S. Lusitania Sunk by German Submarine

Sank in Twenty Minutes after Struck — Appalling Loss of Life

LONDON, May 7.—The steamship Lusitania, one of the largest and finest in the world, was passing through St. George's Channel, between the Irish and English Coast this afternoon, with 2,254 passengers from New York and a crew of 816, when an unseen German submarine sneaked up under her and discharged a torpedo.

The great steamship trembled a moment under the shock, her engines stopped and the sea poured in through a tremendous rent in her hull. As the Lusitania listed far over on her beam ends and as her wireless apparatus sent frantic appeals for aid, the crew manned the lifeboats and twenty were lowered, all filled with passengers.

Only 500 or 600 Saved.

Tonight the Cunard Line announces that between 500 and 600 of the passengers and crew were saved. Of these many are reported "hospital cases," and of the saved many are reported to have died. This estimate of the saved, given by F. V. Jones, one of the chief officers of the steamship, would indicate that 1,400 or 1,500 persons are believed to have lost their lives in perhaps the greatest single incident of the European war, and certainly the most important incident to the United States.

Gravest apprehension concerning the action to be taken by the United States Government is felt in official circles here tonight. There seems to be little doubt that the lives of many American citizens have been sacrificed in the latest assault of the German undersea raiders on British commerce, and it is believed that of the lives sacrificed scores were men and women of wealth and of such prominence that the United States can no longer delay definite action.

Torpedoed Without Warning.

The Lusitania was due to arrive at Liverpool on the morning of the 7th inst. She had entered St. George's Channel, leading to the Irish Sea, in which German submarines have been reported recently, and was proceeding to her destination when the submarine crept upon her, and according to the officers of the Cunard Line, without warning fired a torpedo at her hull.

From the fact of the latest advice say that the glancing of the sea sank within twenty or twenty-one minutes, there is a belief in naval circles here that perhaps, more than one torpedo was fired and that may be several great holes were opened in her hull.

The Titanic, of the White Star Line, remained afloat four hours after her hull had been stove in by an iceberg, and, as the Lusitania went to the bottom so quickly, it is believed that her hull was damaged much more extensively than that of the Titanic.

GERMANS HAD

WARNED PASSENGERS.

NEW-YORK, May 6.—The steamer Lusitania sailed last Saturday from New York and was due in Liverpool today.

When the Lusitania sailed she had aboard 1,210 passengers. Some nervousness had been caused because of the publication in the morning papers of Saturday of an advertisement warning intending travellers that a state of war existed between Germany and Great Britain and her Allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that in accordance with notice given by the German Government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain are liable to destruction in those waters and that travellers sailing in the war zone do so at their own risk. This advertisement was signed "Imperial German Embassy."

This warning apparently did not cause many cancellations for the ship sailed with a very full passenger list. Charles P. Sumner, General Agent of the Cunard Line, was at the pier and in a statement made then said that the voyage of the Lusitania would not be attended by any risks whatever as the liner had a speed of twenty-five and a half knots, and was provided with unusual water tight bulkheads.

PURE PIRACY SAYS

COLONEL ROOSEVELT.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 7.—When informed tonight of the sinking of the Lusitania Colonel Theodore Roosevelt made the following statement to the Associated Press:

"I can only repeat what I have said a week ago when, in similar fashion, the American vessel Gulfport was destroyed off the English coast and her captain lost his life. I then called attention to what I had said two months previously, when the Germans established this war zone and announced that with mines and submarines they would commit the deeds that since, they have actually committed; and that these deeds could by no rule of international law be regarded otherwise than as pure piracy."

A RED CROSS APPEAL TO THE FARMERS.

Our country, with its Allies, is waging a great war for justice, for the protection of small nations in the enjoyment of their rights, for continued and growing freedom, and for the maintenance of its pledged word of honor. Much destruction and desolation are being caused. Lives are being lost by the thousand. Canada's first contingent is now in the thick of it. The Red Cross Society exists to succor the sick and wounded in war. The need of Red Cross Service is great and growing greater as the war goes on. The price of progress towards lasting peace is very, very dear. It costs lives, homes, health and much besides. Canada's part in the process of payment, through giving for Red Cross work, is mercifully light and easy, even when all have given to the extent of really feeling it.

The soldiers and sailors pay the price exacted by the desolating struggle from week to week. What they paid in blood and did in sacrifice a month ago was not enough for them. Shall we say it was enough for us? What they are doing and suffering and achieving have put aside, for the time, all their thoughts and plans for individual welfare, comfort and safety. They don't hesitate to establish precedents. But they are precedents of heroic sacrifice for our country and its cause, for our principles and ideals that they may be upheld.

Farmers, individually as well as through their Institutes, Clubs, and Cheese and Butter Factories, are in a position to help very greatly. Their business does not suffer from the war. Prices of nearly all farm products have gone up. While labor is scarce there is time to think of the boys at the front and to send the Red Cross Society a gift to be spent for the sick and wounded.

Farmers are generous in sentiment and generous in giving when their hearts and heads point the way. This is a case when they do so point clearly, persuasively and urgently. In this crisis, in the lives of stricken soldiers, none can pray too much, do too much or give too much.

I appeal to farmers to send me sums from $1 to $50, during the first week in May. Every $50 provides one additional hospital bed with the giver's name over it. By sending me about $10,000, you would serve your country well, bring credit to yourselves, and make all of us very proud of you. For the sake of the wounded boys, make the gift substantial. It will be an investment towards the recovery of some Canadian soldier who stood in our stead that our cause might be upheld.

Faithfully your friend

Chairman, Red Cross Society

THE WEEK'S WAR NEWS

Allies are Hammering the Germans Hard

PARIS, May 10.—The following official communication was issued by the War Office tonight:

"To the north of Arras, in spite of several German counter-attacks, we have maintained all our gain of yesterday, and we have enlarged it at certain points, notably between Carency and Sauchez.

"Our success is developing. The total number of prisoners at three o'clock today exceeded 2,000. Among these were about 40 officers, including a colonel.

"We have captured, in the last two days, more than ten cannon and 50 machine guns.

"At Berry-au-Bac a German attack has been repulsed, as well as one in the forest of LePretre.

LONDON, May 10.—Field Marshal Sir John French, commander-in-chief of the British forces on the continent, reports no change in the general situation today.

"Our line to the east of Ypres, in spite of repeated attacks by the enemy during last week, is substantially the same as that to which we withdrew on the night of May 3-4," he says in his report to the War Office. "During the fighting in this quarter yesterday the enemy made five unsuccessful attacks, and his losses in these failures were very heavy. On the front of the first army the fighting today has been confined to artillery action."

WAR BRIEFS

VISITOR. "Do you feel lonely now, Mrs. Tingley, since your boys have gone to the war?"

MRS. TINGLEY. "Not so bad. It do come over me sometimes terrible on washday, when I've none of their things to do. Indeed, I've to borrow some of my neighbor's wash to keep me cheerful like."

General Pau, just returned from a mission to Petrograd was observed to enter a Red Cross branch in Paris. A young girl borrowed a hat and begged money to buy a bouquet for the General. When he came out the girl presented the flowers, the General kissed the girl, the crowd cheered, and the General drove off in his motor, crying "Viva la France."

Russians are again raiding German Territory with strong columns of Cavalry.

The armored Car for the Eaton battery is ready for dispatch to Europe. It has large knives in front for cutting wire entanglement. Italy has commandeered its big liners for military service.

