Mr. MALCOLM: Not being a member of the treasury board I do not know what arguments were used with regard to the deputy ministers in the various departments. If the hon. member desires to know to what extent the treasury board considered length of service, and what other matters were considered, I think he would be well advised to direct his question to the chairman of that board, because I am not in a position to give that information.

Mr. LADNER: Was the minister's request for an increase of $2,000?

Mr. MALCOLM: I may say frankly that when I was consulted with regard to the matter, I said that I thought my deputy was worth $10,000.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MALCOLM: If my hon. friends are agreeable, I should like to take up the item dealing with the Canada Grain Act.

The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation, maintenance, and equipment of elevators, administration of, $2,618,570.

Mr. SPENCER: Does the revenue derived from the charges made equal the expenditure in this case?

Mr. MALCOLM: The revenue this year has exceeded the expenditure. I can give my hon. friend the latest figures:

	Receipts	Expenditure	Surplus
Grain inspection, weighing, etc.	$2,179,435 23	$1,856,202 06	$323,233 17
Management, operation and maintenance of elevators	807,435 27	430,384 38	377,050 89
Equipment of elevators	.....	16,056 35	(deficit of) 16,056 35
Totals	$2,986,870 50	$2,302,642 79	$684,227 71

The apparent surplus is $684,227.71.

Mr. COOTE: Was sufficient money voted last year to carry out the administration of the act?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, we had sufficient voted last year for that purpose.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to bring to the minister's attention the accommodation provided for the grain inspector at Calgary. I mentioned it before. I think better accommodation should be provided for the grain inspector at that point. The premises he has at the present time are too small to enable the staff to work satisfactorily. They have not enough window space. It will be realized that grain inspectors always want a north light.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend brought this matter to my attention and the accommodation which he wanted is being provided at the present time.

Item agreed to.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and icebreakers, $1,650,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have been taking up with the minister a number of times a matter in connection with the tax on canoes, rowboats and motorboats in Muskoka. If the minister will be good enough to tell me that he will repeal the order in council in question, I shall have nothing more to say.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Unfortunately I am not in a position to be as generous as that in regard to my hon. friend's request. I should like to hear his reasons.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am sorry the minister cannot give me that assurance. I will ask him another question, because I do not want to say anything that is unnecessary with regard to this matter. Has the government determined to leave that order in council in force?

Mr. CARDIN: That is practically what has been decided. There may be a discussion and a reduction of the rates, but I am afraid we shall have to stand by the order in council.

Mr. McGIBBON: Then I shall have to enter a protest against the discrimination that is being exercised in connection with the riding which I have the honour to represent. I do not know why my riding should be singled out from all the ridings of the Dominion of Canada and an order in council passed imposing a tax of from $1 to $8 on all canoes, rowboats and motor boats. I know what the minister will say, namely, that this has been asked for by a tourist association some of whom, I am free to admit, are Conservatives, but I humbly submit to the minister that it would be better to take advice, if he is going for advice to Conservatives at all, from those who represent the people rather than from those who do not represent anybody. I submit that this tax is unfair and discriminatory, because in the whole Dominion of Canada it is only my riding that has been singled out. Moreover, this is a tax which it is impossible to enforce. Let me read for the minister's information his own order in council, so that I shall have a basis for the remarks I intend to make:

His Excellency the governor general in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and under the provisions of the Government Harbours and Piers Act, chapter 89 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered that the regulations made and established by order in council, P.C. 1170 dated 12th July, 1928, be applied to the following waters to be known as the harbour of Muskoka lakes—

To be defined as follows:

All the waters of lakes Muskoka, Rousseau and Joseph, including their connecting and tributary waters.

I wonder if the minister has ever considered what that means. We have three lakes there with a coastline of possibly 200 miles that he is going to make into a harbour. More than that he is taking in all the tributary rivers and the connecting waters—for example, the south branch of the Muskoka river, which runs away back into the district of Haliburton, and the north branch, which runs away up into the district of Parry Sound. The other outlet from the lake runs into Georgian bay. Taking it all in all, I think his order in council is making a harbour that will have from 1,000 to 1,500 miles of coastline. If that is not a ridiculous thing to do, I do not know what would be. Moreover, it is an infliction that is going to penalize not only the ordinary residents of Muskoka but tourists as well. The tourist trade is bringing a large amount of money into this country every year; in a former debate it was estimated at $275,000,000 a year. If these regulations are going to be enforced, every tourist who comes to this country will have to hunt up some person, take an affidavit, go and get a license, put number plates on his boats or canoes, and equip them with lights. That will be a real annoyance to the many tourists who come into our country, many of them bringing a canoe on the side of their car. It will be a real annoyance also to the farmers and other residents of Muskoka living near the Muskoka lakes.

If the minister will read the regulations he will find that they require a light to be carried in the stern of a boat or canoe that will be visible from all sides. If the minister has ever been in a row boat or a canoe, he must know that that is impossible. No man could fix a light in the stern of a boat so that it would be visible from all sides on a dark night. These regulations are going to be a worse nuisance than the luxury taxes which the Conservatives put on years ago, and they are bound to cause an immense amount of trouble. Only one man is appointed to issue the licenses; he lives in Toronto nine months out of twelve, and during the other three months he is located in the little village of Port Carling. People will have to go miles and miles to get their number plates and licenses. It will mean that some people will have to go from fifty to sixty or seventy miles.

The minister has been very generous in saying that he will reconsider this matter. I am going to be frank with him: he could not put in my hands a better instrument to get votes than these regulations if they are to be enforced. But I am not looking at it from that point of view; I am looking at it from the point of view of the good of the country. The tourist trade is rapidly growing, and petty annoyances of this sort will disgust those who come to visit this country. The tax, it is true, runs only from $1 to $8, but it is heavy. The government does not get a cent out of it, because all the money is turned over to a man who is appointed as harbour commissioner, a man who is an outsider and the people up there are estimating that he will draw from $6,000 to $10,000 a year.

The regulations are going to be a real nuisance, and will not react to the credit of this government. Many of my people, farmers scattered along the shore line of the lakes, miles and miles away from a village, have two or three canoes or rowboats, and they have to go to all this trouble simply to appease Sir Thomas White and other people like him who were instrumental in persuading the government that this was the right thing to do, when it is really the wrong thing to do. I am not blaming the government for it, but they should not have listened to this advice. The object of making these boats carry lights is, of course, the protection of life, but I submit that under the law as it stands everything can be obtained that the minister is seeking to obtain here, and with a great deal less trouble. I am going to ask the minister and the government to repeal these regulations.

Reducing the cost of the license will help some, but that is not all the trouble. When you look at the penalties that are attached, you will see that a man may be imprisoned for not carrying a license number on his boat or canoe or motor boat. When a man brings his canoe or rowboat in to the shore at night he invariably turns it upside down to let the water out. If there are electric batteries in the boat they are likely to tumble out and get wet unless they are permanently fastened. As I said a few minutes ago, if I were seeking my own political advantage I would say nothing and let the government proceed to enforce these regulations, and the more strictly they were enforced the better it would be for me politically. But I say I am looking at it from the point of view of the good of the country, especially a country so closely tied up with the tourist traffic as Muskoka is. I hesitate very much to accept even in a modified form anything that is going to be such an irritation. I ask the minister and the government, who have been very kind and considerate with regard to all my requests, to see if they cannot cancel this order.

Mr. BENNETT: May I direct the minister's attention to what I conceive to be the legal position in connection with this matter? The order in council purports to be made under the provisions of chapter 89 of the revised statutes of Canada. The title of that chapter is "An Act respecting the government harbours, piers and breakwaters," and the act may be cited as "the Government Harbours and Piers Act." In this act, "minister" means the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Section 3 reads:

> Nothing in this act shall apply to the harbour of Toronto, Quebec, Montreal, Halifax, Pictou, or St. John, New Brunswick, or any harbour under the management of commissioners appointed under any act of the parliament of Canada.

That in itself indicates the meaning that is to be attached to the word "harbour" generally. Then section 4 says, with respect to works under the control of the minister:

> Excepting such wharfs, piers and breakwaters as are on or connected with canals, the use, maintenance and ordinary repairs of all harbours, wharfs, piers and breakwaters constructed or completed at the expense of Canada, or in any way the property of Canada, and the making and enforcing of regulations concerning such use, maintenance and ordinary repairs, and the collection of tolls and dues for such use, shall be under the control and management of the minister.

The powers of the governor in council are set out in section 6:

> The governor in council may appoint or direct such officers or persons as he thinks proper, who shall have, under the direction of the minister, the charge of the works by this act placed under the management and control of the minister, and who shall collect the tolls and dues to be paid in respect thereof.

That refers to tolls and dues in connection with harbour works. Subsection 2 of section 6 reads:

> The governor in council may determine the remuneration to be allowed them respectively for such services, and such remuneration shall be retained from the tolls and dues collected.

Then section 7 provides that the governor in council may make regulations. Section 8 deals with the publication of the regulations, section 9 with the collection of tolls, and how enforced, and section 10 provides that no clearance shall be granted to vessels unless the tolls are paid. I think the Minister of Justice, who is beside the minister, will agree that unless there is a grant of power by parliament upon the minister and or the governor in council to make regulations no regulations may validly be made. That is clear. There must be a grant of power to permit the regulations to be legally made.

Under the order in council the minister purports to convert one thousand miles of lake and river front into a harbour. These words occur in paragraph (1) of the order in council:

> That the regulations made and established by order in council P.C. 1170 dated 12th July, 1928, be applied to the following waters to be known as the harbour of Muskoka lakes:

Imagine, Mr. Minister of Justice, an order in council purporting to convert a river and lake shore front extending over one thousand miles into a harbour to be called the harbour of Muskoka lakes, the description being as follows:

> All the waters of lakes Muskoka, Rousseau and Joseph, including their connecting and tributary waters.

That becomes the harbour. The whole basis of this new regulation is that a harbour has been established with respect to which these tolls may be applied. Certainly there is no grant of power by this parliament to the governor in council to make that regulation. There is nothing within the four corners of this statute that confers upon the governor in council power to make a harbour, and much less would council have power to make a harbour of the Muskoka lakes. The word "harbour" must have the ordinary designation attaching to it, as is shown in the use of the expression "harbour of Montreal, harbour of Quebec," and so on. Now the government is going to make three lakes and the connecting rivers into a harbour called "Muskoka harbour." The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a professional man, and he has beside him the departmental adviser. I think he will agree that the leading cases in the privy council hold that parliamentary authorization is necessary to the validity of an order in council.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no doubt as to that.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course not. Then I just make this request of the minister, and he and I will have no further argument about it: show me within the four corners of the statute the power to make this order in council.

Mr. ARTHURS: Before this discussion closes, I should point out that there are a number of people interested besides the member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon). The minister attempts to call the Muskoka lakes and their tributary waters a harbour. Well, a part of those waters extend up into Algonquin park and into my riding. Manifestly it would be unfair that a man travelling along the highway beyond, say, Parry Sound, carrying a canoe on his car, should be compelled to have attached to that canoe one of the lights suggested by the minister and to buy a license for his craft if he wants to use it on any little stream tributary to the Muskoka lakes. If the minister wanted to do it piecemeal he could have secured orders in council dealing with the Trent river, the Muskoka river and the French river systems. Therefrom he would derive an unwarranted revenue for the government. It is absolutely right that regulations should be made to provide that motor and other boats carry lights at night when they are running through crowded or dangerous waters; there is no objection to that at all. But if a farmer in that country has some ten, fifteen or twenty canoes that he hires out during the tourist season, and perhaps a few motor boats, he is taxed between $20 and $150 under this order in council as now proposed by the minister. The whole proposal is absolutely unfair, it is class legislation, and there is no justification for it. I agree with the leader of the opposition that no such proceeding is authorized by statute.

Mr. CARDIN: This is not a new question. For over ten years representations have been made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to take action to prevent the possibility of accidents on these lakes where there is a somewhat heavy traffic of motor and rowboats, particularly at night. Representations have also been made to the department by people who are interested in navigation on the Muskoka lakes. A few years ago the petitioners were supported by the municipal bodies of the localities surrounding those lakes. The government did not act on its own volition with a view to imposing nuisance taxes, as my hon. friend from Muskoka said. We simply desired to meet a request which has been made to us on many occasions. I can see now that the opinions of certain people have changed since that time, but I think that everybody will admit it is quite proper to take the necessary steps to protect life on these lakes, particularly at night when very fast motor boats are likely to place in a very dangerous position those using canoes, rowboats and even small motor boats.

Mr. ARTHURS: I do not think that either the member for Muskoka-Ontario or myself has any objection to a regulation to safeguard the public or the users of motor and rowboats and canoes. What we are objecting to is that the government in passing this order in council went further than any request that they received from any organization in Muskoka or any other part of the Dominion, and imposed a very substantial tax upon the owners and users of boats in that section. If the government want to appoint a man to enforce the present law regarding the carrying of lights at night by motor and other boats, I shall be satisfied as I am sure will be my hon. friend from Muskoka.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister elaborate the point raised by the leader of the opposition? What is his authority to declare any body of water a harbour? The act does not give him any power. Here are three or four large lakes and adjacent rivers. We know they do not constitute a harbour. Under what authority does the minister declare those large bodies of water to be a harbour? Parliament might do it, but he has no power.

Mr. CARDIN: May I say in reply that a large body of water may be termed a harbour, as well as a small body. The extent of the water does not signify.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Who has the right to declare it to be a harbour?

Mr. CARDIN: We have the right according to the law under which we have acted.

Mr. BENNETT: What section?

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend the leader of the opposition stressed certain words, "piers and breakwaters." But he left aside the general wording of the act respecting government harbours.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, he mentioned that.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, but he argued more particularly that piers and breakwaters referred to works which have been constructed.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is the power to make this body of water a harbour?

Mr. CARDIN: The power under which we acted is contained in section 7:

> The governor in council may, on the recommendation of the minister, make rules and regulations for the use and management of such harbours, wharves, piers and breakwaters, and a tariff or tariffs.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Manifestly this area is not a harbour unless it is so declared by some power. The word "harbour" has a definite meaning in the English language. Parliament might do it.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Have the law officers of the crown been consulted about this matter? As the Minister of Justice knows, the only harbours that the Dominion has any power over at all are the "public harbours" as described in the third schedule of the British North America Act. My hon. friends the two ministers ought to know the situation very well in view of the Montreal harbour commissioners' case which went through the courts here and then to the privy council. I wish I had had an opportunity of looking up that case; but the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will find that the word "harbour" is discussed in that very case. Certainly a series of lakes is not a harbour. But where do you get your authority? It must come from the British North America Act, and the specific description there is "public harbours." What is a harbour? A harbour is a place where ships ride into anchor. It is not a lake over which ships ply; it is not a sea over which ships ply; and to undertake to pass a law of this description, and then visit penalties if it is not kept, seems to me, frankly, ridiculous. I cannot believe that any law officer of the crown has been consulted in reference to this order in council. I respect law, and I sometimes think that even a poor law should have some respect; but I tell you plainly that I would advise any of these men in that district, in this great series of lakes, who found themselves offended by this order in council to disobey it and to take the government of the country, at the expense of the government, through the law courts. It has been done before. I think that before this is relied upon we are entitled as a parliament to have the statement of someone learned in the law who will say that this is a proper order in council and within the power of the Dominion of Canada. You cannot deal with anything but public harbours because you have not property in anything else, and the British North America Act is specific.

Mr. CARDIN: Not to prolong the discussion, or to expose the government to the possibility suggested by my hon. friend, I am ready to look into the matter again and to submit the case to the Department of Justice.

Mr. McGIBBON: I thank the minister.

Mr. SHORT: How many icebreakers are there and where are they in use?

Mr. CARDIN: We have the Lady Grey, the Mikula, the Montcalm and the Stanley. The Stanley, as my hon. friend knows, operates in Nova Scotia.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to replace three Dominion steamers which are no longer serviceable, $550,000.

Mr. CARDIN: As the item indicates, this vote is to replace three obsolete boats, the Newington, the Scout and the Shamrock.

[Mr. Ryckman.]

Mr. SHORT: What is the size of the steamers that will take the place of these old ones and what will be the cost of each one?

Mr. CARDIN: They will be 175 feet long.

Mr. QUINN: Have the contracts been let?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. QUINN: Does the minister propose calling for tenders from firms outside Canada?

Mr. CARDIN: No, in Canada only.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister has promised to use his good offices to see that more ships are built in Canada, because our shipyards are not in use. Tenders in this instance will be called for only in Canada?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: One of the boats mentioned by the minister is the Newington, which operates on the Pacific coast. I want to make sure that the boat which will replace it will be no smaller, because the work is constantly increasing and the boat is overworked as it is.

Mr. CARDIN: We are trying to have a better boat.

Mr. CAYLEY: What are the boats for?

Mr. CARDIN: Lighthouse and coastal service.

Mr. BRADY: Will the minister give us some particulars about the boat which will replace the very obsolete Newington?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to gratify my hon. friend's legitimate curiosity; the plans and specifications have not yet been completed. The idea is to get boats capable of giving a better service.

Mr. BRADY: Where is the boat to be built?

Mr. CARDIN: It will certainly be built in Canada because I propose to ask for tenders only in Canada.

Mr. BRADY: Are all the various units, such as the dry docks in Prince Rupert and Vancouver, within the scope of these tenders?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, certainly.

Mr. BRADY: And the lowest tender—

Mr. CARDIN: That is always the case.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What is the nature of the service?

Mr. CARDIN: It is a lighthouse and buoy service, supplying materials and everything necessary for lighthouses.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Will any of these boats be on the Atlantic seaboard?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Item agreed to.

Investigation into wrecks, $6,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: How much of the vote was spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: $4,921.

Item agreed to.

Navigation schools, $9,000.

Mr. BRADY: The minister might tell us where these schools at present function, what is the probability as to their extension, and the scope of the work they perform. If we are going to conserve one of the greatest industries that Canada possesses to-day, then I should like to know from the minister exactly what we may expect from these schools, and what his intention is in regard to their future development.

Mr. CARDIN: These schools are located at Halifax, Yarmouth, North Sydney, St. John, Quebec, Charlottetown, Collingwood, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. At present we do not see any need for increasing the number, but we propose to maintain them as profitably as possible for those who desire to study navigation.

Mr. SHORT: How many certificates were issued by these schools last year, and was there any increase last year over the year before?

Mr. CARDIN: These schools do not issue certificates.

Mr. SHORT: The men passed their examinations; surely they must issue certificates.

Mr. CARDIN: Not at the schools.

Mr. SHORT: The schools recommend them?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. They may give the men certificates that they have completed the course, but the masters' and mates' certificates are issued by the department after examination.

Mr. BRADY: I know these navigation schools are most essential and that they form part of the scheme for conserving our fisheries, but what is their definite purpose? What does a young man really get when he enters one of these schools? Does he get a certificate, and if so, what is the nature of it? There are many men very anxious to have the opportunity of entering a school of this kind. Canada is very fortunate in having not only a great seaboard but also a large number of young men who are ambitious and wish to get all they can from such schools. I should like the minister to tell me what a young man gets when he attends one of these navigation schools.

Mr. CARDIN: They get instruction with regard to seamanship and navigation which permits them to qualify as masters and mates.

Mr. BRADY: And under what conditions are these certificates granted?

Mr. CARDIN: These schools do not issue certificates; they give the young men the necessary instruction which allows them to pass an examination held by a board of examiners appointed by the department, and the certificates are granted by that board of examiners. At these schools they only receive the instruction necessary to enable them to pass the examination.

Mr. BRADY: It seems to me that $9,000 is a very small sum for these navigation schools, of which I think the minister said there were five or six. Perhaps he might give us the details of this expenditure.

Mr. CARDIN: At Halifax we pay the instructor $2,100; at Yarmouth the instructor receives $1,620; North Sydney, $600; St. John, $2,100; Quebec, $440; grant to Queen's University, Kingston, for lessons in navigation, $500; Charlottetown, $500; Prince Rupert, $1,000, and in Collingwood the instructor is paid as an examiner for the lectures he gives. The same system is followed in Vancouver; Captain Elliott Lindsay is paid for his lectures out of the salary he receives as examiner.

Mr. SHORT: How many persons took the examinations for masters and mates in each of these schools?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot tell my hon. friend how many of these pupils have passed the examination, but I have before me the average attendance, as follows: Halifax, 16; St. John, 6; Yarmouth, 7; Charlottetown, 3; Quebec, 34; Kingston, 29; Prince Rupert, 15; Vancouver, 14; Collingwood, Ontario, 19.

Mr. CAYLEY: Does the instruction consist only of lectures, or is there practical instruction as well?

Mr. CARDIN: Lectures only.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I should like to ask the minister if the examiners at North Sydney, Halifax, Yarmouth and St. John are the same people who give the instructions?

Mr. CARDIN: No, they are not the same; the instructor at Halifax is Captain H. M. O'Hara, while the examiner is Captain Michin.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Would it not be a saving to the government to let the schools issue the certificates? In votes 153 and 155 we have some $29,500, and I think if those two items were combined we could save money.

Mr. CARDIN: That is worth looking into.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who is the examiner and instructor at Kingston?

Mr. CARDIN: This is a grant to Queen's university.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is it Captain Barrett?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN: I should like to draw the minister's attention to a matter which arose out of the wreck of the Manassoo, on Georgian bay. The mate had his papers taken away from him and a great many citizens feel that they should now be restored. Has the minister considered this matter?

Mr. CARDIN: I am giving consideration to that representation.

Item agreed to.

Registration of shipping, $3,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister explain what is covered by this item?

Mr. CARDIN: This appropriation is for the purpose of defraying such costs as may be involved in the registration of Canadian shipping. Part I of the Canada Shipping Act provides that Canadian ships must be registered before engaging in trade. The greater part of the expenditure is in connection with the printed forms and certain appliances. As the principal customs officers at ports of registry act as registrars of shipping, no salary expenditure is involved.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister anything to do with the law concerning the directorships of steamship companies? Of course the minister has nothing to do with the American law, but under their law a Canadian cannot be a director. In the formation of the board of directors of Canadian steamship companies this same rule does not apply, and I know of one case where only one Canadian is on the board. I think the time has come when we should insist that the boards of directors of Canadian steamship companies should consist entirely of Canadians.

Mr. CARDIN: As long as the company is incorporated under British law and the principal place of business is in Canada, we register the ship. We do not have the same regulations as exist in the United States.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does not the minister think that it is about time we protected our own shippers and insisted that the boards of directors should be Canadian?

Mr. CARDIN: It might be a good suggestion.

Item agreed to.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $5,000.

Mr. BRADY: What navigable waters are included in this grant?

Mr. CARDIN: All navigable waters within Canada.

Mr. BRADY: I should like to know just what navigable waters are to be cleared of obstructions.

Mr. CARDIN: The rivers and lakes where there is a wreck or in which navigation is blocked.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a contingency fund.

Mr. CARDIN: Where navigation is impeded through some obstacle in the river.

Mr. BRADY: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the Skeena river, in British Columbia. This river is navigable for many miles, but there are a few rocks in the river near the village of Usk, and when the flood waters rise each year the surrounding property is inundated, with consequent danger to the inhabitants of that place. This town is on the Canadian National railway, about 12 miles from Terrace and 100 miles from Prince Rupert. Has the minister received any requests for the removal of these rocks? I think $1,000 would cover this work.

Mr. STEVENS: Give him $1,000.

Mr. CARDIN: No representations have been made to the department up to the present time.

Mr. STEVENS: You have a request now.

Mr. NEILL: What is the policy of the government with regard to the removal of Ripple rock in Seymour narrows? The tide there is very swift, running about 4 knots per hour and this rock is about 16 feet below the water at low tide. The American boats en route to Alaska are forced to lie up for five or six hours to wait for the tide to turn, and on one or two occasions a wreck, with possibly a large loss of life, has been barely averted. I am afraid that this will occur some day and I think the government should give this matter some attention. There seems to be some divergence of opinion about it; some people think it may be useful whenever a railway is built across the narrows, as the rock might be used as a base. However, that time is very far distant and if the rock were removed it would only mean that the piers would have to be sunk a few feet deeper. Of course this work could not be completed out of this vote, but I would ask the government what steps they intend to take in regard to this matter.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to state the policy of the government in that regard. That work would come under the Department of Public Works rather than the Department of Marine and Fisheries, because that department has the administration of what is known as the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I will pass on the request of the hon. gentleman to my colleague, the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. NEILL: This vote is for small items only?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Inspection of live stock shipping, $4,500.

Mr. LUCAS: What is this item for?

Mr. CARDIN: The inspection of ships carrying live stock to European ports.

Mr. LUCAS: Very little live stock is being shipped at the present time.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: What amount was spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount was $3,644.

Item agreed to.

To continue subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $45,000.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to renew my annual request that the government consider the increasing of this amount for British Columbia. The government subsidizes a very good wrecking plant, one of the best in the world, but it is stationed at Esquimalt all the time. Esquimalt is at the south end of Vancouver island, and the plant is available for any part of the Pacific coast. But this plant is needed to a greater extent, especially in the winter months, on the west coast of Vancouver island, which is known as the graveyard of the Pacific. The government has attempted to meet this situation by maintaining a small gasoline lifeboat at Bamfield, and have supplemented that service in the winter months by maintaining one of the fishing patrol boats or one of the navy boats at that point. These boats are much too light for the work. They were mine sweepers during the war, but it would be useless for them to go out in a heavy sea and attempt to pull a steamer out of danger by towing it, or anything of that kind. The plant at Esquimalt is admirably suited for this purpose, and if a few thousand dollars were added to the vote a suitable plant could be maintained at Bamfield and the government would have a life-saving service of which they would be proud. The crews of the boats which are located there at present are very capable, seafaring men and I have no doubt that they would answer a call of distress under any conditions, and might possibly lose their lives. The fear has always been on my conscience, that we are asking these men to go out in boats which are not safe. This condition could be overcome by the government providing a few thousand dollars to meet the extra cost of keeping one of these fully equipped salvage boats on the west coast. Even if it were kept there for only two months it might provide valuable service, as the other boats could serve for the remaining two months.

Mr. SHORT: Why is it that this vote includes only Quebec and British Columbia? Does the minister not realize that a little shipping comes in and out of the ports in the maritime provinces? Why are they neglected in subsidies of this kind? We have several wrecking plants in the maritime provinces, but I understand they are not included in this subsidy at all. If the maritime provinces can maintain wrecking plants, why cannot Quebec and British Columbia maintain their own wrecking plants without a subsidy; or if we are going to give a subsidy to those two provinces, why not give a subsidy to the maritime provinces? Why discriminate against them? Personally I do not think it is necessary for either Quebec or British Columbia to receive a subsidy. They could very well go without it and we could use that $45,000 for some better purpose. But if it is necessary to subsidize wrecking plants in those two provinces, it is just as necessary to subsidize similar plants in the maritime provinces. I think gross discrimination is being shown in this regard.

Mr. CARDIN: We are not subsidizing wrecking plants in the maritime provinces because the private companies there have enough work and a revenue large enough to take care of their plants and to operate them successfully. In British Columbia and Quebec they have not enough revenue to maintain the wrecking plants required for the safety of navigation, and that is why we give a subsidy to those companies.

Mr. SHORT: With the shipping that goes in and out of the Pacific ports and up the St. Lawrence river, I think wrecking plants should be able to be maintained there as profitably as they can be in the maritime provinces. I do not think the minister's answer is satisfactory at all. I know a number of wrecking plants in the maritimes have made no money whatever in the last few years; in fact several of them have been obliged to go out of business.

Mr. NEILL: I suggest to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis that British Columbia might forego a share of that $45,000 in favour of the maritimes if they would give us our share of the $160,000 annually they have been keeping from our fishermen for the last forty years.

Mr. SHORT: That was threshed out before the committee on marine and fisheries.

Item agreed to.

Life-saving service, including rewards for saving life, $80,000.

Mr. BRADY: There is no increase in this vote and nevertheless we are faced with an appalling loss of life among our fishermen every year. Anybody who knows of the loss of life last year on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards must realize that as regards our life-saving appliances, we are hoplessly, I might truly say, wilfully negligent. On the Pacific seaboard to-day, along Hecate straits, where the greatest fishing industry in Canada exists, where the majority of the fishermen who are the producers in this important industry are toiling, there are no life-saving facilities. I want to drive this home to the minister: We who represent the fisher-folk do not stand up in the House of Commons just for fun; we are here to advocate what we believe is essential, and I wish to say now that, as regards life-saving along the Pacific coast, the government has not done its duty to the men who go down to the sea in ships. There should be a further increase in this all-important vote and the British Columbia coast should be included in it. It is natural for those who live in the eastern provinces remote from the sea to think the man who comes here and presents a picture of marine life, which is not merely wonderful in itself but which is full of the greatest dangers, adventures, and risks, is speaking of something which is trivial. Such is not the case. It is a great question and worthy of the consideration of every member of this House of Commons. What I want to bring out is this: we are voting $80,000 for life-saving for all Canada. I should like to ask: How many members in this chamber can tell me the loss of life that has taken place in the last twelve months on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards? I challenge any hon. member to give me the answer. There has not been one month from October, 1928, to January, 1929, in which each day did not see the loss of three or four human lives. From the Lunenburg fleet alone last year there were lost scores of men. The Pacific waters likewise took their toll. I want to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give life-saving appliances for the fishing fleet of Prince Rupert. Along the Queen Charlotte islands, where thousands of our fishermen toil to give revenue to Canada, there is sore need of life-saving stations. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows what I am talking about better than any other man in the House of Commons. He knows that in the waters of the Pacific coast right from Vancouver sweeping north, there is not one life-saving station that will help the fishermen when in distress. Will the minister promise that he will do something in that regard?

MR. SHORT: I should like to refer to the life-saving station in my constituency and the condition of the boat they are using there. This station was built, I think, in 1912 or 1913, I understand they are using the same boat to-day and I believe there is in that boat the same engine that was in it originally when it was placed there in 1913 or 1914, although the boat was a secondhand one then. The boat is totally incapable of performing the work that she is expected to do. If we are to operate these life-saving stations they should be equipped with suitable boats to weather the storms in which they are required to go out. I am calling the minister's attention to this. I know nothing whatever about the other stations, but I know that at Bay View, Digby county, the equipment is totally inadequate for the services that it is expected to render.

Mr. CARDIN: A new engine is being installed this year.

Mr. SHORT: I think a new boat is needed too. The present boat is about twenty years old.

Mr. NEILL: I was promised a new engine for the life-saving station at Bamfield; does this vote include provision for it? It is worn out and never had sufficient power.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Has anything been done towards improvement of the life-saving station on the island of Scatarie? I brought this matter to the attention of the house in 1926, 1927 and 1928.

Mr. CARDIN: I am sorry to say that nothing has been done up to the present time.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I cannot understand the attitude of the minister when he makes such a statement, after we have brought this matter to his attention and the attention of the house on so many different occasions. Scatarie island is known as the graveyard of the Atlantic. There have been more wrecks on the island of Scatarie than on any other portion of the north Atlantic coast. Shipping going east and west along our Nova Scotia shore must pass the island of Scatarie, and in the fog Scatarie island seems to be the graveyard of most of our Atlantic shipping. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister as recently as last session, when the whole crew of a boat was lost on Scatarie island. When I was campaigning in 1926 I viewed the remains of a ship and saw five bodies representing lives that could have been saved if we had had a proper life-saving station on Scatarie island. I also saw the life-saving station at that time. There was a boat that I could put my fingers through. There was not even a gun to fire a line on the island. Human lives are worth more than the dividends of corporations and companes to which this government hands out subsidies, such as the salvage companies for Quebec and British Columbia, and yet the government cannot find money to save human lives. We demand a proper life-saving station and proper life-saving equipment for Scatarie island, and I am going to stand up in this house and fight for a life-saving station on Scatarie island and continue to fight for it until I get it. I would like to have a definite answer from the minister as to what he intends to do about it.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house, I beg leave to present the fourteenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the house.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): With the unanimous consent of the house, I beg to present the fourth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and to move that the report be concurred in. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the report of the subcommittee was unanimous, and the report of the main committee was unanimous. I think it would expedite the business of the house if the discussion could take place on the bill instead of on the report.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Mr. BENNETT: I think we should agree to the report being concurred in now if it is distinctly understood that we are not committing ourselves either to approval or to disapproval of the report.

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

Motion agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, June 6, 1929.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) presented the fourth and final report of the select standing committee on public accounts as follows:

Thursday, June 6, 1929.

The select standing committee on public accounts beg leave to present the following as their fourth and final report:

Your committee have examined witnesses and taken evidence respecting the following:

A payment of $72,138.39 to A. S. MacMillan, Halifax, in connection with construction work at Bedford Basin, Nova Scotia, as set out at page O—27, vol. II, of the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927; and also,

A payment of $88,989.72 to A. S. MacMillan, Halifax, in connection with the Hudson Bay Expedition, as set out at page O—27, vol. II, of the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928; and also,

A payment of $13,038.50 to S. Cunard & Company, Halifax, in connection with supplies to the Hudson Bay Expedition, as set out at page O—26, vol. II, of the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928.

Eleven meetings of your committee have been held at which meetings twelve witnesses were examined, and the proceedings and evidence adduced therefrom, printed.

Your committee append herewith a copy of the said evidence for the information of the house.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) S. W. Jacobs,
Chairman.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS OF PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar) moved:

That for the remainder of the session all private bills from the Senate, when received from that house, be read a first and second time and be referred forthwith, and that standing order 105 respecting the posting of bills be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise to a point of order. Standing order 116 states:

Except in cases of urgent and pressing necessity, no motion for the suspension or modification of any standing order applying to private bills or petitions for private bills shall be entertained by the house until after reference is made to the committee on standing orders or to one of the committees charged with the consideration of private bills, and a report made thereon by one of such committees.

I submit that under this standing order the motion is out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Under ordinary circumstances I should say that the point was well taken; but the hon. member must read carefully the first line of standing order 116 from which he has just quoted:

Except in cases of urgent and pressing necessity.

The raison d'être of the present motion is that the session will soon conclude, and if these bills are to be entertained by the house, standing order 105 must be suspended. Notice was given of this motion, and in my judgment, reading standing order 116 as it should be read, I rule the motion in order. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

FISH TRAPS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA WATERS

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): A few days ago the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) asked me to table the report of Judge Ellis in regard to fish traps in the northern waters of British Columbia, I am pleased to be in a position to comply with his request, and I now table that report.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Howard, that the third report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, presented to the house on Friday, May 31, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

SENATE BILLS—FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill 344, for the relief of Kenneth Blackwood Gibb—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill 345, for the relief of Edith Spencley.—Mr. Hepburn.

Bill 346, for the relief of Annie Farrow.—Mr. Boys.

Bill 347, for the relief of Evelyn Mae Warren.—Mr. Speakman.

Bill 348, for the relief of Louis Coit Dargavel.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill 349, for the relief of Vera Maud Gendron.—Mr. Hepburn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—MR. W. J. THIBEAU

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton-North Victoria):

1. Is one W. J. Thibeau in the employ of the Customs department?
2. If so, what is his salary?
3. What commissions or expenses have been paid to the said Thibeau during the past year?

Mr. EULER:

1 and 2. Mr. W. J. Thibeau is authorized to act as a customs excise enforcement officer, without salary.

3. He was paid no commissions or expenses but was paid $223.26 as his share of awards in customs seizures.

GRAND TRUNK STOCKHOLDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to a cable which I have received from a friend in London, stating that the Grand Trunk perpetual stockholders offered to send a deputation to Ottawa to negotiate a friendly settlement of their difficulties, but that nothing came of the offer. He requested me to ask whether or not the government intended to take any action in the premises during the recess towards carrying on such negotiations.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): These so-called negotiations were commenced when a previous administration was in office; I think Mr. Meighen was Prime Minister at the time. I had gathered that they had been ended some time ago.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 343, to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Location valid, etc.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister give us some explanation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The object of this amendment to the Yukon Quartz Mining Act is to assist in the better administration of the act and to prevent action being taken by claim jumpers where very substantial compliance with the regulations has been undertaken by the lessee. One case arose in the Yukon over the fact that the location was not quite accurately described, and there was some slight difficulty with regard to payment. I am not quite clear as to all that happened, but I understand that the judge sustained the lessee. Another action is about to be commenced dealing largely with the size of the stakes, and this amendment is designed as a direction to the court that where substantial compliance with the regulations has been undertaken and carried out, the full and minute compliance with the regulations as provided in the act will not entitle the court to give a decision cancelling the lease.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

MARINE AND FISHERIES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Life-saving service, including rewards for saving life, $80,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton): Would the minister advise the committee of his intention as to placing a life-saving station at Scatarie island?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, I realize the importance of the matter which was raised by my hon. friend last night, but I doubt very much if he appreciates the extent of the expenditure necessary were the government to accede to all the representations which are made in regard to the establishment of life-saving stations. The government last year considered the matter of placing a life-saving station at Scatarie island, and it also considered the placing of similar stations at Whitehead and Halifax. When the matter of costs was looked into it was found that it would cost $550.000 to set up these three stations with modern life-saving equipment. The committee will realize what it would cost if this service were extended all over the country. I must confess that when my officers submitted that figure I was somewhat frightened, and I hesitated to ask parliament to vote such a large sum for the establishment of these life-saving stations. The department is not losing sight of the importance of such stations at certain points, but we must realize that it would be impossible for Canada to meet all the requests which have been made for the establishment of life-saving stations. During the last session hon. members from Toronto complained because the department had not established sufficient life-saving stations on the great lakes and that we were not fulfilling our duty in protecting life on these inland waters. If we were to establish modern life-saving stations all over the country it would cost millions of dollars. The United States has been cited as an example, but I visited one of their life-saving stations last year and as far as efficiency is concerned I do not think they are very much ahead of Canada. In that country the life-saving organization is joined with the coast guard service and Canada might consider the joining of our life-saving service with the protective and patrol service of the National Revenue department and the Fisheries department. I was told by the man in charge of this station which I visited that he had been there for twenty-five years and during that time he had not used the devices which were placed at his disposal. A small gasoline boat on the great lakes would be of very little assistance to a vessel which might be in difficulties in the middle of the lake or at the opposite end, and to give effective service it would mean the establishing of a very expensive organization, and I think we should hesitate before entering into such a large program.

The case of Scaterie island is still being considered by the department. At the present time the deputy minister is in England investigating the system which they have there, and I would advise the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton (Mr. Macdonald) that the case of Scaterie island is very well known to the deputy minister. After giving this matter very careful and full consideration I came to the conclusion that if these requests are to be met it will be necessary for me to come before parliament and ascertain if it is the desire of the house that we have a yearly expenditure of over $1,000,000. The amount for which we are asking is not very large, $80,000, when one considers the extended service which is provided. Our object always has been to meet the conditions which arise at particular points which we consider to be the most important as far as protecting life is concerned. I realize that Scatarie island is an important point and I can assure my hon. friend that that matter is not being lost sight of.

Mr. HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, the minister has made reference to the great lakes and to the city of Toronto, and before this vote is passed I would like to refer to the complaints which have been made as to the inspection service of passenger boats on the great lakes and the inadequate supply of rafts and life-saving apparatus on those boats. Some of the boats are from twenty to thirty years old and they are still carrying very heavy passenger lists across the great lakes. Perhaps the minister would make a few observations with regard to this particular inspection service over which he has control and as to the adequacy of the life-saving apparatus on these vessels.

Mr. CARDIN: What my hon. friend has mentioned was the subject of certain study, but one of the hon. members representing the city of Toronto made a direct observation with regard to the life-saving stations that we have around the lakes. With regard to the last point raised by my hon. friend, this is the business of the ship inspectors, and the instructions which they receive from the department are very strict. If my hon. friend has any case in which the inspector has not been fulfilling his duty, I shall be glad to hear of it and to take the necessary means to correct it.

Mr. MANION: I took some part in that discussion last year when one of the Toronto members brought up the matter. I suggested at the time that the department or the government should have some form of meeting with the vessel owners and the employees on the boats in order to discuss the question of curtailing the movements of vessels to a certain extent for the last few days at least of the season's navigation. My recollection is that the minister at that time said that such a proposal was intended to be carried out. What has been done in that regard?

Mr. CARDIN: We have always made representations to the ship owners to cease navigating the lakes when the season was reasonably closed. We find that most of the accidents happening on the lakes occur after what we call the regular or reasonable close of navigation. But we have always been making representations to these companies that they should not take upon themselves the great risk of navigating the lakes when the reasonable season is closed. They are not always disposed to act upon the representations we make. We are trying to curtail as much as possible the risks they are taking in navigating too late on the lakes.

Mr. MANION: I entirely agree with the minister that the danger is after the reasonable season of navigation is over. At times an attitude of carelessness has been taken towards the lives of the men employed upon vessels. I wish again to impress upon the minister the reasonableness of endeavouring to have what has been suggested carried out. I do not wish to suggest an unreasonable curtailment of the season of navigation, but certainly it should be the duty of parliament as far as possible to preserve the lives of the seamen from any absolutely unnecessary dangers to which they are exposed by an unreasonable extension of the navigation period.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I note that the minister objects to improvement of the life-saving station at Scatarie island, and I am very sorry that he takes this attitude. He claims that if we are going to establish one station we should have two or three. Anybody acquainted with conditions on the Atlantic coast realizes the dangers to which shipping is exposed and I am sure that if the minister and the deputy minister had taken the interest in this matter that they should have taken in the past, they also would be cognizant of the situation at Scatarie island and would have taken steps to provide the remedy. The cost of giving them at least some form of life-saving station would not amount to more than $25,000, and I claim that Scatarie island is second only to Sable island in being the most dangerous point on the north Atlantic coast. During the last five years there has not been a year without at least twenty-five or thirty lives having been exposed on that coast. Last year thirty lives were lost off that very island and the previous year five lives were lost. During the last five years not one year has passed without four or five lives being lost. These men were not all Canadians, it is true, but if the government takes the attitude it does, I cannot see how we are going to relieve the existing situation. We spend enormous sums of money for other things, but we cannot find a dollar to spend for the saving of human life. Would it not be better for the department and the deputy minister to take the money they are now spending in other directions and utilize it for the establishment of a proper life-saving station at Scatarie island? It is my intention to bring this matter up on every occasion and I am going to press for it because I consider it essential in the interest of the country. It is one of the most humane things we can do. The poor sailor who goes out to sea is risking his life at all times, and it should be our duty to furnish him with every possible safeguard and to do everything we can to minimize the risks of his hazardous calling.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): I wish to join with the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton in impressing upon the minister the necessity of some improvement in the life-saving service at Scatarie island. It does not form part of my constituency, but it is perhaps the most dangerous point on the Atlantic coast and the equipment there now is totally inadequate. It would not cost anything like a million dollars to equip the station properly. If the minister secured a vote of $10,000 or $15,000 for a proper boat there, that would fulfil the requirements at the present time, but something is urgently needed at that point.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: Has any provision been made for life-saving at Sable island?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed there is a life-saving station there.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: If Sable island has a life-saving station, there is certainly every necessity for one at Scatarie island.

Mr. CARDIN: There is also one at Scatarie island. The complaint is that it is not big enough.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: I think Scatarie island, more than any other island on the Atlantic coast with perhaps the exception of Sable island, is entitled to a life-saving station. I certainly agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton that the government should do something at once to provide means there of protecting the lives of the sailors. The sum need not necessarily be a large one. Disasters of all kinds are happening every year and have been happening for many years around that island.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The minister said there was a life-saving station at Scatarie island. If he calls the present equipment that the government has placed on Scatarie island a life-saving station, it is a disgrace to the government and the country. Scatarie island is in my constituency and I have visited it on more than one occasion. The island is situated nine miles from the mainland of Main a Dieu and I would not for a minute go into a pool the size of this parliament building in the lifeboat that is now at Scatarie island. You can see daylight through the bottom of the lifeboat. We have no life-saving crew on Scatarie island. The government supplied a boat there some years ago and that is as far as the government has gone in that regard. The only time the lifeboat was ever used was when volunteers went out in it and the government pays them the paltry sum of a dollar or two when they go out. I do not believe there is a man on the island who would risk his life by going out in that boat. It is up to the government to give the matter some consideration. The minister cannot understand the seriousness of the situation when he stands up in this house and makes the statements he does. It would pay the minister if he or his deputy or one of his officials were to visit that spot and see the wrecks that are strewn around that coast, and let him ask any of the men in the vicinity as to the number of human lives that have been lost there in the last five years. If the minister would only look into the situation, I am sure he would not make the statements he does.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if the minister has ever been down by the Atlantic ocean when there was a storm. I recall being on the Atlantic coast when one of those fierce storms came in from the sea, and when you observe what takes place around any of these small islands, and especially if there happens to be a fog, as there frequently is—well, I should not like to be the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and feel that I had not utilized the public exchequer to provide facilities there for life-saving. I say that to the minister very seriously. I travelled along that coast last year by motor. Part of the time it was very foggy, and once there was a very heavy storm. There are wrecks of ships along that Nova Scotia shore and skeletons are sometimes washed up of men who have lost their lives. Scatarie island has been responsible for the loss of a good many vessels and many lives, and I suggest to the minister that he could provide at least reasonably decent life-saving facilities out of the miscellaneous vote. To carry into effect the suggestions that have been made would not cost I should think more than $2,500 at the moment. I think you could get a lifeboat and small station with that much money, or with $5,000, say, you could provide a gun and a decent boat. I made some inquiries about what these things cost; I am only speaking from memory that is now eight or ten months old, but I think $5,000 would defray the cost of a gun and a decent lifeboat. Now I put this to the minister: Can he rest quietly with the thought that we are voting $100,000 for advertising, $150,000 to do this and $50,000 for something else, when for $5,000 he could provide facilities which might save the lives of half a dozen people, or even only one life? I cannot think that Canada is doing its duty in leaving that island in its present condition, and I do press the minister to say now that he will provide these life-saving facilities out of the miscellaneous vote. I am sure that the Prime Minister would not baulk at a governor general's warrant, if it became necessary, to provide a few thousand dollars for a cause such as that. I do press the minister not to leave this over for another year. I remember the head of a great shipping corporation telling me that when there were storms and his ships were passing along a certain dangerous shore, he could not sleep at night. That was before the days of wireless. Here we have that condition intensified, and I do press the minister to provide these life-saving facilities.

Mr. CARDIN: The hon. leader of the opposition may rest assured that we are not losing sight of the importance of the service that has been suggested.

Mr. BENNETT: But you have.

Mr. CARDIN: The lives which have been lost in that vicinity are not due to the lack of what may be called proper life-saving appliances. They are due to accidents which the ships have met with, and nobody can contend that the lives that were lost would have been saved if instead of having one life boat we had two or three.

Mr. BENNETT: But you cannot call this a boat at all. It is useless; it is unsafe.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. CARDIN: It is used once in a while at all events.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): That boat has not been in the water for years. It is there for ornament.

Mr. CARDIN: Apparently the boat has not been needed. I would not like to be taken as minimizing the importance of the life-saving service. I quite agree with the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton and the hon. leader of the opposition that it is important to have life-saving facilities even if they are not used, because of the greater confidence and the greater sense of security they give to navigators and the crews of vessels. They feel that there is something there to take care of them if an accident does come.

Mr. BENNETT: You certainly could buy a gun to shoot a line across to a ship.

Mr. CARDIN: There is one there already.

Mr. BENNETT: It is no good, I am told.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly it is good, but I have no objection to meeting the reasonable request that has been made by the hon. gentlemen, and I will see if I cannot take something out of the general vote to meet the situation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The minister states that there is a gun on the island. Where is it placed, and when was it placed there?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the gun was placed there in 1927.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): After the wreck of 1926.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): After I had brought the matter to the attention of the house. What class of gun is it?

Mr. CARDIN: It is a line throwing gun.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How large?

Mr. CARDIN: It is the standard size.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): For the benefit of the minister I may say that the gun that is on the island is of absolutely no use to the people on the island. This is a fishing community, with twenty-five families living on the island, and they have no roads over which they can transport the gun which the government has supplied. That just shows the information which the government has as to conditions there. They have a gun that cannot even be transported from one place to another. The government should send someone to that island to make an inspection and see just what is necessary. The minister says that no lives were lost as a result of there not being proper life-saving devices. I tell him that five lives were lost in 1926 as a result of not having the equipment to fire a line aboard a ship. The captain of that ship told me personally—I was with him for five or six days both on Scatarie island and in the town of Louisburg—he waited all night for a line to be fired aboard his ship, and all the time his ship was breaking up and the timber was going mountains high, huge timbers were being crushed to splinters, while he and his crew of thirty men watched the fires burning which the fishermen had lighted on the shore. Those five human lives could have been saved if there had been equipment on the island to fire a line aboard that ship, and I say it is up to this government to look into this situation and provide these life-saving facilities. The facilities could have been used every year in the last five years if they had been there, but there are not proper facilities on the island at the present time. What is there is wholly inadequate.

Item agreed to.

Hydrographic and tidal and current surveys, and to provide for the maintenance and repair of hydrographic steamers, $495,000.

Mr. BRADY: How many vessels are engaged in the hydrographic service at the present time and where are they stationed?

Mr. CARDIN: On the Pacific coast we have the steamer Lillooet and the auxiliary house boat the Somass. On the Atlantic coast we have the Acadia, the Cartier and the Bayfield.

Mr. BRADY: Have you any engaged in the Hudson bay?

Mr. CARDIN: The Acadia is going up there this summer.

Mr. BRADY: Have you any on the great inland lakes?

Mr. CARDIN: We have none.

Mr. BRADY: I notice in the supplementary estimates there is a vote of $400,000 for a new hydrographic survey boat. Is that right?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BRADY: On what part of the coast will that boat be put in service?

Mr. CARDIN: It is for general work on the Pacific coast.

Mr. BRADY: We find along the British Columbia coast—and I refer now particularly to the waters north of Vancouver and extending along the whole of Hecate strait, including the Queen Charlotte waters—that there is the greatest need for hydrographic survey work. Let me give an illustration of the hopeless lack of these surveys. A few weeks ago a large company engaged in very extensive logging operations on the Queen Charlotte islands entered into a contract with a transportation company to take out some million logs. The contract contained a clause which had been overlooked by one of the parties; it was to the effect that before the vessel would go into Moore channel the survey chart would have to be produced. There was no survey chart for this channel. Telegrams were sent to Ottawa, and I took the matter up with the Department of National Revenue, thinking it came under that department. Then I went down to the hydrographic branch and found that the admiralty charts which were supposed to cover these waters had not been printed for years; in fact they are practically out of print and useless. This is the telegram that I received:

On account of extensive activities now going on west coast of Queen Charlotte islands the Queen Charlotte City board of trade request you immediately to take up matter of surveying Moore channel by steamer Lillooet to check up and supplement chart number two one six eight.

It was impossible for the Lillooet to be put on this survey work. The man concerned, had he failed to take out the logs, would have lost thousands of dollars. Therefore he had to go down to San Francisco and buy a steamer to carry out his contract.

At this moment I am not blaming anybody, directly, but I do wish to bring this home to the minister. The Lillooet, an eight hundred ton boat is not fitted to go out into the rough waters contiguous to the Queen Charlotte islands; in a word, she is not capable of doing the hydrographic survey work along that coast. We are sadly lacking in up-to-date hydrographic survey boats capable of carrying on the work in those dangerous waters. I would impress upon the minister the urgent necessity of setting aside a boat exclusively for this work of charting the waters of the Hecate strait and the adjacent waters. Since the Lillooet cannot be spared from the Vancouver coast, I would recommend to the minister that now he is organizing and extending this very important survey work he should take steps to place a suitable hydrographic survey boat in these waters and keep her there for the next seven years on intensive hydrographic survey work.

Mr. CARDIN: It is precisely because we realize the importanace of what my hon.

friend has referred to that in the supplementary estimates we are providing for a new boat.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, the member for Skeena does not tell the house that the hydrographic survey boat has been operating off the Queen Charlotte islands for years and years, to the neglect of the interests lower down the coast, and if the boat has been transferred to Vancouver Island such transfer was long overdue. I am glad to hear that a new hydrographic survey boat is being provided for in the supplementary estimates, and I do hope that it will be in addition to the Lillooet and not to replace it. That perhaps in some way explains why this vote is smaller than it was last year. It was small enough then, and I am sorry to see it reduced. The members from eastern Canada do not appreciate how urgent is the need for this survey work. I recall a year or two ago that Sir Henry Drayton suggested the cutting down of this vote. That is very easy for an eastern man to say, for such survey work has been carried on in eastern waters for a hundred years, but we on the Pacific coast are only now waking up to the absolute necessity of these hydrographic surveys.

This house will perhaps be interested to know that in many places still our seamen are operating by the aid of charts made by Captain Vancouver when the western Pacific was first discovered, so to speak. Vancouver's charts have proved to be very good so far as they go, but he only did his work at wide intervals. Now, there is a peculiarity in the Pacific coast waters that does not obtain elsewhere to the same extent; that is, there are large numbers of what is known as pinnacle rocks. A pinnacle rock is a small narrow rock which may be only a few yards wide, but it has a point on it that will rip the bottom of a boat just like a knife will cut into cheese. Any general survey is totally inadequate to detect those rocks. To establish their location it is necessary to sweep from point to point. This involves a far more expensive survey than any provided by the old charts made by Captain Vancouver.

I agree with a great deal of what my hon. friend from Skeena has said with regard to the growing necessity of this work, but I am talking now more in the interests of my own district. On the west coast of Vancouver island in the last three years there have been established fishery reduction plants costing between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, and bringing an enormous return to the general public in the shape of fish meal and fish oil.

It has made a new trade of very great and valuable importance. Necessarily these plants are located in new and untried, so to speak, locations, in remote inlets. Now, the fish oil and fish meal must be taken away as soon as available. A small boat is of no use on that exposed coast. These reduction plants need boats fitted up with tank equipment. They go into one of these uncharted channels and sometimes strike an uncharted rock. The underwriting companies will not allow boats to go into these places on account of the waters being uncharted. That is the necessity, the growing necessity of the work in which this steamer Lillooet is now engaged. To give you some idea of the general benefit of that work I might mention a specific instance. Here is a vote for $495,000. This seems a large sum and there is apparently no return. But the return, though indirect is very great. I know of one place where there was a cannery and the owner chartered a boat to come and take a few thousand cases of salmon. The master, a Norwegian, looked at his chart, saw that the place was not properly charted according to the old chart, and he refused to come in. The result was that it cost the canner a thousand dollars to have the salmon taken by lighter to a spot where it was considered safe for the steamer to load. A few months after that I got the government to send the Lillooet to chart the place, and at the cost of a few hundred dollars a very valuable service was rendered. That one undertaking alone more than justified the expenditures over a period of months in connection with the Lillooet. I have not a list before me showing the actual work done from year to year by this hydrographic survey, but I can give an idea of the development that is taking place along that line on the west coast. I might quote half a dozen figures showing the increase in the aids to navigation which have been provided in the last eight years. In 1921 there were eight lighted buoys; to-day there are twenty-four. In 1921 there were one hundred and fifty-two unlighted buoys; to-day there are two hundred and three. In 1921 there were eighty-three lighted beacons; to-day there are one hundred and twenty-four. In 1921 there were thirty-three fog alarms, of which twenty were of the diaphone type—very expensive; to-day, instead of thirty-three, there are forty, twenty-four being diaphones. This gives a vague but significant idea of the development that has taken place in these few years. This work naturally requires a good deal of money to provide expert mechanics, and supplies have to be taken by steamer. This is taken care of in part by the vote for lighthouse tenders. I am merely trying to convey to the house some idea of the development that has taken place in the last few years, and there is not the slightest suggestion that the Marine department has been too quick to realize our needs; because getting money out of that department is like getting blood out of a stone. There is not much danger of their indulging in waste and extravagance. If they spend a nickle, you may rest assured that they should have spent a dollar. I wish to give them credit if credit is coming to them in that regard, for no man could be more careful of the public purse than the minister of this department. So that if he has put his hand into the treasury to that extent the committee may be assured that it was more than needed. We did particularly need this extra new boat and I am more than pleased to see an estimate to provide for it. I hope it is the intention of the department to keep the Lillooet on as well as the bigger boat, which can do the heavier outside work, the Lillooet being available for necessary operations in more inland waters. I trust the minister will assure me that the Lillooet will be kept in commission as well.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Item agreed to.

Radiotelegraph service and to provide for the construction and maintenance of radiotelegraph ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the Dominion, $843,505.

Mr. CARDIN: This appropriation is to provide for the maintenance and operation of government radio stations and for the general administration of radio in Canada, including the licensing and inspection of ship stations, private and commercial land stations, broadcasting and receiving stations, and the examination and certification of commercial radio operation. The vote does not include the amount necessary for improving reception.

Mr. HEAPS: I presume the minister has reference to ordinary broadcasting stations. I do not intend to ask any questions in that regard, but I desire some information in reference to government-owned radiotelegraph stations. The government own stations in the east and west and, I believe, on the lake shores as well. I understand that they own radiotelegraph stations which transmit commercial telegrams and also give weather forecasts. In eastern Canada the stations are operated by the Canadian Marconi Company, which I understand is given a subsidy each year. I wonder why in one case the government deem it necessary to give a subsidy to a private company to operate a system which they own themselves, while in the other case, on the Pacific coast, they operate the government-owned system themselves. Why is it not possible for the government to operate all its systems?

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend is correct; the government own stations on the Pacific and on the Atlantic coast, the system on the Atlantic being operated by the Marconi Company. We are not making any money in the operation of our stations on the Pacific, and I am informed that the Marconi Company is not making money either in the operation of our station in the east.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the government losing money in connection with the Pacific service?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, we are.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the loss?

Mr. CARDIN: These stations are used as aids to navigation and the revenue derived from them is far from being sufficient to meet the expenditures.

Mr. HEAPS: Is there not some way of separating the costs of the various services, as between commercial service and the service given to ordinary ships sailing into and out of the ports in British Columbia?

Mr. CARDIN: These stations have to be maintained as aids to navigation and the transmission of commercial messages is only incidental.

Mr. HEAPS: Does that apply to the eastern service as well?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, it does.

Mr. HEAPS: But why cannot the government operate its own system in the east?

Mr. CARDIN: We have a long term contract with the Marconi people, covering a period of eighteen years, which I am informed will expire in 1931. I suggest that it will be opportune then to take into consideration the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. HEAPS: The government have no control over the men who work in the stations in eastern Canada. These men have to work seven days a week, whereas on the Pacific coast employment conditions are much more satisfactory. Is there anything the government can do to have the eastern men given one day off every week? I do not think I am asking anything out of the way for these employees.

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid we are not in a position to impose our views on the Marconi Company at present; we can only make representations to them.

Mr. HEAPS: In view of the fact that the agreement expires in 1931 and that a new agreement will have to be made, perhaps it might be just as well to take up the question next session, but I have a further matter which comes under this vote. I believe the Department of Marine and Fisheries granted a license to the Marconi Company to operate a beam service from the Pacific coast of this country. I would like to know the terms and conditions of that license.

Mr. CARDIN: I might say to my hon. friend that the Marconi Company has been given a license to operate a beam service from Drummondville, Quebec, to Australia, and also from Drummondville to England. The ordinary fee of $50 was collected for that license. No station has been established on the Pacific coast; the company asked for a license but no station has been erected.

Mr. HEAPS: The point is that the Marconi Company was given a license by the Department of Marine and Fisheries which enabled it to compete with the government-owned Pacific cable system. I want to know from the minister whether, before that license was issued, his department took up the matter with any of the other departments of the government.

Mr. CARDIN: This license was not issued during my time as minister, so I am not in a position to give the details, but I should think it would have been submitted to the Post Office Department and other departments interested in the cable. In any case, apparently it was thought that we should not refuse to issue a license which would permit of a very important experiment being carried on. I feel sure that the other departments interested were consulted.

Mr. HEAPS: This is a very important point. This beam service came into operation within the last few years; it began after I became a member of the house. I do not know exactly how long the minister has been in charge of the department, but I think the beam service between Australia and Canada was established in 1926. I am under the impression that the present minister was in charge of the department in that year, so that I do not think the reason he gave just now is valid. If possible I would like to obtain these particulars from the minister, because I think it is a very important matter when one department issues a license to a private company which enables that company to compete with a publicly owned utility. In addition to that, so far as I have been able to ascertain we have received no concessions as a result of this service. All other countries which have the advantage of this new system have had their rates lowered by approximately one-third, but no reduction has been made in Canada.

I do not concede that it was necessary to issue this license; I believe the government could have operated the beam system as easily as it operated the cable system, but if the government was determined to issue the license I think it was the duty of the department to secure for this country the concessions which were obtained in other countries. I am afraid the minister is not very well acquainted with the affairs of his department in this regard, but I would like some information as to whether or not the other departments were consulted when the question of issuing this license to a private company was under consideration.

When the bill approving of this cable merger was before the house some time ago the Postmaster General said the license had been granted by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and he had very little information to give the house. I think we should have all the information available on a question of this kind. It may be said that the matter has been disposed of, but in one sense that is not the case, because some time ago the Labour party in Great Britain stated that if they were returned to power they would repudiate this contract between the new corporation and the government. I am rather disappointed that the minister is not able to give us some information on an important question of this kind.

Item agreed to.

Radio service—to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $237,160.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not wish to delay the minister's estimates in any way, but I would suggest that the wording of this vote is rather strange.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to ask the minister if he can give the house any information as to when the report of the radio commission will be presented?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not able to give that information just now; the commissioners are still working and I cannot say when the report will be ready, but I do not think it will be very long now. I hope to have the report in perhaps six weeks or two months, but the commissioners have not visited the maritime provinces as yet.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation at the next session of parliament based upon the report which will be presented by the commissioners?

Mr. CARDIN: I think at the next session we will be in a position to deal with the report, and we will have time to consider any legislation which may be made necessary by the report.

Mr. HEAPS: Referring again to the license issued to the Marconi Company for the operation of a beam service, is that an annual license?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: I wonder if the minister will be good enough to have a copy of that license laid on the table?

Mr. CARDIN: With pleasure.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of an icebreaker for the Hudson strait, $759,000.

Mr. MANION: Has the contract been let for the construction of this icebreaker?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MANION: To whom?

Mr. CARDIN: The Halifax Shipyard.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of a new icebreaker for service in the St. Lawrence river, $359,000.

Mr. MANION: Could we have the same information on this item?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, the St. John Dry Dock.

Mr. MANION: They have the contract?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: Why this great difference between these two items?

Mr. CARDIN: One icebreaker is to be much stronger and larger than the other because it will be used in the Hudson strait, while the other is to be used on the St. Lawrence river.

Item agreed to.

Amount required for expenses of Canadian delegates to the international conference on safety of life at sea, $25,000.

Mr. SPENCER: When did this conference take place?

Mr. CARDIN: It was concluded two or three days ago.

Mr. SPENCER: How many delegates went from Canada?

Mr. CARDIN: The delegates were the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Johnston; Commander Edwards, director of radio; F. McDonnell, the chairman of the board of steamship inspection; Captain Dixon and Mr. Bain.

Item agreed to.

River St. Lawrence ship channel—maintenance, operating, repairing, dredging and providing necessary boats, vessels and equipment, also maintenance, operation and repair of Sorel shipyard, $3,108,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This appropriation is for the continuance of the operations in connection with the deepening and widening of the St. Lawrence ship channel between Montreal and Father Point, including the maintenance and operation of the Sorel shipyard which is used for the building and repairing of all ships, dredges and tugs which are used in the service. The increase is due to the expenditures necessary in order to build two dredges which were used in the service.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of regulating and retaining dams in the St. Lawrence river, $1,100,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This is a revote from last year. This matter was first suggested in 1911 and it was said that the level of the river could be materially improved by building what is called submerged dams at certain points. This vote came before the house last year and was approved of but the department was not in a position to start work.

Mr. GEARY: Am I right in inferring that this will deprive the port of Quebec of a great deal of its just due?

Mr. CARDIN: These dams are to be constructed about midway between Quebec and Montreal, but there is nothing included in the vote for the port of Quebec.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They do not need any dam in Quebec.

Mr. GEARY: They are slowly deteriorating, I expect.

Mr. CARDIN: What is deteriorating?

Mr. GEARY: The port of Quebec.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think my hon friend the Minister of Justice will agree to that.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The moss and grass will always appear.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and allowances to light-keepers, $750,000.

Mr. SHORT: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should have an explanation of this item, as there is no increase over the vote of last year. A delegation from the light-keepers met the minister and the government some time ago and requested that something be done in the way of granting an increase in salaries. These light-keepers have received no increase in their remuneration for a number of years, and they are the lowest paid officials of the government and do the most hazardous work in the service. I notice there is an item of $25,000 in the supplementary estimates, but I do not know whether or not that is to take care of these increases. If it is, it is a very small amount considering the number of lighthouses and lightships which we have along the coasts of the Atlantic and the Pacific. These men receive a much lower remuneration than is paid to men performing a like service in the United States. This matter has been brought before the house for the last three or four years and representations have been made that a reclassification of these light-keepers should be made by the department and an increase granted, but up to the present time nothing has been done. I think the minister should take into consideration the representations which have been made to him by different members on both sides of the house, and also the representations which were made to him by the delegation of the light-keepers association, and grant substantial increases to these men. I know of some light-keepers who have to walk from one to three miles at night to light their lights, who cover the same distance in the morning to turn them out and who receive the magnificent sum of $200 per year. Some of these men have not had an increase for twenty years and everyone knows the cost of living has almost doubled in that time. These men are performing a valuable and hazardous service and I submit, Mr. Minister, that the time has arrived when their salaries should be increased. If the minister can increase the salary of his deputy minister and other officials in his department, surely some consideration should be given to these light-keepers who are giving such valuable service to the country.

Mr. CARDIN: We have listened to the representations made and we have decided to grant the requests which have been preferred to us. The amount of $25,000 which is provided in the supplementary estimates is to cover increases in salaries of the light-keepers. The lightkeepers were represented by members of their organization, and the amount we are providing in the supplementary estimates is satisfactory to them for the present.

Mr. SHORT: Is the amount sufficient to cover the increase they ask for?

Mr. CARDIN: I understand they were, as many people do, asking for more than they probably expected to get, but a compromise was reached between them and the department.

Mr. SHORT: On a fifty-fifty basis?

Mr. CARDIN: They agreed to that.

Mr. SHORT: This amount of $25,000 is sufficient to cover the amount agreed upon?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: It takes in all classes?

Mr. CARDIN: No, more particularly the low classes.

Mr. SHORT: Do the ones in the higher class receive any increase?

Mr. CARDIN: Not this year.

Mr. SHORT: Is it the intention of the government to give them an increase next year?

Mr. CARDIN: If they press the request, I am ready to listen to them.

Mr. SHORT: I have no doubt they will.

Mr. CARDIN: I may say I expect them to do so.

Mr. BANCROFT: Has any arrangement been made for providing superannuation for lighthouse keepers when they retire from the service? I understand from experience I had with the department in the past, that no superannuation is provided for them because they are classed as part-time employees. This works quite a hardship upon some of the men when they become old in the service. Some provision should be made in regard to superannuation.

Mr. CARDIN: Those who are giving only part of their time to the service are not entitled to superannuation but those who are giving their full time are entitled to superannuation, and they receive it.

Mr. MacLAREN: The question perhaps does not come directly under this item but, as it concerns lighthouses, the minister might shed a little light on it. When may we expect to receive copies of the report of the St. John harbour commission?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not responsible for the delay. I have asked for the report and I am informed that it has not yet been printed. It may reach me this afternoon or to-morrow, I do not know, but St. John is not the only harbour which has not sent in a printed report. I have not yet received a printed report from Vancouver, but I expect these reports any day.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understood that a written report had been received by the department.

Mr. CARDIN: A typewritten report.

Mr. MacLAREN: Then the report is now in the department?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, but not in printed form.

Mr. MacLAREN: I presume it is now being printed.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, but not by the department; the reports have to be printed by the harbour commissioners themselves.

Mr. MacLAREN: Perhaps the minister will inquire by telegraph.

Mr. CARDIN: I will.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will he inform the house to-morrow?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: When the delegation of lighthouse keepers waited on the minister last winter, another question was taken up which more particularly concerns the lighthouse keepers of British Columbia and which has not been dealt with to-day. I gather from the officials that they were going to meet the situation, and I should like the assurance of the minister that I am correct in so stating the situation. The question was in connection with annual leave and sick leave. There seemed to be the idea among some of the lighthouse keepers that they had to provide their own substitutes if they went on annual leave and that the same thing applied in connection with sick leave. I understand from the officials—and I would like confirmation from the minister—that the situation is that as regards lighthouse stations that maintain more than one man, arrangements will be made that the head man can take his holiday at a slack time of the year, such as when there is no fog, and leave his deputy in charge. Of course he gets his full pay while he is away. I understand that in the case of one-man lighthouses the department will get and pay some local man to substitute for him without going to the expense of sending in a man from a distance. As regards sick leave, of course while they cannot give sick leave just for a few days' illness, in the case of a man being seriously ill and having to go away for an operation, the department is willing to provide and pay a substitute to do the work. If that is the situation I would only ask that it be confirmed by the minister, because many men seem to have the idea they are not getting the arrangement that I have suggested.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that such is the practice.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister speaks of the low class. Does that mean those who are temporarily employed on inland waters, for instance, on the great lakes, because their pay is disgraceful? I do not know how they manage to live on it.

Mr. CARDIN: The expression "part time" means employees who are giving, for example, one hour or two hours' service a day.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does this take in the man who is employed on the great lakes for just so many months in the year?

Mr. CARDIN: There are on the great lakes a number of men who are what we call full-time employees; they are on the most important lights that we have, but we have others that are only part-time employees.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is on a shore light where they put in an hour or so a day?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What I referred to was a man who goes out on a small island where there is a small light and stays there for four or five months in the summer. Will he benefit by this increase?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that he will not. The men at the docks are what we call full-time employees.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The man I mean is the one who goes out to a light on an island or on a point of an island and who is there for three, four or five months in the summer. His pay is certainly a pittance. I do not know how he manages to live and feed himself on the amount he receives.

Mr. CARDIN: I understand that a certain number of these lightkeepers in the position indicated by my hon. friend from Kingston are also doing other work. Their time is not entirely taken up by looking after the light. They light it when necessary; they take care of it, but they engage in other work. Some of them engage in fishing and other occupations.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where a returned man has to go periodically to his unit centre for an examination, is it the practice if that period occurs during the time of his employment, to deduct the pay for the two or three days he is absent?

Mr. CARDIN: We make no deduction from his salary for that. We arrange to let him go.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Of this appropriation of $25,000, what percentage is to be allowed to the more poorly paid lightkeepers throughout the country?

Mr. CARDIN: Practically the whole $25,000 goes to the lower paid lightkeepers.

Mr. SHORT: Will this include the part time lightkeepers, some of whom are getting as low as $60 a year?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is the kind of men I meant.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, they are included.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): We have along the Atlantic coast lightkeepers working on full time and receiving four or five hundred dollars a year. What increase are they to get? They are situated in positions where they cannot do anything else, and they must remain there the whole year round.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the $25,000 takes care of the class indicated by my hon. friend drawing $400. In regard to the higher class, the suggestion which has been agreed upon is to reconsider their classification. They may be changed from one class to a higher class, and the higher class will, of course, carry a higher salary. That is the idea in regard to the second group of lightkeepers. They may receive their increase through a change in their classification. That is what we propose to do.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): For years the lightkeepers on the Atlantic coast, both the full time and the part time men, have not been receiving adequate recompense for their labour. Many of them are placed in practically impossible situations, out on islands where they have no communication with the mainland, and they must remain there the year round. I consider that $25,000 is not adequate to give these men the increased salaries which they should be receiving. This government is expending huge sums of money for other services, and this is one of our very, very important services; it is an aid to navigation. I consider that it is the duty of the government to enable the men they hire to earn a decent livelihood so that they may have the comforts of life that are enjoyed by the people in other communities. I would urge the minister to take seriously into consideration the recommendation of the committee that met him last year and give the lightkeepers not merely this $25,000 but the full amount they asked for.

Mr. BRADY: The higher paid lightkeepers are in grade 1. These men must have assistants in looking after the larger lighthouses. At Cape Race, for instance, the lightkeeper has four assistants. At Estevan Point there are also four assistants. The principal lighthouse keeper, drawing $3,060 must support, feed and maintain four other persons. They may not be members of his family. I should just like to be sure about that. Are there any cases where the assistants at these large lighthouses are not members of the principal lighthouse keeper's family?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to say as to that because the lighthouse keeper is not supposed to make a report to us on that point.

Mr. BRADY: I know that in many cases they have to pay out money to assistants who are not members of their family, practically $600 a year. I think that consideration in the way of increased pay should be given to these permanent men who are working in these isolated places, doing wonderful work under very hard conditions. That applies to grades 1, 2 and 3. Consideration also should be given to the part time lightkeepers where the lights have not to be looked after daily. But as regards the permanent lighthouse keepers I do think that if the people of Canada as a whole realized the service these men are performing and the conditions under which they work there would be a real protest at the parsimonious treatment that is being given them in the supplementary estimates. It was only last year that one of these lighthouse keepers situated at a very lonely lighthouse along the British Columbia coast lost his life, foully murdered by some person. It comes as a shock to the community when instances of that kind arise. I am pleased to hear that an annual vacation will be given to the lighthouse keepers and that they will not have to pay out of their own pockets for an assistant to take their place while they are on holiday. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, we are doing that.

Mr. BRADY: That is fine.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $900,000.

Mr. SHORT: I would like to refer to a matter which I brought up last year when this item was under consideration. Has the department given any further consideration to equipping these lighthouses with hydro-electric light wherever it is available? This would reduce the cost very much and would certainly assist the lighthouse keeper very materially in his work. I have in mind particularly a lighthouse in my constituency at Point Prim on the Bay of Fundy. It is a very important light. The Digby county hydro-electric system has extended its line within half a mile of this lighthouse, and it would be very much more economical for the department to use the hydro-electric light instead of oil-burning lamps, and it would be very much more satisfactory. I think the matter has been brought to the attention of the agent of the department at St. John, who is in charge of that district. Has the department given the matter any serious consideration? If not, I think it would be in the interests of the service for them to do so.

Mr. CARDIN: The department is doing precisely what the hon. gentleman is advocating. Wherever we can be sure of an unfailing supply of electric light we take advantage of it for the lighthouses.

Mr. SHORT: Then I presume that as the hydro-electric line has been extended to within half a mile, arrangements will be made with the power board to give the service to Point Prim.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Construction of lights and aids to navigation, including regulation of traffic at such places as may be found necessary, $930,000.

Mr. BANCROFT: What progress is being made with respect to providing aids to navigation required in lake Winnipeg? During the summer of 1927 I was asked to meet a number of captains and mates who operate ships there. About forty of them were in attendance and they outlined a number of aids that were needed in the shape of lighthouses and buoys. I took the matter up with the minister at the time, and last summer he was good enough to send an inspector there to report on the situation. I understand the inspector was of opinion that certain lighthouses and buoys were needed. Is any provision being made for these aids?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no special provision, but the matter can be taken care of in the general vote.

Mr. BANCROFT: That is what I understood; it will be done this year out of the general vote?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: There is quite an increase; what is the reason?

Mr. CARDIN: It is a general increase. Provision is made in this estimate for the construction of a pier, light and fog alarm at Ile aux Coudres, at a cost of approximately $100,000; and for the construction of piers and the installation of lights at Brulé Bank, at a cost of approximately $176,000. Both these stations are in the St. Lawrence.

Mr. SHORT: I notice there is an increase of $205,000 over last year's appropriation for the construction of lights and aids to navigation in such places as may be found necessary. Let me again call to the attention of the minister what I have brought up from time to time—the necessity of a light on the breakwaters at Tiverton and East Ferry in the bay of Fundy. This is a most important fishing centre. A ferry operates across there throughout the day and night, and a pole light on each of the breakwaters would be of great assistance to the ferry service and also to the fishermen. The cost would not be great. There are such lights on a great many of the government breakwaters all over the bay of Fundy. I hope the minister will consider the advisability of doing this.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose it had under consideration item 175, $930,000, for the construction of lights and aids to navigation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was not here; was anything said about salaries for lighthouse keepers, as to the prospects of their being increased?

Mr. CARDIN: That discussion took place on a previous item in connection with salaries, and I stated that we had in the supplementary estimates $25,000 for increases in the salaries of the lower class lightkeepers. I also intimated that there was provision for a reclassification of other classes.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Is the minister going to reclassify the lower paid officials?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): That is the best news that has come to the house for a long time. These men are certainly underpaid, and if there is any man in the whole government service who is working for very little money and in the most remote and lonely part of the country it is the lighthouse keeper. I am delighted to hear the announcement of the minister.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay pensions to pilots, $9,900.

Mr. GUTHRIE: These are all pensions?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Administration of pilotage, $250,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: A royal commission under Mr. Justice Morrison has made an inquiry into pilotage in British Columbia, and the report has been brought down. I suppose something will be done this year to carry out the recommendations in that report?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, we are doing that.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I presume that some of the officials of the department will be in British Columbia?

Mr. CARDIN: An officer has been there already.

Mr. McQUARRIE: And will be there later on?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: In that connection I would ask that the proper official, whoever he is, be instructed to assist the New Westminster harbour commissioners in the matter of the drawing-up of bylaws and so forth as recommended by the commission.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly, he will.

Item agreed to.

Meteorological service, including magnetic observatory, grants of $500 each to Kingston and Montreal observatories, and allowance of $400 to L. F. Gorman, observer at Ottawa, $330,000.

Mr. SHORT: There is an increase of $30,000; why?

Mr. CARDIN: It is to provide for statutory salary increases and for necessary expansion of service. Several new wireless reporting stations have been established in the far north together with a number of balloon stations for obtaining upper air data for aviators, and numerous fire and weather reporting stations have been established in conjunction with the provincial forestry departments. All of this involves additional expense.

Item agreed to.

Marine and Fisheries—salaries, $546,920; contingencies, $90,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This involves an increase of $2,000 in the salary of the deputy minister?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: We pointed out the other evening that we could not agree to these increases in the salaries of deputy ministers while other salaries had been left as they were. It will be recalled that Mr. Fielding stated the policy of the government, in connection with matters of this kind, to be that deputy ministers should have been ten years in the position before provision was made for increases in their salaries. It is not desirable to take up the time of the committee discussing the matter at great length at this moment. We shall probably have to move a motion that will cover the question, because it is felt that with conditions as they are—large numbers of people receiving less than $100, and the status of the technical service being still unsettled—to increase the salaries of deputy ministers is not in accordance with what we conceive to be the real justice of the case. Some of these increases are $2,000, some $1,500. Then there is the further question in connection with those who have the rank of deputy minister. I have looked up the statute since we discussed the matter last, in connection with the estimates of the Prime Minister, and certainly the position of the Speaker, and the position of the Clerk of the Senate, of the Clerk of the House of Commons and of the Clerk of the Privy Council are exactly the same and dealt with in the same statute. There is also the question of the librarian, and, I think, the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, who is in a somewhat different position from the others. But some principle should be observed. Mr. Fielding made the statement some years ago that service for a period of ten years should be regarded as the guiding principle, thereafter salaries being increased as occasion necessitated. I take this opportunity to mention the matter because there are other estimates which will be discussed in the same way.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not a fact that this deputy minister is also provided with a government car—

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): —an automobile at the government's expense?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rather think that some statement to that effect was made in a return brought down to myself.

Mr. CARDIN: If such a statement was made, it is an error. He uses the car which is supposed to be for the minister; he has no separate car for himself.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He uses the minister's car?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be recalled that this deputy minister left the service and was reappointed within a period of ten years.

Mr. CARDIN: He resigned in 1920 and came back in 1921, and that was considered at the time to be continuous service.

Item agreed to.

To provide for a refund to the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company, Limited, of an amount paid to the government out of net profits, in excess of amount required by contract, $4,139.75.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. CARDIN: This is the result of a misunderstanding as to the terms of a contract between the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company and the government for the maintenance of a salvage and wrecking plant at Quebec. The contract provided that each year the company should refund to the government 50 per cent of their net profits on operations to offset the subsidy which they were entitled to receive. In determining their profits for this purpose in 1920-21 the company neglected to deduct the usual 5 per cent for depreciation, in consequence of which their refund to the government for that year was excessive by this amount.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give the committee the amount paid by the government as a subsidy and the amount paid to the government by this company as part of the profits?

Mr. CARDIN: During the past five years there were no profits; the losses were as follows:

1922-23	$47,776
1923-24	14,671
1924-25	27,996
1925-26	25,136
1926-27	7,187

The subsidy amounts to $35,000.

Item agreed to.

Hydrographic and tidal and current surveys, and to provide for the maintenance and repair of hydrographic steamers — further amount required, $65,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I notice that last year we voted $530,000 for this work. In the main estimates this year there was an increase of $35,000 and now we are asked to pass this supplementary vote of $65,000, making a total increase over last year of $100,000. In addition, the next item is for the construction of a new hydrographic service steamer, to cost $400,000. What is the reason for these substantial increases?

Mr. CARDIN: This supplementary appropriation is to provide for the reconditioning of the steamer Lillooet at a cost of $35,000. This is a revote from last year; the work was not done although the money was voted. This also covers the replacement of the house boat Somass, at a cost of $30,000. Both these boats are on the Pacific coast service. Provision was made for the reconditioning of the Lillooet in the main estimates last year, but the proposed work was unavoidably delayed and accordingly the sum provided lapsed. It is hoped to keep this steamer in commission this year, but she cannot continue longer without reconditioning, and it is proposed that this work should be done next fall. The house boat Somass has been in the service for a very long time and is worn out beyond repair; she cannot be used beyond this season.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is not shown to be a revote.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of a new steamer for hydrographic surveys, $400,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister tell us what this steamer is for?

Mr. CARDIN: This steamer is to take care of the hydrographic surveys on the British Columbia coast. It has been represented to us, as was stated in committee this morning, that the Lillooet, which we have there now, is not able to cope with the situation. There is much work to be done and representations have been made to the government that we should go more extensively into this service. That is why we propose to add this new steamer, and we will also retain the services of the Lillooet.

Mr. MANION: Have tenders been called for in this case?

Mr. CARDIN: No, not yet.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of a commission to inquire into the radio broadcasting situation throughout Canada and to advise as to the future administration, management, control and finance thereof — further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is another increase. As the minister knows, under item 165a we have already voted $10,000 for this purpose and now we are asked to vote another $15,000. Surely that amount is excessive.

Mr. CARDIN: The explanation I have here is that this supplementary appropriation is in part a revote of item 475 of last year. The commission did not commence functioning until late in the year, with the result that the amount appropriated to provide for their expenses was in excess of their requirements by approximately $4,000; which excess amount lapsed at the close of the year, of course. In addition, the time required by the commission to complete their inquiry will be longer than was anticipated when the main estimates for this fiscal year were prepared, and this further sum is required to enable them to complete their work.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then I understand that last year only $6,000 was spent; they did not complete their work and now they are asking for an additional $25,000. That seems an extravagant amout of money for a single commission which has no very great amount of work to do; its work is largely technical, carried on in one centre, and I should think they could make a very intelligent report for about half this amount.

Mr. CARDIN: I think my hon. friend is under a misapprehension.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Tell us how you are paying the members of the commission.

Mr. CARDIN: This commission is inquiring as to conditions with regard to radio all over Canada, and they have also gone abroad to obtain the benefit of the experience in European countries; they have been in England, in Germany and other countries.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How many are there?

Mr. CARDIN: Three.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What amount of remuneration are they receiving?

Mr. CARDIN: The commissioners are Sir John Aird, the chairman, and his remuneration has been fixed at $50 per day—

Mr. GUTHRIE: And expenses?

Mr. CARDIN: And a living allowance of $25 per day. Mr. C. A. Bowman is the next commissioner, and his remuneration is fixed at $35 per day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is that Mr. C. M. Bowman?

Mr. CARDIN: No, it is Mr. C. A. Bowman of Ottawa.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is that the journalist?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, he is with the Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What does he know about radio?

Mr. CHAPLIN: We are paying him to find out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They seem to be real experts.

Mr. CARDIN: The third commissioner is Dr. A. Frigon of the technical school at Montreal. His remuneration is fixed at $35 per day with a living allowance of $20 per day. The secretary of the commission is an officer of the department, Mr. Manson.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How does it come about that it costs Sir John Aird $5 per day more than the other men to live?

Mr. CARDIN: He is the head of the commission and most of the people address themselves to him.

Mr. SPENCER: It is $15 per day more.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, $15 per day more.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Have Sir John Aird, the banker, and Mr. Bowman, the journalist, any technical knowledge of radio, or are they just finding out?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to say whether or not they have any technical knowledge. I contend that is is not absolutely necessary to have that knowledge in order to inquire into a matter of this kind. A judge can sit in court and hear the argument of counsel and the evidence of expert witnesses and is able to give a judgment on a technical matter, and these men are sitting as judges in this inquiry. It has been my personal view that as far as the granting of licenses for broadcasting is concerned I prefer to grant them to the newspapers, because they are trained in the business of advertising.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Such as the Toronto Star.

Mr. CARDIN: I contend that there is no necessity for a man being an expert to inquire into such a situation in this or any other country. Furthermore, the commission has the services of the experts in the department.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is there not such a thing as people in Canada doing a job of this kind without receiving remuneration?

Mr. CARDIN: I think the remuneration which has been allowed to these commissioners compares very favourably with that granted to other commissioners who have been appointed from time to time. The treatment they are receiving is not exceptional; other commissioners doing work of no more importance have received practically the same remuneration and same living allowance.

Mr. JACOBS: How many free jobs has the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) done?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have been doing one for twenty years without receiving any remuneration at all, and it has been just as important as this one.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of what took place at the last session I cannot understand why this commission was not appointed at an earlier date. The report should have been before the house at this session, but as it is the report will not be available until another year has passed. In other words, two years will have elapsed instead of the one which was indicated by the ministry when we were dealing with this question as being the time necessary to look into this matter. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) was right when he said that the country is getting sick of being governed by commissions. It struck me the other day that there was considerable truth in what he said, because he has appointed most of them and he had appointed one two or three days before that time. In view of the difficulties which arose in connection with the utilization of our air channels by our great neighbour to the south, and the impossibility of arriving at an arrangement, I am sure that the majority of the Canadian people are becoming rather apprehensive about this matter and most anxious that some report be brought down which would indicate just what our position is to be with relation to the use of air channels, particularly as it concerns the United States.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to answer the question of my hon. friend as to the date when the report may be expected. I understand that the commission has not sat as yet in the maritime provinces. They are concluding their sittings in the province of Quebec and will then go to the maritime provinces to complete their investigations. I expect that the report will be in within two months and we will be able to deal with this matter at the next session of parliament. The commission did not neglect the starting of their labours and they have been working quite hard.

Mr. BENNETT: When was it appointed?

Mr. CARDIN: December 6.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, and the report will be in in two months. Had they been appointed as promised two months after the house rose last year, we would have had the report for this session. The minister has proved my case. In other words, they were appointed in December and the report will be ready in two months from to-day, or in August, and had they been appointed in October, instead of December, we would have had the report for this session.

Mr. JACOBS: You must not undermine their health, whatever you do.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not see anything in the vote to provide a doctor for them.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of an icebreaker for the Hudson strait—further amount required, $205,000.

Mr. MANION: We had a similar item this morning asking for the amount of $759,000 for an icebreaker for the Hudson strait, and now we have this item in the supplementary estimates. I notice that the next item is for $440,000 for an icebreaker in the St. Lawrence river, and we had a similar vote this morning for $359,000. How much do these icebreakers cost, and will these votes complete them?

Mr. CARDIN: It was estimated that the icebreaker to be used in the Hudson strait would cost $1,269,000.

Mr. MANION: This will not complete it?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes; the contract with the Halifax Shipyards is for $1,220,000.

Mr. MANION: Is the same thing true of the next item?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MANION: It will complete it?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: Was not the contract let to the Halifax Shipyards before the main estimates came up? Did not the department know what the cost of this icebreaker would be at that time, and why do they consider it necessary to make two items of the one matter? Why was not the whole matter put in the main estimates?

Mr. CARDIN: When the main estimates were framed we were not in a position to determine what amount would be spent during the present year.

Mr. SHORT: I understand that the contract has been let?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: It must have been for a specific amount.

Mr. CARDIN: The main estimates provided for what it was thought would be necessary for the current year, and we did not provide for the whole amount in those estimates.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Is the minister able to report on conditions in Hudson bay and strait? Evidently we had a certain investigation carried on last year and I should like to know what conditions were found there.

Mr. CARDIN: Generally speaking it is reported that navigation is possible in the strait, but the details can be found in the report of the expedition which has already been tabled and which is available to hon. members.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): For how long is navigation possible?

Mr. CARDIN: Somewhere around three or four months.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Is that navigation free from icebergs? Is it safe during the three months' period?

Mr. CARDIN: It is not entirely free from ice, but it is represented to us that it is possible to navigate the strait safely.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Does the minister consider to-day that with three months' navigation it will be a good business proposition for us to open up that country?

Mr. CARDIN: It is not for me to express an opinion, but I think this will be sufficient to meet the requirements.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the report to which the minister refers, that of the aviators who have been watching the strait?

Mr. CARDIN: It covers the whole thing.

[Mr. Short.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was this report from the aviators' camp itself?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who made the report?

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. McLean, the officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries who was in charge of the expedition there. This report includes the work of the aviators; it includes everything.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How long was he there?

Mr. CARDIN: The summers of 1927 and 1928.

Mr. CHAPLIN: All the summer?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the full report of the aviators covered by this?

Mr. CARDIN: Everything is covered by the report. All the work which has been done there is given in detail.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to capital—Marine department—river St. Lawrence ship channel—maintenance, operating, repairing dredging fleet and providing necessary boats, vessels and equipment, also maintenance, operation and repair of Sorel shipyard—further amount required, $67,297.

Mr. MANION: Did we not have an item dealing with that this morning?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. This appropriation constitutes a revote of the unexpended portions of appropriations Nos. 219 of the main estimates and 481 of the supplementary estimates for the last fiscal year. The purpose of these appropriations was to provide for the reconditioning of wharf No. 4 and for other work of a similar nature, but more particularly of the reconditioning of the wharf. When this work was put in hand during the summer, it was disclosed that the condition of the wharf was such as to necessitate a modification of the original plan for the wharf. The result was that the work was delayed beyond the season when it could be done to advantage and the money lapsed in large part with the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANION: This is the same as appropriation No. 169, $3,108,000, in the main estimates, making the total amount, roughly speaking, $3,200,000.

Item agreed to.

Lighthouse and coast service—salaries and allowances to lightkeepers—further amount required, $25,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many lightkeepers are there, that is those permanently and those part-time employed?

Mr. CARDIN: The total number is 1,179, but in the list that I have before me there is no division between the lower class and the higher classes. I can later supply that information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister does not know how many there are in the lower class?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot say just at the moment, but I can get the information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Could the minister give a guess?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This item of $25,000 which appears in the supplementary estimates is to increase the salaries or the pay and allowances of these lightkeepers. Last year I had the honour of bringing to the attention of the house and the minister the situation that has existed for a long time with respect to these lightkeepers, and perhaps the statement I made was sufficient to shock the minister himself. These men are grossly underpaid. The session before last I performed the same work or at all events I made an effort to secure increases for these men. I had the pleasure of seeing a deputation of them again this year. I am glad to see that the minister has now shown some regard for the representations which have been made to him from time to time and that some slight increase will be granted to these lightkeepers. I wonder if we shall be as successful with the Postmaster General. We tried last year, the year before and again this year to get a little increase for the underpaid postal workers. Perhaps there is still room for hope that next year he will be able to do something.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the minimum salary paid to a lightkeeper?

Mr. CARDIN: In connection with certain lights the salary is only $60 a year, but it must be remembered that these people are not giving their whole time to the work. All they have to do is to go to the lighthouses in the evening and light the lamps and, if necessary, to clean the lights.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the minimum salary paid to those engaged full time in the work and what holidays do they get?

Mr. CARDIN: It is around $400.

Mr. ADSHEAD: A year?

Mr. CARDIN: For the season they are occupied.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How long is that?

Mr. CARDIN: It depends. It may be five or six or seven months.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What do they do the rest of the year?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I think that ought to be considered. I think they should receive a minimum salary of at least $100 a month.

Mr. JACOBS: It must be remembered that they are enjoying the sea air while they are carrying on their duties.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They also do some fishing.

Mr. McQUARRIE: They are not the only employees of the government who receive less than $100 a month. On the Pacific coast the fisheries patrol men working on the boats receive less than $100 a month; as a matter of fact, they receive $90 a month, and out of that they have to pay their board while out on patrol, which it is estimated costs them at least $25 or $30 a month. There was a time when they received board in addition to their salary, but now they have to pay for their board out of their salary. I have from time to time protested to the minister in the house and outside of it and to the deputy minister and I have presented petitions from the men and from various organizations pointing out the injustice under which these men are suffering owing to the small salary they receive. A man who has to keep a wife and a family on the salary a patrolman receives in British Columbia has not got very much chance. I know that the minister has refused to entertain the suggestion that has been made that these men should have their wages increased. He says that he has looked into the matter and that they are getting paid the same amount as men working on privately owned boats. Personally I think these men have been badly treated. I quite agree that the lighthouse keepers should have their salaries increased, but I think the minister should go a little bit further and treat the patrol men in the same way and give them an increase. A great many of these men are returned soldiers, as the minister knows, and it is absolutely impossible for them to live with any degree of comfort on the wages they are receiving.

Mr. SHORT: I understood from the minister this morning that this $25,000 was the amount that was agreed upon when the delegation from the lighthouse keepers' association met the government, and that the arrangement made at that time was satisfactory to them. I understand that the delegation asked for increases that amounted to $134,000, but that the department decided that that was too much to grant them this year, but they made them the sporting offer that they would grant fifty per cent of what they asked, and I understand that the delegation were satisfied with that for this year and went away thinking that they were going to get increases amounting to $67,000. There is only $25,000 in the estimates, and therefore it does not provide for the general increase that they expected and were promised.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend refers to the delegation of last year?

Mr. SHORT: They met the minister again in February or March of this year.

Mr. CARDIN: This year the representatives of the lightkeepers came to the department and discussed the matter again. As a result of the discussion it was agreed that for the present the changes proposed would require an expenditure of $25,000, and that was satisfactory to them for this year.

Mr. SHORT: I understood that the changes that they asked for represented an increase of about $134,000, that the government considered that was too much for the present season, that they were not disposed to grant the request of the lighthouse keepers in full, but they made them an offer of fifty per cent of what they asked for this year, and said that they might do something more next year. The lighthouse keepers accepted that offer and went away satisfied. That would have involved an expenditure of $67,000.

Mr. CARDIN: When the first request was made involving an expenditure of over $100,000, it was recognized at once by the lightkeepers that such a figure could not be considered at the present time, so there was no discussion at all about reducing that amount. However, they wanted some increase, and after discussion they agreed on the changes that we proposed. They agreed that this $25,000 would be sufficient for the present year. They have not abandoned their claims for greater remuneration, but for this year they are satisfied.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps I might explain a little further. When the delegation met the minister, the suggestion was thrown out by one of the delegation that they might be satisfied with fifty per cent. The minister did not definitely promise it, although he held out some hope that he would consider it. Then it was left to a smaller delegation, including myself and one of the organizers of the Civil Servant's Associations, to look after the matter for these lightkeepers could not stay here indefinitely. We continued the negotiations and had several meetings with the officials. The suggestion outlined to us was this—I do not think we accepted it, except for the very good reason that we had to, and certainly we did not accept it as an abandonment of the claims of the men. It was recognized that the lower paid men I think from grades 16 to 19 ought to have their pay increased, for after twenty years they certainly had an increase coming to them. It was arranged that their pay should be increased. I forget the actual increase that was proposed, but it was a substantial increase for each of these grades. Then it was claimed that if they went into a consideration of the claims of all the lighthouse keepers, more particularly those of the part time men on the Atlantic, it would mean a reclassification of all these positions, which would take a year's time, and inevitably the result would be that some men would have to accept a lower rate of pay because conditions had changed since they were first appointed. Perhaps railways had come or villages had grown up and made the conditions very different from what they were many years ago. It was shown to us to some extent that if such a general reclassification took place some of these men would have to have their salaries reduced, and it was felt that that was not desirable from the men's point of view. So the suggestion that was made was this: If we would accept, or rather if we would be quiescent over this increase for the lower grades, then any individual in the higher grades who felt that he had a specific complaint, that he was not being fairly dealt with as compared with other lighthouse keepers in view of the special circumstances of his position, could have his case considered, and I think the language that was used was that it would receive "the sympathetic consideration of the department." So while the lower grade men are sharing in this increase in any case, none of the higher grade men will have to be demoted, and if any one of them feels that he is being discriminated against or that his position has become more difficult by reason of changed conditions he can bring his case up and, to quote the language of the official, it will receive sympathetic consideration by the department.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was any minimum salary suggested?

Mr. NEILL: There was no question of minimum salary because of the difficulty of fixing a specific salary that would fit all conditions. The conditions of the lighthouse service are peculiar. A salary that would be perfectly adequate in one place would be perfectly inadequate at, say, a point 50 miles away, due to difficulties of communication and other factors. Therefore it is not possible specifically to lay down a salary that would be fair to one and all; each case must be considered by itself.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the hon. gentleman say there is a minimum salary for a man permanently engaged?

Mr. NEILL: It was arranged that the minimum salary for the lower grades should be substantially increased.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): A new situation has arisen. The minister said the deputation was satisfied. I understand from the last speaker that the deputation appointed a subcommittee and they are not satisfied. Is that the situation?

Mr. NEILL: We were satisfied—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister will answer the question, please.

Mr. CARDIN: I understood they were satisfied with what we were ready to do this year. It is true they were asking for more. They did not abandon their claim. I may have been mistaken, but I understood from their declaration that they were satisfied to have the low salaries taken care of for the present.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is a flat increase to be given to each one of the low salaried men, or are the increases to be varied? I have been trying to figure out what each one might get. The increase might amount to $40.

Mr. CARDIN: I might read for the benfit of the committee a brief explanation which I have among my papers:

It is proposed to grant definite increases to the lowest paid group, which are classes 19 to 16 inclusive, averaging between $26 and $27 per annum. This group is now paid a minimum of $80 per annum and a maximum of $150. It is proposed to increase the minimum to $100 and the maximum to $180. There are approximately 390 in this group. It is not proposed to grant definite increases in classes 15 to 11 inclusive, but to consider each individual case with a view to granting promotion instead of changing the classification of the station, which will give them a higher salary. There are approximately 380 in this group. It is estimated that approximately 25 per cent of each class will be promoted to a higher class, and the additional annual expenditure involved will approximate the above sum.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Has the position of lightkeeper at Fourchu, in the county of Richmond been filled?

Mr. CARDIN: I am sorry that I have not the information before me.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The minister should be aware that the position became vacant through the death of the lightkeeper, and that an appointment was to be made. I should like to know if the man now employed there has been permanently appointed. If so, how so and why so?

Mr. CARDIN: I will undertake to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. DICKIE: I did not happen to be in the house, Mr. Chairman, when the item for the administration of pilotage was before the committee. Is it the the intention of the government at an early date to provide the necessary machinery for putting into effect the recommendations of Commissioner Morrison and the committee on Marine and Fisheries with respect to pilotage matters on the Pacific coast?

Mr. CARDIN: We are doing it now.

Mr. DICKIE: There have been disconcerting rumours that a high official in the minister's department does not view with approval the by-laws which were agreed to by the shipping federation and the pilots of Vancouver. The pilots are a little bit perturbed, and they wish to be assured that the necessary order in council will be passed and that the minister will proceed to establish a pilotage board along the lines suggested by Commissioner Morrison and the committee.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that these by-laws are now before the Justice department for approval.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Referring to my question in reference to the lightkeeper at Fourchu, I may say for the information of the minister that this is a very important matter. A vacancy occurred some time last year, and I understand that a minor is now holding the position. I have had a good many communications in reference to the case. I do not know whether it is due to the fault of the Civil Service Commission or not, but I understand notices advertising the vacancy were not posted in the vicinity. We have in that district quite a few returned soldiers, and my information comes from them. These men claim that they have not been given a proper opportunity to apply for the vacancy. As is well known, we have in Nova Scotia a system of party patronage. To-day it is uncertain whether the position is actually held by the father or by his son, but I know the father holds every important government position in the district. He is the local patronage dealer. Three or four of the returned soldiers to whom I have referred are invalids as a result of their war service in the cause of freedom and the vindication of British principles of justice and fair play. These men desire to know whether or not this 18- or 19-year old son is the lightkeeper of Fourchu or whether his father holds the position. They cannot find out.

Mr. CARDIN: I will secure the information and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Furthermore, I would ask the minister to make an investigation and ascertain whether or not the Civil Service Commission or his own department failed properly to advertise the vacancy; and if an appointment was made, how it was made. If the returned soldiers in the district were not given an opportunity to apply for this position, I claim the case should be reopened. As I have said, three or four of these returned soldiers are invalids, they are not able to work, and their pensions are not sufficient to enable them to maintain themselves and their families. Such a position as this—and by statute they are entitled to preferred treatment in these cases—such a position, I say, would be a great help to any one of these men. British justice should not be denied these returned soldiers, and I claim that the position should be reopened and these men given an opportunity to compete for it.

Mr. BRADY: In the matter of ordinary repairs such as carpentry work and work around the lighthouse, which very often involves many long hours on the part of the lighthouse keeper, is any extra pay allowed?

Mr. CARDIN: No; in connection with small repairs material is supplied to the lighthouse keeper, but he receives no extra pay.

Mr. BRADY: Is the minister aware that very often the work that devolves upon these men occupies them seven, eight and nine hours a day? In view of this, and the fact that these men must devote a long part of their night to lighthouse work, consideration should be given the matter.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to reimburse certain merchants of Victoria, B.C. for materials furnished and used in the construction of two lighthouse tenders for the service of the government, $8,459.77.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister explain this item?

[Mr. Macdonald (Richmond).]

Mr. CARDIN: This vote results from the failure of the British Columbia Yacht and Boat Builders' Company Limited, of Victoria, to complete a contract entered into with the department for the construction of two lighthouse tenders in 1920. The original contract provided for a total payment of $62,750 but it was later increased to $75,000 when the work was nearing completion, on the representations which were made that it was more costly than had been anticipated and that the credit and resources of the company were exhausted. Ultimately the government was compelled to take over the vessels uncompleted and to complete them on commission at a cost of $1,450. The above sum represents unpaid claims of various merchants against the original contractors for materials supplied which entered into the construction of the vessels, less 17 per cent which accrued to them from money assigned by the direction of the industrial commissioner for the province of British Columbia. The government acknowledges no legal liability for these things but proposes to pay them as an act of grace. These people supplied materials and goods which were necessary for the building of the ships. We are getting the benefit of this because we are using the materials, and it has been felt that it would be only fair to compensate the dealer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the result of the contract in the first place?

Mr. CARDIN: We got the two boats. They could not carry on; they failed.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Did the boats cost you that much more?

Mr. CARDIN: We paid $75,000 for the boats.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That was the amount of the contract.

Mr. CARDIN: No; the amount of the contract was $62,750. This company, I may say, was an organization of returned soldiers who had gone into the business of building ships; but apparently they were not experienced and could not carry on, with the result that they failed. The government had to supply the necessary money to complete the work. The merchants who supplied the goods were anxious to be paid, having made representations for many years. This year we decided to make this grant as an act of grace.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services, $1,160,000.

Mr. BRADY: On this very important vote, which calls for an increase this year of $180,000, making the total $1,160,000, I have something to say which is of vital interest. It is of such vital importance to our patrol system in the waters of British Columbia that I feel sure that when I put a few facts before the committee they will not be merely surprised at conditions there but will receive a decided shock. To-day on the Pacific coast we find the greatest fishery that Canada possesses. That is the only part of Canada at the present time that presents increased fishing problems; these problems are all on on the Pacific seaboard. For instance, we have entered into a halibut treaty for the preservation of that great industry, and we have made a seal industry from which this government obtains annually $100,000. This money goes into the national revenue and is not paid into the fishing department for its development. This bounty is a gift from one of our sea industries. Then lately we have seen the desirability of entering into a salmon treaty for the preservation of that very high class commercial fish, the Sockeye.

What are the facts to-day regarding our fishing? I went to the trouble to get from the bureau of statistics at Washington the report of the tariff investigation that has taken place in the last few weeks in connection with fishing in the United States and in its relation to Canada and other countries. As a preamble to the facts which I am going to give to the committee. I may observe that the president of the largest fishing establishment in Boston, in giving his evidence before the tariff commission when asking for an increase of 3 cents per pound on processed haddock going in from the Atlantic seaboard into the United States, uttered this sentence, which I am quite convinced will cause every member of this committee to think.

What we want is an equalization basis; having got that, with American brains and American genius, we look after the rest.

To-day in the United States, with a population nearly thirteen times greater than that of Canada, there is a demand thirteen times greater for fish in that market. And here we find this statement in an article:

It has been abundantly proved that the fishing banks to which American fishermen have immediate access are unable to meet the demands of the American market for fish.

From maps compiled by the United States bureau of fisheries indicating the distribution of production, it is made manifest that any further developments in production must be made in waters nearer the Canadian coast than that of the United States.

I will give one more short paragraph which is also illuminating in connection with American inland fisheries; a survey made in American waters proved that they are so depleted that production in these waters is entirely inadequate to meet the demand. Yellow pike, whitefish, yellow perch and jacks, all have suffered depreciation. It is admitted, moreover, by the United States authorities that the production of fresh water fish on the American side of the great lakes is likewise depleted. The blue pike, a highly commercial inland water fish which was obtained in tremendous quantities from American waters up to 1923, has been fished out.

As a preamble to what I am going to say I want to remind hon. members that no phase of this great industry demands the attention of this house and of the people of Canada so much as our Pacific fisheries. What is happening there to-day? Let me go back three years; time and again the Department of Fisheries has been warned that great inroads were being made by American trawlers, and on our fishery grounds only as a last resort on the part of individual Canadian trawlers to undertake to do the police work which the department was unable to do properly because of the lack of an adequate patrol system, with which I will deal in a moment. The smaller boats, except the Malaspina and Givenchy cannot go into these deep waters, swept as they are by terrific storms, and as a result they are unable to give proper service.

The Washington treaty of 1909 undoubtedly has not been lived up to; here is the important section of that treaty, which was signed at Washington on January 27, 1909:

American fishermen shall be permitted to enter such bays or harbours for the purpose of shelter, repairing damages, purchasing wood, obtaining water—

The next is the important provision:

—and for no other purpose whatever.

It has been proved that hundreds and hundreds of American trawlers have violated the provisions of that treaty, and are doing so at present. I have here a sworn copy of the log of a Canadian trawler, covering the period from May 9 to September 6, 1928. I have taken only this one bit of evidence from that offered by all the hundreds of vessels which go in and out of the different harbours, but certainly this should make us feel very much alarmed when we see the dangers with which our fisheries are faced as a result of these American trawlers menacing our fishing grounds. The log is as follows:

May 9th. White Rocks—Banks Isl. 11 U.S.A. trollers from ¼ mile of light-buoy to 14 miles W. ¾ S. A large number of U.S.A. trollers fishing off cape George observed at 17.15 p.m.

May 13th. 43 U.S.A. trollers fishing from 1 mile of Seal rocks (Stephens Isl.) to 20 miles S.S.W. off "Freeman's pass."

May 14th. U.S.A. trollers "Valid" and "Republic" fishing ½ mile off N.W. rocks—Banks island.

May 15th. Several U.S.A. trollers fishing off Reef island.

May 16th. 11 U.S.A. trollers fishing off Scridler point, inside 3 mile.

May 19th. Sat. night at dark anchor lights of U.S.A. trollers resembling street lights of a city at night—off Freeman's pass.

May 20th. U.S.A. troller "Majestic" trolling about 2 miles off White Rocks—Banks island, strong S.E.

May 23rd. 16 U.S.A. trollers fishing from Rose spit buoy to end of dry spit.

May 31st. U.S.A. trollers too many to count fishing from Reef island to Bonilla.

June 3rd. 2 U.S.A. trollers fishing along N.W. Rocks, Banks island.

June 7th. 2 U.S.A. trollers fishing—Butterworth rocks.

June 9th. 3 U.S.A. trollers fishing off Reef island 10—2 a.m.

June 10th. 4 U.S.A. trollers fishing approximately one mile from Meresly Island.

June 11th. Several U.S.A. trollers fishing 2 miles off Reef island.

June 13th. Canadian trollers "Iceland" and "Point May" observe 7 U.S.A. trollers around Rose spit buoy at 11.15 a.m. also 17.55 p.m.

June 14th. One U.S.A. troller (no name on her) trolling inside Butterworth rocks with one line over the stern, her poles up.

June 15th. U.S.A. troller fishing 1½ miles off Gull rocks—no name.

June 16th. 19.30 p.m. Freeman harbour. 14 U.S.A. trollers anchored. Crews cutting poles ashore.

June 17th. U.S.A. troller "Republic" fishing ¼ mile off Indian cove.

June 20th. Sparrowhawk breakers, 8.45 a.m. 2 U.S.A. trollers fishing 1 mile off S.E.

June 22nd. 37 U.S.A. trollers anchored in Freeman's harbour. Crews trolling poles ashore.

June 27th. 7 U.S.A. trollers fishing inside Rose spit buoy.

July 4th. U.S.A. trollers "Jennie" and "W-U" trolling Laparanese rocks 200 ft. off S.W. at 8.30 a.m.

July 14th. 15 U.S.A. trollers fishing around Rose spit buoy.

Aug. 18th. Reported by Canadian halibut boat (Thelma C) large number of U.S.A. trollers fishing off Gosling rocks (Goose island).

Sept. 6th. Reported by D.S.T. (Canadian halibut boat) 3 U.S.A. trollers fishing between Rose spit and Butterworth rocks.

Surely it is my right, Mr. Chairman, to present to this House of Commons and to this committee the gravity of the situation and the danger threatening this great fishing industry. A grave responsibility rests upon us of preserving and conserving that great industry. I believe the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows the complexity and magnitude of this work which he is called upon to perform, but with his double function of Minister of Marine and Fisheries he cannot hope to give the Fisheries department the consideration which it deserves. I would like to quote a few sentences from a very excellent report upon the patrol service and which throws out a hint that this particular service should be improved. The first sentence is:

> In view of the immense increase in the number of fishermen and the quantity of fishing gear operated during the year, particularly in the case of salmon, and the resultant keen competition, the difficulties of the patrol service were greatly increased.

And again, and this is much more important:

> Several of the present overseer's areas must be considerably reduced.

I will explain the significance of that sentence a little later on. The report continues:

> The inspections by guardians and patrolmen are very often unsatisfactory owing to the fact that these officers are usually new men each year.

Those who do not understand the conditions under which these men enter the patrol service cannot get the significance of that sentence. The minister knows that this service is used for patronage purposes. These men see an opportunity of obtaining a job for two or three months and very often some of them have never seen the inside of a boat before. I know of one instance where a man was placed on one of these patrol boats and I looked up his history and found that he did not know anything about a marine engine. I do not blame anyone personally, but I blame the system. The system is wrong and we should have competent men in our patrol system, men who are paid enough to keep them from temptation and bribery. They should be given proper boats and the areas of inspection should be reduced. Moreover, there should be one or two larger boats provided to ply these waters and visit the harbours where hundreds and hundreds of American salmon trawlers are to be found.

It is only since May 11 that any effort has been made to check up this great evil. A recent case was the patrol boat Malaspina which seized five American trawlers and took them to Prince Rupert. They claimed that they came in for shelter, but it was proved by the evidence of the fishery officers in charge of the fisheries that the weather had been fine. They were not in need of water and they had not been forced in through the inclemency of the weather. A few days ago at Zayas island in northern British Columbia another American trawler was seized. The man admitted that he had been fishing, but he was caught redhanded and was forced to make that admission, and furthermore, he had salmon on board. That boat was a fifteen ton trawler, newly built in Seattle, and had been fishing in Canadian waters. Before I proceed any further, I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether or not Hecate straits are "mare clausum" or considered as being Canadian water.

Mr. CARDIN: The department has always claimed that it is.

Mr. BRADY: It is within Canadian waters?

Mr. CARDIN: That is our claim but it is not admitted.

Mr. BRADY: I am very glad to hear the minister say that that is our claim. I believe that that is one thing which will have to be fought for as those waters should be considered as being purely Canadian waters. Last year the American trawlers took nearly 2,000,000 pounds of salmon from that area. At the north end of Hecate strait, at the international line, there are hundreds of American traps to be found, and the same condition applies to the southern end of the international line. Then we find hundreds and hundreds of American trawlers plying along our coasts and coming into our harbours and there is no doubt in the world that they are not keeping to the treaty of Washington. If this committee, or this House of Commons, would realize the importance of this matter it would receive immediate attention. The only place in Canada where we have fishing problems is on the Pacific coast. The Atlantic seaboard has been fished for many years and it presents no great problems at the present time. This government should have a Minister of Fisheries who knows these waters and knows the problems surrounding them; that is the only solution of the whole matter.

I do not wish to keep the committee any longer, but I only desire to say that we are wasting time, energy and money unless a constructive policy is adopted. These people should be made to live up to the treaty, a better patrol service should be provided, better conditions of entering that service and conservation of our fish. These should be the important points.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: How are these fishery guardians paid? Are they paid by the month?

Mr. CARDIN: They are paid by the day.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: When they are paid by the day, are they supposed to do any other work, their own work, or are they paid a sufficient amount to keep them from doing other work?

Mr. CARDIN: They are not supposed to do any other work during the days they are supposed to work as guardians.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: Does that apply to all the fishery guardians?

Mr. CARDIN: There are a few of them who are not obliged to give their whole time to the work.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: I have had several complaints from parts of my constituency that these guardians are doing other work and neglecting the streams. I did not take any notice of this because I was not sure whether they were compelled to devote their full time to the work or not. I suppose this is according to the pay they get.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. In answer to the observations of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady), while I have no intention of going into any of the details that he has discussed, referring to his last observation that the proper move would be the appointment of a separate minister to look after the fisheries, I have already said in the house that personally I am not very anxious to continue the office of Minister of Fisheries. I think my hon. friend should be relieved by the declaration of the Prime Minister not very long ago that he was considering the matter and that he expected he would be in a position to appoint a Minister of Fisheries. What has been stated by my hon. friend relates, if I am not mistaken, to last year.

Mr. BRADY: Yes, 1928.

Mr. CARDIN: The results for this year are very satisfactory. The patrol service has already effected several seizures, and I think the condition has very much improved as compared with what it was last year. At present we have in British Columbia twenty patrol boats. We have two big boats; in district No. 1 we have six smaller ones; in district No. 2, nine, and in district No. 3, five, making a total of twenty. We propose to build for district No. 1, an additional boat, and for district No. 2 five additional boats. We propose also as an experiment to build four sea sleds, very fast motor boats, to operate from a master ship. Of course these sea sleds will not be capable of going on the high seas and in rough weather, but as they are very fast-running boats, we think they will be of great advantage. Outside of that we have the flying service to help us, and after considering the whole matter and discussing it with interested parties, we have reached an agreement to cooperate to the greatest extent possible with the Northern British Columbia Fishing Association. The department is satisfied that at present the situation has improved, and we hope it will continue to improve.

Mr. SHORT: The minister has given us the number of patrol boats he has on the Pacific coast. How many has he on the Atlantic? The hon. member for Skeena evidently thinks that we have no fishery problems in the maritime provinces. I should like him to understand that we have quite as many problems and difficulties in the maritime provinces as they have on the Pacific. The minister might also give the number of patrol boats on the great lakes.

Mr. CARDIN: We have none on the great lakes, but on the Atlantic coast we have the Arras and the Arleux. We have also the Mildred McColl and the F. P. 1. In New Brunswick we have the Phalarope, the Gannet Rock, in addition to chartered boats. Moreover we are building three boats for the eastern coast of Canada, one to replace the F. P. 1 which has been condemned, a new boat for scallop investigation and a new boat for patrol service.

Mr. SHORT: Last year the amount appropriated was $980,000. This year it is $1,160,000, or an increase of $180,000. How is this made up?

Mr. CARDIN: In the first place there are statutory increases and the employment of four new overseers. This includes the travelling expenses and allowances for these officers.

Mr. McRAE: What do the overseers get?

Mr. CARDIN: We have two grades, one receiving from $1,200 to $1,500, and the other from $1,500 to $1,800. This increase also covers special guardians, employment of additional guardians in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and Saskatchewan; miscellaneous expenditure, the small amount of $5,000; the building of new boats for the west coast and the east coast, amounting to $137,000. That is the big item in the increase.

Mr. McRAE: How much of that is for the west coast?

Mr. CARDIN: $98,000. The existing wooden boat sheds at Digby island, British Columbia, which were of cheap and fragile construction, are beyond repair and must be replaced at a great cost or deterioration of the boats will be incurred. Additional sheds are now needed, there being no accommodation for some boats. The amount for that is $6,700. We are now providing $20,000 more than last year for air service.

Mr. McRAE: Principally west coast?

Mr. CARDIN: Altogether west coast.

Mr. McRAE: This patrol service which, I presume, is being operated on the west coast, is rapidly mounting into very large figures. I notice that last year we spent on the patrol service, $228,904, and from the figures given by the minister our expenditure this year will probably be close to $350,000 on the coast. There is a good deal in what the hon. member for Skeena has said. The conditions of which he complains on the west coast of Vancouver island and under which our Canadian fishermen have suffered have prevailed for a long time. We have beyond the west coast of Vancouver island the Swift Shore banks, about twenty-five miles out, and our fishermen should enjoy the advantage of proximity to that bank, but under the old treaty American vessels have the privilege of entering our ports for wood, water, shelter and repairs. I appreciate that it is very difficult for the department to protect our fishermen and prevent what is undoubtedly going on, and that is the use of these numerous harbours on the west coast of Vancouver island as a resting place for the Seattle fleet. I submit to the minister that we should take some steps to protect our fishermen on the west coast, even to the extent of asking for a modification of that old treaty which is no longer applicable to present day conditions. I submit that a great deal of this expenditure of $350,000 which the government will make this year is caused by the fact that we are endeavouring to protect ourselves against the misuse of our numerous harbours on the west coast. I can see the difficulty the department must experience in doing that because to-day it is not unusual to find twenty-five or fifty American boats, which fish off the Swift Shore Banks, resting in our harbours on the west coast. They can run in and out of these harbours with impunity under this clause in the treaty which permits them to come in for wood, water, shelter and repairs, almost as conveniently as our own fishermen who have their homes on the shore. I submit that the Seattle fleet would be at a great disadvantage, operating two hundred miles away from their base, if they could only use our harbours when there was a real storm on, and then they could come in for safety. I do not think this treaty was ever intended to allow foreign fishermen to come into our harbours and enjoy exactly the same privileges as our own Canadian citizens. The Seattle fleet buy all their supplies in Seattle, and then come up and fish off the Swift Shore banks, enjoy the privileges of our harbours so far as shelter is concerned, and then return to Seattle with their catch, but they are not subject to two cents a pound duty.

I am glad of this opportunity to put these facts before the committee because I think it is a matter that requires the attention of the government, particularly in view of the increased expenditure which is going on from year to year in order to protect ourselves against conditions which it is impossible for us properly to protect ourselves against, regardless of how many boats you put on the patrol service, for there are dozens of harbours, probably forty or fifty, into which these American boats can run, and there is no habitation there at all. It is quite easy for the Seattle fleet in any little blow which would just make the ordinary landsmen seasick to run into our harbours and call it a storm, and then immediately go out and fish again when the sun comes out.

Mr. BALDWIN: How near the shore can they fish, three or twelve miles?

Mr. McRAE: I believe that three miles is the limit, but that is not the real complaint, because I believe that poaching will be done once in a while by all fishermen. It is difficult on a long coast line of 300 miles to prevent poaching altogether, and I do not think there is any serious complaint about that. What we complain about is that common use of our harbours by foreign fishermen and our own people.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to endorse everything that the hon. member for Vancouver North has said. He has outlined the situation as it exists. What the remedy is I do not know unless it be greater vigilance on our part. Some years ago it was the practice never to interfere with these men at all. There seemed to be some doubt about the correct interpretation of the treaty, and I had a good deal to do with pressing the department to take the matter up. Two years ago the department finally decided to take action, and in order not to be too harsh at first they first of all warned these men, and then on the second offence they seized the vessel. I think last year five or six boats were seized. The United States government took the attitude that we were all wrong, that we had not interpreted the treaty correctly. I believe the matter never went to the courts. The boats were confiscated or released on paying a very heavy fine. I saw in the local papers only a few weeks ago that quite a number of them had been taken recently, some in the constituency of my hon. friend from Skeena, and some in the district I represent. I can only suggest that the government should be more vigilant in this matter and make an example of these foreign fishermen and vessels when they catch them.

Mr. McRAE: The difficulty the government experiences is in connection with this clause in the old treaty which gives foreign vessels the right to come in for wood, water, shelter and repairs, and until that treaty is modified all we can expect is that the government do the best they can, but they will not get very far in protecting the interests of our fishermen in these harbours because you can readily see that a man could shut off his gasoline engine or put it out of business and then come into port and say he wants to fix the engine up. Many a man has said that when he has been approached—"I am fixing up my engine"—and he is allowed in under that clause in the treaty which enables him to come in to make repairs. I really think that in the interests of our fishermen the treaty should be revised. It has been in effect for one hundred years, and I think it would be a good thing to bring it up to date.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How much will be spent on the air patrol under this item?

Mr. CARDIN: This year about $40,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What does that include?

Mr. CARDIN: Three planes must be always available and give at least three hundred flying hours.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Are the planes owned by the department?

Mr. CARDIN: No, by Canadian Airways Limited.

Mr. McRAE: I should like to say that there is no fisheries patrol service on the coast as efficient as the air service.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Where do these planes operate?

Mr. CARDIN: All along the coast but mainly in district No. 2.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the arrangement with Canadian Airways Limited as to the use of these planes?

Mr. CARDIN: They have to have three planes available at places specified by our officers from time to time.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What do you pay for this service?

Mr. CARDIN: We pay $40,000 to that company for the use of a plane, and three of them have to be always available anywhere that is indicated by our officer.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What do they do? I quite agree that the air service is most useful in fisheries patrol, but I am wondering what work these planes actually do. If we were really getting results, it would seem to me that this poaching which the hon. member for Skeena has told us about should not occur.

Mr. CARDIN: Those aeroplanes are operating in the same way as the protective boats that we are using there. The efficiency of the service cannot be gauged by the number of arrests made. The prevention of offences is the most important feature, and judged by these results I think we are justified in saying that the service has proved satisfactory.

Mr. SHORT: Under this heading comes salaries. I presume that is one of the items which accounts for some of the increase. Among the new men appointed since the reorganization of the Fisheries department I notice Mr. Paisley, a former editor of the Sydney Record. Will the minister state what position this gentleman occupies, what are his duties and his qualifications?

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Paisley has been appointed director of publicity. His salary comes under the civil government vote. As my hon. friend knows, the appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SHORT: What qualifications does Mr. Paisley possess for a position of this kind? Did we not have an intelligence bureau presided over by one of the other officers of the department?

Mr. CARDIN: We had no officer fulfilling the same duties.

Mr. SHORT: Did not Mr. Cowie perform those duties?

Mr. CARDIN: We had an intelligence bureau for the obtaining of information regarding bait along the coast. That was the only object of the bureau presided over by Mr. Cowie.

Mr. SHORT: I would think that the man in charge of the intelligence bureau of the fisheries department would need to have some knowledge of the fishing industry, otherwise he could not give the information to the public that the public are looking for. I would not know Mr. Paisley if I met him on the street, but I am told that he has absolutely no practical qualifications whatever, that his appointment was purely political. Had he not been of the right political stripe, he never would have received this appointment, regardless of whether the Civil Service Commission made it or not. Now, if the minister is going to play politics with the fisheries service he will never improve it; in fact such a course will be very detrimental to the industry. You must get practical men in the department if you are going to make a success of this great natural industry; you must have men who know something about the business.

Mr. CARDIN: I think this appointment cannot be described as a political appointment. It was made by the Civil Service Commission in accordance with the Civil Service Act. Mr. Paisley is a newspaper man and is supposed to know something about advertising, and certainly having lived for a long period of years in the maritime provinces he has a general knowledge of the fishing industry in that section of the country. We do not need at the head of the publicity division an expert in any line or branch of the fishing industry. If he has a knowledge of the general principles of the industry, and capacity for devising a better scheme of reaching the public, I think his qualifications are sufficient. He has to collect information and distribute it for the benefit of the fishermen and the general public as well. He does not require any technical experience.

Mr. SHORT: What advertising is the department doing? I get our maritime papers every day, and so far I have not seen any improvement whatever in the articles that are sent to the press.

Mr. CARDIN: Surely my hon. friend realizes that we are only at the start of this branch of the service, and are not yet in a position to show the benefit resulting from its establishment. I repeat, Mr. Paisley's appointment was made through the Civil Service Commission. Several others applied, and the commission decided that Mr. Paisley was the best qualified.

Mr. SHORT: How long does a man require to get a bureau like this started? How long does it take him to get into his stride? He has been in his position for several months. I do not believe there is any intention on the part of the department to make any radical change. If he is such a wonderful man I would think, after having been in the position for several months, he would be able to show the public that he can improve the service.

Mr. McRAE: Mr. Chairman, I notice that guardians come under this vote, and I have a suggestion to make to the minister. No people on our coast are more interested in the industry than the fishermen themselves. They have some very representative and serious minded associations, and these associations are giving a great deal of time to the development of the industry. I have no hesitation in saying to the minister that if a little less regard was given to the political complexion of the guardians, and if the fishermen's associations were a little more closely consulted about appointments, the department would get men who not only know the district to which they are assigned, but also possess the knowledge which the associations have at their disposal. I have not the least doubt in the world that more efficient guardians could be obtained in that way. This would result in better protection of the fish, which is the purpose for which these men are hired.

Item agreed to.

Building fishways and clearing rivers, $20,000.

Mr. McRAE: It is not very often that this side of the house criticizes the government for not spending enough money, but this vote for clearing streams is absurd; it is totally inadequate, and in some cases the money has not even been used. It requires no expert in fishing to know that you must remove obstructions from rivers and streams if fish are unable to get up those rivers and streams; and on our coast there are dozens of streams in which improvements of this kind could be made to great advantage. I should like to see the vote sufficiently large so that if applications came in to the department, and investigation warranted it, a proper expenditure could be made to improve any stream where necessary. I know of one steam at least which would require the whole of this vote to put it into proper condition. The expenditure would be worth while, and as a business proposition it would be made. But the department has always been handicapped by the limitation of this particular vote.

Mr. CARDIN: Last year we spent practically the amount voted—$19,000. I agree with my hon. friend that more work should be undertaken.

Mr. McRAE: The vote should be $100,000, and even if you did not use it all you would at least have the money on hand to do work which is of primary importance.

Mr. SHORT: I agree with the hon. member that this vote is a mere pittance compared to what it should be to take care of so important a matter as the clearing of streams. We have the same difficulty in Nova Scotia. In some of our rivers, which were splendid salmon rivers, this fish is now almost extinct; the salmon are unable to get up the rivers on account of obstructions. I wish to read an editorial that appeared in the Halifax Herald two or three days ago, bearing on this subject:

Protect The Salmon

There is urgent need for more adequate protection in relation to the salmon streams of Nova Scotia. If this adequate protection is not afforded, these fine fish will cease to exist in streams now famous as anglers' haunts.

On certain streams facilities are provided for the passage of salmon upstream, but when the small fish come down they get into the flume and are destroyed.

What is needed, The Herald is advised, is a screen on the flume to keep the small fish out.

This matter is giving concern to those interested in conservation of the fish of the province, and it should receive immediate and effective attention.

I believe this matter was brought to the attention of the minister last year by the senior member for Halifax, and it is one that should receive the immediate consideration of the department. Our rivers and streams should be so cleared as to enable salmon to get up and down. This means a great deal to the province of Nova Scotia and to every province in the Dominion. If there is not sufficient money in the vote for the purpose, it would be advisable for the minister to ask for a further appropriation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Last year I called the minister's attention to this very item. There is not much use clearing rivers if you do not take precautions to see that fishways are maintained. The preservation of spawning beds is a most important thing. As I pointed out to the minister, charters are being granted to power companies for the erection of power sites on rivers which are navigable and which should come under the jurisdiction of the federal department. If this matter does not come within the scope of the federal department, then I submit that there should be a certain amount of cooperation with the provincial governments to see that fishways are made on these rivers. I have been over a great number of them and I cannot find one. Consequently, both by damming and by the erection of power sites, the old spawning grounds are being destroyed, and the future supply of fish is endangered. It is more important to preserve fishways and spawning grounds than it is to maintain hatcheries in an attempt to restore the fish. I spoke about this matter last year but I do not think one thing has been done by the department since then. The result is that power sites are being built without any attempt to establish fishways.

Mr. CARDIN: We took this matter up last year with the Ontario government, but my hon. friend understands the difficulties that have to be met. We can only make representations; we have not the power to impose our views upon the provincial government and to decide whether or not dams shall be built. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that we are not failing to make representations in the matter; every case brought to our attention is discussed with the provincial authorities.

Mr. GARDINER: Where were the various amounts spent last year and for what purpose?

Mr. CARDIN: Money was spent in practically every province. In Nova Scotia we spent $4,545; in New Brunswick, $6,308; and a very small amount in Prince Edward Island. We did some work also in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Mr. GARDINER: No money spent in Ontario or Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: No, because the administration of fisheries in Ontario and Quebec is provincial.

Mr. MacLAREN: What work is being done on the small salmon streams in the bay of Fundy, on the New Brunswick coast, such as the river near St. George?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that we did a certain amount of work there last year. The engineers are going there this year to continue it.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $130,000.

Mr. McRAE: What is this for?

Mr. CARDIN: This appropriation is to encourage the production, to extend the demand and to improve marketing facilities. With a view to having the growing demands for fresh fish supplied as far as possible by our inshore fishermen, an experiment was started last year in the collection of fish along the coast, where those supplying the fresh fish markets would agree to buy all the fish caught. The portion of the coast covered was from Port Bickerton, Guysborough county, to Canso. The Maritime Fish Corporation, particularly, entered enthusiastically into the experiment. The experiment was successful and resulted in the building of several new boats by the fishermen and in other preparations being made for more intensive fishing. It was continued there last season, when over one million pounds more cod and haddock were transported than in 1927. Another result is that during the present winter at least twenty-two new boats are being built by the fishermen, wharves are being enlarged and additional ice and bait facilities are being provided.

The experiment was extended last summer to the portion of the southeast coast of Cape Breton from Main a Dieu to Canso, where again the Maritime Fish Corporation undertook to buy the fish; to the portion of the cost from Sonora, Guysborough county, to Halifax, along which the National Fish Company of Halifax and Messrs Mitchell and McNeil undertook to buy, and along the portion of the coast from Cape Negro to Lockeport and Shelburne. The idea is to collect the fish from places where it is not easy to market them and take them to where they can be marketed advantageously.

Mr. McRAE: That would seem to apply to the development of the industry; how about the conservation?

Mr. CARDIN: I think the word "conservation" does not apply to the fish but to the fishing industry.

Mr. McRAE: There is one point I would like to mention in this connection; I refer to the question of our deep sea fishing off the west coast of Vancouver island. I would like to ask if any representations have been received from the fishery interest on the Columbia river with regard to the restriction or the regulation of the fishing season off that coast?

Mr. CARDIN: I suppose my hon. friend refers to spring salmon?

Mr. McRAE: Yes.

Mr. CARDIN: Representations have been made but we are not yet in a position to state whether or not those representations are correct.

Mr. McRAE: That being the case I want to warn the minister and the government of a complication which may develop there. It has been determined by our biological officers that 70 per cent of the fish we catch on the Swift Shore banks off Vancouver island would go to the Columbia river if left alone, and the Columbia river fishermen represent that the fish we catch weighing nine or ten pounds, if caught six or eight months later in the Columbia river would weigh eighteen or twenty pounds. I think probably they are correct; and they claim that from an economic standpoint there should be some regulation to prevent the catching of immature spring salmon on the west coast of Vancouver island. Naturally the position of our fishermen is that this is their source of supply and, while the fish may be small or immature, they belong to our fishermen. They contend that any regulation which would permit these fish to grow to maturity, while it might give the Columbia river fishermen twice the weight of fish, would give all these fish, or practically all, to the Columbia river fishermen instead of to our own men. Bearing in mind the seal treaty and other treaties we have made with respect to these very waters I want to take time by the forelock and point out to the government that we should not interfere in any way with the rights of the fishermen on the west coast of Vancouver island for the benefit of the fishermen of Portland.

Mr. NEILL: I think I might add that it is contended by our fishermen that it is not true that later on the fish are bigger; they claim that they can occasionally catch immature fish off the west coast of Vancouver island and, as the hon. member for North Vancouver has truly said, they violently resent the idea that they should be restricted in any way for the benefit of the Columbia river fishermen. I drew this matter to the attention of the government a couple of years ago in a similar endeavour to take time by the forelock, as my hon. friend has said.

Mr. McRAE: For the benefit of the committee I might say that the biological society, if my memory serves me correctly, by tagging a great many fish on the Swift Shore banks, showed that when the fish were not interfered with 70 per cent found their way to the Columbia river, and all but a small percentage of the remainder went to Puget Sound. Only a very small proportion reached the Fraser river, so that of the entire catch on the Swift Shore banks, if those fish were not caught, probably not over 10 per cent at the most would find their way into Canadian waters. So it will be easy to understand the deep concern which is felt by our neighbours in desiring to conserve these fish for themselves at our expense.

Mr. SHORT: This item has been in the estimates year after year, and has remained at the figure of $130,000; I think last year was the first time the full amount was expended. The item was originally included in the estimates for the purpose of assisting in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and also to create a demand for fish, but within the last year or two I do not think one dollar has been spent in an effort to create that demand. I commend the minister for the action he has taken in having a number of boats collect the fish from the outlying districts of the maritime provinces and take them to the central markets. That has been a splendid thing for the fishermen but it has not created a demand for the fish after they are landed.

I find on looking up the accounts that of the $130,000 voted last year $66,000 was expended in connection with the commission which was appointed to investigate the fisheries. Surely that should not be put under the head of fish conservation. I find also that $17,000 was expended for the extermination of hair seals. Last year we passed an item of $25,000 for that purpose, but we find that a part of this $130,000 has been used to pay bounties in that connection. I just want to show the inefficiency of this department and its inability to cope with the problems of an industry which is of so much importance to this country and which, if properly looked after, would provide for all time sea food in much greater quantities than it is available to-day. I wonder if hon. members are aware of the fact that in the maritime provinces we have not increased our fish production since 1910; the figures for that year and for 1927 are almost the same. In 1928 there was a slight increase in the value but none in the amount of the catch, which goes to show that there must be some great inefficiency in this department. I am bringing this matter to the attention of the committee because this item has appeared in the estimates year after year. It was intended for the purpose of increasing the consumption of fish in this country, but the department has not been able to expend it until last year, and they would not have expended it last year had it not been for the royal commission, which took up a large portion of that $130,000. I think the minister should try to create a further demand for our fish as we could sell double the quantity of fish in this country if we had some assistance by way of advertising and had a good live department which would look after the industry as it should be looked after. We have been drifting along for the last twenty years and I hope the attempted reorganization will bring about a larger demand for fish, not only in this country but in foreign countries. I do not see any reason why our trade commissioners should not look up markets for our surplus fish. One of the officials of the department was sent to Great Britain last year to look into market conditions there and he reported that there were possibilities of selling a great deal of our Canadian fish. In order to start that it would need some assistance from the department, but the department has never paid any attention to his report. The fishing industry will continue in a stagnant condition unless a little life is put into the officials of the department. Our production of fish should be worth $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 instead of $10,000,000 or $12,000,000. We have one of our greatest natural resources right at our doors in the province of Nova Scotia, and if we had a department which was capable of coping with the problem the industry would not be in the position in which it is now. I hope that the reorganization of the department will put some life into this industry.

Mr. BRADY: What quantity of haddock was caught on the Atlantic seaboard and landed at Canadian ports last year?

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): While the deputy minister is looking up that information, I would like to say a few words with regard to the fish collecting service. This has been of great benefit to the fishermen in Nova Scotia, and I desire to make the suggestion that that service might be extended to Prince Edward Island. The last speaker complained of the inefficiency of the department as far as Nova Scotia is concerned but that province has been receiving much better service than has been given to Prince Edward Island. I think the fisheries on the north coast of the island could be greatly increased. It is quite true that a private corporation has been operating this year, but if this fish collecting service has been so beneficial to the province of Nova Scotia it would be equally beneficial to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): I think the department is to be commended on inaugurating this service, but there is one feature of it which should be called to the attention of the government. As far as I can learn, the department does not exercise any supervision over the prices which the buyers pay for the fish. I am instructed that in many instances the prices offered are very low, and I know of one case where the fishermen opened their traps rather than accept the amount which was offered. A question was asked in the house in relation to this matter and the minister promised to get some information. I would suggest that the government go a step farther and introduce the same cooperative methods which prevail in the western provinces in regard to wheat. If we could get the fishermen to cooperate in that way we would be going very far towards solving many of our difficulties. I think the government will need to take the lead in this matter and possibly furnish some money for the first step.

Mr. CARDIN: I can assure my hon. friend that the department is trying to get the fishermen to cooperate in the same way as the agriculturists are doing in other sections of the country. We have tried to convince them that it would be to their advantage and we are helping them as much as we can. In regard to the prices being paid for the fish, I answered a question in that connection some time ago. It was contended that the companies were buying the fish by the count instead of by the pound, and that the prices offered were not satisfactory. We made representations to the companies that the fish should be bought by the pound instead of by the count, and also that the price offered should be reasonable. Of course we cannot compel them to pay a certain price, but we made the strongest possible recommendation.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): With what results?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that they are now paying a better price than they paid last year. To answer the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) I will give him the figures which appear in the report of 1927. That is the only report which has been published; a more recent one is now in process of publication. The production of haddock by provinces is as follows:

	Cwt.
Prince Edward Island	1,188
Nova Scotia	384,297
New Brunswick	33,834
Quebec	3,500

Mr. BRADY: The reason I asked that particular question is because of the very great importance of this particular vote. It is to increase the demand for fish within as well as outside of Canada. I have a few figures that are very interesting, that are compiled from an authoritative source, the bureau of fisheries of the United States. These facts made an appeal to me for the simple reason that this is just the thing we need, namely, to develop a great demand, a home market for our fish and particularly for that highly-prized fish, the cod family, which includes the haddock, mackerel and cod. In the decade commencing with 1911, the total catch in pounds of haddock landed at Canadian Atlantic ports, taking the average for the decade 1911 to 1922, was 55,000,000 pounds per annum while at United States ports during the same decade the catch amounted to 73,000,000 pounds. Something happened in 1922. The United States government imposed a tariff of one-half cent per pound on our haddock. The result was that from 1922 to 1927 the catch of Canadian haddock fell to 38,000,000 pounds while the United States catch increased to more than 100,000,000 pounds. In other words, as regards fishing in the very same waters, there was a decrease of 17,000,000 pounds in the Canadian catch and an increase of 27,000,000 pounds in the United States catch. The point I wish to bring out is this. These fish came from the same waters. Nevertheless we find on one side a great decrease and on the other a great increase. By what means were these fish caught? I will give the answer. It was the Canadian fishermen who were induced to cross over to the United States and get a market there. We allowed them to go; they went with their families, and they continued fishing, but they did not bring their fish into our Canadian ports. There is the greatest need to-day for the development of our own home market. The fisherman is at the thin end of the line. He is the producer; he has no control over the markets. He cannot dictate or stipulate the price for his fish and this government, realizing the importance of that food, should do everything it can to enable him to market his fish where there is a demand for it within Canada, a demand that we are not now getting.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the hon. member give us any information as to what price the fisherman gets per pound for his catch, say of halibut, and then compare it with the price the consumer has to pay?

Mr. BRADY: I did not go into that involved question.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It is very important.

Mr. BRADY: We will discuss it some other time when it comes up.

Mr. QUINN: This is a very important item:

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish.

The hon. member for East Calgary has just asked the hon. member for Skeena the cause of the great spread between the price paid to the fishermen and that paid by the consumer. The price the fishermen gets is as low as half a cent a pound.

Mr. ADSHEAD: For halibut?

Mr. QUINN: For what we call the common fish, codfish and haddock, caught on the Atlantic coast. The consumer is charged anywhere from 15 cents a pound up.

Mr. ADSHEAD: To 25 cents.

Mr. QUINN: Yes, and to 30 cents. What I want to ask the minister is this: Is there not some way whereby the Department of Fisheries could fix a minimum price to the fisherman for his fish?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. QUINN: It is done in connection with other commodities, as the hon. member for Skeena has pointed out. There is a minimum price for wheat.

Mr. BROWN: Does the hon. member make the assertion that there is a minimum price for wheat?

Mr. QUINN: There has been in previous years. It was fixed by the government in previous years.

Mr. BROWN: But to the detriment of the producers.

Mr. QUINN: This is very important to the fishermen. There is a tremendous spread between the price the fisherman receives as the result of his toil and the price charged to the consumer. That is a matter which should be taken into consideration by the Department of Marine and Fisheries and thoroughly investigated, because the spread is entirely too great.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The point raised by my hon. friend is very important, not only to the fishermen but to all kinds of producers. It has been raised in the house before. We find, in connection with other primary producers, for instance those producing wheat or, as was pointed out in the house the other day, those who are producing apples, there is a tremendous spread between what the producer gets and what the consumer has to pay. I was taken to task a little for questioning the advisability of bringing in more people to produce, for instance, apples in the Okanagan valley where the producer does not realize enough to cover the cost of production, whereas in Calgary we have to pay $2 or $3 a box for apples. When the hon. member stated that there is a minimum price set for wheat, that statement was entirely outside the mark. I know of no such thing.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The minister says that as a result of departmental activities, we have an increased price for fish in the Ingonish district. What is the price per pound for fish in the Ingonish district at the present time?

Mr. CARDIN: The price paid last year was 2 to 2½ cents, while this year it is 2¾ cents.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I have asked the minister a direct question. I do not know whether he is seeking to deceive the committee or not. We have never received 2½ cents a pound for cod or haddock caught off the shores of Nova Scotia. Some of these fish may weigh as much as from four to ten pounds, and that price is per piece, per fish. The question that was before the committee was to have the fish bought by the pound, not by the piece. I do not think the government seriously grasps the situation that faces the fishermen at the present time.

Mr. CARDIN: For fear of being accused of trying to deceive the committee I think I had better read this memorandum which has been handed me by the officers:

> The matter was immediately taken up with the general manager of Leonard Fisheries, who explains that for a great many years it has been the practice to buy trap-caught fish by the piece, instead of by the pound, and that this practice has obtained in other places as well as Ingonish. The fish are caught in the traps, sometimes in very large numbers, and only a few men are required to handle the traps, and it is difficult, and hardly possible, to move these fish quickly enough to assure their quality being maintained, and that this was the reason that the method of buying trap fish by the piece had been adopted. The price paid last year was two to two and a half cents, while this year two and three-quarter cents were offered. Apart from this, there is competition for the fish, and anyone is at liberty to go there and buy, and that keeping in view the cost of transporting these fish to the freezer at Mulgrave and their quality, the price being paid is as large as the market conditions will permit.

Mr. QUINN: That just bears out my contention that as low as half a cent a pound has been paid. The hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton mentioned that a fish weighing ten pounds would be sold for two and a half cents, which works out to less than the figure I quoted. Last fall I saw some hundreds of barrels of salted herring and salted mackerel which the fishermen in my constituency had gone out and caught and salted and barrelled, and the information that was given to me was that they could not sell this fish for what it cost to catch and barrel them. That is why I ask if it is not possible for the department to regulate the price of fish and fix a minimum price for all classes of fish.

Mr. CARDIN: It is impossible for the department to fix the price of fish. We are quite ready to help the fishermen get a better price for their fish, and every recommendation or representation of a constructive character will be welcomed by the department. If my hon. friend has any method to suggest, the department is quite ready to look into it, but I must confess that at present we know of no method of fixing the price of fish. It depends on market conditions. As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis has pointed out, the marketing is the important problem that has to be solved, and we hope that with the new branch that we have established, the publicity that will be given will increase the demand for fish and thus enlarge the market. But I repeat, I see no method at present of fixing the price of fish.

Mr. QUINN: May I suggest to the minister that he inquire into the cause of the great spread between the price paid to the fisherman and the price paid by the consumer? I think that would be a very good matter for investigation by the new deputy minister of fisheries, and I would suggest that the minister instruct the deputy minister of fisheris to go into that question thoroughly and find out if some relief cannot be given to the fisherman.

Mr. CARDIN: I have not the least objection in the world to following that course.

Mr. SHORT: Is it the intention of the department to expend any of this $130,000 for advertising?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the officers are preparing to do advertising out of this vote.

Mr. SHORT: A portion of this money will be used on advertising?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It is not a question of demand, because there is plenty of demand for fish. The trouble is that the people who are demanding fish have not the money to buy it at present prices. I think the minister would do a good work if he would undertake to find out what causes the great spread between the price paid to the original producer and the price paid by the consumer. Such an inquiry might lead to very valuable results in other departments of the government.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would just like to support what the hon. member for East Calgary has said. Year after year we hear hon. gentlemen from the maritimes complaining that the price the fishermen get for their fish is not sufficient to pay for catching them, and yet when that very product gets to western Canada it is so high in price that we cannot buy it. Take such a good old fashioned article of diet as boneless codfish. Frequently I have sent down to the martimes and got a pound or two by mail. We cannot buy it in the west for any reasonable price at all. I would draw attention to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture has an item in his estimates for a cooperative marketing agency, and I think that this subject might very well come up under that vote. The question of British Columbia fruit is on a parity with this fish question. The producer in British Columbia hardly gets the cost of growing his fruit, and yet the price of that fruit when it reaches the prairies is so high that we cannot afford to buy it. This question of the spread between the price to the producer and the cost to the consumer offers a great field for investigational work. We spend hours and days and weeks arguing about the tariff, and it is an important matter for those who have to pay the extra cost that the tariff imposes, but the tariff is not nearly so important as this other factor that operates over the tariff wall and in spite of any tariff wall, and that is the cost of distribution. I hope that when the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture are up we will give these questions consideration in connection with the item for a cooperative marketing agency.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Coming back to the question I asked, I said that fish were selling at two and two and one-half cents apiece. I do not believe that in Ingonish they are selling any higher than two cents apiece; that is, to the corporations who own the traps; I am not talking of trap fishermen, net fishermen and line fishermen, and we have 43,000 of them in the maritimes. They are compelled to accept two cents apiece for every cod or haddock that they they sell to the corporations. Some of these fish weigh as high as ten and fifteen pounds, and, when retailed here in Ottawa, bring 25 and 30 cents a pound. I have bought it here in Ottawa at that price, and I did not get fresh Nova Scotia fish, but fish that had been in cold storage for a long time. I did not get the fish that I would get at home for five cents apiece, not per pound. The point I want to make is this: It is not for the corporations that we should seek to legislate, but rather for the individual fisherman. As to organization of fishermen, we had a very distinct recommendation in that respect by the royal fisheries commission which sat in Nova Scotia in 1927. It is some time since that commission made its report, and the present condition of affairs shows how this department is falling down. I may say that, irrespective of governments, the department of fisheries as formerly or as now constituted has not taken into consideration the seriousness of the question. Ten thousand fishermen have left our shores since 1912. Five hundred have left the little island of Scatarie—to go where? To engage in the American fisheries. A good many of those men will become American citizens. The American fishermen are getting a decent price for their fish. Fish landed in Boston or New York fetch 5 or 6 cents a pound. If our Nova Scotians received 3 cents a pound for their catch they would be able to live.

After going over and describing various forms of organization, the royal fisheries commission made this recommendation:

> We recommend, therefore, that the establishment of cooperative organizations of fishermen be assisted by the department as soon as possible, and that an organizer, experienced in cooperative methods, be appointed and paid by the federal government for the required period to initiate and complete this work.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister if this had been done. Has his department taken any steps to organize the fishermen of the maritime provinces? The fishermen to-day are seeking to organize themselves by private contributions and by assistance from the provincial government. But has this one important recommendation of the royal fisheries commission been carried out by the Dominion government? No, the minister's department did not organize the fishermen of the maritime provinces. Instead, what did they do? They went to work and supplied a collection system. For whom? For the benefit of the corporations—not for the benefit of the cooperative societies, but for the advantage of the financial corporations. The fish have been carried at government expense practically free of cost to the corporation, but the producer—the fisherman—is not receiving one copper more for his fish than he did in 1927. I notice the Deputy Minister of Fisheries does not agree with me. Well, I wish he were in the minister's place. I think he has had control of the situation for the last fifteen or sixteen years, and it is through him, through our director of fisheries in the maritimes, that we have fallen down.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the situation. The fish are collected by a government fish-collection service and brought to the private corporations. These corporations pay whatever price they see fit. Is not that the fact? The fishermen of the maritimes to-day are not receiving a cent more. The corporations are not paying the cost that they formerly paid to have the fish collected; the government is collecting the fish for them and helping them out to that extent. This is the new "system" that is assisting our fishermen in the maritimes. The result is that to-day we are receiving two cents apiece for cod and for haddock caught on some of our best fishing grounds—Ingonish, for instance. I submit that it is up to the minister and his department to follow a different system and to implement the finding of the commission that sat in Nova Scotia and cost this country $100,000; I say it is up to the government to do so without further delay.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, is hardly fair to the Deputy Minister of Fisheries. He may be subject to certain criticism, but no man in the world can escape criticism in the fulfilment of his duties. The present Deputy Minister of Fisheries during the time he was director of fisheries and since has devoted himself to developing the fishing industry of the maritime provinces. If anybody should be interested in that work it should be the present deputy minister, because he comes from the maritimes, and nobody can accuse him of neglecting his duty towards the fishermen of those provinces. He is not perfect, nobody in this country is perfect, and if my hon. friend were occupying the position of deputy minister of fisheries he would be subject to criticism as severe as that which he is now directing against the deputy.

It is true that the fishermen of the maritime provinces have been experiencing difficulties, but the fishing industry is not the only industry in this unhappy condition. The farming industry has been passing through very difficult days; our labouring men have been experiencing great difficulties; our traders and merchants generally speaking are experiencing great difficulties. But so far as the good will of the fisheries department towards the fishing industry of the maritimes is concerned, I may say that our officials are putting their heart and soul into their attempt to solve the problem. It is not an easy problem. It cannot be solved by a few accusations, it cannot be solved by writing a few letters. It is a problem that will require the best minds of this country for its satisfactory solution. We are experiencing difficulties because we are next to a country which has closed its market, a very profitable market, to us.

Mr. BENNETT: Hush, hush!

Mr. CARDIN: The United States market in the past was very profitable for our fishermen, and when congress increased the duty on our fish it placed our fishermen in a very difficult situation. We are trying to cope with the situation, we are trying to carry out the recommendations made by the fisheries commission. The very thing that my hon. friend is speaking about is already being undertaken. Our officers are being trained with a view to organizing the fishermen and assisting them. We propose to help them as much as we possibly can.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The hon. minister states that my criticism of the deputy minister is hardly fair. Now, the Deputy Minister of Fisheries formerly occupied the position of director of fisheries, and since then he has been promoted. Well, after receiving the report of the royal commission which investigated our fisheries, I cannot see why the government took such a stand. The commission recognized that the Department of Marine and Fisheries had fallen down in the maritime provinces—they must have recognized it. If the deputy minister had paid as much attention to the results which would accrue to the fishermen as to the corporations, he would have taken a different stand in the last fifteen years as regards the problem of the maritime fisheries.

Mr. CARDIN: This is unfair.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I do not blame the present government only. I blame every government that has directed the affairs of this country during the last fifteen years. I blame both parties. Both parties are guilty.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): When the committee rose I was dealing with a few statements made by the minister, who characterized my criticism of the deputy minister as hardly fair. I covered a little of the ground, pointing out that during the last fifteen or twenty years the department, so far as the maritime provinces were concerned, had been administered by a director of fisheries. Now I want to impress upon the minister the failure of the government to carry out the recommendations contained not only in the report of the Duncan commission but, as well, in the report submitted by the royal commission which was appointed to investigate the fisheries. I contend that this government was distinctly at fault in appointing the director, to whom must be directly attributable the condition which has existed in our fisheries in the maritime provinces during the years I have mentioned. And for this the government should be severely censured. The minister stated that conditions were bad not only with the fishermen but with the farmers and others as well. In reply to that statement I have this to say: Had conditions been looked into as thoroughly, and an effort put forward as vigorously, to bring about an improvement in the fisheries of the maritime provinces under this department as has been the case in connection with the agricultural industry in Canada, the fishing industry in the maritimes would not be in the state in which it is to-day. The minister further stated that so far as his department was concerned, good will had been shown towards the people of the maritimes. Let me assure him that the fishermen and the people generally of the maritime provinces welcome his good will. But we want a little more than good will; we want an organized department of fisheries for the maritime provinces. We want the maritime fishermen to be properly organized; we want them to be given something more than good will; we want conditions so improved that they may obtain the things that are necessary to life, in order that they may secure a living wage, in order that they may be as well paid as their brothers who are engaged in various other industries in the country. That is what we demand. We accept the minister's good will, but we want the fishermen in the maritime provinces to be given the consideration which has been shown the western farmers in regard to rural credits and other benefits. We want organization similar to that which now exists in the west. In short, we want to have the recommendations of the fisheries commission carried out. The minister suggested that we were organizing—through what means? Through the fisheries inspectors in the maritime provinces. We have had these inspectors for a number of years, and what have they accomplished? To-day they are being taken before a biological board in Nova Scotia—to study organization? Is that the way in which the fisheries commission's recommendations are being carried out?

I am going to read a few statements from the report of the fisheries commission in case the government have not read them. The commissioners state that they do not propose to discuss in detail methods of organization; that must be left to responsible authorities —not, as the minister suggests through his deputy, to a group of fishery inspectors who are sent every few weeks to Halifax to a biological board to study the organization of fishermen. The report proceeds:

> But we suggest that after careful study the maritime provinces be divided into zones or districts, the limits of which shall be determined by the number of fishermen and the quantity of production; that each of these zones be organized into a fishermen's cooperative association; and that the zones so organized be again included in a provincial body, and perhaps into one association of the entire maritime provinces. In certain places in each of the zones or districts so formed, small brine-freezing or rapid freezing plants, with a small auxiliary cold storage building, with salt and ice equipment, should be established; and at a central point, within a day's transit of these small local plants, a large cold storage building and possibly a fish-waste plant where warranted by quantity of waste, should be provided, all with initial subsidy assistance from the federal government. The large, central cold-storage building would take care of surplus frozen fish direct from the freezers, or would take the surplus product from the smaller local storage buildings. More extended reference to brine freezing has been made in another paragraph. From such an organization a marketing sales board to control the output of the product. . . . and selling agents to control the distribution in the larger places of demand, would dominate the market, keep it on a stable basis, and, with the organized power of bargaining, could dictate reasonable prices alike for producer and consumer, and gain a reasonable profit. Such a plan would ensure a more direct contact between producer and consumer, and would eliminate some of the costs for services which now intervene.

Then he goes on to say that by such methods, properly established, the consumer would receive a better product and the fishermen would receive more adequate recompense for their labour.

The reason I spoke as I did this afternoon is because I live in a fishing community; my livelihood depends upon the ability of the fishermen in my community to earn a living. If I am to prosper every fisherman in that locality must prosper, and how can they prosper when they sell their cod and haddock for two cents each? That is not two cents per pound; fish weighing eight and nine pounds are sold for two cents each. What is the reason for this condition? The minister said it was due to the large amount of fish taken in traps, but he neglected to refer to the fact that the large amount of fish taken by our beam trawlers is equally responsible for this condition

We do not want to play politics in connection with this question, but there is a matter to which I must refer. Last summer the deputy minister made a trip to Nova Scotia and arrived right in the midst of our local campaign. I believe he landed somewhere near Canso, and took with him on his trip the manager of our large beam trawler concern, Mr. Robinson. They toured through the fishing sections of Cape Breton in order that they might appease the fishermen in those sections. I do not know what private conferences took place or what happened during those conferences, but I do know that the fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia were led to expect much more than was contained in Bill No. 26 which was brought down in this house some time ago. I can tell the minister and the deputy minister that the fishermen of Nova Scotia resent having their industry used as a football at election time; that is one of the reasons why I spoke as I did this afternoon. This question does not concern the minister so much, but it does concern us in the maritime provinces, and I want to tell the deputy minister that if he comes to our province again during an election he will not be so well received as has been the case in the past.

Mr. CARDIN: I think my hon. friend is not fair when he makes the insinuation that the Deputy Minister of Fisheries went to Nova Scotia during election time in order to influence the electors of that province. That is not correct; he was there on business for the department.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Then I would ask the minister why his deputy took with him the head of the largest beam trawling concern when he visited the various fishermen during his trip to Nova Scotia?

Mr. CARDIN: I understand the reason was that this concern was the only one which was willing to buy the fish which would be brought in as a result of the fish collection service; they were the only people ready to cooperate under the new system.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What price did the fishermen receive?

Mr. CARDIN: That is not the question.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was this visit made just before the election?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the election was decided upon after the deputy minister had left Ottawa.

[Mr. Macdonald (Richmond).]

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): That was the second trip, when he went to see if Mr. Paisley was a proper man to place at the head of the fisheries intelligence bureau.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that that is not so, and surely my hon. friend will not complain if the deputy minister visits Nova Scotia several times in order to get better acquainted with the situation there.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): To play politics with the fishing industry.

Mr. CARDIN: He has not been playing politics at all; the deputy minister is out of politics and is fulfilling his duties without interfering in politics.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): If he was not playing politics certainly he was not looking after the interest of the fishermen when he took with him the head of the beam trawler group, the man who to-day is responsible for the election of the Liberal member for the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough. He came to the Liberal headquarters in my constituency and had a conference with my opponent; he also went to see Hon. Mr. Mombourquette, who looks after the interests of the Liberal party in the outlying districts. He did not go to see anyone else; he left the gospel with those gentlemen.

Mr. QUINN: He did not go to you?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): He certainly did not come to me.

Mr. CARDIN: With regard to that section of Nova Scotia I might quote a few words from a letter signed by the president and vice-president of the fishermen's federation of Louisburg. Surely these gentlemen know something about this question. The letter is as follows:

> This year the experiment of having a boat collect the fish and take them to the firm's market, was started too late in the season to prove the full worth of the experiment. But I think you will agree that even though the best fishing season had gone before the experiment was put into effect, yet the outcome fully warranted the cost of the service. It simply turned what had every appearance of a failure in the fisheries to a successful year for our fishermen. It has given the fishermen new hope, and with the promise of a continuance of thus marketing our fish, our fishermen will procure better facilities and go into the fisheries on a larger scale.
>
> Next year, which will be a full year, will prove to you and the fishermen as well, that there is a living in the fisheries, when the fish can be properly marketed.

I am surprised to hear my hon. friend complain about the establishment of this collecting service; I think he is the only man from Nova Scotia opposing or critizing the establishment of that service.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What is the date of that letter?

Mr. CARDIN: It is dated last fall and is signed by the president and vice-president of the fishermen's federation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What time last fall?

Mr. CARDIN: After the season had been closed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The fishermen had great hopes that the establishment of this service would be a panacea for their ills. These collecting services have been in operation all along the line but the fishermen are not receiving a better price than they did before. They used to receive $9 for a little over a hundred pounds of dried fish, but during last season they hardly received two cents apiece. Moreover, they were making $1 per hundred pounds more by selling their fish salted instead of selling them under the method my hon. friend advocates.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is this collecting done free of charge?

Mr. JACOBS: They are fish pools, perhaps.

Mr. CARDIN: This service is provided for the collecting of fish from certain points where there are no transportation facilities. A charge of 10 cents per hundred pounds is made against the shipper.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The service is supplied to places where there is no rail communication?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And a charge of 10 cents per hundred pounds is made for that service?

Mr. BENNETT: They take them to the cold storage depot first.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I suppose the service would be limited to the outside places. To that extent it is good, but it would have no effect on the general level of prices and is not a step in the direction of organization. I think that in time the fishermen down there will be handling that service for themselves, but there is no harm in this government service.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): For the benefit of my hon. friend I would say that in practically every one of these communities the various corporations which have been buying fish in the past have maintained such a service. Now the government has instituted a service but the fishermen are not receiving one cent over and above the old prices. If the company has enough fish it will offer the fishermen half a cent or a quarter of a cent per pound, or 2 cents apiece. The fish have been selling in Ingonish and northern Cape Breton for 2 cents apiece, and until we have the proper method of organization and until the recommendations of the commission have been carried out by this government and proper cooperatives and associations formed, that fish collection service will be of no value to the fishermen in the various communities.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to read a petition from the constituency of my hon. friend. I think that the fishermen, perhaps, understand the conditions a good deal better than I do, and I am beginning to think they understand them better than my hon. friend does. This petition is as follows:

At a large representative meeting of the fishermen's—

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I would like to tell the hon. member—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The hon. member has made a statement, and I should have the opportunity—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. RALSTON: I will not yield the floor.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I rise to point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member desires to speak to a point of order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has stated that probably there were people who understood the fishing conditions better than I do. I just want to make the statement that if I did not understand them, and if the fishermen did not feel that I understood them—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): — they would not have sent me here.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member has stated his point of order.

Mr. RALSTON: I was about to say that I do not claim to have a knowledge of the real benefits of this collection service such as the fishermen have, but I am beginning to think that my hon. friend has not that knowledge either. This petition was addressed to myself and to the hon. Minister of Fisheries, and I should like to know from my hon. friend whether or not it correctly represents the views of the fishermen. I have been under the impression that this collection service is of substantial benefit and I must confess that I have done all in my power to support it and assist in having it started, believing that it would be in the interests of the fishermen. The following petition was passed unanimously by the fishermen's union:

> At a large and representative meeting of the fishermen's union of L'Ardoise district the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:
>
> Whereas the fishermen of the L'Ardoise district have heretofore been greatly handicapped on account of lack of adequate transportation facilities;
>
> And whereas the federal government has subsidized collection boats to collect fish from the various sections along the southern and eastern shores of Nova Scotia;
>
> And whereas a collection boat can be successfully operated from the port of L'Ardoise at least during the spring and summer months, and thus enable the fishermen of that port to dispose of their catch on equal terms with those of other districts already served by collection boats;
>
> And whereas L'Ardoise is one of the largest and most important fishing centres in the province of Nova Scotia;
>
> It is therefore resolved that the Department of Fisheries be respectfully requested to make provision for a fish collection boat to serve the district of L'Ardoise during the coming season.

It was resolved that a copy of the resolution be forwarded to the Hon. Mr. Cardin, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and to myself. The petition was signed by the president, Mr. Wilfred Mombourquette, and by the secretary, Mr. A. P. Sampson, of the fishermen's union, and I took the petition at its face value. I believe that the gentlemen who signed it and the gentlemen whom they represented knew what they were talking about, and until my hon. friend spoke this afternoon I had thought that the collection service was considered to be in the best interests of the fishermen.

The only objections I have received to this service have been from representatives of the companies. One company did not give any particular reason, but stated that they did not favour the proposition. Another company wrote to me:

> We suppose that such a move is intended to raise the prices to the fishermen, but we, as curers cannot stand any increase.

