

THE MAASDAM BURNED.

THE CREW BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN FORCED UP BY A PASSING VESSEL.

The loss placed at $200,000. The agent ignorant of the particulars and skeptical about the steamer's generally.

From the New York Journal. Louis W. Morris, the passenger agent of the Rotterdam, was seen by a journal reporter last evening and said:

As to the rumor of the burning of the Maasdam I know very little. The fact that the steamer had been sighted on the Atlantic and abandoned is a matter of public knowledge.

Paris, Oct. 30.—A despatch from Gen. De Lisle, dated Hanoi, says the garrison of Tuyen Quan repulsed several attacks of Chinese Oct. 14 and 19 without loss.

Germany in West Africa. The German colonies in West Africa are being reorganized.

ALD. MOORE'S ANNEALATION SCHEME SUBMITTED TO THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The suburbs offer strong opposition. The matter left in abeyance for the present.

The private office of Attorney General Moira was crowded at 3 p.m. yesterday with aldermen, property owners and prominent men of the city for the discussion of the civic annexation scheme proposed by Ald. Moore.

THE PROFESSOR'S ROMANCE

BY DANIEL WALTON. "Mary, I am astonished!"

Of course, the grave, elder sister was astonished. In truth and in fact she lived in a chronic state of astonishment, for Mary was always doing something to astonish her friends and relatives.

Mrs. Ruth could scarcely credit the evidence of her own senses in the hazy glow of the August morning, when she came out of the shadows of the little south porch and discovered that yonder moving object was not a book in her hand.

"I don't care," said the little dame, laughing saucily defiance. "It's the nicest place in the world up here. I feel just like a bird, with the leaves fluttering against my face and the wind blowing so soft."

"I intend to stay here. Wouldn't you like to come up here, Ruth? It's so quiet, just put your foot on that knee and—"

Ruth, who was 30 and weighed 110 pounds, bridled up with amazement. "Mary Thorne, are you crazy? Come down this instant."

THE PROFESSOR'S ROMANCE

BY DANIEL WILSON.

"Mary, I am astonished!" Of course, the grave, elder sister was astonished. In truth and in fact she lived in a chronic state of astonishment, for Mary was always doing something to astonish her friends and relatives.

Miss Ruth could scarcely credit the evidence of her own senses in the hazy glow of the August morning, when she came out of the shades of the little south porch and discovered that the younger moving object, half way up the branches of the huge old pear tree, was not a spray of leaves, nor a cluster of sun-checked pears, swinging in the blue empyrean, but Miss Mary Thorne, comfortably perched in the crook of the old tree, her curls all flecked with the sifted ray of sunshine that came down through the shifting canopy of leaves, and a book in her hand.

"What a lovely scene!" said the little dame, laughing in a way that was almost hysterical. "It's the nicest place in the world up here. I feel just like a bird, with the leaves fluttering against my face and the wind blowing so softly, and I intend to stay here. Wouldn't you like to come up here, Ruthy? It's really done. Just put your foot on that knot, and then—"

Ruth, who was 30 and weighed 100 pounds, bridled up with amazement. "Mary Thorne, are you crazy? I come down this instant." "Indeed I shan't!" said naughty Mary, tossing the silky shower of hair away from her forehead, and glancing down with eyes that shone and sparkled like two blue jewels.

"But we are all going—" "Yes, I understand; you are all going in triumphal procession to the depot to render an ovation to the great Professor La Place, the wisest, sagest and grandest of mankind, whom the Thorne family have the unutterable honor of being second cousins, and to escort him solemnly to a month's sojourn at Thorne Hall. Oh, dear, dear, dear, I wish I could run away somewhere and hide. I hate this paragon of prim precision. I shan't marry him if he asks, and I mean to have no say in it." "I am not going with you. I hate the close barouches and it's too warm to ride on horseback. I shall stay at home," said Mary, settling herself so snugly, with one tiny, slippered foot swinging down, and her feet tucked close to a nest of speckled bird's eggs, that Ruth gave it up with a sigh of despair.

"Well, then, have it your own way, you incorrigible romp! I wish you were so too high to climb up in a distasteful, or to have your ears well boxed." "It is a pity, isn't it?" said Mary, demurely. "Of course it is, Mary! If Cousin Tom Bantley comes this morning, he is sure to explain to him why we are absent—and believe like a young lady, mind!" "All right," said Mary, demurely. "I always liked Tom. We used to have grand romps together."