A number of workmen, chiefly old country men, have gone from Sydney mines to work in the munition factories of England. A free passage was given to them.

Great Britain is now joined to Russia by a military Cable. It starts from Scotland to the coast of Norway and thence to Alexandrovsk. It is said to be longer than the Atlantic Cable between Britain and America.

A travelling kitchen costing $2,500 arrived in Halifax last week on its way to the front. It was presented to the Volunteer Heavy Artillery by the people of Coburg, Ont.

Another Canadian City, Peterboro, has organized a base hospital unit for the front, furnishing the entire staff and arranging for maintenance on service.

The War Office announces that no more warm clothing need be sent to the troops.

It would cost the "Queen Elizabeth," now at the Dardanelles a quarter of a million sterling an hour, if she were to use all her guns at their full capacity for that time.

The French Cabinet has decided to educate at the public expense all children made orphans by the death of their fathers in the war.

Many Roman Catholic prelates are urging the Pope to speak out strongly in favor of the Allies, rather than to continue in a position of indefensible neutrality.

The Methodist Sunday School of Toronto are giving a motor field ambulance to the Canadian Red Cross Society for use among the British Forces at the front.

The Russians denounce German airmen who drop bombs upon undefended Polish towns, and threaten to try for murder any who are caught in destroying non-combatants.

A German diary written on Dec. 14th admits that Germans beat to death wounded British soldiers on the field.

"When I was a boy, I was proud to be a German, but, now, grown grey, I am sorry for my country; Germany is a mad-house. The nation has gone mad? So says a German, born in Berlin, and for five years a Consul-General, but now a naturalized American citizen.

Britain has commandeered the whole meat-carrying capacity of all British Steamers trading between Europe and the Argentine and Uruguayan republics.

A Paris despatch says eight German submarines have been caught in a trap of mine field and nets laid for them in the British Channel. The British fleet was deliberately withdrawn in order to lure the submarines into the tangle.

Fourteen miles is a long range for a gun but it has been reached by German guns against Dunkirk.

Submarine blockade by Germany under British control. No British ship has been sunk since April 12.

One hundred additional Canadian doctors are being chosen to go to England at request of the War Office to help on the fields and in the base hospitals.

THE WAR AND TEMPERANCE.

A Total Abstinence Campaign.

The present would seem to be an opportune time for an energetic total abstinence campaign.

The attitude of Russia, France and Britain to the question of drink is an endorsement of the importance of temperance work. The nations are today more than ever emphasizing the value of total abstinence.

Why not then, at once undertake a united forward temperance movement in all parts of the Province, along the lines of moral suasion? No additional organization is needed. Our churches and temperance societies can reach the people.

On Sundays, the 23rd and 30th of May, at the regular services, a total abstinence pledge could be read to the congregations and all willing to take the pledge might do so by standing. Of pledge cards could be distributed in the homes of the people during the week beginning Sunday the 23rd, by the temperance societies or church committees, and at the same time in our public schools and Sunday Schools the boys and girls could be enrolled as total abstainers.

A War Pledge.

We suggest as a form of pledge the following:

In view of the fact that our Empire by reason of the war, is passing through a time of great trial, having in mind the sacrifices made by our soldiers and sailors in fighting to uphold our honor as a nation and to defend our liberties, we pledge ourselves, for the welfare of the Empire, to abstain from the beverage use of alcoholic drinks during the war.

Or a short pledge as follows:

We pledge ourselves, for the welfare of our Empire, to abstain from the beverage use of alcoholic drinks during the war.

By any other form of total abstinence pledge may be used. The taking of the pledge for the period of the war, would benefit many who are not now abstainers. At the close of the war the pledge could be renewed for a definite time, or for life.

A Royal Example.

Since His Majesty the King has set an example by forbidding the use of alcohol in his household, we might well as loyal citizens manifest our patriotism by co-operating in a movement which would tend to the moral and material efficiency of the Empire.

Let us then have a great total abstinence campaign week, beginning Sunday, the 23rd of May. We can depend upon the press to assist in this work.

We respectfully appeal to all churches and temperance societies.

METHODIST NOTES.

Rev. S. J. Boyse, who expects to graduate at Sackville in May and be ordained in June, has accepted an invitation to the Lawrencetown Circuit. Rev. J. A. Smith has accepted an invitation for a third year on the Berwick Circuit.

Dr. W. F. Hale, after several years in England, has (accompanied by wife and little boy) been visiting his parents at the parsonage, Sandy Cove.

On the Digby Circuit six persons and on the Berwick Circuit five persons have recently been welcomed to church membership on profession of faith.

A new church, replacing that destroyed by fire in December, 1913, and erected at a cost of $8000, was dedicated at Kingston on the Aylesford Circuit on March 28th. The preachers for the day were Rev. H. F. Roe of Mahone and Rev. Mr. Wheeler (Baptist).

On April 11th the people on the Granville Ferry Circuit were pleased and profited by the ministrations of Rev. F. Armitage of Lawrencetown.

Rev. George Bryant, once pastor of the Digby Neck Circuit, has left for the front as a member of the Ambulance Corps.

On Sunday, April 25th, Rev. Jas. Lumsden went home to God from the parsonage at Barrington. He came to Newfoundland from England in 1881, and from Newfoundland to Nova Scotia in 1892. In Nova Scotia he ministered with great acceptance on the Port Mouton, N. E. Harbor, Mill Village, Arcadia, Southampton, Baddeck, Gabarus and Barrington Circuits.

At the recent meeting of the Transfer Committee, Rev. C. G. Hockin, B.D., was transferred from the Nova Scotia Conference to the Alberta Conference and Rev. C. H. Johnson, B.D., from Alberta Conference to the Nova Scotia Conference. The latter left Nova Scotia for Alberta in 1910.

Mission Room receipts reported on April 16th are $237,596.87, $36000 more than at same date last year. This does not assure a larger income than last year but shows that Circuits are re-mitting more promptly. This is very gratifying as it means less waste in interest on borrowed money. Methodist Belgian Relief Fund, to April 24th, $20,094.63.

At a recent Convocation of Victoria University, the degree of B. D. was conferred on Rev. H. A. Frost, B. A., Chaplain with First Contingent, whilst seventeen men on active service in England or France, were granted their year without examination. Among these is S. Kimura of Hayashida, Japan.

Potash and Wood Ashes

With the supply of potash from the German mines shut off by war conditions, Canada should now give attention to the large quantity of this fertilizing agent which is allowed to go to waste through want of care and conservation of the annual production of wood ashes.

Throughout a large part of Canada the chief fuel at all seasons, but more especially in winter is wood. In the eastern provinces, hardwoods are chiefly used. These woods, especially beech and maple, are rich in potash, varying from 5 to 13 per cent, according to conditions of dryness of the wood and care of the ashes. Other valuable ingredients of wood ashes are a small proportion of phosphoric acid and about fifty per cent of carbonate of lime.

In the clearing of wood lots and in the burning of debris after taking out the fuel supply, large amounts of ashes are produced. These as a rule are left where the burning is done, and are consequently wasted.

Wood ashes should be carefully stored, in fire proof receptacles if possible, in any event away from any danger of fire, and should be kept dry to avoid leaching. In the spring they should be spread upon the land. They are especially valuable as a fertilizer and to encourage the growth of clover and the better grasses.