[The Chairman.]

Even though these objections were received the collection service was put into effect. My hon. friend says that he has no desire to play politics in this matter; if that is so, I think he should give credit where the credit is due, and I was surprised to hear him criticize this service this afternoon and again this evening. I should like to know whether he is for or against this collection service. The service was inaugurated in my own constituency and as a result the fishermen were enabled to fish as late as the middle of January whereas previously they had been forced to stop fishing about the end of October. It was regarded as a substantial benefit. In that connection I should like to read an extract from a letter which I received, as follows:

> The boat is a great help to all concerned and everyone is anxious to make a success of it so that the service could be continued another year. It surely makes a great difference to all concerned in the fishing industry in this locality.

That letter was written early this year. The petition which I have read was signed in February 1929. I think we should deal with this matter fairly. These measures were thought to be of great assistance to the fishing industry, particularly in the outlying places and the fishermen are approving them and asking for more. If my hon. friend is against the service I should like him to say so.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): If the minister has been in the house for the last twenty minutes, he knows exactly where I stand in the matter. I do not have to make myself any clearer. I say that without cooperation to handle that fish production, the fish collection service is of no benefit to the fishermen whom it is supposed to serve. As it exists to-day, it is of benefit to the corporations and the department is paying for what the corporations should be paying for to-day.

Mr. RALSTON: That is what neither the fishermen nor the companies say.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): When the fishermen sent the letter and the petition to my hon. friend, they were not in a position to know. They were reading what was in the departmental literature on the subject as to the benefits that would accrue. If the fishermen along the shore where this fish collection is in vogue were to salt that fish instead of selling it fresh, they would last year have been a dollar per 100 pounds better off.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Evidently there is a good deal of dissatisfaction, at least among certain classes of the fishermen in Nova Scotia. Under date of November 15, 1928, I received a letter enclosing certain resolutions from the Fishermen's Federation of Nova Scotia in which, it is stated, there is an actual membership of more than one thousand. There were enclosed with the letter copies of resolutions adopted at the district convention of the Fishermen's Federation of Nova Scotia held at St. Peter's, Nova Scotia, on July 19, 1928. Among other statements made are these:

The fishermen consider the erection of the public fish cold storage in Halifax very unpropitious, unless further steps are taken to enable shore-fishermen to profit by it. If it is only going to help a few investors in the trade and, alas! perhaps serve only as a storage room for steam-trawler fish, then we claim that a huge sum of public money is being spent to hasten the already appalling exodus of our fishermen, and, indeed, a good many small dealers will be put out of business.

Again:

While the government is showing itself so generous towards doubtful projects of this nature, large sections of the coast are unable to sell their fish fresh through lack of small storage plants and, further, are unable to secure public funds to erect wharves, and other harbour facilities sorely needed. We are told that without trawlers, we could not supply the market. The fact is we could flood the market if we could sell fresh, profitably, instead of salting.

The recommendation of the royal commission that a chain of small cold storages should be erected along the coast, with a large plant near shipping facilities, to gather in the product of the smaller plants, is the real solution of the fishermen's troubles. If that were done, we would not have to worry about trawlers, or supply of the market, or exodus of our brave fishermen. But, to concentrate public favours upon a few spots and a few people, and leave the coast and its inhabitants as they are now, is to leave the fishery question unsolved, and, really, to make it worse than it ever was.

In one of their resolutions the fishermen's federation goes on to urge that the government should appoint some officials to help them to organize. Personally I am not at all sure that government officials will do very much to help in the organization of these fishermen, but there is not the slightest doubt that some organization and possibly further facilities than the fishermen now have, are needed. When I was in the east a few months ago, I was told that very frequently the fishermen had to go to cold storage plants operated by the big corporations even to procure their bait, and that they were absolutely in the hands of the big corporations. Bearing out what was said about the low price of fish only a few weeks ago, namely on April 18, I received a letter from a correspondent in Nova Scotia in the Canso district who made this statement:

Brittain from Montreal recently announced fish prices as follows for 1929: market cod, $1.25 per hundred pounds; steak cod, $1.50 per hundred; fish under 23 inches, 75 cents a hundredweight.

It seems to some of us who are outside that area that surely there is something wrong when, with such large supplies of good fish on the Atlantic coast, we have to pay in the inland parts such high prices for fish. Some urge that we ought to increase the market. We have a great market in central eastern Canada and all through the west. Many of us would like to use fish to a much greater extent, but we cannot pay the high, fancy prices which we are charged under present conditions. In other words, we have the fishermen themselves being exploited at one end through lack of organization and facilities, and the consumers throughout the inland areas being exploited because of the lack of proper facilities for bringing the producer and the consumer together. The minister should to-night make it much clearer than he has yet done why a more definite attempt has not been made to carry out the recommendations made by the commission.

Mr. SHORT: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just read an article from what he calls the Fishermen's Federation of Nova Scotia. That is the fishermen of eastern Nova Scotia. There is no such thing as a general federation of fishermen in the province of Nova Scotia. I know something about the fishermen of that province, representing one of the largest fishing sections there. There is no such federation in the western section of Nova Scotia. The hon. member also read a statement that Britten—I presume that applies to Mr. A. H. Brittain of the Maritime Fish Corporation of Montreal—had set the price for the season. There is not a word of truth in that statement. I am in a position to know.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said that a Canso correspondent had given me that.

Mr. SHORT: And I say there is not a word of truth in the statement he gave the hon. member. Mr. Brittain never set any price for the season at all. That is a most ridiculous thing for the hon. member's correspondent to state, because there is no such thing as a set price for the season for fish in the province of Nova Scotia. That was the opening price for the spring, and it is a good fair price. The price of 1¼ or 1½ cents a pound is for round fish. That is the opening price in the season when the fish are in their poorest state. They are very thin in the spring, and consequently are not worth the same price that they are later on. As the season advances and the fish get better, the price advances. Last fall the prices rose to 2½ and we paid as high as 3 cents a pound. I am fully in accord with these fish collecting boats that the government have put on and I believe they have done a great deal for the fishermen of Nova Scotia.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The hon. member says "we paid." Whom does he mean by "'we"?

Mr. SHORT: I am in the fish business myself, if the hon. member wants to know. I have been in that business for more than thirty years, and I claim to know something about it. I have every sympathy for the fishermen of Nova Scotia, and I am doing and have done everything I possibly can for them. As I said this afternoon, I commend the government for putting on these collecting boats. I think they have done a great deal for the outlying stations. There are sections of Nova Scotia which cannot reach the markets without a service such as this, and there are other sections that do not require it, but in the outlying districts undoubtedly it has done a great deal of good, and I want to commend the government accordingly.

There are many other things which the government could do to help; I outlined some of them this afternoon. There is no question that the shore fisheries have been greatly neglected, but the government has now made one more in the right direction and I hope it will proceed further. There has been a great deal of talk about cooperation among the fishermen. I think that would be a move in the right direction. If you can get the fishermen into cooperative societies they will be able to buy their materials cheaper and make better arrangements for disposing of their fish. At the present time, were it not for the firms to which some people object, I do not see how the fishermen could sell their products. It might be of benefit to them to go in for cooperation as has been done in the west in connection with the wheat pool, but it is questionable whether it would or not, because fish and wheat are two different commodities. Wheat you can hold until the market can take care of it, but fresh fish has to be marketed every day, and marketed promptly.

I had not intended to speak to-night until the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre quoted a communication that was supposed to have come from a concern in which I am interested, and I felt I must take exception to it. I know that he did not intend to mislead the house, but evidently the parties who sent the communication to him intended to convey the impression that those spring prices were all the year round prices, and that is absolutely not correct.

Mr. BRADY: It is quite evident that there must have been a reason for the establishment of this fish collecting service. The fishermen must have been under some disabilities or it would never have been brought into being. It was established for the benefit of those fishermen out on the banks who were not able by their own enterprise to get their fish promptly to the nearest market. The minister knows thoroughly the conditions that prevailed prior to the inauguration of that service, and it would be a great help if he would tell the committee just what they were. I should also like to ask if this service is confined to the Atlantic seaboard, or is it extended to the British Columbia coast? I have been away out on the banks with the trawlers and I find that private enterprise enables the British Columbia fishermen who catch their fish far remote from the markets to market their catch. People go out to the fishermen and for a nominal sum they buy the fish from the fishermen and transport it to the market. If this fish collecting service on the Atlantic seaboard is operating so successfully, I should like to know if it is to be extended to the Pacific seaboard.

Mr. CARDIN: This system is not extended to the British Columbia coast. It is contended in the department that conditions in British Columbia are very different because there the fish buyers go out and buy the fish on the fishing grounds. On the Atlantic coast the buyers do not do that, and the fishermen are not in a position to bring their fish in fresh to the market and dispose of it for cash as advantageously as they can with this service. As to the conditions prevailing prior to the establishment of this service, I can only refer my hon. friend (Mr. Brady) to the expressions of opinion that we have received from all parties concerned to the effect that they are satisfied with this service and that it is a benefit to them. We are receiving requests to extend the service to many other communities.

Mr. BRADY: It means that the fishermen are not compelled to leave the locality where they are fishing, but can continue their operations and at the same time have their catch marketed and disposed of?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I have listened to the observations of the Minister of National Defence as well as those of the minister in charge. As I understood the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton, he was not objecting so much to the collection of fish as to the failure to carry into effect the recommendations of the royal commission on fisheries, one of those recommendations being the establishment of cooperative zones for dealing with the distribution and sale of the product. If the minister has read the farm relief bill in the United States he will observe that it proceeds exactly along the lines of the recommendations of the fisheries commission, and that a $500,000,000 revolving credit is to be established, to be operated not by the nation itself, but through cooperative societies acting through clearing houses. The recommendation of the royal commission as to cooperative effort in marketing fish is finding concrete expression in that bill. As I understood the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton, his complaint was that the government had substituted for the recommendations of the royal commission this service of gathering fish in the manner in which he indicated, and that it has not brought about an increase in the price, which was the object aimed at; for the price, he pointed out, was not adequate having regard to the risk involved and the character of the food secured. It is contended that the spread between the initial price to the producer and the ultimate price to the consumer is too great. Can the minister say why these recommendations have not been carried into effect, and whether it is the intention of the government to endeavour so to do?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly it is the intention of the department to carry out the recommendations of the royal commission appointed to look into the fisheries. We have already established the fish collection service, and we propose to follow the other recommendations of the commission.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend the leader of the opposition probably has not read the whole report lately. But one of the recommendations of that report was for improved transportation facilities, and it dealt with one of the sections that were under discussion tonight. The petititon I read on the matter of cooperative effort was from a fishermen's union.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no misunderstanding as to that; but as I listened I gathered that the criticism was that we had transportation without linking up the transportation with cooperative sale and distribution.

Mr. RALSTON: They are two different things.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course, but if you are going to gather fish they must be sold, and the question of how they are to be sold is an important matter that arises out of the gathering. One method is through cooperative organizations; the other is by the old method.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A few days ago we received notice that some new process had been evolved in regard to the chilling of fish for transportation to remote markets and we had in the restaurant a very fine sample of haddock. Is that system now in general use, and can fish which has been so chilled be shipped into western Ontario, for instance?

Mr. CARDIN: Three companies have already started operations along that line, and there is a possibility that other companies will go into the business.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can only say that the fish that came last week was a very prime sample; but if the minister had tasted the cod that was served in the restaurant yesterday he would have found he had got the other end of the line.

Mr. JACOBS: Will consumers be able to purchase the fish at 1½ cents a pound?

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Has any arrangement been made with the International Fresh Fish Corporation with regard to carrying fish along the shores of Prince Edward Island? If so, what will be the cost to the department?

Mr. CARDIN: We have arranged for a subsidy to that company, and it is preparing to carry on.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): On what basis is the subsidy to be paid? And what will it amount to?

Mr. CARDIN: We are paying $1,800 a month to the company for the operation of the boat.

Mr. McRAE: This new freezing process has been under observation for some time on the Pacific coast, but it has not made a great deal of progress. Will similar treatment be given to any cold storage men who want to adopt the system on the Pacific coast?

Mr. CARDIN: It is wide open to the people on the Pacific coast.

Mr. McRAE: On what basis is the subsidy granted?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no subsidy in connection with that freezing process.

Mr. HEAPS: The statements made this evening by two hon. members from the fishing district of Nova Scotia struck me forcibly. It was news to me to hear that the fishermen who risk their lives on the fishing grounds receive only two or three cents for the fish they bring in. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) stated the fishermen in his district were paid only 1½ to 2 cents a pound for their catch. We, the consumers, have to pay some 25 to 30 cents a pound for our fish. I have never yet been able to find out how the spread is made up. There is no use talking about improved systems of freezing fish and catching more fish unless at the same time some means is devised of laying down the product to the consumer at a reasonable rate. No matter what the fishermen may do to improve their position, their efforts will be unavailing unless the fish can be sold to the consumer at a reasonably low price. I do not see why fish cannot be sold at half the present price and the various interests concerned in the industry still be allowed a reasonable profit. When the farmers of western Canada were faced with a situation somewhat similar to that which now confronts the fishing industry they organized a wheat pool. It seems to me that if our fishermen would copy some of the methods of our western farmers, for instance, organize themselves into a cooperative marketing pool, they might be a good deal better off.

I observe that the total vote for the fisheries department is $2,403,000. That seems to me to be a rather large sum. I do not know whether the fishing industry is getting full value for this expenditure. I believe we are spending more money in the interests of this industry than in looking after the farming community, and yet the total value of the catch of fish is small compared with the value of our farm products. Will the minister kindly tell me the total value of the catch for the last fiscal year?

Mr. CARDIN: The total value for 1928 was $54,000,000.

Mr. HEAPS: And we spent $2,400,000 to look after that catch, or about 4 per cent of the total.

Mr. QUINN: This discussion, Mr. Chairman, would have been unnecessary had the recommendations of the Duncan commission been implemented by this government. Dealing with fisheries organization, the Duncan commission made this recommendation:

> There should be a separate branch in the joint department with a deputy minister of fisheries at its head. In view of the importance of the industry and the distance at which the department has to function from the principal fishery areas, we feel it would be advisable to have a deputy minister whose duties would be confined to that section of the department and who would therefore be freer to keep in close personal touch with its problems by periodical visits to the fishery areas, and we recommend accordingly. It was urged that the deputy minister should in such an event be a person having practical qualifications.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing against the present incumbent of the office of Deputy Minister of Fisheries. I believe he is a gentleman of the highest integrity and is so regarded by all members of this house. But I have no reason to believe that he has any practical qualifications for the position which he holds, and in my opinion if the recommendations of the Duncan commission had been carried out in that respect we would have had a man with practical qualifications at the head of the department. Acting on the recommendation that I have quoted, he would have paid periodical visits to the fishermen of the maritime provinces to study at first hand their difficulties, consequently we would not have the conditions which exist in that industry to-day and of which hon. members are now complaining. During the last few hours we have listened to a recital of the deplorable conditions of the fishing industry of the maritime provinces. We have heard hon. members conversant with those conditions describe how the fishermen are living, and the poor prices which they are being paid for the products of their toil. I ask the government to take into consideration this question with regard to the appointment of a Deputy Minister of Fisheries. We have been told time and again that the Duncan report has been implemented except for one or two items. But here is one recommendation in that report which the government has not carried out. The government has not implemented the recommendation of Sir Andrew Rae Duncan and his colleagues with recpect to the appointment of a practical man to the office of Deputy Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. SHORT: The hon. member for North Winnipeg speaking a few minutes ago, referred to the spread in prices as between the east and the west; he suggested that with a price of a cent and a half a pound down at the coast there should not be such a spread in the west. I agree with him in some respects as to there being a great spread in the price, but he does not make allowance for the fact that the cent and a half per pound is for the round fish. These fish all have to be processed, and in many cases the loss is from 55 to 67 per cent. In this connection I would refer the hon. member to page 34 of the report of the fisheries commission in which this matter is discussed. The commissioners state:

There is much discussion of the price spread between the fishermen and the consumer in Quebec and Ontario. A fact too frequently lost sight of, when comparing retail prices in these markets with the prices paid to the fisherman, is that there is a loss in weight when the heads are removed, or when the fish is filleted. As already pointed out, when the head of a cod is removed 27 per cent of the weight of the fish in the round is lost; and in haddock the loss is 25 per cent. When a fish is filleted, from 55 to 67 per cent in weight is lost, depending on how closely it is cut, and when fillets are smoked 3 to 5 per cent additional weight is lost. It is evident therefore that the prices of headless or filleted fish must reflect these losses. For example, a shipper who purchases 100 pounds of haddock in the round, at say 2½ cents per pound, pays $2.50. We will assume that the customer requires headless haddock, and thus a loss of 25 pounds in weight is at once incurred. The shipper therefore must receive $2.50 for the remaining 75 pounds, or three and one-third cents per pound. It is estimated that when fish is filleted, three pounds of round fish are required to make one pound of fillets. Therefore when a shipper buys one hundred pounds of fish for filleting, he must receive $2.50 for the resultant 33⅓ pounds of fillets or 17½ cents per pound to realize what he paid for the fish without any allowance for the labour of filleting or handling the fish.

There is therefore a considerable loss in the processing of fish; and when you add to this the express charges from the seacoast in the maritimes to the middle west, another four or five cents per pound, and on top of that two or three profits to wholesaler, middleman and retailer, you will readily appreciate why high prices are paid for fish in the middle west.

Mr. MacLAREN: In reference to the new rapid process of freezing fish for purposes of transportation, will the minister inform us what kinds of fish are so treated?

Mr. CARDIN: Any kind of fish may be treated in that way, but at present cod and haddock are so processed.

Mr. MacLAREN: I can quite understand that any kind could be treated that way, but the question I asked was, what kinds of fish, as a matter of fact, are being so treated.

Mr. CARDIN: Cod and haddock.

Mr. MacLAREN: The haddock we have had an opportunity of testing has been very satisfactory, but I have just heard a reference to salmon being so treated. Is it a fact that salmon are so treated at the present time?

Mr. CARDIN: Not now.

Mr. BRADY: The hon. member for North Winnipeg wondered how it was that there was such a marked difference in price between the fish as caught on the banks and when it reaches the consumer. I have been looking up some data lately and I find the very interesting fact that it takes two and a half pounds of round fish, or ex-vessel as they call it, to make one pound of filleted haddock, that is, a manufactured or processed fish. Consequently there must be one and a half pounds waste in order to produce the finished product. On this point I may say that I have information which leads me to believe that the United States, realizing the importance of processing fish, and appreciating the value of having the fish processed in that country, are very anxious that the Canadian fisherman should be content to sell his round or ex-vessel fish at a low price while they process them, getting the higher values. I think it is a suggestion which the government should seriously consider, to try to develop the processing of our own fish in Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Is there some arrangement in connection with the International Fresh Fish Corporation as to what they should charge the department for transporting fish by the boat which it is proposed to have call at Prince Edward Island? In view of the subsidy, which appears to be a liberal one, of $1,800 a month or $60 a day, I think there should be an arrangement with regard to the charge for transportation.

Mr. CARDIN: It will not be more than 10 cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): If they are allowed to charge that on a product for which a minimum price of one cent per pound is supposed to be paid, the rate would appear to be very high. From my knowledge of what freight rates are and ought to be, taking the short haul in Prince Edward Island from the north side of the island to Georgetown, I think there should be a much lower minimum than 10 cents.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I noticed in one of the maritime papers a few days ago a despatch from Ottawa stating that the boat has been subsidized to carry other things besides fish. Is that so?

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend's information is correct; the boat may carry other things.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What other produce is it supposed to carry? In a newspaper article appearing in the Halifax

Herald a few days ago, and emanating from Ottawa, the statement was made that the boat would carry potatoes during the fall months.

Mr. CARDIN: Any kind of produce; if the producer wants to ship it he will have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Then I understand that this is to be a produce carrier from September on. Is that the understanding?

Mr. CARDIN: It is available if they wish to take advantage of it, but it is a cold storage vessel.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): And it is to be used for carrying produce during September, October, November and December; is that the case?

Mr. CARDIN: It is to be used for carrying fish particularly.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): According to the Halifax report this ship is for the benefit of the agriculturists in the fall, as soon as their crops are ready to be marketed.

Mr. CARDIN: It is mainly for carrying fish.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Did I understand the minister to say that the rate would be ten cents per hundred pounds?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, that would be the maximum.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): If this boat is to be used for the carrying of produce from September to December, why should this subsidy be paid out of the fisheries appropriation? That should come under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. CARDIN: The vessel can carry other things than fish; our subsidy is for the purpose of having this vessel carry fish but that does not mean that it may not carry other produce so long as that other produce does not take the place of fish.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): When that boat is not carrying fish is this subsidy to be paid by the fisheries department?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Or by the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. CARDIN: The subsidy will not be paid.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The subsidy is not paid when fish are not carried?

[Mr. Macdonald (Richmond).]

Mr. CARDIN: If they do not carry fish they do not get the subsidy.

Mr. KELLNER: In view of the statements which have been made about cooperative marketing I want to ask the minister if there is not at present a cooperative organization for the sale of fish in northern Alberta?

Mr. CARDIN: There is nothing under the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. KELLNER: I know it is not under the Department of Fisheries; the wheat pool is not under any department either, nevertheless there is an organization out there which cooperatively markets fish at present. Their headquarters are at Lac La Biche, and I remember when I was there a couple of years ago they told me they were getting almost twice as much for their fish through that organization as they had received formerly. According to reports which I had something over a year ago the organization was operating with considerable success, and I think if the minister would get in touch with his overseers in that district they would instruct him that the organization is still successful.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no doubt that such an organization is profitable; we know of the existence of the association mentioned by my hon. friend and we are prepared to try to induce the fishermen in the maritime provinces to follow that example.

Mr. KELLNER: The department did not render any assistance in the formation of this association; the fishermen did it themselves.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How many fish collecting services have been established in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. CARDIN: We have two at present but we expect to have three or four a little later on.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Would the minister give us the location of these services?

Mr. CARDIN: There is one on the southeast coast of Cape Breton island.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What section does this service cover?

Mr. CARDIN: From Port Morien to Fourchu.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Where are the headquarters?

Mr. CARDIN: In Canso.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Then one service is from Port Morien to Canso; where is the other?

Mr. CARDIN: From Westport in Pictou county to Digby.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Where will the others be?

Mr. CARDIN: One is to be established from Port Bickerton to Canso and the other from Cape Negro to Lockeport, and there may be others also.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What is the amount of the subsidy in each case?

Mr. CARDIN: For the Pictou service we are paying $800 a month for one boat, and for the other service we are paying $1,200 for two boats.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What became of the service which was extended along the Guysborough shore last year?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that it will be started again on June 20.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What is the subsidy for that service?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount has not been fixed as yet but we will try to get it as cheaply as possible.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Are these boats owned by the government or hired from private individuals?

Mr. CARDIN: We hire them from private individuals.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Who are the private individuals from whom the government hires these boats?

Mr. CARDIN: Two were hired from Hendry of Halifax; one from Cruikshank of Sydney; and the other one from Crocker of Westport.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Were those boats hired through an agent for the department, or direct from the individuals?

Mr. CARDIN: The transaction was carried on directly with the individuals.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I asked for the number of boats chartered by the various departments of the Dominion government from Hendry's Limited of Halifax for the years 1927-1928 and 1929, and I did not receive any information in connection with these boats in the fish collection service. A good many of us suspected that they had been hired from Mr. Hendry, and I would like to know why the department did not mention that.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the arrangements were completed only a few days ago.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The return was tabled only a day or two ago, on Tuesday, June 4.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that these boats started just to-day and probably when the return was prepared to be tabled they had not been hired.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How long would it take to enter into an arrangement between Mr. Hendry and the department? This return was handed in on June 4 and the arrangement must have been under consideration at that time. It takes about three days for correspondence to come from Nova Scotia. What class of boats has been hired?

Mr. CARDIN: They must have a mileage of at least ten knots per hour and a capacity of at least 60,000 pounds of boxed fish.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Have they cold storage compartments?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Suppose a boat should get a full load of boxed fish at Main a Dieu and unfavourable weather should arise and the boat be forced to lie up in Louisburg, or if she has a shallow draught she may have to make the port of Fourchu and may have to wait there for a week or ten days; at whose risk would these very perishable goods be carried?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that it would be at the buyer's risk.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Not at the risk of the fishermen?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Are the fishermen paid when the fish are put on board the collection boat, or do they receive their pay after they are landed at the plant of the corporation?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot give my hon. friend that information because the arrangement is made between the buyer and the seller.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): They are at owner's risk until delivered?

Mr. CARDIN: Buyer's risk.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) knows that there is a passenger service between Mulgrave, Arichat and Petit de Grat, for which service Mr. Hendry is receiving about $15,000 by way of a subsidy. According to Lloyd's register the boat on that service is some twenty-two or twenty-three years of age. She was built of Nova Scotia wood and I do not see any reference in the register of repairs having been made since she was built. Mr. Hendry had another boat, the Prince Albert, which went out of service some time ago, and which must have been twenty-eight or twenty-nine years old. A year or so ago her stern fell out at the port of Mulgrave and she had to be docked for repairs. During last winter this boat sunk at Mulgrave in the strait of Canso with 60 tons of freight. She happened to be at a wharf when she sank, so that no lives were lost.

Mr. MALCOLM: The statement made by the hon. member as to there being freight on that boat is not borne out by the evidence we have in the department, which is that there was nothing on the boat at all except a few rubber boots. Our information is that there was not freight aboard.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The information which I have from people who were there and witnessed the sinking is that there were some 50 or 60 tons of freight aboard.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am afraid my hon. friend will have to take the information we have; I do not think the owners of the boat would give incorrect information.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): When they would have a boat of that kind transporting passengers in the strait of Canso, I do not think I could take their word.

Mr. MALCOLM: The hon. member realizes that the boat was insured and the insurance was paid. Therefore she must have been in such condition as to pass the underwriters, otherwise the insurance would not have been paid.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The hon. minister is probably not as well acquainted with Nova Scotia timber and Nova Scotia ships as I am.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am not putting my own opinion against that of my hon. friend; I am giving the opinion of the underwriters who handled the insurance.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): If the boat carried insurance then the underwriters were the losers. All the old boats in the province of Nova Scotia are being picked up by friends of this government and leased to the different departments, or they are put into different services under subsidies. The government is paying for public services and we should get what we are paying for. No matter whether these people are friends of one party or of the other, the government should see that we receive the services we are paying for.

[Mr. Macdonald (Richmond).]

Item agreed to.

Fish culture, $442,000.

Mr. McRAE: This is probably the most important item in the fisheries estimates. There was an increase of about $175,000 in this vote last year, but I observe that the appropriation has not been increased for this year. I should like to ask the minister if there has been any increase in the work, or if it is remaining stationary.

Mr. CARDIN: A program of expansion in the fish culture service is being systematically carried out. A portion of the appropriation is being set aside for the construction of new hatcheries and improvements in the existing hatcheries. In the last year four new hatcheries were completed at a cost of $127,774, as follows:

Alberta
Lesser Slave Lake	$46,714
Nova Scotia
Yarmouth	$37,456
Antigonish	32,666
New Brunswick
Florenceville	$10,938

Owing to the necessity of maintaining and operating these hatcheries, less money is available for construction for 1929-30. It is anticipated, however, that it will be possible to carry out the following building project:

Windsor Hatchery, Windsor, N.S.
Salmon and trout	$30,000
Northern Saskatchewan
Pickerel and perch	40,000
Anderson, Lake Seton, B.C.
Sockeye salmon	15,000
Shuswap Lake, B.C.
Sockeye salmon	25,000

Mr. McRAE: Where is it contemplated they will get the spawn for the Shuswap hatchery and what system is there in that hatchery? Are they adopting the pond system?

Mr. CARDIN: This is a proposed establishment, and we expect to get the spawn from Cultus lake and Harrison lake.

Mr. McRAE: Is it proposed to continue the hatchery at Babine, which last year I notice cost $7,182?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McRAE: I presume, as previously done, the spawn will be taken from the head waters of the Skeena?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McRAE: I want to protest against this expenditure, first on behalf of the fishermen on the Skeena river—

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that is the Skeena watershed.

Mr. McRAE: I want, second, to protest from a national standpoint against the transfer of that spawn. The fact is that the Skeena river is a purely Canadian stream where Canadian fishermen catch 100 per cent of the fish. Any contention there might be that the head waters of that river are overstocked would not be borne out by the catch there for the last twelve years. In looking over the records I find that for the four years, 1917 to 1920 inclusive, the sockeye catch on the Skeena river averaged 116,000 cases annually; from 1921 to 1924 inclusive the average catch was 104,000 cases, and since that time the average has been 81,000 cases, or a continual decrease from 116,000 cases prior to 1920 to 81,000 cases annually at the present time. I might observe that as many as 14,500,000 spawn were transferred in 1926 and the result of transferring that spawn to the Fraser river is that the fish find their way to the sea through the United States outlet and on their return 70 per cent of them, and some times more, are caught by United States fishermen. Therefore we are taking this spawn out of a river where 100 per cent of the fish come back to our fishermen and to the business of this country and we are putting it into the Fraser river where only 30 per cent of the fish come back to our fishermen and 70 per cent remain in the United States with their fishermen. That is not a sound business proposition, and it is not sound business to spend $7,000 or $8,000 a year to bring about that change.

There is another matter that I should like to call to the attention of the minister. He says that a new hatchery is being built this year at Anderson lake. That hatchery in 1928 cost $6,856.28 to operate. What do they propose to do with the new hatchery which is to cost $15,000?

Mr. CARDIN: We have no hatchery at Anderson.

Mr. McRAE: I misunderstood the location. Then I should like to ask the minister what is approximately the pack of sockeye salmon this year at Anderson lake and Uchuceslet inlet, which is the entrance to Anderson lake.

Mr. CARDIN: I have not that statement before me at present.

Mr. McRAE: Perhaps I can make a reasonably close guess at it. That stream originally provided as high as 8,000 cases of sockeyes a year. This is very important because it leads up to a matter which I consider of sufficient moment to call to the attention of the committee in connection with our fish culture. Along in 1910, about the year that the hatchery was established, 8,000 cases was the maximum that was packed. The department will correct me if I am wrong as to the year. After the first cycle this fish largely disappeared, and from a river that had provided as many as 8,000 cases there was packed, after the hatchery returns should be in, less than 1,000 cases. Therefore I say that this hatchery has ruined the business at that point.

Much along the same line is the experience at the Naas, another rather important river in our section of the country. I notice that the report shows that 13,488,000 fry were released there in 1924. If in the cycle year, 1928, one per cent of those fry returned, we would have had 134,000 fish. If you take 12 fish to the case, which would be about right, we should have caught in 1928, 11,200 cases of fish. What was the pack last year in the Naas? It was 5,540 cases, showing that if nature did not do a thing, if the fish which ran into that stream did not spawn at all and the hatchery is given credit for every fish that was packed there, the return is less than one-half of one per cent. The country has thrown away millions of dollars on fish culture when the department should have known for at least the last fifteen years, as everybody in the business knows, that we have not got value for our money. The department has spent on fish culture in our province about $2,100,000, and look at the fish we are getting to-day! The pack on the Fraser river, partly for this and partly for other reasons dropped from 1,000,000 cases to 26,000 last year. The Skeena river has gone off from 116,000 cases to 81,000 annually, and the Naas river is down to the trifle of 5,500 cases this year. At least $2,100,000 has been spent in British Columbia on a system of fish culture which every man in the business in our province has condemned. I have had this matter up with the government before I was a member of this house, and I asked them to investigate the pond system which has prevailed in the United States with so much success. I do not wish to say anything unkind against the department, but I do believe that the only reason we have not experimented in a real way with the pond system is because to do so would be for the department to admit that we have been following wrong methods. For fifty-five years we have been spending money in British Columbia for fish culture and our fish have been getting less every year.

I have heard many people speak of this great natural resource. We should be getting in British Columbia $50,000,000 a year from our fish. We have no market problem in connection with our fish because the world wants them and the world takes them. Our problem is to get the fish.

I want to offer to the committee, Mr. Chairman, the experience in the United States with regard to the pond system. I may observe that the treaty now under discussion provides for the pond system. The state of Oregon took up the pond system in 1912. It had been carried on by the United States federal government before that date, but in 1912 the state of Oregon took that work over from the federal government and turned it over to a commission of practical men, not a paid commission, not a commission for disappointed politicians like our harbour boards, but a commission of men who had the interests of their country and the interests of the business at heart. The president of the American Can Company in Portland was president of that commission, and these figures were given to me by him at that time. Consequently I give them to this commission, as being absolutely reliable. That work has been carried on under the jurisdiction of the Oregon game and fish commission, and later, for the last sixteen years, under the Oregon fish commission.

Under this system, the fish are carried in ponds and fed until they are about six or seven months old, and then they are turned out as fingerlings four or four and a half inches long, the idea being that the fish is then able to take care of itself. I submit to the committee that to turn out the small little fry as we are doing is but furnishing food to our trout, because they are not big enough to take care of themselves. That great difficulty was recognized in the state of Oregon in 1912, and since that time, under the propagation methods carried on by this commission, the fisheries of the Columbia river have been largely re-established, and re-established on a very sound basis.

[Mr. McRae.]

The cost of those fish is rather surprising. I believe the cost which I have here has been much reduced recently, but the cost at that time of turning out fingerlings was $2.50 to $3 per thousand. It was difficult to get the exact returns, because as you can understand there are always certain fish running in the stream propagating their kind as well. There was however one opportunity to get exact returns and that was in connection with the red sockeye which the commission brought from Alaska and which had never previously been in the Columbia river. They were brought down to the Columbia river and at the end of the four year cycle they jumped back into the hatchery ponds—the identical ponds they had left four years before and 600 cases of them were caught. Some years later 50,000 of them were tagged, and running true to form they came back at the end of their four year cycle. Three thousand of these tagged fish were caught, showing a six per cent return. On that basis the enterprise would be a highly profitable one commercially. No less a man than the president of the American Can Company in Portland has said that he would so regard it.

Now what have been the results? The Columbia river has come back until this year they got some 350,000 cases. The cost of that commission was $118,514.80 in 1928. The industry on the Columbia river is self-supporting and does not cost the country one cent. Yet here we are to-day sitting down in this committee and spending about $800,000 in my province for an industry that you are running into the ground.

On the Columbia river there are nine of these hatcheries and they turned out 47,812,136 fingerlings last year. There are seven of these hatcheries in the state of Washington. Washington has followed the example of Oregon and has taken up this work. They have built on the Green river at Auburn on Puget Sound one of the finest pond systems hatcheries in existence, a pond system capable of turning out 10,000,000 fingerlings per year. Altogether they have seventeen of these hatcheries in that state and their costs are very much less than I have quoted for the Columbia river. They figure that if one fish in a thousand comes back, it will pay the cost.

We spent on our hatcheries in British Columbia in 1928, $112,532.65, a little less than the state of Oregon is paying, the only difference being that while it is a waste of money on our part it does not cost the state of Oregon a dollar. The industry there is entirely self-supporting, and so it is in Washington, I understand. I think this country has gone on long enough throwing money away on the present methods of fish culture, and it is about time that we took stock. If we are going to get any results we must change our methods. All you have to do to be convinced of that is to look at the decrease there has been in our fish production all along the line. I know that the answer which the Fisheries branch makes to that is that they are keeping up the annual value of our fish packs, but what they are actually doing is raking the bottom of all our streams to get the pinks and the dogs, the cheap salmon, which means no profit for the fisherman or the operator. Sockeye are worth on Puget Sound from 80 to 90 cents, and in our country 60 cents; pinks are worth 5 cents and dogs a little more. It is like bundling up the chaff on the prairie and letting your hard wheat go by.

The great handicap under which the province of British Columbia has operated in the past is political interference; there is no doubt about that. But we have passed that stage now because we have nothing more to interfere with. All we can do is to raise a great row because we fear we will soon not get any fish at all. We are rapidly approaching that stage. Stream after stream has gone, and there is no new propagation. Why is it? It is not because the information I am giving you here is not in the possession of the department; of course it is. It is because they are afraid to tackle this business proposition.

I want to make one suggestion to the government—and it may be a very useful one in connection with the sockeye treaty as well. What we want in British Columbia is a fish commission, say, of five members composed of representatives of the fishermen, the cannery men and the business men, because the business men of British Columbia have a deep interest in the restoration of the industry. We do not want a paid commission; you cannot get the proper class of business men to give their services on such a commission for the few thousand dollars that you pay your politicians on the harbour board. We want good capable experienced men on such a commission, for it will be no child's job to run it. If the people of Oregon can bring back their fishing industry to a flourishing condition, as they have, and if the people of the state of Washington see fit to fall in line, surely the people of British Columbia, if entrusted with their own fisheries, can restore the Fraser river and every other stream to their former flourishing condition. Under this pond system the whole industry is capable of great development and instead of the total export value of our fish being $34,000,000, of which about 50 per cent comes from my province, the value of the British Columbia catch alone would soon be $50,000,000. This would benefit greatly, not only the province but the whole Dominion.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not fail, Mr. Chairman, to appreciate the fairness of the suggestion made by the hon. member for North Vancouver. I quite realize that his observations are of a constructive character. I may tell him that we have already started the pond system, but in order to ensure the best results we have instructed the biological board to make a complete investigation. We shall be prepared to follow their recommendations. The observations and the statistics with which the hon. member has favoured us will be looked into with great attention by the officers of my department.

Mr. McRAE: I have this to say about the efforts made by the present department to test the pond system. I believe the system was established in connection with that ill-fated hatchery at Anderson lake. I am informed—I did not see it myself; it is rather a hard climb to get to it—that the water in the ponds was very inactive and the fish were not properly developed. Anybody who has seen one of the modern Oregon pond systems in operation, where the water is very turbulent and the fish are developed the same as they would be in a natural stream, will realize that anything like a still pond is no good.

I have one word to say of the biological board. I do not see any reason on earth why we cannot take the experience which our neighbours to the south have gained during the last twenty-five years. I cannot see why we should wait for the biological board to report. How long is it going to take them to investigate and decide on a system unless they take advantage of the experience of our neighbours; and if they are going to do that they should have done it years ago. Here we have the biological board starting in at the ground floor. That is the trouble with the board. You cannot talk with a fisherman in our country who has much regard for the work of the board. Our fishermen agree that its members are very fine individually, but they complain that the board do not accept or profit by the information they get from the fishermen who are on the ground. Our fishermen claim that the board are actually endeavouring to propagate fish in streams where, to the man who knows, it is absolutely impracticable to do so, and where the effort is worse than wasted. Let me state one instance with respect to the biological board; it will be sufficient. The board has spent a very considerable sum in an effort to ascertain the damage done to fish by hair seals. Why, bless your heart, every fisherman in our country knows that hair seals literally tear his nets to pieces and destroy the fish in it. What we should do is destroy the hair seals. I am going to deal with that later. Our biological board should start out by taking advantage of all that the fishermen know and build up from that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This, Mr. Chairman, is a subject that I have been discussing in this house for the last four or five years, but my voice has been as "one in the wilderness." Now I am going to say a word in defence of the biological board. For several years the board has been demonstrating that our fish hatcheries have been in most cases miserable failures. They have proven to the department that the work of taking the fingerlings and fry and depositing them in our lakes and streams has been for the most part wasted effort. During the last four or five years the biological board has been condemned by those officials in the department who had no interest in and could not keep up with scientific research work. For years the biological board has been struggling along without very much sympathy from the department. The result is that one chairman resigned. I am glad to see that now a little light is dawning on the department, and its officials are recognizing the value of the work that has been done by the biological board. Undoubtedly the board has proven that the stocking of our waters with fingerlings and fry was wasted effort. I know one lake that has been restocked for the last thirty years with fry of one kind and another, and I defy you to find one man who has caught a mature fish in its waters.

For years the biological board has been trying to get the department interested in this work, but no person would listen to its representations. The pond system has been in operation across the border with most successful results. I think the provinces can do more than the federal authorities in this matter. The pond system could be easily established throughout the Dominion if local clubs were organized, as they have been in the States, to look after the fry or fingerlings until they are strong enough to escape the pirate fish. I should not like hon. members to think that the biological board has been behind the times in regard to this work. It has been years in advance with very little encouragement from the department. And I could mention other lines of work in which the board has engaged without any sympathy or backing from the department. I agree that the minister may not have been properly acquainted with the work of the board, but those in charge of the department should have kept him acquainted with it and stimulated his interest, because it is one of the biggest things that we can undertake in the Dominion, whether we regard it from the commercial or the sports point of view. Every man remembers when as a boy he went out with a hook and line and had very little difficulty in catching all the fish he desired. But those days are past. Only a vigorous policy by this department can put our streams and lakes in the condition where they should be as fish preserves. It is a scientific subject, fish culture and fish production, and behind it is the study of aquaculture, with which so few are acquainted. These two, fish culture and aquaculture, will give us results if they are prosecuted. I should like to see more cooperation along this line. It does seem to me that we are wasting hundreds of thousands of dollars on this fish culture and the work of the hatcheries. Some of it is good, In connection with salmon we have obtained some results, some good demonstrations; but in central Canada, where we are interested in sport fish, such as bass, very poor results have been obtained from the work of the hatcheries. The field, however, is one for cooperation; it is a scientific field, and I believe that only men with biological knowledge and information will get us anywhere in this work.

Mr. BRADY: The hon. member for Kingston, speaking in reference to the biological board, has said he has been as "one in the wilderness". I recall, however, that as late as two days or so ago he held the stage, when the estimates for the Department of National Health were before the committee, and he helped considerably a great number of us who are neither doctors nor scientific men. To-night I wish to tell the hon. member that it is not from any personal reason that I am trying to get as much information as possible in regard to this important subject, and when the hon. member for North Vancouver mentions the Naas river I am very anxious to elicit from the minister some information regarding the future of the Sockeye fishery in that great river. I do not agree with the report that appeared in the Vancouver Province about a week ago regarding the hopeless position of that river so far as the sockeye salmon is concerned. I went up there last year, going into the upper stretches, the headwaters of the Naas river, and I have in a little notebook the name of every river that flows into the Naas from Mezziadsen lake right into that mighty river. I find that every one of those streams has an Indian name which means "Sockeye". In other words, in days gone by, that river was the centre of a great sockeye run. I will not believe any scientific man who tries to prove to me that that river was not originally the home of the great sockeye family of salmon. I wish to ask the minister a question and then I shall discuss this matter further for a few minutes. Has there been an overseer looking over the Naas area in the last twelve months or two years?

Mr. CARDIN: The position has been vacant for some time, but the Civil Service Commission is going to appoint an overseer.

Mr. BRADY: Thank you. Now let us get the facts. Why is it that no overseer will go into the Naas? I know that no overseer will go in because his life is in danger and he is not going to venture among a hostile people at a salary that does not give him a living wage. To whom do I refer? I will tell the minister. On the Naas there are the largest Indian settlements in British Columbia; at Aiyansh, and Gitladamix and right down the whole of the Naas there are large Indan settlements. I went last year to investigate, merely as one desiring to get information, and I was ordered off one of the reserves because the Indians believed I was there for hostile purposes. However, I went up there after the close season, when the sockeye were running up, and I can assure the minister that they were running up; but at the upper stretches the nets of the Indians were stretched across the river and the sockeye were caught before they reached the spawning grounds. Let me give some figures in connection with sockeye salmon tagged in these waters:

Sockeye Salmon Tagging—Haystack Island, Aug. 3 to 21, 1925

Number tagged 659: returns 135: 20 per cent

Naas river	80
Observatory inlet	1
Portland canal	9
Wark canal	3
Dundas island	1
Skeena river	13
Union passage	1
Alaskan waters	27
Total	135

In other words, to the Naas river went the great proportion of the salmon that were tagged at Haystack island. Yet what do we find? As the hon. member for North Vancouver says, only five thousand cases were obtained last year. I contend—and I am assured in the stand I take in this regard—that if we grapple with the problem in the Naas river and put behind it all the weight of our strength and power, in five years we shall resuscitate the run of sockeye into the Naas. But I will admit to the minister that he has the biggest problem ahead of him in the Naas of all the rivers in British Columbia. There we find thousands of Indians who are given many privileges, and they overstep those privileges; they are taking a great toll of the sockeye salmon which are endeavouring to reach the spawning grounds. Why should the Indians at the headwaters of the Naas catch sockeye and transport them down the Naas river and sell them at the canneries? Why?—because there is no overseer. An overseer is the one man who must take a great responsibility when he goes there to perform his duty fearlessly and bravely. And you do not find men to do it with such meagre salaries. That is the position on the Naas river. The very word Naas, Mr. Chairman, is itself indicative of "sockeye" for in the Indian dialect it refers to sockeye salmon, just as Aiyansh means "early summer" and "early bloom". I urge the minister to obtain all the information he can in regard to that river, because if he takes courageous action and places two overseers there, one at the mouth and one higher up at the headwaters, he will obtain surprising results. I guarantee that in less than two cycles he will find there will be not five thousand cases, but many times five thousand.

Mr. SPENCER: I am interested in what the hon. member says in regard to sockeye salmon. Were they able to trace all the sockeye salmon tagged?

Mr. BRADY: No, they were not; out of 639 which were tagged 135 were caught in the various rivers I mentioned, and I believe over 70 per cent of the tagged fish came to British Columbia waters.

Mr. NEILL: Eighty per cent.

Mr. BRADY: No subject which has come before this house during the present session is more important, not merely to British Columbia or to the Atlantic seaboard but also to Ontario and the maritime provinces, than this question we are now discussing. I desire to pay tribute to the minister and deputy minister of fisheries; I am afraid I must have worried them this year but I honestly believe they are trying to do the best they can under very adverse and difficult circumstances. However, as a very clever man has said, ignorance of the law is no excuse; I believe there is too much at stake in this matter to pass it by lightly. Therefore I do not apologize for having taken up the time of the committee to-day. I have not spoken in the house very often this year, but in this case I did desire to express what I think was constructive and helpful criticism.

Mr. NEILL: Referring to the remark of the hon. member for North Vancouver, the hatchery at Anderson lake is in the district I represent, and I would not like the impression left with the committee that the work is a failure or that the superintendent is in any way to blame. I do not think this gentleman votes for me, so I am not boosting a political friend, but I know the superintendent to be a thoroughly capable and an exceedingly conscientious gentleman who has devoted many years to the prosecution of his duties, and I think he has made a success of his work.

The hon. member for North Vancouver instanced a case where the catch of the cannery immediately below the hatchery suddenly fell off, and he connected up that falling off with the commencement of the hatchery operations. But he missed a cog in his description of the matter. What happened was this: The headquarters of this cannery were in Vancouver; it had been coming along very nicely, getting a moderate catch for a good many years. I forget the size of the catch, but it does not matter whether it was 4,000 or 8,000 cases; the proposition is the same. Then the management passed into the hands of people of the go-getter type and word was sent to the local manager that he must double his pack of sockeye salmon. He replied that it was impossible to do so in justice to the stream, which was small, but he was told that if he did not do so they could get someone who would. So he said he would double the catch and he did so the next year, but that was done by the most barefaced poaching. Perhaps the cannery people would deny that they did any poaching themselves; probably they did not, but they winked at it when it was done by their employees and they bought fish they knew had been poached. The cannery was situated on a bay about three miles long, into which emptied a narrow stream only a few hundred feet wide, and it would be very easy to put a net across that stream. That was done day and night, and every fish going up to the spawning grounds was caught. That was the reason for the sudden drop in the catch. Then within a year or two the management realized that they had adopted a shortsighted policy; wiser councils prevailed and they decided to adhere strictly to the law. A capable fisheries guardian was put in, a man who could not be induced to wink at any violation of the laws, and the bay was closed for at least three or four years or possibly longer. The result was that in the course of a few years the bay was reopened and they are now getting a very satisfactory run of sockeye salmon there.

Mr. McRAE: Does my hon. friend know how many cases they pack?

Mr. NEILL: I do not know.

Mr. McRAE: I asked the department and they could not give me the information. I should be glad if my hon. friend could tell me.

Mr. NEILL: I do not know, but I have been told that the pack has increased very much over the sudden drop which took place. The same thing occurred on the Sumas river, which is twenty-four miles away. The fish ran out entirely; it was over-fished. Then the river was closed for some years; fry were brought from this hatchery and put into the lake at the head of the river, with the result that there is a satisfactory run of salmon now. The river has been opened for fishermen again and last year they took a satisfactory catch of sockeye salmon. So I would suggest that the hatchery was in no way to blame for any falling off in the catch; on the contrary, I believe the hatchery has been very successful.

Mr. McRAE: I do not think anyone accused the hatchery officials; I had the system in mind. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni explained about the pack in one year, but I would remind him that the diminution of the fish required excessive packs for four years, since there is a four-year cycle, and surely during at least three years of this period the hatchery official must have been on the job. My information is that the great falling off in the fish came about during all the cycle years after the hatchery had been established. I am sure my hon. friend is more familiar with his own line of business than with the fish business. He will agree with me when I say that for many years the great trouble with the fish on the Sumas river was due to a dam. This was later taken out, and it is true that there was some improvement after the dam was removed.

Item agreed to.

Oyster culture, $35,000.

Mr. SHORT: I have a few words to say in connection with this item. I notice that last year we spent only $10,000 for this purpose. The maritime provinces, particularly New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, at one time produced large quantities of oysters. In 1882 they produced 64,646 barrels while in 1926, according to the figures given before the royal commission investigating the fisheries, they produced only 19,898 barrels. Everyone knows that something has happened to these very valuable oyster fisheries. We produce to-day the finest oysters in the world. At one time the Malpeque oyster was known all over this country and the United States as having the finest flavour of any oyster produced, but it has become almost extinct now through the inefficiency of this department. Our production of oysters has been decreasing year by year, yet until quite recently, nothing has been done to restore it. I am glad that at last the department is waking up to the fact that something should be done for this very valuable industry, but I do not think it can do very much for $35,000; probably $100,000 or $200,000 will be required. Even if it is necessary to expend that amount of money, it would be thoroughly justified in the end. I understand that oysters are worth about $10 per barrel to-day, so it will be easy to estimate the revenue which would accrue if we could get back to a production of 64,000 barrels annually. I hope the department will give some attention to this valuable industry from now on and try to restore it to its former condition. There is no reason why this result could not be brought about if proper attention is paid to the spawning grounds. I direct this matter to the attention of the minister because it is one in which everyone in the country is interested. I repeat that I hope an effort will be made to restock these beds so as to bring the industry back to where it was years ago.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the payment of a bounty for the destruction of hair seals in tidal waters, $50,000.

Mr. McRAE: I want to compliment the minister upon the increase of this vote from $25,000 to $50,000. In the past this appropriation has not been sufficient, and on one or two occasions it has run out and left the department without money to pay the bounty. A rather amusing incident occurred up at Alert Bay in my constituency, in which one of the fishery guardians, in true, honest fashion, said that the government had no more money, much to the disappointment of the fishermen. This allowance of $2.50 on hair seals is not sufficient; it is entirely too small to make it profitable to the fishermen to engage in the destruction of the seals. As a matter of fact a great many of these seals sink when shot and the fishermen recover only about 50 per cent. I think it would be only fair to the hunters to increase the inducement by raising the bounty to $5 instead of $2.50. Probably the most destructive animal to our fish is the sea lion. I would like to see a substantial bounty paid on these animals. The department has been doing some very efficient work in killing these sea lions with rapid fire guns, but I think the work could be increased by allowing a very substantial sum, say $10 or $15, and thus encourage the fishermen to destroy these animals.

Item agreed to.

To provide for an investigation into the life history of the Pacific halibut by the International Fisheries Commission appointed under the Pacific halibut treaty of 2nd March, 1923, $31,500.

Mr. McRAE: Will the minister give the committee a report on the progress being made in this work?

Mr. CARDIN: The first report of the commission was submitted to the two governments last year, and was approved. Extensive as well as intensive studies are being conducted. It is expected that the work which is being arranged for the coming year will cost $63,000. The United States government has arranged to appropriate one-half of that sum, and under the treaty the other half must be provided by Canada. Concentrated attention will be given to the publication of the results of the investigations made up to date. This will cover the migration of the halibut, which is being studied intensively by means of tagging and racial investigation. The growth, spawning and other pertinent natural history questions will be studied. Statistical data will be prepared which will show what has been going on at the different banks since the beginning of the industry. The investigations will cover the spawning conditions, migration, drift of eggs and so forth, and will be extended further west and possibly into the Bering sea. To enable this work to be carried out a staunch vessel is required, one which is seaworthy and able to stand very rough weather, the spawning time of the halibut being during the winter. The boat should have accommodation for four or five men in addition to the crew. There is no such vessel in the Canadian fleet, and the United States fishing vessel Dorothy has been hired from time to time. This vessel has accommodation for seventeen men; she is 92 feet in length, 20 feet 6 inches wide, has a tonnage of 130, and is equipped with a 250 horse-power engine as well as an extra engine of 12 horse-power which can be used for sounding and other work. The rental has been at the rate of $50 per day for such days as the boat has been used, conditional upon the vessel being fully equipped for halibut fishing.

Mr. McRAE: Has any improvement been noted in the halibut fisheries on the banks between Graham island and the mainland?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that there has been over-fishing in those areas. No improvement has been shown up to date.

Mr. RYCKMAN: This seems to be a very bald statement: "To provide for an investigation into the life history of the Pacific halibut by the International Fisheries Commission," and so on. What will be done when this life history is obtained?

Mr. CARDIN: Regulations will be adopted as suggested by the commission.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The vote does not say that directions will be given to the department as to how it should operate after the investigations have been completed. I think it would be better if this amount had been added to vote No. 194 and a real effort made to rehabilitate and make commercially profitable the Malpeque oyster industry which made Canada famous. No suggestion is made that upon this history being completed any benefit will accrue to Canada. I am prepared to hazard the guess that when this report, upon which we are spending $31,500, is completed nothing will be taken from it. The minister has not suggested how the country is to profit by this expenditure. More money should be devoted to those things which will produce coin in the cash box instead of making experiments of which the possible results are unknown. We are voting large sums of money without any prospects of a possible return. The minister is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but since I have been in the house nothing of real value has been done for the fisheries; I think the minister has been marine, and very much at sea. When we have such a splendid opportunity in the cultivation of our own fish, of our own oyster beds, it seems to me that the minister and the government ought to take a lead from what can commercially be done for the Canadian fisheries. How often have we heard it repeated in the house that the four basic industries are agriculture, lumbering, mining, and the fisheries? Since I have sat in the house I have never known of any real contribution to the development of the fishing industry by any one who was planning to turn this great industry to account. I do not wish to delay the committee, but if a considered and well-directed effort were made to turn to account the fisheries of this country, to prevent their depletion, to reestablish our oyster beds and to make the industry desirable so that citizens of Canada would enter it, something might be expected in the way of its development. If it is not developed in an earnest way, frankly I do not want it classed as one of the four great industries of Canada; and I defy the government to show that during the last eight years any distinct effort has been made that has resulted in benefit to the fishing industry in any part of Canada.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How much has Canada spent on this international commission to date?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I have not the information before me, but the commission has been operating for the last four years and the expenditure is between $25,000 and $30,000 or $35,000 a year.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Last year $31,500 was spent; would that be about the average?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: When did the expenditure start?

Mr. CARDIN: Four years ago.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Have we obtained any results so far from the work that has been done? I presume the commission has been investigating the life history of the Pacific halibut during the four years the commission has been in existence. But is it a fact that notwitstanding the existence of the commission, the halibut fishing has been very greatly depleted and that there is grave fear that the halibut grounds will be barren in a comparatively short time? I assume the minister has read the last report of the commission. If he has, no doubt he has seen there a statement by the commission that this fishery is in a very precarious condition. What benefit is Canada receiving from the expenditure which is being made every year on account of this commission?

Mr. CARDIN: According to the treaty, a commission was to be formed to investigate the conditions of the halibut fishery. Everyone will realize that it takes some time to make the necessary investigation in a matter of that kind. Under article 3 of the treaty the commission is to conduct investigations, make a report and afterwards suggest regulations to be adopted with a view of building up the industry and ensuring to the two countries the advantages which they should derive from such an important industry.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has the commission any power of regulation?

Mr. CARDIN: No; it will make recommendations that certain regulations be adopted, and those regulations will afterwards be adopted by the government.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But surely the commission must know that there are at present some real grounds for making recommendations; that there should be no delay in regulating the catching of the small halibut, the baby halibut as they call them. I can remember the time when it was unlawful to catch halibut which weighed less than 25 pounds. I do not know whether that is still the law or not, but my information is that the small halibut are being caught and the banks thus being depleted. The fishermen have been forced to go out further to sea; the fish have been driven away from the fishing grounds by reason of the over-fishing that is taking place, and there is a scarcity of halibut. If this condition continues it is only a question of time when there will be no halibut at all. Some action is required immediately. I do not believe in this policy of waiting, waiting, which has been followed in the case of other species of fish. I was told at one time in the marine and fisheries committee that the biological board was investigating the sockeye salmon on the Fraser river, and that it would some day make a report. I asked when we might expect that report, and the reply was: "In ten years or so." Must we wait ten or twenty years, until the halibut fishing is extinct, before we get a report from the international commission? We are either throwing away our money or should expect some results from the work of the commission. I should like to know from the minister what results we are getting, and what results we may expect.

Mr. CARDIN: The only answer I can give to my hon. friend is that the commission having been appointed we ought to wait for its report and give it the necessary time to investigate before adopting any measures.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How long will the minister wait?

Mr. CARDIN: We will wait until the commission has completed its investigation.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How long will that be? The minister must have some estimate as to the time the commission will occupy in investigating. Surely there must be some limit.

Mr. CARDIN: The commission has already made a report and certain recommendations.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I thought they had not yet made recommendations.

Mr. CARDIN: The recommendations will be found at page 9 of the report, which has been tabled and is available to members of the house. The recommendations are as follows:

1. (a) To establish areas, within each of which, if deemed necessary for the preservation of the fishery there, the total catch of halibut may be reduced by a predetermined percentage annually, commencing not less than one year after the putting into force of this recommendation, until the fishery therein shall reach a state of stability of yield.

(b) To determine upon the amount of this percentage reduction, and to revise the same from time to time as may be found necessary, the intent being to restrain any increase in the amount of fishing within such area.

2. To close permanently to all fishing the two areas herewith defined, and known to be populated by small immature halibut, and to close such other grounds as may be found by the commission to be populated by a similar class of fish.

3. To prevent the use of any fishing gear deemed unduly destructive.

4. To extend the present closed season by two weeks at its beginning, making the closure for all fishing in all areas from November 1 to February 15, both dates inclusive, and to facilitate future alterations in the length of close season.

5. To license all vessels fishing for halibut in treaty waters, under such terms as are necessary for the purpose of the treaty, including statistical returns, and for clearance to regulated waters.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the date of that report ?

Mr. CARDIN: It was issued last fall.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What has the department done to carry out those recommendations?

Mr. CARDIN: The recommendations have to be approved by the parliament of Canada and by the United States.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does not the minister think that he should have brought down some legislation this year? When does he intend to bring down this legislation?

Mr. CARDIN: We are in a position to pass legislation putting into effect these recommendations, but we are waiting for action by the United States.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I understood, first, that the minister was waiting for recommendations from the commission. Now we find that he has recommendations from the commission, and he says he is waiting for action by the United States. It seems a most extraordinary thing that this session has gone by without some action being taken by the government in this regard.

Mr. BRADY: I think that I have spoken at greater length to-day than I have done during the whole of the present session. It is really the first day that I have been impelled to speak, and because of the importance of this vote, nothing can stop me, not even one of those up-to-date machines that can tear down forests, such as the hon. member for North Vancouver was telling us about the other evening when talking of the Peace River.

We are discussing to-night one of the most important treaties that Canada has entered into for many years. In the articles of that treaty there are three outstanding phrases, which, if given effect to would assure to Canada the perpetuation of the greatest fishing industry in the world. There is no part of the world that has a greater halibut industry than Canada. Let me briefly sum it up for those who are ignorant of the possibilities of the halibut fishing industry. The world's annual production of halibut to-day is 90,000,000 pounds. Halibut is the most highly prized fish food that the world knows. It is found on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. Of that 90,000,000 pounds produced annually we are producing in British Columbia waters, 50,000,000 pounds. What does that mean? It means that we are contributing to the world supply of this highly prized fish, sixty per cent annually.

The story of the halibut banks and their exploitation is one of the most thrilling that anyone could ever read. No novel has yet been written of it, but one shall be written some day, and it will be the pride of British Columbia to know that she contributes one of the most interesting chapters in this country of romance. What was the origin of the halibut industry? It goes back to the year 1888. It started at Cape Flattery and extended until in the year 1910 it included 600 miles of the British Columbia coast. Between 1888 and 1910 more halibut were caught in those 600 miles than are being taken to-day with the area extended to 1,800 miles. Every member of parliament knows the map of Canada. Cast your eye to-night from Cape Mendocina, the first cape from the Panama, and travel up to Cape St. James at the southern extremity of the Queen Charlotte islands. That stretch from 1888 to 1910 produced the greatest halibut return that the world has ever known. Where are we to-day? Follow from Cape St. James up to Cape St. Spencer in Alaska and then to the Aleutian islands. What is the return to-day in that stretch of 1,800 miles of water, even with the most up-to-date devices for catching halibut? We are catching forty per cent less halibut to-day than we were in 1910.

No man, I think, should get up in this house and speak unless he has something constructive to say. I want to get behind this halibut treaty and to bring home to hon. members a few facts respecting the appalling toll that is being taken of our halibut. Are hon. gentlemen aware that there is no scientific method by which halibut breeding grounds may be developed? We have spawning grounds for salmon; we can propagate salmon under the most unfavourable conditions; but we know of no natural law under which we can propagate halibut.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. BRADY: Because they spawn in the ocean. There are three kinds of halibut sold in the market: the baby, the chicken, and the full developed halibut. The baby halibut is five years old. It is of no commercial value until it reaches that age. The chicken halibut before it begins to reproduce its kind must be ten years old. To-day a mighty toll is taken among the fish of that age. I have stood on the wharves of the greatest halibut port in the whole Dominion, Prince Rupert, which is the centre of the halibut market of the North American continent, and I have wondered why we do not realize that we are destroying the halibut industry, tearing up its very roots, when we sell to the fishing companies on the exchange the very fish that can reproduce their kind. The whole of the Pacific coast knows exactly what I am talking about.

Now, the first and most important article in the halibut treaty is this: we shall make a close season of three months. I ask the minister, did that work?

Mr. CARDIN: I am told it did.

Mr. BRADY: I will tell you why it did work—for a time. It gave a breathing spell, but it did not go far enough. What then did the department do? They said: "We will now study the history of the halibut to ascertain whether it is a migratory fish, whether the various banks are isolated units, or whether certain spawning grounds are peculiar to certain halibut. They succeeded in getting a great deal of information. To my mind the most important article was the third—to make recommendations as to the regulation of the fishery. Number one failed; number two opened up our eyes to the fact that number three was essential. By number three we recognized that the halibut industry to-day is in a parlous state, and that something must be done to arrest the terrible toll which is taken of the fish from cape Flattery to Kodiak island. The halibut industry to-day is in such danger of depletion that, unless the great American nation, whom we admire because of their genius, their intellect and their energy, come to us—and hitherto they have failed to do so, as I proved this afternoon—unless they come to us and agree to restrict the terrific toll that their fishermen are taking of our halibut, we can do nothing to remedy the present desperate state of affairs.

Now, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) asked: What return are we getting for our money? Well, we are not getting very much. We are not getting the return that we should get from what should be, and really is, the greatest fishing industry the world knows. I know there are some who doubt what I say, and for their benefit the following should be recorded.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, June 7, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

SYDNEY JAMES BLACK

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Totzke:

That the petition of Sydney James Black praying for an act to dissolve the marriage between the petitioner and Minnie Black, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing order 92 in relation thereto.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would like to have some explanation as to what this really means.

Mr. JACOBS: This is the petition of Sydney James Black praying for an act to dissolve his marriage with Minnie Black, and the motion is that the petition and the report of the clerk of petitions be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing order 92 in relation thereto.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What does that mean?

Mr. SPEAKER: I might explain by reading the report of the clerk of petitions:

Ottawa, June 7, 1929.

The clerk of petitions has the honour to report that he has examined the following petition presented on the 6th instant, and finds that the time for receiving petitions for private bills having expired, it should not be received.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SATURDAY SITTING

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had a word with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the leader of the Progressive group (Mr. Gardiner) with respect to the resolution standing in my name, and I gather that if the government will undertake not to sit in the afternoon or evening hon. members will not object to meeting in the forenoon at half past ten instead of eleven o'clock, the understanding being that when we take up estimates if there are any contentious items which it may be desired to hold over until Monday, that will be done.

I think this will meet with the general approval of the house, and with the consent of the house I move the amended motion, as follows:

That on Saturday, the 8th of June instant, and every Saturday thereafter until the end of the session, the house shall meet at 10.30 o'clock a.m. and the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Fridays.

That means that we will meet at 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning and adjourn at one o'clock.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): That wholly meets with the approval of those with whom I am associated.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Canada Grain Act, and to provide for the salaries of the chief commissioner and other commissioners, and for the appointment of four assistant commissioners, and for the payment of transportation expenses and per diem allowance to members of the standards boards attending meetings of the said boards.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Malcolm thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 359, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. MALCOLM moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister give us some reasonable explanation?

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Speaker, the members of the committee on agriculture have spent the major portion of their time during the last few weeks in the consideration of this matter, and they thoroughly understand all the changes which have been incorporated in this legislation. Other members of the house who have been unable to follow the proceedings of that committee may not realize to the same extent the effect of the changes brought about in this proposed legislation, but I think they can be briefly summarized under two or three headings.

The Brown royal commission sitting in the province of Saskatchewan, brought down certain recommendations making changes in the car order book. The recommendations of that commission in regard to the car order book have been taken as being the result of evidence submitted and of careful consideration given thereto. The majority of the recommendations in that regard have been accepted by the agriculture committee and have been incorporated in this legislation.

Considerable complaint has been made with regard to the lack of uniformity in the outturn standards of grain from our terminal elevators and while the inspection board set higher standards of outturns than the standards of inspection at Winnipeg, on appeal they could not be sustained. It was thought advisable to provide by statute that the outturn standard of all grades of grain from the terminal elevators should be as near the average of the grade as it was possible to obtain. Therefore, in order to give uniformity of grade in the flow of grain to Europe or the orient during any one crop season, the committee decided to adopt the recommendations made by the officers of the western pool, that the outturn standards of the grade from terminal elevators should be 75 per cent of the average of the grade and 25 per cent of the minimum of the grade.

The committee was informed by its witnesses that that outturn standard was acceptable to the handlers of grain in Canada as being an advisable standard to incorporate in legislation.

Evidence was submitted also to the committee as to whether or not the existing machinery for the administration of the Canada Grain Act was sufficiently powerful to deal with the ever-increasing problems which arise in the business of handling our western wheat crop. The committee felt that the recommendation made by the Brown commission to increase the number of commissioners to five instead of three, and to locate the commissioners across the country—one at Vancouver, one at Fort William, and one at each of the three western provinces—was not the best way in which to administer this act. It took the view that the board should be mobile, moving from place to place in order to study problems in the administration of the act; that in place of the commissioners being separated, as they have been in the past, the members of the board should work together. However, in order to carry out the demands and the requirements of western Canada, and to meet the complaints arising in the handling and inspection of grain, it was felt advisable to place permanently an assistant commissioner at Fort William, another assistant commissioner in the province of Manitoba, one in the province of Saskatchewan and another in the province of Alberta. The new board would be assisted by four assistant commissioners who, under the act, would be given powers equal to the powers of the commissioners but who would be responsible to the main board for their findings and their actions. The opinion was expressed by the committee that the business of handling the grain crop of western Canada is large enough to justify the extension of the personnel of the board and that this being a billion dollar business only men of the very highest calibre should be in charge of the administration of the act. When one realizes the volume of business transacted, the importance of the rulings made, both as to their financial consequence and the spread of that financial consequence among 250,000 farmers, he must agree with the committee that it might be difficult to get the class of men required at the salaries being paid. The committee therefore recommends to the house that there be an increase in the salaries of these commissioners. May I say in passing, Mr. Speaker, that the men who understand the grain business are practically all in the employment either of the grain trade or of the western pool. It is not an easy matter to get the type of man required for the administration of this act unless he be taken from some occupation of a similar nature, and the committee felt that it would be quite in order that the salaries should be raised to the amounts mentioned. Indeed it was said in the committee that it would not be paying too much if the chairman of this board were to receive a salary comparable to that paid to railway presidents, as both the volume of business and the importance of the work were comparable to the duties of such a man. However, the majority ruling of the committee was that the salaries should be increased to the amounts provided in the bill.

I think that covers the views of the committee with regard to the administration of the act. Briefly, they are, that the machinery be increased and that the best men available be secured for the administration of the act.

Another matter on which I might speak briefly is the discussion which took place in the committee with regard to a vexed question for many years in western Canada, that of whether or not our grades of grain should be mixed, one with another. Evidence was submitted by some very competent and well informed witnesses that the mixing of one grade of grain with another is the most logical method of disposing of our crop. Evidence was also submitted that in the mixing of grain, our higher grades are deteriorated by putting therein lower grades which rather lower their milling value and reputation on the markets of the world. After due consideration of all the evidence submitted, and of the problems of handling our crop, the committee felt that the introduction of legislation which would have to take effect within the next sixty or ninety days, and which would disturb the handling methods now practised, would be rather a drastic change. The committee also came to the conclusion that as regards the lower or so-called commercial grades of grain, it was not shown, nor, indeed, could it be shown at the present time, that any damage or ill effects could result from the mixing of those grades. But the committee came to the conclusion that as regards the statutory grades of grain, namely, Nos. 1, 2 and 3 red spring wheat, the grades which are more or less our guiding grades, no good could be done to them by mixing any other type or grade of grain with them. In other words, the committee decided that we could not improve the top grades by mixing; that there might be logic in the argument that the lower grades could be so improved. In regard to this question the committee brought down a recommendation that the 75-25 outturn standard to which I have referred, should come into effect at once, with regard to all grades of grain; that with regard to the commercial grades the general practice of mixing which has been heretofore in use, be continued, but that as regards the statutory grades, the committee advised the prohibition of mixing.

As I mentioned a moment ago, I think it is only fair to those handling grain to explain that probably there will be some change necessary in the system in the terminal elevators in order to bring into effect the recommendation of the committee. It may be that an organization like the pool, which has seven terminal elevators at Fort William, will be able to handle through one of its houses all of Nos. 4, 5 and 6 grades, and mix and treat grain therein. They may devote to the the handling of Nos. 1, 2 and 3 another house where they can bin separately and keep intact the grade as it comes through Winnipeg. All people handling grain, however, are not so fortunately situated. Some line elevator companies have more than one house and can adopt a system of segregation such as I have referred to. Other line companies, however, have only one terminal elevator and arrangements will have to be made in order to segregate within the one house those grades of grain which cannot be mixed and those grades which can be mixed.

Representations were made by our chief inspector that supervision would be necessary in order to enforce the findings of the committee, and that if the recommendation were put into effect immediately, a very much larger staff would be necessary to supervise the binning and see that that the statutory grades were kept intact than would be necessary if we postponed the enforcement of the new mixing regulations for one year, during which time arrangements could be made for handling the statutory grades in separate terminals. In this case all the supervision which would be necessary would be an inspection of the cars going in and to see that each of these three grades was put into its proper bin. Therefore, with regard to mixing the committee recommended that the prohibition of mixing in the statutory grades come into effect on August 1, 1930.

I do not want to delay the committee with a discussion on the minor recommendations which can take place as the sections are taken up; and wish only to refer to major recommendations of the committee. That the 75 per cent of the average and 25 per cent of the minimum of a grade passing Winnipeg, be the standard for our grain going to Europe, is most important. This, it is felt, will give a uniformity of standard in the flow of our grain and is most desirable at the beginning of the season when the price is set. I might observe to the house that the prices set on Canada's grain are largely set on the samples which are submitted at the beginning of the crop season. Prices may fluctuate if the standard of the cargoes improves, but by this method it is felt that the Liverpool corn exchange and the other corn exchanges of Europe will know more definitely what they may expect to get throughout the whole crop year. They will know that the standard they are going to get is above the minimum standard on which the grain was bought, and it is felt that confidence will be established in the European buyer by providing that the out-turn standard shall be almost the average of the grade.

One other point which was discussed and amended is the question of section 150. Section 150 was recommended by parliament two years ago and the import of it was to give to any producer of grain the right to take his shipment to any country elevator, to put it into storage and, when he had paid his storage charges thereon, to direct that it be transported to any terminal elevator of his selection. In simple language, that was the intention of section 150. Certain difficulties arose in connection with a ticket issued under this section. The grain companies handling grain contended that they had the right to handle grain for those who had a contract to handle the grain for producers and by the use of this ticket they deprived the producer of the right of determining the destination of his grain, claiming the right that they had under a certain contract. The committee has suggested a new wording for this section which, I think the house will agree, clearly and definitely sets out that under no set of circumstances can the rights of the producer be taken away from him.

But the committee has gone further. Under the old Canada Grain Act and under subsequent changes which have been introduced by the agriculture committee and recommended to the house, certain forms of tickets were prescribed by legislation. It was also prescribed by legislation that no other form of ticket should be used. This brings up the question of how the act is to be enforced with regard to providing that in all the thousands of country elevators, no violation of the spirit of this section shall take place. In other words, it was, I think, clearly pointed out to the committee that the auditing of all the country elevators in the Dominion of Canada to make sure that no one of them at any time used a ticket that was not in exact conformity with the act, was a task which was colossal in size and would involve a tremendous expenditure. So, inasmuch as the question had been raised that section 150 had been violated by the insertion of certain words on the ticket which were not prescribed in the act—

Mr. BENNETT: And which had not been approved by the governor in council.

Mr. MALCOLM: Quite so—the committee felt that for all time this question could be best settled and expense and laborious auditing saved if they would recommend to the house that it be enacted in legislation that a standard ticket be printed and supplied by the Board of Grain Commissioners to all country elevators, this standard ticket to take the form and appearance of a standard government certificate. The committee are recommending in this bill that the Board of Grain Commissioners do not actually print but supervise the printing of the tickets, and supply them to the elevators, and that no tickets shall be used until they have been supplied by the board. That the use of any other ticket than the ticket supplied by the board shall be illegal. May I observe that this is not going to disturb the printing of tickets in western Canada. There are a few large printing houses which are printing these tickets for the board. I believe that the board will see fit to use a standard paper for the printing of these tickets. They will use a standard border in the printing of the tickets, and there will be uniformity of type throughout. The only difference will be in the name of the grain company printed on the ticket, to supply the needs of the various buyers of grain. The grain ticket which will be used in future in western Canada will be as uniform in appearance as a Canadian government certificate or as a one-dollar bill. It will lead, through standardization of size, to economies of handling and it will I think forever get away from where an operator of a country elevator goes to his local printer and gets a ticket printed which may not be in conformity with the desire of parliament, because the printer has added words thereto, and before the addition of those words is discovered many disputes may arise.

I think I have covered the four or five principal features to be found in this bill. We have dealt with what has been known as the hybrid ticket, and I believe that we have settled that question in the most satisfactory manner possible, by clearly defining the rights of the producer under section 150, and we are providing by having the tickets supplied by the board that no tampering can take place with tickets in the future.

We have recommended a solution for the problem of mixing by asking for the prohibition of mixing in the statutory grades, leaving mixing legal within the commercial grades. We have tried to settle the question of lack of uniformity in standards by making legal a standard which we think is as near the average of the grade as it is possible to reach. We have tried to settle complaints by providing for more extensive machinery for the administration of the act. I think that that is about all the information that I can give the house in a general way on the changes recommended by the committee on agriculture and colonization.

Mr. LADNER: There are four assistant commissioners appointed, one at the head of the lakes and one each in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Why is there not an assistant commissioner stationed at Vancouver, where 100,000,000 buhsels of wheat go through the port in a year, and where there is a storage capacity of approximately 13,000,000 bushels?

Mr. MALCOLM: These commissioners will have for the major portion of their work the settling of complaints of producers, the supervision of the country elevators, and such work as concerns largely the producer's interests. It was felt that the production of grain in British Columbia was not yet sufficiently large to justify the stationing of a commissioner at Vancouver at present, and that the settlement of complaints with regard to the production of grain in British Columbia could be looked after more conveniently and economically from Calgary. So far as the output of grain from the terminal elevators at Vancouver is concerned, the inspection department can take care of that work admirably.

The decision to place a man at Fort William was largely due to the fact that there is a greater quantity of grain moving through Fort William. The Board of Grain Commissioners have been stationed in the past at Fort William, and a great deal of the work of the commission which deals with European shipments passing through Fort William will have to be continued at that point. Undoubtedly there will be a permanent staff at Fort William for the administration of the act on account of the importance of Fort William as an all-year shipping point, by rail in the winter and by boat in the summer. It was not found necessary to establish at the moment an assistant commissioner at Vancouver. We took evidence on that point from our own officers, and I can assure my hon. friend that the matter was given very careful consideration. It may be that in the future when the grain business of Vancouver has increased it will be necessary to have an agent there.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The real difficulty to which attention was directed, namely, the use by the grain trade of a ticket that had not been approved by the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada, for which undoubtedly the government must accept full responsibility, has I understand been settled to the satisfaction of all parties concerned.

So far as we may be interested, we are only desirous that the great agricultural producing sections of the country should feel that they are deriving the full return for their labours from the sale of their product. As I understand that this committee composed of representatives of all parties, has striven for weeks to arrive at conclusions that would be satisfactory so far as it may be possible to all parties concerned, and that these conclusions are now embodied in the legislation which is submitted to the house, we regard it as our duty to say to you, sir, and to the house that regarding the legislation as being acceptable to all interests after it has been fully considered and canvassed in the committee, we shall do our utmost to expedite its progress through the house.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Salaries of commissioners.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I question the wisdom of raising the salaries of these commissioners as proposed in this section. If we were absolutely certain that we were going to get the very best men there would be no objection, but we have no such guarantee. The minister has stated that the experienced grain men have been secured either by the grain trade or by the pool, and that it is necessary to provide a large salary in order to get proper men. I do not altogether agree with that view. As a matter of fact it is not experienced grain men you need as commissioners; that is the class I would very carefully steer away from. I believe that when you pay a man a very high salary you elevate him so far above the ordinary farmer that he is inclined to lose sympathy with him. I simply register my protest; I do not offer any opposition.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Head office.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that the city of Fort William which I have the honour to represent is vitally interested in this proposed change. The same question came up in 1925 when the grain act was amended. Then it was proposed to move the headquarters of the board to Winnipeg, but I put forward the arguments that I intend to submit to-day, and the committee was fair-minded enough at that time to acknowledge the justice of my case. I was supported not only by my own party but by members from the prairie provinces on both sides of the house and by two or three members of the government. As a consequence the headquarters of the Board of Grain Commissioners remained in Fort William. I trust that to-day my hon. friends in all parts of the house will regard the proposal as the House of Commons did in 1925.

May I point out to hon. members, particularly those from the prairie provinces, that the headquarters of the Board of Grain Commissioners was established at Fort William by act of parliament in 1912. At that time Sir George Foster, as Minister of Trade and Commerce, asked the people of Fort William to provide a building to house a sample market and the grain commission. I have under my hand the correspondence dealing with the whole matter. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by reading the various letters, but I may state that the file contains a communication from Sir George Foster asking the people of Fort William to provide the necessary accommodation. It will be recalled by hon. members that the people of Fort William were badly hit by the crash in real estate prices which took place in 1912. But notwithstanding this misfortune they responded promptly to the minister's request and put up $500,000 of their good hard-earned money to erect a suitable building. For a period of about ten or eleven years that money earned no dividend. I may be permitted to mention a personal incident as an illustration of how the investment depreciated. My father subscribed about $15,000 or $20,000. In 1914 when his estate was being wound up his shares were sold at fifty cents on the dollar. I put in a little money myself and have the stock yet, but I merely refer to it to show that all the business and professional men in the city of Fort William provided money for the building. The building was laid out for a sample market, but no sample market was ever placed in it. As a result for about ten years there was not sufficient revenue to pay any dividend on the capital investment, and it is only within the last seven years that dividends ranging from two and a half to five per cent have been paid on that $500,000. Five per cent is the highest return the contributors have ever received. Now, it is proposed by this section to allow the Board of Grain Commissioners to locate the head office of the board at such place as the board may desire. The removal of the board's headquarters from Fort William would probably depreciate the value of the $500,000 investment to about fifty cents on the dollar.

I would point out to the committee that there is a moral obligation on the government in this case. True, the present government was not responsible for the location of the headquarters of the grain commission at Fort William, but, as I have pointed out, the necessary accommodation for the commission and for a sample market was provided on the request of Sir George Foster when acting as Minister of Trade and Commerce in a Conservative administration. Therefore I submit the obligation is a continuing one on the government of Canada.

If it could be shown that the farmers of the prairie provinces were suffering because the head office of the board is located at Fort William, the people of Fort William, being broadminded, would say: Well, we will just have to take our loss. But no national interest is involved. Ever since I came into this house in 1917 there have been attempts made at various times to change the location of the headquarters of this board. I have lived all my life at the head of the lakes, where eighty-five per cent of the grain of the west is handled. I know something about the grain trade, and I have never yet heard it urged that any greater efficiency in the handling of the grain crop of the farmers of the west would result by the moving the headquarters of the board to any other point. If there has been any inefficiency on the part of the board, it has not been because of its being located at Fort William. I submit therefore that there is no national need to justify the proposed change, and I doubt very much that any assistance would be given to the farmers in any manner, shape or form in the better handling of their grain by changing the location of the board head office. Since 1925 one of the commissioners has been at Winnipeg, anyway, and now I notice under this bill it is proposed to appoint four assistant commissioners to occupy offices in different sections of the country.

I have no quarrel with any other portion of this bill. I associate myself wholeheartedly with my leader when he says that our only desire is to see that the farmers of the west get the best return they can from their grain. I am convinced that with the appointment of these four assistant commissioners to act with the three commissioners, the farmers of the west will get that efficient administration of the grain act which they may have failed to get in the past. The board must have some place in which to keep their records, and that is about all their headquarters amount to, because this should be a travelling board. I think the farmers will agree that this board should be, as my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) once expressed it, an itinerant board. In fact to my mind there is no reason why the board should not have a private car just as the Board of Railway Commissioners has.

May I point out in this connection that the railway commission is located at Ottawa, which is a long distance from the centre of the Dominion. Most of its business is done in Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto, Halifax and in other cities of this country. But there has been no complaint of inefficiency on the part of the Board of Railway Commissioners because its headquarters is at Ottawa, a point much further east than Fort William. I submit that the Board of Grain Commissioners in being located at Fort William is much closer to the centre of Canada than the Board of Railway Commissioners located in Ottawa.

I notice that in his statement Mr. Boyd did not give any reason why the headquarters of the board should be moved to Winnipeg, but he did say it is an eight hundred mile trip. It is if you count the distance both ways. He said the trip meant a day lost; it is only a night lost. A train leaves Fort William at night and gets into Winnipeg about nine o'clock in the morning; a train leaves Winnipeg at night and gets into Fort William about the same time next morning.

Most of the cases that come before the grain commissioners are not decided in an hour or a day; they have to be discussed just as have cases that come before any other court. Therefore I think the headquarters of the board might very well remain at Fort William. The board has to travel east and west to hold sittings at various points. Mr. Boyd suggests Winnipeg, but Winnipeg is merely an inspection and trading point for the wheat. I do not need to mention that fact to hon. members who are farmers, but there are other members who are not so familiar with it. Fort William, on the other hand—and I include Port Arthur, of course—is the point at which the wheat is weighed, cleaned, stored, transhipped and inspected on to the boats. There are disputes every now and then arising at that point, and very important disputes in connection with shortages of cargoes going on the boats—much more important than many of the minor differences that occur in the west.

The point has been made in the past that the board, being situated at Winnipeg, might be under the influence of the larger percentage of the trade. I do not care to give credence to that statement, because if the board is properly constituted it should not be subject to such influence. I allude to the fact, however, for the reason that it has been mentioned to me by some people, including some members from the prairie provinces.

The head of the lakes as has been pointed out by the minister, is the largest grain centre in the world; there they have 85,000,000 bushels elevator capacity, and there are thirty-three elevators. To give some idea of the work that is being carried on at the head of the lakes, I may mention two or three figures with regard to the weighing staff and the weighing of grain, an important function which has to be supervised by the Board of Grain Commissioners. The weighing staff in Canada comprises in all 247 members, of whom 139, or more than half, are at Fort William. There are in Canada ten terminal elevators, of which five are at the head of the lakes, four being scattered through the interior and one at Vancouver; and the five at the head of the lakes have twice the capacity of the other five. Then in regard to the income of the board. The income of the Board of Grain Commissioners, according to their last report, was $1,956,000, and of that sum over $1,000,000 was taken in at Fort William and Port Arthur.

I am not going to to detain the committee much longer because I have no wish to rehash all the arguments I have advanced in the past, but I wish to say that I can see no reason for the change. And I make that statement as sincerely as I have said anything in this house. I hope hon. members will bear in mind that there is a fair deal coming to the people of Fort William, just as there is to the farmers of this country; and it certainly is not a fair deal to have the government of Canada ask the people of that city to put up a $500,000 building—and it has been put up—and then tear up the agreement as a mere scrap of paper; because that is pretty much what it would amount to now if this board were to move its headquarters. I appeal to the committee to look at the matter in a fairminded way; I appeal to them to consider the importance of equitable treatment to all sections of the country. Moreover, I would point this out: I have been a member of this house for about thirteen sessions, and in all that time, so far as I can recollect, I have never taken a narrow sectional point of view in regard to any question. Take, for example, the Hudson Bay railway; speeches have been made in this house against that railway, but I have never made any of them—and this notwithstanding the fact that no city will be harder hit than Fort William and Port Arthur if that railway becomes a success, because whatever wheat is shipped by that railway will be so much less passing through the head of the lakes.

I do not intend to discuss the matter further except to urge upon the members of this committee the desirability of leaving the act as it stands in this regard. And with this object in view I wish to move this amendment:

That section 6 of the bill be amended by striking out in line 26 the words, "such place as the board may decide", and inserting the words, "the city of Fort William or Port Arthur".

The section would then read:

The head office of the board shall be located at the city of Fort William or Port Arthur, and the board may from time to time establish offices of the board at other places.

This would be practically the same as the present provision in the grain act, except as changed by the committee this year. In the previous act it was left to the governor in council, on recommendation of the board, to establish offices in other places, and my amendment leaves that provision untouched but for the stipulation that the head office shall be at Fort William or Port Arthur.

Mr. DONNELLY: The hon. member says that either Fort William or Port Arthur is the logical centre for the board. What reason has he to think that the new board when it comes in will transfer operations from Fort William to some other centre?

Mr. MANION: If, as implied in the hon. member's question, there is no intention to remove the head office of the board, why change the act? While there is a stipulation in the act as to the location of the head office, that location cannot be changed; it is statutory. And that was the understanding when the agreement was arrived at between the people of Fort William and the government. More than that, Mr. Boyd has made a statement to the effect that the head office had better be at Winnipeg, and Mr. Snow lives in that city. So that two of the three members are there, and there is likelihood that they might find it more convenient to live at Winnipeg. I am not sure that this has not something to do with the suggestion as to the desirability of having the head office at Winnipeg; and of course most of us want to live in a large and central city. I do not want to be offensive to the hon. member or even to members of the board, but that is my impression.

Mr. MALCOLM: Many of the remarks of my hon. friend are quite correct. Fort William has proved in the past a very good centre for the location of the board and the committee felt that probably there was not so much of a desire to move the board from that point to Winnipeg. The opinion prevailed, however, that Parliament should not dictate to the board in deciding where its headquarters should be. Let me assure my hon. friend that his arguments with reference to the loss of personnel in the city of Fort William are not well founded. The recommendations which the committee have made to parliament in this connection will undoubtedly result in an increased personnel of grain handlers at Fort William and will add to the population of that city.

There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman has said as to the necessity of having the board travel. That is precisely what the committee thought; the board should be a mobile body. No better suggestion could be made than that this Board of Grain Commissioners should have a private car on which to keep necessary records when they are expected to travel, even to Halifax and to Vancouver. The board should visit every port in Canada; the board should inspect terminal elevators; the board should inspect all handling facilities in the country; and, recommended by as many members of the committee, should also make a yearly trip to Europe to see what reception our grain is receiving on the European market. I appreciate the force of what my hon. friend has said: A large portion of the records will always be kept at Fort William. It would not be convenient to move them to any other place, and I believe that even if the board did decide to set up its office in Winnipeg or Calgary, Fort William would lose very little by reason of the powers we are conferring upon the board under this legislation. May I read the section to my hon. friend:

The head office of the board shall be located at such place as the board may decide, and the board may from time to time establish offices of the board at other places.

I think the committee will agree that, after giving the matter careful consideration, the special committee have introduced legislation which will not impair the interests of the city which my hon. friend represents. After all, this legislation has been introduced on the recommendation of the committee on agriculture of this parliament. The administration of the act is under a board, and while it is true that the personnel of that board is appointed by the government which happens to be in power, it must also be remembered that the committee on agriculture, who consider this act from time to time and make recommendations to the house in relation thereto, are a non-partisan committee. The members on the government side can take no more credit for the changes proposed in the act than can the members on the other side. These are parliamentary recommendations and in my opinion it is well that this is so; because after all this is not a party question. This is one of the largest questions in the Dominion, and if the committee of the whole consider that the Board of Grain Commissioners should be free to set up offices where they choose, I do not think the remarks of my hon. friend from Fort William should be taken too seriously but that the larger issue should be considered as recommended by the committee.

Mr. MANION: I just wish to say a further word, and I shall not delay the house very long; apparently the remarks I made are not going to have very much effect. The minister mentioned that due to the enlarged functions which are given to the board there will be an increased personnel at Fort William anyway, but whether the board remains at Fort William or whether it is moved to Winnipeg that personnel will be increased if necessary; in other words, that is not to be taken as compensation to Fort William for the loss of this board.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just what loss will there be? The board never resided there; Mr. Boyd lived at Montreal, Mr. Snow lived at Winnipeg and Mr. Robinson was kept busy attending farmers' meetings. Now there will be a commission at Fort William permanently.

Mr. MANION: The loss will be in connection with this building which the people of Fort William built at the request of the government of Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The building will be there just the same.

Mr. MANION: Yes, perhaps empty.

Mr. MALCOLM: The inspection staff offices will be there.

Mr. MANION: I will admit that my friend the minister cannot move them all away from Fort William, but he is going to move quite a few of them. The minister said the records would remain largely at Fort William anyway.

Mr. MALCOLM: No, I said I agreed with my hon. friend that it might be advisable to keep many of the records at Fort William, and I think that will be the case, but all the committee is doing is leaving it to the decision of the board as to whether they desire to retain their offices at Fort William. They may desire to set up offices in Calgary and be there part of the time, or they may desire to set up offices in Vancouver and spend part of their time there.

Mr. MANION: Yes, it is quite true that the farmers say the board should be a good deal more of a travelling board than it has been in the past, but in view of the fact that the minister said in his previous remarks that these records would be left at Fort William because it would not be convenient to change them, and since a large personnel also will remain there, why change the headquarters of the board?

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not being done.

Mr. MANION: No, but it is being left to the discretion of the Board of Grain Commissioners; one commissioner lives in Winnipeg and another has put himself on record as thinking the board should be located in Winnipeg. Fort William would not have a Chinaman's chance against that sort of thing. I do not intend to fight this matter much further, because while I think I will get a good deal of support from my own party I cannot fight two-thirds of the house.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think you could.

Mr. MANION: Not very successfully. I remember that the last time I took up this matter the hon. member for Bow River was with me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, and look at the results; much of the dissatisfaction now prevailing is due to the location of the board.

Mr. MANION: With all due respect to my hon. friend I submit that the complaints in regard to the board were not with respect to their headquarters but because they had not been travelling enough and had not seen enough of the farmers, and I am rather afraid some of the complaints were due to the quality of the wheat.

Mr. MILLAR: Is it not a fact that in 1912, when the board was established at Fort William, scarcely any grain was going through the port of Vancouver, whereas now it is a very important port? Is that not a strong reason for a change?

Mr. MANION: I do not think it is a reason for a change; I quite agree that a large amount of grain is going through Vancouver, but a very much larger amount is going through the ports of Fort William and Port Arthur. My hon. friend knows that even with the port of Vancouver in operation, Port Arthur and Fort William handle 85 per cent of all the grain.

Mr. MILLAR: Fort William is at the extreme end of the western inspection division, whereas a great deal of the grain is now moving in a westerly direction.

Mr. MANION: That is quite true. Perhaps if we were merely establishing the board now it might be decided to have their headquarters at Regina; that would be about the centre of the three prairie provinces, but that is not the question. I am pointing out that there should be something like fair dealing with a city after an agreement has been made; there should be fair dealing by a succeeding government under an agreement arrived at by a preceding government. Governments are continuous although the personnel changes, as we learned last evening in another province.

I am not going to take up any more of the time of the committee; apparently hon. members have made up their minds, but in closing again I wish to point out that while the headquarters of the board is not being absolutely changed it is being left to the discretion of the commissioners. According to the agreement between the city of Fort William and the government in power at that time, provision was made in the act that the board should be at Fort William, and under that agreement the people of Fort William put up this building.

Mr. KAY: I just want to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Bow River with reference to the residence of Commissioner Boyd. My hon. friend said Commissioner Boyd lived in Montreal, but that is not correct; his residence is in Fort William. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to be unfair.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I intended to say that he spent most of his time in Montreal.

Mr. MANION: Why?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Because it was his business to watch the situation there with regard to grain.

Mr. MANION: Then if one commissioner must be situated in Montreal and others must be located as far west as Regina and Calgary, I submit again that Fort William is the most central point between the two and is the most logical place for the headquarters of the board.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I agree very largely with what has been said by the hon. member for Fort William, and I have noticed some remarks which were made about Vancouver. In my opinion I do not think any of the grain which goes over the Canadian National railway westerly should go as far as Vancouver at all; I think it should stop at New Westminster, and I would like to see this matter looked into by the board. There would be a saving of one cent per bushel on all grain shipped from the Fraser river instead of from Vancouver.

My reason for making that statement is that Fort Mann, on the south side of the Fraser river across from New Westminster, is the freight terminus of the Canadian National railway, which does not enter Vancouver on its own tracks at all; for the last fifteen miles all shipments must go over the tracks of the Great Northern railway which, by the way, is an American concern. That means that grain coming over the Canadian National railway to Vancouver from Port Mann must pay first a toll on the bridge; then the cars must be switched to the Great Northern tracks, which involves a switching charge; then there is a toll to the Great Northern railway and in addition, when these cars get to Vancouver they must be switched to the Canadian Pacific tracks in order to reach the elevators. All these operations cost money, which works out to about one cent per bushel on all grain, so there is that amount of money to be saved by shipping from New Westminster instead of Vancouver. The big ships can come right to the docks at New Westminster, and there are miles and miles of desirable sites for the location of elevators along the Fraser river. As a matter of fact, with the assistance of the government one elevator has been built near New Westminster, and I hope this new grain board, when it starts to function, will look into this situation and see that something is done to recognize the advantages of the port of New Westminster.

Mr. BENNETT: We lawyers have a saying, which indeed is an old maxim, as to "the infallible justice of the crown," and in this instance it is quite clear that the crown selected Fort William as the location for the head office of the board; when I say the crown I mean the government of the day acting through parliament. It is equally true that a number of gentlemen invested their money in a building which was to be used for the head office of these grain commissioners. Should not we leave the matter as it is until the adjustments are made which will insure against any financial loss resulting from any action taken by parliament? In other words, would any harm come to anyone if we left it as it is, having regard to the fact that conditions were altered at the instance of the government of the day and when their wishes were met they were embodied in that legislation? I cannot but think that it would be a fair thing to leave the matter as it is until such time as there has been an opportunity afforded to discuss it with those interested. I was not aware of the circumstances to which the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) referred until he mentioned them to me, but they made an impression on my mind as they must upon the mind of any hon. member of this house. The head office of the organization was established at that point, and upon the strength of that establishment by this parliament certain gentlemen put their money into a building to provide facilities for a sample market and other purposes. Should we not leave this in abeyance until we deal with the whole statute and thus afford an opportunity to the persons interested to present their views? I put that to the minister, and I think he will agree that it is not sufficient to say that there will be an office at Fort William; there is a difference between a head office and an office. At the present moment the official correspondence in connection with grain matters, and the files and records are at Fort William, and to leave the decision to move the head office to the commissioners themselves would be a departure from the principle established by parliament when we asked the Fort William citizens to invest in a nonproductive building for the purposes of meeting the wishes of the country. In other words, if the country should take the head office away it certainly should not do so unless it has considered the effect of that action upon the fortunes of those who saw fit to act in this public spirited matter. That public spirit should not be dampened by any action taken at this moment. What would be the harm if we left it as it is until the act is revised and consolidated? As I understand, it is proposed to revise and consolidate the act as a whole next year?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, that is right.

Mr. BENNETT: That being so, would not it be the proper thing to leave it as it is, without change—I submit that to the minister and to the house—and then the gentlemen and interests affected will have an opportunity to study the situation and be able to deal with it when this house is in committee on the act which will be introduced next year. I think this is a matter which transcends any political view, and when we approach it we should keep in mind that old maxim of the infallible justice of the crown. In view of these circumstances, I think the minister might leave that section just as it stands, having given to the house and to those interested a clear intimation of what may happen when the matter is further considered.

Mr. MANION: I did not know that my leader was going to make the suggestions he has, in fact, I did not know that he was going to take part in the discussion at all. I appreciate what he has said, and I appreciate particularly his final suggestions. I think it is an eminently fair suggestion to allow the matter to remain in abeyance for this year, try out the new system of commissioners and the operation of the act as amended, and then if it be found to be absolutely necessary for the good of the grain trade of Canada to do this thing the city of Fort William will have been given notice that it will have an opportunity to appear and state its case.

The people of Fort William did not know, nor did I know until very recently that there was any likelihood of a change being made; it was understood that there was no likelihood of a suggestion being made in that regard at all. I think the leader of the opposition has made a fair suggestion. This is not a political matter; if it were a political matter it might be better for my purposes to have the office moved and then I could blame the government for doing that. I am not anxious for any political advantage, I only desire that the city of Fort William shall be properly treated. The people of that city have lost considerable money through this deal and they feel that they should not be mulcted of any more.

Mr. MALCOLM: I appreciate the remarks of the leader of the opposition as to there being at least a moral obligation upon the government towards certain capital interests which are involved, but I would say that the rent paid by the Board of Grain Commissioners to the owners of this office building in Fort William is not a large rental, being only $7,480 per year.

Mr. MANION: That does not include the rental for the other grain offices.

Mr. MALCOLM: No, that is the office of the Board of Grain Commissioners. I submit that this is a question which the department or the government might recognize when it is faced with it. I realize that what the hon. leader of the opposition has said is true, that the government should not enter into a contract with private interests to erect a building for a certain purpose and then when the building has been completed and the capital invested to vacate the premises. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Board of Grain Commissioners would be the best body to determine where their head office should be. I doubt very much if the Board of Grain Commissioners will see fit to move out of their existing offices for some time. It is not an easy matter to arrive at a decision as to what the best place will be and it is quite within the realm of possibility that the Board of Grain Commissioners will think that their records could be more conveniently kept at Fort William, although they might be spending a good portion of their time in the Calgary office, the Vancouver office or the Montreal office. The question of whether or not the records should be kept at Fort William will have to be decided by the board under this legislation.

I would submit to the hon. member for Fort William that until such time as the Board of Grain Commissioners recommend to the government that they do not require any of the space which Sir George Foster contracted for, we should not be expected to give consideration to hypothetical hardships. When it does come to that point I can assure my hon. friend that I do not believe it will be possible to give up any of the space. The work is increasing all the time and I hardly think it is fair to assume that less space is going to be required for the work of the inspection staffs and supervision staffs in Fort William. While I recognize the argument of the hon. leader of the opposition I do not think it can be used until the time actually comes when the Board of Grain Commissioners state that they do not require the space, and I hardly think that that will ever be the case.

Mr. MILLAR: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member for Fort William a question in connection with this building at Fort William. The investment to which he referred was made in a building for the purpose of carrying on a sample market and although the headquarters of the board has been at Fort William for some time I understand that the stock has decreased in value to fifty cents on the dollar.

Mr. MANION: It is paying five per cent at the present time, and has been for the last three or four years.

Mr. MILLAR: I submit that poor business foresight has been shown on the part of the government as well as the citizens of Fort William. When this legislation was put into effect it was quite evident that the sample market would never amount to anything and without being offensive I would say that very poor business foresight was shown in making this investment. The result has been that money was lost in that way although the head office has been located in Fort William. The money has been lost while the board's head office has been right there. How is the removal of the head office of the board going to bring this back or affect the matter in any way?

Mr. MALCOLM: My secretary has just sent me a memorandum covering the complete payments by the department for office rental in Fort William. The rentals are as follows:

Office Rentals at Fort William

	Per month
Commissioners and secretaries' rooms	$ 275 75
The statisticians' rooms	161 59
The licensing and bonding rooms	83 00
The weighing branch	249 34
The inspection and registration branches	823 55
General manager of elevators	141 67
Total	$1,735 90

A total of $20,830.80 for the year.

Therefore I submit that with a supervision branch going into Fort William, it is very likely that the full amount of space will still be required and probably more.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has asked: Since the money was unwisely invested anyway, what harm is there if you wipe it out altogether; in other words, if money is paying 5 per cent, why not wipe out the 5 per cent; it does not make much difference to the people. Perhaps it does not, but it makes the difference of 5 per cent. When I spoke of fifty cents on the dollar, the building had been paying nothing. Later it paid 2½ per cent and recently it has been paying 5 per cent. It is not being used entirely for the Board of Grain Commissioners. It is a very large building and there are stores downstairs.

As regards the wisdom of doing this, the legislation was passed. As pointed out in this letter of Sir George Foster, it was intended to put it into shape as a sample market, and many people in the west still think there should have been sample markets. The farmers at that time asked for this. Is there any small city in the west that, if approached by even this Dominion government and asked to erect a building which they say they will use for offices, would refuse the same opportunity if they could raise the money? I doubt if any would, so that there was no lack of wisdom on the part of the people, except perhaps in believing that this government would carry out an agreement made by previous ones.

Mr. MILLAR: Was the mistake not in believing that a real sample market could be established by legislation?

Mr. MANION: If there was any mistake it was not that of the people of Fort William.

Mr. LADNER: I feel it my duty to protest on behalf of the people of Vancouver against the provision in the act depriving that city of the benefit of an assistant commissioner. The act specifically locates the commissioners so far as the head of the lakes, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are concerned. It is interesting to observe the argument of the minister with respect to not fixing the location of the commissioners themselves. Vancouver is becoming year after year a greater shipping point for grain. Last year about 100,000,000 bushels passed through the port and we have or will have shortly, a storage capacity for approximately 14,000,000 bushels. With the development of the Peace River district and the increasing flow of grain from Alberta, it seems most extraordinary that by statutory provision it should be made impossible to have an assistant commissioner at Vancouver, if circumstances warrant it later on. I rise vigorously to oppose that restriction on our great seaport being definitely fixed in the statute and to urge upon the committee as well as upon the minister the advisability of applying the same principle with respect to assistant commissioners as exists with respect to commissioners or definitely establish an assistant commissioner in Vancouver.

Mr. COWAN: With regard to this subject I find myself in complete accord with the stand taken by the hon. member for Fort William. I do not intend to go over the arguments which he advanced this morning, except to say that the statement he has made in regard to the construction of the building and the representations made to the people of Fort William by the government of the day, is quite correct. The people of Fort William subscribed generously towards the construction of this building upon the distinct understanding that for all time the offices of the Board of Grain Commissioners would be established at that point. My suggestion is in line with that of the leader of the opposition, namely, that the matter should be allowed to stand until the board has had an opportunity of functioning for another year; then when the Canada Grain Act is fully and completely revised, the question can be considered whether it is advantageous to move the head office or not. There have been no complaints of a serious nature against the location of the board at Fort William. There have been complaints against the administration of the Canada Grain Act, but those complaints would have occurred whether the head office were at Fort William, Port Arthur, Regina or any other city in the west.

New commissioners are about to be appointed and I suggest that that part of the act be administered as proposed for another year and that this section be allowed to stand. Personally I would prefer that the location of the offices be left, as the present legislation provides, in the discretion of the governor in council, rather than in the discretion of the board. That is the last vestige of control which parliament has over the location of the offices. If you leave it to the discretion of the board, they may place the offices anywhere they please. It would be far better to leave the question of location to parliament rather than to the board and for another year at least the act should be administered with the amendments now proposed and the question of location held pending the final revision.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 21; Nays, 57.

Section agreed to.

Sections 7 and 8 agreed to.

On section 9—Powers and duties of assistant commissioners, and appeals.

Mr. WARD: Subsection 3 provides that there shall be an appeal to the board within fifteen days by any person dissatisfied with the decision of an assistant commissioner. Suppose there is a ruling by one of the commissioners against which I as a farmer wish to appeal. Is there any provision made in this bill for an appeal against the ruling or decision of one of the commissioners?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, an appeal to the board is provided for.

Mr. WARD: In another section?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 10 to 26 inclusive agreed to.

On section 27—Warehouse receipt.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I feel that the change in subsection 1 is not really necessary. The complaints with respect to section 150 were that the old act was not enforced, and I can hardly agree that failure to enforce the act will be overcome by an amendment to the act. Suppose that this amended act is not enforced any better than the old one; surely we are not going to relieve the situation by a still further amendment. My submission is that the whole trouble was the failure to enforce the old section 150. I realize that some of the difficulties and some of the anomalies have been cleared up, but the fact still remains that no effort was made to enforce the old section, and that was the cause of the trouble we had last year.

Section agreed to.

Sections 28 to 30 inclusive agreed to.

On section 31—Moose Jaw and Saskatoon made order points.

Mr. EVANS: I wish that we had had an opportunity to read this bill beforehand. I notice that Moose Jaw and Saskatoon are to be made inspection and car order points. I opposed this two years ago in the house, and I have seen no reason for changing my mind. There has been no demand to include Saskatoon and Moose Jaw as order points. It will certainly mean extra expense and greater delay in the handling of the crop, and it will serve no useful purpose as far as the grower of the grain is concerned. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley:

That the words "Moose Jaw and Saskatoon" in lines 7 and 8, and the words "Moose Jaw or Saskatoon" in lines 11 and 12 of section 31 be deleted.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: This section was dealt with in the committee and a vote was taken of the members of the committee then present, and there was an almost equally divided opinion in regard to this particular amendment. In the first place, it was not dealt with by the sub-committee but was referred to the main committee for consideration. In the first vote taken, the figures were 12-12. Our chairman had the right I presume to give a casting vote, but being a very modest man he did not feel like doing so, and he called for a recorded vote, which resulted 11-13. That will show to the members of the house that there was an almost equally divided opinion in the committee in regard to this particular amendment.

At the present time the inspection of cars of grain at Saskatoon or Moose Jaw is optional. Any farmer may have his grain inspected at either of these points if he so desires. I would also point out to the committee that our Saskatchewan wheat pool, who handle more than 50 per cent of the wheat of our farmers, inspect all their grain going through these two points, so that making these two points compulsory inspection points will not affect the members of the Saskatchewan wheat pool to any extent whatever. On the other hand, making these two points compulsory inspection points is going to add to the expense of handling the grain. The effect it will have will be to compel the grain companies to inspect all their grain that goes through these two points, and of course the farmers who grow the grain bear that expense. It will also add to the expense of our government inspection staff. I am not sure what that extra expenditure will be, but I got the impression in the committee that it will require an increase of approximately one-third of the present staff to handle the business if these two points are made compulsory inspection points. For these reasons I feel like supporting the amendment as proposed. Under this section the chief advantage will accrue to Saskatoon and Moose Jaw. Now, if by amending the act in this way advantage is to be gained by individual cities we are establishing a precedent, and if next session Regina, Brandon, Dauphin, or any other city sees fit to ask for a similar concession we will not be able to withstand the request. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I feel the amendment should commend itself to the committee and that the section should be rejected.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I wish to associate myself with the hon. members for Rosetown and Kindersley in opposition to this section. I believe it is unnecessary in the interests of the farmers. The principle on which it is based is in my opinion a vicious principle. It makes no difference to the farmers whether this section goes through or not, because at the present time any farmer can have his grain inspected at Moose Jaw or Saskatoon if he so desires. This section would result in the railway companies being forced to provide additional trackage and engage extra employees, and the department would have to enlarge its staff. This would increase the overhead expenses of both the department and the railway companies, without giving any corresponding benefit to the farmers so far as I can see. It is simply a concession to Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, and certainly, as the hon. member for Kindersley has said, if you establish a precedent in this case then undoubtedly many other cities will ask for a similar concession—a concession that means nothing to the handling of the grain trade as a whole, but will impose a penalty on the railway companies and on the department. It may perhaps be said that we are not concerned about the extra expense entailed on the railway companies, but I submit that that is not so. At some future time we may be applying for reduced rates, or fighting a demand by the railway companies for higher rates, and on such an occasion you will find the railway companies advancing this extra expense as a reason why they should be allowed to increase their rates. For these reasons I intend to support the amendment.

Mr. VALLANCE: I notice, Mr. Chairman, that hon. members sitting in the extreme southeast corner of the house, particularly my hon. friends from Kindersley, Rosetown and Mackenzie, point out that under the existing conditions at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon the farmer has the privilege of having his grain inspected. They say the effect of this section will be to increase the cost of handling the grain. Well, we will concede that the inspection is voluntary. What would happen if all the farmers whose grain goes through those two points were to exercise that right and decide that it shall be inspected there? There is only one thing that this department could do—put in a staff to take care of the work. As long as that condition remains we must keep a staff there sufficient to look after inspection. As to increasing the cost, you are only relieving the situation at Winnipeg. As one of the representatives of the farmers west and north of Moose Jaw, while I recognize that they have the right of inspection, I feel that it should be made compulsory. As has been pointed out, every carload of grain belonging to the pool that goes through Moose Jaw is inspected there. I feel that in any case while the inspection remains voluntary the government, in order to enable the farmers to exercise that right, must retain a staff sufficient to take care of the possibility of all the farmers exercising it.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Mr. Chairman, there is one point that has not yet been covered in my opinion, and it is one of the chief reasons why we should make haste slowly in making Moose Jaw and Saskatoon compulsory inspection points. The Hudson Bay railway is nearing completion, and as soon as it is open for traffic a great deal of our grain will go out that way. That of necessity will create a rerouting of the freight that is now making its way towards Fort William. When that occurs it will be time enough to consider where we are going to make inspection points other than those we have already set up. For that reason I shall support the amendment.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have listened to the arguments of those who favour this amendment. The principal argument seems to be that no advantage would be gained by making Moose Jaw and Saskatoon compulsory inspection points. I take exception to this argument. Practically all the grain coming from that part of the country in which I live passes through Moose Jaw. If Moose Jaw were made a compulsory inspection point the grain would be inspected there and this would give the farmer time to complain if he finds he is not getting the proper grade for his grain. At present many carloads of grain pass through Moose Jaw to Winnipeg, are inspected there, and then are unloaded at Fort William. When the farmer gets word of the grade of his car of grain he has no time to make a complaint. I had that experience last year. A carload of grain was graded at Winnipeg and unloaded at Fort William, and when I got the return and asked for reinspection, I was told the car had been unloaded and that nothing could be done. Another objection taken is that the proposal would cause delay. As a matter of fact all train loads coming into Moose Jaw are broken up. Inspection would not cause any delay, for the cars remain there for some time. As has already been stated, the pool companies at present keep inspectors at Moose Jaw and do all the inspection of their grain there. I for one am in favour of inspection at Moose Jaw and am not at all concerned as to the expense the line elevators may be put to. I am not concerned about the line elevators, I am concerned in giving every advantage to the farmer. We are told about the expense that this would put on the line elevators. Well, if they have to keep inspectors on the job that is their lookout; but it is vital that the farmer should get the advantage that I believe he will get by having compulsory inspection points at both Moose Jaw and Saskatoon.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I fail to see the logic of the argument advanced by the hon. member for Willow Bunch. He states that if grain is inspected at Moose Jaw it will give the farmer time to call for reinspection in case the grade is not satisfactory. The farmer has that right to-day. If the farmer wants the grain inspected there he can have it inspected there. That is the reason we opposed the change. Every argument the hon. member brings forward applies at the present time. There is inspection at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon but by this section we propose to make it compulsory. Now the farmer can exercise that right to-day if he wants to. But compulsory inspection of grain there would mean additional expense to both railway companies and additional expense to the department as well, without any added advantage to any of the parties, and it is simply a concession to the cities of Moose Jaw and Saskatoon.

Mr. VALLANCE: If every farmer whose grain goes through Moose Jaw exercises his right and says that his grain shall be inspected at Moose Jaw, will the department have to maintain a force large enough to carry out that inspection? We are now asking only that the staff be larger and that it be used 100 per cent to take care of all the grain going through Moose Jaw.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. member is raising a hypothetical question when he asks what would happen if every farmer exercised that right. He might as well ask the civic authorities at Ottawa what they would do if all the citizens of Ottawa broke the law at once—whether they would have a police force strong enough to cope with such a situation.

Mr. DONNELLY: How many farmers in the country know that Moose Jaw is not a compulsory inspection point at the present time, and how many of them are aware that they may exercise the right of inspection there?

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is an immaterial point. The farmer soon finds out, if he wants to have his grain inspected there.

Mr. EVANS: Hon. members need not be alarmed at the supposition that all farmers will ask for this. I have tried in the last two years to arouse some interest among the farmers west of Saskatoon in regard to this question but they have not even brought it up at any of the local meetings nor even at the convention. The only body who represented them were, I think, at one time the executive of the farmers' union in Saskatoon, but they did not have the sanction of all those whom they were representing, the rank and file back in the country; and the farmers themselves have never asked for it. The hon. member for Willow Bunch made the statement that it would be of great advantage as it would give the farmer time to complain if he were not satisfied with the grain. I have been shipping grain from Saskatchewan since the year 1896 when I shipped my first carload, and I have never had cause to complain of not having time to enter protest if I saw fit. In several cases I have done so, and I can remember at least in three cases having had the grade changed. There is no need for this extra expense, and so far as the grower is concerned it will not benefit him in any shape or form. It will only entail more expense to the grain trade, and I believe we are creating too much machinery now—rather more than is needed in several cases for the handling of grain.

Mr. DONNELLY: How many carloads do you ship a year?

Mr. EVANS: What has that to do with it?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at one o'clock we were considering section 31, to which the hon. member for Rosetown had moved an amendment. However, we will revert to section 30, to which an amendment has been moved by Mr. Stewart (Edmonton), as follows:

The car order book and the order for a car shall be in the form D-1, in the first schedule to this act.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 31—Moose Jaw and Saskatoon made order points.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Rosetown has moved in amendment that the words "Moose Jaw and Saskatoon" in the seventh and eighth lines and the words "Moose Jaw or Saskatoon" in the eleventh and twelfth lines, be deleted.

Mr. EVANS: When the committee rose at one o'clock I was speaking with regard to the rights of the grower to have his car of wheat go forward to his own terminal. It was brought out before the Grain Inquiry Commission in Saskatoon last year that certain millers had bargains with the line companies throughout that province by which they were permitted to open cars at the divisional points and divert them to their own mills after having selected those with the highest milling value. When the manager of the Quaker Oats Company was asked if that practice was followed by his company he answered, "No, we do not consider it right."

If there is one thing that should be done in the interests of the grower it is that his car of wheat should be permitted to go forward to the markets of the world without being mixed, and the crop should not be skimmed of wheat with high milling value. World prices should be based on our best wheat instead of on the skimmed grades, and I think perhaps this is the chief reason why the farmer's wheat should go forward to his own terminal. It is very important that we should receive the highest price possible for our wheat, because under present conditions we are hardly able to carry on farming as it is. I would ask the house to consider this amendment from that point of view, having regard also to the expense and delay already mentioned.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The hon. member for Rosetown has just mentioned the diversion of cars of wheat, but this amendment really has nothing whatever to do with that matter. At present Moose Jaw is what is known as a voluntary inspection point; it was made an inspection point by order in council under section 22 of the grain act. Prior to that, in 1925-26 an amendment was moved to the grain act and unanimously adopted by this house, providing that Moose Jaw should be made a full grain inspection point, and when the government passed the order in council making Moose Jaw an inspection point under section 22 of the Canada Grain Act they thought they were making it a full grain inspection point as was intended by the amendment of 1925-26.

For about a month or so after the point was opened all grain passing throughout Moose Jaw was inspected. No farmer ever objected to that inspection; no farmers' organization ever objected, but the grain trade did take objection. A ruling was requested from the Department of Justice, and they held that to make Moose Jaw a full inspection point an amendment to the act was necessary. Therefore last year in the agricultural committee an amendment was moved to Bill No. 188, and that amendment was adopted in the committee by a vote of about two to one. My hon. friend from Kindersley said that this amendment was adopted the other day by a vote of thirteen to eleven, but I would remind him that it was passed by a vote of something like sixteen to eight in the committee last year when Bill No. 188 was being considered, but it will be remembered that this bill was withdrawn.

The present inspection service at Moose Jaw is now fully staffed and is capable of carrying on full inspection except during the very heaviest run of the grain, which is for about three months of the year. That situation could be met by putting on a few extra men. With regard to the railway companies, since this is a voluntary inspection point they have to set out certain cars from their trains and take on other cars, while with full inspection the whole train would be handled there. At all events, no complete train passes through Moose Jaw to-day; it is known as the grand divisional point of western Canada, and all freight trains are broken up in the yard and other trains are made up to continue east. The Canadian National Railways have every facility there for the inspection of all wheat coming to that point, and they have informed me that it is more of a hardship to have voluntary inspection than it would be to have full inspection. A great many farmers' organizations all over that part of the country have continually petitioned the government to make this change. The pool uses this inspection service at present to the extent of 100 per cent, and together with other members from Saskatchewan, a year ago I was told at the pool offices in Regina that due to the fact that Moose Jaw was an inspection point and they were having their grain inspected and their inspections checked there, over $200,000 had been saved to the farmers.

In this case, so far as Moose Jaw is concerned we are not asking for anything more than they have to-day in Calgary, Edmonton or Winnipeg. At Calgary and Edmonton all grain passing through is inspected, whether it is going to Vancouver or Prince Rupert or to the head of the lakes; they are compulsory inspection points. We are only asking that Moose Jaw be put in the same position as Calgary and Edmonton. Surely the province which grows the greatest amount of grain should have the same right as its sister provinces?

One hon. member in the other corner of the house mentioned the fact that this was wanted only by the people of Moose Jaw; that is not the case. It is wanted by all the farmers in that district, as all their grain goes through that point. There is no doubt that a certain amount of work will be done in Moose Jaw because all cars will be looked over when in the inspection yards and a great many leaky cars and cars needing repairs will be found, thus saving money for the farmer as well as preventing damage actions against the railway companies. Surely that would not be a detriment to the grain trade, the farmers or the railway companies.

An inspection at Moose Jaw would not mean a further inspection at Winnipeg. When the grain is inspected at Moose Jaw it passes on under a different coloured car seal and the cars are not again inspected. The only grain inspected again would be those cars of which a reinspection has been ordered. Grain going east is inspected upon arrival at Winnipeg, and it is a matter of only a few hours from Winnipeg to Fort William while it requires considerable time for the certificate to get back to the farmer in western Saskatchewan. To-day the grain is inspected in Moose Jaw, the certificate is sent right out, the shipper has it before the grain arrives at Fort William and thus he has an opportunity to call for reinspection if he so desires.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been passed upon unanimously by the house, it has been agreed to twice by the committee on agriculture, and, therefore, I think this committee should reject the amendment and adopt the section as it appears in the bill.

Amendment agreed to; yeas, 41; nays, 37.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would direct the attention of those who are responsible for the acceptance of this amendment to the fact that it will now be necessary to reconsider section 18. The section which has been amended deals with voluntary orders, but section 18 deals with the actual establishment of the inspection point.

Mr. DONNELLY: We have not been voting on the question of the inspection point at all; we voted on section 31 (a) which refers to the order point.

Mr. EVANS: I move that we reconsider section 18, dealing with the inspection point.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I object to the committee going back to section 18; it has already been passed.

[Mr. J. G. Ross.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A motion to reconsider is always in order.

The CHAIRMAN: It would have to be by unanimous consent. Standing order 41, paragraph 318, reads:

> There is no such proceeding as a motion to reconsider a decision, in British parliamentary procedure.

It could only be by unanimous consent that we could reconsider section 18.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I would point out that copies of this bill were not in the hands of the members until we started to consider it. The sections of the bill have been read off rather hurriedly, and in some cases the marginal references were not read. It has been practically impossible for the members of this committee to follow the reading of the bill and know just what each section means. I think it is only fair that reference should be made to section 18 and reconsideration given to that section in view of the fact that the sections have been passed so hurriedly.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, I submit that apparently the mover of the amendment did not quite understand the meaning of the section which he moved to amend. I do not think it was the intention of the mover to strike out the order point section at all; I think he had the impression that he was striking out the compulsory inspection point. Therefore, I would suggest that we proceed with the bill and an amendment could be introduced on the third reading. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that an amendment can be introduced on the third reading without going into committee. I do not think that my hon. friend has accomplished what he intended to do by this amendment. The privileges of voluntary inspection could be restored under section 31, and then the house could amend section 18 in the regular way.

Mr. IRVINE: Would not it simplify matters if we went back to section 18 and dealt with it now, instead of taking it up on the third reading?

Mr. MALCOLM: The Chairman has ruled that we cannot revert to that section without unanimous consent, and as one member of the committee is opposed to our reverting, I think the proper way would be to proceed as has been suggested.

Mr. IRVINE: I think unanimous consent should be obtained in view of the mistake which has been made by the mover of the amendment which has been carried, and also because I do not think any hon. member of the house would like to see a section carried which had not received the proper consideration. I suggest that those who opposed the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown might very well give their unanimous consent to the committee in order that we might revert to this section.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we are overlooking the fact that there is such a thing as a consequential amendment. When the committee undertakes to amend a bill in a manner different from the original trend of the measure, consequential amendments to other sections are permitted. The committee has amended section 31 and as a necessary consequence section 18 should be amended. Therefore, I submit that we do not need the unanimous consent of the committee, but that we can return to section 18 for the purpose of considering a consequential amendment.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): With regard to this matter, this has been carried through the house on one occasion and twice through the committee on agriculture unanimously. A vote was taken in the committee here a few moments ago with a small attendance and an amendment was carried. This morning, when there was a large attendance in the chamber, section 18 was carried unanimously by the committee. Now with a small attendance, certain hon. members wish to have us revert to section 18. Seeing that they have obtained a majority on the one amendment they want to try to take the other out. I do not think this is fair. If the minister wishes to bring in two amendments on the third reading, both the amendment that has been carried and the one on section 18, I will agree to that and the house can vote on the question.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I think we are losing sight of the point under consideration and dealing wth the principle. We voted on the principle in the form of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown. That principle has been decided, and the principle should be settled now in regard to section 18 where the words appear in the same way as the principle has been settled in regard to section 31. I do not think we should carry this discussion on any further because we have already decided on the principle, and this is only a technicality in regard to changing the wording in another section of the act to conform with the principle that we have already decided.

Mr. VALLANCE: The discussion would indicate that those who were opposed to the principle contained in section 18 are agreed, because of the discussion that has just taken place on section 31, that we should revert to section 18. It is quite obvious, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, why they wish to do this. I do not think it is fair to this committee, the house or the country. This matter was decided this morning and the hon. member for Moose Jaw should receive some consideration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not found myself in very much discord with my hon. friend from South Battleford, certainly not in the work in connection with the agriculture committee. We found him a very amiable, interested and useful member of it, but on this occasion I must disagree with him. Neither he nor the hon. member for Moose Jaw is justified in assuming that the reason why we want to revert to section 18 is because we happen to have secured a majority on the amendment to section 31. The fact is just as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has set forth. It was not the intention of the mover of the amendment to amend section 31. He thought it referred to a compulsory inspection point. It refers, however, to an order point. His intention was to amend section 18, dealing with compulsory inspection points, and all the discussion on the amendment indicated that very clearly. I do not think either of my hon. friends is justified in suggesting that we are motivated simply because we happen to have a temporary majority in the committee or for any other reason than that we want the question cleared up as best it can be. I do not think the amendment moved in this corner of the house is a wise one, and I am willing to have it deleted from section 31. I think those points ought to be voluntary order points, but to make them compulsory inspection points is a different matter altogether.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The amendment deleting those words brings about the situation that Saskatoon and Moose Jaw cannot be order points.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is exactly what I am trying to tell my hon. friend.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I realize that, but my hon. friend says that they are dealing with a different principle, and seeing that they are a majority in the committee they want to revert to another section.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend is wholly incorrect. The point is merely that the will of the committee may be properly carried out. It was clearly the intention of the committee, when the amendment carried, not to disestablish the order points, but to prevent the establishment of the compulsory inspection points, and that therefore we should revert to section 18 and clear that up.

The CHAIRMAN: Before we can revert, it is necessary to have unanimous consent. Unanimous consent was not given. As regards the point raised by the hon. member for South Wellington, standing order 48, subsection 399 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, states:

> After a decision has been given on an amendment to any part of a question, an earlier part cannot be amended. In like manner where an amendment of any part of a question has been proposed from the chair an earlier part cannot be amended unless the amendment so proposed be withdrawn.

I submit that on both those counts we are precluded from considering at this time an amendment to section 18.

Mr. MALCOLM: I would suggest that the mover of the amendment to section 31 withdraw his amendment, and in that case I shall be very glad to ask the committee to revert to section 18 and draft the proper section.

Mr. BENNETT: Just a moment. On the question of order, Mr. Chairman, the section that you read from the rules has no application to this at all. It refers to a question. We are dealing with various sections. When the question is put and amended, obviously the rule applies. That is not dealing with the question at all. The question which was put was: Shall we agree to the section. Then an amendment was made. When that was carried, an amendment was made to the section. But each section is a separate question and not the same question.

The CHAIRMAN: Each section is a question.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. MALCOLM: Can the hon. member withdraw his amendment?

Mr. EVANS: Under the circumstances I wish to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is not in a position to withdraw it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. IRVINE: Is it in order to move that it be rescinded?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, that is in order.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is pointed out to me by the clerk that the hon. member does not require unanimous consent to rescind his motion. That can be done by a majority vote. I would suggest that the hon. member move to rescind his amendment.

Mr. THORSON: How can it be in order to rescind without the unanimous consent and not be in order to revert to another section without unanimous consent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are still dealing with section 31. We have voted only upon the amendment, and if an hon. member, before we pass on to the next section, moves to rescind the amendment, he is quite in order in doing so.

The CHAIRMAN: We are still dealing with section 31.

Mr. IRVINE: In the event of the hon. member moving that his amendment be rescinded and that motion being carried, will the committee then be in order to return to consideration of section 18?

The CHAIRMAN: No, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MALCOLM: Or on third reading. I might point out to my hon. friend that the clerk has just informed me that we cannot return to section 18 now except by unanimous consent, but we could have an amendment to section 18 made on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. IRVINE: If you wish to amend section 18 on the third reading, you would have to give notice of motion?

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

Mr. IRVINE: It would have to be referred back to the committee for reconsideration.

Mr. MALCOLM: Not necessarily.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 31, as amended, carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MALCOLM: I move that the amendment to section 31 be rescinded and that the section stand as drafted in the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we should not be asked to rescind the amendment unless we are assured that we are going to be permitted to refer back to section 18.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I contend that the minister's motion is quite in order. We have not yet passed from section 31. We have merely voted on the amendment, and we are still on section 31 as the next section has not yet been called. I submit that the motion is therefore in order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: After we have just passed the amendment, you cannot under the rules move to rescind it at the same sitting of the house. We have deliberately voted on the amendment and passed it.

Mr. VALLANCE: If the contention of my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is correct, the same principle applies to section 18. My hon. friend says that we cannot rescind something that we have passed. Therefore we cannot do it with respect to section 18.

Mr. GUTHRIE: As a consequential amendment, I said.

The CHAIRMAN: A motion to rescind is in order, but it cannot be put at the same sitting at which the amendment is adopted, as pointed out by my hon. friend from South Wellington.

Section as amended agreed to: Yeas, 41; Nays, 37.

Mr. CAHAN: What happened to section 31, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: It was carried as amended.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I point out the awkward situation we have here in connection with sections 31 and 18? This has happened just because of the way the bill is being rushed through. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that you read each section and give us a few moments to consider them.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think the charge that the bill is being rushed through is fair to the chair. When we started to consider the bill this morning I called each section, and as no one rose to debate the sections as we proceeded I declared them carried. I think it is unfair now that we have reached almost the end of the bill that the hon. gentleman should suggest that the bill is being rushed through.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I did not intend for one moment, Mr. Chairman, to reflect on you but rather on myself and the other members of the committee because we have sat here and permitted the bill to go through in this way in the interests of the despatch of business. In view of what has happened, however, I think it would be good business to have each section read so that we may consider them for a few moments.

Sections 32 and 33 agreed to.

On section 34—Mixing grades in private elevators.

Mr. EVANS: I would ask the minister if any statutory grades will be permitted to be unloaded into private elevators?

Mr. MALCOLM: The act does not prohibit the unloading of statutory grades of grain into private elevators. It simply provides that after August 1, 1930, the mixing of statutory grades of grain either with anything else or with each other shall be prohibited, but it does not provide for the exclusion of the statutory grades from private elevators.

Mr. EVANS: I must say that I am rather disappointed at the decision of the committee to allow mixing of the commercial grades. I cannot see yet how the minister is going to prevent mixing without an undue amount of police work in all the elevators. As the statutory grades will be unloaded into private elevators, the commercial grades will be unloaded in the public terminals, and I should like to have some idea from the minister as to how he is going to prevent mixing even with a law like this on the statute books.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is admitted that when the prohibition of mixing in the statutory grades becomes effective, probably a great many of the houses will turn public. Arrangements will have to be made, as suggested by the pool officers, to use certain houses for the straight grades where no mixing is allowed, and to use other houses where grain has to be treated or cleaned and where it can be mixed in the commercial grades. The reason the committee thought it wise to defer for a year the putting this regulation into effect was just so the board could make arrangements to cover the points that my hon. friend regards as dangerous. It is proposed that these points dealing with the prohibition of mixing will be dealt with in the new draft legislation which will be submitted next session. The committee on agriculture and colonization felt there was danger from the very point my hon. friend has called attention to. Therefore a year's time was given to enable the board to work out the methods by which no mixing of the statutory grades could be brought into effect.

Section agreed to.

On section 35—Offences in connection with this part—penalties—disposal of penalties.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I have not my draft book before me, Mr. Chairman, but if my memory serves me correctly subsection 2 was struck out by the committee. Apparently by some mistake it has been incorporated in the bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is right.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Apparently it is only a mistake on the part of those who compiled the bill.

Mr. MILLAR: That is quite clear, Mr. Chairman; subsection 2 was struck out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I move to amend section 35 by striking out subsection 2.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 36.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by Mr. Stewart (Edmonton):

The first schedule of the said act is amended by striking out form D thereof and substituting therefor form D 1.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. MALCOLM: With the consent of the committee, I should like to revert to section 26. The wording is hardly clear. In the last two lines of subsection (1a) it says:

Provided however that this section shall come into operation on the first day of August, 1930.

I do not think that carries out the intention of the committee. It will be noted that the section deals not only with the prohibition of mixing becoming statutory on August 1, 1930, but also with the licensing of elevators. To clarify the section I propose the following amendment:

That section 26 be amended by adding at the commencement thereof the words:
"From and after the first day of August, 1930;" and by striking out the words: "providing however that this subsection shall come into operation on the first day of August, 1930."

I think this will make it clear that the whole section does not come into effect until August 1, 1930. It allows the rest of section 140 dealing with licensing of houses to stand until that date.

Mr. IRVINE: Would not the minister's amendment come better on the third reading?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is such a simple change that if the house would give unanimous consent we might clear up the point.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: How will the section read now?

[Mr. W. R. Fansher.]

Mr. MALCOLM: As amended it will read:

From and after the first day of August, 1930, subsection (1) section 140 of the said act from and including the first words thereof down to and including the word "aforesaid," in the tenth line thereof is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

I would point out to my hon. friends there is no necessity for repealing section 140 until such time as we enforce the statutory prohibition of mixing.

Mr. THORSON: I do not think that the amended form of the section makes clear the intention of the committee. It would appear that the permission to mix is withdrawn during the interval between now and August 1, 1930. I think the section would be much clearer if it were put in this form:

Private elevators when so licensed may carry on the business of mixing grain and grades of grain, provided that on and after the first day of August, 1930, there shall be no mixing of the grain of the grades mentioned and defined in section 96. . . . .

That will continue the permission to mix in the meantime and will prohibit the mixing of the classified grains from and after the first of August, 1930. I think if the section were recast as I have suggested it would make the intention of the committee clearer than does the proposed amendment.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, I submit this can be made perfectly clear to the committee if I may be permitted to read the section in its amended form:

From and after the first day of August, 1930, subsection (1) of section 140 of the said act from and including the first word thereof down to and including the word "aforesaid," in the tenth line thereof is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

There would be no repeal of that part of section 140 which permits mixing until that date. Then section 140 would read:

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this act the board shall, subject to the approval of the governor in council, make provision for licensing and regulating private elevators and to determine the conditions under which the grain handled by such elevators may be weighed and inspected. Such elevators shall in the course of their operations be bound only to observe such regulations as may be made by the board as aforesaid;

(1a) Private elevators when so licensed may carry on the business of mixing grain and grades of grain except grain of the grades mentioned and defined in section ninety-six of the act under the heading "Spring wheat" and more particularly described therein as No. 1 Manitoba hard, No. 1 Manitoba northern, No. 2 Manitoba northern and No. 3 Manitoba northern.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the section as drafted by the law officers is perfectly clear with the addition of the date at the beginning of the section. It is quite obvious that the intention of the committee is being carried out. I think my hon. friend realizes that is is simply a deferred statutory repeal. That is what it really is.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. BROWN: I should like to call the attention of the committee to what has already been under discussion with regard to sections 31 and 18. The only authority given in the report was to change subsection 2 of section 193, which reads as section 31 reads in the bill now before the house. The committee gave no authority for the change indicated in section 18, that subsection 7 of section 83 of the act should be amended by striking out the words "or Edmonton." There was no authority for that change.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): When the matter was before the committee the principle of compulsory inspection in Moose Jaw was voted on, and not the order point as suggested in the amendment. And it was carried in the committee on agriculture. The same amendment was carried once in the committee and once in the house.

Mr. MALCOLM: In reply to my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) I may say that I take full responsibility for the insertion of section 18 in the bill. The committee apparently made exactly the same mistake as the hon. member for Rosetown. Members discussed the principle covered in section 18 and made a recommendation in accordance with section 31. After considering the discussion in committee the law officer of the crown suggested that we amend the section which the committee discussed. Therefore the amendment was included in the bill under section 18.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. MALCOLM: Now.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I move, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee with instructions to delete section 18.

Mr. MALCOLM: And to restore section 31?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. MALCOLM: I submit to the hon. member that the deletion of section 18 as well as section 31 would indeed create a hardship for the farmers of Saskatchewan who want to have grain inspected at Moose Jaw. I would point out that voluntary inspection has been practised at Moose Jaw for some years; that the railways have made certain provisions to carry out voluntary inspection; that the wheat pools have established their offices so that inspection may take place there; and that there are advantages in connection with inspection at Moose Jaw. When any shipper feels that he will not have an opportunity for re-inspection if his grain is inspected at Winnipeg. One of the advantages of inspection at Moose Jaw, as pointed out by a former member for that constituency, Mr. Hopkins, when the question was first discussed, was that a farmer who wished to appeal from a Winnipeg inspection had very little time in which to get his appeal before the board, whereas if the inspection was made at Moose Jaw and he wished to appeal, he had ample time to have the appeal made before the grain reached Fort William. I do not think my hon. friend wishes to withdraw from the farmers of the west the privileges of inspection at Moose Jaw.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I had no intention whatever of doing that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But you voted twice to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It was to change the amendment.

Mr. MALCOLM: If the hon. member would change his amendment to provide for the deletion of section 18 and the restoration of section 31, he would be doing exactly what is desired.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am quite willing to do that. I would change the amendment accordingly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BROWN: May I ask, on this point, what difference there is in the situation as between Moose Jaw and Saskatoon? A good deal has been said about Moose Jaw but little about Saskatoon. The same situation does not prevail at Saskatoon to-day as at Moose Jaw, and this is simply a move to introduce into Saskatoon the custom that has prevailed at Moose Jaw. I am opposed to the principle of introducing anything into the grain act simply for the sake of giving consideration to a certain town. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the principle of doing anything whatever that will help the producers, but I do not believe in establishing inspection points or order points for the sake of helping some particular town. I may be wrong, but I believe that for some time there has been voluntary inspection at Moose Jaw. It might possibly be well that this practice should continue, and it might also be well, now that it has become established, that it be made compulsory. On that point I do not feel strongly. But I understand that the situation in Saskatoon is somewhat different; the only inspection that takes place there is made for the sake of milling institutions established at that point. While, therefore, confirming the practice that already obtains at Moose Jaw, we are proposing to extend it to Saskatoon, and I fancy there is a little rivalry between Saskatoon and Moose Jaw: one does not want to see the other get something which it does not enjoy itself.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely my hon. friend will admit that the grain going into the elevator at Saskatoon is inspected at the government elevator.

Mr. BROWN: I was not perfectly clear on the situation at Saskatoon and I am willing to hear further evidence on that point. One important point in this matter is this: these inspection points seem to have been established at the demand of local interests. What, therefore, is to hinder representatives from other communities—from Weyburn, say, or Brandon, or any other of a number of points —coming along and demanding that inspection points or order points be established at these places? It is altogether too soon to establish a point at Saskatoon. The time is coming when we shall have grain shipped through Hudson bay, and in that event Saskatoon is much too far west for the inspection of grain going through that port. In my opinion the whole question has been inadequately considered from the beginning; we have rushed into the matter of establishing order points and inspection points without taking a proper view of the whole situation, and the demand of local communities have been considered rather than the situation as a whole as affecting the producers.

[Mr. Brown.]

Mr. CAHAN: Suppose section 31 stands as it is now: cannot voluntary inspection of grain take place at Saskatoon in the future as it has done in the past?

Mr. MALCOLM: I might tell my hon. friend that if section 31 stands as amended, then a farmer can order his grain inspected at either Moose Jaw or Saskatoon. There is a small inspection staff at Saskatoon and it has been represented to the inspection department that in view of the fact that grain will move via Saskatoon for the Hudson Bay line, a man should have the privilege of ordering his grain inspected at that point as well as at Moose Jaw. It has been held also, as I pointed out to my hon. friend from Rosetown, that there is often difficulty in securing enough time for appeal, when the grain is inspected at Winnipeg. It moves very rapidly to the head of the lakes and after the farmer is informed as to the grade which has been given his grain, before his request for a reinspection can be complied with the grain may be unloaded at Fort William. Therefore the privilege of primary inspection at either Saskatoon or Moose Jaw is a distinct advantage, and I would suggest to the house that making both Saskatoon and Moose Jaw order points and permitting voluntary inspection at these points can be nothing but a privilege to the producer.

The question involved in section 18, which was discussed in committee and discussed in this house, is as to whether or not it should be compulsory for all grain to be inspected there, and inasmuch as the mover of the amendment has agreed that the bill be not now read a third time but be referred back to the committee with instructions to delete section 18 and restore section 31 to its original form, I am entirely in favour of the amendment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee has already refused compulsory inspection at these two points, and if voluntary inspection is also denied them we will practically prohibit the use of Fort Churchill at all, after an elevator is built there, except by taking the grade with no chance of reinspection or survey. There must be some place, somewhere, to have an inspection service where a grade may be given before the grain is taken to Fort Churchill, otherwise it will go straight through without an opportunity being given for reinspection or anything else. I think that is most unfair, particularly to a province which grows about 60 per cent of the grain grown throughout all Canada.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am under the impression that two members of the government are not giving us a true interpretation of the actual circumstances. I am under the impression that Moose Jaw and Saskatoon have been and still are voluntary inspection points.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, that is true.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Then the amendment to section 31, deleting the words "Moose Jaw and Saskatoon" and "Moose Jaw or Saskatoon" restores section 193 of the act to exactly the same form in which it now appears, so we will continue to have Moose Jaw and Saskatoon as voluntary inspection points.

Mr. VALLANCE: Dealing with this Moose Jaw inspection point, by the very act of making it a voluntary point we imply that something can be gained by the producer by making use of this voluntary privilege; there must be something in it or we would not be using it. Representing as I do that portion of Saskatchewan to the west and north of Moose Jaw, through which comes all the wheat grown in that part of Saskatchewan, it is my opinion that this inspection should be compulsory, because those of us who have used the voluntary system have found it to our advantage to do so, and if it is good for those of us who have taken advantage of the voluntary system I do not see why it would not be good for all that portion of the country if it were made compulsory. It is the producer for whom I am concerned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the debate proceeds further I might say that I have received from the hon. member for Mackenzie an amended amendment. His first amendment reads:

That the bill be not now read a third time but referred back to the committee with instructions to delete section 18 therein.

The second amendment, which the hon. member desires to substitute for the first, adds the following words:

—and to restore section 31 to its original form.

The hon. member should withdraw his first amendment before submitting the second, if the house gives him permission to do so.

Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. IRVINE: I want to know exactly what we are doing before this action is taken.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will explain to the hon. gentleman. The hon. member who moved the original amendment, moved it in the following words:

That the bill be not now read a third time but be referred back to the committee with instructions to delete section 18 therein.

Now the hon. gentleman desires to add the following words:

—and to restore section 31 to its original form.

He must first obtain permission to withdraw the original amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: I think I understand the procedure but I want to know from the minister what will happen—

Mr. SPEAKER: First of all we should settle this question.

Mr. IRVINE: If this question is settled I will not have anything to say.

Mr. SPEAKER: I want to know from the house if the hon. member shall have leave to withdraw his first amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: I understand that but I want to know whether or not I should give him leave to do so, and that depends upon the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: Then the hon. gentleman can put his question.

Mr. IRVINE: I want to know from the minister whether, if the section is allowed to stand as it was amended in committee a few moments ago, that implies that compulsory inspection of wheat will be not permitted, and whether that will leave the section as it was in the original act. If that is the case, why should the first amendment be altered?

Mr. MALCOLM: For my hon. friend's information and to make it clear to the committee I think perhaps we had better take our copies of the Canada Grain Act and refer to section 193, which section 31 of Bill No. 359 proposes to amend. Section 31 is as follows:

Subsection two of section one hundred and ninety-three of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

"(2) To the exetent to which any provisions of subsection one of this section are stated therein to apply to Winnipeg or St. Boniface, such provisions shall also, to the like extent, apply to Calgary, Edmonton, Fort William, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, and in every such case—

And so forth. If hon. members will turn to section 193 of the Canada Grain Act and read the privileges which are now given to Winnipeg, St. Boniface, Calgary and Edmonton, and which it is proposed to extend to Saskatoon and Moose Jaw, I think they will realize what an order point means. Section 193 is as follows:

Grain in carloads offered for shipment to points in Canada may be consigned "to be held at Winnipeg for orders" en route to its destination on the direct line of transit on the following conditions:—

(a) The shipper shall pay to the agent of the transportation company at the point of shipment the sum of three dollars per car;

(b) The shipper shall endorse upon the consignment note and shipping receipt "this car to be held at Winnipeg for orders" with the name and address of some company, firm or person resident in Winnipeg, who will accept advice from the carrier of its arrival in Winnipeg and who will give to the carrier instructions on behalf of the owner for its disposal;

(c) Twenty-four hours free time after such advice of arrival shall be allowed the advisee in which to dispose of the property;

(d) If the carrier, within the twenty-four hours free time referred to in pararaph (c), receives written directions for delivery within its Winnipeg-St. Boniface terminals, such delivery shall be made to team tracks or industrial spurs or sidings within its own terminals upon payment of the current grain rate in effect to Winnipeg or St. Boniface at the time of shipment, and surrender of the bill of lading;

(e) The carrier may, in the absence of written instructions from the advisee for the disposal of the grain within the free time mentioned in paragraph (c), forward the grain to its destination as consigned;

(f) Grain shipped "to be held at Winnipeg for orders" delivered in Winnipeg or St. Boniface, as provided in paragraph (d), may be sent forward to any point in Canada within six months of its receipt at Winnipeg or St. Boniface—

We have a government elevator at Moose Jaw and one at Saskatoon, but at present they are not order points. A farmer cannot order his grain held at either of those points, but under this amendment subsection 2 provides that they will be given the same privileges as are now extended to Winnipeg, St. Boniface, Calgary and Edmonton. The creation of an order point has nothing to do with the compulsory inspection of grain; it provides that the farmer may have the privilege of ordering a car held for diversion at a later date.

Mr. IRVINE: I thank the minister for his explanation and I withdraw my objection to the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment moved by Mr. Campbell will read:

That the bill be not now read a third time but be referred to the committee with instructions that they have power to delete section 18 and to restore section 31 to its original form.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The amendment is that they have power to do that; that does not mean that they must do that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is an order.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is parliamentary parlance; if they have the power they may or may not do it.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Does it compel the committee to act?

Mr. MALCOLM: With instructions.

Amendment agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Bill No. 359 has been referred back to the committee with power to delete section 18 and to restore section 31 to its original form.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Mr. Chairman, I did not think that it was going to be necessary to debate this matter at any length, but this is a matter which could be discussed for hours as it is one which has been before this parliament for the past seventeen years. This matter first came before parliament during the days of the Union government. Prior to that time inspection at Moose Jaw was recommended by the then chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners, Doctor Megill. This matter had been considered by the board on many occasions and it was brought into the house and the section was amended in 1925-26. It was passed by the house but in the break-up of parliament which occurred that year it was dropped in the Senate. On May 25, 1926, the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce stated to the press that pursuant to an order of the board, approved by the governor in council, Moose Jaw was to be made a grain inspection point. At that time the government thought that they were providing full inspection at the city of Moose Jaw for the surrounding country. On August 1, 1927, at the start of the crop year, an inspection point was established there. All grain was compulsorily inspected for thirty days, but the grain trade, through the Northwest Grain Dealers Association, objected to this inspection. No farmer, or no farmers' organization objected to this compulsory inspection, but the grain dealers were able to get a ruling from the Justice department that in order to make Moose Jaw a compulsory inspection point it would be necessary to amend section 18. In 1928 the committee on agriculture passed these amendments to Bill No. 188 by a vote of 16 to 8. The bill was then brought before the house but because the committee had not agreed to certain other sections of the act the bill was dropped in the house and did not become law. This matter was brought up again this year in the committee on agriculture and an amendment to section 18 was voted upon and carried, and it was then brought to the house.

We are asking that the farmers of Saskatchewan be given the same advantages at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon as the farmers of Alberta have at Calgary and Edmonton, and the same advantages as the farmers of Manitoba have at Winnipeg, and nothing more. We are asking the privilege of having our grain inspected as close as possible to the point of production.

Mr. SPENCER: There is nothing to stop you having your grain inspected at those points if you so desire.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I beg my hon. friend's pardon, but there is. When the railway companies find that it is inconvenient to set out a car to be inspected they pull the grain right on through. That has been done repeatedly and although orders have been given to have the grain inspected at those points, the railroad companies have not carried them out.

Mr. RALSTON: I think the committee should proceed regularly; is there a motion before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN: No, there is no motion before the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: Should not there be a motion so that we may proceed regularly? This bill has been referred to the committee advising the committee that it has power to delete section 18 and restore section 31, but no motion has been made to that effect.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I beg to move:

That section 18 be deleted from the bill and that section 31 be restored.

Mr. MALCOLM: May I suggest to my hon. friend that it might be advisable to make two motions rather than one. If he wishes to move the deletion of section 18 first, that would be quite in order, or if he wishes to move the restoration of section 31, that would be quite in order. But I suggest that he should permit members who are in favour of the deletion of section 18 to vote on that point and those who are in favour of the restoration of section 31 to vote on that. Under a double motion it is difficult to get a proper vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I ask unanimous consent to the withdrawal of my motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I beg to move:

That section 18 be deleted.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Before the interruption I was discussing the question of inspection in Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Mackenzie appears to be a great deal more exercised over the rights of certain grain men such as the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association than he is over the rights of the farmers of Saskatchewan. Compulsory inspection at Moose Jaw is for the benefit of the farmer, has been asked for by the farmer and has been objected to by nobody but the organized grain trade, not including the pools. The pools have asked for inspection there; in fact, they have used inspection there to the extent of 100 per cent. Every car of theirs that goes through Moose Jaw is inspected there at the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the pools are using it to the extent of 100 per cent, what is my hon. friend objecting to?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): There are in Saskatchewan, besides the pool, other farmers whom I represent and whom probably my hon. friend does also.

Mr. CAMPBELL: All those farmers have the privilege of having their grain inspected.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): They have the privilege, but they are not taking advantage of it at the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The only thing is that they are not compelled to do so at the present time.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): All I am asking for is compulsion.

Mr. COOTE: One hundred per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The pools have this 100 per cent inspection in Moose Jaw. I may say to the hon. member for Macleod that that includes his Alberta grain as well. In Moose Jaw grain from the Saskatchewan pool as well as grain from the Alberta pool is inspected. A great deal of money has been saved in this way to the farmers of Saskatchewan, according to the statement given to us by the executive of the pool at Regina. No doubt a great deal of money has also been saved to the farmers of Alberta for the same reason. Still my hon. friends object to this proposition although the pools are in favour of it and the organized trade or the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association are against it. No farmer has ever made any objection unless it be my hon. friends in the house.

The question in section 18 is compulsory inspection. The question in section 31 is car order. They are two different propositions. The car order point gives the man an opportunity of having his grain routed from the order point to any terminal that he wants it ordered to. Once that grain arrives in Moose Jaw, if it is an order point, he will be able to order it to Vancouver, Fort William, Minneapolis or Fort Churchill. That certainly should be an advantage to the farmer in the province of Saskatchewan. The farmers from all over southern, central and north central Saskatchewan, as well as the farmers of eastern Alberta, have asked for this for many years. Some of the members in that corner of the house, before I had the privilege of representing my constituency in parliament, went to the then Minister of Trade and Commerce and asked that this be done. Among them were the hon. member for Red Deer, the hon. member for Swift Current and several others at that time in the Progressive group. This matter has been agreed to by the Conservative, Liberal and Progressive parties.

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It has been passed by the House of Commons. My hon. friend must know that fifteen members of his party formed a committee in 1924 and went to the then Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to this matter.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend forgets that the whole house and the government had agreed to my amendment before it was voted on this morning, yet my hon. friend voted against it this morning.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend will probably vote against me this afternoon.

Mr. MANION: I intend to do so.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Seeing that all parties in the house and the government have agreed to this, I think it should pass and the amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment carry that section 18 be deleted?

Amendment agreed to; Yeas, 49; Nays, 45.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I rise to a point of order. Seven hon. members came in during the progress of the vote. They were not in the chamber when the question was put. Have they a right to vote?

The CHAIRMAN: They have a right to vote in committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand that in committee we have the right to do that. I was here when the motion was put.

[Mr. J. G. Ross.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not refer to my hon. friend.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was here when the motion was put.

The CHAIRMAN: Hon. gentlemen have the right to enter the chamber and vote when we are in committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg to move that section 31 of the bill be restored to its original form.

Motion agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION GRESHAM GUARANTEE AND CASUALTY COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): I would draw the attention of the government to the second report to the policyholders and creditors of the Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company, now in liquidation, and ask if any steps are being taken to reimburse those agents who according to the suggestion reinsured all policyholders under this company?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not here at the moment, but I shall bring the question of my hon. friend to his attention so that he may give him an answer.

ELIGIBILITY OF WOMEN TO SIT IN THE SENATE

On the orders of the day:

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I would ask the government what explanation they have to offer of an editorial which appears in this morning's Ottawa Journal which states that the Hon. Lucien Cannon is going over to England to represent the government and appear in opposition to the appeal to the privy council from the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada last year that women are not eligible for appointment to the Canadian Senate.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Shame!

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): As my hon. friend from Southeast Grey knows, this is an appeal from the judgment given by the supreme court on a reference that was made to the court in order to clear up that point. The Department of Justice has given a ruling which dates back to many years before I had anything to do with the department, and this question is now before the court for a decision on a reference by the Attorney General of Canada. Of course, the Attorney General of Canada must be represented before the court. The women of Canada who are interested in the matter will have their representatives there, and the Solicitor General will have to be present in order to see that justice is done. I do not think he will be so aggressive as the Journal seems to suggest. I may tell my hon. friend that so far as I am concerned I am in sympathy with her views in the matter, and if the judgment of the court is antagonistic to those views I am willing to do my part to change the constitution.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why don't you go over there in his place?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend must see that I am quite busy here answering questions.

Mr. POULIOT: I would suggest that the first appointee of the government, in case the judgment of the supreme court is reversed, should be our charming colleague the member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail).

LUNCHEON HOUR IN DEPARTMENTAL OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): May I draw the attention of the Secretary of State to regulation 89 of the Civil Service Commission which provides that one and one-half hours shall be allowed daily to the civil servants for luncheon, from 12.30 p.m. to 2 p.m. During those hours nobody is left in any of the departmental offices. This is not the case in other countries. At Washington, for instance, the regulations distinctly provide that no departmental office shall be left during the luncheon hour without someone in it to attend to telephone messages and other inquiries. That is also the practice in every large business office in this country. Those are now the only hours at which the members can do business with the departments, and I think someone should be on duty in these offices during the luncheon hour.

CALGARY FLOOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that a short time ago I presented to the department a telegram from the city of Calgary urging the pressing necessity of assistance being given in connection with the washing away of the government's boulevard and other city property by the recent flood. May I ask what the government is going to do about it?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): My hon. friend was kind enough to bring to my attention the telegram which he had received. The matter is not without its difficulties, but it is receiving very serious consideration by officials of the department.

PROPOSED CHIGNECTO CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT K. SMITH (Cumberland): I should like to ask the acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Robb) or the government, or some member of the government, when the Department of Railways and Canals intend to commence their surveys and investigations into the proposed canal across the isthmus of Chignecto. By a resolution, adopted many months ago, the house unanimously concurred in this matter. The season for engineering work is rapidly passing, and the citizens of eastern Canada are uneasy over the prolonged delay, as indicated by a resolution of the associated boards of trade of Cumberland county, passed at a meeting held at Amherst on June 4 last, urging immediate action and asking that the promise made in this house be implemented without further delay, copies of said resolution having been forwarded to three ministers of the crown, myself and others.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I will call my hon. friend's question to the attention of the acting minister.

WAR REPARATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. K. LADNER (Vancouver South): May I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) when it is the intention of the government to pay the reparations claims?

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): As soon as the supplementary estimates are voted the department will undertake to pay the claims.

LABOUR DEPARTMENT ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I see the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) in the house. Could he tell me when the estimates for his department will come down?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am afraid they cannot come down before Monday.

Mr. MANION: Thanks. I saw the Minister of Labour in the house and I wanted to know when we might expect his estimates.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

National revenue—salaries, $745,840; contingencies, $60,000.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Mr. Chairman, I notice this vote represents an increase of $46,970 as compared with the vote for last year. I am at a loss to know why the expenses of the department should be increasing in view of the fact that the royal commission on customs and excise recommended a decrease in the number of ports, outports and preventive stations. I find the following on page 18 of the report:

> The evidence discloses that at the close of the fiscal year March 31, 1926, there were in Canada 148 ports, 358 out-ports, 219 preventive stations, and 48 post offices where revenue was collected, making a grand total of 773, or excluding the post offices, 725.

In the next clause the commission state:

> In our view, this number is unnecessarily large and might be very materially reduced without detriment to the public service or any inconvenience to business interests.

Further on will be found the following:

> The reduction in the number of ports would to a considerable extent centralize the appraisal work and place it in the hands of competent appraisers, to the great advantage of the revenue.

The royal commission, after a thorough investigation, tell us that if the number of ports were reduced there would be no detriment to the public service, no inconvenience to the business interests, and there would be a great advantage to the revenue. I do not know whether the department has carried out this recommendation or not. If it has been carried out, and the number of ports has been reduced, then I fail to see any justification for the increase of $46,970. I presume the minister will have some explanation in reference to this point.

I desire also for a few minutes to deal with the matter of the clearance of liquor-laden vessels destined for the United States. In the debate on this subject which took place several days ago five members from this corner of the house were unanimous in their opposition to the granting of clearance to such vessels. Some of the facts adduced by the minister tended to give a rather misleading impression because some other facts in relation thereto were not stated. In general, his address might be summed up as more or less tolerating the clearance of liquor-laden vessels to the United States. One member from the subgroup on the government side also took part in that debate, and while he did not condone the clearance of such vessels he did not come out very strongly in opposition to the practice. He seemed to censure the United States for not doing all they might do. I was rather struck by the very mild tone of the speech made by the one member of the official opposition who participated in that debate. It was very much in contrast with the speech he made some three years ago on the administration of the customs department. He did not exhibit nearly the same force and vim in declaring his disapprobation of the practice of the government at this time as he did on the former occasion.

Now, the Minister of National Revenue has stated, and I think he was quite fair, that the United States government asked the Canadian government to discontinue sending reports of vessels when they were ready to clear from this side for the American side. I think that was the statement made, or something to that effect.

Mr. EULER: Only at one point, Windsor.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Well, it is quite clear from the treaty passed in 1924 that such information could be given to the American government by our government; but we must also bear in mind that that information was given at the expense of the receiving government. The information was given by telephone or telegram at the expense of the receiving government, the United States paying for the cost. It would look as though their asking to discontinue the submission of such information was very damaging evidence against them. But this is the point that the minister failed to make clear to the committee: It was brought out in the conference held in Ottawa last January that in five thousand cases information had been given to the American authorities, and an investigation having been made into the said cases it was found that the names of vessels given were fictitious, the names of the owners of the vessels were fictitious, and the addresses of such owners did not exist. In five thousand cases of information sent across it was absolutely false, not because our Canadian authorities purposely sent false information but because the rum runners gave such false information to the Canadian authorities, who had no alternative except to send the information to the American authorities at the latter's expense. Can we find any fault with the American authorities for asking that such information be henceforth dispensed with? It meant an expense to them and was absolutely valueless from the standpoint of doing anything to curtail the rum running business.

Another point was mentioned by the minister, and I think perhaps he was fair in his statement. That was to the effect that not more than from 2 to 5 per cent of the liquor used in the United States was of Canadian origin. That assertion, I believe, was based on a statement made by General Andrews, who was in charge of prohibition in the United States during the year 1926. His statement was, I believe, that not more than from 5 to 10 per cent of the total liquor was of Canadian origin. Then Major Mills, who was formerly in charge of prohibition enforcement in New York, stated that 98 per cent of the supply in the United States was produced within the borders of that country. So that I do not question the minister's statement in view of these statements made by these two gentlemen.

There is a further statement which I should like to give to the house, and this also was brought out at the conference held in Ottawa last January. The statement was made by Mr. Doran, who is now Commissioner of Prohibition in the United States, that in eighteen laboratories in the United States, 100,000 samples of seized liquor were examined in an effort to determine the origin of the liquor in such samples. I am neither chemist nor scientist enough to know how they arrived at their conclusions as to the origin of the liquor in these samples, but I have their conclusions as given at that conference, and they stated that in the great lakes and Detroit section not over 2 per cent of the liquor in these samples related back to the industrial alcohol and other forms of control liquor in the United States. And in the New England states, in New York, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and in such places the figure was not more than from 10 to 15 per cent. The statement was further made that in the southwest section of the country the percentage was quite negligible. That is almost a direct contradiction of the statements made by these two other American gentlemen some years ago, General Andrews and Major Mills. I am putting this statement on record because it is just as valuable, made by a prohibition officer of the present day, as the statements made by prohibition officers of a previous year.

There was another statement made by the minister to the effect that the American efforts to curtail rum running were not very pronounced; that is to say, they seemed more or less to tolerate the situation as it exists. Judging from the evidence given at the conference in Ottawa, it would appear that they have been putting forth a strenuous effort. For instance, I have before me the figures in regard to the seizures that were made in the six months beginning July 1 and ending December 31, 1928. The seizures made by the American customs officers in connection with illegal shipments into the United States were these: During that six month period there were 117 boats seized; 375 automobiles; 46,076 cases of beer; 4,576 cases of whiskey. The total number of seizures in that period was 2,283. I have also the figures for the two fiscal years ended June 30, 1928. During that two year period there were 634 boats seized; 964 automobiles carrying liquor from boats on the American side; 46,594 cases of beer; 6,644 barrels of beer and 16,360 cases of whiskey.

In view of these figures it would seem that our American friends have been making a considerable effort to curtail the rum running business from Canada over to the United States.

The minister rightly stated that a good deal had been done by the Canadian officials to curtail at least the rum running business. He told us that the export docks along the Windsor frontier had been reduced from forty to ten. That, perhaps, will curtail the business; at least, it will keep it within a narrower channel so that it may be more easily checked. I am not so sure that it will curtail actual shipments to any great extent. The minister also outlined the restrictions with regard to bonded warehouses, which warehouses are to disappear entirely on June 11, 1930. No doubt that will have a salutory effect on the shipment of such cargoes. He pointed out also—or someone in debate pointed out—that the treaty negotiated to permit seizure within the twelve mile limit had a very beneficial effect. And by the way, I believe it came out in the conference in Ottawa that the effect of that treaty was almost entirely to eliminate rum running along the great lakes and along the seaboard. The conference held in Ottawa, to which I have made reference, was a means of airing the differences between the two countries, and while an agreement was not reached, yet perhaps we are safe in saying that some ground has been gained. But in spite of all the efforts that have been made, in spite of the conference that has been held, the business seems to be flourishing. For the year ended March 31, 1926 the value of liquor exported to the United States, upon which duty was paid, was $12,572,011. For the year ending March 31, 1928, the value was $18,380,070, showing an increase of over 46 per cent, and that represents only the liquor on which duty has been paid; it is quite possible that a considerable quantity got across without paying duty. We also know from the debate which took place a few days ago that the government has collected through the excise tax of $9 per gallon a total of $7,800,000, and perhaps that has a considerable bearing on the attitude of the government towards this business. I am not going to make the statement that it has or has not any bearing, but it is quite possible.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understood my hon. friend to say a moment ago that some liquor might have gone across the border without duty being paid. Would he suggest how that could happen?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I said it was quite possible that some might have gotten over without the duty being paid. No doubt we have stills manufacturing liquor, in addition to the licensed distilleries.

[Mr. Carmichael.]

Mr. EULER: They would not pay duty anyway.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: But liquor would get across without duty being paid. Perhaps our friends in eastern Canada are so much against such an evil that they may not have stills, but I know we have had stills in western Canada which made liquor illegally.

To give my own personal point of view in regard to this matter I may state that I do not hold that Carrie Nation view which was exemplified several years ago in the United States; I am not one of those ardent prohibitionists who think if you look at liquor, smell liquor, handle liquor or even taste liquor you are going to eternal perdition. I do not hold any such views at all, but I do hold that the whole business is an evil tree which does not bear good fruit, I care not where it is carried on or by whom; its influence is not good. Therefore I take this opportunity of registering my protest against the practice of our Canadian government in more or less tolerating the business; I would not say we encourage it but certainly the government does tolerate it and I want to protest very definitely against that state of affairs.

