As the weather grows warmer and ice slips into the ranks of commodities that march under the banner of H. C. But if you are handy with tools you can build an iceless ice box at a triffing cost, and the cost of operating will be nothing. Here is the way it is done:

AN ATTRAOTIVE SURFACE.

All of the woodwork, the shelves and the pans should receive two coats of white paint, and one or two coats of white paint, and one or two coats of white enamel. This makes an attractive surface and one that can be easily kept clean. The screen wire also may receive two coats of enamel, which will prevent it from rusting. A cover of canton flannel, burlap or duck is made to fit the frame. It canton flannel is used, the smooth side should be out. It will require about three yards of material. This cover is buttoned around the top of the frame and drawn down the side on which the door is not hinged, using buggy hooks and eyes or large-headed tacks and eyelets worked in the material. On the front side arrange the hooks on top of the door, instead of on the frame, and also fasten the cover down the latch side of the door, allowing a wide hem of the material to overlap the place where the door closes. The door can then be opened without unbuttoning the cover. The bottom of the cover should extend down into the lower and the cover and the cover. the cover. from the inside of the refrigerator, thereby lowering the temperature of the inside and contents.

The upper pan is kept filled with water. The water is drawn by capillary attraction through the wicks and saturates the cover. Capillary action starts mere readily if the cover is first dampened by dipping it into ideal conditions the temperature has been known to be reduced to 50 degrees Fahrenheit. Obviously, weather

Snails in Aquariums.

A large glass tank is not necessary for a house aquarium, says Boys' Life, Small, inexpensive glass boxes that make desirable indoor aquaria, as well as glass tubs and jars, may be obtained from dealers.

Do not buy a glass globe for aquarium. These give a distorted view of the contents and are evidently un-comfortable for their animal inmates. Goldfish are pretty and interesting, they are common in such globes and not enough can be learned from them by the average student of nature. Fit up the aquarium as if you intended it for goldfish, then get something else.

You can catch many things, but do not put too many into one aquarium. One of the most interesting aquatic animals is the common water snail. These are ordinarily kept in gold-fish aquar'a as scavengers, to clean up the debris and take off the green material that grows on the side of the glass. Most people think of snails as aids in keeping the aquarium clean, but they are in themselves real objects Revenue Per Head Shows Great Growth.

War Expenditures 1920 Very Heavy.

Ottawa despatch: Canada's population is estimated for the fincal year of 1920 at nine millions, her total revenue at $325,009,000 and her total expenditure at $675,125,000. As $350.000.000 of the latter amount is shown as destined for "war" expenditure it would seem that the Fina.... Minister hopes to make the revenues and expenditures other tha. war balance. As Sir Henry Drayton indicated i. the House of Commons that he did not intend to have a Victory Loan campaign this fall if it could possibly be avoided, it is supposed that the $350,000,000 war expenditures referre to are already outstanding on January first, from the Victory Loan of last autumn. This is considered a very large war expendi-ture for a year which is fourteen months r moved from the armistice day, and it is only ninety-six million dollars less the 1919, the heaviest war expenditure year, when the army was demobilized, and all those demobilized given varying sums for demobilization bonuses. PAINTING becomes necessary as your property increases in value, and as property was never so valuable as today there is a greater need than ever for that kind of paint which actually preserves the surface and thus saves the entire house.

This spring, to make a real job of it, use ENGLISH 80 70% Pure White Load because it combines permanence, covering capacity and economy

If B-H "English Paint" was dearer than it is, it would still be the most economical—the shorter life of other cheaper brands makes them more expensive in the end. It contains the famous Brandram's Genuine B.B. finely-ground white lead—70%—to which is put 30% of pure zinc—a guaranteed formula that no other paint can boast. To this mixture is added fine turpentine and linseed oil from the B-H mills, which is of a quality in keeping with the other ingredients. When you use B-H Paint you will notice its "body" and brilliance—you will compare the extreme covering capacity with other brands—the permanence you will be able to prove by other exteriors painted with B-H paint years ago. EPISODE SIX

SYNOPSIS.

John Davis and Hawk Morgan, execuers of the estate of John Carr, miner, imagres over the disposition of the profits
f the mine. Morgan, seeking the gold and the girl fer himself, and unsuspected by Davis, whem Ethel really loves, makes everal attempts on the life of the latter, saissted by an accomplice named Spider tellas. Suspicion is diverted to a mysterius hermit. Davis, Hawk and the Spider ave for San Francisco to get machinery of work the mine. Hawk and Spider rug Davis and leave him in an abanoned cabin in imminent danger of a terble death.