Wood ashes, by hastening the decay of organic matter in soils, render more readily available the nitrogen contained therein. In sandy soil, wood ashes supply the phosphoric acid and lime in which these soils are deficient, while, on clay lands, the lime content of the ashes tends to render available the potash salts already present in abundance. Potash as supplied to the land through the medium of wood ashes has a distinct advantage over the potash salts as imported from Germany, in that it is in a very soluble form, and hence is at once available for plant food. The importance of wood ashes, as shown above, as a fertilizer can hardly be over-estimated. It is consequently of first interest to the agriculturists and lumber interests of Canada to conserve the supply wherever and by what process produced.

During the present winter large undertakings in land clearing and right-of-way clearing of railway lines will be in progress from the burning of the debris of which large amount of ashes will accumulate. Some steps should be taken to provide that these ashes are not wasted, as apart from the difficulty of securing potash supplies, the market value of ashes at present is from $8.00 to $12.00 per ton, depending upon quality.—D.

CANADA'S DRINK

BILL INCREASING.

Montreal Journal of Commerce: Much has been written regarding Great Britain's excessive drink bill and the loss of time sustained by the workers. It is undoubtedly true that there is cause for complaint, but on the other hand statistics show that there is considerable less drink in drink in Great Britain than there was a few years ago. In 1893 the per capita expenditure for drink in Great Britain was $20.75, while 20 years later or in 1912 it was but $16.20. In Canada there has been an increase in the consumption of drink during recent years, despite the spread of the temperance movement. In 1909 we consumed 0.86 gallons of spirits, 5.71 gallons of beer, and 0.09 gallons of wine. In 1913 these figures had increased to 1.11, 7.00 and 0.13 respectively.

Three thousand sewing machines were imported into China last year.

MELVERN SQUARE.

May 10.

We are sorry to report Mr. Vernon Palmer of Melvern West, quite seriously ill of pleurisy at time of writing.

Mrs. Waite of Massachusetts has been the guest at the home of her brother, Mr. Eugene Phinney, during the past week.

We must congratulate the Monitor staff on their great improvement in the print of the paper during the past few weeks. It is certainly all right.

The remains of Felix McNeil were brought from Bridgetown to Kingston for interment, last Wednesday afternoon. Interment in North Kingston cemetery.

Raymond Gould, who has been spending the winter at the home of his aunt Mrs. Burgess Wheaton, returned to his home in the vicinity of Aylesford quite recently.

As Sabbath, May 9th, was observed as "Mothers' Day" throughout the land, the white flower was much in evidence, being worn in honor of "mother," by old and young.

A large herd of fat cattle were shipped from the well stocked farm of D. M. Outhit. Also one pair from Mr. Martin, to Halifax last Wednesday morning. That means some beef in the Halifax market.

The Melvern Young People's Society celebrated their closing for the winter season, by holding an ice cream social at the parsonage, on Wednesday evening last, where a "cool," and very enjoyable evening was spent.

A number of our Melvern Square people are laid by, or, to say the least, have been inconvenienced by frequent attacks of rheumatism, the result, no doubt, of the prolonged spell of cold, wet weather.

A concert under the auspices of the Sunshine Mission Band, will be held in the Methodist Church here on Sabbath evening, May 16th. A silver collection will be taken at the close in aid of Foreign Missions. Come and help the cause along and encourage the youthful workers.

We understand that our enterprising friend, Mr. K. H. McNeil, has accepted the agency for Kings, Annapolis, and part of Digby Co. "Ken" is usually pretty good on a sale, anywhere, and under all circumstances, and we wish him every success in this new venture.

Mr. Charles Van Buskirk received news from the Adjutant General on Tuesday last that his son Fred was now in a hospital in London, suffering from shrapnel wounds in the forehead and thigh received in battle. Mr. and Mrs. Van Buskirk and daughter have the sympathy of the community in their anxiety for an only son and brother.

Purser D. W. Smith left on Tuesday of last week to take up his duties on the Prince George, after enjoying a few weeks vacation at his pleasant home on Pleasant Street, Melvern Square. During his stay here Mr. Smith has been making some improvements on his lawn, adding much to the appearance of his well kept and up-to-date residence.

PETROGRAD, THE CAPITAL OF RUSSIA

(This is the new name for St. Petersburg, capital of the Russian Empire, the change having been recently made to introduce the Russian word "grad," city, in place of the German word "burg," fortress.—Ed.)

Petrograd is the city made to order in about 1703 Peter the Great looked about him for a site for the capital of his vast empire, and his choice fell upon the marshy ground at the mouth of the Neva. Thereon he reared a city in spite of the opposition of his people. "On one side, the sea; on the other, sorrow; on the third, moss; on the fourth a sigh." It is surrounded by swamps, sea and forest, and has a climate that is damp, depressing and unhealthy. As a foundation for every building piles had to be driven into the marsh. However, the Emperor evidently glorified in surmounting difficulties. He probably got much more satisfaction in rearing a capital in the face of such obvious disadvantages than he would have had if the circumstances had been entirely favorable, and the result of his determined effort is a very splendid city.

Nevertheless, it is much handicapped by the climate and its flat situation. When certain winds are blowing the water of the Neva rises and floods the tenements along the banks. The people have to leave till the water subsides, when they return to their wretchedly damp houses with what bits of furniture they managed to take away with them. A gun is fired from the citadel when the water begins to rise, and when it reaches a certain point there is a signal which warns the people to vacate their dwellings. Of late years many canals have been built to carry off the surplus water in flood time, and these, 200 in number, are improving the condition of Petrograd a great deal. The three largest of these are concentric, running around the city in the shape of a fan.

Keeping warm during the long, cold winter is an undeniable problem, yet it is during this season that Petrograd is at its best. People return to the city from their summer homes, provide themselves with warm clothes and furs, seal up their windows and prepare to enjoy life during the snowy months. The houses and public buildings are always warm, as the heating apparatus used seems to be more efficient than is found elsewhere in Europe. From December till March the streets are covered with snow, which falls with most alarming frequency. This makes the traffic during that time remarkably noiseless, and when the snow melts and vehicles begin to rattle over the cobblestones the change is very noticeable.

It is only the society people that leave the city in the summer and return in the winter. Hundreds of peasants spend the warm months on their land in the country, and when the winter comes they throng to the city, bringing with them their Finnish horses and quaint sledges for hire. Ice forms two or three feet thick on the Neva and lighted roadways cross it at intervals. In fact, tracks are sometimes laid on the ice, upon which run electric cars from one side to the other. They take the place of small steamers, which ply back and forth in the summer.

When Peter the Great planned the city he said it was to be a "window into Europe" for the Russians, and it has certainly fulfilled his wish to make it a cosmopolitan city. Here many nationalities of the world mingle though the have not fused to the extent that they have done in other European cities. However, foreigners have not eclipsed the real Russian—generous, indolent, improvident, unambitious. And how these people do enjoy themselves! They delight in revelling through the night and sleeping during the day. They may go calling at ten or eleven o'clock in the evening and extend their visit till three o'clock in the morning. All kinds of entertainments start at a late hour, and are carried on correspondingly late in the morning. Sometimes the finishing touch to a night of pleasure is to drive along the river in the early morning and watch the sun rise. This applies particularly to people of leisure, but even those who have their daily work to do turn night into day as much as they can afford to. For inspiring a feeling of space, Petrograd matches the country of which it is the capital. Everywhere there is plenty of room; the streets are broad, the squares are large, the thoroughfares are so spacious that they seem to be deserted. The only space that is ever crowded, where one finds oneself in a surging mass of diversified traffic, is the Nevsky Prospect, the chief street of the city. It is while traversing its less than three miles of length that we realize fully Petrograd's truly cosmopolitan nature. Frenchmen, Germans, Dutchmen, Finns, Tartars, Englishmen, Jews, Orientals—you will find them all there, intermingled with the Russians, many of whom are in bright uniforms, for the civic officials vie with the soldiers in brilliance of garb. A medley of languages falls upon your ears, a great variety of vehicles, ranging from swiftly moving motors to clumsy little rustic carts, greets your eyes. It is a fascinating sight.

