible business sense, and real live approaches to the problems that are there.

It is an ongoing question and one that the House, over the next number of years, will debate, I am sure. At this time, however, I would like to move:

That the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is fine. Further debate.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on this bill.

I want to take this opportunity to look at the whole question of international debt in the developing Third World countries, because it is something that Canadians should look at not only in terms of the international plight of nations, but in terms of Canada's role in that and Canada's values that we purport to hold.

I want to take a look, first, at some of the purposes that are set out in the articles of agreement of the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development. It states that one of the purposes is to promote the long-range, balanced growth of international trade and maintain an equilibrium in balance of payments, thereby assisting in rising productivity, standards of living, and conditions of labour in these countries. That is the key and goal that it set: to assist the rising productivity, standard of living, and conditions of labour in these territories.

The International Monetary Fund states its purpose to use the fund temporarily available to them under adequate safeguards, thus providing them with an opportunity to correct maladjustments in their balance payments without resorting to measures destructive of national or international prosperity. Those are nice goals, but if we look at what has happened over the years to the Third World debtor nations, those goals have not been met. In fact, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the restructuring of debt has driven many of these countries into poverty and slavery to the international monetary markets.

It reminds me very much of that old coal miners lament: "Loaded 16 tonnes of number nine coal and what did I get? Another day older and deeper in debt. I owe my soul to the company store". That is what used to happen before labour unions. The companies made sure that the miners always owed more at the company store. They charged them usury rates, they refinanced their debts, they kept them in bondage. That is basically what has been happening in the international monetary market.

Let us take a look at how some of those country's debts developed. I will give two examples. Many of the debts that came out of the Latin American countries were run up by dictators who borrowed money not to assist the public, not to improve the working conditions, not to improve health conditions; but to line their own pockets, to put in developments that they or their families controlled, to make sure they had the military power to keep working people subjugated to their dictatorships. When they were overthrown they usually departed the country with the assets and the new emerging democratic countries were left with the debts. The new democracies paid the dictators' debts and forfeited their sovereignty.

The International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and private bank managers are the ones which are now dictating how the nations generate wealth, spend it, invest it, and share it. Debtor countries are not free to set their own monetary or fiscal policy, export or import measures, social or health programs, or wage and price policies. A democracy should be able to do all of those things. These new democracies have now lost their sovereignty to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. All that the system has done is make it possible for dictators to remain in power for years and to depart the countries with untold wealth and leave the debtor nations in poverty.

Another thing has happened. If you look at many of the developments, who benefited from them? Was it the Third World countries?

I will give another example. A Third World developing Pacific nation was talked into building an international hotel, a solution to its economic woes because it would get western tourists, affluent tourists. So, it was lent the money. What happened? Of course, all the materials were imported to build that hotel because the local building materials were not suitable for a western style hotel. All of the equipment for the hotel was imported; air conditioners, cutlery, bedding, and construction workers. These people were not skilled in modern construction techniques, in concrete construction, electrical wiring, refrigeration, air conditioning, so they brought in the workers. None of the money was spent locally. It benefited solely the people in the developed countries. In the end, they operate a hotel and they bring in the food for that hotel because western visitors want western style food. They bring in the trained staff to run the hotel.

The only jobs that the local people have are jobs that relate to the menial tasks such as cleaning the grounds, cleaning the building. Their economic viability has been ruined because they now have this massive international debt that they must try to pay. They have no economic basis on which to pay it.

I notice the Liberals are very silent on this whole thing. Of course, they sat there for years as the Canadian government and let the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank subjugate developing countries. They took no leadership role. They did nothing to try to break the cycle of debt and poverty that these nations are being put into.

Mr. Manley: What are you proposing; withdrawing from the IMF?

Mr. Karpoff: There are many things that could be done. All we have to do is look at some of the recommendations. I notice everybody is getting very jumpy but it is time that Canadians took a leadership role and looked at those countries and seen what we have done to them.

We are asking the poorest nations in this world to sacrifice their meagre standards of living so us fat cats up here can make more money. That is what we are doing.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): How about trading with them?

Mr. Karpoff: Trading with them? Let us trade with them on commodities they can afford instead of trading with them simply to get their natural resources at the cheapest dollar.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Do you want us to be protectionists?

Mr. Karpoff: One of the things that we have to start to do is look at what the NGOs say on the World Bank and look at some of the things that they have to say in their assessment of what is happening. They point out: "There is no evidence to justify the bank's confidence that adjustment helps the poor in the long run. There is not any evidence to suggest that orderly adjustment, coupling with loan scheduling, offers in time a way out of the debt crisis".

We have got to start facing some realities. Further they go on to say: "Many of the elements of adjustment programs, including the rapid dismantlement and tightening of credit availability, the emphasis on export promotion and the cutting of public support for health care and education are likely to increase inequities with the historical disadvantage of rural and urban poor being cemented in the place for another generation. Often what we are forcing these countries to do is to try to grow export commodities to satisfy their foreign debt to the disadvantage of their ability to feed their own populations".

We are saying to them: "Stop growing food crops and grow cash crops to feed the international debt". As a result we have driven these countries and the people into a lower and lower standard of living." They say for the bank to make a serious change in course, it will have to do more than support new poverty-focused programs. A fundamental rethinking of the development model that promotes it is required with active participation of local populations, sustainable development that builds upon their creative capacities and the efforts of the poor themselves. The monetary fund has to start working with these people instead of shutting them out of decisions. The bank should place more emphasis on protection for the domestic market, with food self-sufficiency as an important goal that should also be pursued. Many of these countries now even have to import food because we have taken away their basic agricultural market economy.

Another one of the recommendations is that the bank should publicly stress the importance of land reform and of increasing local food security through greater emphasis on subsistence and self-providing crops. These are what internationally known NGOs familiar with the international field say.

Another key to this is the fact that women in these Third World countries are probably the most adversely affected by these policies. These people go on to say that for adjustment and related policies to increase food production and security over the long run, policy-makers must directly target and enhance women's productive roles. There are many other recommendations.

What this bill does is say that we are going to increase our stringent and punitive control over debtor nations. We are even going to take away their voting rights, to force them to withdraw from membership if they do not do as they are told. They are going to ensure that they have no voice in the policies that affect them the most.

What should Canada be doing? Canada had an opportunity to take a leadership role based on Canadian values. We missed it because we agreed with the policy. We agree with what is happening. Before an indebted nation can receive more funds from the IFIs, it must agree to impose harsh internal austerity measures. These conditions often lead to massive cuts in social programs, privatization, devaluation of currency and other market-oriented policies which are supposed to lead to an improvement in credit worthiness. Such structural adjustment measures, strongly endorsed by the Minister of Finance and the president of the Canadian International Development Agency, have caused violent protests in developing countries, such as riots in Zambia and Venezuela which caused the deaths of several hundreds of people.

In the 1970s and 1980s, these countries in the developing world were told to focus on exports to improve their balance of payments situation. Instead of growing food for internal consumption, debtor nations grew cash crops such as coffee to finance their debt and to draw hard currency into imports. The glut on the commodity market has worsened the debt situation and left African nations unable to feed themselves.

The whole situation is something that Canadians cannot take any pride in. Canada had an opportunity to take a leadership role.

An all party committee, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, produced a report called Structuring our Global Future: Canada's Stake in the Unfinished Business of the Third World Debt.

This report does many things. It talks about what Canada should be doing. I am going to mention a few of the things that it recommends. It set out a number of guiding principles for Canadian policy.

The first one is that the primary long term goal of action for Third World debt must be sustainable, human development in debtor countries. It goes on to say: "But first, every means should be explored to reduce the debt services burden of all debts, including allowing debt repayment to be made in local currency for investment in human development projects in that debtor country."

It points out that poverty and debt are enemies of development, not structural adjustments per se. Adjustments can only be successful and supported as a part of a holistic development approach in co-operation with debtor countries.

It talks about how adjustment must be looked at. One minute, I am told, it states that the social impact of adjustment programs must be assessed. If there is no net benefit socially to that country, it should not be proceeded with.

Canada is a wealthy country compared to many of the developing countries, but we seem to be using our wealth along with that of most of the other developed countries not to assist in the long run the development of debtor countries, but to continue to ensure that they are always going to be in poverty and owing us money.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope at least for the sake of our viewers they do not leave with the impression that Canada has not been playing an international role in trying to deal with Third World debt and development around the world.

In fact, history can speak for itself in terms of the tremendous amount of contribution Canada has made to Third World countries and developed countries. I, for one, am very proud of the contribution Canada has made in the past and continues to make on the international scene.

Having said that, I would just like to ask my colleague one specific question about the hotel. He talked about the construction material for the hotel, the workers who built the hotel, the forks, the knives, the food the plates and everything that was imported.

I am sure many of the viewers in my riding of Ottawa Centre are wondering where that famous hotel is located. I want to ask the hon. member if he can tell us about the location of that hotel, when it was built and who built it. What money was used for that?

Mr. Karpoff: Mr. Speaker, the same thing happened in Western Samoa, Tonga, Cook Islands and in Fiji. There are four countries.

The loan rates varied. One thing is quite interesting. The Liberals seem to say that Canada is doing a good job, but they were part of this committee that urged Canada to take a different view.

I will read again. This is what the Liberals forget that they signed up on: "There is no alternative to concerted political action among the major developed countries governments. Canada is a respected member of that group and active in many international organizations".

• (1340)

We have a seat on the United Nations Security Council. Finance Minister Michael Wilson now chairs the key policy advisory committee of the IMF executive board. It is time for Canada to use its international position and influence to maximum advantage. That is what they signed. Beyond these specific measures, the sub-committee urges Canada to seek support of other governments for an international conference on debt and sustainable global adjustment, such a conference to aim for negotiating commitments to policy reform by all countries, not only the poor and indebted. That is what will happen. We want the poor and the indebted countries to make all the adjustments, to make all the changes in terms of sustaining international development and sustaining international trade.

It is time the Liberals read some of the things that they signed. I know that they want to let this bill slip through, as they do every year, without really looking at the issues that the Third World countries are now facing. The Speaker is signalling I am out of time.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who has just addressed the House has made some points that are of interest and concern to all of us. He should know that it is not a matter of Liberals having forgotten the contents of the committee report or anything of the sort. Any of us, including myself, has encouraged the Minister of Finance in his role in the IMF to take into account the emerging understanding of development issues in the context of IMF loans being granted.

What the NDP seems to have forgotten is the issue that is before this House, not the issue before the IMF on any given day. What we have is a bill that essentially does two things. First, it increases the amount held on deposit by the IMF, reflecting the fact that world trade has increased and also that inflation has caused the volume of world trade to increase. Second, it imposes upon debtor nations, quite correctly as he points out, certain measures that the IMF can take to try and enforce payment.

I am driven to the conclusion by hearing the NDP speakers that they believe one of two things, or perhaps both of them. They believe that either Canada should withdraw from the IMF—perhaps that is NDP policy—but the very least, they do not believe that the IMF reserves should increase to reflect the increased volume of world trade. Second, they do not believe that countries that borrow from the IMF should be forced to repay their loans. What kind of international financial order would that create?

If they want to talk about direct aid, let them talk about the appropriate vehicles for direct aid. Surely they can address their minds to the issues before the House of Commons that this bill presents instead of the silly gobbledegook to which we have been listening.

Mr. Karpoff: Mr. Speaker, one of the things I am always interested in is watching the Liberals get up and talk about fiscal policy, after they demonstrated in this country that they could only drive the country into economic recession. Then they start saying, "Look, we are knowledgeable, we deserve to be listened to as we have some credibility".

The Liberal's credibility in fiscal and economic management is zero.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate, the hon. member for Elk Island.

Mr. O'Kurley: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Point of order, the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that I move:

That the member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca now be heard.

Mr. Danis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. After you recognized the hon. member for Elk Island I distinctly heard the hon. member say, "Thank you, Mr. Speaker". You had given him the floor, he had the floor and therefore I suggest that the motion is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, the hon. member for Sherwood Park on debate.

Mr. Riis: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Point of order, the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: I think the record will show clearly that while you recognized my hon. friend from across the way, before he began speaking you recognized me on a point of order.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Riis: He can speak all he wants. The point is that you had recognized my point of order. I stood up on a point of order and presented a motion. I think the record is very clear. If we do not follow the rules in the House of Commons, then why do we have rules?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognized the hon. member for Elk Island. He was starting to speak. Then I came back to the hon. member for Kamloops. The hon. member for Elk Island has the floor. On debate.

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to remind the House and my hon. colleagues in the NDP that the IMF is a very specialized instrument designed to achieve many valuable and important economic goals of the international community.

One of the concepts that is embodied in this organization is the concept of balance. The proposed increases in IMF quotas is part of a regular cycle for reviewing fund quotas. The higher level of total IMF quotas is required to ensure a better balance between the resources available to the IMF and the needs of members for balance of payments financing over the next few years.