She sat there in the old pear tree, prettier than any hamadryad that might have haunted the mossy old caverns of the garden, her cheeks flushed with sunshine and carnage, her dimpled lips set, now reading a line or two from the book in her lap, now looking up, as if sprinkled down through ever-moving leaves, and now breaking into a soft, little warble of sound, as she listened to the very robust music, that reached her ears to one side to listen.

The carriage had driven away long since. She had watched it by the window of the winding road; the dark mantle of shadow was slowly falling, the creeping sun clock in the old church spire among the far off woods had chimed out 11. And still Mary Thorne sat there in those forked branches of the old pear tree. Suddenly there floated into her leafy sanctum a pungent, aromatic odor, which made her eyes start and her ears tingle, and her eyes were with one hand, the better to penetrate the green foliage below.

Not the least monthly roses, but the many-throated borders of behemoth, that spiced geraniums—some of these blossoms distilled that peculiar smell. "My patience!" said little Mary, "it's a dig." A clear it was, and the owner thereof, she could just see a white linen coat and a tall hat covered with black, as if they stood on the porch steps quite smoking and indulging in a lengthened view of the garden steps.

before they could think of a de- count follow." "No!" said Mary, shaking her head and biting her cherry lips firmly. "I hate him beforehand." "What a spiteful little puss you are!" said her companion laughing. "No, Tom, I'm not. And the blue eyes became misty. I love papa and Ruth dearly, and I love almost everybody, I like you, Tom; but I hate Professor La Place. And I want you to promise, Tom, that you'll be my friend, and not allow him to tease me into walks, or rides, or tea-tetes of any kind. Will you?"

"Would he? If she had asked him to precipitate himself out of the pear tree fixed on his head, had I done it; any man of taste would." "I promise!" he said, and they shook hands on it. "What a cozy place for a chat that gnarled old tree was. And when they had talked over everything they could think of, it was the most natural thing in the world that Tom should recover the book which had slipped down into the network of tiny boughs, and read, in a low, musical voice that maidens love to listen to, and Mary sat there watching the pretty curls blowing to and fro on his broad, white brow, and the long, black lashes almost touching his olive cheeks; and she thought how very handsome Cousin Tom how very, very handsome Cousin Tom was, how much he had changed in the last ten years that had elapsed since she had met him, and she wondered whether Tom was engaged to any pretty girl; somehow she hoped not. Now, why couldn't Tom have been rich, like that horrid Professor La Place, instead of a poor medical student, and—"

And when the large black eyes were suddenly lifted to hers, Mary felt as though she had read every thought in her mind, and blushed scarlet. "Come Tom," she chattered, to hide her confusion, "we've been here long enough. Help me down and I will show you the old sundial that we used to heap with butter-cups when we were children." A rumbling of wheels; it was the returning of the carriage, and Mary clung to Tom's arm.

"The awful professor, she whispered. "Now, cousin Tom, be sure you stayed by me through everything." "To my life's end!" was the whispered answer. "But there was no one in the carriage save Mr. Thorne and Ruth. How could it be? It was on the grand sweep beside the two oaks." "Where's the professor?" said Ruth, "and—"

"He was not at the depot," said Ruth, "and—"

"But Mr. Thorne had sprung from the carriage and clasped both the stranger's hands in his." "La Place, is it possible? Why, we have in fact been looking for you at Mill station. I am sorry to have inconvenienced you, sir," was the reply; "but I came by the way of Wharton, and walked over this morning."

"Never mind now, so you are safely home," exclaimed the old gentleman. "Ruth, my dear—Mary, let me introduce you to your cousin, Professor La Place!" Mary had dropped her arm and stood dismayed. "You told me that you were Cousin Tom."

"That is my name, and I believe I am a distant cousin by relationship. My name, Mary, and the black eyes sparkled, "don't be angry because I don't take snuff nor wear spectacles. I beg that you will call me Tom, and I will be glad to see you. Mary, be just, and don't hate Cousin Tom because his other name happens to be La Place. But don't doubt I was a very perplexing thing to have two cousin Toms; and so, about six months subsequently, Mary, in contrast to the inconvenience of assuming the name of one of them to assume a nearer relationship; and, in spite of all her assertions to the contrary, she is Mrs. Professor."

For its solemn fact in this world, that whenever a girl says she never, never will do a thing, is pretty sure to do it the first chance she gets; and Mary is no exception to the general rule. "Say, why is everything either at sixes or at seven?" "Probably, my dear nervous sister, because you are suffering from the diseases peculiar to your sex. You have a 'dragging-down' feeling, in the back-ache, you suffer from indigestion, and you are ailing from various kinds. Take Dr. R. V. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and be cured. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists."