Gray, flat, monotonous—we might use these terms to describe Petrograd, if it were not for the diadem of pinnacles and domes that crowns the city. A dazzling sight they are when the sun beats down upon their gilded surface, and they even manage to gleam through the mist on a dull, dreary morning. The centre of the city views is the immense gilded dome of St. Isaac's Cathedral. The main cupola, with its surmounting cross, is overlaid with 200 pounds of gold leaf.

The cathedral, which is gorgeous and striking, though hardly laying claims to artistic beauty, stands on a space large enough to hold one hundred thousand men. At the main entrances are gigantic monoliths of Finnish granite sixty feet high, each weighing 128 tons, and between these massive pillars you walk to immense bronze doors. The interior is also gorgeous, and there are pillars of the lapis lazuli and malachite, which is used so extensively in Russian churches.

But St. Isaac's is suffering from its unfortunate situation. When it was erected, over 1,200 huge piles were driven into the boggy ground to form its foundation, but they have not been adequate to support it, and one side of the magnificent edifice is slowly sinking into the marsh.

In the Hermitage, which has been called the Louvre of Petrograd, are many antiquities of great value and interest, besides a splendid array of pictures. There is the best collection in the world of the works of Rembrandt, containing, as it does, at least forty of his paintings. There are also productions from the brushes of Rubens, Van Dyck, Velazquez, Murillo, and many other great masters.

In one of the rooms of the Hermitage is the life size wax figure of Peter the Great, dressed in clothes that were really his, and mounted upon his yellow charger. His favorite yellow hand is by his side, while in his hands he grasps a sword. Round about are hundreds of instruments and tools that he used. There is his iron staff, so heavy that you almost drop it when the attendant places it in your hand, while the same attendant smiles proudly as he holds a stick beside you, and observes that the notch, which represents the great Emperor's height, comes a foot above your head. Not far from the banks of the Neva is the famous statue, which Catherine erected to the memory of Peter the Great. It stands on no ordinary pedestal, but upon a great block of granite, which was raised and transported from some distant marsh with great difficulty. The bronze statue represents Peter mounted on a horse, whose hind hoofs are crushing a serpent. His hand is raised as if he were pointing out some of the wonders of the golden-domed city.

Another man besides Peter has stamped his individuality upon the city. This is Alexander II., of whom we are forcibly reminded in the Winter Palace, where his private apartments are preserved exactly as they were on that fateful day of 1881 when he left them to review some troops of the last time. Five times the Nihilists attempted to kill the Czar, and his son begged him to take every precaution. In spite of protests, however, Alexander left his writing to fulfill his ordinary duty, only to be carried back an hour later bleeding to death. The rooms, with their simple furnishings, are now open to the public.

The slow, broad silver flood of the Neva has formed a delta where it pours into the sea. This delta contains about forty islands, which are connected with one another and with Petrograd by numerous bridges. Here nature has not been quite so unkind as she proved in the main part of the city, for there are many beautiful spots on the islands. During the summer evenings they are the favorite resort of those who have to remain in the city, while on the more distant ones there are many summer homes belonging to the wealthy. As you cross rustic bridges and go along avenues shaded by ash, willow or lime trees, you will see charming villas built of wood, each with beautiful garden and green-house, and probably a boat house down by the water. Life would be very pleasant here were it not for the inevitable drawback—the ground is low, the atmosphere is damp and mists are of almost daily occurrence.

MORE BAD WEATHER.

Hicks, the American weather prophet, foretells more bad weather for May, changeable, cold, extreme heat, then cold again, with plenty of rain and thunder storms. He says the moon is on the equator on the 8th, and in conjunction with the sun and earth on the 13th. These causes, one at the beginning, the other at the end of the period, added to the most important fact that a Venus period is now in full force will cause a series of wind, thunder and rain storms to be followed by frosts. He predicts a long spell of wet weather through the central part of May. The Venus period is central from the 20th to 25th, contributing its full strength to storm and weather extremes. He also predicts threatening weather for the end of the month.

BRITISH PRISONERS IN GERMANY.

From time immemorial prisoners of war have evoked pity and sympathy. The agony and humiliation of the British prisoners must be indescribably acute and galling. But from state of suffering there can be no redress, it being part of the fortunes of war, but the lack of comforts and food stands in a different category. This want will grow in volume and intensity as the days go by.

As the result of an official organization having been created recently to carry parcels to the British prisoners in Germany, insuring proper transmission through the neutral carrier, the "Khaki" Magazine of Imperial House Kingsway, London, has started a fund to supply food and comforts for those who have no relatives or friends to look after them, as it is known that these poor fellows are not getting a proper supply of food. An appeal is made to you in other directions. This money will go for the direct benefit of the prisoners, as there is no cost of transmission and no waste of any description, information having been established showing the kind of food and clothing, etc., which can be sent without confiscation by the German Government.

This appeal should get a large response as there is no other fund that deals with this particular condition. The "Khaki" Magazine and the Cabled News Sheet was created primarily as a gift for the Overseas Soldiers, bringing them late news from their homes. It is now supplying, free of charge, in addition to the soldiers at the front and in training, the various hospitals in England and France, as well as the Grand Old Fleet. It is a purely patriotic endeavor and in no way commercial.

When the "Khaki" Magazine was founded, amongst the many who gave their support and expressions of goodwill for the work it had undertaken, were:—

- The Duke of Wellington, K. G.
- The Duke of Manchester.
- The First Lord of the Admiralty.
- The Countess of Zetland.
- Lady Leven.
- Mrs. Leopold de Rothschild.
- Lieut.-General Sir Robert Baden-Powell, K.C.V.O.
- The Right Hon. Austen Chamberlain, P. C. M.P.
- Lord Desborough.
- The Earl of Essex.
- Viscount Bryce.
- Lord Willoughby de Broke.
- The Earl of Ronaldshay.
- Viscount Milner.
- Earl of Kintore.
- Sir Gilbert Parker, M. P.
- Sir William Bull, M. P.
- The Right Hon. Sir Charles Johnston, Lord Mayor of London.
- The Right Hon. J. E. Rayner, Lord Mayor of Liverpool.
- The Right Hon. W. H. Bowater, Lord Mayor of Birmingham.

All subscriptions will be published in this paper, and you are requested to send yours to any office of the Royal Bank of Canada, and mark it "Khaki Prisoners' Fund." The subscriptions will be duly acknowledged in the magazine and various newspapers in England from time to time.

IMPROVE THE HOME GROUNDS.

Now is the time to clean up about the yard and lawn. All the dead parts of vines and shrubbery should be removed and the fence straightened up if need be, flower beds laid out and made, and perhaps a few shade trees planted. Native trees especially those grown in the rather open places, often thrive best and make the most desirable shade trees. In case a lawn is to be started it should be done without further delay. Rake grass seed in and roll lightly. Probably there are worn or bare spots on the lawn that need re-planting. Cover such areas with an inch or two of well rotted manure, spade deeply, stamp lightly, and sow with lawn seed. Rake well and roll. If possible, these areas should be kept moist.