John Davis, having rescued his mortal but unsuspected enemy, Hawk Morgan, from the vultures and a living death, and having hauled him to safety, tripped and went over the cliff himself. Hanging to the end of the frayed rope and fighting his way foot by foot back to the edge of the brink, he might have regained it despite his terrible handicap had not the Spider coming up and seeing his desperate plight, ground the frayed section of the lariat beneath his heel. And at that dastardly act the rope parted and John went shooting downward to the rocks

That he would have been crushed to death upon them there is no doubt had not great good fortune come to his Some distance in his fall, John's body crashed into a tree that thrust itself out at a sharp angle from the face of the cliff, and the resilient branches of the pine, first bending beneath the shock, a moment later responded with a counter movement that tossed the body aside as a powerful wrestler does the form of a weaker antagonist. John, landing upon a narledge that protruded from the main wall of rock, lay there as insensate as the stones themselves, one arm dangling over space. It so happened that this ledge, lying as it did on an incurve of the cliff, was not visible to one who stood upon the upper brink of the main descent.

Spider Bellas, having done this damnable thing and for the moment disregarding the body of his comrade, threw himself upon his stomach and peered over the edge. Far below him he could see a small avalanche of stones and dust going down in gigantic leaps, but nothing more. Feeling certain that the body of his foe was in the midst of that roaring mass and even now was beaten out of all semblance of humanity, he watched the avalanche grow in size each moment until with a faint crash it was lost in the pines far below which bordered the Sweetwater river or creek.

He arose satisfied that they no longer had to fear Davis in the game they were playing and turned his attention to his senseless friend. Dragging him a little farther from the edge he drew a flask from his pocket and poured a small quantity of liquor down the other's throat. Revived by the stimulant, Morgan sat up. He placed his hands to his cheek, winced from the pain of it and drew his palm away covered with blood.

"My God!" he cried with a shudder. "I remember now. The vultures! What happened?"

Bellas, wiping the blood away from this still terrified pal's face, was debat ing the words which should form his answer.

"Davis shot a couple of them and then hauled you up.

'Where is he now?" "He was bending over you and between you and the edge. The ledge broke and he fell. He caught the rope somewhere as he was going down, it was frayed out and-well, look for yourself." He picked up the broken fragment and held it before the other's "It broke and he went to his death in the valley. I think his body must have plunged into the river and been swept away." Solemnly Morgan

"Spider, did you push him over that The spider crossed his heart. "I did not. Hawk "

"And did you cut that rope?" The other raised his right hand on high. 'So help me God I never laid hand on it. I was back yonder among the trees when he slipped, and when I ar rived here he already had gone over." "I'm glad you had no hand in muttered the Hawk as he arose. "Let's be going back." Pausing but long enough to permit the Spider to roughly bandage his wounds, Morgan led the way to the cabin.

With an exclamation of dismay at sight of his wretched appearance, Ethel came hurrying forward to meet him, Bridget Wegan close at her heels. Rainface was dispatched for hot water and medicaments, and Ethel rolling up her sleeves began ministering to the wounded one

"Tell me all about it," she demanded as her deft fingers flew on. The Hawk answered in a weak voice.

"Naturally deeply hurt that you folks suspected me of not playing fair, I wandered off alone. The Hermit, who for some reason unknown to me has been doing all this mischief, attacked me when I was not looking. I was stricken down from behind, and when I came to my senses I found myself bound hand and foot and hanging over a cliff. Then the vultures—" he gave a real shudder of horror at the thought -"attacked me. God. It was terrible. I must have fainted again, for I remember nothing until I saw Spider's honest face bending over me." "And you did what?" cried the girl as she turned upon Bellas. The Spider took up the tale.

"Mr. Davis shot the vultures from across the valley. Then he ran to the top of the cliff with me following at e distance. I saw him haul Mr. Morgan up, then just before I got to him he stumbled or slipped and went over the edge. And that's the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help me."

Horror distorting her face, the girl sat staring at the speaker.

"And his body?"

"I didn't see his body, Miss Ethel, after that. Mebby it is at the bottom of the valley, and mebby it was swept away by the stream."

Slowly the old Indian turned upon the Spider. His roughly hewn face was as impassive as though it had been carved from living rock, but a baleful glow was deep in his black eyes. With low gutturals he addressed the Spider. "I believe dam lie."

With a leap Bellas was upon his feet, but quick as he was the ancient one was quicker. Before the leveled gun that the other had whipped from omewhere, the hands of the Spider rose cellingward, and slowly he began backing away from the glaring one who covered him. From behind them arose the angry voice of Bridget

"Good for ye, Injun. Yer brains are workin' right wanst more.' Removing the pistols from the Spider and Morgan, Rainface pointed to the door of Bridget's room. "Go in there and stay there," he commanded them. He turned to the others. "Me go and find out what happened.' "Curse you-" broke from the Spider, but Morgan cut him short.

"Let him go," he sneered. "We will walt here until he finds out that we have told the truth."

Without further protest they entered the room of the Irish woman, while that lady vanishing in the kitchen reappeared a moment later with a murdouble-barreled shotgun, the tubes of which had been sawed off short before the chambers. Drawing up a chair she planted herself before the door, great determination resting upon her round face.