It is important to recognize here that while other institutions will provide the bulk of development financing for the developing world, the IMF has the specific responsibility to use its resources in support of growth oriented economic adjustment programs for both developing and developed countries.

The concept of working together with both the developing and the developed countries is very important. We know that that goes against the philosophy of the NDP which has shown and demonstrated from time to time through their activities and the activities of their supporters that it supports more of a confrontational approach, as opposed to a co–operative approach.

This bill is reinforcing Canada's support of this co–operative approach by offering a program to both developing and developed nations. This bill is a very valuable initiative. I should add that it does not represent any significant additional cost to our country.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would move:

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of the second reading stage of government Bill C–93, an act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will those members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

And fewer than 15 members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion is adopted.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A point of order. The hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I seek clarification from my hon. friend, the government whip. Earlier today my assistant and I had it confirmed that the government would not do what it has just done. It was not just confirmed with me. It was with my assistant. We asked whether the government would extend hours and the official said, "No, definitely not".

I repeated that question: "Do you plan to extend the hours today?". Again he said , "No, we will not".

I want to register my concern that when an official says one thing and then the government does another, it makes it very difficult to plan to do business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): What you people do behind the curtain is of no concern here on the floor of the House. But I will allow the hon. government whip to answer.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I want the House to know in absolute terms that no one from the New Democratic Party, official or person, has approached me personally with that kind of a question today. It was my understanding at our morning meeting that we were to get through second reading stage of Bill C–93 and we were to get Bill C–81 through report and third reading.

• (1350)

As the day progressed it became clear to me, as the government whip, from information that came to me from other members, that the New Democratic Party was filibustering the Bretton Woods agreement. That was not in accord with arrangements that were reached earlier in the week between our House leader, who happens not to be here today, and other House leaders or their officials. It has been communicated to me in my lobby that the New Democratic Party is not keeping the commitments that were made earlier this week in terms of what would happen on this day. Whether that is right or wrong I have no direct knowledge. I simply report what I was told.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, earlier today, the request came formally from the government House leader's office, asking if we were intending to complete second reading of Bill C–93. I indicated that I thought it may not occur. In the best interests of doing business, if the government was to introduce Bill C–81, we would, in fact, agree to the completion of second reading. Our critic undertook to accomplish that and it has been done. It was under the assumption that we would continue the debate with no extension of hours. This is what the government House leader's office communicated to us so that we would agree to pass Bill C–81, which we did. I see that that agreement did not stand up.

To carry on the business of the House it requires the co–operation and honesty of all of the players. I am afraid that that is simply—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there is going to be any further negotiations on the floor, I wish it could be done behind the curtain with the two whips and the government House leader.

I will listen to the chief whip for the opposition party.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, perhaps one might be able to share some information with all hon. members so that we clearly understand what has transpired. There was a disposition on Wednesday that two bills would be under active consideration today, namely, Bill C–81, which has now been completed in terms of debate and that we would proceed with the completion of second reading of Bill C–93.

I recognize, and one can never attribute motives or indeed, intentions to anyone, that the House leader for the New Democratic Party was not privy to those particular discussions. He may have a different view, quite rightly or quite wrongly. Let's be clear that when one is imputing motives of members of this Chamber, that those in glass houses ought not to throw stones.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The negotiations that are going on here on the floor of the House should be done behind the curtain and in committee meetings. They should not be done on the floor of the House. This is debate on Bill C–93. I think I should recognize the next hon. member for debate.

I will recognize the hon. member for Kamloops just one more time on this same point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I do not want to leave this matter with these inaccuracies in the air. I would like to clarify one point.

Regardless of the discussions that have taken place earlier in the week, earlier today on a formal visit from the government House leader's office, the question came, "are you prepared to complete Bill C–93 today at second reading?" I indicated that I thought not. Again, one cannot predict the future in this place ever, as you well know, Mr. Speaker. I thought we had sufficient numbers of speakers that it likely would not conclude.

The official spokesperson from the House leader's office then indicated, "the government would like to pass C–81 today." I said that that was fine, we would agree to co–operate to facilitate that, because we felt that we had an obligation to seriously consider these two bills, which we did.

Bill C–81 was debated and passed. That is set aside. Let me go back to C–93. I then asked, "will the government extend hours," and was answered "absolutely not." I repeated the question because it is important that we know, particularly on a Friday afternoon when members are moving to their constituencies for the weekend. I asked them seriously, "Will the government extend hours today," and he said, "absolutely not." I assumed the government would not extend hours. All that transpired earlier today and the government has obviously decided to extend hours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate on Bill C–93. The hon. member for Kamloops on debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking forward to this debate for some time. We recognize that Bill C-93 is an important bill for a variety of reasons. It is one of the few opportunities we have in this House to discuss the role that Canada plays in international finance.

We recognize, as we enter into the global economy and enter into a shrinking world in terms of international trade, how important it is that Canada continue to play its expanded role. Perhaps we were not there physically, but certainly over the years a lot of us have recalled those beginning days with the creation of the IMF as a result of an agreement signed by the 44 nations at the International Monetary and Financial Conference of the United and Associated Nations held at Bretton Woods. Therefore the bill itself is often referred to simply as the Bretton Woods legislation.

On that day in July, 1944 it was recognized that the various countries had a role to play in ensuring countries an opportunity to participate in the development of international trade. At that time Canada's intentions were very honourable. But as my hon. friend who spoke recently indicated, the IMF participation in terms of international development in the last number of years has been suspect. The doctrine of the United States that has been transferred to the IMF has often visited upon Third World developing countries an agenda that was simply illogical for the tasks that they had to address.

We have a long list of Third World countries which, in order to receive support from the IMF, have been presented with an agenda of fiscal and monetary initiatives that they were required to take, to say nothing of other political, social and economic initiatives that were suggested in order for them to participate in any benefits that the IMF may in fact provide. That is really an imposition of a particular ideology, usually an ideology that reflects the world view of the United States, on a country that may be interested in pursuing a different economic approach or a modified economic approach to solve its particular problems.

When one looks at the details of the bill, again in recognizing we are at second reading stage—and it is at this point where we talk about the principle of the bill—I must say we have serious concerns regarding the principle of the bill, to say nothing of some of the issues that are indirectly related to Canada's participation in the IMF.

I think we all recall in the news just recently when a number of Central and Latin American countries asked questions of the International Monetary Fund about whether or not, in terms of the overwhelming amount of foreign debt that they had accrued, they could continue on in terms of introducing the various so-called reforms that the IMF was making of them. I think any of us who have any knowledge at all of many of these countries recognize that the introduction of these particular IMF agenda items was virtually an impossibility if it was not going to cause even more undue hardship to the peoples of these various nations.

At that time the discussion started in Canada about our participation in the IMF, to what extent were we associating ourselves with the ideological initiatives being presented by the IMF, particularly on developing Third World countries.

That debate has been raging across the country for many months, and as we have an opportunity now to culminate that debate as we begin the processing of this legislation, may I suggest it is going to take a long time to move this legislation through the appropriate phases.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CENTENNIAL FLAME RESEARCH AWARD ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-258, an act respecting the establishment of the Centennial Flame Research Award to publicize the contributions to Canadian public life of persons with disabilities, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Because it is Friday, there is an automatic deferral and, pursuant to Standing Order 45(6), the recorded division stands deferred until 7 p.m. on Monday, December 10, 1990.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C–93, an act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the motion of Mr. Reid (p. 16458).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to the comments which I just made regarding Bill C–93.

First, I want to set this discussion today into some context. Sometime back, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade submitted a report to the House on the international debt crisis. The government's response was simply to discount every, single recommendation made by the unanimous all–party report. I find it rather odd that a report that got the unanimous consent of all parties, which happens only infrequently, one that looked at and studied the debt crisis faced by nations that were facing serious indebtedness, that the government would choose simply to ignore all the work done by the committee. This puts into some context, I suppose, how serious the government is in terms of actually cleaning up its effort at helping countries out in terms of managing their foreign debt.

One of the items of Bill C–93, the conditionality of financing from international financial institutions such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund is, of course, a reality. To put it more simply, before indebted nations can receive further funds from the IFIs, they must agree to the imposition of harsh, internal austerity measures. These conditions often lead to massive cuts in social programs, privatization programs, the devaluation of currency, and other market–oriented policies which are supposed to lead to an improvement in the worthiness of a country when it comes to credit.

While such structural adjustment measures may be strongly endorsed by the Minister of Finance, they have caused very strong and serious reaction in many countries around the world, particularly in the developing world. There have been riots in Zambia and Venezuela which resulted in the deaths of literally hundreds of people. Most Canadians who look at these policies demanded by these international monetary funds of one kind or another recognize that this is, in some ways, a rather indirect form of colonialism. The western countries, including Canada, which control the IMF and the World Bank are dictating economic policy to the less developed nations. Once again, in terms of allowing self–determination and self–realization and, in a sense, the self–government openness of Third World developing countries, we are imposing our view of what is right on them.

When I say "our view", I am of course referring to the government's view. A lot of us would have serious questions about the government's view of how to conduct the economy in terms of federal government measures, even as it occurs here in our own country of Canada. We have a monetary policy. Is it right for Canada? We have a fiscal policy. Is that right for Canada? We have a water policy. No, we do not have a water policy for Canada. Do we have a policy, in terms of regional economic development? No, we have not. We have a couple of slush funds which are operating in Atlantic Canada and in western Canada, but in terms of meaningfully assisting the development of serious economic infrastructure, particularly new economic infrastructure in western, northern, or Atlantic Canada, such is not the case.

Even in our own country, the overwhelming majority of Canadians are saying that the government's policy in terms of economic development is haywire. It just does not make any sense anymore. On top of that, the government is going to impose a whole new set of taxes now called the goods and services tax.

I just returned from a visit to Japan and looking at its government's recent imposition of its version of the GST. The Japanese government decided that it was in its best interest to impose a GST of only 3 per cent. What did the people of Japan do at the first opportunity they had to indicate what they thought about that? They turfed out the government. I anticipate that at the first opportunity that Canadians have to show this government what they think of its economic policies, they will do the same and turf out this government.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Milliken: And elect a Liberal government in its place.

Mr. Riis: There is some noise from the Liberal benches about their future. I suspect that, if we look at their future—where could we look? We could look, I suppose, at what is going on in the province of Ontario. That would be one place to look. But will set that aside, Mr. Speaker. It is not worthy of even a response, quite frankly.

• (1410)

I should clarify the point. The point is that the government's view of appropriate economic policies to develop Canada's economy are wrongly placed. That is the same mentality that now is being visited upon Third World countries. There are governments such as our own here in Canada saying to Zambia and a whole set of other countries: "We know what is best. We are the big brother. Our country may be in a shambles economically, but our ideological view of what is best ought now to be imposed upon you. You have no choice, because if you expect support, indirectly and directly, from organizations such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, you have got to do what we are telling you to do."

That is not the way the world ought to operate. I do not think Canada, the United States, or anyone else has the right to impose a particular ideological view on another country. That is not what the global community ought to be made up of, the imposition of certain views by some on others. That is why we have some concern in terms of the way the International Monetary Fund is progressing.

We recognize that the purpose of this bill is to provide for an increase in Canada's International Monetary Fund subscription by $906 million special drawing rights, about $1.2 billion. Another purpose, under section 1, is to provide for the proposed amendment regarding the suspension of members voting and relating rights. Relating to that are sections 2, 3, 4 and 5, as you well know, Mr. Speaker.

As I say, we have grave concerns of the implications of this particular legislation. I probably do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in the 1970s and 1980s the IFIs told the developing world to focus on exports to provide their balance of payments situation. Instead of growing food for internal consumption, these debtor nations grew cash crops such as coffee to finance their debt and to draw hard currency for imports. The subsequent glut on the commodity market has worsened the debt situation and left many of these nations unable to feed themselves.

In other words, they were following the dictates of countries such as our own in terms of saying: "We know what is best for you. Rather than develop sound food crops, you should be developing coffee, bananas, sugar, and so on for export." That is fine, as long as these things can be sold.

We know what it is like to be a farmer in western Canada or any place in the country now in terms of being able to compete in the international marketplace. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what it is like to be a food producer in a developing country, without the hundreds of millions of dollars in support systems, or may I say billions of dollars, that our producers receive.

We think we are being treated unfairly. You can imagine the concerns that the people in the developing countries have at the near collapse of the GATT discussions that have just recently occurred.

I simply point out that our direction in the past has been demonstrated to be the wrong and inappropriate direction, and it has caused even further indebtedness of the developing countries that we were so–called attempting to assist. By following the direction of western countries and the advice of western economists at the IMF, the developing world, in fact, has sunk further into its debt mire. Now, the IMF and the World Bank are telling the debtor nations to tighten their belts to make up for earlier bad decisions made by the United States primarily and the IFI.