How to Care for Your Complexion

There is no truer saying than that "beauty is only skin deep." Good features lose their charm under a sallow or blotchy skin and poor features are glorified by a beautiful complexion. A very useful toilet booklet entitled "Your Complexion" has just been issued by Nyal's and contains many helpful health and beauty hints, including proper methods of massage. It can be had for the asking at the Nyal Agency Drug Store and you should call or telephone for it. Among other things it points out that diet, sleep, ventilation, and a thousand other things we cannot escape are continually warring against our complexions. Get a 25c or 50c jar of Nyal's Face Cream and convince yourself of its cleansing and refreshing and beautifying qualities. It is greaseless, oxygenated and quickly absorbed by the skin, leaves no shine, and gives a pleasant, smooth, cool sensation, quickly removing the irritation produced by wind and weather. 1194

All Nyal preparations are justly famous and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call or telephone us for your copy of this book which contains most valuable information.

WEDNESDAY MAY 12, 1915. THE FARMERS AND THE RED CROSS SOCIETY.

We publish today a second appeal on the behalf of the Red Cross Society, by Dr. James W. Robertson.

Dr. Robertson is still best known to the farmers of Canada as Professor Robertson. He began his official public service at the Ontario Agriculture College nearly thirty years ago.

The Dairying Service of the Department of Agriculture soon became known and trusted throughout Canada. From Prince Edward Island to Alberta, farmers profited by the illustration Dairy Stations and the Travelling Instructors.

Other public services of continuing and growing value were inaugurated, while Professor Robertson was Commissioner of Agriculture.

Besides these were the Manual Training Movement, the School Gardens, Household Science, and the Consolidated Rural Schools.

In more recent years, Mr. Robertson was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and of Technical Education.

In these and many other ways, Dr. Robertson has given the farmers of Canada the best that was in him.

The "Christian Herald" has been in some respects an excellent newspaper. Under the direction of the late editor, Dr. Klopsh, it gained a wide circulation in Canada.

In its issue of April 28th, there is an article, entitled "Reaping Dollars from Death," the reference being to the fact that many manufacturers of the United States have been supplying the Allies, with the knowledge and connivance of the Government.

It is with much regret that we chronicle the death of Mrs. L. T. Harlow of Lawrencetown, on the 29th of April.

Mrs. Harlow was the daughter of Mr. John Hardy of South Brookfield, Queens County. Her aged mother is still in the old home where Mrs. Harlow's funeral service took place on Saturday.

The service at Lawrencetown on Friday morning at 10 o'clock was very largely attended. Rev. H. G. Mellick officiated and based his remarks on "The Master has come, and calleth for thee."

He voiced the sincere regard and esteem in which the entire community held the deceased, the husband and two daughters, Miss Hazel and Barbara.

Mrs. Harlow was a sunny dispositioned woman, with a real desire to be helpful, making her an acquisition to the neighborhood.

The flowers bore mute but lovely evidence of the affections of many friends.

and was unprepared for it. A careful reading of the official documents proves this to have been the case. Efforts were made to reach an agreement respecting the limitation of warships, to which Germany refused to accede, and in other ways the same desire for peace was manifested by Great Britain.

On the other hand, Germany had for more than thirty years been compelling her citizens to submit themselves to be made into a great fighting machine. She had organized a system of espionage more extensive and treacherous than the world had ever seen.

What the Christian Herald says shows a mental bias which will injure itself. It does not represent the convictions of the American Government or people.

It is with much regret that we chronicle the death of Mrs. L. T. Harlow of Lawrencetown, on the 29th of April.

The Nation First

How a Boy Played His Part in the Great War.

(By John Gomfort.)

What was it the curate had said last Sunday, when they went down to the village for mass?

"He serves his home best who puts the Nation first."

Jean clenched his brown fists until the knuckles showed white beneath the skin.

"I must go to the village to warn the soldiers. The cattle will be lost and Marie will cry, but it is the Nation that comes first!"

He had his back towards home now and he was running as fast as he could go down through the wheat fields and through the gap to the dusty high road. An old man was sitting by the wayside doing something to his patched boots.

"The Germans are coming—go and warn someone!" shouted Jean, but the old fellow was so deaf that the boy had to go right up to him, and catching him by the shoulder, fairly shake the evil tidings into him.

When the old man understood what was wanted of him, he did not even stay to put his boot on, but tucking it under his arm, turned off through the fields to warn the next village, while Jean sped onward along the dusty road.

Down a hill, up a hill, and then the road veered to a dip again, and there he was, with the village close at hand, and a dozen dusty men lying asleep under the shade of a tall tree by the side of the road.

"Wake, wake! The Germans are coming!" panted Jean, who had hardly breath enough to make himself heard at all, and he entirely failed to wake the soldiers, who were so spent with travel and the long forced marches which had been their portion.

The landlord of the inn heard him, and came running out to demand the source of his information, and between them they roused the troop.

There were about two hundred of them, and when their captain had heard what Jean had to tell, he gave the word, and the whole troop crossed the meadow behind the inn at a run, disappearing into the forest, on their way to intercept that long, wavering line which Jean had seen creeping up through the forest ways.

"Go home boy, go home now, and it may be that you will be in time to save the cattle even yet," said the landlord, who was a kindly man, and understood what it must have cost the boy to put the Nation first.

Jean nodded, and turned away. He had no breath to waste on talking; a long mile stretched between him and the farm, and his mind was gone with the village.

The church bell clanged in an agitated fashion—that was to call the old men and the boys from the fields, and to put the outlying places on guard. But Jean knew that the sound of the bell could not be heard at his home if the women were still indoors, for old Gascoyne was deaf, and never could tell the angelus from the sound of a cow-bell in the upper pastures.

Jean had a horrible pain in his side, there was a thrumming as of drums in his ears, and his feet were so heavy to lift that he caught himself counting the steps as he took them.

He had reached the fields again now, then dashing through a piece of standing wheat, he made for the woodland. There was a short cut here, and if only he made haste, he might succeed in driving the beasts into the forests before the enemy crossed the meadows of the farm.

Desperately he plunged through the lush undergrowth of the little belt of woodland, and just as he was emerging on the side nearest to the farm he heard the watch-dog begin to bark, and a minute later the sound of screaming was borne to his ears across the sunny pastures.

"They are there!" he shouted in his despair; and as if to confirm his utterance, at that moment there came the shrill squealing of a pig that was being slaughtered.

Jean came to a sudden halt. If the troop were busy with a pig, the cattle might escape attention for the moment and there were twenty beasts in the meadow below the house, out of sight of the windows. Surely if he tried very hard he could get these under cover of the forest before the enemy had finished with the pigs.

At least it was worth trying for Jean darted through another piece of standing corn. At ordinary times it would have been reckoned little short of a crime to do things like these, but the cattle were worth hundreds of francs, and he must save them if he could.

NEW EXPERIENCE FOR LABOR BODIES

Taken Into the Confidence of the British Government on War Matters.

So that there may be no delay in making the essential munitions of war, on which so much depends, a conference has been held between the Government and the labor representatives, at which 75 workmen's organizations were represented.

Happily this conference succeeded in reaching certain conclusions which will be recommended to the men represented.

The chief points were: During the war period there shall in no case be any stoppage of work upon munitions and equipments of war.

All differences on wages or conditions of employment shall be the subject of conferences between the parties.

An advisory committee representing the workers engaged in production for Government requirements shall be appointed by the Government.

During the war period the relations of the present trade practice is imperative. Any departure from the practice ruling shall only be for the period of the war.