The viewpoint of the United States, of course, is that they can be helped very considerably if our government will refuse clearance to these vessels, and I do not look upon that as being an unreasonable request. I am of the opinion that perhaps the Americans themselves could go a step further than they have gone as yet. I hold no brief for them; I do not say they have done all they can do; I am of the opinion that they could do very much more, and rather agree with the opinion advanced by our Canadian delegates to the conference here in Ottawa some time ago, which was to the effect that if the Americans would require registry of all vessels of every size and tonnage, that would help a great deal in curtailing the rum running business. Then they would be able to check up all their own vessels. I believe it came out at that conference that practically 100 per cent of the vessels in the business were owned by Americans.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to ask if it has not been stated within the last few days that all these vessels are registered, just as automobiles are registered. If I might make an interjection, I would venture to say that if this is the case the argument to which my hon. friend is alluding has been very much over-emphasized.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am not sure whether the hon. member expects the minister to answer now; I presume he will deal with that point later. The evidence brought out last January, however, was to the effect that at present vessels of five tons or under are not registered, and the reason advanced by the American delegates to that conference as to why this was not done was that such registry would interfere to a large extent with small pleasure boats which were running back and forth. I do not attach much weight to that argument; in view of the fact that our government requires the registry of all Canadian vessels of all sizes, I see no reason why the American government could not adopt the same practice. Then we had a number of petitions presented to this house this session in connection with this question; I have not taken time to count them but I am sure there were scores and perhaps hundreds sent in. As a matter of fact the minister himself presented petitions from different organizations calling upon the government to refuse clearance to vessels laden with liquor for the United States, but I noticed that every time he presented such a petition he had a smile on his face.

It was stated during the course of the last debate on this subject that the report of the customs committee recommended the refusal of clearances to these vessels. The royal commission, in its report, concurred in the report of the customs committee and stated that smuggling could be considerably curtailed if these clearances were refused. I think it was also stated that the Prime Minister of this country, during his election campaign of 1926, stated that he was prepared to carry out the recommendations of the royal commission to the limit. I think perhaps he obtained a great many votes in Ontario because of that declaration and I have wondered just how many of these votes he will retain in view of the fact that he has failed to carry out what evidently was a very definite pledge to the electors of Ontario.

I am of the opinion that Canada would not lower herself nationally or internationally if she were to take the attitude that this business should be curtailed so far as officialdom can do it. By so doing Canada certainly would be discouraging a business which is not beneficial to the country beyond the small revenue derived from it. If we were to place on the other side of the scale the evils which come from the class of people engaged in this business who frequent our borders and get over into Canada, such people as smugglers, gangsters, rum runners, hi-jackers and racketeers—

Mr. SPENCER: What is a hi-jacker?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I will have to consult a dictionary; one hon. member has suggested that he is a bad actor anyway, and I will take it for granted that he is a bad actor who is in the business for the money he may get out of it. We have such people, as well as murderers, flourishing along our borders like the proverbial green bay tree. Surely this is not a business of which our country is proud; surely after all that old Biblical statement, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," stands good to-day just as it did when it was made. That holds good for the individual as well; the individual who goes out after great riches may get them, but if he loses his good name what has he left? He has a few paltry dollars, but what good are they? The same applies to a nation, and we should take some pride in our good name. I used to take pride in the good name of Canada but I feel ashamed when I am approached and written to by individuals living in the United States who throw it up to me that we, the legislators of Canada, allow such a business to be carried on. I feel ashamed when I think of myself as being one of the legislators of this Dominion of Canada.

I take this opportunity, therefore, to register my very decided protest against this whole business. The whole business is bad and no good will come from it. The few million dollars of revenue which we obtain from it may look rather enticing, and perhaps it is enticing to the government, but I am rather of the opinion that if we did away with the business and curtailed the rough element of mankind which is flourishing along our borders, we would be moving a step forward in the retention of our good name; we would be washing our national hands clean of the whole business. The government asked for a full discussion on this matter, and I would like to urge upon them that they reconsider it. I would like to see the Americans required to register every vessel and I would like to see our Canadian government refuse a clearance to any vessel laden with liquor for the United States.

Mr. COOTE: The practice of granting clearance papers to ships engaged in smuggling liquor to the United States was discussed in this house a couple of weeks ago, but I did not have an opportunity at that time of taking part in the debate, and I desire to take advantage of this vote to say a few words in regard to this matter. I do not want to approach the subject from the point of view of the United States, but desire simply to keep in mind the effect which this practice has upon the people of Canada. In my opinion, the smuggling of liquor is a dirty, low-down, nefarious business. The practice is made easy because we grant clearance papers to the boats engaged in the smuggling of liquor. We encourage the location in Canada of a lawless element which is a distinct liability to this country, a class of people who would kill for money, a class of people very well described in those excellent articles which appeared last winter in MacLean's Magazine. It seems to me that the practice of granting clearance papers to these ships is carried on largely for the benefit of the brewers and distillers of Canada, many of whom in past years evaded every tax which they possibly could and, in some cases, when their books were required by a royal commission, they were destroyed.

I was disappointed at the position which the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) took some days ago. He suggested that we should not stop granting these clearances to these rum runners because the United States preventive officers were not doing all they should to apprehend the law breakers. He told of how the Canadian officers notified the United States officers whenever clearence papers were granted and the boat was about to sail, and I could not help but think that it must be very interesting indeed to those Canadian customs authorities to watch the liquor smugglers dodge the American officers as well as the officers of the Ontario government. The very fact that we do notify those authorities would lead one to believe that it is an improper thing for the government to grant clearances to the boats.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is in the treaty; that was in the agreement.

Mr. COOTE: The minister said that he had limited the number of docks at which clearances would be granted, and he seemed to think that that was an improvement. I could not help thinking how much better it would be for us to prohibit clearances at all docks. The minister suggested that if we should stop granting these clearances liquor would be smuggled out of the country anyway, but that seems to be taking it for granted that the distillers, brewers and bootleggers would defy the government of the country, and that seems to me to be the wrong attitude for us to take. I do not think the minister would suggest that we should repeal the law governing the importation and sale of narcotic drugs because a lot of men engaged in that business would not obey the law. The minister read a report made by one of his officers to the effect that no effort was being made by the United States preventive officers to apprehend these smugglers at one of their ports, but it is hard to harmonize that statement with the action of American officers in firing on Canadian boats and at times wounding not only the men engaged in the traffic but innocent parties as well.

Mr. EULER: I did not say that they made no effort whatever.

Mr. COOTE: Possibly I should correct that and say that the minister had said that they made very little effort. However, I gathered the impression from his remarks that they were making no effort. Only a few days ago the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) made rather a long speech in which he complained about the actions of one of the United States patrol boats; that they were too zealous in performing their duty—the notorious I'm Alone case. The minister also said that he was more interested in stopping smuggling into Canada than in preventing the smuggling of liquor into the United States. It would seem to me that this granting of clearances encourages smuggling into Canada; it encourages the location in Canada of a class of men who will not hesitate to smuggle goods into Canada if they can make a dollar out of it; it encourages the location in Canada of people of the very worst type; it brings into Canada a class of people who would not hesitate to commit murder if there was sufficient money in it. This whole business is bound to have a demoralizing effect upon the people living in the areas from which the exportation of liquor is being carried on, and we are encouraging the formation in certain parts of Canada of a gangster element such as they have in Chicago. I think it is time we stopped giving official cognizance to this whole nefarious business.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the minister give us some information about the correspondence which passed between his department and the American officials with reference to the discontinuance of notice to the collector of customs at Detroit?

Mr. EULER: I have not the correspondence here, but it came from one of the officials of the Department of the Secretary of State, asking that we discontinue telephoning information that clearances had been granted at Windsor. We fell in line with that request, but I can assure my hon. friend that it was perfectly formal. It was not made by the collector at Detroit, it was made by a representative of the American government.

Mr. CAMPBELL: When the minister was speaking a few days ago he gave the impression to the house and to the country that the American authorities were not very much concerned as to whether or not the information was received. Is it not a fact that before that time there was considerable correspondence between the two governments with regard to the proper indentification of these boats, and it was only when the department refused to grant the American requests and properly identify the boats, that they asked for the discontinuance of the giving of this information? Without the identification the information was useless.

Mr. EULER: I am very glad that the hon. member mentioned that matter. I have read of the same thing elsewhere, that the Department of National Revenue refused to give certain information which was asked for by the American authorities, and I desire to deny that absolutely. I will give my hon. friend information as to what we did. Under the treaty we were obligated to give certain information, and I will read the circular which was sent out by the Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise. It is dated October 30, 1926, and I may say that was very shortly before I took office. It reads:

> Memorandum No. 63.
> Additional instructions. When furnishing information with regard to vessels as provided in the above named treaty and regulations thereon, you are instructed to have such information include as far as possible the following:
> (1) Name of vessel.
> (2) Nationality of vessel.
> (3) Name and residence of master.
> (4) Registry or license number of vessel.
> (5) Kind of vessel.
> (6) Description of the vessel sufficiently correct to enable its identification.
> (7) Time of clearing.

Those were the instructions that were sent out, and as far as I know they were faithfully carried out until at Windsor we were requested to discontinue giving that information. We sent out a further circular under date of June 20, 1927, to all the collectors as follows:

> You are requested, when supplying information to United States officers under the above treaty, either by way of advance or immediate information or periodical reports to wherever possible include the particulars set out in supplement F to memorandum No. 63. This should be carefully observed.

That was very faithfully carried out. It is on record and I suppose my hon. friend has read the evidence of what took place at the conference between the officials of the two countries where our United States friends made the following statement. Admiral Billard, who led the United States delegation said:

> This treaty, as we all know, has not accomplished the purpose for which it was designed. In this regard, however, may I be permitted to add that Canada has fully and faithfully discharged the obligations which she assumed under the present treaty. The fact that the treaty has not tended to curb smuggling activities can in no wise be attributed to any failure on the part of your officials to perform their duties under the treaty.

If the United States authorities felt that our officers were not giving all the information that it was possible to give, why did they not accept the offer of the Canadian government to permit United States officials to come on the Canadian docks and send the reports themselves? They declined that offer.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am more tired than I can very well express at having to listen in the house to pussyfooting talk of this kind in regard to the subject under discussion. Surely the people of the United States are able to look after their own affairs without any assistance from us. They admit that practically ninety-seven per cent of the liquor consumed in the United States is brought in by their own people or produced in their own country; the small amount which they claim is brought in from Canada is but 2 per cent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask where that admission is made?

Mr. CANTLEY: I am sorry that I cannot hear my hon. friend and it does not make any great difference, as I propose to go on with my speech. Within the last three years a delegation from this parliament went over to one of the principal cities of the state of New York, and I see here some of the gentlemen who accompanied me on that occasion. We were entertained there by the mayor of the city, also by the chief of the fire department. Some of my friends whom I see before be now were regaled there with imported liquor, Johnny Walker whiskey, and other potent stimulants, dispensed by the mayor and other officials of that city.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The hon. member is looking at me and I deny the charge.

Mr. CANTLEY: It does not make any particular difference to my argument whether my hon. friend denies it or not. Further, I was not looking at him. I see an hon. gentleman in front of me who was there. That, however, is not the point. The point is that ninety per cent of the people of the United States have no intention of enforcing and do not want to enforce their own legislation. That is the real fact of the matter and I am rather tired of hearing in the house statements which in my opinion should not be made. Let the United States people skin their own skunk and enforce their own legislation. If they want restrictive laws of that character, let them enforce them. We have no obligation. We have gone far out of our way to demean ourselves in connection with enforcement of their legislation, which if they really want they cannot expect Canada to enforce. The statement made by the Minister of National Revenue the other day should have convinced any reasonable member that the government had taken every step they could in fairness or by way of international courtesy be called upon to take. Indeed I think they went perhaps too far in their efforts to aid people to enforce laws, many of whom say themselves they do not want enforced. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the minister to a matter to which I referred a year or perhaps two years ago, namely, the publication containing the customs tariff. I have under my hand a book of 300 odd pages. The index, instead of being printed at the beginning or at the end as in almost any other book, extends from page 129 to page 154. This publication is intitled "Office Consolidation". It is anything but a consolidation. It has been in use for twenty-one or perhaps twenty-three years. It contains appendices to the number of something like forty or fifty. There are in it schedules "A", "B", "C", "D", and I do not know how many more. There are in it items which come under two different tariff classifications and it is impossible for the ordinary man to tell under which classification some of the items come. It is a publication of which the government should be absolutely ashamed. Two years ago I appealed to the minister and also to the Minister of Finance to have some improvement made, and I remember very distinctly that they agreed with me and it was understood that some improvement would be made. There have been some slight changes made, but it is not a publication with which the government should be in any way satisfied. I appeal to the minister to have prepared a book setting forth the tariff schedules in such a way that the ordinary man can read and understand them and can see in a few minutes what the duty is on any item and the regulations in regard to it. Such a tariff is published by other countries and conditions in this country differ in no particular way from theirs. I would appeal to the minister to prepare a tariff publication properly arranged and indexed and as will be a credit to the government and the minister at the head of the department at the moment.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. EVANS: I do not think I would have spoken on this question had it not been for the impression the minister gave to the country the other day. Although it might be said that a good deal is being done, and we are doing what we can to aid the United States in the enforcement of their own laws, I do not agree with the hon. member for Pictou when he calls this kind of talk "pussyfooting." In fact, I am very glad to see, judging from the petitions that have been presented to the house from all parts of the country, that the conscience of the people is being aroused in regard to this matter. The United States have taken steps by means of a prohibition law to stamp out the liquor evil and I believe it is time Canada did the same thing. The liquor traffic is considered to be harmful even to health. During the war time we took steps to curb that evil. Since then, we have provincially tried to control the traffic, but we must admit that the result has been practically that the traffic has controlled the different governments. I think it is also true that our provincial administration of liquor laws has made prohibition in the United States very difficult to enforce. To-day we are up against a situation that calls for drastic measures. We are allowing the manufacture of the stuff, and its distribution is carried on by provincial governments. This government gives clearance to craft engaged in defying the laws of the United States. This is a difficult position to be in. The question has a moral as well as a financial side. When we give clearance to these rum-runners smuggling liquor into a country with a prohibition law we give practically a legal standing to the illicit traffic, and Canada as a nation is put in a most humiliating position as a law-breaker. At the same time we are one of the most vigorous members of the League of Nations. That is not a consistent position to occupy. I say again that it is an immoral act, and makes us all partners in what I term and what the hon. member for Southeast Grey has called a dirty business. The Minister of National Revenue says that the stuff will be imported into the United States anyway, and so far as I could gather from his argument the profits override any moral issue in which as a nation we become involved.

Mr. EULER: Will the hon. gentleman quote anything I said that will bear out that statement? What he says is absolutely wrong.

Mr. EVANS: I have not the minister's speech in front of me.

Mr. EULER: You will find nothing of the kind in it.

Mr. EVANS: There was the money question and what we were making out of it.

Mr. EULER: I never even mentioned the revenue that we had from it.

Mr. EVANS: I can remember figures being given.

Mr. EULER: I did not quote any such figures.

Mr. EVANS: There is one thing certain, that this house was given to understand that as the traffic will be carried on illegally, we might as well give clearance to these vessels and make it legal for them, and then nobody will be breaking the law. I am sorry to say that the Prime Minister himself was silent when this question was under debate in the house before, but perhaps we shall hear something from him yet. It is easy to understand from the attitude taken in this house and by the government why newspapers all over the country lauded the crew of the I'm Alone as heroes.

I want to ask, where do we stand on this question? Is it right to make this rum-running business a national undertaking, or is it not? Is Canada to follow the ideal that a Christian nation should have, or are we going to continue to break the law of a friendly country because of a profit of $9 a gallon on stuff that we ourselves have banned as a curse?

The minister, if I understood him aright, justified the granting of clearances because the United States themselves have not done all they could to stamp out the evil. Again let me ask, are we to take advantage of a situation that gives us an excuse to comply with the wishes of a number of men who are determined to make a profit out of the depraved tastes of their fellow men and are violating the laws of a friendly country? Are we to dishonour the laws of a friendly country simply because there is money in it? When Canada dishonours the laws of another nation can we expect our own people to obey our own laws? It is as true to-day as it was when Habakkuk uttered the words, that a city built and established on blood cannot last.

The liquor laws, the minister said, are in a class by themselves. No doubt they are. Too much they are viewed as if they did not have to be obeyed. The report of the royal commission on customs I think gives us the key to this line of thought. Governments through their election managers have put themselves under the power of the traffic and under the power of some of these law-breakers. It is the saddest thing on record in our history that a supposedly valid reason for this traffic can be found by members speaking in this house to-day.

It is most inconsistent for Canada to be a member of the League of Nations and enter into a convention with other nations for the suppression of the drug traffic, and then condone law-breaking in carrying one of the worst drugs there is to a foreign country, and give clearance to craft that engage in that triffic. I have no two standards for laws at all. I would class rum-running and bootleggging along with murder, robbery, rape or anything else. Again let me ask, has the report of the royal commission on customs become a dead letter at this early date? The I'm Alone incident ought to have shown us the danger into which an incident of that kind might land us. Indeed, had it not been for the quiet and steady temper of our people and the way in which they regarded this incident, I have no doubt that it might have landed us into an international difficulty of some moment. Doctor D. L. Ritchie, of Montreal, writing on the I'm Alone incident, has this to say:

> The great war itself broke out when Europe's dynamite dump had an assassin's bullet fired into if from Sarajevo. How great a matter a small fire kindles, especially when primitive impulses are stirred and the baser forces of the nations set themselves to make gain out of men's follies and woes.

Again he says:

> I repeat, Canada's attitude has been an example of the new patriotism, the common sense and true patriotism, a patriotism with moral standards that endeavours to keep everything in subjection to the imperial reason and confers with a nation before it begins to quarrel.

Further:

> It must be made clear that the day has one past when desperadoes can wrap themselves in any honourable flag and expect the might of which it is the symbol to hasten to their defence when caught in evil ways. Certainly to fly the British flag on anything but clean business and honourable adventure is now to soil and to degrade it; so to do must be made a crime. More and more it must wave on every breeze for justice, ordered government, and at least a measure of the golden rule.

Now, the I'm Alone incident raises questions that to my mind go to the very root of ordered government and everything that makes for peace and good will between nations. All civilization is built on law and its observance, and the question comes down to this: are neighbouring states to assist each other's lawful governments or to connive at their destruction? I do not think we should talk of national honour if any untoward incidents occur while we are granting clearance to vessels manned by law-breakers who defy the laws of a neighbouring country.

Again I wish to read one short paragraph from Doctor Ritchie's statement:

> We may flatter ourselves in Canada that we are not as these Americans, that our courts are clean, our police uncorrupted, our laws firmly administered and our people law-abiding. Once there was truth in all that; but are we not in danger to-day of making it an idle dream? Was not the brazen attempt of the liquor ring assisted, alas! by some of our public men, to make a hero of a rum-running scofflaw, an ugly sign of warning? And what of those in our midst, confederates of evil, who boast that they live by breaking a neighbour's laws, and are still regarded as good citizens? It was frankly asserted in one of our journals that the cargo of the I'm Alone belonged to big interests in Montreal that parade as patriotic. Why cannot they be dragged into the light? Has it not been proved that some of our brewers are behind the bootleggers? And who more swaggeringly patriotic than they?

It is a healthy kind of thing that there are at least some journals that cannot be used to further the interests of a class of men such as those engaged in this traffic. Mr. Ritchie's article that I have been quoting will be found in the Montreal Witness. There is a real danger to-day in taking a wrong viewpoint of the public opinion created by our newspapers.

I read the other day that the Rev. Lorne McTavish had declared that the four leading papers in Saskatchewan aided and abetted this work. When we see such journals upholding the crew of the I'm Alone, is it any wonder to-day that men like Harry Bronfman are untouched? In spite of the crimes named against him in the customs investigation report, that man is still unpunished. Here and now I protest against letting such men go scot free. Although the royal commission said there was a prima facie case against Bronfman, neither the Saskatchewan government nor the justice department at Ottawa hae seen fit to prosecute. As long as the illness of inspector Knowles could serve as an excuse, the Attorney-General of Saskatchewan took the responsibility for not proceeding against Bronfman. Now that gentleman says the duty is on the Minister of Justice at Ottawa, and the Minister of Justice in turn says that somebody must lay a charge against Bronfman. The charge is contained in the customs investigation report, and yet this man still goes free and unmolested. Sometimes I tremble to think what a liquor-controlled press could have involved this country in had it not been for the steady character of our people at the time.

Now, unless this nation takes drastic means —and I say this in all seriousness—to curb this evil, it will as completely control all governments in Canada as it has controlled the government in Saskatchewan during the past year. Our first duty is to refuse assistance to these rum-running craft. At the conference held in Ottawa last January between our officials and officials of the United States we talked in a very friendly tone, but since then we have learned that in such a business smooth words avail very little. Admiral Billard said that as far as he could learn the aim of Canada was to further the temperance problem, but that the whole difficulty was we were handling it in a way different from that adopted by the United States, and he got the impression that the Canadian authorities seemed to think that that situation caused certain difficulties. He clarified the situation at the conference in these words:

> We are asking you to consent to recommend to your government the refusal, or rather the discontinuance, of official sanction to export certain commodities into a friendly neighbouring state whose laws forbid the importation of such articles.

I take his words to be a warning. He also pointed out that our treaty with the United States was entitled a "convention to suppress smuggling," and that he was now asking Canada to follow the policy they had already officially sanctioned. If I understood the Minister of National Revenue in this house the other day, the answer he gave to this was that we are making revenue out of this business.

Mr. EULER: Absolutely, I never made any such statement.

Mr. EVANS: I apologize if it is not so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EULER: As a matter of fact, I was not present at the conference. I do not know Admiral Billard; I never met him in my life.

Mr. EVANS: I did get that impression, but I will accept the minister's denial. When he spoke of the fact that the United States was not looking after the enforcement of its own laws, I certainly got the impression that he was inclined to let the United States look after their own laws.

An hon. MEMBER: Why shouldn't they?

Mr. EVANS: That is all very well, but it will not excuse Canada for breaking the laws of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON: How is Canada breaking the laws of the United States?

Mr. EVANS: Perhaps that is putting it pretty strongly; but at least we do assist the gangs that go out purposely to defy those laws.

Mr. ROBINSON: They are not Canadians.

Mr. VENIOT: They are Americans, every one.

Mr. EVANS: Admiral Billard at the conference said the only way Canada could aid the United States now would be to refuse clearance to vessels that knowingly defy the United States laws. I take that, Mr. Chairman, as a polite way of informing Canada that we are playing a two-faced game.

Now, to me it is a very serious matter. I look on it from our own national standpoint as having a most deadly effect on our young people. As for the money that is in it, I do not care how much it may be; I want law and order upheld before our young people. This is a moral question and we cannot escape it. I think it is indeed a sad reflection on our administration that since 1924 the importation of liquor into the United States from Canada has steadily increased, and Doctor Doran at the conference plainly stated that any regulatory measures would be obviously impracticable. This border outlawry, he states, will be bound to increase. If I mistake not his meaning, he has given warning to us, and we shall have nothing to say if any untoward action occurs in the enforcement of that law. It may involve us yet in a nasty quarrel. I look on the I'm Alone incident as simply an incident in the prosecution of a policy which the United States authorities themselves have now adopted. I know it will be asked—have we no national pride that we allow the United States to dictate to us? They are not dictating to us. That question was put forward in this house, but I do not look at the matter in that light; and in answer to that I want to appeal to those in authority in Canada to-day not to put this nation, by any means whatsoever, in the position where its people will have to defend a dishonourable and disgraceful business.

Mr. KAISER: I want to make a few observations without entering into any details in regard to the question which has been thrust upon the attention of the house by hon. members to the left. That question appears to be whether Canada should or should not lend its forces at the present time to the prevention of liquor exports into the United States. On that question I have my own opinion and conviction.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech made the other evening by the Minister of National Revenue and I must say that it was not convincing to me. In the efforts to grapple with what is civilization's great problem, there would be nothing wrong about the Dominion of Canada endeavouring to do something to assist in the solution of the difficulty which is being met by the United States of America. For the moment, however, I consider it far more important for us as Canadians to take an interest, a universal interest, in what we consider at present to be the solution of the problem so far as this country is concerned. Rightly or wrongly, seven provinces in this Dominion have decided that the best way to handle the liquor question in Canada is under a system of government control. I am not going to say whether I consider that the best or the worst system. All I say is that at the present time the great bulk of Canadians are of the opinion that it is the best method they know of by which to control or to cope with this great difficulty in our country. Whether in the end it will succeed or fail I do not know; but as a good Canadian, and as a citizen who desires to see a better condition of society obtain in Canada, I claim it is the business and the duty of all Canadians to give this great experiment in the Dominion the best possible chance. That we are making some headway is evident, I think, in the fact that about three days ago the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, who spent three or four years trying to convince that province that government control was all wrong and that some other system should be inaugurated, came to the conclusion and announced himself in favour of the government control of liquor in the provinces. Of course, he was a Liberal, and Liberals do not generally find it very difficult to turn a handspring if it suits them. And this gentleman took a big handspring and landed at this point.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Probably he was only bringing his policy into line with the policy of this government.

Mr. KAISER: No, I wish it were the other way about; I wish this government would bring its policy into line with him. One of the difficulties which the people of Canada have had in the past to deal with this question, from a local point of view, was the fact that the government of Canada would not try to do anything to give the provinces a proper chance. With seven of the provinces undertaking to meet the situation by means of government control—whether that system be right or wrong—what do we see taking place in Canada? The records show that we export 2,355,431 gallons of whiskey, of which 1,126,399 gallons go to the United States. This is according to the figures given by the department; and 1,229,034 gallons are exported from Canada to other countries. The other countries are classified according to exports within the British Empire and exports to foreign countries. To countries within the Empire we export 657,771 gallons, and this considerable export is largely to the small islands along the Atlantic coast. The minister knows that we export 170,000 gallons per annum to Miquelon. I see it is six o'clock and I will remain at Miquelon until we shall have had something to eat.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 281, respecting The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.—Mr. Smith (Stormont).

Bill No. 302, for the relief of Hurley Alexander Fummerton.—Mr. Thorson.

Bill No. 314, for the relief of Barbara Elise Sewell de la Penotière.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 315, for the relief of Oliver Milton Martin.—Mr. Harris.

Bill No. 317, for the relief of Mary Jane Teeson.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 318, for the relief of Sam Gladstone.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 319, for the relief of Charles Smolkin.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 320, for the relief of James Franklin McDonagh.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 321, for the relief of Joseph Louis Philippe Corbeau.—Mr. Sanderson.

Bill No. 323, for the relief of Frances Thirza Edlund.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 324, for the relief of Vivian Elizabeth Pearce.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 330, for the relief of Robert Henry Dunlop Ellis.—Mr. Lawson.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 350, for the relief of Lillian Ainsworth.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 351, for the relief of Sarah Berkovitz.—Mr. Sanderson.

[Mr. Kaiser.]

Bill No. 352, for the relief of George Frederick Wilson.—Mr. McGregor.

Bill No. 353, for the relief of Roy Franklin Beattie.—Mr. Spence.

Bill No. 354, for the relief of John George Laney.—Mr. Hepburn.

Bill No. 355, for the relief of Albert Nott.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 356, for the relief of John Thomas Legge.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 357, for the relief of Isabella Henderson.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 358, for the relief of Emil Henry Hornburg.—Mr. Edwards (Waterloo).

Bill No. 360, for the relief of Ruth Oretta Taaffe.—Mr. Donnelly.

Bill No. 361, for the relief of Frank William Benson.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 362, for the relief of Hilda Rebecca Allison.—Mr. Jelliff.

Bill No. 363, for the relief of Sydney James Black.—Mr. Hay.

Bill No. 364, for the relief of Llewellyn John Chubb.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-Hyde Park).

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 337, for the relief of Edward Ernest True.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 338, for the relief of Glennville Wesley Potter.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 339, for the relief of Elizabeth Mitchell.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 340, for the relief of Edith May Enfield.—Mr. Howden.

Bill No. 341, for the relief of Lillian Elizabeth Barton.—Mr. Boys.

STELLA PEARL DUNCAN

The house in committee on Bill No. 300, for the relief of Stella Pearl Duncan—Mr. Clark—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What about the children?

Mr. CLARK: Perhaps my hon. friend has the evidence before him. I have no doubt this has been before the private bills committee, but the evidence has not come to me.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If we have not the evidence I do not see that we should be expected to go on with the bill.

Mr. CLARK: The bill has been reported by the committee; if my hon. friend has the evidence on these bills no doubt he has the information, but it has not been forwarded to me.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the sponsor of the bill himself has not the evidence and has no information I do not see that we can be expected to go on with the bill now.

Mr. CLARK: Then I would ask that this bill be allowed to stand for the present and that it be called later. In the meantime I will see if I can get a copy of the evidence which ordinarily is mailed to all members but which has not come to me.

Bill stands.

VERA ALICE GRIFFIN

The house in committee on Bill No. 333, for the relief of Vera Alice Griffin—Mr. Sanderson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can we have an explanation with regard to the children?

Mr. SANDERSON: There are some children in this case but provision is being made for them.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

VIVIAN ELIZABETH PEARCE

The house in committee on Bill No. 324, for the relief of Vivian Elizabeth Pearce—Mr. Lennox—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I am moving this bill for Mr. Lennox.

Section agreed to.

Section 2—Right to marry again.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How many children are there?

Mr. CLARK: What about the children in the Jacobs case?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have been asking only in regard to those cases where the wife is concerned; I have not been asking any questions where the man has been the petitioner, as presumably he would be in a better position to take care of the children.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I am sponsoring this bill for the hon. member for North York (Mr. Lennox), and I would remind my hon. friend that if he has the evidence before him the petition would show just what is the position of the children.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I have said before, I have no desire to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, but nearly three hundred divorce bills have come before us during the course of the present session and I do not think that any private member has the time to go through the evidence in each case. I have not done so, although I have tried to read a few particular cases which have been referred to me. If the consideration of these bills is not a mere formality, the least we can expect is that the sponsor be in a position to answer a few questions. If the hon. member for North York is not present and he has made arrangements for another hon. member to sponsor the bill, I should be willing to concede that point, but I think we are entitled to any information we desire. If the acting sponsor is not able to give this information the bill should be allowed to stand.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I am not suggesting that there was any arrangement; I merely thought that as an act of courtesy the bill might be proceeded with because we are instructed that the hon. member is not in good health and is unable to be present.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. member is ill and unable to be present some of his friends should have looked up those cases which stand in his name.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Perhaps the hon. member could do that himself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I have done as much of that as any hon. member, and perhaps more than some.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to see that that statement at least meets with approval. Unless it is intended that these cases should go through in a purely perfunctory way, I think the hon. member should be prepared to give the information asked for.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 2 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not unreasonable in this matter. I have not had the time, and I do not think any other hon. members have had the time to read this case. At this late stage of the session I am anxious that there should be no unnecessary delay, but the members who sponsor these bills should be prepared to give certain information. The bills have been allowed to pass first reading, second reading, have been sent to the committee, and now they are before the committee of the whole, and this is the place where they should be discussed. Objections have been raised to our discussing them at an earlier stage, and I now take this opportunity to ask for certain information.

The CHAIRMAN: It is for the committee to say whether or not this bill should stand, not for the Chair. Shall section 2 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It will not carry for at least a few minutes. The members of the committee are aware of the objections which some of us have taken to the perfunctory way in which these bills have been passed. Some of us would have liked to see a divorce court instituted, but that bill was rejected by the House. Some hon. members took a stand because of religious convictions, and would not concede the principle which they believed to be involved, that is, the principle of divorce. I recall one hon. member from Toronto who said that the Anglican church was opposed to divorce, but since that time the Toronto synod of the Anglican church has met and has declared itself to be in favour of a divorce court. I think that decision should make it considerably easier for the members of that denomination, especially those who come from the city of Toronto. We have had a good deal of favourable opinion from a number of other sources, and this would go to show that the public generally is in favour of a divorce court. Two cases have been brought before the private bills committee and investigated, and in each case the petition has been refused. In one instance, the Bourdon case, the petition was withdrawn. It had been stated, and I read the letter in the house, that an operation had been performed which had rendered this poor woman incapable of bearing children, and then later that she had been, as it were, thrown on the street, by her husband who came seeking a divorce.

Mr. STEVENS: That has nothing to do with this particular case.

Mr. CLARK: I rise to a point of order; certainly this is not debatable at this moment. Furthermore, I dispute the statement which has been made in reference to a particular case.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am discussing the principle.

Mr. CLARK: It is not a question of principle; we are discussing the bill.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We were told that this was the place to discuss these matters.

Mr. BENNETT: Not in committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We were told that it was permissible to discuss these matters.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the principle of divorce?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When some of us undertook to discuss the principle of a bill we were told that we could not touch upon the evidence, and now we are told that we cannot touch upon the principle underlying the bill. I must submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is an absurd situation. When I was interrupted I was calling attention to the fact that when cases have been really considered in the private bills committee they have been rejected. I have no desire to go into the case now before us except to point out how necessary it is that each case should be carefully considered, and how absurd is the present practice. I am as anxious to get on with the business of the house as anyone else; I am as sick of these divorces as anyone else in the house.

The CHAIRMAN: I am not saying that the hon. member has not the right to discuss this bill at this time, but there are many other bills upon the order paper and the hon. gentlemen who are sponsoring those bills are present in the committee. I think we could make better progress if this bill were allowed to stand, and then we could proceed with the others.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is all I was asking for.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the committee that Bill No. 324 should stand?

Section stands.

Bill stands.

STELLA PEARL DUNCAN

The house in committee on Bill No. 300, for the relief of Stella Pearl Duncan—Mr. Clark—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children involved in this case?

Mr. CLARK: There is one.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has any provision been made for its care?

Mr. CLARK: The child is living with the mother of the mother.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MABEL BULLIS

The house in committee on Bill No. 328, for the relief of Mabel Bullis—Mr. Smoke (for Mr. Stinson)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children in this case?

Mr. SMOKE: I find from the evidence that these people were married in 1894, thirty-five years ago. There are four chidren, all over age. The respondent deserted his wife in 1901. There are seven charges of adultery proved by the evidence.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ALICE CLARKE

The house in committee on Bill No. 325, for the relief of Alice Clarke.—Mr. Clark (for Mr. Boys)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there children involved in this case?

Mr. CLARK: There is no record of any children.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

KATHLEEN MARY HAMBOURG

The house in committee on Bill No. 326, for the relief of Kathleen Mary Hambourg—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Any children in this case?

Mr. LAWSON: One child born July 11, 1928, residing with the mother.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FLORENCE GERTRUDE SINGER

The house in committee on Bill No. 327, for the relief of Florence Gertrude Singer—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children?

Mr. LAWSON: One child born June 25, 1923, residing with the mother.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EVELYN COWIE

The house in committee on Bill No. 331, for the relief of Evelyn Cowie—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Any children?

Mr. LAWSON: One child, five years of age, in the custody of the petitioner, supported, under a court order, by the respondent.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ENID MARJORIE JUDD

The house in committee on Bill No. 332, for the relief of Enid Marjorie Judd—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Any children.

Mr. LAWSON: One child, born January 11, 1926, maintained by the mother, the petitioner.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CHRISTINA ADAMS BOURNE

The house in committee on Bill No. 334, for the relief of Christina Adams Bourne—Mr. Clark (for Mr. Boys)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. CLARK: No children.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RUTH AGNES TOWNSEND

The house in committee on Bill No. 335, for the relief of Ruth Agnes Townsend—Mr Lawson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Any children?

Mr. LAWSON: There is no mention, either in the petition or in the evidence taken before the divorce committee, of there being children.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FANNY ELIZABETH REED KENDALL

The house in committee on Bill No. 329, for the relief of Fanny Elizabeth Reed Kendall—Mr. Clark (for Mr. Bell, St. Antoine)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Possibly the sponsor of this bill would give us an outline of the case?

Mr. CLARK: I thought I could, but I notice the evidence has disappeared.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I suppose we may ask that the bill stand until the evidence can be secured.

Mr. BENNETT: This is Friday evening and the senate, I think, will not be convened to-morrow. We should do everything possible to afford these people the relief to which they are entitled.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would venture to assert that these people are not entitled to anything. That is one of the premises which we have been taking for granted and it ought to be challenged. These people come here with a petition and the senate all along seems to have been going on the supposition that if a petition is presented, it must be granted. That is not the case. We shall have a Monday, we hope, to discuss these bills. These private bills have the right of way on Monday, and there is also Tuesday. I do not think that we are holding up things unnecessarily if we ask that the ordinary procedure be complied with for the next day or so.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no such procedure.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Surely, we ought to know something about a case before we pass on it. We do not know anything about this case and the sponsor is not in his place.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason the evidence is printed.

Mr. CLARK: There are two ways in which my hon. friend can ascertain all about any particular case. One would be by reading the evidence, which is certainly sent to him as to other hon. members, except that I have noticed there has been an oversight in one or two cases. The other is by appearing before the private bills committee, where the case is fully considered.

I should like to point out to my hon. friend that this is the end of the session and there are at least some hon. members who have other things to do besides attending to private bills. There are many things to be done at the end of a session, and at this stage I think it is expecting too much to ask that members should be ready to examine the evidence and read it to the house, in the face of the fact that the whole case has been thoroughly considered by the private bills committee and by the senate committee, where there has been a full trial. Some consideration ought to be shown to hon. members, some of whom live a very long distance from Ottawa. In my own case, for instance, railway accommodation to Vancouver must be arranged for fully ten days ahead at this time of the year. It may be that there are members of this house who have been obliged to leave with their families, having reserved their accommodation ahead, and the session may go on for a day or two beyond the date they expected. They are obliged to go and yet my hon. friend would hold up these bills because they are not here. These bills are wished on members. Not one out of the 245 members of the house knows why his name appears as sponsor for a divorce bill. Somebody has to sponsor them. Some of us are lawyers, and there are legal firms in the city of Ottawa who use our names perhaps because we are lawyers and friends of theirs. I have no objection to that; if a lawyer friend of mine puts my name to a bill, all right. But these litigants have also some rights. They have just as much right to have their case heard as my hon. friend has to speak in the house. They have just as much right to justice at the hands of parliament as my hon. friend has to sit in and speak in the house; yet because the sponsor of one of these bills happens to be out of the house—and I believe it is our duty to sponsor them—my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre says he will deny justice to the bona fide litigant. Outside the provinces of Ontario and Quebec any one of these people could go before a court of justice and have the case tried just as it has been tried here, and the court would be bound to give a decision. But these people have been denied by the members of this house the right to go before a court of law.

Mr. LAFLAMME: No.

Mr. CLARK: Who says "no"? My hon. friend voted against the bill to establish divorce courts in the province.

Mr. LAFLAMME: I was right too.

Mr. CLARK: And now he says "no." What does he mean?

Mr. STEVENS: He does not mean anything.

Mr. CLARK: He does not mean anything, no, certainly not. If my hon. friend had anything to do but read a newspaper, if he had any desire to do justice—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CLARK: I say that advisedly. If he had any real desire to do justice he would inform himself as to the merits of these cases, and vote according to the dictates of justice. What we are up against is that some members of this house refuse absolutely to consider the merits of the case, which they are bound from every point of view to do, while others refuse these litigants justice because some hon. member, who happens to be the sponsor of a particular bill is not in his seat. They will refuse justice to these litigants despite the fact that the senate committee has fully heard the case, that the evidence has been printed and every hon. member given the opportunity to read it and size up the merits of the case; that the case has been before the private bills committee. There might be a rehearing of the case before that committee, as has been done in several cases this session, and they might refuse to report the bill. I have the evidence here, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not feel quite as chastened as I might do if I did not recall that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has had a good deal to say with regard to a number of the estimates. He considered that it was perfectly proper for him to challenge at considerable length estimates with which he was not satisfied. I just happen to be working along a different line. I am concerned in this particular case rather than about some particular estimate.

I frankly concede that there is some ground for what the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has said. I know that in the past it has been the practice for various members to sponsor these bills without their having any idea they would be called upon to present the case. I do not wish to be unreasonable in the matter. But unfortunately the hon. member has buttressed his plea with some false statements.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CLARK: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I withdraw; I should have said that he had buttressed his plea with some unsound arguments. He suggested that these people ought to have justice. I am pleading for justice for them, and the way to get justice is to have their cases considered instead of having a large number of bills passed here en bloc, as has been done in the past, or having them passed without any consideration at all, as has happened with some of these bills even to-night. To get justice for these people we should not attempt to rush the bills through without any consideration, indeed without even the sponsor being in his seat.

It is further stated by the hon. member—and this is what I had reference to when I said that he had buttressed his plea with false statements, which I changed to unsound arguments—that these bills have been carefully considered by the private bills committee. I do not think that statement is absolutely accurate. The fact is that any case that is not challenged passes the private bills committee without any consideration whatever. There are ten steps in the procedure for divorce. First it is dealt with by the Senate divorce committee, which examines the case to the extent it considers necessary; then the bill is reported, given its first and second reading in the Senate, considered in committee and given a third reading. The bill then comes to this house where it is given a first and a second reading, goes to the private bills committee, comes back into committee of the whole, is reported and given a third reading. There is only one real examination made, and that is the preliminary examination by the senate committee. All the other processes are simply equivalent to a rubber stamp, and we put on the rubber stamp ten times. Now, that is what I object to. I would rather sweep away this whole elaborate procedure, but if there are those who insist on retaining it, it is not quite fair for them to blame us when we insist on following the regular procedure. They accuse us of holding up the house. I have now held up the house about as long as the member for Burrard, and will let him proceed with the evidence.

Mr. CLARK: There are no children. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Thanks very much.

Mr. IRVINE: In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the speech of the hon. member is an indictment of the entire house and is well deserved. He simply indicated by his very fair and straightforward criticism of the members of this committee and of the house generally that we are incapable of doing the work of a divorce court. No one is prepared to admit that more readily than I am. While we are allowing these bills to go through this session on the strength of the Prime Minister's promise that next session there will be some alteration in this regard, yet we are conscious that we are not doing the business in a proper way. Some one has suggested that we consider these matters in the private bills committee. We do nothing of the sort. In that committee bills are simply read off; that is all that is done. In my experience during the last five or six sessions of parliament I have only seen three or four cases really considered in that committee. And those were cases that had been specially referred to the committee; all other cases are passed without anybody reading or discussing the evidence. I am afraid that what the hon. member for North Centre Winnipeg desires will not be attained in this house. We are not a divorce court; we cannot seriously treat ourselves as such, and the whole proceeding is the most shameful and disgraceful that I have ever seen anywhere.

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: The sooner we get rid of this divorce work the better. I do not know whether I would be in order in serving notice on the government that at the next session of parliament they will not get any business through in this way.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The house in committee of supply Mr. Johnston in the chair.

National revenue—salaries, $745,840; contingencies, $50,000.

Mr. KAISER: When the committee rose at six o'clock I had just arrived at the island of Miquelon, that beautiful, barren isle of the sea where liquor flows and nothing grows, and during the remainder of my remarks I wish to refer to this island as representing conditions at other points on the Atlantic ocean.

I suppose the Minister of National Revenue must realize that the conditions which exist on this island cannot be taken seriously; there are elements of fraud in connection with what is going on there. We will say a cargo of liquor leaves the port of Halifax and goes to Miquelon, or pretends to go to Miquelon, and a certificate is brought back to the department showing that the cargo arrived safely; the customs officer certifies that the cargo has landed and this certificate is accepted by the department as proof that the liquor has reached its proper destination, so no excise duty is charged. I understand that the government of Canada became rather suspicious of this beautiful little island and insisted that the governor of the island should also sign this certificate.

I want to point out that if this cargo really arrives at Miquelon and is unloaded at that point a duty is charged by the government of the island; in fact they charge three duties, one of which is called a customs duty, another a consuming duty and the third by some other name, but the three duties total $1 per gallon. That cargo, paying no duty in Canada and a duty of only $1 per gallon at Miquelon, has an advantage of $8 per gallon over a cargo sent to the United States or any other part of Canada, and I want to know why we charge an excise duty of $9 per gallon on liquor going direct to the United States when it goes out the back door by way of Detroit or Niagara Falls and when we know it is going to the United States, with everything pointing to that fact, while if it goes out the front door and lands at this little island there is no excise duty collected. I wonder if the minister imagines that we are so devoid of intelligence in Canada as to suppose that the people of Miquelon consume all this liquor. I pointed out the other night that Canada alone sends annually over 50 gallons of liquor per capita of the adult population or 42 gallons per head when calculating every man, woman and child on the entire island. Some one says that is not enough, but I think it is quite sufficient; if all the inhabitants of that island consumed that much liquor per head for two years there would be only about two or three individuals left alive, and they would be regarded as perambulating distilleries. It is absurd; the government of Canada must know that the liquor landed on that island is not consumed there.

I am not going to discuss the question whether our excise duty on liquor going direct to the United States is too high or too low but I do claim that we should charge the same duty on liquor exported to Miquelon or to any other foreign country as we charge on liquor for home consumption, because I believe one of two things happens; either this liquor finds its way back to Canada or it reaches some other market such as that of the United States. In any event it is objectionable. Why does the minister say that there is such a wide open door at Detroit and Niagara Falls, when we have evidence that that door is not open on the Atlantic ocean? A vessel was found two hundred or two hundred and twenty miles off the shore of the United States and a government cruiser shot it down, and yet we are told that the same government has a green light up and it is perfectly safe to smuggle liquor at Detroit and Niagara Falls. There is something a little suspicious about the statements given to this house by the minister but I do not care whether he is right or whether he is wrong, what I want to say is this: The people of several provinces of the Dominion of Canada have come to the conclusion that they can best handle this liquor question through government control. I do not know whether they are right or whether they are wrong, but it is a great experiment and I want to say here that I ally myself with those people of Canada who are trying to eliminate drunkenness from society. This is the method which has been adopted, and I plead with this government to ally itself with those provinces which are trying to do something with regard to this liquor question. The government should do something to help them and not leave the door wide open and thus circumvent the efforts which are being put forth by those who believe in government control. We give these smugglers an eight dollar advantage on every gallon. We are told that the smuggler and bootlegger has been eliminated from Ontario. He was eliminated when the Ontario Temperance Act first came into force and he did not reappear for two or three years, but he found out how to get around that act. In three or four years' time he will find out how to get around this government control act, and I am afraid we will have the same conditions. I believe that act is a good law but I think a fair chance should be given to the provinces to better the condition of society. No headway will be made as long as this government stands still and permits the conditions which exist at the front door of our country, which conditions only tend to circumvent the efforts being put forth by those who have faith in government control. As a Canadian I consider it of great importance that we should endeavour by every means to prevent the export of liquor to the United States. We should do that, but our greatest duty is to the people of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, one can understand the concern in the United States about this traffic in liquor from Canada by examining the statistics. The figures show that in 1923 liquor to the value of $3,178,000 was exported from Canada to the United States. That was the legal exportation, and one can only guess as to how much was exported illegally. In 1925 the value of the exportations had risen to $11,610,000 and in 1928 the figure had grown to $24,403,000.

To come down to the particular issue which is being discussed at the present time, as to whether or not Canada should refuse to grant clearances to vessels laden with liquor for the United States, it seems to me that we are only being asked to extend a courtesy to that country which we would not for a moment refuse in our social relations with each other. I read the minister's speech of some days ago, and I take it that his opposition to carrying out the request of the United States is based on four arguments. His first argument was that we should not be asked to assist in carrying out the laws of another country. Then he claimed that the United States made no effort to curb the shipments of liquor into Canada when conditions were reversed during the war. His third argument was the obvious insincerity of the United States in enforcing her own laws, and fourthly, he doubted the efficacy of the remedy suggested by the United States, that is, for Canada to refuse clearances to vessels loaded with liquor for that country.

In my opinion, this is not an issue between what we commonly call the wets and the drys. I take it that there are tens of thousands of people in Canada who believe in government control of the sale of liquor, that is, they support what is commonly called the wet side, and yet they are in favour of the government using every means at its disposal to prevent the export of liquor into the United States. They object to Canada failing to grant what seems to be a most reasonable and modest request on the part of the United States.

The United States are not asking us to assist in enforcing their laws. In a recent issue of the Toronto Star an American official is quoted as follows:

> We do not want Canada to help clean up our backyard, but just to stop throwing dirt over the fence into it.

It seems to me that that covers the situation very well. He went on to say that they did not ask Canada to aid in the enforcement of their law, but they did ask Canada not to aid in the violation of it.

Every member of the house knows the difficulties a government encounters in enforcing any prohibitory law. We have heard that old cry for generations, that a government was not sincere in enforcing such and such a law. I have heard the charge made in western Canada against the minister's own department, that his officers were not sincere in enforcing the Inland Revenue Act. I do not believe those charges because I think his officers are doing everything that is humanly possible to stop the illegal manufacture of liquor. Just because there are still many infractions of the American law and because the law does not absolutely prohibit the opinion is expressed that the government is not sincere in attempting to enforce the law. It is not for us to judge whether or not the government of the United States is sincere in its efforts to enforce a prohibitory law; all we have to do is to grant this reasonable request and refuse clearances to vessels loaded with liquor.

The next point in the minister's argument was that the United States had made no effort to curb shipments of liquor into Canada during the war when that country was wet and Canada was supposedly dry. I am not sure that Canada ever made any particular requests to the United States for assistance along that line, and I have no proof that if such requests were made they were ignored. But that seems to me to be a most illogical argument to use, to say that because someone committed a crime or a misdemeanor some years ago it justifies the doing of the same thing to-day. That is one of the most unsound arguments anyone could use, and I did not expect it to be used by a minister of the crown. If there has been insincerity on the part of the United States government, or on the part of their officials, in enforcing this law, then Canada is just playing into their hands, because certainly the impression is being created from one end of the United States to the other to-day that these laws are not being enforced on account of Canada's failure to grant that reasonable request. If the minister is convinced that there is that insincerity to which he refers, then he is helping along and strengthening that insincerity in the United States by refusing its request. If the request were granted and there still were no particular improvements in the situation, then the people of the United States would find out the insincerity, if any, on the part of their government.

[Mr. Campbell.]

May I remind the minister that there is a good deal of ill feeling, I may say, in Canada to-day over the action of the United States congress in raising the tariff against many Canadian products? But let us consider that there is being engendered in the United States as well a feeling just as bitter and probably more so; a grievance is developing there against Canada because of the failure of the government to grant that request. It is just possible that even the tariff action of the United States congress is influenced to some extent by the inaction of the Canadian government in this regard.

May I refer to a series of articles which were published in MacLean's magazine beginning in the issue of December 1 last and concluding in the issue of January 1. These articles are headed: "Men will Kill for Whiskey", and they are written by Mr. Frederick Edwards. They cover the whole situation on the lake front and they point out with great force that this is not merely the business of the United States. The minister may assume an attitude of complacency and perhaps we as Canadians may thank the Lord that we are not as other men are; that we are not bothered with this thing ourselves; but these articles show very clearly that all the crime and viciousness that have developed in the wake of the liquor traffic have penetrated Canada as well as the United States. I say that for our own protection, our own benefit, for the upholding of law, order and decency in this country, we should cooperate with the United States to stop this illegal traffic. May I quote from the article of December 1? This article refers to the attempt of the border cities to get rid of the underworld that had developed there due to this illegal liquor traffic. The writer points out that they have met with much success. Many of the dives were closed up; many of these crooks had to decamp to the United States. Yet the writer goes on to say:

> Yet, in May of this year, Jack Kennedy's dead body was found in a Toleda woods; and his murderers have never been apprehended.
>
> Yet, during the summer, Charlie Williams, responding to a telephone message from Detroit, crossed the river, a lamb going in panic to the slaughter, and paid $40,000 to Detroit gangsters, refusing later to lay a charge against the one man the police were able to entrap.

This is one of the most terrible features of the whole thing. Even where these men were spotted; even where the police had their fingers on them, we find the parties were so much in terror of these crooks that they refused to invoke the law to punish them. They were more afraid of the crook than of the law. The writer goes on:

Just a few weeks ago Sam Low was attacked on the highway between Windsor and London, bound, blindfolded and held for ransom.

This man was later released on ransom. Further on the article says:

We in Canada are rather proud of our reputation for law enforcement. It is a thought not consoling to our national consciousness that American thugs are able to ferry themselves across a narrow river to our Dominion and there kidnap, blackmail and arrange even for the murder of our citizens without encountering a swift and just retribution; but here are three examples of outrageous crime perpetrated within our boundaries during the past year, and in each case the guilty parties originating from the American side of the line, have been able to escape with a casual ease which cannot but be an invitation to further similar outrages.

The article continues:

It is a blazing affront to Canadian dignity, a menace to the peace and order of the Dominion, that such things as the Kennedy killing, the Williams hold-up and the Low kidnapping should go unpunished. And yet no one has been arrested.

The writer asks the question: Why? And he goes on to give the reason. The reason is quite obvious—the enormous profits that are made in the liquor business. I will deal with that presently. He gives many instances of men who have testified before the commission and the various criminalities which many of them were guilty of, such as false statements, brewers falsfying their books and all that sort of thing, a story of crime and wickedness that would make any Canadian blush for shame.

In his article under date of December 15, the writer has this to say:

A geographical accident compels the peaceful, industrious and thrifty populations of Windsor, Walkerville, Ford City, Sandwich and the rest of the border towns, to accept as a close neighbour the overcrowded, cosmopolitan, rowdy metropolis of Detroit. So it came about that at the very moment that the honest burghers of the Border Cities were dusting off their palms, rolling down their sleeves and congratulating themselves that last years strenuous campaign had triumphantly routed the forces of evil which had infested their communities for years, the worst elements among the yellow parasites who feed greedily on the illicit liquor traffic were chuckling grimly in the depths of their Detroit and border ratholes, and remarking "is that so?" Whereupon these dangerous gangsters proceeded at once to demonstrate that in this day and age, with the aid of fast automobiles, telephones and automatic pistols of deadly precision, the bloody business of murder for money is not in the least discommoded by a mere mile of smooth water.

The writers goes on:

Against the banditti of the turbulent motor city the folks of the border towns on the Canadian side are powerless. Everything that the rsidents of the Border Cities can do in their own behalf, they have done.

May I refer again to the article of January 1? He gives an instance or two to show the enormous wealth that is acquired by those engaged in the traffic. He quotes the case of Cecil Smith. He says that two years ago Cecil Smith was a taxi driver without any money. Two years after he had set up as a bootlegger, Smith boasted in open court that during the previous twelve months he had paid more than $90,000 to officials of various grades and services in return for immunity granted a score of valuable liquor cargoes smuggled across the river. In this case we have Canadian as well as United States officials bought and corrupted by these men, yet the minister assumes an attitude as if it were none of our business, as if it did not affect Canada in the least, and he refers to the United States request as one for our assistance in enforcing their laws. Surely our own law is at stake; surely law, order and decency are at stake in Canada as well in the United States. This condition is not one that is creditable either to the minister and his department or to the people of Canada as a whole.

The writer refers to the evidence given before the commission. I have not time to quote much of it, but it is most illuminating and it would be worth the while of any member of the house to read all he has to say. He gives an account of the murder of Jack Kennedy to whom I referred a little while ago. It appears that Jack Kennedy was an employee of a brewery on the lake front. He was an accountant and probably he was one of those gentlemen who was called upon to fake the accounts in order to defeat the minister's own officials. When he knew he was going to be called upon to testify before the commission, he suddenly disappeared. He spent part of the season in Florida, most likely under the pay of the corporation. Later on he came back to Toronto. Just a few days after he arrived there, he was served with a subpoena to appear before the court, but apparently he was a decent, honest fellow, just as good a fellow as you could get in that class of business, and he said, when asked by one of his friends what he proposed to do, that he was going to tell the truth. Before the time arrived for him to appear before the court he was kidnapped, taken across the river, and his battered and mutilated body was found a few days later. As this article points out his murderers have never been apprehended.

The article goes on:

And finally listen to this. The speaker is William C. Dunford, a Canadian, and a liquor exporter of Windsor. He is giving testimony in one of the series of government actions against the brewers, in Toronto, last May. He has admitted that he has sold many cargoes of liquor to American bootleggers with headquarters in Cleveland, Ohio. He has been asked by the court to give the names of his customers. Here is his reply:

"My lord, in the United States a man is marked if he is a squawker or is a stool pigeon. I would sooner face a charge of contempt of court than be taken for a ride when I return to the United States."

The article concludes:

How do you like that, Canadians?

Yet the minister adopts the attitude—as if it were none of our business—that it is the fault of the United States wholly when that kind of thing can go on. But I say that when a man admits in open court that he is more afraid of the thug who has threatened him than of a sentence of a judge of a Canadian court, it is not to the credit of Canadian institutions, and unless we deal with this matter we shall soon have as bad a condition in Canada as they have on the other side of the line.

What is the remedy? In a case of this kind I do not think there is any clear-cut distinction between right and wrong, or good and evil. It is a case of choosing the lesser of two evils, and to my mind the only conclusion from that standpoint, choosing the lesser of two evils, is completely to nationalize every brewery and distillery in Canada. I know that there are objections to that. Many will say that it would lead to political corruption and a certain amount of graft in connection with government. Undoubtedly there would be some graft, but certainly there would be nothing like there is to-day. The main thing is to take the private profit out of that liquor traffic, and I think that is as far as public sentiment will permit us to go at the present time. I know that constitional questions will be raised as to the relative rights of the provinces and the Dominion, but I suggest that the federal government take action to nationalize these breweries and distilleries. Wherever there is a province that has government liquor control and it desires to exercise that right, let that province be allowed to do so. I think that would help to a considerable extent to clean up the situation.

I wish to quote from the Toronto Star of Saturday last, which gives an account of a speech by the Hon. Grant M. Hudson, representative in congress of that section of Michigan which is across the river from Windsor. He disputes many of the statements which the minister made in this house some time ago. The minister's statements to-day would seem to conflict with what this gentleman says, and of course we must accept the minister's statement. However, I will read this for the benefit of the minister because, although there may be other inaccuracies in this statement, it must be taken seriously because it is the speech of a congressman in the House of Representatives at Washington.

The minister made the statement that vessels of five tons and under did not have to take out clearances in the United States, but Mr. Hudson points out that it is only in the case of passage from one American port to another American port that these boats are not required to have clearances. He points out that under American law, if these vessels leave for a Canadian or foreign port, they must secure clearances.

Mr. EULER: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but would he mind reading that part of the law to which he now refers, that it is necessary for American boats to obtain clearances when they leave for a foreign port?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have no law here.

Mr. EULER: I am quite sure the law is quoted there, because I read that myself.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This is a statement of the Hon. Mr. Hudson.

Mr. EULER: Yes, and I think he quotes the American law.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps so. The minister gave the house the impression that none of these boats of five tons and under were required to secure clearances from the United States.

Mr. EULER: Nor are they required to do so because they leave the United States without cargo. They come to Canada for their cargo.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This gentleman says they have to have a clearance regardless of whether they have a cargo or not.

Mr. EULER: What I stated was confirmed by the representatives from Washington when they met with our representatives.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Referring to the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue regarding five-ton vessels, Mr. Hudson quotes this statement of the Minister of National Revenue:

I am not going to suggest any reason but, peculiarly enough, we were requested by the United States government to discontinue the giving of notices to the collector at Detroit and in accordance with that request such notices were no longer given at that port. They asked us then to give weekly reports rather than daily reports by telephone and we have acceded to their request.

Mr. Hudson then asked:

What are the facts? The United States officers did not ask that these notices be discontinued until the Canadian government had refused to give information that would be of some real value. In doing this the fault did not lie with the Canadian customs officers, who undoubtedly acted within their instructions. The difficulty was apparently higher up.

Of course I realize that that conflicts with the statement which the minister made in the house this afternoon. Mr. Hudson goes on:

The vessels of less than five tons, to which Mr. Euler refers, are not registered in the United States by name but, like automobiles, by number. Every owner must take out a license, as he would for an automobile, and receive an identification number, which the regulations require shall be prominently displayed. This number is the only means of real identification. The Canadian authorities have been asked to give the identification number of the vessels that were cleared. This they have refused to do.

I realize that that conflicts with the minister's statement this afternoon. Mr. Hudson points out that on the Florida coast the Bahamas government does give them this information, and that it has been very useful to them in identifying vessels. He points out that one cannot rely at all on the identification given by the Canadian authorities. A boat may be called The Bat, The Bug or The Rambler, and the United States officers find that there is no such vessel. The names of the owners are fictitious and their addresses are often inaccurate or fictitious.

Mr. IRVINE: Might not the numbers also be fictitious?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I suppose there would be a license plate the same as for an automobile, and that would be some means of identification.

Mr. EULER: None at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Hudson points out that on account of the action of the Bahamas government the rum-running in that section has been clamped down very substantially. This has been done by arrangement with the British government, and he says that Canada has been asked to do this but up to date has refused to do so. He goes on:

If Canada will not stop granting clearances, will she at least take steps to make the rum-running business honest, in this regard at least, that the correct names of the vessels and the correct names of the owners shall be given, and that there shall be an insistence that the vessels clearing reach the destination for which they clear. . .

Surely it is not too much to suggest that the government of Canada should not be a knowing accessory to the falsehood and perjury that now characterizes the rum-running business on the border. The evidence is irrefutable that at present boats are cleared by Canadian customs officers under what they know to be a fictitious name of the boat and with what is known to be a fictitious name of the master, and to what is known to be a fictitious destination. This action is unjustifiable by any standard of international ethics.

He quotes the minister again:

Mr. Euler says: "Exportation of liquor from Canada is entirely legal. If we pass a law prohibiting clearance, the liquor will then go out in any case, but it will go out illegally and secretly instead of openly, above board."

Mr. Grant replies to that. He says:

"Here surely is a new principle in jurisprudence—that the law should be made to suit the would-be law violators, and that when their wrong-doing cannot be prevented by law it should be facilitated by law; that where you cannot prevent an evil thing from being done secretly, then provide that it may be done openly."

The same argument might be applied to murder, because you cannot detect all murderers and then make murder legal. He goes on to say:

"I wonder in what other regards would Mr. Euler apply this principle. It would work fine with hold-up gangs and burglars. Certain hours in broad daylight might be provided during which burglars and hold-up men would operate, and certain sections reserved for them. Apply this to obscene literature or immoral plays. Provide that insted of this being driven into the dark and underground it be brought right out into the open. Let the obscene literature be displayed on certain corners during certain hours. Let the immoral plays be given in the open park."

Then he proceeds to challenge the minister's statement that the United States government was not sincere in its attempt to enforce the law.

As a proof of the earnestness of the United States in seeing that their officials do their duty, there is the fact that to-day there are nine officers in gaol in the city of Detroit for the taking of bribes and ten others under indictment awaiting trial. It may be further said that the bribing of these officers was done by the very rum-runners and the interests behind them with whose infamous business Mr. Euler declines to interefere.

Mr. Hudson claimed that Mr. Euler was in error regarding United States law when he claimed that all boats under five tons sailing from United States ports are not required to take clearances and do not need to report when they return.

"It is true," Mr. Hudson said, "that these vessels do not need to take out clearance papers when going to another port within the United States, but they do require clearance papers when going to a foreign port."

Mr. BIRD: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say one or two persuasive words in the hope that the minister will yet choose the better way. I have given this matter very careful attention and I have considered the reasons advanced by the minister and also by his officials. I maintain that anyone who impartially considers those reasons cannot say that they are impressive, except in the sense that they are unimpressive. It seems to me to be a case of alleging reasons to support a position that has been come to without the aid of reason. I am reminded of the story of the old British squire who sat down to write out his reasons against prohibition. He jotted down twelve reasons, and then to bring them to a close added a thirteenth, which read, "and for any other reason." Now, when I read the reasons that were concocted by the minister's officials after the January confabulation with the officials from the States, that story came very strongly to my mind. When I read over those eleven points, each succeeding point seemed to destroy the force of the whole case.

I think there are three very clear reasons—not thirteen, but three—why the minister should prohibit clearances of these liquor-laden vessels going to a friendly country; three reasons that stand out so spontaneously in one's mind that I would have thought they could not have been gotten around even by the official mind. The first reason is that public opinion has already expressed itself in a most articulate form in this house. In 1926 a committee of this house declared clearly that the only ethical thing to do was to prohibit these clearances. What has the minister to offset that clearly expressed will of the people of Canada? One should hardly need to bring forward any other reason. But surely if I were asked to appreciate the work of the Liberal government in the last few years I think I would say in their commendation that they had been very sensitive to the will of the House of Commons, that they had sent out feelers almost constantly to find out what the Commons were thinking, what they had thought, and what their position was on any given question. I would say that very freely. But here is a case where, for no adequate reason at all, the minister is going counter to the clearly expressed declaration of the House of Commons. And the onus is altogether on the minister. "But" he says, "my officials"—my officials—"considered this thing, and they outlined their reasons, and I accept their reasons." He did accept their reasons. His speech the other day was a very faithful recapitulation of the points that were drawn up by his officials. I have the greatest respect for the officials of the government. I have never yet in my contact with any of them had any cause for anything but respect. But I have yet to learn that government officials in the position in which they are ought to formulate government policies on these all-important things. They are there to carry out policies already formulated by responsible government. Do not let us hear too much about this "responsible government" business because whenever it is convenient to do so ministers and governments are prepared to shoot the whole thing to the winds. The Minister of National Revenue cannot shoulder this on to his officials, because people will immediately ask, "Where do the officials get their hunch from?" Either they got their eleven points from the minister or the minister got his eleven points from them. "Oh", you say, "well,"—and the minister actually said it—"the man in the street has pronounced on this thing. The man in the street says we have no business to try to enforce the laws of the United States."

Well, I have not much respect for the "man in the street", because I have never met him. That is one of the fictitious personages from time to time invented by people who have axes to grind in order that they might put into his mouth sentiments that would be unpopular if they came from their own lips. The man in the street indeed! He has appeared again, as he will often appear, speaking popular phrases, well-conceived catch words, that have no foundation in reason and are not meant to appeal to reason, but are meant to appeal to passion, to that ignoble passion that one nation has inherently against another. It does not matter what crisis occurs, from somewhere, from some dark corner, from some anonymous source, the man in the street, this imaginary phonograph, will get off the popular catch-word—"Oh, it is not Canada's place to enforce laws in America". And that is sufficient.

The brewers of Canada are not without influence; they are not without brains; they are not without ingenuity; they are not without knowledge of this time-honoured game, the instinctive sense of psychology by which you can make use of the gullibility of the so-called man in the street. Someone has said that if you will let him write the songs of a nation anyone who likes may make its laws. One might also say, "Let me coin the catchwords of a party and I don't care who makes its policies"; because the catchwords will eventually rule. A very clever catchword indeed, displaying remarkable genius: It is not our business to enforce the laws of the United States—no truck or trade with the Yankees—our whole history of politics is bespattered with these despicable phrases invented by self-interest and put into the mouth of this fictitious person, the man in the street. One would have thought that a clear expression of public opinion through parliament would have given the minister his steer and not this shady and suspicious voice out of this puppet which no one knows or calls brother, the man in the street.

Another reason equally conclusive is the dictate of international good feeling. I saw on the bulletin board this afternoon that the British embassy at Washington had refused to sign any more requisitions for the importation of liquor into that embassy. That seems a small thing, and it is a small thing. But the less demonstrative a gesture the greater its value. It is not the big things that affect relationships between nations. Anyone who reads the story of the great war as told by Sir Edward Grey will discover that the things which exacerbated relations between the European nations were all despicably small things, little slights we should be ashamed almost to show between individuals. These are the seeds that eventually become dragons' teeth. If we did something openly against the United States, if we made some blatant brag, they would probably laugh at us and that would be the end of it. But no nation can afford to overlook these little courtesies and felicitations, because they are the things which ultimately determine relationships between nations. A little spark kindles a great fire and a little mustard seed will some day grow into a big tree. You may say that this is a small thing. I know it is a small thing. But when one great nation comes along to another, looks over the fence as it were and asks some small courtesy, some small concession that costs very little, it seems to me there is an opportunity we cannot afford to overlook. But it is going to be overlooked. I think that the minister, for whose common sense and human feeling I have conceived the very highest regard, has overlooked some of the simplest impulses of our nature. I do not think the minister has ever kept chickens, for instance, on a thirty foot lot.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BIRD: There is sometimes a display of a very inferior type of humour in this house, and I rather thought this remark would elicit it.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Who started it?

Mr. BIRD: At any rate it is plain to see that the minister was never in that situation, because he would have found out that a principle of human justice, dating back to the time when Justinian himself kept chickens, is that a man who keeps chickens must fence against them; it is not the man on the other side of the lot who must do the fencing. The man who keeps the chickens must do the fencing, and God forbid that the minister should ever keep chickens; for what is going to happen to his neighbours? Every morning the minister is going to go down when he takes the milk in and open his garden gate and shoo his chickens into his neighbour's yard; so to speak, he is going to give them clearance into his neighbour's garden. In other words, he is going to disregard a principle of justice recognized by all civilized peoples in the memory of man.

I appeal to the minister to lend an ear to such simple dictates as begot the golden rule, to such simple impulses that make for neighbourliness everywhere. The principles by which we live harmoniously together in little communities are ultimately the principles by which nations live harmoniously side by side.

I want to suggest another principle before I conclude. I think the dictates of reverence for law and order ought to have guided the minister. But the puppet in the street says it is not our business to help the Yankees to maintain law and order. "I am not my brother's keeper" is a form of cynicism as old as human writing; the disavowal of any obligation for the life of our neighbour is not a new thing in the earth. But the most surprising fact is that it should find modified expression on the humane lips of the minister. It is not our business to interfere; it is not our business to help them to maintain law and order. I want to point out, however, that it is our business in a very real sense. It was Carlyle who told about a tragic occurrence in a Scottish city, when some poor people caught the typhus fever in the slums of that city. The wealthy people in the west end said, "That is not our business; they must look after themselves." But the typhus germ, being a very democratic animal, did not stay in the slums; it strayed over into the other end of the city and the city was decimated. Now that is what is going to happen on our border if we disavow responsibility for helping the United States to maintain law and order. If we refuse to recognize that responsibility, do you think we are going to be able to stem the flood of lawlessness and disorder that will break through that invisible line? I do not think we can expect it.

We have heard a good deal this session about the tragedy of divorce, the breaking up of homes. You know that homes do not break up spontaneously; all kinds of moral influences contribute to that result. Do you think these influences can be stopped at the border? Do you think that by talking about divorce or social ethics in this house you are going to put up an insuperable barrier at the border? That cannot be done in that way, but it can be done by showing some sincere effort to maintain social conditions, not only here but on the other side of the line as well which will lend themselves to the establishment of our old-time institutions. No, we cannot be indifferent to what is going on across the line; sooner or later our homes will be exposed to the same influences.

In closing I want to remind hon. gentlemen that this house spoke two or three years ago, and as far as I can learn no one has spoken since except the "man in the street," who does not exist. The dictates of international good feeling implore my hon. friend to take a different course; respect for law and order on both sides of the line also pleads with him to yield this simple point, which will cost Canada practically nothing. He is asked simply to place his prohibition on the clearance of these vessels.

Mr. ROBINSON: I do not want to prolong the debate or take up the time of the house unnecessarily, but I should like to add a word or two to this discussion. During the days of the Drury government in Ontario it was a popular pastime to picture the border along the Detroit river as a terrible place and the people who lived there as outlaws; it used to be suggested that it would not be safe for decent or respectable people to walk the streets after dark, and apparently some of our hon. friends in the southeast corner have caught the fever. I would like to tell them that the distillers, the brewers and the exporters are doing an honest business and are living up to the law. Whenever churches, hospitals and other charitable institutions want help they do not forget to call upon these people for money, and they are usually very generous in responding.

With regard to the articles in the Toronto Star and in MacLean's magazine, I want to say that these articles are written in the most sensational manner possible. In order to illustrate the unfairness of the Toronto Star I might tell the committee that prior to the last election they sent to the border a couple of reporters who laid indiscriminate charges against four exporters in East Essex, four in West Essex and two breweries, but when the magistrate called the cases the next day these men were not to be found; they had gone over the river. After the election was over the cases proceeded, with the result that these men had not a tittle of evidence to support their charges, and they received a severe reprimand from the magistrate.

I am firmly of the opinion that it is not up to Canada to attempt to enforce the Volstead act of the United States, a law which they themselves make very little attempt to enforce. For instance, when the river was frozen over and the boats could not cross, all through the day there was a long stream of automobiles and sleighs carrying goods across the river below Ojibway from the Canadian side to Detroit, and hundreds of people watched them unload and reload their cargoes in broad daylight.

Hon. gentlemen spoke about these thugs and bootleggers and implied that they were Canadians, but that is not the fact. Last fall they had an investigation on the American side and discharged about one hundred or more preventive officers, many of whom were found to be criminals themselves; some of them were house-breakers, thieves and hijackers. I was very much amused at the reference by the hon. member for Kindersley as to the number of automobiles that had been seized. They may seize an occasional automobile in Detroit, which is sent to the police department to be sold; a friend of the bootlegger usually buys back the car for $5 or $10, and that is all there is to it. A number of boats were seized and taken to anchorage, and when the time came to sell them it was discovered that they had all disappeared.

I claim that if the United States officials were in earnest they could stop the bootlegging across the Detroit river, but they are not in earnest. I also think the United States owes Canada a debt of gratitude for allowing their bootleggers to import this liquor; if they were not able to get a supply of good liquor and beer their people would be drinking squirrel whiskey and all that sort of stuff, which sends them to the hospital and blinds them, as had happened in a hundred cases, especially a few years ago. I do not know that I have anything further to say except to add that I am heartily in accord with the statement made by the minister a few days ago.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Like the hon. member for West Essex I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I do wish to say that I agree with very much of the statement the minister made in the house a few days ago, and my chief reason for taking this attitude is that I believe the minister and his department have more than they can handle in enforcing the Canadian laws with regard to liquor.

I did not rise to hand out any compliments; I am going to criticize the department, because I believe their decision of a few months ago to close a number of preventive stations and outports in the maritime provinces will make a paradise out of what was formerly a garden of eden for the smugglers. I need scarcely say that when vessels were obliged to enter and clear at the different ports, the department had a close check upon them; they were able to follow the course of these vessels from day to day and from week to week, and they knew pretty well what was going on. The present plan is that all coastwise vessels may enter and leave these ports freely, without the necessity of either entering or clearing. What will be the result? Look at the advantage it will be to the smugglers if they are not obliged to report anywhere during the whole season, if they do not choose to do so; they can go into and out of practically all the different rivers and harbours of Prince Edward Island; they can go out to the gulf and meet the mother ship loaded with liquor and return to any of these harbours openly and freely. So I say the department has done more to assist the smuggler than can be overcome by any means at its disposal.

I have a further complaint to make with regard to the closing of these offices; I refer to the inconvenience this action will cause a great many people in many sections of the country. I believe the minister has received a petition signed by a large number of the residents of one of the ports where the office was closed, and as it is short and concise I will read it in order to show in some measure the inconvenience these people will suffer as a result of this action. This petition is addressed to the hon. minister, and reads as follows:

The undersigned residents of Cardigan and vicinity, in the county of Kings, Prince Edward Island, having learned that your department proposes to close the customs office in the village of Cardigan, take the liberty of making the following representations in connection therewith.

(1) This office has been an established institution since the province joined confederation, and is a very great convenience to the people of a large and prosperous section of country.

(2) The village of Cardigan is the customs and railway centre shipping port for a number of large and populous settlements, some of which are twelve to fifteen miles from the railway, and all of which will be seriously inconvenienced by the closing of this office.

(3) The entering and clearing of vessels is a matter of much importance, and while this does not bring in revenue, and we realize that the office may not be profitable from that standpoint, we beg to submit that the service given to the public generally is so great as to more than justify its maintenance in view of the very small salary and expense connected with it.

(4) In stressing the urgency of this matter we wish to represent that the question of revenue should not be the department's only guide in such cases. Accommodation to the public is being given in most branches of government service without regard to financial returns, and we believe this is a case in which the needs of a large section of country should be considered rather than the small economy which can be effected by closing the office.

Therefore we earnestly pray that your department should give further consideration to this case, and trust you may see your way clear to meet our views, and the needs of this district, by maintaining the customs office at Cardigan.

The same arguments could be applied to several other districts where the offices have been closed, notably at Murray Harbour, Murray River, and St. Peter's Bay, and to a lesser extent at Annandale. During the summer time there is a considerable traffic from the United States to Prince Edward Island. Many of our people who have gone to that country to work return for a visit to their friends, and of course the custom is to check their baggage through from Boston or New York, or whatever point they depart from. Take the case of Cardigan. A man writes to his friends at that point advising them that he expects to arrive by a certain train, and he checks his baggage through. Perhaps his friends have to drive twelve or fifteen miles to meet him, and then it is discovered that they cannot get his baggage. What are they going to do about that? They will have to go back home and make another trip to some other place where there is a customs house in order to have the baggage examined. Considerable hardship will be caused through closing this office, when it could be averted by continuing to pay the small salary which was paid to the official at that point. The reason given is that the customs returns have been so small, but if the same principle were applied to other branches of the government service many offices would have to be closed. It would be found necesasry to close most of the post offices if they were considered on a revenue basis.

There is another port which I would like to mention, the port of Georgetown. This is the winter port of Prince Edward Island, and is the port of call for many vessels. I have made representations both to the minister and to the commissioner of customs regarding this matter. I made them as strong as I could, and I wish to repeat them here. The only expense at that port is the salary of the official, because there is a government building which houses both the customs and the post office. That building has to be maintained, heated and lighted for the post office, regardless of whether or not the customs house is maintained. This customs office was established long before confederation. Last year fifty-three foreign vessels entered and cleared; there were two hundred and fifty-three coastwise entrances and clearances, or over three hundred in all. Some of these are large foreign steamers which carry away our potatoes in the fall for delivery to the southern states. I have received information that the postmaster is to be authorized to enter and clear the foreign vessels, while the coastwise vessels are to be allowed to trade back and forth without being subject to entrance and clearance. Even though it has been thought desirable to close this office, the department has a man down there who is costing the department possibly over $2,000 per year, while the man they dismissed was only receiving $660 per year. How long this expensive officer will be kept there is a problem, because at the present time there is no postmaster and there may not be one appointed for many months. Surely if it is necessary to maintain a man there it would be far better to retain the man receiving a salary of $660 per year than to continue to employ one who is costing over $2,000 per year.

Mr. EULER: Is the hon. member referring to the postmaster?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I refer to the officer of the department who is at present at that port. The man who was dismissed had been at that port for the last eighteen years, and although it was thought necessary to close the port they sent an official from Charlottetown to take charge of the office and keep it open.

Mr. EULER: Is the hon. member referring to the present time?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Yes.

Mr. EULER: What officer is the hon. member referring to?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The officer's salary is $1,500 per year and he is receiving his expenses, which I estimate would run to at least $500 per year. A considerable amount of money was spent on repairing the bonded warehouse at this point, even though the office has been abolished. I think this matter should be reconsidered by the department and a decision arrived at to keep this office open, in the interest both of the province and of the shipping traffic to and from that port.

What are we going to do when a vessel which must have qualified officers who must be under articles arrives at the port of Georgetown or one of the other ports I have mentioned where the offices have been abolished? How can we put the crews upon articles and start the ship out? How are we going to pay our sick mariners' dues? What will happen to a vessel which has no clearance papers when it is forced by stress of weather to seek shelter in a foreign port? Under the marine laws a vessel without clearance papers is liable to arrest. These things, taken in connection with the statements which I have previously made regarding the advantages accruing to the smugglers, should, I think, convince the minister that this matter should be reconsidered and the offices which have been closed reopened.

Mr. EULER: I did not reply sooner to the speeches made by some of my hon. friends, chiefly in the far corner, because I had spoken briefly this afternoon to what seemed to me to be the only points of importance that were brought up. I might add to and enlarge upon what I said some two weeks ago when the question was previously discussed in order to strengthen the arguments I made at that time, and which do not seem to have force with some of my hon. friends on the other side. I shall refrain, however, from doing that. It is not my intention to reply particularly to anything that has been said to-day, because with all respect to my hon. friends I do not think they have refuted anything I said ten days or two weeks ago. There may be one or two exceptions. Apparently, there are differences of opinion between a certain United States congressman and myself, but I must adhere absolutely to what I said on the occasion to which I refer.

Something was said with regard to vessels crossing from Detroit to Windsor, and the matter of clearances. I must maintain that boats that leave the United States shore without cargoes, as those boats do leave, do not obtain clearances. They leave Detroit, we will say, with no cargo, because they expect to get their cargo on the Canadian side, and they do not obtain clearances.

With regard to marks of identification, these boats may be marked with a number similar to that carried by an automobile; but surely if a man is bent, as he is in United States waters, on an illegal errand, he is not going to continue to carry that identification mark, and it is very easy for him, before he reaches the Canadian side, to remove the little name or license number that his vessel bore when he left the city of Detroit. I put it to the common sense of the committee whether a Canadian customs officer, in giving clearance to the United States vessel, can do anything to find out whether the name of the master of that vessel or the name of the boat itself is real or fictitious. He cannot do it. As I said this afternoon—and I say it with no intention of giving offence—if it were felt by the United States authorities that we were not giving the proper information, surely they would have accepted the invitation extended to them by this government only two months ago to place on our docks their own officials who could themselves give the necessary information to United States authorities at Detroit or any other point on the United States side of the border. As I said at the outset, I do not propose to enlarge on the matter. I stated some days ago my position and that of the government. What I have heard to-night has not led me to feel that any change should be made in the statement I made then; nor have I any reason to believe, after listening to the debate, that the opinion of the great majority of the members of the house is opposed to what I then said.

With regard to the statement of the hon. member for Kings as to the closing of ports, I may say that in the last year or so some 230 of them have been closed, and this has been one of the most disagreeable experiences I have had since I have been in the office. It is not an easy matter to close a port. In practically every instance strong objection is raised to the closing of a port, no matter how small it may be; there is an element of local pride involved, also the matter of convenience, and of course somebody will be inconvenienced when a port is closed. We have endeavoured to reduce that to a minimum. I might state to the committee the course upon which we proceeded. Perhaps a year and a half ago, when we had time to get down to this particular phase of the work, we called in the inspectors of the various districts and they got together with the commissioners and officials of the department at Ottawa. They sat down at a table with a map showing the various ports and they discussed very freely what ports might be closed without injury to public business. A large selection was made and as yet they have not all been dealt with. As I say, we have closed some 230 ports. The matter of revenue has not been in all cases the deciding factor, although it has been in some. The matter of entries and the matter of convenience are involved. We have been more disposed to leave open the ports on the border than those smaller ports inland. But the matter of revenue is important. For instance, take the case of Cardigan, one of the points mentioned by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island. The import duties amounted to $324.54 and the salary paid, $360. We are not trying to single out any particular province. In Nova Scotia there were more than 100 ports and outports where the revenues were smaller than the expense of maintaining the ports. The amount of expenditure and revenue is not necessarily the deciding factor, but it should have a very important bearing on the matter. The closing of the ports was one of the things recommended both by the parliamentary committee of inquiry and by the royal commission inquiring into the customs.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to get this question clearly—

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend will have his opportunity later. It is also recommended by the auditors, Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth. I may say frankly that it was done because I thought it was the right thing to do. That is why we are doing it and continuing to do it.

As regards the entries and clearances of vessels and a good many of the revenues in connection with imported commodities, in the smaller places we have tried as far as possible to meet the conveniences of all concerned. For instance, all postal parcels may be entered at the post office by the postmaster himself. Foreign vessels may be cleared by the postmaster. In that way we have tried to reduce the inconvenience to a minimum. I fully appreciate, as my hon.

friend says, there will be considerable inconvenience, but I may inform him also that ports have been closed of a great deal more importance than the ones to which he has referred, ports with revenues a great deal higher. I do not see how this is going to be avoided; the house approved some years ago the principle of closing some of these ports, and it simply cannot be done without offending some of our people.

Mr. MANION: In that regard, may I ask the minister about Cardinal and Iroquois? I brought the matter up before. A friend of mine spoke to me about it. Cardinal was closed; Iroquois was not, yet Cardinal was doing the greater amount of business. Is Iroquois still open?

Mr. EULER: Yes. The matter is still under consideration. I rather expect to receive some criticism because a certain port may have been closed while another port is still open, although that other port may have a smaller revenue than the one that has been closed. I shall have to admit that there may be instances of that kind. My only answer is that we have not yet completed the work. We hope to settle those matters after a time.

Mr. MANION: I had it pointed out to me, and I am sure the minister has had it pointed out to him, that a large amount of money, some tens of thousands of dollars, is being taken in by the national railways at Cardinal. It is very important from a revenue standpoint. I should like the minister, in view of the facts which I and others have laid before him, to give the matter further consideration. It is rather unfair to have closed this port, particularly in view of smaller places having been left open.

Mr. EULER: I am informed that, as regards Cardinal, the matter has all been settled quite satisfactorily. In many of these places, while the total of the revenue may be quite large, the number of entries may be quite small. The work of the collector is very much less on that account.

Mr. MANION: In what way has it been satisfactorily settled?

Mr. EULER: Most of the importations I understand are coal and corn. The boat will unload directly at the port, but the duty may be paid at Prescott. I understand that the Canada Starch Company, who are the chief business people there, are quite satisfied with the arrangements we have made. I would say further to the committee that there is no absolute finality about this matter. It may be found that a mistake has been made in closing a certain port, and if we are convinced that such is the case I have no objection to reopening the whole question with a view perhaps to opening a port again.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): When I spoke before I overlooked mentioning that the port of Georgetown was considered of sufficient importance by the legislative assembly of Prince Edward Island for them to take the matter up in session last spring, when they heard that the port was to be closed, and I have in my hand a resolution that was passed unanimously by the house, and signed by the Speaker, protesting against the closing of this port. I have also a resolution to the same effect from the town council of Georgetown. I should like to know what is going to be done about vessels in connection with the points I have brought up—a vessel gets blown off her course and has to go to a foreign port without a clearance; also with regard to a vessel that wishes to pay the sick mariners' fund.

Mr. VENIOT: They can arrange that through the post office.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): How would you get articles for the crew in connection with a vessel over 100 tons?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend is dealing with a technical point that I do not understand, but I will take a note of what he says.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I happen to know these matters because it is a part of my business. There might be very serious inconvenience in that connection.

Mr. EULER: In any event it is a matter not for the customs department, but for the Marine department.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The collector of customs always handled that. It is the only way that I know of.

Mr. VENIOT: As an old collector of customs may I say in connection with the signing of an articled crew that there is a fee charged, and it can easily be arranged for the chief collector to go to the outport or sub-port and sign on the crew. The commission he would get would be sufficient to pay the expenses.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): That is what I am trying to get at. I want to know what arrangement is being made, because something will be necessary. I think we are also entitled to know why the man at Georgetown was dismissed and a man drawing three times as much sent to take his place for the time being, and how long that condition will continue. I stress the point for the reason that the collector of customs had been there eighteen years, and being a man with a family and receiving only $660 a year, he has not been able to save any money. It was a full-time job and he was not able to take on any other work. Now he is let out without notice. Surely it is unfair to let him out in that way. If anybody has to be kept on it should be the man who has been there for years.

Mr. EULER: I am sure there must be an error. It may be the man to whom my hon. friend refers as receiving $2,000 or $3,000 is a preventive service man.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): No.

Mr. EULER: The incumbent of the office received a salary of $660 a year. He was superannuated, and the office, according to my records, was closed on May 1 of this year. I cannot understand how there can be a man there now drawing the salary that my hon. friend mentions. I should like to ask where he gets his information that a man has been sent there drawing a salary of $2,000 or more a year to replace another man who was drawing $660 a year. Perhaps his information is personal, but if he can prove it I think we are very seriously in error. There must be a mistake somewhere.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): That is why I brought the matter up. I consider it is entirely wrong. I was there only two weeks ago, and I know the man is there.

Mr. EULER: What is his name?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Nicholas Murphy, from the Charlottetown office; and I see from the report of the department that his salary is $125 a month. He is boarding at the hotel, and certainly that would be not less than $500 a year. The reason he was there was that there was no postmaster.

Mr. VENIOT: The post office is not closed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): No, a girl is running the post office temporarily because no postmaster has been appointed. The position became vacant a month or so ago, and no appointment has yet been made. This man was sent down there to keep the customs office open. In fairness to the man who was eighteen years in charge of this office, I say that if some person had to be there to carry on those duties, he should have been retained, at a lower cost to the department, and to his personal advantage.

Mr. EULER: I can only say what I said before, that it comes as a surprise to me to hear that there is a man there drawing $150 a month, replacing the man who had been drawing a salary of $660 a year, and was superannuated in the ordinary course. I think my hon. friend must be in error. There is a mistake somewhere. We all make mistakes and perhaps the mistake is here, but none of the officials know of any such man having been appointed. I promise my hon. friend that I will make an investigation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): That was the condition only two weeks ago.

Mr. SHORT: I also am interested in the closing of these ports because in my constituency ten or twelve of them have been closed, and practically every one of them is on the coast line. That leaves practically the whole coast line free for smuggling, because there is no one there to prevent it. The postmasters are not interested in this matter. They may be interested in the entering and clearing of vessels, but not in knowing what cargoes those vessels land.

Mr. EULER: There are preventive service men along the coast.

Mr. SHORT: Not a preventive service man. You closed the office at Tiverton, on Long island, a point which a preventive service officer has never visited more than once in six or eight months, and there are vessels plying between the United States and that port right through the whole season. It is not on the mainland. There has been an office there since confederation. I have been informed that the office at Bear River is also to be closed. The reason given by the department is that the revenue was only $2,000 a year. I do not know whether that office has yet been closed, but my information from the minister personally and in a letter from his secretary was that it was the intention to close it. That port has had a customs office ever since confederation, and it would be a great inconvenience to have it closed. I can quite understand the department closing a lot of little offices in the interior, but to close the ones along the seacoast such as those I have in my constituency is a great mistake. It is a great inconvenience to the public. It may be that many of these small offices do not pay a sufficient revenue to keep them up, but it is not only for revenue purposes that you have offices along the coast; it is to prevent smuggling and for the convenience of the public. Take a point like Tiverton. Perhaps that is not an office producing revenue sufficient to defray the expenses, but there is a great deal of shipping in and out of there, vessels plying between Canada and the United States. The postmaster who has the authority to enter and clear those vessels is not interested in whether they are smuggling or not; all he is interested in is the fifty or seventy-five cents that he gets for entering and clearing each vessel. You are leaving the whole coast wide open for smugglers. That is a great mistake.

I understand the minister stated to-night that the postmasters in these places will collect the duty on parcels. Now, that is not the case. As I understand it, under the new regulations these parcels will come to the main point—in my constituency the Digby customs office—where they will be opened by the collector, and he will assess the duty. He makes the entry, not the postmaster in the place to which the parcel is addressed. Then the collector sends the parcel to the postmaster to collect the duty. You are putting the work of several offices on to the main office. You are not going to save anything, because you will have to give the main office more help in order to take care of this parcel business, which is very large in many of the country places. You have also to give a commission to the postmaster on the duties collected. You are saving very little by this change, and you are inconveniencing the public very much indeed. I think the minister should have considered these things before he took this step. He should have looked into the situation more thoroughly and found out just what the public inconvenience was going to be. Let me ask him: how many of these offices have been closed in the constituency next to mine, Shelburne-Yarmouth?

Mr. EULER: I cannot tell my hon. friend. I have not the information in that form.

Mr. SHORT: You should have the information. You must have expected that this matter was going to be brought up.

Mr. EULER: I certainly did, but I did not expect members would ask me how many offices were closed in their respective constituencies.

Mr. SHORT: There is a good deal of partiality shown in this thing.

Mr. EULER: I question it.

Mr. SHORT: I do not question it.

Mr. VENIOT: I know in my county alone they have closed five.

Mr. SHORT: That is all right. How many are closed in the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth?

[Mr. Short.]

Mr. EULER: At least five are closed there.

Mr. SHORT: There were twelve closed in Digby-Annapolis. I think we have more coast line in Digby-Annapolis than they have in Shelburne-Yarmouth; in fact I feel confident that is so. I think there is partiality shown in the closing of these offices. You say there is no politics in this at all. Well, has the Bear River office been closed?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. SHORT: The minister changed his mind in that case, then.

Mr. EULER: It is not closed yet.

Mr. SHORT: He changed his mind.

Mr. EULER: Not necessarily.

Mr. SHORT: He told me personally that he was going to close it. His secretary wrote me it was to be closed, and that the collector would be sent to the office at Halifax. Why was it not closed?

Mr. EULER: I told my hon. friend it is under consideration.

Mr. SHORT: But the minister had already made up his mind, because I have in my office a letter from his secretary in which he states the office was to be closed and the collector sent to Halifax.

Mr. EULER: That may be quite true.

Mr. SHORT: Will the minister tell me why he did not close it?

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend wants me to say so, I cannot tell; I do not know as yet. I do not recollect everything that is done in this department. I will get the information for him if he wants it.

Mr. SHORT: But the minister must have those records. He certainly must have expected that these questions would be asked, because he has closed these offices all over the country. He should have come here prepared to answer these questions.

Mr. EULER: If I came here prepared to answer every question asked by hon. members I would fill every desk in the chamber with papers.

Mr. SHORT: His deputy must have the records. I am very glad indeed that he has changed your mind in connection with the closing of Bear River. But he certainly had made up his mind to close it, and had given instructions to close it. Undoubtedly political pressure was brought to bear on him, and that is the reason it has not been closed.

Mr. EULER: I am quite sure it would be no use to deny that; my hon. friend would not believe me anyway.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I think, Mr. Chairman, we are all in the same position wth regard to the closing of ports. This action is certainly unpopular in the different districts throughout the Dominion and especially down in the maritimes where those ports have been used by the people for a great number of years. I do not think any partiality has been shown. If there has been any we have not discovered it, because in the county which I represent all the ports have been closed with the exception of two. There were two ports there that we were very anxious to have kept open, Tignish and Alberton, in the extreme western part of the province, fifty or sixty miles from the town of Summerside, which is the headquarters. We felt that although those offices were not remunerative to the department, still they were of benefit to the people and their continuance would be greatly appreciated. We took the matter up with the minister and did our best, but the policy which he is following throughout the whole Dominion has, I suppose, to prevail. With what my hon. friend has said regarding the port of Georgetown I quite agree. It is the winter port of the province, and I know the provincial government took a very strong stand that it should be left open. If, however, arrangements have been made through the Post Office department whereby vessels can be cleared so that no inconvenience will result to the people, it may be all right; but otherwise we would like to see the ports left open. We have received very strong protests against the closing; we have sent those to the minister, and all I can say is, we are sorry we were not able to prevail on him to leave the ports open.

Mr. EULER: There is one thing I should like to mention that I overlooked. The chief purpose in the closing of the ports was to follow out the recommendations of the parliamentary committee and the royal commission as they commended themselves to myself and the department. With regard to this one thing in particular, the complaint was that the department was losing large revenues because of undervaluation. True, is was not only smuggling, it was undervaluation, which has not entirely been gotten rid of. You can only get proper valuations by getting proper appraisals; you can only get proper appraisals through good appraisers; and you cannot get good appraisers in a very small port. That was one of the compelling reasons for the closing of those ports. I should like to ask those who are objecting so strenuously to the closing of these small offices, what principle they would advise the minister to follow in closing them. If they are going to base their objection entirely on the score of local inconvenience, then no ports at all would be closed.

Mr. SHORT: What is the necessity for closing them? They have been there for twenty years.

Mr. EULER: I am afraid that nothing I might say would appeal to the hon. member. In the town of Tiverton the salary was $360 per annum while the import duties amounted to only $234.10. He speaks of the large number of vessels arriving and departing, only twelve foreign-going vessels arrived in the course of the year.

Mr. SHORT: But those twelve might bring in thousands of dollars.

Mr. EULER: The entries were only forty-three, not one a week. This, it goes without saying, is a reason for closing the port.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not a conclusive argument. We are keeping post offices open at various places, the revenue of which is, comparatively speaking, very small; but they are a convenience to the public.

Mr. EULER: Would my hon. friend give me the benefit of his advice as to what principle should be adopted in the closing of ports?

Mr. CANTLEY: I would not close an office that had been open for sixty years until I had good evidence that by so doing the public service would be enhanced. Will the minister tell me how many offices were closed in the county of Pictou, and the names?

Mr. POWER: May I point out to the hon. member that the difference between a post office official and a customs officer is that one is a convenience and the other a nuisance.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is your point of view.

Mr. EULER: I cannot give that information; it is not given by counties.

Mr. CANTLEY: Have you closed the custom house at Pugwash?

Mr. EULER: Since there seems to be a charge of favoritism I might point out that in Prince Edward Island there were twenty-three ports and the number has been reduced to four. In view of the political complexion of that province I do not think anyone will contend that there is favoritism there.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I did not charge favoritism in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. EULER: I was not thinking of my hon. friend in that connection. Pugwash is closed.

Mr. CANTLEY: I regret that. Pugwash has been open since long before confederation—seventy-five years and more. In that port we have some foreign shipping and the closing of that office will be a distinct inconvenience to the people there; it is, I think, a very great mistake from every point of view. I appreciate the fact that the minister is guided by the very best intentions, but in this matter he has gone too far. A few years' experience will demonstrate that to him. I am not suggesting political favouritism. I do not think there was any political interference at all; I am not making that charge so far as Pugwash is concerned. But I do say that it was a mistake to close the port and I should like the minister to reconsider his decision with respect to this particular port. I might advance various reasons but I will not do so now, because I have faith in the good intentions of the minister and I think that after consideration he will reverse his decision.

Mr. EULER: I will not say that I will not give every consideration to the matter in any event, but I can give the hon. member this information. The salary paid was $560 per annum and the collections amounted to $162.89. The entries were seventy-four, a little more than one a week. The export entries were eleven; foreign going vessels arriving numbered four in the whole year and foreign vessels departing, eleven; coasting vessels arriving during the year numbered twenty-four and departing, seventeen. The postmaster is authorized to make collections on postal parcels and to enter and clear foreign going vessels. I have given the import duties, which amount to $162, and I have given the salary paid, $560; on the face of it there is a fairly good argument for closing the port.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not arguing from the revenue. Where a certain number of foreign going vessels enter and clear they have to change crews; how will they do it now?

Mr. EULER: I am not familiar with the situation.

Mr. CANTLEY: They must go to Pictou to do it. They have to engage new crews and pay off the old crews, and to do that they are obliged to go to Pictou, whereas formerly they did it in Pugwash.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. VENIOT: The Pictou collector can go to Pugwash.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not the point. The point is that we have had facilities for over seventy-five years and you have taken them away and we are not satisfied and will not be satisfied under these conditions.

Mr. VENIOT: The same in my county.

Mr. SHORT: That does not help the matter.

Mr. VENIOT: I was reasonable enough to accept it because I saw the necessity, if we are to follow the report of the Royal Commission on Customs and Excise, as some hon. gentlemen opposite suggest we should. But when we do so they blame us.

Mr. SHORT: You have never heard anyone say you must follow it altogether.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes; I have heard you say so.

Mr. SHORT: You have never heard us say you must follow it in toto.

Mr. VENIOT: I have heard hon. gentlemen blame us for not following the recommendations of the customs commission.

Mr. SHORT: Not in everything; that is a lame excuse. I say that the closing of these ports which have been in existence for years and years is creating a good deal of hardship in many cases in Nova Scotia. I have cited the case of Bear River; that was a point where the collections were over $2,000 a year, and instructions have been given to close it. How can the minister justify that?

Mr. EULER: Ports have been closed with a much higher revenue than $2,000.

Mr. VENIOT: For example, Port Elgin, in New Brunswick, with $9,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister the other day made a statement which is reported in Hansard to this effect—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): By leave of the house, I beg to submit the fifteenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Saturday, June 8, 1929

The house met at 10.30 o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia, for Mr. Morin, St. Hyacinthe) presented the ninth report of the select standing committee on standing orders. He moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am informed that this report contains a request for the remission of money. When money has been paid to the officers of the house and the bill is not proceeded with or is not in order, that money automatically reverts to the Receiver General and can be refunded only by the Minister of Finance bringing in an estimate to that effect. Therefore, I think this motion should stand.

Motion stands.

YUKON MAIL CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, as there probably will not be time to have a question answered in the regular way, I would ask the Postmaster General to state how many tenders have been received for the Yukon mail contract, the names of those who have tendered, the amount of each tender, and the successful tenderer.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) consulted with me before deciding to ask this question, and I have an answer prepared. Nine tenders have been received, as follows:

Gorst Air Transport Limited—$750 per round trip carrying 1,000 pounds of mail each way with at least 50 round trips per season, $37,500.—And any trips in excess of 50 will be carried for $650 per trip (round), 1,000 pounds.

The department asked that tenders be submitted for the carrying of 62,000 pounds of mail. This tender would amount to $45,300 for 62,000 pounds. The following tenders were for the full tonnage of mail:

Thomas Cecil Richards Whitehorse, $44,000.
P. Martin and J. R. Alguire, $45,000.
John L. McLennan, A. Dubois and E. E. Hickey, $49,750.
J. E. Greenfield and J. E. Pickering (Greenfield and Pickering) Whitehorse, $56,000.
Christian Gloslie, $56,900.
George Camden Smith, Whitehorse, Yukon, $57,250.
Greenfield and Pickering, Whitehorse, (J. E. Greenfield and J. E. Pickering), $60,000.
Robert Lowe, Whitehorse, $60,000.

Those are the nine tenders. The question was to whom the contract would be awarded. The contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, namely, Thomas Cecil Richards, Whitehorse, $44,000.

For the information of the house I may say that since they brought up the question of carrying increased poundage, I have looked into the matter and it appears that a certain quantity of second-class matter accumulates during the winter time at Dawson or Whitehorse and is not transferred to the Yukon until some time in the spring or summer. I am endeavouring to make arrangements with the man who has been awarded this contract under the general call, to have that extra accumulated mail taken over at certain periods as it accumulates, perhaps once a month, and, if possible, twice a month. If that cannot be done in the regular way by the trail, we will endeavour to have it done by aeroplane so that when the spring arrives there will be very little, if any, accumulated mail for that section of the country.

The question has been raised of having that mail service carried out by aeroplane. I have not accepted that suggestion for the reason that if we accept the proposition of transporting mail to the Yukon entirely by aeroplane, we shall be taking away from the people of the Yukon the assistance they are now getting through a mail contract, of keeping the trail open in the winter time. By this system of transportation of the mail we aid that territory by keeping open the winter trail, and I thought it in the interests of the people there, while permitting a certain amount to be carried by aeroplane, to continue the old system of getting the mail through in order to assist those people by keeping the trail open during the winter.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 313, to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), the chairman of the committee, will, I think, be in a better position than I am to explain the amendments to the house.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): There are a few amendments which are really corrections of typographical errors which have crept into the printed copy. One amendment of a very serious nature is the following. The clause reads:

Any appointment made by the chief electoral officer may be made by reference to the title of office of the appointee.

The Senate in their revising capacity have thought well to make it read:

By reference to the title of the office.

There is some discussion amongst authorities learned in the law as to whether or not we should say a man has the title of office or the title of the office. In view, however, of the importance of the legislation, I would not suggest to the house that we appoint managers to consult with the Senate as to whether this matter was seriously discussed with them. The other amendments are not of any consequence and I suggest that the house accept them.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

National Revenue—salaries and contingencies, $795,840.

Mr. SPENCER: Yesterday we had a good deal of discussion with regard to clearance papers for vessels carrying liquor to the United States. If the government carried out the expressed wishes of this parliament in 1926 and refused clearance papers to such vessels, what difference would it make to the revenue of this country? If clearance papers were refused, would it cost a great deal, and if so, how much, in the minister's estimation, for any increased force that would have to be engaged to do this work?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I am not sure that I can give anything like an accurate estimate of the amount of revenue that would be lost if clearances were discontinued. It might not be very great. The committee, of course, understands that all excise is paid on liquor when it leaves the distilleries. The collections last year of liquor cleared for the United States amounted to $12,421,000. If those clearances were discontinued, I do not think it would at all follow that a large amount of liquor would not go to the United States, and whether it entered the United States by way of clearance or without a clearance, that liquor, if it came from Canadian distilleries, would still have paid us revenue, but it would not then appear under the heading of clearances to the United States, because clearances would not be granted. It would appear, no doubt, as domestic consumption. The liquor would be purchased, I suppose, from the government stores in Ontario or from the liquor commission in Quebec. It might be exported and yet it would not appear under clearances to the United States, so that we could not calculate what amount would be lost. It would all depend upon how much the exportation to the United States would be reduced by the discontinuance of clearances.

The other question, I understand, was how much it would cost—

Mr. SPENCER: For an extra force to try to prevent people from breaking the law with regard to importing liquor into the United States.

Mr. EULER: I cannot say definitely. I have heard it estimated at anywhere from $1,000,000 upward a year. It would depend upon the size of the preventive force you would require to establish. You might have to put boats on the lakes in order to watch vessels going out illegally without clearances.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister give the house the increase in the preventive service in the last three years?

Mr. EULER: In the land forces in 1927, there were 142 employees, and in 1928, 342. It was in 1928 that the chief reorganization took place. Last year there were 318 employees, a slight reduction as compared with the previous year. The personnel of the shipping crews amounted in 1927 to 283; 1928, 649; 1929, 544. To the latter should be added 48 men for two new vessels now building, one of which I understand will soon be in commission. The number of employees on cruisers and patrol boats in 1927 was 16, and in 1928, 39.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was the total number of employees in the land and sea forces of the preventive service in each of the last three years?

Mr. EULER: I have just given those figures.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total?

Mr. EULER: For this year the total is 544, and last year, 649. The reduction is caused by reducing the crews on some of the boats, and in some cases we have reduced the land forces as we thought it advisable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am at a loss to understand the figures just given by the minister. There may be an explanation. In reply to a question I put on the order paper some time ago I was given the total number of employees in the preventive service, including boats, during the fiscal years 1922-23, 1923-24, 1924-25, 1925-26, 1926-27, 1927-28, and the grand totals for the years to which we have just been referring were 299 for 1925-26 and 400 for 1926-27. The minister now says 649. For the first nine months of 1927-28, apparently the last figures available, the number was 662. The minister makes that 544.

Mr. EULER: In 1928 the number was 649 and in 1929, 544.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I was informed that the number for 1927-28 was 662. The minister now says 649.

Mr. EULER: The figures vary from time to time. The ones I have just given are up-to-date.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was the total for 1927-28?

Mr. EULER: The total was 649.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): For the first nine months it was 662, so I take it that there were some dismissals.

Mr. EULER: There may have been.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister does not know why there is this difference?

Mr. EULER: Sometimes a boat is taken off for a while. There have been dismissals, and probably will be some more from time to time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I guess so, under patronage.

Mr. EULER: Under patronage you do not dismiss.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total for 1928-29?

Mr. EULER: Up to the 1st of April this year, 544.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is no doubt that the minister is doing something to try to straighten out the preventive service. I notice that in 1922-23 the total number of employees, according to the figures furnished me by the department, was 127. What the figure of the minister is for that year I do not know. In 1923-24 the total was 170; 1924-25, 186; 1925-26, 299; 1926-27, 400; for the first nine months of 1927-28, 662. So there has been a very heavy increase in recent years. One would expect that there would be quite a bit more in seizure collections. It may be, however, that the mere establishment of the preventive service has had the effect of curtailing smuggling to some degree.

Mr. EULER: That is the meaning of the word preventive.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly, but I am at a loss to understand one very striking comparison that I have before me. In the year 1923-24, the total customs seizures amounted to $334,877, and excise seizures, $268,148, or a total of $603,026. Those are the figures given me by the department. That total amount of seizures, $603,026, was made with a total staff of 170. In 1926-27, almost exactly the same amount of seizures was made, namely, $429,603, but that required 400 men, or at least 400 men were employed. In 1923, 170 men made seizures amounting to $603,026, and in 1926-27, 400 men seized approximately the same amount.

Mr. EULER: The answer simply is this: The preventive service was doing what they were supposed to do, preventing smuggling. If smuggling were not going on, there would be fewer seizures.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If that is the case, take the year immediately preceding in each case. In 1922-23, with a staff of 127 men, the seizures amounted to $326,434. Either the staff was not doing its duty at that time or there was very little smuggling. The attempted smuggling must have very much increased next year or the staff improved its service, one or the other, to collect the enormous amount they did that year. Between 1923-24 and 1924-25 there is a drop of $200,000 in the seizures. There seems to be a very striking fluctuation in the activities of the preventive service.

Mr. EULER: Not within the last few years.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The figures are striking because in the year 1922-23 the seizures amounted to $300,000 and in 1923-24 to $600,000, and in 1926-27 to $429,000.

Mr. EULER: If a big seizure of liquor is made it runs into money. Sometimes you may get seizures periodically and sometimes none at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister will perhaps not overlook the fact that seizures of liquor are tabulated separately, I understand, because I find at the foot of one of these columns a note that, in addition, 70,534 gallons of liquor were seized having a duty paid value of $830,000. It does not say for what year that was.

Mr. VENIOT: I might be permitted to say a word or two on the preventive service, on the increase in the personnel, and on the variations in the value of the seizures in 1923-24, and in 1927, when the staff was larger. I think it is well known to the house that I live in a seaport myself. The county which I have the honour to represent is situated partly in the Restigouche Bay, partly in the baie des Chaleurs, and partly in the gulf of the St. Lawrence. Included in the lower section of the county we have Shippigan island and Miscou island, part of one island being entirely in the baie des Chaleurs and the other island drawing an imaginary line from East Point, Miscou, to Point Maquereau on the Quebec side, half in the gulf of St. Lawrence and half in the baie des Chaleurs. The balance of the county from these islands down to the county line of Northumberland is entirely in the gulf of St. Lawrence. I myself served in the customs department for eleven years as chief collector of the port of Bathurst, having under me four or five outports. During those years we had trouble with smuggling, and we had no organization to cope with it except the ordinary customs officials and tide waiters. There was no such thing between 1900 and 1911 as a real preventive service to stop smuggling on the high seas. Whatever the department did at that time was done through the officials who had their land duties to perform, which took up most of their time. When prohibition came into force in the several provinces down by the Atlantic seaboard smuggling increased, especially after the high duties placed on imported liquors. Up to 1925 there was not a sufficient staff to prevent smuggling to any great extent. The fishing fleets of the islands of Miscou and Shippigan in the county of Gloucester, numbering some 350 sail, would leave their home ports on a Monday and go codfishing on the banks in the strait of Northumberland, remaining away the whole week. At that time there was what was known as a "rum row" not only in the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Northumberland strait but also in the baie des Chaleurs. Our fishermen could get all the liquor they wanted at a very low price in exchange for their fish. When those men arrived home on Saturday they had smuggled liquor galore for distribution and sale. After the organization of the preventive force which the minister now has at his disposal, on that section of the New Brunswick coast rum row disappeared; we are no longer bothered with vessels lying twelve or fourteen miles out in the gulf of St. Lawrence or in the baie des Chaleurs loaded down with liquor ready to be handed over the side to fast motor boats. Since 1926 smuggling has disappeared in that lower section of the baie des Chaleurs and the gulf of St. Lawrence. I am not going to speak of conditions in the strait of Northumberland, that locality being too far away from my home. In those two areas smuggling has been reduced at least 80 per cent, and to-day we in the county of Gloucester are proud to be able to say that there is no smuggled liquor to be found in the homes of our fishermen.

I wish now to compliment the minister and his officials on the way in which they have organized the preventive service in that section of New Brunswick. In the past smuggling had the effect of demoralizing our fishermen; to-day we are clear of it. Under the old system we had no preventive officers in any of the outports in the county of Gloucester. There were five outports and one main port, and the only preventive officer we had was the preventive man or tide waiter in the port of Bathurst. To-day, if I am not mistaken, we have not only some four or five land preventive officers, but we have well manned and fast patrol boats. The result is that the smuggling fraternity, knowing those waters are so well patrolled, no longer look to that section of New Brunswick as a haven for their operations. At the present time there are ninety per cent fewer seizures, not because the officials are failing to do their work, but because they are doing it so effectually that the baie des Chaleurs and the gulf of St. Lawrence is clear of smuggling, to the credit of the Department of National Revenue and to the glory of the counties bordering on those waters. That will explain to some extent why with a staff of three or four hundred as compared with the former staff of about two hundred, fewer seizures are being made. The fewer seizures made the better it is for the country, provided the organization is operating as efficiently in other sections of the Dominion as it is in the section to which I have referred in the maritime provinces. I take it that it is not so much a question of the department getting revenue out of seizures as of preventing liquor from being trafficked in on the high seas.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister's statement is very interesting, but the point I wanted to make was not that there is any particular reduction in the number of seizures. There does not appear to be any reduction, but there is a striking fluctuation from time to time.

Mr. VENIOT: There is a considerable reduction in the number of seizures if you compare the traffic of 1925 to 1926, as we knew it living along the seaboard, to what it was in 1922 and 1923.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister means that the actual liquor traffic has been cut down?

Mr. VENIOT: Certainly, smuggling has been cut down.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not the figures—

Mr. VENIOT: We do not need figures there; we see it every day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Unfortunately we are not so familiar with the happy years when smuggling was prevalent.

Mr. VENIOT: They were not happy years for us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No. As to the elimination of smuggled liquor in certain sections of that country, well, I am afraid the minister's experience has been largely happy, or unhappy, depending on his point of view.

Mr. VENIOT: Happy from the point of view of order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well I happened to be down in that part of the country, not New Brunswick—

Mr. VENIOT: I am referring only to New Brunswick.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River) —and I had a very happy experience. A car followed the one in which I happened to be driving, and on reaching an open stretch of the road it tooted its horn. I said to the driver of my car, "You had better let this chap pass. He wants to go by." "No," said my driver, "he does not. Wait a minute. When the road is quite clear we will stop." He stopped. A lovely bottle of Jamaica rum was produced from the rumble seat of the car behind. I asked where this stuff came from. I never saw rum in my life before I got down into that part of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VENIOT: You lost a lot of fun.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But, frankly, I want to hand it to the people of Nova Scotia. If they can drink that darn stuff and live—

Mr. EULER: You tried it, did you?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): —there is no danger of climate or anything else spoiling their health. The man said quite frankly, "This is brought in by the fishermen." I asked, "Is there much of this being done?" He replied, "Oh, a little." "How much?" He could not tell me, he was not in the business himself, but he had a bottle, in fact he had two or three, and they were all gifts. So I am not so sure that the minister has made out such a magnificent case for the maritimes generally as he thought he had.

Mr. VENIOT: I was not speaking of the maritimes generally—only of New Brunswick.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I know he was not; but as he is a minister from that country it might be taken that he was speaking for conditions down there generally. It is just as well to clear it up: he was speaking only of New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: That is all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When I can afford it I am going to take a trip to New Brunswick, when I hope to find everything the minister says is correct.

Mr. VENIOT: If he will let me know a little ahead—not that I wish to prepare anything—I will follow him up and make him a present of a silk hat—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Make it a bottle of rum.

Mr. VENIOT: —the best he can buy, if he can discover any smuggling of that kind along the shores that I have just named.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If I wanted to find out anything of that character I would hardly send out a brass band like my hon. friend the minister to prepare the way.

Mr. VENIOT: No, I would keep it secret.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would hardly take any chances of that even then. Could the minister give me the total salaries and total expenses for 1928-29? My list is not complete in that regard.

Mr. EULER: The figure is $1,650,133.28.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the total salaries.

Mr. EULER: The total expenditure. I can give the details: maintenance and operating expenses of cruisers and patrol boats, including salaries, $1,038,319.34; patrol cars purchased, $40,881.22; land officers' salaries, $528,366.37; travelling expenses, $42,566.45. This makes the total.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the minister believe that he has now reached the limit of his requirements in the preventive service? Is the thing pretty well checked now?

Mr. EULER: It should be less, so far as expenditure is concerned, because in these figures there are sums paid for boats. We are building two final boats now and hope these will meet the requirements, so that next year the estimates may perhaps be less. I do not care to make that statement too definitely because we cannot tell what developments may occur which we shall have to meet; but I should judge that in future we should have a smaller estimate than this year's.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister might circumscribe his remarks by his mention of the number of boats. What about the personnel, the staff itself? The increase has been considerable; in the last few years the number has increased from 186 to over 600. I wonder whether the minister has any idea as to when the limit will be reached. I have no doubt he is doing good work and knows just how well the preventive service is functioning. The excise seizures are falling off, I assume he believes that, although I do not know whether it is a fact. As a matter of fact, are the excise and customs seizures falling off?

Mr. EULER: The excise seizures in 1927 were 1,618 and in 1928, 1,148.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What about the value?

Mr. EULER: I have not that. It would hardly be a question of value, because where an illicit still is seized there is no question of value.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, how does the department get the figures if the minister cannot supply them to me? The department says that in 1926-27 the excise seizures were valued at $123,260, and in 1927-28, for nine months, $106,658. Perhaps the minister will check up those figures.

Mr. EULER: The commissioner informs me that there is an appraised value taken which is usually too high. I cannot add anything to that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister cannot answer.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. EULER: What is the exact question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The exact question is as to the total value of the excise seizures made in 1928-29.

Mr. EULER: We have not got it here but can get it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has the figures for the salaries, for the boats, for the employees and the expenses; the only thing he lacks is the value of the excise seizures.

Mr. EULER: It would be only an estimated value in any case.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That was not suggested in the reply given to me by the department. The figures from the department are very definite; they are given in two columns, side by side, the total value of customs seizures and the total value of excise seizures. There is no question of an approximation; the exact figures are given. I must presume that documents from the department are accurate and not deceiving.

Mr. EULER: The significant fact is the number of seizures made. But when a still is seized it is destroyed and whatever alcohol is there is also destroyed, so that the value disappears.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On what basis does the minister estimate his requirements in the way of personnel, staff, boats and so forth for the period immediately succeeding? He does not jump at a conclusion and say, "We shall require 1,000 men and 200 boats". He estimates the amount of work to be done and, I presume, he also estimates the number of men required to conduct the preventive service properly and efficiently; then he puts in his estimate. What I want to know is this: Does the minister think that we have now reached the limit?

Mr. EULER: I have answered that question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; but on what does the minister base his opinion?

Mr. EULER: On experience, of course.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But that varies.

Mr. EULER: The experience of a practical man, I should say, would be a pretty good indication. If we know that last year the number of men we had was about right, we shall know that that is what we ought to have in the following year; and if, during the following year, developments show that we have either too many or too few, we shall make our adjustments accordingly. That is ordinary common sense.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But the expenditure, you see, is going up.

Mr. EULER: It includes capital expenditure for the construction of boats, which capital expenditure I said would no longer be required to be included inasmuch as the department would have all the boats needed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the capital expenditure on the boats alone?

Mr. EULER: We are building two new cruisers this year, costing $600,000—$300,000 each. That is entirely capital and that will not be needed next year.

Mr. IRVINE: What is the tonnage of the new cruisers, and what speed will they have?

Mr. EULER: They will have a speed of 17 knots; as to the tonnage, I am not much of a nautical man and I do not know. The speed is 17 knots and the crews will number 24 each. The length is 165 feet, the breadth 21 and the depth 13 feet.

Mr. SPENCER: How does that speed compare with that of the boats chased?

Mr. EULER: In the outside service it compares favourably with the speed of the large boats that come into the 12 mile limit, where these large boats operate. The small launches and speed boats that engage in smuggling within that limit are of course faster, but we have some boats to compete with them, attaining as high a speed as 35 miles an hour.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister give the total number of excise and customs seizures by provinces?

Mr. EULER: The excise seizures by provinces last year were: Prince Edward Island, 40; Nova Scotia, 64; New Brunswick, 21; Quebec, 328; Ontario, 312; Manitoba, 120; Saskatchewan, 202; Alberta, 41; British Columbia, 20; Yukon, none—making a total of 1,148.

Mr. SPENCER: How do you account for the small number of seizures in British Columbia, only half as many as those made in Alberta?

Mr. EULER: British Columbia is a difficult territory to operate in.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What are the customs seizures by provinces?

Mr. EULER: The commissioner is trying to get that information; I will have it in a moment.

Mr. SPENCER: I have listened with great interest to this debate and to the statement made by the minister. With reference to the recommendations made by the special committee of this parliament in 1926 and the recommendations of the royal commission, I notice that a great many of the recommendations have been carried out, but one which was made both by the commission and the special committee in connection with the refusal of clearance papers for boats carrying liquor to the United States apparently has been entirely ignored, and as yet I have not heard a clear and definite statement from the minister as to why this recommendation has not been complied with. It seems to me this is the most important point in the discussion, and I should be glad if the minister could give us a clear statement as to why that recommendation has not been followed.

Mr. EULER: I have given the explanation, but I will give it again. I think I made very clear what perhaps was not well understood by the committee or by members of the house, that clearances cannot be refused under the present law; that is the opinion of the Department of Justice. In order to refuse clearances, therefore, it would be necessary to amend the law by an act of parliament, and I am not sure that this was the intention at that time. I will say, however, that we have made many changes according to the recommendations contained in these reports, as we thought advisable in the light of experience and what we thought was necessary. If this parliament decides that clearances should be refused, then parliament will have to enact new legislation, and I will say to my hon. friend that personally I do not feel that advisable at the moment, for reasons which I gave in a former address some two weeks ago. I would say further that even during this debate I have found no reason to believe that this parliament, which at the moment is in the control of the destinies of this country, desires that change to be made; I have had no intimation from parliament or at least from more than a limited number of members that they desire any such change in the law.

Mr. SPENCER: To me it seems an extraordinary statement that at present clearance papers cannot be refused under the law. Is it not a fact that some of the commissioners who conducted that inquiry were learned legal gentlemen, who were paid fabulous fees for their services? If that is so why should they make recommendations apparently in ignorance of the laws of the country?

Mr. EULER: I am sure my hon. friend does not suggest that even judges are infallible.

Mr. SPENCER: I do suggest that if we are to pay such men $150 a day or more, certainly they should understand what they are recommending to this parliament.

Mr. EULER: So far as the department is concerned there is no doubt whatever that under the present law we cannot refuse clearances. I think my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, who acted as minister of this department for a short time, desired to refuse these clearances, but he also found that under the present law he could not do so. I personally made inquiries in that regard and was informed by the Department of Justice, whose guidance we must accept in matters of law, that under the law as it stands now there is no authority for the minister to refuse these clearances.

Mr. CAYLEY: The government has already undertaken to reduce the number of docks from which clearances may be made, and I was wondering why these docks could not be eliminated altogether.

Mr. EULER: As I explained some time ago, when the excise is paid on the liquor it becomes free, as is the case with any other commodity; it is in the same category as any other article which may be legally exported from Canada, and where a customs port exists anyone may avail himself of that port for the purpose of making exports. While we can limit the number of docks within a port we can do nothing which will prohibit any legal commodity from passing through that port. For instance, within the confines of the Windsor district there were some forty or fifty docks from which liquor went out. We cannot stop the liquor going out from that port but we can tell the exporters that they can ship only from certain designated docks, although of course that has not the prohibitory effect. Shipments may be carried on, but the traffic may be limited in that way, which also gives us more control.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Now I will give the customs seizures according to provinces:

Nova Scotia	480
New Brunswick	122
Prince Edward Island	58
Quebec	284
Ontario	783
Manitoba	145
Saskatchewan	78
Alberta	37
British Columbia	147
Headquarters	45
Total	2,179

The total for the year previous was 2,240.

Mr. GARDINER: How does that compare with seizures in former years, say 1923 and 1924?

Mr. EULER: I am sorry I have not that information.

Mr. IRVINE: I have heard a good deal of discussion, particularly from this section of the house, with regard to this question of refusing clearances. I am not going to discuss it at any length, but I want to say that I think if we began refusing clearances we would get into a great deal of real trouble. I should like to suggest to those people who are interested in preventing liquor from going to the United States that they go a little further and advocate prohibiting the manufacture of liquor in Canada, or as an alternative, suggest that the government control the whole business. Then we would not be faced with this question of refusing clearances, and we would not be permitting individual corporations to make money out of the business. Otherwise Canada will have to assume a large responsibility and a considerable expenditure to try to enforce a law which we have proved to be at least very difficult if not almost impossible to enforce.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If the house should decide to abolish the manufacture of liquor in Caanda where would the political parties obtain their campaign funds?

Mr. IRVINE: That is a question I will have to relay across the floor to the government and to the acting leader of the opposition; I do not know anything about such matters. If it so happens that the party campaign funds come from that source, they might be considerably reduced if we abolished the manufacture of liquor, but that might be a good thing and I do not think that is a reason why we should not take that step. However, I have every confidence in the present Minister of National Revenue; I think he is doing his work very well and I think the people of Canada believe that the Department of National Revenue is perhaps the most efficient department of government to-day. Just in closing I might add that personally I am opposed to the drink traffic. I do not think that we can assist the United States government very much by refusing these clearances; we would be making a great deal of trouble for ourselves. I am going to suggest, as the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) suggested last night, that the government consider a more fundamental way of dealing with this matter. I believe the people of Canada should take over the whole business and nationalize the traffic with a view to abolishing it as soon as possible. Those who have become so accustomed to drinking that they cannot live without it will soon die off and younger people will be coming along who do not require liquor, and we can get rid of the whole business. I think the only course which can be followed is the one the minister is following, and I suggest to him that this question of nationalization be considered. I do not think that prohibition will be successful because it seems to be very difficult to enforce and I think the same results would be obtained through nationalization of the business. In that way the supply could be stopped at its source and we would have full control over the traffic.

Mr. BOURASSA: Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the minister took a very strong stand in regard to the enforcement of the law as it concerns the government of the United States, and I hope he will not do anything to weaken that position. The majority of the people of Canada, irrespective of province, party or race, as well as many people in the United States, support his position. Some people take the opposite view, quite sincerely no doubt, and I respect them, but there has been too much hypocrisy introduced into this question. Of course if one believes that Canadians have come down to the low level of the decadent and degraded races of the world, and find it impossible to control their habits of drinking, then one is right in asking for prohibition, but I am one of those who believe that we still retain some of the elements of civilization and are able to control our own habits in matters of drinking, as well as eating or anything else. Blue laws such as were necessary to be enacted by the French government in dealing with the Indians in the early days are not required to moralize the people of Canada. If people believe that the white population of this country has reached a point where the Indian population was centuries ago, or the Negro tribes of Africa are at the present time, then they are right in asking for prohibition, but the majority of the people of Canada still come up to the civilized standard of humanity and I do not think it is the business of the government to interfere with the ordinary habits of human beings.

I have no desire to throw any cold water upon the enthusiasm evinced by some members as to the effectiveness of our preventive service, and so forth, and I do believe that prevention is now much more effective than it was. However, there is another factor which must be considered, the fact that several of the provinces of Canada have come back to their senses and are now allowing a reasonable amount of controlled liquor traffic within their borders. This applies now to every province in Canada, Ontario as well as the western and the maritime provinces; they have come back to a normal standard in this matter. The Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) has made a good case for the province of New Brunswick, but I do not think the number of seizures in that province would have diminished as they have if it had stuck to its old policy of prohibition.

As was pointed out to the minister last year, another factor in the increase of smuggling and the manufacture of moonshine liquor is the high duties which were imposed upon liquor during the war times. Last year the minister intimated that the time might come when these duties would be decreased. A few weeks ago I received a letter from a missionary who has been stationed in northern Ontario for many years. He deals especially with the Indian tribes and asked me if it would not be possible for the government to do something to prevent the enormous amount of bad alcohol which is being distributed among the Indians of Manitoulin island and along the northern shore of lake Superior. He told me that he had been in that district for years and had noticed a very marked increase in the supply of bad whiskey ever since the high duties had been imposed. He said that before that time there was some drunkenness among the Indians but there was not the same inducement to illicit traffic as was given by the imposition of these high taxes. The minister intimated last year that he might take the sense of the house with regard to the lowering of these duties, and I think he would do well in not losing sight of that suggestion.

The position taken by the minister and his department with regard to the issuance of clearance papers is, in my estimation, the right one to take. I marvel at the way some people in Canada boast of our national pride but then seem to be prepared to make the officials of the Canadian government police agents for the United States. I have no desire whatever to put Canada in a state of aloofness or difficulty with the government of the United States, but even the people in the United States realize that Canada is not on the northern border of their country simply as a police station for the American government. Mr. La Guardia, when speaking in the House of Representatives last week, said that the government of the United States was handicapped in putting its own laws into operation in the state of Maine because some of the best people in that state were the real lawbreakers. What justice would there be, and what sense would there be in asking the Canadian government to use its public services to enable the government of the United States to enforce a law which they are unable, and a good many of their agents are unwilling, to enforce in the United States. It has been demonstrated by public inquiries that the agents of the government of the United States are themselves smugglers into their own country.

To come back to our own country: my hon. friend from Bow River spoke of his experience in New Brunswick. I might speak of a similar experience I had in Ontario in holy prohibition days. I was once travelling through the western part of Ontario with a party of friends from Montreal. Some of us wanted to go ahead to prepare the reception in one of the inland towns. They were going at a pretty high speed in order to make time, when they saw a car coming after them and making certain signals which were understood by the chauffeur who said: "These are speed agents; I am afraid we will be held up for a fine." To this my friend said: "Very well, we will pay the fine and make the best we can out of it." So the police agents came up and said: "Gentlemen, you are from the province of Quebec?" "Yes." "Well, we want to show our spirit of hospitality," so they took out of their car a case of beer and they said: "You know this is not—" what was that famous beer? —"two point four per cent?" I tasted it once and I will never taste it again. It is far worse than any kind of rum the hon. member for Bow River may have tasted in New Brunswick. They said: "This is real beer, made in Quebec." My friends were very thankful, and I cannot, any more than they did, blame the police agents for their generous spirit of hospitality. But this shows the difficulty of enforcing blue laws in any country whatever. I think one of the most sensible things that has been done by the Ferguson government is the amendment of their liquor laws, and if the number of seizures decrease in Ontario, this will be largely due to the sensible policy of that government. I hope we will keep on that footing of common sense. We should not always endeavour to imitate what is done by the people of the United States or by any other people. Let us have laws that suit the conditions of the average Canadian and let us try to enforce such laws as are capable of enforcement. Let us not endeavour to make laws under the pretence of making people perfect. We are not perfect and we have no mandate to moralize by laws the people of Canada or the people of the United States.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I notice that the number of customs seizures in Ontario was 783 and in Quebec, 284. In other words, there were about three times the number of customs seizures in Ontario that there were in Quebec during the past year. Is there any difference in the method by which these seizures are made in the two provinces? Why is there such a discrepancy?

Mr. EULER: This is largely the result of seizures made at such points as Windsor and Niagara Falls. Many people cross at Detroit and Niagara Falls and probably more people come from the United States into Ontario than over the Quebec border. Many of the seizures are very small.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is the procedure in regard to seizures the same in both provinces?

Mr. EULER: Certainly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been rumoured that in Quebec seizures are not made without consultation with the sitting member for the riding in which the offence takes place.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I wish that were true.

Mr. EULER: I wish to contradict that absolutely. So far as I know—and I think I should—there is no difference in practice in any part of Canada. All sections are treated alike.

Mr. ROBB: This is not the first time that we have had insinuations that the people of Quebec were the only smugglers throughout Canada. This morning we have from the acting leader of the opposition again the old insinuation—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I asked a straight question.

Mr. ROBB: —that the people of Quebec are greater smugglers than those in any other parts of Canada.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The figures do not show that.

Mr. ROBB: We have the statement from the hon. gentleman who is administering the law, who himself comes from Ontario, that the methods of administration are identically the same in both provinces. It is about time for my hon. friends of the Conservative party to cease this continual attack upon the province of Quebec.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very cheap stuff for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. KAISER: After the castigation administered by the Minister of Finance, an hon. member from Ontario had better think twice before he says anything. That kind of talk from a minister on the front benches is rather uncalled for. I want to ask the Minister of National Revenue one or two questions in order to get things clear in my mind. I understand that an excise duty is a tax paid for the release of liquor for consumption in our own country. The minister says that he charges an excise duty of $9 a gallon on liquor, when he knows and everybody else knows that it is going to be exported to the United States.

Mr. EULER: We do not know that.

Mr. KAISER: Then the minister releases the liquor not knowing where it is going to go. Supposing I, as an individual, go to a bonded warehouse and pay the excise duty, is there no question asked? Can any individual get all the liquor he wants from a bonded warehouse?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. KAISER: Then how is is that these people can get all the liquor they want for export to the United States?

Mr. EULER: As my hon. friend knows, under the act passed last year, nobody can purchase liquor in Ontario or in any other province except the government-controlled provincial bodies in the various provinces, unless for export.

Mr. KAISER: But the Canadian practice or law of export is that when the master of a vessel comes and asks for 10,000 gallons of whiskey, he has to put up a bond for twice $9 a gallon, and when he gets a clearance certificate from the customs officer in the foreign country and brings it back, the bond is released. This is not the practice in sending the liquor to the United States. How does it come about?

Mr. EULER: For the simple reason that the men cannot produce a landing certificate in the United States. The United States, being presumably dry, cannot give a landing certificate. These men who export liquor to the United States, one may be sure, will never even apply to United States officials for a landing certificate. They land the liquor secretly or, at least, fairly secretly sometimes. They cannot obtain a landing certificate in the United States showing that the liquor has been legally landed there. For that reason they pay the excise tax and then there are no questions asked. Our duty as a department of national revenue is ended when we collect the revenue on that liquor. If it is clearly proved to us that the goods have been legally landed in a foreign country, under our laws we are not entitled to any excise. That is why as regards liquor shipments which go to St. Pierre and Miquelon and other foreign countries which are not dry, where the purchase is legal, when the landing certificates are produced, the bond is released and we get no duty.

Mr. KAISER: This is not clear to me yet.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps it my fault.

Mr. KAISER: Perhaps it is and perhaps it isn't. We are not all given to understand things as readily as the minister.

Mr. EULER: I am admitting it may be my fault.

Mr. KAISER: The minister said that this liquor was released in Ontario only if the government control commission there gave him authority.

Mr. EULER: I did not say that.

Mr. KAISER: The minister said at the beginning that was the only condition under which it was released.

Mr. EULER: No, I said that it was sold only to government control commissions or for export to others.

Mr. KAISER: Then your only legal method of knowing that it has been exported is when you get the clearance certificate from a foreign country, and you say that the United States cannot give you a clearance certificate. What I am endeavouring to ascertain is why you make an exception in regard to sending liquor to the United States contrary to the usual regulations; why do not the same regulations apply to liquor going to Miquelon or anywhere else?

Mr. EULER: We cannot be absolutely certain that the liquor is going to the United States. We cannot be certain, legally speaking, that it did go to the United States unless we get an official certificate from the United States authorities that it is landed there. That certificate is never produced; therefore we have no knowledge that it actually goes to the United States. It may be perfectly true that the greater part of it does go there; I think it does, but so far as the law is concerned, unless we have the official certificate from the United States authorities that the liquor has been landed in the United States, we cannot excuse these people from paying the excise, and that is why they pay it. When the liquor is exported to some other country where proper landing certificates can be obtained the excise is not payable.

Mr. KAISER: But you do release that liquor to the United States without that certificate? How is it done?

Mr. EULER: It is done because they pay the excise, and then it is free goods the same as any other commodity, because we have received our revenue.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How do we get in our trade returns the shipments of liquor to the United States when you do not know whether it goes there or not?

Mr. EULER: The export entries are made that way.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are export entries showing that it goes to the United States.

Mr. EULER: Yes, but under the law unless they produce a landing certificate from the other side of the line we cannot excuse them from paying the excise.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But there is some entry of the transaction as an export to the United States, because I read in the reports that the shipments amounted to over $23,000,000.

Mr. SPENCER: During the customs investigation in 1926, it was noted that other goods besides liquor, silk and clothing, for instance, were being smuggled into this country. I would ask the minister what goods have been attempted to be smuggled into this country during the past year.

Mr. EULER: We have had letters from those who are interested in the silk trade in Canada, complimenting the department on the fact that that practice has been discontinued and I think that is true. If it were not true you would surely be receiving complaints. I think that that practice has been almost entirely stopped.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. SPENCER: The minister mentioned liquor seizures that were made from time to time. This liquor does not come from Canada or it would be transported by rail. From what countries does it come?

Mr. EULER: Most of the rum comes from the West Indies, almost altogether in fact. I think much of the liquor that comes in through the gulf of the St. Lawrence comes from St. Pierre de Miquelon.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and temporary buildings and rentals, $7,815,975.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection and in connection with the board of customs, and amount required to create positions, make appointments and pay salaries and expenses of Dominion appraisers, investigators of values and claims for drawbacks, $1,175,755.

Miscellaneous—Printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, etc., for various ports of entry, express charges on samples, stationery and legal forms, legal expenses, premiums on guarantee bonds and uniforms for customs officers, $700,000.

To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service and amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, also to provide for expenses of such officers and for the purchase or charter of vessels, and for the purchase or hire of automobiles to be used in the prevention of smuggling, or other offences against the revenue laws, $2,007,933.

Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by and accounted for to it for secret preventive service; amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue; notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said Act, $100,000.

To provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, and amendments thereof, and authority for this purpose to create positions and make appointments, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act and salary of $8,000 for the commissioner of income tax, $2,200,000.

To provide for payments to Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash for services in connection with the investigation and prosecution of brewers, $15,000.—Total, $14,014,663.

Mr. EULER: I think we have discussed practically everything that comes under this particular vote under the previous vote.

Mr. SPENCER: I notice that income tax comes under this vote. We have not discussed that. There has been a great deal of criticism from time to time with respect to the small amount of income tax raised from the agricultural classes. Those of us who happen to represent largely agricultural constituencies do not like the criticism that is often made that collections are not made from the agriculturists because the farmers do not send in proper returns. I do not believe that for one moment because if the departmental officers are doing their work properly they will see that no one escapes paying the tax whether they are farmers or engaged in some other occupation. I would ask the minister if his department has any difficulty at all in collecting income tax from farming localities where they have had good crops and should have a revenue sufficient to pay income tax, or whether he thinks more money could be raised by way of income tax upon that particular calling than is being raised at the present time.

Mr. EULER: We have no complaint whatever to make with regard to the collection of income tax from the farmers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How about the Business Profits War Tax Act? How much is there in arrears now in respect of that act?

Mr. EULER: Very little, less than $200,000 or $300,000. It is being wound up very rapidly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is that the total accumulation of years?

Mr. EULER: That is all that is outstanding.

Mr. GUTHRIE: About how many firms or individuals are in default?

Mr. EULER: Out of 27,000 files there are about 50 outstanding, the commissioner tells me.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are only 50 still in default? Has any of this been written off or has it all been paid?

Mr. EULER: It has all been paid except what is still outstanding.

Mr. CAYLEY: How many farmers pay income tax?

Mr. EULER: The statistics for last year are not yet available, but for the year before, the number of farmers—they are called agrarians here—paying income tax was 3,201, and they paid a total of $241,281.12.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: With reference to the first item in this vote for the salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, there is an increase of $277,515. The minister stated yesterday that the number of ports had been decreased by 230. That brings the total number of ports, if the figure given in the report of the royal commission on customs is correct, from 773 down to 543. Why should there be such a large increase in the salaries and contingent expenses in the several ports in the Dominion if the number of ports has been decreased by 230?

Mr. EULER: Is my hon. friend referring to the first item?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Yes, on page 68.

Mr. EULER: Of the $277,000, $108,320 is directly attributable to statutory increases. Those are uncontrollable. Then there have been some additions to the staff, which, less a decrease in other appointments and promotions, total the balance of $147,000. While the royal commission stated that possibly the staff could be reduced, with a resulting reduction in expense, that is not exactly the fact. Hon. members will understand that in view of the fact that a certain degree of reorganization has taken place in the department, and also in view of the fact that the business of the country is expanding—we are making treaties with other countries which require an increased staff; we are building highways and attracting tourists which requires the maintenance of officers at the border in larger numbers than before—it is absolutely impossible to reduce our expenses; on the contrary, there must necessarily be an increase. I have no apologies to make in regard to that at all, because I think the increased expenditure is reflected in the better service and the larger revenues that we are collecting. That is my general explanation, and I think it is quite sound.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I assume that the figures in regard to the number of ports now open are fairly correct. Instead of 773 we now have 543 ports.

Mr. EULER: That is substantially correct.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How many are there in the United States?

Mr. EULER: Seventy odd.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I fail to understand why with a reduction of 230 the expense should not be decreasing rather than increased.

Mr. EULER: They are all very small places.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: But surely it costs money to operate even a small place; it has to be manned. Withdrawing 230 men, supposing there was only one at each port, ought to result in a decreased rather than an increased expenditure.

Mr. EULER: Quite a large number of the men to whom my hon. friend refers were absorbed into other branches of the service where they were needed because of the demands of which I have just spoken. Let me give my hon. friend an instance of how the staff must expand. When the bridge from Detroit to Windsor is finished we must put on 75 more men for the protection of the revenue. When the Peace bridge was opened not long ago we had to put on 40 men. That cannot be avoided. Every highway from the United States to Canada is now a route for tourists to come here. We must maintain watchmen and customs officials to guard these highways. In addition to that, as I stated last night, one of the chief recommendations of the royal commission was in the matter of appraisals in order to stop undervaluation. In order to get proper appraisals you must have proper appraisers. We have had to increase our appraisal staff, and we have had to increase the number of investigators here and in other countries in order to make sure that the valuations in the invoices of imported goods are correct and proper so that the revenues may be conserved. That in general is the explanation for the increased staff.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I suppose the minister will also have an explanation for this other question, in regard to the administration of the Business War Profits Tax Act and the Income Tax Act. The former tax was imposed in 1916, and the latter in 1917. I notice that for 1922-23 the total cost of administration of these acts was $2,200,000, and for the present year, 1929-30, it is exactly the same. Surely the expenditure should not be as large in view of the fact that the business profits war tax is almost eliminated, and the income tax in one of the past years was $102,000,000,—

Mr. EULER: It was never $102,000,000;

Mr. CARMICHAEL: —while at the present time it is only a little over half that amount. Under the circumstances I do not think we should be spending the same amount of money for the collection of these taxes.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend will understand that it might cost just as much to collect $50,000,000 as $100,000,000. Take, for example, with regard to the sales tax. At three per cent it might produce sixty or seventy million dollars; you reduce it to two per cent and get only two-thirds of that amount; but it will cost you just as much to collect the two per cent as the three per cent, because the work involved is just as great. The same is true of the income tax.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I think not, Mr Chairman, because the sales tax, whatever the rate may be, is still applicable to every person; but the income tax is not now applicable to as many persons as it was formerly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister give the committee the total amount of the business profits tax collected in each of the last five years?

Mr. EULER: In reply to my hon. friend from Kindersley, in March of 1927 the income tax collected was $46,000,000, in the following year $57,000,000, and the year after $59,000,000. So the collections have really been increasing, anad therefore we could hardly expect the work or the expense to be less.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has not replied to my question.

Mr. EULER: I have not heard it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am sorry. The minister must be confused with the number of assistants he has around him.

Mr. EULER: I am not confused at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am sure if the members of the staff now assisting the minister require as many assistants in their own offices, there is no reason to be surprised at the enormous increase in this vote.

Mr. EULER: Will the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total amount of the business profits tax collected for 1924-25, 1925-26, and so on up to date?

Mr. EULER: If I were possessed of the fund of general information which is apparently controlled by my hon. friend, I am sure I would not need to have so many assistants about me, but I am unfortunate in that regard.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister should not take me too seriously on that particular point.

Mr. EULER: I really did not take very seriously anything the hon. member said.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I imagine the minister did. His remarks showed that he had taken it very seriously.

Mr. EULER: In 1924-25 we collected $2,704,000; in 1925-26, $1,173,000; in 1926-27, $710,000; in 1927-28, $956,000; in 1928-29, $455,000; and there is now a balance outstanding of between two and three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the minister's staff being reduced in proportion to the reduction of collections?

Mr. EULER: There are only two men working on it now.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How many were there formerly?

Mr. EULER: The work used to be combined with the income tax collections. When the present commissioner of customs left the income tax branch he took over, because he was familiar with the work, the collection of the business profits tax. We had from 1,200 to 1,500 persons employed in the collection of the income tax and the business profits tax. What proportion of these would be allotted to the business profits tax I cannot say.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice an amount of $15,000 for auditors in connection with the investigation and prosecution of brewers. Will the minister explain this? There was the same vote last year.

Mr. EULER: We discovered a great many cases of fraud in connection with the sales tax, especially in the city of Montreal, and also in Toronto and elsewhere, and we have employed expert auditors to dig out the facts in order to enable us to prosecute and make collections; and this has paid us very well. We have collected over $300,000 as a direct result of the investigations made by these auditors, and in the city of Montreal we arrested the heads of about seventy firms; I do not know how many in Toronto.

Mr. SPENCER: Are there any fines, or is there imprisonment in connection with these prosecutions?

Mr. EULER: I have the list here but it is very lengthy. I do not suppose my hon. friend wants me to read it. Time in gaol occurs very often, but that does not mean very much, and the department is not responsible for that.

Mr. GARDINER: I suggest that the minister put that list on Hansard. These investigations were mostly in connection with brewers.

Mr. EULER: No, they were not; they were commercial firms who had been concealing sales and deceiving the government with regard to sales tax.

Mr. GARDINER: The item provides "for services in connection with the investigation and prosecution of brewers." The amount is $15,000.

Mr. EULER: I thought my hon. friend had reference to another item for which we retained this firm of auditors. The item my hon. friend is quoting from does relate to the prosecution of brewers and distillers.

Mr. GARDINER: What success did you have along that line?

Mr. EULER: We made settlement with a large number of brewers and distillers and collected several million dollars. Two cases, as my hon. friend knows, were lost, but we are appealing them.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it necessary to secure the services of this particular firm for the purpose of investigating this matter, and is their employment permanent or temporary?

Mr. EULER: They were retained by the customs commission and they are so entirely familiar with all the details of this business that we deemed it worth while to secure their services.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it not possible to use your own auditors in connection with this investigation?

Mr. EULER: We do use their services, but in certain circumstances we feel justified in bringing in experts, and it has been worth while.

Mr. GARDINER: There is another item of $10,000 for secret preventive service. Is that amount spent every year?

Mr. EULER: It is not spent every year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is it for?

Mr. EULER: For the purpose stated in the item—secret service.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What did you spend last year?

Mr. EULER: The figures are not given out; it is pretty much of a secret process.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But we always get the amount spent.

Mr. EULER: It is spent under the Justice department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But it is charged to this department.

Mr. EULER: Yes, it is charged to this department.

Mr. KENNEDY: The other night the minister made a statement which is reported at page 2697 of Hansard. He said:

> I do not question the good faith of the men at the top—but I think it is at least a fair reason for considering whether the Canadian government would be justified in going to what, I think I can show, would be a heavy expense if this law were enacted that is being asked for, in face of the fact that the United States authorities are making no very earnest effort to do it themselves.

Will the minister show us in a general way what the expenditure would be and whether it would be due to additional staff or to a loss in revenue or to both?

Mr. EULER: I answered that question about an hour ago.

Mr. EVANS: Will the minister tell us why some of the advice offered by the customs commission has not been carried out with reference to some of the most barefaced cases that came before that body, particularly in Saskatchewan, in connection with the bribery of customs officers, the evasion of the sales tax and so forth. Why was prosecution not entered against these people in accordance with the recommendations of that commission?

Mr. EULER: The recommendations of the commission with regard to prosecutions, including the prosecution of Harry Bronfman, were acted upon so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned. The prosecutions, I may say, take place under the Department of Justice, and the Minister of Justice some weeks ago, in reply to a question raised by my hon. friend from Rosetown, made a statement. I do not know that I can go beyond that. I may add, however, that as regards the case of Harry Bronfman it was the opinion of the Department of Justice, for reasons which they gave and which were disclosed to one or two members of the group in the corner, that it was impossible under the law to succeed in any prosecution.

Mr. MANION: In regard to the number of delinquencies in connection with the sales tax, how does the situation stand now in the matter of collections?

Mr. EULER: Two or three years ago when I went into the department there was a large sum in arrear; a large number of firms were behind and we had to deal with them as best we could. In many cases the firms were in liqudation; in other cases they were in the courts. Many of them were struggling along as best they could. We did not desire to put them out of business, obtaining nothing, and we nursed them along. We have reduced the indebtedness substantially. The figures as they stand now are: $974,000, which we are in process of securing through settlement by means of correspondence and urging them to pay without actual prosecution; there is legal action in respect to $2,774,000; and there is, in connection with people in liquidation, $679,000. This makes a total of $4,427,000. I think I should add in all fairness that of the amount under legal action, a large sum applies to brewers and distillers, in connection with which we are now proceeding in the courts.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister written off any of that money or is this the whole amount?

Mr. EULER: Where firms have gone out of business we may get something or we may not; in many cases firms have entirely disappeared.

Mr. MANION: Can the minister tell me in round figures the amount written off in that way, because really that is what it amounts to?

Mr. EULER: I have not that information, but where firms have become insolvent, when the assets are distributed of course we rank with the other creditors.

Mr. GARLAND: I take it that the amount involved in connection with arrears of sales tax and so on in regard to the breweries amounts to about $4,000,000?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has that money been collected?

Mr. EULER: I have just explained the position of the various items making up the $4,000,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not wish to embarrass the minister or hold up his estimates but I am asking these questions because of a public announcement which appeared in the press stating that $4,000,000 had been collected by the Department of National Revenue from the breweries for arrears of sales and gallonage taxes.

Mr. EULER: I am very sure I made no such announcement; I have just given the details of the $4,000,000 which is still to be collected. We have collected some millions of dollars from these brewers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How much have you collected?

Mr. EULER: While that is being looked up, for the information of the committee I might say that this refers to old arrears, accruing up to January 1, 1927. At that time we passed an amendment to the act under which interest was charged on arrears, which formerly was not possible, with the result that there was a large accrual. Since that time accruals are no longer possible because, since January 1, 1927, if the monthly returns are not sent in and payment made accordingly we immediately take legal action to make these collections.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): To what does the minister attribute the failure to collect these sale and gallonage taxes in the past? Is it fair to assume that the press statement is correct and that the failure to collect these taxes was the result of slackness in the administration of his department during past years?

Mr. EULER: Certainly I am not going to say that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would it be fair to say that?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend will have to judge for himself.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I would like to know by whom this branch of the department was administered at that time.

Mr. EULER: The hon. gentleman knows the answer to that question as well as I do. But I might say that one of the reasons why so many firms fell into arrears was because there was no provision under the law for the collection of interest on overdue sales taxes; business men, perhaps going through a somewhat strenuous period, found that they could borrow money from the government without the payment of interest, as it were, and naturally they yielded to that temptation. That is no longer possible, and that is one of the reasons why to-day business men pay up more promptly, because they know if they do not pay up they will be liable to 8 per cent interest on the overdue amounts.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was the only corrective for the temptations to evade payment the application of interest, or was there not some proceeding which could have been taken even before that interest was applied? Obviously the minister knows that under the act provision was made to enable the department to collect taxes which were in arrears; if the business men to whom he refers as preferring to borrow money from the government for nothing instead of going to the banks were in arrears, surely he had the means at his disposal at that time to collect these taxes. I do not refer to the present minister but to the minister in office at that time.

Mr. EULER: He could have resorted to the courts, and I am informed that he did so in some cases.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All we know is that a tremendous accumulation of arrears occurred. The minister does not assert that the interest on the arrears amounted to a very large sum?

Mr. EULER: There is no interest on the arrears, except on those which occurred after the amendment was passed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly, so the $4,000,000 of arrears can be considered altogether apart from the question of interest.

Mr. EULER: There is interest from January 1, 1927.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister knows the demoralizing effect on the general taxpaying public of this sort of thing. The business men realized that they could escape the payment of taxes and a large number of them actually did not pay these taxes which the minister now says cannot be collected because of the liquidation of some of the companies. I remember that in those days the farmers had to put up with a good deal of abuse from those who asserted that the farmers were failing to pay their taxes. The fact of the matter was that the farmers were willing to pay their taxes if they only had the income on which to pay. Now we find that the very class of people who made these charges against the farmers were themselves in arrears to enormous amounts, which are only now being collected.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did I understand the minister to say that the decision of the Department of Justice was that they could not hope to be successful in a prosecution against Harry Bronfman?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows very well that that is the case, because I showed him the papers in that connection.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The papers I saw merely expressed the opinion that there was some doubt about it; certainly I did not understand that the Department of Justice gave such a definite opinion.

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Then the minister is giving an alleged criminal the benefit of the doubt. I submit that where there is a definite recommendation made by a royal commission, such as there is in this case, it is the duty and responsibility of the minister to prosecute, even if there is a doubt. There is a doubt in every case, but here the minister gave Bronfman the benefit of the doubt instead of giving it to this department.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure to whom my hon. friend is referring; if he says I gave Bronfman the benefit of the doubt he is wrong. I recommended to the Department of Justice that they proceed in all cases where such action was recommended by the commission. The Department of Justice must use their own discretion as to whether it is worth while to prosecute, and I may say there were some cases where the commission did err; they were not supermen even in matters of law, and it was found by the law officers of the crown that in some instances it was practically impossible to prosecute because there was no evidence. The commission recommended that prosecutions be entered if it was possible to do so with any hope of success; surely then it was the duty of the Department of Justice to decide whether it was worth while to carry on these prosecutions. In the case of Harry Bronfman I think the Department of Justice decided there was no hope whatever of succeeding, so I submit that the responsibility is not altogether mine.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Certainly the papers the minister showed me did not express the opinion that there was no hope whatever of success; I did not take it that way at all. I understood from the papers that there was a reasonable doubt as to whether an action action against Bronfman could be successful, and my protest is that in this case the benefit of the doubt was given to the alleged lawbreaker.

Mr. EULER: In any case, if it were a criminal offence it would come under the attorney general of the province in which the alleged crime was committed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There seems to be a good deal of doubt as to that; during the election campaign which ended the other day, as the minister knows, the attorney general of that province stated repeatedly that he had no responsibility in the matter, that the responsibility rested with this government. I am not quite clear as to whether the prosecutions would be instituted by the Department of National Revenue or by the Department of Justice.

Mr. EULER: The prosecutions must go through the Department of Justice. The Department of National Revenue pass these cases on to the Department of Justice, and if that department in its wisdom—and I do not question that for one moment—decided that it should not prosecute in the case of Mr. Bronfman, then I think the department is quite right.

Mr. CAMPBELL: When the department recommends to the Department of Justice that action should be taken, does that department go ahead and act or does it use its own discretion?

Mr. EULER: The Department of Justice uses its own discretion. It is the legal end of the government; the Department of National Revenue is not constituted to act in matters involving legal action. The Department of Justice decides all cases for all departments so far as any legal action is concerned. If, after examing a case, it decides that there is no hope of succeeding, naturally it would not go on. After a case gets out of the hands of the Revenue department and into the hands of the Department of Justice, then it is a matter for that department.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did not the Department of Justice simply act in an advisory capacity?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I might have a case and go to a lawyer and be advised that my chances of winning were not very good, yet I might insist upon the case being proceeded with.

Mr. EVANS: This thing seems to be surrounded with mystery. For two years Mr. Knowles' illness was given in the Saskatchewan legislature as the excuse for the non-prosecution of this case. When the Attorney General of Saskatchewan was asked why the prosecution had not been proceeded with he replied that it was up to the Department of Justice at Ottawa, and when I asked the Department of Justice the same question the minister replied that someone must lay a charge. Did the Minister of National Revenue lay a charge before the attorney general of the province when the attorney general made the promise that as soon as Knowles was in a proper condition to go to court the prosecution would be proceeded with?

Mr. EULER: I have explained already to my hon. friend that these legal matters are handled by the Department of Justice, and that procedure was followed in that case.

Mr. COOTE: How many prosecutions of brewers and distillers have been undertaken since the minister came into the department? In how many cases has a judgment been secured, how many have been written off and how many are yet to be decided?

Mr. EULER: None have been written off. We have collected about $2,500,000 by way of settlements with brewers and distillers.

Mr. SPENCER: That is $2,500,000 which those people were trying to get out of paying.

Mr. EULER: I presume that they thought they were not under any legal obligation to pay. Some of them fought us in the courts; in several cases we won, but in the last two cases we lost. The others thought that it was just as well to settle, and they did so. Fifty-eight cases were settled in all.

Mr. COOTE: Would that number include the prosecutions up to the present time?

Mr. EULER: Nearly all those prosecutions were in connection with the collection of the sales tax. There was some doubt as to whether or not the sales tax was collectable when the goods were exported. The law has been amended since that time and there can be no doubt that the sales tax is collectable on beer or liquor whether it is or is not exported.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister assure the committee that since the amendment has been passed the department is collecting all the sales tax and other taxes from the brewers and distillers for which they are liable under the law?

Mr. EULER: Exactly the same as with any other business which must pay the sales tax.

Mr. COOTE: Are the names of those who hae been prosecuted available in any government publication?

Mr. EULER: No but there would be no objection to allowing my hon. friend to see the list.

Mr. COOTE: In replying to a question asked by the hon. member for Kindersley, the minister explained the reason for the increase in the first item by saving that additional appraisers would be needed. According to the civil government list there would seem to be a decrease in the number of appraisers. How many appraisers are engaged by the department?

Mr. EULER: The approximate increase will be about twenty-three.

Mr. COOTE: How many are in the department?

Mr. EULER: About nine.

Mr. COOTE: Are the uniforms worn by the officers supplied by the department, and if so, from whom are they purchased?

Mr. EULER: They are supplied by the department and purchased locally. The department makes an allowance of $37.50 per uniform.

Mr. COOTE: Has the department given any consideration to having these uniforms manufactured at some of the penitentiaries and thus make use of prison labour?

Mr. EULER: The matter has not been brought to my attention.

Mr. COOTE: I see no reason why these uniforms could not be made there and possibly little money saved for the government. There is another item in the vote, "To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service." How many cruisers are operated by the department?

Mr. EULER: We have eight cruisers, and two under construction, and twenty-six patrol boats.

Mr. COOTE: Does the department intend to purchase or hire additional vessels?

Mr. EULER: No, we intend to own them ourselves.

Mr. COOTE: The vote provides for the purchase or charter of vessels.

Mr. EULER: We intend to get rid of all chartered vessels; we intend to own our own boats.

Mr. COOTE: Then the wording of the item would not be correct?

Mr. EULER: The two new vessels are not completed yet.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Provision is made in the third item for subscriptions to commercial papers. What is the total amount to be so used? What is the purpose of the appropriation? Is it just daily newspapers for the department?

Mr. EULER: Trade papers that aid in giving information as to values and so forth.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is there an amount for advertising? Does the department do any advertising now?

Mr. EULER: We do in the income tax branch.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand there was an increase this year.

Mr. EULER: I think there was.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River)): What is the total amount now spent on advertising?

Mr. EULER: About $27,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: To come back to the Bronfman case for a moment, I have the report of the Royal Commission on Customs and Excise, interim reports Nos. 1 to 10, and I find this reference on page 54 to Bronfman:

> It was alleged by Inspector Knowles that in connection with the seizures made by him, Harry Bronfman, who was then the directing spirit of the Gainsborough Liquor Company and the Dominion Distributors, on more than one occasion offered him a bribe to disregard his duties and to desist from further interference with the operations of the firms or syndicates with which Bronfman was identified. Strong corroborative evidence was adduced before us in support of the testimoney given by Inspector Knowles, and in our view a prima facie case was made out sufficient to warrant prosecution being entered against Harry Bronfman for his alleged offence.

Under the heading of "Recommendation" it says:

> That prosecution be instituted against Harry Bronfman for the alleged bribery of Inspector Knowles.

It is inconceivable to me that men of the judicial standing of Chief Justice Brown and the distinguished attorney who represented the department there should have made that recommendation if, as the minister says, there are all these legal difficulties in the way of prosecution. I wonder, when the department finds some poor farmer out in the bush making a little home brew, whether they encounter the same difficulties. There is apparently no difficulty in haling him before a justice of the peace and having him sent to gaol for six months; but when the case is one of a wealthy bootlegger like Bronfman, all these legal difficulties seem to crop up. Whether the responsibility be on the Attorney General of Saskatchewan or the Justice department or the Minister of National Revenue, you find one passing the buck to another. This is an impossible situation, and I would expect this least of all from the Minister of National Revenue. I thought one of the best things the Prime Minister of Canada ever did was when he put the present minister in charge of that department. I give the minister credit for cleaning up the situation there and certainly making it a great deal better than it was before.

Mr. EULER: What would the hon. gentleman like me to do that I have not done in connection with the Bronfman matter?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would like the minister to take a definite stand with the Department of Justice that this recommendation be carried out. If he insists on the Department of Justice taking action, then I say he is cleared.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member knows as well as I do that the Minister of National Revenue cannot dictate to the Minister of Justice in his own department.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I know that very well, but I know at the same time that the Minister of National Revenue can make a recommendation and a very definite one, to the Minister of Justice informing him that he wants someone prosecuted who has been guilty of an infraction of the law of his department. If he does that, I can hardly believe the Department of Justice will refuse his recommendation. I have yet to have that proved to me.

Mr. EULER: I have already stated that all the cases recommended for prosecution were recommended by me to the Department of Justice for action.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Why not this one?

Mr. EULER: This was included. I said: All the cases.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There must be something wrong with the minister's recommendation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is entirely unfair. The minister gives his word of honour that he made the recommendation, and the hon. member says that there must be something wrong with it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not questioning the minister's word. That is not the point. I accept the minister's word that he made the recommendation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to know what the hon. member is questioning.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The minister should insist on prosecution; it should not be a mere recommendation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Last year the minister introduced a bill providing for taking away from the Civil Service Commission the appointment of certain of the preventive service and, I think, of the appraisers. The minister also provided within his own department an examining board which was to prepare an eligible list from which were to be selected certain men required by him in his department. I should like to know the total number of men selected during last year under the act which he introduced on that occasion.

Mr. EULER: About fourteen appraisers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How many preventive officers?

Mr. EULER: Probably about thirty.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister does not know the exact number?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister give the committee the personnel of the examining board in his department that takes care of these?

Mr. EULER: For appraisers, Mr. Costello and Mr. Funston.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): An examining board of two?

Mr. EULER: Yes, and occasionally another Dominion appraiser, Mr. Jones.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And for the preventive service?

Mr. EULER: The chief of the preventive service and the provincial chief in the province to which the appointment is to be made.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understood that in the act passed last year there was a provision that after the minister had selected the men whom he wanted from those eligible lists, the names so selected were to be submitted to the Civil Service Commission for its approval: Was that done?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was the attitude of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. EULER: They declined to act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think it would not be amiss at this stage to point out that we in this corner of the house indicated last year not only our complete disagreement with the policy which was being adopted by the minister in this regard in taking from under the operation of the Civil Service Act the appointment of these men, but in answer to a statement made by the minister that he wanted to maintain a certain measure of control by the commission—

Mr. EULER: I should like to correct my hon. friend. The minister did not take from under the operation of the Civil Service Act the appointment of preventive officers; they never were under it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The appraisers. I did not mention anybody in particular. I said that the act gave the minister power to take away certain responsibility from the Civil Service Commission. But he said to the house: We are giving them the power to pass on these men.