It is appropriate that we recognize that the impact of this payment on condition is disproportionately filled at the lowest end of the economic scale: women, children, the dispossessed. We are talking about the unbelievably poor here and they bear the burden of this type of restructuring.

The impact of structural adjustment policies in countries such as Peru, Zambia and Guyana are really worth noting. In Zambia, the devaluation of currency has spurred inflation into triple digits. Here in our own country, when inflation reaches 5, 6, and 7 per cent, we start becoming seriously concerned. Tough policies are brought in to dampen down those inflationary fires. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what it must be like to be in a country where, in fact, it is in three figures when it comes to inflation and what that requires in terms of combating that incredible problem in terms of economic development? As a result of these restructurings in Zambia, we have also seen rising infant mortality, increasing unemployment, significant increase in illiteracy, and on and on.

Structural adjustment has now been applied in over 70 countries and has only contributed to stagnation and increased poverty. I must say that the IFIs are undermining the developing world and Canada, and Michael Wilson at the chair of the interim committee of the IMF—sort of the P&P committee of the IMF—is a key contributor to this policy. As a government we have to assume full responsibility for the types of policies now being imposed upon so many of these developing countries.

I want to go back to the point I made about the standing committee's recommendation that Canada has an obligation to work toward reforming the IFIs. I must admit I have not studied every single clause of this bill. That will come later in committee work. But from what I can gather, this bill does absolutely nothing, in spite of our pathetic performance in terms of advice that we have been giving developing countries, to change the status quo. I do not know how my hon. friend, the parliamentary secretary, is able to stand in the House today and say that this is a good Canadian initiative, because it does not change a single thing that Canada has been doing and what Canada has been doing is not good for the developing world. We say that we have missed an opportunity here.

I know the government and the Liberals do not want to discuss this any longer, and I can understand why. If this was our legislation and we were doing absolutely nothing in light of the increasing debt build–up in developing countries, I would not want to be caught debating it publicly either. I chastise my Liberal friends for muzzling the debate in the House of Commons and wanting to get out of the discussion. I do not blame them. I recall their policies when they were in government. They were no different. Did they care about the developing world? There were some individuals, yes, but as a political party they never ever committed sufficient funds, in spite of years and years of promise, to economic development. Now the Tories really do no different. That is why I think Canadians are realizing that whether this policy, Bill C–93, is called Liberal policy or Conservative policy, there is no difference.

I listened carefully earlier and I asked: "Will we hear a different voice between my Conservative friends and my Liberal friends on this issue?" Mr. Speaker, I could not tell which side was talking.

The opportunity came, and I might say one of the very few opportunities members of the House of Commons have an opportunity to speak on international debt refinancing and restructuring, and do the Liberals want to speak? No. They do not want to speak. They want to curtail this debate and I say that is wrong.

Mr. Milliken: We agreed to extend hours so that you could speak.

Mr. Riis: I know why they decided to extend hours—to muzzle debate. They know it is Friday. They know there are x number of members here and that is the easiest way to curtail debate. Do not try to fool and mislead the people of Canada. I will simply say mislead the people of Canada.

It is despicable, it is disheartening, it is sad, and it is a black day for Canada when it comes to the role it could play in terms of international development and assisting Third World countries.

I would like to close my comments by saying a very important Canadian was quoted recently in the news by saying: "The patient is very sick, but the medicine will only hasten the death." This was an outstanding Canadian talking about the plight and the challenges of many Third World countries as they struggle to survive, not even necessarily to advance, but simply to survive under unbelievable challenges.

What does the government do? It makes it worse, just as it is making it worse for the people of Canada. This ought to come as no surprise. This is an ongoing thesis now. It has developed almost monthly for the last two years.

Canadians, small business people are struggling to survive; farmers right across the country, struggling to survive; small manufacturers, struggling to survive; families, struggling to survive. What are the figures as a result of this policy which the Minister of Finance says is a policy of pain? It is going to be a scorched-earth policy because he says we want to inflict pain on the people of Canada in order to dampen down the inflationary fires.

• (1420 )

They have done it admirably. They have killed off initiatives. They have killed off both so that there is an increasing sense of despair.

So I plead with my hon. friend across the aisle who is responsible for this particular initiative at this stage to rethink what the government is doing. While it is too late now, there has been pain that has been inflicted upon the people of Canada as a result of this federal government's policy. Let us not repeat that same pain and suffering for those people who are living in the developing countries.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to what the House leader for the New Democratic Party had to say. I was hoping that with the events in Ontario that he referred to earlier this year, when an NDP government was elected, and perhaps with the success that they are temporarily enjoying in the polls, the NDP would come forward with something substantive and serious; something that would give us a clue to what they might do, if it ever befell us, that we had an NDP government in this country.

I could only conclude from having listened to him that either he has not given any serious thought to Canada's role in world institutions, or that he thinks that we should withdraw from the International Monetary Fund. That is the only reasonable conclusion to draw from his remarks.

The bill before us provides for two things. It provides for an increase in the amount of the deposits, the quotas, that are held by the International Monetary Fund to reflect the increased size of world trade and it provides for a means for the IMF to collect amounts owing from debtor nations, or to provide that they should pay them.

As I pointed out earlier today, many of us agree with the comments in the parliamentary report. Many of us agree with the sentiments which the House leader for the NDP is expressing in terms of what the IMF does in the context of granting its loans.

As I said earlier as well, many of us, including myself, have urged the Minister of Finance to take into account the emerging understanding of development issues in loans that are being granted by the IMF, for example in Brazil.

For the leader of the NDP to get up and say that the bill before us distinguishes parties, his and ours, for example, on those issues simply because this bill provides for the ongoing function of the IMF, is totally ridiculous. Why can he not get up and say specifically what he thinks Canada's role should be with respect to this quota system and to the collection of debts on an ongoing future basis?

Does he think that loans from the IMF should be without recourse against better nations? Should they be just simply gifts? In that case, why do we need an international clearing house like the IMF? What is it that the NDP has for a policy? In fact, do they have one at all?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, to answer my friend, there is much to say on this issue. That is why we wanted to debate this issue. I do not understand why the Liberals want to curtail this debate.

This is the one opportunity we have for all members from the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party, to express their party views. It is an opportunity for members of Parliament to speak on what has to be one of the world's most important issues, the increasing indebtedness of the developing countries.

My hon. friend knows that what this legislation does. When I say that it maintains the status quo, it worsens the status quo, Mr. Speaker. He knows full well that it imposes additional sanctions on countries that are unable to repay their loans.

In other words, if you are so poor that you are simply unable to pay, they are going to impose heavier sanctions and make it impossible for you to even hope of paying it in the future. This is not good legislation.

Mr. Manley: What's your proposal. Give it away?

Mr. Riis: There are many proposals. The Liberals want the little catch phrase. The Liberals want some of these television quotable quotes. Their leader, Jean Chrétien, has not said a single thing in the entire byelection. Try and find out where they stand on anything.

For example, we look to economic development as a role for the IMF to play. But the role is not to impose Conservative or Liberal—same thing—ideologies on developing countries. Absolutely not.

Look at international assistance and ask yourself the question: "Where does the most appropriate international assistance occur?" You have to say it occurs at the NGO level.

I realize that this is not exactly what this bill is about, but it is the only opportunity we have to discuss Canada's role overseas in terms of assisting economically or in other ways. These are the kinds of proposals we ought to have an opportunity to discuss. But, since we do not seem to be having that, I would like to propose a motion. Therefore, I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say to the hon. member, and I know he has been around here for a long time, that Standing Order 25 states, and I quote:

When it is provided in any Standing or Special Order of this House that any business specified by such Order shall be continued, forthwith disposed of, or concluded in any sitting, the House shall not be adjourned before such proceedings have been completed except pursuant to a motion to adjourn proposed by a Minister of the Crown.

The hon. member realizes that. The motion is out of order.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few comments to the discussion that has already taken place on this very important bill.

As the House Leader of the New Democratic Party has clearly pointed out, there are serious questions about the increased debt on Third World countries. How much do we pile up? When do we say enough is enough? When do we stop imposing on the threat of that Third World debt our goals for an economy and our solutions for economic problems? How much austerity can we suffer in Canada and how much are we demanding that we impose on the Third World countries that are subject to the debt? Are we indeed the harbingers of some kind of Milton Friedman hard right wing policies that suggest that the IMF's role is to be a debt collector rather than some imaginative development of programs in the jurisdictions in which we are loaning the money?

If the government and opposition members argue that this should be a collecting agency, is there not a moral responsibility in the initiation of the loans to do some planning with the people who are borrowing the money? Are we making surrogate economies based on what we think is right? Or, are we focusing on what should be the force coming out of an indigenous need of those countries? Does the IMF take any time, as the Liberal Party raises the question about our policy, to express a desire that the indigenous economy was what should be supported and enhanced rather than impose some kind of unproven economic theories that are pursued in this country as the model?

It is very interesting to casually talk about what we hope to do and what we want to do. But, we always end up in effect imposing our views on the Third World countries and then expect, because we have loaned them the money, that they should be successful based on our views. We have done more to harm Central American and South American countries because of that attitude than we have to help them.

Sometimes it is best to have people help themselves, let them define what they need in terms of help rather than impose a regime that we think because it may or may not be appropriate for us, it certainly has to be appropriate for them. We have not been a good model, and if anybody wants any evidence of that, just examine what is happening in this country today. It is very interesting to hear the Liberals and Conservatives squabble over who is responsible for the mess. I do not understand the basis of that squabbling. They both believe in the same policies anyway. The difference is between tweedledum and tweedledee. One is in and the other is out.

• (1430)

Mr. Milliken: And you're tweedledummer.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Member, I want to thank you for your very intelligent interruption. It is most appreciated. If you had anything positive to demonstrate, you would first of all explain why you have been such a failure across this country.

What are the options? The options are to understand that people in their own jurisdictions have the right and the responsibility to determine for themselves the direction in which they would like to go. If you examine the kind of pressures that have been created by multinational corporations through government instruments and through the IMF, to dictate to some of these smaller countries what they should do, you can understand why the policies have been so ruinous.

When does a debt come to an end? What are the consequences of the kind of policies we have been pursuing? Yes, there should be an all-party consensus in asking those questions. Certainly, we are not going to have that by extending the hours of debate and trying to ram the bill through. There is no thoughtful analysis of the mistakes we have made in this country and helping those people avoid them. I suppose the government's response, in terms of enhancing the view of the IMF, is to loan some of those countries John Crow. What an asset. We could send Crow down there. He just took a 27 per cent increase in his salary in a two-year period. Then, he tells the Canadian people that they have to cut to the bone and we have to fight inflation. His method of fighting inflation as a reflection of this government is take that whopping salary increase, and then deign to come into committee and say: "That is really not a committee matter."

I find it hypocritical, if I am allowed to use that word. I do not address that word to any single member. It is a collective admonition, particularly on the Conservatives. The admonition is that if this kind of debate—

Mr. Boyer: The committee looked into it.

Mr. Barrett: It is a rather pious comment from my good friend over there. Yes, the committee has pondered about this and yes, we have to make these moves.

It is still the agenda that is dominated by the multinational corporations and this government is a reflection of the policies of those large corporations to the detriment of small business in Canada and certainly to the detriment of the indigenous economy of many of the countries that we allegedly are trying to help by burdening them with these massive debts. These massive debts have not been dealt with in a frugal and fiscally responsible manner. We are imposing the same kind of thing and the corporations go on their merry way.

Sure the terms are going to be modified and sure, there is going to be a touch of patent humanitarian approach. The reality is you are imposing a fiscal regime that is essentially outmoded and would make Milton Friedman very happy. This government has been a failure with the same policies here in Canada and the same approach they are taking with the IMF.

Mr. Boyer: We've converted our loans to grants.

Mr. Barrett: You have done some of it.

Mr. Boyer: We've done it entirely and we've forgiven loans.

Mr. Barrett: I appreciate the interruptions because it makes for an unintelligible debate.

In pursuing that particular course of unintelligible debate in response to that particular interruption, even the head of Imperial Oil of Canada, who is not known to be a New Democratic Party supporter, has announced that grants such as my friend is talking about are foolish. He particularly mentioned what this government has done with Hibernia. He did that just yesterday.

He is talking about grants and the grants toward what kinds of programs and forgiving debts on the basis of a Milton Friedman right-wing kind of mentality and encouraging the Third World countries to mirror the kind of economic decisions made by this government. A grant is a grant is a grant, my friend. When Imperial Oil says Mobil should not get a grant, they are being converted either to an understanding of basic economic theory or they are envious that they did not get the grant. Far be it from me to be suspicious of Imperial Oil. Imperial and other oil companies are in the Third World.