The relaxation of existing demarcation restrictions or admission of semi-skilled or female labor shall not affect adversely the rates customarily paid for the job.

The Government also proposes to limit the profits of employers to ten per cent, and any excess is to go to the State. The labor men regard the settlement of this point as necessary corollary to the problems which the trade unions have been called upon to face.

Mr. Lloyd George, interviewed by the "Daily Citizen," discusses this conference and its decisions.

"The note of the whole thing," said Mr. Lloyd George, was the necessity of taking labor frankly into the confidence of the Government in the organizing of all industries that produce munitions of war.

"I think," the Chancellor added, "that this is the first time since a thing has ever been done either in this or any other country. And mark you, it does not end with the conference, for we have established a permanent advisory committee of labor representative with whom we mean to confer from time to time upon problems affecting the labor in the factories and workshops that are engaged in turning out war material.

"It amounts to this," said the Chancellor, "that there is now opening up a great new chapter in the history of labor in its relations with the State."

Eastern Car Company of New Glasgow Receives Contract for 2,000 Cars from Russian Government.

NEW GLASGOW, May 5—The Eastern Car Company has been given an order by the Russian Government for 2,000 steel frame box cars, and the Nova Scotia Steel Company has received an order for shells worth $3,500,000, from the Imperial Government. Work will begin at once on both orders.

The cars will be shipped in sections from Pictou Landing for Vladivostok where they will be set up on Russian soil.

It will take eight or ten ships to transport the cars and whether the company's own steamers will be used, or whether ships shall be chartered by the company for the purpose, has not yet been decided.

The shell order for the Nova Scotia Steel Company includes eighteen-pounder shrapnel, 4.5 lyddite shells and sixty-pounders. The company has been making 18 and 15-pounder shells for the British Government, but this is the first order for lyddite and 60-pounders. The Nova Scotia Steel Company will make the shells and put in the bullets but the explosives will be inserted at Quebec.

MIRACULOUS CURE OF ASTHMA

Suffered Terribly for 15 Years Until He Tried "Fruit-a-lives"

D. A. WHITE, Esq.

21 WALLACE AVE., TORONTO,
Dec. 22nd, 1913.

"Having been a great sufferer from Asthma for a period of fifteen years (sometimes having to sit up at night for weeks at a time) I began the use of "Fruit-a-lives". These wonderful tablets relieved me of Indigestion, and through the continued use of same, I am no longer distressed with that terrible disease, Asthma, thanks to "Fruit-a-lives" which are worth their weight in gold to anyone suffering as I did. I would heartily recommend them to all sufferers from Asthma, which I believe is caused or aggravated by Indigestion".

THE OLD ARM CHAIR.

What recollections of the past,
Of scenes gone by, and days that were;
Crowd through my mind whenever I cast
A look upon my father's chair.
How often have I climb'd his knees
To pat his head and stroke his hair;
The kind paternal kiss to seize,
When seated in this old arm chair.
And much of monetary lore,
Which bade me of the world beware,
His tongue has uttered o'er and o'er,
When seated in this old arm chair.
When evening called us round the hearth,
And storms disturb'd the wintry
air,
What merry tales of social mirth
Have issued from this old arm chair.
With summer's toil and heat o'ercome,
When weary nature sought repair,
Oft has he thrown his languid frame,
Exhausted in this old arm chair.
When adverse fortune cross'd his road,
And bow'd him down with anxious care—
How has he sigh'd beneath his load,
When seated in this old arm chair.
But death has long since clos'd his eyes,
And peacefully he slumbers, where
A grassy turf is seen to rise,
And fills no more this old arm
chair,
E'en that which does these seems recall,
Which age and wasting worms impair,
Must shortly into pieces fall,
And cease to be an old arm chair.
Yet while its smallest parts remain,
My fancy shall behold him there;
And memory stir those thoughts
again,
Of him whom filled the old arm
chair.

First Dose Ends Indigestion, Heart- burn, Or Gas On Stomach

The question as to how long you are going to continue suffering from indigestion, dyspepsia or out-of-order stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking Tonaline Tabs. People with weak stomachs should take Tonaline Tablets occasionally, and there will be no more indigestion, no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, no heartburn, sour risings, gas on stomach, or belching of undigested food, headaches, dizziness or sick stomach; and besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved five minutes after taking Tonaline Tablets. Go to your druggist and get a $1.00 box of Tonaline Tablets and you will go to the table with a hearty appetite, what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. Tonaline tabs fresher you and make you feel like life is worth living. Tonaline Tablets cost $1.00 for a 50 days' treatment. At druggists or mailed by American Proprietary Co., Boston, Mass.

MISS ETHEL FITCH

CHAPTER IV.

Neither of the two excited occupants of the room noticed the quiet entrance of Parish. Hogan still continued to flourish his revolver with nerve-racking carelessness, demanding the whereabouts of Maudie and the rocks, while Percy's entire attention was absorbed in futile efforts to explain his identity and dodge the formidable weapon. Parish stood, an amused spectator. Though not a word of the heated argument escaped him, his keen eyes appraised his double, and took in every detail of the disordered room. The suite which Percy occupied he noticed was one of the best in the hotel, from which we will infer that three weeks of hardship had not taught the son of the multi-millionaire economy. He perceived also that the garments thrown about the room were expensive and well-tailored, and decided that this might indeed be the son of Van Ness.

At length fearing that Hogan's loud tones would attract attention, and tiring of the quarrel which though apparently endless promised no new developments, he interposed by tapping Hogan smartly on the shoulder with his cape. Hogan wheeled sharply, and stood for a moment gasping with astonishment, starting from Percy to Parish, as if in doubt of evidences of his senses. Then, with cry of intense relief, he sank almost blubbering into a chair.

"Is it you, Jim," he exclaimed. "The Lord be praised, I thought you had given me the double-cross. This living picture of yours here," waving his arm towards Percy, "put a fearful scare into me."

Parish paid little attention to his pal, beyond an admonition to "cheer up." With a differential bow he proffered Percy a cigar, then deliberately sat down and smoothly and suavely sought to engage him in conversation. "I deeply regret," he said, "that your resemblance to me has caused you to suffer at the hands of my impetuous Irish friend." At this point the impetuous Irish friend, prompted by a glance from Parish, muttered a gruff apology.

"Oh that is all right," answered Percy lightly. "It was clearly a case of mistaken identity, and I was partly in fault."

Percy felt greatly relieved by the advent of this third party, whom he rightly supposed to be Gentleman Jim. He would have welcomed the devil himself, if his coming had meant relief from the bore subjects of Maudie and the rocks. He did not exactly fancy the idea of hobnobbing with crooks, but was not adverse to a few moments chat with Parish, who seemed a gentleman of refinement and education. The adventure had a spice of novelty about it, and moreover gave him an opportunity to study his double at close quarters, and compare his features with his own reflected image in the mirror. He knew also that Hogan must be bursting with inquiries about Maudie and the rocks, and took an impish delight in prolonging his anxiety.

Although Parish and Percy were very similar in features, size, coloring and even the calibre of their voices, a keen observer would have noticed that Parish seemed somewhat the older of the two. There was also an exaggerated saunter in the manner of the former, which Percy lacked; being stolid and phlegmatic as a Dutchman, which indeed he was by descent. Parish also had a certain nervousness of manner, glance and gesture, and a furtive habit of looking over his shoulder, which would have furnished the same keen observer with a clew to his method of earning a livelihood. He talked well, and even brilliantly, frequently punctuating his remarks with a jolly laugh, which exposed to view rows of faultless teeth, more even and white than those which Percy boasted. His hands also were slimmer, longer, and the fingers more tapering, and free from the stains of cigarettes.