Mr. EULER: Not the appraisers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): At that time we told him there was no use under heaven of his bringing a subterfuge of that kind before the house. No body such as the Civil Service Commission could possibly be asked to recognize and be responsible for the appointment of men in the selection of whom they had no say whatever. We warned the minister at that time that this would probably be the position taken by the Civil Service Commission. It is, and now we find the flagrant position of the thing is as we stated last year. The minister has taken away from the Civil Service Act certain persons who were formerly under it and placed them under the control of the patronage of the department.

Mr. EULER: Not at all; I deny that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Could anything be more distinctly patronage than this is?

Mr. EULER: There is absolutely no patronage in it. As regards the appraisers that have been appointed as a result of the change in the act last year, their politics are not known to me at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That does not evade the question of patronage.

Mr. EULER: I do not know what my hon. friend means by patronage.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend knows very well that it is not always the question of politics that enters into it; it is friends of friends, and the arrangement of examinations to suit certain individuals from time to time—something that is actually done.

Mr. EULER: I am afraid my hon. friend has a very suspicious mind.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister need not talk about a suspicious mind. I challenge him, does he not know of cases to-day where an examination is prepared under the act in order to meet the requirements of a certain individual?

Mr. EULER: Not so far as I am concerned, and I am not responsible for anybody else.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the way he gets out of it. We still hold the view that the minister made a mistake last year. The United States have recognized the mistake that they made in the past, and to-day in order to strengthen their service they have placed it under the operation of the Civil Service Commission, and they now select their whole preventive service as well as their appraisers through the Civil Service Commission. The merit system applies, and they are doing that in the hope of improving the character of the employees in the service. I say to the minister that sooner or later he will find that he has made a serious mistake in reverting to what may be a modified form of the patronage system, but is the patronage system nevertheless, by taking the appointment of these officers away from the Civil Service Commission. What was the total value of the sales tax refunds last year, or were there any?

Mr. EULER: I have not the figures here.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want that information.

Mr. EULER: We will get it for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should also like the total amount of the business profits tax refunds.

Mr. EULER: There were none.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are there any tax refunds other than income tax and sales tax?

Mr. EULER: There are refunds of customs and excise taxes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister let us have them?

Mr. EULER: That is all in the blue books. My hon. friend could really get that information himself.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister knows that the information in the blue books is not up to date.

Mr. EULER: The information is in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is a year late.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. EULER: It is as much up to date as any other information that the hon. gentleman gets with regard to any department.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, the minister has given me up to date information to-day in regard to customs and excise seizures. I am interested in getting this information because frankly I am going to ask the minister to take into consideration the necessity for making refunds public. I think we recognize that this country must protect its people from any suspicion they may have that business is getting away with something.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at one p.m.

Monday, June 10, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INTERWOVEN STOCKING COMPANY

Mr. McGIBBON:

1. Did the Interwoven Stocking Company, of New Brunswick, New Jersey, ship any of their products into Canada last year?
2. If so, what was the nature of same?
3. What quantity was imported and at what price?

Mr. EULER:

1, 2 and 3. It is contrary to the practice of the Department of National Revenue to give information which would disclose the business of an individual concern.

COPPER BOUNTIES

Mr. COWAN:

1. How much was paid out of the consolidated revenue fund during each of the years 1923 to 1927, inclusive, under chapter 40, 13-14 George V?
2. Where were the industries located which received such payments?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. (a) The expenditures for administering the Copper Bounties Act are made by fiscal years and are as follows:—

	Expenditure
1923-24	Nil
1924-25	$180 00
1925-26	314 00
1926-27	376 65
1927-28	329 00

(b) The bounty rates on copper vary for different years, ending on June 30 in each case. The following shows the amounts paid during these periods:—

Period	Rate per lb.	Amount paid
July 1, 1923 to June 30, 1924	1½c.	—
July 1, 1924 to June 30, 1925	1¼c.	$ 14,551 75
July 1, 1925 to June 30, 1926	1c.	108,086 27
July 1, 1926 to June 30, 1927	¾c.	122,904 39
July 1, 1927 to June 30, 1928	½c.	62,572 24

2. Only one company has been paid bounty on copper: The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada, Limited, Trail, B.C.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Did the government appoint a committee of the civil service to deal with the subject of superannuation, and make recommendations?
2. Did said committee meet and make a report and recommendations?
3. Is said report now before the government, and will same be acted on at this session?
4. In view of the long delay in action regarding increases to the professional class, is the government aware of the urgency of the matter as respects superannuation?

Mr. ROBB:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Several reports have been received from the committee. These have either been acted upon or await the consideration of the treasury board.

4. An inquiry containing an allegation would not appear to call for an answer, in view of rule 44 of the house.

PRIVATE BILLS

WILLIAM JOHN BLIGHT

The house in committee on Bill No. 336, for the relief of William John Blight.—Mr. Neill—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is one of the cases to which I took exception the other day. I have read the evidence and I cannot see that on the evidence the charges have been proved. I should like to have from the sponsor of the bill a short outline of the case.

Mr. NEILL: I do not propose to read the evidence in this case. Every member has a copy of it and can read it for himself. The hon. member who asks me to give a resumé of the case, says that he has read the evidence. What more can I give him than what he has already read himself? This is neither the time nor the place to go into all the details. This case has been carefully considered by the senate committee and unanimously passed. It has also been carefully considered by the House of Commons committee and unanimously passed. I submit that the thing for us to do is to follow the example adhered to in the other two hundred cases we have dealt with and pass the bill.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was this carefully considered by the private bills committee?

Mr. NEILL: So I am informed.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

EDITH SPENCLEY

The house in committee on Bill No. 345, for the relief of Edith Spencley.—Mr. Hepburn—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Any children?

Mr. HEPBURN: There are four children. This is a bigamous case. There was one child by the first wife and there were three by the second. The children are now in the custody of the two mothers. They are not asking that any provision be made for the children at all.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

ANNIE FARROW

The house in committee on Bill No. 346, for the relief of Annie Farrow.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask if there are any children in this case?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): There are two children residing with the petitioner, the mother, and they are being supported by the father, the respondent, under an order of the court, the amount paid being $10 a week.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

EVELYN MAE WARREN

The house in committee on Bill No. 347, for the relief of Evelyn Mae Warren.—Mr. Speakman—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children in this case and is provision being made for them? The sponsor of the bill is present and I think he might give us the information as has been done in other cases.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I find just at this moment that I am the sponsor. I believe there has been an error in putting my name to the bill without my knowledge. I sponsored one bill of a similar nature which has gone through and with which I familiarized myself. I do not know anything about this bill and I did not know until this moment that my name was attached to it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I object to this bill passing with no sponsor's name attached.

Bill stands.

LOUIS COIT DARGAVEL

The house in committee on Bill No. 348, for the relief of Louis Coit Dargavel—Mr. Casselman—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. SMOKE: Looking over the evidence in this case, I have come to the conclusion that the bill should not be passed on the evidence which has been presented. There has been no fair trial. The petition is dated February 7, 1929. The charge against the respondent is concerning an offence alleged to have been committed on or about June 1, 1928, at Fayetteville, New York. No attempt was made to prove this charge. No evidence whatever was adduced concerning it. A paid detective was allowed to give evidence concerning other occasions of which the respondent had not the slightest notice and in regard to which she had no opportunity to defend herself.

The respondent was without funds. The insignificant sum of $75 was advanced to her on the order of the committee—a sum totally inadequate to enable her to prepare for trial —and the sum of $75 was advanced to pay counsel—an amount not sufficient to fee a solicitor, much less to pay counsel on the hearing.

The petitioner adduced evidence to show that the respondent and corespondent were registered at a rooming house called Traymore Apartments, in Rochester, N.Y., under the name of "Mr. and Mrs. Rudd." The respondent and corespondent deny this positively on oath, and after a few days' adjournment of the case the corespondent was able to produce the man, Guy L. Rudd, who was actually registered at the said apartment house and living there with his wife, and who came before the committee and refuted the evidence of petitioner. One of the witnesses who swore that Rudd and wife were the respondent and corespondent recanted and after returning to Rochester made an affidavit that the evidence she had given before the committee was incorrect and that she had never seen the respondent or corespondent until she saw them at the trial before the committee.

The committee refused a further adjournment in order to allow the respondent to call this recanting witness who admitted that her evidence was untrue, and refused to allow the affidavit to be read before the committee. The corespondent proved that on occasions when the petitioner's witnesses had sworn he was at various places with the respondent he was actually confined to his bed by illness in another town altogether and that it was a physical impossibility for him to have been where the respondent's witnesses swore they saw him. So much of the evidence adduced by the petitioner having been positively shown to be perjury, none of the evidence on behalf of the petitioner is worthy of credence.

The respondent swore—see page 34—that the petitioner proposed that she commit the necessary offence upon which to obtain a divorce. This proposal she refused. There was no contradiction of this evidence on her part.

Without doubt further adjournment should have been granted in order to allow the respondent and corespondent to meet the charges that were made against them. In the short time at their disposal they utterly refuted some of the charges and proved the evidence given on behalf of the petitioner to be perjury. Given a reasonable time to check up the other evidence, there is every reason to suppose it also could have been shown to be perjury. Two of these charges were sprung on the respondent and corespondent without notice. They were able entirely to refute all those which could be said to be sufficient ground upon which to grant the petition. As to the remaining occasion, there is not the slightest direct evidence of impropriety. Both the respondent and corespondent gave clear and unequivocal explanation of the circumstances and deny on oath any improper relations either at that time or at any other time.

To grant this divorce on these proceedings would be highly improper. No court of law would permit a case to be presented and tried as this one was. In any properly conducted divorce trial, the offence as alleged must be proved. Evidence of offence alleged to have been committed on "divers occasions"—which is the stereotyped language of such petitions—is never allowed by a court except to show the general conduct of the respondent and in a manner as corroboration of the evidence as charged. If the offence as charged is not proved by the evidence no court will grant a divorce.

Where the charge as alleged with particularity, giving place and date, cannot be proved, and petitioner desires to prove other charges, it is the invariable practice to have the petition redrawn alleging definitely the charges it is desired to prove, and to have the petition re-served giving the respondent an opportunity to prepare a defence and to obtain from the petitioner all particulars of the charge.

This primary rule of procedure—to disregard which would be a decided injustice—was altogether ignored by the committee, and neither respondent nor corespondent has had a fair opportunity of making a defence.

This was a contested case, Mr. Chairman, and the evidence is rather bulky. After I had read the evidence I looked back with some anxiety to see whether the divorce committee had really recommended the passing of a divorce bill. It did not seem to me possible that they should do so in view of the fact that Rudd and his wife were not the respondent and the other woman. It seems to me that the case turns very materially on that point, and it strikes me, with all deference to the divorce committee of the Senate—we all recognize that they are human and that everybody makes mistakes, even the courts—that this particular bill should be referred back to the private bills committee for further consideration.

Mr. CAHAN: I agree with what has been said by the hon. member. The only charge made in the petition against this respondent was proved to have been a case of perjury. Then other charges were made which were not included in the original petition. As I read the case, no due time was given to the respondent fully to meet those subsequent charges. If a respondent comes before the committee and swears clearly and positively that she has not been guilty of the charge made against her, and, if the original charge as made in the petition is proved to have been founded upon perjury, then any subsequent charges which may be made during the course of that hearing should be made by amendment to the petition, and a re-hearing should be allowed to the respondent in order that she may have opportunity to prove her innocence of these other charges of which she had no previous notice whatsoever before she appeared before the committee.

Mr. CASSELMAN: I am rather surprised that this bill is being opposed in the house. Just a few minutes ago there was placed in my hands the same brief that has just been put on the record by the hon. member for Brant. With many parts of that brief I cannot agree. It would appear to me that when this matter was before the private bills committee the other day, if any investigation was desired it should have been made at that time, rather than allow the bill to come back here to the committee of the whole house and then ask to have it referred back. I do not wish to suggest that the parties who are opposing this bill are not doing so in good faith, but I think it would have shown better faith on the part of the parties who are responsible for this action being taken if they themselves had appeared before the private bills committee.

With regard to the statement that the charge in the petition was not proven, I would suggest that the charges in the original petition covered the offences which were proven. I have an interest in this case, knowing the parties, and I therefore sat for several days in the committee when this case was being heard. I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind that this applicant had just grounds for divorce. I therefore oppose any move to have the bill sent back to the private bills committee.

Mr. SMOKE: In answer to the hon. member, I am not a member of the private bills committee; I have other committees to attend, and in any event I was not put on that committee and I did not consider it my duty to go there and present any argument. I assumed that the private bills committee would look after their own business. That is all I have to say on that point.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I wish to support the position taken by my hon. friend from Grenville-Dundas. I have read the evidence carefully. I know the parties. The applicant is a resident of the town in which I reside. His wife has not resided with him for a period of fifteen years. This case was contested before the Senate divorce committee, where every opportunity was given to produce evidence, and there was a further opportunity before the private bills committee. It seems to me that the position now taken is one of obstruction, at this late date in the session. I submit that we ought to follow the regular procedure, and as this case has been thoroughly investigated by the Senate committee and in the private bills committee that we ought to adopt their report.

Mr. CAHAN: I wish to call attention to the fact that although these parties had not been living together they had been living separately under a separation agreement since April 17, 1915, and there is a clear suggestion that the object of these divorce proceedings is to allow the husband to escape paying the annuity which he agreed to pay under that separation agreement. In a charge of adultery there should be some time and place mentioned in order that the respondent may be upon her guard and may be able to show where she was, in what company she was, and under what circumstances she was living at the time the alleged adultery took place. In this case there is only one specific date mentioned, and that is June 1, 1928, and the place mentioned is Fayetteville, in the state of New York, and the charge with respect to the adultery alleged to have been committed on June 1, 1928, at Fayetteville was proved to be utterly false.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Referring to the separation agreement which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has just mentioned, it contains a clause that the payments were to be made only so long as the respondent remained of chaste character. There was that limitation, and there is an exhibit of a letter sent by the respondent to her husband in which she herself offers in consideration of $3,000 to consent to divorce and to produce the evidence that will support the divorce.

Mr. ADSHEAD: As a member of the private bills committee I wish to say a word in regard to this case. One hon. gentleman has suggested that it is the business of the members of the private bills committee to go into these cases. Personally, I may say that I have neither the time nor the inclination to go into these three hundred divorce cases. This is just another illustration to show what a farce this divorce business is so far as consideration before the private bills committee is concerned. I hope the Prime Minister will implement his promise that next year there will be a different arrangement with respect to divorce.

As regards the remark that was made by one hon. gentleman that bills that have passed the private bills committee should not be considered in committee of the whole house because the private bills committee should attend to their business, I would ask what is this committee of the whole for? Have we just to give a perfunctory approval to the bills that come from the private bills committee? I say that if any evidence has come out since the private bills committee sat on this case, it is the duty of this committee to consider such evidence and to listen to what may be said.

Section agreed to: Yeas, 41; Nays, 30.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported.

VERA MAUD GENDRON

The house in committee on Bill No. 349, for the relief of Vera Maud Gendron—Mr. Hepburn—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children?

Mr. HEPBURN: There are no children in this case.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported.

LILLIAN AINSWORTH

The house in committee on bill No. 350, for the relief of Lillian Ainsworth—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children in this case?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): On behalf of the hon. member for West York, I wish to say that the records show that there is no family in this case.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported.

GEORGE FREDERICK WILSON

The house in committee on Bill No. 352, for the relief of George Frederick Wilson—Mr. McGregor—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. SPENCER: Are there any children in this case?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): No children.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported.

CHARLES EDWIN WALKER

The house in committee on Bill No. 296, for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker.—Mr. Sanderson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

An hon. MEMBER: Explain.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to make a comment on this bill. On the second reading of the bill the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) went over the evidence, pointing out its weaknesses, and it was assumed by the committee of the whole that when the bill was referred back to the private bills committee special consideration would be given it. As a matter of fact, when the bill did get before that committee no particular attention was given to it. It is time that consideration of the bill was postponed for two days, and the officers of the committee were instructed to inform the respondent when the case would come before the committee. The so-called agents of the respondent were not present; in fact, it happened that the respondent had no official agent, for the lawyer had received no instructions: in other words, the woman had no money and there was no way of going on with the matter. The result was that nothing was done. When the bill came up I endeavoured to present the petition to the committee, but it was another "I'm Alone" case; nobody paid any attention to it. No investigation was made and no evidence seriously presented.

I wish once more to make a plea on behalf of the respondent. First, let me say that I do not know the respondent at all. I would point out that the most material witness in favour of the respondent was unable to give evidence before the senate committee for the reason that she had passed through a very serious operation. There was no doubt about the serious condition of the witness, for there was evidence to prove that clearly. Counsel for the respondent asked that the case be postponed or that an opportunity be given for this material witness to appear. The chairman of the committee in reply said something to the effect that it was very difficult to ensure that the same personnel who had heard the evidence in the first instance would be present on a subsequent occasion, and for that reason a postponement of the case was not granted. The result was that this witness was not heard.

I understand that this witness proposed to prove an alibi; that is to say, at the time and in the places where the illegal acts were supposed to have been committed it could be proved that the respondent was not present at all, thus substantiating her claim that the case was a frameup. She denies the charge, claiming that there was a frameup, and the most material witness was unable to give evidence.

There is another feature of the case. I believe there are three corespondents mentioned. The respondent, not knowing of course the methods which would be adopted by the petitioner, did not know how many corespondents would be cited and consequently did not have an opportunity to call them. It must be remembered also that this is a poor woman who has been working for her living; she received $75 by order of the committee in order to carry on the case but could not afford to add enough to that sum to pay for her lawyers and to see that the case was properly conducted. Furthermore, if she was advised that our committee was to reconsider this bill—and I do not know whether or not she was so advised—she was working and if she had given up her work and come down here she might have lost her position.

In view of the circumstances and in view of the fact that the petitioner cannot suffer very much if this bill is left over for another year, I do not see why this committee should not give this woman the benefit of the doubt and kill this bill for the time being; it can be brought up again next year and all these further points considered. That seems a reasonable request, and in view of the fact that perhaps not over two per cent of the members of this committee know anything about this bill I think it would be a very serious responsibility for us to pass it now.

Mr. CAHAN: I also carefully read the evidence in this case and I am confident that if I were sitting as a judge I would not grant a divorce on the evidence which was presented. Furthermore the respondent, in this case a woman, came before the committee and swore positively as to her innocence, and when it was found impossible to prove the first charge that was made, if I remember correctly an amendment was allowed. Where a respondent comes before a committee and swears positively as to her innocence, in my opinion no new charges should be allowed to be presented against her without an amendment being made to the petition and ample opportunity being given the respondent to bring her witnesses in respect to the new charges. The evidence, to me, is quite consistent with being a frame-up and therefore I think there should be further investigation in this case and that the respondent should have a further opportunity to bring a witness who was proved to be ill at the time and present her defence to the amended charge. I intend to vote against this bill.

Upon the yeas and nays being called for:

Section 1 agreed to: Yeas, 40; Nays, 34.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, on division.

EVELYN MAE WARREN

The house in committee on Bill No. 347, for the relief of Evelyn Mae Warren—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. GARDINER: Who is sponsoring this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN: In view of the lateness of the session, with the consent of the house I would be pleased to sponsor this bill.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman will take the responsibility of sponsoring the bill and if he is prepared to give all the necessary information I do not see any reason why that should not be done.

Mr. GARDINER: Then I would suggest that it be reprinted on the orders of the day.

The CHAIRMAN: That is for the committee to decide.

Mr. HEPBURN: I would like to explain that apparently this is a very deserving case, since the Senate committee has recommended the remission of the fees payable. It would be unfortunate if at this time the petitioner should lose out because of a technicality of this kind.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, this bill must be sponsored, and I object on principle to any transfer of this kind. If a bill is sent here with no name attached to it, it seems to me that we cannot possibly proceed with it; surely that is a rule of order. Permission has been granted on occasion, when the sponsor was absent, for another member to act in his place, but there is no precedent at all for permitting a bill to come here with no name attached to it. The hon. member whose name is attached to this bill denies responsibility for it; now some other member puts his name to the bill, but I do not think that can be done without having the bill reprinted.

[Mr. Cahan.]

The CHAIRMAN: I am informed that there has been some error in the committee branch and that this bill formerly was sponsored by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys). Through some error the name of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has been attached to the bill.

Preamble agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On a point of order, I object to this bill being proceeded with at this time.

The CHAIRMAN: I have declared sections 1 and 2 carried and I think the committee should decide whether or not I should declare the title carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On a point of order, I object to this bill being presented without the sponsor's name appearing on the bill. I would ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not know that there is any rule which states that even though one name appears on the bill as sponsor, it may not be sponsored by some other hon. member of the house. It is for the committee to decide, rather than for any one member of the committee or the chairman. I am asking the committee to decide whether or not we shall proceed with this bill.

Mr. GARDINER: I have never heard you make a decision of this kind before, Mr. Chairman; whenever any controversial point came up you have always found a precedent on which to base your ruling, and I ask you now to rule on this point.

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to my hon. friend that, as we all know, the session is drawing to a close and the question of urgency enters into the matter. Therefore I think I am not asking the committee to do anything unreasonable when I ask them to decide this point.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to direct attention to standing order 116, which is as follows:

Except in cases of urgent and pressing necessity, no motion for the suspension or modification of any standing order applying to private bills or petitions for private bills shall be entertained by the house until after reference is made to the committee on standing orders or to one of the committees charged with the consideration of private bills, and a report made thereon by one of such committees.

In commenting on this standing order, paragraph 900 of Beauchesne states:

So far the maxim is certainly true and founded on good sense that as it is always in the power of the majority by their numbers to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapon by which the minority can defend themselves from similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules and proceedings which have been found necessary from time to time and are become the standing orders of the house, by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can alone be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check, and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

I suggest that in this particular case we have the regular rule that each bill must be sponsored.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is the rule?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is a rule that has come down from time immemorial that when a bill comes before the house it must carry the name of some hon. member, and I object to this general rule being disregarded.

Mr. HEPBURN: We have listened this session to the obstruction of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I object to the word "obstruction"; it is not parliamentary.

Mr. HEPBURN: I did not know what else to call it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that word.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to withdraw the word "obstruction"; it is not parliamentary.

Mr. HEPBURN: Very well, Mr. Chairman, I bow to your decision, but I say that any one holding the radical views of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should not object to establishing a precedent if that is necessary in order to put this bill through. If he has any of the milk of human kindness in his heart he will withdraw any objection he may have to this bill. The respondent in this case not only committed adultery but is now confined in a Michigan penitentiary, and the financial position of the petitioner is such that the senate committee recommended the remission of the fees. Surely my hon. friend is not going to have this bill ruled out on a technicality.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Acadia suggested that I rule on this point of order, and I am now ready to do so. My ruling is that, as this is a case of urgency owing to the approaching prorogation of the session, it is quite in order for us to proceed with this bill even though the name appearing on the bill is not the name of the hon. gentleman who is now sponsoring the bill.

Mr. GARDINER: Will you give me the number of that rule?

An hon. MEMBER: That is a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some hon. gentlemen do not like this sort of thing, but quite apart from these divorce proceedings I do not think we can afford to let a ruling of this kind go unchallenged; I challenge the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the hon. gentleman's privilege; this will necessitate a report to the house.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

When Bill No. 347 was under consideration in committee of the whole, Mr. Hepburn moved,—That section one be carried. Objection being taken that Mr. Hepburn was not the sponsor of the bill, the chairman ruled that in a case of urgency any member other than the one whose name appears on the order paper could sponsor a bill.

Whereupon, Mr. Woodsworth appealed from the ruling of the chairman.

The question being put by Mr. Speaker: shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed: it was decided in the affirmative on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),	Geary,
Bancroft,	Glen,
Barber,	Gray,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	Grimmer,
Bennett,	Guthrie,
Blanchard,	Hall,
Bock,	Hepburn,
Bouchard,	Jenkins,
Bowen,	Johnstone (Cape Breton North-Victoria),
Bradette,	Ladner,
Cahan,	Laflamme,
Casselman,	MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Cayley,	Macdonald (Kings),
Chaplin,	MacLaren,
Dickie,	MacLean (Prince),
Edwards (Waterloo South),	McKenzie,
Elliott,	McMillan,
Euler,	McRae,
Fiset (Sir Eugene),	Morrissy,
Forke,	Motherwell,
Foster,	Neill,
Fraser,	Perras
Garland (Carleton),

Pettit,
Plunkett,
Ralston,
Rennie,
Robb,
Robinson,
Ross (Moose Jaw),
Rowe,
Sanderson,
Senn,
Simpson,
Sinclair (Queens),
Sinclair (Wellington North), Smoke,
Spence,
Steedsman,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Stewart (Leeds),
Stirling,
Telford,
Thompson,
Thorson,
Tummon,
White (London),
Young (Saskatoon),
Young (Weyburn).—71.

NAYS

Messrs:

Adshead,
Campbell,
Carmichael,
Coote,
Evans,
Fansher (Last Mountain),
Fansher (Lambton East),
Gardiner,
Garland (Bow River),
Irvine,
Kellner,
Kennedy,
Lucas,
Luchkovich,
Macphail (Miss),
Speakman,
Spencer,
Woodsworth.—18.

EVELYN MAE WARREN

The house again in committee on Bill No. 347, for the relief of Evelyn Mae Warren—Mr. Hepburn—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Bill reported.

ISABELLA HENDERSON

The house in committee on Bill No. 357, for the relief of Isabella Henderson—Mr. Heaps—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. NEILL: As the precedent has been set in the case of the other bill, I suggest that we extend the same courtesy to the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) in the case of Bill No. 357. As this is the only one left on the order paper, I would be glad to sponsor it.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. CAHAN: On the motion to report the bill, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there should be a clear understanding. So far as I can ascertain from my experience in this house, when a bill is in committee any member may move that a clause be adopted or struck out, and that it is not necessary that the person whose name is printed on the bill should make a single motion before the committee.

Bill reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—REPORTED

Bill No. 344, for the relief of Kenneth Blackwood Gibb.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 351, for the relief of Sarah Berkovitz.—Mr. Sanderson.

[The Chairman.]

Bill No. 353, for the relief of Roy Franklin Beattie.—Mr. Spence.

Bill No. 354, for the relief of John George Laney.—Mr. Hepburn.

Bill No. 355, for the relief of Albert Nott.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 356, for the relief of John Thomas Legge.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 358, for the relief of Emil Henry Hornburg.—Mr. Edwards (Waterloo).

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when the Kellogg treaty was being debated in this house I made a suggestion to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that it might be a good thing to call a disarmament conference if, as we hoped, all the governments that signed the treaty were sincere. I find now that such a conference is being suggested by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the new Prime Minister of Great Britain. In this morning's newspapers it is announced that probably Mr. Mackenzie King will be invited to accompany Mr. MacDonald in his conference with Mr. Hoover. I should like to ask if any invitation of this character has been received by the Prime Minister, and what his intentions are in respect thereto.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is now receiving a delegation, I shall direct his attention to the inquiry made by my hon. friend, and possibly he may be able to answer it at a later stage in the day or to-morrow morning.

REPORTS OF HARBOUR COMMISSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) if he can make any reply regarding his telegraphic communication with the harbour commissioner of St. John.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): At the request of my hon. friend I wired the commissioners in regard to the report, and the answer I have received is that it is being printed.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 26, to amend the Fisheries Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: I may explain, Mr. Chairman, that this bill has been before the committee on marine and fisheries on several occasions, and as now presented it is in the form accepted by that committee.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The committee recommended that trawlers be licensed. Where does that recommendation appear in this bill?

Mr. CARDIN: Clause 7.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Another bill is now being handed around. There was an amended bill on the commons bills file which did not contain what is in the bill now being handed to us.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Which portion of clause 7 deals with the licensing of trawlers?

Mr. CARDIN: Clause 7. Let me read it:

7. The said act is further amended by inserting the following section immediately after section sixty-nine thereof:—

69a. (1) Every person shall be guilty of an offence, and shall incur therefor a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars and not more than two thousand dollars, recoverable with costs upon summary conviction, who at any time, except under license from the minister,—.

And the following section indicates in what circumstances a license may be obtained. There is also subsection 4 on page 3:

(4) The minister may determine the number of such vessels that shall be eligible to be licensed.

(5) Regulations may be made under the provisions of section forty-six of this Act,—

(a) Prescribing the form of license;

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer a few comments on the bill. This bill, I take it, represents the government's intention in the matter of implementing the findings of a commission appointed to inquire into the difficulties, problems and disabilities of the fishermen of the eastern section of the maritime provinces. It must be a matter of deep regret to those of us who come from fishing communities, as I know it must be to the fishermen themselves, to find that this is the only piece of legislation that the government has to offer in connection with the findings of a commission which has cost this country upwards of $100,000. As a remedy for the deplorable conditions depicted by this commission this bill is practically valueless. There are upwards of seventy recommendations made by the commission. The government had this report in its hands for over a year, and I regret to see that after a year's consideration the only legislation that the government was able to bring down is this bill, which is entirely innocuous and leaves the situation in exactly the same condition as it was when the commission was appointed. The only difference is that, as the hon. minister has said, the words "licensing of steam trawlers" are inserted in this bill.

Among its many recommendations the commission recommend that the fishermen should be properly organized so that they might be able to get more of the consumer's dollar for their product. They also recommend the establishment of co-operative organizations to be assisted by the department, and that an organizer be appointed and paid by the federal government for a period of time in order to start the work. This is the crux of the situation and yet the government has done nothing.

The royal fisheries commission states that if the inshore fisheries in the maritimes are to succeed, organization and co-operation are absolutely essential among our fishermen. On page 81 of the report the commission recommends that in certain districts or zones, co-operatives should be formed and supplied with small brine or rapid freezing plants, having small auxiliary cold storage buildings in connection. These should be placed within a days transportation of a larger cold storage plant, the latter having a waste fish product plant in connection. This would take care of the surplus from the smaller plants. They also recommend a marketing sales board to control the output of the product to various sections and that selling agents be appointed in the larger communities to control distribution and protect the market. Equipped with this organized power of bargaining, the fishermen could dictate reasonable prices to the consumer as well as secure a reasonable profit for their labour. Under such a plan long term loans for the purchase of boats, equipment and also insurance of fishermen's property could be arranged through the fishermen's organization. The royal commission believes that these suggestions would solve the fishermen's problems, and would establish a profitable industry and secure for him an assured market and a bargaining power which he has not thus far possessed, and a greater portion of the consumer's dollar than he has hitherto received.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as far as I can see, those recommendations have not been carried out. As regards section 5 of the old bill, I take the stand taken by the fishermen in the eastern section of Nova Scotia, that the beam trawler is to a large extent responsible for the condition that now exists in our maritime province fisheries, and I claim it is the duty of this government to accept the majority report of that commission if they are going to do anything for the fishermen of the maritime provinces.

I am unalterably opposed to the beam trawler fish landing in Canada, and I ask this government what it has done to protect our north Atlantic fishing grounds from the depredations of the foreign trawler. The fisheries report has asked for a conference of the nations concerned in reference to this destructive method of fishing. Thus far nothing has been done. Mr. Chairman, I claim that the use of the beam trawler is one of the most destructive methods that could be devised; firstly, for the reason that large quantities of immature and inedible fish are caught through this method and are destroyed. These fish are either thrown overboard dead, or taken to a fish meal plant for reduction and placed on the market as fish meal or fertilizer. Secondly, the beam trawler destroys the spawning fish, thus seriously interfering with fish propagation. Dr. W. L. Fulton, superintendent of scientific investigation in Scotland, claims that thirty per cent of the trawler catch consists of immature inedible fish. The spawning fish taken by the beam trawlers on our banks are not taken to any extent by the methods employed by the inshore fishermen, as sick fish spawning will not readily take the hook and line. I submit that means should be taken to restrict the trawler method if we are going to conserve our fisheries in the maritime provinces, and especially our north Atlantic coast fisheries. Thirdly, the beam trawler net with its iron shod doors drags the bottom of the sea and disturbs and destroys the algae and the fungi on which the fish depend for food.

My contentions are borne out by the fact that in the North sea fishing grounds off the coast of England where beam trawling originated, the fish catch is decreasing year by year on account of the employment of the trawler method. Where formerly they fished an area of 152,000 square miles, they are now compelled to extend over an area of over 700,000 square miles, and are not supplying an amount equal to that of former years.

Spain, Portugal, France and English beam trawlers are to-day compelled to come to our north Atlantic waters and fish on our banks, by reason of the depletion of their own fishing grounds. The United States consuming public are becoming disturbed over the depletion of haddock in the north Atlantic and are to-day advocating a conference between Canada, the United States and all nations operating beam trawlers in order to arrive at ways and means whereby this most valuable fresh fish product may be conserved. The beam trawler method of fishing gives to the consuming public an inferior product. Fish are by far the most perishable of all foodstuffs and if they are not frozen by the rapid freezing, or what is sometimes known as the brine freezing, method as soon as they are taken from the sea, they lose their texture, that is they become soft; they lose their flavour and also become a prey to bacteria, resulting in rapid deterioration, giving rise to ptomaine poisoning.

The fish taken by the beam trawler are injured by their own weight and by the foreign material taken into the trap. The lower portion of the catch are bruised and crushed by the great mass of material in the trap before they reach the deck of the trawler. This fish is placed in bulk in the hold of the ship or in pens or on shelves and there iced, and the melting ice pours down on the fish below, further softening it, and carrying with it products of bacterial decomposition. The greater part of this fish is kept from five to nine days sometimes longer before being landed. This fish is then placed in cold storage to be frozen by the slow method. Depending upon the amount landed by each trawler, some 200,000 to 300,000 pounds, this requires some two or three days. The fish is then held in storage for three to six months before being placed on the market for human consumption. The product is much inferior to our inshore catch, which is generally marketed the day it is caught. The inshore fish retains its texture, its flavour, and is a very much superior product. The condition in which the beam trawler fish reaches the consumer is the reason it is so difficult to retain the market of central Canada.

In my opinion the greatest objection by inshore fishermen to the beam trawler method is the glutting of the market by over production, giving to the inshore fisherman a very restricted market and consequent low prices —prices which will not permit of an adequate livelihood. Our shore fisherman is thus compelled to give up his occupation, close his home, move to the United States and engage in the American fishing industry, which to-day gives him a livelihood denied to him in his own country. Since 1912, ten thousand fishermen have left the maritime provinces. In one school section alone thirty-three children left with their parents and moved to the United States in a little over three months, and in March, 1929, practically five hundred fishermen left the small section of Isle Madame for the United States to engage in the American fishing industry. Some two hundred have left the river Bourgeois section of Richmond county during the past two months. The result is that the New England fisheries are to-day almost entirely manned by Nova Scotians. Would it not be a better policy to try to do something for our own fishing industry and retain our native sons instead of spending $20,000,000 as we have done in eight years to bring aliens into Canada?

The mass beam trawler production of which I have spoken has driven our inshoreman from his customary rights, rights which have been his from time immemorial. Our inshore fisheries have played the most important part in the colonization and development of the maritimes. The thriving, happy and contented fishing villages of earlier days are now a thing of the past, and in their places are to be found ruined fishing establishments, boats and gear decaying, homes closed, their former occupants to-day in a foreign land, lost to this country forever.

The problem to-day is a choice between the dividends paid to a group of capitalists who are operating a destructive method of fishing, producing an inferior article, employing some two hundred and forty-nine men, with an invested capital of $990,000, and the livelihood of sixteen thousand fishermen, with an invested capital of $24,000,000. One or the other must go, and it is up to this government to protect the interests of our native born inshore fishermen.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the sixteen thousand fishermen my hon. friend refers to be shore fishermen only? There are some forty thousand altogether.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): That is, in Canada. The friends of the beam trawler claim that the inshore fishermen cannot supply the demand. That is their only claim, and I would ask the minister whether this government has ever given the inshore fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia an opportunity to try to supply the demand for fresh fish. The government has not done so. In 1928 the inshore fishermen of Nova Scotia furnished about one half of the fresh fish marketed by our various corporations, and they have also sent to foreign markets, in its dried and salted state, almost double the quantity supplied by the beam trawlers. The fishermen in that province have not been given an opportunity, and under this legislation—although we have spent $100,000—we are receiving no consideration. I regret that, in spite of the conditions which have been described by the royal commission, this government has treated the situation in the way it has done.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): With much that my hon. friend has just said I must agree, though not with all. The condition of the fishermen in the maritime provinces is a great blot on the economic life of Canada to-day; there is no other class of the communitiy I know of which is in such a pauperized state. I have not lived in that country long enough to know just what has brought this about, but I had the opportunity of going down there twice in recent years.

Mr. BENNETT: And caught a salmon.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Thank you; I was fortunate enough to do that. The hon. gentleman is not a fisherman, I take it, or he would enjoy with me the thrill I had in catching it.

Mr. BENNETT: It was the first you caught.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No; I had caught several on the Pacific coast before that. I found that in some districts many of the fishermen were wholly illiterate. Even to-day some families are growing up without education. The average fisherman, in Cape Breton at least, is fortunate if he has an income of $500 in the year. I wish hon. gentlemen would just try to fix their annual budget on the basis of $500 a year. These men, for years, for generations, have lived by such a low standard that their intelligence and aggressiveness have poured out of that country into other countries or into other parts of Canada, or have been completely suppressed by the economic conditions under which they exist. I see now, however, a ray of hope in the fact that they are at last beginning to think cooperatively, and if the government could find any means whatever of helping to ignite that little spark that has just started they would have performed splendid service.

Travelling up the west coast of Cape Breton you will find at the north end of one shore the old Scottish Hectorians, if I may use that term, the descendants of the first Scottish people who came to Canada. These people have not only retained their original facial appearance and general physical structure, but even their tongue is as pure to-day as when they came here. I was a little alarmed on one occasion in this house, Mr. Chairman, when a barbaric sound broke out from immediately to your left; but after visiting Cape Breton I find that these hon. gentlemen who on that occasion started some Gaelic songs were simply carrying out the practice which is quite common down there. On the least temptation hon. gentlemen like my good friend from Richmond-West Cape Breton (Mr. Macdonald) will burst forth into Gaelic song. If you could jump across the island—you cannot very well do that; you would have to fly across, because there is no road over the island at the moment unless you go around by Wycocomagh—you would find on the other side the Acadians, just as their ancestors were when they established there in the first place. They are a hard working, thrifty, good living race of people; yet they are in such desperate economic straits that I fancy that if hon. gentlemen visited them and lived with them a little while they would register just such a protest as I am now making against the continuance of the conditions that now prevail in that part of the country. From one hon. member to your left the other day, Mr. Chairman, we got an idea of at least one of the difficulties. He thought that one and a quarter or one and a half cents per pound this time of year was pretty good pay. In my opinion, that sort of pay for the hazardous occupation of catching fish is positively ridiculous. Men cannot live and maintain a decent standard and become or remain good citizens under such conditions. The result is that these fishermen have left the country by thousands, until we find at last, when it is almost too late, business men, clergymen and even doctors, beginning to take a real interest in the condition of the fishermen down there, and urging the necessity for organization. In that part of Canada they have established some locals of the fishermen's federation and in the future their voice will be heard in no uncertain terms. The government is aware of this, at least to some extent. The stream is gathering force and, unless something is done to avert it, it will break with perhaps unfortunate results to hon. gentlemen of the government who come from that part of the country. On this question of organizing the fishermen there is no doubt that the government will have to act with caution. As a result of our experience in the west I can say definitely that government organizers hardly could be expected to be successful; there is always the natural antipathy and suspicion with regard to officials sent around by any government agency, and naturally enough in that part of the country where politics are so partizan there would be a tendency to appoint organizers of the same stripe as the political party in power. Down there you have a large number of people of the opposite political persuasion, and these men would not take kindly to lectures on cooperation by those of another shade of political opinion.

Another point which might be raised at this stage is that we have not found it advisable in any case, in organizing cooperatives in the west, to make grants of money where organizations do not exist, nor have we found it advisable to make grants of money in any case directly to individuals who were not organized or who did not agree to pay back part or all of the money. In other words, I would suggest that if the fishermen are to be really assisted, a plan such as was established some years ago in connection with the bait freezing plants should not be recommenced. I think the chief reason for the failure of the bait freezing attempt was the fact that the fishermen had no monetary commitments in regard to it, and its usefulness was dependent almost entirely upon the initiative or aggressiveness of one or two fishermen in each district. That sort of voluntary work, without responsibility, is good enough in its way, but it does not carry with it the prospect of success. I would submit to the minister that if he could induce the professional classes and the busines men to take a greater interest in the fishermen, and above all if he could induce the fishermen themselves to study cooperation, he would be moving in the right direction. He might have lectures on cooperation broadcast from the radio stations in that section of the country, and he could have men preaching and teaching cooperation all over the country. My hon. friend from Wetaskiwin has just asked what the minister knows about cooperation. I am afraid he knows very little, and that is one of the great difficulties I see in carrying out the recommendations of this report. At page 81 the report recommends the establishment of cooperative organizations of fishermen and suggests that they be assisted by the department as soon as possible, and they further recommend that an organizer experienced in cooperative methods be appointed and paid by the federal government for the period required to initiate and complete this work. Then the report proceeds to deal with other matters. I think if you could get the fishermen to undertake the work themselves it would be far better in the long run; in fact, ultimate success in cooperative enterprises of this character can be only counted upon when the rank and file of the fishermen have become cooperatively conscious.

To-day there is greater hope of success with regard to cooperative enterprise amongst the fishermen than ever before, because of the recent discovery of the brine freezing plants to which my hon. friend referred. I am informed that small brine freezing plants suitable for fishing villages of average size could be established at a cost of from $1,200 to $1,500, and I would strongly recommend to the minister that wherever organizations of fishermen are now established, he get into communication with them and find out if they are willing to put up a small amount of money, say ten per cent or even five per cent, with the government advancing the balance, in order to establish these brine-freezing plants. The government might hold a mortgage on the property and the fishermen could pay the money back to the government in yearly instalments spread over a given period of years. The fishermen also should have some system of long term loans, which they do not have to-day; they have no cash of their own, and if you could give them an opportunity to secure better equipment with which they can fish more efficiently, probably they would be in a better financial position to repay any loans which might be made to them. However, if you can raise the standard of living you have taken the first great, necessary step in order to help these unfortunate men out of the economic destitution in which they find themselves to-day.

There is a great deal more I would like to say on this subject, Mr. Chairman, but I do not wish to delay the house unduly at this late stage of the session. I simply suggest to the minister that there are examples in other departments which he might well follow. There is the question of marketing; the federal Department of Agriculture conducts certain marketing services, such as the swine and sheep marketing service, and indeed I understand that the first really successful marketing of maritime dressed meats in the city of Montreal was carried on under the Department of Agriculture. I suggest the application of something of that nature to the fish business. The trawler question probably will be the most difficult to solve; I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend from Richmond for sentimental reasons. I think if you can do anything to make our present fishing population happier and more contented you will have done a great deal more for Canada than can be done by making a few maritime fish corporations rich. After all, this would not be putting any obstacles in the way of scientific progress, because I understand that this government, which now protests that it cannot help the fishermen by removing the trawlers, did prevent the catching of walruses off the coast of Labrador in order that the Eskimos and Indians of that district might live. If it was a good thing to prevent the commercial catching of walruses in order to enable the Eskimos to continue to exist, surely there is justification for the limitation and close restriction of trawlers in order to enable the maritime fishermen to exist in Canada.

The minister has not carried out the recommendations contained in this report to any real extent. I do not know whether he has anything more to offer the fishermen; I have looked over his estimates, but have not found any striking change in them. There are a few small increases, but they contain nothing calculated to improve the general condition of the fishermen. I submit that the minister himself would be well advised to go down to the maritime provinces this year and live among these people for a month or two, in order to find out their actual condition. Then he could come back to this house next year with a real remedy.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. Do I understand that he is in favour of the majority recommendation of the royal commission with regard to the abolition of beam trawlers?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Sentimentally, yes, but as a practical proposition I do not see how you are going to abolish a trawler which is international in character. That is the difficulty I see; you have beam trawlers coming from all parts of the world, from France, from Portugal, from Spain, from England, from Norway and from the United States, and it seems to me it would be a very stupid thing to destroy Canadian trawler fishing unless it were done by international agreement, and so apply to the trawlers of all nations. I think there should be a limitation, and you should try to build up the morale of the shore fishermen and give them more confidence in their future. You should do what you can to help them market their fish at a better price.

An hon. MEMBER: Get them trawlers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The way to help them get trawlers is to assist them in organizing first and then lend them the money, taking security on the trawler itself. I believe the trawlers cost from $135,000 to $150,000; that is not a very large sum of money, although it must appear a tremendous sum to the shore fishermen. To a government it is a mere bagatelle which is chucked away here and there several times in the course of one day when we are passing estimates sometimes without even decent consideration. If you can only get the fishermen to organize they will be quite willing to undertake the responsibility in these matters if they see an opportunity of ever getting their heads above the economic slough in which they are immersed at present. Frankly, I would hesitate to picture to the house conditions down there, as I saw them. They were deplorable. I went into one home where there were five children, the eldest of whom was a girl of seventeen, very polite and very pretty. I had heard that she had never been to school, but I wanted to find out for myself, and when I asked her she told me that that was the case because her mother had to go to work in order to make fifty or seventy-five cents per day to keep the home going, and so the girl was required to look after the other four children. The next child was a boy of eleven years of age, and when I asked him if he had ever been to school, he told me that he had not because his father was getting along in years and required his services in the boat in order to steady it while he set the lines for fishing. It is necessary that these boats go out from five to ten miles from the shore, depending on the condition of the weather and the fish, and someone is needed to steady the boat and the sons, and in many cases the daughters of the fishermen, are taken along to do this work because the fathers cannot afford to hire any help; the result is that we have in Canada in the year 1929 a condition of illiteracy which is a disgrace to the country. This is brought about as a result of economic conditions which the minister would be well advised to look into to see if this question cannot be solved in some way.

I must say quite frankly that I am puzzled as regards the trawlers. If I thought it would save the lives of ten or twenty thousand fishermen and keep them in Canada and build up their business, and if I thought it would not damage the Canadian fishing industry, I would be in favour of abolishing the trawler, but I am in doubt as to just what the effect would be. In Great Britain and other places where the trawler has been used for many years the fishing has become almost non-existent, or at least it has been very largely destroyed. Any hon. member who comes from that part of the world knows that that is the case. Reference was made to agricultural machinery and it was said that it would be just as foolish to prevent the use of the binder as it would be to prevent the use of the trawl, but that is not a fair comparison to make, the binder does not destroy the land, nor does it destroy the grain, and it has been stated on fairly accurate authority that the trawler does both; it destroys the fishing beds and destroys a lot of immature fish. On the other hand, other authorities state that that is not the case, so I find it impossible to arrive at an intelligent answer to this question. I think the minister should take the whole matter into consideration and give it his personal attention, as the conditions which prevail in that part of the country are not a credit either to his department or to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: During the recess, would the minister be good enough to secure the file in connection with the Ellis royal commission. The report was tabled a short time ago, but one of our members is very desirous of having this report.

Mr. CARDIN: The report has been tabled.

Mr. BENNETT: But not the file connected with it. There are some matters antecedent to the report which some members are very anxious to inquire into, as it affects their ridings.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Minister may cancel license.

Mr. CAHAN: A number of licenses are issued by the minister under the provisions of chapter 73 of the revised statutes. For instance, under section 9 of that statute there is a license in respect of whale fishing; in the same section there is a license for whaling in Hudson bay and northern waters. Under section 10 there is a license for manufacturing fish meal; under section 20, a license in British Columbia waters for boats and buyers of fresh salmon; under section 22, a license in British Columbia for the herring fishing; under section 23, a license for lobster canning or curing; under section 28, a license for lobster pounds, and so forth. Again I am not suggesting any amendment expressing want of confidence in the minister, but the proposed new section 8A provides:

> The minister may cancel any license issued under the authority of this act, if the operations under such license are not conducted in conformity with law.

That leaves the cancellation as a mere exercise of discretion on the part of the minister. It does not provide for any evidence being presented to the minister of any violation of this statute. I suggest that, in case of its being alleged that any holder of a license has not acted in conformity with the law, he should have an opportunity to be heard and to present evidence in support of his innocense of any such alleged violation. These licenses are held in many cases by persons and companies who have invested many thousands and sometimes tens of thousands of dollars in the particular fishery for which they have obtained a license, and it seems a hardship that their licenses should be cancelled without an opportunity being given them to be heard. Therefore I move this amendment:

That section 3 be amended by inserting beween the words "if" and "the" in the seventeenth line the following words:

"It has been ascertained by the report of a commissioner appointed under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, that"

The clause as amended will then read as follows:

8A. The minister may cancel any license issued under the authority of this act, if it has been ascertained by the report of a commissioner appointed under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, that the operations under such license are not conducted in conformity with law.

We are now laying down the law for future time with regard to such cancellations, and this amendment provides simply that the licensee, in case a charge is made against him, may be heard under the Inquiries Act. I would be willing to adopt any other method of inquiry that might seem more suitable, but this is the form of inquiry which we have provided for by statute. I have shown my amendment to the minister and I trust that, after due consideration, he will be prepared to accept it.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend was kind enough to communicate to me the amendment he proposed to make to this section of the bill. After looking into the matter, I am quite agreeable to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend and to incorporate his amendment in the section.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I think this amendment should be considered a little. I should like to ask the minister if the licenses referred to include licenses granted to lobster and other fishermen under the Fisheries Act?

Mr. CARDIN: All licenses.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): My hon. friend who moved the amendment should take into consideration the fact that when we issue licenses to lobster fishermen, it is simply a matter of regulating the fishing and seeing that they obey the law. One of the most objectionable features in connection with that fishery is the difficulty of getting the fisherman to leave the spawn lobsters in the water. We give him a license and if he is found to disobey that regulation, which is important to the industry, his license is cancelled. That is the only control that we have over him. You could not get a commissioner under Inquiries Act to investigate a case of that kind.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): Are you going to send him out on the water to watch the men? That is impossible. If the department is satisfied from the evidence that the fishermen is not acting in conformity with the law, then the word of the inspector or police officer or whoever is enforcing the act should be sufficient to have the license cancelled.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How do you manage it now?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): It is now in the hands of the department.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What do they know about the evidence against him?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): They have the word of the officer who is enforcing the law.

Mr. IRVINE: Would not the commissioner have that?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): The commissioner could only investigate the case afterwards. I think the amendment is entirely unworkable from a practical standpoint.

Mr. CAHAN: There is no reason why you could not appoint the officer who is enforcing the law as a commissioner to investigate the case. It is certainly not an objection that the commissioner cannot be on board one of these boats because the fishery inspector is not on the boat either when it is on the water, and he must decide on hearsay or other evidence of some sort.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): Evidence, but not hearsay. A commissioner under the Inquiries Act would not decide on hearsay.

Mr. CAHAN: Of course not, and I wish to avoid the possibility that any partisan or any person who is personally hostile to this particular fisherman can merely by writing a letter secure the cancellation of his license. In some cases these men have thousands of dollars invested and the cancellation of the license destroys the entire property value. Therefore, there should be some method whereby, before the license is cancelled, the particular licensee complained of should have the opportunity to be heard on oath or to present the evidence of his witnesses on oath. That is what I am suggesting. I quite agree with the hon. member that if the fishermen do not conform to the law their licenses should be cancelled, but the cancellation of the license should depend upon an inquiry at which those who are opposed to its cancellation may have the opportunity to be heard; and the minister should have a report from the person who conducts that inquiry on oath, upon which in the exercise of his full discretion he may cancel the license. I am not proposing to take away the discretion of the minister to cancel. I am simply providing that he should have evidence on both sides, if available, before such cancellation takes place.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I have heard of no complaints from the fishermen or from the officers enforcing the law with regard to trouble in getting information. I think the law is being administered fairly to both, but the amendment of my hon. friend would set up too much machinery and there would be too much expense connected with it. You might as well take away the license to fishermen altogether, so far as preserving the industry is concerned, if you enact such an amendment into law.

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot possibly understand that, because under the law as it is at present this license may be cancelled by order of the governor in council, and it is proposed now to vest the sole discretion in the minister.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): As it is now.

Mr. CAHAN: No, as proposed by this amendment.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): As it always has been.

Mr. CAHAN: Not so. Under the law, as it stood before, the minister had not that discretion. In exercising his discretion the minister was acting under an order of the governor in council authorizing it, and the governor in council assumed full responsibility for every such cancellation.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): It would be cancelled upon the recommendation of the minister of the department.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so, but there was full governmental responsibility in the exercise of that power of cancellation. I am simply trying to ensure that those who hold licenses shall not have their licenses cancelled without being heard in their own defence as to whether they have violated the law or not. We are now enlarging the act so that it refers not only to lobster fishing. The old act refers to whale fisheries and a great number of fisheries conducted by large undertakings, and we are now making the act apply to licenses for trawling and the like, under which business is done in a large way. I think there should be opportunity given to these people to be heard before their licenses are cancelled. That is my suggestion.

Mr. NEILL: Rather than see the amendment pass in the form suggested by my hon. friend I think it would be better to drop the section altogether. I can see the point he makes as regards the large vested interests being injured if licenses are cancelled, but the member for Queens and myself have in mind the operation of the law as it applies to the fisherman's license, the one dollar license. Out in British Columbia the Japs get a license and they farm it out. They get a license in their own name and sell it to somebody else; it may be to someone in a remote fishing place, and if we have to put into operation the clauses of the Inquiries Act before we can take that license away, the fishing season will be over. The amendment would also involve an enormous expense because there would have to be advertising, and notice given of the time and place where a meeting was to be held. It would be of no use whatever in protecting the individual fisherman, and would be a great burden on the department in administering the law. No one has ever heard of anyone having been unjustly treated, and I really think it would be better to drop the section then to accept the amendment.

Mr. CARDIN: I think the amendment may at first give rise to some suspicion, but I believe it is workable. There is no objection to it that I or the deputy minister can at present see, and no objection to our fishery officers being appointed commissioners to make these investigations. I think that can be easily done under the law.

Mr. VENIOT: Is the decision left to the minister after the evidence is taken?

Mr. CAHAN: Absolutely.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—publication.

Mr. CAHAN: Under the law as it now stands and under the proposed amendment the regulations go into effect on being published in the Canada Gazette. In addition to that, under the statute as it now stands, these regulations are subsequently published with the volume of statutes for the year. Nearly every country justice of the peace has access to the statutes of Canada as published from year to year, and it gives greater publicity I think to these regulations if the statutes for the year can be examined, as they are now examined, to ascertain the purport of the regulations made from time to time. The sole difference is the very slight cost of publishing these regulations with the annual statutes. The regulations come into full force and effect immediately upon publication in the Canada Gazette, but at present in order to give greater publicity they are also published in the appendix to the statutes for the year. Throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion few people have access to the Canada Gazette; but in almost every country village they have access to the annual statutes and the information contained therein as to such regulations.

Mr. CARDIN: This amendment has been suggested to us by the Justice department. Their contention is that the publication of these regulations in the appendix to the yearly statutes has on many occasions unnecessarily delayed their publication. So we have decided to act on that recommendation.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Penalty for using trawls, etc.

Mr. QUINN: Subsection 2 provides:

No such vessel shall carry on fishing operations from or to any Canadian port or ports, unless such vessel is registered as a British ship in Canada.

I move that subsection 2 of section 7 be amended by adding after the word "is" in the third line the words "built and." The subsection will then read:

No such vessel shall carry on fishing operations from or to any Canadian port or ports, unless such vessel is built and registered as a British ship in Canada.

I move this amendment because of the fact that for years criticisms have been made in this house and elsewhere that our shipbuilding plants have been allowed to remain idle. When the government was building the merchant marine ships several tenders were let to the Halifax Shipyards and other shipbuilding plants throughout the Dominion, and the ships they turned out, were equal to any built in any other part of the world. I was very much surprised when tenders were let to British concerns for the ships for the West Indies service. The reason given was that they could be built so much cheaper on the other side of the Atlantic. I do not consider that a sufficient reason. We have been spending millions of dollars on immigration and colonization, and this expenditure has been criticized on many occasions on the ground that facilities were not granted to our people to produce what they consume and use. Here is one means of helping to solve our immigration problem. If we want ships for our mercantile marine, let them be built in Canada, and so give our workmen an opportunity to demonstrate what they can do. We ought to make ourselves as far as possible a self-contained nation. Let us give every advantage to the Canadian producer; that is real protection. Let us enable our Canadian workmen to demonstrate their ability to build fishing trawlers, instead of giving advantages to workmen abroad.

Mr. CARDIN: Although I am in sympathy with the policy advocated by my hon. friend from Halifax in regard to encouraging our shipbuilding industry, I cannot accept his amendment. It would have the effect of practically confiscating a certain number of vesesls which are now in operation and have been for a period of years. We are not losing the benefit of that operation, because most of these vessels are fishing from Halifax. As to the future, the recommendation of the committee on marine and fisheries, which we are accepting by this bill, provides a remedy. If my hon. friend will refer to paragraph (c) of subsection 5 of section 7, he will see that regulations may be adopted to fix the conditions under which a license shall be issued. Then we may make any other provision respecting licenses. So that in so far as the future is concerned, the bill empowers the minister to meet the situation suggested by my hon. friend. I submit, however, that it would be most unfair at the present time to provide that no licenses shall be issued to an existing trawler on the ground that it was not built in Canada. I hope my hon. friend realizes the position in which his amendment would place us; it would bring about an injustice. I would ask him, therefore, to withdraw it, assuring him that the views he has expressed with respect to encouraging shipbuilding in Canada are shared absolutely by the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. QUINN: I have listened carefully to what the minister has said and I wish to impress upon him my motive in proposing this amendment. We have been studying, year after year, the problem of maintaining our Canadian citizenship, and how best to meet the immigration question. I have looked over this bill carefully and have come to the conclusion that the amendment I suggest is one way of making a beginning. We are anxious to give employment to Canadian men and women, and if the minister wishes to make a beginning in this direction the amendment I have offered suggests a modest way. Millions of dollars in the way of contracts have been awarded to shipbuilders in other countries notwithstanding that we have in Canada craftsmen, mechanics and builders who have demonstrated clearly that they can build ships the equal of any produced in any other part of the world.

Mr. CARDIN: No doubt.

Mr. QUINN: The minister agrees. In my own native province we had many years ago a splendid record for shipbuilding; we could build wooden ships from our own native material, and manned by our own people, and filled with the products of our own province, sending them to the seven seas of the world. But because of what I was going to describe as an unfortunate, but perhaps I had better say a fortunate agreement arrived at in 1867, the province of Nova Scotia, realizing its duties as a British possession, entered confederation, threw in its lot with the other parts of Canada, and became part and parcel of this great Dominion. It has been shown beyond question that Nova Scotia has lost, has suffered as the result of that agreement. We have not been able to convince the people, particularly of the western provinces, of the sacrifice Nova Scotia made in 1867; they do not realize the important part Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces have played in this great confederation. We have been the sufferers, the losers, and I regret to be under the necessity of pointing out the fact that the western provinces have failed to realize the position we occupy and the contribution we have made to confederation. Our duty as representatives of the maritimes in this parliament is to bring this fact to the attention of the people; other members from those provinces realize their responsibility as fully as I do, and it is important that this government should do something to place the maritimes in the position they occupied previous to confederation. At that time we had control of our own resources and revenues and we played an important part in the commerce of the world. But we have been gradually going back, suffering as a result. Now here is an opportunity to give the maritime provinces a chance. In my native city we have a shipyard which has demonstrated that we can build ships equal to any turned out anywhere in the world. In proposing this amendment I say in all sincerity that if trawlers are to be used on the Atlantic and on the Pacific the shipyards on both coasts should be given an opportunity to construct these vessels.

I have nothing further to say except once more to emphasize the sentiment generally prevailing in Canada to-day that every effort should be made to give Canadian workmen the right to produce the goods which we consume. We should do that to the greatest extent. Turn to the country south of us: will they give us any opportunity to build ships for them? Do they give contracts to Canadian shipbuilding firms? No chance. They build their own ships, giving employment to their own workmen. I am asking that the same consideration be shown Canadian workmen and that in every case our own people be given an opportunity to build the ships which are required for the development of our fisheries and other lines of commerce.

Mr. SHORT: I thought this matter had been all threshed out in the committee and had been agreed to almost unanimously.

Mr. QUINN: No.

Mr. SHORT: Well, there were three out of twenty or thirty members who disagreed. In my opinion subsection (c) covers the situation thoroughly and I agree with the explanation made by the minister. I do not see how we can possibly accept the amendment because we have already a number of trawlers that are now registered in Canada. These trawlers were not built here and what what will be done with them? They are to be found on the Atlantic and the Pacific. Will they be confiscated? The government has already accepted them and given them Canadian registry. If the amendment were adopted what would happen? This subsection fixes the licenses for future vessels and it is for the department to decide then whether such vessels shall be of Canadian build and register. But under existing circumstances it would be ridiculous to accept the amendment as introduced by the junior member for Halifax because it would affect a number of ships built in Great Britain and other countries, operating both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and registered in Canada. I submit, therefore, that we ought to accept the section as passed by the special committee almost unanimously.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): As a member of the committee which passed this amendment, I might tell my hon. friend from Digby that the committee was not unanimous.

Mr. SHORT: I did not say it was unanimous; I said about three members voted against it, out of a membership of thirty.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): If more members of the committee were better acquainted with conditions on the Nova Scotia coast there would have been more than three votes against that recommendation. I did not intend to speak at any great length in connection with this matter but I notice that the minister has changed his attitude very recently and that the look on his face now is not the look which was there before we adjourned at noon; he has discovered that he has a recruit from Nova Scotia. The position of my hon. friend from Digby is well known to me and to every fisherman in the maritime provinces, and when my hon. friend the minister smiles and applauds him in this house when he takes a certain stand, I feel that any member who supports him is a friend of the capitalists and not a friend of the fisherman of the maritime provinces.

The amendment which has been moved has to do with a great deal more than merely the building of ships in the maritime provinces; it means a great deal more than giving work to our shipbuilders who are to-day out of work. It means to every fisherman in the maritime provinces an opportunity to live, and I make my appeal on behalf of those people. If these ships were built in the maritime provinces to-day we would have no trouble with the ten beam trawlers operating on our coast; we would give the 16,000 fishermen of the maritime provinces an opportunity to live, and we would probably throw 249 men out of work, which would mean that some of the corporations in the maritime provinces would not be able to pay dividends.

Since we can get no other legislation put through this house it is my intention to support this amendment in order that we may curtail to some extent beam trawling in the maritime provinces. If the amendment is adopted, incorporating the words "Canadian built" only one of the trawlers now operating on the Nova Scotia coast will be allowed to continue at work, and for that reason I support the amendment now before the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend is quite right when he says the amendment has to do with something other than just the question of building ships in Canada. I do not think the Fisheries Act is so much concerned with the question of the construction of ships as it is with the interests of the fishermen, and I am afraid my hon. friend from Halifax who lays particular emphasis on the fact that we should have Canadian built ships has perhaps missed the real purpose of the legislation now before the committee. I am just as much in sympathy with the idea of building ships in Canada as is my hon. friend from Halifax, but I am not sure that my hon. friend should select fishing vessels as being the only ships which should be required to be built in Canada.

Mr. QUINN: I mentioned others.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has selected the Fisheries Act as the place to insert this particular provision, but I say that this bill relates to fisheries rather than to shipbuilding. At present I am anxious for legislation which will assist the fisheries. Shipbuilding can be dealt with in connection with general legislation respecting the industries of this country, and that might be done instead of picking out the fishing industry alone as the one which will have these restrictions imposed upon it.

Mr. QUINN: I simply suggested that a start must be made somewhere.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not oppose the idea of having these vessels built in Canada but I want to point out to my hon. friend that, under section 5c, it could be a matter of regulation to provide that vessels which were entitled to a license under this act should be required to be built in Canada. I want to remind the committee that we are facing a problem which is at least eighteen years old; it has existed ever since the first trawler was introduced in Nova Scotia, I think in 1910 or 1911. To-day we have on the table of this house the first bit of legislation to be introduced to limit the operation of trawling out of the ports of Nova Scotia, and in that respect I think hon. members should feel that we have made a substantial advance.

In that connection I want to point out that there was a fisheries commission which travelled through the maritime provinces taking evidence, and that commission received a great many different suggestions with regard to the trawler. These suggestions were gone into very carefully, and a majority of the commission brought in a report favouring the abolition of steam trawlers, as they put it until the demand for fish became such as to necessitate the use of these means for production. As I have understood since, and I think my information is correct, their idea was that if only the domestic market was to be served, then it was questionable whether or not steam trawlers were necessary, while on the other hand a different situation might arise regarding outside markets. The chairman of the commission, in a minority report, recomended that trawlers should be limited to those of Canadian registry and Canadian ownership. A very serious complaint was made before the commission that firms were permitted to go to Great Britain to charter trawlers for a comparatively small amount and bring them over here as Canadian vessels to engage in the fishing industry, so the chairman proposed that trawlers should be of Canadian registry and ownership.

I would also like to remind the committee of something which I think probably has been lost sight of in connection with the discussion and the report. The chairman of the commission pointed out that in his opinion the number of trawlers in use should not exceed the number which would produce from time to time the market requirements in excess of the production of fish from boats and vessels; in other words, he recommended that the trawler production of fish should be auxiliary to the production by boats and vessels and, in addition, the minority report contained a recommendation that some international body be created to regulate fishing by trawler.

Those are the recommendations which were before this house, and the minister introduced a bill which went further than the minority report but not as far as the majority report. The bill which was introduced, which was bill No. 26, required that any trawling vessel operating out of Canadian ports should be of Canadian ownership and registry and, where it was owned by a company, that the majority of shares should be bona fide owned by Canadians. That was not recommended by either the majority or the minority reports of the commission; that meant a very sweeping change in connection with trawlers, and I submit that it made a very substantial limitation as to the number of trawlers which might operate.

That bill went before the special committee, to which representations were made and I want hon. members to realize that everyone is not of one mind in connection with this matter; everyone is trying to find the best solution in the interest of shore fishermen. The representations which were made to the committee took different aspects; one recommendation, which had been made before the fisheries commission, was that over and above the present trawlers, future trawlers should be Canadian built. That recommendation recognized the situation which has been mentioned already, that a certain number of trawlers were operating out of Canadian ports which were not Canadian built, and it was intended that regulations should be made so that over and above those trawlers, the remainder should be Canadian built. Another recommendation was the one which I mentioned a minute ago, namely, that trawlers shall be Canadian owned and registered and furthermore that if they are owned by companies, the majority of the shares in the company shall be owned bona fide by Canadians. Another suggestion before the committee was that the number of trawlers which could operate from Canadian ports was to be limited for this year to the number which operated last year; a very drastic limitation. That last suggestion was made by the subcommittee but it was very strenuously opposed by a number of those interested in the province of Nova Scotia, who felt that if such a limitation were put on a monopoly would be created in favour of those who already had trawlers and against those who might want to operate trawlers in the future. As a result of those representations, the main committee changed the recommendation of the subcommittee and brought down a provision recommending that regulations should be made by the governor in council for the limiting of the number of trawlers and for the regulating of the issue of licenses to trawlers; in other words making it absolutely impossible for a trawling vessel to leave Canadian ports without a license from the minister, and putting in the hands of the governor in council the power to make regulations as to the conditions under which these licenses would issue. Further than that, and it is in the bill, it was provided that trawlers should not operate within twelve miles of the shore. The committee recognized what is set out in the report of the royal commission at page 97, which puts it in this way:

> It must not be forgotten that the shore fishermen are proprietors of the inshore sea, proprietors not in virtue of actual possession, but in having made it their own from the earliest days of Canadian coast settlement or colonization.

The provision is in the bill that trawling vessels shall not operate within twelve miles of the shore, leaving that area to the inshore fishermen.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the minister think that the foreign trawlers can be controlled in that way?

Mr. RALSTON: It is made an offence for a man to land his catch at a Canadian port when he has made that catch within the twelve-mile limit.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the minister given any thought to the effect upon international relations with respect to the outstanding conventions as to the use of sea ports?

Mr. RALSTON: Foreign trawlers are limited in this way: a duty of one cent per pound is imposed on fish which is landed by them. It all comes down to the question of limiting and regulating what we know as Canadian trawlers. That is the recommendation of the committee, and that recommendation has been embodied in the bill. This is not the last word in connection with trawlers; it is the first. It is an endeavour to meet a very difficult situation, a situation which is fraught with all sorts of troubles. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), who I know has a very sympathetic interest with those engaged in the fishing industry in Nova Scotia, was sincerely puzzled in connection with the matter of trawlers. He saw that there were difficulties in connection with any of the remedies which have been suggested, and most of them have been suggested by representatives of the fishermen. He saw that there would be great difficulty in carrying them out, but at the same time a sincere and honest attempt has been made to making it possible to get together those who were interested in this industry and have them place before the minister the representations which they had to make with regard to a practical way of limiting these trawling vessels. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the bill is a sensible one. It is very difficult for the house or the committee to arrive at a solution of a problem which has proven practically insoluble for the last eighteen or twenty years, but I think a fair opportunity has been provided to everyone concerned to present his views. If there is any formula which can be suggested whereby the limitation or regulation of these vessels can be effected, an opportunity is given to those who have that formula to present it to the minister. I believe that those who are members of the committee, and I believe that the members of this house feel that after all, if it ever should come to be a question between the trawlers and the inshore fishermen, the inshore fishermen should have the advantage and be the ones for whom we should legislate. That has been the spirit in which members of the committee approached this question. It is far more important for us to have prosperous villages along our shores, to see happy and contented people, rather than to pile up profits for corporations, and it was in that spirit that this legislation was brought down.

The hon. member for Bow River very honestly and fairly and candidly said that he was doubtful as to whether or not it was possible to do away entirely with the trawler but he thought that there should be some method whereby they could be limited and regulated. The limitation is provided for in this bill, keeping them outside the twelve-mile area. The power is given to the governor in council to make regulations under which licenses will be issued, and suggestions have been offered which can be followed as the principles upon which such limitations or regulations can be laid down. Those recommendations have been made by the committee of the house, and have been adopted by the Minister of Fisheries, and I believe they are a distinct step in advance.

Mr. IRVINE: How many cruisers will be employed in policing the twelve-mile limit?

Mr. RALSTON: If the hon. member will read the act he will see that a penalty is provided for landing fish which has been caught within the twelve-mile limit, and the burden of proof in connection with the catch is upon the trawler. In other words, a man may be required to make an affidavit that the catch was taken outside the twelve-mile limit.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): This is also a discrimination against the Canadian trawler, because the foreign trawler can operate up to within three miles of the shore.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the hon. member say that he is against the twelve-mile limit?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I am not against it.

Mr. RALSTON: I would like the hon. member to take some definite position in regard to it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I am not in favour of the beam trawlers. I differ from my hon. friend in that respect; he is in favour of a certain growth—

Mr. RALSTON: I am in favour of this act as being the first step in connection with the regulation of trawlers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The foreign trawler can operate up to within three miles of the shore.

Mr. RALSTON: Is the hon. member for or against the twelve-mile limit?

Mr. BENNETT: That is not answering the question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): That has nothing to do with my question. I am in favour of the total abolition of the trawler, but under this act the Canadian vessel has to fish outside the twelve-mile limit, while the foreign vessel can fish up to three miles.

Mr. RALSTON: All I can say is that the Canadian or the foreign trawler is prohibited from landing its catch, if it has been made within the twelve-mile limit.

Mr. SHORT: No trawler fishes within twelve miles of shore. They all fish away off the coast.

Mr. RALSTON: While I am dealing with the matter of fisheries, may I say a word to my hon. friend with regard to cooperation? When he speaks about there being no effort toward cooperation with the fishermen, I think he knows there are between eighty and a hundred fishermen's federations and the government has been and is taking steps toward assisting in connection with the cooperative movement among the fishermen all over Nova Scotia. I agree thoroughly with my hon. friend in regard to the desire to see that cooperation is encouraged among the fishermen of Nova Scotia and that the fisherman is made sure of a substantial market and bargaining power.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The minister stated that we have between eighty and a hundred cooperative societies in Nova Scotia.

Mr. RALSTON: I said fishermen's federations.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Yes. Could the minister say where they are located?

Mr. RALSTON: I could not give my hon. friend the list. They could be given very easily if my hon. friend wants them.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I am acquainted with the majority of the fishermen's federations in Nova Scotia and I do not think there are more than twenty.

Mr. RALSTON: That is simply a statement of fact which can easily be verified. The third matter which has been brought up is one in which I am intensely interested and one which has to do very seriously with the question of trawling. It is the endeavour to bring about an international conference with regard to not the regulation of trawlers coming into a particular port but the regulation of foreign trawlers which, of course, have a right to fish on the banks regardless of any regulation we may make, so that for the benefit of all concerned, the fish supply may not be depleted. That is receiving and will receive the attention of the department in connection with future measures which may be considered.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. QUINN: The Minister of National Defence has stated that this bill is the first step in the regulating the trawlers. I ask him whether it is in conformity with the recommendations of the fisheries commission. I submit that it is not. When I moved my amendment, I had in mind the conservation of Canadian trade, Canadian work for Canadian workmen. That is the argument I adduced in my previous remarks. This bill does not conform with the report brought down by the royal commission on fisheries. The Minister of National Defence wonders why I should bring up under this particular item an argument in favour of Canadian-built ships. This is one opportunity that I have and on every opportunity that presents itself I will urge that Canadian ships for Canadian trade should be built in Canadian shipyards by Canadian workmen. In the last two or three years we have awarded contracts for five ships for the West Indies service. Notwithstanding the opposition that might be raised to my ideas, I submit that these ships could be built in Canadian shipyards, I will confess at an enhanced price, but what would have been the result? We would have been giving work to Canadian workmen, and that is the policy the party on this side of the house been advocating all along. Even if we pay a little increase in price, we should give these contracts to our Canadian shipyards and our own men.

At the present time we have two destroyers being built in England shipyards for the Canadian navy which is under the department of my hon. friend, the Minister of National Defence. In these times of peace when we have no expectation of going and no desire to go to war, we do not need shell-proof destroyers, and therefore an opportunity should be given to Canadian shipyards to build these destroyers for the Canadian navy, even though this might cost us a little more. The only argument against it is that the cost is a little higher; but with the extravagant ideas of the government which holds the reins of power to-day, a few hundred thousand dollars here or there would not make much difference. Therefore, when they are in that extravagant mood, why not give the advantage to our Canadian workmen by permitting them to build these ships and thus keep our workmen on this side of the line instead of having them go to the United States through lack of opportunity in this country.

I have a deep interest in all Canadian fishermen, but particularly have I at heart the interests of the fishermen of the maritime provinces. Therefore I say: Every opportunity should be granted to these men to carry on the industry in which they are born and brought up, the conditions of which were so well demonstrated by the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton and the hon. member for Bow River this morning. They are such that it is not necessary to point out to the Department of Fisheries that something must be done to alleviate conditions among the fishermen, particularly in the maritime provinces. I would repeat what I said the other day when I was criticizing the present incumbent of the office of Deputy Minister of Fisheries, namely, that if he would devote his time to the industry and to the people who participate in it, he would make to the government a report which would bring about better results. The whole responsibility for the present condition is upon this government and if they do not bring in legislation that will produce better results and conditions among the fishermen of the maritime provinces, they will have to pay the price.

Mr. SHORT: The statements made by the hon. junior member for Halifax and the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton would lead the committee to believe that the firms which are operating trawlers are not in sympathy with the shore fishermen. They would also lead the committee to believe that because I am not in sympathy with the amendment moved by the hon. junior member for Halifax, I am not a friend of the shore fishermen. I want to tell both of those hon. gentlemen that I am a friend of, and have perhaps done more for, the shore fishermen than either of my two hon. friends has done. The firms that are operating trawlers out of Nova Scotia have done more for the shore fishermen than any of the other firms that are carrying on the fish business there, because they have created throughout the country a market for their fish. They have spent thousands and thousands of dollars advertising fish throughout Canada and have found new markets for fish where the small concerns were unable to do so. They would not be operating trawlers out of Nova Scotia ports to-day if they were able to get a regular supply from the shore fishermen. As everyone knows, there are seasons of the year when the shore fishermen do not operate. We do not have any fish on the shore during the winter months, and that is when there is the greatest demand for fish throughout the country. The maritime provinces had no fresh fish market until we were able to give the cities of the upper provinces a regular supply of fish every week. Previous to that they were supplied from the United States, from Portland, Boston and Gloucester. Fish used to come in from those ports all the year round, but in 1910 we started to establish a fresh fish market in the cities in the upper provinces by giving them a regular supply the year round, and that trade is increasing year by year.

The concerns that are operating the steam trawlers would not be operating one of them if they could get a sufficient quantity of fish from the boat fishermen because it is a well-known fact that the fish landed by the boat fishermen are of a better quality than that landed by the trawlers, but during the winter months it is impossible to get a regular supply of fish from the boat fishermen along our shores in Nova Scotia, and we have to use modern methods in order to ensure a regular supply. The report of the royal commission shows that the operators of steam trawlers purchase over fifty per cent of their shipments from the boat fishermen. These trawlers do not operate out of Canso during the summer season at all. It is only in the fall and winter when the weather is bad and the supply is not equal to the demand that they are obliged to use modern methods just as they do in the United States and other countries. I repeat, if the supply of fish could be guaranteed by the shore fishermen, there would be no trawlers operating at all. My hon. friend from Richmond-West Cape Breton talks of the big dividends paid by these corporations. The large fishing corporations of Nova Scotia have made no money in the last four or five years. Like other concerns they did make some money during the war, but since 1921 they have made no money and several that I know of have not paid a dividend for four years. So the big interests that my hon. friend talks about are not making the money that he thinks they are. Their sympathies are entirely with the shore fishermen, and they would not be operating these expensive trawlers if they could get sufficient supplies from the shore fishermen. I see no reason why this amendment should receive consideration from this committee at all.

Mr. THOMPSON: I know nothing about trawlers on the Atlantic coast or their operation, but I am in favour of this amendment because I am in favour of its principle, that all vessels operating in Canadian waters should as far as possible be built in Canadian shipyards by Canadian workmen out of Canadian materials. I think when the order for the vessels for the West Indies trade was given to outside shipyards a great mistake was made. Even if it had cost a little more, I think the work should be done in our own country.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The Minister of National Defence has stated that whenever the question comes up as between the shore fishermen and the steam trawlers he would take his stand behind the shore fishermen. I wish to congratulate him on that statement. It is exactly the stand I take. I am not going to say that the steam trawlers should be completely abolished. That is a very difficult question, and I can appreciate the position of the Minister of National Defence when he was speaking in the house on this matter, but we had a commission appointed by this government, which cost this country $100,000, to investigate this and many other matters that were referred to it in its terms of reference. This report is signed by the majority of that commission, by Doctor Cyrus MacMillan and his colleagues, exclusive of the chairman, who sent in a minority report. At the bottom of page 98 of that report I find the following very startling statement made by these commissioners, and I take it for granted that these men were competent to deal with the various matters referred to them by the government. If they were not competent to deal with them, they ought not to have been appointed. They say:

> We believe that one of the remedies for the present situation is the total prohibition of steam-trawlers from operating from Canadian ports, landing their catch in Canadian ports, or obtaining in Canadian ports coal or supplies. And we recommend that such legislation be enacted as to make such prohibition effective on and after June 1, 1929.

Then I turn to page 97 of the report, where they say:

> The problem seems to be largely one of choice between the steam trawler and the shore fisherman.

[Mr. Short.]

I read that for the information and edification of my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence in the light of his statement, that he was prepared to stand behind the shore fishermen, if it became a question between them and the steam trawlers. The commissioners say plainly:

> The problem seems to be one of choice between the steam trawler and the shore fishermen. One or the other must remain, and one or the other must go.

There is the finding of commissioners appointed by this government—one or the other must remain and one or the other must go. It seems to me that the commissioners put it up pretty plainly to the Minister of National Defence and myself and all others who should take a stand as representatives of the people on this question. That is a very serious statement by the commissioners, and in view of the statement of the Minister of National Defence I would ask if he has given it due consideration. Evidently the minister does not believe that that statement is true or this legislation would not have been brought in. If he does believe it is true, then the only stand that the Minister of National Defence and I and others can take is to stand four-square behind the shore fishermen because human values are the values that must be considered in this matter. If, as these commissioners say, one or the other must go, for my part it would seem that the government should indemnify the owners of these steam trawlers for any losses they may incur as a result of the passing of these trawlers. And if the continuation of these steam trawlers in Nova Scotia is to be permitted, and if their continuation means that the shore fishermen must go, I say that it is the duty of this government to protect the shore fishermen, for human life is more valuable than any steam trawler or any other machine that the mind of man can invent. If the statement of the majority of the commissioners is correct, the steam trawler should go, and not the shore fishermen, and it "should not stand upon the order of its going."

Mr. MALCOLM: Is the conclusion of the commissioners correct, in the opinion of my hon. friend?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What conclusion?

Mr. MALCOLM: The conclusion that one or the other must go.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: That is not a matter for me to decide; it is up to the government which appointed this commission.

Mr. MALCOLM: Not at all.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The government have that recommendation from their own commission, a commission of their own creation, and it reports back to the government in terms unequivocal that one or the other must go. That commission reports back to them directly in unequivocal terms that one or the other must go. I say to my hon. friend with his ingratiating smile that he cannot put the onus on me. He must put it on the government of which he is a member, and he must bear his part of the responsibility.

Mr. MALCOLM: Apparently my hon. friend is not willing to assist in the matter at all.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The government have the power, and consequently are responsible.

Mr. BROWN: As a private member who does not know anything about this subject, I should like to ask the hon. member for Inverness—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: After I have concluded my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to answer any questions my hon. friend from Lisgar may wish to ask. My hon. friend the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) said he also was interested in legislation for the fishermen. Well now, here we have the report that has been in the hands of the government for over a year, the report of its own commission, a commission which made in all about seventy recommendations. This government kept that report in their possession for over a year, and then in the dying days of the session they bring in a bill to keep steam trawlers from operating within twelve miles of the coast of Nova Scotia, when as a matter of fact they were always precluded from operating within that distance.

That commission also recommended long-term loans to the fishermen to enable them to purchase boats and equipment in order satisfactorily to prosecute their calling and to supply the amount of fish that my hon. friend from Digby said the corporations wanted, so that the steam trawler might automatically abolish itself. According to the evidence taken by the commission, the fishermen of Nova Scotia to-day are not able to equip themselves properly to carry on that important calling. As a result they have to abandon it and the commission found a pathetic condition of affairs in the fishing districts of the province. My hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland), who also visited the province, found a similar condition of affairs. He found that children were not being sent to school because the returns from the fishermen's work were not sufficient to enable them properly to feed and clothe their children. The commission also found that not only were those conditions deplorable, not only were the men not getting a fair return from their hazardous toil, but that hundreds of them were compelled to leave our fishing villages, and the commission saw houses boarded up and villages depopulated.

One of the cures for this calamitous state of affairs would be the introduction of legislation to provide long-term loans to the fishermen of Nova Scotia. Since my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence says he is interested in legislation to assist the fishermen, it may be proper to ask him why that was not done since the government had the whole session in which to do it.

There is no doubt whatever that the fishermen need to cooperate. They should be taught cooperation, because cooperation requires a great deal of study. But I hope the government will not follow the practice of sending down political heelers to organize the fishermen. I believe the organizers should be appointed by the fishermen themselves and paid by the government.

The situation revealed in the report of the fisheries commission is a serious one for Canada. It will be remembered that when confederation was in the offing the great leaders of public opinion at that time, Macdonald, Cartier, Brown, Galt, Tupper, all stressed the importance of the maritime element in confederation. They said that Canada could not be formed unless it had a "maritime element." Well, a "maritime element" does not consist merely of harbours and ports of call. It has to do with the hardy men who carry on maritime pursuits, and if we allow their livelihood to be placed in jeopardy, whether by the steam trawler or any other factor, then the government that is in control of the situation is remiss in its duty when it does not come to the assistance of these people, who have played such an honourable part in our history and who are so important in our national development.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend began his speech very frankly and very candidly by saying that he himself was not wholly in favour of the abolition of trawlers. If he knows anything about the condition of affairs in Nova Scotia at the present time, he must be aware that the fishermen are not advocating the total abolition of the trawlers. He knows that the fisheries committee has not recommended their total abolition, but has realized that regulation is necessary. He knows that such a good friend of the fishermen of Nova Scotia as the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) who spoke this morning, does not advocate the total abolition of the trawlers. My hon. friend has endeavoured to play on words, but as yet he has made no declaration of his own in regard to this very important matter.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Oh yes.

Mr. RALSTON: He says the responsibility is on the government. Well, the government is taking the responsibility of bringing down this legislation. My hon. friend speaks of this bill being brought down in the "dying hours" of the session. It was first introduced on February 14, 1929. I was not a member of that committee, but my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Macdonald) was, and he knows what occurred in the committee. The committee's recommendation is being dealt with by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries within a week after it was submitted to the house. So my hon. friend can find no fault with the government for delay in the matter. This talk about the dying hours of the session is simply an endeavour to draw a red herring across the trail, and to give him an opportunity for making a speech —something that my hon. friend can do very cleverly indeed—to give the fishermen the idea that he is in sympathy with them—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: My hon. friend does not seriously wish to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RALSTON: —but failing absolutely to make any concrete or practical suggestion for helping in the solution of a problem which, as I say, has baffled our people for the last seventeen or eighteen years. This legislation is an endeavour to arrive at a solution of the problem. It will enable the people interested to make representations, and afford the minister an opportunity to weigh those representations and to lay down some principle which will be of benefit to the industry. And when I speak of the "industry" I do not mean the trawlers, I do not mean the companies, I do not mean the corporations; I mean the men and women who day by day are engaged in earning their livelihood in this occupation.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I think, Mr. Chairman, this question should be considered very calmly and coolly. There is no question of doubt that the problems surrounding the fishing industry of Nova Scotia are of a very acute character. But how any person in these modern times could conceive of abolishing absolutely the trawler—the instrument that has made the Nova Scotia fishing industry broaden out in the Dominion—is more than I can understand. It would be like the western country abandoning the gang plough in favour of the one furrow plough, or our textile manufacturers reverting to the spinning-wheel. It is regrettable that certain fishing districts in Nova Scotia are to some extent suffering on account of the operations of the steam trawler, but if the steam trawler were completely abolished the province generally would suffer. Take the coal industry, for instance, approximately $100,000 worth of coal is sold to steam trawlers annually, and that coal is mined in Nova Scotia and these trawlers are also provisioned in Nova Scotia. Therefore I think we should approach the discussion of this question not provincially or parochially but on the basis of a broad national question. Our fishing industry as it is now being developed finds an expanding market all over the Dominion.

It has been said that the fishing corporations are making excessive profits. I am told they are not. An hon. member of this house, thoroughly conversant with the fishing industry and also following that business, claims that they have not made anything like excessive profits in the past four or five years. This question should be considered and debated in a calm, sensible way in the light of modern science and advancement in all our industrial pursuits, including fishing. The steam trawlers do not operate within twelve miles of the coastline of Nova Scotia.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the good of the bill?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I am merely discussing the question of the steam trawler, which seems to be the paramount issue before the house at the present moment. The hon. member for Bow River stated this morning that the steam trawler had disastrous effects on the fishing industry off the Orkneys in the old country. The royal commission appointed by this government to investigate and study the fisheries in the maritime provinces held, both in the minority and in the majority report, that the operations of the steam trawler have not had a disastrous effect on the fishing industry of the maritime provinces.

I do not think we should have any desire to cripple an industry which is developing and making considerable headway in Canada. We have had sufficient evidences of cooperation with regard to the marketing of our products; I need refer only to the Maritime Provinces Association in the city of Toronto and another one in the city of Montreal, both endeavouring to assist us in the marketing of maritime products in central Canada. If, therefore, we should make any move which would cripple an industry of such importance and with such far-reaching ramifications as the fishing industry, it would simply be tying the hands of those who are willing to assist us, who have been assisting us, and who in the future will give us more in the way of assistance than we can do for ourselves so far as finding outside markets for maritime provinces products including fish.

Mr. J. ETIENNE DUSSAULT (Levis) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn), I wish to give the reason for the vote I am about to cast. The hon. member moved an amendment to Bill No. 26, an amendment which bears on the Fisheries Act, that a clause be inserted in the act so as to provide that licenses be refused to owners of vessels unless such vessels are built in Canada, and the reason given by the hon. member for Halifax in support of this amendment was that he wants the workers interested in the building of vessels to be employed. In my opinion, the hon. member for Halifax could have found a more appropriate circumstance to help these workers. He told us a short while ago that we could in Canada, as well as anywhere else, build vessels as sound and as cheap as those built by English firms. This is not so. On every occasion that the Canadian government requested our ship-builders and those of English firms to submit tenders, Canadian firms had to ask 30 per cent more than the English firms, and the contracts which, under these circumstances, were awarded to Canadian builders, brought ruin upon them. Last year, the Dominion government had to build two ice breakers, only Canadian firms were asked to tender. What was the outcome? Both contracts were awarded to firms in the Maritime provinces, and I can safely assure beforehand the hon. member for Halifax that these two contracts will hinder instead of fostering the development of ship-building industry in Canada. The Minister of Marine should not be obliged after having asked for tenders, to award the contract to the lowest tenderer. Certain owners of ship-building yards are so anxious to find work for their men that they put in tenders even at ruinous prices. It would be better to have the cost of the vessel, on which tenders are sought estimated and refuse to award the contract should the tender submitted be below the estimates of the department's engineers. The question may be asked why the Canadian ship-builders cannot compete with those of Europe. This is easily explained. First, the workmen's wages must be taken into consideration. All know that wages paid in Canada to workers in ship-yards are at least double those paid in Europe. We have no blast furnaces or rolling-mills in Canada to produce steel plates which are needed in ship-building. These steel plates are imported from England. The freight on these plates must be taken into account. Moreover, the English and European ship-building yards have been established for nearly a century and have always been given the preference on orders from governments or large ship-building firms, they therefore have been able to expand more than our Canadian ship-building yards.

There are in my riding ship-buiding yards operated by the Davie Ship-building Company. The latter were requested, during the war, by the government, to erect a special plant in order to build vessels. This plant has cost more than six million dollars. During war activities work was plentiful, but since then it has often lacked. It has been rumoured that the Davie Ship-building Company, as then organized, made large losses on their ship-building contracts during the war. Ever since then, this company has worked mostly for the Canada Steamship Company who are the owners.

During the war the price paid to ship-builders was $140 per ton, and even at that price Canadian firms could hardly balance their budget. To-day the price has dropped to $60 per ton. How can we therefore hope that this Canadian industry, whose development has been so costly, can, to-day, compete with that of Europe which has developed gradually and was assisted both by contracts and bonuses from various governments. Simply by giving to this industry the assistance needed and paying a fair price for its work. With that end in view the hon. members of this house must impress upon the Minister of Marine the advisability of awarding contracts only to those whose tenders show reasonable profits. It is not by fostering competition such as it exists among Canadian builders that we shall find a remedy to our ills.

Take, for instance, a shipbuilding yard whose workers are out of work; you request its owner to tender for the building of a vessel and at the same time you make the same request to the owner of a shipbuilding yard in full activity, immediately you give rise to competition which will force the former to tender at a price which will allow him to carry on but to carry on miserably. I cannot see any other reason that can explain the ridiculous low prices which the Minister of Marine has received in tenders for the building of the two ice-breakers in question. Can the minister be blamed for accepting those tenders? Evidently not. Had the minister acted otherwise the opposition would not have let slip the opportunity of blaming him for taking the public's money to make a gift of it to a company. For instance, the minister would have been blamed for having made a gift of $250,000 to the Davie Shipbuilding Company if he had awarded to this company the contract for the building of the first ice-breaker, instead of awarding it to the Halifax Shipbuilding Company. It would have been said that the government in acting thus had no other aim but making themselves safe in the Levis riding. Yet our workmen were more in need of work than those of Halifax. And I feel certain that the passing of the estimates of the Marine department would have been delayed for weeks, as it recently happened, for smaller items, when the estimates of the Postmaster General came up. For these reasons, I cannot vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax.

I have but a few comments to add in connection with the contracts awarded to European shipbuilders for the building of two cruisers. The hon. member for Halifax is wrong in blaming the government for not having these two cruisers built in this country. And this is the reason: The Canadian shipbuilders already own machinery which has been very costly to them. Now, to build cruisers, special equipment is necessary, and the ordinary machinery at the disposal of our ship yards is not sufficient for this work. The plates used in the building of cruisers are made of steel in which enters an alloy of chrome and nickel, an alloy so hard as to resist boring, cutting, heating and bending with the machinery at present in use in our ship yards. All our shipbuilders would have been forced to order beforehand entirely new machinery which would have been only used again about ten years hence when the government would have had to replace the cruisers that are being built at present.

To utilize with profit such equipment, it would be necessary for Canada to decide to build a navy. I feel sure that it is not the intention of the hon. member for Halifax to advise the government to take such a step. I entirely agree with the minister for not having asked our shipbuilders to make a further outlay of $1,000,000 or more so as to purchase and erect machinery which would have been utilized exclusively in the building of these two cruisers, the cost of which will not amount to $1,000,000.

If my hon. friend sincerely wishes to help the workmen of our shipbuilding yards, I think it would be better for him to withdraw his amendment and await a more favourable opportunity. I shall then be very pleased to vote with him in favour of any measure which will facilitate the minister in carrying out the promise which he has just made to the house, that is fostering in all possible way the industry of ship-building in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I have just one brief observation to make. The Minister of National Defence suggested that the government was taking a stand on this question, and that the question was very simple. The royal commission on fisheries decided by a majority of four to one against steam trawling, but the government decides in favour of it. What lead is that to the House of Commons with respect to commissions? Either the commission was composed of men who knew their business better than anyone else or it was a commission which should not have been appointed; it was either a commission of experts or it was not; the experts knew their business or they did not. If they knew their business, then four of them have recommended, in the language of the report, as follows:

> We believe that one of the remedies for the present situation is the total prohibition of steam-trawlers from operating from Canadian ports, landing their catch in Canadian ports, or obtaining in Canadian ports coal or supplies. And we recommended that such legislation be enacted as to make such prohibition effective on and after June 1st, 1929.

That commission cost this country $100,000, and that recommendation is made by four of the five commissioners. What lead is it to the House of Commons when the government comes along and says these four men do not know their business but that Mr. Justice Maclean, who is not a fisherman at present, says we must have the trawlers?

That is the real question before this committee. The government tried to divest itself of responsibility by appointing a royal commission. The Minister of Finance said the other day that this country is sick of being governed by commissions, although a few days previously he appointed a commission to deal with the salaries of technical men in Canada. The Minister of National Defence, confronted with the Duncan report, succeeds in having the government of the day appoint a commission on fisheries composed of five members, of which Mr. Justice Maclean was chairman, with four other members who were said to be gentlemen of wide experience, highly qualified by political and other associations to deal with this problem. Those four gentlemen were Cyrus Macmillan, H.R.L. Bill, Joseph Mombourquette and J. G. Robichaud. I am not in a position to place my knowledge against theirs and I ask my hon .friend from Lisgar, who asked a question a moment ago, whether he does not think that those four gentlemen, who were selected by the government which he supports, know more about this matter than we know.

What can I say to my constituents with respect to this matter; what can I say to the public of this country, when four gentlemen named by the government and selected, as I say, because of their wide knowledge, one of them being a college professor, say that steam trawlers should be abolished, while on the other hand a judge of the exchequer court says that action should not be taken? What is this committee to do? The majority is four to one, but now the Minister of National Defence, representing the province of Nova Scotia in the cabinet, says, "I am for Judge Maclean; I agree with him." I leave it to the members of the committee and the country whether or not they think that is giving a lead to public opinion in Canada.

Now I desire to ask the minister one other question. Is it not true that we have renewed the licenses of American fishing boats and that we allow them to enter our Canadian ports to coal, victual, outfit, and land their fish, by an order in council passed within the last three months? I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if that is not so?

Mr. CARDIN: Not on the Atlantic.

Mr. BENNETT: Only on the Pacific? There has been no renewal of the modus vivendi with respect to American fishing boats out of Gloucester?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Then it is clear that they cannot land their catch on the Atlantic?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Nor ice their ships?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Nor obtain supplies of any kind?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Formerly that was the case, but now that only applies to the Pacific?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: The fisheries on the Atlantic being pretty well cleaned up, now we are to continue this practice until they are wholly cleaned up on the Pacific. In other words, the halibut are to be entirely annihilated, as they have been partially annihilated already, and now that the great fisheries of the Atlantic are becoming exhausted we are to have the same principle applied to the Pacific.

When my hon. friend from Richmond-West Cape Breton and my hon. friend from Inverness are asked as to the position, all they can say, all I can say and all any other Canadian can say is that the government saw fit to select a commission of five members to consider this question, four of whom recommended a certain course of action. The fifth commissioner recommended another action, and the government has taken the opinion of the one commissioner in preference to that of the four. Now what are we to do? The government and the minister will tell us what we must do now. I do submit that this is but an evidence of what you get when you have a condition of this kind in a country like Canada; the sacrifice of principle for the purpose of maintaining power by groups scattered throughout the country. When the groups had been brought together a commission was appointed, and then when the commission made its report, the government did not accept it; the government said that one commissioner was right and the other four were wrong. The hon. minister says that this is but the beginning; it is but the beginning, but it is the beginning of the end of this government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. leader of the opposition is very optimistic.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not ready to take too seriously the observations made by the hon. leader of the opposition. I do not think that anyone has ever contended in this house or in the country that every report made by a commission must be implemented in its entirety by legislation. These reports are merely recommendations which must be studied and looked into by the government and by the officials of the department. I cannot bring to mind any particular instances, but when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and my friend the leader of the opposition was supporting that government, there were many reports made by commissions, which reports were not adopted in their entirety by the government of the day. I will admit that that is no justification, but it proves that the principle which has been advocated by the hon. leader of the opposition is not possible of application to every case. These commissions are bodies of investigation, that is all, and when my hon. friend says that the minister and the government have chosen between four commissioners and one commissioner, that is not exactly the case. This legislation is the recommendations of a committee of this house. The committee on marine and fisheries dealt with the report of the Atlantic fisheries commission; they dealt with the question of trawlers, and the bill embodies the conclusions arrived at by that committee. The government is merely following the recommendations of the majority of a committee of this house.

Mr. GEARY: The note on page 2 which indicates the purpose of section 7 reads as follows:

This section is necessary to carry out a recommendation of the committee.

As I understand it, the recommendation was to the effect that steam trawlers should be abolished.

Mr. CARDIN: The word "committee" refers to the committee on marine and fisheries.

Mr. GEARY: As I understand it, the committee recommended that all ships should be owned either by Canadians or by corporations the majority of whose shareholders were Canadians.

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. GEARY: Some committee made that recommendation.

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. GEARY: Then I am quite in error.

Mr. CARDIN: The clause in the bill expresses the conclusions of the committee on marine and fisheries.

Mr. GEARY: The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) referred to some report having been before the committee—

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: The minister was referring to the report of the Atlantic fisheries commission.

Mr. GEARY: —that all these ships should be owned by Canadians.

Mr. CARDIN: That referred to a bill which was first introduced in the house but which has been amended by the committee on marine asd fisheries.

Mr. QUINN: Mr. Chairman the remarks of the Minister of National Defence would tend to give the impression that I was opposed to the beam trawler, when the words of my amendment were not meant to convey that impression. To a certain extent I am in favour of the beam trawler, but the amendment which is now before the committee proposes certain limitations. The hon. leader of the opposition has pointed out that a commission was appointed for the purpose of investigating the condition of the fisheries in the maritime provinces. That commission consisted of three gentlemen who were actively engaged in the fishing industry, a college professor, and a judge of the exchequer court. The three gentlemen who were actively engaged in the fishing industry—

Mr. SHORT: And who were divided in their opinions before they heard the evidence.

Mr. QUINN: —along with the college professor, made a certain finding, but the fifth member of the commission, who occupies an independent position, presented a minority report. That royal commission made a report to this government and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that report should have been implemented by this government. But what did they do? Bill No. 26 is brought in, and that bill is discussed by the fisheries committee and a report presented to the house. We have the matter in three successive stages: a royal commission, consisting of supporters or friends of the government; the fisheries committee, which consists of a majority of representatives of the government; and then this committee of the house, which has a majority on the other side. I am not opposed to the beam trawlers because I believe that they are necessary to the fishing industry, but I am primarily in favour of the shore fisherman. He is entitled to every consideration from this government or any other government; he is entitled to every assistance in the way of protection of the industry by which he earns his livelihood. If the beam trawler is allowed to operate then I say that it should be the product of Canadian shipyards and be built by Canadian workmen.

It may take a little time to bring that result about, but in the interim the question as to whether or not the shore fishermen can produce sufficient fish to satisfy the Canadian market can be settled. If they cannot, then there is a justification for the beam trawler, and if the beam trawler is necessary, then it should be the product of Canadian shipyards and of Canadian workmen. The whole responsibility lies upon this government as to whether or not they satisfy the fishermen. If they do not make a success of that, it is their responsibility.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misapprehension in the mind of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Geary), and evidently there must be a misapprehension upon the record. The government appointed a commission and that commission brought in two reports, a majority and a minority report. The government did not evade any responsibility, but took the responsibility of drafting Bill No. 26, which provides that all trawling vessels should be Canadian owned and of Canadian register and, in the case of companies that a majority of shares should be bona fide Canadian owned. Because of the fact that there had been a majority and a minority report, and that there was a difference of opinion, the government felt that it was only fair to the members of the house to submit that bill to the fisheries committee. Let me remind the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn) that it is not so many years ago since he was standing up in the house and saying, "We will not have any commission, the real commission is the members of this house, elected by the people of this country." The government, having received from the commission a report which was not unanimous but which showed a difference of opinion, referred the matter to a subcommittee of the members of the house, of I think, twenty-six. That subcommittee, as I told the committee a few minutes ago, proposed to pass Bill No. 26, but to limit it for this year to the number of trawlers now operating. Then, when protests were received from those who were interested and who felt that this would create a monopoly among trawl owners who now had trawlers, the result was that when the amendment was considered by the committee itself, the committee struck out that provision and made the recommendation which is now before us and which is embodied in Bill No. 26. I think the course of the government has been fair, has been to assume and not to evade responsibility, and it has introduced a bill in accordance with the recommendation of the committee. My hon. friend says that there is a majority of government members on the committee. That is quite true; but my hon. friend, if he is a member of the committee, knows that not more than three out of the whole twenty-six voted against the recommendation that was embodied in the bill. Therefore it must have been approved pretty generally on the other side. In fact, this afternoon the support of the bill has not by any means been confined to one side of the house.

Mr. QUINN: It is non-political.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend does not seem to be trying to make it so. He says that it may take a little time to have these vessels Canadian built. I would point out to him that we have to be practical in connection with these matters. If it is going to take a little time, is it not the best course to pursue to give the governor in council power to make regulations, to lay down principles under which licenses may be granted and to consider the very proposal my hon. friend is making, as to whether or not a limitation of time cannot be imposed—my hon. friend does not suggest how long—after which period trawling vessels should be Canadian built? As I said a little while ago, the proposition was made before the fisheries committee that over and above the trawlers now operated, new trawlers should be Canadian built. There cannot be any better method to pursue than to afford an opportunity for the inclusion in the regulations of such a principle if it is considered practical, and if it is not practical, then as my hon. friend says, in the interim—and that is the word he used—the question whether or not this principle should obtain can be further investigated.

I do not agree with some of the hon. members who have spoken on the other side. They have said that trawlers are absolutely necessary; they lay that down as a basic principle. My opinion is that trawlers are necessary only if they are required to supply the excess demand after the shore fishermen have brought in their supply. That question may have to be and may be considered by the minister in connection with the granting of licenses. If my hon. friend from Halifax is looking at the matter from the practical point of view, this is the best way to bring about the possibility of putting into effect any such suggestion as he has made.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries not think that to place in the hands of the minister the power of determining the number of licenses he shall issue, is going contrary to the modern tendency? The Chief Justice of England has recently declared in very strong terms against bureaucracy, the bureaucracy that consists in orders in council being passed and government by order in council. Here we have a discretion given to a political minister—and all ministers are political; I am not referring to this minister more than others—a political appointeee, to determine who shall have a license and who shall not. Is that quite right? I think the minister will see where that leads—the pressure of his friends, the opposition of his opponents, and in the end the minister is placed in a position where his efforts will be destroyed. One has only to pick up the daily press to see what happens to men who fearlessly enforce the law; they lost their positions. I put it to the minister whether or not it is a fair thing, in view of what his colleague has said, namely, that this is an experiment, to place the success or failure of that effort in the hands of a minister who necessarily must exercise his power in favour of his political friends and against his political opponents, being in that respect like all other ministers as regards a matter of this kind? The effect of the pressure will be that this experiment, so-called, will be nothing more or less than political effort. Those of us who know the capacity of the Minister of National Defence in dealing with patronage in Nova Scotia know what the inevitable result will be.

Mr. CARDIN: I fully realize the difficult position in which the minister may be placed later on by the adoption of this legislation; but somebody has to decide; somebody has to be given the responsibility of deciding a matter of this kind. I think it is for the government to assume the responsibility when they are placed in a position to exercise their judgment. I can assure my hon. friend that the regulations which are provided by that section governing the issuances of licenses to the trawlers, are not going to be drafted without giving the proper consideration and without looking beforehand for advice from all parties concerned in the fishing business. I do not propose to recommend to the governor in council any regulations without having first obtained the advice of and given full opportunity to all those who are interested in the business of fishing to express their views as to the form of these regulations and as regards the power that the minister is given, according to that section, of issuing or refusing licenses. So far as I and the government are concerned, we are not looking towards increasing the number of licenses to trawlers; we are rather looking towards a reduction in the number of those licenses. But we thought it would be an injustice, unfair, practically to confiscate the trawlers which have so far been operating. Unless very grave circumstances arise or reasons are given, no further licenses are going to be issued for trawlers. I quite realize this is going to be a hard job, but may I say to my hon. friend with the short experience I have had in that department and in that branch of the service, with the very limited knowledge I may have of that business and the limited knowledge that previous ministers may have had with regard to these technical matters, it is no small affair to administer the fisheries of this country. As my hon. friend has mentioned, representations of all sorts are coming to the minister on every question which is put to him. We have the representations of the dealers on one side and the fishermen on the other, and we have to give consideration to the general good of both enterprises and to protect with greater care the interest of the fishermen. This is not a small job and it is not going to be a small job for the minister, but for the short period of time I shall be in that position, I am going to take the chance and I can assure my hon. friend that nobody need be afraid of political interference or of any injustice resulting from the influence of one party or another.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has seen fit to throw out an insinuation which I think was hardly worthy of him.

Mr. BENNETT: I intended to make it a plain statement, not an insinuation at all

Mr. RALSTON: I would welcome an opportunity for discussing the matter of patronage in Nova Scotia and, indeed, elsewhere in Canada, a little nearer home to my hon. friend than Nova Scotia. If I had followed the example of his political friends in Nova Scotia, there might be some reason for complaint. But I endeavoured to deal with these matters on the broad basis of the best interests of the country. If my hon. friend has any particular instance in mind, he is quite at liberty to bring it up. I am not going to weary the committee this afternoon, but during the last two or three years there have occurred in connection with political patronage on the part of the provincial administration, friends of my hon. friends, certain matters which might well afford an excuse for my friends to feel, as indeed they do feel and have so expressed themselves very often, that I do not deal with these matters as aggressively as they would like.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no Civil Service Act there.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no Civil Service Act there, my hon. friend says. That is the excuse that is given; there is no Civil Service Act there. My hon. friend mentioned the other day men who had a contract with the government, and who would be entitled to be paid for life even though they had their contract ended at the age of seventy-five years, but there were men in Nova Scotia who had the same sort of contract with the government and were appointed to hold office during good behaviour, who suddenly found that an act had been passed by the present provincial government changing their tenure to holding office during pleasure, and they were immediately dismissed without cause or investigation. That is the sort of thing we have had in Nova Scotia, and that is the sort of thing I have had to meet in connection with the administration of public affairs there. I want to tell my hon. friend that I would be perfectly happy if he would bring up any case he desires with regard to the administration of patronage or of public business in that province, where he thinks there has been political interference.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Garrison's case will be here presently.

Mr. RALSTON: I shall be very happy now to deal with his case. All I know of it is what I have seen in the newspapers.

Mr. BENNETT: Then my hon. friend is much belied because Mr. Garrison said that there was a telegram sent by the minister.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend picks up anything that happens to be told him and retails it from his prominent place in this house as being the truth. That is an absolute mis-statement. My hon. friend does not know it, but he ought to take a litttle more care to investigate before he makes such statements because he occupies a position of considerable responsibility in this house and in this country, and it is not befitting his office or befitting himself to make these statements without at least some attempt at investigation.

So far as this bill is concerned, my hon. friend may be assured that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have all my best endeavours and cooperation in seeing to it that no political considerations enter into it whatever, but that when licenses are granted, they shall be granted on some fixed principle which applies to everybody and has regard to the best interests of the industry and of the men and women who are engaged in it.

Mr. BENNETT: I say that there is nothing too small for the minister to interfere with in Nova Scotia. I say that deliberately, and if you want evidence of it we had it this session when at the public accounts committee he as a minister of the crown sat in that committee and watched its proceedings to protect MacMillan. We have further evidence—this is not the time and place, but the evidence will be brought forward before this house prorogues—in connection with the case of MacMillan, who is the political henchman of the Minister of National Defence, and is well known so to be. The minister's assumption of virtue in matters political is belied by the record, and I say that the people of Nova Scotia know it and they understand it and that is the reason he usually sits for one constituency for one term only and no more.

With respect to this particular matter, a large measure of power, life or death with respect to property is vested in the minister. The minister says what is perfectly true, that political pressure is exercised with respect to these matters. We have had evidence of it in this house within the last two weeks. In the one case when a minister was asked by one of his employees for an investigation, he referred it to his colleague whose signature had dispossessed that man of his position. Naturally, every government must play the game in that way. A minister must support his colleague, and when his colleague takes responsibility, he in turn must support his colleague's view, and that was what was done when the situation arose as it did the other day, and the man failed to obtain an investigation because the minister affected said no.

When the Lord Chief Justice of England was directing attention the other day to these bureaucracies, he pointed out that legislation in parliament in recent years has taken the form of skeleton acts, leaving to the governor or king in council or to a department great powers, and that that was disastrous to democracy and the effect of it was ruinous. Political pressure is invoked, and the result is that a man to save his property must agree to support the administration of the day. That is what happens, and you see men who are Conservative to-day suddenly voting Liberal to-morrow and vice versa, because the government of the day makes it impossible for them to continue to support a party that is opposed to the government if they want to get what they desire and require. It is not a case at all of this one particular instance, for this is but one of many, and when I point out the fact it is merely something that every man may see for himself if he studies conditions in this country, Regulations are passed, and these regulations permit the very thing that in my judgment must be stopped if we are going to preserve the democratic principles of the institutions that we are living under. To say that a man must support a government or he will not get what he wants is but a manifestation of a principle which is very, very destructive to our institutions.

Then there is patronage. The Minister of National Defence says that patronage in Nova Scotia arises because of the fact that there is a government in power in that province that does not support this government; that the provincial government exercises patronage against this government's supporters, and he is therefore pressed to do it as against Conservatives in the federal field. I pointed out that there is no Civil Service Act in that province. The minister says there is a provision in the Civil Service Act that if a man engages in political activities he loses his position. That provision is in the act, but the minister does not for a moment think that there is any difference in political parties with respect to this question of patronage. The pressure is the same whether it is a Conservative or a Liberal government. But what we are endeavouring to do is to remove the possibility of that pressure being exercised, and I say that it is improper for such a wide power to be left to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of National Defence, from Nova Scotia, says that he will do what he can, but when his friends insist on a certain thing being done, you will have exactly the situation that we have had many evidences of. Remember, we are not dealing with generalities. We had a great commission that sat here, and we saw the very great pressure that was exercised—members of parliament, ministers, pressure of that kind—and it will continue so long as you afford the means. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is only human, and when he is told that John Smith is out actively working against him and wants a trawler's license, he will see that he does not get that license because the Minister of National Revenue says that he must not have that license and carry on propaganda against the government as he is doing.

Mr. EULER: Not the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not referring to him because he has nothing to do with trawlers. I should have said the Minister of National Defence. That is but human nature. When a general election is on, governments are seeking support from all quarters. It is only human for them to do what they can to secure support from every quarter they can, and all this country's history, royal commissions and otherwise, whether you go back to the early days of 1878 or come down to 1926, show that the evidence is all the same. I admit that public opinion is not very active about it. In support of that all you have to do is to take the report of the customs committee of this house, which was adopted by this house by a majority of ten, and which placed condemnation upon the Prime Minister by name. But what was the result? It did not affect the people—not in the least, although this house by a majority of ten had adopted that report. It may well be that what we are doing is putting public opinion to sleep by opiates and other means—drugging them with large estimates, with favouritism in the distribution of public moneys, by making ports here and harbours there, by dredging rivers, by rebates on salt and coal, buying aviation field sites, and matters of that kind. But there always comes a day of reckoning. It may not come in my day.

It is unfair to ask a minister who is human, who is anxious to get support for his party, who is one of the most active and successful securers of support, if I may use that word, of any minister in this house or of any that have been here for a generation—he secures the support of friends and they tie themselves to him with bands of steel—it is unfair, I say, to ask him to put himself in that position. I am against such bureaucracy and against the exercise of these powers, which have done great injury to Canada and to other countries. It is no good to point out what our friends did or did not do. We make no progress in that way; it does not get us anywhere. If that had been the guide by which governments were to determine their action there would never have been a change from the rotten boroughs of England; there would have been no electoral reform, no passing of bills for the amelioration of the condition of individuals. But we are trying to go forward, and we cannot go forward if we put that power in the hands of a minister under these conditions, with his political friends clamouring for the exercise of power.

With respect to the instance mentioned, the Minister of National Defence says that he is entirely guiltless, that Garrison had no authority for making the statement he did. I accept his word with respect to it. He says that I should make inquiries. All I know is this. Mr. Garrison occupies a very important place with respect to the Liberal party in the city of Halifax, and on the occasion referred to the evidence indicates that he went to the customs authorities, accompanied by the representative of the Minister of Labour, a fair wage officer. He then made the statement to which I have referred, that he, the man charged, had received a telegram that morning from Colonel Ralston by which he was being recalled. That is as far as I know. The minister says, "You should make further investigation." Well, I made reasonable investigation. One cannot investigate anything more fully than can the government, and if the minister says he sent no telegram, I accept his word.

Mr. RALSTON: Why not ask the man?

Mr. BENNETT: He was asked, and he said a telegram had been sent.

Mr. RALSTON: The man?

Mr. BENNETT: No, Garrison.

Mr. RALSTON: Why not ask the man whom Garrison was addressing to ascertain whether he got the telegram?

Mr. BENNETT: The same record shows that he says he did not.

Mr. RALSTON: Then why does my hon. friend suggest that I did send a telegram when the man to whom it is alleged to have been sent says he did not receive it?

Mr. BENNETT: No. The suggestion is that the minister is exercising his power of patronage in Nova Scotia, as every minister has to do, and that one of his henchmen in Nova Scotia, Mr. Garrison, is so sure of his position that he makes those statements.

Mr. RALSTON: Why did not my hon. friend inquire and find out if they are true?

Mr. BENNETT: Because Garrison is relying on such enormous power that he is in a position to say the minister will do this if he has not done it.

Mr. RALSTON: It is purely imagination.

Mr. BENNETT: On his part, not on mine at all. There is MacMillan's record. Why does the minister spend his time in the public accounts committee?

Mr. RALSTON: I can tell my hon. friend if he will give me an opportunity.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well.

Mr. RALSTON: In the public accounts committee there were no less than three privy councillors representing the opposition. The only two members of the government who were on the committee were the Solicitor General and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was engaged in the agriculture committee, and the Solicitor General was away. As the only privy councillor available I was asked to represent the government. Why did three privy councillors on the other side take such an active part in the investigation?

Mr. BENNETT: They were allotted to the committee when it was struck. They had nothing to do with that, I understand.

Mr. RALSTON: I am not finding any fault with them, but I say surely the government might be allowed to have one privy councillor present.

Mr. BENNETT: The government have a majority at all times.

Mr. RALSTON: I am talking of members of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought my hon. friend meant the government. Who were the two or three privy councillors on this side?

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member for Fort William, the hon. member for East Toronto and the late hon. member for Frontenac-Addington.

Mr. BENNETT: The latter was there part of the time; he was not there during the concluding discussions. The record indicates what the purpose and intention of the government was in respect to it. Why should the government desire in any way to impede the investigation of MacMillan's accounts?

Mr. McMILLAN: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Are we dealing with the fisheries bill, or are we throwing slurs against each other across the floor of the house?

Mr. BENNETT: I wish to assure my hon. friend that the MacMillan I referred to was not the hon. gentleman for South Huron.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): A large American fish corporation has taken over two or three Nova Scotia fish corporations. If that corporation has not sufficient trawlers for its Canadian needs, is it the intention of the government under this legislation to grant it a license for American trawlers? To-day that concern is in a position to bring over the trawlers that it owns on the American side.

Mr. CARDIN: No, it is not our intention to issue licenses for the purpose.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): It can be done very easily under this legislation.

Mr. SHORT: It could not be done; they would have to be of Canadian registry.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): It all depends on the minister. There is nothing in the legislation to prevent it.

An hon. MEMBER: Subsection 2.

Amendment negatived on division.

Section agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 81, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend asks me to explain the bill. I would have thought this would be rather unnecessary, because it is absolutely similar to the bill which has passed this house three or four times only to meet an unfortunate fate in another place. This house is committed to the bill after having adopted it, as I have said, three or four times.

There is perhaps much misapprehension as to the effect of the bill. It is far from having the effect of wiping out the crime of sedition from the criminal code. Its purpose is to replace the law as it was prior to the session of 1919. The crime of sedition existed then and will still be in the criminal code after this bill has become law. Under the present section 132 of the criminal code the crime of sedition is divided into seditious words, which are words expressive of a seditious intention; seditious libel, which is a libel expressive of a seditious intention; and, thirdly, seditious conspiracy, which is an agreement between two or more persons to carry into execution a seditious intention. As the house will observe, the seditious intention plays an important part in the crime of sedition, whether this crime consist in words, writing or conspiracy. The crime of sedition under the British law is a crime under the common law, and it has never been found advisable to define exactly what circumstances and what facts constitute sedition; this has been left to the courts, judges and juries. There was a disposition in the English draft bill to fix a definition, but it was found better not to do so; and here in Canada our criminal code, as originally drawn and introduced into parliament, contained a clause defining a seditious intention. But after much debate in the Canadian parliament it was deemed advisable not to try to have a restrictive definition but to leave the offence of sedition as it was under the common law. And of course the meaning is very general. As has been stated, sedition embraces everything, whether by word, deed or writing, which is calculated to disturb the tranquility of the state. It was so general in its meaning, as first introduced, that parliament found it advisable to place in the code a section safeguarding freedom of speech. That section, which appeared in the criminal code until 1919, and which we are asking now to reinstate, is rather the most important part of this bill. Section 133 of the criminal code as it was in force before 1919, and which section 2 of this bill is intended to reinstate, reads:

No one shall be deemed to have a seditious intention only because he intends in good faith,—

"(a) to show that His Majesty has been misled or mistaken in his measures; or,

(b) to point out errors or defects in the government or constitution of the United Kingdom, or of any part of it, or of Canada or any province thereof, or in either house of parliament of the United Kingdom or of Canada, or in any legislature, or in the administration of justice; or to excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure, by lawful means, the alteration of any matter in the state; or,

(c) to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of hatred and ill-will between different classes of His Majesty's subjects."

I freely confess that I am at a loss to understand why this section was repealed in 1919. Surely nothing therein described could be an offence; the citizens of a country have the right to criticize measures of the government, and to try to show to the people of that country that the sovereign has been misled by his officers, or something to that effect. This safeguard we wish to reinstate in our criminal code.

The second purpose is to repeal the sections which are now consolidated in section 98 of the present criminal code and which were enacted at the same session in 1919, purporting to define certain acts, words or publications as being seditious. As I stated before, these are absolutely unnecessary because the offence of sedition as it exists under the common law, and as it is already in the criminal code, embraces all the things which might have been mentioned in that section. It did not improve the law; far from it. On the other hand, it has been strongly resented and found objectionable by a large section of the citizens of Canada. As a matter of fact, since I have been a member of the government it has been my privilege to attend every delegation which has met the government each year from the Trades and Labour Council, from the railroad brotherhoods and from other labour organizations, who have all represented to the government their strong resentment of this change in the criminal code. Indeed, they have called attention to the fact that the word "force" as used in that section has been interpreted by certain gentlemen as being applicable to a sympathetic strike. It has been argued that a sympathetic strike constitutes a kind of force, and organized labour, rightly or wrongly, believe that that section as it stands may be used as a means of putting obstacles in their way and denying them the right to strike when they deem it wise to do so. It has been represented to us that organized labour at times cannot find halls for their meetings because the owners are afraid that by renting the hall to such labour associations they may come under the provisions of this section. I may remark that it is rather extraordinary to give to the commissioner of mounted police, who after all is a police officer, the right without warrant to authorize his men to go and take hold of property, either real or personal, on mere suspicion. This, it seems to me, is an extraordinary provision which one cannot find in the code of any other country. I repeat that the law as it was, and as we want to reinstate it, is sufficiently strong to punish the crime of sedition in whatever manner it may be committed.

There is another misapprehension I would like to correct; far from this being done at the instance of or to please the communists, I may say that if I thought this amendment would have the effect of helping them I certainly would not be fathering this bill, but this change is requested not by the disorderly elements in the country but by organized labour, by the men who have been helpful in maintaining peace and order in our industrial relations, and that is why I am introducing the amendment.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I have only one observation to make. The legislation in question has been on the statute books of this country for ten years, and during that time no prosecution has been entered under it. Therefore it has adversely affected no interest, nor has it done harm to any person. We are now asked to repeal it because, in my judgment, there has been a great misapprehension on the part of organized labour as to what it really meant. In essence it is merely an effort to preserve the life of the state by making more definite and clear the conditions under which men may carry on propaganda of whatever kind they may desire to spread. There is no limitation or restriction placed upon legitimate propaganda; there is no restriction upon those who desire to criticize our institutions or to support by peaceful means any change in the conditions under which they live, but the section was drawn for the purpose of meeting a condition which was very real, not only in this country but in others, a condition which we hope has disappeared but which may recur. The essential subsection is as follows:

> Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada, by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association.

Then follow subsections dealing with other phases of the same matter. It will be observed, therefore, that there is no limitation placed upon peaceful associations, upon propaganda, or upon any effort within reasonable limits to bring about needed changes in the body politic, but it does aim to prevent these unlawful associations from disseminating the doctrine of force in connection with our changes in our constitution or institutions, and I say it is helpful to have upon the statute books of this country laws which will protect us from that form of propaganda.

As ten years have passed without any charges being brought under this section it may be taken that the deterrent effect has prevented such propaganda. I recall reading in the newspapers during the last few years reports of gentlemen making speeches and saying, "Of course, we do not advocate that these changes should be brought about by physical force." I have no doubt that the reason for those statements was this section of the criminal code, and to that extent it has been useful; it has prevented the extremist from carrying on the operations which he might have carried on, and no injustice has been worked to any person. So it cannot be said that it has curbed reasonable criticism, lessened freedom of speech or in any sense deprived peaceful citizens of any rights which they should enjoy with regard to the carrying on of any reasonable propaganda having for its purpose the persuasion of other people to think as they think. For that reason I say this is not the time when there should be a change of this kind, especially in view of conditions which have been brought to our attention since this house met, conditions which we know and which the minister knows from reports made to him from time to time are not wholly absent from this Dominion but which we hope will become less as the days go by and men realize that no good purpose is to be served by an effort to subvert the laws of the state or reach their ends by other than peaceful means.

If I thought any good purpose could be served by repealing this section of the act I would support this action, but since no harm has been done by this section, no good will be done by its repeal. No useful end will be served by making it possible for those so disposed to carry on their propaganda in a more reckless manner, with less hesitation in the expression of their ideas as to the means necessary to attain their ends.

That is the only observation I have to make with respect to this legislation. If there were any limitation as to the power of expression by the humblest citizen of this Dominion as to the desirability of effecting changes in any industrial activity or in the government of the day, certainly I would not support any such limitation, but as this section aims to prevent the application of force to attain that end, it serves a useful purpose as a deterrent, and it should not be repealed.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Unlawful associations.

Mr. CAHAN: With regard to this bill I might say that I personally made an intensive study of the common law as it stood in 1918. I was then associated with the Department of Justice, and we found it impossible to secure convictions under the law as it then stood against those who were actively advocating the use of force to overturn the existing governmental institutions of this country. If this section is repealed I say with considerable confidence that those who desire to advocate force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic changes, within Canada, will have a great deal more freedom to do so. Those who advocate force, violence or physical injury for the purpose of bringing about governmental or constitutional reforms in this country should be amenable to the criminal law of Canada, because they are really the people who become responsible for the use of force for such purposes, by advocating it and inciting others to commit acts of violence for that purpose. Personally I am against the complete repeal of the present section 98, although possibly it might well be modified in some particulars.

While I am on my feet I might refer to section 133a. I do not see any objection to adding this section to the present criminal law of the country. I think we are all agreed that the matters dealt with in these several clauses should not be deemed to indicate a seditious intent, but personally I think that a complete repeal of section 98 is not in the best interests of this Dominion. I have no animosity or feeling of hostility to the labour movement in any way, shape or form, but if we are to preserve in times of crisis the institutions of this country, it must be made a crime to advocate the overthrow of those institutions by force in a democratic country such as this where complete liberty of moral suasion is permitted and upheld.

Mr. WARD: Has there been, at any time during Canada's history, an attempt on the part of any organization to overthrow any constituted form of government?

Mr. CAHAN: For a short time I was associated with the Department of Justice with the nominal title of director of public safety, and I came in touch with scores of such cases. If the records of the department have been preserved it will be seen that there were many such cases.

Mr. WARD. What kind of government were they trying to overthrow?

Mr. CAHAN: They were trying to overthrow the form of government which we have in Canada to-day, no doubt about it.

Mr. WARD: Civic, provincial or federal?

Mr. CAHAN: Civic, provincial and federal. There came to my attention evidence of foreign funds which had been supplied to a very considerable extent during the last years of the war; foreign agents and aliens, who were resident outside of this country, governmental and otherwise, were sending funds into this country to establish printing presses from one end of the country to the other, for the issuance of propaganda inciting to force, and in saying that I speak from personal knowledge. There were very few prosecutions during that time, but I communicated with some of the leaders of those movements and asked them to come to Ottawa, and I told them in a most emphatic manner that unless they desisted from those methods they would have to be met with more severe enactments than were then upon the statute books of the country. Those who were propagating that incitation to violence were men who had come to this country from foreign countries provided with foreign funds to be used for such purposes.

Mr. WARD: Has the hon. member ever seen any evidence of success on the part of those so-called foreign organizations?

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Seditious words, punishment.

Mr. BENNETT: In many cases it is within the discretion of a judge to impose a very severe penalty and it has been found that that option serves a very useful purpose, and I cannot understand why a reduction has been made from twenty years to two years.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is for the purpose of making the law as it was in 1919; two years was the penalty at that time.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have been asked by several members when they could receive their indemnity. I have given the necessary instructions to the accountant and hon. members may begin to-morrow to draw their indemnity cheques.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—FISH TRAPS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA WATERS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss a matter of some importance to British Columbia as a whole and of very great importance particularly to a number of people in that province. It is a matter that I intended to bring up on the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin), and I have sat here patiently, or with such measure of patience as one can command at this season of the year, for three whole days from eleven o'clock in the morning to eleven o'clock at night, for the appropriate item to be brought up. But there has been so much delay and so many interruptions that I may not be here when it comes up. Of course the matter can be discussed in committee when and if we do reach that stage eventually. I understand, speaking at this particular juncture, that I am entitled to speak for more than forty minutes and this would be my opportunity to get back at the advocates of the forty-minute rule and speak for a couple of days. But I want the support of the house generally and of the government and I understand this course would not meet with the approval of hon. members. Therefore, if I can get the attention of the house for thirty or forty minutes, I think I can confine my remarks to that time.

The matter to which I wish to refer concerns fish trap licenses for salmon in British Columbia. Some months ago the government appointed a commission to ascertain whether it would be in the public interest to allow the use of salmon traps in the northern part of British Columbia adjacent to the boundary line between British Columbia and Alaska. The commissioner has reported and I have his report under my hand. To put the matter briefly, he recommends the use of fish traps. I want to give a number of reasons why the report of that commissioner should not be accepted.

The essential objection is that the use of fish traps will eliminate the working fishermen of British Columbia. Last year 14,000 fishing licenses were issued in that province. It is well known that a man does not live to himself alone; it has been calculated that a working miner, between his own dependents and those who make their living out of his wages, supports seven or eight persons. If, therefore, those 14,000 license holders were put out of business, something like 100,000 people would be involved. I do not suggest that that would be the immediate result if the trap licenses were granted in this particular area to-day or this year; because probably there would be only fifteen or twenty traps and it might not affect more than a couple of thousand or twenty-five hundred men. But as surely as day follows dark, if the principle is once granted there it must inevitably be accepted elsewhere in British Columbia and this will lead to the ultimate elimination of those fishermen and of those dependents upon them.

I should like to begin a little back in the history of this matter. Between 1919 and 1925 there were no traps in this area, that is the northern British Columbia area, No. 2. Early in 1925 rumours got around that traps were going to be allowed once more in that area, and the then member for the district—that is, Skeena, Mr. Stork—came to Ottawa and secured from the government a promise that no traps would be allowed in that area. Later in 1925, along about May, a fish company began to build a trap. I may explain that the name of that fish company was The New England Fish Company, a very powerful United States concern, having quarters in Seattle, Boston and, I think, New York. It is purely a United States concern. It operates in British Columbia, of course under an appropriate Canadian subsidiary with a nice Canadian name. When I use the words "this company" referring to the company, I do not confine myself entirely to them. While they are the primary movers; while they are the men who built the traps in 1925 and who are to-day asking for the renewal of their license to use them, there is not the slightest doubt—indeed, it was brought out in evidence before the commissioner—that if they got the traps, the other cannery owners would be compelled to do the same thing. Therefore it is really the canning industry that is asking for the traps as well as this particular company. But on this occasion, namely, along about May, 1925, this fish company began to build a trap; they demanded a license, and they were refused in consequence of the arrangement arrived at between the government and Mr. Stork some months before. It was then found that Mr. Johnston, the then Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, had given those people a letter some months before informing them that they could get all the traps they wanted. That letter, apparently, was not known of at the time, but later on the company of course produced it. The situation was then that they had invested a great deal of money in this trap and they had this letter from a recognized official of the government saying that they would get the license. The government was compelled to yield, on that occasion, stating that they would get a license for 1925, but it was given on the distinct condition that that year would end the license; that they would get no more after the year 1925. That brings us up to the end of 1925.

In 1926 the company, like everybody else in similar circumstances, came back again wanting the license renewed and talked about vested interests and so forth. They were refused flatly and definitely by the then Liberal government, practically the same as the government of to-day. So we have on record at that time a definite stand taken by the Liberal government of the day that they would grant no more trap licenses in that area. That occurred along about May 1926. In July, 1926, the Conservative party came into power and they promptly granted the licenses. Then the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, leader of the Conservative party, went out on a campaign, and when he reached Prince Rupert he found the local feeling so acute—the situation was explained to him just as I am trying to explain it now—that he immediately gave instructions cancelling the licenses and on the 18th August they were cancelled. That was a much more drastic step for him to take than the one that had previously been taken by the Liberal party when they were in power, because the Liberals merely said: You must not go on and build the trap; but in the case of the Conservatives they cancelled the license in the very middle of the season, after the trap had been completed, equipped and was actually in operation. I well remember the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen holding a big meeting in my district at a place called Royston and announcing this cancellation, and the gratification with which our fishermen received the news that this shadow that had been over us for so many years would now be removed. So we have the position that both political parties were absolutely pledged and had taken action in fulfilment of that pledge, against fish traps in British Columbia.

After the election The New England Fish Company comes along and demands a renewal of their license for the next year. There are rumours that the company possesses a letter written by the Hon. Mr. Patenaude, then Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the Conservative government, to the effect that if they would keep quiet during the election their licenses would be restored after the election. Until I see it I prefer not to believe that there is such a letter. It would be a reflection on the sincerity of the then minister, and until it is produced I would much prefer to have grave doubts as to its ever having been written. But suppose the worst, that it was written. That in no way binds the present government. They could in no way be a party to it, and they had definitely committed themselves to the policy of no traps in that area.

I now come to the commission granted by the government. I am candid to say that I think the government made an error in granting that commission. They should have taken the position that the matter was closed and that in view of past circumstances, it could not be reopened. However, they granted the commission. The next mistake they made I think was in granting a commission of one man. A good deal of local feeling prevails there, and it certainly would have been much better in a case of this kind to have three men, one of whom, if not two, should have been totally removed from that district and with no possible affiliations or pre-formed opinions on the matter. However, I am glad to say that the commissioner was a man of repute, and I have no doubt that he did his best in the limited time he gave to it.

I wish to explain briefly the question of fish traps and what fish traps mean. It is admitted by everybody that they are the most destructive weapon by which you can destroy fish. The cannery men say that they are the most effective; that is true. The fishermen and government officials say that they are the most destructive, and that is equally true. Very few of the members of this house know what a fish trap or a gill net is, and it would take too long to go into detail, but I can give an illustration that must come home to nearly everybody here. Very few members, I suppose, have not at some time gone out duck or deer shooting. There is the same relation between a fish trap and a gill net as there is between a machine gun and an ordinary shot gun or rifle.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The illustration is hardly a good one.

Mr. NEILL: It is absolutely correct.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend would have a lot of trouble shooting ducks with a machine gun. If he used a machine gun shot gun, it might be all right.

Mr. NEILL: There is a pump gun which operates the same way as a machine gun. As long as you keep your finger on the trigger it fires, and its use has been forbidden in British Columbia.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am afraid my hon. friend is not thinking of the ordinary pump gun but of the automatic gun, which is prohibited by law. There was an automatic shot gun produced, but its use was prohibited.

Mr. NEILL: Possibly "automatic" is the word that I should have used instead of pump gun, but the principle is the same. If you go out shooting and use an automatic instead of an ordinary gun you can imagine the slaughter, anyone who was seeking to kill, regardless of consequences so far as game preservation is concerned, would readily say that it was the best weapon he could have because it is the most destructive. We know what would inevitably happen in a very short time if it were used by many people.

It may be said, and it has been said, that they have traps in Alaska. So they have, in large numbers; and what has been the result? The almost total annihilation of the salmon industry. The conditions were such that a commissioner, Mr. O'Malley, a very capable administrator, was appointed with wide powers to do exactly what he liked. He was an autocrat. All he was required to do was to restore the fisheries of Alaska to some semblance of their old state. The first thing that he did was to turn his attention to traps. The cannery men saw it coming, and they got together and presented a nice little plan to him by which they would voluntarily cut down their traps. There was some dispute among them as to just which traps should be cut down, and the commissioner said, "I can settle this quite easily. I will cut them all out," and in that particular year he cut them practically all out in one particular district. I have not the details, but in southeastern Alaska, the worst district in regard to being over-fished, he cut out I think over 100 traps, and he is going to do away with more next year. According to the Pacific Fisherman, an American publication, he is going to extend that principle to four other areas, which are the remaining areas in which trap fishing is permitted. He intends to cut out ninety-five in that area and reduce the size of the traps, and in another area he is going to cut out seventeen. He is going in very heavily for the reduction of traps, in some areas cutting them out almost entirely and in others reducing them extensively, because of the destructive, almost annihilative effects of trap fishing.

In British Columbia we do not need any more destructive weapons to take our fish; we have too many already. The catch is getting bigger every year, not by the increase of fish, but by more intensive fishing, and we certainly do not want to increase our weapons for fishing; on the contrary we find it necessary to restrict them.

The purse seine is very little better in its destructive operations than the trap, but still it is not quite so bad, and we have formed a large number of areas—last year eighteen were added—in which no person may use a purse seine, the waters being reserved entirely for gill net fishing and trolling, which give the fish a much better chance to get away. In addition to that, we have a regularly weekly close season of forty-eight hours. We have a further system of restriction which is known as the progressive weekly close season. The chief inspector sizes up a certain area and says from his experience, "I think the number of gill nets that that area could properly stand with a proper escapement of fish would be, say, fifty gill nets, or so many seines." He says, "If fifty gill nets are put in that area the weekly close season will be forty-eight hours, but if fifty-five are put in the weekly close season will be sixty hours." He goes on in that progression, so that if one hundred gill nets are put in, the weekly close season would be seventy-two hours or more, and he is prepared to carry on that progression until, a certain number of gill nets being used there would be only one day's fishing a week, which would be entirely unprofitable to those doing it. That is what we are doing now without any fish traps. We certainly do not need to add to our already overstocked weapons of fishing what is admittedly the most destructive method known to the human mind for catching fish.

To give you an idea of what people there think about this matter, let me read a wire that I have received from the chairman of a meeting that was held at Prince Rupert:

Be it resolved that we the citizens of Prince Rupert assembled in public meeting and representing all occupations and walks of life are strongly opposing permission being granted to operate any salmon fish traps anywhere in the northern British Columbia salmon fishing district No. 2 on the ground that salmon traps, if permitted to operate will endanger livelihood of large portion of British Columbia's population. Letter follows.

In addition to that, I have a petition here that I am presenting to the minister privately because, not being correctly worded, it cannot be presented formally to the house. It reads as follows:

To the Minister of Fisheries of the government of The Hon. Mackenzie King,
Ottawa, Canada.

We, the undersigned citizens of British Columbia, do hereby petition your department to prohibit all fish traps in British Columbia and also prohibit all seining of salmon between Chatham Point light and Victoria, British Columbia, taking in all waters in the gulf of Georgia and inlets leading into same.

The object being to put a stop to the wholesale destruction of young salmon by these methods of fishing. All of the adult salmon can be taken by gill nets and spoons without the slaughtering of the immature.

The above mentioned area is a natural feeding ground for all species of young salmon for the first period of their lives.

Hon. members will notice that it goes even further than asking for the abolition of traps alone. That is signed by something like eleven hundred people. The man who sends it to me says he is forwarding by a future mail two or three more petitions much more fully signed.

Now we come to the report—such as it is. I want to say that if the government paid more than a dollar and six bits for the report then the people of Canada are stung to the extent it exceeds that sum; it is not worth any more than that. It consists of twenty pages. I have not time to deal with it all; I do not need to. I will deal with the recommendations. I will quote two or three of them and show how those recommendations not only contradict each other, but contradict other portions of the report. A great deal of the report consists of commonplaces, which to people familiar with the fishing industry and the conditions there might almost be termed platitudes. It does show that at least the commissioner has failed to grasp the real genesis of the situation out there. He makes five recommendations. There is really only one; the rest of them are reasons for that recommendation or padding. This is the first one:

That traps for the catching of salmon to a limited number be permitted or allowed in the following described area:—

Then he gives the area by its geographical description, which I need not repeat. It will be noticed he says, "that traps for the catching of salmon to a limited number be permitted —'.' That is, not the traps are to be limited; oh no; but "traps for the catching of salmon to a limited number".

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How under heaven could they limit the number of fish caught in the traps?

Mr. NEILL: There is a close season, but any limitation would have to be applied to all kinds of gear, and that will work a hardship to others engaged in the industry, as I shall point out later on. It is a wide word, "limited."

Now, the commissioner gives reasons. And I want to be fair. I am not trying to make out a case in the absence of the author of this document, so I am going to quote all his reasons. He says:

Canadian traps in the area above referred to will not appreciably curtail fishing by other gear.

Let me deal with that. I say most emphatically it will and it must curtail fishing by other gear. There are two ways by which curtailment will be brought about. First, nearly all these seines are either owned directly by the cannery, which operates a paid crew, or financed by the cannery, which equips the fishermen on a percentage basis. No cannery is going to put seines into the water or finance fishermen if it can get traps, because traps are cheaper and more convenient for the cannery; just as it is obvious that a man out to make a killing among ducks or deer regardless of consequences would not use an ordinary gun if he were allowed an automatic. I would refer to the evidence in which a man came forward and said he had gone to some cannery and asked for a boat and net. That is the usual practice, the cannery supplying the boat and net on a percentage basis. But the manager refused the man's request, stating they did not care about gill netters now as they had traps. He gave this as an instance of the viewpoint of the companies—and a very natural one indeed. Why should they bother about outfitting men with gill nets and purse seines when they can have a number of traps? That shows it would curtail the employment of these other fishermen, because they would not themselves be able to buy gill nets or purse seines, and no company would be anxious to give them the necessary financial backing. The second reason why it would curtail the other gear is this. We are now restricting the areas. We are searching about to restrict the number of fish now being taken. We are cutting down the fishing sometimes to four days a week. Two years ago it was necessary in the middle of the fishing season to put on a close season of two weeks. The canneries and the fishermen were in the midst of their operations, they had to cease work and leave all their equipment idle. This involved a disastrous expense. It was found necessary two years ago—and I believe it was justified—to put on that close season. So you see, as I have said before, we are restricting them all we can, and now on top of that over-fished water—too much gear in the water—it is proposed to throw in unlimited traps. This is the most destructive method known. It will discourage the use of gill nets and purse seines, and the inevitable result must be more close seasons, because there will be too many fish taken and the fish inspector will come along and say, "We must put on an extra twenty-four or forty-eight hour a week close season." This would involve hardships, especially to the working fishermen, because an idle trap affects only four men, but if the fisherman has to be idle three or four days a week he cannot make a living fishing the other one or two days. It came out in the evidence that on an average the traps employ four men. I calculate that one trap would replace twenty or twenty-five fishermen. But that does not mean there would be only twenty-five fishermen out of a job because, as I said before, he has his wife and family dependent on him, and he has other men incidentally depending on his wages. It is calculated that seven people are dependent on one fisherman; that would be something like 150 people would be out of employment for every trap that was operated; for you must remember, Mr. Speaker, that a trap does not have its hair cut, it does not buy clothes, it does not go to the movies; it simply stays there and does not cost anything when idle. But these other fishermen give other people work, all the inhabitants of the little towns depend for their living on the money earned by those fishermen.

To show that this is not only my opinion but the opinion of the commissioner, may I turn to page 17. This is not something I am twisting out of the document; these are his exact words:

> The fishermen were able to convince me that traps would reduce the number of fish they would catch, and an elimination to some extent of the number of men engaged in the fishing business. This Mr. Hagar concedes—

He is the manager of the company.

> —the number so eliminated would naturally depend on the number of traps put in the water.

Naturally so. And he is going to allow unlimited traps; so the number of men thrown out of employment would be unlimited. After reading that statement, surely it is a joke for him to say that it will not appreciably curtail the number of gear now in the water.

Now we come again to his defence—I desire to be polite. He says:

> Canadian traps. . . will result in catching a share of the salmon now being caught by American traps and which otherwise would be lost to Canada.

I call particular attention to those words, "otherwise lost to Canada." That, Mr. Speaker, is begging the whole question, because I may explain the cannery men's argument is that these would-be traps are placed on the border line between British Columbia and Alaska. In that particular place Alaska, we might say for the purpose of comparison, lies north of British Columbia. The cannery men contend that the fish go from the south to the north, and if we do not put in these traps, then the fish will go on into American waters and be caught with American traps. This, so to speak, is the "last chance" at them.

Now, the commissioner appears to have swallowed that argument, stock, lock and barrel. His acceptance is based entirely on a bald assertion by a cannery man that that is so. But the fishermen come along and say the opposite. They say that the fish are going south and that therefore Canadian traps would take fish which would otherwise go, not into American traps, but into the Skeena and other rivers in British Columbia to be caught by gill nets and trollers. Those are the two points of difference. The cannery men say that the fish go north while the fishermen contend that they go south, and the commissioner throws his whole weight into the argument of the cannery men.

Mr. SPENCER: But surely the facts are known as to which way they go.

Mr. NEILL: They are to some extent, and I will explain that in a moment. But as between the two, what little is known is emphatically on the side of the argument that the fish go south. Here is a report on Pacific salmon migration by Professor H. Charles Williams, D.Sc., F.R.S.E., a technical and highly educated man, who is not going to throw his weight one way or the other but undertakes to record the facts as he sees them. He tagged 659 fish, and I may explain to those who are not familiar with it just what this means. They take the salmon when newly caught and put a clip into its tail or one of its fins and then turn it loose, and when it is ultimately caught valuable information is obtained as to where it has been in the meantime and where it is going. This is a new method only recently adopted. Now according to this report only 135 of the 659 were recaptured that season, and of that number 80 per cent were caught in British Columbia waters and 20 per cent in American waters. He actually gives us a map showing the course run by every fish from the time it was first tagged until it was finally caught. One was caught 100 miles south inside of twenty-four hours; in other words, it was travelling at an average of 100 miles a day. As I say, 80 per cent were taken the second time in British Columbia waters. This man's report ought to be good because it is a definite, unbiased and scientific statement, and he asserts that 80 per cent were taken in the waters of British Columbia, proving, so far as our knowledge goes, that the fish were going south. Therefore this theory of putting in last chance traps is entirely unsound, and the argument that the fish would "otherwise be lost" is not based on the facts.

The third reason the commissioner gives is this:

> The Department of Fisheries with traps in this area will be in a better position to carry on a more intensive system of tagging, and for the next few years study the run of fish from Wales island and Dogfish, that is, whether and to what extent they are making for Canadian and United States waters.

You will note that he says it will enable them to go in for more intensive tagging. He is proposing to put in traps—perhaps twenty—at a cost of $150,000 in order to catch a few fish to be tagged—a few hundred or a thousand fish which could be caught just as well with seine or troll. Now, Mr. Speaker, when we want roast chicken we do not burn down the hen house and its contents. Is there any need of investing $150,000 to establish a destructive method of fishing in order to catch a few fish to be tagged when experience shows that they can be captured just as well by seine or trollers? It is done off the west coast of Vancouver island; I have seen them do it with the troll and they have been quite successful. They did not need to use any traps. Further, it is stated, we shall be enabled to decide to what extent the fish are making for Canadian or for American waters. In that sentence is to be found proof of what I have said, namely, that the commissioner, with all due respect to him, has failed to grasp the situation as it exists. He is going to allow traps to be used for an unlimited period and in unlimited numbers for the purpose of taking fish by a very destructive method in order that some of them may be tagged to determine whether traps should be allowed or not. Do you grasp that? Traps, with their iniquitous capture of these fish, are to be allowed in order to determine by means of tagging the fish whether the traps should be allowed or not. The last time I heard reasoning of that sort was at a country fair and by a quack doctor selling patent medicines. Would it not be better to continue the existing system of tagging with a view to demonstrating whether the traps should be allowed or not?

Now we come to the other recommendations. No. 2 is, that applications for licenses should be open to all. Well, applications for licenses have been open to all for the last twelve years. That policy was adopted by the Conservatives in 1918 and has been continued ever since; it is known as the open door policy. So that when he recommends that applications be open to all he is merely repeating a commonplace. Mind you, it is not a question of putting in two or three traps; the New England Fish Company would be content with three. But every other cannery man in that vicinity would also demand fish traps; and as a matter of fact they say plainly that if one gets them they will all get them.

The third recommendation is that licenses be granted only for a specified time until the results of the tagging operations have become known. Note that: a specified time. But what is a specified time? He does not say. It may be a year or a decade or fifty years. However, he recommends that the licenses be granted only for a specified time until the results of the tagging operations are known. He gives the show away in that sentence, because he admits he does not know whether the traps should be there or not. But he says, in effect: "In the meantime, let them operate with this destructive method until we find out by the tagging operations whether the traps should be allowed or not." Is that not putting the cart before the horse? Why not let the fish traps wait until the present system proves conclusively whether or not the suggestion is correct that the fish are going south?

The fourth recommendation is that no license granted in any sense creates a vested interest in the owner for any period longer than is mentioned in the license. If that is not a platitude I have never heard one. If I rent a house for ten years I know that the house does not belong to me at the end of that period; but there is no need for anybody to tell me that.

The fifth and last recommendation is that the opening of areas specified in recommendation No. 1 is in no sense to be regarded as a precedent to be cited or acted upon in respect to any other areas or territories in this or any other fishing district in British Columbia. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would point this out: You cannot establish a precedent and then by a wave of the hand say it is not a precedent. If I commit murder and formally announce that the deed is not to be regarded as murder, I cannot get away with it; the corpse is there, justice is demanded, and the law will step in and brush aside my sophistry. A precedent once established is there for all to point at, and it will be pointed to. A week or two ago I used an illustration which perhaps I might now repeat. Was it not said by the Conservative party, and properly, that their legislation in 1918, in regard to the good roads grant was not to be considered a precedent? Yet every member who spoke on the subject a few months ago sooner or later cited that very precedent. I will tell you why the commissioner makes this statement. He wants to conciliate public sentiment and allay alarm, because the people are afraid that this principle, once established in the north, will spread to the south. And it is for that very reason that I take so keen an interest in the matter. This particular district is away beyond my own, but our people are terribly afraid of this thing called a precedent; because once it is established that it is right to have traps up there, the next thing will be to have them in the southern waters in the district I represent.

Now it may be said that I am unjustifiably suspicious, that I am an alarmist, that I am pleading a special cause and for that reason making the strongest case I can. Not at all. I have evidence here to show that it will be only a matter of a very short time, if traps are granted in the north, before the precedent will be cited in the south. And here is the evidence to show that before that policy is actually adopted traps in the south are being recommended. I quote from a newspaper report of the evidence:

> Mr. Hagar not only advocated the establishment of fish traps in northern waters, but also throughout the province.

There is the handwriting on the wall. Before ever traps are granted in the north, he says, "You have given them in the north and we must have them in the south as well." Am I not justified in asking, if they do these things in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

Now, sir, it is up to the government. Some hon. gentlemen may ask why the government should not accept the report of the commission. Possibly that should be done in most cases, but not in the case of a wabbly, stillborn report like this, which contradicts itself in its own recommendations and in other ways. This afternoon one of the members from the maritime provinces was criticizing the government, and when a member of the government challenged him to define his policy in regard to the question under discussion the hon. member replied that he would not do so, that the responsibility must rest with the government. That was a politician's answer, of course, because it left him free to find fault with whatever action the government took. I am not afraid to take the responsibility or the blame for anything I advocate; I have the courage of my convictions. Of course it would pay me better in a political way to let the government go ahead, and do wrong, because then I could yell "crook and scandal" during the election campaign, but where would my district be left? I would rather see the government do the right thing now even if they get credit for it instead of myself.

Here is the question: As I have said, there are 14,000 working fishermen licensed this year; with their families and those indirectly depending upon them, including the farmers—because they do not eat fish exclusively; they must have eggs and butter and milk—and the town people who are also dependent upon the earnings of these fishermen, we might take it that 100,000 people would be affected. We want these people, Mr. Speaker; we have them now and we want to keep them because they are a sturdy, desirable class of citizens. Are we going to wipe them out and leave our shores barren except for a few fish traps placed at strategic points in order to swell the coffers of an alien corporation? I think I can safely say that I represent the views of every fisherman in British Columbia; they are a unit in their opposition to these fish traps. Practically all the people of northern British Columbia in the neighbourhood of Prince Rupert, irrespective of politics or occupation, are of the same opinion in this matter, and judging from the petition I have presented and from others which I could produce, there are a great many people in the southern part of British Columbia also opposed to these fish traps.

Now I have practically finished; the decision is up to the government. I beg and implore them—yes, I even warn them—to put people before pocket, men before money, in this case and let the decision be made on that principle.

I do not want to be melodramatic; I do not want to use sensational language, but I am trying to find words which will impress upon the government the seriousness of this situation. I am sorry if I am unable to emphasize sufficiently the importance of the matter, but I believe, and more than that I hope, that a curse will rest upon this government, certainly politically, if they take away the livelihood of these people in order to produce a few quicker and fatter dividends for an alien corporation, because that is practically what it amounts to, no matter how it may be wrapped up and regardless of how it may be explained or camouflaged. I might almost paraphrase the American orator—William Jennings Bryan, and say: We must not, we shall not and we dare not crucify our British Columbia fishermen on a cross of increased dividends.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that this question has come up so prematurely, because it is a complex matter fraught with very great interest to thousands of fishermen on the Pacific coast. The commission which sat in Prince Rupert and Vancouver some weeks ago to consider the question of the advisability of allowing traps to be installed along the international waters in the northern part of district No. 2, was composed of one gentleman, Judge Ellis. I found it very difficult to get information with regard to the origin of this commission, as to who appointed it, who authorized it and so on. As far as I can gather, Mr. Speaker, it was done by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin), who was anxious to settle once and for all the question of the advisability of permitting traps in these waters.

I have before me a letter which was handed to me by the hon. member for New Westminster, (Mr. McQuarrie), who is not here, with the request that I read it in the house. This letter refers to fish traps, and is as follows:

New Westminster, B.C., May 18/29.

Mr. W. G. McQuarrie, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:

I have been instructed to call your attention to the recent action of the Department of Marine and Fisheries with respect to salmon traps and to ask you to support the fishermen in their opposition to the same. Following are the facts as the fighermen know them:

Late in 1927, in October or November, a delegation of salmon canners and fishermen held two meetings with Hon. P. J. A. Cardin and asked that a royal commission be appointed to investigate the salmon fishing industry in British Columbia with a view to recommending remedial action of some sort. This was opposed by W. A. Found, and the commission was not granted. After departure from Ottawa of fishermen delegates canners put forward set of requests of their own, unknown to the fishermen. The man who arranged the two meetings of the joint committee with Mr. Cardin was an attorney of Vancouver named J. E. Ellis, evidently retained by the canners, as the fishermen did not retain him.

Recently, without fishermen having the remotest idea that such a thing had been applied for, announcement was made in Vancouver that Judge Ellis was named as a royal commission to investigate and determine whether it would be in the "public interest" to allow the establishment of salmon traps in Canadian waters adjacent to the Alaskan boundary. In the "public interest" and "adjacent" were two terms that stuck in the craws of the Prince Rupert men, where the first meetings were held. Naturally, fishermen opposed traps and canners favoured them. At the Vancouver meeting Mr. Ellis, when questioned who asked for the appointment of himself as a commission, said he did not know, he merely received word by wire from Ottawa to make the investigation and report thereon. However, A. L. Hager, president Canadian Fishing Company, was not so reticent or ignorant, and stated his company probably was responsible for the appointment of a commission to see if his firm would not be allowed to operate traps at Wales island which they purchased some years ago from M. Desbrisay and were stopped from operating them. Therefore it appears to the fishermen that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has, under guise of a general investigation, appointed a commission for the specific purpose of giving the Canadian Fishing Company right to operate certain traps, and so that will not appear too raw to the proletariat, etc., a few more trap sites will be given to other concerns, and then the general scramble will be on again.

Wm. E. Maiden,
Secretary, B.C.F.P.A.

Then he asks that the hon. member for New Westminster support the fishermen in their contention that traps should not be installed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, hon. members were privileged to read the report of Judge Ellis together with the evidence given by the various witnesses; if hon. members could understand the attitude of the representatives of the two opposing sides, the one against and the other advocating traps, together with the summing up by Judge Ellis and his recommendation in favour of the installation of fish traps along the international boundary, I have no hesitation in saying after reading the report that no one unprejudiced could possibly claim that all the convincing evidence produced at the meetings of that commission held in Prince Rupert was given by the representatives of the fish traps.

I have taken from the report a few of the reasons which were advanced as to why the traps should be installed. I am very sorry that I had not more time at my disposal to go through this report thoroughly, because we are not dealing with a local issue. I wish to impress that upon the house; the question of fish traps in Canadian waters is not a local issue, it is outside the realm of any local condition; it is international in its scope and demands a broad international mind to deal with it in order that justice may be done to both sides arguing this question. Here are some of the reasons given by the advocates of fish traps in support of their claim that traps should be installed in these northern waters.

The first reason given was that the traps represent the modern trend in fishing. In American waters to-day the trap is the one and only, up-to-date, scientific machine for catching salmon with very little difficulty. It is quite true that it is the modern trend in fishing.

The second argument offered was that a better grade of fish was caught. That is true likewise. The fish get into the traps of their own accord, and they are in perfect condition when caught.

The third argument was that traps would enable us better to compete with the United States. On what ground would we be competing with them? For the annihilation of the fish. Through their up-to-date system of traps the United States have undoubtedly seriously menaced the salmon fisheries of the Pacific coast, and one has only to go down to the Fraser river and into Puget sound to realize the truth of that statement. Or he can go up to the southeastern Alaskan waters and find that Mr. O'Malley, the director of fisheries for the United States, has reduced the traps for the year 1929, in the very area we are speaking of, by the number of sixty. On what grounds? Because of the fact that the escapement of salmon is not sufficient and the catches have depreciated.

The fourth argument offered was that the largest amount of fish caught in foreign countries was caught by means of traps. In the short time at my disposal, I could not find any further arguments.

Let me take the argument which was advanced by the fishermen—and I think these men are entitled to the courtesy of a fair hearing because we are considering something greater than the mere scientific, expeditious method of capturing fish. The fishermen argued that many of them would be put out of employment. They proved that statement, and Judge Ellis admitted that the fishermen had proved their case. In his report Judge Ellis said that the fishermen had convinced him that the traps would reduce the number of fish they would catch and eliminate to some extent the number of men engaged in the fishing business, and the canners admitted that that was true and that the number eliminated would depend upon the number of traps which were put into the water.

I find that there is no right or power vested in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to grant say three or four licenses at Wales island or Pearse channel and to refuse licenses to others in the same area. He cannot grant to some and refuse to others. What will be the result? According to the canners themselves the result will be that by the installation of traps they will be able to obtain a higher grade of fish and sell at a higher price. Can anyone argue that other canners in the same area will stand idly by and allow two or three of their number to reap the reward; that they will be content to take the lower grade of fish which they say are caught by the gill netters, the trollers and seiners? That is absolutely ridiculous. These traps will not only throw two or three hundred fishermen out of employment, but a living will be taken away from their wives and children.

In this large district No. 2, there are 1,421 fishermen engaged in the industry, with three hundred more trawlers. These men buy their supplies from the various merchants in Prince Rupert and they contribute a large sum of money annually to the upbuilding of that town. They have a capital of $1,500,000 invested in boats. All these matters should be considered, but, to my mind, the main one was not mentioned in the report.

I approach the discussion of this question with as open a mind as any man could have in order to investigate a question concerning which I was some time ago not fully informed. I agree that the trap is a scientific instrument for the catching of fish. It is deadly in its power; it is placed in the very path of the fish as they go to spawn and there is no hope of escape. The gill netter, the troller and the seiner must follow the tide hither and thither, and the fish have a sporting chance of escape as they go to the spawning grounds. The Americans are decimating and depleting their own waters, and it ill becomes us to put into operation a system so deadly in its effects and so dire in its results, one which destroys God's food to the people who for all times and for all ages have depended upon the food of the sea. It may seem sentimental for me to speak like this, but I have only to take you back, Mr. Speaker, to the days of Christ himself, when He, the representative of the poor, having no money with which to pay tribute to Caesar, ordered that a fish be caught, and in its mouth was found the coin that paid the tribute to the Roman emperor. This question is not one that we, as a people capable of understanding, can treat with light disdain and at the same time be true to the great heritage which is ours. Therefore I honestly believe that in putting those traps into those waters, we are doing something which will deprive future generations of the food that God Almighty Himself placed in the waters, believing that those fish would be the food of the common people for all time.

I do not see that the report of Judge Ellis, as I have read it, is based upon convincing arguments. Therefore, without delaying the house further, I ask that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries consider carefully the arguments advanced on both sides. He has found all the citizens of Prince Rupert opposed to those traps; the city council passed strong resolutions against them. Nine different associations of salmon trollers and fishers have asked him not to put those traps into effect. I know the minister believes that if he had those traps there, he would be better able to tag the fish and to follow their migration to the waters in order to ascertain whether they go into Alaskan or British Columbia waters. But that is a minor question in the presence of a major one, which is this: I am here this evening endeavouring to represent to parliament the views of the people of British Columbia as a whole, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be well advised, before putting into operation the recommendations of this commission, to ponder its report more carefully and at greater length, so that at least we may be assured that no injustice will be done to the people in No. 2 district and that there will be no depletion of the fish supply which is so valuable to the people of those parts of British Columbia.

Mr. A. D. McRAE (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the house for a few moments while I refer to this subject. I regret that it comes up at this time, as in committee it might have been disposed of with a few questions to which, no doubt, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) would have been able to supply the answers. The traps in question are a subject of long standing, going back, I think, as far as three or four years. I find in the file a copy of a letter dated September 10, 1926, from the department to the company concerned, in which the department promised an investigation with a view of ascertaining what damage, if any, was done, and what obligation there might be on the part of the government on account of promises made, which the company interested claimed they had acted upon. In going through the file I find there does not appear to be any other correspondence of record until this royal commission comes up. In this regard I think a fair criticism of the Department of Marine and Fisheries is the fact that so much of their business is carried on apparently by personal negotiation and so little of it is a matter of record that it is very difficult for anyone to follow the proceedings in continuity. It is not necessary for me to point out to the house that in international negotiations in the past this failure to put our understandings on record has led, I believe, to some repudiations which were not pleasant. I am sure that in our negotiations here as well as with our neighbours to the south, the department will keep out of trouble, and the members of the house will be able to follow the proceedings with a great deal more clarity if they are all properly on record and not left to verbal understanding.

It would appear that in the early stages of this trap controversy on our northern boundary, the claim for damages was presumably made and the investigation then promised apparently had that in view. This matter would have been much better dealt with had that now been the issue and had the government seen fit to order an investigation on the basis of whether we were responsible financially or morally in connection with the establishment of these traps some three of four years ago, instead of bringing up the old question of the establishment of traps.

It is unnecessary for me to go over this question again. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) have dealt with it at length, and there is little I can add except to say that I thoroughly concur with them in their presentation of the situation.

A great deal of trouble would have been saved had the matter been dealt with on the basis of compensation. I cannot think there is any politics mixed up in this at all, because it certainly would be very bad politics. I notice, however, in going through the file, that a letter was sent to Mr. Olaf Hanson on March 27 last advising him that a commission was appointed, but apparently he never replied; at least there is nothing on the file to show that he did.

Mr. BENNETT: Who is he?

Mr. McRAE: He of course is the candidate for the Liberal party at the next election.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In Prince Rupert.

Mr. McRAE: The opponent of the hon. member for Skeena in the next election. I can only say that if Olaf did not reply, it goes to show not only his great inexperience but that he has a great deal to learn in the political game, because even to a blind man it should be apparent that this would be ruinous to the chances of any candidate. I hope in the committee, in order to square Olaf, to show that he has ordinary sagacity in matters of this kind, the hon. minister will be able to produce a letter from him telling the minister not to go ahead with this commission under any circumstances because to do so will mean the return of Jim Brady.