Mr. Boyer: We're talking about overseas assistance.

Mr. Barrett: Overseas assistance. That is the way you treat Newfoundland. You think they are overseas and you gave them that kind of overseas assistance on a forgivable grant to the oil companies. Newfoundland is not overseas, it is part of Canada. Get that straight.

Let us understand, when they talk about these kinds of grants to the oil companies, and they give us examples of the Third World countries, that they are denying them the opportunity to enhance what is the indigenous economy, the kind of economy that enhances the jurisdiction within which it should flourish and develop based on their own internal needs and their own sovereign goals, not an imposition by another multinational funded government, such as the one that we have here in Canada.

Mr. Boyer: Nonsense. Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Barrett: Nonsense, absolute nonsense, my friend says.

Let us take a look at the United Fruit Company in Third World countries and what they have done, along with the IMF loans. The United Fruit Company has monopolized the growing, the ownership, and the distribution from Third World countries of products such as bananas.

Mr. Boyer: This is a Canadian Parliament. Why don't you talk about Canadian companies?

Mr. Barrett: It is a Canadian Parliament and we are dealing with Canadian taxpayers' money that ultimately will have to pay for these grants.

The United Fruit Company, which is a beneficiary of the kind of policies sponsored by the IMF, has a monopoly over the growing of such products as bananas. Does the IMF ask to support the continuation of corrupt governments and massive debts and still sponsor programs that benefit such corporations as United Fruit? If one thinks that these things are unconnected, one is wrong. They are connected.

International corporations have influenced those governments. Look at the overthrow of the Arbenz government in 1954 in Guatemala and you can see the direct connection between the thrust of IMF loans, the kind of forgiveness in terms of grants, and the continuation of the control of those governments and the internal policies by the outside multinational corporations.

There has to be a separation before the grants have any meaning. There has to be a separation between the IMF, and the international corporations' agenda, and right-wing governments' agenda, and an understanding that all the money loaned should be going toward the construction of the indigenous economy of the countries that receive money.

There is nothing wrong with that philosophy. I am proud to belong to a party that espouses the philosophy of supporting the indigenous economy. But to continue to pour money into programs that have no bottom, only to support the international corporations that are usually exploiting the resources of those Third World countries makes one question the whole idea.

What is the response of the IMF in terms of collecting debts? Squeeze the local people more. The multinational corporations just squeeze the campucinos more, not ask more from the resources. The peasants will cough up the money. It is absurd. We should have a debate on what this money is being loaned for, and ultimately the direction we hope that people will decide for themselves, not do what we tell them to do.

I agree completely with my colleague, the member for Kamloops. He made an outstanding statement here today, an outstanding position. Frankly, if I were a government member, I would have listened and probably come to the conclusion that the Tory government should resign. Since they do not seem to agree I just wanted to make these few comments in support of the admonitions of my good friend from Kamloops and the wisdom with which he gave his remarks to this House.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have heard from the last couple of speakers the concern that they could not tell the difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives.

I would like to express one way that you can tell the difference. The hon. member for Ottawa South said that he was surprised that the NDP discussions have been bereft of any positive ideas that had any substance to add to this bill or to the discussion today. The difference between him and myself is that I am not the least bit surprised. This is something I think people from across the country are going to become more and more used to.

The discussion has referred to the International Monetary Fund many times today and the World Bank has also come into it. I wonder if the hon. members in the NDP understand the difference between the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and a food bank.

• (1440 )

I hope they would not go to a food bank asking for a mortgage or financing for one of their businesses, or any economic development.

For the information of those members, we have different kinds of banks for different functions. When it comes to trying to help the developing countries to develop their economies in the most positive and effective manner as possible, the International Monetary Fund has done an outstanding job.

I am really confused by what the members from the New Democratic Party are saying. I have to draw the conclusion that they feel that the International Monetary Fund is not doing an effective job and I assume they are prepared to withdraw their support from it.

I really ask the hon. member who has just spoken: does he not feel that the best thing that we can do, especially in these developing countries, is to try to provide them with the economy and the sustenance they require to provide the long–range economic support that the people of those countries need?

I guess the simplest way of saying it is we all know the best social program is a job. In that respect, I do not see any difference between the Third World countries and Canada. Providing all kinds of assistance, although very necessary and very noble does not necessarily go very far in providing them with a good economy that provides jobs.

The International Monetary Fund does that, and I would hope that the hon. member would support that.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to allude to my good friend's comments on the number of food banks, and the difference between food banks and other banks.

I think we should put it into perspective, relative to my criticisms of this government. Right now in Canada there are more food banks than there are McDonald's restaurants. That is really a hallmark of the success of the Tory policy.

It was this government that bailed out the Canadian Commercial Bank to the tune of $800 million, while the food banks continue. The hon. member has the nerve to stand up and talk about giving jobs so people can self–sustain.

The government pays off the banks when they go broke. Eight hundred million dollars. People out there in food banks went bankrupt. What is the government doing for them, giving them another hill of beans and promises?

Because of the wisdom of my comments, I call a quorum. There are not enough people in here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will count the members present.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I now see a quorum.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if I could point out to the House that the member who was speaking has demonstrated his blindness twice already today. Maybe he would like to try for three. He cannot even see the quorum when it exists.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I take the admonition from the member for Calgary West, and I realize that the Liberals saved the Tories again.

If anybody wants proof of a coalition, just watch the Liberals come in and save the government again. There is the evidence, but far be it from me to make a political comment in a Chamber like this.

If we bring politics into this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, there will be no holds barred, so I will refrain from making any political observation about the Liberals saving the Tories again. But could I say that, I would have.

I want to continue my remarks on questions raised by my good friend, the member for Cariboo. He wanted to make the analogy, as he said, about the various institutions that are available for loaning money. One of the institutions that I pointed out that exist in this country to help banks when they go broke is the Canadian taxpayer by way of the Conservative government.

If my friend is serious about the admonition of this House that the best way to create a better economy is indeed to have jobs, then what is the justification for bailing out the Canadian Commercial Bank? Why take $800 million of taxpayers' money and give it to the people who have the God-given right to go broke? I thought free enterprise meant taking a risk. The only people who take a risk in this system, in this way of loaning money, are the ordinary men and women of this country who end up at food banks, while the big banks are bailed out. I wanted to deal with that because he raised it.

As to the question of the options of the money, of course there are options for money. There are always conditions no matter what the options are, whether it is the International Monetary Fund or anywhere else. It is the conditions we are talking about.

The conditions are onerous when there is dictation down to the recipient, rather than listening to the request from the recipient and going along with their own indigenous economic needs, rather than imposing our own ideas that do not work too well for us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Is the House ready for the question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first question is on the motion of Mr. Reid. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

[Motion agreed to]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore the question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I call it three o'clock?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at one o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

At 2.49 p.m. the House adjourned.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine) that Bill C-225, an act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of members of the House of Commons), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

And on the amendment of Mr. Funk:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-225, an act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of members of the House of Commons), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the bill withdrawn and the subject-matter referred to the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations."

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the House today on this item of Private Members' Business, a bill put forward by the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine in relation to the Public Service Employment Act.

The thrust of the bill is one which most people would be content with, that is, it attempts to provide some degree of security of employment for individuals who are employed or become employed with members of Parliament and it provides a mechanism whereby, under certain conditions, employees in the year after they work for members of Parliament, can find their way into Public Service employment.

It is worth pointing out that other employees of members, who happen to be ministers in the government or the Leader of the Opposition, now, under the Public Service Employment Act, can be hired and taken into the Public Service, with priority over others, upon their termination.

• (1310 )

The difficulty, and it is a significant difficulty, that I and my colleagues have with this bill is that it sets up a very obvious distinction between employees of members of Parliament, who are themselves competent, and everyone else in the country who would be, who wants to be or who wishes to apply for a position in the Public Service.

What the bill actually does is to wedge or shoehorn into the Public Service those individuals who for whatever reason find themselves unemployed, including because of their member with whom they are employed not being re-elected. It shoehorns them or wedges them into the Public Service.

We in Canada take great pride in our Public Service. We have a a very professional, competent Public Service right across this country which prides itself on being non-political, very specialized and dedicated. The stream of new recruits into the Public Service stays the healthiest if that stream of new blood comes from the public at large.

What this bill does is take a competent group of individuals, the staff people of members of Parliament, and provides them with a privilege to continue on in the employment of the Public Service.

We have three conditions stated under which that could occur. The three conditions are that the staff member has worked with a member of Parliament for three years, that he or she qualified while working with him or her to be a public servant and finally, that he or she enter the Public Service within a year after the termination of employment.

We do not have a problem with individuals who are a part of the Public Service who leave it to work with a member of Parliament or a minister's office and to take a leave of absence for that purpose and then go back to the Public Service. That happens now. I think it functions reasonably well.

I do not know whether there are practical problems that exist in that field, but that particular mechanism appears to serve public servants well now. It serves MPs, ministers and other functionaries in the House of Commons, but this bill goes much further than that.

It provides an additional privilege to employees of MPs in the House of Commons to seek secure employment with the Public Service immediately following their employment with an MP.

I want to address one context in which this bill should be seen. That is the attempt by the government now to radically change and update the Public Service. It flies by the name Public Service 2000. In that process, there has been shown clearly to be a real need on the part of the government to consult more broadly with the Public Service. It has failed to do that.

I am of the view that we in the House of Commons, while desiring very much to be fair to our employees and to be fair to the Public Service, should not be undertaking a wedge mechanism such as this bill without consulting extensively with the Public Service Commission and and the employee associations and unions that operate there.

That is one significant omission in terms of this bill and within the context of reform within the Public Service. It is a shame that that has not occurred. I know there are some who would say: "Let us send this bill to committee and work with it from there", but I believe very firmly that the bill should have started with a base of consultation and then moved into the House of Commons. The New Democratic Party member who proposed this amendment has failed to do so, oddly enough, with the Public Service sector and the union sector. It is an unfortunate omission.

As a result, we commend positive consultative initiatives in Public Service 2000. Perhaps some day in the future this might be addressed. This is a mechanism which perhaps should be addressed in the future, but we on this side of the House feel that we cannot support it at this time.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am a little concerned about my party's position on this bill. I can remember when we were in power from 1980 to 1984. I can also remember many good, hard working and loyal people. They did not work for ministers. I was fortunate. I worked for a Prime Minister. However, there were many good people who worked for members of Parliament. When we were not returned to office, naturally many of these assistants to members of Parliament were out on the street.

When a new government takes power and you go and knock on the door of the member of Parliament, first you are asked for your c.v. If you said "I am Dennis Mills. I worked in the Langevin Block for four years and would like to work in your office, Mr. Paproski"—I should say you would be one of the exceptions, Mr. Speaker—I can tell you right now you would be out of business.

This bill is a good one in that it encourages people to work for members of Parliament. It is almost an incentive. I would like to see people have experience with members of Parliament before they even qualify to enter the Public Service. That is the real test as to whether or not a person has the endurance, the courage, the passion, and the commitment to put up with what is required to do the work that we have to do in this House, in committees, and in other places.

I am nervous that reverse discrimination will develop if we do not support this bill. In 1984 many of my friends were good, hard working public servants who happened to work in members' offices, providing secretarial, support services, et cetera. However, because they were with the Liberal government at that time they were not given the opportunity to work on the government side. There is a natural element of trust involved here. If Chrysler advertising uses one firm, Ford does not tend to use the same one. That is just a basic, practical fact of life.

This bill, as I understand it, relates to persons who have served members of Parliament well. Obviously members of Parliament would not keep the person around for three years if they were not doing a good job. Working for a member of Parliament, especially in opposition, is certainly not nine to five, Monday to Friday. It is a tough job. We can never thank members of our support staff enough for the extra time and hours they put in.

If I lost my seat I would hate to think that people had no other opportunity in this city after working their guts out for me for three or four years because they happened to work for a Liberal. I think they are a natural for the Public Service of Canada. It should almost be a prerequisite. I do not see it as any special wedge.

When we talk about a stream of new blood, I think the Public Service should welcome the new blood that would come into the Public Service after working in an office of a member of Parliament. When one goes to work in the Public Service, one might go to work for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of Communications or the Department of Employment and Immigration and ones work tends to be singular; but when one works for a member of Parliament, one never knows from one hour to the next what issue one has to face. Assistants to members of Parliament should be supported if after an election they opt for a Public Service job. I for one think that they should be given that opportunity, so I support this bill.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to the amendment since I have already spoken on the principal motion. I want to make it absolutely clear that there is certainly some misunderstanding in some people's minds about what this amendment is all about.