"I wonder," said Parish, after they had chatted for a time on indifferent topics, "if we are any relation."
"My people are southerners. I was born in Georgia. My grandfather was Colonel Parish, one of Lee's generals. My mother was of French descent."
Whereupon Percy with not a little pride delved into his own family tree, incidentally telling many intimate things about his parents and of his life in New York.

"Well," said Parish at length. "We have had a very pleasant talk. Now I want to do something to atone for the trouble which Hogan has caused you. Come out with us and have something to drink and a little lunch. I know a swell cafe on Boylston Street."
"Oh! No thanks," exclaimed Percy, who suddenly remembered the detective who had shadowed him, and realized that he did not want to be seen in public with the crooks.

"I have a flask of Scotch in my pocket," interposed Hogan.
"Good enough for me," assented Percy, producing glasses from the cupboard. While his back was turned Parish gave a peculiar sign to Hogan, who nodded immediate assent, and drew also a small phial from his pocket, containing a dark brown liquid.

"Our mutual health," proposed Parish, bowing to Percy, and lifting his glass with a great flourish. Percy drained his glass. "I will have another," he said, "for this is my birthday."

"Your birthday," exclaimed Parish. "Why we are indeed twins. It is mine as well. I am twenty-one," he added not without an appraising glance at Percy.

"Twenty-one," exclaimed Percy. "Why so am I."

They shook hands with enthusiasm, wishing each other many happy returns of the day. Hogan took advantage of the opportunity to pour a few drops of the brown fluid in Percy's glass.
"Our next meeting," proposed Percy, lifting his glass, for in spite of prudence, he was beginning to like the clever crook immensely.

They drank again.
In a few moments Percy began to feel very sleepy, his head nodded, the faces of Hogan and Parish grew faint, their voices sounded a long way off and the heir of the Van Nesses fell an unconscious heap to the floor.

The two crooks faced each other across the table.

"Well," demanded Hogan. "What is the game? But first of all," interposed, as Parish was about to reply, "Tell me what you did with the swag?"

"I went out to Denver as planned," said Parish, "but found myself shadowed?"

"Who by?" inquired Hogan.

"I don't know," replied Parish. "A smart looking guy in plain clothes. I never saw him before. I came back at once to Boston, as I closed with Epstein, although he slacked a bit on his first offer. I picked them out of the settings and sold them in bulk."

"Without recutting?" exclaimed Hogan. "It was the only way the old trick would take them."

Hogan shook his head as if in disapproval of such rashness.

"What did he pay you?"

"$25,000," replied Parish. "They are easily worth twice that amount, but money is scarce, and we were lucky to dispose of them at all. I banked the money and will give you your cheque now for half."

"What about Maudie's share?" interposed Hogan. "Where is she anyway?"

"Maudie has left the firm, at least for the present," said Parish with a rueful laugh.

"Married?" screamed Hogan.

"No not so bad as that," Parish assured him, with a smile at the lover's ardor. "One Sunday night when we were out in Denver," he continued, "we went to hear Bill Sunday just for a lark. He is some little talker. He could talk a hen off her nest. Maudie got converted, and swears that she is going to live straight. At the present moment she is dressed in cheap serge, working behind the counter at Jordan & Marsh's for a small sum of $4.25 per week."

Hogan gave a grunt of disgust. "When a woman gets religion," he announced, you can't do anything with her. I paid my sister Nora's way out from Ireland, and when she got here she would not do a thing to help me, though she had places in rich families. That is religion for you."

"Just let Maudie alone," admonished Parish. "I think that she will come around alright. She is very fond of pretty things, and it does not run in our family to work very hard or very long."
"Now as regards this cub," he continued, prodding Percy with his toe. "You have made a great find Hogan. I could not have asked a better Christmas present than this. Every Gentleman of Fortune should have a double. Then if any unpleasantness arises, he can send his proxy to the Pen, and still go about his life work."
"What do you mean?" asked Hogan, mystified.

"Just this," exclaimed Parish. "Things are going to get too hot for us here soon. Martel has been promoted to Chief, and a new broom sweeps clean. He will want to make a lot of arrests. All our friends on the police staff have been fired. Reforms is the order of the day. Now if anything turns up about those stones, here—indicating Percy—is a peace offering for Martel. We will send this lamb to the slaughter. As for myself, I am going to New York."

"What for?" inquired Hogan.
"To visit my Papa and Mamma Van Ness. They must be lonesome without me. Strip off his duds. I am going to change with him. Probably his parents would not know his rags—these rich people seldom see their children—but servants have sharp eyes. Pack all his things into that grip, and then phone a hack. I will settle his bill. Go through his pockets carefully for letters, and if you come across any read them to me, while I undress."
"What shall I do with him while you are gone?" asked Hogan, starting to remove Percy's coat.

"Take him down to Bert's place and keep him snug. Do not let Maudie in on this. She is not to be trusted just at present. I will write just as soon as I can."
The programme outlined was quickly carried out. Nothing of interest was found in Percy's pockets, except a pawn ticket, which mystified the two crooks. A hotel porter helped them back the apparently intoxicated Percy into the hack.

"If I send for you come at once," said Parish, in parting instruction.
"Yes," replied Hogan.
"And above all, keep Maudie out of this," he added, as he banged to the door of the hack. "Joy Street," he bawled to the driver, "and drive smart." He stood watching the hack for a few moments as it rolled down the street. Then he made his way quickly to South Station and purchased a ticket to New York, and was soon en route to the bosom of his adopted family.

The Revenue Question

When prohibition is enforced the revenue question settles itself quite easily with a good balance on the credit side. That has been the experience of Maine, Kansas, N. Dakota, Russia, Norway and in our own country Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and the many municipalities that have prohibition by local option.
The Minister of Russia explains it in a pithy manner. He says "When we sold Vodka the people were poor. The money for the drink went into the treasury but the human machine that made that money became weaker and weaker. So the nation was really cutting off the revenue at its source."
When mobilization began the doctors found all sorts of complaints superinduced by drink. Now at the end of this very short period the new armies are of a healthier sort of men. And what is the result financially? There is money in the savings banks. If the country is a little poorer, the people are already a good deal richer. If the people are poor we tax them without results. If they are rich we levy on them by indirect taxation as we are doing now."
"In the coal regions we have sent thirty per cent of the men to the war and yet the output of work is greater by thirty per cent because everybody is sober. I have received delegations of former drinkers and their wives and families thanking the government for the new conditions and asking that they continue. Delegations have come from employers all over Russia asking that we never again sell Vodka."

"A large number of men cannot break off drink without some help and it is cruel to tempt them with the open bar and store instead of helping them in their struggle."

The Nation First

clenched his hands again in rage at the robbery, for the Germans took what they would and paid for nothing, and how could the former-folk exist at times like these if they could not sell their produce?

He entered the pastures by the lower gate, and saw to his dismay that the cattle were scattered all over the wide meadow. What a time it would take him to round them up! And they were lumpy things to drive when they did not choose to move. He would be discovered, and his chance of saving them would be gone.

Was there no way? He drove his hands into his pockets with a movement of desperation, and his knuckles hit a bit of rock salt, and then he suddenly had an inspiration.