This problem as it manifests itself in the north is right on the border line between British Columbia and Alaska, and the situation is almost identical with that of Fraser river. I suggest to the minister that when he is redrafting the Fraser river sockeye treaty for next session, he include the Naas problem, because it is an international water. The satisfactory adjustment depends entirely upon our coming to an agreement with the United States, and I do not hesitate to say, as I said in committee the other day, that unless something is done in connection with the Naas River, it will soon be as barren of fish as the Sahara. There will be no fish in it at all and nothing to trouble about. That would be a most regrettable condition, and I think that the proper way to deal with this matter is in an international way.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I was not going to refer to the question of traps except to endorse the position taken by the two hon. members who have spoken. I do, however, want to take exception to one or two of the findings of the royal commission in the hope that in view of our united opposition the recommendation to establish traps will not be adopted. I see that the minister himself has a pretty fair idea of traps because, if my memory serves me aright, in speaking a few days ago of the haddock traps he said that they required few men. That is true of traps whether they be on the Pacific or the Atlantic coast. The report of Commissioner Ellis would indicate that there are now some 11,000 fishermen engaged in fishing on our coast. Last year, 1927-28, the total number of licenses granted to all kinds of people, red, white and yellow, was 14,819, and that, I would have hon. members understand, is for a very much depleted industry. If our fishing industry on the Pacific coast was built up to what the people of this country have a right to expect, there would be about 50,000 licenses issued a year, and that industry alone, built up on that basis of individual licenses as now issued, keeping away from traps, would support a population as great as that of Prince Edward Island. That is what is in the future, and I agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) that it would be nothing short of a crime if we started in now to undo these prospects.

I had in mind, until it has now got so late in the session that I presume new ideas will not be tolerated, to suggest when the estimates for the Indian department came up for consideration the opening up of dozens of Indian reserves in the mouths of our rivers in small lots of ten or fifteen acres—it is the best land in the country—for settlement by white fishermen, and then they would have their homes on the ground. On many of these Indian reserves there is nobody living to-day, and I think the time has come when we should build up communities of white fishermen where they can rear their families, and thus establish in British Columbia a race of fishermen such as they have to-day in the maritimes. We have not got that to-day, but we are on the way to building it up, and I hope that in a few years when our industry gets on the road to prosperity again we shall be able to take all these surplus fishermen in the maritimes out to the Pacific coast.

I have referred to only one or two things, Mr. Speaker, in the findings of Commissioner Judge Ellis. I think generally we would all disagree with his findings. So far as economic fishing is concerned, traps are undoubtedly the modern method, but so far as the wealth of the nation is concerned I submit that the practice of fishing which will support a great healthy white population in our country is the method that we want to employ, and we would certainly be taking a very retrograde step if we should now establish the precedent of putting in even one trap. I entirely disagree with the statement of the commissioner who says that this would not be a precedent, because once you have established one trap, you have let the bars down, and then look out for the results.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I have only a few words to say in reply. From the observations made by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this matter, I can readily understand that there is a very strong opposition to the issuing of licenses for traps in the northern waters of British Columbia.

As has been stated, this is not a new question. It has been in the mind of the public for many, many years; in fact, licenses have been issued as far back as 1916. In that year two licenses were issued; in 1917, 5; in 1918, 6; in 1919, 7, and in 1920, 6. The department has received complaint against the issuing of these licenses, and the officers have been looking into that question with some care. I think, however, it would be unfair to conclude that the present government is the only one responsible for these traps. Indeed, in that respect, the record of the Liberal government can be compared favourably with that of previous administrations. Licenses were issued in 1925 on the understanding that the company should not be too sure that they would be renewed in 1926; in fact the licenses were not renewed in 1926 until after this government went out of power. After we went out of power, on July 23, 1926, licenses were issued to that company, the Canadian Fishing Company, by the then government, but on account of representations made on the 4th of August, 1926, a report was asked for, and the result was that on August 16, 1926, less than a month after the licenses had been issued on July 23, they were cancelled by the present government.

As hon. gentlemen have pointed out, it is a complex and difficult question. The department felt that we should not renew the licenses and the matter has been under consideration in the meantime. After receiving representations from the fishermen and from the company concerned, it was considered advisable to have an investigation made by an independent organization, and it was thought that a judge would be sufficiently independent to take the evidence which might be given on both sides of the issue and carry on that investigation. I confess that, this report having come to the department at the end of the session when we were very busy, it has not been given by the officers of the department or by myself, owing to lack of time, a detailed study. I can only say at present that no one should conclude that because the commissioner recommends the licensing of a certain number of these traps it is the intention of the department and myself to follow his recommendation. I once more submit that a department or a minister is not bound to follow the recommendation of any commissioner who may have been appointed in order to provide the minister with better information and fuller detail on the question under consideration. In that case as in any others, the reasons given by the commissioner and his conclusions will be weighed in the light of experience, and I can assure the house that the interests of the fishermen will not be prejudiced, and nobody need be alarmed lest the matter be decided without proper consideration being given to the recommendations.

My hon. friend from North Vancouver (Mr. McRae) referred to the fact that the documents which I showed him were not very complete. As a matter of fact they are all we have. I know the matter has been discussed verbally with people from British Columbia by the officers of the department and myself. I should not like the impression to prevail that our files are not properly kept. They are kept in good order, and documents which should be on those files are to be found there. In fact the letter written by the Hon. Mr. Patenaude—he was Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries for a short while—in which he promised an investigation was not on the departmental files. It is on there today because that promise was used as an argument by the company asking that licenses be issued in their favour. When we asked them whether the promise was in writing they sent us a copy of the letter. This explains its presence on the file.

My hon. friend referred to the letter which was addressed to Mr. Hanson advising him that a commission had been appointed. He said that if Mr. Hanson was a good politician, qualified to be a candidate for any party, he should have expressed his views against that procedure. I have no letter from Mr. Hanson, but my hon. friend will not object to my declaring that I know Mr. Hanson's views through a verbal message which was brought to me, and I may say that they are as strong as those of my hon. friends from North Vancouver, Skeena and Comox-Alberni.

Mr. McRAE: May I say that evidently Mr. Hanson is a lot more careful than we gave him credit for, and is too good a politician.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not write.

Mr. McRAE: No, he did not write.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think there is anything further I can add. I repeat that hon. gentleman need not be alarmed. I can assure my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni that his observations will not fail to be considered, as will also the very strong support which is given to him by the hon. members for Skeena and North Vancouver.

Mr. McRAE: As the minister has given a clean bill of health to his present candidate in Skeena, would he kindly give the gist of the verbal understanding with Mr. Hanson.

Mr. CARDIN: I was requested by this gentleman, as I have been by many others, not to issue those licenses, whatever might be the conclusions of the investigator.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The CHAIRMAN: Vote 308, page 68 of the estimates, national revenue, $14,014,663.

Mr. BENNETT: What is this item for?

The CHAIRMAN: It was under discussion the other day.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister say whether or not he has received a report from Mr. Knox with respect to conditions in Halifax?

Mr. EULER: I received a report from Mr. Hunter. I received some correspondence, possibly it might be called a report, from Mr. Knox. In fact this morning I had a call from him with regard to conditions in Halifax.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the difficulty there?

Mr. EULER: I might give a very brief review of the situation, because I understand my hon. friend desires to bring it up.

Some time ago word came to the preventive branch of the department that there were certain abuses existing in the city of Halifax with regard to the local preventive service. In the ordinary routine of the office the acting chief despatched Mr. Hunter and Mr. Knox, the investigating officer, to Halifax to ascertain the situation.

Mr. BENNETT: Who is Mr. Hunter?

Mr. EULER: The chief clerk in the preventive office here. They made certain investigations. During the course of their stay in Halifax a certain man named Garrison—whose name I heard mentioned this afternoon by the hon. leader of the opposition—entered the office.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the minister must have heard his name before?

Mr. EULER: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BENNETT: It was in the paper a week ago.

Mr. EULER: I am referring to the assault.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. EULER: I am afraid my hon. friend was not following me.

Mr. BENNETT: I was.

Mr. EULER: I am describing what took place after these officers went to Halifax.

Mr. BENNETT: But I thought the minister said he heard the name Garrison for the first time this afternoon.

Mr. EULER: No. If my hon. friend finds any discrepancies in what I am about to say I hope he will correct me.

During the course of their stay in Halifax a man named Garrison came to the office to interview Mr. Knox. Mr. Hunter was there at the time; an interview did take place between Mr. Knox and Mr. Garrison. What really happened there I am not sure, there are conflicting reports, but as a matter of fact there was an assault. Whether Mr. Knox or Garrison was the aggressor I do not know, but in any case Mr. Knox was charged in the courts with assault, and was called upon to put up a bond of $5,000 for his appearance at the trial.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it a civil or a criminal proceeding?

Mr. EULER: I am not enough of a lawyer to say, but he was called upon to put up a bond of $5,000. He requested that the department put up the bond. Mr. Knox is regarded as a good investigating officer, and I desired that the investigation should proceed. So, rightly or wrongly, I decided that the department might well supply the bond.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: That was done. Before the bond was issued, on his own responsibility Mr. Knox engaged counsel to assist him. I felt, however, that if an officer of the department took the law into his own hands and administered very severe physical punishment to someone else, he was going beyond what he had any right to do as an officer of the crown. For that reason I issued instructions that the department was not to be held responsible for the legal fees of the lawyer whom he had retained. From the reports the situation appeared to me to be rather bad, and in order that the investigation should be conducted on the highest ground and that everyone should have confidence in those making that investigation, I instructed the assistant commissioner of customs, Mr. Blair, and Mr. Lennie, who I think is known to most members of the house, to proceed to Halifax to institute the inquiry.

Mr. BENNETT: When?

Mr. EULER: They are there now. We did not displace either Mr. Knox or Mr. Hunter. Mr. Knox was asked to remain there, although he had requested to be sent to Toronto, intimating that undue political influence had been used in Halifax. I do not know what sort of pressure had been brought to bear upon him, but there may have been some. Certainly, however, it was not recognized in the department. Both Mr. Knox and Mr. Hunter were asked to remain. Mr. Knox—I presume this was the reason—when he found that the two officials whom I have mentioned had been sent to Halifax to make a thorough investigation into conditions that looked rather bad to me, sent in his resignation, which was promptly accepted.

Mr. Knox came to me this morning, stating that he wished to see me with regard to conditions in the port of Halifax. He found fault, I think, with the fact that the department declined to pay his lawyer's expenses for his own personal defence. He said he had not been backed up by the department or by someone in the department. I requested him to give instances to show where he had not been supported, because there had been no interference on the part of the department with either him or Mr. Hunter. He declined to give me any instances but stated that he would take them to my hon. friend, who would bring them up in the house. That is the story so far as I know.

Mr. BENNETT: The question at the moment is: Was there political influence? That is No. 1. The second question is: Who asked for the investigation in Halifax? I do not propose to discuss the question whether the port of Halifax is or is not in proper shape, because that would be prejudging the matter; but I asked the minister whether Knox had made a report in writing—and I should have added, with respect to conditions in the port of Halifax. As a matter of fact, I did not have time to speak to Knox, beyond having a few words with him, because I had to be in the chamber.

Mr. EULER: I will answer the first question first. My hon. friend inquires whether there was political influence. I have answered that already: So far as the department was concerned, there was absolutely none.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that, but from other sources?

Mr. EULER: Nor from other sources. I can very well guess the inference which is supposed to be drawn by the house, because I heard the debate this afternoon. So far as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) who represents one of the constituencies in Nova Scotia is concerned, I may say that no influence of any sort was exerted nor was any attempt made to exert influence with myself with respect to Knox.

Mr. BENNETT: Was an effort made to withdraw Knox from the investigation?

Mr. EULER: Never to me, and I do not know that any such effort was made so far as anyone else is concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister say that none was made to any of his colleagues?

Mr. EULER: I have no knowledge of what may have happened with my colleagues.

Mr. BENNETT: Knox gave evidence before the customs commission, and although I hardly know the man except for the fact that when I saw him this morning I recognized him as a witness in that inquiry, it appeared there that he was regarded as a valuable investigator and was certainly well thought of in that sense by everyone. From Ontario, where his duties usually lie, he was taken to Halifax, and I know only what the papers and the minister say, because I had not time to go into the matter. That is why I asked the question. The minister indicates that trouble arose because a man called Garrison, who is known to be a very active and offensive political supporter of the government in Halifax, went to the custom house. My understanding is that Mr. Hunter, who was there, retired and the two men had an interview. This man Garrison was accompanied by a man named Martin. Is that correct?

Mr. EULER: I understand so.

Mr. BENNETT: And he was a government official in the Department of Labour. Is that so? He was a fair wage officer in the Department of Labour in Halifax?

Mr. EULER: When Garrison went to interview Knox he took with him Martin, who is in the employ of the Labour department.

Mr. BENNETT: What for?

Mr. EULER: As a witness.

Mr. BENNETT: What for?

Mr. EULER: I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT: A political heeler says he took a government employee with him when he went to have this interview, and the minister says the man went as a witness—what for? As a plant?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: What was he a witness for? The minister says this man states that the other was taken as a witness. What was he a witness for?

Mr. EULER: That is the statement made by Knox.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the minister did not say that; he said it was the statement made by Martin. He was taken as a witness.

Mr. EULER: There is a statement here by Martin but I am sorry it is difficult to find it. My recollection, however, is that Martin wrote a report in which he stated that while he was in the long room of the custom house in Halifax, Garrison came and asked him to accompany him, which he did. He said: "I don't know what it was all about"—I am speaking from memory—"and in fact after the fracas I was sorry I went."

Mr. BENNETT: Someone used the words, "as a witness." The minister has used those words; I did not use them. The man went there as a witness; as a witness to what?

Mr. EULER: I gather that he went as a witness on the request of Mr. Garrison; it could not be for anyone else, because Garrison asked him to go.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. EULER: As a witness to what took place, I suppose. Mr. Garrison went to make certain accusations against Knox, which he did make, which Knox denied, and as a result of which denial the words followed leading to the assault. I presume that when a man goes on such business with the purpose possibly of making an assault or of having a difference with someone else it is not at all difficult to understand that he might desire to have a witness there.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Did they have boxing gloves?

Mr. BENNETT: In view of what the minister says, and of which I was not aware, and the matter being now investigated, it would be premature for me to discuss it further at the moment. But I venture this statement, that the minister should support his officer. When an officer in the discharge of his duty is assaulted on public property, whether or not he provoked the assault is a matter to be determined; but no person for a moment thinks that such a man should be abandoned. He has been sued, I judge civilly, because he would not give bond for $5,000 for a trial in October unless the proceedings were civil. Of course, it may be a criminal case; I do not know, and perhaps the minister can tell us. It may be a case of damages or it may be criminal. What counsel did he employ? That probably would largely explain the matter.

Mr. EULER: A man named Jones, I understand. My hon. friend is a lawyer and knows more about these technicalities than I do, but the words are, "It is ordered that the defendant be arrested and imprisoned until final judgment." I suppose that indicates a criminal action?

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is a civil action.

Mr. EULER: In any case, a bond of $5,000 was required.

Mr. BENNETT: I think in the old provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick they still have what we call a capias procedure and probably this man was arrested under capias, because if he was directed to remain in gaol until judgment was given it would indicate a civil and not a criminal action.

Mr. EULER: Just a word with regard to the statement made by the leader of the opposition that the department should stand behind the man. I think we did that. I do not desire to go into this question at any length, but as a matter of fact there have been numerous complaints for many years in regard to Mr. Knox. In fact, until to-day I did not know that the assistant deputy minister of excise had reported that Mr. Knox should not be employed by the department at all. I had many complaints, but I also knew it was the impression of the committee and perhaps of the house in 1926 that Mr. Knox was a good officer.

Mr. BENNETT: A good investigator.

Mr. EULER: Exactly; all the reports say he is a good investigator, but there are reports which perhaps do not speak quite so highly of him in other respects. I kept him in the department, one reason being that we might be criticized if we let him go in view of the information he furnished in 1926, which was detrimental to the then government, as most people will admit. I was unwilling to have the accusation made that I was discriminating against the man for that reason.

Mr. BENNETT: That does the minister credit.

Mr. EULER: I also agreed after an explanation was given as to the assault which had taken place, that the department should furnish the bond of $5,000. However, I did not think that any officer should take the law in his own hands. Mr. Knox is a pretty big man and need not be very much afraid of a physical encounter with anyone, and I understand that his opponent was not very big. Mr. Knox may have had provocation; I understand he was the subject of an epithet which is regarded by most people as being fighting language. But if an officer of the crown takes the law into his own hands it is not the duty of the department to stand behind him as far as his legal expenses are concerned; it then becomes his personal affair. At any rate, rightly or wrongly that was my position and I am within the judgment of the committee as to the wisdom of my action.

Mr. BENNETT: Who was the lawyer employed by Knox?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend probably knows the name of the firm; one of the members of the firm is Mr. McInnes.

Mr. BENNETT: I think he was a president of the Conservative association for a good many years.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. EULER: Perhaps that does not make it any worse. The firm name is McInnes, Lovett and MacDonald. I might also say that the acting chief of the preventive service inferred that the services of a solicitor should be paid for by the department, at the time I gave instructions that the bond should be given. I instructed him to the contrary, but whatever expense had been incurred up to that time so far as solicitors were concerned is being borne by the department.

Mr. BENNETT: Did Knox make a report in writing?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: To the department?

Mr. EULER: He made his report to the acting chief of the preventive service. It is rather a lengthy report; does my hon. friend wish to hear it or shall I show it to him?

Mr. BENNETT: Does it touch the port of Halifax, the investigation?

Mr. EULER: No, it is with regard to the fracas with Garrison. Since the investigation is going on perhaps it would be as well not to read it.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the report should be read; I agree with the minister, however, that we should not discuss the question of the investigation of the port.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that there are not some incidental references to the port. The report is rather lengthy, but if the committee desires to hear it I will read it. It is written from Halifax and addressed to Mr. Jenkins, acting chief of the customs preventive service, under date of May 20.

About 1.10 p.m. to-day I was called to the phone by Mr. G. E. M. Hunter, acting divisional chief, Halifax, and answered same. The party on the other end of the telephone asked if I was Mr. Knox to which I replied yes. He then said "Are you going to be in the office for a while?" I said "Yes for probably half an hour". He gave no name or any intimation of what he desired to see me about. Ten minutes later two gentlemen arrived in the preventive service office and as I was sitting in the inner office, which is occupied by Mr. Hunter and myself during this investigation, I heard one of the gentlemen ask for Mr. Hunter and myself whom I later learned was a Mr. Garrison. These two gentlemen were shown into the office and the taller of the two, whom I later learned was Mr. Garrison, asked who was the boss to which Mr. Hunter replied he was. Mr. Garrison then replied "Well I don't want to see you" and Mr. Hunter replied "Is it on official business in connection with the preventive service of the customs?" He said "yes". Then Mr. Hunter said "Well I want to know all about it." Mr. Garrison said "You think so".

I might tell my hon. friend and the committee there are words written in here in ink; I do not know whether or not Mr. Knox wrote them and I am not sure whether I should read them. They are not initialed and probably they are the words my hon. friend would like to hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know; the minister has the report. I would like to have it read, and the minister says it is written partly in handwriting.

Mr. EULER: Yes, and the acting chief of the preventive service thinks it is not in the handwriting of Mr. Knox.

Mr. BENNETT: Read it under those circumstances.

Mr. EULER: Very well:

Colonel Ralston will talk to you.

Those are the words written in ink. Then the report proceeds:

"You are not the boss around here" and Mr. Hunter replied he was and would insist on being present at any interview where matters of the preventive service of the customs were being discussed. Mr. Garrison then sat down and addressed Mr. Hunter that he did not come to see him but to see myself and that he wanted a private interview with me. Mr. Hunter then retired after Mr. Garrison had informed the both of us that the gentleman who accompanied him be brought as a witness and was the representative of the Minister of Labour at Ottawa, namely Mr. Peter Heenan. At this stage Mr. Hunter retired to the other office closing the door, leaving me in the room alone with these two gentlemen.

Immediately after the door was closed Mr. Garrison addressed me as follows, "You got a telegram from Colonel Ralston this morning, did you not" to which I replied "Not to my knowledge." He insisted I had and I again informed him that I had received neither telegram nor letter from any individual whatever this morning. He then stated that I was lying and that I was through with my investigation here and I knew it. I informed him it was the first intimation I had from anyone that I was through my investigation here and would continue my investigation until I received such word that my investigation was through. He then replied, "Is that so?" "Colonel Ralston" he says, "will see that you are taken away from here." I replied, "if that happened I could not help it but that until I got some official notice from our own department I intended to continue on. He then replied, "You were to see my brother last week," to which I replied, "Not that I know of."

That is a peculiar reply; I think if he had been there he would have been aware of it.

He then challenged me that I was lying and that he knew I was up to see his brother before he died. I replied that I never had been to see his brother subsequent to meeting him on board the boat "Guardian" in the dockyard over a week ago and that was the only time that I ever seen his brother or had the privilege of meeting him and then only for a few minutes when we were trying out the engine on the boat "Guardian" and that I had no discussion with his brother whatever except informing him, when he complained about the oil in the motor heating up, that it would not matter much a little heating in a new boat. He replied I was a liar and that he had witnesses to prove that I was to see his brother in a new blue Ford automobile the day before his death. I replied no he must have been mistaken and asked him whom the parties were that said I was to see his brother at his home. He replied that a neighbour of his had seen me and the blue Ford car. This I informed him was impossible because I never knew where his brother lives nor was I at any time in a blue Ford car to see him. Again he insisted that I was lying so I informed him and the other gentleman that was with him that if they had any evidence or any witnesses to prove that I was to see his brother at his home at any time that I would like to know. Mr. Garrison insisted he had and would see that Colonel Ralston was informed.

I then addressed myself to Mr. Garrison and Mr. Martin, whom he introduced as the Hon. Mr. Heenan's representative and told them both in these words, "Gentlemen, if you have come to see me or interview me on any business whatsoever I want to make it clear that I know nothing of what Mr. Garrison has been saying and as he had insisted in that I was Lying I would have to request you gentlemen to leave the office." That I was not going to be accused of lies and untruths to my face. Garrison replied he would not leave the office and I replied that I would see he did and immediately arose from the chair and opened the door to show both gentlemen out. On opening the door I requested both gentlemen to leave the office immediately or if not I would have them put out. Garrison replied I was not big enough so I opened the outside door which leads into the corridor and requested him especially to get out or I would show him whether or not I was big enough to put him out. He challenged me in a threatening attitude so I took him by the shoulder and pushed him outside the door. When I did so he said, "You would, eh" and crouched down in a boxing manner as if to make an underhand or foul blow at me when I prepared myself for an onslaught which I anticipated was coming. Just in a moment he made a flash at me as if to strike me but I sidestepped him and he missed and I then caught him with my right hand under the eye. He was at this time inside the door of the office. The blow struck by myself staggered him and left him in a dazed condition after which I took hold of him and shoved him out in the corridor. His condition was weak at this moment and he fell down so I simply rolled him out in the corridor and could see that he was bleeding a little but not serious.

I then closed the door on him and left him in the corridor and later spoke to Mr. Martin who allowed himself to be introduced without speaking a word as the Hon. Mr. Heenan's representative. I must say in fairness to Mr. Martin that he in no way took part in any conversation which I had privately or otherwise except after I had put Garrison out in the corridor. The only time Mr. Martin opened his mouth was when I struck Garrison when he said, "I am a witness to that." After having shut Mr. Garrison out in the corridor Mr. Martin seemed very much surprised and informed Mr. Hunter and myself that he was at a loss to understand what it was all about and informed us that he had met Mr. Garrison by accident in the long room of the customs house just previous to coming up to see myself and Mr. Hunter and that he was approached by Mr. Garrison to accompany him and to be a witness to what he was going to say to me and my replies to him. He then said that if he had known what it was going to be he certainly would not have been there and was very sorry that he had been misled by Garrison on this occasion.

I cannot understand by and through whom Mr. Garrison would have come to interview me to-day because I have had nothing to do whatever directly or indirectly with his deceased brother. I simply met him casually at a trial run of the boat Guardian with Mr. Hunter over a week ago at the dockyard and had no cenversation with him whatever any more than what I have previously referred to, that is that he did not need to worry about the oil tank on the engine of the boat Guardian warming up that as I understood all new boats or new engines will do this and that it was nothing for him to be afraid of. This I am prepared to swear to before any tribunal and hence my misunderstanding not having any knowledge why Mr. Garrison this afternoon came to see me whatsoever. Never have I at any time had occasion to go and see his brother prior or subsequent to the trial run of the boat Guardian and I defy anyone to state that I have been to see him.

The whole question of our unfortunate interview this afternoon was brought about by Mr Garrison himself. His attitude and his threatening language brought the trouble on himself and when he tried to maim me I was forced to defend myself and will do so on any other such occasion should it arise. I have nothing to be sorry for in striking Mr. Garrison, if I had not done so I might have been wearing the beautiful black eye that he has to-day and, Sir, he will long remember his interview with me and the force which terminated that interview.

It is not a question at all of anyone losing his head. It was simply a case of self defence of which I will always seize the opportunity to defend especially when it is against my own person. From the results of this interview between Mr. Hunter, myself, Mr. Garrison and Mr. Martin I can only conclude that Mr. Garrison came here with the idea that I had been to see his brother and interrogated him thereby causing his sudden death. This, Sir, I will say with all emphasis is an infernal lie to which I have not been a party nor, so far as I am aware, Mr. Hunter either.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. A. Knox.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose he has not made any report as to the investigation at the port?

Mr. EULER: No; as a matter of fact I do not think there has been any investigation with regard to the port; I think the investigation was held with regard to the preventive officers. There were some charges made against the officers at that port in correspondence which came to the department.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. BENNETT: The investigation is now being carried on?

Mr. EULER: That investigation is being carried on. The papers of which I spoke are in the hands of Mr. Blair and Mr. Lennie, who have gone down to make the investigation. Inspector Graham is there also.

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to repeat what I said this afternoon, that the use of my name in connection with the incident which has just been cited was entirely unauthorized and without any foundation. I never had any communication with Mr. Garrison, either directly or indirectly, or with anyone for him, nor did I have any communication, either directly or indirectly, with Mr. Knox. I can only assume that Mr. Garrison referred to me, or thought that he would make his complaint to me on account of my being the minister from the province, but there was no authority at all for bringing my name into this matter.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister says no such reference was made, in fact.

Mr. RALSTON: Knox says that Garrison referred to me in that conversation. I cannot say whether or not he did this, but I am saying that there was no foundation for his doing so.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister says no reference was made to the hon. Minister of National Defence by Garrison or anyone on his behalf in connection with the investigation carried on by Knox.

Mr. RALSTON: None whatever.

Mr. EULER: I think I might just repeat that at no time were any representations made to the department that Mr. Knox should be withdrawn from the investigation.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that Knox said that Garrison referred to me; I do not know whether he did or did not, as I was not there.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. minister says that in fact he was not referred to by Garrison or by anyone on his behalf, or by Knox, and that makes it quite clear.

Mr. EULER: I have no desire to prolong the discussion, but I should like to read a report signed by Mr. Taylor, assistant deputy minister, which goes back as far as May 26, 1925.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the minister think he should read that report in view of the fact that there is a trial pending?

Mr. EULER: This refers to Mr. Knox and has absolutely nothing to do with the assault.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a civil action for damages pending.

Mr. EULER: I read Mr. Knox's statement.

Mr. BENNETT: A statement made by the deputy minister in 1925 might be prejudicial in connection with the trial for damages.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend think it would be fair to read a portion of a report which has just reached me through Mr. Hunter?

Mr. BENNETT: The minister must use his own discretion with respect to that; the minister has had a servant of the crown withdrawn.

Mr. EULER: I have no desire to do anything which will cause an injustice. Mr. Knox tendered his resignation; he was not asked to resign. As a matter of fact, we were willing to continue employing him as an investigator in Halifax after the assault took place, although I had serious doubts as to the advisability of doing so because it could not be expected that he would be received with any spirit of good will or even with the respect which should be given to any officer making investigations of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT: Did Mr. Martin represent the Minister of Labour?

Mr. EULER: I do not know, but perhaps we might accept his statement. He said that it was a casual meeting in the long room of the customs house and he went along just to keep Garrison company.

Item agreed to.

To provide for payments to Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash for services in connection with work arising from reports of the special committee and royal commission and in connection with special sales tax investigations, $10,000.

To provide for payment in full to the widow of the late C. E. McDonald, sub-collector of customs and excise at Port Borden, who was accidentally killed while returning home from duty, a compassionate allowance of, $3,000.

To provide for payment in full to the widow of the late T. Ingalls a customs excise officer on the preventive service, who was accidentally killed while on duty, a compassionate allowance of, $3,000.

To provide for payment in full to Henry Mayo, an ex-member of the crew of the customs patrol boat No. 3.—Mr. Mayo received an injury to his eye in the performance of his duty which has left him practically blind, $2,500.

To provide for payment in full to Edwin P. Clark, an ex-member of the crew of the customs cruiser Bayfield.—Mr. Clark received an injury to his back which resulted in subsequent illness, $2,673.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection and in connection with the Board of Customs—Further amount required, $55,100.—Total, $76,273.

Mr. MANION: I see that a part of this item reads:

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection and in connection with the Board of Customs.

We were discussing here the other day, very briefly, the closing of a number of customs ports in various parts of the country. Would the minister inform the committee as to the saving made by the closing of these ports, and how many of the men engaged at the closed ports were removed from the service so that positions were eliminated?

Mr. EULER: Practically all these ports were very small; in fact the salaries ranged from $200 up. Many of the officers were not receiving more than $200 a year; they were only part time employees. In a really strict sense, many of these so-called ports were not full-fledged ports at all and there was not a great deal of monetary saving in abolishing them. The chief reason for their abolition was in connection with appraisals. It is impossible, in these small places, where men are not qualified, where they have no knowledge of commodities, to get proper appraisals, and that is the real reason for closing a number of the ports. The saving was comparatively small. In most instances where the officers were full-time officers, we transferred them, wherever possible, to some other point where their services could be utilized.

Mr. MANION: Including those receiving $200 or $300 a year, how many of these men had their positions eliminated by the closing of the ports?

Mr. EULER: Perhaps 125.

Mr. MANION: What I am going to speak of now has nothing to do with the Canada Starch Company about which I was asking the minister the other day. A gentleman stated to me on the street—and I merely pass this on and ask the minister to give his version of it—that at most of the ports that have been closed, the entries are being made to-day just as they were before; in other words, that the ports have not really been closed. What is the minister's statement as to that?

Mr. EULER: That is almost altogether untrue. There are only two or three cases of that kind. For instance, Queenston was a part of Niagara. It is handled in that way still; the officer belongs to the Niagara port instead of Queenston being a seperate port.

Mr. MANION: I asked this question to clear the matter up and not with any other desire. I do not know anything about it myself, but the statement was made to me.

Mr. CHAPLIN: As regards the port of Queenston, there would not be any saving of expense in what the minister has done in that regard, would there?

Mr. EULER: The appraisal is done at Niagara Falls.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But Queenston is five or six miles from Niagara Falls and seven or eight miles from Niagara-on-the-Lake. It is a point where vessels land.

Mr. EULER: The officer is there and attends to clearances of vessels.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I ask the minister where there is any saving in connection with officers.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps there is not a great deal of saving, and as a matter of fact it might be that the ports should have been closed entirely. Perhaps that will follow. As I have already intimated, there is not a great deal of financial saving in the closing of these ports. The chief factor in the situation is the matter of appraisals.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me to be a matter of convenience as much as anything else. I do not know whether I am on the right item or not, but I should like to ask the minister a question and I have not yet had an opportunity of doing so. I notice from last year's public accounts that the minister has been buying quite a few automobiles in his own city, presumably for the customs service around the country. Some of these machines went as far as British Columbia, some to Quebec, and some to Ontario. How does it come about that his own city is favoured with these purchases?

Mr. EULER: I rather expected that somebody would ask that question. The orders were given entirely on tender, and if my hon. friend desires, I can give him the prices with regard to one particular make of car which, perhaps, I need not specify. One tender price was $1,825; another was $2,225; another was $1,955, and the one that was accepted, which came from a Kitchener firm, was $1,815, by far the lowest tender, for the same make of car.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The same car?

Mr. EULER: Yes, delivered at destination.

Mr. COOTE: What were those cars used for?

Mr. EULER: For patrolling the border, preventive service.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do I understand the minister to say that he got in Kitchener a price for a car that was equal to the price he could get at Quebec, for instance? One of those cars went to Quebec. Did the minister at the same time ask for tenders in the city of Quebec? It seems strange that a car should be shipped to Quebec from Kitchener. Were tenders for that particular car asked for in the city of Quebec; and similarly, were tenders asked for in British Columbia?

Mr. EULER: Tenders were asked for in the places in which the cars were needed. Surely it should not be to the discredit of even the minister or the town from which he comes if the dealers there were able to underbid other dealers. They are very keen business men in that town, and they know they have to deliver the right kind of goods at the right prices in order to get the business. That does not apply only to motor cars.

Mr. POWER: I should like to make this suggestion to the minister: recently the government decided on a policy somewhat different from that which it followed two years ago with regard to clearances of liquor, a question which has been discussed in the house at some length. It appears that the government has continued in its employ as a solicitor, Mr. Rowell, who is, I am sure, not sympathetic with the government in its praiseworthy and patriotic stand in connection with liquor clearances. I should like to enter into a discussion in committee with the minister in regard to the expense account of Mr. Rowell. I would point out to him that in view of the overwhelming sentiment of this house and of this country it is not the right thing for the minister to have in his employ someone who is not wholeheartedly in sympathy with him on this policy, and I would ask him if he will seriously consider employing other counsel than Mr. Rowell. But first I should like to know what he cost the country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think you can get reasonable support for that suggestion over here.

Mr. POWER: That is what I am looking for. I should like to know just how much this country has spent on Mr. Rowell in prosecuting the cases which have arisen out of the customs investigation.

Mr. EULER: I do not quite follow my hon. friend when he says that Mr. Rowell is not in sympathy with the policy of the department. That may apply to clearances of liquor, but Mr. Rowell had nothing whatever to do with that. He was retained to conduct the cases against the breweries and distilleries against which we were proceeding for sales and gallonage taxes. On my recommendation he was employed by the Department of Justice and paid by them, for two reasons. He was employed because he had an absolutely thorough knowledge of the whole situation. He had previously been employed by the Royal Commission on Customs and Excise and knew the business of the breweries and distilleries I think better than any other lawyer in the country. That was one of the reasons we employed him. The other reason was this: he is a first-class lawyer, and while perhaps even I might not agree with Mr. Rowell in everything, he has obtained results, and that after all is what this committee and this parliament desire.

Mr. POWER: I should like to obtain a statement of those results. Can the minister give the committee a statement showing how many cases Mr. Rowell prosecuted, how many he won, and how many he lost?

Mr. EULER: We collected almost $2,500,000, as a direct result of the activities of Mr. Rowell, from the breweries and distilleries.

Mr. POWER: How many cases did he lose?

Mr. EULER: Two, and they are under appeal now.

Mr. POWER: How much did they involve?

Mr. EULER: One, $600,000 and the other about $300,000.

Mr. POWER: He wins about $2,500,000 and loses about $1,000,000. A lot of lawyers can do that.

Mr. EULER: We already have collected about $2,500,000, and I think we will collect the other $900,000 as well.

Mr. POWER: Is the minister speaking from personal sympathy or from legal knowledge? Mr. Rowell has received large fees from this government, and I think we should be able to receive a report on his activities.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How much has he received?

Mr. POWER: I do not know; that is what I want to know, and I think we are entitled to know just how much. I think the minister ought to get that somewhere.

Mr. EULER: I would suggest to my hon. friend that he put that question on the order paper. In any event the cases are conducted by the Department of Justice and not by the Department of National Revenue, and Mr. Rowell's fees are paid by the Department of Justice.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Speaking of the same gentleman, Mr. Rowell, I should like to inquire from the minister if it is true that a certain gentleman wanted to give evidence to this solicitor and that he followed him around to several places? I am referring to Mr. James Cooper, of Windsor, who wanted to give certain evidence to Mr. Rowell, and Mr. Rowell never took his evidence. Does the minister know about that case?

Mr. EULER: I have no knowledge of that whatever.

Mr. CANTLEY: I asked some questions the other evening regarding the port of Pugwash. What was the officer there paid?

Mr. EULER: He was paid $560 per annum.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister be good enough to let me know whether he has a shipping master at that port?

Mr. EULER: I have not that information.

Mr. CANTLEY: I should judge that there is not one there, and in that case I would ask what is to be done when a foreign vessel arrives at that port. Her crew has to be paid off, and before she sails the master has to sign on another crew. That can only be done before a shipping master. Is it a fact that there is no shipping master nearer than Pictou? If that be so, is it not a fact that the master of the ship must take his crew to Pictou and there get them discharged before a shipping master?

Mr. EULER: Only four foreign vessels arrived at that port in the whole year.

Mr. CANTLEY: Suppose there was only one. The point is how can that work be done?

Mr. EULER: The postmaster is a customs officer and can do it.

Mr. CANTLEY: The postmaster is not a shipping master.

Mr. EULER: Even if it were necessary to go to another point, I do not think we would be justified in keeping open that port for the sake of four vessels that depart in a year.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think there have been more than four.

Mr. EULER: No, I have the figures.

Mr. CANTLEY: How many sailing vessels and how many steamers?

Mr. EULER: The statement I have shows that four foreign vessels arrived. I do not know whether they were sailing vessels or steamers.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister gave me a list of seventeen other vessels that were using the port.

Mr. EULER: Those were coasting vessels that departed to the number of seventeen.

Mr. CANTLEY: How can you sign off the crew without going before a shipping master?

Mr. EULER: They do not need clearances at all.

Mr. CANTLEY: Foreign vessels do.

Mr. EULER: Only four foreign vessels departed.

Mr. CANTLEY: Suppose there are four; are you going to compel the masters of those four foreign vessels to take their crews to Pictou, which is the nearest port where there is a shipping master, to have them signed off and have another crew signed on there?

Mr. EULER: I really think it would hardly be justifiable to keep open the port and pay the expenses of an official in order to serve the needs of four vessels. It might result in a little inconvenience and expense to the owners of these four vessels, but it seems to me a very good case has been made out for the abolition of the port by my hon. friend's argument.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not the only argument.

Mr. EULER: It is not a very strong argument.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. CANTLEY: It is only part of my argument. This port has been open for seventy-five years or more. The minister closes it, and he admits that the whole saving is only four or five hundred dollars a year. To have that port open is some convenience to the people of that district apart from signing on and signing off crews. We talk of encouraging foreign trade, but you are not encouraging foreign trade very much under those conditions.

Mr. EULER: I have just been informed that the crews can be sworn on before a justice of the peace. I am not very familiar with the shipping business or with marine law, but my hon. friend will know whether that is a fair explanation.

Mr. CANTLEY: If that is so, it is something that I never knew before, and I doubt the statement very much.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): I am in the shipping business and I have sworn on crews before a justice of the peace.

Mr. CANTLEY: Sailors on foreign ships?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think you had better revise your information. You may do it on the lakes; you do not do it in the maritimes.

Mr. FRASER: In this return the minister submits two orders in council as his authority for paying these premiums, one dated September 9, 1898, and the other May 6, 1907. What sections of the act give authority for these orders in council?

Mr. EULER: I am afraid my hon. friend hardly expects me to answer that question.

Mr. FRASER: I certainly do not; but will the minister get the answer for me?

Mr. EULER: I shall be glad to.

Mr. POWER: To revert again to Mr. Rowell, I do not wish the committee—

Mr. CANTLEY: Hit him again.

Mr. POWER: No. I do not wish the committee to be under the impression for one moment that I have not the highest opinion of Mr. Rowell as a solicitor and as a citizen. But I do object to his being employed by the government; first of all, because I do not think he is in sympathy with its policy; and secondly, because I do not think—

Mr. BENNETT: What is the policy, may I ask?

Mr. POWER: The policy of the government with regard to the clearance of liquor.

Mr. EULER: He has nothing to do with that.

Mr. POWER: He has a lot to do with it. I would not have a man in my employ who did not agree with me all the way.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the trouble with the harbour commission of Quebec.

Mr. POWER: It is a pretty good harbour commission.

Mr. BENNETT: On that principle.

Mr. POWER: The difficulty is that here is a question which is being violently agitated in public, and one of the most important men working for the department is absolutely out of sympathy with the minister.

Mr. EULER: Not at all.

Mr. POWER: On that question he is. Surely you are not going to tell me that Mr. Rowell has changed! If he has I will apologize. As a lawyer he has a perfect right to his personal opinion on almost anything, but on matters connected with the business for which he is employed he should, at any rate ostensibly, support the policy of the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I think he supports the government.

Mr. KAISER: What is the policy of the government?

Mr. POWER: There is another reason. As I said before, I believe Mr. Rowell to be a very upright, honest man, but personally he has not the sympathy of a large portion of our population. He managed to alienate it some time ago, and he has never been able to get it back. I wish to warn the minister that there is a possibility that if he continues in the good graces of the minister he may, as it is rumoured in the public press, be appointed as the Canadian arbitrator on the I'm Alone case. I want to tell the minister if that is so—

Mr. BENNETT: He will be alone.

Mr. POWER: Yes, he will be alone; and I hope he finds against us because we will deserve it.

Mr. KAISER: Would the hon. member be kind enough to tell us what is this government's policy in regard to clearances?

Mr. POWER: I am sure I don't know.

Mr. QUINN: May we expect any further consideration of the claim of Charles F. Longley in connection with the Admiral Beatty matter? The minister is thoroughly with it as are nearly all hon. members, because it was discussed here last session. Briefly, this is the case. Longley chartered this vessel to a native of France to carry a cargo of liquor from St. Pierre Miquelon to Nassau. Off the Nova Scotia coast she became disabled, sprang a leak, and had to put into Halifax, where some repairs were made. She left again and was only a hundred miles off shore when she had rudder trouble and again had to seek shelter. Because of some five small flasks of liquor being carried ashore on the persons of the crew, the vessel was seized and held under detention for fourteen months until the trial took place before Mr. Justice A. K. Maclean of the Exchequer court. He held:

> I am therefore of the opinion that the seizure of the Admiral Beatty and her cargo has not been justified, and they should be discharged from the custody of the crown and delivered to their owners, and free of any charges or expense incident to the detention.

Longley claimed that his vessel became unseaworthy because of her detention in the port of Shelburne for fourteen months in all kinds of weather. Her sails became rotten, her chains rusty, her deck planks unsound, and her bulwarks were stove in by a storm that took place shortly before she was released. I understand there was a delay of three or four weeks after the vessel was discharged before Mr. Longley could take possession of her because of his financial condition.

I submit in view of the facts of the case, with which the minister is fully familiar, that some compensation should be paid to Mr. Longley because of what is practically the loss of his vessel. Following the decision of Mr. Justice Maclean on August 16, 1927, the vessel was discharged, and Mr. Longley took delivery the following October. But she has been laid up ever since, unfit for any use whatever. As a result of the loss of his vessel Mr. Longley today is practically penniless. He has a claim for damages against the department of which up to the present he has been unable to recover a dollar. The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) has mentioned a gentleman who has been employed by this department and treated very generously. According to the last record obtainable he had received over $50,000 for nine months' legal services. If the department can treat a gentleman of the legal profession so generously, the minister ought at least to compensate Mr. Longley for the loss of his vessel.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, this matter was very fully discussed last session, and I am not going into the details again. Perhaps I might give one of the reasons which determined us not to grant the request, and that is that the damage to the vessel was occasioned after notice had been given to the owner to remove it from the dock. He did not do so, a storm came up, and damage resulted. There may have been some other damage, but the judge did not in any sense hold the department responsible. Under all the circumstances I am afraid that while I have a good deal of sympathy for my hon. friend's constituent, I cannot hold out a great deal of hope at the moment that we will change our course of action as decided upon at that time.

Mr. CANTLEY: I was one of those who discussed this matter last session. The minister's statement is only partly correct. The damage resulting to the bulwarks of the vessel I will admit probably occurred as the minister has suggested, but the main damage was occasioned during the long period that she was held by the department without any effort whatever being made to protect her from such damage as must result to any vessel exposed throughout the summer, winter, spring and autumn. The sails were rotted, a lot of the deck planking was damaged, the spars were in bad shape, the standing rigging was practically worn out and the running rigging was gone completely. All that occurred prior to the time when the vessel was supposed to be redelivered to the owner. Surely in these circumstances the minister will not maintain that his department is not responsible or that the unfortunate owner of the vessel is not entitled to some compensation. That is not reasonable, it is not British justice, and I should expect something very much better from the minister, knowing what I do of him, than to offer such a suggestion as he has made to-night.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps my hon. friend forgets that the case was tried in the exchequer court, whose decision freed the department of liability. In the face of that he will realize that it would be pretty difficult for the department to pay money by way of damages when the court had decided that we were not liable. However, I will say this to him. If Mr. Longley decides to appeal from that decision we will certainly not put any barrier in his way, and if the appeal should be successful I should be glad to have him recompensed.

Mr. QUINN: Does the minister realize the position Mr. Longley is in? The man is practically penniless to-day and is not able to make an appeal. He cannot do anything to recover damages. He is not in a position to appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Maclean. I showed the minister the report of a master mariner and marine surveyor as to the condition of the vessel about the time she was delivered to the owner. He said that the standing rigging was worn out, the running rigging was gone and the whole vessel in exceedingly bad shape. This vessel was held under seizure by the department for fourteen months, and I submit that it should have been taken proper care of while in detention. If the vessel was not delivered to the owner in the same good order and condition, ordinary wear and tear excepted, as she was in prior to her detention, then I claim that the department should recompense this man for the damage sustained. In addition to that, I have affidavits from two other master mariners, sworn to before notaries public in the province of Nova Scotia, all in the same strain. These men declare that the vessel is absolutely unfit for going to sea. I submit that some compensation should be given to Mr. Longley because of the carelessness of the department while the vessel was in their hands.

Item agreed to.

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Mines Branch

For investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, expenses of testing and reasearch laboratories, investigations by Dominion Fuel Board, including salaries and all other expenses, $257,000.

For operation of peat bog at Alfred, Ontario, $25,000.

For publications, English and French, purchase of books, laboratory supplies, instruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $45,000.

For transportation charges from outlying provinces on ore shipments which may be sent to the ore dressing plant of the Mines branch at Ottawa for testing purposes, under regulations approved by the Minister of Mines, $1,000.

To compensate J. H. Fortune for quarters, fuel, light and water supplied him as resident caretaker of the Mines branch building, Sussex St., vacated because of the necessity of utilizing the caretaker's quarters for storage and laboratory space, $400.

Appropriation not required for 1929-30.—Total, $328,400.

Mr. WHITE (London): Will the minister make a statement with regard to the peat bog at Alfred?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): We have been operating at Alfred for some years. Last year we completed the machinery and put the plant in operation but did not have a very successful season, there having been so much wet weather. The quantities depend very largely on the extent of dry weather there is, becauses the peat is air-dried on the ground. We made about six thousand tons last year and have a considerable quantity still on hand.

Mr. WHITE (London): What is the cost per ton?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The estimated cost is $3.50. We have had to buy a considerable amount of machinery and to pay the cost of replacements and adjustments in machinery, and this runs into a good deal of money. We have spent $87,000 on capital account since taking the plant over from Peat Fuels Limited and equipping it. We had an agreement with Peat Fuels Limited whereby, at the expiry of the lease executed, they were to take the plant back at the amount expended by us, and the arrangement included the provision that if the department and Peat Fuels Limited did not agree the matter should be submitted to the exchequer court. We find ourselves in that position to-day: We cannot come to an agreement as to the price they are to pay us and the question is being referred to the exchequer court for adjustment. When it is settled Peat Fuels Limited will come into possession of the plant and resume operations.

Mr. GEARY: Have you produced peat fuel?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; we have a little more than four thousand tons on hand, having produced six thousand tons last year.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the fuel sold for?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is sold at $3.50 but I am not sure whether that includes loading charges.

Mr. ADSHEAD: That is what it costs; but what do you get for it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a reasonable cost of production.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I am not asking that; I want to know what you sell it for.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Peat Fuels Limited were the selling agents and I believe they retailed it in Montreal at about $10.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But the department gets nothing back. It costs us $3.50 to produce the fuel, and what do we get back?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We sold outright at $3.50.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What did it cost to produce?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Just about that amount.

Mr. BENNETT: There was a loss, was there not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the total loss?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That will be difficult to estimate until the courts decide what amount we are entitled to receive from the company.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think up to the beginning of last year we lost about $350,000, because we have been playing with this project for about twenty-one years. Last year the minister got $50,000 from parliament for this purpose and made some arrangement with somebody whom he referrs to as Peat-Fuels Limited, but apparently he got into trouble with them and he can now neither hold on nor let go. And so we are asked for $25,000 more after having spent $350,000 already with absolutely nothing to show for it. Are those not the facts?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Investigations of this character cannot be carried out for nothing, and I think I am safe in making the statement that this plant is capable of turning out a maximum of 20,000 tons in a good year, but to be on the safe side we will say it will average 15,000 tons annually. We have had to make trials and test out the machinery; as a matter of fact we have had to develop new machinery, because so far as I know there is no similar plant operating anywhere. This machinery is designed as a labour saving device for the manufacture of peat fuel. In the villages surrounding that plant there is a very large quantity of hardwood used for domestic fuel, for which use this peat fuel is adapted, and in my opinion every ton of the output of that plant can be sold in the immediate vicinity without shipping a single ton to Montreal. I frankly admit that, like other people who enter into agreements, we sometimes reach the place where we have to ask the courts to make a decision as to the difference between us, and that is the case in this instance.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the real difference?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To be quite frank, I have never had a definite offer from Peat Fuels Limited as to what they are willing to pay. I have had tentative offers of $40,000, but we have spent $87,000 on capital account and we think we should recover that amount, or at least the greater part of it. The only thing for me to do was to apply the remedy contained in the agreement and submit the question to the exchequer court for a decision, I may say it is not our intention to operate that plant this year, and we will not require the money which is included in this item.

Mr. BENNETT: Then take it out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was the $50,000 voted last year all spent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I find that we will require $600 for picking up the fuel still on the bog; $3,000 for handling the peat in stock;; $2,000 for harvesting the humus, which is ground peat now used on greens on golf courses, and $5,000 for selling expenses, so apparently I was rather hasty in saying we would not require this money. We will need approximately this sum to finish selling the peat already on hand in order to realize on it.

Mr. CANTLEY: I venture to say that the minister will not get back the amount of money he proposes to spend this year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I will get back this money.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister has said something to that effect every year when this matter has been under discussion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): While we are experimenting with machinery and putting in new machinery, of necessity it will have to be charged to capital account, but this amount is simply to dispose of the material on hand and realize what we can from it.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister and his predecessors have been coming to parliament year after year in connection with this matter. I have here a report issued in 1925 which contains statements as to the amount of peat handled in the previous year, the amount that was to be handled the next year, the type of machinery being replaced by other machinery and so on. The real fact is that we have spent $350,000 or more, as I said, before, and got nowhere. In former years I have dealt with this matter at some length and pointed out that as a commercial proposition, peat fuel is not in the class of fuel that can be dealt with mechanically. There are about 4,000,000 people in Ireland and they consume about 8,000,000 tons of peat; that supply is obtained by peasants spading it out in the spring months, stacking it up to dry and using it during the ensuing eleven or twelve months of the year. It is not a mechanical proposition at all but a domestic one. As the minister knows, the water content of peat is very high. In discussing this question on a former occasion the minister referred to the difficulty of drying peat in this country particularly in the summer months, because of the moisture in the air. Unfortunately that is true; there is much more moisture in the air in warm weather than is the case in cold weather. When the temperature is below zero there is no moisture in the air at all; it is completely dried out, but during the summer months the moisture content is very high and it is much higher on some days than on others. That affects the water absorbed by the peat just as a sponge absorbs water; the combined moisture cannot be abstracted by solar heat or any other kind of heat. I believe the minister is aware of that fact; that is the great difficulty and it is one reason why peat has a very low fuel value.

There are three difficulties in connection with peat; the first is its low thermal value; the second is its bulk and the third is its friability and the difficulty of handling it without reducing it to powder. Why the minister continues to spend large sums of money year after year in the face of all that has been spent and the continued failures in connection with this project is something I am at a loss to understand. Last year, when we appropriated $50,000 for this purpose, I thought we had heard the last of this unfortunate enterprise which has dragged on for more than twenty years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): These experiments usually result in the discovery of a process that will be beneficial to the community. I only need cite the expenditure of $1,000,000 at Bienfait by the government which we succeeded. Apparently there was no result from that expenditure but to-day, following that experiment, a splendid plant is being established there by British capital for the manufacturing of low grade fuel and the making of briquettes. All I can say for the peat proposition is that I inherited it along with the Bienfait project. My hon. friend is quite correct when he says he has objected to the peat experiments during all these years. However, I repeat that this plant is capable of turning out in the neighbourhood of 15,000 tons annually, and in competition with hard wood—of course it is not being offered in competition with coal—it is a cheaper fuel for the people of the locality in which this particular bog is situated. We have proved that it cannot be shipped long distances and that it is a fuel which cannot be handled frequently; it must be handled very rapidly from the drying up to the point of consumption. Therefore, I suggest that we must dispose of what we have manufactured already in the immediate vicinity. I may say that a private company is operating at St. Hyacinthe now and we are not assisting them in any way; all I am asking for is an amount to permit of the present fuel being disposed of. We are awaiting the decision of the court as to what amount is to be fixed for Peat Fuels Limited.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am glad the minister has admitted as many facts as he has, because it is a distinct change from the position he took two or there years ago. How much peat is actually on the ground?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): About four thousand tons.

Mr. CANTLEY: How much is the minister asking for to dispose of that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): $23,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: To sell four thousand tons of peat which is actually upon the ground?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but my hon. friend will bear in mind that we expect to recover a certain amount. The Ontario government has agreed to put in $10,000, and it is necessary to grade and gravel about two miles of road in order to get to the main highway with our trucks. Owing to weather conditions it was impossible to do that last year; all the peat which was marketed had to be marketed in carload lots in Montreal, and we discovered that that is not a profitable way to handle this commodity. It should sell at about $8 per ton, so my hon. friend will be able to see what amount we expect to recover.

Mr. CANTLEY: If the hon. minister gets $10,000 from the Ontario government he is still spending $12,000 to handle four thousand tons of peat.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We estimate that it will take in the neighbourhood of $7,000 to repair the road. As this road is in the province, we have asked the Ontario government whether or not they will consider the repairs as being part of their contribution to this experiment.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. CANTLEY: That does not improve it very much, because when the small pile of peat is gone the road would be of no value. The minister referred to some experiments carried on in New Brunswick.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I did not.

Mr. CANTLEY: If not—where?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is a new plant going into operation at St. Hyacinthe.

Mr. CANTLEY: This peat has some value. It is an excellent absorbent and in the powdered form it has a small sale, but the quantity bought and sold for that purpose is comparatively small. From what the minister has said I would judge that he is through with the peat experiment. When the minister was referring last year to an experiment in the west he stated that he had thrown away a million dollars.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not say that we had thrown away a million dollars.

Mr. CANTLEY: You said something which was pretty close to that. The minister's words were as follows:

> Notwithstanding the fact that we have spent $1,000,000 of good hard cash of this Dominion on that experiment, which was said to be a failure—

I understand that that experiment has been taken over by another concern and there is some difficulty in connection with that transaction.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In what way?

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand there has been some misunderstanding with the people who have taken it over.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have nothing to do with them.

Mr. CANTLEY: Under what conditions was the plant taken over?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The coal was being purchased from the Western Dominion Collieries, and a large proportion of the money invested in those collieries was English money. Mr. Sutherland, who was in charge, has since died but the mine is still controlled by the same company. They have decided to erect a plant at Bienfait upon the premises occupied by the original experimental plant, erected by the Lignite Utilization Board. We are not connected with the matter in any way except that they hope to come under the provisions of the domestic fuels act, while we do not believe that they can come within the provisions of that act.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand that that plant was erected for the purpose of briquetting brown coal; is that the fact?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is Canadian lignite; I do not know whether you would call it brown coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, it is the same thing. I do not see any possibility of their coming within the provisions of the coking act because briquetting and coking are two totally different operations and there is no connection between them. There has been a considerable amount of correspondence between the department and these people.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is very difficult for me to see just how they can come under the provisions of the act, but they have a high temperature carbonization plant through which the coal is put before it is briquetted.

Mr. CANTLEY: Their idea is simply to heat the coal to a temperature of four or five hundred degrees in order to make it plastic by liberating some of the oils and tarry substances in the hope that thereby they will then be enabled to briquette it. Whether that will actually work out in practice remains to be seen, but that is beside the question. If those people are prepared to spend their own money in making that experiment, I have no objection, and I do not think the minister will object. I should like to call the attention of the house and of the minister to some of the activities of the mining department. A good many publications were issued—

The CHAIRMAN: It is now eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house, I beg leave to present the sixteenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Tuesday, June 11, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): On the orders of the day yesterday the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) referred to a press report from Great Britain to the effect that the Prime Minister of Great Britain intended meeting the President of the United States to discuss disarmament matters and asked if I had received any information with respect to the matter. I may say to my hon. friend that my information is restricted to the reports which he himself has seen in the papers.

IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. K. ESLING (West Kootenay): In view of the frequent appeals made to the government last year, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to restrict the importation at glut prices of surplus United States strawberries and other fruit and farm and poultry produce during the approaching marketing season of the Canadian producer.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government will endeavour to deal with each situation as it arises.

PROPOSED CHIGNECTO CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): I would ask the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Robb) if he would answer the question I asked on Friday last with respect to surveys and investigations into the proposed canal across the isthmus of Chignecto.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals): I had quite forgotten that. I have a memorandum upon it in my office, and I will send for it and give it to my hon. friend.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BILL FOR THE RELIEF OF RUTH ELIZABETH GREENE

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): With the leave of the house I move:

That pursuant to standing order 111, Bill No. 322 (Letter K8 from the senate) intituled: "An Act for the relief of Ruth Elizabeth Greene", the preamble of which was reported as not proven by the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, be placed on the order paper for consideration in committee of the whole at eight o'clock p.m. this day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GLEN: This bill was remitted to the private bills committee. I had the opportunity of reading the evidence before the bill went to the committee, and I find that there were four witnesses in support of the petition including the petitioner herself, that is the wife, two investigators and one other party—four in all. The petition was undefended. No appearance was made for or on behalf of the respondent. The evidence is perfectly clear that adultery had been committed, and the only objection that could possibly be taken was taken by some that there might have been connivance on the part of the petitioner. I felt then that the evidence was so clear, and so many cases of a like nature had already passed through the private bills committee, that there was no reason that could possibly be adduced by anyone to prevent the passage of that bill. A vote was taken in the committee and the preamble of the bill was not proved, and the bill was thrown out. I am now making this motion in order that the case may be brought to the attention of the house to-night for further consideration. If this action were not taken I feel that an extreme hardship would be placed on one individual, according to the evidence, which is much stronger than in many other cases that I have read, and I therefore ask for the consent of the house to move this motion in order that the bill may be discussed this evening.

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, this bill came before the private bills committee of the House of Commons and was discussed there for the best part of an hour. A vote was taken in committee and with the exception of one voice it was unanimously decided to throw this bill out. The principal objection taken to the bill was that the petitioner in this case had been supported by evidence of people who are making a business of trading in divorces. That is the sum total of it. Further, it was established that the petitioner in the case was aware of what was going on—she admits that in her own evidence—and could have prevented what was going on but evidently did not want to. It was quite plain that she was not very particular, and she was conniving with people who are making a business of securing divorces and who have appeared before the divorce committee in quite a few cases. It further developed that the principal witness was a friend of the man who was the respondent, and that he deliberately laid a plot to catch him. There was a plant to secure the evidence for this divorce, and that is the reason why the bill was thrown out. I do not see any reason for bringing it up again and wasting the time of the house upon it any longer.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale): I hope the house will lose no time on this matter. Early last week this bill came before the private bills committee, and we discussed it for half an hour and then adjourned to allow both the respondent and the petitioner to be represented by counsel.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this matter can only be dealt with by unanimous consent and that as there is not unanimous consent further discussion is unnecessary and not in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This is a private bill. I think that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is misinformed.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a motion to bring the bill before the house to-night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: No notice is necessary.

Mr. BENNETT: Notice is necessary to discuss it to-night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the motion is quite in order.

Mr. SPENCE: This bill was discussed for an hour in the private bills committee and a vote was taken. The majority objected to the bill being reported to the house and it was thrown out. As the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) has said, the chief witness in this case is a man without a reputation, a man who worked a frame-up on the respondent in this case, hired rooms in the King Edward hotel, provided two women and booze, and they were all drinking together when he telephoned to his accomplice, to a man who has appeared in fifty-three cases of divorce before the House of Commons committee this year. This same witness has been co-respondent in two other cases I am told. This is a man who allows himself to be used as co-respondent and will take part in a frame-up against a man with whom he is friendly. He swore that he was a traveller and had to have these rooms in the King Edward hotel, but I know that he lives in Toronto and has a wife and family and he ought to be living with them. Then just before my friend the respondent—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPENCE: There is nothing to laugh about. Just before the respondent knew that he had been framed he met this witness at the bank. The latter wanted to cash a cheque and asked the respondent: "Will you identify me?" The bank manager said to the respondent, "The only thing you can do is to endorse the cheque." The witness issued a cheque on a bank in Chicago and later it came back marked "No account." That is the character of the witness whose evidence is being relied upon in this particular case. He had described himself to the respondent as a travelling salesman for a system of advertising with headquarters in Chicago. When the cheque came back as I have described the man was arrested, and in the police court he stated that he was a private detective. So in one case he was a traveller, in the other a private detective. In my opinion we should not grant a divorce on the evidence of such a man.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that your ruling is not a correct one, and I stand by what my leader has said in regard to it. Personally, I do not like divorces, but as a rule when the private bills committee reports in favour of a divorce bill the house passes it. However, in this case that committee has reported that the preamble has not been proven and we should support the committee. Standing order 111, to be found at page 277 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, deals with such a case. In the comment on this rule contained in paragraph 890 I find the following:

Consequently the correct procedure in all analogous cases—

That is, where the committee has reported that the preamble has not been proved:

—is for the house to give the committee instructions which will enable it to consider the whole question again.

The hon. gentleman has moved that this bill be considered by the committee of the whole this evening. The proper motion to make would be that the bill be referred back to the committee on private bills for further consideration. Therefore as it is not on the order paper to-day, I submit with all respect, Mr. Speaker, that the motion is out of order and cannot be proceeded with except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any use my entering into discussion of the merits of this case. I am perfectly satisfied in my own opinion that an injustice has been done to the petitioner in view of the evidence submitted.

Mr. CAHAN: But this is a point of order.

Mr. GLEN: Just a moment. I leave it to anyone on the other side of the house who wishes to review the evidence dispassionately and without prejudice to say whether or not an injustice has been done to the petitioner. But in view of the fact that there has to be unanimous consent, and there is opposition to my motion, with the consent of the house I beg to withdraw the motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Shall the hon. gentleman have leave to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion withdrawn.

SUPPLY—FISCAL POLICY

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. Minister of Finance made his original motion to go into committee of supply much has transpired on this continent that should give this parliament occasion to pause and consider the position of Canada, and I avail myself of the motion that has now been made to discuss the situation as I see it, hoping that we may be able to obtain some indication from the administration as to what it proposes to do to meet a crisis in our economic history.

That it is not seemly to discuss the domestic policies of another country goes without saying, but to that general rule there are two exceptions. The first exception is, that if we have treaty obligations that are affected we are bound to discuss them. The second is, that if the legislation which is in process of being passed, or has been passed, by a friendly nation does directly affect this country, and it has been pointed out during the discussions antecedent to the passing of the legislation that it was so intended, then obviously this parliament should discuss it.

I need hardly point out that with regard to the action of congress we have no treaty obligations to be respected or discussed; but with regard to the second proposition that I have submitted to those of us who have read the speeches of the public men of the United States delivered last fall, not only of those who were candidates for high office but of those who supported them in their political campaign, will recall that in many instances it was declared to be the intention of the Republican party if it came into power to enact such legislation as would have the effect of preventing the importation from Canada into the United States of certain of our products that would enter into competition with their own. Under the circumstances it is therefore quite clear that a discussion of the domestic policies of the great republic becomes important and essential because of the fact that they were intended to, and do in fact, adversely affect the interests of this Dominion.

Having regard to what I have referred to, may I point out that in 1921 when the emergency tariff was enacted by congress it had an immediate adverse effect upon the interests of Canada, and that when the Fordney-McCumber tariff was put into force in 1922 its effects became apparent to every one. The emergency tariff very injuriously affected the interests of this country as a whole, particularly the farming interests, and if hon. members will look at the Commercial Intelligence Journal, published on the 25th of May of this year under the auspices of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, they will find set out exports from Canada to the United States of a number of commodities such as are produced on Canadian farms or manufactured directly from such farm products. The figures given are for the month of April, 1921, 1922, 1928 and 1929, and for seven months ended April for the same years, with the United States tariff rates in force on such dates. It will be observed that during the seven months ending April, 1921, this country sold to the United States cattle, horses, poultry and sheep, fruits, grains, grain products, meats, milk and milk products, seeds, vegetables, and miscellaneous products such as eggs, hay, maple sugar, tallow and wool, valued at $138,845,815. The next year, 1922, exports of the same class of live stock and farm products had fallen to a value of $32,000,000, in 1928 they rose to $39,000,000 and in 1929 they declined in value to $33,000,000, using round figures. It will therefore be observed that the direct result of the Fordney-McCumber tariff and the emergency tariff that preceded it was to decrease the value of our exports of farm products to the United States in a seven-months period by over $100,000,000. That is a tremendous sum of money with respect to live stock and farm products, and the result is directly attributable to changes in tariffs by the United States. These changes will be found set out at page 785 of the journal to which I have referred, and it will be observed there are a large number of free items; in the first column there are the emergency tariff rates on such exports and in another column the Fordney-McCumber tariff as it now stands.

Now the loss of $100,000,000 worth of exports from the farms of this country was reflected in the increased prosperity of the farmers of the United States, who produced the products that had formerly been imported into that country. They were no longer subject to the competition of $100,000,000 of Canadian live stock and farm products, and to that extent they supplied the requirements of their own people which theretofore had been supplied by Canadian ranchers, farmers and artisans. That, I think, is abundantly clear. Need I point out that the Fordney-McCumber tariff also contained a provision whereby the President of the United States was enabled after inquiry to increase the existing tariff rates to any extent not exceeding 50 per cent; and if he found that this was not ample to protect the agricultural and other interests that were affected he had power to fix arbitrarily, after inquiry, the price of imported articles upon which duty should be computed, somewhat similar to the provision we made in our customs tariff, and to which I shall presently refer, in connection with fruit and vegetables and matters of that kind. Under these circumstances, we are confronted with the fact that this government, in power in 1922, as it still is, there having been an interim in which it was not, was called upon to meet a situation which imperilled Canadian trade with respect to agricultural products to the extent of over $100,000,000 per annum. I will not take up the time of the house this morning to review the imports and exports to the United States, but I will point out that during the last six or seven years we have been able by slow degrees to get back somewhat to the condition we were in before this tariff was enacted against us. But the adverse balance of trade between the United States and Canada still continues, and while for the year ended March 31 we bought nearly $900,000,000 worth of goods from the United States, we were able to sell them only $500,000,000; and that $500,000,000 worth of goods was made up largely of three items: First, paper and paper products; secondly, unmanufactured lumber and lumber products; and, thirdly, minerals and mineral products. These three items made up in a large way what we sold to the United States in our endeavour to pay for the goods purchased from that country and thus to reduce the adverse balance of trade.

Now we ask ourselves at the very threshold of this discussion: What did this government do to meet that situation? What did the government of Canada do in 1922 to meet a situation which destroyed $100,000,000 per annum of the export trade of this country? That would be a pertinent question to ask at any time; it is doubly pertinent at this time for reasons that are apparent to us all. I find that the government of that day, speaking through the Minister of Finance in 1923, after the Fordney-McCumber tariff had been enacted, thus represented their position. The Right Hon. Mr. Fielding said:

I believe I am warranted in saying that to-day there is no class of the Canadian people who do not recognize that it is of the highest desirability that we should have proper trade relations with the United States. The desire of Canada to make a friendly treaty with the United States ought to be well known, and I think it is well known. As to the willingness of Canada to have a measure of reciprocity between the two countries there ought to be no question. A minister of this government went to Washington and informed the government and the congressional leaders of Canada's willingness to enter into negotiations for another reciprocity treaty. They know our willingness in this regard, and I think it is well we should say it again. The position of our government in the matter, therefore, is well known. In 1879 when the national policy, so-called, was framed, there was what was called a standing offer to the United States, and the United States had notice of how Canada would like to deal with them. I want to adopt the principle of that, though not the details of it. I am proposing that we shall put into our tariff laws to-day a declaration of our readiness and our willingness to make an arrangement with the United States whenever they are ready to meet us on fair terms. I propose to put it in this clause:

The governor in council may authorize any minister of the crown to enter into negotiations with any authorized representative of the government of the United States with a view to the making of a commercial agreement between the two countries on terms that may be deemed mutually beneficial. Any agreement so made shall be subject to the approval of the parliament of Canada.

This is a general indication of our willingness to make a commercial treaty with our neighbours. We realize, however, that if this suggestion on our part should meet with favourable consideration, considerable time would have to elapse before an agreement could be made and brought into effect. It would require action by congress. Congress only could deal with the matter in that broad way. Is there not some other way in which the desired end, in part at least, could be reached? Can we do nothing in the meantime? Possibly we can.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Under the present law of the United States there is a privilege granted to the president of the United States to make certain reductions if he likes to do so. He may do that without waiting for congress, and, therefore, we propose to insert this clause, having relation to that particular matter:

If the president of the United States, under authority of the United States' tariff act of 1922, determines to reduce by fifty per cent the duties imposed by such act on the following articles, that is to say:

Cattle, wheat, wheat flour, oats, barley, potatoes, onions, turnips, hay, fish as enumerated in paragraphs 717, 718, 719 and 720 of the said tariff act of 1920, the governor in council may by order in council make such reductions of duties on such articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

The previous paragraph makes a standing offer of reciprocity which we know can only be adopted by congress. This paragraph appeals to the president, or intimates to the president, that if he is prepared to exercise the power which the congress has given to him by way of reduction, we are prepared to meet him on similar terms. I do not know that any good will come from it. I think we are doing right to place on record our desire and determination to meet our American friends on fair terms, if they will meet us.

That was the action taken by the government of that day, speaking through the Minister of Finance, in connection with these matters: first, an offer of reciprocity coupled with a provision that a minister might be appointed to go to Washington to negotiate a treaty if that were thought desirable—though so far as I can ascertain from the records no such minister was ever appointed; and, secondly, a provision whereby the government of this country, by order in council, might reduce the duties upon American products named and specified if the United States president did the same with respect to Canadian products. What came of that? Nothing; for let me point out that, far from that appeal having had any effect on the President of the United States, the exact opposite is the fact. It will be observed that under the elastic provisions of the tariff to which I refered a few moments ago, the President of the United States was given large powers which, as I have indicated, he has seen fit to exercise, increasing by proclamation the duties upon Canadian products since the tariff of 1922 was enacted in that country. And the effect of that has been to make it more difficult still for Canadian products to find access to the United States. Perhaps I might mention some of these products in order that they may be recalled to the minds of the members of this house.

When the emergency tariff was enacted in 1921 the duty placed on wheat was 35 cents a bushel; it was reduced in the permanent tariff of 1922 to 30 cents but was later increased by proclamation of the President of the United States, on March 7, 1924, to 42 cents per bushel. Wheat flour was similarly increased to $1.04 per hundred pounds from 78 cents; butter from 8 to 12 cents; iron from 75 cents to $1.12 per ton. And here is this singular item to which I direct the attention of the house, namely, bran shorts and mill feeds, which were subject to a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem when the final tariff measure was passed in 1922, but which the president, by proclamation on March 7, 1924, reduced by one-half, that is to say, 7½ per cent ad valorem. That indicates the settled policy of the United States; they reduced the duty on all those products which they find it necessary to import, either in a wholly raw or partly raw state, or partially processed or partially manufactured, in order that they may be made available for their own use in a completely manufactured state. So bran, shorts and feed are reduced from 15 per cent to 7½ per cent, while wheat is increased from 30 cents to 42 cents per bushel and other farm products and raw materials are similarly dealt with.

I mention this because it illustrates the policy of the administration of the United States during the years from 1922 to 1929. Having thus indicated what the effect of the Fordney-McCumber tariff has been, what this government has done in relation thereto, we ask ourselves if they did anything further to meet the situation, and we must answer yes, they did very much more. Not only did Mr. Fielding place upon record the offer to which I have referred, which offer never has been availed of, but while we in this house during the last few months have been discussing the situation with respect to our own country the new President of the United States, acting upon the report of a tariff board, has seen fit, by proclamation which becomes effective on the 14th day of this very month, to increase the duties upon various articles. This list will be found in the issue of the United States Daily of May 12-13. That proclamation increases the rate on milk from 2½ cents to 3¾ cents per gallon or the maximum executive increase of 50 per cent; it increases the duty on cream from 20 cents to 30 cents per gallon, again the maximum by executive action; the duty on window glass is increased from ⅝ cents to 1½ cents, again the maximum increase. So that, thirty days from the date of the proclamation, that new tariff law comes into force, while we Canadians have been sitting here urged by the leader of this house, the Prime Minister of Canada, not to say anything that might be provocative to the Congress of the United States.

However to continue the inquiry as to what we have done further, we find that we have met the stern rebuffs of our friends to the south by reducing the protection which was afforded to the Canadian people. We did that to such an extent that our representative at the League of Nations stood up and spoke proudly about Canada leading the world in reducing tariffs; we did it to such an extent that the Minister of Justice referred to it proudly a few days ago, and various extremists throughout the world have been lauding Canada as leading the world in reducing tariffs or tolls on imports which in effect has enabled those who do not offer to us facilities to trade in their markets to come in and dispossess our markets from our own people. Is there any doubt with respect to that? I will refer to the observations made by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) in 1924, when the greatest reductions were being made. Speaking for the government of the day in reply to Sir Henry Drayton, who was the financial critic of the then opposition, on April 14, 1924, he is reported as follows:

> One could not help but be struck this afternoon, in listening to the address of the ex-finance minister (Sir Henry Drayton) by the fact that he saw very little wrong with the budget as presented on this occasion, but it was interesting to note the desperate way in which the hon. member declared that it was the death knell of protection. One would have thought that we were listening to a funeral oration this afternoon, and I trust that it will be the death knell of protection. I do not mean to suggest for a single moment that we should vote at this time to abolish the tariff in its entirety, but rather that we should do as we have been doing —as to which my hon. friend complained so bitterly—continually amend the tariff where it bears too heavily upon the production of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to hear that the policy enunciated by the minister in 1924 is, in this year of grace 1929, still the policy of the administration, and that the administration invites the abandonment by the Canadian people of their own markets in favour of our great and powerful neighbour to the south! If there is any doubt in this connection it will be dispelled by the observations that have been addressed to a long-suffering people by the Consumers' League of this country, about which I will have something to say presently, in which they point out, doubtless on behalf of the administration, since the officers of that league so loyally support the administration, that there has been a continual lowering of the tariff by the administration.

That is how this government met the Fordney-McCumber tariff; that is how the government met the situation which deprived Canadians of $100,000,000 of trade in a single year; that is how this government met a situation which destroyed cattle men in western Canada who theretofore had free access to the markets of the United States and who were deprived of those markets by a duty ranging from a few cents a pound for cattle weighing less than 1,050 pounds to 30 per cent in some instances on horses, cattle, sheep, swine and various other varieties of live stock. I will not take the time of the house to go into the matter in detail, but that is how this government met the situation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend might mention what they got for their cattle last fall.

Mr. BENNETT: They received a good price in the Chicago markets for their cattle, and they had to pay a high rate to get them there. There are no thanks due this government for that fact.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say that they received the highest price paid for cattle in western Canada during the last twenty years or more.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman will look up the figures he will find that he overstated the case when he said the prices were better than they had been for over twenty years; he stated a fact that is not a fact.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will be glad if my hon. friend will put me right.

Mr. BENNETT: I have before me the figures from the Department of Trade and Commerce with respect to the last few years only. I know that Mr. Cross's steers brought a higher price in Chicago last year than has been the case in recent years, because of the scarcity of steers in America; the Americans bought the cattle and paid the duty, but what did this government do to help the western cattle men? They received that higher price because of the law of supply and demand and because the American buyers had to come to Canada for the cattle. If it had ended there it would not have been so very bad, but during the last ten or twelve months there have been exported from this country a larger number of dairy cows than ever before in the history of the Dominion. From one county in Nova Scotia alone three thousand cows have disappeared, and since this tariff was introduced into congress several representatives of United States firms have been going about in Ontario buying up milch cows with which to replenish the herds of the New England states, and these men say that now they can succeed in their dairy industry because they will not have competition either from Canada, from New Zealand or from anywhere else.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Are they paying for the cows?

Mr. BENNETT: They are paying for the cows with real money, not with promises such as were made in Weyburn last week by the hon. member. Before that they were paying for the milk and cream which now they are not allowed to do, because after the 14th day of this month there will be in existence a tariff which will prevent milk and cream from entering the United States; that will affect Ontario and Quebec, and other sections of this Dominion. Now, thanks to the action being taken by the congress of the United States, they will have the American market for themselves, and they are buying our cows in order to furnish the milk and cream for that market.

Mr. BROWN: We will keep on raising cows and sell them at a good price.

Mr. BENNETT: We have 101,000 fewer cows in Canada to-day than we had a few years ago, according to the figures supplied by the Department of Trade and Commerce. That is how you are raising cows, and while the United States is raising tariffs—

An hon. MEMBER: We are raising cows.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: We are not raising cows; while they are raising tariffs we are not raising cows.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: It seems to be a great joke to the hon. gentlemen when they consider the fact that we have 101,000 fewer cows this year than we had last; it seems to be a great joke to the hon. gentlemen when they realize that the American tariff on milk and cream has been increased 50 per cent; it seems to be a great joke to them that the Canadian farmers who were dependent upon the markets of New England and New York have been deprived of those markets; it seems to be a great joke to them that cows are being bought and sent to the New England states; it seems to be a great joke to them that cows are being bought in Ontario and shipped to the United States to supply milk and butter to the American people; but it is not a joke to the people of Canada. It may be a joke to the hon. gentlemen opposite but it is not a joke to our people.

Having thus indicated what the effects have been, we are now confronted with a new measure, a measure which has been introduced into the House of Representatives of the United States and forwarded to the Senate with some amendments for further consideration. Need I point out the effect of that measure? Need I point out what the effect will be upon the farmers of this country? Need I indicate that it means a prohibitive tariff against Canadian wheat, flour, cattle, sheep and potatoes? I hold in my hand the measure as it left the House of Representatives. The first two hundred pages deal with this new tariff legislation. The free list commences at page 211, but it will be seen that it is a list of products which are either raw materials or partly processed goods, or manufactured goods of which the United States has practically a producing monopoly and in which we cannot compete. Our copper, our asbestos, our gypsum —where is the hon. gentleman from Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley)?—are to be taken into the United States free from duties or import tolls and fabricated in order to give employment to a quarter, a half or a million workmen who in turn will be supplied with butter, milk and dairy products by the men who purchased cows in Canada, while the Canadians denuded of their natural resources see their raw materials flowing into the United States to be fabricated by the labour of American citizens. I commend to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) the careful perusal of that tariff measure as indicating the policy of the United States in protecting its own people.

But there was another effect. As I have said, we had a sudden decrease in the value of our goods exported to the United States. I have the detailed figures here but it would hardly be fair to take up the time of the house in repeating them. Not only did it lessen the exports from this country to the United States; not only did it improve the export of goods from the United States into Canada because of the reduction of duties, by this government until our importations from the republic have reached the large figure of $868,000,000—an increase from $515,000,000 in 1922 to $868,000,000, in 1928, or an increase of over $350,000,000—not only have we increased our imports, but we have done more than that. Our men and women, unable to find employment in this country through the operations of the Fordney-McCumber tariff, have been forced to follow our raw and partly fabricated materials to the United States to find jobs in that country which could not be obtained at home. Let us have no misunderstanding about this matter. I have the figures which have been classified by the immigration authorities of the United States of America. In the year ending June 30, 1922, only 46,465 Canadians went to the United States; the next year, as a direct result of that tariff, 115,635 people went to the south from Canada; in 1924, when the full operation of the Fordney-McCumber tariff was apparent, we sent to the United States of America 200,834 Canadians; in 1925 the migration was 102,496; in 1926 it was 91,786; in 1927 it was 81,982; and for the year ending December 31 last the figure was 73,605. Why this steady diminution in numbers during the last few years? Because we had exhausted the available source in the years which had preceded. That is the reason. Do the hon. gentlemen realize the significance of those figures? Do they realize the relation between cause and effect? We have the Fordney-McCumber tariff, the diminution of exports, to the United States, the increase of imports, the lack of employment and the increase in the exportation of men and women from this country to find occupations in another country in fabricating Canadian raw materials, which occupation was denied them at home through the action of this government. Consider the type of men and women who have been forced to leave this country. In 1922 we sent out 1,757 of the professional class; in 1923, 3,100; in 1924, 5,385; and last year the number was 3,884. In skilled labour and skilled artisans we sent out 18,730 last year and 41,345 in 1924. When we consider farm labourers, farmers, labourers, servants and draymen, the same story is told. Most of those who left the country were under the age of forty-five years.

Taking into consideration these figures and their relation to cause and effect, most Canadians hoped that confronted with a new problem affecting our very economic existence, confronted with this new tariff measure, just when we were showing signs of recovery from the Fordney-McCumber tariff, Canada would have had a clear policy outlined by the government of the day. It was thought that the leaders in the political life of the country, the leaders of the government, the leaders of the Liberal party would have indicated some policy with which to meet such a crucial situation as now confronts us. What happened? Our friends to the south merrily pursued their way, the new tariff bill was in troduced and has gone to the senate and the effect of that bill upon the cattle industry of the west will be that those who ship their cattle to Chicago will find themselves handicapped in some instances to the extent of $20 per head. What has the government done about it? What are they going to do about it?

An hon. MEMBER: What is the senate going to do?

Mr. BENNETT: It will do what it has always done, increase the tariff against us as a competing country.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What would you do about it?

Mr. BENNETT: When the electors of Saskatchewan get an opportunity once more they will indicate what they will do with respect to dairy products.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That should hold you for a minute.

Mr. BENNETT: They little know the men from the west; it would take more than that to hold the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) for even a half minute.

What has been the effect upon this country? I have indicated the effect upon the imports and the exports of materials, other than human, and upon the man and woman power of Canada. But there is another effect. It has been assumed that we are prosperous because we have such a large purchasing power by reason of our great crops. We have been fallaciously assuming, because we produced and sold $550,000,000 worth of grain and grain products during the last twelve months, between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 worth of forest products, and about $200,000,000 worth of metal and mineral products, that with such great purchasing power we are prosperous, when we are with this money buying from the people of the United States what we should to a large extent be making at home.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The situation is the other way around; we are buying because we are more prosperous.

Mr. BENNETT: We are buying because we are prosperous and we are prosperous because God has given us a great heritage and great crops. The great crops of western Canada, the great forests that can not be replaced in a generation, the mineral products that can never be replaced, have been turned into money and give us a purchasing power which is reflected in our so-called prosperity. But all that we have done is to sell our birthright in the way of mines, forests and the wealth that nature has given us from our lands, and exported them to give employment to men and women in a foreign country. Is that the kind of prosperity the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) wants? Is that the kind of prosperity he is hankering for, that he thinks will make a nation or a people, a prosperity by which we become hewers of wood and drawers of water for the great people to the south of us, shipping to them our vast wealth in raw materials partly or wholly unfabricated and then buying back the manufactured goods, so that men and women went from Canada to the United States to the number of 200,000 in one year to find employment?

An hon. MEMBER: How many came back?

Mr. BENNETT: I can say to the hon. gentleman that the figures are perfectly clear. The number that came back did not constitute 10 per cent of those who went.

Mr. MORRISSY: That was not the case in New Brunswick, my hon. friend's birthplace.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend's government, not content with dealing with our great neighbours to the south in the manner indicated have also dealt with other nations of the world. They have made trade treaties with France, Italy, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia and other countries and with Australia and New Zealand. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) used to talk about empire trade in terms that would almost make one weep at his expressions of desire to advance the interests of the empire. With a tremor in his voice he talked about the Australian treaty as a fine gesture of empire unity. But within a few weeks after it had been in force, his government imposed the dumping clause against Australian products and shut out most of the agricultural products of that country. By an order in council on the 25th day of September 1925, a few months after making the treaty, the Minister of Finance put the same treaty into force with New Zealand by order in council. That was only four days after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said in Woodstock that if the treaty worked an injustice to Canada, he would see to it that it was cancelled. What has happened? In this Dominion during the twelve months ended April of this year, we bought 27,000,000 pounds of butter from New Zealand. While we did that, the United States of America, having increased their duty on butter from two and a half cents to twelve cents a pound, made their people so free from outside competition that all they bought was 4,600,000 pounds of butter. Do you realize, Sir, there are hon. gentlemen in this house who say that tariffs play no part in agricultural life? There are some of my hon. friends to my left who say that. In the United States of America, in 1920, they bought 37,000,000 pounds of butter to supply the requirements of their own people and at that time the duty was two and a half cents a pound. They raised it to six to eight to twelve cents a pound and in 1928 they supplied all their requirements with the exception of 4,600,000 pounds.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Their people are eating oleomargarine.

Mr. BENNETT: The evidence is that they are eating more butter than they ever did before in their lives. That is what their official reports show.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): They are not eating within ten pounds per capita as much as we are.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, because there is very little butter consumed in the southern states as compared with what is consumed in the northern part of the United States. Butter fat, as the physiologists tell us, is largely used in northern climes as distinct from southern. The hon. gentleman knows that, and when he talks about oleomargarine, he is endeavouring to draw a red herring across the trail. He cannot becloud the issue in that way, any more than his intervention in Weyburn improved the political situation there.

I have pointed out what has happened in Canada with respect to butter, eggs, poultry. I put this query to my hon. friend: Is it desirable that Canada should become a dependent country with respect to butter, not producing enough for our own requirements? The other day I wrote to the Department of Agriculture of Ontario asking them what the situation was there since the beginning of the year, and they tell me that the total of butter manufactured in February, March and April, 1928, was 10,802,541 pounds, and the number of creameries reporting, 228. This year the quantity manufactured in the same months was nearly 700,000 pounds less or 10,155,818 pounds, and the number of creameries reporting had dropped down to 211, or 17 less than the year before. The great manufacturing creameries of Ontario and other parts of Canada are importing New Zealand butter and this is part of the 27,000,000 pounds the new Zealanders are selling to the people of this country to-day. This is due to the fact that the milk is not available and it was shown here the other evening why that is so. I will not enter into a discussion with respect to this matter.

I have referred to butter, eggs, poultry and other products of that kind; but let us go a step further. Is it desirable that Canada should become a dependent country with respect to meats, importing more and selling less? Is it right that this should happen in regard to fruits; that we should import more and sell less? Is it desirable with respect to machinery about which we have heard so much talk?

Nothing could be worse for a country than that we should not be able to manufacture machinery and thereby become dependent on people who are competing with us in the same activities. I require machinery in western Canada and under existing conditions I have to go to the United States to get it. I have to take my chance against the United States competitor. If he wants machinery, he gets his first and then I get mine. Shall this country develop its resources on that basis or not? The real issue that faces Canada to-day is whether we shall be dependent on other countries, dependent for butter, for farm products, for meats, for fruit, for vegetables, for manufactured goods such as machinery and so forth, upon a foreign people whose supreme object in life is to support their own interests and prosperity regardless of what happens to us? This is not a matter that one can regard with any degree of satisfaction.

I should like to read to my hon. friend from Weyburn what Professor Dean of the Ontario Agricultural college said in a broadcast message the other day. He said:

> Here we have the argument plainly stated. Why did Canada import over 24 million pounds of butter, worth over 8 1/2 million dollars, in 1928, and nearly two million pounds of cheese? The answer is that the Canadian farmer is not accorded the protection in his business which he needs in order to make it profitable. A little over two million cows' milk goes annually into the factories in Canada. We have the land to maintain twice this number of cows for factory purposes. If the full number of cows were kept on Canadian farms there would be no need to import butter and chese for home consumption requirements, and we should maintain our imports at or above the present level. It is an economic question. The Canadian farmer may not know his costs of production so well as he might, but he has a shrewd suspicion that 40 to 45 cents per pound butter in winter does not cover his costs, and he concludes that he cannot compete with cheap grass butter from Australia and New Zealand, which enters Canada practically free of duty. The American farmer demands that his business shall be "protected" similar to that of any other manufacturing business. His slogan is "protection for all or protection for none."

I commend that statement of Professor Dean, of the Ontario Agricultural college to my hon. friend from Weyburn and other members of this house. It was broadcast the other day throughout Ontario and indicated at least the considerations that prevailed in inducing him to arrive at conclusions as to what the situation really is.

Now I proceed to deal with the question of trade treaties with other countries. We have a treaty with France and a treaty with Italy, where the farmers of this country sell their wheat and wheat products. What happened? This government made a treaty with those two nations. The treaty with France provides that we shall enjoy the minimum tariff on our exports to that country, but it does not provide that they will not increase their tariff, and so we still have the minimum tariff, while France has increased it three times since the minister made the bargain with them. Only last week I find that the republic of France increased the rate upon wheat to 50 francs for 220 pounds, or about 54 cents a bushel. What are you doing about it, Mr. Minister of Finance? You made the treaty. You cannot complain because we still enjoy the minimum rate. The best tariff rate that the rest of the world gets from France we get. But we have given them favours in our market which we cannot take away from them, while they can take away from us the favours which they have given to us under the treaty.

France increased the duty on wheat first of all from 25 to 35 francs, and increased the duty on flour in the same ratio and then on the 23rd of May of this year increased the duty on wheat from 35 to 50 francs per 220 pounds. Italy increased the duty on wheat from 7½ to 11 gold lire per 100 kilograms or about 220 pounds, and only the other day, on the 25th of May, while we were sitting here, Italy further increased the rate from 11 to 14 gold lire per 220 pounds, or nearly 75 cents a bushel.

Where is the agriculturist of the west? What is he doing with this government? Where is the member for Weyburn? Where is the Minister of Agriculture? What are they doing about it when our market in France is taken from us by increasing the rate on wheat to over 50 cents a bushel and our market in Italy is taken away from us by increasing the rate to nearly 75 cents a bushel, while we say under the treaties: Behold the Canadian market; take it, it is yours; we have fixed the terms on which you can enjoy it and cannot change them without abrogating the treaties. What are you going to do about it, Mr. Minister of Finance?

[Mr. Bennett.]

It is the same with respect to Great Britain. I am indebted to my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) for giving the exact facts in connection with the preference afforded to Great Britain. From 1868 to 1898, a period of thirty years, there was no preference with Great Britain. From 1898 to 1928, another period of thirty years, there was a preference. The average duties collected on imports from all countries were as follows:

Average duties p.c. collected on imports from all countries

	Per cent
From 1868 to 1898—on dutiable goods..	25-50
From 1868 to 1898—on dutiable and free	17-16
From 1898 to 1928—dutiable goods.. ..	25-52
From 1898 to 1928—dutiable and free..	15-81
from United Kingdom
1868 to 1898—dutiable..	23-98
1868 to 1898—dutiable and free..	18-64
1898 to 1928—dutiable..	24-39
1898 to 1928—dutiable and free..	18-49
from United States
1868 to 1898—dutiable..	22-49
1868 to 1898—dutiable and free..	12-48
1898 to 1928—dutiable..	23-95
1898 to 1928—dutiable and free..	13-35

There are the figures. The so-called British preference negotiated in 1897 and whittled down by the operation of various treaties has now reached the stage where the average duties are more favourable to the United States than they are to the United Kingdom. You may take the figures and make the computation for yourself; any hon. gentleman may do it. I have given the facts of the situation as they confront the Canadian people at this time, not only with respect to the great republic to the south, but with respect to the countries with which we have made treaties, and indicated why the difficulties of trading with these countries are increasing from time to time.

How is the government of the day meeting the situation? You heard this morning the answer given by the Prime Minister: We will meet each situation as it arises. Is that statesmanship? Is that the duty of a statesman? As I read the history of great statesmen whose lives have been devoted to their country, they had prescience and vision and looked into the long future. They saw policies where others saw none and they led their people so that they might be able to meet the emergencies as they arose. What are we doing to meet those emergencies? What are you members from the province of Quebec doing to meet the situation by which your milk and cream will no longer be able to find access to the United States? What are you farmers from the west doing with respect to the increased tariffs on wheat in France and Italy and the United States? What are you doing about your cattle? What are you doing, my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Sinclair) about your potatoes from Prince Edward Island that used to pay 50 cents per 100 pounds duty and will now pay 75 cents? What are we doing about the cattle industry?

Mr. FORKE: The people will pay more for their beef in the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend says that they will pay more for their beef. This seems to me a very proper time at which to make one observation with respect to that matter, because it is an observation made by Professor Sidgewick, who is one of the greatest authorities sometimes quoted by my hon. friends. Professor Sidgewick, dealing with this situation, used words which I commend to every man who studies the economic situation of this country:

I have now to call attention to an oversight in the ordinary exposition of the benefits of free trade, which is of some importance when the division of the world into separate nations is taken into account, and the interests of a single nation are considered. It is often assumed, expressly or tacitly, that when a class in a given nation can obtain any kind of commodities cheaper through foreign trade, the nation as a whole must be benefited by their so obtaining it. What is overlooked is the possibility that a portion of a nation from which employment is withdrawn by the change cannot be employed within their own country without a loss of utility greater on the whole than the gain from the cheaper foreign supply of the commodities they were producing before the change. I do not think this result is at all a probable one in a country as large and as industrially developed as England. But I think it must be admitted in any theoretical treatment of the subject, that in order to realize the economic advantage obtainable by free trade between two countries, a displacement of labour and capital out of one of the countries may be necessary; so that the aggregate wealth of the persons living in one of the countries may be reduced by the change.

I commend those words of Professor Sidgewick to the Minister of Immigration because I think, coming from such an authority, they will probably have some effect on his mind.

Leaving that for the moment, I again ask what has been the attitude of the government? What are their suggested remedies? I will take them in order. The hon. gentlemen from western Canada who spoke were all very careful to say: You must not interfere with these tariffs of the United States. The Minister of Finance issued a warning, and hardly had the warning escaped him and reached Washington than they began to revise upwards the tariffs originally submitted for consideration. Then came my friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and he talked internationalism, pure and simple, with respect to tariffs. He talked the old shibboleths of free trade, clothed in modern terms, and about the resolutions of Geneva. Against that I put not only the words of Professor Sidgewick, but the words of Herr Stresemann when he was speaking at the League of Nations in connection with tariffs and allied matters. These words I commend to the Minister of Justice because they express at once the view that I think should be held by every man who is not prepared to sacrifice his love of country for any such shibboleth as internationalism or free trade throughout the world.

I am of the opinion that no nation which belongs to the League of Nations in any way renounces thereby its own national personality. The Divine Architect of the earth has not created mankind as a universal whole. He gave the nations different strains of blood. He gave them as the sanctuary of their soul their mother tongue.

We might say in Canada "their mother tongues." That is the answer to the speech he made, that is the answer to his appeal to the Geneva resolutions. Then the Prime Minister comes in and closes the debate for this nation, you might say; for the moment he assumes to speak for Canada. It is sufficent for the purpose that he has a majority behind him made up of men of diverse views and thought with respect to economic problems; but there is the majority. When he rose and spoke for this young nation what did he say? "Hush! Hush! Don't provoke them over there; they might do something to you; and don't you dare talk about preference with the mother country for you might provoke them worse still and they would become more angry with you than they otherwise might be."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend kindly give his authority for those words? I do not think he will find the word "hush" in anything I said.

Mr. BENNETT: These are his words, which will be found at page 1403 of Hansard for April 9, 1929:

An important measure, we are led to believe, is a measure relating to farm relief. Another measure relates to limited adjustments of the tariff; I think that is the expression which has been officially used. Having that knowledge before us, I ask hon. gentlemen irrespective of party: In the condition of prosperity which Canada is to-day enjoying would it be desirable on the part of the administration to take any action with respect to the tariff in Canada at the present time which could be regarded as provocative by those across the line who may be interested in seeking to raise the tariff in that country? I say that with the knowledge that we have before us at the present time, were we to do what hon. gentlemen opposite by their amendment apparently wish us to do, namely raise the tariff, we would be creating in the minds of the American people the very sentiment which would cause them to raise their tariff higher perhaps than it was ever their intention to raise it. We do not intend to take any action of that provocative character.

May I say to my hon. friends opposite, in the other corner of the house, that were we to-day to take a step along the lines of increasing the British preference to a greater degree than exists at the present time that step also might be misconstrued, for we know that there are people on the other side of the line who are just as anxious to be trouble-makers as certain people on this side of the line, who are ready to misrepresent matters, and we have to take human nature as it is, and deal with it as it is. So facing the situation before us, we have followed the policy that we shall follow at all times and that we have followed in the past, of dealing with each situation as it arises in the light of the conditions as they exist at the time.

I am sure the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) must cheer lustily that statement, because it represents his view sufficiently—"Unto the day sufficient is the evil thereof." And the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) who has intimated that his stay amongst us may be all too short, doubtless cheers a sentiment of that kind, because it represents so well the policy of the Liberal party at the moment. That policy is, Don't provoke them!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has not yet found the word "hush," has he?

Mr. BENNETT: He did not use the word "hush" He said it was a Hush! hush! policy. And that is what it is. Can any such policy be anything more than a Hush! hush! policy?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend's policy is a Hash! hash! policy.

Mr. BENNETT: That indicates the cleverness of the right hon. Prime Minister for which he is so famed throughout this country. A "Hash! hash!" policy he says. Well, I submit that it is better to have an affirmative policy of any kind than a negative policy. I say his policy is unfitting to the dignity of this country, and in that regard I ask him to read the Vancouver Sun, and especially I ask him to read the Toronto Globe. The latter paper says that the time has come when the government must consider this question.

Mr. FORKE: Or the Winnipeg platform.

Mr. BENNETT: I should think platforms would be the last thing the Minister of Immigration would ever want to talk about. Anyone who has ever read his utterances from this corner of the house on the tariff policy of the government would be surprised that he does not hang his head in shame to find himself to-day a minister of the crown in the present government. What does he think of the tariff policies of the government to-day? Has the leopard changed his spots?

Mr. FORKE: Will the leader of the opposition state what I have got to be ashamed of?

Mr. BENNETT: His observations made in this house on the government tariff policy.

Mr. FORKE: What were they?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I can only say—

Mr. FORKE: You can make statements. But come through. You said they were statements to be ashamed of.

Mr. BENNETT: Undoubtedly.

Mr. FORKE: Tell me what I have to be ashamed of.

Mr. BENNETT: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is very simple. When one out of power and office makes declarations against the government of the day, declarations that are to be found in Hansard from 1921 to 1928, and then changes his policy and accepts office under the same Prime Minister whose policies he denounced—I say unless he has given some evidence and reasons other than his love of power, he should be ashamed.

Mr. FORKE: Will the leader of the opposition tell me wherein I have changed my policy?

An hon. MEMBER: How did you get there?

Mr. FORKE: All right. Come through with it. Let us have it. I am waiting to hear it.

Mr. BENNETT: I will say this to the hon. gentlemen. I doubt not that he had an inward desire to accomplish those reforms which he championed so loudly from this side of the house, but he has found his surroundings so impossible of improvement and reform that he has abandoned the task, and in a sunnier clime in another place he hopes to find that repose which is denied him here.

The next gentleman who spoke was the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler). He did not speak in this house; he went down to the Women's Liberal club in this city and said:

> The Canadian government will act in the interests of the people as a whole when the time is ripe for action, and though people are assuming that it is going to "turn the other cheek," it is just as logical to assume one course of action as another.

That is the nearest the hon. minister got to any policy or desire to serve this country at the moment. But the government sent the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) to Windsor. He, speaking for the administration as all cabinet ministers do, was a little bolder down there. He said:

We face a serious problem with our neighbours. We are not looking for a fight, but we certainly will not run away from it. We will see to it that Canada is amply protected.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh!

Mr. BENNETT: The Solicitor General continues:

—the Liberal government has never shirked its responsibility.—At present they are not as good friends as they might be.—

Despite our embassy in Washington!

Canada must play between these great nations—

That is Great Britain and the United States.

—the part of a liaison because at the Geneva conferences Canada, it may be truly said, represents the American opinion.

"Represents American opinion"; If that is so we shall soon get a low tariff, shall we not? Now let us look at this statement. The hon. gentleman uses the word "fight". After the Kellogg pact, after we have decided to abolish war by asphyxiating gases, the Solicitor General uses the word "fight" down in Windsor; and he uses the word "protection". He says that the government of Canada will "protect" this country. Now there is protection for my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Glen).

Mr. GLEN: Not the kind you have enunciated.

Mr. BENNETT: Then if, by means of some method of television or otherwise, the hon. gentleman has been able to read into these words a meaning we do not suspect, the Solicitor General has deceived the people of Windsor.

Mr. GLEN: You know the answer to that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am only reading the language of the Solicitor General. He says: "We will see to it that Canada is amply protected; the Liberal government has never shirked its responsibility".

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): May I ask the leader of the opposition whether he has quoted all that the Solicitor General said with regard to protection in that instance, or what paper he has been reading from?—because there are different reports.

Mr. BENNETT: I have it from three papers and the despatch is the same in all: "C.P.", Canadian Press; and inasmuch as it was a Canadian Press despatch I thought I would take it rather than any other as a statement of what had taken place.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I know my hon. friend wants to be fair, and I may tell him that the despatch I read indicated that the Solicitor General had proceeded to say that Canada would protect the legitimate interests of all her people. He was not dealing with tariff protection.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say to the hon. member for Melfort, whose return we so heartily welcome—

Mr. McLEAN: He is pleased to be back.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He says he is pleased to come back.

Mr. BENNETT: There are five hundred reasons why he should be. The hon. gentleman has asked a reasonable question and in reply I may inform him that I have been quoting from a Canadian Press despatch. There were several despatches from private correspondents but I selected the Canadian Press despatch which appeared in all the large papers in Canada. I will show it to the hon. member at any time if he cares to see it. A more ample statement of the Solicitor General's observations appeared in one of the Liberal papers, but this is from the Canadian Press.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I was referring to a longer despatch which appeared in many of the papers.

Mr. BENNETT: Now that is the position of the government. Here we have the Minister of Finance making a slight and veiled threat. He says: be careful now, down there; we don't believe in high but low tariffs, but we will trade with people who trade with us. Then the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) gives the assurance that there is no reason to believe that the government will turn the other cheek—they may engage in some other form of entertainment. Then there is the Prime Minister, and later still the Solicitor General—gathering volume as they go until at length we have the use of the words "fight" and "protection". Now that is distinct progress, very considerable progress indeed. What else have we? We have in addition to that the assurance given to the fruit and vegetable growers of Canada last year, when a delegation waited upon the government, that in some way their interests would be protected. In 1922 this provision was incorporated in the statutes of Canada at the instance of a Liberal government.

If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the governor in council, on a report from the minister, that natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada are being imported into Canada, either on sale or on consignment, under such conditions as prejudicially or injuriously to affect the interests of Canadian producers, the governor in council may, in any case or class of cases, authorize the minister to value such goods for duty, notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, and the value so determined shall be held to be the fair market value thereof.

Last session an endeavour was made to deal with the situation. The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) asked that this provision should be repealed, and a resolution was moved on May 8, 1928, on this side of the house, urging that necessary action should be taken by the government of Canada effectively to control the importation into Canada, either on sale or on consignment, of natural products not grown in this country. Notwithstanding this, the minister has intimated to the interests affected that they cannot be protected this year. But we have another indication of the attitude of the government. There is in this country an organization known as the Consumers' League, of which the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) is chairman, the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) is secretary, and the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) is one of the distinguished members. These hon. gentlemen have sent out, under frank of this house, ammunition or literature to various parts of Canada. Some of it is quite interesting inasmuch as it undertakes to teach the people of the United States how they should govern their country. I have no doubt the good people to the south of us will be greatly obliged and deeply obligated for the advice thus tendered them from Canada. For example, listen to the following which appears in the pamphlets which these hon. gentlemen have sent out:

> The Consumers' League has recently published an eight page article entitled, "The Principles of Free Trade". This article ought to be in the hands of every student of the problem.

Further:

> A protective tariff is simply a device by which the rich are made richer at the expense of the poor.

I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to mark that. Then there is this statement:

> The Consumers' League of Canada is in favour of lower tariffs. Its contention is that the burden of the present tariff is greater than the benefits received.

Here, then, we have the Consumers' League, officered by members of parliament and supported by other members, of whom my hon. friend from Weyburn is, as I have said, one of the distinguished members, telling the people of the United States, in face of the present situation, that what we desire in Canada is a lower tariff.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member says "hear, hear." Very well; let us reconcile the views of this group of supporters of the administration. One says: Steady; don't provoke them; don't mention preference, or that will provoke them still further. Are those hon. gentlemen expressing the views held on the other side of the house when they take this stand? Another says: You have no reason to believe that we shall turn the other cheek. Then another says, "We will fight; we will protect Canada." Then come the hon. member for Swift Current, the hon. member for Humboldt and the hon. member for Weyburn, all declaring that what we want is a lower tariff—that is what we need in this country to-day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, out of these it is proposed to fuse a party which will save Canada at the present time. But, Sir, not content with saving Canada, they are also bent upon saving our friends to the south of us. I quote again from an article by the Consumers' League entitled "Bunk to the American Farmer":

> Not since those happy halcyon days, when the man with the pea under the shell played cats and dogs with the pocket-book of the yokel at the country fair, has there been anything quite so artful as the save-the-farmer-if-it-costs-ten-cents-apiece plan of the Hoover tariff mandarins at Washington.
>
> "Mandarins", by the way, is an excellent word to describe the gentlemen who work the game. A "mandarin" is a Chinese official entitled to wear a button on his hat. Buttons on the hats of the members at Washington would help the farmers as much as the tariff suggestions of the ways and means committee, now planning at the American capital, new methods of exploitation, new ways of cracking the public crib.

So we have the Consumers' League saving the farmers of the United States, calling their legislation "bunk," and at the same time declaring that we in Canada must have lower tariffs—in order that the Americans may sell more goods in this country. I wonder who subsidizes this league: the Canadian farmers or the American manufacturers? I asked myself that question when I read this statement I have just quoted—I do not know whether the hon. member for Weyburn has seen it.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): We don't get a cent from the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to hear that. No doubt, Mr. Speaker, you will recall the words of Richard Cobden, that capital shrinks instinctively from insecurity of tenure. It may surprise some hon. members opposite that from a bulletin issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce it appears that this country is exporting capital; in other words, this new country, which, according to all the statements that have been made, requires large sums of money to develop its resources, finds it necessary to export capital because of the conditions that now prevail in Canada. The statement made by the statistician of the department is that during the last year for which we have a record, 1927, these exports amounted to $81,000,000; and in the meantime the adverse balance of Canadian trade is increasing. I ask the Minister of Finance this question: Did you, year after year, stand up and say to the Canadian people that the so-called favourable balance of trade was an indication of great prosperity? Did you tell them that when the exports exceeded the imports it was an indication of prosperity? I find your record here in Hansard, and that was one particular point upon which you laid great stress. Then what of to-day? If it was a sign of prosperity in the years that have gone by, when the opposite is the fact it must be a sign of depression, must it not? Otherwise you have deceived the Canadian people in the statements you have made in the past. It must be one or the other; there is no halfway position. Listen to these figures; in January of this year we imported $2,034,444 worth of goods more than we sold; in February we bought $4,782,710 worth more than we sold; in March we bought $20,565,548 more than we sold and in April, $31,789,608; in other words, in these four months there was an adverse trade balance of $59,172,310, increasing monthly from $2,000,000 to nearly $32,000,000. When the opposite condition prevailed the minister told us that was prosperity; now what about it? Is the converse true, or is it not? If it is not true someone has been deceived, because these are the figures produced by this government, and they indicate all too well what is now happening in this country.

Once more I would like to ask the government, when they talk about prosperity, to tell us what they have done to increase the selling power of this country. It was the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia which had to do with forest products, over which this government has no control; it was the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba which produced our wealth of cereals and grain. So much is that the case that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in answer to my question the other day, said he could give no assistance in the selling of contract goods such as wheat and other grain, nor could he assist in the selling of newsprint and forest products, yet those items alone made up nearly half the entire exports of this Dominion last year. This government claims credit for prosperity and that claim was based on our exports, but the production of these exports rests with the provinces; if this government has any claim with respect to prosperity that claim must be based on our imports, over which they have control and over which they may exercise supervision. There are the figures of the visible adverse trade balance during the last four months, and I ask the Minister of Finance to say frankly to the people of this country that we have here clear and plain indication of what is transpiring in Canada to-day.

Those are the conditions confronting us; what shall we do? Will the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) go down and tell the farmers of Quebec, "My dear friends, it is true we are shut out of the markets of the United States by a hostile and adverse tariff, but we have taken the tax off Pullman car tickets." Is that the way in which these matters are to be dealt with? Perhaps my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Sinclair) will go back to the potato growers of Prince Edward Island and tell them that the United States proposes to raise the tariff on potatoes from 50 to 75 cents per hundred pounds, then say, "Oh, that is nothing; we have taken the tax off telegrams." Is that what will be done? There is only one way in which this matter can be dealt with by the people of this country, and that is the way suggested by the Toronto Globe and approved by every thoughtful man in this country, namely by seeing to it that Canadians developing the vast resources of Canada shall have an equal opportunity and shall meet fair competition with the rest of the world. If they are given that opportunity they can meet the competition which may be offered anywhere.

How can this be done? It may be done by tariffs; it may be done by excise taxes, by drawbacks, by bounties or by preferences; all these are available to the government. There is some talk of an extra session of parliament. We who sit here have declared that we are ready and willing, and have been ready and willing since the very inception of this menace to our economic life, to remain here so long as may be necessary in order that Canada may make it clear to all the world that we are hewers of wood and drawers of water for no nation, that we will develop our own resources and that no one may with impunity strike a blow at the economic life of this country, aimed directly at prohibiting our having access to the markets of the great republic, without our taking notice of that fact. We seek no retaliation; that is not the policy of any party in this country. The policy of this party, which has been declared from time immemorial, is a policy of developing Canada for Canadians, a policy which seeks to make this Dominion a country of homes, to give employment to men and women in order that they may be able to live their lives and develop and work out their destinies in the country in which they were born, rather than seek under an alien flag and in a strange land those opportunities which are denied them at home. This party to the left of the Speaker never will be content so long as 75,000, 100,000 or 200,000 Canadians are annually compelled to leave this country because they are denied the opportunity for self-expression here. We will not be content while that condition prevails, and we say now that anything we can do that will contribute to a policy which will make it certain that this country has a mission and a destiny on this continent will be done. Our integrity cannot be invaded; we must work out our destiny as a free people and end an economic slavery that comes from being dependent upon people in another land for the very necessities of life. We care not where those necessities be found, whether they are within the British Empire or somewhere else; when we find a great basic industry which is being destroyed by the policies of the government, it is our duty to see to it that that condition no longer prevails.

That is the attitude we take with respect to these problems, and to the support of that attitude we invite all lovers of Canada, all men and women who believe in their country, as I believe in it, as distinguished from those who believe in internationalism, all those who love Canada as a nation and a people and who believe that if we would only do what I suggested in the opening days of this session, that is, call here at Ottawa an economic conference of the British Empire, we could work out, not by blanket preferences which have brought such disaster to this country but by a consideration of the production of the various parts of the British Empire, a scheme of preferences which will do good to all and harm to none. Then there would be no New Zealand treaty by order in council, working a benefit to New Zealand for the moment and a detriment to the dairy industry of this country. That is the policy and the duty of this party. While at times we may meet with evidences of the appeals made to men of divers opinions and economic views to join together for the purpose of retaining place and power, there will come a time—it always comes—when the people of this country will waken from their dreams and, realizing their dangers, will turn again to the party which has given them the only steady policy ever given with respect to the future of this country and this empire and its place amongst the peoples of the world, which has laid the foundations for the economic life of this country and, please God, will endeavour, so far as it lies within its power to see that that life is maintained against the peril which now threatens it.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to delay on going into supply and proceeding with the business of the house and I regret, as I am sure the house regrets, that the budget speech of my hon. friend has been delayed until the last days of the session. As I listened to the eloquent arguments of my hon. friend the leader of the Conservative party I observed what a wonderful change has taken place in the attitude of mind of this great party from the days when their slogan was "No truck nor trade with the Yankee." To-day the whole complaint is that the people of the United States, rightly or wrongly, down in Washington where the weather is hot, are debating to what greater extent they are going to tax the women and the children who are crying for bread and butter and milk and cream. I am sure that the argument which my hon. friend has presented to-day will be read with delight by those in Washington who are urging a policy which will compel the workers in the United States to pay more for their milk, their cream, their butter and their bread. It seems to be impossible to please the Conservative party. I recall meeting a very good personal friend in Winnipeg last fall, a former member of parliament, and one who understood the cattle business fairly well and his one complaint to me was that the Americans were coming over here and paying too much for our cattle. He complained that they were taking our cattle away by paying too high a price. I cannot help comparing that attitude with the attitude taken by another good friend whom I met recently in the eastern townships. He told me, as my hon. friend has stated to-day, that the people of the United States were coming here and buying cattle and paying very high prices for milch cows. I asked him how it would affect his business and he replied that if they wanted to milk the cows, we would raise them. That is the attitude which was taken by a dairy farmer.

One part of my hon. friend's speech was preaching blue ruin, while the other part was an explanation of our existing prosperity. My hon. friend complained that this government had been asleep at the switch after the action which was taken by the government of the United States in 1922. Canada should not be complaining about the tariff policy adopted by the United States. Had they followed the same policy which has been followed in this country we would not have heard the kind of speeches which were uttered during the last presidential campaign. My hon. friend admits that we have prosperity, but he claims it is the wrong kind. Did any member of either party in the last presidential campaign admit that they had prosperity in that country? The cry of blue ruin was raised by all parties and they stressed the necessity of doing something to bring about prosperity.

My hon. friend has discussed at some length our trade with only one country, but Canada to-day is dealing with the world. The United States can adjust their fiscal policy to suit themselves, and if they want to pay more for the milk and cream produced by Canadian farmers; if they want to tax their people more for food commodities, that is their business. If they think that 40 cents per bushel duty on wheat is not high enough and want to put it up to 75 cents or $1 per bushel, that is their business; they can put it up as high as they like.

Mr. BENNETT: That was Italy.

Mr. ROBB: The United States have had a duty of 42 cents per bushel on wheat.

Mr. BENNETT: Not 75 cents per bushel.

Mr. ROBB: Our busines is to adjust our trade to suit Canadians and to help Canadians. What have we been doing in this regard?

An hon. MEMBER: Allowing Americans to milk our cows.

Mr. ROBB: I do not propose to delay the house at any great length, but I would like to give some trade figures commencing with the year 1922, which is the point at which my hon. friend started. In 1922 Canada had treaty agreements with fourteen countries, and in that particular year we had a favourable balance of trade of $6,000,000. At the present time we have treaty agreements with forty-three countries. In 1922 we exported to those fourteen treaty countries goods to the value of $75,000,000, while our exports in 1929 to the forty-three treaty countries amounted to over $220,000,000. Our imports in 1922 from the fourteen treaty countries amounted to $45,000,000, while our imports in 1929 from the forty-three treaty countries amounted to over $103,000,000. We had a favourable trade balance in 1922 with these treaty countries amounting to $30,000,000, while in 1929 that favourable trade balance had increased to over $117,000,000.

My hon. friend has complained of our trade with the United States, but where would he start to check that trade? It is quite easy to talk in generalities but let us get down to the hard facts. Where would my hon. friend start? I am no more satisfied with our present trade arrangements with the United States than anyone else; I would like to have them improved and better our trading conditions, but they have the same rights at Washington as we have here in Ottawa. I will repeat what was said at the time the budget was delivered; that in the light of events we will take care of Canadian trade in the future as we have taken care of it in the past, and we will fix our tariff to suit Canadians and not to take care of any other part of the world. Supposing my hon. friend were in office, what would be his policy? It is true that he has promised he would have an economic conference with the people of the British Empire, but what for? What did he say to those gentlemen when he was welcoming them here to Ottawa? Did he say to the people of Australia and New Zealand, "We are ready to sell you everything which you need, but we cannot buy anything from you"?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No butter, anyway.

Mr. ROBB: We have had a favourable trade balance throughout the British Empire, and we believe that we can improve that. I do not know that I should delay the house any longer. My hon. friend has largely rehashed the debate which we had upon the budget. When he quoted the importations and trade figures with other countries he was very careful not to go into details as to where he would stop trading. Until my hon. friend can be more definite as to his policy, it seems to me that we might very well proceed with the business of the house and vote the necessary supply to carry on the business of this country.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Department of Agriculture—Experimental farms, including necessary new buildings, $2,050,000.

Mr. MANION: I wish to say a few words on this item and if the chairman would not mind calling it one o'clock, I shall speak after recess. I will take only a few minutes.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MANION: Just as the committee rose at one o'clock and we went into the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I was about to say a few words regarding the possibility of establishing an experimental farm station at the head of the lakes or somewhere in that neighbourhood. According to a return that was furnished to me sometime ago there are twenty-two experimental stations in the Dominion of Canada, and I intend to put them on record in Hansard for future reference:

Experimental station, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.
Experimental station, Kentville, Nova Scotia.
Experimental farm, Nappan, Nova Scotia.
Experimental station, Fredericton, New Brunswick.
Experimental station, Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, Quebec.
Experimental station, Cap Rouge, Quebec.
Experimental station, Lennoxville, Quebec.
Experimental station, La Ferme, Quebec.
Experimental station, Kapuskasing, Ontario.
Experimental farm, Ottawa, Ontario.
Experimental station, Morden, Manitoba.
Experimental farm, Brandon, Manitoba.
Experimental farm, Indian Head, Saskatchewan.
Experimental station, Rosthern, Saskatchewan.
Experimental station, Scott, Saskatchewan.
Experimental station, Swift Current, Saskatchewan.
Experimental station, Lethbridge, Alberta.
Experimental station, Lacombe, Alberta.
Experimental station, Summerland, British Columbia.
Experimental farm, Agassiz, British Columbia.
Experimental station, Invermere, British Columbia.
Experimental station, Sidney, British Columbia.
Experimental substation, Beaverlodge, Alberta.
Tobacco station, Farnham, Quebec.
Tobacco station, L'Assomption, Quebec.
Tobacco station, Harrow, Ontario.
Experimental Fox Ranch, Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

Of the twenty-six experimental stations there are only two in the province of Ontario, one this well-known and beautiful farm at Ottawa, and the other at Kapuskasing. From Kapuskasing we jump to Morden, Manitoba, a distance of about seven or eight hundred miles, without an experimental station. I would point out to the Minister of Agriculture, as I pointed out to the Minister of Public Works when his estimates were up, that there is a real reason for having an experimental farm station some place between Kapuskasing on the east and Morden, Manitoba, on the west. Northern Ontario comprises an immense area, as large as Germany and Great Britain put together, and with the exception of the experimental station at Kapuskasing, at the extreme eastern end of that section, there is no experimental station in all that area. I do not need to point out to the minister, who is familiar with that section, that those farmers who have taken up these bush lands in northern Ontario and are hewing out homes for themselves have a very difficult time. I think it would be a very good gesture on the part of this government and be very helpful to the farmers in that vast section of country, an empire in itself, if an experimental farm station were to be established somewhere between Kapuskasing in Ontario and Morden in Manitoba. A very natural place to locate it would be at the head of the lakes, either at Fort William or Port Arthur. An experimental station at either of these points would serve a large territory comprising very fine agricultural land, which is settled by a very fine group of farmers, who have gone in there in the last twenty or twenty-five years, and who deserve any assistance they can get. I do not wish to take up further time at this stage, but I do wish very sincerely and in a non-political way to impress upon the minister and upon the government the need of establishing something in the way of an experimental farm in that section. About two months ago I received a resolution, as no doubt did the Minister of Agriculture and the government, from some of the farming communities at the head of the lakes asking for an experimental farm in that section, and I appeal to the minister in fairness to that part of the country to give this request favourable consideration. Particularly I appeal on the ground that looking over this list of experimental stations starting from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and going clear through to British Columbia, there is no space I should judge of more than about two hundred miles without an experimental farm except lying between Kapuskasing and Morden, Manitoba, a distance of about seven or eight hundred miles. I therefore would urge very seriously upon the minister and the government the necessity for considering establishing an experimental farm at the head of the lakes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The tributes that have been paid to the usefulness of these experimental stations by my hon. friend and others are very gratifying. It will be recalled that when this government first took power in 1922, times were pretty hard and it was difficult to get our estimates increased as we would have liked to increase them. That applied to all departments. We were trying to retrench. There was a feeling throughout the country against further expenditures. That has entirely disappeared so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned because the real value of these experimental stations is becoming more and more appreciated every year.

When I first took charge of the department I felt that it was incumbent upon me, and I so advised my colleagues, before we started in to establish new experimental stations, to endeavour to put the present ones in good shape, better equipped, and in some cases enlarge the farms. That is the position we have taken up to the present.

There are three places throughout Canada —I do not know that Fort William is one of them—that were examined before I had the honour of taking over this work, with a view to establishing an experimental station, and I believe that some hope was held out. I understand that in those three the Fort William district was included. Another one was in that vast area, the Bulkley valley extending from Fort George to Prince Rupert. I took a trip through that vast country myself and was impressed with its enormous possibilities. Later I find that there was some investigational work done in connection with the Swan River country in northern Manitoba where there are heavy fat black soil lands that require some work of this nature to get the best out of them. I am informed by my deputy that Fort William was another place in prospect. But we have kept them all waiting in the meantime, hoping to get in ship-shape the farms at present established, and I think that that policy has been justified in the main by the better results from the twenty-three farms now established. It is better to have a comparatively small number of farms in good shape for efficient work than a large number not in good shape. We have, however, in the meantime been pursuing a policy of establishing a considerable number of small illustration stations, where with the cooperation of some enterprising local farmer of an experimental turn of mind a plot of say forty acres is worked under the supervision of an officer of the department. That has proved very popular. It requires no capital investment and displays in a miniature way the work that is being done on the experimental farms, and it brings the work home to the farmers of the district. We have now over two hundred of these small demonstration plots. Some people think that they are a little bit too small to be worth while, but they have done very valuable service. In some places that takes care of the local need for a fully fledged farm. I feel that that policy could yet be pursued a little while longer.

A part of the increase in the vote this year is due to the enlargement of the Morden farm, which we have doubled in size this spring. We are now in occupation of that farm, which is a very useful one, consisting of half a section in southern Manitoba. As I say, we have doubled the size of that farm, and in view of the development of the fruit industry, apples and other fruits, in that part of Manitoba I think it will be found to be none too large. We have also added to the farm at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, Quebec, and further expenditures will be required to meet enlargements to the central farm at Ottawa and to provide for further buildings, horticultural buildings and such like, necessitated by the larger operations. At the same time I am friendly disposed towards the establishment of an experimental farm in the vicinity of Fort William, and also in northern Manitoba and in the area between Fort George and Prince Rupert in British Columbia. Those would seem to be the most urgent when we do begin to establish new experimental farms.

Mr. MANION: I am very glad to have the minister declare that he is giving consideration to the matter. If he will permit me to say so, I think the appointed time to act is now. I suggest that particularly in view of the fact that if the minister does not move fairly rapidly in establishing this farm, the next government will have to do it for him, and in future years I should very much like to be able to give credit to the minister in this connection. So I hope he will hurry along.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you.

Mr. TUMMON: Recently it has been announced that property has been purchased in the city of Belleville for the establishment of an entomological branch of the Department of Agriculture. Does the money necessary for that come under this item? If so, will the minister state what it is proposed to carry on there?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, that comes under the heading of the entomological vote.

Mr. FRASER: I want to enter a plea with the minister for another experimental farm. He has mentioned the area from Telkwa, in the Bulkley valley to Prince George as being a very likely district in which to establish a farm some time in the future. I want to draw his attention to the area in British Columbia which lies south of the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I can start him in as a matter of fact at the southern boundary of British Columbia and take him up through the central valleys for a distance of some four hundred and fifty miles. I would particularly direct the minister's attention to the fact that this is one of the largest areas for livestock production in the Dominion. In this area we have, I should say, about 100,000 cattle. We turn off every year about 20,000 head at an average of $100 a head. The minister will see that this must mean a very considerable production. The federal government has never done anything in any shape or form to assist livestock production in that area. I am told by the provincial district agriculturist in the neighbourhood that there is a loss to the cattlemen of 1,000 head per annum from preventable diseases. These diseases are not understood by the stock men. It requires a man with special technical knowledge to investigate these diseases in order to discover proper remedies to prevent this heavy annual loss. I submit that that is the duty of the federal Department of Agriculture, and that it should provide the necessary service for the stock men.

I am asking for consideration by the minister of the establishment of this experimental farm for another reason. In that area the percentage of pure bred sires and dams is very small. This is simply because the stock men have to go thousands of miles in order to secure pure bred stock, and it is impossible for the small stock man to incur this heavy expense. I think a farm should be established there for the purpose of providing foundation stock for the whole area.

In addition to the livestock business we have very extensive areas in which a large amount of grain is produced, and an experimental farm as well as providing a service for the livestock men would also provide a very much needed service for the producers of all kinds of grain. In this connection I want the minister to take into consideration this other fact. There is no question about the market for the stock which may be raised in that area. The beef production can easily be doubled if the increase is brought about in a systematic way. Not only that, but we have in that area only about 6,000 head of sheep. This can be increased at least a hundredfold if proper methods are taken for securing suitable kinds of stock, and if a certain amount of supervision is exercised over those who are desirous to take up this branch of stock raising. Very few swine are raised in this area. The conditions are ideal for the production of all kinds of livestock, and I submit that in making a request to the minister to have this area thoroughly investigated I am not asking anything that is at all unreasonable. True, the northern district is important, but it is a small area in comparison with the one which I am dealing with. In other words, it is four or five hundred miles from north to south and from two hundred to two hundred and fifty miles from east to west. Within those limits there is an immense area of pastoral land admirably suited for the production of all kinds of livestock.

Let me repeat. At the present time the federal Department of Agriculture has done absolutely nothing in any shape or form to assist the stock men in that area. With all deference to the minister and the government, I think it is pretty nearly time that the department gave some attention to an area which has such wonderful potentialities. To-day in British Columbia, we are producing only about one-half of the meat consumed in the city of Vancouver. Let me remind the minister that with the rapid development of that city it is no stretch of the imagination to forecast that in the next ten or fifteen years its present population of about 325,000 will have increased to a million. With that market available I think it is high time that the minister took into serious consideration the question of making a real and comprehensive survey of the whole situation throughout that area. I do not want to labour the question any longer because I am sure that when the minister understands the conditions thoroughly he will give the matter his very serious consideration. But I should be very glad indeed to hear him give some word of encouragement to the people in that district in regard to the establishment of this experimental farm.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A great part of my hon. friend's remarks, which were perfectly proper, would come more appropriately under the live stock vote, in connection with which I shall have a statement to make; a part of what he has said relates also to the health of animals branch regarding the diseases of animals.

Mr. FRASER: I do not agree with the minister. I am discussing experimental farms, which include live stock, grain and various other things.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend spoke of the large losses sustained in the live stock world as the result of certain diseases.

Mr. FRASER: Preventable diseases.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would point out to my hon. friend that only certain diseases come within the scope of the federal department, such as glanders, bovine tuberculosis, rabies, hog cholera and mange; these are pretty nearly the only diseases that come under this department. If my hon. friend will let me know whether any of these diseases are responsible for the great loss to which he has referred I shall be glad to have the matter looked into. The major portion of his remarks have reference to the need of experimental farms in the vast empire extending from the international boundary up to Fort George. We have four experimental farms in British Columbia besides the illustration stations, and when the time comes we shall have five including the Bulkley valley country. That will be the maximum to be found even in the older provinces. Of course, that should not debar British Columbia from having still more, because her physical features are of such a character that one farm will not of necessity serve as large an area as it would elsewhere; and the conditions are so diversified and numerous that I suppose I myself could put up an argument for more farms in that province. But we must have a reasonable regard for the number of experimental farms in each province. For example, there are only two in Manitoba, and no doubt there is reason why it might be argued that there should be another one in the northern part of that province. Alberta has only two full fledged experimental farms, although there are two very important substations up in the Peace River. My hon. friend's claim may be considered in due course but we shall have to have a good deal more money before we establish new farms throughout the country. particularly when there are so many not yet properly equipped.

Mr. FRASER: In my opinion, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba might be regarded as comprising one area; the conditions throughout those provinces are pretty much the same. And the minister has admitted that he has nine farms in that area. He has also admitted that the conditions in connection with experimental farms throughout British Columbia are so diversified as to entitle the province to a great number of farms. With all deference to the minister, I submit that the three prairie provinces together might be compared with the province of British Columbia in this regard; if we had as many experimental farms in British Columbia as there are in the three prairie provinces, British Columbia would not be better served than those provinces are at the present time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What my hon. friend says is worth considering.

Mr. FRASER: Can I not get some definite indication from the minister? He has not told me anything; he has not given any promises—he is extremely careful in that respect. Can I not get some indication that he will make a survey of the situation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes; we will look into it and if we find towards the end of the year, or well on in the year, that by strict economy we have a little money left over, we shall be more disposed to give heed not only to the representations of my hon. friend but to the other claims to which I referred a few moments ago.

Mr. FRASER: Do I understand from the minister, then, that if he has a little money left over later in the year he will send a man to investigate?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I can safely say that we can send a man into any of those territories to make further investigation.

Mr. FRASER: That is a little better.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But I should like to know at first hand something more about the matter.

Mr. FRASER: The minister need not take my word for it; let him send his technical officials to make a comprehensive survey of the situation to see whether what I have told him is not absolutely correct.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not that I doubt my hon. friend, but there is a good deal of other information that might be gathered at the same time.

Mr. FRASER: Surely; and let me make this observation to the minister while I am on the subject. I think his officials could get a large amount of very useful information from the provincial Department of Agriculture, and the two departments working together ought to be able to show that what I have been trying to convince the minister of is absolutely correct.

Mr. BRADETTE: I can understand the earnestness with which the hon. member for Fort William made his plea for an experimental farm in the section of the province of Ontario for which he spoke, because I have reason to know the great benefit which the Kapuskasing experimental farm in my part of the country has been to the farmers. Our people are making application for an increase of at least $10,000 in the grant to that farm. We always think of northern Ontario in terms of mining or of lumbering; but it is also a well-known fact that in that part of the province we have one of the finest sections for colonization and for purposes of cultivation. It is well known that the forestry branch in Ontario is spending nearly one million dollars in preventive work to safeguard our forests from the fire danger. And so far as the mining industry is concerned, large sums are being spent in several sections in the way of experimentation. The Kapuskasing farm is doing wonderful work among the settlers, encouraging them in experimenting with new kinds of grain which mature earlier than in other sections of Ontario and Quebec by reason of the fact that the season is shorter. This farm has a total area of 1,270 acres. From this area, about 300 acres are under stump pasture and 650 acres under cultivation. From this last amount over 200 acres are under experimental work and those who know what work is associated with such a large field of experimentation will have an idea of the cost of operation.

The labour conditions in the northern section of northern Ontario are such that we have to pay very high wages. The climatic conditions and the short seasons make it necessary to do the work as rapidly as possible, which in many cases increases the expense.

The appropriation for this station last year was $45,759. It will take, roughly $41,500 for salaries and wages only, leaving less than $5,000 for purchases and improvements. When we take from this amount the cost of supplies and feeding stuffs, it does not leave any for improvements and extension work. However, there is a big need for expansion and certain improvements. For instance, a better drainage system should be established on parts of the farm, which would increase the yield of crops and facilitate the working of the land. The roads should be fixed so as to facilitate the haulage of crops; better facilities should be arranged to clean the grain for the settlers at cost, and assist them in that way in sowing clean seed; and more pure-bred live stock and poultry should be kept to enable the settlers to procure foundation stock at reasonable prices. Last year Alaska oats was introduced to the settlers by that farm. This is a variety that is sure to mature in that district, and as it is very satisfactory the demand is so great that they will not be able to supply more than 10 per cent of what is required. This means that it may take several years before the settlers can be supplied with that seed. The demand has been so great that at least fifty thousand bushels could have been sold in this district last year.

Then there is a great deal of land which has been burned over and on which second growth poplar is growing. If we delay this work a few years more it will mean that the cost of clearing this land will be two or three times as great as it would be if the work were done now. If a comparison should be made between the different farms as to the acreage, the climatic conditions, the wages paid and the amount provided by the government it would be seen that this station is not getting its proper share, and I hope the minister will take the matter into consideration as soon as possible.

In 1925 some complaints were made in connection with that farm; a great deal of heavy construction was being done by the Spruce Falls Company at Kapuskasing, and I heard that the experimental farm horses were being used by the company. I made a personal inquiry into the matter and found that the company wanted a certain kind of heavy draft horse which could be supplied only by the experimental farm, so the complaints were not really serious. However, I found also that the superintendent, who is a man well known throughout northern Ontario, a great friend of the northland, appreciated by everyone, a very capable administrator, a man who puts his heart and soul in his work, had to carry an overdraft in his own name amounting to at least $5,000 or $6,000 every year, and I do not think it right that any employee of the government should on his own responsibility be compelled to provide such a large amount of money for governmental work.

I desire to make this plea very earnestly; millions of dollars have been spent in experimental work in connection with mining and forestry, and I am firmly convinced that the house will support an increase of at least $10,000 in the estimates for the farm at Kapuskasing. Just to mention one point which requires consideration, hon. members may be aware that when trees are brought up from the southern part of the province they do not get on very well; they are not adapted to the northern country. I believe there is a good deal of work to be done in that connection, and this could be carried on at the farm. So I hope the Minister of Agriculture will see his way clear to increase the estimate for the Kapuskasing experimental farm by at least $10,000, and I feel confident that if he does he will receive the wholehearted support of the entire representation in the house.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This farm at Kapuskasing was established during the war, largely to demonstrate the agricultural possibilities of that great clay belt along the line of the Canadian National railway. It happens that while this farm is easy of access it is the only farm in the Dominion which I have not visited; I have been so delighted with the look of it from the train that perhaps I have passed it over for that reason. You know, once you get on a railway train you want to get to your destination as quickly as possible, but I think I can promise my hon. friend that I will stop off at this farm sometime during the coming summer, and if circumstances seem to warrant it we will see if we cannot provide more than $46,000 for that work. However, my hon. friend's suggestion that $10,000 is necessary properly to equip that farm is an argument in favour of out general policy of putting the existing farms in better shape before establishing new ones.

Mr. EVANS: Our expenditure on experimental farms seems to increase year by year, but I am not sure that our agricultural industry has been improved in any way. The fact is that we are using up our resources of soil and fertility, and the farmer is not able even to get credit at the bank in order to carry him through his working season. The fact is that the man on the land who is farming in a small way is not able to make it go, and our experimental work does not seem to touch that man or make life easier for him in any way. Unless a man is a capitalist and spends a good deal of money on his farm he cannot make it pay; he must have modern machinery and live stock and everything else in connection with a big farm. The man who is on the land to make his home through his own efforts is gradually squeezed off, and somehow our experimental farm work does not help him.

This is a condition of affairs which I should like to see remedied. There is no doubt that this morning the leader of the opposition was quite right in his description of agriculture, but the remedy he suggests is quite wrong; he wants a still bigger dose of the poison which has ruined the whole system of agriculture already. We must get closer to the man on the land and allow him to settle there and make his home through his own efforts. It is not a case of providing city conditions for young people on the farms; it is a case of making the farm pay.

How is that to be done? I hope the minister has thought it out. If he possibly can, the farmer will improve his land, but he is up against the big factor of inadequate returns for his labour, and we are forever making more distinct the dividing line between the capitalist and the worker; we are bringing our people to the servitude of wage earners instead of the freedom of home builders. I will leave that point for the minister to consider.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is a practical farmer himself and I would be very glad to sit at his or anyone else's feet in order to learn how better to apply the work of these farms to the individual. We have the publicity branch, with which we will deal later, sending out bulletins containing information as to what is done on these farms, and I am sure my hon. friend will agree that since our chief occupation in the west so far has been the growing of cereals, incalculable benefit has been done every individual in the west through the new varieties of wheat which have been propagated here at the central farm and distributed throughout the west. I think a review of these matters will convince him of that fact.

It always has been the case, and I presume it always will be so, that there are certain farmers not doing very well, but there is real cause for complaint when the majority of the farmers are not doing as well as they might. I do not want to go into the economics of this question on a vote of this nature, but if my hon. friend or anyone else will show me how these farms can be made to touch the lives of the individual farmers to a greater extent than is the case now I shall be glad to have that information, because I have often wondered if that could not be done. What further media, what further facilities can we use to get right home to the individual? Unfortunately, very frequently the man who needs these things most is the least desirous of securing them, while the man who needs them least is on the alert and secures all the information available as new ideas are brought forward. I would be delighted to have anyone who is engaged in agriculture suggest how these farms can be improved; there is no question as to their value, and I do not think any country in the world has a better system of experimental farms than we have in Canada. If the information does not get home to the individuals I am open to any suggestions as to how it can be put across.

Mr. SPENCER: I appreciate that the experimental farms which are being carried on throughout the Dominion are providing very valuable information, and also that one cannot expect them to pay their way, but in view of the great interest shown by the farmers and the difficulty many of them have in visiting these experimental farms, I think something should be done in the way of running excursions to enable farmers to visit them.

A suggestion was made by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) and the minister asked for suggestions along this line, as to a possible way of demonstrating the fact that farming can be made to pay. I think it would be a very excellent thing to establish demonstration farms in every province of the Dominion. Accurate accounts could be kept but the farms should be conducted on a scale of living comparable with the ordinary farmer's. It could be clearly established whether or not farming would pay in a particular locality, and if it was found that farming would not pay then the government would have no right to put out propaganda through the Minister of Immigration in an effort to induce people to come into those particular areas to settle upon the land.

The minister stated that there were about two hundred demonstration plots in the Dominion. Is there any other cost connected with these plots except the $5 per acre rental? What would be the cost of starting a new experimental farm, and what is the average cost of running such a farm?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The majority of these plots are on a rental basis of $5 per acre for a forty acre tract. In some districts it is impossible to get forty acres, and then we are forced to work on a different basis. The hon. member mentioned excursions to these farms. I can remember that twenty or twenty-five years ago the most popular events of the summer were excursions to the older farms like Indian Head and Brandon. It was necessary to guarantee that a certain number of passengers would be carried on those excursion trains, and if the day turned out to be a bad one at times the trains would be only half filled and we were forced to pay the deficit. After fifteen or twenty years it was found that this interest died out, although it is reviving. In some of the older districts there is a new interest in diversification, the growing of more grasses and clover, more seeding down, and such matters, and we are beginning to find that these excursions are regaining popularity. The excursions to the Scott farm are particularly popular, and if we can get the provincial governments to cooperate with us and assume some of the responsibilities in the event of it being a bad day, we feel that the number of these excursions can be increased. When a farmer visits one of these farms and is able to see with his own eyes just what is being done, he tries to apply those things to his own individual case, and I think we are reaching the time when more and more farmers will come in contact with these farms.

The hon. member asked the cost of starting a new farm. We started a tobacco station last year at L'Assomption, and the initial cost was about $30,000. To establish a live stock farm would cost between $40,000 and $50,000, depending upon the area and the price per acre for farm land.

Mr. SPENCER: What would be the annual cost?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From about $30,000 to $50,000 depending upon the size.

Mr. SPENCER: It costs nearly as much to keep it going as it does to establish it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If you install full equipment and machinery and buildings, of course it costs more. As a rule, we are putting on new equipment all the time as the work is extended; there is a little capital outlay being made all the time which goes in with the annual cost of administration.

Mr. SPENCER: I am quite aware of the fact that the work being carried on at these farms is of an experimental nature and that the cost is more or less enhanced, but the minister did not reply to my suggestion that it might be a very good thing to establish some demonstration farms upon the same standard as the surrounding farms.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know how that could be done if it were necessary to put on all the frills which are demanded by the public in relation to a government farm.

Mr. SPENCER: I would suggest that there be no frills at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If it is run as an ordinary farm without any regard for public sentiment, perhaps it could be done. The public exact certain conditions in connection with government farms, and to carry those out takes away all possible profit. If it is a farm run by an individual who has some knowledge of farm management, and who is reasonably young, vigorous and healthy, he should certainly be able to make it pay.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I suppose the minister will think that it is utter nonsense for an advocate like myself to talk about farming, but I happen to have a farm of my own. I have been reading the reports issued by the experimental farms, and although I can understand ordinary technical language I venture to say that these reports have no educational value whatever to the average country farmer. As for helping the farmer, I think the publication of these reports is a useless expense. I would suggest to the minister that it would be a great help to the farmer if the department would prepare and send out these reports worded so that he could understand just what is being done at these experimental farms. But the information is not brought home to the mind of the ordinary farmer, and a great reform is necessary in that respect. I do not wish to elaborate, but I think the hon. gentleman is wasting a good part of his time and a considerable amount of the public money in the way in which he is conducting his department which should be of educational value to the ordinary farmer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I shall be delighted if my hon. friend will particularize, because I do not think I am wasting, and I have no desire to waste, the public money.

Mr. CAHAN: To take one instance, the reports of the experimental farms are not issued in language that is comprehensible to the ordinary farmer in the country districts of the province, for example, where I reside, so that those reports are of no educational value to those farmers and that expenditure is wasted. By a proper use of the officials of his department, those reports might all be sent out in a simplified form so that they would be comprehended by the ordinary farmer and prove of considerable educational value to him.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend has reference to the annual report which is used for distribution and for filing purposes.

Mr. CAHAN: I am referring to the reports of the experimental farms.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From time to time we send out bulletins and leaflets dealing with farm work, particularly under the headings of "Seasonable Hints." These we send out four times a year. They are seasonable hints prepared by the superintendents of the various farms. In this way the farmers get four times a year a brief review of what is going on. I have received a good many compliments and favourable comments in connection with these little bulletins, because the message is a short one that can be read quickly and does not terrify a man as if he had to sit down and read such a formidable report as that to which my hon. friend refers. I will read over the reports in the light of my hon. friend's criticism and see whether there is any warrant for it. There is a bulletin summarizing the work in a popular form.

Mr. CAHAN: For my own information I obtained from the Department of Agriculture at Washington a series of simple pamphlets on dairy production, explaining in simple language to the farmer that a cow that was giving so many pounds of milk a year was a loss, telling him how he should select his cattle, how he can prove whether cows are profitable or not. By a simple process it educated the farmer in raising and maintaining milch cows which will prove profitable to him. It was very instructive to me.

I saw another series of pamphlets on the raising of potatoes, showing that raising so many bushels, for instance, 100 or 150 bushels to the acre, which seemed to be the average in many districts of the United States, was an unprofitable venture, pointing out how by the selection of seed and by spraying and certain other simple processes, the productivity of the same land could be and had been raised to as high as 300 and 350 bushels to the acre, making a profitable farmer out of one who had hitherto simply been earning a dollar or a dollar and a half a day by his own labour. In every other branch of such farming as we have east of the Ottawa river—and I am not dealing with grain culture, but with vegetables, fruit, eggs, milk and the rest—a series of simple pamphlets should be issued which would be educational in value. Although I asked the minister's department three years ago for a complete series of their publications and I thought I had been receiving them since, I have not seen pamphlets of this nature although they may exist. I have been studying the reports I have received, because I need education myself. I have the ordinary intelligence, but I find that for me they are not informative and educational. There should be some change so as to bring home to the ordinary farmer every bit of information available of an educational value to him, showing what things he can produce and how he should produce them so as to give him a profitable return on the labour and money he expends annually upon his farm.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are so many of these little bulletins that I sometimes think the work, instead of being underdone, is being overdone already in that respect. I shall be glad to send my hon. friend a list of the publications for 1929. These are distributed from place to place wherever we find any interest is being taken in them. We ask the man to mark those he prefers and we send him those in which he is interested. Some of the titles of these pamphlets are as follows:

Flowers for the Prairie Home.
Fruit Crop Reports.
Fruit Trees, Protection of, from Mice and Rabbits.
Fruit and Vegetables, Canning, Drying, Storing.
The Prairie Farmer's Vegetable Garden.
Grapes for Home Use, Growing.
Hardy Roses, Their Culture in Canada.
Homes Beautiful.
Home Lot, Planning the.
Mushroom Culture.
Orchard Practices, Modern.

There must be thirty of these listed on each page and there are ten or eleven pages of them, so that these bulletins must run into several hundred. These people have their choice of one, two, three or half a dozen that they may desire. If there is any criticism that I would make, it would be that there are too many of them.

Mr. CAHAN: Could something not be done in the way of sending students or teachers from the experimental farms or from the department into the rural districts at certain seasons of the year, who, after having made a study of the productive possibilities of the particular district, would gather the farmers together, come into direct personal contact with them, make suggestions to them, listen to their criticisms, study their needs, because they feel that they are in need of educational assistance in the way of making their farms profitable? The real fact is that the farming districts east of the Ottawa river are not as profitable to-day as they were some years ago. The small farmer is finding greater difficulty in making his farm productively profitable and he is anxious for expert assistance. It seems to me that in this way, if your agents would go into the country districts and come into direct contact with the people themselves, thence reporting to the hon. minister, you would have a new vision of the necessities of agriculture in those provinces which lie to the east.

Mr. IRVINE: I hardly think that some members who have spoken on this question can be quite serious, particularly the hon. member for Rosetown when he suggests that probably the experimental farms do not justify the expenditure. I do not wish to misrepresent him, but I think that that was his idea. I do not think there is any doubt in anybody's mind to-day that these experimental stations are of great value. I do not think that we expect them to pay. Experimental work of that kind is not done to pay; it is done to find out things and then to disseminate the knowledge gained by the experiments and I am quite sure that this is being done to a great extent in all the farm stations throughout the country. Particularly do I believe that this is being well done in the experimental farm at Lacombe. I notice that the farmers in that district get a good deal of assistance and acquire must useful knowledge from being in close touch with the sources of information at that institution. I would ask the minister if there is any increase this year in the vote for the experimental farm at Lacombe.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is an increase of $3,000. We would like to get an addition to that farm, and intend to do so as soon as possible.

Mr. IRVINE: That is what I was asking for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There have been urgent representations from there that the farm is too restricted in its area. We are adding to the size of our farms. We added to the Lethbridge farm a year ago, and we hope to get around to Lacombe before too long, but we have to cut our coat according to our cloth. These farms are requiring money all the time. There is a little complaint as to the expenditure, but not much because I think the people generally feel that the expenditure is well justified, but we cannot go very much faster than we are doing and do the work properly.

With regard to getting closer to the homes of the farmers, I would point out that the question of production is looked upon as essentially a provincial matter. Nevertheless we found it advisable to do a certain amount of work in cooperation with the provincial departments, because if we are going to have an article that will be acceptable to the market, the first thing to be done is to see that it is produced properly, that the article is what the public wants. Consequently, in the maritimes and in the province of Quebec, we have been working in cooperation with the provincial governments in the matter of production, doing what we call promoting. We will have, for instance, a livestock promoter. That is being done in the east and to a certain extent in the west, but we have to do it with a good deal of care or there will be over-lapping, which will cause a little friction. I am happy to say, however, that there is very little friction throughout the whole of Canada in connection with our work in conjunction with the provincial departments of agriculture. But we recognize that production is primarily a matter for the provinces.

Mr. IRVINE: I just want to impress upon the minister the importance of that increase that I have been asking for, for the farm at Lacombe. I presume that the minister is aware of all the circumstances there and realizes how important it is that there should be an increased vote for this purpose.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: I am glad that the minister is thinking about it, and I hope that at this session of parliament he will find a little more cloth so that he can cut the coat a little longer. He might take a few yards of cloth from the Department of Immigration, for instance; in fact, he could take the entire salary of the Minister of Immigration and put the minister in the Senate or some place else, and apply that amount to the farm at Lacombe, or he could take the salary of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of the Interior—the salaries of all three of them—and cutting out this unnecessary expenditure apply the money to carry on successful experiments at the farm at Lacombe. But if the minister will not accept that suggestion I would offer another, and that is that he appropriate a certain percentage of the money that is supposed to be expended this year on immigration itself and apply that to the farm at Lacombe, because I am sure that it would be of far greater value to Canada if expended in that way, giving real practical knowledge to the agriculturists.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Some mention has been made of illustration farms. I was not in when these estimates came up, and I am not sure whether the minister has touched on that feature or not or whether illustration farms are included in this vote.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, they are included.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: If the minister has not already done so, I would like him to outline the system under which these farms are established and how they are conducted, and to state whether it is the intention of the government to extend that policy and establish more farms of that kind.

Coming as I do from one of the older settled areas in the province of Manitoba, I feel that we are being somewhat neglected in that regard. In that province we have two experimental stations, one at Morden and one at Brandon, but they are a long way from the part of the province that I represent, and consequently we do not have the advantage of visiting those farms very often, as they are not very accessible to a great many of our people. While we all admit the splendid work that is being done on these farms, we believe that it woud be profitable and be to the greater advantage of the people if some of these experimental farms and illustration stations were brought closer to the people. I feel that there is a very great need at the present time in those older areas for something of that nature.

We have got to the point now where we must change our system of agriculture to some extent. We have been growing wheat. The area that I come from put Canada on the map for the production of No. 1 hard wheat. The minister knows that himself without being told by me. But conditions have changed. Our crops have been attacked by rust and we have suffered largely from the ravages of that wheat disease. Consequently we have had to change from the growing of bread wheat to other varieties. We have come to the stage where we must almost abandon altogether the idea of continuing to produce a bread wheat, but we are in hopes that some of the varieties that are being propagated by the various experimental stations and scientific agriculturists will come to our rescue to a certain extent, but we realize in any event that we must change our system. We are therefore to-day looking for other varieties of wheat and for varieties of grasses and clover that we can use in crop rotation and that will build up and return to the soil fibre and other properties that have become to some extent weakened. We feel that we should have some assistance in that, and I am urging upon the minister, if it is the intention of the government to establish illustration farms, that there is a field where he could very well expend some money to very great advantage.

It is a tragedy to see the ravages of rust and other diseases affecting the crops in those areas. We have gone through all the period of wheat production, and now we must change our system. We need some assistance to help solve our problems and to demonstrate to us the varities of grasses, clovers and fodder crops, if you will, and barley that we can grow to advantage. We must look to barley largely as our commercial product. We have of necessity to summer-fallow a great deal of our land, and we have not at the present time a known variety of barley that we can successfully grow on summer-fallow.

Mr. SENN: What part does your provincial government in Manitoba take in helping you out in that direction?

Mr. STEEDSMAN: None so far as I know.

Mr. SENN: The provincial government does all that work for Ontario.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: I understand the federal government have illustration farms in operation in every province. I know they have some in my province. In the district west of Morden and south of the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway there are no illustration stations whatsoever. That is a very large and important part of Manitoba. If it is the intention of the government to extend this work, I think it might very properly be undertaken in that part of the country. What is the policy of the government in regard to it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did touch very briefly on illustration farms before my hon. friend came in. They are very important in my estimation and apparently in his. His major question is as to the procedure to obtain one of these stations. I am afraid if I go too elaborately into the procedure I shall be smothered with applications. We have been endeavouring to establish these small illustration stations in the newer districts where the farmers are more in need of them, but it is difficult to keep them there because in the older districts problems are constantly arising which necessitate the establishment of such stations. Out of two hundred illustration stations that we have established, at least one hundred and fifty have been set up during the last seven or eight years. When an application is received for an illustration station the first step is to look into our records and find if a station has been established within a reasonable distance. This reasonable distance is twenty-five or thirty-five miles, but sometimes certain physical features compel us to disregard this limit. We ask the applicant what particular line of experimentation he wishes to take up, what is bothering the farmers in the district, whether it is a question of soil, disappearing fertility, deterioration of soil due to the absence of humus, weeds, or a dozen other things. Out in Saskatchewan in the drier areas they have all kinds of difficulty getting a catch of grass or clover. After we have received that information we get the names of two or three farmers in the vicinity who are of an experimental turn of mind. It is absolutely useless to ask anybody to undertake the work of an illustration station if he has no inclination for experimentation. Not having any predisposition for this class of work, under such a man the forty-acre experimental plot will be a failure. We also take the ground that the station should be on a highway accessible to the public so the sign "Dominion Illustration Station" will be seen by passersby. Then we send one of our representatives to the locality to have a chat with the prospective men whose names have been given to us as being likely to engage successfully in this class of work. Finally one of those men is decided on. The whole of the work is explained to him, and that he has to put himself under the auspices of the department through the medium of one of the staff of the experimental farms in the province. For instance in Saskatchewan it is Mr. Taggert at Swift Current; in Manitoba it is Mr. Tinline at Brandon. Nearly all our illustration stations in Manitoba have been established within the last seven or eight years; they are Arborg, Dauphin, Dugald, Eriksdale, Gilbert Plains, Gunton, Inwood, Katrine, Pipestone, Plumas, Petersfield, Roblin, Ste. Rose du Lac. There is no capital outlay involved except two or three dollars in putting up a sign "Dominion Illustration Station" and keeping it painted. The produce grown on the forty acres belongs to the farmer, with the exception of any special varieties of seed that the government may require.

In reply to the other question, do we intend to continue these illustration stations?—I do not see how we can do otherwise. They are more popular than the large farms, although some people turn up their noses when I suggest one of these illustration farms instead of one of the large farms with buildings, equipment and live stock. These illustration stations are so popular that we can scarcely keep up with the demand for them.

Mr. SENN: I should like to get a list of the illustration stations.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Someone asked for all the illustration stations in every province.

Mr. SENN: Only the number in each province.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: These are: British Columbia, 16; Alberta, 19; Saskatchewan, 28; Manitoba, 13; Ontario, 15; Quebec, 64; New Brunswick, 18; Nova Scotia, 16; Prince Edward Island, 12. My hon. friend will notice that they are not evenly distributed, because it depends upon the applications. We treat the provinces all alike; we have the same policy for all. But there is no use in seeking opportunities for locating these stations unless we get applications.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the average cost per year of one of these illustration stations?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They run all the way from $10 up at Hudson bay, where we have a very small station, up to $300 or $400, the average being about $200.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is the program for the Peace River district this year? Do I understand that there is a farm there?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I remember the time when, a few years ago, my hon. friend did not think much of these substations.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understood that a farm would be established there.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think not; there is a pretty good substation there now under Mr. Albright, and some day it may be a full fledged farm. Just at the present time we are not prepared to establish a farm. There is a substation at Fort Vermilion, a remote locality, three hundred miles north of the Peace River country, and it is doing very useful work. It seems out of the way, but it is well to retain it. The substation at Beaver Lodge has done excellent work under Mr. Albright; it is giving good results with a comparatively small expenditure.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Will the minister give the number of farms in the Dominion by provinces?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are twenty-three full fledged farms.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Then there are some experimental stations which are not designated farms.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are three tobacco stations and a fox farm in Prince Edward Island; there is a substation at Beaver Lodge and another at Fort Vermilion. Of all-round experimental farms, such as branch farms, there are twenty-three; five were organized under the government that established experimental farms first in the eighties; eight were established under the government that followed them; nine were established under the government that preceded this one, and not one to our credit. We are trying to put them all into shape before establishing new ones. Our frontiers are being flung back further all the time, and as my hon. friend from Peace River indicates, the Peace River area is becoming a tremendously important one and it is only a matter of time when we shall have to establish one there. That makes four in the offing so far as that district is concerned. But we shall have to have more money.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Will the minister give the number of experimental farms in each province?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I suppose my hon. friend means the full fledged farms. I think I can give them from memory. In British Columbia there are four; Alberta, two, besides the substations at Beaver Lodge and Fort Vermilion, which are nearly as good as farms; Saskatchewan, 4; Manitoba, 2; Ontario, 2, the central farm and one at Kapuskasing, besides a tobacco station at Harrow, which is a very important one; Quebec, five, with two tobacco stations; Prince Edward Island, one; Nova Scotia, two, and New Brunswick, one. There is also a fox station in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SENN: Does the minister consider the Central experimental farm at Ottawa a purely Ontario institution, or is it Dominion-wide?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is very much an Ontario institution; it is something like the Guelph college, which at one time represented all Canada, although it happened to be located at Guelph. I do not think there is any farm in Canada that receives the number of visitors who go through the Central farm here; there are good roads leading to it from all over the country, and various organizations meet there. It is undoubtedly an Ontario farm, although it serves the Dominion as a whole. My deputy reminds me that in the beginning it was primarily intended to serve Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. member for Wetaskiwin suggested to the minister that he discuss with his colleagues the advisability of securing a certain portion of the vote intended for immigration purposes and have it devoted to agriculture. The hon. member spoke, of course, in his usual jocular way, and lest the minister did not take him seriously I wish to repeat the suggestion. I have here a letter from a municipal council officer in the west making this very suggestion. I will quote it in part:

> Owing to the enormous damage done by the spreading of weeds in this province and the losses incurred thereby, I am instructed, as weed inspector for division 1, Spalding municipality—No. 368, to ask if you could sponsor a motion to transfer $2,000,000 from either the military or immigration apportionments to the Department of Agriculture to be used solely in destroying the noxious weeks on crown lands.

The letter is signed H. R. Brown. This matter has been a source of contention and dissatisfaction in the district for many years. As the miinster knows, there is a large area surrounding the Quill lakes, which has been set aside as a bird sanctuary. That land is polluted with sow thistle and other noxious weeds, and it is practically impossible for the municipal authorities in any part of that surrounding country to cope with the weeds. The minister and his colleagues will no doubt say that the eradication of weeds is a provincial problem; in the case of privately owned lands the municipal or provincial authorities have power under provincial laws to go on these lands and take the necessary means to eradicate the weeds, charging the cost against the land. But here you have land belonging to the federal government against which no taxation can be levied, and the area is so large that it would be altogether too expensive for the municipalities to undertake the work of eradicating the weeds. Indeed, they have not even the right to go on the land, as the minister knows. If that land were leased or allowed to be cultivated, if something were done with it, then of course it would come under the provisions of the provincial statutes. But year after year this problem remains. The farmers are doing everything they can to cope with the sow thistle, experimenting on their own land; but here is a large area of land belonging to the federal government, land which is not leased, over which the provincial authorities have no control, and which is just a breeding ground for these weeds, creating a tremendous problem for the farmers of the district. It seems to me to be useless to discuss the matter with the provincial government. It really is not and should not be the business of the provincial government to handle the situation there; and even if the municipal authorities were permitted to go on the land—which they are not—they cannot be expected to expend their funds for this purpose. If that land is to be continued as a bird sanctuary then I suggest that there should be a vote for the purpose of eradicating these weeds. The minister may say that this comes under the Department of the Interior; that is correct, but that department is not particularly interested in the eradication of weeds, and I suggest that the minister discuss this question with his colleagues and try to arrange some method of handling this problem. The hon. member for Melfort is not in his seat just now, but he attended a conference at Star city about a year ago which was attended by representatives of the municipal authorities covering a wide area, at which this problem was thoroughly gone into. Petitions were forwarded to the provincial and federal governments; there was a good deal of correspondence about it but so far nothing has been done. After all, this matter comes under this department; it is a federal problem and it seems to me the Department of Agriculture should at least press for something to be done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not want to take advantage of the fact that this vote covers experimental farms; I suppose almost anything can be brought up now. This weed problem on crown lands has been up many times; the Minister of the Interior and I have had many discussions about it, and for some years he has adopted the policy of getting rid of many of these lands and letting those who take them over meet the situation. For the government to undertake to eradicate sow thistle, let us say, around Quill lakes would be a tremendous task; the only method I could imagine would be to pasture it with animals so heavily that the sow thistle would be killed, but by the time you did that the animals probably would be dead from starvation. I visited that district recently, and having viewed the terrific destruction the birds are doing my suggestion is that the sanctuary be thrown open. There is a time in the agricultural life of the community when you cannot both farm and protect the beaver, for instance; they will cut down your trees and fence posts as quickly as you can put them up. Then you have to sacrifice them in the interests of the farmer and let them go back to the frontier where there are not so many farms and where there are more trees for them to cut down.

With regard to this bird sanctuary, I had charge of that work when I was a provincial minister; I have a great deal of interest in bird life, but my interest in human life is much greater. I have every sympathy for the farmers who are trying to make a living, but who find that the ducks reap the harvest. There are enough people taking a slice off the farmer's harvest without letting millions of ducks interfere as well. That would be my solution of the problem.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I agree that the only real solution is to have this land thrown open; once it is privately owned it is subject to taxation and the necessary action can be taken to eradicate the weeds. I hope something may be done along that line, but if the Department of the Interior retains that land I think they should eradicate these weeds. I know it is a big problem, but it could be handled if the land was completely mowed before the sow thistle goes to seed. The weed might continue to spread by the roots but certainly there would be no seeds blowing on to the farmer's land. That would not require such a very large expenditure, and certainly if the land is retained as a bird sanctuary something should be done.

Mr. CAHAN: I have been waiting to ask the minister a question, and perhaps he will allow me to ask it now. What is the Department of Agriculture doing to improve the culture of tobacco in the province of Quebec? I am reliably informed that the tobacco production of the province of Quebec could be increased to two or three times what it is at present if it were possible to establish warehouses in which the farmers could place their tobacco during the time it is maturing for the market and obtain a warehouse receipt. I am informed also that the ordinary small farmer who raises tobacco finds it very difficult indeed at present to obtain the amount of money necessary to carry him over the time of culture, and then he has to carry the tobacco for a long time while it is maturing. If some means could be found, either under this or some other department, whereby warehouses could be established at convenient points where the raw product could be stored while maturing, the banks would be quite willing to advance to the farmers a very considerable portion of the price on warehouse receipts, which would enable the farmers to pay their current expenses and carry their product until it is ready for the market. In fact I am told that if some such reform were made it would double and treble the production of tobacco in that province, as, owing to the extensive use of tobacco in various forms, a very good market could be found even for a much increased production. Has the hon. gentleman studied that question at all?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend has brought up a very important question, because there are a few tobacco growers who possess sufficient means to establish a proper warehouse, and as yet I do not think anything has been done by the government in the way of assisting in the establishment of these warehouses. I understand that in Quebec there is quite a large number of cooperative warehouses, and I remember from my experience with this question in the county of Essex that some of the tobacco companies advanced sufficient money to the farmers to enable them to put up proper buildings for the purposes indicated by my hon. friend. Then, in the fall of the year, the tobacco would be sold and a certain amount of money would be applied to the cost of the building, and in five or six years it would be paid for. Unfortunately sometimes the grower found himself tied up to a tobacco company when he could have done better elsewhere, and that caused some dissatisfaction. However, I think if that sort of thing is carried on squarely it is a very good thing.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. gentleman promise me that during the recess and before parliament meets again he will study that question? I have a long brief here which would require perhaps three-quarters of an hour to present; I intended to deal with the matter at length, but, since these estimates have come down at the close of the session that has become impossible. However, I do suggest to the minister that he study the question because I intend to bring it up in earnest, if I attend another session of this parliament.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would like to ask the minister if this department has done anything to encourage the industry of muskrat farming. Only a few years ago this was looked upon as something of a joke, but to-day it is getting to be a very important industry.