"I'll guard the spalpeens," she anounced grimly. "Big Irish squaw some good some-grunted Rainface as he went without

On the narrow ledge on which he lay John first stirred slightly, then opened his eyes and sat up. Having rested his head in his hands for a fe mements in order to collect his thoughts, he arose and went creeping along the ledge. Finally coming to a niche that seemed to be of some depth, and with no other way of escape visible, he began crowding himself into it. me yards farther on he could tell by his sense of feeling that he had entered a room of rock, and lighting a match glanced about. Above him, glowing dully in the flickering light, yet plain to be seen against the matrix of dark rock which composed the rock of the cave, he saw veins of free gold of undeniable richness.

"Great heavens! The mine! At last!

Striking another match he again cast his eyes about. Upon a small boulder in a corner stood a discolored and battered lantern, and lighting it he followed the vein, until of a sudden it "petered ont." Continuing his way, a moment later he bent and picked up a dully glittering object and held it close beside the lantern. It was an ingot such as had filled the caskets, and he thrust it into his pocket.

"Poor old Morgan. I did him an injustice in thinking he stole the gold," muttered.

He held the lantern on high that its light might carry farther. Before him he saw a rude ladder leading upward.

and mounting it stood within a narrow tunnel. With no other course to pur-sue he began carefully treading its length, pausing not until he came to the short which was a templory its end. Here he found another short ladder above which was a trapdeor, and climbing it cautiously shoved the trap and stepped into a small, dark room. Seeing a door upon one side he silently opened it, his heart giving a great leap at what he saw.

He was peering into Ethel's bed-room, and the girl, sitting before a little table with her cheeks in her hands, was gazing at his own picture. tered and dirty he set his lantern down, and approaching her quietly from behind, laid his hand upon her shoulder. Turning swiftly she looked up-grew white- then with a low cry threw herself into his arms.

For several minutes, oblivious that in all the world there existed others than themselves, they abandoned themselves to the caresses and whispers which lovers know so well; then John, holding her off at arm's length, smiled.

"Come. We must go and tell the others also." With Ethel clinging to his arm they entered the room where Bridget sat on guard as formidable as old Cerberus himself before the gates of Hades. Dropping her weapon on floor the woman arose, mouth op and eyes bulging at the sight of the "Merciful hivens! An' ye were not kilt at all, at all!" she gasped as she stumbled forward to greet him.

"Hardly, Bridget," he grinned. She turned to the pair within the room.

"Come out, both of ye." Heads erect and wearing the look of men grossly mistreated, the Hawk and Bellas entered the living room. John thrust forth his hand.

"I can only ask your forgiveness, bys. Ethel has told me all, and it boys. happened just as you said it did, Bel-Furthermore, I have found the real mine. Come on, all of you, and we'll inspect it."

"I'll stick behind and see that all goes well here. You can tell me about it when you come back," said Morgan. As he determinedly refused to accompany them, they hurriedly made ready and took their departure.

Left alone, Morgan began to prowl. "Davis must have got in by some secret way," he muttered as he began searching the floor. Presently coming to the closet of the girl's room he raised its rug and at once saw the trap cut in its floor. Quickly securing his Winchester he also thrust his pistol into his belt, raised the trap and went feeling his way down the ladder.

Lighting his way by the lantern which Davis had left behind, he followed the tunnel until it emptied him into the main cave. Above him he saw the gold glowing dully, and gasped as the other man had done as compre hension of its great richness gradually forced itself upon him.

"There are millions here, and I mean to have all. And the girl as well," he muttered. Setting the lantern down he approached the growth which screened the outside entrance to the room, peering into the open air. In the distance he saw the party from the the trail in single file John in the lead, and he picked up his rifle with a cruel smile.

'Now I have him," he whispered as he ran his eye along the barrel. The roar of his rifle went resounding among the hills, buffeting back and forth like a shuttlecock. John, in the act of leaping across a small rift, plunged forward just as Ethel was about to grasp his proffered hand

Morgan, in the act of turning to flee, felt a crushing blow from behind, and throwing up his hands, collapsed with a groan upon the floor.

Davis scrambled to his feet and pointed to the moss-covered rock from which he had slipped at the instant the gun was discharged. That was the luckiest missten I eve made, for otherwise that bullet would have gone through my head," he cried others came rushing to the spot. He waved his hand at them. "Take to cover everybedy-quick." From the boulders behind which they cuttled they watched the entrance closely for several minutes. No sounds came from within the cave, and con vinced that whoever had ared the shot had fied, Davis rushed the opening, gur in hand, the others hot upon his heels. Before them and lying senseless upon the floor was the body of the Hawk. Ten minutes later Morgan was able to speak in faint tones.

'After you left I stepped into Misa Ethel's room, and much to my astonishment saw a trap door in the floor of her closet. Wondering what it could mean, I descended through it, following a tunnel which led me into this As I entered I saw that cursed Hermit in the very act of firing upon you as you approached, and made a jump for him. But in my weak state he was too much for me and knocked me senseless. But thank God you are Warmly John shook his safe."