It refers the subject matter of the bill to committee for further study and essentially withdraws the bill. I am not sure it is entirely proper to withdraw a bill we are debating, to withdraw every single word of it and still assume that we have the bill before us for debate. Nonetheless, that is the motion, and I presume it has been ruled in order.

It is important to point out to my colleague who has just spoken what the bill does. The subject matter that he endorses is not to give staff of members of Parliament a chance at being employed in the Public Service but to give them priority over all others being employed in the Public Service.

It is important to recognize that the amendment to this bill asks that it be referred to committee. It has been brought forward with no consultations with the unions. We as a party have taken a very strong stand against the whole process of PS 2000, reform of the Public Service, because there has been no involvement of the unions and of the front line workers in developing the recommendations of the PS 2000 amendments to legislation and amendments to administrative procedures, which will substantially affect the working lives of a quarter of a million Canadians. It would be inconsistent for us to endorse, even in principle, this bill. We are now being asked to refer it to a committee so that it can be brought forward, possibly, as a somewhat amended piece of legislation.

I appreciate the difficult situation in which people are placed to work for members of Parliament, the immeasurable skills, both personal and technical, that they bring to that kind of employment, and the immense learning that they go through in a variety of fields. That would be helpful to the Public Service if they were there as employees.

However, many of those people are hired on the basis of their political affiliation with us, the right to be appointed to the public service on a priority basis, rather than on any objective assessment of merit. I do not think a bill which gives people priority in hiring over others within the Public Service who may be looking for a promotion to a position is a just bill. It is not something that is based on liberal principles of a federal Public Service based on opportunities for hiring, for promotion, and for transfers founded on one's ability, not on who one happens to know.

The member has said that it is important that people who have come to work for us have an opportunity to be employed in this city. It is evident from that comment that he still believes that most job opportunities in this region are in the Public Service. That is not true and has not been for many decades now. Less than 20 per cent of the employment in the Ottawa–Carleton region is in the Public Service.

It is vital to recognize that in the last few years, as a result of the downsizing program of the federal government and as a result of assuming that it can make scapegoats out of the Public Service, thousands of people have lost their jobs. Some 25,000 people have been affected by downsizing. Many of those people have worked for the Public Service, not for two or three years but for 10, 20, or 30 years. They find themselves unemployed at a time when seeking a new job is extremely difficult.

If anybody deserves priority over others to be put into a vacant position in the Public Service, it is somebody who has shown that kind of loyalty over decades, not someone who has come to work in the excitement and the political environment of Parliament Hill. They often come here as a political friend of a member and have not, with all respect, demonstrated the long-term commitment of many people who are now losing their jobs.

The government likes to say about people who lose their jobs that everybody has been accommodated and that mostly it has been through attrition. That is not the case at all. There are well over 20,000 people who have been disrupted, dislocated from their jobs, forced to accept a lesser job at a lesser salary, or left without a job. This is at a time when they are still paying a mortgage and they have two or three children in university. Their opportunities for re-employment are very slim, simply because of their age and their level of experience which makes them a more expensive person to employ for any other firm or for any Crown corporation, for that matter.

In light of all that, a bill that gives priority to our staff over all others is badly timed, to say the least, and is probably inappropriate at any time. We would be prepared to look at other options for providing some measure of security to parliamentary staff working in members' offices but not to disrupt career public servants, many of whom are now without a job, to accommodate our own staff.

• (1330 )

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr.Speaker, I have spoken on the bill, obviously, since it is my bill and I introduced it. I also encouraged another colleague of mine to move an amendment to the bill which would refer the subject matter to a committee. The reason I did this was for many of the reasons put forward by the previous speaker.

When this bill was first debated in 1984, it was introduced by a then Liberal member of Parliament who also happened to be the parliamentary secretary to a minister. The government at that time was not adverse to doing something about employees of members of Parliament.

Contrary to what the hon. member says, all people who work for members of Parliament are not necessarily political friends of the MP. I never met the people who work in my office before I hired them. If you take a look at the people on the Hill, there are many who have worked for many different members of Parliament for many, many years.

The question I want to address, in just a minute or two, is the very one that the previous speaker addressed. Everyone recognizes that staff who work for members of Parliament have absolutely no rights at all. They do not have the same rights as any other employee in this country, and that is to join a union of their choice. There is no legislation to prevent them from doing that, and that is not what the bill argues. But what I would argue is that members of Parliament who have participated in this debate have all expressed a view that they are sympathetic to the position in which staff of members of Parliament very often find themselves.

What I am saying is that the House should do with this bill what it agreed to do in 1984, that is, refer the subject matter to a committee to allow members of Parliament to have a fuller discussion on the merits of the problem. It would allow staff members of MPs to have a say and to express their concerns and it would allow any pertinent union to come before a committee to look at the matter.

The principle we are trying to address concerns the rights of staff who happen to work for a member of Parliament. They should have the same rights as every other Canadian employee; that is, the right to have some say about the working conditions while they are on the Hill working for an MP. That right should be recognized by members of Parliament, and Parliament should accord to those employees the same rights as every other Canadian who works off the Hill. I do not think that is unreasonable or too much to demand. I only find it regrettable that one or two members in the House during this debate tried to raise the issue as a partisan political question. I can quote the hon. member who spoke before me in The Hill Times.

I find it strange that I have never, as long as I have been in this House, found a Private Members' Bill attacked in such a way that even the motivation of the hon. member who put forward the Private Members' Bill has been questioned in the way in which it has been. I find that regrettable and I do not think it adds to either this debate or to the relationships between MPs in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

During the ringing of the bells:

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a), the division stands deferred until seven o'clock p.m. later this day. Therefore, I will suspend the sitting of the House until two o'clock this day.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 1.40 p.m.

COMMUNITY RADIO

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it seems that every time there is a budget cut, social and cultural programs are the first to suffer. What is happening to the subsidy program for community radio stations is no exception.

The Department of the Secretary of State's community radio stations assistance program, designed to establish French-language community stations in minority and Acadian communities, is the only source of federal funding on which these stations can draw for capital investment. This year's funds have been exhausted, which means that community radio stations in my riding la radio de l'Épinette noire and la radio communautaire Kapnord Inc. will not be able to develop at the same rate or may have to close down altogether.

Acadian and French-language minority communities are increasingly threatened by assimilation. The people in my riding feel that community radio is the best way for these communities to counter this threat. Community radio stations have made it their objective to reduce assimilation by giving French-speaking communities in Northern Ontario a chance to hear programs that reflect their local values.

INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate International Human Rights Day, the 42nd anniversary of the UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

As a Canadian, I am proud of this country's past record on human rights issues. We are all proud. However, recently this record has fallen into some disrepute. In October, the UN human rights committee unanimously condemned Canada for failing to live up to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Our record with respect to native peoples and refugee claimants came under particular fire from the UN.

The Mulroney government has failed to introduce long promised changes to the Human Rights Act here at home to protect gays and lesbians and disabled people against discrimination.

The government cut off funding without explanation for an independent human rights conference of equality seeking groups held each November for the past three years under the Court Challenges Program. Instead, it has organized a conference that is going on here in Ottawa at the moment by invitation only.

Surely, the present government should spend more energy preparing its long promised human rights legislation and less time on public relations exercises such as this week's conference.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, Canada's embargo on grain shipments to Iraq has eliminated our fifth largest export market. Canadians support the sanctions and rightly so. However, it is costing farmers hundreds of millions of dollars in lost grain sales. Farmers are paying the price.

Farm fuel prices are rapidly climbing as a result of the situation in the Middle East. This, combined with high mortgage costs, dwindling markets and low grain prices, is placing a severe economic burden on the agricultural community.

The uncertainty of the outcome of the GATT negotiations begs the question: How long will the United States and the European Common Market continue their subsidy wars? While Canadians enjoy an inexpensive food policy, farmers are paying the price.

I urge the federal and provincial governments to jointly announce at an early date new initiatives to address the plight of the farmers.

TRIBUTE TO NATHALIE GIGUÈRE

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, swimmer Nathalie Giguère and her coach, Benoît Lebrun, were in the spotlight at the 1990 Athlete of the Year Gala in Quebec City. For her performance, Nathalie received the Memoris d'or, while her coach was named Coach of the Year.

At 17, this extraordinary swimmer from Charlesbourg won the gold medal for the 200 meter breast stroke in 1990 at the Commonwealth Games. At the present time, Nathalie is doing high-altitude training at Los Alamos, New Mexico, in preparation for the world championships in Perth, Australia.

A talented and disciplined athlete and a hard worker, Nathalie has always been thankful to those who over the years, helped her to develop this talent: her parents, her team and her coach.

Nathalie: Charlesbourg, Quebec City, the province of Quebec and Canada are proud of you and the Memoris d'or 1990 award which you truly deserved. Congratulations and the best of luck at the next world championships!

BILL C-21

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern about Bill C-21, the government's unemployment insurance bill.

It seems that the government did have the last laugh on Canadians after all. I refer specifically to the free trade debate. How many times did we hear that social programs, in Canada, were a sacred trust that would not be sacrificed? How many times did we hear that they would not be included in the negotiations? Did not the Prime Minister himself publicly make reference to his mother and say he would do nothing to infringe upon our social programs?

Let us look at the government's unemployment insurance bill. With this measure the government has withdrawn all together from contributing to the UI fund. This means that it is now up to the employee and employer to make up the difference. In these times of rising unemployment, millions of Canadians who genuinely need help will have a tougher time getting it. Moreover, how long does the government think it will take the business community to claim that it is at a disadvantage because companies in the U.S. do not shoulder the same costs? Perhaps our pension funds and Old Age Security program will be the next items up for bids. If the price is right, this government has shown that it will sell anything.

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS COUNCIL FOR THE GREEN CROSS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that an important step in protecting the environment will be taken when the International Business Council for the Green Cross meets in Moscow on January 16, 1991.

This council was created by the Global Forum of Spiritual and Parliamentary Leaders on Human Survival. The Green Cross was established in response to a challenge proposed by President Gorbachev to involve the business community in the forum's activities. It is designed to offer help to countries suffering from ecological troubles. The creation of such a body is important since it provides forward-looking businessmen a forum in which they can share ideas for a greener future.

This forthcoming meeting in Moscow will bring together prominent businessmen. It will be co-chaired by Mr. A. W. Klausen, former head of the World Bank, and leading Canadian businessman, Mr. Albert Reichman.

THE LATE SENATOR HENRY HICKS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, early this morning we received the very sad news that former senator and Nova Scotia Premier, Henry Hicks, along with his wife, Rosalie, died in an automobile accident.

Senator Hicks was a Nova Scotian of genuine passion and great intellect, who enjoyed a long and distinguished career in the arts and in the public service of his province and the country he loved so much.

Mr. Speaker, he was a Liberal early in his life and started campaigning for Liberal causes in his teens. A Rhodes scholar, Senator Hicks was first elected to the Nova Scotia House of Assembly at the age of 30. He was a cabinet minister at the age of 34 and premier of this great province at the age of 39, in 1954.

Upon leaving active political life, he later served as Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science at Dalhousie University and, thereafter became president of this very prestigious university.

In 1972, he was appointed to the Senate of Canada and retired earlier this year.

The measure of this man was enhanced by his warmth and by his personal approach toward the people and the province he loved so much.

Mr. Speaker, I extend on behalf of our party our sincere sympathy to his family and all those who mourn the untimely death of both Mr. and Mrs. Hicks.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Ken Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, last week in Brussels delegations from more than 100 nations witnessed the apparent inflexibility of the European Community on the question of agriculture. EC politicians appear to fear the fact that they need to change their common agricultural policy, or the CAP. The CAP continues to wreak havoc with producers around the world in countries like Canada, Australia, Argentina, all countries of the Cairns Group, as well as many very poor Third World nations.

• (1410 )

Let us hope this near collapse of the GATT talks will give EC leadership pause for reflection. Can they really afford to thumb their noses at the rest of the world over an issue of such relatively minor economic importance in their own nation states?

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance first came to power, he promised to make the tax system fair. Instead, he has padded the pockets of his rich friends and picked the pockets of the poor.

Six years later he still claims he has made the tax system more fair in this country. Is it fair that those making over $250,000 a year pay less income tax while those making under $15,000 pay more income tax now?

The Minister of Finance must have a funny notion of what is fair because over 80 per cent of Canadians say he has failed in the most recent Gallup poll. Even most supporters of the Conservative Party said in the Gallup poll he has failed to make the tax system more fair.

The height of unfairness is the government's GST which will increase the burden on all Canadians, particularly those who are poor in our country. When will the Minister of Finance wake up from his dream world which is a nightmare to ordinary Canadians, stop playing Scrooge, withdraw the GST and give ordinary Canadians something to celebrate during this Christmas season?

INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, today we are privileged to be joining people from around the world in celebrating International Human Rights Day, as well as marking the 42nd anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

This year, our commemoration coincides with the National Conference on Human Rights and Canadian Solidarity being held in Ottawa at this very time. The conference is being hosted by the Minister for Multiculturalism and Citizenship and is focusing on the importance of human rights in the nation-building process. Representatives from every sector of Canadian society, in every field of human rights, are taking part.

Canada has long been considered a world leader in the area of human rights. In 1986 we became the first nation to be presented with the Nansen Medal by the United Nations in recognition of our efforts to provide refugee relief.

The present government is keenly aware that human rights continues to be a vitally important issue for Canadians. Here at home there are many issues to address; literacy, the environment, the rights of women. For example, it was in recognition of the rights of children that Canadian signed the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child last May.

Prime Minister Mulroney also co-sponsored the first World Summit for Children at the United Nations in September.

Canadians have indeed made significant strides in ensuring that human rights and freedoms are the foundation stone of our citizenship.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my constituents want me to debunk three myths being perpetrated by the NDP and their friends in the media.

The first is that there are only two sides to an issue, the right side and the wrong side, and that they are never wrong. The more we look, the less we see there.

The second is that they have all the answers on the environment. Premier Bob Rae stood at the Keele Valley landfill site and said: "No more expansion". Now, his minister says expansion could take place and without an environmental assessment.

The third is that the NDP has the only leader in the House with a smile on her face. Well, Mr. Speaker, that myth will be history tonight when the electors of Beauséjour have made their choice. When Jean Chrétien enters this House, the smiles on this side of the House are going to stretch all the way from here to 24 Sussex Drive.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, the recent lack of balance in television news coverage of the CBC reorganization is of concern to me and should be of concern to more Canadians. Biased reporting can harm Canadian unity by fanning the fires of regional anger. There are those in television who asked the questions: Why were the following issues not addressed and the following questions not asked.

Radio covers all communities, both urban and rural, and is an effective way of serving the regional interests. Yet I heard no mention of the conscious decision by CBC to retain these radio regional routes.

No one asked on behalf of the thousands of communities which do not have community TV service why they are less deserving. Why should the people who live in these communities be picking up the tab? Why was no one asking the representatives of the communities who do enjoy local service why they were not suggesting ways that they could pick up the tab? Too many predicted that the loss of service to these 11 communities could damage national unity. Why? How? It is not obvious to me. Why was it so easily accepted by the journalists?

Unfortunately we live in tough times, and tough times mean tough choices. I commend the CBC management for facing its responsibility and making those decisions.

THE SENATE

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, once again the Senate has brought disrepute upon itself and the Upper House has hit a new low.

Last week Liberal Senator George van Roggen attempted to entertain his fellow senators by telling sexist jokes. It is disgusting that an allegedly respectable individual, a privileged man, could use his privilege to demean all women by reinforcing sexual stereotypes. Once again we have men who should know better contributing to the inequality in our society.

Sexist jokes are part of the control mechanism to keep women in their place, to reinforce the view that women are here for men's use and abuse. We are not. The women of Canada see nothing funny in this locker-room mentality. It is always offensive, but it is inexcusable coming from a Liberal senator in the Parliament of Canada.

For him to make these remarks the day after the memorial services marking the Montreal massacre demonstrates the depth of his insensitivity.

New Democrats have called on the justice minister to have mandatory gender sensitivity training for the judiciary. It is obvious that these sensitivity sessions should also be extended to the Senate. What Senator van Roggen should consider today is an apology.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has exceeded her time.

HOUSEHOLD MAILERS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on February 26, 1990, after Canada's Minister of Finance brought down his Budget, I decided to do my bit and take the advice given to Canadians: tighten your belts. I believe I have made a contribution towards improving the state of the economy, especially by reducing my household mailers from four to one, and by no longer mailing 2,000 Christmas cards to my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, the cheapest way to send those greetings today is to speak directly to the people of Abitibi and wish them a Merry Christmas and a Happy and prosperous New Year.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE GREEN PLAN

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

We understand that tomorrow, after months and months of broken promises and more and more delays, the government will finally be announcing its so-called green plan on the environment. I predict and I know that Canadians will be disappointed once again.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister admit today that rather than the $5 billion comprehensive plan originally promised, the plan will be for billions of dollars less and it will not even begin to be implemented until months and months from Toronto—months and months from tomorrow.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I guess politics is something on the minds of all of us, Mr. Speaker.

Isn't this so-called green plan really to improve the political environment for this government and not the real environment for Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition will have to wait just one more day. I hope that he will be patient, because I am sure the green plan that will be announced by my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, will be very well worth waiting for.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first this government began dismantling VIA Rail, then the post office, then Air Canada, and last week the CBC. Now it is clear the government is starting to wimp out on its commitments on the environment.

Why won't the Deputy Prime Minister admit that this green plan has nothing in it on the subject of municipal infrastructure, the need of cities and towns across this country to have funding from the federal government to help them fight pollution by improving their water and sewage systems?

Why won't the government listen to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and recognize that this has to be in its green plan and that we need a national program to deal with what is a national problem that needs help for solution from this government?

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition was a member of a government that had been in office for 20 to 25 years. It had every opportunity in the world to put in place an infrastructure program, and all it did was reduce spending to the provinces and to the municipalities.

We are not going to get into a debate on the green plan. The hon. member will have ample opportunity to examine and comment on it tomorrow, and I am sure he will not be disappointed.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the government has already misled the Canadian people about its policies on the environment. Funding for the Green Plan will be far below the $5 billion originally committed. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why his government refuses to upgrade municipal infrastructures and deal responsibly with the people of Quebec. And will he tell Canadians when his government will finally realize that the environment is important to the well-being of the entire country?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary is identical to the second question, and therefore my answer is the same as that given by the Deputy Prime Minister.

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister will know that every Canadian municipality across this country has called upon the Government of Canada to cost share in a $15 billion program. Last night I saw and I read the green plan, and there is nothing in that plan which addresses that fundamental problem.

Why is the Government of Canada wimping out with regard to supporting our municipalities concerning water and sewer? Is that not a fundamental program of fighting for the environment?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would think that members of the opposition should join with Canadians everywhere in applauding this government for putting into place a program which will be announced tomorrow. It is a long-term environmental action plan, the first such program ever announced in this country, the sort of program that does not exist in very many countries in the world.

Furthermore, what is so important about this program is that it has been put together as a result of consultation with Canadians from coast to coast. It will be the kind of program tomorrow which responsible Canadians, wherever they may be—and maybe even the opposition will join in—will applaud this government for putting in place, the kind of long-term plan we have long needed.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In view of that answer and in view of the fact that the parliamentary secretary has now admitted that there is no money for municipal infrastructure, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the green plan has nothing with regard to a 20 per cent reduction by the year 2005 of national 1988 $CO_2$ emission levels, why it fails to have a Canadian environmental bill of rights, why it fails to have a national carbon tax, why it fails to bring western provinces into a national acid rain reduction program, and why the Government of Canada has reduced the moneys for the green plan from $5 billion to $3 billion, a 40 per cent reduction? Why?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that seems to happen around here on Monday when it has been a quiet weekend is that the opposition parties do the same thing that our friends in the gallery do: they write speculative stories about what will come tomorrow because they cannot wait in anticipation.

I would suggest, therefore, that the hon. member show some patience. We will be addressing this issue tomorrow when a specific program will be put in place. I know the hon. member will be pleased by what he sees.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

This is the government that last week offered special briefings on the green plan to select members of the media but offers members of Parliament a lockup tomorrow morning. Tomorrow is going to be a public relations exercise to try to cover up the possible election of Jean Chrétien later today. We know what is going on.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am the one who had a tooth pulled this morning. It looks like the Liberals are a little nervous.

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister because the legacy of this government is business profits first, environment last. Across this country our forests are falling to clear-cuts and they are not being replanted. Our air, water, and land are becoming increasingly polluted. Since the process began $5 billion of new money was promised, a promise we now know will be broken tomorrow because of the briefings given to the press last week. But some promises must be kept, and I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if they will be kept.

Would he confirm the dates for the implementation of specific targets and timetables for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and acid precipitation. While he is at it, would he confirm the dates for implementation of a natural resources inventory on the state of our environment and on the state of pollution of our environment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is getting carried away with his presumptions. I would suggest to him that he wait until tomorrow when the document is presented. He will have a chance to have looked at it, and then he can comment on it in a knowledgeable fashion.

Certainly it would be premature and totally disregarding of the institution of Parliament to have the debate on the green plan one day before it is officially unveiled.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, that answer would have some value and some validity if the government had not pre-briefed certain select media last week before letting members of the House know what is in the plan.

My supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister as well.

[Translation]

Even if the Plan doesn't have the money that was promised and in fact confirmed—

[English]

An hon. member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, I am not allowed to speak French now.

[Translation]

As I was saying, at a briefing session given last week to a select group of journalists, the minister can still table a bill to protect the environment. Could the minister give the House the assurance that an environmental charter of rights will be included in the Green Plan he will table tomorrow?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think all members will have to wait until tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows, because everyone who has studied the issue of national parks in this country knows it, that if we do not complete the national parks system by the year 2000 our opportunity to do so will have been forgone.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm what has been confirmed prior to today and prior to tomorrow, that the national parks system will be completed by the year 2000 and that two new national parks per year will be created between now and the year 2000?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that this government has made a commitment to the preservation of Canada's environment in the form of national parks, a commitment which exceeds that of any other administration in Canadian history.

I can furthermore confirm that that commitment will be kept.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Skeena and the NDP for their confidence in the candidacy of Mr. Jean Chrétien today.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Foster: It is nice to see them on side.

I want to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture who knows that Canadian farmers are the big losers in the GATT negotiations and the suspension of those negotiations last Friday. For instance, U.S. farmers are largely insulated from the impact of these by the U.S. farm bill, whereas Canadian farmers, especially those grain producers in western Canada, have had their support programs cut by 50 per cent during the last two years.

What is the Deputy Prime Minister going to do for western producers and other producers across this country in the face of the collapse of the GATT negotiations and the suspension?

• (1430 )

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear to the hon. member and to all hon. members that this round of Uruguay negotiations have not been suspended. In fact they are continuing and will continue into the first part of the new year in the hope and expectation that there can be some resolution to the very difficult agricultural file. To suggest that the talks have been suspended or that they have collapsed is certainly premature.

We, as a nation, led by the Minister for International Trade, and our very competent and able negotiators, will be there to contribute to that process in every way, shape or form. We did indicate, and I have indicated before, that even if we were to succeed in all aspects of the GATT round, there still would be the need to put in place some long-term solutions, particularly in the area of safety nets.

I did have the opportunity to meet with the provincial ministers of agriculture to advance the negotiations on the GRIP and NISA proposal, which is the long-term safety net and stabilization program. I am satisfied that progress is being made and I hope that we will be able to achieve a conclusion of all the outstanding details within the next week or 10 days.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government agreed to give the United States access to the Canadian market for ice-cream and yogurt after the GATT negotiations this fall. Now that the negotiations have been suspended, or at least put in limbo for the next several weeks, I want to know if the government plans to allow access for processed dairy products from the United States, like ice-cream and yogurt. If the government is going to do this, how is it going to see that Canadian producers survive because they do not have access to the U.S. market?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong in his assumption. We did not agree to give the United States access to the ice-cream and yogurt market. We did say that we would be prepared to sit down and negotiate, but it would have to be within the terms of the over-all objectives achieved through the MTN.

After all, we did lose a GATT panel on the issues. The hon. member is a great fan of the GATT in this particular case and I can assure him that we will not negotiate any access with the Americans until such time as the MTN is concluded. The hon. member knows as well that the position we advanced with regard to the Canadian agriculture position at the MTN was fully consistent with his goals and objectives and the goals and objectives of Canadian agriculture. It would be commensurate, and reciprocal with us getting access to the American market under their removal of the section 22 waiver.

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Last Friday, when he hoped that no one would notice, the Minister of Finance announced tax changes that have the effect of denying tax benefits worth $50 million to 100,000 residents of northern and isolated communities in Canada. Fifty thousand of those citizens of northern and isolated communities live in 572 communities on the island of Newfoundland. They have lost tax benefits worth thousands of dollars per family.

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is the following. How can the Government of Canada justify a northern and isolated tax regime that pays benefits to a Newfoundlander employed in Fort McMurray but denies benefits to a Newfoundlander unemployed in an isolated community like Harbour Deep that can only be reached during the winter months by helicopter? What kind of isolated and northern benefit regime is that?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the task force made a report in late 1989 with a recommendation of a single zone across Canada for tax benefits in northern and isolated communities.

At that time, tremendous consultation went on between the Minister of Finance and the affected communities from coast to coast.

The evidence presented to the task force and to the minister in his consultations which took place with various communities affected, was that the only way in which it was fair to give these benefits was, in fact, to do it in a zone and not community by community. Community by community was completely inequitable. It did not work.