Mr. CAHAN: Is that agriculture?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes, most decidedly so. This would be a most profitable venture to be carried on as a side line to the ordinary cultivation of the land. Wild animals are being almost completely trapped out; muskrat furs as well as other furs are becoming scarcer year by year and we will have to rely upon the farms to supply the markets. In the newer portions of western Canada there is a lot of rough, sloughy land, and with a little encouragement and the proper technical advice many of the settlers in those parts could make a considerable amount of money out of land which is almost valueless for agricultural purposes. There are several of these muskrat ranches in my constituency and I believe the men running them are doing very well. The Saskatchewan government has done something towards scattering some technical advice, but I think this is a proper matter for the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have an officer who is working on that question at the present time. These farms are spread all over Canada, and some of them are being operated on dry land. The general impression has been that muskrats must be raised near the water, but one of the hon. members of this house has been very successful in raising rats on ordinary dry land within a short distance of Ottawa.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Have any bulletins been published by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We had a bulletin but the demand was so large that it is now out of print.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I suggest that the minister do everything possible during the coming season to distribute this information to the farmers. In many parts of the country the farmers could be very easily encouraged to engage in this profitable business, and many of them are looking for some kind of technical advice.

Mr. KENNEDY: Has the minister received a request for the establishment of an experimental substation on the north side of the Peace? I think a request was made by the board of trade of Fairview.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are investigating that matter to see what the prospects are in that particular district. In connection with these substations the objection is taken to paying a salary to a man for operating his own farm. There is not the same control over him as if the land belonged to the government, and I do not know how far we will go in the establishment of these substations. The substation at Beaver Lodge has been quite successful, but I imagine that any capital outlays will remain on that farm, and I look with a considerable amount of disfavour upon establishing too many of these substations.

Mr. KELLNER: When the minister is discussing the matter of noxious weeds, I think he should confer with the Minister of Justice as well as the Minister of the Interior. There is a considerable tract of land in the city of Edmonton owned by the penitentiaries branch. The city of Edmonton has approached the government several times with a view to disposing of this land, but I understand that the answer has always been given that they were unable to do so. I think the Minister of Agriculture should see that the weeds are controlled on that property, as it is very unfair to have such a large tract of land in the city of Edmonton covered with all sorts of weeds.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will remember the recommendation of the hon. member. If they have no use for the penitentiary at Edmonton there is no need to grow weeds upon the property. If they cannot keep the penitentiary filled it should be disposed of.

Mr. SENN: Some additional property has been purchased by the government for the use of the experimental farm at Ottawa, and I would like to ask the minister if it is proposed to use that additional property as an experimental farm or as a general farm.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The department has not received the judgment rendered by the exchequer court, but, according to the newspaper reports, the price has been set at $700 per acre, with an additional 10 per cent levied for forcible expropriation, and $30,000 for the buildings thereon. The total acreage of the additional property is three hundred and sixty.

Mr. SENN: Is this property to be used for experimental purposes or for general farming?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The whole farm is experimental in nature but a certain amount of commercial farming will have to be carried on in order to provide for the live stock.

Mr. GARDINER: What kind of buildings were on the land?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was one house, and pretty extensive stabling adjoining the house with four or five of the usual old frame barns.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the minister find it difficult to conduct profitable operations upon land which costs $700 per acre?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We were not prepared to pay that much for the land, but where there is a difference of opinion in a matter of that kind, it is necessary to refer the matter to the exchequer court for a decision. Whatever they decide, of course, I feel I must accept.

Mr. CAHAN: Is there any possibility of its being profitably used for farming purposes?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. It was expensive land, but it would be much more unprofitable not to have it even at that price. Canada is expanding so rapidly, agriculturally and othewise, that the central experimental farm requires more farm space for the purpose of developing new varieties of grains, grasses and so forth and propagating them on the twenty-two branch farms. Therefore the success of the twenty-two branch farms is dependent upon the central farm which is the nerve centre of the whole system. I do not know that the price paid is reasonable, but it would be more expensive not to have it than to have it even at that price, for the simple reason that if we did not have proper room to develop our activities at our headquarters at Ottawa, the whole system throughout the Dominion would be in danger of being paralysed.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): How many acres are there now in the central experimental farm?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: About 825. The original farm was 465 acres and this addition consists of 360 acres.

Mr. SENN: A few moments age the minister informed me that the central experimental farm was an institution for the use of Ontario; that it could be considered a provincial institution, or one for the use of the province alone. Now he tells us that it is used for developing seeds and so forth to furnish the branch farms which, I understand, are situated throughout the Dominion. He tells us also that there are some 700 or 800 acres in the whole farm. May I ask him whether the acreage of the original farm was all used for experimental purposes and for developing the necessary seeds for the branch farms? If not, why was it necessary to purchase the additional land?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As time went on, the original farm was used for many purposes besides what might be termed agriculture, strictly speaking. There is an arboretum consisting of sixty acres in which the late Doctor Saunders took a great pride. Then we have to have some grounds around the farm. We have established branches dealing with horticulture, orchardry and poultry, and as each new branch was established it took up a little more ground. We started in a small way with one or two divisions and we have developed until now there are fifteen. This means that the farm had been reduced to three fields of forty acres each, or 120 acres in all. That is really all that is strictly speaking, the agricultural ground we had. The farm was really top heavy with beauty without having a farm associated with it until we secured this additional acreage. I am sure my hon. friends from the west would not like to call an experimental farm a farm when there were only 120 acres for actual operations.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister will now admit it is top heavy with cost.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We hope to get results commensurate with the cost, and I think we shall.

Mr. SENN: Will the minister admit that it is a Dominion-wide institution and not confined to Ontario?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will admit that, but at the same time one cannot help realizing that it is of tremendous benefit to Ontario. It is, strictly speaking, a Dominion-wide institution because it supplies the whole system, but it is a valuable adjunct to the agriculture of Ontario because it is accessible by good roads from half of the province.

Mr. SENN: How many of these branch farms are located in Ontario?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is Kapuskasing and there is a tobacco farm at Harrow.

Mr. WARD: Does the Minister of Agriculture think that the Booth farm which has been recently purchased is worth anything like the price that has been paid for it, or does he think it was good business to call upon the exchequer court to arbitrate in connection with the price? Is that court in a position to know land values? I looked all over the Booth farm the other day and I think the government has paid about five times more than the property was worth. The buildings could be put up for much less than $30,000, the price we paid for them. They did not cost $30,000 new, and no practical man would value them to-day at over $8,000. If the government had paid $75,000 for the farm itself, they would have paid a long price. It is a wet, low-lying piece of land, and it will cost a great deal of money to drain it before it is fit for experimental purposes. As an hon. member beside me suggests, it might make a good muskrat farm.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We could not agree on a price and I do not know of any other way of obtaining a decision than through the court. That is the regular way. Whether it was a correct decision or not, my hon. friend is more at liberty to criticise it than I am. I was one of the interested parties in submitting the matter to the court, and I feel I have to accept the decision, whatever I may think about it. The price is unquestionably high for farm land, but I take the ground that it would have been a greater mistake not to have had it than to take it even at that price, because we needed it so badly for the purpose of keeping the branch farms across the Dominion going. That is different from saying that the price is high or low. The decision is that of a court and I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. SENN: Were there not in the locality other farms that could have been purchased at a more reasonable price and that would have answered the purpose of the department just as well?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. If my hon. friend has ever operated two farms with a road between them, he knows the tremendous inconvenience involved. You spend a great deal of time on the road. The Booth farm abutted on the experimental farm, there being an imaginary line—in fact, just a hedge—between. It is hard to describe just how valuable it is to have the farm so located as against a farm, perhaps just as good, but farther away, and with a public road between. My hon. friend, I believe, is a farmer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. member tells us that he has operated a farm all his life under similar conditions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If he has, he knows the inconvenience involved. We have investigated the whole matter and there would have to be a subway. The drainage there would not permit of a subway to get from one farm to the other. Another way to get from one to the other would be by an overhead bridge.

Mr. SENN: I understand fully the inconvenience involved in crossing a highway all the time to get from one farm to another. At the same time, this is a considerable amount of money to expend. Is the minister finished buying land for the experimental farm now? I heard that further developments were likely to follow and that other land might be acquired in the near future.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am through for the present, at least until we get the new farm developed. I will not say that it is large enough. Someone may follow me who may have ambitions to enlarge it, but for the immediate present we have sufficient land to meet the requirements.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The cost of the Booth farm was over $300,000?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Something like that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is over $800 an acre.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: At five per cent this farm is costing for carrying charges alone nearly $20,000 a year, or $40 an acre. I think it is pretty nearly time the minister came to the conclusion not to spend any more money on these farms.

Mr. PECK: Was a valuation made before the purchase of the land by any local valuator, and if so, by whom?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the hon. member mean a valuation for strictly farm purposes?

Mr. PECK: It would not matter what you bought it for. What was the farm worth? What would it sell for to the ordinary purchaser?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I presume that the price set by the court would be what anybody else would have to pay for it.

Mr. PECK: Did you not endeavour to settle the price amicably before going to court?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. PECK: Before doing that you would require to have a valuation made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. PECK: Who were the valuators who acted for the government?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We had two farmers who looked into it very thoroughly as a strictly farming proposition compared with other lines in that vicinity, and having regard to the condition it was in, with quackgrass and lack of drainage, they valued it at $75 an acre.

Mr. PECK: Is there any reason why the government should pay more than $75 an acre for it, plus the extra ten per cent which would be allowed by any arbitrator?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There seems to be a tremendous diversity of prices in that vicinity. The Caldwell farm could be got for a little less than $400 an acre. For the farm adjoining the Caldwell farm and butting up against the Booth farm, Mr. Scott wanted $700 an acre. There is a gentleman farming sixty acres there, and he valued his land at $700 an acre. It just shows the difference between the individuality of these men and what they think the land is worth, depending on what they can make out of it in the matter of production. The Scott farm is an exceedingly well handled farm and very, very clean. I do not know whether Mr. Scott feels that he can make interest on it at that price, but I am given to understand that he does.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The price the minister paid for this acreage puts me in mind of the prices charged for a subdivision in some western town. Suppose you figured eight lots to an acre, that would figure out to $80 for a small lot.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The court puts an appraisal on the property. We needed the land and needed it badly, and so we sent the matter to an impartial tribunal, where lawyers on both sides were heard and witnesses galore.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The court did not put a price on it until you asked them to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We felt that the only way to arrive at a decision that would be equitable to all parties would be to submit the question to an impartial tribunal.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the price per acre originally asked for this land?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They put it at $700 per acre, plus 10 per cent for forcible possession, plus $30,000 for the buildings, bringing the total to $823,000. They were asking in the court proceedings $1,200 per acre, and our lawyers were offering $400.

Mr. GARDINER: Did they set any prices privately on this land before the matter went to the court?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was no offer on our part, but there was a tentative offer on their part of $700 an acre. That was some time ago. Prior to that, before the father of the present owners died, they asked $1,500 an acre for it.

Mr. GARDINER: This tentative offer of $700 prior to the case going to the exchequer court would include the buildings, I presume. I think the minister said something about that last session, that they had offered this land at $700.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It included the buildings.

Mr. GARDINER: So by going to the exchequer court we paid 10 per cent on the purchase price of $700 and $30,000 for the buildings.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We had to pay a little more on account of the lawyer's fees, I suppose.

Mr. GARDINER: The lawyer's fees were on top of that. It strikes me as poor business.

Mr. SENN: It seems to me that the minister must have thought that offer of $700 per acre was too high a price to pay or he would not have gone to court.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right.

Mr. SENN: I understand that this is a low-lying farm and hard to drain, that it needs under-draining. It seems there is no system of under-drainage in that section of the county. Does the minister think it is possible to under-drain this farm properly in the next few years?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, yes. While it is in need of draining very badly, it is not expensive to drain. There are good outlets.

Mr. SENN: The minister told me a few moments ago that he could not put a subway under the road because of the lack of drainage.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because of the fall at that end of it. That is opposite the Caldwell farm. That was in the event of our getting the Caldwell farm, but we do not require it under the circumstances.

Mr. PECK: Did the judge give a written judgment? It would be interesting to see how he arrived at this enormous price for the property. I think his judgment should be produced.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not had much experience in the exchequer court or in any other court proceedings, but there is a regular routine to follow, and following the course of that routine the judgment has not yet arrived in our office.

Mr. PECK: When was the judgment given?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The case was heard about the 10th of May and judgment was given almost immediately.

Mr. PECK: It was a regular trial, with evidence given on both sides as to the value of the property, and after hearing the evidence the judge handed down his judgment. I think it could be very interesting to the committee to have the text of his judgment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend has the substance of it.

Mr. PECK: In his judgment the judge would sum up the situation and show how he arrived at the price he fixed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am awaiting that information myself. I am somewhat curious to know how it was figured out.

Mr. GARDINER: Was any evidence offered to the court on behalf of the department that the Booth family had offered this land to the department at $700 an acre, and if so, how on earth could the court have given the judgment it did?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not at the court, but I understand not. The communication that was sent to us with regard to that was confidential and in confirmation of an interview between Mr. Booth, Doctor Grisdale and myself. Doctor Grisdale communicated with Mr. Booth and asked him if the understanding was so and so. Mr. Booth marked his reply "confidential," and our lawyers advised us not to use the letter. I think the contents were meant to be confidential at the time, but I did not so regard the letter after the case went into court.

Mr. WARD: The witnesses in the exchequer court must have been great real estate boomers.

Mr. SENN: I understand the minister himself is not too well satisfied with the judgment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I have gotten over it.

Mr. SENN: From what he said a little while ago I understood he thought the judgment was perhaps a little too high. That being the case, does the minister intend to appeal the judgment?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, when I got the judgment first I thought it was high. If my view had prevailed at the outset in the price we offered for the land we would not have had to go to the exchequer court, but the other gentleman entertained a different view; that is why we had to go to the exchequer court. We were advised by the Justice department not to appeal; the result would be doubtful and in any case it would involve further expense.

Mr. SENN: The minister did consider an appeal?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thought over it and we submitted our view to the Justice department. We were advised that it would not be good tactics and would probably result in simply adding to the expense.

Mr. PECK: I cannot agree with the minister. You are spending on the purchase of this property over $300,000, and the costs of an appeal would be scarcely worth considering in view of the amount involved. Personally I should like to see an appeal taken to the supreme court against the judgment. I think it might be reversed. Certainly it would be more satisfactory to the government and the people generally if an appeal were taken to the supreme court.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): It is just such transactions as this that bring the department into disrepute with the ordinary farmer. When he realizes that the interest on the purchase price of the Booth farm is about $40 an acre, or the purchase price per acre of the average farm in Ontario, a great deal of the investigation work carried on by the experimental farm and the advice given by the department from time to time are discounted. I have often heard the ordinary farmer say: "There is no use my trying to follow the advice offered by these experimental farms. They are backed by the government, they have all the money they require to carry on things as they like, and I cannot do that." As a consequence he passes up a lot of good advice. I censure vey severely the paying of this amount of money for farm land in Ontario. No land for farming purposes is worth the price or anywhere near it. How any court could award such a fabulous price, and expect to have it accepted by the farming community of this country, I am at a loss to understand.

Mr. GARDINER: I would call the attention of the minister and the committee to the fact that treating this so-called confidential letter as such—and in my judgment it was only confidential for the time being—has cost the country $55,000 over and above the price that the Booth family required in the first instance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Unfortunately there is no other tribunal to which we could resort in arriving at the value of this land. We needed the land so badly that we were prepared to pay the price rather than be without it. Personally, after the negotiations were made public I did not think the letter was any longer confidential, but our lawyer did not regard it in that way. The land at Morden we bought for about $46 or $47 an acre. We considered it was a good buy. We had to pay $100 an acre for the land we bought at Lethbridge because it was irrigated. So sometimes we get land adjoining our present farms at their rock bottom value for farm purposes. At other places we have to give a price quite out of line with agricultural valuation. In this instance when the whole system was depending on the nerve centre being properly taken care of we had to get the land at that price.

Mr. SENN: I understood the minister to say that this land was valued by two farmers, who were acting as valuators, at something like $75 an acre. Did they appear in the exchequer court as witnesses?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. TUMMON: Was there no other property close by available for the same purpose?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, but it was not so desirable. The Booth property was much more valuable for our purposes because it adjoined the experimental farm.

Mr. TUMMON: But was there no other property available in the vicinity?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is other property on the other side of the road, but it is intersected by two roads.

Mr. TUMMON: My information is that there is a piece of land two or three hundred acres in extent very close by and perhaps better suited for farming purposes than the property under discussion, and that it was available at about $250 an acre.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. If we took the whole farm that my hon. friend refers to it would have cost us $375 an acre, and it is cut off from the main farm by two public highways.

Mr. GARDINER: After looking over the farm very carefully there is no question in my mind that more land was required. But I would remind the minister that last session he stated the Booth family had offered this land to the government at $700 an acre, and at that time the minister thought it was too high a price to pay. In view of that statement, I really think a great mistake was made in not bringing the offer to the attention of the exchequer court. I do not know who was responsible; I am not blaming the minister, but I do say some official in his department should be called on the carpet for making such a blunder.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When you go to the exchequer court you must get lawyers to take care of your case, and you must either accept the decision of the court or take the chance of getting a worse decision in another court. My hon. friend is complaining about not making further use of the letter marked confidential. Counsel said it would be bad policy and bad ethics to go into court and use a letter marked confidential, no matter how it had been obtained.

Mr. GARDINER: But that information was given to the house last session when the minister's estimates were under consideration, because I remember the occasion distinctly. Well, if it could be given to the house it could be given to the exchequer court.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Having submitted the matter to the court, and needing the property as we did, we had either to appeal or to acquiesce in the judgment, and we were advised not to appeal.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not appear to have got the point clearly to the minister. Last year he said in this house that it was the intention of the department to buy the Booth farm because of lack of sufficient land for experimental farm purposes. The minister stated in the house last year that the offer was $700 per acre; and he added, if I remember rightly, that in the judgment of the department this was too much. He instanced a certain gentleman out at Indian Head, known to both the minister and myself, who gave a piece of land to the government for that class of work for nothing, and he made the comparison. So did the member for Qu'Appelle. Now in view of the fact that the information had been given to the house, that the Booth family had offered the land at $700 an acre, I wish to know why that information was not submitted to the exchequer court. I maintain that if it could be given to this house it could be given to the exchequer court; and I should like to know what court would raise the price over and above what had been proposed by the people who wanted to sell the property.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The information was not confidential then.

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: After the tentative negotiations were over I never looked upon that letter as confidential and that is why I gave it to the house; but the lawyers regarded it as confidential and held that it would be bad ethics to use it. And we were guided by their advice.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister gave that information to the house twelve months ago; I think there is something wrong somewhere in this particular matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; my hon. friend is quite wrong.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not suggest anything like bribery or anything of that sort, but someone slipped on the job; whether it was the lawyers or the officials of the department. I do not know, but someone was at fault.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is quite wrong. There is no justification for suggesting any jugglery or wrongdoing.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not say that, but they fell down on the job.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Even lawyers sometimes do that, I suppose; but we got a good lawyer and in his opinion it was not good tactics to use that letter, and we acted accordingly.

Mr. FRASER: Who was the lawyer?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Wilson of Ottawa and Mr. Robertson of Toronto, while Mr. Tilley was Mr. Booth's lawyer in Toronto; who his local representative was I do not know.

Mr. GARDINER: I am to understand, then, that the lawyers for the department never presented this letter to the court at all. If I know anything about jurisprudence or pleading, I take it it would be up to the lawyers for the other party to object to the evidence going in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My deputy, who was present in court, informs me that the lawyer did not submit that letter. I discussed it with him myself a month before the case was heard and it was my opinion that he should have submitted it. That was my own view, because I considered it was meant to be confidential only during the tentative negotiations but not for an indefinite length of time.

Mr. GARDINER: I still hold that the lawyers for the department should have submitted the information to the court, and if opposing counsel objected then the court would rule on the point. I say therefore that in that regard they fell down and fell down badly. When was the case submitted to the exchequer court? What was the date?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have not the exact date, but it was well into the beginning of winter.

Mr. GARDINER: This last winter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. I am speaking from memory, but I think it was late in November or early in December.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: I again direct the minister's attention to the debate that took place on his estimates last year. If I mistake not, he made the statement then that the offer from the Booth family was $700 an acre. I intend to look up the debate. In any case I submit that someone has fallen down badly.

Mr. ROWE: It seems to me that the minister, judging from his statement of the situation, has clearly shown that the Booth property has cost this country about $170,000 or $175,000 more than the Scott-Caldwell property would have cost; and from experienced farmers who are familiar with the value of soil I learn that the Scott-Caldwell property is equally as valuable for farming purposes. As to the suitability of its location, I understand that it is only sixty feet further from the main grounds; and as for the road dividing it from the farm, it divides only one field. The minister could have saved the country, I should say, at least $150,000 and would have had a property adequate for his purposes. It seems to me that his purchase has been extravagant.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is entirely a matter of judgment whether it would have been better to have taken the other property rather than the one we secured. But I would point out to the hon. gentlemen that if we had selected the property he suggests the choice would have been wrong for all time, whereas the one selected is right permanently so far as location is concerned. And that is an important consideration.

Mr. ROWE: But the minister in one case would have been buying farm property, whereas in the other he is buying city property ready for subdivision.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The possibilities in regard to subdivision must have been taken into consideration by the court. That was the whole argument of the owners, and it is an important factor in determining the value of the property. I do not know of any other lands around here which would be worth three or four hundred dollars an acre. I understand that the Caldwell farm had been floated as a subdivision proposition by a company in the early years of the war, but it has gone back to farming operations. That was at a time of special boom, but the proposition petered out. In years to come, of course, it may be worth what they are asking for it, but at the present time it is not worth their figure either for subdivision or for farming purposes.

Mr. ROWE: It seems an unwise policy for the Department of Agriculture to purchase land capable of subdivision when there is adjacent a desirable property which is worth almost dollar for dollar what the other represents. It seems to me that the minister has wasted from $150,000 to $175,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend did not appreciate what I said with regard to what is known as the Caldwell farm. That was a subdivision project floated by a company of which Mr. Caldwell was one, but it broke up and the property went back into his hands. Some day it may be worth as much as the other, but it is not worth it now either for subdivision purposes or for farming.

Mr. FRASER: I find that according to the auditor General's report for 1927-28 there is an increase of $454,000 in this vote. Can the minister give me the reasons for that increase?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will have to look that up.

Item agreed to.

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,450,000.

Mr. KAISER: There is a great deal to be said in favour of spending this amount of money in looking after the health of animals, but it is not an unmixed blessing to the farmers of this country as the work is carried on at present. I am going to draw the attention of the minister to a case which, although I cite a particular instance, is by no means an isolated example. In my community there is a great deal of dissatisfaction among people who concern themselves with the production of high grade stock, and I will tell the minister the reason for this dissatisfaction. My particular complaint has to do with the method by which the government handles a disease known as mange.

For the benefit of those who may not understand what I have to say, I may state that mange is a parasitic disease which breaks out among animals. I have had experience with it; I have seen it in human beings, in horses, in dogs and in cattle, and therefore I believe I have some knowledge of the disease. Mange is caused by a parasite which attaches itself to the animal, and there is a period of what is called incubation, but I would like to point out that this government does not recognize the scientific knowledge which is applied by other countries in handling this disease. In this connection I might quote what the German authorities have to say:

> The tenacity of scab mite varies according to different varieties. According to Gerlach, the least resistant are the sarcoptis which die in dry air in a few days.
>
> The dermatocoptis mites live outside the body from 4 to 6 weeks, but longer in damp and dirty stables, and can remain alive even in dry air for 10 to 14 days.

This is an authoritative statement, and now I want to show how this department handles this situation. In November, 1927, a very high class farmer named Richardson bought an animal at auction which may be described by the following couplet:

> The farmer called him Mike, because > That's the kind of a cow he was.

We admit that mange existed on the farm from which the animal was bought, but the government inspectors investigated conditions there, ordered all the cattle dipped, cleaned them all up and certified that it was safe for this farmer to buy "mike".

Mr. Richardson bought the animal and took it to his farm. Three months later, on March 8, this animal was put up for sale at Bowmanville and was purchased by a man living near Peterborough, and eleven months later the government inspectors found that the animal had mange. Then Mr. Richardson, who had sold the animal, prepared his stock for sale; he had worked on his heard for twenty years and it had been regularly inspected by the government inspectors; as a matter of fact they went to this farm thirteen times in one year, 1928, and examined these animals, and gave a certificate to the effect that Mr. Richardson had an accredited herd. However, after these thirteen visits, another inspector discovered that this animal Mike at Peterborough had mange. Just when Mr. Richardson has his herd ready to sell, and after he had paid $10 a head to have them included in the sale, the inspector came along and notified him that the cattle were not to be placed on the block, and he advertised that fact all over the country. Then he inspected the premises and the entire herd; unable to find any trace of mange on any animal, he then issued a certificate saying that this action had been taken on "suspicion"; he only suspected that something was wrong with this herd.

The situation was so critical and so unbelievable that I engaged a high class veterinary and took him to this farm, where he and I examined every animal. This veterinary gave me the following certificate:

March 5th, 1929.

This is to certify that this day, at the request of Dr. Kaiser, member of parliament for Ontario riding, I made a special inspection of the premises and entire herd of cattle owned by L. Richardson and Son of Ashburn, township of Whitby, and herein state that in no case could be found a visible sign of mange, past or present, in any animal of the whole herd; and furthermore, as a veterinary, I have visited the stock for many years past, and I have never seen any skin affection which even suggested mange, upon any animal upon the farm.

W. A. MacNeely, V.S.,
Brooklin, Ontario.

This farmer had gone to considerable trouble and had built up a magnificent herd but on account of this interference on the part of the department he was deprived of the only chance he had to cash in. He could not put these cattle up as high grade stock and receive up to $300 per head for them, but was obliged to take them from the block and sell them on the market as ordinary animals. I saw one of these animals myself; it looked to be absolutely perfect, and a stockman assured me that it was easily worth $500. Instead of accomplishing something of value to stockmen these officials are actually doing damage not only to this man's herd, but to other herds in the same neighbourhood. The British and European authorities claim that mange cannot exist beyond three months, even under the most favourable circumstances. During the last fifteen or twenty years it has been proved that there are periods of incubation beyond which there is no danger. It might as well be said that a man should not risk catching smallpox by going to the home of another man who had it three years ago, as to say that an animal can catch the mange after eleven or twelve months. The government has enacted certain regulations which appear to me in some respects to be as old as, or perhaps older, than the Minister of Agriculture. Let any sensible man consider these regulations and see what conclusion he can arrive at from such a regulation as this:

No animal which is affected or has been exposed to the infection of mange shall be permitted to run at large or come in contact with any animal not so affected or exposed.

This does not recognize the period of incubation or make any time allowance for quarantine, but if such an animal comes in contact with another animal then the department may step in at any time and destroy the results of efforts extending over twenty-five or thirty years. If the minister should conclude that what I am saying is the truth, then this government should compensate that farmer for the loss which he has sustained. He has suffered not only a loss in the value of his cattle, but also a loss in prestige. I ask the government to investigate this case, and if I am correct in my statements then the minister should call off some of these half educated veterinary surgeons and place in charge of this work sensible men who understand something of the evolution of disease.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The officers of the department put a quarantine on these animals and said that they were unsafe to be sent out to a sale. There is no doubt that an animal can carry mange for as long as two years and show no visible signs of it.

Mr. KAISER: Where does the minister get that authority?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Anyone who knows anything about what is called burrowing mange knows that it can be carried that length of time. Surface mange is easily diagnosed, but the experience with this burrowing mange has shown that it may be carried at least two years without being diagnosed. Our records show that a veterinary practitioner reported mange on the premises of Mr. Melville Pinnett, of Indian River, Ontario, and scrapings taken by Inspector Gibson from a bull in Pinnett's herd were examined in our laboratory and sarcoptes found. These are the burrowing mites and this mange is difficult to cure. The following is a memorandum regarding this outbreak at Indian River:

The disease was probably introduced into the herd of Mr. Melville Pinnett, of Indian River, Ont., by a bull purchased at a Bowmanville sale in March, 1928, and originally coming from the herd of James Compton, of Ashburn, Ont.

Mr. Compton's premises were quarantined for sarcoptic mange in the fall of 1926 and released in March, 1927, after the cattle had been treated three times, but this bull probably carried infection in spite of treatments.

The outbreak on Mr. Compton's premises was apparently introduced through a cow purchased from Mr. John Miller of Ashburn, Ont., and which had been purchased by the latter in Alberta some five years previously. This animal had shown skin trouble at the time of purchase by Mr. Miller but had subsequently apparently recovered.

Further evidence that sarcoptic mange was present in Mr. Miller's herd before 1924, probably brought in by western cattle, is found in the fact that a number of cattle imported by Messrs. Dryden and Miller from Scotland in 1924 and subsequently sold in 1925 were found to be infected. It is unlikely that the infection was introduced by the imported cattle since these were inspected by a Canadian veterinary officer in Scotland and kept under continual observation during the quarantine period at Quebec, and no clinical symptoms noted.

The hon. member is complaining that we did not allow these suspected animals to go to this sale and thus be distributed to the four corners of Ontario. In order to safeguard our live stock it is necessary to take every precaution to see that such animals are not let loose at a sale. There is no question that it is a hardship, but in the public interests of the community it is necessary that these precautionary measures be taken. They are carried out on the advice of the very best veterinary surgeons we can obtain, and it is regrettable that these hardships must prevail with respect to the individual. You cannot take a chance with any of these diseases. It has been found necessary to impose regulations as to shipments of merchandise, et cetera, with regard to the foot and mouth disease, and although they may seem very harsh it is necessary to take every precaution to keep out any of these infectious diseases. Safety first must be our policy, especially when action is being taken under the advice of one of our competent authorities. I am very sorry for the gentleman who apparently suffered loss by reason of not being able to submit his cattle at the sale. I understand from my deputy—I did not catch it from my hon. friend—that this man, by reason of not being able to submit these animals at the sale, lost the sale of them and that he wants compensation. The law makes no such provision and therefore I am unable to give the matter favourable consideration. We give compensation for animals slaughtered for bovine tuberculosis, but not for cases of this kind.

Mr. KAISER: The minister misunderstands me altogether. I do not complain because this man was shut off from the sale. What I complain of is this, that when he bought this animal the government certified that it was right; that it was clean; that it would not scatter the disease. The animal was observed for sixty days and then the man was assured that it was all right. Of what benefit is this government certificate? A man in good faith accepted it; he built up his herd and then when he expected to make a few dollars, he was told that he could not cash in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no system of governmental or other inspection that is 100 per cent correct. This kind of mange does not show at times. It is a burrowing mange that is beyond the ken of the ordinary eye. At certain periods of the year it will develop and manifest itself, but it may be carried for at least two years and in the interim a clean certificate may be given. Otherwise it might have to be quarantined still further. When there is a reasonable presumption that there is no danger of mange, the quarantine is removed and the certificate is given. If the inspector had taken absolutely no chance for that period of two years, there would have been all the greater howl because we kept the animal in quarantine for so long. We took a chance in liberating it and eventually it developed that it had the mange of this description. Then the gentleman, not being able to sell it, no doubt suffered loss. We have had placed before us a number of claims for compensation of that nature, but before we could deal with them, the law would have to be amended. The question whether we shall widen the scope of the law as regards compensation is a matter for consideration. The act has not been up for revision for some years and I should be glad to consider the question of widening its scope. But if the door is opened for compensation for that disease, it will have to be opened for some others and we shall have claims for all kinds of cases similar to the one which my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the trouble with the department is that having the life history of this burrowing mange, they did not act as they should have done. As soon as mange is discovered amongst animals on a farm, they should prevent the sale of them. The trouble arose when the department permitted the animal to be sold in the first instance. Having the life history of the burrowing mange as the department has it, that it may remain concealed for two years, I cannot understand how any veterinary officer would release an animal for sale within that period and take chances of the disease being distributed to other farms. The criticism would lie there rather than in the permission to allow the second sale. If the department is satisfied as to its diagnosis that this burrowing mange may exist for two years—and I agree with them in that so far as mange goes—they should issue regulations providing that no sale may take place from a farm where such mange has been found.

I want to bring a different case of quarantine to the attention of the minister and I do not think he can find any regulations whereby he can escape responsibility. I brought to his attention a farm where a quarantine had been established some four months previously in a case of suspected rabies. A man had lost several cattle and also a dog had been acting suspiciously. A quarantine had been established. Following that a biological examination, I have no doubt, was made, and the possibility of rabies was disproved, negatived. But notwithstanding that, this man was allowed to continue for four months with that quarantine on his farm. I have a letter under my hand and if the deputy will kindly wait, he can get all the details. I am not going to say that the greatest precaution should not be taken in the matter of quarantine. That is one action which you must take in preventing the spread of disease. But in this case what happened is that I verily believe the inspector forgot all about his quarantine and that farm was quarantined from May to September, although, as I say, a pathological examination had been made and the result was negative as regards rabies. The inspector should have gone back to that farm. He comes back and says: "Oh, I permitted him to sell farm produce." The farmer did not understand that and I could not get the quarantine placard because the inspector came out, grabbed it and took it away. I should like to see that quarantine placard. Why was he so keen to grab it and take it away when his attention was drawn to the length of the quarantine? That farmer was left there for four months under quarantine without any reason whatever and he had reached almost a destitute condition before the attention of the department was called to the matter. Then the inspector rushed up, removed the placard and said: "Everything is fine, but we think we were justified in our quarantine."

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 344, for the relief of Kenneth Blackwood Gibb.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 345, for the relief of Edith Spencley.—Mr. Hepburn.

Bill No. 346, for the relief of Annie Farrow.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park), (for Mr. Boys).

Bill No. 347, for the relief of Evelyn Mae Warren.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park), (for Mr. Boys).

Bill No. 349, for the relief of Vera Maud Gendron.—Mr. Hepburn.

Bill No. 350, for the relief of Lillian Ainsworth.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 351, for the relief of Sarah Berkovitz.—Mr. Sanderson.

Bill No. 352, for the relief of George Frederick Wilson.—Mr. McGregor.

Bill No. 353, for the relief of Roy Franklin Beattie.—Mr. Spence.

Bill No. 354, for the relief of John George Laney.—Mr. Hepburn.

Bill No. 355, for the relief of Albert Nott.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 356, for the relief of John Thomas Legge.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 358, for the relief of Emil Henry Hornburg.—Mr. Edwards (Waterloo).

WILLIAM JOHN BLIGHT

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved the third reading of Bill No. 336, for the relief of William John Blight.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, representations have been made to me that there is evidence that was not presented to the senate committee. Those representations come from those whose word I can trust, and for that reason, and for that reason only, I do not challenge this bill at the present stage. I would say, however, that the evidence as it comes to us from the senate committee does not prove the charges alleged. I hope the time will soon come when we shall not pay so much regard to lobbyists either in the senate or in the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

LOUIS COIT DARGAVEL

Mr. A. J. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park), (for Mr. Casselman) moved the third reading of Bill No. 348, for the relief of Louis Coit Dargavel.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the third reading of this bill on the ground that evidence was improperly admitted, and once this evidence was admitted the co-respondent was not given sufficient time to face the charges that were made. In the insufficient time which was given, only about four days, part of the accusation made was proven to be entirely false and the evidence submitted did not prove the case. This is a case not proven, and because it is not proven I object to the third reading of the bill. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth):

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be sent back to the select standing committee on private bills with instructions that they have power to make further investigation.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): I was not present last night when this bill was being considered in committee, but I have read what took place. It seems to me that in spite of the apparent desire of the house to vote all these bills through without any regard to the merits of each case or to the evidence brought or not brought in connection therewith, there should be at least some semblance of decency. I appeal to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). I do not know this case, and I am simply taking the declarations as they were made last night in the house. It was stated last night by two hon. members that this divorce was being granted on a charge the witness to which was a perjurer—at least the evidence of his perjury was quite clear; that the proof made by the police agent was entirely unsound. He stated that the respondent and another party stopped at a certain hotel under a certain name. Now the person to whom that name belongs states that he lived at that place with his wife. Therefore this is a clear case, if not of perjury, of gross mistake. Application was made for a new hearing, and it was refused because of lack of time. The position seems to have been taken generally in this house that the whole responsibility rests with the committee of the Senate, but surely what we are doing here must count for something. Quebec claims to be opposed to the establishment of divorce courts on principle and believes that it is better to keep the present system because it offers a guarantee of careful scrutiny and is in effect a law instead of a judgment. But in a case like this if the statements, corroborated yesterday by the member for Brant (Mr. Smoke) and the member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), are accurate, our decision may be in the form of a law, but we shall make it in defiance of the most elementary principles of justice and equity. We shall be ratifying blindly not a judgment but a decision by another body forming part of this parliament. For my part I protest once more most emphatically and most unequivocally against this manner of dissolving marriages. It is against all principles of morality, it is against all principles of law, it is against all principles of evidence, it is against all principles which are supposed to be upheld by parliaments and courts of justice. I refuse to be a party responsible for any such miscarriage of justice.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we had considerable discussion of the details of this case yesterday and the hon. member for Brant—who unfortunately has had to leave the city—made certain definite charges with regard to the procedure followed. Those charges have not been answered, nor has there been any review whatever by the private bills committee of this house or by the committee of the whole; we have simply acquiesced in what the Senate committee has done. I am informed that the Senate committee was not by any means a unit in this matter, though of that I have not any information in the report itself. But we have in this case as in many others evidence given by certain detectives. Their work is being recognize as a greater outrage than anyone could have imagined before we started discussing divorce bills this session. I am informed that one detective with his accomplice—if I may use that term, and I think it is proper here—has been responsible for securing evidence in some fifty cases, and that in some instances he has resorted to the most abominable practices in order to secure that evidence. These professional detectives try to lure their victims into vice and then turn round and report the evidence thus framed up in order that they may secure sufficient grounds on which to obtain a divorce. I say it is an abominable practice, and I cannot think that the conscience of this country will tolerate very much longer the practice of relying on evidence coming from such a source.

With regard to this particular case, it is quite obvious that somebody is committing perjury. I am not sure who it is. Any one who merely reads this evidence taken before the Senate committee has no opportunity of observing the witnesses at first hand, and therefore cannot so well judge who is the guilty party. May I read a sentence or two from the report that comes to us from the Senate committee? This will be found at page 58:

Mr. Beament: I have no further evidence today, but I have been able to obtain certain affidavits which I wish to read.

Mr. Beament, I believe, was acting as counsel for the respondent.

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Beament: For the purpose of asking for an adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Schaffner: No.

Mr. Beament: At least, I submit, the committee should hear the nature of the evidence.

The Chairman: What is the ground upon which you are asking for the adjournment?

Mr. Beament: On the ground that I can produce evidence to substantiate the fact that the co-respondent was ill in the apartment house he lives in, during the period he mentioned, but that it was impossible for him to get the witness to come with him to-day owing to his business engagements, but that he can come in a week from now.

The Chairman: The last sitting of this committee will take place on Friday next. We are going to close up then, absolutely.

And so to suit the conveniences of the Senate committee counsel for the respondent was refused the opportunity of bringing the wintesses which he said he could bring. As we were told by the member for Brant, the charges which were originally made in the petition were not followed up at the trial, but at that time other charges were substitued, and when it was attempted to refute those other charges counsel could not obtain a sufficiently long adjournment. The Senate committee had to get on with its work, it was going to close up, and whether it involved injustice or not did not seem to make very much difference, so no adjournment was granted. If we are in any sense a court of review I say we cannot do other than ask that this bill be not now read a third time; I am glad to support the amendment.

Mr. A. C. CASSELMAN (Grenvelle-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements that have been made with respect to this bill I feel I should reply briefly. The whole argument against the bill is based on the fact that certain evidence was improperly admitted, and that certain evidence which should have been admitted was not allowed to be put in. The first hearing of this case was on the seventeenth day of May, and at that time the evidence which was attempted to be contradicted by affidavit was given. The last sitting of the Senate committee on this bill was on the twenty-ninth of May, so there were twelve days intervening during which this evidence could have been secured. Failing to do that there was an opportunity to adduce this evidence before the private bills committee of this house. I believe that the applicant understood that the bill was going to be opposed before the private bills committee, and he presented himself to that committee. There was no objection taken whatever. The first objection was taken in this house yesterday and resulted in the bill being carried on a vote in committee of the whole. May I repeat that I am aware of the facts in connection with this case. The petitioner is personally known to me. I am satisfied that the evidence produced by him was of such a nature that in any court of law he would have been given the relief which the Senate committee saw fit to give him.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park) moves that Bill No. 348 be now read a third time, to which Miss Macphail moves in amendment, seconded by Mr. Woodsworth:

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be sent back to the select standing committee on private bills with instructions that they have power to make further investigation.

M. SEGUIN: En français, s'il vous plaît.

M. l'ORATEUR: M. Anderson (Toronto-High Park) propose que le bill n° 348 soit maintenant lu une troisième fois, et mademoiselle Macphail propose en amendement, appuyée par M. Woodsworth:

Que le dit bill ne soit pas lu maintenant une troisième fois, mais qu'il soit renvoyé au comité permanent des bills privés avec autorisation de poursuivre son enquête.

The house divided on the amendment (Miss Macphail), which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Bancroft,	Lapierre,
Benoit,	Lapointe,
Bourassa,	Lavigueur,
Bowman,	Letellier,
Campbell,	Lucas,
Casgrain,	MacLean (Prince),
Chevrier,	Macphail (Miss),
Delisle,	McMillan,
Deslauriers,	Morin (Bagot),
Evans,	Perras,
Fansher (Last Mountain),	Pouliot,
	Prévost,
Fansher (Lambton East),	Ralston,
	Roberge,
Forke,	Séguin,
Gardiner,	Sinclair (Queens),
Gervais,	Speakman,
Girouard,	Spencer,
Guérin,	Stewart (Edmonton West),
Heaps,
Heenan,	Sylvestre,
Irvine,	Telford,
Jelliff,	Tobin,
Kellner,	Veniot,
Lacombe,	Ward,
Laflamme,	Woodsworth.—49.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),	MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Arthurs,	McGregor,
Barber,	McRae,
Bell (St. Antoine),	Neill,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	Peck,
Bowen,	Plunkett,
Cantley,	Robinson,
Casselman,	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Chaplin,	Rowe,
Edwards (Waterloo South),	Sanderson,
Fraser,	Simpson,
Garland (Carleton),	Spence,
Gray,	Stewart (Leeds),
Harris,	Stinson,
Hepburn,	Stirling,
Jenkins,	Thompson,
Johnston (Long Lake),	Tummon,
Ladner,	Young (Saskatoon),
Lawson,	Young (Toronto Northeast).—38.

CHARLES EDWIN WALKER

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth) moved the third reading of Bill No. 296, for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I wish to direct the attention of the house once more to this case. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre presented the facts some little time ago when the bill came up for second reading, and I reviewed the case a few nights ago when the bill was in committee, so I do not need to take up very much time to explain the situation.

Briefly, in this case the main witness for the respondent was unable to appear because of illness. There was no doubt of that; a doctor's certificate was presented proving that the witness could not appear. Counsel asked that the case be postponed, but that request was refused on the ground that it would be difficult to have the same members of the committee present at a subsequent sitting. The case was proceeded with. In addition, three co-respondents were named, but the respondent was not aware that these three people would be named and was not in a position to refute the evidence. Moreover, the woman in the case is very poor; she works for her living and could not engage proper counsel, nor could she be present when the bill was referred to the committee on private bills for further investigation.

The fact of the matter is that this case received no attention from the committee of this house, and surely any hon. member who has read the evidence will see at a glance that the grounds for divorce are very slim indeed, with the woman emphatically denying the charges but unable to bring the witnesses to prove her case. I am sure any hon. member who has read the evidence will be willing to give this woman the benefit of the doubt. I beg to move, therefore, seconded by Mr. Jelliff:

That Bill No. 296 (letter O7 of the senate), intituled "An act for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker" be not now read a third time but that it be sent back to the select standing committee on private bills with instructions that they have power to make further investigation.

Mr. SPENCE: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking for the sponsor of the bill, who had to leave the city to-day.

Mr. IRVINE: The sponsor of the bill is in his seat.

Mr. SANDERSON: I thank my hon. friend for taking my place, but I happen to be here to-night. I have very little to say with regard to this bill, but I happen to be the sponsor of it and have read the evidence very carefully. When it was up for second reading in the house I moved that it be referred back to the private bills committee because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) raised some objections and attempted to read a letter from the respondent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I made no attempt to read the letter. If I had I would have read it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not want to get into controversy with my hon. friend, but my recollection is that he attempted to read the letter but was not permitted to do so.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I merely said that I had a letter.

Mr. SANDERSON: We will let it go at that. I moved that the bill be referred back to the private bills committee because I felt that in view of the argument presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre it should be given further consideration. The bill was referred back to the private bills committee and counsel was there representing the respondent but he stated that he had no brief or instructions from his principal and it was decided to have the bill come up on the following Friday. The bill came up on that day but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was not there, nor was the petitioner or the respondent. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) was there and pleaded the case of the respondent, and may I say that he pleaded it very well.

Mr. IRVINE: When?

Mr. SANDERSON: In the committee.

Mr. IRVINE: When?

Mr. SANDERSON: The time the hon. member acted as chief counsel. A vote was taken in the committee and the hon. member for Wetaskiwin voted alone. I submit that this bill should pass the house because careful consideration has been given to it, not once, not twice, but three times.

Mr. IRVINE: Was the evidence in this case ever presented to the committee?

Mr. SANDERSON: The evidence was taken before the senate committee and a copy was sent to every member of the house. The hon. member apparently reads all this evidence and I rather think he likes to read it, because he seems to be thoroughly well posted. The evidence was reviewed by the private bills committee when the matter came up the other day.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): The hon. member for Wetaskiwin has a somewhat short memory as to what happened in the committee. During the last discussion on this subject he said that every bill which had been referred to the committee had been thrown out, and I thought at the time he made that statement that he was a little astray; this is one bill which was not thrown out. He is also astray in his statement of the position of this bill before the committee. It was referred to the committee and was considered on two different occasions. When it came to the committee it was debated at some length and a legal gentleman of very high qualifications from the province of Manitoba made a vigorous opposition to the bill. The bill received a good deal of consideration but it was felt that more time should be given, consequently action on it was delayed. It was considered the second time and the result was as stated by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson); it was passed by the committee. While it is true that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin was alone in voting against the bill, I was personally opposed to its passage, and to that extent I am in agreement with the hon. gentleman. However, it happened that I was in the chair at the time and, therefore, did not vote. This bill is one which might properly be described as a dirty mess all round. The evidence was that at one time the petitioner had been guilty of adultery but when an alimony action was brought by the wife it was agreed that the charges which were being made one against the other should be withdrawn, and legally they were withdrawn.

Mr. CAHAN: Withdrawn in the case before the court?

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. BROWN: Withdrawn in the case before the court, but that does not alter the realities of the case. It seemed to me to be proven conclusively that the man did not come before this court of parliament with clean hands.

Mr. CAHAN: If I read the case correctly, he came before parliament simply to get rid of having to pay the alimony which he agreed to pay.

Mr. BROWN: Undoubtedly that was the case. I, for my part, would have preferred that the amendment moved by the hon. member should have been to the effect that the bill be read this day six months hence. In that event I would have been prepared to vote against the passage of the bill. In most of these cases one side is involved in what may be described as a dirty mess, but in this particular case it seemed to me that both sides were involved, and so far as I am concerned I do not feel like giving any particular relief to one side or the other. As the husband is asking for the divorce in this instance, I propose to vote against his receiving it.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Smoke) left last night, he asked me to present the facts of this case to the house. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has said that no adjournment was given in the divorce committee of the Senate. An adjournment of from ten to twelve days was given, and at the adjourned hearing the lawyer for the respondent did not appear. He sent an Ottawa agent there merely for the purpose of having a few lines of evidence expunged, and the agent then left the court. It has been said that the lady is poor and had not any money to bring witnesses, but for two or three years she has been receiving $35 per week alimony, and $10 per week for her daughter, so she could not have been very hard up. She claimed that she had three witnesses who could come and prove an alibi, but in each case the witnesses did not show up. It was thought in the private bills committee, after considering the matter for two days, that if she had any witnesses who could give evidence in her favour, they would have appeared. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Smoke) knows the petition well, and it is at his request I am speaking.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): It may be that this case is what has been described as a dirty mess, but I submit that even a criminal is entitled to fair play, and I do not think that has been given in this case.

Mr. CAHAN: And the respondent, the woman, has not been proven to be a criminal.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) says, this woman has not been proven to be a criminal. That is clear. This case is one that I called to the attention of the house at an earlier stage and asked that it be carefully studied by the private bills committee. That careful consideration has not been given. It is true that the matter was brought up; it was discussed and a strong case was made out for delay. Indeed, so strong a case was made out that it was decided to adjourn and call the woman. When she was communicated with, it was found that she had exhausted what money she had and she could not afford to come here or to retain a lawyer. She had spent all that she could rake up in appearing before the senate divorce committee and in endeavouring to answer charges that were then unexpectedly brought up against her. Let me remind the house, as I stated the other day, that the original charge against her—

Mr. SANDERSON: I understand my hon. friend to say that this bill was not given careful consideration before the private bills committee of the commons. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: How does my hon. friend know that? He was not a member of that committee and he was not present at the committee when the bill was brought up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not a member of that committee, but I received a very thorough report from those who were there. Would the hon. gentleman venture to say that the case received careful consideration when the respondent was not even there, when there was not a single witness, when no further evidence was taken than that which is now before us? It was on account of the lack of that evidence that I took the matter up.

Mr. CAHAN: And they did not take a single step to bring the woman here.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was quite possible that the woman might have been brought here as in the Bourdon case; that her expenses might have been paid. As it was, her expenses were not arranged for. A wire was sent to her saying that she might come.

Mr. IRVINE: The wire was not sent to her. The lawyer who had been her agent was communicated with, but she had no agent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman across the way says that she had an agent and that he did not act. He had no instructions to act. He had acted and was paid for acting in the other committee. I do not know whether he had obtained the full payment or not.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member is wrong again. Counsel for the respondent did appear. With all due respect to my hon. friend, I want to give the facts as I see them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I know the facts.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend does not know the facts of the case or he would not adduce the arguments he has before the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quite aware that counsel was present, but I am also informed that counsel said he had no instructions to act for the woman. Those are the facts in the case and I would just as soon in this take the word of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin as that of the hon. member across the way, the sponsor of the bill. The record will corroborate the word of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin that counsel stated he had no instructions to act. He had been counsel before the senate committee. I want once more for the benefit of the house to quote from the evidence taken before the senate committee. I quoted this the other night, but there may be some hon. members present now who were not present at that time:

W. D. M. Shorey, barrister-at-law, of the city of Toronto, appeared as counsel for the respondent.

Mr. Shorey: Mr. Chairman, before the evidence is taken I want to make a formal application for a postponement on behalf of the respondent. I assume ordinarily that it would be made after the plaintiff's case is in. I do not want to delay the taking of evidence this morning, but there is one witness in particular for the respondent, a Mrs. Irene Henderson, a cousin with whom the respondent has been living practically since the respondent and her husband separated, who is a most material witness for the respondent. In March she had a major operation performed—

And so on. Further on in the same page this appears:

The Chairman: One of the difficulties is this: the committee is made up of different members, and you cannot always get the same members together to hear the second part of the case.

And because the same members, the same jury, could not be brought together throughout the entire hearing, it was decided that nothing further be done. So the senate did not give a fair hearing to this woman. She was not able to bring her witnesses and when the case actually came up before the private bills committee, we did not summon a witness; we did not make any real inquiry; the woman was not represented by counsel. Under those conditions I claim that it would be doing a serious injustice to her if at the present time we should let this bill pass.

Mr. SPENCE: I understand an adjournment of from ten to twelve days was given in the senate. If this sort of thing is allowed to continue, it is just making a farce of the private bills committee, and many members of that committee will not want to serve on it again.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Irvine) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Arthurs,	Jelliff,
Benoit,	Kennedy,
Bourassa,	Lacombe,
Brown,	Laflamme,
Cahan,	Lapointe,
Campbell,	Lucas,
Coote,	Luchkovich,
Delisle,	Macphail (Miss),
Deslauriers,	Morin (Bagot),
Evans,	Peck,
Fansher (Last Mountain),	Perras,
Fansher (Lambton East),	Prévost,
Forke,	Rinfret,
Gardiner,	Séguin,
Girouard,	Speakman,
Guérin,	Spencer,
Heaps,	Sylvestre,
Irvine,	Tobin,
	Woodsworth.—37.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),	MacLean (Prince),
Bancroft,	McLean (Melfort),
Barber,	McGregor,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	McKenzie,
Bock,	McRae,
Bowen,	Neill,
Bowman,	Ralston,
Casselman,	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Cayley,	Rowe,
Chaplin,	Sanderson,
Foster,	Senn,
Fraser,	Sinclair (Queens),
Garland (Carleton),	Spence,
Gray,	Spotton,
Harris,	Stewart (Leeds),
Hepburn,	Stirling,
Jenkins,	Telford,
Kaiser,	Thompson,
Ladner,	Totzke,
Lawson,	Young (Saskatoon),
MacDonald (Cape Breton South),	Young (Weyburn).—42.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. IRVINE: I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that it is after nine o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: We have to finish the proceeding once it has started.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I move in amendment to the main motion that this bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read this day three months hence.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills being exhausted, the house will revert to supply.

SUPPLY

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mines Branch

For investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories, investigations by Dominion Fuel Board, including salaries and all other expenses, $257,000.

For operation of peat bog at Alfred, Ontario, $25,000.

For publications, English and French, purchase of books, laboratory supplies, instruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $45,000.

For transportation charges from out-lying provinces on ore shipments which may be sent to the ore dressing plant of the Mines branch at Ottawa for testing purposes, under regulations approved by the Minister of Mines, $1,000.

To compensate J. H. Fortune for quarters, fuel, light and water supplied him as resident caretaker of the Mines branch building, Sussex St., vacated because of the necessity of utilizing the caretaker's quarters for storage and laboratory space, $400.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister be kind enough to make a statement in connection with what he has done to carry out the resolution of the house at last session:

That in the opinion of this house, in order to test and demonstrate the possibilities of pulverized coal, the government should adapt one of their steamers on the Pacific coast, and the furnace of one of the government public buildings in British Columbia, to the use of pulverized coal from Vancouver island mines.

I have been taking this matter up with the government from time to time. At first there was delay owing to the fact that the department was observing the result of the experiment on the Lingan which had been equipped by the British Steel Corporation to use pulverized coal. This delayed the government's plans quite a while, because they thought they might as well benefit by that experiment. After a prolonged trial it appeared to have been a total failure. This must have been due to some defect either in the system adapted or in its installation, because I have in my hand the record of an experiment on the New Zealand Shipping Company's steamship Hororata, of 11,200 tons gross, which arrived in New Zealand after a voyage of 11,000 miles from the old country. Half of her boilers were equipped for the use of pulverized coal. It was a very thorough and successful experiment. I see they used all sorts of coal—Welsh steam coal, North of England coal, Scottish coal, Virginian coal, and some New River coal which they obtained at Panama. On the homeward voyage they were going to burn New Zealand coal.

As regards adapting the furnace of one of the government public buildings in British Columbia to use pulverized coal, while the resolution called for that to be done one must not be unreasonable. I have been informed that the only buildings that could be suitably equipped in that way would require a boiler having a rating of 300 horse-power or over, and that there are only two public buildings in Canada that could make use of a heating apparatus of that size. Therefore we cannot expect the experiment to be carried out in British Columbia. But it has been ascertained almost beyond doubt that pulverized coal can be successfully used on land. Several factories have been equipped with apparatus for this purpose, and the system is beyond the experimental stage. But apparently there are vast differences between the conditions governing the installation of the system on land and on the sea; why I do not know. Some people put it down to the Scotch marine boiler, which they claim is not adapted for the use of pulverized coal, and that the tubular boiler should be used. To solve such and other problems is why this house endorsed the idea that the government should experiment on some of the boats of the Canadian government. The British government has done a great deal of research in that way, but it is not entirely useful to us on the Pacific coast, because it appears that the coal from each mine requires special adjustment of the equipment to handle it, and that is why it was thought advisable that we should experiment with our own coal on one of our government boats on the Pacific coast. We are disappointed to find that the Canadian government merchant marine has ordered two boats to be equipped for oil burning. That is against the spirit and the letter of the resolution of this house.

I find in a report I have here that the Blue Star line—a British line of course—operating a fleet of twenty-six vessels, proposes at the earliest possible moment to equip its fleet with the Clarke Chapman pulverized fuel system. A recently ordered 9,000 tonner will be equipped to burn pulverized fuel by the Brand system. The P. & O. Steam Navigating Company—one of the biggest in the world—have decided to convert several of their steamers to the Bauer-Wach system of exhaust steam turbine propulsion in combination with pulverized fuel plants. There has been a company formed in England known as the Howden-Buell Combustion Company, Limited, to develop and exploit both marine and land pulverized fuel installations. It was that system which was used on the Hororata which I mentioned at the outset of my remarks. It is apparent that pulverized coal can be utilized. There is needed only a little more enterprise on the part of the government to make it a success.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. NEILL: I suggested they should adapt one of the fishery patrol boats on the Pacific, but it is objected that they are too small to justify the installation of the system. This would cost some $15,000 to $20,000 whether the boat be large or small, and we do not want the experiment to be made in such a way that it would be abortive and give a black eye to the proposal.

I should like the minister to give the committee a statement of what he has done along these lines, and what we may hope he will do to carry out this resolution in the future.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has dealt fairly thoroughly with the pulverized fuel situation, and undoubtedly he is keeping very closely in touch with the experiments that are being carried on. We have discovered two or three things in this connection. One is that there must be a laboratory test of the fuel before it is attempted to use it for pulverized fuel firing. Another is that the installation of the mechanical devices for the purpose of using pulverized fuel is very expensive. A third is that so far there have been no successful tests made of boilers under 150 horsepower, which is a fairly large boiler. In the Lingan test on the St. Lawrence from Sydney to Montreal, spoken of by my hon. friend,

I think a mistake was made in equipping all the boilers with pulverized fuel apparatus. When the mechanical device went wrong of course the ship was laid up. We watched the experiment very closely. Had they equipped one half of the boilers, then the ship would have been able to keep going. That was the practice followed in most of the cases where attempts were made on British liners going to New Zealand and later by the shipping company mentioned by my hon. friend.

My attention was first directed to the advisability of giving serious consideration to pulverized fuel owing to the statement made to me two years ago by the marine engineers located at the British fuel research station that if a complete mechanical system could be devised for this purpose pulverized coal would be a cheaper steam producer than fuel oil which is so rapidly taking the place of coal on ocean going vessels. I made some inquiries at the British fuel research station and found they were experimenting along those lines. I asked them to keep us closely in touch with the results of their experiments. In most cases where the experiment has been a success they have not equipped the entire ship with pulverized fuel burners. I think it is safe to say that the experiments have been successful and have reduced to a considerable degree the cost of raising steam on these vessels. With respect to our own situation, last year when my hon. friend's motion was being considered I felt it would be possible to install this equipment on some of our lighter craft on the west coast; but after some investigation we deemed it unwise to ask for an experiment on a vessel of the size of the one in the fisheries trade on the coast. With respect to what my hon. friend has said regarding stationary plants, we found them too small for our purposes there. I believe there are very great possibilities in connection with pulverized fuel firing for the raising of steam, but so far the mechanical plant costs a considerable amount of money and we have the full advantage of the experiments carried on by British shipping as well as the attempt made on the St. Lawrence in firing on the Lingan. I am now endeavouring to see whether it is not possible to have the merchant marine make an experiment on one of their ships. I do not think it would be wise on the part of the government to spend a large sum of money only to find that the equipment was faulty. In the experimental stage we are severely criticized for spending money; and as in the case of low temperature carbonization of fuels, in connection with which so much has been done in Great Britain, I thought it would be wise for us to wait until we had available sufficient knowledge as to what had been discovered by the experiments carried on in this respect in Great Britain by private companies. I do think, however, that the equipment of one or two boilers in the merchant marine, burning our own fuel from our own Canadian coal, would be worth while; and with that end in view I shall see whether a further experiment cannot be undertaken on our own behalf with respect to pulverized fuel.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The minister mentioned something about the low carbonization of fuel. What progress has been made since the last session of parliament in connection with testing fuels in western Canada from the standpoint of the low carbonization problem?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have collected samples from a good many mines in the west. We are establishing now a fairly large plant for testing purposes in the fuel laboratories on Booth street, and as soon as the equipment is in place we shall test fuels by the low carbonization process.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister has referred to the importance of small coal; he says he has not thought it desirable to do any experimental work in this regard. The trouble I find with his whole department is that they have never done any real experimental work; what they have done is, in the main, to copy the work of established plants which have demonstrated certain lines of action, and then play in a childish way with the same thing themselves. I find that in some of the reports made by the department there are put forward, in regard to the investigation of fuels, statements which I do not consider correct, while others are trivialities. Take for instance one of the publications of the department issued in 1926 in reference to fuels and fuel testing. It is said to be a general review of an investigation carried out by two gentlemen of the staff, Mr. Haanel and Mr. Gilmore. I will deal briefly with a few of the statements made by these gentlemen. At page 35 of the report they have something to say with respect to the nature of sulphur in cokes made from Canadian coal, and they discuss the experiment they made in connection with a mixture of Nova Scotia and United States coal. Now I ask the minister this question: Why waste any time on an experiment of that kind, namely, the coking of a mixture of Nova Scotia and United States coal? What good result will follow therefrom? Will the minister tell me that? I can understand his carrying on experiments with Nova Scotia coal so far as coke is concerned, although experience in its use dates back fifty or sixty years: Nova Scotia coal was coked successfully and used to a considerable extent in Nova Scotia before the minister was born, and, as everybody knows, is still used there. Page after page of this report which I hold in my hand is taken up with experiments carried on by the officers of the minister's department—experiments which mean practically nothing. Here for example is a statement appearing on page 36 of the report:

The coke made from the Springhill coal is the only one with a sufficiently low sulphur content to be classed as metallurgical, though the sulphur in the Sydney-Pocohontas, Comox, and Sydney cokes is not much too high.

That statement is absolutely false: thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of tons of pig iron have been made in Nova Scotia with coke solely the product of the coal mines of Pictou and of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia. Of that there is no possible doubt. Why then say that coal made from Springhill coal is the only one produced in Nova Scotia with a sufficiently low sulphur content to be classed as metallurgical fuel? The statement, I say, is absolutely untrue, is most misleading, and is most unfair. In the next paragraph on the same page the writer deals with different forms of sulphur in coal and coke and makes statements which would be challenged by anyone with a practical knowledge of the matter. Further down the page he states:

The writer's earlier paper indicates that, in his opinion, while oxidation of the carbonaceous material in coal is the principal cause of spontaneous combustion, the oxidation of finely disseminated pyrites is also a contributing factor.

Of course it is a contributing factor; that is known to everyone who has handled coal and has been known from time immemorial. Why therefore go into that matter now?

Mr. CHAPLIN: They must print something; that is all.

Mr. CANTLEY: Take page 43:

Typical western Canadian coals were analysed for sulphate, pyritic and organic sulphur, and the following conclusions drawn:

None of the coking coals from the Mountain park or the two Crowsnest pass areas contain any appreciable amount of pyritic sulphur, nor do the partly coking coals from the Nanaimo area contain much of this form of sulphur. The sample of coking coal from the Comox area contained considerable pyritic sulphur, but this would be reduced by washing.

Of course it would be reduced by washing; all coals that contain pyrite—and most of them do—can eliminate the sulphur to workable proportions by that method. Coal is washed in Nova Scotia and in other places for two reasons, first to reduce the sulphur and then to reduce the ash; both can be largely eliminated by successful washing. Here is another gem:

Cokes made from maritime provinces coal, either alone or blended with United States coals, and one coke made from Comox, B.C., coal, were analyzed for sulphide, sulphate, free and solid solution sulphur. It was found that:—

The coke made from Springhill coal was the only one with a low enough sulphur content to be classed as a good metallurgical coke.

That is the second time such a statement is made in this report, and it is not a true statement of fact. Then the report goes on:

The cokes made from the Sydney (unwashed) and Comox (washed) coals contained a little too much sulphur to be classed as satisfactory metallurgical cokes.

The cokes made from Minto coal contained such a large percentage of sulphur as to render them unsatisfactory for almost any purpose whatever. However, coal washing, which would be necessary on account of the high percentage of ash, would greatly reduce the sulphur content.

No one in the maritimes with any sense ever suggested coking Minto coal, because the percentage of sulphur is much too high. It could be washed out, but you would wash out at the same time eight or nine per cent of the total volume of coal, and the ash is also too high; in short it is not a suitable coal. These same arguments apply to other coals, but to state that maritime province coal generally will not produce good metallurgical fuel is to make a statement which is absolutely untrue. Then on page 44 I find the following:

Considerable variations in the specific gravities of the separating solutions did not to any extent affect the division of pyritic sulphur.

There you are dealing with laboratory experiments instead of ordinary commercial washing; you are dealing with methods of treating coal with solutions of different densities at different strengths. That is only a matter for laboratory experiment. What is the use of continuing that sort of thing and spending tens of thousands of dollars to demonstrate something which was demonstrated thirty or forty years ago in a practical way? I do not say that the present steel and coal companies know all there is to be known with regard to their own coal, but they know more than anyone else knows and they have acquired that knowledge through a long period of years in the daily operations of their plants.

Then on page 47 I find a table dealing with cokes made from Sydney, Sydney-Pocohontas, Springhill, Minto-Elkhorn-Pocohontas and Comox coal. There we find the total sulphur, sulphide, sulphate, free sulphur, solid solution sulphur and ash, but all that information was known long ago by the people interested in this coal, that is, the people who consume large quantities of coal in the manufacture of iron and steel in Nova Scotia and Ontario. On page 61 I find the following:

> As a general rule "mine" samples contain less ash and have higher calorific values than the corresponding "commercial" samples. . . It should also be realized that, generally speaking "slack" coal will contain more moisture and ash and have a lower calorific value than the corresponding screened coal, and that "run-of-mine" coal will be intermediate between the two.

Of course that is so, and any coal miner or coal dealer knows it is so. Why burden a report with material of that kind? It is making this department a laughing stock with people who know anything about this business.

I might proceed to deal with similar matters contained in the report of the Dominion Fuel Board for 1923-28. At page 33 of their report they deal with the low temperature carbonization of bituminous coal, and I want to point out again that Pictou coal has been coked for over sixty years and washed for over forty years. This coal has been coked in beehive ovens for more than three-score years and for one equal period has been used in blast furnace operations. The first rectangular coke ovens on this continent were operated in Pictou county in 1891, and the first commercial coal washer constructed on this continent was operated at the same place in the same year. Half a dozen coal washing plants have been constructed in Pictou county and in Cape Breton since that time, yet here we are given a lot of information which may be of interest to school children but which is of no use to people in the trade. I suggest the minister would be well advised to withdraw a good deal of this information, and I believe his department would stand higher in public estimation if that action were taken.

I might go on and refer to many other matters in connection with these various reports, but I do not think I should take the necessary time. For example, these reports deal with the absorption of moisture, with the depreciation in peat through handling and many other things of that character which are not of any great value to this or any other country. Most of the material contained in these various reports, of which there are half a dozen, is out of date and has been out of date for years.

My quarrel with the department is that to a very large extent the experiments which have been carried on are simply play boy work based on information which was acquired long ago by people in the business. Practically all the information contained in these reports could have been obtained by simply visiting one of several of the plants in Nova Scotia and taking notes on what has been done by the old method of trial and error, the only method by which progress is made.

Now I take up the final report of the peat committee, in which reference is made to an attempt to carbonize peat from the Alfred bog. The approximate analysis is given, as follows:

> Moisture, 25.6 per cent.
> Ash, 4.6 per cent.
> Volatile matter, 48 per cent.
> Fixed carbon, 21.3 per cent.
> Calorific valuer, B.T.U's, 7,040.

This calorific value is just about half that of really good Nova Scotia coal. An experiment was carried on in connection with the carbonization of this peat, and one very peculiar thing in connection with that experiment is that the fuel used to heat the ovens was 2,654 pounds of slack coal. Why did you not use peat; why use slack coal? You are attempting to carbonize peat; is there not sufficient heat units in the peat to warm up the ovens in order to carry out the carbonization? Could anything be more ridiculous than a performance of that kind? There are many like cases which I could mention, but I do not want to take up any more time of the committee. This department has carried on experimental work for more than twenty years at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars and the results have been one continuous failure, especially with regard to the experiments carried on with peat. There has been duplication in the securing of information concerning subjects which have long ago been investigated by private enterprises unassisted by government aids and depending wholly upon the commercial results obtained. In other words, knowledge has been gained by the old method by which all useful information has been acquired. I submit that the time has come when this waste of the public money should be stopped, and I hope the minister will stop it.

I would like to compare the work done by the mines department with that which has been carried on in Great Britain and on the continent. And here may I say I have nothing but praise for the other department under the minister's management, the geological survey, but I can find very little to praise and much to condemn in the work carried on by the mines department. As the result of the war Germany lost a large proportion of the territory which has previously supplied her with a great deal of her bituminous coal; I refer to Silesia, which was awarded to Poland. How did she meet that situation? By utilizing what they call brown coal, which is practically the same as our lignite, and to-day we find her using that coal, formerly neglected, in her open hearth gas producers, using it to run her steel and iron works, and as the fuel for the carrying on of other industries. Prior to the war they had not dreamed of being able to do this work with their lignite. If the department desires to learn how to deal with the lignite in the western provinces they should send someone to Germany to see how she is solving that problem. It would not cost anything to get that information, outside of sending a really capable man there.

Enormous progress has been made in the use of powdered coal, as was referred to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). Probably the greatest problem in the use of this fuel is the upkeep of the pulverizing machinery, because that machinery wears out faster than any other known type of machine. Statements have been made in some of these publications that pulverized coal can be stored, can be carried in tubes, can be blown into furnaces, and the same things are said with regard to pulverized peat, such statements are not correct. If such is attempted you will have explosions, because coal in a pulverized condition is highly explosive and when a certain proportion of air is mixed with the coal a spark or even friction will set it off. Anyone who has seen the results of dust explosions in any of our collieries will have some knowledge of the tremendously destructive effect of coal dust explosions. We in Nova Scotia have had for years experience in firing heating furnaces and reheating furnaces with pulverized coal. We at first had the idea that it could be stored in bins, conveyed through pipes and blown into furnaces, but we found that that was impracticable. It collects moisture very rapidly and then cakes up, and there are other reasons which I need not refer to.

Is the minister aware that internal combustion engines are to-day being operated in Germany with pulverized coal in the same manner in which petrol or gasoline is used? The advances made in connection with the use of pulverized fuel in Great Britain have been very great. The minister has said that the boilers which were here available for experimentation by him were too small as they were only 150 horse-power. How many horse-power, may I ask him, is there available in the heating plant in connection with this building? When a new installation of boilers was being asked for last year I suggested to the Minister of Public Works that the boilers be fitted up to use pulverized fuel. If that had been done a demonstration plant would have been provided and the men of the department could have watched the results of the operation every day. Why was not advantage taken of that opportunity? I would like the minister to answer that question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I thought the hon. member was making a speech and I did not want to interrupt him; I intended to answer him when he had finished.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister has indulged in some talk at times, more particularly when he returned last year from the other side of the Atlantic, regarding the by-products which could be obtained from coal in the form of oil. The latest information which is available in connection with that is to the effect that under existing conditions this process is unprofitable with the use of high temperature distillation and that the profits to be derived from low temperature carbonization are even more problematical. As yet nothing whatever can be said as to the commercial value of the Bergius process to which the minister referred at great length last year.

So far my remarks have been what the minister might term destructive, but I do not want to stop there. I would like to make one recommendation to the minister, and I would be very glad if he would adopt it. It is this: instead of spending time and money in carrying out experiments with regard to things which have been well known, determined and settled long ago, take two or three of the brightest men from his department and send them to the old country, to Germany, to the United States and to France to observe and study what other people are doing in a commercial and practical way. If that were done the minister would be able to give us some information which would be of enormous value to the industries of this country. These books issued from his department may have some value to the primary schools, but are of no value to the industries of this country, whether coal mining, coke producing, iron or steel making, or any of the kindred industries.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go into the intricacies of the analyses of the different grades of coal which the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) has suggested that the government should further investigate, but one thing which is obvious to all the people of Canada is that no serious attempt has been made to develop a national fuel policy. We have a national fuel board costing this country about $20,000 a year. They submit reports to parliament, and certain investigations are carried on by them with respect to analyses and other matters of a highly technical and intricate character, but we are left completely in the dark with regard to the general basis of developing a national fuel policy, which is one of the most important matters that the country could deal with. If the expense involved to carry on the fuel board, namely, $20,000, is not sufficient to broaden their scope, I would suggest to the minister that enough money be placed at their disposal to enable them at least to carry on an investigation with respect to the development of a national fuel policy for the Dominion. It is their duty; it is not the duty of members of parliament, and I do not think it can be claimed to be the duty of the Minister of Mines in the federal government to evolve a national fuel policy whereby we shall use our Canadian fuels instead of importing foreign fuels as we have been doing year after year in increasing quantities. Such a move would prove of benefit not only to the eastern portion but also to the midwest and the extreme western portions of the Dominion. I offer this suggestion to the minister in all seriousness and I hope before long some properly constituted agency of the government, it matters little whether it be the fuel board or some other commission, will develop and inaugurate a national fuel policy for the Dominion so that we may use the great resources we have instead of importing such huge quantities of fuel from foreign countries.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): First, let me say a word with respect to the criticism of the hon. member for Pictou. No one denies that Springhill coal and coals of similar character will make good metallurgical coke. That has never been denied; but when the question is one of using Nova Scotia coal for that purpose in central Canada, it becomes purely and simply a question of transportation and costs. Let us for the moment forget altogether about any suggestion of difference in the fuel. That, I think, answers my hon. friend. This is not a problem particularly for a fuel board; it is a mere matter of how much the people of Canada are willing to pay for transporting their own fuel into what we call the acute fuel areas of this country where the larger portion of our manufacturing industries are located. Attempts have been made: indeed, they are under way at this time, to lend assistance in that regard, and a good deal of coal is being moved in. I think I am safe in saying that the water-borne coal to Montreal has reached pretty well into eastern Ontario

—I am now speaking of bituminous coals, coals that are ordinarily used in the United States—in competition with the United States product coming across the line. We have done that and I am asking for a vote of $250,000, as hon. gentlemen will note, in the supplementary estimates, for the purpose of moving coal next year, and, I hope, greater quantities than have been moved heretofore.

As to any question of differences in the fuels, I am not going to raise that at all; I assume they are similar. But the short rail haul from the coal mines in the United States to the south of us, with a low rail rate and a much lower production cost than prevails in Nova Scotia, makes it a little difficult to land here, over the longer haul, coal that is mined in Nova Scotia, to meet the competition in price of the United States product. That is the practical difficulty we have to face. Of course transportation by water relieves the situation very considerably. There is no trouble as regards the department with the statement of my hon. friend that good coke has been made from Springhill coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not my statement. What I was controverting was the statement in one of the minister's publications that Springhill coal was the only coal that would make metallurgical fuel. I deny that absolutely.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For the moment I am dealing with the Springhill product because it is a representative product of Nova Scotia mines.

Mr. CANTLEY: But the minister is misrepresenting what I said. I found fault with the statement that Springhill coal was the only coal in Nova Scotia that would make satisfactory fuel.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I admit it is not the only one.

Mr. CANTLEY: I know, but one of the minister's publications said it was.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Undoubtedly there are other mines quite comparable as regards product with the Springhill mines.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am quite sure about that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not saying that it is the only product.

Mr. CANTLEY: But the minister's publication said it was the only coal that would make satisfactory metallurgical fuel.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That was the sample that was tested and the sample referred to in the report, but I do not for a single moment imagine that the officers of the Mines department will say that is the only coal in Nova Scotia that will coke.

Mr. CANTLEY: They so report.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): There is no better coal in Nova Scotia than the Springhill coal.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have got into trouble on many occasions with Nova Scotians in regard to their coal and I do not want to get into it to-night. I simply want to say that the administration of the department as regards the transportation of coal has been of considerable value to the mine owners of Nova Scotia and I hope it will be of still more value in the future.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister then, repudiates what is said in the report.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister does not; I am not dealing with the report. I do not have it before me. The minister will make his own statement so far as that is concerned. I notice that my hon. friends from Nova Scotia are very tender about any criticism that may be offered of the fuel coming from their particular locality. Possibly that is right, and I admire their standing up for the provinces from which they come.

My hon. friend has referred to the installation of a pulverized fuel plant in the heating plant for these buildings. We have been using for a number of years Minto coal of a low grade, burned on grates, and it is giving very good results, although I believe we are paying slightly more for that coal than we could import coal for. That, however, has been the policy of the government with respect to that particular matter.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is the correct policy.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I hope it is. At all events, it is the policy of the government. Dealing with the coking properties of Nova Scotia, we have been endeavouring to supplant the importation of anthracite with coke, as my hon. friend knows and we have been working for some years with that object in view. The Hamilton coking plant is proving itself a very great success. The plant in Montreal has been in operation now for about a year and a half, and is another case in which anthracite coal will be supplanted by domestic coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister refers to the sucess of coking plants in Hamilton and Montreal and to their success in displacing American anthracite. What advantage is it to this country to displace American anthracite with American bituminous coal?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am just coming to what I think is of real value. We are informed not only by our own officials but by the officers of the companies that are operating, and with whom costs always count, that to utilize Nova Scotia coal in its entirety would be more costly than to use the imported product, having regard to transportation costs. That is no reflection on Nova Scotia coal at all; it is simply a statement of fact. But we did see if the coal could not be blended. My hon. friend has quoted from the report with regard to the attempt that was made in that direction in the plant at Hamilton. I saw that coke, and it was a very good coke.

With regard to encouraging the consumption of Canadian coal in domestic coking plants, where gas plays a very important part in the high temperature plants, and where gas may be washed so thoroughly that it can be used for domestic purposes, we have had some difficulty in convincing these companies that it would be more in their own interests to burn all Canadian fuel or a large proportion of it. In order to secure the greater use of Canadian fuel we have offered under the statute fairly liberal inducements to these companies to use Canadian coal, with the result that in the city of Halifax they have now established a plant.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister does not say that seriously.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do say it seriously. The plant has been erected.

Mr. CANTLEY: When, and what capacity?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It certainly would be very strange to me if the plant was not erected because they are making application for the subsidy provided under the act.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does the minister really want information in regard to it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend is assuming that it is an entirely new plant, it is not; it is a rebuilt plant, but it conforms with the provisions of the act so far as ovens are concerned and comes up to the standard in order to earn the subsidy.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How much subsidy has been paid?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know that we have paid anything yet.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Absolutely nothing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as that plant is concerned we have simply been inspecting it as construction went on. I do not know that we have yet paid out anything in subsidies, but we will as construction is completed and the plant gets into operation and meets with the requirements of the act.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You have paid nothing whatsoever.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That may be true.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It is true.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The moment the plant is completed and meets with the requirements of the act, we will be prepared to pay the subsidy earned by the plant.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: So far you have paid nothing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why should we if it has not yet reached the point where it is earning? We have made several inspections. What is the object of my hon. friend in repeating that statement?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I want you to make the statement whether you have paid anything to this plant or not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do know that two inspections have been made. I do not know whether cheques have been issued. I do not know what my hon. friend's object is in raising this question, but I will say this; the moment the plant is in shape to earn the subsidy provided under the act we will pay it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: So far you have paid nothing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am assuming that my hon. friend knows.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Absolutely, and you do not. That is the difference between us.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am very glad to get that information from my hon. friend, but I do know that construction has been going on and that they are endeavouring to meet the requirements and earn the subsidy provided under the act.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: But you have paid nothing so far.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I presume that the plant has not yet reached the stage of construction where the subsidy is earned.

[Mr. Macdougall.]

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You ought to know.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot be intimately acquainted with all the details of a large department. My instructions to the officers of the department are to watch the construction and to pay the subsidy as warranted under the provisions of the act. Construction has been going on, the company have undertaken to build that plant and to use Canadian coal. As soon as they have completed the construction, they will get the money they have earned.

My hon. friend says that the officers of the department are confining their activities to trivial undertakings. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that in the experimental stages of such developments as these, experiments carried on by various institutions have been looked upon by some people as a trivial thing. But it is very strange, if these activities are trivial, that one of our bright young chemists has just been taken over by the Besco plant to work in their laboratories. If our work was not considered very satisfactory, if it was considered only trivial, I do not know why our men should be in such demand by commercial companies who value this kind of information very highly, and we have a good deal of difficulty in keeping our men.

With respect to the domestic coking plants I did hope that as large a proportion as possible of Nova Scotia coal would be used. One of the things that we have been working on, although we are not yet in a position to report, is how to treat coal with sulphur content that goes a little bit over the average. That will require considerable experimentation, but I think the results will be very valuable in the treatment of many grades of coal that to-day cannot be utilized for this purpose.

My hon. friend states that in Germany they have been experimenting with the brown coal. I saw those experiments. I saw the various carbonization experiments that were being made at the large plant at Leuna, where they are endeavouring to utilize the coal for various purposes to meet their domestic necessities, and where they are spending very large sums of money.

My hon. friend will agree with me that so far as our ordinary fuel is concerned for raising steam, say, in large plants, very little is necessary to be done to our coals. They are being utilized now, and their further utilization is merely a question of transportation. We had hoped that we would be able to utilize a larger proportion of Nova Scotia coal as domestic fuel than heretofore. There are two ways in which that might be done. One would be by the application of assistance to domestic coking plants, and the other is assistance given in the matter of transportation for the raw product itself. I think that we have met with some success in both methods. I have not time to go into a detailed report of what has been accomplished, but I would point out that Alberta has profited very little from this assistance in the way of the transportation of coal, while Nova Scotia has moved both by water and by rail a considerable quantity of coal and has widened the market for Nova Scotia coal in western Quebec and eastern Ontario.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): How did the experiment of moving that Alberta coal east work out?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not a very great quantity of it has been moved. Up to date no money has been paid over by the government because while the initial rate was fixed at $6.75 the Board of Railway Commissioners has not adjudicated upon the rate—

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): Has any considerable quantity moved under that scheme?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Speaking from memory, last year I think around 30,000 tons. May I finish my statement? The railway commission have to fix the ultimate rate based on an investigation of the movement.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): Was the movement successful?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It was not successful in moving a very large quantity.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Why not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot explain it to my hon. friend. I think the Ontario market was fairly well canvassed.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Was the rate too high?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The rate was fixed lower than the western operators really requested. It was put at $6.75 a ton for all Ontario points.

Mr. MALONEY: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the minister is aware that the fuel question in central Canada is an outstanding one. We are vitally interested in procuring a supply of fuel from purely Canadian sources. In fact we are prepared to use the soft coal of the east and the soft and hard coal of the west for domestic purposes simply to maintain a market for Canadian coal. It is true the bulk of domestic coal used in Ontario and Quebec is imported from the United States. The people of these two central provinces feel that we should be self-contained so far as our fuel supply is concerned. Viewed from the economic and every other standpoint, from which source would the Minister of Mines advise the people of Ontario and Quebec to procure their coal, from Alberta, from Nova Scotia, or from the United States?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I certainly would advise them to procure it from Alberta and eastern Canada; that would be my first choice. But on the other hand it must be borne in mind that in order to protect the manufacturing interests of central Canada we must get them their fuel somewhere within reasonable reach of the prices at which they can procure it across the line. That is what we have been endeavouring to do.

Mr. MALONEY: I thank the minister for his answer. I feel I am speaking the mind of the great bulk of the people of the central provinces when I say we are prepared to make many sacrifices to secure a supply of coal from our own mines. In this connection I would say that, if necessary, the freight rates on coal should be cut down to a minimum so that we might be able to secure our supply within our own borders.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): What efforts have the department made—outside of those that the minister has mentioned with respect to lower freight rates—to develop in Canada a national fuel policy? If such a policy means anything it must mean an attempt to use as much of our own coal as possible. I cannot see that there has been any concerted effort on the part of the department, outside of reductions in freight rates, to develop a fuel policy for this country. I would ask the minister to enlarge on that point, because it is of very serious interest and concern to the people of the maritime provinces.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is purely and simply a matter of transportation costs, and one of the objects of the present test movement, both from the east and from the west, is to establish what are the actual transportation costs. Once that is established, it is merely a matter for the government or for parliament to decide what contribution, if any, shall be made to assist the railways in this problem. Fortunately from Nova Scotia you have a fairly lengthy season for the water movement, which is very cheap. I think the cost of landing your coal in the port of Montreal is seventy-five cents a ton. From there it is a rail movement for distribution into western Quebec and eastern Ontario. But in the winter season it is a long rail haul at the very time of the year when most of the fuel is being consumed. The situation from the west is entirely different. It is an all rail movement, and it is a long haul as against a short haul from across the line. So it resolves itself purely and simply into a question of transportation costs.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The minister says it resolves itself into a question of transportation costs, and that fortunately for Nova Scotia in certain months of the year we can ship our coal by water to Montreal. Is the hon. gentleman convinced that we cannot ship our coal from Nova Scotia to Montreal by rail in the winter months? If so, why?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For the very simple reason that you have a long rail haul against a short rail haul from across the line.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I quite realize that; but what data has the minister before him to justify the sweeping statement that we cannot ship our coal to Montreal by rail under reasonably fair freight rates? Does he know what it costs to ship a ton of coal from Sydney to Montreal? Why does he make that sweeping statement?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Undoubtedly we shall have the Board of Railway Commissioners report, and it will be authentic. The movement from Nova Scotia last winter was a test movement.

Mr. MACDOUGALL:: What did it cost per ton?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They have not found out.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Then the minister does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Two or three times I have tried to impress on the minister that what is required in my humble judgment is a national fuel policy. The minister has surrounded the issue with a lot of facts in regard to the movement of the fuel itself. Although that is very important, I do not consider it is an all important feature of the matter. It is not a question only of a reduction in freight rates. It is a question of arrangement with respect to fiscal matters, it is a question of subventions, it may be a question of bonuses, and there may be a dozen other questions surrounding the whole issue of the development of a national fuel policy. The contention of those of us who come from the east is that no effort has been made by this government to overcome obstacles which should be overcome in order to utilize the fuel that we have in the Dominion, and to keep our own miners employed, and so develop our own country rather than bring in from the United States such tremendous quantities of the very kind of fuel that we ourselves produce. I ask the minister if the Department of Mines will not consider seriously the development of a national policy for Canada, not only with respect to a reduction in freight rates, the $2 per ton asked for by the people of Nova Scotia, but also in relation to all the difficulties that surround the question, so that we in Canada may be placed in an independent position so far as fuel is concerned. I think that is only fair. I have asked the minister a question and I am entitled to an answer. The fuel board as at present constituted is not able to cope with the problem; it has not the resources to enable it to carry on investigations. It is therefore the duty of parliament to give the board wider scope and more money to enable it to evolve for Canada a fuel policy which will be beneficial to this country. To-day we are simply drifting so far as fuel consumption is concerned—drifting towards importations from foreign countries, mostly from the United States. This matter, in my opinion should receive serious consideration at the hands of the minister.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not work out a policy?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): We are relying on the government to work out a policy, but if it were left in our hands we could evolve one. We have sent delegations to the government with suggestions for its consideration, but I do not know that many of those suggestions have received favourable consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can only repeat what I have said before. So far as bituminous coal is concerned there is in my opinion little or no difference between the Nova Scotia and United States products. I make that statement in a broad general way.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): That has nothing to do with the issue.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, it has. It means that the manufacturing interests—and some of my hon. friends are engaged in manufacturing—buy their coal for their manufacturing plants in Ontario at a fairly low rate, which is a pretty large factor in production costs; they buy it at a rate around $5 or $5.50 a ton. I do not know the exact amount, because it fluctuates from time to time, but that is about the rate. Now that is the identical coal mined in Nova Scotia and it is used for manufacturing purposes largely in the raw state. You then have to transport your coal, which costs you between $3 and $4 a ton to raise and place on the car; and then you have to ship it all that distance either by water or by rail or partly by both, to give the manufacturer his fuel at a price which will permit him to enter into competition with manufacturers elsewhere. That is his problem, and it is rather a vital one for central Canada. Therefore, when speaking of the national fuel policy, you must be prepared to give the manufacturing interests and the domestic users in this part of Canada fuel at a price at which they can procure it from across the line. That is my conception of the question. That is why I say that, so far as the bulk of the product is concerned, the question is purely one of transportation. As a government we have offered, I think, fairly generous bonuses to enable the railway companies to carry coal. We have placed it at a fairly low rate and asked the railway commission to investigate thoroughly and give us an idea of what it would cost to move coal from Nova Scotia into Central Canada, as well as from Alberta to this part of the Dominion. So far we have not got that information. We have asked for it on one or two occasions but the railway companies have stated that they are not ready to go on with the movement.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How long is it since the minister submitted that question to the railway board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Nearly twelve months ago.

Mr. CANTLEY: More than twenty-four months ago.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): And in the meantime the movement is going on east and west.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Is it not nearly two years since the question was submitted?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Since the inception of the movement.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: No, but since the minister submitted to the railway board the question as to how much it would cost to carry Nova Scotia coal to central Canada. Is it not nearer two years than one year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It may be in the neighbourhood of two years since the movement started but not since we asked for the figures.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I am interested in that, because I believe it is over two years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will get the facts. The order in council was passed on March 30, 1928, and one year later we asked for the report from the Board of Railway Commissioners with respect to the amount that we should be called upon to pay.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What was the answer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The answer was that the railways were not ready to furnish us with these figures. But in the meantime the movement is going on from both east and west, and it has resulted, particularly in the water and rail carriage, in bringing a fairly large amount of Nova Scotia coal into eastern Ontario, in both years. I am unable to give the figures because the railway board has not yet reported; but when we have those figures we shall be able to formulate a policy as to how much the government of Canada or the railways will have to contribute to make it possible for the consumer in eastern Canada to get his coal as cheaply as he can procure it from across the line. That is the problem in a nutshell, and that is what we are trying to solve.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The minister says that the railway board has not yet reported and does not know anything about the matter. How then does he know that the movement has resulted in an increased consumption of Nova Scotia coal west of Montreal?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For the reason that each sale, particularly in the vicinity of Cochrane and points in eastern Ontario, is submitted to us before it takes place.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: By the railway board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, by the sales agents of the companies.

Mr. SPENCER: How much coal was moved from Alberta and from the maritimes under the reduced rate during 1928?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There were 32,000 tons from Alberta; we have not the figures for the maritimes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am interested in the question of the distillation of oil from coal, and I should like to know what progress has been made along this line. Both in this country and elsewhere this question is receiving attention and it is going to be of great importance to such provinces as my own. I have one or two other questions to ask the minister and perhaps I had better state two or three points in reference to which I wish information and the minister can answer them at once. There is the question of the distillation of coal: How far has experimentation proceeded along this line? I am aware that it can be done, but the question is whether it can be done in a commercial way. There is also the question with regard to the utilization of the tar sands and oil shale of northern Alberta. I am aware, too, that some experimentation has been carried on along this line, and the utilization of these tremendous deposits is a matter of great importance and considerable interest. From what I could catch of the discussion at the other end of the chamber I believe part of the work of the fuel board and of the research laboratory has been covered, but I notice an increase of $57,000 in the item, and I assume that is partly due to increased activities in that very important line of investigation. I should be glad if the minister would tell me what progress has been made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have lately arranged a joint investigation into the utilization of the McMurray tar sands, and of course in the parks we have carried out experiments in road building, using those sands without extracting the oil. At the university of Alberta, directly under the supervision of the Alberta Research Council, Mr. Clark and Mr. Stansfield have been working on the problem of extracting oil from the tar sands for some years, and now it is proposed that we should enter into a joint investigation. There is a problem of mining to be dealt with, and I believe an experimental plant will be built jointly; they will carry on the experiments with regard to extraction while we attempt to find a type of machinery to be used in connection with the mining. I believe that work will go on this year; part of the sum included in this vote is for that purpose. So far as the road experiment was concerned, it proved a splendid success but was somewhat expensive due to transportation costs.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The minister realizes, of course, that the extraction of oil from coal on a commercial scale is a matter of tremendous moment, especially to a province such as Alberta where the vast deposits of coal cannot be transported any great distance because of the transportation charges and the fact that it breaks up in handling. This is a subject of such importance that I am sure it will receive attention, and it is a subject on which the people of this country would like as much information as possible.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. STEWART: (Edmonton): We are now creating a position for a trained man who will carry on research work in this connection in our own laboratories. So far we have been watching very carefully what has been done in Germany and in England; perhaps Germany has gone further in research work and tests in this connection than any other country. At the moment I can only say that the plant at Leuna is still very much in the experimental stage, and of course very much depends on the quality of the coal submitted for treatment. However, we do intend to create a position for an engineer who will carry on this research work and of course we will keep closely in touch with what is being done in other countries.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I would like to know also what has been done in connection with the control of the waste gases in the Turner valley. As the minister knows, this question was up last year; it has been discussed from time to time and it is a matter of some importance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was in Calgary recently, but was unable to visit the Turner valley field. However, we do know that a very large quantity of gas is escaping at that field, and the provincial government and our own officials have become somewhat concerned about the wastage. We have agreed to appoint a joint commission to investigate the matter and, if possible, suggest methods for its conservation or use. A great many suggestions have been made in this connection, but before taking any definite steps we thought it well to have a thorough investigation made. Doctor Camsell is chairman of the board which has been created for that purpose, the other members being Mr. Ross, our mining engineer, and Mr. Carpenter of the utilities board of the province of Alberta. At the moment I think they are beginning their work and I expect a report in a short time.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am glad some action has been taken, because while possibly a large number of people throughout the country and perhaps many members of this house do not know it, I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that the supply of gas is not unlimited and that a field can be drained as readily as a country can be deforested.

Then there is one other point on which I should like some information; I refer to the oil shale in Athabasca, as distinguished from the tar sand. I understand that these shale deposits are stated by geologists to hold the greatest known deposits of petroleum in the world, but it has not been found possible to utilize those deposits in a commercial way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have not conducted any experiments in connection with shale in the north, but for some years we have been carrying on experimental work on New Brunswick shale. Every year we bring quantities of the shale to the laboratories here to see if some plan cannot be devised for the extraction of the oil as a commercial proposition.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Might I ask if there has been any success attained so far? I should like to know if there is any possibility in sight at the moment of accomplishing that task and finding out how to utilize these deposits in a commercial way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If it were not for the fact that fuel oil is fairly cheap because it is being secured in such large quantities and can be transported at a fairly reasonable cost, the extraction of oil from shale, from the tar sands and from coal could be carried on in a commercial way, but while fuel oil is so cheap it is very difficult to compete with, at least under any present methods of extraction.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is the point I had in mind, because we all know it can be extracted successfully; it is purely a matter of how much it costs, and I was directing my inquiry along that line.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): Anyone who has paid any attention to this coal question must realize the difficulties confronting coal producers in Canada. I appreciate the difficulties which face the minister, but I do not think he is proceeding as he should. I quite appreciate the position we are in, with the coal fields of the United States so close to the industrial centres of Canada, which makes it possible for these industrial concerns to get American coal quite cheaply; there is no doubt that we will have a great deal of difficulty in meeting that competition. That is a question of transportation, and the minister appears to devote the most of his attention to that question. But transportation is only one element which has to be considered; there are many other and probably just as important factors in connection with this problem. There is the element of the cost of production; then there is the element of transportation; then comes the element of marketing, and, last but not least, the element of competition. When I had the honour of addressing this house upon this question I pointed out what I thought was a feasible plan, one which might afford some solution of the problem and cause the government to give some consideration to the formulating of a national fuel policy. We admit that under ordinary circumstances it is impossible to put Nova Scotia or Alberta coal into central Canada to compete on an even footing with American coal; that may as well be admitted first as last. But as the hon. member for South Renfrew said a few moments ago, the people of Ontario and western Quebec are willing to make a sacrifice in order that we may become independent as far as fuel resources are concerned. Of course everyone must realize that there is a limit to the extent to which the good people of Ontario would be prepared to go in that direction. The suggestion which I offered last year was the appointment of a commission to investigate the cost of production, the cost of transportation, the cost of marketing, and last but not least, the element of protection, but I am afraid that in that connection we will not have the sympathy of the present Minister of Finance. It was stated this afternoon that the present Minister of Mines rather prided himself on the quotation with reference to the "death knell of protection." Additional protection is needed on our coal in order that it may successfully invade the markets of central Canada. The government deserves credit for giving us a three dollar rate on coal to points in Quebec, but that is not enough. This national fuel policy will never be evolved by considering only one element. I suggest that a commission of outstanding public men be appointed to study this question. The facts are all obtainable from the bureau; the department is excellently staffed and the information is available which will enable a commission composed of such men, as I suggested last year, to solve this problem. I leave that suggestion with the minister.

Last year the government received a delegation from Nova Scotia which asked for a two dollar rate. The Minister of Mines was present and heard that request, but as yet no answer has been made. Is it the intention of the minister to consider that request for a two dollar rate on coal?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): From what points?

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): From all Nova Scotia points; to replace the three dollar rate.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The government does not feel that the rate can be changed until the report is received from the railway commission as to the present movement. The matter still stands awaiting that report.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): Will the minister give some attention to my suggestion as to the appointment of a commission?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Speaking personally, and not for the government, I do not think a commission would be able to gather any more facts than are being collected now with respect to transportation. The hon. member suggests that a duty should be placed against the foreign article, but it would not be necessary to appoint a commission to decide that; that would be a matter of policy. Personally, I have always felt that the manufacturers, as well as the domestic users of Ontario, were entitled to receive their coal, which is such an important factor in manufacturing as well as in domestic heating, at as reasonable a price as it could be procured; I do not think it would be fair to ask them to pay any more than they are paying at present. My endeavour has been to supply those consumers with the Canadian product at a price as near as possible to the price they are now paying. Otherwise they would be handicapped to some extent, and I do not think that would be fair. If a contribution is to be made, it should come from the federal government, but so far as I am concerned I do not think there is any necessity to appoint a commission at the moment. We are conducting test movements from both the east and the west in order to establish what is the actual cost of transportation. These movements are not being conducted to determine whether there shall be a dollar, two dollar or three dollar rate, but to establish the actual cost of transportation.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister talks about test movements and giving cheap fuel to the Ontario manufacturer, but the fact of the matter is that the coal producers have a protection of about 10 per cent, while some of the Ontario users of coal brought in from the United States have a protection of from 25 to 30 per cent. Is one class of producers not entitled to as adequate protection as another? The minister referred to some of his young men having been taken away by industrial firms and I am very glad that some of them have found useful employment which they certainly could not find when they were in the minister's department. The minister made reference to the fuel policy of the government as it concerns coal and coking ovens, but he was unable to answer the question as to whether or not any bounty has been paid. The fact of the matter is that the only installation able to comply with the conditions of that policy is one consisting of ten or fifteen coking ovens which were built in Halifax to replace an old gas plant which had been in existence from time out of mind. I think this plant has been completed, but when it is in operation it will not amount to a row of pins as a commercial unit, and the minister knows that is so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member is aware of the fact that they were using American coal in the old beehive ovens.

Mr. CANTLEY: It was not a beehive oven plant. Why are they using American coal in Montreal? If the policy inaugurated by the government was a reasonable one, a workable one, why was this large coking plant which has been erected on the bank of the Welland canal not built in the east end of Montreal so that Canadian coal could have been used? It was built at the Welland canal where Nova Scotia coal can get to it only by two ways, either by rail or by being lightered up at a cost almost as great as that of bringing it from Sydney to Montreal. The fact of the matter is that the legislation was of no value; it was known to be no good and it has proved to be just as valuable as we said it would be. It was simply a gesture and nothing more than that.

The minister said that one difficulty and a great one was the matter of sulphur. I state that that difficulty is not at all insuperable. All the sulphur could be removed out of the gases for a cost of a good deal less than twenty-five cents per ton. All this talk about high sulphur content is only using camouflage to hide behind, nothing more and nothing less.

Some reference was made to the $6.75 rate from Alberta. Coal coming from Alberta to Ontario travels about 2,000 miles. We in Nova Scotia were given a flat rate of $3. If we were given a rate proportionate to the mileage, as we were entitled to, we would have a rate from Springhill, not of $3 as now, but of $1.80; from Minto, a rate of $1.60 and from Stellarton a rate of $2.20 instead of $3. I want to tell the minister that about twenty years ago a considerable quantity of Nova Scotia coal was carried to Montreal at a rate of $1.80 from Stellarton. During the years when it was so carried during the winter at that rate, we had surpluses on the Intercolonial. I will admit that it costs more to operate the railway to-day than it did sixteen years ago, because that is about the time the movement to which I refer took place, but the cost has not increased so much as to change a profitable $1.80 rate to a losing $2 rate. Why should the government apply a blanket rate over the whole of the maritimes, where there is a difference between Minto, the nearest point, and Sydney the furthest, of nearly 400 miles, or practically four-tenths of the whole mileage?

The minister made some reference to the efforts of himself and his department to further the use of Nova Scotia coal in the Montreal district. Unless the minister is greatly belied, on his return from that very enjoyable trip to Germany I understand he was royally entertained in London and he there took the opportunity of suggesting to the people of Great Britain that they were neglecting the market in the St. Lawrence. He suggested that it was a market to which they ought to pay more attention. I do not think that is quite within his province as Minister of Mines. Still to-night he talks about the great efforts of his department to further the use of Nova Scotia coal in the St. Lawrence valley.

Last winter a considerable quantity of soviet coal entered Canada, and the minister and the government said they were powerless to do anything whatever to prevent such coal from coming in. What was the attitude of the United States in that connection? The first cargo that came into Canada went in the first place to New York. How was it met there? Under the United States system of tariff and under the power given to their president, they were able to deal with it. That coal could not be landed in the United States. The cargo then left New York and travelled all the way around Nova Scotia up the gulf and came into Montreal. Other cargoes followed into Portland thence by rail to Montreal, and this government sat absolutely supine, unable or refusing to do anything to protect the coal industries of Nova Scotia and Alberta, and allowing soviet coal to travel about 6,000 miles, one-third of the circumference of the earth, and enter Canada in free competition with our own coal. The minister did nothing to protect either his friends in the old country or his friends in Nova Scotia or his friends in Alberta in that regard and he has to-day nothing that he can say in defence of his action or lack of action—I leave it to him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say in answer to my hon. friend that the only coal that came in from soviet Russia, and a very small quantity at that, was anthracite coal?

Mr. CANTLEY: I know it was anthracite coal and the quantity was considerable.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): With regard to my hon. friend's strictures about my suggesting inter-empire trade in anthracite coal and that alone, this was merely a suggestion on my part that instead of the United States getting the business in anthracite, this trade might well go to Great Britain. I was not interfering for a moment with our own domestic fuel supply, because my hon. friend knows full well that we have no anthracite coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: I absolutely deny that. What did it displace ? What have we been endeavouring to displace for the last ten years? We have been trying to displace British anthracite and United States anthracite with domestic coke and if the minister would give us a chance we would do it. That is the answer. The minister should get a better story than that or else remain silent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is a plant in Montreal now and my hon. friend can take advantage of the bonus offered by the government. Let him ship coal and have it used in the Montreal plant, and supplant anthracite. That was the purpose for which the bonus was offered.

Mr. CANTLEY: The government is allowing German and British coke and tens of thousands of tons of United States coke to enter Canada simply because they will not protect Canadian coke by a duty on coke coming into this country.

Mr. HEPBURN: Will the hon. member's leader make a declaration in favour of protection on coke or coal?

Mr. CANTLEY: What was it my hon. friend said? I did not hear.

Mr. HEPBURN: Will the hon. member enunciate for his party a policy of a higher tariff on coal or coke?

Mr. CANTLEY: Certainly; on both.

Mr. HEPBURN: Will his leader agree to that?

Mr. CANTLEY: Certainly he will.

Mr. HEPBURN: I should like to have his declaration.

Mr. CANTLEY: Do not make any mistake about his policy. He will.

Mr. HEPBURN: Let whoever is leading the opposition make that declaration now. I challenge them to do it right now. That is a fair question.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Let the hon. member and the hon. member for South Essex debate that.

Mr. HEPBURN: The hon. member for South Essex got all he wanted when he was discussing that.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The Minister of the Interior has referred to the coking legislation passed by the present government. What have been the results of that legislation? How much more Canadian coal has been produced and used as a result of it?

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, June 12, 1929.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DREDGING EQUIPMENT AT VICTORIA AND VANCOUVER

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. How many government owned dredges and other units of dredging equipment are lying idle at Victoria and Vancouver?
2. What is the total value of such dredges and dredging units?
3. What is the annual cost for maintenance, services of watchmen and upkeep of such dredges and dredging units?
4. What was the cost per cubic yard for dredging and dumping material during the time the dredge Mastodon was operating in Vancouver harbour?
5. Did the board of harbour commissioners for the port of Vancouver, or the government, award a contract for dredging in Vancouver harbour to a private company or person?
6. If so, is such work now being carried on by such company or person, and by whom?
7. If such work is now being performed by a private company or person: (a) what price per cubic yard is being paid for dredging; (b) what price is being paid for dumping the material so dredged?
8. Has the board of harbour commissioners of the port of Vancouver any inspector, or inspectors, employed on the work? If so, how many and at what monthly wages?
9. Did the government or the board of harbour commissioners of the port of Vancouver secure any estimate from the dredging engineer or any other engineer of the Public Works department prior to awarding such contract?
10. If so: (a) what was the estimated price per cubic yard of dredging; (b) of dumping the material so dredged?

[Mr. Hepburn.]

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. Cardin):

Department of Marine:

1 to 4. See information from Public Works department.

5. The Vancouver harbour commissioners let a contract for the supply of 700,000 cu. yds. of gravel fill on the site of a new pier, which included the dredging of 85,680 cu. yds. of mud before the fill was deposited.

6. Yes. By the North Western Dredging Company.

7. (a) No unit price is being paid for dredging the material required to be removed before the filling is deposited. The price for this is included in the 24 cents per cu. yd., being paid for the 700,000 cu. yds. of filling. (b) Answered by (a).

8. Yes, three. Regular employees of the commissioners' engineering department. One at $175 per month. One at $7 per day, and one at $6 per day; working three shifts of 8 hours each.

9. No, answering for the harbour commissioners, they had the advice of their own engineers and consulted no one else.

10. The estimate of the commissioners' engineers was that securing the dredging and filling at the bid price offered by the North Western Dredging Company at 24 cents per cu. yd., was cheaper than they could accomplish the same result in any other manner.

Public Works department:

1. Dredge No. 301—(Ajax)—Laid up at Victoria; dredge No. 306—(Mastodon)—Laid up at Vancouver; Rock breaker No. 1—Laid up at Vancouver; Rock breaker No. 2—Laid up at Vancouver; Tug Point Grey—Laid up at Vancouver; Tug Petrel—Laid up at Vancouver; Launch Knockabout—Laid up at Vancouver; Derrick scow of dredge No. 306—Laid up at Vancouver; Diving scow—Laid up at Victoria.

2. $422,025.

3. $15,486.40. (Fiscal year 1928-29).

4. Cost of Mastodon's work averages 20.24 cents per cubic yard while in Vancouver.

5, 6 and 7. Contracts for dredging awarded by Public Works department in 1928; Calamity Point, First Narrows, to North Western Dredging Company, Ltd., at 18.7 cents per cubic yard, class B. work proceeding. Burnaby Shoal, to North Western Dredging Company, Ltd., at 26.8 cents per cubic yard, class B. work discontinued. Price includes dredging and ordinary disposal of waste material.

8. Please refer to Marine department's answer.

9 and 10. Estimate of cost of work contracted for was made to Public Works department by chief engineer, Department of Public Works, prior to tenders being received at 20 cents per cubic yard for Calamity Point, First Narrows. 25½ cents per cubic yard for Burnaby Shoal covering dredging and ordinary disposal of waste material.

ACCIDENTS IN PENITENTIARIES

Miss MACPHAIL:

1. How many fatal accidents have occurred in each penitentiary in Canada since 1925?

2. How many serious accidents have occurred in each penitentiary since 1925?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. One in Manitoba penitentiary; none in the others.

2. Kingston penitentiary	5
St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary	15
Dorchester	3
Manitoba	2
British Columbia	3
Saskatchewan
Total	28

THE HUNTINGDON GLEANER

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine):

1. What amount has been paid by the government to the Huntingdon Gleaner since the year 1920 to date?

2. What amount has been paid to said paper each year from 1920 to date, and how much from each department of the government?

Mr. RINFRET:

Auditor General:

1 and 2.

General election of 1921	$ 179 79
General election of 1925	246 39
By election of 1926	3 60
Total	$ 429 78

Department of Finance:

1. $45.36.

2. 1922-3—$45.36 (advertising).

Department of Indian Affairs:

1. $8.10.

2. 1927, $2.70; 1928, $5.40.

Department of the Interior:

1. $23.87.

2.

1920-21	Nil
1921-22	Nil
1922-23	$ 1 37
1923-24	1 50
1924-25	1 50
1925-26	6 60
1926-27	9 90
1927-28	1 50
1928-29	1 50

National Revenue:

Customs and Excise Divisions

1. $68.73.

2.

Fiscal Year	Amount
1920-21	$ 3 40
1921-22	10 43
1922-23	24 05
1923-24	6 90
1924-25	15 10
1925-26	8 85
1926-27	Nil
1927-28	Nil
1928-29	Nil
Total	$ 68 73

Income Tax Division

1. In March, 1929, paid William Findlay Company, Limited, $14 account Huntingdon Gleaner.

2. Answered by No. 1.

Post Office Department:

1 and 2.

Fiscal Year
1920-21	Nil
1921-22	Nil
1922-23	$ 4 80
1923-24	9 78
1924-25	Nil
1925-26	5 88
1926-27	31 36
1927-28	15 64
1928-29	6 90
Total	$ 74 36

Department of Public Works:

1. $31.88.

2. Fiscal Year

1925-26	$ 7 35
1927-28	10 50
1928-29	14 03

HIGHWAY EXPENDITURE

Mr. COWAN:

1. Has the whole of the $20,000,000 provided for by the Canada Highways Act of 1919, being chapter 54 of 9-10 George V, been expended?

2. Is there a record available of the amount paid to each province?
3. If so, what amount was received by each province?
4. Is there a record of the highways upon which said funds were expended?
5. If so, what mileage has been built and what is the location of such highway?

Mr. ROBB: The information asked for in this question is all contained in the annual report of the commissioner of highways for the year ending March 31, 1928. A marked copy was sent to the hon. member, and I understand he is prepared to have the question dropped, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped as being answered.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT HEAT AND POWER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. N. SMITH (Stormont): I would ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) whether any contract has yet been signed between the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and the government; if not, will one be signed shortly ?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): No contract has yet been signed. Negotiations are in progress.

SUPPLY—TIME OF MEETING OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the house for a very few minutes to a question of considerable importance, at least to working men. I ask the government to consider the desirability of opening the parliamentary session at a different time of the year from that which is now the practice. I do not know whether the month of February was selected to inconvenience western members as much as possible, particularly farmer members, but were that the purpose it has been very well executed. It is the custom for parliament to meet in February, or perhaps even later. As a result we are now in the summer months roasting and frying in this building, when we ought to be out in the sunshine storing up health, especially when we have to stay indoors so long during the winter months. Surely the time is come for us to consider whether February is the best time for parliament to meet.

It goes without saying that seed time is one of great importance to the farmer members, and it also goes without saying that the members coming from the maritime provinces on the one hand and from British Columbia and the western provinces on the other have to stay here steadily throughout the session; they have no opportunity of going home over the week end or during a short adjournment; and to have to remain in Ottawa during the spring season when they ought to be at their work at home imposes on them a very serious inconvenience. I believe it would be better for all concerned were parliament to meet two or three months earlier than it usually does. I think November would be a very excellent time to open the session, have a recess for Christmas and New Year, and then come back and conclude our parliamentary work before the first of May at least.

That is the suggestion I wish to make. It may be that some members from the eastern provinces would rather continue the present practice, but I think they ought to be prepared to give a little consideration to this suggestion, since the change would involve no inconvenience to any one, whereas if we continue to meet in February western members are very seriously inconvenienced.

There is a further reason why I think eastern members ought to give favourable consideration to my plea. I think it is clear to any one who looks at the matter from the point of view of indemnities that the western members are discriminated against. No man can be here steadily for four months and attend to any kind of personal business. He has practically to give it up. That is true also of the maritime members. I do not know whether one should mention the word "indemnity" or not. Far be it from me to suggest any increase!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: I would not think of making such a suggestion. I know that all parties are very much afraid of this question, especially the leaders. I might go so far as to suggest that $1,000 be taken off the indemnity of the eastern members and added to that of the western members. This would not increase the taxation in any way, while it would make up some of the difference which now exists as between eastern and western members. It is clear I think that eastern members have a little advantage over those from the west, and if $4,000 be a reasonable indemnity for a man who can be in his office every day in the year it is very unfair to a member from Vancouver or from any of the western provinces. Even if for some minor reason eastern members would rather be here in the spring of the year, I submit that in view of all the circumstances they ought to be prepared to assist us in our effort to impress upon the government the advisability of changing the time at which parliament meets, making it November instead of February.

In conclusion, I wish to say this. There is a great deal more in the suggestion than may appear on the surface, for the question of indemnity is one which leads us to another question of moment to the people of Canada and to the democratic system in general. I believe that it is becoming more and more the tendency that only rich men can come to this parliament; and poor men, however able they may be, may ultimately be debarred except they may possibly receive assistance from some other source to enable them to attend parliament—which is perhaps a principle equally as dangerous as the principle of having only rich men in parliament. And there is a tendency in Canada for that principle to take root. I think we can find instances, without going back very far, of outstanding men of the main parties in Canada who have been assisted or indemnified by private persons—we do not know who they are—in order that they might be in a position to give their services to the country. Now I offer no criticism of any individual; I do not know any case in which this has been done wherein the individual concerned was not an outstanding man whose services Canada could ill afford to lose, and of which we are very glad to have had the benefit. That is not my criticism, however; my criticism is that the principle is a very bad one. At least we ought to know in every case who the men are that subscribe funds, and I would rather advocate that Canada be prepared to give, to those whose services the country accepts, a remuneration sufficient to maintain them, having full control over them, than prejudice their services by allowing private individuals to keep them in public life.

I hope that in view of all the circumstances the government will listen to our request that parliament meet in the fall instead of in the spring, and that we be careful not to allow mere wealth to supersede other qualities in this parliament. I frankly admit, of course, that I should be very glad indeed if I had sufficient political influence to be worth $200,000 to anybody outside parliament. Unfortunately, however, I am not in that happy position and so I stand for the democratic principle of having the people of Canada pay the services of their representatives. And if it were necessary I would even suggest that the personnel of parliament be reduced by half, paying the members an adequate compensation, and applying the same principle to ministers, reducing their number to the same extent and adequately remunerating them in order to keep in public life men whose services are of value to the country.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Finance—charges of management, $979,290.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the increase of $50,000 in connection with printing Dominion notes?

Mr. ROBB: This is to cover an increase of about 15 per cent in the number of one dollar and two dollar notes in circulation, and to provide an adequate reserve of notes.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the cost of printing notes of one dollar and two dollar denomination?

Mr. ROBB: These are the figures: 290,000 sheets of 25 cent notes, $62.70 per thousand sheets; 6,240,000 sheets of one dollar notes, $58.90 per thousand sheets; 2,240,000 sheets of two dollar notes, $58.90 per thousand sheets; 15,000 sheets of five hundred dollar and one thousand dollar bearer notes, at $80.75 per thousand sheets. There was a 3 per cent excise tax on that.

Mr. SPENCER: Does the department contemplate issuing notes of larger denominations than the one and two dollars for general distribution among the people?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. SPENCER: Why? There is a general opinion on the part of the public that the government should issue more notes for circulation among the people. Why is this not done?

Mr. ROBB: I have heard that suggestion made occasionally in the house, but I am bound to admit that I cannot agree with my hon. friend that there is any general public demand for such issue.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the item, "Commission for payment of interest on public debt, purchase of sinking funds," and so forth, $105,000.

Mr. ROBB: To the Bank of Montreal, for services as financial agents in London, at the rate of £150 per million pounds of debt; commission, Bank of Montreal, New York, cashing interest coupons, at $\frac{1}{8}$ of 1 per cent; registration fees for bonds, domiciled in New York, $6,000; commission to Bank of Montreal for purchase of sinking funds, estimated at $10,000; commission to banks for cashing interest coupons on renewal and refunding loans at one-eighth of one per cent, estimated at $22,000.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister ever considered the advisability of having these notes printed by the government? We have a royal mint in Ottawa and I have often thought it would be well for the government to consider the advisability of putting in a proper printing press and producing their own notes instead of having the work done by a private firm.

Mr. ROBB: That question is before the department. As my hon. friend knows, the contract for the printing is given by public tender, and if at any time we discover that those tendering are attempting to hold up the government we always have it in mind that we will be able to take care of the work ourselves. At present, however, it looks as though we were getting the work done more cheaply than it could be done by the government.

Mr. COOTE: Who has the contract now?

Mr. ROBB: The Canadian Bank Note Company; they have had it for some years.

Mr. COOTE: Is it a yearly contract or is it for a number of years?

Mr. ROBB: It is a five year contract. I believe we called for tenders only this year; I think the present contract runs out next year. I will give that information later on.

Mr. FRASER: At this point I would like to ask the minister one or two questions with regard to the audit board. What are the functions of that board; who are the members; what are they paid; are they employed during the whole of the year or just for a few days during the year?

Mr. ROBB: I have not before me any memorandum as to the audit board, but the chairman is Mr. Gordon Scott of the firm of Ross and Sons, Montreal. Whenever they are ordered by the Minister of Finance to do so they proceed to audit the accounts of any department. We make use of them frequently to audit the accounts of harbour commissions, for instance, and other organizations whose bonds or securities are guaranteed by the government.

Mr. FRASER: Are their functions supplementary to those of the Auditor General? I thought the Auditor General was the man who did that work, and I would like to know why it is necessary to employ an audit board costing the country $70,000, to supplement the work of the Auditor General.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: That is a very fair question, and I can give a fair answer; it is because parliament ordered this to be done under the act passed some years ago. I will be glad to have this information compiled and given to my hon. friend, but I have not the details before me at present.

Mr. FRASER: Can the minister give me the details of the amounts paid these officials?

Mr. ROBB: No, I have not that information here, but I will get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. FRASER: How much work did they do last year; what accounts have they been asked to audit during the last fiscal year?

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps later on I might let any one item stand and give that information to my hon. friend when I have secured it.

Mr. FRASER: Just here I might ask the minister one other question with regard to the sinking fund, as referred to in the Auditor General's report at page 21 of volume 1, as follows:

The amounts available for investment during the year on account of these sinking funds were as follows:

Annual contribution of ½ of one per cent of amount of loans..	$1,272,263 60
Interest on sinking funds investments (London loans)..	1,582,054 97
Total..	$2,854,318 57

Of this amount $2,845,589.55 was invested in Dominion securities of the par value of $3,418,685.69, purchased at a net discount of $573,096.14. In the public accounts and in this report (Volume II, page F-13) the amount of $3,418,685.69 added to the sinking fund is the par value of the securities purchased, the discount being credited to the current year's revenue.

In other words, the minister purchased bonds at a discount of $573,096.14 and that amount has been included as revenue. I want to know from the minister how much of his surplus is accounted for in this way. He buys bonds at a discount, immediately puts them into the public accounts at par and takes credit to himself for the difference in the revenue for the year. How does he explain a transaction of that kind?

Mr. ROBB: Will my hon. friend tell me how we could explain to the country what has been done with these earnings if we did not so report them?

Mr. FRASER: That is the point; is this earnings? Does the Minister of Finance claim this is earnings?

Mr. ROBB: I am not claiming that, but I am claiming that it belongs to the people of Canada and must be accounted for.

Mr. FRASER: But it has no value to the people of Canada; because the government bought these bonds at a discount how can you say half a million dollars has been earned? Perhaps the bonds may go down on the market; then would you charge up to your revenue the amount you lost on the bonds?

Mr. ROBB: We certainly would.

Mr. FRASER: I would like a little better explanation from the minister. Here is an item of over half a million dollars accounted for by the Minister of Finance as revenue which he has never collected and for which he has nothing to show; this is a part of his $70,000,000 surplus. I think we are entitled to know how he justifies an accounting of that kind.

Mr. ROBB: I am bound to say that I think my hon. friend is a little mixed in his financing. Provision was made by order in council to purchase sinking funds not to exceed one-half of one per cent per annum, on the following loans: War loan 1915-25, order in council of December 4, 1915; war loan of 1916-31, order in council of June, 1917; war loan of 1917-37. Purchases were made until May, 1924, when they were discontinued as the three loans were then selling above par. On April 13, 1929, the Bank of Montreal, Montreal, were instructed to purchase 5 per cent 1916-31 war loan bonds at a price not to net the department more than par. Between April 13 and April 27, 1929—

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister permit me to interrupt?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend asked for the information; now I am going to give it to him. Between April 13 and April 27, 1929, $200,000 had been purchased, leaving a balance of $188,587.08 in our sinking fund cash account, standing to our credit in a savings account. The accounts stood, as of April 30, 1929, as follows:

Sinking fund, 1915-25	Redeemed
Sinking fund, 1916-31	$999,300 00
Sinking fund, 1917-37	$379,800 00
Sinking fund, cash balance to our credit in savings account	$188,587 08

The Bank of Montreal, Montreal, are trustees for this sinking fund.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sorry to say that the minister is blocking his own estimates; he is giving a lot of information which is very interesting but which has nothing to do with the question asked by the hon. member for Cariboo. The hon. gentleman referred to the purchase of bonds below par and asked why the discount should be included in the current revenues of the country. The minister is reading the figures for the last few months and they have nothing to do with the question at issue.

Mr. FRASER: That is exactly what I was going to bring up; the minister has given me the information for the last year just closed and he knows very well that I have no criticism to make of those figures. The only information I have before me is for the previous years and he expects me to be satisfied with an answer concerning last year. That is not what I expect from the minister, and I do not think it is fair when I ask a question of that kind that I should receive an evasive answer.

Mr. ROBB: I hope my hon. friends are not developing too much heat in regard to this matter. I told the hon. member that we had to account for this in some way; if we buy in these bonds and earn upon them we must report those earnings to parliament.

Mr. FRASER: Why could not the bonds be put in at the amount they were purchased at? Is that the regular custom of the department?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: When bonds are purchased at a discount the department takes credit for that as being money earned, but as far as I can see it is not money earned. I am puzzled to know just how much of this surplus the minister has presented to the country could be accounted for in a similar fashion?

Mr. ROBB: There has been no difference in the system of accounting in the department for many years; we are following the same procedure followed by my predecessors of both parties.

Mr. FRASER: I look upon the Minister of Finance as being a good, sound business man, but I do not know how he can justify the position which he has taken in regard to this matter. Even supposing that previous ministers of finance had accounted to the country in that way, it is poor business and the Finance minister should find a better way of accounting for these revenues to the country.

Mr. ROBB: If I go into the market and retire Dominion bonds at a premium I must report to parliament that I have paid that much more for them, and when I buy them at a discount I must report the discount as well as the premium.

Mr. FRASER: I do not know why the bonds are not taken in at the amount paid for them.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know of any other commercial concern which does it in that way.

Mr. FRASER: I think all commercial concerns take them into account at the amount actually paid.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under what item would we vote the item of interest on public debt which appears on page 6 of the estimates?

Mr. ROBB: That is statutory.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then we do not discuss it at all?

Mr. ROBB: We can discuss it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If we can discuss it, it would be just as well to discuss it under this item, because I have one or two remarks to make in connection with the statement made to the house by the right hon. the Prime Minister, when speaking on the budget. I want to get this matter straightened out because, in my judgment, the statement made by the Prime Minister was very misleading and not at all in accordance with the facts. I take it that the funded debt of Canada on March 31, 1922, was $2,420,000,000, in round figures, and according to the Canadian Gazette of April 13, I find that the funded debt of Canada on March 31, 1929, was $2,363,000,000. It will be understood that I am giving round figures. When I was speaking on the budget I gave the funded debt of Canada as of March 31 last as being $2,330,000,000, so it would appear that I was just $33,000,000 too low. I obtained those figures in the course of conversation a day or two before with the Minister of Finance. When I stated that there had been a reduction in seven years of $90,000,000 in the funded debt of Canada, I should have stated that there had been a reduction of $57,000,000. The right hon. the Prime Minister made what to my mind is the most ridiculous financial statement which has ever been made in the House of Commons. The right hon. the Prime Minister said that I had overlooked entirely the fact that in 1922 there was a floating debt of $144,000,000, and that this government had paid that floating debt because it had disappeared. According to the statement of 1922 there were against that funded debt assets which have also disappeared from the public accounts of Canada. Schedule B of the public accounts for 1922, shows the following assets as appearing on the balance sheet of Canada and which are carried as cash:

[Mr. Robb.]

Imperial government account..	$122,719,711 71
Italian government..	702 52
Belgian government..	6,291,125 64
French government..	5,730,000 00
Greek government..	7,520,473 17
Roumanian government	20,449,104 49
Russian government..	55,571 82

Making a total of $162,766,689.35 which was carried on the balance sheet of Canada as of that date. The minister stated that the government had paid $144,000,000 of floating debt, but I ask him where these assets have gone. According to the statement which appears in the Canada Gazette, the assets amount to $31,049,000, while in March, 1922, they amounted to $162,766,000. What has become of those assets, cash assets which were carried on the balance sheet of the Dominion of Canada? Those assets have been liquidated and the money has been used to pay the floating debt of $144,000,000. The assets are gone and the floating debt is gone, and the balance has not been affected at all.

The right hon. the Prime Minister knew that fact when he made his speech, or if he did not know he should have known. I submitted those figures to an accountant and I was told that a more ridiculous proposition had never been put up to him in all his experience. If the assets were still there then I could understand that the debt had been paid, but that debt was paid out of the cash assets. The money had been borrowed from the banks to advance to these foreign governments, and when that was paid the money was repaid to the banks and the balance of the Dominion of Canada was not affected at all. When I stated that in seven years the Minister of Finance had reduced the funded debt by $90,000,000, I was giving him credit for $33,000,000 too much; the amount should have been $57,000,000 and not $90,000,000. I cannot say who supplied this information to the Minister of Finance, but if it was a member of the Finance department, that man should be hauled over the coals and brought before the Auditor General because he does not know his business.

Mr. ROBB: This is not the first time that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has challenged the correctness of the financial statement put out by a minister of finance of this government. My hon. friend made even wilder statements in 1927—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am making that statement, and I am not going to have my hon. friend say that I made wilder statements. That statement was made to this house by the Finance minister of Canada, and if he can explain it we would like him to do so.

Mr. ROBB: I repeat that my hon. friend made even wilder statements from the public platforms of this country in 1927 when he was seeking to injure the government and advance his own political interests. I could see that at that time there might be created by the speech of my hon. friend who occupied then a very high position, as he does now, a feeling of unrest throughout the country and it would not be a good thing for the Dominion of Canada if the idea should go abroad that the finances of the country were being in any way juggled or interfered with. So to get an independent audit that at least the Conservative party could not find any fault with, the treasury board, on my recommendation, instructed P. S. Ross and Sons of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, a very large auditing house throughout Canada, to make an audit of the accounts of the department. I may say, by the way, that they are relatives of that very estimable gentleman who controls the Ottawa Journal, and who, I am told, is president of the Conservative Association of this city; brothers of a gentleman who was Conservative candidate in Montreal at one time; P. S. Ross and Sons who were selected by the government of Sir Robert Borden and the Union government to audit the accounts overseas. They were instructed to go into the accounts of the department, audit them carefully, make the most thorough examination and report to parliament as to the position. The answer will be found in the public accounts for the fiscal year, ended March 31, 1927, on page xiv. I will put the report on Hansard now so that the public will be able to see it in answer to my hon. friend. It is as follows:

P. S. Ross and Sons,
Chartered Accountants,
Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg.
Montreal, 5th December, 1927.

Honourable J. A. Robb,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—By authority of the treasury board, given 28th June, 1927, we have examined the balance sheets of the Dominion of Canada for the fiscal years ended 31st March, 1924, 1925, 1926 and 1927.

We certify that the published balance sheets examined by us have been compiled in a manner similar to the corresponding statements of previous years, and do not include in the net debt of the Dominion, issues of the Canadian National Railway Company and the companies included in its system which carry the guarantee of the Dominion. The details of such guarantees have been shown separately each year in the public accounts.

We further certify that the surplus of revenues over expenditures, as audited by the Auditor General of Canada and as shown by the books of the department for the four years ended 31st March, 1927, has been as hereunder:—

1924..	$73,420,808 30
1925..	28,163,127 26
1926..	55,711,045 04
1927..	73,024,845 86
		$230,319,826 46

and that the same has been properly reflected in the respective balance sheets as follows:—

Additions to capital or non-active asset accounts:—

1924..	$37,427,214 44
1925..	27,817,537 97
1926..	28,004,458 87
1927..	31,128,116 53
		$124,377,327 81
Reduction in net debt:—
1924..	$35,993,593 86
1925..	345,589 29
1926..	27,706,586 17
1927..	41,896,729 33
		$105,942,498 65

The net debt of Canada, as shown by the public accounts at 31st March 1927, which has been substantially verified by the board of audit in conjunction with us, was..	$2,347,834,370 09
The net debt at 31st March, 1923, was..	2,453,776,868 74
A reduction in the net debt, during the period, of.. ..	$ 105,942,498 65

Respectfully submitted,
(Sgd.) P. S. Ross and Sons,
Chartered Accountants.

That is the answer to my hon. friend. I prefer to take the certificate of P. S. Ross and Sons to the statement of my hon. friend, much as I esteem him.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What has my hon. friend done? He might just as well talk about the weather or the opening of the new hotel in Toronto as read the statements he has read. I agree that the public accounts are correct, but I am just as satisfied that the statements of the Minister of Finance in the house in the last five or six years were incorrect and that the statement made in the house by the Prime Minister was also incorrect. That is my objection. The public accounts are correct; stick to them, and I am pointing out to-day that the statements in the public accounts will not bear out the statements made by the Minister of Finance as to the funded debt and the reductions in the funded debt.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did the hon. member take account of the assets in his statement?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the whole point. He left out of account the other matter to which I referred.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I left nothing out of account; I took the statements from the public accounts, but my right hon. friend left out the assets.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was drawing attention to what my hon. friend left out and which he admits he left out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I took in neither the floating debt nor the assets connected with it. I took the funded debt as given by the public accounts, and the only mistake I made was to give credit to the Minister of Finance for paying off $33,000,000 more than he did. The reason was that I got the figures from the minister in conversation with him, and he said that he would not know the exact amount until the end of the year. This was a day or two before the end of the year. When the figures up to the end of the year came out, I found that I gave him credit for $33,000,000 more than he was entitled to, and instead of reducing the funded debt by $90,000,000, as I stated, he has reduced it by $57,000,000 and that only. The statement made by the Prime Minister in regard to the floating debt of Canada, according to information I get from men who are accustomed to bookkeeping, is absolute nonsense. You have wiped out the floating debt of $144,000,000, but you have wiped all the assets too, and this does not change the account at all. My right hon. friend said that he should have credit for paying, not only the $90,000,000 matter I spoke of, but $144,000,000 more. He should also have credit for spending $144,000,000 of the assets of the country, because they are not shown to-day on the balance sheet of Canada. They have been paid and the debt incurred with the banks when those assets were created, has been wiped off. That is the transaction. The $57,000,000 is the reduction in the funded debt of Canada.

Mr. ROBB: But the people who gave the interest know what the debt is.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister may submit my statement to any of his officials and I will guarantee that my statement is substantiated by men in his department who know. I am not talking about the net debt. I am not seeking to impugn the public accounts of Canada. I am standing by the public accounts; I say they are correct. What the minister should have had audited by P. S. Ross and Sons was not the public accounts but his own statement in regard to them, as I pointed out last year. The minister showed from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 too much, and he knows it.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that a certain amount of printing of Dominion notes is done in the basement of the east block. Does the minister consider it cheaper to have most of the notes printed outside by contract than doing the printing ourselves? What would be the difference in the cost?

Mr. ROBB: No one has seriously suggested that we would save any money by printing the notes ourselves. The whole experience of business is that it is not cheaper to do the work ourselves. For instance, we have a very large printing bureau for doing general printing, but no one would say that it was a very great economy for the country.

Mr. SPENCER: But we do print a lot of Dominion notes ourselves. I would like to know what percentage we do print, and if it is found cheaper to do the work ourselves than to have it done outside.

Mr. ROBB: We just print the seal and signature. The work is done by contract.

Mr. SPENCER: We just do the finishing part of it.

Mr. ROBB: The seal and the signature.

Item agreed to.

Insurance—salaries, $95,515; contingencies, $59,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. ROBB: The number of positions required for 1929-30 is 40, an increase of two over last year. The increase of $1,635 is accounted for as follows: statutory increases, $1,305; new positions, actuarial assistant, $1,560; clerk, grade 2, $1,080; two clerks, grade 1, $720 each; less 2 positions reduced by $420 by appointment at minimum salary; two positions dropped, $2,750.

Item agreed to.

To provide for retiring allowances to former employees of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $17,500.

Mr. BENNETT: What are the particulars?

Mr. ROBB: These employees were retired in connection with the reorganization of the printing bureau in 1920. The number of annuitants on March 31, 1929, was 28.

Item agreed to.

Canadian National Safety League, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Who gets that money?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The National Safety League.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is the league and what is it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The late Sir John Gibson was president of it. I think its headquarters are in Hamilton.

Mr. COOTE: What purpose does this organization serve that it should receive a government grant?

Mr. ROBB: This item is under the Department of Labour, but we called it just to clear the slate as we go along. I think a good deal of the work of the National Safety League is to prevent accidents on railways. They have an organization in all the provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: How much went for salaries?

Mr. ROBB: Very little.

Mr. COOTE: It appears to me that it would be very much better to have the Minister of Labour explain the vote. The only work of the league that I have seen is the distribution of a calendar. It seems to me hardly worth while to pay out $10,000 for this purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let the item stand until the Minister of Labour is in his seat.

Item stands.

Grant to the Dominion Council of the Girl Guides, $6,000.

Mr. BROWN: I am only sorry, Mr. Chairman, that this vote cannot be made larger. The work the girl guides are doing is of first importance to Canada, and I think it worth while to place on record an incident that happened not very long ago in Winnipeg, where the girl guides were the means of saving life. Perhaps this may be of interest to the Canadian Press Association, because one of the girls was the daughter of a former member of the association. Three girls were playing on the street. Another girl hastened up to them, spoke very hurriedly, and they followed her. They found a man being suffocated in a garage. They pulled him out and sent one of their number for a doctor, and in the meantime they saved the man's life by the use of artificial respiration. The doctor was well pleased when he found what the girls had done. I believe those girls recently received public recognition of their service. I thought it well to delay the house to record such an incident, for it shows the very valuable work the girl guides and boy scouts are doing for Canada.

Mr. COOTE: Why do the girl guides get only $6,000 as against $15,000 voted to the boy scouts?

Mr. BENNETT: The boy scouts are much more numerous.

Mr. COOTE: It hardly seems fair to the girls.

Mr. ROBB: I think the girls are very well satisfied. The grant was first made in 1919-20 at $3,000. It was increased in 1928-29 to $6,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Are they satisfied?

Miss MACPHAIL: Is the Minister of Finance sure that the girls are satisfied with less than the boys are receiving, or is he guessing at it?

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps it is a guess.

Miss MACPHAIL: I think so. May I say a word about the girl guides? There are some features of the girl guides' training that to me smack a little too much of uniform and precision, but on the other hand I think they do very good work. Their work is largely coloured by the local leader. Last year some girl guides in the city of Toronto put on an international pageant, and for the first time the girls became interested in international life, which is now part of the life of the individual whether we wish it or not. These girl guides study nature at first hand, and they are taught life-saving methods. It is a splendid training, and I think the girls need it just as much as the boys. I should like the minister next year to increase this amount, because the girls are not satisfied with less than the boys are getting.

Item agreed to.

To provide for salaries and expenses of the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation. Payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder, $120,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire once more to enter a protest against this expenditure. The minister is doing nothing more after parliament meets and the budget speech is delivered than to submit to this tribunal matters that should be brought to the attention of parliament if they are of any value at all. It is a glorified commission to enable the minister to escape responsibility. I should like to know what factories the chairman visited during his term of office, referred to in the last report as being for the purpose of establishing "intimate relations." While the minister is at it, I may tell him that in Oshawa not long ago the chairman of that commission stated that he was now in communication with Australia and other countries in connection with negotiations for closer trade relations. I desire the minister to indicate whether or not he has delegated to that gentleman the right on behalf of the government of Canada to discuss trade relations with Australia and other countries.

Mr. ROBB: Regarding the last observation of my hon. friend, this is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. BENNETT: Have you not seen his speech in that regard?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has kept me so busy here that I have not had time to read that speech. Does my hon. friend desire that I place on Hansard the information he asks for, or shall I read this statement?

Mr. BENNETT: I am quite content that the minister should put it on Hansard if the house agrees.

Mr. ROBB: I will hand it to Hansard.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Visits by Tariff Board to Industries during Fiscal Years 1927-28, 1928-29

Apart from numerous visits to agricultural areas throughout Canada, and interviews with representative jobbers and distributors from coast to coast—in connection with various references affecting agricultural products—the tariff advisory board has visited, during the two years mentioned, many industrial plants and organizations, most of them by request of the management. Such firms, plants or organizations visited and inspected by the board during the incumbency of the present chairman include the following:

*Aluminum Co. of Canada, Toronto, re aluminum-ware.
Automobile Dealers Assoc., Vancouver, re sale of used car.
*Barrie Tanning Co. Ltd., Barrie, re leather.
*Barrymore Cloth Co. Ltd., Toronto, re textiles.
*Bates & Innes Ltd., Carleton Place, re textiles.
*Beach Foundry Co. Ltd., Ottawa, re iron and steel.
Bienfait Briquetting Plant, Bienfait, re coal.
Big Lump Coal Co., Estevan, re coal.
*Brantford Cordage Co., Brantford, re twine and cordage.
Br. Columbia Cement Co., Bamberton Inlet, re cement.
Br. Columbia Refractories, Vancouver, re fire clay.
Br. Columbia Sugar Refining Co., Vancouver, re sugar.
Cadomin Collieries (met management in Edmonton), re coal.
Campbell Woollen Mills, Almonte, re textiles.
Canadian Collieries Ltd., Nanaimo, re coal.
*Canadian Cottons Ltd., Montreal, re textiles.
*Canadian Cottons Ltd., Hamilton, re textiles.
Canadian Cottons Ltd., Cornwall, re textiles.
*Canadian Dyers Ltd., Cobourg, re textiles.
*Canadian Graton & Knight Ltd., Montreal, re textiles.
*Canadian Woollens Ltd., Peterborough, re textiles.

Canmore Collieries Ltd (met management in Calgary), re coal.
*Carson, Hugh Co., Ottawa, re leather.
Coast Cement Co., Vancouver, re cement.
*Consumers Cordage Co., Montreal, re twine and cordage.
*Cosmos Canadian Ltd., Hamilton, re textiles.
Courtauld's Ltd., Cornwall, re textiles.
*Crean, Robert Co., Toronto, re hats and caps.
Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co. (met president in Vancouver), re coal.
*Demetre Sault & Ciriez, St. John's, P.Q., re textiles.
*Dominion Combing Mills, Trenton, re textiles.
*Dominion Foundries & Steel, Hamilton, re iron and steel.
*Dominion Linens Ltd., Guelph, re textiles.
Dominion Sugar Co. Ltd., Chatham, re sugar.
Dominion Sugar Co. Ltd., Wallaceburg, re sugar.
*Dominion Textiles Ltd., Verdun, re textiles.
*Dominion Textiles Ltd., Hochelaga, re textiles.
*Dominion Textiles Ltd., St. Anne's, re textiles.
*Dupont Textiles Ltd., Toronto, re textiles.
*Fernandez V., Toronto, re cigars and cigarettes.
*Forbes, R. & Co., Hespeler, re textiles.
Fuel Commissioner of Alberta, Edmonton, re coal.
*General Motors Ltd., Oshawa, re iron and steel.
*Hamilton Cottons Ltd., Hamilton, re textiles.
*Hamilton, W. B., Toronto, re boots and shoes.
*Hatch Mfgr. Co. Ltd., Whitby, re harness hardware.
*Hawthorne Woollen Mills, Carleton Place, re textiles.
*Hinde & Dauch Paper Co. of Canada, Trenton, re paper boxes.
*Horn Bros. Woollen Mills, Lindsay, re textiles.
*Imperial Tobacca Co., Montreal, re cigars and cigarettes.
*King Bros. Ltd., Whitby, re leather.
*Lang Tanning Co. Ltd., Kitchener, re leather.
*Leishman, W. H. & Co., Toronto, re textiles.
Lowery, Robt., Toronto, re harness hardware.
Luscar Collieries (met management in Edmonton), re coal.
MacDonald, J. A. & C. H. (met management in Vancouver), re building stone.
Marlboro Cement Co., Edmonton, re cement.
McClary Mfgr. Co., London, re enamelware.
Moffats Ltd., Weston, re parts of stoves.
Mountain Park Collieries (met management in Edmonton), re coal.
*Nashua Paper Co. Ltd., Peterborough, re wax paper.
*Ontario Steel Products, Oshawa, re iron and steel.
*Oriental Textiles Ltd., Oshawa, re textiles.
*Pattinson, Geo. & Co., Preston, re textiles.
*Phillips, W. E. & Co., Oshawa, re glass.
*Regent Knitting Mills, St. Jerome, re textiles.
*Richardson, C. & Co., St. Mary's re dairy supplies.
*Rolph-Clark-Stone Ltd., Toronto, re lithographed and printed matter.
*Rosamond Woollen Mills, Almonte, re textiles.

*Schnaufer, F. A. & Co., Toronto, re dressed furs.
*Sheet Metal Products Ltd., Toronto, re enamelware.
*Smith, Howard Paper Mills Ltd., Montreal, re pulp and paper.
*Sparks-Harrison Ltd., Hull, re textiles.
Souris Fuel Distributors, Winnipeg, re coal.
*Thorbourn Woollen Mills, Almonte, re textiles.
*Underhills, Ltd., Barrie, re boots and shoes.
*Western Clock Co., Peterborough.
*Wabasso Cotton Co. Ltd., Three Rivers, re textiles.
*Wilson, Andrew & Co., Toronto, re cigars and cigarettes.
Western Canadian Collieries (Brazeau Collieries) (met management in Lethbridge), re coal.
Western Fuel Co., Nanaimo, re coal.
*Wayagmack Paper Co., Three Rivers, re paper.
*York Knitting Mills, Toronto, re textiles.
During the past two years various officers in the employ of the board have visited the following plants:
Steel Co. of Canada, Hamilton.
Algoma Steel Corporation, Sault Ste. Marie.
British Empire Steel Corporation, Sydney.
Dominion Alloy Steel Corporation, Sarnia.
And industries located at the following points in the United States:
Pittsburg, Middletown, Cleveland, Ashland, Malone, Syracuse, and Buffalo.
*Visited by chairman—56.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I gather the minister is not familiar with the activities of the chairman of the board in regard to trade negotiations with other countries as mentioned by him in his speech?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry "My dear Moore" has not consulted his minister.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much in addition to the vote of $120,000 is provided for this tariff board? I notice in the public accounts there is an item of some $70,000 for experts. Will the minister tell us something about the item?

Mr. ROBB: The particulars I have here are as follows:

Expenditures for members of the board, $16,482.80.
Permanent staff, $20,954.83.
Temporary staff, $6,734.49.
Travelling expenses, $6,740.66.
Investigators, $5,899.98.
Per diem allowance, $3,520.

This is a per diem allowance I imagine for the investigators. The printing of the records runs up to almost $12,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is one item here that I am anxious to get particulars of. It is in the public accounts for 1928. "Expenses of advisers re tariff inquiry, $71,999." What is that?

Mr. ROBB: That would be the total of the account that I have just read. What is the amount?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The amount is $71,999. It is marked "Expenses of advisers re tariff inquiry."

Mr. BENNETT: Experts?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It does not say experts.

Mr. ROBB: That is for the expenses of the advisory board.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And it has risen from $71,000 in 1928 to $120,000 now.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. KELLNER: Can the minister give us a list of the changes made in the tariff on the advice of the board?

Mr. ROBB: That is rather a large order; perhaps my hon. friend will move for a return.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps the minister will give us a list of the changes he has made without their advice.

Mr. ROBB: That is another matter.

Mr. CANTLEY: I put a question on the order paper some weeks ago in regard to the advice tendered by these so-called tariff experts of the board. The minister said the question was an improper one but he promised to give me the information privately. When may I get it?

Mr. ROBB: I can give it to my hon. friend at one o'clock; part of it is in my office now.

Item agreed to.

Unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be under order-in-council, on recommendation of the treasury board, and a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within fifteen days of next session, $80,000.

Mr. FRASER: How much of last year's vote was spent?

Mr. ROBB: This item is the usual provision for expenditures of an unforeseen character, payments made under authority of the governor general in council. Not very much was spent last year—$7,033.76. The previous year, 1927-28, the expenditure was $131,032.65. Sometimes it is more and sometimes less; there might be accidents.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to provide for grants to be made to the provinces of—
Nova Scotia, $875,000.
New Brunswick, $600,000.
Prince Edward Island, $125,000.
pending consideration of provincial subsidies.

Mr. QUINN: Is consideration being given to the final adjustment of subsidies to the maritime provinces?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. QUINN: When may we expect the final settlement?

Mr. ROBB: I cannot make any promise in that regard, but the matter is under consideration.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Montreal Association for the Blind, $5,000.

Mr. COOTE: Are there not other institues in Canada for taking care of the blind, and are they receiving government assistance?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Are they all treated alike so far as the government is concerned?

Mr. ROBB: Yes; they are fairly well satisfied now. There are two main organizations and at one time it was alleged that one of them was not receiving all that it should, but the matter has been adjusted and I have heard no further complaint.

Mr. CANTLEY: We have in Halifax an institution that cares for the blind in the three maritime provinces. What provision is made for it?

Mr. ROBB: I met the head of that institution when I was recently in Halifax and the only request he had to make was for a certain concession to sell newspapers in the post offices throughout the country; otherwise they are satisfied with the grant.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of work in the interest of fire prevention to be carried on by the Department of Insurance, $10,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is this for?

Mr. ROBB: This is for fire prevention services. The vote includes the salary of the fire prevention commissioner, Mr. J. Grove Smith, $4,920, and for clerical assistance. The expenses for salaries are: 1925-26, $6,120; 1928-29, $6,150. Travelling expenses in 1925-26 amounted to $1,155 and in 1928-29, $1,386. The total expenditure in 1925-26 was $9,683 and the total in 1928-29, $8,773.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What does this officer do?

Mr. ROBB: I am bound to admit I have never been quite satisfied that he was earning his salary. He has been in the service for some years, having been finally given this position. We found him in the service when we came into office. He travels about, and my complaint is that he goes around after the fire is over and tells the people what they should do to prevent the next fire.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does he report?

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: Yes, to the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. SPENCER: Does he work in conjunction with the fire insurance companies?

Mr. ROBB: No, he is in the Department of Insurance. He looks after inflammable materials, testing them out, and organizes fire prevention gatherings which meet every year.

Item agreed to.

Chief electoral officer—salaries and contingencies of office, $16,240.

Mr. SPENCER: This item calls for salaries and contingencies in connection with the chief electoral officer and on page 67, under vote 307, there is an item of $6,000 for "salary, chief electoral officer." What connection is there between these two items?

Mr. RINFRET: The salary of the chief electoral officer is statutory and does not come under this item. This vote is made up as follows: Assistant chief electoral officer, $3,120; chief electoral officer's secretary, $1,620; clerk-stenographer grade 3, $1,500; contingencies, amount to be expended depending on number of elections, $10,000. The position of assistant chief electoral officer is now vacant, but under the new act, which will greatly enlarge the scope of the work, it will be necesary to have the office filled.

Item agreed to.

Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1929, including Secretariat, International Labour Organization and Permanent Court of International Justice, $171,781.53.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item was previously before the committee but was held over at the request of an hon. member for information. If the house wishes I can give it; otherwise we can pass the item.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps the Prime Minister would put it on Hansard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. This is the statement:

The covenant of the League of Nations originally provided that the expenses of the league should be apportioned among the members on the same basis as that adopted for the expenses of the Universal Postal Union. This was found to be inequitable and an amendment to the covenant was adopted in 1924 providing that the expenses should be borne in the proportion decided by the assembly. The basis to be adopted has been considered by committees of various assemblies. The question of the weight to be given to such factors as national revenue, population, trade returns depreciation of currency, was repeatedly considered. A scale of allocation was adopted by the assembly in 1926, and the ninth assembly voted to continue on that basis until 1932, when it will be reconsidered.

Present Scale of Allocation of the Expenses of the League

Country	Units	Country	Units
Abyssinia	2	Australia	27
Albania	1	Italy	60
Argentine	29	Japan	60
Austria	8	Latvia	3
Belgium	18	Liberia	1
Bolivia	4	Lithuania	4
Bulgaria	5	Luxemburg	1
Canada	35	Netherlands	23
Chile	14	New Zealand	10
China	46	Nicaragua	1
Colombia	6	Norway	9
(Costa Rica)	(1)	Panama	1
Cuba	9	Paraguay	1
Czechoslovakia	29	Persia	5
Denmark	12	Peru	9
Dominican Republic	1	Poland	32
Estonia	3	Portugal	6
Finland	10	Rumania	22
France	79	Salvador	1
Germany	79	Serb-Croat-Slovene State	20
Great Britain	105	Siam	9
Greece	7	Spain	40
Guatemala	1	South Africa (Union of)	15
Haiti	1	Sweden	18
Honduras	1	Switzerland	17
Hungary	8	Uruguay	7
India	56	Venezuela	5
Irish Free State	10
			986

Budgets of League, 1919 to 1929

Year	Total budget	Canada's contributions	Per cent
1921	$4,101,250 00	$186,237 31	4·5409
1922	4,028,671 00	195,140 47	4·8437
1923	4,954,987 00	183,668 03	3·7067
1924	4,483,007 69	168,353 29 (less refund—$11,849 37)	3·7553
1925	4,373,020 63	163,356 38	3·7424
1926	4,424,542 39	165,271 06	3·7353
1927	4,729,738 17 less 270,135 60	150,777 13	3·3809
	4,459,602 57
1928	4,888,244 35 less 270,134 66	155,241 26	3·3615
	4,618,109 69
1929	5,214,815 96 less 345,501 21	171,481 53	3·5216
	4,869,314 75

It will be noted that the total budget of the league has increased only from $4,101,250 in 1921 to $4,869,314 in 1929.

The budget for 1929 is divided as follows:

	Gold francs
I. Secretariat and Special Organizations	14,713,085
II. International Labour Organization	8,612,640
III. Permanent Court of International Justice	2,255,555
IV. Buildings at Geneva	1,445,000
Total	27,026,280

The increase in the total budget over 1928 is due mainly to opium investigation, the proposed conference on the codification of international law, and the special work of the transit organization, as well as to additional activities of the International Labour Office.

It will also be noted that the total amount paid by Canada is less than in 1921, and that her share of the total is now 3·5, as against 4·5 in 1921. The slight increase in the percentage in 1929 over 1928 (3·36) is due largely to reduction in the share borne by India, which was felt to be too large.

Item agreed to.

Government Contracts Supervision Committee, salaries, including L. R. LaFlèche, Secretary, at $6,000, and that of L. H. Beer, Salvage Officer, $5,000 telephones, telegrams, travelling expenses, stationery, etc., $21,200.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this committee functioning and doing any real work at all?

Mr. ROBB: The purchases for 1928-29 amounted to $414,089.17, and the salvage to $106,468.83. In addition to that, they attend to a good deal of the distribution within the service; one department might want some new typewriters, but instead of going out and buying them the purchasing commission may find them available in another department.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand the minister to say that the purchases made on behalf of the government amounted to $414,000. Can the minister give us the total purchases made by the different departments in Ottawa in addition to those made by this committee?

Mr. ROBB: No, I have not that information.

Mr. GARDINER: My information is that this committee has been practically set aside and that the various departments do their own purchasing without reference to this committee.

Mr. ROBB: There is no doubt but that the various departments have their own purchasing commissions, and always have had them. This commission was organized during the war, to attend to war purchases, but the departments have excellent purchasing commissions of their own, and perhaps we might be able to curtail some of this expenditure, although this commission has existed for many years and I think the purchasing is carried on quite economically under the tender system.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister's statement is not very satisfactory. He states that each of the departments has its own purchasing commission, and it seems to me that many of the departments purchase goods similar to those purchased by various other departments, and I think that could be done much more efficiently by a central organization such as this. I merely ask the minister to take that matter into consideration and see if it would not be possible to have our purchasing done in some better way.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me a little hard to understand why we should pay $21,200 to keep this purchasing commission alive when each department has a purchasing commission of its own. I do not think the minister has given a satisfactory reason why this commission should be continued, and I wish he would enlighten the committee a little more.

Mr. ROBB: If the hon. gentleman will consider the various departments of this government which do business all over Canada, he will see that even if this purchasing were all under one department it could not be done for $21,000 or anything like that amount because we would require an additional staff to look after the work. My hon. friend will understand that if we do all this work under one board we must increase that board in order to take care of the increased work, but this commission has a supervisory control of the department and they are doing an excellent work in saving money to the country by way of salvage.

Mr. COOTE: Do they supervise the work of the purchasing commissions of the various departments?

Mr. ROBB: No, not necessarily.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to know just what contracts the committee supervise, if each department has a contract supervising committee of its own.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I always understood their chief work was salvage.

Mr. COOTE: Perhaps the minister can tell me whether they have ever supervised the purchase of any typewriters for the House of Commons?

Mr. ROBB: I think that is done through the printing bureau.

Mr. COOTE: It seems an extraordinary thing for the printing bureau to supervise the purchase of typewriters for the House of Commons; perhaps that is the reason why only two of the typewriters now in use in the stenographic service were new when they came here. I think it is very improper and almost scandalous that the typewriters in use in the stenographic service of the House of Commons should be all second-hand machines; apparently the departments get all the new machines and the old ones are sent here. I think the letters of the members of the House of Commons are just as important as the letters of any of the departments, and I would suggest to the minister that perhaps he might give this government contract supervision committee the job of purchasing some new typewriters for use in the stenographic service here. It is scandalous that the stenographers serving the members of this house should have to use these old typewriters; I think it is time we had new machines.

Miss MACPHAIL: I would like the minister to instruct the commission to buy some silencers for the typewriters. It gives me a headache when I dictate to the typewriter for an hour or so and I do not know how the girls stand it with about ninety machines going in one room, only two or three of which are equipped with silencers. I think the staff should be put in smaller rooms or else silencers should be put on the machines.

Mr. CANTLEY: One-third of the typewriters in the stenographic service are antiques and another third are practically useless.

Mr. ROBB: All I can promise is to direct the attention of the proper officers to the representations which have been made; I will ask the board if they can salvage these typewriters and sell them to someone else, but I would suggest that hon. members do not run them down too much until we dispose of them.

Mr. COOTE: I would not like to see the government of this country take advantage of anyone, and I am sure that would be done if many of those typewriters were sold. A number of those machines were salvaged at the time of the fire; I could hardly credit that statement when it appeared in answer to a question which I placed on the order paper. I think it is time the internal economy committee of this house looked carefully into this matter.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the International Council of Nurses toward defraying expenses of their meeting to be held in Canada during 1929, $5,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Where is this conference to be held, and when?

Mr. ROBB: This is a world wide convention, and I believe it is meeting in Montreal.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the salary of Hon. J. C. Patterson, commissioner to investigate titles of Great Britain to lands in the Arctic seas, $2,400.

Mr. ROBB: The annuitant has died since the estimates were prepared.

Mr. RINFRET: I move that the item be dropped.

Motion agreed to.

Patent Record, $35,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Is there any revenue derived from this publication?

Mr. RINFRET: This is the usual vote asked for the publication of the Patent Record, which is issued under section 60 of the revised statutes. This is published every week and gives the name of the inventors and contains a description of each patent which has been issued during the week. It is sent to the libraries of Canada and distributed to members of parliament or to senators who desire to receive it. There is a subscription price of $10, and we have a certain number of subscribers, but this publication is more in the way of a public service.

Item agreed to.

Battlefields memorials, $170,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: When is it expected that these memorials will be completed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item relates to the memorials at Quebec and elsewhere, and I imagine that the work will continue for years to come.

Item agreed to.

Expenses under the Canada Temperance Act, $10,000.

Mr. RINFRET: This vote is to provide for plebiscites under the Temperance Act. A plebiscite was held in the county of Brome, province of Quebec, and we expect to hold one in the city of Thetford Mines, and in the county of Compton, Que. We allow about $5,000 for each plebiscite.

Item agreed to.

Expenses under the Naturalization Act, $8,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the revenue derived under this act?

Mr. RINFRET: I would suggest that this item stand, as it comes under the estimates for the Secretary of State. As there are supplementary estimates covering the same item the matter could be discussed then.

Item stands.

To provide for payment of salaries and expenses in connection with the operation of the Canadian Farm Loan Act; any payment under this item to be by way of advance repayable to the consolidated revenue fund from the revenues of the Canadian Farm Loan Board as and when they accrue, $50,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What amount was expended under this item last year?

Mr. ROBB: There was $5,010.05 expended to March 31, 1929. I am not sure that this vote is required because interest is received from the capital advanced.

Mr. FRASER: When will loans be available under this act?

Mr. ROBB: They are available now as soon as the requirements of the act are complied with.

Mr. FRASER: Are they available in the province of British Columbia?

Mr. ROBB: I think that province has advanced farther than any other province.

Mr. FANSHER (East Lambton): In what provinces does this board operate at the present time?

Mr. ROBB: The provinces of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island have not passed the legislation required by the act. The situation with respect to the other six provinces is as follows:

Alberta, provincial board appointed April 15, 1929.
British Columbia, provincial board appointed April 4, 1929.
Manitoba, arrangements not completed.
New Brunswick, provincial board appointed April 15, 1929, and will be ready to function about May 1, 1929.
Nova Scotia, provincial board appointed.

As soon as this comes before the board it will be passed.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the salary of the chief commissioner, and the per diem allowance for the other commissioners?

Mr. ROBB: The chief commissioner receives $8,000 per annum. Hon. E. C. Drury was appointed in January, 1929, and receives $25 per diem, with a minimum of $1,000 per year. Mr. Beaudry Leman was appointed on the same date at $25 per diem with a minimum of $1,000 per year. A living allowance of $15 per diem was authorized by order in council of January, 1929, for the commissioner and the other members.

Item agreed to.

National battlefields commission—to provide for acquisition of land for the main entrance to the Quebec battlefields park, $22,500.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Was not the right hon. the Prime Minister mistaken in saying that item No. 294 had to do with the Quebec memorials?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sorry, but I was wrong.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: How long is it expected it will take to complete the memorial at Vimy?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Possibly His Honour the Speaker could reply to that question.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The right hon. gentleman will remember that I visited the battlefields and the memorial of Vimy in October last year. The work has progressed satisfactorily, but the committee has had considerable trouble in obtaining the proper quality of granite. Various quarries in France, Belgium, England and Scotland were inspected, when an old quarry, dating from the days of the Roman empire, was discovered in Jugoslavia, and granite of a very fine grain is being taken from there to Vimy. The foundation for the monument has been completed, and the two majestic pylons are now under construction. The surroundings of the monument are completed and also the inscription of the names of the soldiers. From what I gathered at the last sitting of the commission, and from what I heard at Vimy when I was there last fall, I believe it will take about a year and a half from the present date to complete the monument. I must say that the commission was very fortunate in having Brigadier-General Hughes as an engineer. He discovered right in front of the memorial the trenches which were used alternately by the Germans and the Allies. He has completely reconstituted these trenches, so much so that every Sunday from all parts of France, Belgium, England and even Germany, many congregate there to see our monument and also to see those historic trenches, where on the walls can be read the names of the occupants whether they were Germans or British. I can assure the committee that it is a most impressive sight. I was told that no less than 4,000 to 5,000 visitors went there every Sunday during the summer and fall. As regards the beauty of the monument, it is admitted to-day by the Société des Architectes in France, that it will be the most imposing memorial on the battlefields of Europe.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Yukon Territory.
Salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the territory, including surveys, $64,700.
Grant to Local Council, $45,000.
Grant for maintenance and construction of roads, $73,000.
Grant to provide for the payment of bounty on wolves and coyotes under the provisions of an ordinance to be enacted by the commissioner-in-council, the sum to be paid not to exceed $30 each for wolves and $15 each for coyotes, the pelts of the animals on which bounty is paid to be surrendered to the government, the proceeds of the sale of such pelts and any unexpended balance to be placed to the credit of the consolidated fund of Canada, $35,000.—Total, $217,700.

Mr. SPENCER: What is this?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The only change in this is the $35,000 provided for the purchase of pelts which we are buying direct. We need this money to pay for them, and we shall be recouped when we sell the skins. We have been doing this in connection with the wolf bounty and we are applying it in the Yukon this year.

Item agreed to.

Indians—British Columbia, $527,100.

Mr. SPENCER: Are the Indians increasing or decreasing in population throughout Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are just about holding their own. According to the latest report, we have about 105,000 all told, in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Indians—general, $281,500.

Mr. GARDINER: What does the general vote include?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is pretty well outlined in the estimates. It includes:

Payments to Indians surrendering their lands under provisions of section 89 of the Indian Act which will afterwards be repaid from the avails of the land, $50,000.

Relief to destitute Indians in remote districts, $100,000.

To prevent the spread of tuberculosis, $97,000.

Printing and stationery, $8,000.

Grant to assist Indian trust fund account 310, suppression of liquor, $3,000.

Surveys, Ontario, Quebec, and Maritime provinces, $6,000.

To provide for expenses in connection with epidemics of small-pox and other diseases, $10,000.

To provide an amount to pay agents' fees in connection with registration of births, deaths and, marriages, $500.

General legal expenses, $7,000—Total, $281,500.

We are asking for an increase in the item concerning the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis, because tuberculosis is undoubtedly ravishing the Indians to a very great degree, and we are having complaints from many quarters.

Mr. COOTE: Would the administration of oil and gas rights or other minerals on Indian reserves come under this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. We have by order in council imposed on Indian lands regulations practically uniform with those prevailing on crown lands. That went into effect about a year ago. Formerly the regulations were not uniform.

Mr. COOTE: Are any leases granted on Indian reserves without reserving a royalty to the crown?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; all leases issued provide for payment of royalty.

Mr. COOTE: But on Dominion government lands there is in most cases no royalty?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): On Dominion lands we are proposing to impose a royalty after five years and on Indian lands payment of royalty begins with production.

Mr. COOTE: Are there any engineers in the Indian department to see that the regulations are enforced?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The same group of officials look after all the oil regulations. We make them responsible for supervision of the drilling on the reservations, the same as on crown lands.

