SOME people in this town seem utterly incapable of appreciating a generous act, merely because a young man on a young lady had a dozen evenings during the week, and occasionally drove in between meals.

There are people mean enough to indicate that it means something, besides anxiety about the health of the sick mother or to see how the kitchen range is working.

His speaking of range that reminds me of the large stock I saw up in Chinatown store of cooking ranges and stoves, judging by the stock on hand to be the best that the firm does not intend to take any back seat to that line.

Should you require anything in that line just give Chestnut & Sons a call they can satisfy me any one.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

LOCAL NEWS.

SOLICITOR GENERAL.—It is generally understood that the hon. Mr. Richard will shortly seek re-election in Westmorland as solicitor general.

FISHED.—The local government, in session part of the past week, finished its business last night and the members returned to their homes to-day.

TO A SPECIALIST.—Wm. Richards, the lumberman, who has been troubled with his eyes for some time past, has gone to Montreal to consult a specialist. He was accompanied by Fred Coleman.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.—York Co. teachers' institute will convene in the Normal school next Thursday. A public meeting will be held in the evening, at which prof. Davidson has agreed to deliver an address.

THE LUMBER CUT.—Robert Connors is authority for the statement that about 125,000,000 feet of logs will be harvested on the St. John river and its tributaries this winter, which would be about 25 per cent in excess of last season's total.

NEW WOOLLEN MILL.—Messrs. Willis and Son, and Trueman and Merritt are fitting up a new class woolen mill at Woodstock, and expect to have it running by the middle of January. Why does Fredericton not get any of these new enterprises?

LITERARY.—Writers of the Scovill system of shorthand in the United States have decided to have a new text book issued, to embody the latest ideas in the art. They have elected C. A. Wyman, of Boston, and Frank H. Ristien, of this city, as writers and editors of the work.

OFFICERS ELECTED.—The following officers were elected for L. O. L. No. 145, with headquarters at Fredericton Junction: C. E. Boone, W. M.; D. A. Duplissa, D. M.; P. A. Nason, R. Sec.; Rev. G. W. Foster, chaplain; A. L. Duplissa, Treas.; R. S. Duplissa, Fin. Sec.; R. Merryweather, D. of C.; J. Rodgers, lecturer. A vote of thanks was rendered Rev. Mr. Foster for past services.

HAS THEIR FILL.—The Advocate says: The latest sensation is the whispered intention of the various newspaper subscribers to boycott all papers publishing anything relating to the Bathurst schools, the vexed question which occasions so much needless ill feeling between the different denominations and has given Bathurst a wide-spread reputation for intolerance and ill repute.

DEATH OF MISS BULL.—Word was received here this morning announcing the death of Miss Helen Bull, which occurred at Lower Woodstock, on Friday evening. The deceased lady was a sister of Mrs. T. B. Wainwright, of this city, and Mrs. Harrison, of Magalloway, and was widely known for her many sterling qualities. Her funeral, we are requested to state, will take place from her late home, Lower Woodstock, on Monday afternoon.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Bartlett Hallett, of Upper Caverhill, while working in the lumber woods on the Nashwaak, was taken ill with congestion and inflammation on Monday last. A doctor was called into the camp, but the sufferer died an hour after the doctor reached there. Mr. Hallett had left his home but two weeks ago for the woods and his sudden death has cast a gloom over the neighborhood which was much respected. The remains reached his home on Thursday. Much sympathy is felt for his wife and family.

Indian Exhibit.—Indian commissioner Farrel who has been authorized by the department at Ottawa to procure a display of Indian work for the world's fair, has been very energetic in the business as the result shows. The display includes agricultural products in grain and roots, manufactured articles in fur, leather, bead, porcupine and leather work, woven and many designs and implements employed in their domestic life. The work is exceedingly well done, the bead work and carving being hard to surpass.

A Good Time.—The high teas and fancy sale held in the church hall on Thursday evening by the ladies of the church of England sewing circle, was a decided success, notwithstanding the stormy weather. The tables were beautifully spread; the fancy tables were nicely arranged, and the articles readily disposed of. Oyster stews, candy department, grab bag, bagatelle board and the several amusement catching devices were well patronized by the young ladies in charge. No one appeared to guess the name of the doll. Hanlon's orchestra furnished the music. $100 was realized.