"We are quits now, old man." "I knew you would come to believe in me at last," returned the Hawk as he responded to the other's grip.

Together they inspected the cave with its untold wealth, marveling over its richness; scarce able to believe their senses. At last becoming conscious that the day was rapidly fleeting, they agreed that Rainface should take Bridget back to the cabin by means of the tunnel, while Davis means of the tunnel, while Davis showed the others the way he had found into the mine through row cleft. At the entrance to it, however, Morgan, saying that he was too badly done up to go farther, sat down to await their return; whereupon the Spider also decided to remain behind. Left to themselves, Ethel and John pursued their way.

Scarcely were the lovers out of sight than the Hawk, with a grin of triumph at his follower, pointed to a small box which was half covered by debris in one corner and upon the end of which was the brand that signified that its contents was gaint powder.

"They overlooked that little package, which must have been left here by old Carr when he was working the mine," chuckled. Dragging it hurriedly to the opening of the niche they attached the fuse. Then lighting it, they scuttled from the place as rats desert a sink-

Davis, chancing to glance back along the narrow passage, saw the crawling light of the fuse. Instantly scenting danger, he picked the girl up bodily, swinging her out upon the edge into the open air, threw himself after her in such haste that he fell headlong at her feet. As he did so, a blast of gas and flame came roaring from the crevice like the discharge from a giant cano, streaming far out over the edge of the cliff and spewing in its wake a volley of rocks that fell crashing into the treetops far below. They had escaped being blown to eternity by a ver itable, beiching volcano by the mere matter of a second and a yard.

Waiting only long enough for the narrow passage to free itself of the poisonous fumes, Davis and the girl ventured back. The entrance to the cave was hopelessly blocked. Helpless-ly they stood staring at each other.

"We're in a sweet fix," mused the man as returning to the narrow ledge they looked into the swimming depths below. "Here we are marconed half way between earth and heaven, with walls above and below us that it would take a lizard to climb. It looks fike it was going to be a long time between A little cry from the girl interrupted him.

"See!" she exclaimed, pointing down. The man's glance followed her pointing finger. Some few yards below them, reposing where it had caught on a slight obstruction upon the face of the wall, was the rope which had supported him before he fell upon this ledge by reason of the Spider's cowardly grinding of the frayed strands Could the lariat be obtained they might well hope to descend from cleft to cleft, but with it lying a dozen feet below their reach it seemed that it might as well have reposed at the bottom of the valley. The girl's quick wit came to their rescue.

"Perhaps we can manage it," she laughed as she sat down and removing the lacings of her high boots. Quickly grasping her thoughts, John buckskin thongs which ran through his own footgear to hers, and plucking a hatpin from her head, fashioned it into a hook. Throwing himself prone he lowered his line, finding to his joy that it was of sufficient length. Not much later he hoisted the lariat in triumph. Looping one end about her body, he began lowering her to the ledge next below, and she having safely lande there, freed herself while he made the upper end fast. Then sliding down released the upper end with a deft flip, repeating the operation from time to time until at last they reached a footing upon which they could proceed without further use of the life-saving line. Hurrying homeward with all speed they entered the house together. Briefly relating their experience while the listeners sat in amazer Morgan struck his open palm with his clenched fist.

"That-Hermit again. After you and Miss Ethel left us, Bellas and I rested for a moment and then came back here by the tunnel. We did not meet him on the way, therefore there must be still another entrance to the tunnel as yet unknown to us." Davis, acquiescing, changed the subject.

Now that we have found the mine we must go to San Francisco for men machinery and supplies in order to start work upon it at once," said he Morgan at once assented.

"Right. We've a good half day be-fore us and I am feeling much stronger. Suppose we start at "But me?" protested Ethel. John's hand stole over her own. "We are going to make a flying trip. There is no need of your going through the inconvenience of the jour ney, and you will be much more comfortable here with Bridget and Rain-Still unconvinced but yielding to his wishes she silently assented. Approaching night found the three still upon the trail. Drawing in his horse the Spider spoke.

Fastened the Noose to His Neck.

"We will never get to the station before dark. There is an old shack up here that I know of, and I vote we spend the night there and hit the trail again at daylight. It's bad goin' along this way after dark."

"Where is the shack?" asked Davis, half convinced that the other was speaking wisely. The Spider pointed ndefinitely to one side.

"I think it's in there. You fellers wait here till I go and make sure. I'll be back in a few minutes." Easing themselves in the saddles and rolling cigarettes the remaining two settled themselves down to wait.