Mr. LUCAS: Will a royalty be imposed after five years?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, after a lease has been in existence and the well is producing, we begin to impose a royalty.

Mr. COOTE: In the past was a royalty not imposed right from the commencement of production of oil on Indian reserves? Am I mistaken in that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend is mistaken, because we were paying a subsidy in Ontario for oil production; we were not getting any royalty. That subsidy has been very largely discontinued.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the amount of the royalties proposed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Speaking from memory, on Dominion lands the royalty begins at 2½ per cent and goes up to 5 per cent, but I will give that information when we are considering the Interior estimates.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister also look up particulars of the royalties which must be paid on oil found on Indian lands?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Indian education, including the construction of school buildings, $2,240,500.

Mr. FRASER: What new schools are proposed to be built in British Columbia under this vote, what will be the total cost of them, and where will they be located?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry I have not my notes before me, but I will put that information on Hansard for my hon. friend.

Mr. MacLAREN: Would the minister give that information for all the provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I have some questions to ask in regard to this item and I would ask that it stand.

Item stands.

Scientific Institutions

Expenses conected with the Dominion observatory at Ottawa, $71,550.
Expenses connected with the Dominion astrophysical observatory at Victoria, B.C., $23,300.

Mr. GEARY: Is anything to be done in regard to transferring other observatories in the Dominion to Ottawa?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. There are just two, one at Victoria and one at Ottawa.

Mr. GEARY: Is there not a Dominion observatory in Toronto?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is in the meteorological service, and comes under the Marine department.

Item agreed to.

Topographical Surveys

Topographical and aerial surveys and maps for the development of hydro-electric, forested and mineralized areas and for aerial fire patrol; expenses of geographic board of Canada; classification of lands for settlement and forest reserves; traverse of northern rivers and lakes for administration of Northwest Territories; surveys for administration of Dominion parks and game reserves, miscellaneous legal surveys of Dominion lands; testing of standard measures and instrument repairs; plotting and printing of plans, etc., $430,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What aerial surveys are being made in Alberta this year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We intend to complete surveying the area around Athabasca lake, and if the machines can be provided to do some surveying along the Peace river for the purpose of mapping that area with a view to opening it up for settlement.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. COOTE: How many survey parties will be engaged in this service in western Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry I have not that information before me but I will get it for my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Administration of Justice:
Yukon Territory—miscellaneous expenditure, including living allowance of judge, salaries, and allowances of court officers, etc., $12,000.

Mr. CAHAN: Has the government come to any decision with regard to the increase of judges' salaries? It was discussed last session.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am afraid it will have to be kept under consideration for some little while yet.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is the government still considering the matter or has it been dropped?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The government is considering it, but, as my hon. friend understands, it would be impossible to bring it before the house this session.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do. But the matter was referred by the minister himself to a special committee last session, that committee reported in favour of an increase. We are now very near the end of another session. What is the prospect for next session, for instance? Judges' salaries in this country are entirely inadequate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are the judges to continue any longer to suffer on acount of the inactivity of the government?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is not quite fair about it. When I am convinced that parliament will support such an increase my hon. friend knows that I will not delay bringing the matter before the house; but I was given so strongly to understand that a measure for this purpose could not pass through parliament that I thought it better to wait until a better opportunity occurred. I still believe that judicial salaries are too low, and that this condition of affairs is not good for the administration of justice. It is all very well to say, as many hon. gentlemen do, that we are always able to find men to accept judgeships, but the present salaries are not sufficient to attract to the high courts those who should be appointed. But I cannot do anything else now.

Mr. GUTHRIE: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that a Minister of Justice who entertains those views about judicial salaries is lacking in courage in not bringing forward a measure to remedy what he knows is an evil. He says he is afraid it would not pass through parliament. That was his fear last session as it is this session. This government is in office for the purpose of governing. Here is a glaring injustice, and yet the government is afraid to take the necessary steps to remedy it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let me tell my hon. friend that I am a democratic Minister of Justice and a democratic minister of the crown. I will never try to force a measure on parliament when I know parliament is opposed to it. Unfortunately that was the position last year. I hope that by a process of education the adverse majority will come to think the other way. I think they are wrong at the present, but as far as I am concerned, I repeat, I will not try to force through a measure which is not acceptable to the majority of parliament.

Mr. CAHAN: I trust the Minister of Justice will undertake the education of those who sit behind him, because I do not think he will find very much opposition from this side of the house—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: —especially if the sentiment is at all like it was when the report of the committee came in. I do think the Minister of Justice is somewhat lacking in courage when he trusts to mere rumours rather than test the intelligent decision of parliament itself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They are not only rumours.

Mr. IRVINE: We are all in a twitter over here, Mr. Chairman, because we heard the minister talking of increases, and we do not know of whom he is speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the Minister of Justice if it is the intention of the department to superannuate judges of the superior courts when they have attained the age of seventy-five years? When a judge has attained that age I think he is entitled to a rest, and it is not fair to impose on him the obligation of sitting in court. If this could not be done without amending the British North America Act, is it the intention of the government to ask the opinion of the provinces in this respect?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As my hon. friend knows, a resolution for that purpose was moved last session or the session before by my hon. friend from Muskoka. At the time I said that unfortunately this was governed by the British North America Act. We could deal with the federal courts such as the Supreme Court of Canada and the Exchequer Court, but the judges of the high courts in the provinces are appointed for life, and we would have to change the constitution. Several of the provincial representatives were not prepared to agree to our asking for an amendment of the British North America Act in that respect, and there the matter stands at present.

Mr. POULIOT: I should not like to be misunderstood in this connection, Mr. Chairman. I have a great respect for the bench, and I put my question because in court I heard a judge of over seventy-five years of age say he noticed that his memory was lacking.

Mr. CAHAN: There are some gentlemen very much younger than seventy-five years who apparently suffer from arrested intellectual development.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Whom has he reference to?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps the Minister of Justice would not find so much difficulty in getting parliament to consent to an increase of judicial salaries if there was some different method of selection. At the present time the positions are too often given as a reward for political services.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That tends to lower the standard of the judiciary, or at any rate its prestige. It has been frequently recommended that the bar associations of the various provinces should make the nominations for judicial positions and that the government should accept them. I am not sure whether that would be much of an improvement or not on the present practice, but I do say that just so long as judicial positions are the reward for political services—

Mr. LAPOINTE: They are not.

Mr. CAMPBELL: —it will be difficult to secure increases in judicial salaries because it is felt that we do not get the best men.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is wrong when he assumes that. I have already stated in this house, and I will state it again, that the best way to hurt the chances of appointment of any gentleman to the bench is to attempt to bring political pressure to bear in his favour.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Has the minister appointed any from this side in the province of Ontario?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have been charged with having done so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, the charge is unfounded so far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have been told that I have appointed gentlemen a good deal more friendly to my hon. friend than to myself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What provision is there for securing anything like uniformity in the sentences imposed for various crimes throughout the country? Is that matter left entirely to the discretion of the judges or is there any possibility of having some uniformity established?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. The only possible course would be to amend the various sections of the criminal code, fixing certain definite sentences for certain offences, which sentences would be invariable. But that would not be desirable. Some discretion must be left to the judges inasmuch as the circumstances vary, and we certainly cannot interfere with the courts in that regard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is no supervision of any kind exercised by the department over the various judges?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not so far as their judicial functions are concerned.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps I might give an instance of what I have in mind, although I will not mention the names of any judges; it is the principle rather than the individual that concerns me. A certain justice, dismissing from the jury a man who had intimated that for conscientious reasons he could not serve in a trial involving capital punishment, remarked that a man who adopted that attitude was not a good Canadian citizen. He is reported thus:

> "You have no right to live under the British flag", said His Lordship. "As long as the law provides for capital punishment it must be obeyed. There is a constitutional method of changing the law but it is not for jurymen to alter it."

It does seem to me hardly the thing for a judge to take such a position when a man on conscientious grounds declares his unwillingness to serve on the jury in a particular case; this man had every right to decline to act on that jury. Is there no way by which judges may be checked in rather reckless statements of this sort?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend's principle is wrong; I would not agree with him. I consider the independence of the judiciary the best safeguard of society. If we could exercise some influence on judges, I believe that everyone would suffer in Canada. The law has seen to it that our judges shall be absolutely independent of any influence whatsoever, and were a judge to take that stand again I should support him.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I too wish the judges to be independent, but not arbitrary. Let me cite another instance which has been brought to my notice. A judge addressing a prisoner said:

> The jury have found you not guilty on evidence upon which a verdict of guilty might equally have been returned. For myself, I think that you fired the shot that killed. . . . and I think some steps will have to be taken. I will make my report accordingly, for I think you are not a safe man to be at large.

I do not know all the circumstances, but it seems to me very strange for the judge in this case to have swept aside the verdict of the jury. I am not a lawyer, but I regard it as an arbitrary act on the part of the judge when he undertakes to give his own opinion in this way, virtually disregarding the verdict of the jury. I should like to know whether there is any way of criticizing judges or of exercising some supervisory power, without of course, necessarily involving impeachment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In the interests of all, I do not think that such control should be exercised. Not only has parliament decided that this shall not be done, but I am not quite sure even that my hon. friend is in order in thus criticizing the judge in that particular case. The rules of the house forbid such criticism. So far as I am concerned, I will certainly not express my personal views as to whether the judge was right or wrong in that respect.

Mr. EVANS: To emphasize the importance of the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Woodsworth), I cannot do better than give an instance that has come to my attention. In one case a car was stolen and afterwards left outside the city in a damaged condition for the owner to get it. The culprit, a lad of eighteen, was let out on suspended sentence, and during that suspension he committed four other crimes. Altogether he was up for nine crimes, and during the course of his operations he secured booty to the extent of some $500, going so far as even to rob women; he did his looting at ladies' aid meetings and so forth. Nine offences were proved against him and still he was left at large on suspended sentence. He was also allowed to go into a neighbouring town to work, and apparently nothing could keep him in the right path. It seems to me that there is an utter discrimination in the dispensing of justice in the west to-day. I could mention cases to show that sentences have been unduly severe while in this particular instance I have cited it has been the very opposite.

Mr. LUCAS: When was the criminal code amended granting to agricultural fairs and certain religious bodies the privilege of running wheels of fortune and lotteries?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was about three years ago. I remember that my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell)—and I must say I was surprised at this—was very strongly in favour of it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But you did not oppose it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was not contrary to my own principles but I thought it was contrary to those of my colleague. However, it passed the house without much opposition.

Mr. LUCAS: Has the minister had any recommendations in this regard from other organizations this year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: Has any action been taken with respect to these recommendations?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; next year a bill will be introduced proposing many amendments to the criminal code, but we do not desire to take action in this regard at the present time, particularly in view of the fact that the Revised Statutes of Canada, covering provisions in the criminal code, have been in force now for only a year. Under the circumstances I thought it was better not to introduce any changes in the code during the present session.

Mr. LUCAS: I have received a good many complaints against this privilege granted to agricultural fairs.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Are they opposed to the privilege being granted only to the agricultural fairs or do they want it extended to themselves?

Mr. LUCAS: One or other.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is what I thought.

Mr. LUCAS: One complaint is against the privilege being allowed to the agricultural fairs, and there is the other contention that if it be granted to those fairs then it should be extended to all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What does my hon. friend himself think?

Mr. LUCAS: I do not think it should be allowed at agricultural fairs. I do not believe that anything should be carried on at those fairs which is not permitted to be carried on anywhere else.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The views of the agricultural representatives in that respect certainly will receive consideration.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to ask the minister what is the custom in the case of a vacant judgeship in one of the provinces; is an appointment made as a rule without much delay, or at times is the appointment delayed because of some doubt as to the necessity of having so many judges? I have a case in mind in my own province; I have had many requests from different gentlemen as to that appointment, and I understand that the appointment is not being made at present because there is some doubt as to whether there is enough work to necessitate the full complement of judges. I should like to know if that is the case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No doubt my hon. friend is referring to the vacancy in the Stettler district. The reason why this vacancy has not been filled is because I have received communications from the Attorney General of Alberta saying that it might be better not to fill the vacancy owing to the work not being heavy enough to justify it. I have communicated further with him and he rather suggests that this district should be looked after by one of the other judges and that more good would be done by the appointment of a permanent judge in another district which has no resident judge at present; I think that is the Peace River district. However, the matter stands there, and we will have to reach a decision on this question. I am making investigations of my own and I will try to meet the wishes of the authorities of the province.

Mr. SPENCER: When a judgeship becomes vacant does the minister consider the wishes of the provincial government in filling that vacancy or are the provincial governments consulted at all?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would not say that the appointments are subject to the provincial governments, but when there is a question as to the desirability of appointing a judge in a particular section of a province, the wishes of the provincial government are considered. The constitution has determined that the appointments should be made by the federal government, and we make them.

Mr. SPENCER: But supposing the provincial government should object to a certain judge being appointed?

Mr. LAPOINTE: How could they know who was to be appointed?

Mr. SPENCER: Supposing they did know and they objected to him and thought they had good reasons why he should not be appointed; would the Minister of Justice consider those reasons?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Every representation which might be made by individual members of the provincial government certainly would be considered, as well as representations by members on both sides of the house.

Item agreed to.

Penitentiaries—
Kingston, $464,312.
St. Vincent de Paul, $424,660.
Dorchester, $302,000.
Manitoba, $230,180.
British Columbia, $205,500.
Alberta, $3,120.
Saskatchewan, $266,580.
General, $1,400..—Total, $1,897,762.

Miss MACPHAIL: I understand there have been a number of prisoners taken from Kingston to Stony Mountain in recent years. I placed a question on the order paper but apparently I did not get the answer for the years in which I was interested. I should like to know how many prisoners were taken from Kingston to Stony Mountain in the years 1922, 1926 and 1929, and how long they were kept there.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand that in 1922 there were 75 convicts transferred to Stony Mountain; in 1926 there were 80 and this year there were 48. These transfers are made when the population of some penitentiary has increased to such an extent that they cannot accommodate them.

Miss MACPHAIL: I understand they were sent out there to build an addition to the Stony Mountain penitentiary, and I wondered if there was any real reason why they should not stay at home and build an addition to Portsmouth penitentiary, from which they were transferred.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend's information is not quite correct; they were not transferred to build an addition to Stony Mountain penitentiary but to do the ordinary work which is being done there. There was a good deal of vacant space at that penitentiary while Portsmouth penitentiary was crowded, and I might just add that it would be difficult to build an addition at Kingston on the space available there.

Miss MACPHAIL: The minister has not told me how long the prisoners were kept at Stony Mountain in 1922, 1926 and 1929?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Until the termination of their sentences.

Miss MACPHAIL: I think that is not quite fair to these men, if their homes were in Ontario and they were not particularly bad types of people. They are prevented from seeing their relatives at all, because very few people could journey to Stony Mountain to see them; they are really exiles from their own province, and unless there is some real reason why they were sent there, either for their own protection or for reasons of discipline, I cannot understand why this was done. Why cannot an addition be built to Portsmouth penitentiary? Is there no more land available?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is for the good administration of the penitentiary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would like to inquire of the minister with regard to a case which has been recalled to my memory by the remarks of the hon. member for Southeast Grey. A crime was committed in Ontario and the man was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment. This man was sent to Stony Mountain penitentiary, where I think he has been for three or four years. This man's home was in Guelph, where I live, and he has three or four small children who have never seen their father since he was convicted. I have had a letter from a gentleman who is a member of the parliament of Italy, which I have had translated by the Italian counsul general; this gentleman deals with the case very fully and asks if there is no provision under our law by which these children may be permitted to visit their father occasionally while he is in custody. He also asks why this man was sent to a prison so far away from the place where he lived or the place where the crime was committed. Would it not be possible to have that particular prisoner transferred to Kingston? If that was done, occasionally at least his children might see him, and that is all that is asked in this case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend will be good enough to send me the name of that prisoner certainly I will look into the matter and if it is possible to remedy the situation I will be pleased to do so.

Miss MACPHAIL: While that will look after this one man it will not do anything for the rest of these prisoners. I do not think the minister answered my question and stated why these people were sent to Stony Mountain. We used to think that these prisoners had no rights at all, but I think that is not the general opinion to-day, and I believe there should be something done to guard these men against being exiled from their own province for a term of years. What is the basis of selection of those who are to be sent from Portsmouth to Stony Mountain?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The officers of the penitentiary make the selection. They take into consideration the section of the province from which the man comes, the number of visitors he has been receiving and so forth. For instance, a man from western Ontario would not be very much farther from his home when he was in Stony Mountain than he would be at Kingston.

Miss MACPHAIL: In this regard the minister relies wholly upon the judgment of the officials of the penitentiary?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely my hon. friend would not ask me to go and make the selection myself?

Miss MACPHAIL: No, but if the minister relies upon the judgment of the officials of the penitentiary in this case, why does he not do it in connection with the recommendations which have been made by Brigadier General Hughes? He has made some very specific recommendations but the government will not do anything.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely, my hon. friend does not compare a matter of policy upon which a minister can pass with the matter of selecting convicts who shall be transferred?

Miss MACPHAIL: I would consider this a matter of policy, and I think there should be some very explicit reason why these men are transferred from one province to the other. If Ontario has more criminals than any other province, then we should build a bigger place.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Has my hon. friend received many complaints about convicts being transferred? I understand that Stony Mountain is a very fine penitentiary, and I am not sure that I would not prefer to be there rather than in Kingston.

Mr. MANION: Or here.

Miss MACPHAIL: I happen to have many friends among the convicts, and they have complained very bitterly about being transferred from Kingston to Stony Mountain. They claim that their sentence is made very much harder. Two or three of these men have become very good citizens and I am quite proud of them, but it was not an easy thing for them to be transferred. One young lad complained that he did not see any of his people for over two years; his sentence was made that much harder, and there is no reason why he should have been transferred.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This week we received a demand from the wife of a convict in Toronto that her husband be sent to Stony Mountain.

Miss MACPHAIL: I suppose she has good sense and wants to get him as far away as possible. I would like to mention the case of a prisoner who was sent from Portsmouth to Stony Mountain some time after 1925; I do not know the exact date, but he was sent to Stony Mountain and his first duties were indoor, assisting the schoolmaster and then in the tailor shop. He was then transferred and put at work in the quarry. This man wrote a letter to his mother and father in which he said:

> The warden has no use for me because I complained about my work being dangerous and threatened to notify the superintendent about it.

A short time after the parents received that letter they received news of their son's death. The letter was smuggled out by a prisoner who had served his term, but it is an authentic letter. The fact that he used the words which I have just put on Hansard, followed by his death, seems to me to be a very odd coincidence. The wife and parents of this man asked the Minister of Justice to make an investigation to see whether or not he was killed because of negligence. I have received a letter from his mother and from his wife, and the mother says:

> The condition of his body was shameful. He had not been embalmed.

The wife said the same thing, and in referring to the warden she also said:

I do not believe what he said because he said that the body was embalmed and we know it was not.

I think we should have information as to whether or not this man was put at dangerous work. The fact that he thought the work was dangerous and that he was killed shortly afterwards would need a careful explanation, and I would like to hear what the minister has to say about it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This was a very unfortunate accident, but no one in the penitentiary was responsible for it. The man had been working in the quarry for only three days.

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes, I know that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The accident was not caused through any defect in the machinery, and the coroner did not think it necessary to hold an investigation. This man, as well as the other convicts, had been warned not to push the stones with his hand when they were being raised by the derrick, and I have the statements of convicts, as well as of guards, to that effect. We were notified immediately by the warden of the penitentiary as to this accident and upon the request of the relatives in Toronto we instructed the warden to have the body embalmed and sent to Toronto. That was done, and it is certainly not according to the facts to state that the body was not properly embalmed, because not only have I the statement of the warden that it was, but we have paid the bill of the undertakers and the embalmers. We have a population in the penitentiaries of Canada of 2,809 and it is remarkable how few accidents happen. I think we can safely say that in no industrial plant anywhere do so few accidents occur as in the penitentiary. As I informed the hon. member, the authorities of the penitentiary sympathize with the family of the convict, but what took place is one of those things that cannot be avoided.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not sure that proves anything in the world, because the warden certainly is not going to say that this was carelessness on his part, and I will guarantee that the guards and the prisoners dare not say so. As regards the sworn statement of the prisoner, if the warden is to blame, that statement would not be worth the trouble of writing it or the paper it was written on. These men are absolutely under his command and I am convinced, not from one source, but from many, that they would not dare say it was carelessness on his part. I am personally much more willing to take the word of the mother, the father and the wife —that is three people—of the prisoner that the body was in a most disgraceful condition, than I am to believe those who said that it was embalmed. The government may have paid for the embalming and it may never have been done. From another letter which I have under my hand and which was also smuggled out, there is a very significant statement by the man to the effect that if you compared Stony Mountain with Portsmouth, Portsmouth was heaven and one lived there like a king. That is the opinion of the whole gang of men who go from Portsmouth to Stony Mountain. But going back to this particular case, has the minister anyone else that he can quote as proving that the body was in good condition, other than the warden of Stony Mountain penitentiary whose statement does not prove anything?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The undertaker and embalmer did the work and were paid for it. What else can I do?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know anything about the particular case referred to, and I have no doubt of the sincerity of the hon. member for Southeast Grey; but I know that no other public servant in Manitoba bears a higher reputation than the warden of Stony Mountain penitentiary. I have heard again and again of the great improvements he has made since he assumed control of that penitentiary and I do not think you will hear a breath of suspicion in Manitoba against that warden.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are two or three statements which are contained in the report of the superintendent of penitentiaries to which I should like to call attention. There is, I believe, a resident population of some 2,500 people, and the cost per capita is $1.50 per diem. I would simply point out that this involves a very heavy expenditure to the country at large, and that the actual cost of maintaining a criminal is much heavier than the cost of educating a child. It is much more expensive to keep those people in the penitentiary than to keep them from getting into it. I have been reading the record of one particular individual and the statement is made:

It might well be asked how such men as these came to be admitted to Canada.

I would refer that to the Minister of Immigration. When the superintendent of penitentiaries calls the attention of the country to the fact that we are bringing in very undesirable immigrants, such cases ought to be carefully checked up and made the basis of very stringent regulations. Further on in the report this statement is made:

Another man about to be discharged wrote:—"When I came to prison I did not know anything. I was never given a chance, never was at school, could neither read nor write. I was not fitted for anything. I am going home with a fair education, am an expert blacksmith and also a good shoemaker. I have been taught both these trades in the penitentiary."

This is undoubtedly very satisfactory from the standpoint of the penitentiary, but I ask: Are we going to go along, year after year, spending $1.50 a day in training these people in blacksmithing and other trades when we refuse to help in anything like a scheme of technical education? I do not want to go into the question of technical education today except to point out that these matters are very closely related. If we deliberately refuse to train boys in their youth, we shall have to pay the bill later on in connection with the untrained men who go to the penitentiary. It seems to me again that these departments of our public life should be more closely correlated. Another paragraph in the report signed by General Hughes reads:

There should be some definite and properly organized endeavour, either by the Dominion or provincial governments, or both, to provide for the unfortunate dependents left behind when the wage-earner of a household is sentenced to prison. The leaving of a poor mother, frequently with several small children, without any means of support or chance of obtaining a livelihood, would seem a greater crime than very often is committed by the one who had been their provider. For long years the policy of "the innocent must suffer for the sins of the guilty" has ruled. Surely in the enlightened twentieth century this should not longer be regarded as a sufficient reason for leaving innocent mothers and children to starvation or worse.

Several years ago, after having debated this question during, I think, two distinct sessions, the house passed a resolution to the effect that payment should be made to the prisoners for work done in the penitentiary, and that in the case of married men, this amount should be turned over to their wives and children. The minister has apparently taken no action on that resolution. Again we ask: What about the responsibilities of the government to the house? The question was canvassed backwards and forwards very thoroughly; expert opinion was given as to what had been done and as to the beneficial results in other places. Nevertheless, year after year has passed and we have nothing done. I cannot conceive of a much more severe indictment of our present system than that from the superintendent when he says that the crime committed against the prisoner or his dependents is often much more serious than that which the prisoner himself has committed. We cannot very well pass over these things year after year and have nothing done. This very significant statement is the last one made by the superintendent:

The recommendations made in former years are again suggested.

I would like to ask why we appoint a superintendent, expect him to make reports and then fail to act upon them. The superintendent does not even give the recommendations again this year. He apparently feels it is hopeless to do so. They are not even put down in black and white. It would seem as if he was tired of making reports to the government, because the government passes over them. Most hon. members are not tremendously concerned over the penitentiary population. Most of us are trying to avoid this institution; we do not expect to go there. What do we care for a few criminals? The only opportunity we have in the house of discussing these matters is when we have the estimates before us, sometimes just a few hours before parliament prorogues. I would urge that the action of the bar associations and other bodies such as the Social Service Council, indicate that at least those who pay attention to this matter are heartily in sympathy with reforms along the line suggested by the superintendent of penitentiaries. It is due to the house that the Minister of Justice should tell us very definitely why he has not carried out the recommendations of the superintendent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Good things cannot be done all at once. I have always stated that the first step I had in mind so far as prison reform was concerned was to segregate the young offenders in separate institutions. I was really expecting, although apparently in public life we cannot ever expect anything, to be congratulated this year by my hon. friends.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am going to do it. I have not spoken yet.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am glad to know that, but now I am afraid it may be said that I was fishing. I am receiving communications from organizations interested in penitentiary matters to the effect that the greatest step forward in penal legislation in Canada has been taken this year through our providing in the estimates for the building of two institutions for young offenders. I think that is the one thing which was primarily needed.

It is going to cost a good deal of money, but we are going to have the institutions, and even if I have only that to my credit during my administration of the Department of Justice I shall be proud of it.

As far as the other matter is concerned, we must first of all have productive work that will bring in some return before we can divide the profits. We must first have the profits. The work done in the penitentiaries has been increasing year by year. We have installed new machinery, and to-day instead of the convicts merely breaking stones, most of the prisoners in the penitentiraies are working at some productive work. For a large number of years, of course, organized labour was opposed to prison labour coming into competition with their own, but now they have reached the stage where, although they do not want the products of prison labour to come into competition with the products of industry in the country they are willing that the departments of the government should buy such articles as they require which can be obtained from the penitentiaries. We have already started doing that to a certain extent, but I must remind my hon. friends that I am not in control of all the departments, and there will be some educational process necessary before I can convince all my colleagues that the products of the penitentiaries will meet their requirements as well as the work which is being produced by the ordinary industries of the country.

I wish to say that in no country in the world are the prisoners paid anything before the expenses are met. The state certainly has the right to be reimbursed for the very large expenditure which is made to keep the penitentiaries working to maintain the prisoners in the penitentiaries. The only place I know of where anything is paid to the dependents of the convicts is in Minnesota. In some other places the system has been tried and abandoned periodically according to the changing views of the different governments coming into office. I have myself looked into the records of what is being paid in some of the penitentiaries, and I find that in most of them nothing is being paid. In others an amount is paid varying from 1½ cents—the rate paid in the big penal institutions in New York State—to 25 and even 50 cents a day. But as I stated, the expenses must first be met. When a convict is guilty of some offence against the regulations of the penitentiary a fine is imposed, and it is paid out of the little amount which may be to his credit. However, even if it is impossible to collect something which might go to the dependents, and I find many difficulties in the way, we might at least provide a little amount for the prisoner when he has finished serving his sentence and is thrown out on the world. As it is to-day, he goes out with a suit of clothes and five dollars in his pocket, and a ticket to the place where he came from when admitted to the penitentiary. I think myself that it would be a great thing if they had some little amount to start with, although I must admit that the opinions of responsible people in places where that has been tried are that in many cases within two days after they have left the penitentiary, the amount is spent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What about the wife and children?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was speaking of giving something to the convicts when they are released. To do that it would be necessary to change our system, and that can be done only gradually. It is all right to urge that we must change the whole penitentiary system of Canada immediately. I agree with the principle. There is a word that has been assailed many times in this house, the word "chart"; this is a chart which I have before me in endeavouring to bring about that reform.

I said last year that I intended to visit all the penitenitiaries in the country in the fall, but unfortunately, as my leader was sent to the League of Nations at the request of everybody in Canada, I had to stay in Ottawa at the very time when I wanted to make that visit, but I shall certainly visit the penitentiaries this year. I wish to see them all and learn at first hand what the conditions are and what can be done. Though I am willing to do anything I can in order to facilitate what I may call the reform of the convicts, rather than adhering to the old idea of punishment, and punishment alone, we must not go to the opposite extreme. I would call the attention of my hon. friends, however, to the fact that the officers in the penitentiaries have to deal with all sorts of men. In the penitentiaries are some of the worst characters in the country. For instance, when complaints are made against the strictness of the discipline it must be borne in mind that the officers in those institutions are very often in jeopardy, and for their protection there must be strict discipline, although the convicts are to be treated kindly. I certainly admire the views of my hon.

friend from Southeast Grey, and I am willing to go as far as possible to meet them. I really believe by this new step in segregating young offenders from hardened criminals we have gone a long way in prison reform.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has not said how he is providing for the wives and families during the incarceration of the breadwinners.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not providing for them, I admit. We must not forget that our federal system is largely responsible for some of the difficulties that confront us. We are in charge of the penitentiaries, but the provinces are in charge of the gaols. Men sentenced to more than two years imprisonment come to our penitentiaries. In the United States each state is in control of all prisons. If we could do so we would look after the dependents of the convicts in our penitentiaries, but these are in a minority; there are more men imprisoned in the big gaols than in the penitentiaries. But apart from this, the administration of justice is in the hands of the provincial authorities, and we are taking charge of those who have been committed to the penitentiaries by the provincial courts, but it does not necessarily follow that the federal authorities should be charged with the duty of looking after the families of those convicts.

Mr. CAHAN: There are some who would be very glad to go to the penitentiaries if they were assured that the state would look after their families.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is that danger if we make our penitentiaries first class hotels and undertake to look after the families of the convicts. There are limitations in that regard which we should not overstep. Until the work of the convicts is remunerative to the extent of the expenses which the state must incur on their behalf, I certainly will not recommend paying anything to their dependents.

Mr. MacLAREN: What is the percentage of Canadian-born convicts?

Mr. LAPOINTE: These are the figures: from Canada, 1,589; from England and Wales, 197; from Scotland, 69; from Ireland, 35; from other British countries, 28—making altogether 1,918 British convicts out of a total of 2,500 in our penitentiaries. That was for last year.

Mr. MacLAREN: What percentage is British?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The figures are 1,918 out of 2,500. Since then the population has increased to about 3,000. As far as foreign countries are concerned, there are 220 convicts from the United States, 85 from Russia, 75 from Italy, 67 from Austria-Hungary, 53 from China, 22 from Roumania, and 120 from other foreign countries.

Mr. KELLNER: Under whose charge is prisoner George Edmund Jackson? It will be remembered that there was a controversy between the Alberta government and the Justice department with regard to this man.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have discussed the matter with the hon. member and he knows the position as well as I do.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a matter of public interest.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. KELLNER: At the time I spoke to the minister about it he said he was going to take further steps.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. I wired Premier Brownlee yesterday in answer to his wire.

Mr. KELLNER: I understood the minister was going to take some steps with a view to having the Justice department look after this man.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, I told my hon. friend that owing to the telegram I had received from the Alberta authorities I was willing to reconsider the matter, and that I would wire the premier to send me the report of the medical experts which he had mentioned in his telegram to me.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister state briefly the facts of the case?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. Jackson was sentenced to death for murder. In the course of the trial the question of sanity was raised. Medical evidence was given, and the jury found him guilty.

Mr. BENNETT: And sane?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, guilty. Of course my hon. friend is entitled to his own conclusion. An appeal was made to the governor in council for clemency. Of course, my hon. friend knows that in discussing those matters I am restricted in the information that I can give to the public. There was a report from the trial judge, Mr. Justice Tweedie, and other representations which influenced the decision that was reached, that it was better for the ends of justice that the capital sentence should be commuted to imprisonment for life. Under the law he was now sent from the prison in Alberta to the Prince Albert penitentiary in Saskatchewan, which serves for the two provinces, and some time after he had been admitted to the penitentiary the surgeon of that institution certified that he had had this inmate under close observation since he had been admitted and found him to be insane, and he expressed the opinion that the man was insane when admitted. There is a section of the Penitentiary Act which I think I should read now that this matter is under discussion. Section 53 of that act reads:

> If at any time within three months after the receipt at the penitentiary of any convict sentenced to imprisonment therein it is established to the satisfaction of the minister, either by the written certificate of the surgeon of such penitentiary or otherwise, that the convict is insane or imbecile and was insane or imbecile at the time when he was received at the penitentiary, the minister may, after giving reasonable notice of his intention to the attorney general of the province within which such insane or imbecile convict was convicted, by warrant under his hand, direct the removal of such insane or imbecile convict from the penitentiary to the jail or other place of confinement from which such insane or imbecile convict came to the penitentiary.

Another section of the act provides that when, in the case of a prisoner who has been sentenced to death, such sentence is commuted to imprisonment for life, he shall be admitted to the penitentiary as though the order in council granting the commutation were a judgment of the court. Upon the receipt of this written certificate of the surgeon that Jackson was insane, we notified the attorney general of Alberta, under the section I have just read, on October 12, 1928, well within the three months provided for by statute, acquainting him with these facts; and we requested him to advise us as to which of the mental diseases hospitals the man might be taken to. We did not get an answer for some time and then we were told that, Jackson having been found sane by the jury at the trial, we should not have acted as we had done under the section of the statute to which I have referred. In view of this attitude on the part of the attorney general of Alberta, I took upon myself to send an impartial medical expert from another province, Dr. MacNeill of the mental hospital of North Battleford. Dr. MacNeill is a well known authority, and he forwarded to us his report to the effect that the man was insane and that he could not understand how he had ever been sent to gaol. We again notified the authorities in Alberta and, upon their refusal to act, the officers of the penitentiary proceeded upon the warrant which had been issued, taking the man to the prison in Alberta from which he had come.

They still claim that the man is sane, and I received the day before yesterday a wire from Mr. Brownlee, in the absence of the attorney general, stating that they have had the man examined by four medical experts from Alberta, two from Edmonton, I believe, one from Calgary and one from some other place. These men say that the man is sane.

Mr. SPENCER: I believe that two were from Ponoka, one from Calgary and one from Edmonton.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That may be. However, I wired Mr. Brownlee that I was quite willing to reconsider the matter, asking him to be good enough to send me the reports of these medical experts. I do not know what decision will be reached, whether we shall send some other outsiders or simply accept the reports; it will depend on the nature of those reports. I may assure my hon. friend, however, that I wish to have no conflict with the province of Alberta in this matter. On the other hand, we must not create a precedent, charging the federal government with responsibility for men who are declared to be insane when they are sent to the penitentiary. Under these circumstances, I shall act in the best way possible.

Mr. JACOBS: Doesn't this go to show that what we consider insanity in other parts of Canada is looked upon as sanity in Alberta —with all due respect to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know that the hon. gentleman has thrown any illumination on this very disagreeable subject by the observation he has just made. The fact is that Jackson was left on the doorstep by the officer of the federal government, so far as I can ascertain from the public press; and the provincial authorities, regarding the man as sane, did not desire to lock him up. That is the position as indicated in the press of the country, and I say to the minister that it is rather a reflection on the administration of justice on the part of the federal authorities charged with responsibility for maintaining institutions for the custody of those whom the courts of law have sentenced. This man was sentenced to death; that sentence was commuted, I believe, to imprisonment for life, and he was taken to the Prince Albert penitentiary. And notwithstanding the fact that the experts had not been able to satisfy the jury on the plea of insanity and that he was found guilty of murder, he was taken from that institution—my information is solely from the public press and it may be inaccurate—by an officer of the federal government, to Edmonton or Fort Saskatchewan, where he was left on the doorstep. He seems to be reasonably sane and there is no place to take him. Surely that is not proper administration of justice. I do not think the minister believes so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You think it would be proper administration to lock the door so that he could not get in?

Mr. BENNETT: There is where the conflict arose. The minister asks a very pertinent question—was it proper administration of justice on the part of the provincial authorities to lock the door? But they said quite frankly: "We cannot take an insane man to gaol," and therefore they locked the door—if that is what the minister means by locking the door; that is the only locking of doors I have heard of.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am advised by my officers that the man in whose charge he was sent waited for twenty-four hours before leaving him at the door of the gaol.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, and just left him free.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will just read that part of the statute again:

> —the minister may, after giving reasonable notice of his intention to the attorney general of the province within which such insane or imbecile convict was convicted, by warrant under his hand, direct the removal of such insane or imbecile convict from the penitentiary to the gaol or other place of confinement from which such insane or imbecile convict came to the penitentiary.

That is what they did. I frankly admit that I knew all the facts only after this occurence had taken place, but under the law as it is they were justified in leaving the man at the place from which he came. The officials of the gaol knew he was there but refused to let him in.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but I am sure the minister realizes the gravity of the situation. This man was convicted of murder, yet he was left on the doorstep under the warrant of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. JACOBS: What does the hon. gentleman mean when he says he was left on the doorstep?

Mr. BENNETT: Under a warrant from the Minister of Justice he was taken by an officer of the federal government to the gaol at Fort Saskatchewan, and when they would not take him in the officer left him on the doorstep and went away.

Mr. JACOBS: And the man insisted upon remaining on the doorstep?

Mr. BENNETT: We prefer to treat this as a serious matter, but in any event he did not remain there very long. The contention is that a murderer, who is now alleged to be insane, should not be in gaol, although the statute directs the minister, if he so desires, to send one of his officers with him by a warrant under his hand, to the gaol from which he came, and Fort Saskatchewan was the gaol in which he had been imprisoned. He was taken to the gaol and the keeper of the gaol said, "This is not an insane man at all, and I am not going to take him in."

Mr. LAPOINTE: He had no right to say that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the story. Thereupon, after waiting for a while, the officer left this convicted murderer upon the premises and went away. Where is Jackson now?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand he is in custody somewhere.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and he is either sane or insane; if he is sane he should not be anywhere but in the penitentiary and if he is insane he should be in a mental hospital. In the meantime this terrible thing has happened, and I believe it is a sad commentary upon the administration of justice in this country. The minister has properly said if he had known the facts then as well as he did later he would not have taken this action, but as it was the federal officer travelled from Saskatchewan to Alberta and left his man at the gaol because the keeper of the gaol said he had no authority to take in a sane man who was convicted of murder.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He had no right to say that.

Mr. BENNETT: But that was what he did say, because the difference is as to the sanity or the insanity of the man; one group says he is insane and the other says he is sane. If he is sane he should be in the penitentiary and it was only through the exercise of clemency by the minister that he was not hanged, because he was sentenced to death. Now, because someone says he is insane, he is taken to Alberta and they say they will not take him because he is not insane.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But the law gives the discretion to the Minister of Justice and it does not matter whether they think he is sane or insane.

Mr. BENNETT: And the Minister of Justice decided that the man was insane, otherwise the warrant would not have been issued.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Minister of Justice has acted as the law says he should act, on the certificate of the physician.

Mr. BENNETT: The law says that if the prisoner is insane or an imbecile the minister may do so and so, and the minister has a certificate from one to the effect that the man is insane. On the other hand the authorities, who were conscious of the whole situation when the man was tried, say that is incorrect and the man is not insane. I do suggest, in the interests of the administration of justice, that there should be a disinterested person brought in to consider the question before we render the administration subject to unfair criticism and attack. The minister acted strictly in conformity with the terms of the statute, but I suggest that it would have been better to have had an independent opinion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I had the opinion of Doctor MacNeill, of North Battleford.

Mr. BENNETT: I heard the minister make that statement before, but I mean some opinion upon which the authorities of the province and the federal authorities would agree, so that there would be no question as to the determination of sanity because it is not a pleasant thing to think we are faced with that situation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I hope this will be settled satisfactorily to all concerned.

Mr. JACOBS: Have we not in Canada some institution in which the criminally insane can be placed? I understood that provision was made at Portsmouth penitentiary at Kingston for the criminally insane from different parts of the country.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I believe that was closed in 1915.

Mr. JACOBS: Was that because we have no criminally insane?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know.

Mr. JACOBS: Is there no place where these criminally insane can be treated?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: When they are found insane later than three months after they have been admitted to the penitentiary they remain under our charge; if we have the accommodation we keep them in a separate ward, but when there is no such accommodation we arrange with the provinces, where they have hospitals which are suitable for that purpose, to look after them and we pay the provinces for keeping them in these asylums so long as they have not finished their sentences. When the sentences are served of course we deliver them back to the provinces from which they came and then they are under the care of the provinces.

Mr. JACOBS: Then I understand that if this man had been in the penitentiary longer than three months he would have been kept in the Prince Albert penitentiary?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, and probably we would have arranged with the province to look after him, but we would have had to pay the province.

Mr. KELLNER: I did not mention this matter with the idea of carrying on a discussion in favour of the provincial government, but I think some consideration should be given the people of Alberta in a case of this kind. The minister's statement of the case is not at all in line with my information; I am told that this man was never returned to the gaol at all and was never accepted by the gaoler but as a matter of fact was turned loose on the streets of Fort Saskatchewan.

I would like to review the case briefly. The woman who was murdered was named Nellie Pendleton; she had worked for the provincial government of Alberta for quite a number of years and later married this man Pendleton and went out on a farm north of Waskatenau, in Alberta. They had friends by the name of Jackson, and the father of the prisoner went to Pendleton and asked if he would take his boy on the farm. This was done, and the boy worked there for several months. One day Pendleton left him on the farm to do the chores and went back to his work of cutting the brush. The boy took an axe and killed this woman, stole all the money in the house and took a horse and rode it to Waskatenau, where he hired a car and drove to Edmonton. I do not believe those were the actions of an insane man. The following day Jackson was arrested as he left a moving picture theatre; after being tried he was sentenced to hang on June 6 of last year, and later the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment in the penitentiary at Prince Albert. The minister said a moment ago that an order in council had the same authority as an order of the court, but the order in council said that this man was to be kept at Prince Albert penitentiary; there was nothing said about his being transferred to Alberta.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the same as an order of the court.

Mr. KELLNER: Before his trial for murder this man was sent to an asylum in Alberta where four doctors examined him and stated that he was sane. He was tried and duly convicted, and later on a doctor at the penitentiary in Saskatchewan stated that he was insane, and the minister turns and ships him back to Alberta. The minister has the authority of four doctors who say that he was sane, and the authority of one doctor who said that he was insane.

In this connection, I would like to make a few remarks in regard to this expert witness nuisance. This matter is getting to be rather serious as I am sure that anyone reading the papers cannot help but see that when a man is accused of a really serious crime almost invariably he is defended on the ground of insanity. The prosecution seems to be able to go out and get any number of expert witnesses who will swear that the man is sane, and the defence can get an equal number of equally expert witnesses who will swear that he is insane. I think it is time that some notice was taken of this situation, as it looks to me as though each side are able to find witnesses who will say what they want them to say.

Mr. BENNETT: That is so, and always has been the case.

Mr. KELLNER: The minister is setting the statements of four doctors against the statement of one. I understand that a controversy developed a little later on between the department and the province of Alberta as to who should take care of this prisoner, whose ward he was to be. During the month of May a guard from the Prince Albert penitentiary brought the prisoner over to the gaol at Fort Saskatchewan and told the warden at the jail that he wanted him to take the prisoner. The warden refused and said that he had no instructions to do so, and the guard took the prisoner into Edmonton. The guard returned later on and told the warden at the jail that he had the prisoner and that he was to take him. The warden tried to find out with whom the guard had been in consultation while he was in Edmonton, but the guard refused to give him that information. The warden went out to a telephone booth to call up the provincial authorities, I presume to get their instructions as to what action he should take, and when he returned he met the guard and noticed that the prisoner was not present. He asked the guard where the prisoner was and was told that he had been left on the doorstep. The warden looked down the street and he saw the prisoner walking along by the memorial hall. I am sure that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) will know just what distance the memorial hall is from the gaol. The prisoner was wearing a blue suit of clothes and could not be distinguished from any other young man on the street.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend has a report about the facts I would like him to send it to me. Is my hon. friend merely reciting something which he has been told?

Mr. KELLNER: That information has been supplied to me and I am sure the minister will accept it as a report.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh no, not when I have a report from the officers as to what happened.

Mr. KELLNER: The report from the officers does not agree with my information?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, it does not.

Mr. KELLNER: The information I have is that the prisoner was later arrested and put in the lock-up in Fort Saskatchewan, and as far as I know he is there yet. There should be no trouble in verifying that information, and the minister could find out whether he was delivered and accepted by the warden at the gaol, or whether he was turned loose on the street. When a controversy of this kind develops between the Dominion and the provincial governments the people of this country have a right to assume that it will be conducted in a high, honest and firm manner. If my information, which the minister questions, is correct, this action of taking a prisoner over to Fort Saskatchewan and dumping him on the doorstep was that of a bully, and not the action of someone who was trying to act fairly in a matter of this kind. If the information which I have received is not correct I will be very glad to retract these statements, but I have every confidence that it is correct.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would not like to review again the case, but I am not sure whether or not my hon. friend is suggesting that the sentence of the man should have been commuted. In matters of this kind I, unfortunately, have to play a very large part.

The question of capital punishment has been discussed in the house and if I am not mistaken even my hon. friend was opposed to that. I believe in it, but I believe that every safeguard and precaution should be taken and when we had a report from the trial judge and from the medical men who gave evidence at the trial stating that the man was subnormal, I must admit that not only did I hesitate, but I would rather have resigned my position than send that man to the gallows.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Whether this man was insane or sane, the fact is that he was left on the doorstep of the gaol in Fort Saskatchewan. Not long ago we had a murderer in western Canada known as the strangler. Suppose this man had been a murderer of that type and had been left on the doorstep of this gaol and in the interval had committed half a dozen murders, what a terrible thing it would have been. Fort Saskatchewan happens to be in my constituency and I want to register my protest against the authorities, whether they be provincial or federal, causing so much consternation in the minds of my constituents.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, before I make a few remarks in regard to some reforms which I would like to see carried out in the penitentiaries, I would like to go back for a moment to the case we have spoken of, of the man who was killed last August at Stony Mountain. I would like the minister to do something further in ascertaining the facts of that man's death. If the minister desires to disregard the evidence of the wife and the parents, he can ascertain from the undertaker in Toronto the true condition of the body when it arrived. I think there should be an investigation into the cause of that man's death. Personally I would not accept the warden's story unless I could be very sure it was not prejudiced. I do not like to say this about any warden, but this is not the first thing I have heard about the warden of Stony Mountain penitentiary, and the matter should be investigated. If the minister intends to visit all the penitentiaries this year—and I hope he may be back with us when the house meets again—he may look into the matter and he may find out more about it than he knows at the moment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I suppose my hon. friend does not suggest that I am favouring that warden on account of political partisanship?

Miss MACPHAIL: As a matter of fact I feel that the warden got his position because he was a brother of a certain eminent man in Canada. I do not think there is much doubt about that. He was certainly not trained for this particular work. I suppose that is why he got the position, but that does not mean he would not be a good warden.

Mr. BENNETT: I think he had training in Dorchester penitentiary before he went to Stony Mountain.

Miss MACPHAIL: We have not a warden at all who is trained; we have no trained official in any penitentiary in Canada except those trained by experience. The officials are not particularly fitted for the work and I do not think they are very carefully chosen, because if one inquires into their history, one has reason to think it was not their qualifications that caused them to be appointed to their particular positions. I should like the minister, if he has not done so already, to read Crimes against Criminals by Robert Ingersoll. It is one of the finest of the small books that I have read on this subject.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend agree with everything that Robert Ingersoll wrote?

Miss MACPHAIL: I agree with a good deal of his common sense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What about the other sense?

Mr. JACOBS: The Minister of Justice could not read it. It is on the expurgated list.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I hope the hon. member will not ask me to make my confession about it.

Miss MACPHAIL: I admire Robert Ingersoll's courage. He said what he thought and that is more than many people do. As an hon. member reminds me, he shows his sympathy with humanity very clearly in his Crimes against Criminals. It is far ahead of our time and it must have been even further ahead of his.

There are only two things to think of regarding prisoners. One is the protection of society, and the other is the reclaiming of the prisoner. The idea of vengeance is being eliminated in practice, but still the old act we have is based on it. I should like to see a pretty thorough reform of our penitentiaries. To begin with I congratulate the Minister of Justice on carrying out the third recommendation of W. S. Hughes, the superintendent, in having the young offenders segregated. The recommendations are nine in number, and before I finish, I hope to put them on Hansard. While the chart spoken of by the Minister of Justice of giving the prisoners work and the possibility of paying for that work after they have looked after their own keep, is splendid, and apparently the Minister of Justice has looked at it at some time, because he knows it exists—it reminds me a good deal of the chart of the Liberal party, that wonderful chart of Liberalism, to which the Prime Minister so often refers. I am sure it is treasured somewhere, but it is hidden so carefully I am afraid it is not often looked at and very seldom toward. I am afraid the Minister of Justice has not done much; in fact, I cannot see that he has done anything and I would like to see that he has more work for the prisoners in the penitentiaries and is progressing towards the time when they will be paid for that work. It came up in the house the other day that the uniforms for our permanent force in Canada were made by special manufacturing establishments of their own. At the time I said, and I now repeat, that I can see no reason why the industries within the penitentiaries should not make these uniforms. I have seen suits of street clothes made by the tailor shops in the penitentiaries and they were beautiful suits. That is a matter which the minister might well look into. If all the uniforms of the permanent force were made in the penitentiaries, this would add very much to the work they are already doing. They make mail bags and, while I know that we discussed the matter, I am not sure whether they make the brooms that are used in the government service. The minister will know whether they do nor not. They make a good many articles, but I see no reason why they should not make as much as they have time to. Certainly the cost of their own maintenance should first be met, but if the time ever comes when they produce more, the result of that should go to keep their dependents. The house passed a resolution to this effect some years ago and we should take steps to carry it out. Just thinking about it will not get us very far.

One thing more I want to suggest is that the government of such an institution is very much like an absolute monarchy. In other words, the warden is practically in control of the whole institution. There could be a more democratic form of government than that worked out.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What does my hon. friend suggest?

Mr. JACOBS: That the prisoners should elect a warden every year amongst themselves.

Miss MACPHAIL: I would suggest that the other officials should have a part of the responsibility with the warden. There should be a board of governors composed of the warden, some of the guards and the very best behaved prisoners, the prisoners being chosen from amongst themselves. I think if the inmates were treated as an isolated community and all the rules that work well in the community of the world were used there, this would produce better results than we have, because I know by my own nature, when anyone sets out to make me do things, it is a great deal harder than if they worked with me, to get the thing done, and I think everybody else is the same.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; the hon. member is good and those others are not.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not even think that; I have a better judgment than that. I think there could be a more democratic system of government. The minister still thinks I am wrong, but the matter should at least be thoroughly investigated. Along with that, some special training should be given to the wardens of the penitentiaries. They should be men who understand psychology, who know something about hunman nature. They should be men who are missionaries in the finest sense of the word, and whose great task is to reclaim these men and send them back to society in harmony with their fellowmen. They should be students of the whole subject. We have not that type of men in the penitentiaries of Canada because we have not thought until now it was necessary to have them, but if we are going to inaugurate new policies we shall certainly have to do so through the same men with new ideas or through other men with new ideas.

As regards education, I should like the Minister of Justice to tell me whether it is true that only forty minutes a day during the dinner hour are allowed to the men who are attempting to study. Is that correct?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Miss MACPHAIL: How much time are they given?

Mr. LAPOINTE: From six to nine o'clock at night, apart from the forty minutes.

Miss MACPHAIL: Is that in their own cells or in the schoolrooms?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In the cells.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am afraid that is not the same thing. Shut in a cell with a book by themselves is certainly not the same thing as meeting as free men in a room with good school teachers. The former is not what I would call education. Reading in their cells I would not call education. You may get education out of it, but it is not education by the prison authorities.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There were 55,000 examination sheets distributed to these men to work on at night.

Miss MACPHAIL: That is a bit better.

Mr. JACOBS: May I remind the hon. member for Southeast Grey that Pilgrim's Progress was written in a cell and it is pretty good literature yet.

Miss MACPHAIL: That is true, but sometimes we think that the pilgrim has not made much progress on that account. I would ask the minister if there is a waiting list or can all prisoners become students in these institutions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Every one of them.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am very glad to hear that. I do think that every facility should be offered by the institution for these men to better their education. I suppose that examinations are necessary, but I sometimes wonder whether we are not examination mad. But at least it is an advance over a few years ago.

One other thing. I think there should be an adjustment board to look after the man or woman when he is ready for release from the penitentiary. It should be composed, I think, of an official of the government of the institution, and outside civilians. The Red Cross has been built up by people who were not paid for doing it but who loved humanity sufficiently to give to give their time in its service. I think the same idea could be carried out with an adjustment board for each penitentiary. I have been very interested in half a dozen cases. Suppose a person has been in the penitentiary for five years and then comes out; there is no one to help adjust him to life again. They have this little bit of money, $5, and a suit of clothes, which I do not suppose is a very good suit, although it may be, and a railway ticket to take them back where they came from. If any of us had been confined to this house for five years with no opportunity of getting out, and were turned out at the end of that time under such conditions, we might find a great deal of difficulty in adjusting ourselves. I think the superintendent would bear me out, if he could speak on the floor of the house, that it frequently happens that shortly after his release and before he gets to work again, reestablishes himself, and is absorbed again as a human being into the human family, when everybody's hand is against him, the former prisoner becomes a repeater. That conditions in the world are not too good was proved by the words of the Minister of Justice today. It was a sad indictment of civilization to say that if the penitentiaries were made too comfortable and if the prisoners' dependents were looked after by the government, people would deliberately get into the penitentiaries. I cannot believe that people would deliberately give up their freedom for a period of years unless conditions were very bad outside.

I want to put on Hansard the recommendations of the superintendent of penitentiaries, W. S. Hughes, one of which is being carried out this year by the Minister of Justice. The recommendations are as follows:

1. The providing of institutions for the segregation and classification of all inmates is again strongly recommended.
2. The reopening of the criminal mental disease hospital.

The need for that is shown by the Jackson case.

3. The segregation of habitual criminals.
4. The furnishing of more work for the inmates by the government.
5. Payment of wages to well-behaved inmates for work well performed.
6. The securing of situations for inmates prior to discharge.

That is what I mean by an adjustment board. It is simply putting it in another way.

7. The training of officers before being permitted to take charge of inmates.
8. The empowering of those in charge of penitentiary administration with authority to administer and discipline on similar basis to that of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I am not sure that I agree with the latter recommendation.

9. Change in the method of purchasing supplies. This essential in order to attain success in the manufacture of goods in the penitentiaries.

There is not any use at all in the superintendent of penitentiaries recommending to us again and again what he out of his experience has learned unless we are willing to take his expert advice and try a little more rapidly than we have been doing to carry out his recommendations. I am glad that we are taking this one step, but one step in ten years is a slow walk, and I hope that we shall speed it up a bit.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I should like to supplement the remarks made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey. I was at one time organizer of the city relief department of the city of Calgary. Nothing was more distressing than to have released convicts come to me, and I had several of them. I said to them, "Why do you come to me for work or assistance?" This was the answer I got: "Wherever I go for work, just as soon as they find that I have been a convict, I am discharged." In other words, not only do we need an adjustment board to help the convict reestablish himself as a useful citizen, but even so-called Christian society absolutely refuses to give these men a second chance. I have had convicts apply to me to do even pick and shovel work for the city of Calgary although they were fitted for a much better class of work, just because of a slip they had made in life—and who has not made a slip? Possibly some of us might have been in gaol if the law had taken its course.

Miss MACPHAIL: If we were not politicians.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have sometimes had to send these men out of the city to places where they were not known in order to get work for them. Society itself is in need of a readjustment of its ideas with respect to these men. I do not know exactly what to suggest, but I do say that we are not giving these men a chance when they are able and willing to work and would make good citizens, so long as Christian society refuses to give them a second chance.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister know why certain boots made lately in the penitentiary for the police force were rejected and sold on the market?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Some defects made the boots unacceptable by the officers of the police force. Only a few of them were rejected, not many.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): For some years I have been bringing to the attention of the minister, without much success, a matter in which I am interested. About three years ago the officials of the penitentiaries were brought under the Civil Service Act. They were allowed to become members of the civil service by paying a certain amount into the superannuation fund on account of their past service. That became a very heavy burden upon a few of them, some seven or eight, who had been working in the penitentiary for twenty-two to twenty-five years. The department and the superintendent and others may say to these men, "You have had your choice. In the first place you were not guaranteed the gratuity which has been allowed in the past for twenty-five or twenty-six years' good service. It was granted conditionally. You were not entitled to it." Secondly, they may say, "You were granted the privilege of paying in the amount due on account of your past service." That is the attitude taken by the department, but I think those men who have served for twenty-three, twenty-four, or twenty-five years should be treated a little differently; that some part of the gratuity should be allowed them to reimburse what they have had to pay in. There are not many affected, and I think the government could well afford to treat those who have served that length of time by recognizing the principle that the gratuity has to a certain extent been earned. Say to these men: "We will accept you in the civil service and allow you a certain part of the gratuity." Now, I am going to bring this matter up until something is done, for I believe these men have a good case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My friend knows that after all I have done something. Prior to 1924 not only those three but others were not entitled to what he is claiming for these men. Something similar happened a couple of years ago when I introduced a pension law for the mounted police officers. Unfortunately the line has to be drawn somewhere, and these men are not within the law as it is. I know my hon. friend has been very insistent and is doing his best for them, but I must admit that I have not found it possible to meet his wishes. It would require legislation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Well, I think that is what we are here for.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): We are called legislators, whether we are or not. When a legitimate case is brought forward it should be dealt with. You have a precedent in the case of one man who was given a gratuity of $2,500 or $2,600 and then went back into the service.

Miss MACPHAIL: I want to know something about shackling to the bar. Where convicts are so dealt with, are their arms above their head, by their side, or where?

Mr. LAPOINTE: "Shackled to the bar" means that the convict is placed in his cell and his arms tied to the gate of the cell at the waist line. It happens that some of the convicts refuse to work, and if they are found physically fit they are forced to stand up in their cell instead of being given a chance to sleep while others are working. As soon as they express their willingness to work they are unshackled. It is only during working hours that they are so treated. I do not think there is anything very cruel about the treatment. It is merely a way of dealing with the convicts when they refuse to work.

Miss MACPHAIL: If they change their mind and want to work are they allowed to do so?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, yes, we are pleased to send them to work.

Miss MACPHAIL: That might be a good thing to apply to people outside the penitentiaries.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, even to members of parliament.

Miss MACPHAIL: What is meant by "paddling"?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Spanking with a small leather strap. It is not at all a nine-tails-cat.

An hon. MEMBER: A cat-o'-nine-tails.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I put it the other way round.

Mr. MANION: You put the tails on the wrong end.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend knows what I mean. It is a small leather strap about eighteen inches long. It is applied to convicts under very extraordinary circumstances when they have been rebellious or guilty of beastly action, and it is done on the warden's orders. There is nothing cruel about it; it is rather the humiliation that hurts.

Mr. JACOBS: My hon. friend as a former school teacher ought not to require an explanation of what spanking means.

Miss MACPHAIL: I never found it did very much good. I found other ways worked very much better. I think it is degrading both to the prisoner and to the official who spanks him. It must put the guard in an awkward position with regard to the prisoner, and I should think it would make the prisoner rebellious. It does not look very good to me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree it is not a pleasant thing for either. I do not like it myself,—

Mr. CHAPLIN: When did they do it to you?

Mr. LAPOINTE: —but the wardens are very often placed in a very difficult situation, and really I think we ought to give them discretion in these matters.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not blindfold them both?

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: Apart from that, may I say to my hon. friend that conditions in our penitentiaries are not so bad as they are sometimes painted. Many reforms have been put into effect, and statistics show that only eight per cent of first offenders ever come back to the penitentiaries. Ladies and gentlemen from other countries, especially from the United States, have visited our penitentiaries, and I think we have reason to be proud of what they have stated as a result of their inspection. There are not many penitentiaries better managed than our own. Of course a good deal more can be done, and I assure my hon. friend that all her remarks are taken in very good spirit, and I will try, even quicker than she seems to expect, to meet at least some of her wishes—not all. I am free to admit that I do not agree with some of her recommendations, because I do not believe it would be in the interests of the administration of justice to adopt them.

Item agreed to.

Penitentiaries—to provide for the purchase of preferred class penitentiary site, and to begin erection of buildings, $150,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Last session I proposed to the minister that in addition to getting this building and segregating these cases there should be also some examination of the boys to ascertain what started them on their criminal career. As I pointed out last year, there are some eight thousand juvenile delinquents in the Dominion of whom forty-six have now reached the penitentiary, some at the age of fifteen, others seventeen and eighteen. In my opinion there should be an investigation into the causes leading to this state of affairs; such an investigation could very well be made in the penitentiaries. The causes that have led to these forty-six boys finding themselves in the penitentiary would probably explain the delinquency of others. I hope that the minister will look into the matter. Now that this building is to be put up some steps should be taken in the direction I suggest. Last year I also pointed out the fallacy which prevails that these juvenile delinquents are for the most part foreigners; the fact is that they are Canadian born. I pointed out that delinquency had increased from 64 to 66 per cent, these delinquents having occurred amongst boys who had not reached the higher stage of education. Surely something can be done in the way of investigating into the causes that have led to their condition.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under this vote providing for the purchase of a penitentiary site, the minister might give us some information as to location and cost.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No decision has been reached, but the site will be in the vicinity of the present Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems a lot of money to pay for a site alone—$150,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And also to begin the erection of the building.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is only to begin the erection of the building; it does not provide for anything further. How much will it cost?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know what the site will cost. I must have the authority of parliament, and I shall need the money. My hon. friend seems to think it is a lot of money; that is what my colleagues tell me every time I try to give effect to the will of parliament. I am glad my hon. friend from Southeast Grey is present; she will realize that it is not so easy to get what we want.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the estimated expenditure on the building?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We expect the site to cost about $60,000 or $75,000, and the balance is to begin the erection of the building. To complete construction we shall have to ask parliament for a further sum; it might cost $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely the minister does not mean to tell us that he is starting out to buy a site on which to put up a building without knowing how far he is going or where the whole thing will end. There must be some plans for the building; he must know pretty well what it will cost. The minister should take the committee into his confidence and let us know, as far as he can, exactly what he has determined on as to the cost of the building and the cost of the site. He knows very well; he is not starting in the dark with this undertaking. His officers have given him this information and he should have it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member will understand that this is not an ordinary public building for which a vote of parliament is asked; it is a building which will be erected by the inmates of the penitentiary. It is difficult to say exactly how much it will cost, for that very reason, that the work will not be carried on under ordinary circumstances. It will depend on how much work we shall be able to put on the building the first year, and so on. I really cannot tell how much it will cost, but I want the building.

Item agreed to.

78594—230½

Penitentiaries—to provide for the purchase of Lussier estate and other properties at St. Vincent de Paul, $450,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much land is there in this estate?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are 327 acres, and apart from the Lussier estate there are properties just in front of the penitentiary and which have been asked for by the officers of the penitentiaries branch for years. They are absolutely needed. I cannot say exactly what amount will be involved because if necessary we shall have to expropriate and pay a reasonable price.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has any agreement been reached with respect to this 327 acres? Is there a price, or does the minister intend to expropriate, leaving the price to be determined by the court?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We cannot do anything before the money is voted by parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is not carried. The minister knows whether he will expropriate the property or not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know how much I shall have to pay; it will depend upon the judgment of the court.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is what I asked. Does the minister intend to put the matter before the court? Does he intend to expropriate and allow the court to decide what the property is worth? Is that the proposition?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Probably, if it is impossible to come to a reasonable agreement. I shall have the superintendent and the officers of the penitentiary investigate, and if the reports were to the effect that we could secure better prices otherwise than by expropriation, I am not sure that we should not act upon such advice.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has any offer been made for the property?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A price has been named?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As regards the Lussier estate, I understand that an offer was made years ago; the matter has been long pending.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have a reason for asking these questions. Only yesterday or the day before we saw something similar in connection with the Department of Agriculture, and I have been wondering whether the same thing will be repeated here.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When Inspector Fatt was acting warden at St. Vincent de Paul the property was offered for $100,000 but no action was taken.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police, $3,040,725.25.

Pay of force (including salaries of two constables, Ellesmere island district, at $2.25 per diem, to insure department against loss through death), $1,279,772.75.

Maintenance (including billeting, travelling expenses, forage, fuel and light, clothing, repairs and renewals, horses, ammunition, stationery, etc., medical, hospital, etc., transportation and freight, building repairs and renewals, contingencies and criminal investigations, $1,625,452.50.

To compensate members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for injuries received whilst in the performance of duty, $10,000.

To assist in enforcement of federal statutes, (expenditure chargeable to this vote shall be in connection with such federal police duties as may be defined by the governor in council upon recommendation of the Minister of Justice), $75,000.

To provide for special services in connection with the enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, $50,000.

To compensate Wm. Pinsky for medical attendance on his child who was fatally wounded by police dogs, at Fort Resolution, $500.—Total, $3,040,725.25.

Mr. COOTE: Would it not be possible—certainly it would be much better—to list each one of the items separately under this vote? It is not satisfactory to the committee to deal with this vote in its present form. When the estimates are prepared next year it would be better, I submit, to have each item listed separately.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend may be right; we have merely followed the usual practice.

Mr. COOTE: Yes, but we are following a lot of bad practices in this house. In some cases whole pages are included under one vote and very often the chairman or somebody else says, "carried," before the committee has had an opportunity to look over the different items comprising the vote. I repeat, it would be much better if these items were listed separately; if that were done members of the committee would have a better chance of looking over the items to see whether or not they are necessary.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some two or three weeks ago I asked a question with regard to the activities of the mounted police and the information which they were securing with regard to various bodies, especially the communist organization. The minister stated that it was not possible for him to give the information as to the activities of that body.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

I would point out to the minister that this is definitely a political body; my own organization in Winnipeg has had to fight this party in municipal and also in federal elections, and as a matter of fact at present we have one communist member of the Winnipeg city council. I should like to ask the minister why the Liberals should have exclusive knowledge concerning the activities of such political bodies as these. If anyone is to have privileges of this kind I think all political parties should have the opportunity of learning what are the actual aims and activities of the communist organization.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is wrong; the Liberals have no knowledge of that kind.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; the Minister of Justice has that knowledge, but he does not have it as a Liberal.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I presume it is quite possible that some of the information in the possession of the Minister of Justice might seep through to the Minister of Justice as a member of the cabinet or as a member of the Liberal party. We are told that this is a revolutionary body and I understand that certain spies are maintained who become members of that party. A few years ago I knew of cases where these spies actually incited disorder. That seems to me a very questionable practice. I know that in certain labour meetings when a man advocates disorder other members of that body are against him; he is suspected to be a stool-pigeon, and probably in the employ of the government. It is an intolerable situation if the government, through its spy system in this way, lends itself to the activities of agents provocateurs. If these people are really dangerous it is only right that the minister should let the country know the extent of the danger. So far as I am concerned I think this is a case of a bogy man held in reserve, to be trotted out occasionally by the reactionary elements in the community. I do not see that we are helping the cause of good government in Canada by maintaining a secret police system which is constantly spying on certain groups.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As my hon. friend knows, that is not the purpose of the mounted police; they are located at different places throughout the country to enforce the federal statutes, and if in the course of their activities, as my hon. friend calls them, while they are doing their work something happens which they think they should report to their superintendent as concerning the peace and order of the country, I do not think there is anythink wrong if they do so. I do not think there is ground for complaint that any persons have been persecuted or troubled in this way, at least since I have been in control of the mounted police. If my hon. friend has instances to quote in which he believes that even these communists, with whom I know he does not sympathize and with whom I have no sympathy, have been unfairly treated, I should be only too glad to have him give me that information.

Mr. EVANS: There is one matter which I think comes under this vote, which I should like to bring up now. Recently the premier of Saskatchewan stated that it was up to the federal authorities to initiate the prosecution of Harry Bronfman, that the onus was upon the federal government and not upon the provincial government at all. Again I would like to ask why this was not done, following the recommendation of the royal commission?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think I have already explained this matter, but I have no objection to saying again that the Minister of National Revenue, as has been stated, sent to the Department of Justice the documents and the record with regard to this special case as well as those concerning many other cases. The offence charged had been committed in 1920. On the facts a prosecution might be entered, although the evidence was contradictory, with three witnesses on one side and three on the other. The offence was under the Customs Act, for having attempted to bribe officers in order to prevent them from stopping trucks which were coming from the United States to Canada, not for the purpose of smuggling goods into Canada but rather for the purpose of smuggling liquor from Canada into the United States. There is a provision in the Customs Act which compels any such trucks or motor cars to report to the Canadian customs when they enter Canada, and when that is not done the car is liable to seizure. The Customs Act provides also that any attempt to bribe a customs officer for the purpose of preventing him from doing his duty is an indictable offence subject to a penalty of fine and imprisonment. However, under another section of that act the prosecution must be instituted within three years after the commission of the offence. In this case the offence, as I have stated, was committed in 1920 and came to the notice of the Minister of National Revenue only as a result of the investigation of 1927, seven years afterwards. Therefore the law officers came to the conclusion that this man should not be prosecuted under the provisions of the act, because of the statute of limitations. That is all.

Mr. EVANS: Then the case must have been outlawed when that recommendation was made ?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am responsible only for the Department of Justice; I had nothing to do with that recommendation.

Mr. JACOBS: I might tell my hon. friend that the case was outlawed three years before the investigation by the commission.

Mr. EVANS: Why was that used as an excuse for not prosecuting for over twelve months?

Mr. LAPOINTE: When the files of the Department of National Revenue were sent to the Department of Justice we gave instructions to have the man Knowles interviewed immediately in order to obtain his version of the affair. It was reported that he was ill at the time and could not see the counsel whom we had appointed for that purpose, and I suppose that is why it was stated that the delay was due to his illness. That had nothing to do with the legal side of the case; the matter was thoroughly investigated and it was decided that we could not prosecute.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) showed me a letter from the Department of Justice in which doubt was expressed as to whether or not a conviction could be secured against Bronfman. I did not understand that letter to say that the door was closed; the letter intimated that an action could be taken for bribery under the common law.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The officers of the department found that a prosecution could not be instituted under the Customs Act and they tried to bring it in under the common law where the statute of limitations would not apply. Under ordinary circumstances prosecutions may be instituted either under the statutes or under the common law, but the officers of the department came to the conclusion that when the statute stated definitely that there was a limitation of three years then we could not prosecute, and I agreed with that finding. If the Minister of National Revenue had desired to follow the line of least resistance a charge could have been laid, but it would be almost immoral to lay a charge against a man when it was felt that he could not be convicted.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think it is unfair for the minister to say that the man could not be convicted. The letter which I saw simply expressed the legal opinion that it was extremely improbable that a conviction could be obtained.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The remarks which I have made are my own conclusions.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not think the minister has any right to make such a final decision. My complaint is that the offender was given the benefit of the doubt in this case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the law should have had the benefit of the doubt. There is a great deal of suspicion from one end to the other of this country that because this man was wealthy and was pretty close to the Liberal party he has been—

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is most unfair.

Mr. CAMPBELL: —able to commit an offence and go free. That fact has been one of the contributing factors to the defeat of the government in Saskatchewan; the Saskatchewan government was not able to explain the non-prosecution of this man.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If that is the reason for the defeat of the government my hon. friend should not boast about it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I said that it was one of the contributing factors, and I think I am doing good service to the minister and to his party by suggesting that this thing be cleared up. Many people in Saskatchewan believe that this man has been unduly protected. Very serious charges were made in the campaign—I cannot quote them as facts, but they were made by distinguished members of the bar who have been elected as representatives of the people of Saskatchewan—regarding contributions to campaign funds, and all that kind of thing. It is absurd to take the position that where there is any doubt the offender shall be given the benefit of that doubt; I think the law should have the benefit. The suspicion will always remain that because this man was wealthy and had a close association with the Liberal party he was immune to prosecution.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Pay of force—further amount required including an amount to provide for the pay of Inspector James Taylor from September 1st to 15th, 1928, inclusive, $2,800.83.

Maintenance—further amount required, including an amount to provide for ration allowance of Inspector James Taylor from September 1st to 15th, 1928, inclusive, $60,016.80.

Mr. BENNETT: I think this would be a good time to ask the minister what has been done in connection with the death of Bilodeau. It has been alleged that he was murdered and his wife is claiming compensation, but so far as I know, nothing has been received up to the present time. I should like to have a public statement from the minister as to the present status of this matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A claim was made for compensation but, as my hon. friend knows, it was necessary that it be sent to the Department of External Affairs. They have communicated with Washington but the United States has refused to do anything in the matter. It is for the provincial government to decide as to the prosecution of the man, but I have been told that those who should have facilitated this prosecution have been rather inclined to take no action. Nothing new has developed in the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: I am advised that the government of this country paid a claim for the death of an American citizen under somewhat similar circumstances. This man was killed on the border some two or three years ago, and a claim was made through the American government, which was paid by the Canadian authorities.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will inquire into the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: I will get the particulars during the evening recess.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Department of the Interior—Scientific Institutions—International Boundaries — Expenses connected with the survey and demarcation of international boundaries, $35,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any more of this work to be done before it is completed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is going on continuously. It is a joint commission of the two governments and from year to year they make fresh markings and keep the lines properly marked and up to date.

Item agreed to.

Geological Survey—For explorations, surveys and investigations, wages of explorers, topographers and others, $230,000.

For publication of English and French editions of reports, maps, illustrations, etc., $55,000.

For maintenance of offices and museum, expenses of special exhibitions pertaining to natural resources, purchase of books of reference, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $60,000.

For museum equipment, $15,000.

For purchase of specimens, $3,000.—Total, $363,000.

Mr. SHORT: I see that last year $205,000 was voted for explorations, surveys and investigations, and so forth. How much of that was spent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Practically all of it. It covers the payments of the various parties who are in the field on geological survey work.

Mr. FRASER: Has the department more parties in the field this year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have three more parties this year to go into northern Manitoba.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Indian education, including the construction of school buildings, $2,240,500.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was to give some information to hon. gentlemen about the new schools to be built for Indian educational work, and where they are to be located. They are as follows:

Blue Quills, Alberta, $50,000.
St. Bruno's, Alberta, $20,000.
Wabasca, Alberta, $15,000.
Providence, Northwest territories, $15,000.
St. George's, British Columbia, $10,000.
Alert Bay, British Columbia, $70,000.
Cecilia Jeffrey, Ontario (to finish), $15,000.
Brandon, Manitoba (new school), $160,000.
Birtle, Manitoba (new school), $80,000.
Beauval, Saskatchewan, $25,000.
Old Sun, Alberta, $40,000.
George Gordons, Touchwood Hills, Saskatchewan, $90,000.

This is a school which we have to reconstruct.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The minister mentioned a new school at Punnichy. Was there an investigation into the cause of the fire?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There was an investigation, but it was very difficult to establish the cause of that fire. It was supposed to have started from a cigarette, but that has not been proven. We have not been able to ascertain the exact cause.

Mr. MacLAREN: How many schools are there for Indians in New Brunswick?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think we have any boarding schools in New Brunswick.. As my hon. friend knows, we built one in Nova Scotia about a year ago. We have any number or day schools in the eastern provinces.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Is this an enlargement of the previous school at Punnichy?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will accommodate the same number of pupils, but it will be a little more modern than the old school.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Northwest Territories—Salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the territories, including the erection of buildings, investigation work, schools, hospitals, relief to destitute, maintenance of prisoners and insane patients, administration of the North West Game Act and the Wood Buffalo park, etc., $190,000.

Arctic exploration and administration of Eskimo affairs, salaries and contingencies, equipment and supplies; relief to destitute; schools; hospitals and medical services; erection of buildings; maintenance of prisoners and insane patients; education; travelling expenses, etc., $190,000.

Expenses connected with the purchase, herding and maintenance of reindeer for the N.W.T. including wages, building of corrals, etc., $50,000.

To provide for the payment for beaver pelts purchased as a relief measure, from certain Indians and half-breeds in the Mackenzie district, under authority of P.C. 2146, dated 28th November, 1928; also for the transportation of same and incidental and unforeseen expenses connected with the sale thereof, $135,000.

To provide for the revision of the North West Territories Act and ordinances, $6,000.—Total, $571,000.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Have we passed item 222 in regard to Indians in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories, covering implements, tools, field and garden seeds, and so forth?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We passed all those items this morning. I have no objection if the hon. member wants to say something about the matter.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): What provision is being made for the settlement of outstanding Indian accounts for seed grain, tools, live stock and other supplies which have not yet been paid for? I have had this brought to my attention in the last three or four years. Promises were made by one of the Indian agents in Saskatchewan that these matters would be looked into. Orders were given to farmers, merchants, lumber dealers and others for live stock, seed grain and materials which were supposed to be paid for by the Indian agent or by the department. What provision is being made for the payment of these accounts, some of which run into very large sums of money? As we all know, seed grain and similar commodities are sold for cash. Some of these goods, it seems to me, were obtained on false pretences if these accounts are not going to be paid.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): During the period of the war when greater production was being urged on the farmers of Canada undoubtedly a great deal of grain, horses, cattle and implements were purchased for the Indians on the reserves. Unfortunately I have been selected to clean up the mess. I have been forced to this conclusion, that in every case where the creditor is able to produce an order we are in duty bound to pay the account. We have paid all that it was possible to pay out of the band funds available. I was in hopes that these accounts had been pretty nearly all cleaned up, except those still in dispute as to whether the transaction took place. One of the principles we insist upon is that we will not recognize now, and we have not for the past two years, any transaction with an Indian unless the creditor can produce an order signed by the agent. In every case where he is able to produce such an order we are prepared to settle, and in some cases where the evidence is clear that the transaction actually took place and that the creditor has given value for the claim, we will try to make an adjustment.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Some of these orders are not in the possession of those who delivered the goods on the orders. They met the principal of that institution either at Regina or elsewhere in Saskatchewan and produced their orders and were asked to leave them with the commissioner. These orders have not been returned to them, and in many cases payment has not been made on them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As my hon. friend is in one section of Saskatchewan that is particularly bad in that respect, I would ask him if he would be good enough whenever he comes across a case of that kind to forward me the particulars and we will have a special investigation and see if we cannot make an adjustment.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I am very pleased to have that word from the minister because I have frequently taken this up with the department and there seemed to be no way in which a settlement could be made. I might also point out that a settlement has been made of some of these accounts on a percentage basis, part of the account being paid and the balance running on for some two or three or four years. Would the minister's statement apply to these cases also?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Certainly. It applies to all unpaid accounts.

Mr. FRASER: Can the minister tell us something about this $50,000 for a herd of reindeer?

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To make it as brief and as comprehensive as possible, the previous experiment in Canada in Baffin's land ended somewhat disastrously because the reindeer were not put on proper feeding ground. We have therefore had Porsild Brothers, who have been trained in the investigation of feeding ground for reindeer, make an investigation.

Mr. FRASER: Have they made a report?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Is it printed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have it available in the department.

Mr. FRASER: Will it be printed and distributed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. We sent Porsild Brothers into Alaska and into the far northwest territory among the Eskimos along Coronation gulf and they spent a year and a half in there and reported that there is a splendid feeding ground for reindeer in that locality. We propose buying reindeer delivered in that locality.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I gather from conversations with the leaders of hon. gentlemen opposite that hon. members would be agreeable to sitting until midnight to-night, and I would therefore move:

That this house shall not be adjourned at eleven o'clock to-day.

Mr. EVANS: I would ask the Prime Minister if he will set the time for adjournment for 12 o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I indicated that we would sit until midnight.

Mr. EVANS: Is that in the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will give my word.

Mr. EVANS: That is all right.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I object to the motion, Mr. Speaker. Many of us have been in this building since half past eight this morning and we have put in all the time that we should be asked to do. There are many important estimates still to come up, we have complaints to register, and we must be on the job almost every moment of the time. I do not feel that it is fair to ask us to sit any longer than we have been sitting.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Do I understand that the motion to sit beyond eleven was carried? Is not unanimous consent and notice necessary?

Mr. SPEAKER: No notice is necessary under standing order 45. when it concerns the time of meeting or adjournment of the house. Standing order 45 reads:

> Forty eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for placing a question on the order paper, but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the house.

NATURAL RESOURCES OF MANITOBA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to table the report of the royal commission on the transfer of the natural resources of Manitoba.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Government of the northwest territories, $571,000.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): The hon. member for Cariboo asked a question before we rose at six o'clock but the offices were closed and I was unable to get the information. The question had reference to the reindeer transaction. I shall be glad to give him the information on another item in the supplementaries.

Mr. BENNETT: Only one observation I have to make and that is as to the destitution of the Eskimos in remote sections of the country. I brought the matter to the attention of the government last year, and I may say that the Rev. W. G. Walton, with whom the minister has been in communication, is very anxious that it shall receive consideration by parliament. His view is that a large number of people are suffering privation and practically starvation by reason of the lack of food, and that they might have their condition greatly improved if provision were made for reindeer. Before we rose at six o'clock the minister had not made any general statement as to the intention of the government in that regard and perhaps he will do so now, especially in view of the fact that there is some talk of establishing a beaver farm in a distant section of the country. The transportation difficulties would be considerable, having regard to the point of location and the distance between such a farm and the Eskimos. This reverend gentleman is of the opinion that if reindeer were introduced and looked after these people would not run the risk of starvation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have that very much in mind. The missionary is stationed on the east coast of Hudson bay and the bands in that vicinity have experienced considerable difficulty. This year we are sending an officer to an island up there—I have forgotten the name—where application has been made for a beaver farm. He will investigate the possibilities and we hope we shall be able to provide sufficient food for these people. It is expected eventuallly to give the Eskimo families a certain number of reindeer to provide them with meat, clothing and milk. With regard to the introduction of reindeer into the east of the delta of the Mackenzie river I shall be glad to give information later on in connection with the supplementaries as to what we are paying. We propose to have them driven across from Alaska and landed in Canada before we pay for them.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the Eskimo population of Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Between seven and seven and a half thousand.

Mr. BENNETT: What has been the decrease in recent years?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is difficult to say; there is no authentic method of ascertaining the number. Mounted police are now stationed on the east coast and this year we are establishing a post in Coronation gulf, so that we ought to have shortly a better census of the Eskimo population.

Mr. BENNETT: Of this total of $571,000, how much is for salaries? I am told that the real fact is that most of it goes that way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, it is not all for salaries.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say all, but the major portion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is very expensive sending officers there.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest to the minister that he drop the item of $6,000 providing for the revision of the Northwest Territories Act and ordinances. In view of what we know about the number of officials, especially lawyers, connected with the Department of the Interior, surely the minister has in the department a sufficient number of men to revise the ordinances and put them into reasonable form without having $6,000 voted to provide a job for someone. I put that to him straight; that is all there is to it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am willing to drop it; there are two lawyers in the department.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I move that the vote be reduced by $6,000.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FRASER: In connection with the item of $135,000 to provide for the payment for beaver pelts, the minister might tell us how he fixes the price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is a closed season for beaver applicable to all hunters and trappers in the northwest territories, but we found that this created a great hardship on the Indian population, and we have arranged to allow the Indians to take beaver. We propose that they shall bring the pelts to the mounted police who are stationed in the territory and turn them over at a fixed sum. We sell the skins to recoup ourselves, and in this way we keep close tab on the taking of beaver in the territory so that none but Indians shall trap them.

Mr. FRASER: How do you fix the price to the Indian?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It varies between $12 and $25, the latter price being paid for large prime beaver.

Mr. FRASER: A beaver at the present time is worth about $40.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. FRASER: So that the department makes the difference between $25 and $40.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will require more than that to recoup us for bringing out the skins and selling them, and that it really more than the Hudson's Bay Company, Revillon Freres and other companies are paying for them.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BENNETT: I should think the right thing would be to send them to the fur auction and have them sold off.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are all sold at public auction.

Mr. McRAE: I would like to ask the minister what protection is afforded in the case of these buffalo straying out of the park. The buffalo come to Fort Vermilion and frighten the people very much, and they want to know if it is all right to shoot the buffalo in self-defence.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid it is not; if they will report them to our wardens they will try to drive them back to the park.

Mr. EVANS: I should like to know if some such arrangements as that made with regard to the beaver skins can be made with regard to the buffalo hides?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The buffalo are slaughtered at the Wainwright park; those slaughtered in the north will have to be killed under permit, and the government will retain the hides.

Mr. FRASER: The purchase of beaver is prohibited in the territory?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only Indians are allowed to take beaver.

Mr. FRASER: What do you do about the white trappers?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is prohibited.

Mr. FRASER: You have had no experience in the bootlegging of beaver skins?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is the first season the prohibition has been in effect.

Mr. FRASER: We had prohibited season in British Columbia at one time, and the government got into a great deal of trouble in regard to the bootlegging of beaver skins. I think therefore that the minister is inviting quite a bit of trouble.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I quite appreciate that fact. There has been a closed season in the province of Alberta and, as you know, most of the skins go up the Mackenzie river and through Edmonton. There has been a closed season in effect in Saskatchewan also, and we thought it well, in order to preserve the beaver, to establish a closed season in the territories in order to have a uniform law throughout the whole area. Unfortunately, however, we have had a very serious condition prevailing in connection with our Indians and we were forced to allow them to take beaver, largely to provide food. Last year they had a bad epidemic along the Mackenzie river; we know we lost three hundred Indians through disease and they were unable to make any provision for the winter, so we were forced to lift the embargo as far as the Indians were concerned. We are trying to prevent any beaver being taken out of the territory except those coming through the hands of the mounted police, so we will know whether there is any bootlegging.

Mr. FRASER: What protection have you in case a white trapper takes a certain amount of beaver skins and turns them over to an Indian to dispose of?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The heads of families are restricted to ten beavers, but the situation described by my hon. friend might arise and it would be very difficult to detect. However, we have that restriction and we can only do our best to see that it is enforced.

Mr. GARDINER: And no other company is permitted to buy these skins at all?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the cause of the death of these Indians?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There was a very severe epidemic of influenza.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the minister any reason to believe that the Eskimo population is either increasing or decreasing?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We must admit that we have very little authentic information as to the Eskimos, but so far as we know there are about seven thousand of them in that country all told. As we extend the mounted police posts in the Eskimo district we will get a better idea of the size of the population, but as far as we know they are not decreasing.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is anything being done by the government to educate the Eskimos?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, the same system is in effect with regard to Eskimos as we have in force with regard to Indians; the church schools are among the Eskimos, although not to a very great extent as yet. At the mouth of the Mackenzie river, at Herschel island and at the delta there is a Roman Catholic school as well as an Anglican school, which was established many years ago, and a school is being established to the north of Hudson bay, at Chesterfield inlet. They get a grant from the government, and the work is carried on by these two churches.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I suppose the pupils are boarded at these schools?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, and they have day schools as well, carried on in tents located where the Eskimos are fishing in the summer season; but as in the Indian work, much better results can be obtained by boarding schools.

Mr. CAMPBELL: With regard to the Eskimos, I have understood from many articles I have read that there has been rather a lowering in their standard of living; as the game is killed off they have to resort to other methods in order to keep themselves alive. They have lost some of their primitive arts in connection with the making of clothing, the packing of foods and the use of the bow and arrow, and this has entailed additional hardship upon the Eskimo population. I wonder if the minister could tell us if he has any information upon that point.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are told by our own officers who visit the Arctic that the arming of the Eskimo perhaps has not been altogether a good thing. Formerly when he missed a seal that seal was left alive, but now when he shoots a seal it often reaches a hole in the ice through which it gets back to the water and of course is not recoverable. The Eskimo is perhaps a little bit more clever than the ordinary northern Indian. He becomes an expert shot; he is a persistent hunter; he follows the game and builds his own home wherever night overtakes him, but in spite of that he may experience just a little more difficulty in obtaining a livelihood, and of course it is not good for him to attempt to live on the food of the white man, which usually brings illness. On the whole, the Eskimo is a very apt pupil; he learns quickly; he is of a mechanical turn of mind and will adapt himself to new conditions very rapidly, I think much more so than his Indian brother.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Some of the explorers, Stefanson among them, have emphasized the importance of the musk-ox, yet we have been told that in many districts in the north the musk-ox has been killed off entirely by the Eskimos, who do not seem to realize what it means to themselves. They seem to believe that because the game comes from some far off land it will come again in the future. Has anything been done by the government in this regard?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That idea is quite prevalent amongst the Eskimos, because they lead a nomadic life. The game in the north, as well as in the southern and western parts of the country, seems to enjoy periods of fairly large production; then they move to other sections, their numbers are greatly diminished and they have an off season. I think that has engendered in the minds of the Eskimos the idea that perhaps these animals will come back, but there is ample evidence that the musk-ox has been much farther south than we find it now. There is a considerable herd of musk-ox on Ellesmere island but it was found that large parties were coming across from Greenland and slaughtering the animals. We have established posts there to stop that kind of thing, and although we have no definite information we believe that the herds are increasing.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What is being done to educate the Eskimo as to the necessity of conserving the game?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That has been the main idea of introducing the reindeer. The history of Greenland under the administration of the Danish government shows that the reindeer has been the salvation of the northern peoples in that country. We propose to introduce the reindeer into our northern territories so that the Eskimo may be supplied with food and clothing as the farmer on the prairie obtains like supplies from his sheep or cattle, and we believe in that way the Eskimo will be taught the necessity of preserving game. As a rule the Eskimo and the Indian do not slaughter the game. It is the white man who is the vandal and who destroys the wild animals; he takes all the pelts he can gather without any thought as to reproduction.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is that Wood buffalo park on the bank of the Mackenzie river?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, on the Slave river.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Could the minister give us the number of buffalo in that park, and how they are getting along?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They must be increasing because the hon. member for North Vancouver has just asked me if we are going to provide any protection to those animals which stray out into the settled areas around Fort Vermilion. This park is not fenced, but as far as we can learn from the reports of the herders the 6,000 animals which were taken from Wainwright are doing very well. The original herd consisted of 1,500 heads, very large and robust animals, and the importation from Wainwright seemed to take up with them very acceptably.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They are not being domesticated at all?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They are not fenced up?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Lands and Parks—Salaries of the Dominion lands outside service, $680,000.

Dominion lands contingencies, etc., $205,000.

Amount required to pay the fees of the board of examiners for D.L.S. of the secretary and of the sub-examiners and for travelling expenses, stationery, printing, rent of room and furniture, etc. (The fees of Messrs. F. H. Peters, W. M. Tobey and Harry B. Parry, members of the board, and J. A. Cote, secretary, are to be paid out of this sum), $2,000.

To assist in publishing the transactions of the association of Dominion land surveyors, $125.

Protection of timber, tree culture, inspection and management of forest reserves, surveys of forest resources and research in forestry and forest products, etc., $1,574,313.

Grant to Canadian forestry association, $4,000.

For investigation of water and power resources, including the Dominion hydrometric survey ond for the administration of the Dominion Water-Power, Irrigation and Reclamation acts, $500,000.

To cover professional assistance engaged by the governor in council to assist the departmental officers who are advising re international and boundary waterway questions, $15,000.

Amount required to meet expenses of Lake of the Woods Control Board, $10,000.

To provide for the expenses connected with Canadian national parks, historic sites, care of indigents in the parks, etc., and to reimburse the provincial government for the salaries of police magistrates at Banff and at Jasper, $1,358,000.

Administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, $58,825.

To provide for the construction of the Golden-Revelstoke highway (revote), $150,000.

Engraving, lithographing, printing and preparation of maps, plans, reports and kindred publications of the Dominion, including salaries and necessary materials for same, etc., $271,960.

Costs of litigation and legal expenses, $20,000.

Ordnance, admiralty and railway lands:—salaries and expenses, $28,270.

Grant to Alpine Club of Canada, $1,000.

To pay Mrs. E. S. Forbes a compassionate allowance equal to one-half of the salary of her husband, payable monthly, $1,050.

Amount required to pay salaries and expenses connected with seed grain and relief collections and half of expenses of seed grain and relief adjustment board, etc., $47,460.

To provide for expenses connected with the supervisory mining engineer's office due chiefly to the recent mining activities in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan, $104,565.

To provide for the expenses connected with the commission appointed, under the Inquiries Act, to report on the question of the administration and control of the natural resources of the province of Manitoba, including services of accountants, engineers, technical advisers, clerks, reporters and assistants, etc., $35,000.—Total, $5,066,568.

Mr. EVANS: Would the minister advise the committee as to the present status of the negotiations for the return to the provinces of their natural resources? About this time last year the Prime Minister stated that the question would be dealt with after the close of the last session. Since that time a conference has been held and we understand the bases have been arrived at upon which the natural resources are to be returned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A conference was held since the close of last session and, as my hon. friend knows, a commission was appointed in regard to the province of Manitoba, the report of which was laid upon the table of the house to-day by the Prime Minister. During the discussion at that conference the province of Saskatchewan made it plain that as far as they were concerned they were not prepared to acquiesce in the return of the natural resources unless they were guaranteed the full subsidy when it would be earned. The Prime Minister offered the present subsidy to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, but it was to terminate with that amount; that is, for all time to come the present subsidy would be paid without any increase. As I have said, in the case of Saskatchewan the Premier felt that they should have the full subsidy. The Premier of Alberta asked for time to consider the matter, and so far as I know he has not decided to accept this proposition, although I would not say that it has been rejected absolutely.

Mr. MacLAREN: Does that item of contingencies cover an amount for the Fort Howe park?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, an amount of $10,000 is being provided.

Mr. GARDINER: Are homesteaders being permitted to go in and settle any distance from the railway in the Peace River district?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are not prohibited from settling wherever they desire; if the land is surveyed and open for homesteading, we take the application.

Mr. GARDINER: Does not the minister think that that is a rather poor policy in view of the fact that we may be called upon to provide railway transportation at a future date?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There was a time in my life when I felt that homesteading should be prohibited beyond thirty miles from a railway, but having been so intimately in contact with these matters I have come to realize that people cannot be stopped from going into such areas. If we made a reserved area they would simply go in and squat, and we would have the difficulty of adjusting the squatters' claims. A large number of people are going down the Peace river, between Keg river and Fort Vermilion, to take up land. My hon. friend knows that they will be very many miles from a railway, but we are being asked to make further surveys in that territory.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister give an explanation of the increase of $50,000 in salaries?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have been forced to employ additional homestead inspectors in order to keep up with the demand. Last year was one of the heaviest years in registration of homesteads we have had since I came to the department, and it was found necessary to employ fifty-three additional clerks.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister give the number of homesteads taken up last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall be glad to answer any other questions while that information is being looked up.

Mr. LUCAS: And also the number of abandoned homesteads.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can tell my hon. friend at once that I will not be able to give him that information.

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister give the committee some information as to the vote of $150,000 which is being provided for the construction of the Golden-Revelstoke highway? How much money was spent on that last year and under what arrangement with the British Columbia government is the road being constructed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As my hon. friend knows, there was a proposal to construct the highway on the grade of the Canadian Pacific through Glacier park, but after we had investigated the matter we came to the conclusion that this would be a very dangerous highway, very difficult to maintain and costly to build. It was estimated that the cost would be in the neighbourhood of $800,000. In all probability we would not be able to use it until the end of June or the beginning of July, on account of snow, and in the summer season there would be difficulty with slides. When the matter was discussed with the British Columbia government, they informed us that they proposed to build the road up the Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: Around the big bend.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not all the way, but part of the way around to meet the requirements of settlement going in there. We came to the conclusion that although the mileage would be considerably longer, the highway in that section would be much safer, and we offered to contribute the $750,000 it would cost us to build through the park. That would be our contribution towards the construction of the road from Revelstoke to Golden.

Mr. FRASER: How many miles?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking from memory, but I think it is over 150 miles.

Mr. FRASER: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We were to pay on a fifty-fifty basis until our $750,000 was exhausted, and they were to undertake to complete the road. Since the provincial government has changed, I have had a discussion with the provincial Minister of Public Works and some of the other members of the government including the premier himself. It was suggested that the new government were not very keen to go on with the proposition. Later on, however, they decided to continue the work and we are providing the money in order to be able to pay our share. We have paid nothing so far.

Mr. FRASER: But work was done last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but we have not paid anything to date.

Mr. McRAE: Has there been any proposal from the British Columbia government to turn over their parks, particularly Garibaldi, to the federal government?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Cory is in British Columbia dealing with the whole matter of the railway belt and the Peace River block. Some suggestions have come, I believe, from outside parties, and not directly through the British Columbia government. I am not able to state that they have officially suggested our taking over any of their parks, but I have heard this from other sources.

Mr. McRAE: I am very much in favour of that being done. The park administration is so satisfactory that I think better results would ensue if that course were followed.

Mr. ESLING: All the agreements between the federal government and the provincial government regarding the construction of the Revelstoke highway are completed, are they not? I mean to say that the situation at present is that it is optional with the provincial government to proceed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the fact.

Mr. ESLING: No further agreements need be consummated?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. The British Columbia government are undertaking the construction. We agree up to an amount of $750,000 to contribute fifty-fifty on the construction work as it proceeds.

Mr. ESLING: That is in lieu of what it would cost the government to build, had they elected to do so, the road through Glacier park.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is quite right.

Mr. GARDINER: When was this agreement entered into?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): About two years ago, or just before last season's construction work.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain how it is that a special privilege is handed out to British Columbia and not to the other provinces, in view of the Prime Minister's statement in the earlier part of the session?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The national highway would traverse our park, Glacier park.

Mr. GARDINER: I see.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are contributing only the amount of money it would have cost us to build through the park and to have a very dangerous highway. We are contributing that to the provincial government in order that the detour may be made around the river.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the minister taking into consideration the tremendous waste of gas in the Turner valley, and are any steps being taken to conserve that gas?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will look at Hansard, he will find that I gave a statement in that connection in answer to my hon. friend from Red Deer.

Mr. KENNEDY: In regard to the item:

To pay Mrs. E. S. Forbes a compassionate allowance equal to one-half of the salary of her husband.

Will the minister explain what this is for?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): She is the wife of an ex-secretary to the Minister of the Interior. It was claimed that her husband contracted an illness that affected him mentally and he is an inmate of a mental institution as a result of illness contracted while he was in the employ of the government. For some years Mrs. Forbes has been receiving this allowance.

Mr. GARDINER: Could the minister give the committee any information as to how the compromise with regard to seed grain liens is proceeding?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are getting many settlements from the committee in charge of that work. I am asking in the supplementaries, as my hon. friend knows, for $47,000 to meet our obligation in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: I merely bring to the attention of the minister complaints by many people who are trying to secure a settlement, that the negotiations are too prolonged, and that they cannot get any information from the board in regard to their claims. If the minister will at some time look into the matter and see if he cannot speed up the work, it will be much appreciated.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I judge from the number of settlements that are coming through that the committee is accomplishing a great deal. It is possible that they cannot overtake the work.

Mr. KENNEDY: There was considerable agitation for a highway connecting Jasper park with the province of British Columbia. Is anything being done with regard to that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will not be a serious matter to connect the detour by the Columbia river with the entrance to Jasper on the west side. We intend to build down on the abandoned grade to the outskirts of the park. We will possibly do something with regard to that this summer, although our main work this year will be to connect up the eastern entrance with the Edmonton highway.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister made a statement to the committee in regard to the reorganization of the land branches of the department? I noticed in the press some days ago an announcement which, if it correct, will give me some satisfaction. It is to the effect that the department is organizing its land branches into one branch. Does the minister care to make a statement in that connection?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The statement given out covers the whole arrangement. They are reorganized. Unfortunately, they were a long time in reorganizing and in consequence, the staff of the Dominion Lands branch was delayed perhaps a year or eighteen months longer than it should have been in receiving adjustments, but the organization has taken place just as announced.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand the minister intends to effect economies by that reorganization. In what manner will the economies be effected? Will it be by reduction of staff or what?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There will be a reduction of staff, although not to any considerable degree, but the main economy will be effected in better supervision and in the fact that the work will be handled much more expeditiously than it was formerly. My complaint was that we had too many branches.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is no doubt about that. Of all the departments of government, the Department of the Interior, for some reason unknown to me, has always appeared to me to be somewhat top heavy with organization, all sorts of heads everywhere. I notice, for example, that the cost of the total land work done, the outside work, was $440,000 in round figures, and the total cost of the inside service at headquarters was $530,000. I do not know whether it is fair—I am not going to be unfair—to draw any particular conclusions from these figures, but when they were brought to my attention they startled me. The headquarters staff cost $86,492 per year more than the outside service; in other words, the actual activities of the department cost less than the administrative end. It seemed to be a pretty heavy item, and I do sincerely hope that the reorganization of the lands branch as announced by the minister will have the effect of cutting down the spread between those two services. That deals with the land service only.

As to the general service in the Department of the Interior, I find that the Ottawa service alone cost in 1913-14 in round figures $1,031,000, and the outside service $811,000, and in 1927-28 the Ottawa service cost $2,609,000 and the outside service $1,389,000. The striking feature about this is the enormous increase, an increase of over 100 per cent since 1913-14, since when a great deal of the activities of the department have been curtailed, at least in the lands branch.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): They have increased.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I take it that the land settlement or homesteading is very much less now than it was prior to 1911, 1912 and 1913. I wonder if the minister could give us a brief explanation of why there has been an increase of over 100 per cent since 1913-14.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not the homesteading figures of 1913 before me, but I may say for the information of my hon. friend that last year was one of the heaviest years in homesteading in the history of the department, 7,233 entries being granted. That in itself means a tremendous amount of bookkeeping. In addition, all our survey parties are paid from Ottawa; they are not charged to the outside service, so one does not get a proper conception if it is assumed that because a surveyor is out in the field he is being paid from the outside service. He is a permanent officer at Ottawa. That is the chief of the party himself. The labourers, of course, who are employed for a few months out in the field are charged to the outside service. The homestead inspectors and the clerks in the land offices in the three prairie provinces are the only staff of any moment that we have in the outside service, but all the records are kept here, and when my hon. friend remembers that we keep a record of all the grazing lands, mining leaseholds, and water-powers in the three prairie provinces he will readily understand that it requires a very large staff to keep an accurate account of every transaction that passes through the Department of the Interior. I know there is a belief that all that work is done in the outside land offices, but that is not the fact. All the records are kept here and full information concerning every transaction can be obtained from the office at Ottawa. The rentals are all passed in here and the accounting is all done here, and that, of course, necessitates a very large staff in Ottawa. Our forestry activities are also all directed from Ottawa; that work has grown tremendously in recent years, and must increase if we are to protect the forests.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is no question that there are certain branches that have increased, mines and forests particularly. On the other hand, there has been a tremendous and sometimes unexplainable increase in the personnel, salaries and costs. When will the reorganization now being undertaken by the minister be completed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is completed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When will it be in operation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It has been in operation for some little time. I cannot give the exact date it went into effect.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do hope that it will bring the results that are expected of it. I recollect taking this matter up with the minister four years ago, and he promised at that time in response to a letter from myself that he would undertake this work at once. I am not blaming him in the least, but I think the delay in bringing about that reorganization calls for an explanation of some kind. But I do not want that now as the reorganization is under way. Does not the minister think it is, after all, somewhat belated in view of the probable transfer of the natural resources to the prairie provinces next session?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot speak as to its being belated. All I can say is that it does take a considerable time to get the reorganization put into effect. I frankly am unable to explain the reason for the delay. Some of these delays are very vexatious, and particularly vexatious to this staff.

Mr. GARDINER: Now that the reorganization has taken place, can the minister give any idea as to its value as compared with the old organization?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not quite understand the purport of my hon. friend's question. We certainly would not have entered on the reorganization if we had not thought it would be valuable to the staff and from the point of view of the service rendered.

Mr. GARDINER: Are we getting any better service on account of the reorganization?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not heard any complaints of the service being delayed, and we have a department in which it is very important that speedy answers be given to requests and letters. We do a tremendous business through the mails, and of necessity replies must be made promptly.

Mr. GARDINER: I take it that the minister was of the opinion that a reorganization was absolutely essential. He states now that it has been in effect for some time, and I am asking whether there is any improvement under the reorganization as compared with the old organization, and if so, in what respects.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The complete reorganization went into effect only on the 1st of April last. One thing I do insist upon is prompt action on the part of the staff, and I think we are getting that; at least, I am not getting any complaints about the service, and if the service were delayed I would be sure to hear of it. Moreover, I think that the reorganization has short-circuited a lot of the work. There are not so many people required to examine documents that are going out to the public. All these documents, of course, must be accurate. That is very important where so much is dependent on the treatment of the many leases, affecting large numbers of people, that pass through our hands annually.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are any of the highly paid supervisory positions being done away with as a result of the reorganization?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Some of them will disappear upon the retirement of the present incumbents, and quite a number of them are just about due to take their retirement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very glad to hear that statement, because in the report of the special committee on the civil service, at page 25, dealing with this particular subject that we are discussing, it is stated:

> It is too early to estimate with any accuracy the probable saving which will result, but a considerable reduction can be made by the following:
> 1. The elimination of several highly-paid supervisory positions.
> 2. The pooling of all office services, e.g., stenography, typing and filing.
> 3. The retirement of as many employees as are eligible, and the abolition of the positions thus vacated.

I suppose all this has been taken into consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: I take it that this million and a half expenditure has to do with looking after the timber in the prairie provinces and the Peace River block?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, by far the major portion of the expenditure has to do with the area mentioned by my hon. friend. We do spend some money in endeavouring to get a coordinated effort throughout all the provinces, but of course we have no jurisdiction in the provinces owning their resources.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I see $1,358,000 is to be expended on Canadian national parks, historic sites, and so forth. How is this divided between the provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The three national parks on which we make our largest expenditure are located in the Rocky mountains. The historic sites are scattered all over the Dominion. The largest expenditure in that connection would be in eastern Canada. I may as well give my hon. friend particulars of these expenditures:

Rocky mountains park, $352,350.
Jasper park, $269,220.
Buffalo park, $61,300.
Yoho park, $87,345.
Glacier park, $15,720.
Waterton lakes park, $65,965.
Mount Revelstoke park, $15,750.
Elk island park, $27,935.
Kootenay park, $77,800.
Prince Albert park, $90,000.
Publicity, $65,000.
Head office, $78,210.
Historic sites, $42,000.
Fort Anne park, $4,500.
St. Lawrence islands park, $7,000.
Point Pelee park, $8,000.
Antelope reserve, $2,000.
Vidal's point park, $500.
Field engineering, $47,200.
Fort Howe, $10,000.
Beausoleil islands, $30,205.—Total, $1,358,000.

The last item is for the purchase of islands in the Georgian bay district which we intend to establish as a park.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How much is spent in Quebec on historic sites?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is not in my department. We have spent some money for the purchase of lands at Louisburg. We will have to make a considerable expenditure to restore that historic site.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What is the appropriation for Louisburg this year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have no appropriation except for engineering and the preparation of a plan. With respect to Louisburg and some of the older historic sites, the government hopes either to enlarge the work of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board or to create a new board to take over that work in its entirety and give it more authority to deal with the restoration of these historic sites in eastern Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How much money was expended last year to take over the properties in Louisburg?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think in the neighbourhood of $23,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Who took charge of the payment of this money?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Wardle, the chief engineer of national parks, was sent down to make a valuation of the properties and secure voluntary options. Someone was engaged by the justice department to examine the title.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How much money was spent on legal expenses?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will have to get that information from the Justice department.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Could the minister say through whose hands this money went?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. FRASER: Would it be apropos at the present time for the minister to tell us what stage the negotiations have reached in regard to the transfer of the Peace River block and the railway belt in British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The proposed arrangements have not been submitted to our government, but Doctor Scott, the deputy superintendent general of Indian Affairs, has been to British Columbia, and any little differences have been smoothed out. Mr. Cory, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, is now in British Columbia discussing details of the park lands, water-powers, and matters of that kind, to see how near we can come to a settlement.

Mr. FRASER: Have there been any negotiations in regard to the taking over of Mount Robson park in connection with the transfer of lands or anything of the kind?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are asking for an addition west of Mount Assiniboine.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

We are now asking for the Mount Robson territory as an addition to Jasper park. We hope in these negotiations to secure those areas and make them additional to the park.

Mr. FRASER: A moment or two ago the minister mentioned something about a highway through Jasper park to connect Edmonton with the British Columbia boundary. You are constructing that road?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Do you propose to get to the British Columbia boundary with that road this year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I doubt it. It is not very expensive construction, but we are bending all our energies to connect with the road to Edmonton. Is my hon. friend familiar with the situation?

Mr. FRASER: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): At present we have built up to Lucerne. It is a question of taking off the ties and spreading the gravel in spots down to Red Water junction, which is practically the boundary of the park. We have not made any surveys, but are told by people who claim to know that it will not be a difficult matter to connect up the road around the big bend with the western entrance to Jasper park.

Mr. FRASER: That is what I wanted to know. Provided you get control of Mount Robson park, do you propose to extend your highway into British Columbia until you come to the boundary of the Mount Robson park in British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite right.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Can the minister give me details of the expenditure in Louisburg, especially as regards the taking over of the land last season? Would it also be possible for him to give me the name of the legal men who were engaged in handling the transfers of land?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will get that information for my hon. friend when the supplementary estimates are going through. Perhaps my hon. friend will then mention the matter.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The reason that I ask for the information is that I cannot understand how my political opponent was given the opportunity of doing this work. I know he did the work in this town, an old historic site which is in my constituency; and every legal transaction that has taken place has gone through the hands of my political opponent. I want the information in regard to it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend wants the amounts paid him for the service.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Not only the amounts paid him, but what was paid to each individual. I want the whole thing complete. Of course, we shall have to wait another year before it appears in the Auditor General's Report, but I should like to have it this summer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will give the information when the supplementaries are under consideration.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): There is an increase of $94,565 in the vote for expenses connected with the supervisory mining engineer's office, due chiefly to recent mining activities in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan. Will the minister explain this?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have had to increase the expenditures considerably owing to the opening up of new mining areas. This has necessitated the establishment of recording offices as well as the sending of officers into the territory to investigate disputes. This is the chief reason for the increase, together with certain additional services which will be required in the oil fields both in southern Saskatchewan and in Alberta. In these provinces there has been a greatly increased mining activity which calls for additional expenditures.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Under what item does the geological survey come? That is not included in this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is charged to the Department of the Interior. The geological survey vote is merely for the purpose of sending parties out on geological work in the way of investigation.

Mr. LUCAS: There is an item of $47,460 for salaries and expenses connected with seed grain and relief collections. Was any money paid for seed grain relief last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no change in this vote; the vote has been standing ever since the relief was granted. There is still $6,000,000 outstanding. As regards a portion of it, I am doubtful whether we shall be able to collect; but of necessity we must keep notifying those who have not paid and also keep the accounts up to date. The vote is the same as last year's.

Mr. LUCAS: I understood the Minister of Finance a year ago to say that something like $2,000,000 was being provided for this item, and I know that applications came from my district asking for cancellations. There were men who had these sums charged up against them and when they moved out of the southern district up to farms in northern Alberta these charges were still against them and they were being pressed. I understood that if they had a proper case to submit to the adjustment board the charges would be cancelled.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is true, and they are going through almost every day.

Mr. LUCAS: What amounts have been cancelled?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Last year some $50,000 was cancelled in connection with seed grain indebtedness. This was done on the order of the board.

Mr. LUCAS: What board recommends these adjustments?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In Alberta the board comprises Mr. Fream, chairman, Mr. Matheson, our inspector, and another gentleman. It is representative of both governments.

Mr. LUCAS: That board recommends to the department?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: What amount was collected last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They did not do any collecting. I cannot give the amounts that have accrued but I can give the amount cancelled in the way of loans held against these properties by the federal government.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister stated that the cancellations amounted last year to $50,000. What did that service cost?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as we are concerned, our officers are under regular salary, so that there is no cost to us. I do not know what the cost to the Alberta government is, but Mr. Fream is an officer of that government. There are no outside officials employed on the work.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I wish to direct the attention of the minister to some very pointed complaints I have had in connection with the sale of section 26, township 32, range 32, west of the first meridian. This is a piece of land which only recently was used for pasture by the Keeseekoose Indians; as a matter of fact, it has been used by them for many years. Many parties in the past, year after year, have been applying to the department for an opportunity to purchase that land, but the department has always replied that the land was not for sale. In various letters I have on file it is stated that due notice would be given when the land should be put up for sale.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was that Indian land?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would my hon. friend mind leaving it until we come to the supplementaries for the Indian department?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Those will not be up to-night?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Item agreed to.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Public printing and stationery—printing, binding, etc., the annual statutes, $12,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand that the printing of the British North America Act comes under the department of the Secretary of State. Is that the case?

Mr. RINFRET: There is another item which covers parliamentary documents, if that is what my hon. friend has reference to.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is it a fact that the printing of the British North America Act comes under this department?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes.

Mr. MacLAREN: Then I wish to point out that the books containing that act contain nothing more than the British North America Act and its amendments; they do not include the London agreement of 1866. As the minister knows, that agreement was arrived at by the duly accredited representatives of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, who assembled in London in 1866, and the agreement was similar in many particulars to the Quebec agreement which was concluded a year or two previous. I desire to point out that the London agreement is a highly important document in connection with the formation of this Dominion, but one can only find it occasionally in print; it can be found only in the old blue books of the time of confederation. Its value lies in the fact that it was the very basis of the British North America Act. I believe that it has not only historical value but that it is an important document in connection with the constitution of this country, and I would suggest to the minister that when the British North America Act is again published the London agreement be included in the same volume, partly for purposes of comparison and partly for purpose of reference, since the British North America Act might be looked upon as the enabling act with regard to the London agreement, which was arrived at by the representatives of the provinces.

I do not think I have ever asked the minister for anything before, and this is really not a personal request but concerns a matter which interests many people in this country I would like to ask the minister to include the London agreement in the next issue of the British North America Act. The minister has nodded his head, but that will not appear in Hansard, and it would be more satisfactory to have his verbal assent.

Mr. RINFRET: I think the suggestion is an excellent one and I will certainly consider it when the next publication is being made; in other words, my answer is yes.

Mr. MacLAREN: How far did the minister say he would go?

Mr. RINFRET: I said I quite agreed with my hon. friend.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand the minister agrees to do as I have requested?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes, decidedly so.

Mr. WARD: I might suggest that when the minister publishes a new issue of the British North America Act it might be well to print enough extra copies to place one in the possession of each member of the house.

Mr. RINFRET: That is another very good suggestion, with which I quite agree.

Item agreed to.

Plant—new, $42,544.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain what this new plant consists of?

Mr. RINFRET: Although this amount is rather larger than the vote last year, the amount placed in the estimates last year was less than the usual amount necessary for this work.

Item agreed to.

Expenses under the Naturalization Act, $8,000.

Mr. RINFRET: When this item was up this morning an hon. member asked me as to the distribution of the fees paid by applicants. I may state that a fee of $5 is required from each applicant, which fee is paid to the clerk of the court before which the application is made. In the larger centres, such as Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, there is a special regulation under which, if the total amount collected is more than $2,000, the balance is turned over to the department. In that branch we also have a little revenue from other sources, such as certified copies of former certificates of naturalization and also certificates granted by the Secretary of State under certain sections of the act which do not call for appearance in court. The total amount thus collected by the department in the fiscal year 1928-29 was $6,966. This amount, of course, was turned over to the Receiver General and cannot be credited to this item.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is a question I should like to ask under this item, and I might say I brought to the attention of the department a case which illustrates my point. A judge in my own city sent in a report with regard to certain applications for naturalization, in which he stated that the applicants had not a sufficient knowledge of English. It appears that the people were somewhat flustered at coming before a judge, and later on there was another hearing after which the judge declared that these people had a sufficiently good knowledge of English to enable them to become naturalized. Both reports were sent to the department but as yet the naturalization papers have not been issued. Notwithstanding the fact that it was the same authority which stated in the second place that the people had a sufficient knowledge of English, the department still takes the view that the first report must be adhered to. It seems to me that when we invite immigrants to this country we should admit them to citizenship as soon as they can qualify. These people took the trouble to make applications, and they learned English; why have certificates been refused under these circumstances?

Mr. RINFRET: I have looked into a number of cases similar to the one mentioned by the hon. member. He is not quite right when he says that although a second report was made the department is adhering to the first one. When the famous bill concerning naturalization was before the house last year, I think I explained that although an applicant may come before the court we also conduct an inquiry through the mounted police and the other means at the disposal of the department. In certain cases the report of the court is favourable while that of our inspectors is in the other direction, and it is within the discretion of the minister either to grant or to refuse the certificate. We do not act against the report of the court, but we do not always follow that recommendation, as sometimes we are not as easily satisfied as the tribunal has been. There is no finality to our decision, as the intervention of an influential person will induce us to renew our investigation in an effort to find out whether or not we have been misinformed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to draw the minister's attention to what seems to me to be somewhat of an anomaly in the Naturalization Act. I have in my hand a file covering the case of Mr. H. Stuckenberg, who is living at the present time at Kandahar, in Saskatchewan. Mr. Stuckenberg was a Danish citizen but had lived in Canada for a number of years. He enlisted in the army at the outbreak of the war and took the oath of allegiance at that time. Apparently that destroyed his Danish citizenship, because when he attempted to obtain a passport to visit his native country he found that he was not a Danish citizen, and he also discovered that he was not a Canadian citizen. Here is a man who took upon himself the supreme obligation of citizenship; he enlisted in the army and served throughout the whole war. I have discussed this case with the deputy minister and it has been pointed out to me that under the present legislation this man is not a citizen. Of course the minister can reply that he should make application for naturalization in the ordinary way, but this man thinks that that would be humiliating, and I agree with him. He does not feel that he should be forced to appear before the clerk of the court, pay about ten or fifteen dollars in lawyers' fees and other expenses, and go through all the formality of becoming a Canadian citizen. I suggest to the minister that some change should be made in the act which would admit a man of that type to citizenship.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He was accepted as a citizen for one purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL: He was accepted as a citizen and as a soldier, and yet to-day we deny him citizenship.

Mr. JACOBS: Has he voted in any of the elections?

Mr. CAMPBELL: He is not eligible to vote; if he did he would be liable under the criminal code.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. Under our present act naturalization depends upon two things; (a) residence and (b) character, habits and reputation. Service under the colours does not constitute residence because a man may become a soldier and yet not be a citizen. Taking the oath of allegiance merely means that he takes it to serve in that capacity. The difficulty in meeting the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is that this is an imperial act in the sense that in granting a certificate of naturalization we do not confer Canadian citizenship; we confer British citizenship which is good the world over. If we amend our statute it must be amended in all the overseas dominions and in Great Britain as well, because we have adopted a uniformity of qualification in order to confer a uniform citizenship. I have had to deal with more than one case of a similar nature, and there seems to be a misunderstanding on the part of those who took the oath of allegiance; it is an oath to serve the country in the capacity of a soldier, and not an oath of citizenship or naturalization, which involves a further inquiry upon which the granting of the certificate is predicated.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I quite understand that the man is not a citizen under the present act.

Mr. BENNETT: He would not be eligible in any part of the world.

Mr. CAMPBELL: He has been in the country a sufficient length of time, and he could qualify.

Mr. BENNETT: Then he should do that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was suggesting to the minister that it might be possible to amend the act.

Mr. RINFRET: I think the hon. member will give me credit for attempting to amend the act in certain respects, but the leader of the opposition stated the case very well when he said that there were certain things which would not come within the power of this parliament. As we confer British naturalization we have to abide by certain conditions which exist throughout the empire and which are decided upon at every imperial conference.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Let me remind the minister of a phase of this matter which I have discussed many times before. There are in my constituency many people of foreign birth—and this would apply all over Canada—who find it very inconvenient to go to the judicial centres and appear before a judge to make their application for naturalization. On many branch lines there is only a tri-weekly service, and it means a week away from home. Many of these settlers are very poor; the $25 to $30 it would cost them means a great deal, and many people are going without naturalization simply because they cannot afford it. I have suggested both to the minister and to his deputy that arrangements should be made so that the judges could hear these cases when they are sitting at local points. The deputy minister promised me that something would be done, and in some cases this arrangement has been made. In my own village of Pelly, where the judge sits once a year, there have been a few cases dealt with in this way, but at other times this procedure is not carried out. In most cases the judges refuse to deal with the applicants at that local point, and the people living in the local district where the judge comes once, twice or sometimes three times a year, have to go to all the trouble and expense of travelling to the judicial centre, and this means a considerable expense. The Under Secretary of State pointed out to me that this could be arranged only by cooperation with the provincial authorities. Apparently no provision is made for extra expenses of the judges when this would entail remaining over in the district for another day. I want to suggest to the minister that this matter be further discussed with the provincial authorities. There is no reason in the world why proper arrangements could not be made so that these cases could be dealt with at every local point, thus saving these people all the delay, trouble and expense of going to the judicial centre.

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend is aware, as I reminded him a moment ago, that the best way to deal with the situation he has depicted would have been for both houses of parliament to adopt a bill which I introduced last year to do away altogether with appearance before a court. This house assented to the bill by a somewhat large majority, but it failed to pass the other house, and therefore the amendment which we sought and for which I fought rather energetically, did not become law. We do not have any power over the judges, as my hon. friend will appreciate. The act provides that the applicant shall go before a tribunal, and we are powerless to compel either the clerk of the court or the judge himself to deal with the cases sooner or in some other manner than that which the judge himself determines. We are doing everything in our power by negotiation and conciliation to expedite the work of the applicants, but I am sure my hon. friend will realize that as a department, as long as the act remains as it is, unamended, we are travelling under a handicap.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me it is rather a poor excuse for the minister to attribute the present condition in this respect to the fact that these houses of parliament did not pass the amendment which he brought in last year. The fact remains that that amendment did not pass and is not law. I am asking the minister to do what he can to deal with the situation as it exists to-day. This difficulty has been going on for years and I can hardly agree with the minister's statement that he is powerless; that he has no control over the judges. I have discussed the matter with the Under Secretary of State and he has not given me that impression. It seems to me it is a matter that can be simply and easily arranged between the federal and the provincial governments. It is a matter, I understand, simply of slight extra amount being paid towards judge's expenses, because in some of these instances it means that the judge is compelled to remain over an extra day.

Mr. RINFRET: On that point, I am sure my hon. friend is aware that we are not at liberty to allow judges any proportion of the fees. The federal law is clear that judges cannot receive any compensation beyond their salaries as judges.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is no question of fees or other remuneration involved. This is merely a matter of extra expense that the judge would incur if he were obliged to remain over an extra day or two. That should be an easy matter to arrange between the federal and provincial governments. If the minister would discuss the question with the Under Secretary of State, I am sure the latter would point out how it could be done.

Mr. RINFRET: I will give the matter my very best attention.

Mr. WARD: I am not sure whether this is the proper place to suggest amendments to the Naturalization Act, but I should like to suggest a modification of that law, which, as it stands at present, compels all new Canadians to have a working knowledge, so to speak, of the English or the French language before being permitted to become naturalized Canadian citizens. In this connection we should take into consideration the fact that a large number of new Canadians come to Canada in middle life with no knowledge of either English or French, but immediately become good Canadian citizens and endeavour to educate their families. In fact I have in my constituency many families where the parents cannot speak a word of English but where some of the children have taken the highest honours in the universities. New Canadians who are endeavouring to live up to all the laws of Canadian society, who are just as good citizens as those who speak our languages, should not be debarred from becoming Canadian citizens because they cannot speak the English or the French language. A grave injustice has been done to many new Canadians by the fact that under the circumstances under which they were placed in this country, they cannot become naturalized citizens. We all know that the policy of settlement, whether it was right or wrong, has isolated those people in the west. For instance, one district will be German, another Austrian, another something else, and they have principalities of their own with no opportunity of learning the English language. Persons who come here from other lands in middle life, therefore, and who are anxious to become good Canadians, should not be debarred from securing naturalization simply because they cannot speak the English or the French language.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My attention was called to one particular incident that may give point to what has just been said. An elderly Icelandic woman came to this country some years ago and moved up country between lake Manitoba and lake Winnipeg. She lived a hard life under those pioneering conditions, brought up her family there, contributed as much as she possibly could to the upbuilding of this country. She was in every way an intelligent woman, but she had no opportunity, in that isolated life, of learning another language. The question of old age pensions came up. She is in every way qualified by residence, age and so forth to be the recipient of an old age pension, but she is not naturalized, and under the existing act there seems to be no way by which she can obtain naturalization. It is altogether unfair that she should be deprived of the old age pension simply because of a condition of that character.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The hon. member for Mackenzie has, I believe, made a very able speech in support of a little more consideration for those of foreign birth who come to this country desirous of becoming citizens and who, because of circumstances, are unable to appear before a judge and demonstrate their ability to speak English. I notice, however, in last year's Hansard that when the bill to provide this very thing was before the house, my hon. friend himself voted to give the bill the six months' hoist.

Mr. BENNETT: That was because of the other provisions in it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: As I know the hon. member is a little overwrought, I will excuse him for his language to-night. He has just returned from the country where he ran up against some difficulties and he is not just normal or he would not make the error he has made. I was not dealing with that question at all. I had my own reasons for opposing the change in the Naturalization Act. I believe it could be dealt with better by judges than by politicians.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Now the judges are dealing with it, the hon. member does not like it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Many people in the west who want to get naturalization papers, would prefer to have their cases dealt with by judges rather than by politicians. If they happen to oppose the political party in power they might have a good deal of difficulty in securing naturalization papers. The question I dealt with had nothing at all to do with the question raised by the hon. member for Weyburn. It is a very important question and one with which I hope the minister will deal, because if dealt with it would save these people a great deal of money and facilitate the securing of naturalization.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I understand the hon. gentleman's explanation. He says that last year these people might have wanted votes to assist the party in power but the party being now out of power in Saskatchewan, there is no longer any necessity for killing the bill, and he would like to have it passed.

Mr. BENNETT: They have only been defeated; they are not yet out of power.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: How much English is required of the applicant for naturalization? If the judge happens to be hard-boiled he may require the applicant to speak Oxford English, and if the applicant does not know Oxford English his application may be refused.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not see what answer I can make to that. So long as the act remains as it is, the applicant must go before the judge, and the judge use his own discretion.

[Mr. E. J. Young.]

Mr. SPENCER: How much revenue was received last year from naturalization certificates?

Mr. RINFRET: I gave that information when my hon. friend was not in the chamber. He will find it in Hansard to-morrow.

Item agreed to.

Department of Labour — Annuities Act, $75,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How many annuities have been taken out since the act came into force?

Mr. HEENAN: 10,264.

Mr. SPENCER: Are these annuities being taken up pretty well by the public?

Mr. HEENAN: Last year there was an increase of over 150 per cent, and this year there has been an increase of 11.19 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the average amount of the annuity taken out?

Mr. HEENAN: About $356.

Item agreed to.

Combines Investigation Act, $25,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: In connection with the investigation that was held last year into the fruit industry, the minister told us that he had received a portion of the fines, $50,000. Has any more been paid?

Mr. HEENAN: The whole $200,000 has been paid in this year.

Mr. BENNETT: Any part of it remitted?

Mr. HEENAN: We remitted the expenses of the British Columbia government, which were $10,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Were any of the fines remitted?

Mr. HEENAN: No. We remitted only what the British Columbia government stated were their expenses in connection with it. No part of the fines was remitted.

Mr. BENNETT: The fines went into consolidated revenue?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Conciliation and Labour Act, $55,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the Labour Gazette published under this item?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Although average earnings are lower in Montreal and in Quebec than in other sister cities, as was established on March 3rd of this year by Mr. Gerald H. Brown, Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour, before the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, as will be seen from report No. 3, page 40, the cost of living is as high as and probably higher in the province of Quebec than in other provinces on account of the numerous large families, and the admirable Canadian mothers should be praised the more for bringing up their children well, when it is such a hard task for them to manage the home on the pay envelope they receive.

By virtue of chapter 94 of the Quebec revised statutes, 1925, section 4:

The functions, powers and duties of the minister (of Public Works and Labour) shall be the following:

4. He institutes and controls inquiries into important industrial questions, and may collect useful facts and statistics relating thereto, and may transmit the same to the Quebec Bureau of Statistics.

In l'Annuaire Statistique de Quebec, 1928 (the Quebec Year Book, 1928) at page 394, there is the following statement, which I have translated:

The labour statistics are collected by the bureau of statistics with the help of uniform forms mailed to all associations of the province. Out of 454 labour groups called to answer the sheet of questions, only 245 sent back their report.

Therefore, the Minister of Labour of the province of Quebec can plead his ignorance of labour conditions in the province notwithstanding the fact that there are other reliable sources of information which are open to the public. But even if so many labour unions had not answered his queries, why did not the Minister of Labour of the government of Quebec take advantage of the statute to send some officers of his department to collect those statistics on the spot so as to be better informed on the situation of labour within the province? Are we to conclude that the mailing of questionnaires to the labour unions was simply a matter of departmental routine, and that he personally took no more interest in the matter?

As it would take too long to discuss the rates of wages in all trades, let us for instance, study the conditions prevailing in nine particular trades which affect thousands upon thousands of people in the province of Quebec. The figures will speak for themselves. They are taken from the Labour Gazette, founded 29 years ago, by the right hon. the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), when he was Deputy Minister of Labour, and who has always taken a great interest in labour questions and showed himself to be devoted to the welfare of the people. Not only are minimum wages in Quebec city lower than in any other big city in the Dominion, but the maximum wages in Montreal are below the average wages in fourteen other big Canadian cities. Are not the artisans of the province of Quebec entitled to be paid the same salary as their brethren in other big Canadian cities? The figures that I shall quote were taken from the Labour Gazette of January, 1929, and I have made the calculations myself. The figures are as follows:

—	Minimum Wages in Quebec City	Minimum Wages in other Canadian Cities*	Maximum Wages in Montreal	Average of Wages in Canadian Cities	Maximum Wages in other Canadian Cities*
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Bricklayers	0 90	0 90 Halifax	1 12½	1 20	1 45 Windsor
Carpenters	0 45	0 60 St. John, N.B.	0 75	0 86	1 05 Winnipeg
Electricians	0 45	0 55 St. John, N.B.	0 75	0 86	1 25 Windsor
Painters	0 47	0 60 St. John, N.B.	0 70	0 76	0 90 Edmonton
Plasterers	0 85	0 90 Halifax	1 12½	1 16	1 50 Windsor
Sheet metal workers	0 45	0 60 St. John, N.B.	0 75	0 87	1 06¼ Vancouver
Stonecutters	0 60	0 80 St. John, N.B.	0 90	1 03	1 37½ Windsor
Plumbers	0 45	0 65 St. John, N.B.	0 85	0 98	1 12½ Toronto
Manual labour	0 35	0 30 St. John, N.B.	0 45	0 46	0 65 Toronto

*Halifax, St. John, N.B., Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver, Victoria.

It is rather difficult to give an exact figure for the average of wages. For instance, in Regina the minimum wages for manual labour are forty cents and the maximum sixty. How many men work at forty cents and how many at sixty would take a long time to ascertain through an investigation in all the important cities of the Dominion. In the above quoted book the minimum and maximum wages for manual labour are given for twelve out of fourteen cities, but the Labour Gazette gives the average rate in each city for the eight other trades in 99 cases out of 112. So one can easily find the average of wages in all these cities by adding the wages for each trade in the fourteen above-mentioned cities and dividing each total by fourteen. In the cities where for the trades the minimum and maximum wages are shown, the approximate average wages can be established with the above reservation by adding one-half of the difference between both to the minimum wages.

The following tradesmen, who get the maximum wages in Montreal, receive so much less than the average of wages paid in fourteen big Canadian cities, according to calculations made by figures taken from the supplement to the Labour Gazette, January 1929.

Tradesmen	Day less (8 hours)	Week less (6 days)	Year less (52 weeks)
1. Bricklayers.	.60	3.60	187.20
2. Carpenters.	.88	5.28	274.56
3. Electricians.	.88	5.28	274.56
4. Painters.	.48	2.88	149.76
5. Plasterers.	.28	1.68	87.36
6. Sheet metal workers .	1.84	11.04	574.08
7. Stone cutters. . . .	....	....	.....
8. Plumbers.	1.44	8.64	449.28
9. Manual labour. . . .	.08	0.48	24.96

The following tradesmen, who get the minimum wages in Quebec City, where the Premier and the Minister of Labour of Quebec live, receive so much less than the average of wages paid in fourteen big Canadian cities, according to calculations made by figures taken from the supplement to the Labour Gazette, January 1929.

Tradesmen	Day less (8 hours)	Week less (6 days)	Year less (52 weeks)
1. Bricklayers.	$2.40	$14.40	$ 748.80
2. Carpenters.	3.44	20.64	1,073.28
3. Electricians. . . .	3.44	20.64	1,073 28
4. Painters.	2.32	13.92	723.84
5. Plasterers.	2.48	16.88	877.76
6. Sheet metal workers	4.24	25.44	1,322.88
7. Stone cutters. . . .	2.20	13.20	686.40
8. Plumbers.	4.64	27.84	1,447.68
9. Manual labour. . .	.88	5.28	274.56

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. member read that latter item again? I can hardly understand it.

Mr. POULIOT: Manual labour, less per day, 88 cents; less per week, $5.88; less per year, $274.56. Those are the minimum wages paid in Quebec as compared with the average of wages in fourteen big Canadian cities. Those figures are astounding. The average earnings are lower not only in Quebec city, but even in Montreal, than in other big Canadian cities, and that although the cost of living is as high as and probably higher than, in the province of Quebec.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I understand that the question of minimum wages comes within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Would it not be more effective for the hon. member to read his statement to the Premier of Quebec?

Mr. POULIOT: The point is that these people are not interested in the matter because they do not even get the statistics which they are supposed to be given according to the law. I wish to put my point of view to the Minister of Labour and to disclose the situation as it is, because I want him to give some relief in this matter. I hope the house will be indulgent enough to listen to me for a few minutes longer because it is in the interests of these people that I am now speaking.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are making a statement to Quebec now, aren't you?

Mr. POULIOT: I am not making a statement to Quebec but about Quebec and I contend that some relief should be provided. Although these statistics are rather dull when they are read in this way, I can assure my hon. friends opposite that they will find them more interesting when they come to read them in Hansard to-morrow. What I am stating to-night affects not only one man but thousands upon thousands of families in Quebec.

First, the average earnings are lower not only in Quebec City but even in Montreal than in any other large Canadian city—and that, although the cost of living is as high as and probably higher in the province of Quebec than in other provinces on account of numerous large familes.

Secondly, the Quebec and Montreal manufacturers do not sell their products any cheaper than those of other provinces.

Thirdly, therefore, the difference between the wages in Montreal and Quebec and those in other large Canadian cities means a loss to labour and additional and illegitimate gains to capital in our province. What is the use of inviting big firms to open new plants in the province of Quebec if the artisans who will work there are underpaid.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. POULIOT: Surely.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Two, as a matter of fact. Is he aware that the Premier of Quebec was in an adjoining city, not far from here, this afternoon? Does he not think that he should have Mr. Taschereau paged in order that that gentleman might have the benefit of the interesting and important address he is making?

Mr. POULIOT: The dinner which is being given in Hull is not a joint affair; that is the first point. And in the second place I may say that I expected that the estimates of the Minister of Labour would come before the house on Monday of last week, and if they have come on to-night it is not my fault; it is an act of Providence.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Well, why should not my hon. friend take advantage of that act of Providence and have Mr. Taschereau here? I believe that most governments are interested in the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: Unfortunately there is no radio in this house so that my speech cannot be heard in Hull to-night. Now it is rather hard to expect a supporter of the provincial government to move a vote of censure against that government; but how could it be explained that matters of such great importance have not been brought before the Quebec legislature by any member of the provincial opposition, not even by the Conservative members of Montreal? What is this or that piece of their criticism compared to the welfare and comfort of so many large families?

Taking the official report of the Dominion-provincial conference held in 1927, I find that the Premier of Quebec is reported thus:

> Premier Taschereau, of Quebec, declared at the outset that he was not asking for anything at all for his province. He was surprised that after all the conferences which had been held, and after sixty years of partnership, there should still be so much friction between the provinces and the Dominion as to their respective domains. To have a happy and prosperous Canada there must be happy and prosperous provinces, and the latter could do more for Canada than could the federal authorities. The provinces were more in contact with the people, educating them, building their roads, and looking after their health. The provinces enacted compensation laws in favour of workmen and had control of the judicial machinery.

"He was not asking for anything at all for his province!" What about federal subsidies to the provinces for highways and so many other purposes, including public works and so forth? What about his own request, on behalf of his Siamese brother, Sir Herbert Holt, for the disappearance of the income tax, against the recommendations of the labour congress? What about his own requests of millions to dredge the St. Charles river and to build Canadian National railway terminals at Quebec?

"The provinces would do more for Canada than would the federal authorities." What about the reduction of the debt of this country and the general reduction of the burden of taxation, the extension of our domestic and foreign trade, the settlement of labour troubles, the wonderful work done by federal research experts and civil servants, the policy of this government in regard to imperial matters, and so forth? I quote from the Montreal Gazette of January 10, 1928:

> In introducing a large delegation of the trades and labour congress of Canada, Mr. Tom Moore, the chairman, took occasion to compliment the (federal) government upon its labour legislation. He particularly approved the government's old age pension scheme and asked that any changes which the government might see fit to introduce which would make easier the acceptance of the measure by some of the provinces would be welcomed. The government was also commended for its enactment of the Trade Mark and Designs Act, which now enables the labour organizations to register and probably protect their union labels, etc.
>
> The congress also noted with satisfaction the treaty of the Canadian National Steamships giving effect to their recommendations for the carrying on of the West Indies service by a government owned line in cooperation with the Canadian National Railways; the act amending the Workmen's Compensation Act respecting government employees; amendments to the income tax; the acts encouraging the use of Canadian mined coal and others.

"He was not asking anything at all for his province!" Such a proud declaration does not prevent the federal government from taking every possible means to help our province, as well as the sister provinces, against his will. But although the artisan who receives fair wages does not require so badly the help of the state as the one who is insufficiently paid, although the artisans of the province of Quebec are the least remunerated in the Dominion, and although the five sister provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario have already accepted the old age pension scheme, he for instance even refusees any assistance from the federal government in that connection.

I am happy to congratulate the Minister of Labour upon having gone yesterday to Toronto by airplane to sign the old age pension contract with the representatives of the provincial government of Ontario.

In that momentous gathering of the official representatives of the federal and provincial governments, speaking on behalf of his province, he said that he was not asking for anything at all for his province. Was that declaration criticized by the provincial opposition? No; it was approved by them. I have as much personal regard for Mr. Sauve, the leader of the Quebec opposition, as for Mr. Taschereau, and I do not understand how he would have unreservedly praised the attitude of the Quebec premier at the Dominion-provincial conference. In fact, two months afterwards, he concluded his speech on the address with these words:

> The Prime Minister at this conference took a part which honoured his province, his government and his race. I say this to render justice to him, even at the risk of drawing upon myself reproaches and not figuring in the least that the Prime Minister will long remember my expression of sentiment.

This is from The Gazette, Montreal, January, 13, 1928.

It is to be noted that Mr. Sauve has never been censured by his followers for such a declaration.

Evidently no blame can be put on the federal authorities for the difficulties and low wages of labour in the province of Quebec. As the situation of labour is satisfactory in most of the other provinces, why is it not so in Quebec? What is the local cause of such unfair treatment? Why does capital enjoy there such excessive earnings at the expense of labour? The astonishing and appalling figures that have been given call for immediate relief and for the kind consideration of the best friend of labour amongst labour men in this country. I mean our active and competent Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), who himself comes from the ranks of labour.

May I quote some clippings from the press in regard to the activities of the Minister of Labour since he has been in office? The following is from the Toronto Star, as quoted by the Ottawa Citizen, June, 29, 1927:

> Canada's act making an attempt at conciliation before the declaration of a strike or lock-out was torpedoed by a verdict of the privy council. The damage thus done may not be serious if the Dominion always has a Minister of Labour as earnest and as persistent as Peter Heenan in seeking to maintain industrial peace.

Then in the Brockville Recorder of November 10, 1927, I find the following:

> Following other triumphs in the settlement of labour troubles, he has been successful in bringing peace in the Toronto building trades and has thus earned the gratitude and the congratulations of the mayor of that city, no small achievement for any member of any Liberal ministry.

Then, in the Sydney Record of November 25, 1927, appeared this statement:

> He is useful and successful because he knows the labour problems from the labour point of view and because, at the same time, he has an equipment of mind and character which makes him fair and reasonable in dealing with capital.

Again from the Sydney Record:

> They (Premier Rhodes and his ministers) haven't brought about a satisfactory settlement of the present coal wage dispute, and if settlement comes it will be as a result of the intervention of Hon. Peter Heenan, federal Minister of Labour, who had to come into the case because of the failure of Hon. G. S. Harrington to bring the operators and miners to terms.

Then I quote from the Halifax Citizen of December 2, 1927:

> He is a labour man and appears to be a real live wire with the right idea of getting into personal touch with labour all over Canada. His splendid work for old age pensions, his services in the Toronto strike, and his visit to the industrial centres of Nova Scotia, all give promise of better service from the department in the future.

Then I quote from the Oshawa Daily Times of March 31, 1928:

> In our opinion great credit is due to the Minister of Labour for coming to Oshawa in person and lending his good offices to bring about a settlement of the strike. His arrival here yesterday was, in our opinion, most opportune, and his wise counsel and fair dealing was, we believe, appreciated by both parties to the controversy. The people of Oshawa will have a higher opinion of Peter Heenan as a result of his visit here this week.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would like to know to what clipping agency my hon. friend subscribes in order to secure all these extracts.

Mr. POULIOT: There are many newspapers to which I personally subscribe, and I hardly think my hon. friends will object to these articles. Now I quote from The Beaver of November 1, 1928:

> When the Spruce Falls Pulp Company, controlled by American capital, obtained their timber limits they contracted to employ Canadian workmen. When they had a dispute with their men a few days ago, they replaced several by American workers. Hon. Peter Heenan immediately took the matter up personally. The men are to go back to work and a representative of the Labour Department will be on the ground to ensure absolute fairness. Our national Minister of Labour is alert and efficient in guarding the interests of the Canadian worker.

Then I quote from the Saskatoon Star of May 25, 1929:

Peace In Industry

Another factor in recent years has been the skill of Hon. Peter Heenan, the Dominion Minister of Labour, in conciliating workers and employees who fall out over wages, working conditions and recognition of unions. The latest illustration of Mr. Heenan's capacity as an arbiter of such disputes is his settlement of the plumbers' and steamfitters' strike in Toronto. This strike, according to the Toronto Globe, was peculiarly difficult to handle but the minister did the trick by calling a round table conference of the parties to the dispute. Once again, the Globe remarks, he lived up to his name as "Peter the Peacemaker".

Then I quote from the Fort William Times Journal of December 9, 1927:

He has seen the labour situation from the workers' side. . . . As an experienced labour man, he knows that trouble is best dealt with when it is caught in the bud, instead of being left to ripen to the full fruit. Hence comes his desire to leave behind him the reputation, as Minister of Labour, of having prevented more strikes than he settled.

Now I quote from the Port Arthur Chronicle of the same date:

It is Mr. Heenan's job to take a large share in making conditions contentful for the wage earners of the Dominion. . . . No Minister of Labour has applied himself to the work of the department over which he presides more assiduously than he.

My last quotation is from the Hamilton Labour World of May 30, 1929:

As Minister of Labour for the Dominion, Hon. Peter Heenan has made a name for himself in the settling of differences between employer and employee. The old arbitration board is a thing of the past, as has been manifested in the confidence placed in the ability of this stalwart to negotiate.

Strikes received short shift when the Hon. Mr. Heenan steps in, and he has established a record in early settlements when he gets into action. When everything fails, the human dynamo takes hold to show both sides where they are wrong. His slogan is, "Let nothing retard industry where reason should prevail."

The long years at the throttle give him an experience which could not be duplicated, for there he had courage, conviction and ability. The workers of Canada may justly be proud of their representative in the Dominion parliament, and they are.

Since by virtue of the act respecting his department the Minister of Labour "shall institute and conduct inquiries into important industrial questions, upon which adequate information may not at present be available", would it be possible for him to intervene in this case for the relief of the artisans of the province of Quebec?

I have just one further quotation to make; it is from the Brockville Recorder of December 9, 1927:

At a luncheon at Glace Bay in December, 1927, Mr. Heenan said to the representatives of the United Mine Workers of Cape Breton, "I want you to feel that I am a public servant, and if you need me, just press the button and I will come."

This is my point, Mr. Chairman: The products of Quebec are not sold at a lower price than the same products are sold by Ontario manufacturers, but the employees in Quebec are paid much less. That means a lost to labour and an undue surplus of profit to the manufacturer. This is a very bad situation, and it is the reason why I thought it proper to-night, although we are at the close of the session, to ask the Minister of Labour to investigate that situation in the interests of the workers of that province.

Mr. MANION: There is a matter which I wish to take up with the Minister of Labour; I refer to the recent appointment, I understand on the recommendation of the minister, of Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith as a delegate from Canada to the League of Nations. Before I continue my remarks I should like the minister to give us a statement of the reasons for appointing this lady to this position.

Mr. HEENAN: I wonder if the hon. member would not bring this up under the proper item?

Mr. MANION: There does not seem to be a proper item. I have looked them all over, and perhaps the minister might consider the question now since I must catch a train to-night.

Mr. HEENAN: Very well. I have been asked by the National Council of Women to send a lady delegate to the League of Nations each year to represent the women of Canada. Last year we sent over Mrs. Rogers of Winnipeg.

Mr. BENNETT: A Liberal.

Mr. HEENAN: You may know; I do not.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, you should know, and you do know.

Mr. HEENAN: I think I might be as good a judge of the ladies as my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Get away from all that guff and get down to business; you do know.

Mr. MANION: Is that all the minister has to say?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not all; we will get more later on.

Mr. MANION: I do not know the lady at all, but I know something of her political record and I know something of her activities since her appointment to this position. Of course there is no objection to a lady who is a Liberal being appointed to the position, any more than there would be objection to a lady who was a Conservative or a lady who represented the Progressive party or any other party, but this lady has a political record which is distinctly partisan. Not only was her previous political record so distinctly partisan, but since she received this appointment it has continued to be very partisan. I think the minister is to be criticized for not stopping her political activities after this appointment was made. This lady was president of the Liberal Association at British Columbia; she then became a member of the local legislature; she became a minister without portfolio; then she lost the confidence of the people of British Columbia to such an extent that she had to change her riding, and she was defeated in the new riding. She then came to Ottawa and was appointed president of the ladies' Liberal federation of Canada—I think that is the name, but I am not sure. There is nothing wrong with all that, except that she had lost the confidence of the people of British Columbia and, therefore, I doubt if she has the confidence of the ladies of Canada. After having been appointed to this position she certainly lost the confidence of half the ladies of this country, those who are Conservatives, because she passed from one end of the country to the other making political speeches; she showed the bad taste of making political speeches after she had been given this appointment by the Minister of Labour.

After all, the League of Nations is an organization which we all wish to see succeed. It is non-political in every way and is an organization which all right-minded people desire to be of the greatest use to the world. A large proportion of the people of Canada have the desire to see the League of Nations successful, because it is an organization for the purpose of spreading peace throughout the world. That being the case, how can the Minister of Labour or the government expect a lady with such partisan political leanings to represent truly the women of Canada? How can they expect the women of all political persuasions in this country to take any interest in the League of Nations when a woman is appointed who has shown so much political partisanship after her appointment? She travelled one end of the country to the other making political speeches, and although I cannot prove my statement I have no doubt that she travelled at the expense of the government. I object, not as a Conservative, but as a Canadian, to any representative of ours travelling under the aegis of the League of Nations and making political speeches. I object to her or any other representative of the people of Canada at the League of Nations making a political football out of that organization. I would like to get, and I think the committee should get from the Minister of Labour the absolute assurance that when this lady comes back her political activities will be stopped while she is more or less in the pay of the people of Canada, because the government of this country is not a political party; the government represents the people of the country while it is in power, and she should be instructed by the Minister of Labour or by the government to keep away from any political partisanship when she is speaking to the people on the question of the League of Nations, until her appointment expires. Let her stick to the League of Nations and keep away from politics.

Mr. HEENAN: Without discussing at the moment whether or not we should select a lady or any other person because of political leanings, I would say to my hon. friend that Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith has not travelled through Canada at the expense of the government making political speeches. Mrs. Smith is receiving only her expenses, the same as any other delegate to the International Labour Conference receives.

Mr. MANION: Her home is in Vancouver; she would have her expenses paid as far as Ottawa, and on her way down here she was making political speeches.

Mr. HEENAN: That is not right.

Mr. BENNETT: She made one in this city.

Mr. HEENAN: She attended a meeting here in the city.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister seems to forget the fact that this delegate selected by this government is a resident of Vancouver and she has been making political speeches and organizing the Liberal women of the country ever since she was appointed president of the Liberal Women's Association at Ottawa in convention assembled. All that is very praiseworthy, so far as the Liberal party is concerned; they have the right to select Mrs. Smith or anyone else they desire, but having selected her I submit that she should not continue to act as a partisan and at the same time represent Canada at the League of Nations. By selecting the head of the Liberal women of this country and sending her to the League of Nations as our representative the government is placing half the women of this country who are Conservatives at a disadvantage when she comes back and utilizes her position to advance the interests of her party. She did that before she left and she promised that she was going to speak to them when she returned. Is that fair, is that right, is that just, or is that promoting the cause of peace? Is that advancing the interests of the League of Nations? Is it fair to the people of this country who have endeavoured to keep the League of Nations out of politics to select such a woman as a delegate? If it was the desire of the government to select a public woman, surely we had one in our own midst in this very parliament whom we might have sent to the League of Nations. If it was right to select Mrs. Rogers from Winnipeg, who was a Liberal member of the legislature, and Mrs. Smith, who has been defeated for office more than once, why should we not select one of our own members, the first woman we have had in our parliament? I am sure that there would have been no objection raised, as this member does not occupy a position which is connected with either of the two older political parties of the country.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): She never makes any political speeches?

Mr. BENNETT: The voice of Weyburn has spoken. That being so, I do say to the Minister of Labour that in all fairness to the people of this country and to the women of this country who are not all of one political faith, he has not treated them fairly and he has not treated the League of Nations fairly by selecting the head of a great political organization, the Liberal Women's Association of Canada, to represent the women of Canada at the League of Nations. When she returns the Conservative women are going to stay away from her meetings because she will be a political propagandist and it is not fair and right to ask women to attend who have taken an active interest in the work of the League of Nations. When the right hon. the Prime Minister returned from the League of Nations we all attended a banquet given in his honour because he was the head of the government of this country, but when Mrs. Smith returns a condition will be created which will preclude many women from taking an active interest in the work of the League of Nations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely my hon. friend is not serious?

Mr. BENNETT: I am very serious.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The government is not supposed to select neutrals as delegates to the League of Nations. There are very few people of that classification in Canada, and this is the first time such a doctrine has been propounded. I have been to the Leauge of Nations, and I was not a neutral then and I am not now.

Mr. BENNETT: But the hon. minister represented the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When I was there I saw many lady delegates. There was a member from the British House of Commons, a supporter of the government of the day, and I am sure that she had been making speeches in her own country. A delegate to the International Labour Conference or to the League of Nations is not a civil servant—far from it. People would not undertake such work if they had to renounce their right to their own opinions upon public affairs. The men or women who are qualified to represent this country are those who have views of their own upon the public affairs of Canada. This lady has occupied very high positions in her own province and elsewhere. I remember when I came to parliament twenty-five years ago, Mrs. Smith was holding in Ottawa meetings which women and men of all political persuasions attended, when she was advocating the doctrine of suffrage for women. She has been one of the pioneers in the country in getting the vote for women. She has been interested in social and public matters all her life. Does the fact that she happens to have been elected president of the Liberal women of Canada disqualify her from being appointed to represent Canada on a body dealing with social matters, such as the International Labour Conference? She is not disqualified and she has the right to make speeches on public affairs in Canada. She is not an employee of this government.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then why all this storm? Mrs. Smith has just as much right to air her views as my hon. friend has or I have, and this does not in any way disqualify her from representing the country at an international conference. I think it is a reflection on the women of Canada that they should be told that they cannot speak their minds on public matters, that if they do they must stay at home, that they can have no place in the representation of the country. My hon. friends are absolutely wrong in regard to the matter. Mrs. Smith has the right to do what she has done, and I congratulate the Minister of Labour on having appointed a lady who will bring credit to her country at the International Labour Conference.

Mr. MANION: With all due respect, I differ entirely from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know my hon. friend does.

Mr. MANION: I know I do, and that is something I am proud of. I absolutely differ from him in this, that I believe no woman who is having her expenses paid from her home to the League of Nations, has the right to air her political views when she is representing all the women of this country. The only reflection made on the women of Canada has been made by the Minister of Justice in saying that she can do so. I would urge the same thing if she were airing Conservative views under the same circumstances. Nobody is taking issue with Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith's politics.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mrs. Smith.

Mr. MANION: I said Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I did not hear it.

Mr. MANION: I submit that Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith, when she was appointed to represent the people of Canada and being paid her expenses by all the people of this country, should have the good taste, even if the Minister of Justice does not have it, to agree to keep away from politics for the two or three months she is representing the people of Canada. When she returns and ceases to represent the people of this country, she can talk her politics and nobody can object to that. But when she is representing a whole people, she has no right to make herself a political partisan and represent only a few of them.

Miss MACPHAIL: I really think that a person who is appointed to go to the League of Nations represents all the people in a rather peculiar sense. I think it is quite right to say "Mary Ellen Smith," but if the Minister of Justice prefers "Mrs. Smith," I am quite willing to say that. If it was government money that helped Mrs. Smith to travel across Canada; if it was government money that paid her expenses to come here, she had no right to make political speeches as she did. I should like to ask the leader of the opposition and also the Minister of Labour who, I think, divided the women into half Liberals and half Conservatives, how they arrive at that. They are not quite half Liberals and half Conservatives, I am very happy to say. I am a little fearful that women have been driven into the old parties without really digesting what it is all about. I am still hoping that some day they may know. May I make this suggestion? I made it in private to the government, or at least to the Prime Minister in 1926. It would be a very fine thing if we started to send parliamentary representatives to the League of Nations, and I at that time suggested Sir George Foster, because I thought he had done such splendid work for peace. This was not to the labour end of the league, but to the assembly. It is the people of Canada who are represented there and we should pretty soon get away from the idea of always having partisan representatives, and representing only one party in the house. We are pretty much in agreement; there is not much quarrel amongst us on the subject, and the government, if it wanted to do so, might see that such a man as Sir George Foster, for instance, was honoured by being sent as a representative of the Canadian parliament. I believe he is attending the league in any case whether he has been sent by the country or not. That is all I have to say on the matter. I quite agree with the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Fort William; they are quite right in contending that the women of Canada will more or less resent the fact that all the appointments have been strictly partisan. Nobody can deny that. The appointments of the women have been as strictly partisan as those of the men.

Mr. HEENAN: I can hardly let this pass without saying a few words. My esteemed friend from Southeast Grey is not quite fair in the matter because, being the only lady member of the house, she could very well have answered the leader of the opposition when he said that the lady member of the house might have been sent. The lady member herself could have answered that suggestion. I do not care to answer it.

Miss MACPHAIL: May I do so? I could have been the representative sent, but as all the other women were partisans, I feared to accept the offer because I did not want to be thought a partisan.

Mr. HEENAN: Hon. members will see now by direct evidence that we tried to get away from being partisans so far as the ladies were concerned. Seeing that the political aspect of the ladies has been mentioned, I understand there is a Miss Carmichael from Nova Scotia who was appointed on one delegation. Hon. gentlemen opposite will know her politics much better than I do.

Mr. BENNETT: She is a very strong Liberal. Go on with the next one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Head of the organization.

Mr. HEENAN: Thank heaven she is a strong Liberal, because she is a very smart woman. She is from the maritimes. Then we had Mrs. Thorburn from Ottawa.

Mr. BENNETT: Another Liberal.

Mr. HEENAN: That shows that she is a lady of good judgment.

Mr. BENNETT: President of the local Liberal Association.

Mr. HEENAN: Then we had a lady from the middle west, Mrs. Rogers.

Mr. BENNETT: A Liberal member of a legislature.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the objection to a woman being a Liberal?

Mr. MANION: We were not objecting to the woman being a Liberal, but to her airing her Liberal views while representing the whole people of the country.

Mr. HEENAN: Hon. members can see that we have selected ladies who have been prominent in the public life of the country, who have been elected by the people as their representatives. My hon. friend from Fort William has narrowed down his objections now to the point where these ladies ought not to make speeches.

Mr. MANION: I did not narrow down my objections at all. Those have been my objections from the beginning. I have made no other objections.

Mr. HEENAN: I said: He has narrowed them down.

Mr. MANION: I did not narrow them down.

Mr. HEENAN: I said: He has narrowed them down from the time he first rose to his feet, because he went on to say that she had lost the confidence of the people of British Columbia—

Mr. MANION: So she did.

Mr. HEENAN: —that she had lost the confidence of the women of this country. Then when the hon. member for Southeast Grey agreed with him in regard to the travelling expenses, he said: That is the whole objection.

Mr. MANION: That is the whole objection, too. I was simply giving her record in a general way before I gave my objection. My objection was to her talking politics while she was representing the people of Canada and having her expenses paid by the people of Canada.

Mr. HEENAN: I will give the other side of the record. Unfortunately the lady is a widow and has no one to defend her. I am surprised that hon. members in any part of this house would take advantage—

An hon. MEMBER: Of a widow.

Mr. HEENAN: —of a lady who has done more for social legislation than any other woman in this country, whose husband was president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, who has been elected several times to the British Columbia legislature, who has been a member of the British Columbia government, and who has been head of nearly every ladies' organization of which she has been a member. I wonder if hon. gentlemen would say that she has lost the confidence of the women of this country when only a few days ago a resolution was passed by the National Council of Women thanking the government for appointing Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith to be a delegate to the International Labour Conference.

Mr. MANION: She lost the confidence of her constituents when she was defeated. That is all I said.

Mr. HEENAN: Has every member on the other side lost the confidence of the people because he was defeated at some time or other?

Mr. MANION: He has lost the confidence of his constituents if he is defeated.

Mr. HEENAN: Mrs. Smith is an ex-regent, Municipal Chapter, I.O.D.E.; past president, Women's Canadian Club; past president Women's Forum (Women's Ratepayers' Association of Vancouver); past regent of Primary Chapter, I.O.D.E.; member of the Suffrage League of Canada, having as its object the passing of protective legislation and the fostering of same. Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith was one lady, like Mrs. Rogers of Winnipeg, who stood on the floor of the legislature and advocated and fought for the passing of legislation in their respective provinces pertaining to old age pensions. I have here a long list of the activities in which Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith has been engaged.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it all.

Mr. HEENAN: It is too long. Just within the last two or three days, while she has been overseas and since she has been engaged in these political activities, the National Council of Women passed a resolution thanking the government for appointing Mrs. Smith to represent the women of Canada. Consequently I do not think it is fair that hon. gentlemen, a body of men, should stand up in this house and try to discredit Canada's delegate to the conference while she is over there.

Mr. MANION: Nobody is trying to discredit her.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly the hon. member for Fort William, whether it is any worse for Mrs. Smith to be airing her political views while she holds this position than for an hon. member to air his political views while he is a member of the Ontario liquor control board.

Mr. POULIOT: I like to hear the hon. member for Fort William, who always makes nice speeches. He made nice speeches for his party in this house when he was a liquor commissioner for the province of Ontario, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. MANION: What has that to do with the League of Nations?

Mr. POULIOT: I do not blame him for doing that, but he was in exactly the same position as Mrs. Smith. I would ask the Minister of Labour if he could intervene for the relief of the Quebec labour men.

Mr. KAISER: I would like to say a word in reply to the request made of the hon. Minister of Labour—"Can you do something for the labouring men of Quebec and other parts of Canada?" I understand that it is the business of the minister and his department to supervise contracts in which public money is being spent in Canada, that it is their business to see that a fair wage clause is inserted in those contracts. I think it is also their business to see that the work that is done under these contracts, and which is paid for out of the public treasury, should be given to the people of Canada. We do not need to go outside the city of Ottawa to see a very striking example of work being given to people outside of this country. We spent a tremendous sum of money to build in Ottawa a very fine hotel. I went through it the other day for the first time and I was delighted with it. I was quite charmed with the totem poles I saw there, and I saluted those pagan gods. I was charmed with the gurgling waters of the fountain. With another member of parliament I proceeded to examine the furniture that was there, and the only furniture that I could examine at all thoroughly was the chairs—the rest were all too big to examine. We turned the chairs upside down and we observed on them a remarkable motto. The first word of the motto was "Made". I could not see very well with the glasses I was wearing, and for a moment I thought that the motto read "Made in Kincardine." I thought I had something on the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but on looking at it a little more closely I discovered that the words were "Made in Czechoslovakia." Does the Minister of Labour know that money is being spent out of the public treasury of this country in that way? Does he take any interest in those contracts at all? I would suggest that when the next election comes around the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Trade and Commerce march around under a banner on which are the words "Made in Czechoslovakia" and that they sing a duet to the workingmen of Canada as they salute their banner, singing, "O, Canada, I stand on guard for thee."

Mr. POULIOT: I would ask the minister to tell the committee if he can intervene on behalf of the Quebec labour men.

Mr. HEENAN: I think my hon. friend from Temiscouata will appreciate that the government has very little to do with contracts between labour and employers except when there are disputes, but as this matter has been brought up under the conciliation vote I would suggest that if my hon. friend and the Premier of Quebec cannot settle their disagreement I shall be glad to appoint a board of conciliation to arbitrate between the two. So far as the government of Quebec is concerned, I do know this, that of late they have been coming up to date. They have recently passed a minimum wage act for women and girls, and the legislation is on a fair level with that of the province of Ontario, which I consider is the best province in the Dominion.

Mr. CAHAN: The best province or the best legislation?

Mr. HEENAN: Oh, the best province.

Mr. PLUNKETT: Does the minister consider Ontario more advanced in social legislation than British Columbia?

Mr. HEENAN: I will give you credit out there. The social legislation Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith was instrumental in—

Mr. PLUNKETT: The people of British Columbia—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: Last session they accepted a resolution requiring the insertion of a fair wage clause in pulp and paper mill and water-power contracts. It is probably the second province in Canada to accept that principle. They have put into operation an up-to-date workmen's compensation act. So taking all in all the province is doing fairly well. As between employer and employee, I do not think any government, either provincial or federal, will interfere with any contract between employer and employee.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Employment Offices' Co-ordination Act, $17,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there ought to be a much closer arrangement between the Department of Immigration and the employment agencies as operated under the Department of Labour. I should like to read two or three paragraphs from a letter that I received about two months ago, simply because this very well illustrates the position in which a great many casual labourers find themselves in this country. The writer used to be in British Columbia; I knew him there some years ago. For a time he was a settler on a farm there. Then he says:

> Owing to my wife's death our home in British Columbia was broken up and I went back to bush work, which I had followed up when I was a single man.
>
> This fall I happened to be in Ottawa after doing a summer's work in Ontario, working as navvy on the new highways. Well soon I was broke, had to go to work again. Engaged as general bushman at thirty-five dollars a month, board and bunk found, went down the Soo to work. Well when we got there we found the camp full of Swedes. Started work November 5th and finished work January 30th. Well after paying train fare here and living expenses got a few needful lumbermen's clothes, etc., I was broke. Then I found myself in Port Arthur destitute, stone broke. So had to go to the police station. I asked the police officer if I was to commit a crime or what. I wanted the right to work to live. They said, commit no crime but come up and the magistrate will sentence you under charge of vagrancy—no visible means of support. I got two months at the industrial farm. There were several I found at the farm in the same boat, no work, but the farm. Well, I came out of the jail farm at Fort William this morning. The work there is all right, food and bunk good, but the disgrace of mixing up and being locked up with petty thieves, etc. Surely there can be something done better than jail hard-working men.