Attractive Display.—The beautiful goods being shown at Edgcombe are attracting great attention. His immense stock at this season of the year affords almost unlimited choice to those in search of either useful or fancy goods, for Christmas presents. With styles the latest, prices the lowest, and stocks the largest of any house in the trade, it is no wonder that his business is so extensive. Just now he is offering great bargains in Dress Goods, Jackets, Lines of Fur Goods, Mantle Cloths, Gents' Ties, Men's Storm Coats, and Boys' Clothing, etc., all of which are being cleared out before stock-taking. Santa Claus presides up stairs and has several young ladies attending to the wants of all who call up there to see him.

A Streak of Hard Luck.—The old saw—lightning does not strike twice in the same place, was not intended for man's misfortune, or will not apply equally fitting to fires. Ezra Taber, of Southampton, has been pestered with an unusual vein of hard luck which seems to stick closer than a brother to him. A short time ago, while attending to his duties in his barn, a dog upset the lantern which soon caught in the hay and in a short time the building was in flames. The barn was filled with hay, straw and grain, farming implements, beside it contained six head of cattle and two horses. As soon as the fire got under considerable headway, assistance was rendered by the neighbors who succeeded in saving four head of cattle and one horse. This is the third time Mr. Taber has been burned out, and this time the generosity displayed by his neighbors in rendering him assistance in fixing up an old barn and supplying him with hay and grain, speaks in the highest praise of the people of that place.

THE AFFAIR A BRILLIANT SUCCESS.

It is not too much to say that the complimentary banquet given to premier Blair at the Queen hotel Thursday evening, by his friends in this city, on the eve of his removal to St. John, was the most successful event of that nature which has taken place in Fredericton for many years.

The managing committee consisted of Messrs. John A. Morrison, W. T. Whitehead, F. P. Thompson, F. B. Edgcombe, D. P. George, G. A. Hughes, J. H. Hawthorne, John A. Edwards, F. I. Morrison and A. S. Murray, and the arrangements reflected infinite credit upon them.

The first vice chair was occupied by Dr. Couillard; at his right was seated hon. A. S. White and Wm. Wilson. To the left were hon. H. A. Connell, and C. H. Lablanc.

The second vice-chair was armed by Geo. A. Hughes. To his right were hon. L. J. Tweedie, James Robinson, M. P., P. T. C. Allen and George Y. Dibbles, while hon. H. E. Bannister and inspector Bridges were seated at his left.

Among other guests present were: Rev. J. McDevitt, Dr. F. M. Brown, Dr. J. Z. Currie, Dr. Harrison, W. J. Edgcombe, W. J. Whitehead, A. S. Murray, J. H. Hawthorne, M. Morrison, T. A. Sharkey, Rev. J. C. McDevitt, Dr. E. Edgcombe, J. H. Hawthorne, J. B. Grievies, W. R. McCloskey, F. I. Morrison, W. B. Couillard, F. T. Babitt, Arthur Sewell, W. F. Smith, J. W. Fenry, W. R. Racey, W. A. Porter, Thos. Hetherington, Hon. F. P. Thompson, Geo. T. Whelpley, J. P. F. Whelpley, J. J. Weddall, Dr. A. Simpson, J. B. Beck, Geo. T. Whelpley, Ed. Moore, John Boyle, M. W. Ward, John Owens, F. E. Barker, W. A. Barker, J. R. Simmons, T. H. Colter, Wm. Wilson, Dr. G. E. Couillard, G. C. Foster, Jacob Eavilston, Thos. Barker, Julius Innes.

Among those who sent regrets were: Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir John C. Allen, Judge Fraser, Rev. W. McDonald, Rev. W. P. G. Brown, John Anderson, Hon. A. Harrison, C. B. Harrison, F. C. Miller, and A. D. Richard.

Program of the evening the F. O. M. W. orchestra rendered a very acceptable program of music, in which the masterly violin playing of W. E. Crowe was a conspicuous feature.