In the case of Newfoundland itself, the only way it could possibly be given isolated benefits is on a community by community basis, which was recommended against by most people who appeared before the commission.

Therefore, the island of Newfoundland itself will not receive those benefits. Labrador will.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, what the member fails to say is that when the minister set up this commission and review, he said that its recommendations should be revenue neutral.

What he does not say is that the Government of Canada is saving $50 million on the backs of some of the poorest, most isolated people who live in this country.

I ask the question again, and I want the minister to consider it in the name of tax fairness. How is it fair to pay a northern tax benefit, supposedly predicated on the notion that it costs more to live in certain areas, to people who live in a low unemployment region like Fort McMurray that has an airport, hospital, educational facilities, regularly scheduled flights in and out, government facilities, and not pay a benefit to isolated communities that can only be reached by helicopter where unemployment is high and where services are non-existent?

How is that tax fairness? Fifty per cent of all the cuts nationally are in one province, the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Explain that.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the people who he is talking about do not pay taxes. If you don't pay taxes, you don't get a tax benefit from this system. A person has to be earning money and it has to be taxable income before he or she receives it.

The hon. member is just caterwauling at somebody else. He is not even listening to the answer. He is showboating again.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture.

In the meeting that he referred to in Brussels last week, he promised that he would bring in the third line of defence, cash grants and other income supports since GATT had been suspended.

The prairie pools had indicated at one point that there was a $1 billion shortfall in grain income for this year on the prairies alone. Does the minister agree with that assessment of income shortfall? Does he plan on an early payout, or will he continue to allow grain farmers to be driven out of business?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I repeat once again, this GATT round has not been suspended. It continues. Work will continue, particularly on the agricultural negotiations. It is hoped that eventually there will be a successful conclusion achieved. I say that to the hon. member, recognizing and I am sure appreciating his frustration over the fact that there was not more progress.

I indicated as well in answer to an earlier question that we are moving ahead with the establishment of a safety net and stabilization program which will provide for a gross revenue insurance protection plan as well as a net income stabilization plan. We are very close to putting that agreement in place.

It will be in place for the 1991–92 crop year. I have also indicated, and I repeat here to the hon. member, that when that is done, we will trigger the third line of defence, which will analyze the depth of moneys that are required to look at the debt situation and whatever restructuring may be required to look at inputs and a whole host of things.

• (1440 )

But there is a mechanism for that which involves the provincial governments, the federal government and the industry itself. We will use that mechanism to determine the level of assistance that may be required to supplement the GRIP and NISA proposal.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): The minister knows full well that Canadian grain farmers require assistance right now. The minister has indicated that he intends to bring in plans soon to begin the implementation of the farm safety needs program.

Will an immediate cash payment to grain farmers be part of that implementation program?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that this spring we provided $500 million worth of emergency cash assistance which was supplemented by the provinces.

We provided a cash flow enrichment program which provided interest–free loans on farm stored grain, which cost the federal government something in the order of $95 to $100 million.

We are putting in place the long–term GRIP and NISA program. We are triggering the third line of defence to see whatever assistance may be necessary to supplement that. I think that is a pretty full agenda. It demonstrates clearly that we are working with the provinces and with the producers to try to find the best programs that will not only meet the immediate need, but will, as well, provide a long–term solution, which I am sure the hon. member would welcome very much.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of multiculturalism and citizenship. Today is Human Rights Day. This government's record on human rights is abysmal. Just ask aboriginals, the disabled, visible minorities and others. Yet this government callously ignored the recommendations from both the Standing Committee on Human Rights and those of the human rights commissioner.

On this Human Rights Day, will this government agree to reconsider and adopt the recommendations contained in the standing committee report on human rights and the status of disabled persons?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased to receive the standing committee report. We did respond positively to the recommendations that were brought forward.

We have already begun a complete review of legislation. At least 12 pieces of legislation will have to be examined carefully and important amendments brought forward. We have already started that process.

We announced at the same time a post–censal survey for disabled, a very important process to help in our understanding of the gravity of the situation.

We immediately put forward a senior committee of deputy ministers chaired by the Under–Secretary of State to bring forward a strong cross–government commitment. I have a feeling that the standing committee may be saying something today. I will await their report with interest. We will respond in the appropriate way.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the chair of that standing committee will probably be reporting that the standing committee would like the minister to review the report, Sir.

The minister is presently co–chairing a human rights conference in Ottawa this very weekend. Human rights is about people who do not have a voice and yet this conference was by invitation only.

Given that many groups and individuals were denied access to this conference, will the minister explain whether this was censorship by mistake or by design?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, the doors were open; tickets or passes were not asked for. Indeed, there were many seats available for those who wanted to come and join us.

We did send out over 500 invitations across the country. We wanted to get a cross section of NGOs, academics, business leaders and people from the labour movement. We believe that we can do better. That is why we came together. We have important challenges facing us. They are new and emerging challenges. We are trying to build a partnership, a coalition. We are trying to build Canadian solidarity. I believe the member will recognize that, at least, today is the beginning. This opportunity to examine human rights in a very open manner will certainly mean that more people have a better understanding of what actually is taking place and what takes place around the world, as well.

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint–Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Quebec has lost 80,000 jobs in the past six months. According to the economists, there will be further job losses next year, including at least 40,000 in Quebec, for a total of 127,000. Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House today what measures he intends to take to find jobs for 127,000 Quebecers who will be jobless in 1991?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the full range of our job programs are available to Quebec. I am very proud to say that under Bill C–21, on which we will have some announcements to make in the next month or so, I am sure that the hon. member will be pleased to see the kinds of things we will be doing. For example, we have a number of programs for older workers, for social assistance recipients, and so on. I hope that he will applaud what we will be able to do.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint–Léonard): The following is a supplementary question, and it is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does she realize that in the Montreal region, some schools have not given exams in the past two weeks because some students don't have anything to eat, as a result of the policies concerning poor families which this government has created in the past six years? Exactly what does she intend to do, not through Bill C–21, but specifically for poor families in the Montreal area who can't feed their children? What does she intend to do?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have many programs that deal with poverty. The program designed for poor people under Bill C–21, the Canadian training strategy, will help fight poverty in Montreal and other Canadian cities.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. About 20 minutes ago, British Columbia's Minister of the Environment, John Reynolds, resigned as a result of some statements he made when he appeared before a parliamentary standing committee here, last Tuesday. He indicated, before the standing committee, that there would be full public hearings into Alcan's Kemano II project. When he returned to British Columbia, he attempted to reverse himself and has now subsequently resigned.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House whether or not he is aware of the circumstances that led to Mr. Reynolds' resignation, and whether or not he is now prepared to announce that the Government of Canada will conduct full, public hearings into Alcan's Kemano II project?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the differences which occurred in the committee last week between the hon. member and the minister, and which have subsequently been debated throughout the press in British Columbia, have nothing whatsoever to do with this House.

With respect to Kemano, itself, I can remind the hon. member, as was indicated on earlier occasions, that the project itself was studied. There was a panel which examined it very thoroughly and the public had an opportunity to participate in that process. It is the opinion of the government and the opinion of the relevant authorities in the province of British Columbia that the agreement that was signed with Alcan was consistent with the spirit of the EARP guidelines order.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I hope the government does not dig a hole any deeper than it already has. Five Ministers of Fisheries in a row promised full public hearings into Alcan's Kemano II project. The present Prime Minister, in writing, promised that there would be full public hearings into the Kemano II project.

On October 12, this government exempted the Kemano II project from full public hearings, the only project in Canadian history ever exempted.

Having learned from Rafferty–Alameda, having learned from the Oldman, and hopefully having learned in relation to the James Bay II and Point Aconi, would the Deputy Prime Minister show some justice and show some leadership on the day before the Green Plan and announce there will be full public hearings into the largest hydro project presently under way in Canada?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

• (1450 )

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this project has been the subject of a detailed examination of fish, fish habitat, and other environmental issues.

I remember, as a member of Parliament, sitting in the House and seeing that member congratulate the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans when he introduced the Kemano measures that were announced when the agreement was signed with the province of British Columbia. It is nice today for this NDPer to sit on both sides of the fence, but he should come clean with Canada and tell the people that he approved of that a couple of years ago.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

POVERTY

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The minister knows that the new reality in Canada is that 1.4 million people are using food banks and 40 per cent of those people are children. The minister, when asked about this in the House in the past, has given a lecture on federal–provincial relations, but the Canada Assistance Plan, which the federal government operates, has guaranteed adequate assistance to those in need. That is a guarantee made by the Parliament of Canada.

Can the minister tell us today what his government means by adequate assistance when so many people cannot feed themselves, clothe themselves, or house themselves?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am pleased to do precisely that, Mr. Speaker. The commitment of the government is to do everything it can to eliminate poverty in Canada.

During the tenure of this government important progress has been made in terms of lifting Canadians out of poverty and, as long as any Canadian remains in poverty, it will not be satisfied. The government wants to see continued measures being taken to give poor people the ability to support themselves. It will continue as well to have in place a social safety net which will provide for those people who are most in need.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

As the minister knows, one of the major contributors to poverty in Canada is the low minimum wage. If a single mother with one child in my constituency in Winnipeg worked for the federal government at $4 an hour minimum wage, she would have to work 87.5 hours a week just to reach the poverty level as defined by the government.

The minister has not changed the rate of minimum wage for the federal government since 1986. What is the government waiting for? When will we hear about a new minimum wage for the poor of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour and Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the question of the federal minimum wage has been a focus for concern for quite some time, but we must remember that the number of Canadians effected by federal minimum wage regulations is between 1 and 1.5 per cent. We are considering the circumstances under which the minimum wage, which now applies almost exclusively to part-time employees, might have the effect of eliminating those positions instead of improving the situation of Canadians, thus making matters worse instead of better.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Agriculture). The GATT talks in the Uruguay Round are deadlocked. The Europeans don't seem to want to budge from their position on farm subsidies, and the Americans' strategy to isolate the EEC was not successful. My question is this: Considering what is at stake in these negotiations for the economy of this country, and especially agriculture in Quebec and in Abitibi-Témiscamingue, does Canada intend to take the necessary steps to again try and break this deadlock?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware of the fact that the Canadian government made every effort last week to have a favourable conclusion to the Uruguay Round. Negotiations are continuing. They have not stopped. They will continue in January and February.

I would like to point out that Canadian farm producers from all parts of the country, west, centre and east, have remained united behind the Canadian position. Furthermore, the Premiers and Ministers of Agriculture and International Trade of all the provinces have remained solidly behind the Canadian position, and I believe this should help us while we are waiting for future developments in early January and February, when further progress can be made. Mr. Speaker, all this is thanks to the fact that this government has always consultated with farm producers and Agriculture ministers in this country. That is how we govern and that is how we will continue to govern.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. The minister will know that one way to break out of the poverty cycle is through improved education. In spite of that, the minister and his department are withholding funds for post-secondary education for the Inuit communities of northern Labrador.

My question very simply is: Why? Why now, when unemployment is one the rise? Why now, when education could be a passport to a new future? Why is the minister withholding funds under a legally binding agreement with the Inuit of Labrador that would help those Labrador Inuit young people?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member raised this question. I want to assure him that the government is not withholding funds. In fact, we are committed and I am delighted to say the enrolment in our post-secondary program is exceeding all expectations. This is a piece of very good news across Canada. Aboriginal young people are going on to university and seeking higher education. Our funding proposals for the coming year were not adequate to deal with the demand. At the same time, we had to have the enrolment reports completed and submitted as a basis for setting the budgets.

I am assured by my officials that adequate funding will be made available to the Labrador Inuit Association and all other first nations in Canada who require adequate assistance for post-secondary education.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the problem is the question of timing. Unless the funding is available now, those students will not be able to be guaranteed their seats in this coming semester. It is a question of timing. The funds have to be there now.

Will the minister commit today to ensure that funding is there for those Labrador Inuit young people who want to enrol in this coming semester after Christmas? Will he guarantee that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, indeed, I can do that.

In fact, the enrolment of Inuit post-graduate students and the university students from the Labrador area has doubled from 85 to over 160 in the present year. We have made commitments confirmed in the last day or two to the effect that funding to the end of January is fully committed and the balance will be available before the end of the school term.

FORESTRY

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the Minister of Forestry.

The Commons sub-committee on forestry has recently presented its report to Parliament, entitled The Forests of Canada—The Federal Role. The main thrust of that report calls for a national planning vision for Canada's forests, in both economic and environmental perspectives, to be convened through the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers in a partnership approach between federal and provincial governments. I understand that the federal Minister of Forestry is chairman-designate of the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers for the coming year. My question to him is two-fold.