"Salt, salt!" he cried, sending his voice out with a quavering shout. He had to risk the enemy hearing him call, but that risk was the less, as another pig had begun to squeal. Three pigs! What robbers they were! There would be no bacon for the winter now, nor any lard. They would have to eat their potatoes with only salt—they might even not be able to save the potatoes.

"Salt, salt!" he was calling—in French, for the cattle would not have understood English, nor did he understand it himself. A big red steer in the middle of the meadow had lifted its head, and after pausing a moment, as if in doubt, came marching towards him. This was the leader; two minutes later and the whole lot were on the move.

Jean backed sufficiently to make sure they were all through the gate, then he stopped to give the steer a lick at the salt; and when he had satisfied the animal as to good faith of his call, he slipped round to shut the gate of the meadow, so that there could be no danger of the cattle doubling back.

With such trouble and labor he drove the cattle into a part of the forest crossed by no road or track, and then he herded them carefully, intending to keep them there until nearly sundown, by which time the Germans would have passed right on without discovering the whereabouts of such a valuable find.

He got dreadfully hungry as the time went on, and was just thinking that he might soon start back to the farm, when suddenly there was a shout, then quite a volley of shouting, and a troop of about twenty Germans burst into the open from one of the leafy forest ways.

They surrounded the cattle with loud cries of satisfaction, and one of them presenting a revolver at the head of Jean, harshly bade him drive the beasts onwards to the place where the night camp was made.

Stiff and dazed with horror the boy had to obey or be shot, and all the time he was thinking that if only he had left the beasts at home in the meadow this night he might not have happened.

What a lot of blunders he seemed to make that day yet he had tried so hard to put the Nation first, only somehow he had failed to do anything except to warn the soldiers that the enemy were in the neighborhood. Certainly he had done that much, and the thought of the lives he had saved kept him from feeling an absolute failure.

He was wondering whether he could so blunder his driving that he could make the cattle stampede and scatter in the thick undergrowth, when the German who was holding the revolver at his head called a halt, and held a short consultation with the others.

From what Jean could understand of the talk, he gathered that they were debating whether it would be safe to stay where they were for supper and rest. They had had no food that day, and had got out of touch with the main body which he had seen advancing on the way to the farm, and this was a small patrol belonging to it.

"We had better kill the boy, or he may give away our position," growled a big man who had slipped from his horse, and walked with a limp.

"Yes, it won't be safe to let him run, or he may bring trouble on us before we can cook our supper," remarked another, as he hid his side from his horse.

Kill him! Jean's hair felt as if it stood straight up all over his head, and a horrible shiver caught him in the back. He had to set his teeth hard to keep from crying out in sheer panic, for right down at the bottom he did not feel a bit brave.

He wondered if Marie would ever hear what had become of him, and whether she would cry very much. He wondered, too, if old Gascoyne would know how hard he had tried to save the cattle, and then he suddenly turned rigid with sheer terror as the man with the revolver lifted it pointing it full at him.

All at once the cattle stamped wildly; the big red steer came charging along, bowling over the man with the revolver, which cracked harmlessly in the lush weeds and ferns. The air was full of shouts and cries, and a party of the French infantry whom he had warned a short time before burst out of the thicket and flung themselves on the astonished Germans. The enemy taken so completely unawares,

Many women with disfigured complexions never seem to think that they need an occasional cleansing inside as well as outside. Yet neglect of this internal bathing shows itself in spotty, and sallow complexions—as well as in dreadful headaches and biliousness. The best remedy is Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, which stimulate the liver to healthy activity, remove fermentation, gently cleanse the stomach and bowels and tone the whole digestive system. Glimpses Into German Feelings and Falsehoods

A correspondent of the London Times gives the following glimpses into the German feeling and falsehoods respecting the British and indifference of German soldiers to their own brothers on the field.

The "Most Hated Foe."

As regards the official excitement of the troops against the British, more than one order was published about the time of the attack upon Ypres in which we were characterized as the "most hated foe," "barbaric troops," and accused of using "Dum Dum" ammunition.

In the first of the two following extracts will be seen the ordinary newspaper lie calculated to fan hatred amongst the populace generally. From the second, however, it appears that lies are also disseminated officially to the troops in the field by the military authorities. These two extracts have possibly already been published in the papers at home, but, even so, no apology is needed for a second reference to them in order to make clear the spirit of our opponents.

The first is the translation of a portion of an article from the Tagliche Rundschau, one of the leading German newspapers, dated Berlin, March 28, 1915. It refers to the battle of Neuve Chapelle.

British Methods of Making War.

In this battle the English have again given striking proof of what depths of infamy they are capable. At the first assault they drove the British and Gurkhas, apparently unarmed and with uplifted hands, in front of them. The Germans naturally did not shoot, so that the enemy reached our trenches without losses. The British who followed succeeded by this means in taking possession of our trenches—though only temporarily. At the second assault these infamous English cannibals drove the German prisoners captured that morning in front of them in the attack on our trenches; those who refused to advance were beaten to death.

It is interesting to learn that the recalcitrant German prisoners should have been disposed of by so slow a process as beating when the English canille must have had such things as rifles, bayonets, and revolvers at their disposal! The Kolnische Zeitung, another leading newspaper, publishes a letter purporting to be from a German officer who fought against us at Neuve Chapelle. The letter contains, inter alia, the following:—

I must confess that before I joined the army I used to look upon the stories of English cruelties and dirty tricks with considerable suspicion. Now I have had personal experience, and must admit that, black as matters are painted by the newspapers, they are in reality still blacker. The following examples, for the accuracy of which I can vouch, as they were communicated officially to the troops by our division:—
Two hundred and fifty English in German great-coats and helmets made signs to a party of German soldiers to join them, and then shot them down at close range; German prisoners were used during attacks by the British troops as cover for the advance, &c.

Presumably such liels serve their purpose and are credited by those for whom they are intended, especially when given out as the personal experience of an eye-witness, whose testimony is second-hand and based on an official communication.

German Callousness.

On the other hand, it is interesting to record the behavior at this same fight of some of these soldiers whose gullibility is so great and whose standard of honor and sense of humanity are so strong that it is considered worth while to play upon these feelings in order to excite ferocity against us.

As already mentioned their treatment of some of their own wounded was extremely callous. The detailed facts of the case are as follows:—On the night of March 16-17, in the course of a reconnaissance made in front of the British trenches, an officer with the reconnoitering party saw lights to his rear. Thinking that they were signs of a hostile patrol, he took precautions in accordance. The next night a further reconnaissance in the same direction was made by a larger force under three officers. Lights were again seen and this time cries of Kamerad were heard. On further search two German soldiers were found. One of them, Ludwig Opendorfer, of the 21st Bavarian Reserve Regiment, had been wounded in the head and the other, No. 2510 Edward Schmidt, of the 20th Bavarian Reserve Regiment, had been shot through the left eye. Both had been lying out helpless since March 12, and were in a shocking state, gangrene having set in one case.

These were the only still living men found, but it was clear that many of the bodies in the trenches were those of men who had crawled in. Since the spot at which they were was only 50 or 70 yards from the German line and 50 yards from where the enemy were erecting entanglements, it is impossible to believe that their presence was unknown to their comrades, for their cries could have been heard 100 yards away and they were at such a distance from our front trenches that they could have been removed to our lines and then to the hospital, where they are believed to be doing well. The soldiers who actually picked them up and carried them were what the enemy calls "black savages," and they performed this act of rescue under fire and at the risk of their lives.

The C. P. R. steamer Prince Albert which has been put in first class condition during the spring is now making her daily trips from Kingsport to Fargborough.