After the Queen and Governor General had been toasted, hon. Mr. Mitchell responded eloquently to the health of the lieutenant governor, whose career in politics he traced from the era of the fight for responsible government down to the present time.

Sheriff Sterling then proposed the health of the guest of the evening, and the proposal was received with great enthusiasm. The sheriff in a most fitting address referred to the occasion as one of mingled joy and sorrow, and pointed out briefly what Mr. Blair had accomplished for York since his first election fourteen years ago.

The hon. gentleman had had ten years tenure of office and now he was the head of the strongest government that had administered the affairs of the province since confederation.

The rising of

was the signal for renewed cheering, and the strains of the orchestra were drowned by the thundering chorus of "He's a jolly good fellow" that came from the banquet hall. Mr. Blair, who was very deeply affected, spoke as follows:

Mr. chairman, vice-chairman and gentlemen: I think I must express to you the thought which at this moment is uppermost in my mind, and say to you, sir, and this goodly assemblage to whom I am invited, I regard the tribute which you have been so kind to pay me. Such words as I could employ would entirely fall short of conveying to the friends whom I see before me the cordial and hearty appreciation of friendship and pride in having had so notable an honor paid to me, I feel to be poor and ungrateful language by which to represent the depth and force of the sentiments which I entertain towards you all. I am proud and I am happy in being able to stand before my friends and among the people with whom I have lived all my life, and to hear and recognize what I have heard, while I cannot but be gratified at the altogether too flattering and complimentary terms in which my health has been proposed. I cannot forget that the occasion which has brought you all together is that you may express your regret that I am leaving this dear old city of Fredericton where I have lived so long, and that I am about to sever the connection which has existed so long and happily between me and you.

Several friends have said to me: Why don't you face the political disaster that has overcome you? Why don't you try your present action, dictated by resentment towards my old constituents, I have had the honor to represent a county which has always been deemed in this province an honor to represent two many years to forget that other men before me have encountered a similar fate, and that they were utterly unworthy of me to cherish such a sentiment towards those who have once given me their confidence and who, in the exercise of a mistaken judgment, have been led to withdraw that confidence. I know, myself, too well, to believe that I could be impelled by any feeling of pique to sever a connection which to me has been a source of such unbounded pride, and which has enabled me to associate my name (though unworthily it may be) with the names of Wilton, Fisher, Halboway and Allen, and my immediate and honored predecessor, judge Fraser. I make bold to say that York has been represented in the past by a galaxy of able and patriotic men, of which I am justly proud, and I shall always have the satisfaction of knowing that this county, which I shall represent no more in the future, for a period of fourteen years entrusted me with its confidence and placed my name alongside of the names that have done it so great an honor. (Applause.)

I trust, therefore, that no man will suppose that the action on my part which has been venturated in this expression of my esteem and friendship to-night, has been the product of any feeling of pique or wounded pride because of the result of the recent election in this county. Far indeed from it; but I may say that during my long term of office I have been pointing me towards the course I have concluded to take. I have been led to believe that I

COUNT OF MONTE-CRISTO;

REVENGE OF EDMUND DANTES.

CHAPTER XVII.

BREAD AND SALT.

Madame de Morcerf entered an archway of trees with her companion.
It was a grove of lindens, conducting to a conservatory.

"It was too warm in the room, was it not, count?" she asked.
"Yes, madame; and it was an excellent idea of yours to open the doors and the blinds."

"Do you know where I am leading you?" asked the countess, without replying to the question of Monte-Cristo.

"No, madame," replied Monte-Cristo;
"but you see I am making no resistance."

"We are going to the greenhouse that you see at the end of this grove."

The count looked at Mercedes as if to interrogate her, but she continued walking in silence; on his side, Monte-Cristo also said nothing.

"What a beautiful view!" exclaimed the count, looking at Mercedes as if to interrogate her, but she continued walking
in silence; on his side, Monte-Cristo also said nothing.

"What a beautiful view!" exclaimed the

in silence; on his side, Monte-Cristo also said nothing.

"But only her; do you, then, still hate those who separated you?"
"I hate them? not at all; why should I?"

The countess placed herself before Monte-Cristo, still holding in her hand a portion of the perfumed grapes. "Take some," she said.