Does the minister subscribe to and support the proposal from the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers to lead in developing such a vision plan for sustainable forestry development in Canada, and what steps will he be taking in the coming months as chairman of the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers to initiate such a long-term planning process for both economic and environmental goals in Canada's forests?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, I can report to the House that we have just completed a very successful meeting with the council of ministers in Halifax.

I can report an excellent spirit of co-operation and a very sincere commitment to the long-term plans and strategies and the principles of sustainable development. Naturally, we would want to focus our attention on the collection and building of a better data base.

As well, I can report to the hon. member that we have committed ourselves to a program last year of holding five regional forums that will lead to a new forest sector strategy by 1992.

In this connection, I would like to congratulate the hon. member and his colleagues for a report that they have just published which will be very helpful in the pursuit of these objectives.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. The Quebec government announced on Friday that it wants to levy deterrence or user fees despite clear evidence that such fees serve only to keep the poor from seeking medical treatment.

Under the Canada Health Act, the federal government can withhold federal medicare payments in an amount equal to that collected by user fees.

• (1500 )

My question to the minister is this. Will the minister say that he is prepared to uphold the Canada Health Act and say no to deterrent fees anywhere in Canada, whether that be B.C., Alberta or Quebec?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will know the Canada Health Act specifically forbids extra billing.

I have asked that my officials get in touch with the Government of Quebec to seek information with regard to the proposals made last Friday by the minister of health of Quebec. We will be looking at those closely. We will be also drawing to the attention of the Quebec our determination to ensure that the principles underlying the Canada Health Act are fully respected.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to hear that the minister intends to uphold the Canada Health Act. However, the minister knows that his power to enforce national standards become weaker each day as the federal share of medicare costs decline. At the present rate, all federal cash payments to Ontario will cease by the mid-1990s.

Will the minister tell the House how he will enforce national standards when all federal moneys to the provinces cease and he is left with no means of enforcement?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is dealing with is simply conjecture. For a good deal of time yet to come there will be significant cash payments made to the provinces of Canada in order to help fund their expenses under Canada's medical care system. There is no program in Canada which has broader support from Canadians than Canada's medicare system.

It is a system that this government is determined to see remain and enhanced. We are determined to ensure as well that the principles that underlie Canada's medicare system, principles of ensuring that Canadians receive the best possible health care in Canada, continue to be enforced.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to the presence in the gallery of a number of members of a delegation visiting our country from Kuwait.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

PRIVILEGE

STATUS OF INDEPENDENT MEMBER

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege or a point of order. Without getting into a dispute as to what it is, I have given notice to the Chair with a copy to my friend on the opposite side, the Government Whip. I will try to be short and also try to exercise common sense, which sometimes is in short supply here, Mr. Speaker.

Very briefly, the point of order/privilege is the question of the status of an independent member. I want to say right at the start that this has nothing to do with the status of parties in this House and/or their status as far as the Elections Act is concerned. I know and members know that under the present Elections Act, we have to run in an election as a member of a designated official party or as an independent.

The history of this Chamber is full of parliamentary precedents, with members who, having been elected under one label, made a decision, for whatever reason, to have themselves declared another affiliation. I am not going to go through the hundred or so more who go back into interesting history. I am going to quote some.

The one I am going to quote is a fellow called Gordon Churchill. This brings back memories. I was here when Gordon Churchill stood in this House as a Conservative and made a very succinct statement to the House, and one perhaps that I should have followed, and explained why he had to in a most regretful way to dissociate himself with his then party and sit as an independent and as an independent Conservative. There have been so many that we do not have to take too much time.

Some members in this House, I would venture to say, with respect, do not appreciate that there was no such thing as a party label on a ballot until 1970. I rest my case first on the fact that when I was elected in 1965 there was no party affiliation. I was elected as a person, an individual, and that is my first point. Mr. Speaker, you know and I know and the government Whip should know, that the political system in this country is based on election of individuals who happen to have a party name, and only a party name since 1970.

I say for me at least, and I am not talking about other members who may want their own declarations for whatever reasons, I was elected here without a party label. I have been associated with a party for a good number of years and enjoyed that interesting experience. For other reasons, which I have mentioned here before, I earlier made a declaration that I want to be known as an Independent Conservative. Mr. Speaker, you could not tag me with a label when I came here. Even the government Whip in his earlier statements in this House on September 26 in talking about some of my friends to the left, the Bloc quebecois, started to say that it is clear parliamentary precedent, although he doesn't give any, that members themselves will decide the designation they want to be called or to withdraw the designation they were first elected under, and I totally agree with him.

First, Mr. Speaker, the premise of the political system is that we elect individuals and boy-oh-boy, I can tell you with the malaise out there, you make sure you elect individuals because people are getting pretty fed up with the political system where we all have to do and say the same thing day in and day out.

Anyway, you elect individuals, Mr. Speaker. That is the political system. Let us come to the parliamentary system. The parliamentary system, you know, Mr. Speaker, and I know does not officially recognize parties. It does not recognize parties. We have interesting groupings that have been done through an accommodation over a period of time, but officially, under in the Standing Orders and the Elections Act, you do not see political parties. You do not see any.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the parliamentary system, as distinct from the political system, what you have here are 295 members who for a multitude of reasons. For a multitude of reasons and for obvious reasons in most cases, they have associated themselves with a political party. That is fine. I take no exception to that.

But when a member wants to make a declaration and sit in another capacity and name himself, I say, Mr. Speaker, that is up to the member and he or she will be confronted with that at the next election.

Some of us were here when the member from the province of my friend the government Whip, a fellow called Jack Horner, stood in this House and said he wanted to be known as a Liberal. Did anyone one on the Liberal side stand up and say: "Hey, Jack, you can't come over here because you were elected as a Tory, and therefore you have to stay over there". This is how stupid it is and that is why I am not going to take the time to really over-debate this.

In addition to Jack Horner, you have Ralph Stewart, that peripatetic traveller. When he made the great declaration that he wanted to leave the Liberal Party and come to the Conservative Party without an election, did our government Whip stand up and say: "Hey, Ralph, you had better go back and talk to your people. You can't come with us because you were elected as a Liberal".

John Reid is a little different. He campaigned as a Labour Liberal. I talked to Jean Marc Hamel and on the ballot—and this is why it is irrelevant about the Elections Act—he ran as a Liberal. I understand that I can call myself anything in terms of an election campaign—and I have been called many things—but in terms of when the name goes on the ballot—and that is the way the law is now and I am not debating that at the moment—in terms of the ballot it has to go either in a designated party or as an independent.

Let us take Paul Hellyer and his perambulations between Liberal, Independent and Independent Conservative. Or let us take one who used to be in the cabinet of my friends opposite, the member for Joliette, a fellow called Roch LaSalle who stood up while he was a Conservative under Bob Stanfield and because of problems of language policy, made a declaration from his seat on this side that he wanted to sit as an independent. He went over there where my good friend from Pembina is at the moment, and sat there as an independent. Later he made a statement from over there, saying that he wanted to come back and join the Conservative Party. He was switching around like a yo-yo. Did any government Whip or opposition Whip say: "Hey, Rocco, you can't come over here because you got a label on your back that is embedded into your tissue like a tattoo". These things are not tattoos, Mr. Speaker.

But let me come to the conclusion because I do not want to overtake the system by saying there is no official status for parties in this House. The political system is on the basis of individuals. You are elected as an individual. I know there is a lot of pressure. We could get computerized. We could all be ciphers in the old computer game, and forget even the names. I understand the attraction of members to a party and leaders, but the fact is we still run as the hon. member. I do not want to name my friends over there, but when they put their name on the ballot, not the party, it is because of the Elections Act of 1970 and accounting purposes that we have to put the affiliation. That is just an incidental fact and it should not be the dominant fact.

Our political system is for individuals, Mr. Speaker. Our parliamentary system is not for a block of government members of 170 or whatever. It is for 295 members. Why do we have an index in the back of the book?

• (1510)

I conclude with what I think is the best message of all, something which some members may remember. I do. It was during the financial crisis in the Bob Stanfield era when Mr. Pearson over an Easter break was in Bermuda and got caught in an ambush on a finance bill. There were many of us here in a caucus who thought the government had come to a halt. We thought since the government of the day had been defeated on a tax bill, in effect the government stopped, there was a loss of confidence and Parliament would not even open.

This was years before we started thinking of ringing the bells. I was in the Conservative caucus then and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there were vibrant discussions in caucus. That day, we met in Room 112-N at least once, if not after in the Railway Committee Room, but usually down there because the thing was so topical.

I can remember Gordon Churchill, Jack Horner and others who took a certain stand on one side and Mike Starr who as the House leader was trying to decide whether we would even come into the House.

Our point was that a tax bill was a vote of confidence and was dead. In actual fact, Mr. Stanfield then or later admitted that he got a call from the governor of the bank and was told if we did not meet, there would be a run on the dollar because it was a minority Parliament. A run on the dollar would have been disastrous for Canada.

Therefore, with a sense of public duty, Mr. Stanfield had to take the caucus into the House and have a debate on the question of privilege that the House did not really exist. That debate lasted two days, but the House got going.

That is the time I realized the House really could be a charade. After the leading speeches of Mr. Stanfield, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Lewis of the NDP, the three main speeches on the most important constitutional question that had hit us for many a year, the whole debate was carried out in the halls. After two days of that, Mr. Pearson won the day because the public said: "Of course, this House has to sit and debate things."

Mr. Churchill, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, said, and I will conclude with this. I want to read the whole thing, because this is the state Parliament has come to.

When the statesman Mr. Churchill stood and gave a little statement on his position, there was not a person who would have dared rise and say: "Mr. Churchill, you are not allowed to call yourself that, or do what you think is right."

This is what he said at that time in the House of Commons on February 27, 1968, at page 7019, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege to announce that it is my intention to sit in the house as an independent Conservative.

That, of course, is what I want to do here.

> I am taking this step after careful—

Ms. Copps: There is no such thing as an independent Conservative.

Mr. Nowlan: What are you trying to say here? She sounds the same from here as she sounded from over there. It is disconcerting on either side.

I continue:

> I am taking this step—

I must say this is the type of statement that I should have said rather than abuse the Chair the other day.

> I am taking this step after careful and long consideration, and with deep regret. The issue before the house is so fundamental to our parliamentary system and so dangerous to our freedom that I cannot justify to my conscience to surrender now of part of our freedom in the hope that it may be regained at some uncertain time in the future. That runs counter to my experience of life and to my understanding of mankind's long and painful struggle for freedom. The decision of the Progressive Conservative party to capitulate at this time is so contrary to the principles of the party, as I understand them, that I prefer to have complete freedom to express my views in the debate without embarrassment to my colleagues.

At the earliest convenient opportunity I will meet with the members of the executive of the Progressive Conservative party of Winnipeg South Centre and in consultation with them take whatever action is considered appropriate.

I shall continue to maintain a friendly and sympathetic interest in the Conservative party, in the hope that at some time in the future it will once again command my steadfast and unwavering support.

I rest my case with a man of the stature of Gordon Churchill who wanted to be an independent Conservative for a fundamental break with the party and was so recognized.

I can go through some 90–some names where again they were not open to challenge. That shows what state Parliament has got to when an individual member with a lot of consideration and a difficult decision makes a public declaration and lo and behold, out of the cobwebs of procedure we get someone standing and saying: "You cannot do that."

Mr. Speaker, I ran and I will be running again, whenever Elections Canada says. Right now, in this House of Commons, I want to clear up my status for the record so that the elementary political eunuch in terms of appellation can be clarified and to do what is the fact of life, that is, to be known in the records officially as an independent Conservative.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if we are in a debate, on a point of order, or a question of privilege. Certainly it was at some length.

I have no quarrel with my colleague across the way in terms of his willingness and ability to call himself whatever he wants to and to indicate what in his own mind is any political affiliation.

What we are dealing with is my intervention of some couple of weeks ago when I rose in terms of our printed record, Hansard, which is a publication that governs what we do in committees.

At the back of every Wednesday's Hansard is a section that carries the names of members, the constituency they represent, and their political affiliation. To this point in the life of this Parliament and preceding Parliaments, and I suggest going back to the adoption of the current election law in Canada which flows from the Constitution of Canada, we have designated people in this part of our written record according to the political affiliation under which they ran during an election and therefore were elected to represent the New Democratic Party or the Progressive Conservative Party. In one case in our current records, it is the Reform Party or the Liberal Party of Canada. That is the affiliation.

People have been expelled from caucus without being required to change that affiliation because their voters voted for them as an individual in a constituency with a political affiliation. What we have allowed members to do is to withdraw that affiliation. If they were no longer happy with what they were elected to do, which is to affiliate with other members with a similar label, we have allowed them to withdraw and to put the word "Independent" in our written record. The truth is they no longer affiliate with any political group.