Once out of sight the Spider slipped from the saddle. Chosing a favorable spot he drew an extra revolver from in-side his shirt and lashing it in the fork of a tree carefully sighted it down the trail. Then stringing a small vine across the path tied it to the trigger, after which he returned to the waiting pair with the information that the shack lay in that direction. At once all three started along the way, Davis in the lead. Reaching the point where the spring gur was set, the two following rascals softly drew their horses to one side. All unconscious of the Spider's treachery, John rode on, his thoughts on Ethel and the mine. From the brush beside the way came a sharp explosion, and his horse falling upon its knees, rolled over upon its side with a bullet through the brain. Half dazed by the fall, John sat up just in time to see the Spider dismount and go rushing through the trees, firing as he ran at some imaginary foe. Soon he re turned, gathering up the evidence of his futile attempt as he came.

"Don't know for sure who he couldn't get a good sight of him, but it looks to me as though that cussed Hermit is still camping on our trail, he explained. "He won't follow us any farther on this trip," said Morgan. Taking the dazed John upon his horse they rode to the cabin and retired for the night. In the middle of the night Morgan and Bellas silently lifted their heads A moment's listening told them that Davis was sleeping soundly, and at a whisper from the Hawk the Spider sneaked to the stove and brought him the coffee pot, which, retaining for a moment, the other handed back Just before dawn the Spider awak ened Davis, also shaking Morgan. "Time to be stirring," he announced and sleepily they got upon their feet. Pouring the coffee which he already had heated, into their tin cups, Bellas tendered each of his companions one John, drinking his and thinking of Ethel, did not observe that the other men had secretly poured their portions through a crack in the floor. couple of minutes after he had finished the draught Davis sat upon the side of his bunk while the others spoke briefly of the coming events of he day as secretly they watched him. Moment by moment his head sank lower upon his chest, until with a long sigh he fell backward upon the blankets, instantly beginning to snore. The rascally pair arose.

"He'll be dead to the world for a couple of hours after that doping." laughed the Hawk, as the twain began gathering the three lariats together. 'And that will give us time enough to coek his goose for all time." Passing out of the shack they approached od sized sapling which stood close to the wall.

At the Hawk's direction the Spider climbed the tree and fastened one end of the stout lariats to it, after which he threw the other end of the rope cross the ridge pole of the shack, so that it fell down and trailed upon the far side. To the free end Morgan now attached a second lasso, after which went to an old well from which he brought a wheel and bucket, By means of an ax and spikes found with-in the building he made the wheel se-cure to a second trunk, reeving the lariat through the wheel, and thus obtaining the leverage of a one-sheaved pul-

By means of this contrivance and their combined strength they sprung the sapling down until it became a mighty bow, capable of harling a horse through the sir. Then blocking the pulley so that it could not run loose, by means of the third lariat they fastened the tree firmly in its bent posi-tion. Next going within the shack they securely bound the drugged victim to the stationary bunk, and fastening the noose of the first lariat to his neck, left him there as they made haste to take the last step necessary to the completion of their fiendish plan.

Gathering a few handfuls of dry leaves and bark, they scattered them about the lariat that held the tree in its bent position, after which they sprinkled a quantity of loose powder over the mass. Lighting the inflammable material at its outer edge and waiting but long enough to make sure that the blaze would spread quickly, they threw themselves upon their horses and went galloping off into the gray light of morning, cursing the senseless one they had left behind as they rode. Nor ever before had John Davis been in such mortal peril of a terrible death. For when the oncreeping fire should reach the rope which restrained the sprung tree, released from its fetter, would leap to its upright position with gigantic strength, tearing the man apart as in days of old victims were rended limb from limb by wild horses. At almost the same Side by side she and the old Indian went thundering along the trail of the three men. Just as the first blush of down came over the mountain tops.

Lesson III., April 18, 2920. THE VICTORY OF GIDEON'S BAND

Commontary—1. Gideon's army tested (vs. 1-8). 1. Jerubbaal, who is Gideon—Joash, Gideon's father gave him the name Jerubbaal, which means "let Baal plead," because Gideon had broken down the altar of Baal (Judges 5:25-32). Through the tests with the fleece (Judges 6:36-40), Gideon was fully assured that the Lord had called him and would give him the victory over the Midianites. He had sum-moned the Israelites to war against their enemies, and an army of thirty-two thousand had answered the call Well of Harod-A fountain on the wen of hards—A fountain on the north side of Mount Gilboa. A stream of considerable size flows eastward to the Jordan from this spring. Hill of Moreh—It is though Little Hermon is the hill meant, which is across the valley from Mount Gilboa. 2. 'Vaunt themselves against me—The Lord saw the pride of heart of Israel and knew their disposition to neglect or forsake him. Mine own hand—Even if there was only the small army of Israel arrayed against more than four times as many Midianites, and the former should be victorious, they would not recognize God's hand in the victory. Fearful and afraid-In Deut. 20:1-8 several directions are given with regard to going out to war, and in one it is provid! that the "fearful and fainthearted" shall return home.