"Madame, I never eat Muscatel grapes," replied Monte-Cristo, as if the subject had not been mentioned before.

The countess dashed the grapes into the nearest thicket, with a gesture of despair. "Inflexible man!" she murmured.

Monte-Cristo remained as unmoved as if the reproach had not been addressed to him. Albert at this moment ran in.

"Oh, mother!" he exclaimed, "such a misfortune has happened!"

"What? what has happened?" asked the countess, as though awaking from a sleep to the realities of life; did you say a misfortune? Indeed, I should expect misfortunes."

"M. de Villefort is just arrived in Paris bringing the news of M. de Saint-Meran's death, which took place on the first stage after he left Marseille. Madame de Villefort, who was in very good spirits, would neither believe nor think of the misfortune; but Mademoiselle Valentine, at the first words, guessed the whole truth, notwithstanding all the precautions of her father; the blow struck her like a thunderbolt, and she fell senseless."

"And how was M. de Saint-Meran related to Mademoiselle de Villefort?" said the count.

"He was her grandfather on the mother's side. He was coming here to hasten her marriage with Franz."

"Ah, indeed!"

"Franz is delayed, then. Why, is not M. de Saint-Meran also grandfather to Mademoiselle Danglars?"

"Albert! Albert!" said Madame de Morcerf, in a tone of mild reproach, "what are you saying? Ah! count, he esteems you so highly, tell him that he has spoken wisely."

And she took two or three steps forward. Monte-Cristo watched her with an air so thoughtful, and so full of affectionate admiration, that she returned taking his hand; at the same time she grasped that of her son and joined them together.

"We are friends; are we not?" she asked.

"Oh, madame, I do not presume to call myself your friend, but at all times I am your most respectful servant." The countess left with an indescribable pang in her heart, and before she had taken ten steps she counted six her raised her handkerchief to her eyes. "Do not my mother and you agree?" asked Albert astonished.

"On the contrary," replied the count, "did you not hear her declare that she was my friend?" They re-entered the drawing-room, which Valentine and Madame de Villefort had just quitted. Monte-Cristo departed almost at the same time.

CHAPTER XVIII.

MADAME DE SAINT-MERAN.

A gloomy scene had indeed just passed at the house of de Villefort. After the ladies had departed for the ball, whither all the entreaties of Madame de Villefort had failed in persuading him to accompany them, the king's proctor had, announcing to himself the duty of his office, with a heap of papers calculated to alarm any one, but which generally scarcely satisfied his inordinate desires. But this time the papers were a mere matter of form. Villefort had not scolded himself to study, but to reflect; and, with the door locked, and orders given that he should not be disturbed, excepting for important business, he sat down in his arm-chair, and began to ponder over those events, the remembrance of which had, during the last eight days, filled his mind with so many bitter thoughts and bitter recollections.

"No!" he murmured, "none of my enemies would have waited so patiently for me. I have waited for so long a space of time, that they might now come and crush me with the secret. What interest can this Monte-Cristo, or Zaccaro, son of a ship-owner of Malta, discoverer of a mine in Thessaly, now visiting Paris for the first time, have in my affairs? Can he take in discovering a gloomy, mysterious, and useless fact like this? In no period, in no case, in no circumstance, could there have been any contact between him and me."

But Villefort uttered words which even he himself did not believe. He was imagining a future limited to the enjoyments of home, feasting to awaken the enemy that had so long slept. The noise of a carriage sounded in the yard, then he suddenly dashed. "Certainly, we are friends," he replied; "why should we not be?" The answer was so little like the one that Mercedes desired, that she turned away to give vent to a sigh, which sounded more like a groan. "Thank you," she said. And they recommenced walking. They went the whole length of the garden without uttering a word.

"Sir," suddenly exclaimed the countess after their walk had continued ten minutes in silence, "it is true that you have seen so much, travelled so far, and suffered so deeply."

"I have suffered deeply, madame," answered Monte-Cristo.

"But now you are happy?"

"Doubtless," replied the count, "since no one hears me complain."

"And your present happiness, has it softened your heart?"

"My present happiness equals my past misery," said the count.

"Are you not married?" asked the countess.