BYSTANDER'S CRITIQUE

ON DEMOCRACY, IRISH DISUNION AND NATIONAL SOCIETIES.

A Simpler Law of Land Transfer—The case of England—Mr. Lowell's Address on Democracy.

It is not to be expected that the people will consent to a radical change; but they may consent to many improvements, such as election for longer terms, and overlapping, so as to give more continuity and steadiness to the administration.

The death of Sir R. R. Torrens has closed the career of a man who in an unobtrusive way was no small benefactor of society, and whose work, it may be confidently said, will live in Australia, Sir R. R. Torrens was able without much resistance from rooted custom to introduce a system of land registration and transfer under which dealings with land are so simple as dealings with shipping on the stocks.

Instead of absorbing the French element British Canada is in some danger of being absorbed by it, and is certainly governed by it to a considerable degree. Next to the French element in sectional influence is the Irish, though it does not like the French form a compact mass or retain a language of its own, it is intensely national, and is held together by its priest-hood and by its separate schools.

Hereditary government is gone. Democracy has come. This is the moral of the century. It is doubted by no candid student of the political situation. Nor do many doubt that where democracy is introduced self-government exists the change is fraught both with elevation of character and with increase of happiness for the people.

The spirit of Mr. Parnell's speech in the spirit of his party. The streets of Dublin are renamed after Parnell as an insult to the British government and the people. Moral fibre with which no civilized man would ever pollute his fingers is raised with savage delight out of the sewers of Dublin view, in the hope that the foul stain will adhere to British character.

Among the changes to take place in the various agencies in the bank of Commerce is the transfer of W. Thompson, assistant manager at Guelph, to the management of the Galt branch. P. McConkey, manager at Galt, will be made manager at Guelph. W. Smith, late manager at Guelph, will be appointed assistant manager at the head office.

THE NIGHT SCHOOLS.

Appointments of Teachers for the Coming Season—Separate school supporters. The public school board held a special meeting last night to hear the report of the standing committee on night schools and transient general business.

Parliament street—Head master, J. B. Carr, assistant master, Henderson, teacher for females, G. R. Craikbank, Elizabeth street—Head master, T. A. Gray, assistant master, W. G. Milligan; teacher for females, H. R. Lewis.

Billiards are about to be introduced at Durham, and the Chronicle there is re-echoing the innovation as imminent. A South Woodlawn man has posted in front of his house a placard with the words, "No methodist ministers allowed on the premises."

The matter was referred to the committee on the night schools, and it was decided that the committee hold an open investigation of the charge against Mr. Clarke, the date to be left with the chairman.

See the great crowds at the Bon Marche sale. Miscellaneous Echoes From the World of Recreation. J. J. Murphy of Boston now says that he will not row this season, as Buckley has not accepted his conditions, and Laing's row next best thing is to bring the race on too late in the season.

The Manhattan athletic club will hold games on election day, when the following will appear in the program: 100 yard, 220 yard, 440 yard, 880 yard (Myers) cup; Myers barred, and 2 mile runs, 3 mile walk, running long jump, 220 yard boys' race, and 15 yards of age—all hand-picked.

A dog fight for $2000, and on the result of a $1000. The dog fight was a success. The Toronto Public School Board will open evening classes on Monday, Nov. 3, 1884, at 8 o'clock.

Parliament Street, Niagara Street, Elizabeth Street, Bathurst Street, these schools only need a few more.

DOMINION DASHES.

A 400-pound mouse was shot in Longford on last week. Muskoka records with the crack of the deer-horn's rife these days.

The Collingwood mill, which closed this week, cut 7,000,000 feet of lumber this season. A charitable party at Midway shot the bridge-snow in the calf of the leg with a pebble.

FIFTH YEAR.

IS GORDON A CAPTIVE? Most of His Men Return Him—He Then Flees from Kharatun, and is Captured by the Natives, Recruits to Shendy and Gives Himself Up.

As long as seven weeks ago, runs the story, Kharatun was surrounded by a host of rebels from the Nile country. On account of the scarcity of provisions serious disaffection arose among the garrison.

When Shendy was reached, it was in possession of the rebels, and it was not by an officer's artillery fire, in trying to evade which one of the boats were grounded on the opposite bank of the Nile...