Yet too many—The Lord pur-l to show the people that the victory to be achieved would not come through human might. Unto the water—The fountain of Harod and the stream flowing from it. This shall go
—this shall not go — Another test was ordered which would further reduce the number in the army. 5. Lappeth of the water—From the fol-lowing verso it is learned that this expression means to drink by bring-ing water with the hand to the mouth as a dog con eys water into its mouth with its tongue. Boweth down—To kneel or lie down to bring the mouth to the water, and thus to drink. 6. Three hundred — A small number drank by lapping the water. 7. By save you—It is maintained that the men who drank by lapping the water with their hands were more fully on their guard than those who bowed down to drink. They were standing and could keep their eyes on the enemy, and thus avoid being taken unawares. This test, however, may have been employed because the knew that the greater number would drink in the convenient way of bowing down, and a very few would drink by lapping, and thus the num-ber would be reduced to exactly the desired proportions. 8. Took victuals in their hand—The three hundred were properly supplied with food.

II. Encouragement for Gideon. (vs. 9-15), To give Gideon further encouragement the Lord arranged it so that he would hear a dream told by one of the men in the Midianite army, and its interpretation. The man dreamed that a cake of barley bread fell or rolled into the camp of the Middan-ites. It struck a tent and knocked it down so that it fell flat on the ground. The man to whom he told the dream said: "This is nothing else Save the sword of Gideon, the son of Joseh, & man of Israel! for into his hand hath God delivered Midian, and all the host." This interpretation all the host." This interpretation showed that the Lord had inspired fear into the hearts of the Middanites.

III. The three hundred victorious (vs. 16-25.) 16. Divided . . . Into three companies—By dividing his three companies—By dividing his three hundred men into three com-panies, Gideon would be able at the same time to attack the Midianites on a large portion of their camp lying opposite to them. The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon—"For Jehowah and for Gideon."—R. V. 19. Beginning of the middle watch—It was about midnight. The night was divided into three watches, the svening, the middle and the morning. 20. Brake the pitchers—The sound of the breaking of three hundred pitchers at once would seem like a great clash of arms. The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon—This cry from three hundred men of war, accompanied by the sounding of three hundred trumpets, the breaking of as many pitchers and the glare of as many torches at midnight was sufficient to strike terror to the hearts of the enemy. 21. Everyman in his place round about the camp—To each of Gideon's three hundred men a work was assigned, and each did it. The host ran, and cried, and fled—The Midianites were terror-stricken and in utter confusion. 22-25. In their confusion and terror the Midianites mistook their fellow soldiers for enemies and turned their swords upon one another. They were completely routed and sought safety soldiers for enemies and turned their swords upon one another. They were completely routed and sought safety in flight, pursued by the men of Israel.

QUESTIONS—Give an account of Gideon's call to be the deliverer of Israel. How did the number in Gideon's army compare with that of the Midianites? What was the first test applied to Gideon's army? Describe the second test. Why did the Lord desire to reduce the number of men What encouragement came to Gideon? Describe the equipment of Gideon's men. How was the attack made upon the Midianites?

The enemies of Israel wer numerous, and first on the field. Gideon issued the call to Israel, and Abi ezer, his little flock, came up to mee him. All his host was but a handful before the outspread host of Midian and Amalek. Nothing could be mor ingenious and convincing than the double sign asked for and granted, perhaps more in view of his own coming decimations, than the greatness of his enemies. The applied tests left Gideon with a pitiful handful numerically, but every man a hero. Not a fearful one was in all the ranks; every one wise in self-control, and ager in spirit.

THE POULTRY WORLD

SOME HINTS BY AN ENGLISH EXPERT.

The success of poultry keeping as a business depends largely upon the owner's ability to keep his birds vigorous; and free from disease, so that it is of paramount importance thoroughly to understand what conditions are necessary to ensure good health and productivity.

PREVENTION AND CURE. PREVENTION AND CURE.

The signs of good health in birds are generally a lively manner, clean eye, bright red comb, and good appetite. Before one can intelligently work for the prevention of disease, which is very much more desirable than its cure when it has appeared, something of the causes which produce disease must be known. The poultry keeper must learn to some degree the art of diagnosis, and must then determine what conditions have possibly produced the conditions have possibly produced the symptons which are underisable. Thus, where the digestive machinery Thus, where the digestive machinery seems to be out of order, the quantity and kinds of food taken should be considered, as also should the amount of exercise the birds get, the accessibility of gravel or other forms of grit, the question of undue exposure to cold draughts of air, and the presence of parasites of one form or another. Again, where the respiratory organs are apparently affected, the owner should seet out for himself whether the birds have been chilled or are infested with parasitic organisms more particularly multiplying in the organs or respiration. r respiration.

HYGIENIC CONDITIONS.