"I married!" exclaimed Monte-Cristo, shuddering; "who could have told you so?"

"No one told me you were; but you have frequently been seen at the opera with a young and lovely person."

"She is a slave whom I bought at Constantinople, madame, the daughter of a prince. I have adopted her as my daughter, having no one else to love in the world."

"You live alone, then?"

"I do."

"You have no sister—no son—no father?"

"I have no one."

"How can you exist thus, without any one to attach you to life?"

"It is not my fault, madame. At Malta I loved a young girl, was on the point of marrying her, when she was carried away. I thought she loved me well enough to wait for me and to remain faithful to my grave. When I returned, she was married. This is the history of most men who have passed twenty years of age. Perhaps my heart was weaker than those of the generality, and I suffered more than they would have done in my place; you know all." The countess stopped for a moment, as if gasping for breath.

"Yes," she said, "and you still preserved this love in your heart—one who only love once—and did you ever see her again?"

"Never!"

"And have you forgiven her for all she has made you suffer?"

"Yes, I have pardoned her."

"Rest yourself, mother," he said.

The marchioness raised her head at this word, and beholding the man who so faintly reminded her of her deeply regretted child, who still lived for her in Valentine, she felt touched at the name of mother; and bursting into tears, she fell on her knees before an arm-chair, where she buried her venerable head.

Villefort left her to the care of the women while old Barrois ran, half scared, to his master; for nothing frightens old men so much as when death relaxes its vigilance over them for a moment in order to strike some other old man. Then, while Madame de Saint-Meran, still on her knees, remained praying fervently, Villefort set for a hackney-coach, and went himself to fetch his wife and daughter from Madame de Morcerf. He was so pale when he appeared at the door of the ball-room, that Valentine ran to him, saying—

"Oh, father! some misfortune has happened!"

"Your grandmamma has just arrived, Valentine," said M. de Villefort.

"And grandpapa?" inquired the young girl, trembling with apprehension. M. de Villefort only replied by offering his arm to his daughter. It was just time for Valentine's head swim and she staggered; Madame de Villefort instantly hastened to her assistance, and aided her husband in dragging her to the carriage, saying, "What a singular event! Who could have thought? Ah, yes, it is indeed strange!" And the wretched family departed, leaving a cloud of sadness hanging over the rest of the evening. At the foot of the stairs Valentine found Barrois awaiting her.

"M. Notrier wishes to see you to-night," he said, in an undertone.

"Tell him I will come when I leave my dear grandmamma," she replied, feeling with true delicacy, that the person to whom she could be of the most service just then was Madame de Saint-Meran.

Valentine found her grandmother in bed; silent, careworn, heartworn, broken sighs, burning tears were all that passed in this sad interview; while Madame de Villefort, leaning on her husband's arm, maintained all outward forms of respect at least towards the poor widow. She soon whispered to her husband, "I think it would be better for me to retire, with your permission, for the sight of me appears to afflict your mother-in-law."

Madame de Saint-Meran heard her husband say—

"Yes, yes," she said, softly, to Valentine,
"let her leave; but you stay."

Madame de Villefort left, and Valentine remained alone beside the bed, for the king's proctor, overcome with astonishment at the unexpected death, had followed his wife. Meanwhile, Barrois had returned for the first time to old Notrier, who, hearing the noise in the house, had, as we have said, sent his old servant to enquire the cause; on his return, his kind and intelligent eyes interrogated the messenger. "Alas, sir!" exclaimed Barrois, "a great misfortune has happened.
Madame de Saint-Meran has arrived, and her husband is dead!"

M. de Saint-Meran and Notrier had never been on strict terms of friendship; still the death of one old man always considerably affects another. Notrier left his bed fall upon his chest apparently, overwhelmed and thoughtful; then, closing one eye, he enquired, "Mademoiselle Valentine?" Notrier raised his head, from Madame de Morcerf's; "I will answer her," he said, "she is at the ball, since she came to say good-bye to you in full dress." Notrier again closed his left eye.

"Do you wish to see her?" Notrier again made an affirmative sign. "Well, they have gone to fetch her handkerchief from Madame de Morcerf's; I will answer her return, and beg her to come up here.
Is that what you wish for?"