The general conditions required to The general conditions required to maintain a flock of fowls in good health are, hygienically speaking, much the same as are required for other improved farm animals, excepting, perhaps, that these conditions are more pressing in the case of poultry than in most other stock, as, proportionately, to weight, birds digest food more quickly, while their blood also circulates faster and their temperature is higher. A laying fowl has been compared to "a very perfect and delicate machine, running under high prescate machine, running under high pres sure"; and the comparison is a just and reasonable one. Where such a machine gets really good attention, it runs easily and produces the most remunerative results, though, if neglect ed, it is sure to be more costly and disappointing than more ordinary ma-

UPON ELEVATED GROUND. The first requirement of health is to The first requirement of neath is to see that the poultry house and yard are located, if possible, upon elevated ground, so that the drainage is good and that water will not settle under the buildings. A good proportion of sand in the soil is a benefit, as such soils dry more readily and do not be-come so muddy in wet weather. Damaness is most undesirable. It conduces to rheumatism and many other ailments.

Under what is known as the intengive system, fowls are sometimes kept in very limited spaces; but in our own experience the best possible re-sults can only be had where the ex-ercising yards are large enough. Where space can be spared, every fowl should have at least 60 square feet of yard space, as this will allow of the ground producing as much grass as the birds w'll eat under ordinary conditions. It is a great advantage to have an open shed, facing the south, so that the birds can scratch in the dry during the winter and in rainy spells at other seasons. This helps very much to main-tain health and vigor. VENTILATION

In ventilating the houses for poultry, care must be taken so to arrange that cold dra ghts of air do not blow upon the birds. Fresh ir is most essential, but the houses can easily be health of the fowls. Given a satisfactory method of ventilation, it is wise to cover the inside walls of board houses with building paper or some other air-tight material.

Cleanliness is a capitary condition of the greatest value, since accumulations of dirt and excrement provide breeding grounds for parasites of one sort and another. Hence, when con-structing the poultry house, every-thing should be so de ed that the cleaned. All nest-boxes, roosts, etc., should be readily removable, so that they can be t. The origin of the Arap race is a matter of conjecture, but the Arabs were a uni-fied political body with a king of their own long, long before the Christian era. wrote Frederick Simpich in the U. S National Geographic Magazine. now there are perhaps 10.000.000 Arabs, now there are perhaps 10.000.000 Arabs, and for convenience of crassification they are assaily seperated into two divisions—"Al Bedoo," or "The Dwellers in the Open Land" (commonly called Bedouins), and "Al Hadı," or "Dwellers in Fixed Logalities."

The Bedouins, roaming with their herds all over Arabia and even up into Mesopotamia and Syria, are better known to American "missionaries, officials and travellers than the Hadr class. They are namads from necessity and not from choice, and, as the country comes under better rule, roads, trade, and irrigation will undoubtedly reduce the number of Arabs torced to lead this wandering life.

When they hold up a Mecca caravan, for example, and exact a sum in cash for "protection," they look on this merely as their rightful share of taxes, habitually collected and kept by border officials. A reform of these desert manners and methods will most probably ensue as a result of the British mandate over Arabia.

About 80 per cent. of all Arabs live in towns, villages, or other fixed places of abode and belong to the "Hadr" class. In this "roup is found the aristocracy of Arabia. Here are old, reputable families, with records of births, deaths and marriages, deeds and honors, running back through generations. Perhaps the most noted family in modern Arabia is the house of Koreysh, tracing its connections back to the prophet. The men of this family bear the title of Shereef or Seyd; and it was the Shereef of Mecca who led Arabia's break for statehood.
Education, however, as we regard it in America, is almost unknown among Arabians. The few with culture are a class to themselves. Most learning is confined to the classics fo religious and secular literature; the Koran is learned by rote. In the smaller towns there are no schools at all.

by rote. In the smaller towns there are no schools at all.

Yet it was Arab learning and skill, in the long ago, which started the civilized world on the way to its present high efficiency. Under the Calipha, schools of therapeutics were set up at Bardad, and botany was studied as a brarch of medicine. As one writer says, "the principle mercurial and arsenical preparations of the materia medica, the sulphates of several metals, the properties of acids and alkalis, and the distillation of alcohol were, with their practical application, known to Er-Razl and Geber, professors of Bagdad. In fact, the numerous terms borrowed from the Arabic language—alcohol, alkali, alembic and others—with the signs of drugs and the like still in use among modern apothecaries, show how deeply science is indebted to Arab research."

All of which leads the Christian world to believe that the Arab people, as a nation, can "come back."

(St. Paul Pioneer Press.)
Rare is the day when the news columns do not bear testimony that something cannot be had for nothing. Men and women become parties to intrigue by embracing the conclusion that "here is something easy." o "here is something for nothing." And always they pay the price, if not in death or loss of liberty, at least in humiliation, grief and disgrace. Mortal flesh is weak, and that flesh which is immune to temptation is grace. Mortal flesh is weak, and that flesh which is immune to temptation is hardly flesh but a petrified derivative of it. That is why mere preaching slips too often past deaf ears if it gets within striking distance of the ears at all. But the counsels of observation and common sense are, for us all to take or leave. And if we leave them, we have abundant opportunity to know, we are doomed sooner or later to join that large and inexclusive company of the stung.

It was dark and a keen wind was whistling through the leafless trees. It seemed to her to be singing in a mocking voice, "Irene loved you; she loves you still!"

loves you still!"

Madge fastened her shawl around her and stood for a moment, posed, as it were, upon the broad step. Whither should she go? The answer breathed by the same inner voice, seemed to whisper despairingly—"Anywhere from this place, anywhere!"

Obeying it, as before, she passed down the steps, and swiftly crossing the lawn—across the light thrown from the windows of the still lighted rooms—was swallowed up in the darkness.

CHAPTER XXXIV. CHAPTER XXXIV.

She went swiftly, with the shawl drawn closely around her head, along the drive, its wonted smoothness cut up by the carriages, passed the gates and into the high road. She paused a mement or two to gain breath and looked around her. As she did so, the clock of the Towers struck five. In another hour or two, she reflected, workmen would be about and she would be seen. She must hasten on, but whither? At that omen if any idea at all found room in her bewildered mind it was that of going to her own people. If she walked long enough, if she could only manage to avoid recognition, she must in time come across a band of gypsies. Whether they belonged to her own tribe or not, she knew that they would succor, and, if necessary, hide her.

She hurried on and for a time, supported by the excitamnt, was not sensible of fatigue; but presently she hecame conscious of it. Her feet seemed to be of lead, her head ached, her eyes burned. She knew that she could not go much further. Suddenly she found herself off the road and upon the grass. She hooked around confusion so the weather them are the seed we was on flores Cometing and saw she was on flores Cometing the seed the seed of the wall says on flores Cometing the seed the seed of the way was on flores Cometing the seed the seed of the seed and upon the grass. As she looked a fain light attracted her attention, and she realized, after a moment or two, that it was from Martha Rooper's cottage. It was from Martha Hooper's cottage. It seemed like a beacon—not to warn but to welcome; and it occurred to her that she might rest there for a short time, perhaps until the night had fallen again. The woman had evidently known what sorrow was, and would sympathize with her and hide her. It was true that there was some secret understanding between her and the countess, but Madge reflected that she could show Martha Hooper that she, Madge, was flying from Monk Towers to save the countess from further humiliation, and that would induce Mrs. Hooper to help her in her flight.

She made her way across the com-

She made her way across the common and, nearly fainting now with the exhaustion produced by the reaction of excitement, she leaned against the door and knocked.

Two or three minutes passed—minutes that seemed an age to Madge—and she was asking herself whether she should have strength to keep from falling upon the step, when Martha Hooper's nervous voice was heard from behind the floor:

"Who is it? Is it you—Jake?" she saked in trembling tones.

"Who is it? Is it you—Jake? She asked in trembling tones.

Not many years ago a fertile region of country was suddenly devastated by the eruption of a voicano. Every vestige of its plant life was destroyed by motion lava and hot ashes. To-day this region is almost thickly covered with a new growth of vegetation. There are many ways by which the seeds of plants are carried great distances to spring into new life where conditions are favorable. seeds of plants are carried great distances to spring into new lite where conditions are favorable. It has even been suggested that perhaps the germs of life may be carried about into stellar regions by the Dressure of light. It is a well-known fact that particles having a certain area in proportion to their mass can be driven through a vacuum by the pressure of light alone. Among the most curious methods of seed distribution are those of seeds which are carried through the air on wings, such as the maple, which has two wings, and the catalpa, the elm, the ash and the pine. These seeds do not flap their wings like birds, but depend altogether upon the force of the wind to carry them along. Other floating seeds are the milkweed, thistle and dandelion. The milkweed seeds are concealed in a pod which breaks open and exposes them to the wind. Up they go through the air, each seed carried by a ball of silky down, the threads of which are so frail and diaphanous that one is hardly prepared for their appearance under the microscope. Bach thread turns out to be a separate tube ribbed with dark veinlike streaks arranged in an irregular manner. When a milkweed pod bursts open it is much like a miniature aero meet in which scores of white craft coar up into the morning wind. One may marvel at the economical arrangement of the tubes of down, so frail do they seem to carry the heavy looking seed. Any one crossing the Great Plains in the autumn will notice the stacks of dry-looking weeds piled up on one side of the fences. When we know that the wind drives them there it is easy to see which way the wind blows in such regions as Kansas and Southern Nebraska. They are the celebrated tumbleweed family. The important part played by the weather as a means of preventing the too rapid development of the plant life of the world can be realized only when we consider the vast number of seeds produced. If conditions of the atmosphere favored a more even temperature all over the earth as was atmosphere favored a more even temperature all over the earth, as was probably the condition in the early history of the planet, there would be fewer varieties of plant life, because the more rapidly producing plants would crowd out the others.