"Yes," replied the invalid.

Barrois, therefore, as we have seen, watched for Valentine, and informed her of her grandmother's wish. Consequently, Valentine came up to Notrier, on leaving Madame de Saint-Meran, who, in the midst of her grief, had at last yielded to fatigue, and fallen into a feverish sleep.
Within reach of her hand they placed a small table, upon which stood a bottle of orangeade, (her usual beverage), and a glass. Then, as we have said, the young girl left the bedside to see M. Notrier.

Valentine kissed the old man, who looked at her with such tenderness that her eyes again filled with tears, whose source he thought must be exhausted. The old gentleman continued to dwell upon her with the same expression. "Yes, yes," said Valentine, "you mean that I have yet a kind grandfather left, do you not?"

The old man intimated that such was his meaning. "Alas! happily I have," replied Valentine. "Without that, what would become of me?"

It was one o'clock in the morning.
Barrois, who wished to go to bed himself, observed that, after such sad events, every one stood in need of rest. Notrier would not say that the only rest he needed was to see his child, but wished her goodnight, for grief and fatigue had made her appear quite ill. The next morning she found her grandmother in bed; the fever had not abated; on the contrary, her eyes glittered, and she appeared to be suffering from violent nervous irritability. "Oh, dear grandmamma! are you worse?" exclaimed Valentine, perceiving all these signs of agitation.

"No, my child, no!" said Madame de Saint-Meran, "but I was impatiently waiting for your arrival, that I might send for your father?"

"My father?" inquired Valentine, uneasily.

"Yes! I wish to speak to him." Valentine durst not oppose her grandmother's wish, the cause of which she knew not;
and an instant afterwards Villefort entered. "Sir," said Madame de Saint-Meran,
"without using any circumlocution, and as if I had not time to lose, I wish to write to me concerning the marriage of this child?"

"Yes, madame," replied Villefort, "it is not only projected, but arranged."

"Well, sir," said Madame de Saint-Meran, after a few minutes' reflection, "I fall asleep; I was soon awaked by a piercing shriek, as from a person suffering in his dreams, and he suddenly threw his head back. I stopped the postillion, I called M. de Saint-Meran, I applied my smelling-salts; but all was over, and I arrived at Aix by the side of a corpse." Villefort stood with his mouth half open, quite stupefied.

"It appears to have been an apoplectic stroke."

"And what did you do then?"

"M. de Saint-Meran has always expressed a desire, in case of his death happening during his absence from Paris, that his body might be brought to the family vault. I had him put into a leaden coffin, and I am proceeding him by a few days."

"Oh! my poor mother!" said de Ville-fort, "to have such duties to perform at your age after such a blow!"

"God has supported me through all!
Where is Valentine, sir? It is on her account I am here; I wish to see Valentine. Villefort thought it would be terrible to reply that Valentine was at a ball; so he only said that she had gone out with her step-mother, and that she could be fetched. "This instant, this instant, I beseech you!" said the old lady. Vil-lefort placed the arm of Madame de Saint-Meran within his own, and conducted her to his apartment.

"Rest yourself, mother," he said.

FREDERICTON JUNCTION.

Dec. 9.—The children belonging to the Loyal Legion of this place, are preparing to hold a concert and Christmas tree, on Christmas Eve. As they are being very carefully trained, a good time may be expected by all.

Rev. G. W. Foster has purchased the farm, a few miles above the Junction, formerly occupied by Charles Webb. This will necessitate the removal of Bro. Foster from our midst, but our loss will be his gain, as the place is much more convenient for him.

The public examination of the school in this place is to be held in the primary department Thursday and in principal Alexander's room Friday. The scholars of the advanced department will undergo a written examination the following week.

P. A. Nason, one of our merchants, is rejoicing over a domestic event in the shape of a beautiful little daughter.

Miss Maggie Patterson of this place, is being visited by her sister, Mrs. Thomas Faulkner, of Canterbury Station.

Miss Stella Devitt, who has been visiting her parents in this place, is about to return to St. John.

UNIVERSAL TESTIMONY.

Cannot be disputed, and the case is yet to be heard from in which Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor has failed to produce a perfect cure. This with painless and rapid action and freedom from annoyance during use. The great corn and bunion cure stands unrivalled. Safe, sure, painless. Beware of frauds offered as substitutes for the great corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. N. C. Polson &

Do you believe in the transmigration of souls, Joe? What's that, sir! Why, for instance, that that cow has had a prior existence in another form—perhaps been a being like myself. On, no doubt the cow's been a calf.

RHEUMATISM CURED IN A DAY.—South American Rheumatic Cure for rheumatism days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at ment here on Monday evening, 5th inst., which was so highly appreciated that they were asked to give another, which they did to a large audience on the following Wednesday evening.

Dr. Hallett, the popular station agent here for some time has been transferred to Gibson and his place has been filled by Mr. Miller of that place.

Miss Lily Yerxa has gone to Boston to attend to the estate of her father, who died at Springfield, Kings Co., a few days ago, was the first to be taken from the ranks of Court Kewick, I. O. F.

Miss Ella Colter who has been visiting at Fredericton, has returned.

Mrs. Parker of Madam, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Tracy.

Chas. Coburn has gone to Boston.

Miss Minnie Dunphy has gone to Fredericton to spend the winter.

Many of the young men have gone to the woods.

The travelling is bad on account of the roughness of the roads; many are patiently waiting for snow.

BANANA PEEL ON THE SIDEWALK. The street car had passed, but to catch it he reckoned, so he ran like a deer and shouted and beckoned.

"Till he planted his heel On a smooth bit of peel—Then he saw half a million of stars in a second.

He was in too great a hurry; better have waited for another car. There are cases, however, where haste is necessary.
If you have a night-sweat, feverishness, weak, sore lungs and a hacking cough, do not lose an hour in obtaining a supply of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.
Delay in such cases is dangerous; it may be fatal. Before the disease has made too great progress, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is certain cure. In fact, it's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or money paid for it promptly refunded.

UPPER MAGAGUADAVIC.

Dec. 8.—All the men have gone to the woods, making the place quite lonesome.

Miss Ella Miller has returned from Lewiston, Maine.

Miss Emily Jamieson is at present waiting on her sister, Mrs. Parker, who is very ill.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Saunders, are receiving congratulations on the arrival of a fine son.

Rev. Mr. Easton has gone to St. John, to spend the winter.

Joseph Porter has entirely recovered from his short illness.

Judson Burke, our former teacher, paid a visit here a few days since.

Rev. Mr. Easton is unable to fulfill his appointment, owing to the bad roads, and rev. Mr. Ross was unable to fill the pulpit on account of sickness. We hope it will be of short duration.

"Yes! I wish to speak to him." Valentine durst not oppose her grandmother's wish, the cause of which she knew not;
and an instant afterwards Villefort entered. "Sir," said Madame de Saint-Meran,
"without using any circumlocution, and
as if I had not time to lose, I wish to write to me concerning the marriage of
this child?"

"Yes, madame," replied Villefort, "it is not only projected, but arranged."

"Well, sir," said Madame de Saint-Meran, after a few minutes' reflection, "I fall asleep; I was soon awaked by a piercing shriek, as from a person suffering in his dreams, and he suddenly threw his head back. I stopped the postillion, I called M. de Saint-Meran, I applied my smelling-salts; but all was over, and I arrived at Aix by the side of a corpse." Villefort stood with his mouth half open,
quite stupefied.

"It appears to have been an apoplectic
stroke."

"And what did you do then?"

"M. de Saint-Meran has always expressed a desire, in case of his death happening during his absence from Paris, that his body might be brought to the family vault. I had him put into a leaden coffin, and I am proceeding him by a few days."

"Oh! my poor mother!" said de Ville-fort, "to have such duties to perform at your age after such a blow!"

"God has supported me through all!
Where is Valentine, sir? It is on her account I am here; I wish to see Valentine. Villefort thought it would be terrible to reply that Valentine was at a ball;
so he only said that she had gone out
with her step-mother, and that she could be fetched. "This instant, this instant, I beseech you!" said the old lady. Vil-lefort placed the arm of Madame de Saint-Meran within his own, and conducted her
to his apartment.