Then he comments on the cause of himself and other men being placed in this position. He says:

> Now, as I said when I arrived at the Soo camp it was full of Swedes. We the British-speaking men were fired when the logs and roads were finished, the Swedes were kept on because they had been imported for twelve months' work, after the sleigh haul they were to start in the saw-mill. You see, sir, the timber companies know a thing or two about labour—every year they import green young men from Europe to stop the older men from organization to better thirty-five dollars a month, etc. So the new blood is kept on and the older bushmen take down the road. If broke we go to jail as vagrants.

I venture to read those paragraphs because in their own way, in not the very best English, they very well put the situation in which a great many casual labourers find themselves to-day. And we have to remember that a great deal of the construction work, bush work and harvest work across this country is carried on by these same transient labourers. It does seem that so long as there is a supply of these men in this country we have absolutely no right to admit any others. I think the labour department has a responsibility to insure that these men's jobs are protected. In this case the foreign-born men were given the preference, and men who had been for the greater part of their lives in this country were left jobless. What does the Minister of Labour propose to do in such a case? The other day the Minister of Immigration said that it was not his responsibility. The Minister of Labour was present, I think, when his colleague said: "That is a matter the labour employment bureaux will have to take care of." So he got through his estimates in that way. Now, I ask the Minister of Labour—

Mr. FORKE: Taking a bare statement and placing it before the committee as my considered opinion is not fair.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not Hansard here, but I thought I was being fair.

Mr. FORKE: I do not deny using those words, but you should give the context leading up to them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My impression is that the Minister of Immigration took the ground that he could not be responsible for employment in such cases.

Mr. HEENAN: A specific case was mentioned.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so. But here is another case, and there are a great many of a similar kind, so I should like to ask the Minister of Labour how this difficulty can be obviated. I do not care whether the matter is taken up by the Department of Immigration or by the Department of Labour.

I want to see these transient labourers protected in their livelihood and not sent to gaol as this man was, in order to obtain a little to eat and a place in which to sleep.

Mr. HEENAN: In what month was it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The letter is dated Fort William, March 30. The man had been in gaol two months and had just been released that morning.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The case cited by the member for Winnipeg North Centre is one that occurs, to some degree at least, quite often. Men who move around from one province to another, two-thirds of the way across Canada, very often find themselves in difficulties. The hon. member has not given us any statement as to the character of this man or why he was sent to gaol, but surely when the authorities took that course there must have been something wrong with the man. Otherwise it is an accusation against the civil authorities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, Mr. Chairman. I explained that the man found himself absolutely destitute and went to the authorities and asked if he could be put in gaol or given a lodging and food. At his own request he was placed in gaol.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): For two months?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: For vagrancy.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Even then it is a reflection on the civil authorities, not on the Minister of Labour at all. I have seen many men drifting around the country, knowing that when they got stuck they would get, in the common parlance of the casual labourer, grubstaked to a job. To complain that certain Scandinavians at the Soo were held on while this man was let out, is hardly fair. Everybody who is connected with bush work knows that Scandinavians as a rule are first class men, and lumber companies like other employers will keep the men who are most valuable to them. On the strength of a letter from a particular man who finds himself in unfortunate circumstances and about whom we know little, it is hardly fair to criticise the Minister of Labour. These men of their own volition wander up and down the country and take a certain amount of pleasure in seeing the country and moving around. Generally I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his views on labour, but this is something that occurs frequently and it cannot be stopped by any Minister of Labour.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I gave this as a concrete instance. I have been up and down this country for the last twenty years and I know very intimately the position of these casual workers all the way from here to the coast, and I could give from my own personal knowledge scores and scores of cases like this; or I could take statistics to illustrate the situation. I do not think I need to tell the Minister of Labour that frequently native born Canadians have their places taken by newly arrived immigrants, and I should like him to inform the committee what steps he proposes to take in order to prevent this injustice being perpetuated.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. member has certainly used this case as an illustration of the complaint he was making.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: An illustration, yes; of course I did.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): He based his argument on that instance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; I did not base it on that instance; I gave the instance as an illustration.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I am pointing out that hundreds of men go "booming," as they themselves say, over the country. This man was working in British Columbia and he wandered to Sault Ste. Marie and Fort William, and we all know that throughout the country there is a large amount of casual labour to be obtained between those points at the time he went there.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have two telegrams from Calgary dealing with this question. These telegrams were sent to me by the Trades and Labour Council of that city. For some reason or other the new arrivals land in Calgary every year in the spring. In this wire from the Trades and Labour Council no blame is laid on the Minister of Labour himself, but the statement is made that last week a number of continentals arrived through colonization associations. I know the particular colonization society in Calgary, but it is difficult to ascertain where they get these new continentals. At any rate, every year a number of these people—continentals, as this communication says—arrive in Calgary and take jobs at lower wages than those current in the city. The Trades and Labour Council also refer to the fair wage clause, which varies in the different departments. The gist of their representation is that there is not a uniform wage clause so far as the Dominion government is concerned, and I trust that the Minister of Labour will take cognizance of this telegram with a view to devising one uniform provision which shall apply to all contracts let by the Dominion, and which he will be in a position to supervise. I have no doubt the minister realizes the importance of uniformity in this matter; he knows how desirable it is to have one wage clause which can be put into force by himself, obviating conflict as between one department and another. This telegram states that they know the Minister of Labour has done his best to enforce the act and to observe the minimum wage clause, and I just want to impress upon the minister the fact that if a uniform wage clause is not adopted it will simply prevent both himself and the labour council from properly enforcing the act. I do not know of any department of the government with which I have been more closely in touch than that of the Minister of Labour, particularly this session, for I have been there nearly every day in connection with a very serious wage dispute about which he knows; and so far as his department is concerned I can say I have received every consideration. And the Trades and Labour Council have so stated here. I hope that this question of uniformity in the matter of the fair wage clause will be seriously considered by the Minister of Labour, and I should be glad to be able to go back with the news that in future the various clauses will be eliminated and one uniform wage clause adopted which will enable the minister to enforce the provision more effectively and to the greater advantage of the labouring classes.

Mr. BENNETT: Why is it that, notwithstanding the minister's deep concern to have provision for an eight hour day inserted in contracts for public works, workmen who left Halifax under Mr. MacMillan and workmen who went to Churchill and have been employed directly by the government, are compelled to work ten hours a day with time and a half for work beyond that?

Mr. HEENAN: I have no direct knowledge of the case my hon. friend speaks of, but the eight hour provision is not in all public contracts. The custom which prevails in the particular district is what obtains in the fair wage clause. The government does not fix wages or conditions or hours of employment.

Mr. BENNETT: An eight hour day was agreed to in the Treaty of Versailles.

Mr. HEENAN: Yes; but the prevailing rate of wages is paid and the conditions are those that prevail in the district. I have no knowledge of the case to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. BENNETT: Does not the minister read the reports of the public accounts committee which are printed and which show that the contracts were produced in evidence? The statement was made by his colleague, the Minister of Railways the other night in answer to a question of mine as to what were the hours of labour at Churchill on work for the government of Canada. The Minister of Railways said ten hours.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not know anything about it. In regard to the question asked by my hon. friend (Mr. Woodsworth), the problem he has stated is an important one and one which I wish I could solve at once. In cooperation with the provincial governments we have sixty-four employment offices just to take care of these transient workers. They get information free as to where vacancies occur, the rates of wages, the conditions of employment, and so forth, and last year we placed 470,000 men through the agency of these sixty-four offices. My hon. friend should consider his question in relation to immigration. There is only one way I know of whereby we could solve this problem and that would be to have a system which would allow to come in only as many men as there are jobs for.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, isn't that reasonable?

Mr. HEENAN: That would involve a change of policy in immigration matters; it would call for a new general policy. I would point out to my hon. friend that every time I mention anything about restrictive immigration some hon. gentleman opposite as well as some newspapers take exception to my views in that regard.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Labour will back you up.

Mr. HEENAN: Thank heaven for a little help anyway. With respect to the point raised by my hon. friend from East Calgary in regard to the fair wage clause, I may point out that we have in operation at the present time what might be called two wage policies.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Three.

Mr. HEENAN: There are two. One is where we contribute by public expenditure to any public contracts, public buildings and so forth; and the other is where we insert a clause in water-power leases providing that those who obtain the leases shall not pay less than the prevailing rate. But in the latter case the administration is different in that we have not provided that the decision of the Minister of Labour in the matter shall be final; it is more in the nature of a contract, and if they do not observe this particular section the lease is subject to cancellation. However, I may tell my hon. friend that we intend changing the contracts so that the clause will be uniform from now on.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I want to give the minister credit for helping us fight that particular clause, which contained the words, "in similar undertakings." That prevented him from putting the fair wage clause into effect; if that were eliminated and a fair wage clause put in which was uniform we would not have had the difficulty we experienced in the past in this connection.

Mr. HEENAN: We will fix it.

Mr. HOWARD: I would like to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Ontario a moment ago, because I do not think we should let false information go out to the country. I happen to camp around the Chateau Laurier and I am proud to be there. The hon. member stated that all the furniture in the new wing of the Chateau Laurier was made in Czechoslovakia, but that is not the case. The furniture in the Chateau Laurier was purchased from three Canadian firms employing Canadian workmen, but there is one chair which is used not only in the Chateau Laurier but in every hotel on the North American continent, a bent wood chair, which is not manufactured anywhere in the world except in Czechoslovakia; that is the ballroom chair. With that exception every bit of furniture in the Chateau Laurier was made in Canada.

Mr. KAISER: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say there was only one chair in the Chateau not made in Canada?

Mr. HOWARD: One type of chair.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I notice that the Minister of Labour of the new government in Great Britain has announced that the eight hour day is to be enforced. I should like to know whether the eight hour day cannot be enforced at once in connection with the government's own work in Canada, and I should like to know what excuse the minister can offer for not having taken this action before now. There is no British North America Act to prevent him from doing so.

Mr. HEENAN: In answering my hon. friend from East Calgary the other day with regard to this point, I stated that the government had the matter under consideration and I hope to be able to satisfy my hon. friends before next session.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The point brought up by the member for Winnipeg North Centre is of very great importance to every person who is sympathetic to labour in Canada. Labour throughout this country is vitally interested in a reasonably short work day. I quite understand that this government cannot legislate for the provinces generally in the matter of the eight hour day, but certainly this government has the power to put in the eight hour day in connection with government work, and if my hon. friend the minister deserves a thousandth part of the eulogy, the panegyric and the bouquets flung at him tonight by the hon. member for Temiscouata he should give a lead to industrial corporations in this matter. To say that we will have it next session is merely to say that although he has been eulogized as the greatest Minister of Labour we have ever known he has fallen down on one of the most vital questions concerning organized and unorganized labour throughout Canada. There is absolutely no reason for delay in this matter. When workingmen try to obtain a reasonably short working day, one which will give them an opportunity for recreation, a chance to improve their mental faculties and sufficient rest, they are generally met with the statement that the government of this country itself asks its employees on its public works to work ten hours a day, at a wage of twenty-five cents an hour. That is the situation with regard to the construction of wharves and breakwaters in the maritime provinces. My hon. friend has mentioned the application of a fair wage clause. I want to ask the minister why it is that when the Department of Public Works starts to construct a wharf somewhere in the maritime provinces they always base what they call their fair wage clause on the rate prevailing in that district for unorganized labour. Why do they not take the rate which has been obtained by the organized workmen through collective bargaining? If we are to judge by the minister's reply to-night he hardly merits the very splendid and carefully prepared eulogy sung by the hon. member for Temiscouata. I do not think there should be any further delay in this matter; if my hon. friend is a real friend of labour, as I believe he is, he should use those powers which he possesses as Minister of Labour to see that organized and unorganized labour throughout Canada have a reasonably short work day. He can do it with respect to government contracts; the matter brooks no delay, and there is absolutely no shadow or semblance of an excuse for delay.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to refer to the report made by the select standing committe on industrial and international relations in 1926. At page 17 Mr. Bolton of the Department of Labour stated that what he considered a comfort budget was $2,400; I take that to be a budget giving a reasonable standard of living. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he thinks that figure is too high.

Mr. HEENAN: Perhaps my hon. friend would bring up that matter when we come to a later item which covers it.

Mr. SPENCER: Very well.

Item agreed to.

Fair wages and inspection, $10,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Would my last question come under this item?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I would like to ask the minister what is the status of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act at present. How many provinces have passed enabling legislation to make this act effective, in view of the decision of the privy council that it was ultra vires of the federal parliament?

Mr. HEENAN: All the provinces except Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Has the minister held any conferences with the governments of these two provinces with a view to having enabling legislation passed?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes, but only in an indirect way; I do not think the federal Minister of Labour has any right to tell the provincial governments what they should do in this connection. We placed this question before the Dominion-provincial conference and said it would make it much easier for us if they passed that legislation, but that has not been done as yet by those two provinces.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Not only is it the right, but it is the duty of the Minister of Labour to approach the provinces of Ontario and Quebec in an endeavour to have such legislation enacted. The old barbaric method of settlement by force still prevails in those provinces, and I think the minister should approach them with a view to having enabling legislation passed.

Mr. HEENAN: I have done that in an indirect way. The Trades and Labour Congress of Canada has been asking these provinces to pass enabling legislation, but up to the present time they have not done so.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Could not the minister use his good offices in an endeavour to have that done?

Mr. SPENCER: The minister has not answered my question.

Mr. HEENAN: Will the hon. member please repeat it?

Mr. SPENCER: On page 17 of the proceedings of the industrial and international relations committee of 1926, I find that Mr. Bolton of the Labour department gave what he called a comfort budget, or decent standard of living, as $2,400 for a family of five. I would like to know if the minister thinks that that figure is too high, or does he agree with it?

Mr. HEENAN: I think the hon. member will find that Mr. Bolton was only quoting what someone else had said; I do not think he gave that figure as his own.

Mr. SPENCER: A member who was present in the committee has told me that he gave the figure as being the correct one.

Mr. HEENAN: I think he was quoting Professor Douglas.

Mr. SPENCER: The average wage is given as $1,003 for a family of five. If my figures are correct, does not the minister think that there is something wrong with the prosperity of this country? The prosperity must be very one-sided if the average wage earner is only receiving $1,003 per year.

Mr. HEENAN: If that is the average wage, it is too low, but the hon. member will understand that the Minister of Labour does not regulate wages.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister give me the average earnings of farmers throughout Canada?

Mr. CAMPBELL: It is less than nothing.

Mr. HEENAN: The April number of the Labour Gazette contains considerable information at page 453. Conditions have not changed since 1925, and wages of $40, $45 and so on are mentioned. It gives the board, wages, the earnings of female workers and so on.

Mr. SPENCER: That is for farm labour?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister give me the net income of the farmers?

Mr. HEENAN: We have no statistics for the farmers.

Item agreed to.

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, $20,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What was the expenditure last year?

Mr. HEENAN: The total vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is this vote for overhead, or are there extra expenses in connection with particular investigations?

Mr. HEENAN: It is for all expenses in connection with the boards.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It apparently does not make very much difference whether or not they are acting, the overhead remains the same.

Mr. HEENAN: Oh, no, it depends upon the number of boards which are appointed. The expenditures in round figures for the past few years have been as follows:

1923-24	$25,000
1924-25	35,000
1925-26	3,000
1926-27	17,000
1927-28	20,000
1928-29	20,000

Mr. CAMPBELL: Could the minister give us some particulars as to the disputes investigated last year?

Mr. HEENAN: There were twenty-two applications made last year; thirteen boards were established and the remainder were settled by conciliation without establishing boards.

Item agreed to.

International Labour Conference, $20,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We have been voting in this parliament from time to time very large sums of money in connection with this international conference, but the only result seems to be to furnish political planks which appear in the platforms of both parties. I am at a loss to find any other benefit in connection with these votes. Every time the Labour men in the house rise and ask for the application of the definite pledges of the political party in power, the answer is made that that is purely a matter for provincial legislation. Would it not be better if this money were voted for the purpose of endeavouring to encourage the provinces to undertake the sending of delegates to this International Labour Conference? Those delegates could return and the political parties in the provinces could put these planks into their platforms and we might get some legislation put through. Possibly the Department of Labour at Ottawa could act as a coordinating body in an endeavour to standardize the legislation of the different provinces, but at the present time I am at a loss to know what value there is in our sending delegates so long as this parliament takes the attitude that it has no power to pass the necessary legislation.

Mr. HEENAN: We are obligated under the peace treaty to make this appropriation for the purpose. I agree with my hon. friend that it would be better if the provinces took an interest in this matter. I might inform my hon. friend that every year we invite the provinces to send delegates to this conference.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have they ever done that?

Mr. HEENAN: On two or three occasions, I am informed. The question was discussed during the Dominion-provincial conference. The government stated to the provinces that if they would get together and select one delegate representing the provinces we would name him as a Dominion representative. We offered to do that, but so far they have not got together to select a delegate to represent the provinces.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The statement of the minister would indicate quite clearly that he is of much the same opinion as I am with regard to this vote, namely, that until the provinces are as fully apprised as his delegates are of the situation at these international conferences, it is unlikely that we are going to get as speedy action as labour really requires and is justified in asking. Is the minister in further communication with the provinces at this time in regard to the matter, and when will the next international conference be held?

Mr. HEENAN: We asked the provinces again this year if they would name delegates or advisers and they have not done so. Therefore we do the next best thing; we select delegates and advisers from as many of the provinces as we can, consistent with the vote.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When is the next conference?

Mr. HEENAN: There are two this year. There is the maritime conference in the fall, and of course there is this one every year.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How many accompanied the minister to Geneva when he attended the economic conference? What are their names, and what was the total expense of that joy trip?

Mr. HEENAN: Does the hon. member mean those who accompanied me?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: Mrs. R. A. Rogers of Winnipeg; Mr. T. J. Cochrane of Ottawa, who, by the way, is a British Columbia man; Mr. H. B. McKinnon of Kenora, and Mr. O. Filion of Montreal.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that we ought not to let our obligations under the Versailles treaty and the Washington conference pass by so lightly as we are doing. Either we as a nation were serious in signing that treaty and those conventions or we were not. I recognize there are certain constitutional difficulties, but I should like to take the broad ground that if we have the right to sign the treaty, we have the power to see that its terms are enforced.

Mr. BENNETT: In our own work at any rate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; and even in a broader way than in our own work. I would say it is our responsibility to see that its terms are enforced. In the British North America Act there are certain clauses regarding residual powers which can be readily interpreted as giving us the power to enforce treaties, and if the government were serious about this matter we could have these treaties enforced. We have held up before us on every occasion the provisions of the British North America Act and we are told that we cannot do anything. I have already pointed out in one instance to-day that the government is not attempting to give us the eight-hour day even on its own public works. There are in the public service of Canada men who are working seven days a week and no attempt whatever is being made to give them one day's rest in seven.

Mr. ROBB: Is my hon. friend referring to the ministers of the crown?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not, although some of them must work very long hours. Indeed some of us object to being called upon to work until twelve o'clock midnight after having commenced at eight, but that is the government's own responsibility in that matter. There are in the government service, employees who are working seven days a week. There are others who are working at less than a minimum wage. We have again and again brought that to the attention of the government. There are civil servants who are getting less than $100 a month, only $85, a month. I have repeatedly urged the government to bring the salaries of its own employees up to a decent standard of living, but nothing is done in that regard.

Early in the session I presented the plight of steel workers in Sydney who are working eleven hours by day and thirteen hours at night. They get one Sunday off in two weeks, and they make up for that by working on alternate fortnights for twenty-four hours on end. That is a scandal, a disgrace to any country that calls itself civilized. Yet when we bring this to the attention of the government they say simply: "Oh the British North America Act!"

"We are giving special concessions to that steel company, to all steel companies. There is the same situation at the Soo as at Sydney and to a lesser degree at Hamilton in connection with some of the continuous operations. We might make it a condition precedent to the giving of any sort of special consideration to the companies that their employees must not be permitted to work more than eight hours a day. That is quite within the power of the government, but year after year the matter is passed by, the government saying that it has no power. If we had in authority a government that wanted to enforce the provisions of the Versailles treaty, it could do it and do it at once. But it is easier to hold up excuses rather than frankly to face the problem. I can hardly understand the Prime Minister taking the attitude he does; I know he personally would like to see these reforms. He is an idealist; he has sympathy; but the fact remains that he is not taking any action with regard to these matters.

I am speaking now on the estimates of the Minister of Labour. He apparently, although personally sympathetic with labour, has not the power inside the cabinet to make his wishes prevail. I do not know whether he has courage enough to face the issue and force the government to take action along this line. But I know labour across the country has been waiting—waiting in vain for some action to be taken along this line. Three or four years ago in reviewing the sessions of 1921 to 1925 I remember taking up in detail the planks of the Liberal platform and showing that there had been no earnest effort to implement any of those planks in so far as they referred to labour. I do not know whether the situation would be any better if we had another government in power. Both the Liberals and the Conservatives, representing the major part of the membership of this house, are definitely pledged to the main planks in the platform of organized labour, and yet nothing happens. That is the situation we face. I cannot quite see how the Minister of Labour, this human dynamo as to-night he has been characterized, can sit quietly, in face of this kind of thing, and refuse to give the little bit of that dynamic that would put these reforms into effect.

Item agreed to.

Joint Industrial Councils, $5,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the minister explain the relationship between this item and item 208, referring to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act? Are they not one and the same?

Mr. HEENAN: There is no relationship between the two items. As my hon. friend knows, the appropriation for the joint industrial councils was inserted in the estimates during the war. During the time there was unrest in this country it was thought if there were joint industrial councils, this might eliminate some of the industrial disputes. It was found that the government could not do very much; that it was a matter between employers and employees whether they would establish joint industrial councils or not. Therefore we have kept this item in the estimates purposely to keep the vote alive in case it might be needed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Must we have another industrial upheaval before we get the councils?

Mr. HEENAN: It was thought that joint industrial councils might eliminate strife in part, but no one knows better than my hon. friend that you cannot establish joint industrial councils unless the workmen and the employers are themselves satisfied to establish them. There is an industrial council, for instance, in the very works where men are working, my hon. friend says, under disgraceful conditions, and I agree with him that they are working under disgraceful conditions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In the steel plant at Sydney?

Mr. HEENAN: In the steel plant.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the minister mean that Bishoff scheme—the company union that is in operation there?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I hope that we will not spend one cent to have anything of that character established.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. HEENAN: So do I. The fair wage officer that we have in Montreal is paid under this vote. He was appointed, not by the Civil Service Commission, but by the Union government during the war, and he has been giving very good service. We also intend to utilize this vote to pay expenses in connection with the national council for the civil service, which will be established I hope in a few weeks.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Old Age Pensions Act, $10,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This does not cover all the cost of administration of the Old Age Pensions Act, does it?

Mr. HEENAN: The administration comes under the provinces. This is to provide for printing, travelling expenses and so forth. The vote was $5,000 last year, but owing to the other provinces coming in we expect a greater expenditure this year.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the minister any indication to give as to whether Quebec and the maritime provinces will enter the scheme?

Mr. HEENAN: Nothing except that they have shown that they are interested by inquiring how the scheme is working out, the cost and so forth. We have no encouragement to say that they are coming in, other than the inquiries that have been made. But we are encouraged because of the fact that they have not said that they are not coming in.

Mr. SPENCER: Five provinces so far are taking advantage of the scheme?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How much has the Dominion government paid out in old age pensions so far?

Mr. HEENAN: For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, $832,668.78. The total amount up to date paid out by the provinces is $1,928,277.58. The federal government pays half.

Item agreed to.

Labour — salaries, $251,450; contingencies, $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to make a few observations with respect to the increased salaries of deputy ministers. I promised the other evening that I would do so. I find that Mr. Fielding, speaking as Minister of Finance, in the House of Commons, in 1923, said:

The salaries of the deputies is a troublesome question at all times. We have adopted a rule, which when I mention it, I think will be accepted. It was felt at first that the salaries of the deputies were not high and that there was fair claim for consideration. Then it was argued with some force that regard must be had for length of service, and the decision we reached was that in the case of any deputy in active service at the head of a department who had a service to his credit of ten years or more, we would consider that he was entitled to an advance; but those whose terms of service were less than ten years were left out, but not because they were not capable or efficient, but because it was held, and I think with reason, that some regard should be had for the term of service. At all events that is the explanation. In every case where a deputy has served for ten years or more, and is in active service at the head of the department, he receives the increase, unless he already has the increased salary; but as to the others there is no discrimination, except that which arises from the term of service.

Looking over the salaries proposed for the various deputies as contained in the estimates, I find that some are to be increased by $2,000, others by $1,000, and others receive no increase. Some of these deputies have served ten years, some less than ten years. The deputy of the department now under discussion was appointed originally at $6,000. His salary was raised to $8,000, and now it is proposed to make it $9,000, although according to the record, he has not been in the service ten years altogether as deputy. He may have been longer in the service than ten years, because the records do not clearly indicate the length of service. What I am saying has nothing to do with respect to the individual; it applies merely to the office, and I am discussing the question from that standpoint.

I come to the next question, which I discussed briefly the other evening when we had under consideration the salary paid to the clerk of the privy council. If the committee will look at the revised statutes of Canada of 1927, chapter 22, the Civil Service Act, they will find the following in subsection 2:

2. (3) "deputy" or "deputy head" means and includes the deputy minister of the crown presiding over the department, the clerk of the privy council, the clerks of the senate and House of Commons, the librarians of parliament, the comptroller of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the superintendent of insurance—

His salary is increased:

—the Dominion archivist—

His salary also is increased:

—the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada and, in all cases in which such meaning is not inconsistent with his powers and duties under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, the Auditor General.

2. (e) "head of the department" means the minister of the crown for the time being presiding over the department and includes the Speakers of the Senate and House of Commons.

I find that those are the only terms that are used with respect to them. The Prime Minister the other evening said that the clerk of the privy council is a deputy head. If he is a deputy head he is a deputy head by virtue of section 2 of chapter 22 of the revised statutes of 1927, which places in the same category, within the next few words, the clerks of the Senate and House of Commons, the librarians of parliament, the comptroller of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will find that the clerk of the privy council is a deputy by virtue of the statute which relates to the privy council, and which was passed many years ago.

Mr. BENNETT: But the Civil Service Act distinctly says—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: For the purposes of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BENNETT: The Civil Service Act is what I have been reading from. I am reading from section 2 of chapter 22 of the revised statutes of 1927, and it says:

"deputy" or "deputy head" means and includes the deputy minister of the crown presiding over the department—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Referring to that act.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. It goes on:

the clerk of the privy council, the clerks of the Senate and House of Commons—

The significance given to those words is attached to them in all the other statutes referring to them—the Superannuation Act, the Retirement Fund Act, the Insurance Act, and other acts. In other words, the definition given by the Civil Service Act is the definition that is accepted in the other statutes in dealing with various appointees. So that a discrimination has been practised with respect to a number of these gentlemen. In addition to that there is no fixed principle applied to those who are deputy ministers of departments. Mr. Fielding said it was difficult, but he laid down a rule. In this instance, as I pointed out the other day, if you take the various departments and go through them you will see one deputy minister getting an increase of $1,000, another an increase of $2,000, another an increase of $1,800, and so on, without regard to any fixed principle that could be applied; and certainly with respect to one or two of them it is perfectly clear that their duties are very, very light, while in other cases they are very, very onerous. I take this opportunity of mentioning this because the other evening I mentioned the deputy of the Minister of National Defence, whose duties have become very much lighter because of the disarmament alleged by the minister, and the position of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to which reference was made the other evening. Now we come to the Department of Labour, in which I think there has been a departure from the principle laid down by Mr. Fielding in the first instance.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should like also to refer to a statement made by the right hon. the Prime Minister in discussing the position of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission. He was under the impression that Doctor Roche simply held office for a fixed term and was not in the same position as a deputy minister. In the Civil Service Act of 1918, chapter 12, part 1, section 3, it is provided:

> There shall be three commissioners each with the rank of a deputy minister. Each commissioner shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.
>
> Provided, however, that any commissioner hereafter appointed shall hold office during good behaviour for a period of ten years from the date of his appointment, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons, and shall cease to hold office upon reaching the age of sixty-five years.

Then the Civil Service Act found in the present revised statutes, chapter 22, provides by subsection 3 of section 3:—

> 3. The commissioners in office on the twenty-fourth day of May, one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, shall hold office during good behaviour. Each subsequently appointed commissioner hsall hold office during good behaviour for a period of ten years from the date of his appointment, save that his tenure of office shall cease upon his attaining the age of sixty-five years.

By subsection 4 it is provided:

> Any commissioner shall be removed from office at any time by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

So that the head of the Civil Service Commission holds office for life, and not for a fixed period of ten years. He is in all respects in the same position as any deputy minister.

[Mr. Bennett.]

In fact, he is in a stronger position, I should think. It would appear that he ought to be treated in the same way as other deputy ministers.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Apparently I was mistaken, and I am glad my hon. friend has directed my attention to it. But what strikes me from his reading the statutes is that the discrimination to which the hon. leader of the opposition has been referring seems in that case to have been practised with a vengeance.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In what respect?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government of the day was looking after its own friends by making the appointments outright, but taking care to see that subsequent governments could appoint members to the board for ten years only.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot see any discrimination in that. They have to take the same chance as their opponents in future.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: With this fully developed Department of Labour and highly-paid officials, it seems to me we should look for some very much overdue labour legislation. Let me give simply one instance. This year there was trouble in Toronto. The Rapid Grip Company brought in from Europe workmen to take the place of their regular employees. If I understand aright, the Minister claims that under the alien labour legislation he has not the power effectively to handle a situation of that kind. Why does he not introduce legislation that will give him that power? In this case certain German workmen were introduced into the city of Toronto and took the places of the regular workmen. The same thing has been occurring in other places—in Edmonton and out at the coast. Does the minister propose introducing legislation which will enable him to handle a situation of this kind and thus protect Canadian workmen?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Cannot we have some answer in regard to this matter? The minister, I know, has had this situation under consideration.

Mr. HEENAN: The Prime Minister has already said that there will be no further legislation this session. The question of what should be done in future might be left until we see whether further legislation is necessary, because the case of which the hon. member speaks is to-day in litigation. Of course, the hon. member realizes that there is no doubt about the present law applying to workmen from the United States. When these men were brought in I called the attention of the company to the fact, and they immediately sent back the American workmen; they did retain a few of the Frenchmen, Germans and Swiss. The union interested thinks that the Alien Labour Act does apply, and have taken action in the courts.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—Public Archives—salaries, $110,180; contingencies, $20,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the explanation of the increase?

Mr. RINFRET: This is the usual vote. There is no change except the statutory increase of $1,364.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.

Thursday, June 13, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SALARIES OF DEPUTY MINISTERS

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

What are the names and salaries of officials of the civil service who enjoy the rank of deputy minister and who may not be actually in charge of a department, exclusive of those reported in unrevised Hansard, April 17, 1929, page 1720?

Mr. RINFRET:

Public Archives:

A. G. Doughty, deputy minister, $9,000.

Auditor General:

The auditor general, Georges Gonthier, $15,000 per annum.

Office of the Chief Electoral Officer:

Jules Castonguay, chief electoral officer, salary $6,000 a year.

Civil Service Commission:

Honourable William James Roche, M.D., LL.D., P.C., chairman, $7,000; Joseph Emile Tremblay, commissioner, $6,000; Newton McFaul MacTavish, M.A., D. Litt., commissioner, $6,000.

Library of Parliament:

There are two joint-librarians, each having the rank of deputy minister; i.e. Hon. Martin Burrell, parliamentary librarian, and M. J. de L. Tache, general librarian. Each receives a salary of $6,000 per annum.

Department of Justice:

E. R. Cameron, K.C., registrar of Supreme Court of Canada, salary $6,000 per annum.

CANADIAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE—OFFICERS PENSIONS

Mr. HUBBS:

How many officers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force had their pensions reduced under section (14) subsection (1) of the Pensions Act, in each of the years 1921-2-3-4-5-6-7?

Mr. KING (Kootenay):

The information asked for is not available as statistics relating to individual sections of the Pension Act are not kept. To give a correct reply would involve an examination of the file of each disability pensioner since 1920.

IMMIGRATION—R. A. BURRISS

Mr. COWAN:

1. Does the Dominion of Canada own the site of the immigration hall at Port Arthur, Ontario, and the building thereon, and, if so, what did the site and building cost?

2. When was R. A. Burriss appointed immigration officer at Port Arthur; what were the terms of his employment, and is any record available of the number of settlers located by him?

3. When did R. A. Burriss cease to be immigration officer, and why?

4. Why has no successor been appointed to fill the office of immigration officer at Port Arthur?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Title vested in Canadian National Realties Limited.

2. (a) The record of Mr. Burriss's employment at Port Arthur is as follows—February 1, 1899, as agent for the purpose of obtaining settlers from the United States. The terms of his employment were:—February 1, 1898 to March 31, 1899, allowance of $50 per month for expenses plus a commission of $3 for every male settler over 18 years, $2 for every female settler over 18 years, and $1 for all under 18 years. From April 1, 1899, to October 1, 1899, expense grant of $100 per month instead of $50 per month as formerly. August 1, 1900, placed on the salary basis of $50 per month from the Dominion government and $50 per month from the Ontario government. No commission. May 1, 1901, owing to withdrawal of Ontario government grant, appointed as temporary agent at salary of $1,000 per annum and travelling expenses when away from headquarters. September 1, 1901, salary increased to $1,200 per annum. (b) The amount paid to Mr. Burriss on account of bonuses for persons settled by him in Canada in, 1899-1900 was $209. 1900-1901 was $113. The number of settlers actually located is not available.

3. (a) December 31, 1911. (b) No information.

4. It was not considered necessary to continue an immigration agent at Port Arthur to encourage settlers from the United States; such work is better accomplished by Canadian agents resident in the United States. A full time inspector was appointed at Port Arthur in 1921 and this arrangement is still in effect.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CIVIL SERVICE ACT—EXEMPTIONS

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. In each department, what is the total number of persons who are filling positions that have been exempted from the operation of the Civil Service Act: (a) as full time employees; (b) as part time employees?

2. What are the names and salaries or wages of clerks or other employees in any department who have been taken on as labourers or in other exempted capacities, but who are being utilized in occupations that are not so exempted?

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS SUPERVISION COMMITTEE

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

For the fiscal year 1927-28 what is the total amount of purchases made by the following departments (exclusive of any purchases made on their behalf by the "Government Contracts Supervision Committee"): (a) Indian Affairs; (b) Interior; (c) Justice; (d) Marine; (e) Fisheries; (f) National Defence; (g) Mines; (h) Royal Canadian Mounted Police; (i) Post Office; (j) Public Works; (k) Public Printing and Stationery; (l) Raiiways and Canals; (m) Pensions and National Health?

IMPORTS OF WEAVING YARNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. B. PLUNKETT (Victoria): I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to a telegram I received this morning from the city of Victoria. This telegram reads:

Recent removal of 12½ per cent duty on imported worsted weaving yarns is jeopardizing ultimate success of plant recently established here. City vitally interested in undertaking owing to having guaranteed bond issue. Understand matter has been discussed in house. Can you advise me what prospects are to get duty reimposed this session.

Mayor H. Anscombe.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

I would ask the minister to give me some assurance which will enable me to send back a satisfactory reply to this city. I explained during the budget debate how the city of Victoria—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member must confine his remarks to a question; he must not make a speech.

Mr. PLUNKETT: May I ask, then, what relief will be given to the city of Victoria in this matter?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): The changes affecting worsted yarns were determined upon after a careful investigation of the whole industry, and this industry to which my hon. friend refers was started after those changes had been made.

HUDSON BAY EXPEDITION SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I have been asked to direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that in the advertisements now appearing in Nova Scotia for supplies for the Hudson Bay expedition Campbell's soups are specified, and I understand that these soups are really an American product. The same thing may be said with respect to other supplies. I would respectfully direct the minister's attention to this fact in the hope that he may be able to provide that Canadian goods shall be utilized and not American products.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I shall be pleased to look into the matter and try to meet my hon. friend's request, which is a reasonable one.

CONTROL OF RADIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. G. BELL (St. Antoine): There is a rumour to the effect that all radio will be under the control of the Canadian National Railways. Can the Minister of Marine and Fisheries tell us whether there is any truth in that report?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I shall look into the question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME OF MEETING OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Will the Prime Minister be good enough to inform the house whether the government would take into serious consideration the possibility of calling the next session of parliament about the first of November instead of in February, as has been the case this year?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): After one of my hon. friends on the opposite side introduced the subject yesterday, I had prepared a schedule which helps to indicate the length of sessions in previous years. I shall be glad to furnish the hon. member if he so desires with a copy of that memorandum. I think he will find when the sessions were called in the fall that for the most part they lasted just as long into the following year as they have when the sessions began early in the new year. The house has had experience with both practices. Sir Wilfrid Laurier adopted for a time the practice of having parliament meet in November and it was discontinued later by Sir Robert Borden, largely I think on the representation of members from western Canada who complained that they should not be kept away from their homes so long. However, with respect to the time of the meeting of parliament, that like all others is a matter which the government will have to consider in the light of existing circumstances. I regret I cannot say more than that, but the government will do in this as in all else, what it believes to be most in the national interest.

Mr. COOTE: May I point out that we have now new rules governing procedure and if parliament were called on the first of November there is no reason why the session might not be through by the first of May. It seems to me it would be much better for all members of parliament, particularly those who come such long distances.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,450,000.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I have a suggestion to make with respect to this vote. There was some discussion on it the last time it was before the committee and in order to expedite the passage of these items I suggest that further discussion of the vote be deferred until we come to the supplementary vote of the same character, No. 361, with respect to health of animals. It would facilitate business if we passed now this large vote in the main estimates, leaving further discussion until we reach that supplementary vote. I have no idea of restricting discussion, but it would make for greater progress in disposing of the smaller items which immediately follow this vote.

Mr. BENNETT: If it meets with the view of hon. members to the left, I think it would serve some useful purpose to do so. There would be no lessening of the discussion and we would get the matter in hand as we go along.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is all very well, but this vote might be called some night at a quarter to twelve o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be called now, I understand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we just want to make some progress on the smaller items.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If we can have the assurance that this item will be called at a reasonable hour, in order to give us an opportunity of debating it, that might be all right.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that we discuss both items together.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We might keep at this for an hour and not make very much progress. My suggestion is that we let this go through and then have the discussion on the same item in the supplementary estimates. Then we can make some progress in the smaller items following the main vote.

Mr. COOTE: This seems a peculiar suggestion. If the minister desires to get on with some of the smaller items, why not call those items and let this one stand?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very well.

Item stands.

Entomology, $25,000.

Mr. TUMMON: Under this item I might repeat the question I asked the minister some time ago. Recently there was an announcement that property had been obtained in the city of Belleville for the Department of Agriculture, and I presume that it has reference to this vote. I would be very glad if the minister would make a short statement as to the work he intends to carry on at that point.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am reminded by my deputy that the building in Belleville to which my hon. friend refers is for the purpose of housing all our staff in that vicinity, including our seed inspection and entomological staffs. The purchase has not been completed as yet, but it is in the course of completion and we secured the building at a very good price, very much less than it could be built for at present.

Item agreed to.

Administration of Destructive Insect and Pest Act, and necessary buildings, $580,000.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister tell us the reason for this increase of $50,000?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The insect invasions of Canada are becoming more numerous and more serious all the time, and we have to spend more money to circumscribe their activities. I have in mind the campaign carried on by the provincial government of Ontario and ourselves against the corn borer, as a result of which the corn acreage has come back to 75 per cent of what it was before the invasion of that insect, showing that our activities have been successful in restricting its ravages. Then there is the oriental peach moth; by keeping after that pest continually I think we can save at least a remnant of the peach crop.

Mr. BENNETT: What part of this vote is intended for buildings? There is a miscellaneous item which we are told includes the construction of a very costly building, perhaps costing $150,000. I think estimates which deal with the extermination of pests and at the same time include buildings are not very good unless it is indicated just what the buildings are, how much of the estimate is to be expended for that purpose and to what extent there is a co-relation of the activities of this branch of this department with the research bureau, because I take it that you are studying methods by which to destroy these insects and pests which are so injurious to agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the point is well taken. When I took charge of the department I found that there were a certain number of small buildings being erected, costing up to $4,000, without such provisions being made. I consulted the Auditor General about it and he thought if we were going to put up further buildings in connection with these votes it should be so indicated. This reference to buildings was first included in the entomological vote when we erected the rust laboratory at Winnipeg; that was included in the vote after consultation with the Auditor General and it has been continued since. However, there are no buildings anticipated under this year's vote.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Salary and expenses of agricultural produce marketing agent in Great Britain, $15,000.

Mr. COOTE: What part of this item is for salaries?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I believe Mr. Wilson has reached his maximum; I think his salary is $5,200.

Item agreed to.

Farm economics, including agricultural co-operative marketing, $10,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice this is a new item. Will the minister explain?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This matter has been under discussion for several years; it has been more or less in the public mind, and since cooperative marketing is becoming more popular and is practiced more and more throughout Canada it was felt by my staff and myself that it was time we had a central organization, a sort of clearing house for these activities, since some of these organizations are now becoming Dominion-wide and someone should be in charge of work of this kind. Up to quite recently this work has been of a provincial character, but there are now several Dominion-wide cooperative concerns, such as the Cooperative Livestock Growers' Association, the Cooperative Wool Growers' Association and others, and there are a great many activities which necessitate a Dominion branch in charge of that work, in cooperation with the different provincial authorities.

In a word I believe that is the object of this item. We are now advertising for a director for this work, and we hope to secure the services of some well qualified man. Of course this is a Civil Service Commission appointment and will take some time to complete, but we hope the appointment will be made before the end of July. Our intention is to have a properly qualified man commence work with a survey of these activities in order to find out all the different aspects. There are many cooperative activities being carried on; some of them are stock companies, some are pools of a voluntary nature, some have contracts for three or five years, and in British Columbia there is one organization of a more or less compulsory nature, so a survey will be necessary in order to get a line on this work, since we realize that we cannot have similarity in such a large country as Canada.

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister tell us what will be the title of this official?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He will be the commissioner of agricultural economics, and his salary is advertised as $4,320.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Would the minister tell us if it is proposed to break any new ground in this work, or will the duty of this official be merely to assist existing organizations? Will he go in to new fields and try to develop new cooperative organizations?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course he will be working in cooperation with those organizations already existing. We conducted a campaign in the county of Essex with the idea of organizing the tobacco growers. We had no officers of our own for that purpose and we applied to Mr. McPhail of the central wheat pool to let us have some men of agreeable personality, skilled in that class of work and possessing knowledge of the whole subject. They sent down three men and we obtained from them a lot of information. Conditions were not absolutely favourable to the continuance of the work which we hoped to take up later on because there was an organization already in existence. There were many problems which made it difficult to go any further, but this is one of the things which should be taken charge of in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture of Ontario; something should be done for the tobacco growers in western Ontario because they are too much at the mercy of those who buy and the question of quality is not receiving the consideration it should. This and other matters are largely of federal concern, and I think there is a very decided place for a service of this kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I desire to commend the minister for taking this step, and I trust the venture will be a successful one. May I suggest to the minister that it might be well to spend a little money to look into the whole matter of the cost of distribution. Whether or not you call it cooperation, that is one of the great problems which will have to be solved. A few days ago the hon. members from the maritimes were complaining about the difficulties they encountered in marketing their fish. As the hon. minister knows, we would buy their fish in the west if it could be purchased at a price we could afford to pay, and the same thing applies to British Columbia fruit. It seems to me that this question of the cost of distribution is one which might be taken up by the official whom the minister proposes to appoint under this item. The following appeared in a recent issue of The Western Producer of Saskatoon:

> Apples which sell at $2.50 a box return about 50 cents to the producer. If butter which sells at 50 cents a pound only returned ten cents to the producer for butter fat what would the producer of buttter fat do? Would he clamour for ¾ cent a pound tariff to save his business, or reorganize his method of marketing? The fruit grower thinks a tariff of ¾ cent per pound helps him out.

I would like to quote from an article which appeared in the Manitoba Free Press last fall, as follows:

> The prairie provinces are the natural market for the fruit-grower of British Columbia, and that market could be greatly enlarged, without waiting for future increase of population, if there could be a reduction in the retail price of the fruit on the prairies. The British Columbia apple is an excellent product and the consumption in these provinces is limited only by the ability to purchase. There is no doubt that the sale now is much larger than a few years ago when the west was suffering from a severe depression. The people are buying more because they are able to do so, and they would buy still more if the price were lowered.
>
> A very large proportion of the retail price goes to pay handling costs, freight, and wholesale and retail dealers' profits, leaving only a fraction of the price to pay the fruit grower for the care of his orchard and interest on his investment. The handling and distribution charges on a box of apples are given as follows by the Western Producer of Saskatoon after an investigation of the matter:

	Cents
Box	16
Paper for wrapping	5½
Labelling	1
Packing	7
Lidding	1
Superintendence, loading	10½
Associated Growers' charge	7
Total handling and shipping charge	48
Freight to Saskatoon	56
Wholesalers' profit	40
Retailers' profit	60
Total charges	$2 04

If there is an overhead charge of $2.04 per box, before the producer of the apples gets one cent, then it is a serious matter and something which the department should examine into. These figures are based on carload rates to Saskatoon, but those of us who live in the little outlying villages know that apples have to come from the larger centres such as Regina, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, Yorkton and so on, and they are distributed at less than carload rates which runs the cost up much higher. It means that we have to pay $3.50 to $4 per box, and the average small town dweller or farmer is not able to pay that much. I have known of cases where the British Columbia producer got only a few cents per box for his apples, and I think the official whom the minister proposes to appoint should go into this matter, not merely with regard to apples or fish, but he should consider the broad question of the cost of distribution. It seems to me that this cost of distribution is more important than the tariff, and if we spent a little money trying to get that cost down I believe we would get somewhere. It would not only reduce the cost of living, but we would be increasing consumption by enlarging the market for our own products.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, I cannot take any exception to the remarks of the hon. member but I would draw his attention to the fact that the term "farm economics" is a very wide expression. The qualifications asked for in the advertisement for this vacancy cover exactly what my hon. friend has been discussing. If my hon. friend desires I will read the advertisement, but it takes care of the services to which he referred.

Mr. ROWE: How large a staff will this appointee have?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are calling for only a small staff, an assistant and a secretary.

Mr. ROWE: With the head office in Ottawa?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There will be just three at the outset.

Item agreed to.

Contributions to Empire Bureau, $25,000.

Mr. LUCAS: As this is a new vote, will the minister kindly give an explanation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: At the empire conference of 1923, this question was tentatively brought up; some progress was made, but it was really just a start. At the conference of 1926, at which the government and the department heads were well represented, the matter was dealt with again and a tentative program was laid out for the establishment of these clearing houses or bureaus, for the centralization of agricultural information from the whole empire. Doctor Orr of Rowatt Institute and Sir Robert Greig were appointed in Great Britain to do the initial work in the matter of organizing these bureaus in the different parts of the empire. Many of the dependencies have expressed a desire to work in cooperation with the central bureau in the United Kingdom. One bureau has been established at Edinburgh, which has to do with animal genetics, or animal breeding. There, all the questions, we will say, of contagious abortion, sterility in cows and many other diseases are studied and the causes worked out. Any information we get in Canada or in any other part of the empire, for instance, when we make any discovery with respect to any of these diseases, we immediately forward to the central bureau which acts as a clearing house and which in turn forwards it to all the rest. All the units of the empire engage in this great work. Therefore we are cooperating with each other, for example one of us finding out something about a particular disease, perhaps not enough to make it public but enough to forward to other workers in the same field of activity so as to put them on their guard as to what course to pursue with respect to the problem. Let me cite the case of rickets in pigs. That comes under the question of animal nutrition. I am sure all farmers in Canada, especially in the west, know what it is to have rickets in pigs. If you once see a rickety pig, you will never forget its appearance. This question is being studied in all parts of the country and if research workers in any country discover something in regard to the cause of it—and it is largely connected with feeding—that information will be transmitted to all other bureaus.

There is another branch that has to do with micrology, that is science which treats of microscopic objects. For instance, it deals with rust and other kindred diseases. We have six of these investigators who are working in cooperation with every part of the empire. Every dominion has joined in this bureau proposition and it is now pretty well established and in line with the central bureau, not only giving information but receiving it in turn.

Mr. ROWE: We have heard about rickety pigs and other things, but we have not heard anything about how the minister is going to spend this $25,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is the allocation amongst the various units engaged in this cooperative work:

Contribution from	Amount
United Kingdom	£3,750
Colonial Office	3,750
Canada	3,125
Australia	3,125
India	2,187.10s.
Union of South Africa	1,562.10s.
New Zealand	1,250
Irish Free State	625
Southern Rhodesia	250
Anglo-Egyptian Sudan	250
Newfoundland	125

Then in addition to these, there are two units that have been operating for some time, one since 1912. The latter is the bureau of micrology and the other I mentioned is the bureau of entomology.

Mr. ROWE: What about the other $10,000?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One of them is $5,000 and the other is $1,500. They are included in this vote.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Where is the main central bureau? Is it in London?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The central administrative offices are in London under Mr. Chadwick.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is he in one of the government offices.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and the others are located at various points throughout the United Kingdom.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Department of Agriculture, province of Nova Scotia, to complete amortization of the debt against the science building at the Agricultural college, Truro, Nova Scotia, $8,389.08.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this the last payment necessary to complete this contract?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council and necessary new buildings, $295,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain the increase in this item?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is for a laboratory to be established at the experimental farm. It is primarily for the purpose of giving us accommodation for conducting our research work in dairying. We have a very important export product in cheese and occasionally we have found trouble with bacteria. It takes some time to develop and we have found difficulty in discovering it without more up to date equipment than we have at the present time. For instance, in Grenville county recently—and the hon. member for that constituency spoke to me about the matter—there was some difficulty in connection with shipments of cheese from certain factories. It was discovered that after the cheese was of a certain age it developed deleterious bacteria. Complaints were made and we took up the problem even with the facilities that we have in this city, and found out the cause of the bacterial action. We discovered that it was due to the preservative that was put in the curd and that should not have been put in. It was thought proper to add saltpetre to cheese to discourage the development of certain flavours. But it was found to have the opposite effect. It was a good thing that this was discovered before it had continued for any length of time, because a number of cheese factories were pursuing this practice and they were notified to discontinue it. Instead of preserving the cheese, it had the opposite effect. We want to do work of that nature expeditiously so as to check any unwise or harmful practice before it adversely affects the cheese.

Mr. ROWE: How many new inspectors are included in this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think any particular inspectors will be necessary on account of the establishment of this laboratory. I think we shall have to have one or two more graders for the purpose of keeping track of the work. This trouble got quite a start before it was drawn to our attention. As a matter of fact it did not develop until the cheese got across the water, and we want to keep closer tab than we are able to do at present. We want to lock the door before the horse is stolen, before any danger arises, and that is why we require these additional facilities.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice a grant of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council. What, in the minister's opinion, are the functions of that council? Is it primarily political, for the purpose of advocating an increased tariff on dairy products?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This institution was organized before I had anything to do with the Department of Agriculture, but I have found it a very useful organization in promoting the cause of dairying.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And the cause of protection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was organized before I came here, but I do not consider it the better or the worse for that. I remember the late D'Arcy Scott, the secretary, and the late Mr. Stonehouse, the president, were there when I had first to do with it. I found they were very efficient officers working for the general promotion of the dairying industry throughout Canada. I have reason to think the activities in that direction are quite as useful still. If my hon. friend has anything he wishes to bring to my attention with regard to the activities of the National Dairy Council, I think I have under my hand a statement with regard to what they are engaged in doing.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the minister not think that the activities of the National Dairy Council have, for the past two years, been directed very largely towards the cause of the protectionist, rather than to the improvement of the dairy industry?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I first read this memorandum:

The National Dairy Council is an association composed of representatives of the various branches of the dairy industry. It was originally formed for the purpose of advancing the dairy industry throughout Canada by taking such steps both legal and otherwise as would best bring about the end in view.

One of its first activities consisted in the efforts made to have legislation passed prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Canada. It has also been of considerable service to the dairy industry, through representations to the Board of Railway Commissioners, in having conditions improved and freight charges adjusted in connection with the transportation of dairy produce generally.

The organizations represented in the National Dairy Council are as follows:—

British Columbia Dairymen's Association.
Alberta Dairymen's Association.
Western Ice Cream Manufacturers.
Alberta Producers' Association.
Saskatchewan Dairy Association.
Western Butter Manufacturers.
Manitoba Dairy Association.
Western Milk Distributors.
Dairymen's Association of Western Ontario.
Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.
Canadian Creamery Association.
The Ontario Milk Producers' Association.
Canadian Association of Ice Cream Mgrs.
Condensed Milk and Powdered Milk Interests.
Quebec Dairy Association.
Montreal Milk Producers' Association.
Montreal Milk Distributors.
Canadian Produce Merchants' Ass'n.
New Brunswick Dairymen United.
Nova Scotia Dairymen's Association.
Prince Edward Island Dairy Association.
Holstein-Friesian Association.
Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association.
Canadian Jersey Cattle Club.

The newly elected president is Mr. F. E. M. Robinson, of Richmond, Quebec, while the secretary-treasurer is W. F. Stephen, of Ottawa, Ontario. The National Dairy Council obtains a grant from the federal government of $5,000 per annum.

I gather from the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River that he thinks these gentlemen have something akin to protective ideas with respect to their industry.

Mr. ROWE: They should have too.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend think that with these grants should go a condition that these people circumscribe their views with regard to certain questions? Should I say to Toronto, for instance, which gets a large number of grants: "You must not be so protectionist as you are." I do not see how I could do that effectively.

Mr. ROWE: You will never do it either.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Speaking quite seriously, I do not see how we can in a democratic country give grants of this nature and then dictate what the recipient shall or shall not discuss. I remember that when I was connected with a grain growers' organization myself in the old territorial days we got a very modest grant of $250 from a Conservative minister of agriculture, and I can imagine what remark I would have made if he had said: "We will give you this grant but you must say and talk about the things I want you to talk about." I do not think I would have taken the grant under those conditions, and I likely would have had something to say besides. I cannot imagine any line of advice that could be given to the recipients of these grants that would not be considered wholly objectionable under our conception of democractic government. We are making dozens and scores and hundreds of grants of one kind and another all over Canada, and we have never thought of imposing any such conditions. I may say to my hon. friend that I have suggested to different organizations that it would be easier for me to continue the grants they were receiving if they were not so free in discussing controversial questions at certain times, but I have never thought of imposing any conditions upon them; I just pointed out my difficulties. We have an example of those difficulties right now in the criticism of the hon. member for Bow River, whose opinion I usually regard with high favour, but not this one.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I can imagine no circumstances under which the minister could be silent. As to this particular point the minister's difficulty is quite clear. I should imagine that precisely the same difficulty would meet the Prime Minister, say, when he was selecting his cabinet, that if it were made a condition that every member of the low tariff ministry must be really a low tariff man and never preach anything but low tariff, terrible complications would ensue in the present ministry, and I take it that it would be almost hopeless for them to attempt to carry on. So the same policy is to be carried out in regard to the National Dairy Council that prevails with the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches now—let every man have his own opinions, let him give them out to the world if he wants to, but when election time comes around we will all tell the people how gallantly we are fighting for low tariffs; but in parliament when the session is on we will make sure there is no material reduction in the tariff.

Mr. ADSHEAD: With reference to the list of dairymens' associations which the minister has just read, I would draw his attention to a statement made in the house a few days ago by the hon. member for Yale, who said that a large amount of imported Australian butter was being wrapped in Canada in other wrappers and sold as Canadian butter. It is quite evident that the farmers in this country who milk their cows would not be doing that, and evidently it must be the dairymens' associations that are perpetrating this fraud. I would ask the minister to investigate that matter.

Mr. BARBER: I think we have a right to an answer from the minister as to whether it is permissible under the regulations to bring in forty or fifty cars of New Zealand butter, work it over in the dairies of this country, wash it and sweeten it, and sell it to the people as Canadian or Ontario butter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course, that is quite contrary to the regulations, and if my hon. friend or anybody else will supply us with some evidence we will certainly investigate it. We are investigating complaints all the time. There is not a month that we are not prosecuting somebody for some offence under the regulations, and we do not mind taking on one more.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is it not the duty of the department to investigate these complaints of its own initiative?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is true that quite frequently complaints are investigated following reports from our own inspectors; whenever complaints are made we investigate.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The direct charge was made in this house by an hon. member that certain companies were importing Australian butter, rewrapping it in Canadian wrappers, and selling it as Canadian butter. When these charges are made in this house by an hon. member surely it is the duty of the department to investigate them and try to get evidence substantiating the charges.

Mr. CHAPLIN: More specific charges than that have been made in this house. The statement has been made by hon. members that you do not have to go outside of this very district to find that that practice prevails only a few miles from Ottawa.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sure the Minister of Justice can testify to the fact that hardly a month passes when we are not prosecuting someone for violation of our regulations. In connection with the live stock records here in Ontario, for instance, we prosecuted and had a man fined on four charges, and the fines aggregated $2,000. There can be no complaint made against the department of reluctance to prosecute offences under the acts or regulations. Just bring us something like evidence and we will investigate it for all it is worth.

Mr. TUMMON: Has the department made any investigations in regard to this particular matter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Have any of your inspectors ever brought to your attention cases of the kind just mentioned where New Zealand butter is being wrapped in Canadian wrappers and sold as Canadian butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One or two. The inspectors report to the Dairy Commissioner, he reports to the deputy minister, who reports to me. Complaints have come, but we have not had sufficient evidence to warrant a prosecution.

Mr. SENN: Is it not a fact that any dairy company that is sending out butter under its own label has to have that label registered? When they are reworking New Zealand butter and sending it to the market they put it in a different wrapper entirely, so they are not evading the regulations, after all. Is not that the reason that there have been no prosecutions?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They have to have registered labels for export cheese and butter. There is neither compulsory inspection nor labelling of cheese or butter for home consumption.

Mr. TUMMON: Under the regulations is it legal for a creamery to put New Zealand butter into their churns, work it over, sweeten it, and put it in pound prints and wrap it, placing the name of their factory on the wrappers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is entirely illegal.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): Does the minister say it is not being done?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not say it is not being done at all. We would like to get sufficient evidence to enter a prosecution; but we have not had that yet.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): Then where is all this New Zealand butter going, what is it being sold as?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As New Zealand butter.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): I am advised that a number of creameries buy New Zealand butter, wrap it and sell it as their own. Is this really taking place?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not heard of it.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): Then what are they doing with carloads and carloads of New Zealand butter that they are buying?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand from my deputy that if the butter is sent out in wrappers bearing a name, without any indication of the source of origin, it is not a violation of the law; but if designated as Canadian butter when really it is of other origin, that is a violation of the law.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any regulation in force which requires that imported butter be sold with the name of the country of origin on the package?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. GARDINER: That should be done.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think this discussion is well justified. If the Minister will bring in a regulation requiring that no butter be sold in this country without bearing on the package the country of origin, it would work no hardship on anybody. The minister says that to-day New Zealand butter may be taken into the creameries, rewrapped there and sent out in any kind of package so long as that package does not state that the butter is made in Canada.

Mr. TUMMON: But bearing the name of the creamery doing so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, bearing the name of the Ottawa Dairy, the Fraser River Dairy, or whatever other dairy it may be, creating the impression in the public mind that it is Canadian butter. That is wholly unfair. If that is the case, I think the minister would be well advised to bring in the necessary regulation, if one does not exist—he says it does not—to require on the package the country of origin of butter of this character.

Mr. ROBB: Would my hon. friend apply that policy to all importations?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think so. We rather pride ourselves on our exports of agricultural products; we are proud of our cheese, cream, wheat, beef, and are very glad to have it marked Canadian. I see no reason whatever why goods imported into this country should not be always marked with the country of origin.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think the Minister of Agriculture must realize that such a practice is against the ordinary food laws of this country. This is nothing more nor less than a fraud upon our people, and I think those perpetrating it could be proceeded against under the ordinary common law. It is nothing more, nothing less, than a fraud.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend need not get quite so excited.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not excited at all. The minister should be excited, but he is not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is not the time to get excited.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is too late in the session.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am glad my hon. friend from Bow River has brought up the question. I should like to apply such a regulation to a lot of things, but I understand there is the usual constitutional question to be worked out.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The British North America Act?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What has my hon. friend from Lincoln got to say about it?

An hon. MEMBER: Nothing.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thought it was nothing. In Great Britain the British Merchandise Marks Act is gradually being invoked against all importations. I should like to see the necessary regulation apply to practically all imports.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why cannot it be done?

Mr. SENN: It is a protective measure of course.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why has not the law been introduced before?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why has it not been enforced?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have the reputation of introducing so many amendments that until those are consolidated I hesitate to introduce any more.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I submit the minister has enough inspectors around to ascertain what is going on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The inspectors are there to enforce the law. I do not think we can make any regulations under the existing law, in fact I am quite sure about it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just why? The minister has said he is in favour of this and would like to have it done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He says difficulties may arise. What are they?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Constitutional difficulties.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What constitutional difficulties?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is the first time I have ever heard of constitutional difficulties in the way of requiring our importers to stamp the country of origin on their goods.

Mr. FRASER: The minister need not be so fearful about statutory authority in this case, because other ministers proceed to make all kinds of regulations and orders in council without any statutory authority at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When the same question arose with regard to the inspection and grading of farm products for home consumption, we found we had to get what is called concurrent legislation. It took us six years to bring that about. That applies now to all products for home consumption under the Farm Products Act. The provinces do not like this sort of legislation very much; they feel that it is an invasion of their legislative domain.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think that is imaginative.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The western provinces came through quickly, but some of the provinces down here were reluctant. Without a popular demand I hesitate to try this out in regard to butter. This concurrent legislation does not include butter. It does include eggs and the live stock yards, and it does include the grading of all things for export. The concurrent legislation is necessary to cover all things for home consumption but it is not necessary as regards exports.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I can see where constitutional difficulties might arise in the stamping of domestic goods in the provinces, but surely the federal government has complete control in the matter of regulations governing the entry of foreign goods.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have no law of that nature under our department but I can assure my hon. friend and the committee generally that personally I am in favour of it. I am in favour of having the same law that is on the statutes of Great Britain, that is, the British Merchandise Marks Act. I should like to have a similar law invoked in Canada and applied wherever practicable and desirable.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister promise to introduce legislation along this line next year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With respect to hay, I have legislation which has been lying in cold storage since last year, and I have legislation also with respect to maple products, for which a great many people in eastern Ontario and Quebec are anxious. I will seek an opportunity at another session to place that legislation before the house and I hope I shall have then the same buoyant support which the proposal seems to be receiving now.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The minister speaks of constitutional difficulties. May I ask him whether he is referring to the Canadian constitution or to the constitution of the cabinet?

Mr. ROWE: It seems to me that the minister is merely splitting hairs on this question. The government have passed a good many orders in council and made regulations covering far greater scope than this mere detail of bringing butter under the regulations that now exist with respect to eggs and other products for home consumption. They have camouflaged the real situation. There are 25,000,000 pounds of butter coming into this country every year, which the people do not know. The minister takes a side glance in the direction of some of his free trade friends in the cabinet—because now I believe he is a protectionist—to see whether the suggestion which has been made is satisfactory to them. At first when the hon. member for Bow River mentioned it the minister said he would bring in a regulation; but, as I say, taking a side glance at his colleagues, he believed it might be dangerous to reveal to the people of Canada the quantities of dairy products that are coming into this country. It is my personal belief that the government are desirous of keeping from the public the knowledge of how much dairy butter is coming into Canada. The minister says that wherever practicable or desirable the British Merchandise Marks Act could be put into effect here. Well, I suggest that it is not desirable on the part of this government to show to the Canadian people that there are 25,000,000 pounds of foreign dairy butter coming into Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The returns must show it.

Mr. ROWE: Yes, they do show it; but the people do not know it yet. They will not know until next year. So far as this $5,000 grant to the National Dairy Council is concerned, I submit to the minister that when he gives such a grant to a council one expects that the advice offered by that council, and the resolutions which they pass, will be taken into consideration. I ask the minister now where he stands personally in view of the resolution from the National Dairy Council. Some of the most important resolutions that have reached the government have come from that council, and in my opinion the grant should be increased to $10,000; because if any council has courage enough to give this government a hint to protect the home markets for the home producer, it deserves every consideration for such advice.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): If that is what the dairy council are doing we had better cut out the grant.

Mr. ROWE: The resolutions of the dairy council are as important to this country as any of the recommendations that are made by the Consumers' League in connection with the famous tariff board.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): We are not giving a grant to the league.

Mr. ROWE: I ask hon. members whether the National Dairy Council's advice would not be of more benefit if acted upon than any advice given by the Consumers' League. I would ask the minister now to tell us where he stands on this question. Does he not believe himself that some protection should be given to the dairy industry of the country? We are importing 25,000,000 pounds of foreign produced butter; there are 1,000 cows less in Canada this year than last year; there is consequent depression in the swine industry which is so closely associated with dairying; and there is an all round depressing effect on the activities of the basic industry of Canada. In view of these facts, will the minister rise in his place now and tell us where he stands personally, independently of the free trade inclination of some of his colleagues?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think that the committee is interested in my personal views on the question; the government's views are one.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. ROWE: I know what their views are.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee is not interested in my personal views.

Mr. ROWE: We certainly are.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As regards the suggestion that we are trying to camouflage the amount of Australian and New Zealand butter coming into the country by desisting from giving the facts, the thing is absurd; that question never entered my mind for a moment. As a matter of fact, the question of marking on imported products the country of origin has never before come up in this house, so far as I know, and I am just wondering whether, if such legislation were proposed, it would meet with this uproarious support from certain quarters of the house. Judging from the way the British Merchandise Marks Act has worked out, I believe it is a good thing. I have never seen the act but I believe it serves a good purpose. But it must be invoked with a great deal of caution, because they have met with a good deal of trouble in the old country in imposing it.

Mr. ROWE: It seems to me just as absurd to carry on the way we are doing as it is to make the proposal which has been submitted to the minister. Surely we ought to know the origin of goods which are imported into the country; the place of manufacture ought to be indicated. You so mark your furniture in the Chateau Laurier; surely then it will not be suggested that it is absurd to have foreign products coming into Canada marked to show the country of origin.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From the departmental standpoint I shall be delighted, we shall all be delighted, to have the question looked into during the recess to see whether we cannot bring it in some form or other before the house at another session. Looking at it cursorily, I think it is good; but I found long ago that it is always best to look twice before you jump once, and to be quite sure just where you are getting off at. It looks goods to me and I should like to see it applied all round whenever practicable, but the matter must be looked into.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When the minister does propose it and he finds himself instantly met with strenuous opposition from the dairy council, I hope he will not waiver. I anticipate that the dairy council will be the first body to issue a strenuous protest against the proposed marking of the country of importation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think so; I think they will be in favour of it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think so.

Mr. COOTE: Have they ever suggested it?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The Conservative party has changed over night. Last evening they were opposed to a delegate to the Labour Council even making a speech while she was on her way to Geneva, To-day they would double the grant to the dairy council in order to have them go out and advocate protection, which is political propaganda.

I think this vote is very important; there was a time when a number of the creameries were opposed to the importation of New Zealand butter, but many of them raise no objection now because they have conceived the idea of wrapping it up differently, putting it into different packages and selling it as though it were Canadian butter, and the public does not know the difference. I think a few moments ago the minister became confused with regard to the regulations of his department. We grade eggs and various other farm products, and it does seem strange that we should not be able to grade foreign products or have some way of letting the public know where they came from and what they are like. It does seem to me that if we can have regulations for the grading of our own products we should have some way of grading these foreign importations, and I think steps should be taken along that line.

Mr. ADSHEAD: This question was first brought to my attention by the farmers who have milch cows in the province of Alberta. A quantity of New Zealand butter was brought to the city of Calgary, but though I searched through every store in Calgary I could not find one pound of New Zealand butter anywhere. Surely when that amount of butter was brought in it should not require an amendment to the British North America Act to trace it up and see what became of it, because it was never exported as such. Surely a live inspector could find out what was done with that butter, and I think the dairy institutions owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Yale for bringing up this matter in the house.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I do not think the statement made by the hon. member should be allowed to pass without a word with regard to the situation in other parts of the country. Within the last year I have been in British Columbia twice, and I think the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Plunkett) will bear me out when I say that in the city of Victoria, New Zealand butter is sold as such, displayed on the counter with a sign on it, and sold for two cents a pound more than any other butter. They are not hiding it there.

Mr. BANCROFT: While the minister is investigating this matter perhaps he might find out if any of the members of the National Dairy Council are selling New Zealand butter as Canadian butter. If they are doing so the minister might ascertain whether they are making any profit from it, and if they are making a profit perhaps they might get along next year without this grant.

While I am on my feet I might tell the minister that the producers of cream carry on their organization by taking a certain deduction from the butter fat each month. If the other members of the council are making money by selling imported butter as Canadian butter, they should be able to pay their share of the upkeep of this organization without a grant from the government.

Mr. SENN: A moment ago an hon. member to my left took rather a fling at the Conservative party for changing its attitude overnight, but I notice that certain members of the group to my left have also changed their attitude to a certain extent. They tell us they are in favour of marking the origin of foreign products sold in Canada in packages, and surely that is more or less a protective measure. That is the reason the minister does not want to adopt it, but I am glad hon. gentlemen to my left are adopting our views in that respect.

I noticed that the Minister of Finance asked the hon. member for Bow River whether he would be in favour of that being done with all products, and the hon. member answered in the affirmative. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is in favour of taking such action. A few moments ago the Minister of Agriculture declined to give his personal views on this question, when he was asked to do so by a member on this side. Why did he not want to give the committee his personal opinion; is he afraid or ashamed of his views in that respect? Do they differ from the views of the other members of the cabinet, or why is he unwilling to give them? I think we should have some answer to that question.

With regard to the National Dairy Council, the Minister of Agriculture was good enough to give us the names of the former president and secretary of the council. The name of the present secretary is Mr. Stephen, and if I am correctly informed for a long time, and perhaps even yet, Mr. Stephen was one of the political henchmen of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no information as to that.

Mr. SENN: Surely we could not accuse Mr. Stephen or the Minister of Finance of being in favour of a protective measure of this kind, so if the National Dairy Council have advocated protection for the dairy industry it must be because they have been forced to the conclusion, without regard to their own private views, that it is absolutely necessary for their industry.

In conclusion I would repeat that if the Minister of Agriculture is not ashamed of his own private views on this question I think he should let the house know what they are.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee is not interested in them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A few moments ago the Minister of Finance elicited from the hon. member for Bow River his opinion with regard to the marking of goods in general. Now I think the Minister of Finance might tell us his opinion on the same question.

Mr. ROBB: I am not under cross-examination at the moment. My opinion is that we might profitably go on with the business of the house and pass supply.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Minister of Finance is not interested now but he was interested only a moment ago, when he questioned the hon. member for Bow River. I think the Minister of Finance should not cross-examine another member if he is not willing to be cross-examined himself.

Mr. ROWE: I think this is a reasonable question to ask the Minister of Finance, but he tells us we should go on with the business of the house. Every year since I have been a member here the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture have been brought down either on a Friday night, when a number of members leave for their homes in Quebec and Ontario, where mixed farming is carried on to the greatest extent—

Mr. LAPOINTE: They should stay here.

Mr. ROWE: I think that is right, but I stay here almost as much as the Minister of Justice does. Surely the minister could give us a clear statement as to where he stands on a question of such importance; surely the government cannot camouflage the people all the time. We would like to know where the government stands on one of the most important questions to the agricultural industry in Canada to-day, and if the Minister of Agriculture cannot tell us perhaps the Minister of Finance could give us that information. Again this year we have the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture coming up at twelve o'clock on the last day of the session, since it is generally understood that the house is to conclude its business to-night and prorogue tomorrow.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ROWE: I am not particular about it; it does not matter a great deal whether the house closes this week or next week, but this department is one of the most important in the government, and every year the estimates come down either late on a Friday night or within the last day or two of the session. The most important of these estimates have not been touched yet, and now it is twelve o'clock noon on the last day of the session. This is a very important item, and the Minister of Finance says that we should go on with the business of the country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think these extraneous fiscal matters should be introduced into my estimates. I will have to leave in a few minutes and we are taking up a lot of time discussing a matter which should have been discussed on the budget, and which was discussed.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Minister of Agriculture says that he has only a few minutes left to complete his estimates; in future these estimates should be brought down before the end of the session.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think the last remark of the Minister of Agriculture is wholly unfair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister suggested that the debate on the budget was the proper place to bring in these suggestions; I suggest that there has never been a more proper moment than the present one for introducing a matter of this kind.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To discuss fiscal matters?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This particular matter of marking. The Minister of Finance is the one responsible for introducing that aspect into it, because in his usual subtle and tricky fashion he asked a question with the obvious intention of using my answer at some future time; there is no doubt in the world about that.

An hon. MEMBER: You fell for it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I did not fall for it; I knew exactly what his intention was, and I was very careful in making my answer.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Could I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just a moment, first of all I want to get an answer from another Liberal member. The Minister of Finance has asked a question and it has been answered courteously, and I would like to ask him if he does not believe in the suggestion which has been offered here of marking packaged goods with the country of origin?

Mr. ROBB: Why limit it to packaged goods?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Naturally the minister realizes that there are some goods which cannot be stamped; we could not stamp steel ingots or articles of that kind.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was in the trade, and we imported many of those articles into Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the minister's view as to marking the goods with the country of origin? That is a fair question and should receive a fair answer.

Mr. ROBB: Some years ago the hon. gentlemen brought up a resolution along that line and I pointed out to them that it was a measure of protection, and I have not changed my view on that matter. There is much to be said for it, but it cannot be done as broadly as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No one knows more than the minister himself that he is talking utter poppycock when he says that the principle of protection is implied in marking articles with the country of origin. It has nothing to do with protection; it does not enable the manufacturer to charge the consumer any more for the goods, and the minister himself knows that. He is trying to twist things around and has not as yet answered my direct question. Is he in favour of the stamping of the country of origin upon goods imported into Canada, where it can be done?

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Never mind, I want to get an answer first.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What have the views of the Minister of Finance to do with this item?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Minister of Finance started this thing.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He may have been in error, but the hon. member is doubly so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister asked a question in his usual subtle manner, but I knew the workings of his mind. There is no man in the house who is more subtle in tricking a member into answering a question which may be used against him at some future time. I have been fair to the minister, let him be fair to me.

Mr. ROBB: If the hon. member thinks that I have tricked him into answering a question, I will withdraw the question and I will not use his answer against him.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the minister is being trickier than ever in making that answer.

The CHAIRMAN: I think I should suggest to the hon. member that the word "tricky" is not a parliamentary term.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If it is against the rules of the house, I have no desire to use it. I suggest to the hon. Minister of Finance that he is still evading the answering of my question; he is being absolutely unfair. If the minister wants to be unfair I must leave him in that position.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): Is the Minister of Agriculture in favour of marking New Zealand butter as New Zealand butter? I have received a letter from a party in my riding claiming that a number of Ontario creameries are purchasing New Zealand butter and selling it under their own creamery brand. Is the minister in favour of marking that butter?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Will the hon. gentleman repeat that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am very sorry, but it is necessary that I go.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): They purchase New Zealand butter and then sell it under their own creamery brand. Would the minister be good enough to find out if that is not contrary to law, and if the department should not consider that butter as being renovated butter?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As the Minister of Agriculture has to go to address a religious meeting, I suggest that the item stand, and we will call one item in the Fisheries department.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): I have to attend a religious meeting this afternoon. It will take the minister only a second to answer my question. During the last three or four months over $8,000,000 worth of butter has come in from New Zealand, and where did it go? The people are buying this butter believing that it is Canadian made, and the Minister of Agriculture knows that and does nothing to stop the practice.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour to answer the hon. member's question when I return this afternoon. In the meantime, let me supplement the explanation given by the Minister of Justice for being obliged to leave the committee at this stage. I am going to the experimental farm to assist the Prime Minister in receiving the pilgrims from abroad.

Item stands.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

To provide for an investigation into the life history of the Pacific halibut by the international fishery commission appointed under the Pacific Halibut treaty of 2nd March, 1923, $31,500.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): This item is for the payment of our share of the expenditures in connection with the international fisheries commission.

Mr. McRAE: Might I suggest to the minister that he represent to the commission the fact that our halibut fisheries are not making the progress in reestablishment which we might reasonably expect. I am told that overfishing is still being carried on in the Hecate strait.

Mr. CARDIN: I regret to admit that my hon. friend is practically correct. That condition still exists.

Mr. FRASER: Is it a fact that under the Fisheries Act the minister has power to prohibit and does prohibit the export of salmon from British Columbia?

Mr. CARDIN: We are prohibiting the export of raw salmon, but not of salmon in a canned or cured state.

Mr. FRASER: This is the prohibition of the export of a natural product. Could it not be applied to other products? Why are the fishermen picked out as the only ones whose product cannot be exported? We are asking for some regulation of our wood products in an unmanufactured state. Why are the fishermen picked out as the only producers who are prohibited, under regulations of this government, from the markets of the world?

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. CARDIN: The request of my hon. friend will have to be made to the ministers looking after other departments.

Mr. FRASER: Why does the minister pick out producers under his administration as the only ones in the Dominion of Canada who are subjected to that treatment?

Mr. CARDIN: I confess that I am not in a position to give a complete explanation to my hon. friend as to that. It is rather a complicated issue and I would ask my hon. friend to be kind enough to give me an opportunity to have a statement prepared by my officials in regard to the matter.

Mr. FRASER: I shall be pleased to do that for the minister, but I should like to point this out: my information may be wrong; I am not absolutely certain of it, but I have information which leads me to believe that if the fishermen in British Columbia were allowed to export their fish to the United States, they could get a higher price for their product. Under the regulations of the department they are prohibited from exporting it and consequently they cannot get as high a price for their fish as they could if the market were a local one.

Mr. COOTE: I have always felt that the policy of the government in regard to the salmon industry is almost beyond understanding. We are worried for fear our salmon will become extinct if we do not protect it with very strict regulations regarding the catch. We prohibit the export of raw sockeye salmon, but we go to great pains to make trade treaties with Australia and other countries trying to get very satisfactory arrangements for the export of our canned salmon to them. I have never been able to understand the policy of this country with regard to the salmon industry. On the one hand we are endeavouring to protect it from becoming extinct, so that future Canadians will be able to enjoy this palatable fish. On the other, we are doing our best to negotiate trade treaties which will enable our salmon canners to export this fish to every country in the world.

Mr. WARD: I would like to take this opportunity of saying a word with regard to our western Canada fisheries. A few days ago an hon. member, referring to this department, made a statement to the effect that in all the years he had been in the house he had never known this department to do anything that would assist in turning the fishing industry to any great account. I gather from the remarks of some hon. members that they regard a few oyster beds on the Atlantic or a few salmon on the Pacific coast as the only fisheries in Canada. I represent a constituency with 250 miles of large lake shoreline and I say that from one small lake in that area we produce every year 250 carloads of the highest grade fish produced in Canada. About ten or twelve years ago a hatchery located on an island in lake Winnipegosis was producing annually about 35,000,000 fry, and the annual catch at that time was about thirty-five carloads of fish. Last year and the year before the same lake produced about 250 carloads of fish, principally of what are known as yellow pike and whitefish. This hatchery, which is a government institution, has been for several years producing an average of 100,000,000 fry annually. The same success has been obtained at all the other hatcheries connected with our Manitoba lakes. The annual production of fish in Manitoba has almost doubled within recent years. This, I think, is entirely attributable to the consideration and attention given to that industry by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It is only fair that I should make that statement and it was unfair for hon. members from the maritime provinces who are finding some difficulty with their oyster beds or western members who are finding some difficulty with their Yankee friends in protecting the salmon on the Pacific coast, to go off at a tangent and think the only fish in Canada are the few that may be produced on the Atlantic or the Pacific coast.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of the British Columbia fisheries reference to the Privy Council, $15,000.

Mr. McRAE: Will the minister give the committee a little outline of what this item refers to?

Mr. CARDIN: This is to cover the expenses of the reference to the Privy Council of the difficulty which arose in British Columbia. A company requested the department to issue a license to operate a cannery in British Columbia, and the department would not agree to do so, because they were not satisfied that such a cannery should be permitted to operate. The company started to operate without a license. Prosecution was instituted against them and we lost the case before the court in British Columbia, the decision being practically that they could operate a cannery without obtaining a license from the federal government. The court held that it was not within our authority to regulate or to issue licenses to canneries or to refuse them permission to operate without such licenses. The matter was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, and I regret to say that our contention was not sustained there. It was held that the decision of the court in British Columbia was correct, and that the federal authorities had no right to regulate these canneries by the issuance or refusal of licenses.

One other point which is raised in the reference is the power of the minister to discriminate between applicants asking for fishing licenses in British Columbia and elsewhere. This is a very important issue, because if it is established that we have not power to regulate in this matter; that the power to regulate in British Columbia rests with the provincial authorities, it means as a result that the whole administration of the fisheries in that province will probably pass under the control of the provincial authorities, because they can block all the operations of the Department of Fisheries if they have the right to regulate the canneries.

Mr. McRAE: Who is representing the department before the Privy Council?

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Eugene Lafleur of Montreal.

Mr. SPENCER: Does the Department of Marine and Fisheries control canneries located on interprovincial streams or on lakes within a province?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: Everywhere?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McRAE: I would suggest to the minister, inasmuch as this is a controversy of long standing on the coast, that it might be well to have associated with Mr. Lafleur, for whom I have the highest regard, some counsel who is familiar with the controversy.

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. A. B. MacDonald is associated with him.

Item agreed to.

Marine Biological Board of Canada—(a) purely scientific work, $100,775; (b) practical and experimental work, $200,960; (c) fish culture investigations, $47,150.—Total, $348,885.

Mr. McRAE: The amount which it is proposed to vote for this year, $348,885, represents a very large increase over last year's appropriation of $200,100, an increase of 74 per cent in one year. I think the committee would be interested in knowing how this increase is accounted for.

Mr. CARDIN: The increase is made up of the following items:

(a) For the operation of the biological stations at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, and Nanaimo, British Columbia, necessitating additional scientific help for the former and a boat for the use of the latter station to be used on the west coast of Vancouver island, $5,275.

Mr. McRAE: Is that amount for the boat?

Mr. CARDIN: It includes the scientific help required.

Mr. McRAE: All I can say is that any boat you can get for $5,000 will not go very far in the seas you get on the west coast of Vancouver island. It would not be much better than a rowboat.

Mr. CARDIN: It is a very small boat that is being purchased on the recommendation of the board. The other details are as follows:

(b) A new permanent building is required at Halifax. Due to the expansion of the work of instruction to fishermen and fishery officers, the present building in which are housed the laboratories, offices and class rooms, is far too small, so much so that all who applied for instruction this year could not be accommodated, $50,000.

At Halifax a boat is required to be specially fitted to demonstrate the best methods of handling and keeping fresh fish in good condition, $15,000.

The demonstration building requires a second storey to provide space for canning equipment and demonstration work, $9,500.

Eastern Passage marine laboratory, which was built to provide a necessary part of the training of students taking the university course of Fisheries Bachelor of Science, $10,000.

A new building is required at Prince Rupert to house the refrigeration plant for experimental and demonstration work, in view of the advance now taking place in rapid freezing, $16,000.

Refrigeration machinery for the above, $16,000.

For additional scientific staff and the general operation of the above station, $11,460.

(c) To provide for a systematic investigation of the oyster fishery and to build a small laboratory for the work, $7,000.

Fish hatchery for experimental and demonstration work, $4,000.

Surveying lakes, especially of the prairie provinces (additional), $3,500.

Incidental expenses, $1,050.—Total, $148,785.

Mr. McRAE: I notice that there is a large appropriation of $40,000 odd in connection with buildings and equipment and additional station staff at Prince Rupert. Who is in charge of that Prince Rupert station?

Mr. CARDIN: Doctor Finn.

Mr. McRAE: Does he live at Prince Rupert?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

[Mr. McRae.]

Mr. BRADY: This is a very interesting and a very important subject. A part of the vote is for purely scientific work of an experimental nature and the other part is for practical work. I do not know how many members are really qualified to express in ordinary terms what a great number of these words mean, for instance, protozoa, diatoms and copepods. What progress have we made in the study of this organic life which belongs to what is known as the plankton group? This group comprises a very remarkable family of roaming organic life found drifting in the waters, and includes the flora and the fauna of this particular group. A German expedition in 1894 made a thorough survey of this minute organic life in the Atlantic ocean, and I would ask the minister what data is available for us as to what is being done in that particular group?

Mr. CARDIN: I am sure that my hon. friend does not expect from me a detailed explanation of the work of the biological stations. I have no hesitation in confessing that I am far from being familiar with these scientific matters. Reports are published by the biological board in which all their activities are discussed. I might mention that one of the great problems in relation to the halibut on the Pacific coast was to prevent discolouration or yellowing, on account of which condition the price of the fish would be reduced by five or six cents a pound. The biological board have been studying that problem, and I believe that they have discovered a cure for the trouble. That discovery will be of great benefit to all interested in fisheries. In fact the head of one of the important British Columbia fishing companies stated that this one discovery and remedy would justify all the expenditure by the biological board.

Mr. BRADY: I am pleased to hear the minister's statement. One of our finest food fish is the famous white spring salmon. I have seen these fish caught in the Dixon entrance as heavy as sixty and seventy pounds. Unfortunately owing to the prejudice against its lack of colour white spring salmon does not fetch more than two or three cents a pound, as against twelve or fourteen cents a pound for our red spring salmon. Would it not be worth while to undertake research work with a view to devising some innocuous method whereby this very valuable food fish could be put on the market as best red spring salmon?

I observe that the department is studying the habits of the wood-boring worm known as the teredo. Unless hon. gentlemen have visited the Pacific coast they can have no idea of how rapidly these wood-borers destroy our wharves. As the minister knows, after a freshly cut pile of about twenty-four inches in diameter has been in the water six weeks it is practically ruined. I would ask that the department continue their scientific work in order to discover measures for checking this pest. How far has the investigation proceeded?

Mr. CARDIN: The biological board is studying the problem. I shall be pleased to draw the attention of the board to my hon. friends' representations.

Mr. McRAE: Although the discolouration of halibut has been known for some time by the men in the trade who handle halibut in a large way, I notice the biological board take a good deal of credit to themselves for their discovery. The discolouration comes about while the fish are in the hold of the vessel. What we need is some means of preventing this discolouration. The biological board should bend their efforts to a practical solution of the problem.

Progress reported.

REPORT PRESENTED

Seventeenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

LOUIS COIT DARGAVEL

Mr. A. C. CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas): I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Stewart (Leeds):

That Bill No. 348 (letter 19 of the senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Louis Coit Dargavel," be placed on the order paper this day.

Mr. GARDINER: I object.

Mr. SPEAKER: If there is objection it is well taken.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

SUPPLY

MARINE AND FISHERIES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. McRAE: When the committee rose I was discussing the biological board and I intended asking the minister these questions: How long has the board been established at Nanaimo, and are all the persons whose names are mentioned in the report on the pay roll of the department? The list is quite extensive and I shall refer to it somewhat in detail later, but it would shorten the discussion if we had now a brief explanation as to how these various persons are engaged.

Mr. CARDIN: The station has been in operation for about twenty years. The board is not paid but the staff is.

Mr. McRAE: I have reference to the report of the fisheries branch for 1927-28, which is the last one to hand, and on page 110 of which there appear a large number of names of persons who are making investigations and research. I should like to know whether these persons are all in the employ of the department on regular salary or, if not, how they are paid.

Mr. CARDIN: The station provides facilities for those who wish to make experiments, but these persons are not paid by the department, although their results are available to us. These people are carrying on investigations but are not paid by us.

Mr. McRAE: It seems rather unusual that in the departmental report the department should take credit for the work of so many persons whom they do not pay. These people are not really in the employ of the department. Will the minister tell me how many persons are employed by the department at Nanaimo?

Mr. CARDIN: We pay the following salaries: director, $3,600; captain of boat, $1,800; engineer, $1,560; secretary, $900; cook, $600; maid, $420; caretaker, $900; assistant caretaker, $840. These are the only employees whom we take.

Mr. McRAE: I have been particularly concerned about the work of the biological board inasmuch as it bears on the sockeye salmon situation in our province. I have gone over the report very carefully and I must say I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena, regarding the technical terms which he used so freely this morning. But to me at least this report is not very clear. In this respect I am sure it would be interesting to know just how the fishermen regard the lectures which the board give them on different occasions. I may say that they are sceptical of the practical importance of this biological work; they feel that the work of the board is entirely too theoretical and technical and that not sufficient time is given to the practical phase of the fishing situation in our province. They are of the opinion that the investigations of the board are too abstract and academic: to use the expression of the fishermen themselves, you cannot put this knowledge into the can. The particular claim which the fishermen make is that there are too many desk men, what we might call office men, being sent into the field to inquire about matters which responsible fishermen have known for a very long time. I referred the other day to the inquiry into sea lions, when as a matter of fact what should be inquired into is the problem how to destroy the sea lions which are eating up our fish. The fishermen claim that investigators from the board try experiments in artificial planting in areas where hatchery fish would not have the slightest chance owing to freshets on the one hand or where streams dry up. The board officials have not the necessary knowledge and, the fishermen claim, errors are made which could be avoided if practical fishermen were consulted. I mention this matter in order to convey to the minister the idea that the board is not nearly as practical as it should be. I know that these long names which are referred to in the reports of the research department—such terms for instance as protozoa-diatoms copepods and zooplankton, and all that sort of thing—are all right in their place. They refer to the very lowest and microscopic forms of animal life in existence, some that cannot be seen with the naked eye.

Mr. CARDIN: What big names.

Mr. McRAE: Yes I am afraid the sockeye salmon will be in that class soon. If we cannot get some practical work done by this biological board we will not be able to see the sockeye salmon, not on account of its size but on account of its extinction. I notice that among other things mentioned in the report is an investigation of the life history of the teredo, to which the hon. member for Skeena referred. We all know enough about the life history of the teredo; it lives too long to please us and what we want is some preparation which will prevent the teredo from doing so much harm. We have succeeded now in finding that method in part through creosoting.

As you read the report the thing that impresses you very much is the small consideration which has been given to the reestablishment of our fisheries; in fact you will find only one reference to it in this research work, and that is the study of salmon scales for the provincial government. That is rather an absurd reference.

[Mr. McRae.]

I think the department would be well advised to cut out those things in future reports. The report is supposed to be read by members who, like myself, do not follow it very closely, and I suggest that if it were confined to practical matters and written in common trade terms which we can all understand, the government would be saved a lot of printing expense and the members of this house would have more information than they obtain from this report at present.

With regard to field investigations, there again the findings of the board do not deal with salmon. Coming to the heading "Publicity," and as far as I can see that is confined to two small aquariums which are being established at Nanaimo. I submit that if we are going to establish any of these aquariums for the education of the public they should be located in the populous centres where more people will see them and more good will be done. I have no doubt that these aquariums would be more advantageously located in Vancouver or Victoria than in Nanaimo, where very few people go and where there are very few fishermen. Nanaimo is a coal town and there are no fishermen there except a few Japanese who fish for herring and that sort of thing. Why we should put this biological board in Nanaimo is not clear to me, particularly as it appears from these reports that the board has an educational duty to perform. I notice they are to build a museum in Prince Rupert; I fear that we have about reached that stage of the fisheries problem in our province where museums will be necessary in order to display the last specimens of that great commercial fish, the sockeye salmon. As far as I can see there is no other useful purpose to be served by these museums and there is no reason why the public money should be spent in this way while we have a real fish problem to work out.

I have given the views of the fishermen and now I want to give the views of the cannery men, who say there is certainly great room for biological work in the fish business, and that perhaps the reason why this board had not done very much was because they had not much money. Just here I might say that the United States authorities reported a year or two ago that the work done by this biological board was very good, but that it was very meagre. The business interests in my province have expressed the opinion that there is great need for a biological board but that this board is not devoting very much consideration to the practical issues with which we are confronted.

Now I want to refer to the question of fish culture, with which this vote has to do. There is very little space devoted in the report to the culture of sockeye salmon; some seven or eight lines on page 15 constitutes the only reference. In passing I want to observe that this branch of the service turned out about 105,000,000 fry in 1927-28, which cost us $112,562.35, an average of roughly $1.15 per thousand. This figure is materially higher than what the state of Washington claim it costs them to turn out fingerlings four or five inches long and six or seven months old under the pond system. I mention this fact to show that it is not a matter of cost with regard to this kind of propagation but rather a question of courage on the part of our department to get that work under way.

Our investigations have been going on ever since the branch was established in British Columbia forty-five years ago; I presume we have been investigating sockeye salmon since that time. They are the greatest commercial fish we have and they present a real problem which we must solve. I discussed this matter the other day at some length, and the minister stated in reply that the biological board had been instructed to make a complete investigation and that the department was prepared to follow the recommendations of that board. I must say to the committee that this promises no solution of our problem at all. I do not say that the men who compose that biological board have not the ability to make this investigation if they were so directed. I submit that this board now has been in operation for a great many years, and apparently they are not making any investigation whatever with regard to the rehabilitation of the sockeye salmon fisheries, which the department has said will mount up to at least $35,000,000 a year. There is time enough to get down to theory and theoretical matters later, but I say that before we proceed with the expenditure of the amount of money covered by this vote we should have some further assurance than has been given so far that this increase is necessary. It is not my intention to offer a motion but I do suggest that if we vote $200,100 this year it is enough. I suggest that the minister postpone these additional expenditures and reduce this vote to what it was last year. I think that is a reasonable request until such time as the minister can give us some information to show the effectiveness of this board.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed by the deputy that the board has been looking into the sockeye salmon question for four years and that they have complete equipment at Cultus lake.

There is another point upon which I am in a position to agree with my hon. friend. He complains that the report is somewhat technical and not in plain language. I quite agree with him and I will ask the officers of the department to try to make the report more comprehensible to the ordinary man who does not understand the scientific and technical words which are used by members of the biological board.

Mr. McRAE: Reference has been made by the minister to the cultural work which is being done at Cultus lake in British Columbia, and this information will be found on pages 117 and 118 of the report of 1927-28. This is one of the smallest hatcheries we have in British Columbia, and in 1927-28 the expenditure was only $4,819.05. It is only necessary for any member of the committee to read these pages to realize what a feeble effort is made in studying the culture of sockeye salmon. Very few fish are released from this hatchery, and, as stated in the report, during some years none at all return. About 70 per cent of the fish must be accounted for and returns by the canneries in Puget sound south of the line, and I leave it to the committee to say just how valuable that information is. That is not even playing with the thing and it is making no effort whatever to solve this problem. Mr. Minister, this headless department of yours will have to get a move on if anything effective is to be done for the sockeye salmon industry.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I am intensely interested in the subject which he has been discussing and I am very sympathetic to the proposal he has made with respect to the sockeye salmon fishing industry. I have been out to the coast and studied this matter a little, but I am at a complete loss to know just what the hon. member is proposing.

Mr. McRAE: I take it that the hon. member was not in the house the other day when I made a definite proposal, but I will be glad to repeat it. The Department of Marine and Fisheries, constituted as it is under governments as they must be formed, cannot grasp the situation in British Columbia. In my talk the other day I suggested that the government should appoint a British Columbia fish commission, to be composed of representatives of the fishermen, of the canneries, and of the business interests in the province, who understand this problem.

These men are deeply interested in this matter and would be only too pleased to give their services gratis to their country to bring about the reestablishment of their salmon industry which has been diminishing so rapidly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is all very well, but I do not know how it would get us very far; I do not see that it is any better than the suggestion of the minister, although I do not see that he is getting us anywhere either. So far as I understand the situation the difficulty has been the depletion of the sockeye run, partly as a result of conditions in the Fraser river itself and chiefly as a result of American trapping. With all due respect to the hon. gentleman, I do not see how that question can be solved other than by the making of an international agreement. If we could secure an international agreement to limit the catch for some years, thus allowing a gerater number of mature fish to go up the river to spawn, I think the industry would find itself rehabilitated much quicker than it would be by the appointment of a commission. It is not commissions that we want, we want a return flow of the fish into the streams. I am only a layman on this subject; I am not a fisherman myself, but for the life of me I cannot understand how the Cultus lake hatchery is going to be responsible for the great increase in the vote this year. I do not think the minister can be serious when he suggests that reason. I have seen that hatchery myself, and I presume that some work is being done at Cultus lake and some at Chilliwack river.

Mr. CARDIN: The hatchery at Cultus lake is for experimental purposes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I agree with the hon. member for North Vancouver; I think this vote is out of all reason. Until there is a more definite program laid before this committee, we might return to the old amount. The hon. member is from that part of the country and he knows the requirements out there; he suggested to the minister that this item be reduced to the original amount of $200,000, and in the absence of a more reasonable explanation from the minister I am afraid that I must agree with the hon. member. As to the rehabilitation of the sockeye salmon industry, I think the minister will have to find some way of getting an international agreement on that. Let us get more of the salmon up the stream and we will solve the problem.

Mr. McRAE: I quite agree with the hon. gentleman as far as the Fraser river is concerned, but that is only one of the several great streams in our province, in all of which the fish are being depleted. By appointing this British Columbia fish commission the government would be getting the experience of directors who could not be hired for nominal salaries, men who would be prepared to give their time to the development of this great industry. I am led to make that statement by what has happened in regard to the Columbia river. They have a non-political body of citizens in Oregon who have done great work in the reestablishment of the fisheries on that great river. I am confident that the commission I am suggesting would do for our fishing industry in British Columbia what a similar commission has done in the state of Oregon.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who comprises the biological board?

Mr. CARDIN: Doctor J. Playfair McMurrich, Toronto, chairman; J. J. Cowie, Ottawa, secretary-treasurer, an employee of the department; Doctor Philip Cox of Fredericton, N.B.; Doctor C. J. Connolly, Antigonish, N.S.; Professor A. T. Cameron, Winnipeg; John Dybhavn, Prince Rupert, representing the industry; Professor J. N. Gowanlock, Halifax; Reverend Canon V. A. Huard, of Quebec university; Professor A. H. Hutchinson, Vancouver; Professor W. T. MacClement, Kingston; Professor Marie-Victorin, Montreal university; Doctor E. E. Prince, Ottawa; J. A. Rodd, Ottawa, another employee of the department; A. Handfield Whitman, Halifax, representing the industry; Professor A. Willey, Montreal.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is Professor Connolly still on the board.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understand he has not been in Canada for the last two or three years.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that he attended the last meeting of the board.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): He is a professor at one of the universities in the United States. I expected that the minister or his deputy would have been able to give some answer to the questions put and the criticism made by the hon. member for North Vancouver. As a supporter of the biological board I was distinctly disappointed, and if what the minister gave to the committee was a history of the work done by the board, I could not conscientiously vote for half that amount of money. Surely the minister, if he is in sympathy with the work of the board, would say that something had been done. The biological board, constituted as it was a few years ago, was the first to enter a complaint in regard to the fishery situation, contending that the hatcheries were not doing the good we expected them to do. As a result they studied the losses in the fish hatcheries and to-day we are getting some results and cooperation. The minister at least might have given the board credit for that. He might also have given the board credit for having investigated such matters as lobster canning. Although they made an extensive study of that and would have put it where it was before, yet they lacked the support of the department and the officials connected therewith.

The minister might have told us, too, that scientific studies must play some part in these classes for fishery officials, but when the classes were started first they lacked absolutely that backing and support. The fishery officials who attended those classes naturally would find the course of study very difficult at the time, the same as any student in a university would, but it would take only three or four years to give them a background whereby they would understand what the board wanted. What does the minister expect the board to do? Does he expect the board, composed altogether of scientific men, to go out and examine personally all these things? They cannot do that. They must depend upon the reports provided by the officials of the department and if those officials lack the education and knowledge expected of them, there is only one thing to do: either get a new class of officials, or have the present one educated so that they can supply satisfactory results to the board.

I agree with the statement that a great deal of the work of the board has been done in eastern Canada, and that very good results have been obtained therefrom. I do not know whether one should give the credit to the board or not, but the whitefish supply in lake Ontario, for example, increased very noticeably from 1913 to 1924. In 1913 the catch was only 495,000 pounds, whereas in 1924 it had risen to 2,653,000 pounds. If cooperation can secure a result like that, cooperation is the one thing that the whole department should strive for. I have a report of the first classes called by the biological board. The superintendent of fisheries pronounced them of no value whatever, though he did not attend one class. He did not know anything about them. That is lack of cooperation. I am sure, however, the board is getting cooperation and better results to-day. There is a great deal that the minister could have given the committee to-day with regard to results achieved by the board. If hon. members will look over the reports and papers furnished by the National Research Council, they will find very few practical papers. I am surprised that the minister, in speaking of the people employed, said that they were not paid anything. They are certainly paid the expense of carrying on that research work. I have tried to find out from the minister and the department how these researches are allotted. By a lot of studying I have obtained the information myself, and there seems to be a lack of direction, of getting finality in this research work. The only papers in the report are the "Bottom fauna of lake Nipigon" and "An investigation into the question of early putrefaction of eviscerated fish in which the gills have been left"; that was given in 1919. I am sure the minister could have given the committee a splendid description of the results secured, if he had taken only the success in regard to the freezing of fish and that kind of thing. The board is at the bottom of all this work. The study of fish is a distinctly scientific subject, and the direction must come from scientific men with a knowledge of fish history, fish food, aquaculture and so forth. They must also make use of that information, for practical purposes. The department is falling down, in that respect and also in not placing before the board the information given in the house by hon. members as to where the failure of the fishing industry is taking place, and in not saying to the board: "Give us a solution of the problem." The minister can increase the board by giving the western section of the country their own men on it and a field to work in. Salmon life on the Atlantic is altogether different from salmon life on the Pacific, and the western people should have an opportunity of dealing with salmon life on the Pacific. Before I sit down, might I ask what pay is given to the members of the board?

Mr. CARDIN: No pay.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is one answer which the minister might have given to the committee.

Mr. CARDIN: I gave it this morning.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have been sitting here and I must confess I did not get all this information from the minister.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend was out of the chamber at that very moment, but I gave it this morning.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I heard the statement made this morning, and I also heard it repeated this afternoon, that the minister could get a body of men for nothing. This is a body of men that he is getting for nothing. I know these men. They have been working for the department for years and they have given time to this work. Some of them, owing to lack of the cooperation they desired, have resigned and left the board. I am not altogether pessimistic about the biological board. We need it and we need these men at the head of it, but there must be some driving force behind it. The department must support it and it would be wise to say to the biological board: So far you have been giving a great deal of attention to eastern Canada; put more men on the west and get results there. It is very sad if our salmon industry cannot be brought up in the same way as they have brought up the lake Ontario whitefish industry, and I believe the same results can be accomplished.

Item agreed to.

Marine Biological Board of Canada—further amount required—(a) purely scientific work, $10,000.

Mr. McRAE: What is this for?

Mr. CARDIN: This is a further amount required for the biological board for purely scientific work.

Mr. McRAE: I would like to move that it be reduced to $1.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think my hon. friend is fair in making that request. I have been given the following particulars in regard to the increase in this vote. It is proposed to remodel, extend and equip a building for experimental fish handling, which work it is estimated will cost $4,500. The board also proposes to enlarge and furnish an existing house to accommodate scientific workers with families. This also will cost $4,500. The above extension will be made at the biological station at St. Andrews, New Brunswick.

I think after the remarks which have been made by my hon. friend from Kingston City, the department should rather be supported for giving to the board all the money they require to carry on their work. No one disputes the importance of the work which the board has been doing in the past. It is true that I have not given a very lengthy statement of what they have accomplished, but I have never failed to give credit to that very important organization for the good work which they have done. This morning I mentioned more particularly the very important investigations which they have made in British Columbia in regard to the discolouration of halibut. They have found the cause of the trouble and have suggested a remedy. That is very important and, as my hon. friend from North Vancouver admitted, it is something worth while. In Halifax the board has discovered a method of rapid freezing which is going to prove very advantageous for the fisheries as a whole. I need not say that the department is quite ready to cooperate with the board. While its work is largely of a scientific nature, in practically every country, and perhaps more so in countries not far distant from us, industry is going in for scientific research more and more. I think therefore that we should not be asked to reduce the amount which we are asking the committee to place at the disposal of the board in order to permit them to continue and even extend their works. The request for this increased vote does not come simply from the department but from the board itself. They feel that they need this additional amount to carry on properly the work which has been assigned to them, and I think it would be unfair and not in the interests of the industry which it is seeking to serve to refuse this small additional amount. I can see the point made by my hon. friend that the board's activities in British Columbia should probably be extended further, and that they should be requested to give more of their time to the important problem of reclaiming as much as possible the sockeye fisheries. I can assure him that his views and those that have been expressed by other hon. members will be brought before the board, and I shall ask them to give special attention to the interests of British Columbia during the coming year.

Mr. McRAE: I wish to make it perfectly clear that my sympathy is entirely with the biological board, but I want to make it equally clear to the committee that it is the unanimous opinion of those interested in the industry in British Columbia that the board lacks practical direction. That is not the fault of the board so much as it is of the deparment. There is an increase of 74 per cent in the vote this year over last year, and I submit that in view of the discussion on fisheries which has taken place in this house in the past week, the minister might very well forego this supplementary vote entirely. The list he has read is for more or less permanent improvements. I think the committee would feel better if we got along without any supplementary vote for this purpose, and next year, as the minister has said, he will be able to come here with the matter better in hand, and the committee will understand better what work is being done and the manner in which it is being carried on. I think the idea that the department should expect people to carry on with those investigators unpaid is rather unreasonable. It is hardly to be expected that men will give the necessary time for these long investigations without compensation. I suggest this to the minister for his consideration. I do think, however, that we have voted enough money for this department this year, and that the minister should not ask the committee to approve $10,000 more by way of supplementaries.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries branch — contingencies — further amount required, $3,000.

Mr. McRAE: Before we leave these estimates, I notice that $160,000 is provided for fishing bounties. Is this bounty, which is paid under statute, confined entirely to the Atlantic coast?

Mr. CARDIN: It is by statute, and is confined to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. McRAE: I have only this to say. We have fishermen who need help out on the Pacific coast. I have no objection at all to voting $160,000 for the Atlantic coast fishermen, but I think we should consider when the proper time comes giving equal help to our fishermen on the Pacific coast.

Mr. VENIOT: This is not given for help to the Atlantic fishermen, but as their right under a treaty with the United States.

Mr. NEILL: I protest against the remarks of the last speaker. We discussed this matter last year. This is a case where my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) was very indignant because I suggested that he give up the graft which the Atlantic fishermen have been enjoying for the past twenty-six years. This money is voted by statute for the improvement of the deep sea fisheries. That is what the statute says and nothing else, but the money has been deliberately diverted from the purpose of encouraging deep sea fishing throughout Canada into a means of giving—I will not call it graft—but a little hand-out to a few fishermen on the Atlantic coast—$1.45 to one fisherman, 89 cents to another, and they call that encouraging deep sea fishing. The money is being entirely wasted from the point of view of the purpose for which it was granted, if it was granted for the encouragement of deep sea fishing. Secondly, the money is beoing deliberately diverted from the British Columbia coast, where we are just as much entitled to the bounty as the people on the Atlantic coast. My friends from New Brunswick will no doubt get up and say, as they did last year, that it has always been so. That was the biggest argument that they could advance, but when did antiquity lend countenance to a wrong? If it has been a wrong, the sooner we stop it the better. The fact hat it has been done for a number of years does not establish more than that beautiful thing called a precedent. They claim that this bounty was granted on account of some concession given to the Americans in return for which the Americans agreed to pay a sum of money, two or three million dollars, and this $160,000 is the interest on that sum. But that money was not ear-marked for the Atlantic fishermen. It was put into the treasury of the country, into the consolidated fund. You can read the act under which this money is voted from beginning to end and backwards again and you will not find anything in it which says that the money is to be devoted entirely to the fishermen of one province. I suggest that we stop paying this bounty, a little dab here to this fisherman who goes out in a boat, and a little dab there to that fishermen. That does not encourage deep sea fishing. Is a man going to be encouraged to engage in deep sea fishing by giving him $1.35 a year? The thing is ridiculous. This money should be used for some advantageous purpose, such as the development of biological work. I could quote plenty of cases where it could be used to advantage on the British Columbia coast.

Mr. VENIOT: Take it all to the Pacific coast and give us nothing.

Mr. NEILL: I would suggest that you give it all to the Pacific coast for the next few years to make up for the thirty years during which you have been swiping our share of it from British Columbia. I will not go into details, but there are lots of opportunities on the Pacific coast where money could be well spent in the development of the deep sea fisheries. I protest against this bounty for these two reasons: The money is being utterly wasted, and secondly, British Columbia is as much entitled by law to receive a share of this money as the Atlantic fishermen. I do not want my friends to get up and talk about precedents. What the statute says is what counts. The statute must be read by itself, and it says that the money is for the purpose of encouraging the deep sea fisheries of Canada. If there were any other intentions, they do not appear in the statute.

Item agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Amount required for soldier land settlement advances and cost of administration of soldier settlement, $1,445,000.

Amount required for general land settlement advances and cost of administration of general land settlement, $1,400,000.

Mr. LUCAS: I want to take up with the minister the case of a returned soldier in my constituency. It is in connection with a barn built on the Ogilvie farm. Oglivie secured a full loan from the soldiers' settlement board for land and equipment. He ordered lumber to the value of over sixteen hundred dollars from a lumber firm in Edmonton, and engaged this returned soldier to build the barn. Ogilvie afterwards left the place. The lumber company lost the full amount of their account, not being able to place a lien on crown property. I am not fighting for payment of the claim of the lumber company. Like any business concern, they always set aside a certain amount for bad debts, and it was up to them to look after their own business. But the returned soldier is not in the best of circumstances. He was anxious to get the work in order to support his family, and when Ogilvie engaged him this returned soldier acted in good faith and built a very excellent barn. All he charged was four hundred and eighty dollars. The legion have done their best to help this man, and every time I visit the district they take the case up with me. When I was there last they drove me out to view the barn. This man not only built the barn, but he overhauled the house as well. The board resold the farm to a British family settler. The purchase price of the land to Ogilvie was fifty-five hundred dollars, leaving out the stock and equipment, which are separate items. The board resold the farm for fifty-two hundred dollars, or at a loss of only three hundred dollars. The officers of the department have assured me that the barn added a thousand dollars to the resale value of the farm. In other words, if the building had not been erected, the board could not have resold the farm within a thousand dollars of the price they received for it. I have placed the case before the minister on several occasions, in fact it has been pending for several years. He is sympathetic, but he thinks he has no means of getting the money to pay this claim. I would ask him if there is not some way by which he can take care of the debt owing to this returned soldier.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, I admit this case involves considerable hardship to the carpenter concerned, but for the department to deal with it as my hon. friend wishes would open up a pretty wide field. For the information of the house I might read the statement from the soldiers' settlement board:

This settler was established about 1920, receiving the full amount as allowed by statute to be advanced to soldier settlers; viz: $7,500. The following year he engaged to build a barn, obtaining the lumber on his own credit and hiring a man to build the barn. The soldier settlement board had nothing to do with the arrangement in building the barn. A year or two afterwards he left the farm and it reverted to the board. No purchaser was found for it until it was set aside for settlement under the 3,000 British Family Settlement Scheme in 1926.

The carpenter who built the barn made a claim on the board for his work, about $480. The board, not being in any way responsible for this debt, have refused to pay same. When the farm was sold to the British family settler it showed a loss to the board of something like $1,700, not including any interest. If interest was included it would be over $4,000. The board has neither power nor authority to pay out any moneys on the private debts of delinquent settlers.

Now, to deal with this case as requested would establish a precedent for ten thousand soldier settlers to incur debts on their own responsibility, and their creditors would look to the board for payment. I admit the hardship in this individual case, but really I cannot see any other course open to the board than to repudiate the debts of soldier settlers incurred on their own responsibility after they have obtained full loans under the act. Unfortunately a principle is involved that we cannot ignore, otherwise we might stretch a point in this particular case.

Mr. LUCAS: The loss on the resale which is given in the statement read by the minister of course includes the original loan for stock and equipment. But the new settler who purchased the farm did not get any of that. The land in the first place cost fifty-five hundred dollars, and it was sold for fifty-two hundred dollars; so the actual loss to the board was only three hundred dollars on the farm itself. I think any officer of the department who has seen the barn will frankly admit that if it had not been on the farm the board would not have realized within a thousand dollars of the price on the resale. In order to aid our soldier settlers in 1922, we wiped out approximately eleven million dollars of interest, and the last revaluation will probably involve something like fourteen million dollars. Now here is the case of a returned man who did not go on the land. He is trying to support himself and his family, and in good faith he goes and builds a barn on government property; he does certain work and is not paid for it. He is not asking for charity; he is simply asking for pay for services rendered. The government in this case have something they have not paid for, and I think it is the duty of the minister to try to find some means of doing justice so far as this man is concerned.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If this were a private matter the man could file a workman's lien and that would stand before any other debt. I do not think it is quite fair, because the government occupies a peculiar position, that it should simply ignore a responsibility which any ordinary private individual would have to meet. If in private matters it is simple honesty that a workman's wages should take priority to any other claim, surely to goodness the government will not act less honestly.

Mr. FORKE: I thoroughly sympathize with the carpenter in this case, which seems a hard one. We took the advice of the Department of Justice, but if there is any way whereby we can meet the situation I shall be glad to take the matter up again with a view to having the man paid.

Mr. LUCAS: I thank the minister very much, and I hope he will not say definitely that he will do nothing.

Mr. FORKE: I am not trying to get out of it.

Mr. LUCAS: As the hon. member for East Calgary has pointed out, if this were private and not government property the man could file a lien and have his bill paid. Is the government going to take a different stand from the position which any ordinary individual would find himself in, and refuse to pay the man?

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend must bear in mind that we have to deal with a large number of soldier settlers, and if they could incur private liabilities and charge them to us we do not know what the government would be let in for. The principle is bad; the hon. member can readily see that. Of course, this carpenter has some recourse in relation to the individual who had the farm in the first place. However, I will look into the matter and see what can be done.

Mr. LUCAS: I would point out to the minister that in the first instance the officials of his department were lax in this matter. They allowed Ogilvie to get into the condition we see in this case and get away scot free, and therefore I say there was laxity on their part.

Mr. FORKE: This was ten years ago.

Mr. LUCAS: I know; and this man has been out of his pay all these years. The man is trying to make a living and it is a real hardship on him. The people of that district are incensed over the affair. This man has been held up in connection with $480 worth of work and the whole thing has left a bad feeling in the district. I hope the minister will find some way of settling the question.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The first of the two items comprising this vote is for advances and for administration costs. How much of it will be used for further advances to settlers and how much will be taken up in costs?

Mr. FORKE: To soldier settlers for taxes, insurance premiums, seed and feed, refund of surplus on resale, initial payment returns, general land settlement, and so on, $690,000.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: And the balance is for costs of administration.

Mr. FORKE: There is $690,000 for advances and $755,000 for administration.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How many men were originally placed under this act and how many are there at present on the land?

Mr. FORKE: There went on the land originally 31,360 soldier settlers. Soldier settlers who were granted loans numbered 24,484 and 224 Indian soldier settlers were established, making a total of 24,708 under this particular head. Soldier entries without loan numbered 6,652, bringing the total up to 31,360. Active settlers now on the land number 13,778.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Thirteen thousand out of thirty thousand?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is worse than I thought.

Mr. FORKE: Of course, only 24,484 got loans from the board. There were 6,000 soldiers who took up homesteads without loans.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Of that 24,000 the minister mentions there are 13,000 left on the land.

Mr. FORKE: Yes. There are 1,266 soldier settlers who have paid off loans and these must be added to the 13,000.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The minister is adding those 6,000 to the 13,000. What was the outstanding indebtedness in the fall of 1922? What was the original outstanding indebtedness and how much has been paid? In other words, what proportion of the moneys has been returned?

Mr. FORKE: I do not seem to have the figures just at hand.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What was the total amount which should have been paid by the settlers from the fall of 1922, when there was a consolidation, up to date? How much was due from them and how much have they paid? I would like to know those figures in order to ascertain just what position we are in, and in order to do so I must find out how much was due and how much was paid. I think the chairman of the board must have that form which is handed out every year showing the amount due and the amount paid during that year, and I only want the aggregate of those sums from 1922 to date.

Mr. FORKE: Perhaps you had better go on while the chairman is looking for those figures.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I will leave it there for the moment, although it is rather difficult for me to proceed as I had intended. Can the minister say what is the average size of the farms held by the soldier settlers and the average indebtedness, including loans for all purposes, charged against those farms?

Mr. FORKE: The average size would run around 240 acres, I suppose, but I have not the average loan before me.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: While these figures are being looked up for my hon. friend from Red Deer I would like to make a comment which strikes me on looking at this vote. I do not understand how it is possible for the advances at this late date to amount to as much as $690,000 in a year. There are no new soldier settlers going on the land, as I understand it, and the advances were supposed to be made long ago.

Mr. FORKE: Of course we have been paying taxes and keeping the land in good standing; we have paid insurance premiums, seed and feed have been furnished in some cases and in other cases initial payments have been returned. In other words, some improvements have been put on the farms, and those amounts are all charged up against the land.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Are these all fresh advances made to the same men who secured advances some years ago?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, these are recoverable advances charged against the land.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the amount of taxes paid last year?

Mr. FORKE: About $250,000.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. McRAE: Can the minister say how many soldiers are in arrears?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Perhaps the minister might give me the information I have requested.

Mr. FORKE: The original loans amounted to $112,551,042, and at present the amount outstanding is $73,100,111.30.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: How much of that amount represents arrears?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It would be of particular value if I could ascertain how much in the aggregate was due from 1922 to the present time and how much has been paid by the settlers during that time. That will give me the information I require as to our position in this regard.

Mr. FORKE: It is a little difficult to get those figures.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I will be satisfied to take the figures right from the beginning but I thought I was making it easier in this way because there was a consolidation in 1922.

Mr. FORKE: The unpaid interest amounts to $3,854,648 at present.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is of some assistance to me.

Mr. FORKE: The total amount due and unpaid as of October 1 last was $5,392,838. Of all the soldier settlers, 88·5 per cent have either paid in full or paid a percentage.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That number has paid something?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I want to find out the total amount due from 1922 to the present time; what percentage of the amount due has been paid?

Mr. FORKE: The information I have is that the initial payments amounted to $6,245,505; the repayments of principal amounted to $20,934,029; the repayments of interest amounted to $12,271,395; making total payments of $39,450,930, leaving a balance due of $73,100,111.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The percentage of the total amount due which has been paid is shown for each year, but I want to get the aggregate amount.

Mr. FORKE: That information is not divided up in that way.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Then there is no use of my pressing for an answer.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister said that the amount of unpaid interest up to the present time amounted to over $3,000,000, and the unpaid principal amounted to over $5,392,000; that would be something like $8,500,000 which would be added to the $39,000,000.

Mr. FORKE: The $5,000,000 includes principal and interest, and of that amount $3,791,533 has been paid this year to May 31.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How much was due this year?

Mr. FORKE: This $5,392,838, and of that amount $3,791,533 has been paid.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is the information I want, only I want it from 1922 up to the present time. I want to know how much has become due in that time; how much has been paid; to what extent the men have fallen behind—the minister has given me the information for last year, but I would like it from 1922 on. I take a great deal of interest in this work and I am trying to find out the result of the experiment. In order to do that I must know how much is due, how much has been paid, and how much is still left unpaid from 1922 to the present time.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Perhaps the minister could bring down that information at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I have a few suggestions to make, but I cannot make them until I have that information.

Mr. FORKE: It should be possible to obtain that.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There should be no trouble about it.

Mr. FORKE: We have it for this year, and I do not see why it should not be available for the other years.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: We will let that matter stand for the moment. I have a number of other questions along the same line which I would like to ask the minister. To what extent has revaluation been carried on, that is, how many applications have been made to date, how many appraisals have been made, how many final awards have been sanctioned by the courts, and how many appeals have been filed?

Mr. FORKE: The number of settlers eligible to apply was 10,682.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that the number of actual applicants?

Mr. FORKE: That was the number who were eligible to apply. The number of applications received was 8,290; of that number, 167 were withdrawn. The number of appraisals up to date is 7,377; the number of appraisals which have been received at the head office in Ottawa is 5,905; the number of final awards approved, 4,598, and the sale price to the settlers, of the 10,682 eligible, $17,007,585.

The board's award to the present time has made a reduction of $3,934,602. Soldiers to the number of 3,372 have given their consent to the award that has been made; 876 have not yet consented; 138 to date have appealed to the exchequer court and 21 appeals have been withdrawn since being lodged. The average percentage of reduction is 23·1 per cent.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Does the minister know what percentage of the awards granted were swallowed up in arrears which the men have incurred? The point is this: when an award is made, the settler is credited with that amount as a cash payment. It frequently happens that arrears accumulated between the fall of 1922 when all arrears were reconsolidated, and the time that the appraisal was made and the award given. The practice has been to cancel the arrears to the extent of the award made, that is, to apply it to the man's outstanding indebtedness. It often happens that the reduction granted under the revaluation does not cover even the amount of arrears into which the men have fallen during previous years. In how many cases did the award result in an actual reduction in the annual payments and in how many cases was it absorbed by the arrears?

Mr. FORKE: Some of those questions are going to be pretty difficult to answer until the whole thing is wound up. I understand the hon. member's point of view; it is that in some cases the payments may be just as great in the future as they were in the past.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I realize it would be very difficult to get any such percentage at the moment, but the point is there and the minister is aware of it. In a number of cases —I cannot say just now how many—the arrears of the man practically swallowed up the amount awarded to him, so that the annual payment was as great as before. This brings me to this situation: during the six years between the amendment of 1922 which consolidated and amortized the outstanding indebtedness of that time, and the fall of 1928, when the appraisals were made, a percentage, how large I do not know, of those settlers fell behind so badly in their annual payments that the reduction itself of 23 per cent did not meet the arrears. I have cases that I dealt with personally where the reduction granted fell far short of meeting the arrears. I am not going to stress that point as far as I might, but I will give an illustration which will show the committee exactly what I mean and what the situation is. As a matter of fact, I am taking one out of a good many that have gone through my own hands.

This man, an overseas man of British birth, a man who had given good service, returned and bought a quarter-section under the board. His indebtedness at the time of purchase of land, stock and all the equipment he required, was something like $7,300. He fell behind rather badly prior to 1922, but with the reconsolidation of 1922 he made a fresh start. In 1928, when the appraisal was made, he was awarded, I think, $1,600 or within a few dollars of that. It was what he considered and what I consider, too, as a very fair award, and he had no complaint in that regard. But his arrears had accumulated during the six years to $2,300, in spite of the fact that for four out of those six years no interest charge had been made. The committee is well aware of the fact that by the amendment of 1922, the consolidated indebtedness was exempt from interest for two, three or four years according to the year in which the man had originally purchased the land. Therefore in his case for four out of those six years, from 1922 to 1928, he had paid no interest on his capital, that is, his annual payment was about 50 per cent of the annual payment with interest included. But during that time he went behind $2,300. He received his revaluation which left him with something like $800 of arrears which were not met by the reduction. After revaluation had taken place, the remaining indebtedness was reconsolidated and again amortized into annual payments, with the result in this man's case and in many others with which I am familiar, the annual payment, after revaluation, was larger than the annual payment before, due to the fact that the arrears in 1928 amounted to more than the award granted. I think the committee will appreciate very clearly that if a man went behind $2,300 in six years, paying, I think, about $650 a year during two of those years and about $350 during the first four of the six years, the man is going to have very little chance even after revaluation when the annual payment is greater than before, and his actual capital indebtedness, in spite of the fact that he has made fair, I do not say high, payments during the past years, is greater than when he borrowed the money ten years ago.

[Mr. Speakman.]

I am bringing this forward, not by way of criticism of the minister. The minister knows the situation; he understands it and he is just as sympathetic toward it as I am. But to my mind we are approaching the time when we must decide very definitely whether we are going to forget to a large extent about the capital indebtedness or whether we are going to have the men leave the land, others come on and leave it in their turn, as I propose to show, and finally to allow the land itself to be sold for far less than its value. This man's case typified a problem that has been worrying me a great deal, not just for the sake of the country, not just from the point of view of the taxpayer, but because of the human element that is involved.

This is a man of the very best type. A few days before I came east, he came to see me in order to put his case before me, not to ask anything of the government. He said that they had done fairly by him, but he wanted to ask my advice as to what he should do. He is in the prime of life and has worked for ten years on a quarter-section. City life has no allure for him; his sole ambition is to stay on the land and to make a success of it. He has four young children born during the time he has been on the farm.

That man, of course, cannot stay. If he went in arrears $2,300 in those six years, during part of which time the payments were only half of what he was paying at another time, it is absolutely impossible for him to meet his payments in the future when in spite of revaluation the annual payment is greater than before. That is the very type of man that we are trying to get into this country, that we are encouraging and assisting to come here, a man of good habits, a patriot, a man raising a family, a man whose whole desire was to work on the land and stay there. Yet here is this man with all the necessary qualifications in an absolutely hopeless position. I have been asked why he failed if he was an average farmer. It was for this reason, and the minister and every hon. member who is a farmer knows. On the average quarter-section in the three prairie provinces to-day it is absolutely impossible for a man to raise a family of four children and support his wife and himself, pay the running costs of the farm, and pay a capital charge of approximately $700 a year. I have tried it. I went out with my parents homesteading forty years ago, and for thirty years I have known no other life than the farm, and I know that in my part of the country and in the greater part of the three prairie provinces it is impossible for a man to raise a family decently, pay the running costs of the farm, and meet a capital payment of six or seven hundred dollars a year. The government has gone a long way to meeting the situation by the revaluation, but I am convinced that revaluation will simply defer the evil day, because in so many cases the amount awarded was eaten up by the arrears, and the annual payments in many cases are as large and in some cases larger than they were in the beginning. There are two or three phases of the situation that make it a very difficult one to deal with. I do not know a farmer in my part of the country who has made six per cent on his capital investment year after year. Our farmers on the average are a little better farmers than the soldier settlers, because a greater percentage of them have had experience, and they also had a little capital of their own, so in general perhaps they are a little better farmers. Then the average farm is a little better than the farm occupied by the average soldier settler, because when the land was first purchased for the soldier settlers it was not the best land that could be bought, partly because the inspectors did not know their job—it was a new organization created shortly after the war, and they had not been trained in their work—partly because the settler himself was not a good picker, and partly because the average farmer would not dispose of his best land. The average farmer cannot make the payments that the soldier is expected to make and live.

Mr. FORKE: I agree to some extent with the remarks made by my hon. friend for Red Deer. I believe that the board have in a great many cases advised the soldiers who were in such difficulties as my hon. friend mentioned that there was no chance of their ever being able to get on their feet, but strange to say, the board have found that in many cases they wanted to stay on the farm and were perfectly sure that they would make good under conditions that a practical farmer knew would make it impossible for him to meet the overhead expenses and carry on. I do not know what can be done to meet the situation put before the house by my hon. friend. It was really an indictment of agricultural operations as they are carried on throughout the whole of western Canada today.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was not an indictment; it was a mere statement of fact.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I did not state that the whole of agriculture was in that position, but my remarks applied with peculiar force to these soldier settlers because they had a capital indebtedness far greater in proportion to their security than the average farmer would be allowed to undertake, because a mortgage company will loan only up to 50 per cent, whereas the soldier settler got 100 per cent.

Mr. FORKE: I might point out that 1,200 soldier settlers have paid off their total indebtedness, so they have not all failed. They got the 40 per cent reduction on their stock and implements one year, and a 25 per cent reduction the following year, and the interest was also cancelled. Now they are getting a revaluation of their farms. I do not see just what we can do about it. We cannot wipe off all their indebtedness. That would be unfair to those settlers who have paid off their indebtedness. I cannot see any other way than giving them all possible encouragement and assistance if we think there is a chance of their pulling through. If we think they are unable to wipe off their indebtedness, and they have a fair chance now to move off their holding and take up a new homestead, that indebtedness does not follow them to the new homestead. I think it was a good thing that last year they were given the chance to make a new start. My heart bleeds for these people who are in trouble or in debt, and if anything can be suggested by the committee to assist them in any other way, I shall be only too glad to give it consideration. There is a good deal of truth in what my hon. friend says, and I think it is a good thing for the country to know it.

Mr. JENKINS: As the minister is going to prepare figures for the hon. member for Red Deer, possibly at the same time he might compile figures showing the amount overdue by the soldier settlers in the province of Prince Edward Island. I am rather anxious to know how their percentages of indebtedness compare with that of soldier settlers in other provinces. I have the impression that the men who were placed on the land in our province have been doing perhaps a little better than the settlers in other provinces, and I would like to have the figures to see whether that impression is correct. I realize that in Prince Edward Island there were some men placed on the land who never should have gone there, some who were quite well fitted for office work, but would never make farmers. Some of these have left the farm and gone into other vocations and are doing very well. Generally I think the soldier settlers in our province have been doing very nicely. I would ask the minister to bring down a statement showing the capital outstanding, the amount of interest overdue, and exactly how Prince Edward Island compares with the other provinces in the matter of payments. I feel sure that I shall not be ashamed of the comparison, because I know that nearly all the soldier settlers have been doing very well indeed in our province.

Mr. FORKE: I might point out to the hon. member for Red Deer that out of 15,225 settlers who had payments due last year, 5,747 paid in full. I question whether the average farmer in western Canada made a very much better showing than the soldier settlers in that respect. These were soldier settlers actively engaged on their farms.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is the amount in connection with the general land settlement advances required for the arrangement with the empire settlement board?

Mr. FORKE: It includes the major part of it. The general land settlement board is really the colonization end of the department.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister stated that $770,000 odd would be spent for administration purposes. Does he realize that this amounts to over $56 for each settlement account?

Mr. FORKE: The administration expenses amount to $775,000.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a little over $56 for each active account. I submit that under the circumstances there is something wrong with the administration, and the minister should look into it.

Mr. FORKE: Last session there was some agitation to place the soldier settlement board under the Civil Service Act. Before this was done it was decided to have a thorough invsetigation into the work of the board. This investigation is being conducted by the audit department. As soon as I receive their report I shall be in a better position to judge whether the overhead is too heavy and whether something can be done to simplify the administration. In the meantime I think some injustice is being done to those employees of the soldier settlement board who have been ten years in the service but are not entitled to superannuation. They are doing their work quite efficiently. Next session I hope to be in a position to submit plans for carrying on the organization and placing those employees who intend to remain in the service in the position to which they are entitled. At that time if there is to be any elimination it can be carried out. The investigation to which I have referred is being made for the sole purpose of ascertaining whether this is the most efficient system for carrying out the work. It must be remembered that the government has $77,000,000 at stake; therefore it is advisable that the department should be properly administered.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are there not efficiency experts in connection with the audit board?

Mr. FORKE: They are under the finance department.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the minister received any representations from the Saskatchewan association of rural municipalities regarding the payment of taxes on soldier settlement land?

Mr. FORKE: Yes. The taxation question has been a very difficult one. The hon. member will perhaps recall that some years ago when this question first came up I viewed it from that corner of the house as one on the outside.

Mr. GARDINER: Now you are on the inside.

Mr. FORKE: After I got inside one of my first resolutions was to clean up this taxation problem if possible. I realize the injustice which the municipalities are suffering, and I think I have made a fairly satisfactory arrangement. I notice that at the last convention of the Saskatchewan association the president said:

> In viewing the situation during the past year we find there has been a wonderful improvement in the payment of taxes on soldier settlement board lands, a fact for which we acknowledge our appreciation. The present policy outlined by the board is that all 1927 taxes on purchased patented lands acquired by the board where settlers are in possession were to be paid during 1928 with 6 per cent simple interest. Taxes on this class of lands after that date will be paid before due date, if possible, but in case arrears occur statutory penalties will be paid. The board are paying the taxes on abandoned lands leased to civilians where the amount of revenue is sufficient to pay taxes in full. Where the revenue received is insufficient, the board will apply amount received on the taxes.

I direct this to the attention of hon. members:

> The board are also paying taxes on crown lands that have been acquired by the board where the settler has remained in possession continuously. If this policy is adhered to in its entirety, there should be no more question about payments of penalties in the future.

The secretary-treasurer reported to the convention:

Once again your executive have found it necessary to devote their time and attention to this problem, but we are pleased to report that conditions regarding the standing of arrears of taxes on S.S.B. lands are vastly improved from what they were one year ago. In so far as those lands, which before being acquired by the board, were fully patented and tax paying, and which are still occupied, are concerned, we believe that our difficulties are nearing an end. from the reports which we have received it would appear that the board have paid on behalf of the soldier settler during the calendar year 1928, the sum of $333,374.34—

I hope the member for Argenteuil is listening, because this accounts for a large part of the advances.

—to the municipalities of the province. We are further informed that arrangements are now being made for the payment of arrears of taxes on every parcel of land coming under this classification.

The only point of difference between the board and municipalities is in regard to lands that have reverted to the crown. No attempt is being made to hold those lands, they are placed on the market and sold as rapidly as possible. and will not long be a factor in the tax problem. It must be borne in mind that this is one of the most difficult problems, the government having been in possession of so much land, and it will continue until the final payments have been made by soldier or civil purchasers. The taxes will be a first charge on the crop and on the land, so that the municipalities have not much to complain of in that regard.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am ready to admit that there has been a very great improvement in the tax situation since the minister made the changes he did some time ago, but there still remains a very grave problem in connection with unoccupied lands. There are a great many of the lands which were not exceptionally good when taken up, and now that they are discarded and left in a very poor condition, the municipality is of course piling up a heavy indebtedness against them. In many cases bonds have been issued against lands which were assessable in the municipality. Schools were built, ordinary liabilities incurred by the municipality against them, anad there is therefore a great hardship on the municipality. I have here a letter from the Saskatchewan association of rural municipalities, a copy of which was forwarded to the minister, and I will read it in part. It refers to the fact that the department is now paying taxes on these lands, which taxes, before the lands were acquired by the board, were fully paid. The letter states that they have included in the classification certain other lands, such as school and Indian lands. It goes on to say:

Our most serious grievance however, is in regard to those lands held by the board which have been abandoned by the soldier settler or where his contract has been cancelled. There are large amounts of arrears of taxes outstanding against these lands and the financial position of many municipalities is being undermined through their inability to collect these taxes. With a view to clearing up the whole situation, a series of meetings have been held by the committee of the Western Union of Rural Municipalities, which organization is comprised of representatives of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, the Manitoba Union of Municipalities and the Alberta Association of municipal districts. As a result of these meetings, it has been decided to ask the government at Ottawa to so amend the S.S.B. as to replace these lands in the tax-paying category in which they stood before being acquired by the board.

The letter goes on to mention an amendment which is proposed to the act and which these organizations hope the minister will look upon with favour. The suggested amendment reads:

In case any land which has in any way been disposed of by the board to a settler, or which has been mortaged to or charged with the payment of money in favour of the board free from the claims of the settler, it shall be lawful for the board to pay all lawful rates, taxes and assessments chargeable in respect of such land accrued before or accruing after the same becomes revested in the board; and if the board does not duly pay all such taxes, then the lands in respect of which the same are payable, shall become liable to sale or forfeiture or both pursuant to the provisions of any provincial statute for the recovery of taxes.

After all, there is an important principle at stake, I see no reason why the federal government should enjoy any special privileges in this regard. If lands are held in the title of the crown, lands which have been used and against which bonds have been issued and liabilities incurred in connection with improvements made at a time when there were settlers on that land, it seems to me only reasonable to expect that the government should assume the responsibility which any ordinary ratepayer in the municipality or any mortgage company is obliged to assume. I quite appreciate the fact that there has been a vast improvement so far, but I do think that the minister ought to go the whole length. I do not say that the principle should be applied to crown lands not occupied; but in respect to crown lands which have been used and which have once appeared on the assessment list, the board should assume their proper responsibility and pay their share, just as is done by ordinary owners of any other land. Certainly the government should not be in the position of enjoying the special privilege of having improvements made at the expense of other settlers' lands. The minister mentioned the representations he made and the advice he gave to the government when he sat on this side of the house. At that time he went the whole way, and I suggest to him, now that he is in a position to carry it out, that he take his own advice. Let him take the advice which he gave to the government while he was on this side of the house.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to get some information from the minister with regard to the policy of the soldier settlement board in the matter of the treatment of the settlers themselves. Seizures are made sometimes, are they not? Under what conditions would seizures on a settler be made? Would he have of necessity to be in arrears?

Mr. FORKE: He would have to be in arrears and there would have to be evidence that he was trying to evade payment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In other words, one would not expect seizure to be made unless the man were obviously—

Mr. FORKE: Trying to evade his payments.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly. I should imagine that would be the policy. I wonder why it has been changed.

Mr. FORKE: I did not know it had been changed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, I may tell the minister that in the west, or at any rate in Alberta, I find a widespread dissatisfaction with the recently adopted autocratic attitude on the part of the board. I have asked the minister these two leading questions in order to get the situation clearly before the committee. Now what would the minister think of a situation like this? Here is a soldier settler, a splendid young chap who served as a captain in the Canadian expeditionary force, has one of the nicest, cleanest and neatest farms in the whole province, his buildings well appointed, and everything in perfect shape. He is a traction farmer—he uses a tractor and is thoroughly efficient. He s a married man though without children. He had some small arrears running up to September last, but on September 13 the arrears were all paid off by cheque and receipt given. On October 4 the supervisor from Calgary—really from Drumheller though he is attached to the Calgary office—came around to the man and said he wanted his payments. The current payments had become due on October 1, amounting to some $500 in round figures. The man was harvesting and threshing his crop at the time, the grain was running No. 6, the initial payment from the pool was very low, and he had only partly threshed his crop. He requested the supervisor to hold off the claim for a little while. The supervisor had known him for some time to be a first class man and willingly withheld the claim for the moment. Then the soldier settler said to him: "Don't you think it would be possible to secure a stay of collection over this year in order that I may seed some more grain next summer?" The supervisor said, "No; there is no chance of that." He stated that he had been instructed to make seizure. But, the man pointed out, he did not owe the board a cent. He said, "The current payments have only just now come due. How can you possibly make seizure?" The supervisor pulled out of his letter file the seizure papers filled in and dated and signed as of September 15—at a time when the man did not owe the board a dollar and when even his arrears were very small, and which arrears had been paid off in the meantime. Now here is a fine type of settler, a man who had never been in any financial difficulties with his neighbours, who had never had any trouble with the bank, and who had conducted his business on a high plane: here he is threatened with seizure. It was a blow such as most of us would not like. How would any hon. gentleman like to be threatened and indeed to be shown the seizure papers at a time when he did not owe a single dollar to the person who was going to serve him? As a result of his advice to the supervisor and the supervisor's knowledge of the man himself, he withheld the seizure until he could interview Mr. Woods, the superintendent, at Calgary. I think that interview took place somewhere near Hanna, prior to October 11, and on October 11 the supervisor again called on this settler and informed him that he had taken up the matter with the superintendent on October 4 and that the superintendent had instructed him to proceed to the settler's farm and execute the seizure.

Do hon. members realize the drastic action which was advised by the superintendent at Calgary? As I said before, on September 13 the papers were made out ordering the man off his farm; on October 12 the supervisor called again and said, "You will have to make the payments or I will have to seize the farm." It was too late that night to go to the bank, so the supervisor stayed over night and in the morning the settler went to the bank. This man asked the supervisor to call up the Calgary office and find out what terms could be secured for the payment of the amount due, as the settler did not have all the cash and might have difficulty in collecting it from the bank on a loan. The Calgary office apparently stated that they would be willing to accept an assignment of his wheat on the wheat pool. The settler then made arrangement to pay some $252 in cash, which he borrowed from the bank, and he gave the soldier settlement board an assignment for the balance on 700 bushels of wheat.

As soon as this assignment was sent to the Calgary office they replied by letter, a copy of which I have here, stating that the assignment was not satisfactory and that the man would have to pay the whole amount in cash. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I do not know one of the mortgage companies, those cold-blooded, brutal octopi which we have discussed so much in this house and to which the minister has referred in scathing terms from time to time, that would have acted in such a cold-blooded, brutal manner towards one of its creditors. This is not a solitary case, either. There was another case in that very district, which has been settled; the unfortunate settler managed to make the payment at considerable cost to himself; he had to borrow a large amount of money from the bank and hypothecate other assets in order to make the payments.

Now I want to know first of all why it was necessary to drive this settler into the borrowing class in order to meet a loan which had only just become due. Why did the board have seizure papers made out two weeks before the current payment was due and, above all, when the condition of the crop this year had been placed before the board? The wheat grown on this farm was a No. 6 wheat, low in quality and very low in price, but the board insisted on payment in full in cash. That is not fair treatment; that is not giving consideration to the soldiers; that is not giving them a chance to stay on the land. This man is a particularly high type of settler, judging from the letters he received from the board. Last spring he received a letter asking if he would be able to take some of the empire settlement immigrants, if he could give them work during the summer, and in that letter he was addressed as a No. 1 settler. Now he is informed by the supervisor that in order to justify the seizure papers being made out, he has been demoted and is now a class four settler on the files of the Calgary office. These are all things requiring explanation and in this case, as in several others, I find a clear indication of a change in the policy of the soldier settlement board since it has become attached to the Department of Immigration, and possibly hopes to become a permanent institution.

Mr. FORKE: It is no more attached to the department now than it was formerly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, it is working in close cooperation with it, especially since the soldier settlement board has taken over the empire settlement scheme. That, I think, is more than simply a hyphen between the board and the Department of Immigration; it is an absolute connecting link between the two.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have placed before the minister a clear case, and I want a statement in respect to it. The name of the soldier settler is Captain N. J. McCrimmon and his loan number is 756.

Mr. FORKE: While I have no doubt that my hon. friend has made these statements in absolute good faith, I have had so much experience in looking into apparent cases of injustice and finding that there are always two sides to a question that I very much doubt if the information supplied to my hon. friend, and given the committee to-day, is absolutely correct.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That was my purpose in bringing it to the attention of the minister; I want the minister's reasons, either for the position as I have stated it or for a different position, if such is found to be the case.

Mr. FORKE: I can only state that my instructions to the board always have been that I am more interested in the success of the settler than in the collections, because if the settler succeeds eventually the collections will be made. Of course, the committee will understand that I scarcely know anything about the work of the board unless there are some complaints, and my stand has always been that if the settler is successful the payments will be made eventually. At the same time, often it is just as well that the board does press for payment, because when arrears begin to accumulate sometimes the difficulties pile up, and quite often people are so optimistic that they get into trouble which they are not likely to get out of. If they are pressed for payment sometimes it is for their own good in the long run.

I can hardly believe that Superintendent Woods would act in this way; from my information with regard to that gentleman I have never learned of any such hard dealings with a man who was making an attempt to meet his payments. I cannot give an answer to my hon. friend to-day; probably I will not have an oportunity to give my answer in the house, but I will inquire fully into the matter and will see that my hon. friend gets full information with regard to this particular case. I am sure this is an isolated case; the actions mentioned by the hon. member are entirely opposed to the policy of the board. We treat them with the utmost leniency as long as there is a chance of payment, but sometimes people are not very anxious to pay and they must have pressure brought to bear upon them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister's reply may be all that could be expected at the moment, but I have given the name of the settler and his loan number, at the request of the minister. This settler feels extremely hurt over this whole situation. The case is clear, but evidently the minister did not listen quite so intently as I had hoped he might. On September 14 this man owed the board $142.66 arrears. On September 15 that amount was paid in full, so from September 14 to October 1 this settler was fully paid up. On October 1 his current annual payment of $507.08 came due. On September 13 seizure papers were made out, signed, and presented to the supervisor who travels over that country. These papers were made out in the Calgary office and given him to serve on this man if he did not immediately make his payment. This information was given the settler on October 4, just four days after the amount became due and at a time when he was actually engaged in threshing his crop. The actual service of the papers took place on October 11, after Superintendent Woods had been requested to stay action in the matter until some discussion could take place. This is not an isolated case, and I am simply raising it because it is the one case in which I am satisfied the evidence is clear. The documents in support of the evidence are in my possession, and I am satisfied that the department will have a great deal of difficulty in putting up any defence. I have received many complaints from the Craigmyle, Rowley and other districts, but I have refrained from taking these matters up because in most instances the only information I could obtain was that of the settler, and he did not always have the real evidence with which I could build up a case. But I want the minister to take particular cognizance of this matter and if he finds that the statements which I have made are correct I want him to take the most drastic action with respect to the Calgary office. Their activities should be checked up and if they are acting in a dictatorial or domineering fashion towards the settlers, the officials should be removed from the office.

Mr. FORKE: I have not received any notice of the case mentioned by the hon. member. If he had made that statement to me a week ago I would have been in a position to reply to him to-day. This is the last day of the session and the hon. member is making certain statements.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has no authority for stating that this is the last day of the session; the session may run into next week or the week after.

Mr. FORKE: I am in no hurry.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If this matter has been taken up by the settler himself with the Calgary office, and I presume with the Ottawa office, then the whole file should be in the minister's department.

Mr. FORKE: I can get the file, but this is the first time I have received any notice of the case. If the hon. member had given me this information a week ago I would have been able to have the information before the house to-day and the matter could have been settled. If the hon. member is willing to keep the house sitting for another week, I can get the information. He is giving what was stated to him by the settlers, but there are two sides to every question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I asked the minister to bring in this information after eight o'clock, along with the figures he is to get for the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. FORKE: It might be necessary to send to Calgary for the information.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are the records not kept down here?

Mr. FORKE: They do not know that a case like that is going to come up; the accounting is done here.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks in connection with the tightening-up process in making collections. I have made inquiries to find out whether or not such orders have been issued from Ottawa, and I assume that there has been a little tightening up.

Mr. FORKE: The collections have not been what might have been expected.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: When the revaluation takes place and the farmer is notified of the reduction, the attitude of the board seems to be that the price is at rock bottom and more stringent collection should be made. I have taken up a number of seizure cases this year, but I must say that I have not had one of such outstanding importance as that mentioned by the hon. member for Bow River. When these cases are brought to me I draw the files from the board and arrive at my own conclusions, and I must say that I have no reason to complain of the treatment I have received. I think in one hundred per cent of the cases in which I have taken issue with the board adjustments have been made. I cannot help but think that if the adjustments are made on my request the first decisions must have been arrived at without full consideration, because no department would be willing to overlook their own opinion and accept that of an outsider as to what was fair in the matter. I think this matter requires some careful checking up. I should like to ask the minister a question or two in regard to the procedure of appeal to the exchequer court. A number of men have lodged appeals and they are anxious to know just what arrangements have been made as to the procedure to be followed by the court.

Mr. FORKE: I think the best explanation would be to read the hon. member's letter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I referred only to costs, but I desire to know what arrangements have been made as to the sittings of the court and what procedure will be followed.

Mr. FORKE: I think the hon. member's own letter is the best explanation I can give.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I want to know whether the court itself had come to a decision as to the time and place of its sittings, and as to the procedure which will be followed.

Mr. FORKE: The revaluations will be finished this summer, and the matter is being taken up with the exchequer court to undertake this work at the earliest possible moment. It is just a little doubtful whether Judge Maclean or Judge Audette will be able to find time to undertake the work, but there will be a judge appointed specially who will go west and meet those who are making appeals. All expenses of the court will be paid by the soldier settlement board, with the exception of the soldier settlers' own expenses. The judge also may be allowed his expenses. The Justice department have this matter in hand and I have been pressing them for information as to when the appointment may be made; in fact, I expected that the order in council would be issued to-day. The department would like to have all the appeals in before the judge begins to hold court so that it will not be necessary for him to go over the ground twice.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: No definite arrangements have been made as yet as to the time and place of sitting or as to the procedure?

Mr. FORKE: They will be made as convenient as possible for the soldier settlers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Another matter is the time allowed for filing an appeal, and in this connection I am a little critical of the action of the minister. When a soldier settler has received an award from the board and does not accept it, he is permitted, under the provisions of the act, to appeal to the exchequer court. That appeal has to be made within a given number of days from the time he is advised of the official award. But at the time the first notices of appeal came in, each settler so giving notice was instructed by the departmental solicitor or superintendent that while he could go ahead and this was the way to do it, he must bear in mind that the court in its discretion might assess the whole costs of the case against him.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think that is the case.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is practically what was in the letter—I am boiling it down: that the appeal would be treated as an ordinary exchequer court case and the court would, in its discretion, assess the costs against either party or both. The result, as I was sure it would be as soon as that letter was received, was that the settlers, being in a state of uncertainty whether or not the costs would be assessed against them, and not in the least knowing how heavy the costs might be, would not appeal. To my mind that is why such a very small number of appeals have so far been lodged. The first letter I wrote to the minister was on December 10, in which I outlined the case, but I was unable to receive a ruling until May 6, and that is the point on which I am critical. I believe the ruling itself is fair and just, namely, that the settler would be guaranteed against costs no matter how trivial the grounds of the appeal might be. But that uncertainty, both as to whether he might be assessed costs by the court and as to the amount by which he might be so assessed, prevented many a settler from lodging an appeal. I suggest that a good deal of leniency be shown as to the time within which an appeal shall be made. It is only a few weeks since the doubt was removed from their minds and they know now what they may expect in connection with costs if they appeal. I discussed the matter with some of the members of the court and I think the minister will find that the court will fully concur in the suggestion that a good deal of leniency might apply in respect to the time limit, so that men who feel they have a grievance and who, on account of uncertainty as to the costs, did not appeal within the time provided, might have an opportunity of appealing now that that doubt has been removed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: With regard to the question of the activities of the local officials of the soldier settlement board in collecting accounts against soldier settlers and the apparent highhandedness, of those officials it is only fair to say this: I have had referred to me many cases in which there seemed to be rather officious and highhanded action on the part of the local officials, but I must say that in discussing these cases with the chairman of the board I received as fair treatment as I could expect under the circumstances. We must recognize the fact that these officials are responsible for taking care of a great deal of the country's property, and while we expect them to give all reasonable consideration to soldier settlers, yet on the other hand we must realize that they have a financial responsibility as well. I thought it was only fair to say that the chairman has given most sympathetic consideration to any cases I have referred to him.

While I am on my feet I want to ask the minister whether or not he will make a statement as to his attitude toward the suggestion made to him or his department by the Saskatchewan association of rural municipalities, as I think it is called, as to amending the act so that the department will be liable for the taxes on all lands that have been once occupied as well as the lands that have reverted to the crown, that have been deserted by settlers or on which the settlers have been foreclosed.

Mr. FORKE: I think the amount of land under this category is exaggerated. The board is selling about 100 farms a month, and in a short time there will be very little land left on the hands of the government. In regard to some very poor land—I have no authority to say this, but I am not at all afraid I can get it through when I want to—we will be quite willing to hand some of that land over to the municipalities for the taxes and let them do what they like with it. It is not worth more than the taxes. This, however, is a matter of government policy. If the government is going to pay taxes on government property, the board will pay those taxes. Mr. Lamb and others have addressed personal letters to the Prime Minister in regard to this, and it is a matter of government policy.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is all the association is asking for, namely, that in case the board are not prepared to pay the taxes, we permit the municipalities to foreclose on them for tax sales the same as they do with regard to privately owned land. If the land is not worth the taxes, they are quite satisfied to take it over.

Mr. BROWN: In view of the fact that there is a great deal of criticism, some of it fair and some of it unfair, of the board, I may say that I received a letter from one branch of the Canadian legion in my constituency, expressing their very hearty appreciation of the way in which the board had dealt with all the cases of the soldiers in that particular part of the country. I had occasion to visit that branch of the legion in the early part of the winter. They were then discussing the matter in my presence, and since coming to Ottawa I have, as I say, received from them a letter expressing their appreciation of the way in which the board has dealt with the settlers.

Mr. SPENCER: This item is a double-headed one. There is about $1,500,000 for soldier land settlement advances and cost of administration of soldier settlement. Could the minister inform the committee as to the actual cost of administration outside of the advances?

Mr. FORKE: $755,000. As regards vote No. 60, soldier and general land settlement, the amount to be voted is $2,845,000. The total amount recoverable is $1,090,000; that all comes back to the government, or at least it stands against the lands. The way in which those estimates are made up in the Immigration department and the soldier settlement board, is very misleading as regards the amount of money that is really being expended. Only about half of the vote is really being expended. Out of the total vote of $2,845,000, $1,090,000 consists of recoverable expenditures. As regards the general land settlement, the administration expenses amount to $600,000 and as regards the soldier settlement, the administration expenses amount to $755,000, making a total of $1,355,000 that is not recoverable.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the minister state how much land the soldier settlement board has unoccupied on its hands at the present time?

Mr. FORKE: I will have that looked up.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How many British families are now on the land in connection with the empire settlement scheme?

Mr. FORKE: It is expected that we shall have a full complement this summer. I think it lacks three hundred at the present time. I want to make it plain that that three thousand family scheme might be never-ending, because you will find some families dropping out every year and they will need to be replaced. But no more families will be brought out next year under that scheme.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What is the average amount of loan, on account of land purchased, made by the Canadian government to these settlers, and what is the average indebtedness of each family towards the British government? These families, of course, carry a double-headed debt. There is the $1,500 received from the British government to assist in stocking a farm, and there is the cost of the land turned over to them by the Canadian government. I should like to find out the indebtedness carried by the average family if the minister has that information, and if not, I should like to have it prepared.

Mr. FORKE: The average indebtedness is $3,505.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is the average purchase price?

Mr. FORKE: Yes. The hon. member referred to loans made to British settlers. The Dominion government makes no loans of any kind to these settlers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: You sell them land on time.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, but I want to repeat, because there is a general misapprehension on the subject, that the Dominion government makes no loans of any kind to these settlers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was not under a misapprehension. Perhaps I did not put my question clearly. I want to know, first, the amount to which the average settler is indebted to the Canadian government in respect of the land purchased, and second, the amount to which he is indebted to the British government in respect of loans made.

Mr. FORKE: To get at that figure, you have first the average amount paid for a farm, which is $3,505, and you have 3,000 families. Multiply those two figures, and you get the total amount owing, less what has already been paid.

Mr. GARDINER: You do not collect for the British government?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What is the average indebtedness to the British government by way of loan, for which you are not responsible but which you collect?

Mr. FORKE: I cannot give those figures offhand.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Have these settlers on the average received $1,500?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think that the three thousand families have paid as well in proportion as the soldier settlers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I did not ask that. I asked the average loan made by the British government to each family. I understand that $1,500 is the basis, but that the loans vary. I am trying to find the capital indebtedness of each farm under the empire settlement scheme, and that would include the cost of the land, the loan made by the British government, and the passage money advanced, which is repayable. Those are three types of public indebtedness which these farms would carry.

Mr. FORKE: I think $800 would be about the average indebtedness.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the average acreage per farm allocated to the British families?

Mr. FORKE: Mostly half-sections.

Mr. GARDINER: For only a total cost of $3,505?

Mr. FORKE: There are a number of quarter-sections.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is a very great deal more than the 23 per cent reduction that the soldier settlers got on the revaluation. The farms that I have seen are quarter-sections.

Mr. FORKE: I am speaking without the book.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I want definite information on this because I have been working on the subject for a long time, and I am being continually asked for information.

Mr. FORKE: It is difficult to say offhand just how many quarter-sections and half-sections have been occupied.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give us the total acreage allocated under the three thousand family scheme?

Mr. FORKE: I have not got that.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The terms under which they get the loan from the British government provide for no payments being made for two years, if that is right, in most cases the first payment would be made last fall.

Mr. FORKE: There is generally one year of probation, and another year before they make any payment.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As they have only come in within the last few years it is only now that payments are coming due.

Mr. FORKE: It does not amount to very much yet.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: You have not the definite amount, but are of opinion that it is not quite as satisfactory, by percentage, as the soldier settlers. I shall not repeat the arguments that I have already made with regard to soldier land settlement, but most of those arguments apply to this settlement scheme as well. The minister agrees with me, without saying now that the scheme is damned, that we will take good care to see how it is going to work out before we extend it.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the land settlement board selling to civilian Canadians land on the same terms as granted to the British families, provided that the Canadian settler owns his stock and equipment?

Mr. FORKE: I do not see any reason why they should not. They are selling this land to Canadian civilians right now on twenty-five equal annual payments.

Mr. GARDINER: On exactly the same terms as to the British?

Mr. FORKE: Practically the same terms, twenty-five equal annual payments but if they fall down in their payments we have nothing to take the place of the British government.

Mr. GARDINER: Why do you need the British government when these Canadian settlers have their own stock and equipment? Do you call for any payment down from Canadian settlers?

Mr. FORKE: A payment down of ten per cent.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the difference, and you do not give them two years' probation.

Mr. FORKE: They do not need it.

Mr. GARDINER: Do you give them one year's probation?

Mr. FORKE: I think they get one year.

Mr. GARDINER: Are you quite sure of that?

Mr. FORKE: It is a matter of adjustment. I think they get as good terms as the British settler.

Mr. GARDINER: Not when they pay ten per cent down.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council and necessary new buildings, $295,000.

Mr. SPENCER: If on investigation the minister finds that certain members of the National Dairy Council are getting rid of New Zealand or other imported butter of inferior quality as Canadian butter, will he discontinue the grant to the council?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, if they are doing it it is wrong, and we had better stop it by law or regulation, but I do not think we should penalize the council. My hon. friend speaks of "getting rid of" New Zealand butter as if it was an inferior product. I do not know why any dealer in butter should attempt to disguise New Zealand butter, because it is good butter. However, if what is alleged is being done I think it should be stopped. We have investigated complaints but so far we have not got sufficient evidence to warrant a prosecution.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If large quantities of New Zealand and other imported butter of an inferior quality are being sold throughout the country as Canadian butter it is a serious situation that calls for drastic action on the part of the Department of Agriculture. The minister seems to think that he has no legislative authority to take action. I think he must be mistaken. If we sell our wheat as being of a certain grade, and it turns out to be of an inferior grade, we have to compensate the buyer or we are liable to a charge of fraud. Certainly the minister must be in a position to deal with this situation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This New Zealand butter is not inferior to ours, and if it is not sold as Canadian butter there is no violation of the law. If, however, it is sold as butter of Canadian origin, undoubtedly there is a violation of the law.

Mr. COTNAM: Is it the policy of the government to allow the continued importation of New Zealand butter?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will agree to accept the following motion:

That this house shall not be adjourned at eleven o'clock to-day.

There is a possibility that we may conclude even before eleven o'clock, but I think it is advisable if the proceedings go beyond that hour that we should be at liberty to sit at least as late as we did last night.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Until twelve?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend (Mr. Cotnam) wanted to know whether we would continue the policy under the order in council, applying the Australian treaty to New Zealand. The Department of Agriculture has never undertaken to enunciate government policies; that would be a matter for the government.

Mr. COTNAM: Does not the Minister of Agriculture, as such, know the policy of the government in that respect?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; I am not commissioned to make any reply in regard to either the Australian treaty or its application to New Zealand.

Mr. COTNAM: Then perhaps the minister knows his own mind in the matter. Does he think that the Australian treaty is beneficial to the Canadian dairy farmers as well as to the mixed farmers of Canada, particularly in Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a matter of opinion, I expect.

Mr. COTNAM: I should be glad to know the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture. That is a fair request; he knows his own mind.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. COTNAM: Just a moment; I want an answer to that question.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will make a careful survey of the situation.

Mr. COTNAM: Does the minister mean that while he is making that careful survey the Canadian dairy farmer is to be penalized to the extent of having his market taken from him through the importation of almost thirty million pounds of New Zealand butter every year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is an extraordinary revival of butter making in Saskatchewan and the west generally. During the past four or five months the manufacture of butter in Saskatchewan has more than doubled each month. So that I shall have to reserve my opinion on this question until I see how things work out this summer.

Mr. COTNAM: Am I to infer from the minister's answer that he thinks the treaty beneficial to the dairy farmers, of Saskatchewan at any rate? I am prepared to say that it has not worked out to the advantage of the dairy farmers of Ontario. I can assure the minister that the dairy farmers of Ontario feel very keenly the loss of this market for their dairy products. Perhaps the reason for a part of the immigration which is taking place to-day is to be found in this very fact. Many of our farmers are becoming discouraged in their endeavour to carry on their dairy operations when they seem to get so little cooperation from the Department of Agriculture and this government.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It appears to me, after listening to the discussion to-day, that the opinion prevails in some quarters that because the National Dairy Council receive a grant of $5,000 per annum from this government, the government is in duty bound to accept its fiscal policy from that council. I confess I cannot see the logic of that argument. In my opinion any organization receiving a cash grant of public money from the government should keep strictly out of politics. I understand that this organization has been actively engaged spreading political propaganda of a kind not acceptable to a good many people in this country and in this house, and I suggest that before any money is paid to this council they be required to give an assurance that they will keep strictly out of politics and neither interfere nor attempt to interfere with the fiscal policy of the government. Will the minister give us an assurance to that effect?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have already spoken to the council of the unwisdom of making themselves conspicuous on certain controversial questions, and have pointed out that it would render it easier for me to keep the grant going and possibly to increase it if necessary if they were not so active in displaying their views. I think there is a marked improvement in this regard. They are not offensive this year so far as I can see.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): But they are active.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know about their activity, but I cannot see any offensiveness on their part, particularly since the election of the present president.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I wish to make one or two observations in regard to the question of the marking of goods imported into Canada so as to indicate the country of origin. I support this proposition. The minister, for whose subtlety I have a great deal of respect, when this matter was brought up on a previous occasion, tried to link it up with the general idea of protection. I will not say that he was confused in his own mind, because I am sure he was not; but he did not make any particular attempt to ensure the house against confusion. I may say that I am in favour of a good many kinds of protection, but it is not necessarily the sort of protection the minister has referred to. For example, I am in favour of protectiong the consumer against exploitation, though that is not protection of the sort the minister speaks of; and I am equally in favour of protecting the consumer against fraud or against any uncertainty as to the quality of the goods he buys. I am not prepared to impose a high tariff, but I do support the idea that the consumer should know just where the goods come from which he is buying, what the quality is, and so forth, so that he may make his choice. That is the kind of protection I want. It is the minister's obvious intent to permit a wrong impression to prevail, and I have no wish to see it succeed.

Mr. BROWN: I have been interested in this discussion with regard to New Zealand butter being sold under the guise of Canadian butter. In what form does that butter come into Canada? Is it in pound prints or in larger packages?

[Mr. E. J. Young.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In fifty-six pound packages.

Mr. BROWN: Then it must be repacked by someone in Canada. I can understand that the Dominion government might very well require that the packages coming to Canada should be marked with the country of origin, but I can see some difficulty in the way of the Dominion government acting when that butter goes out to the trade and is repacked in pound prints, as I presume it is sold. Then I cannot be just sure, on this question of fraud, whether the objection is taken because New Zealand butter is better or worse than Canadian butter. It cannot be fraud practised on the consumer if, as was stated this afternoon, New Zealand butter is selling in Vancouver for two cents per pound more than Canadian butter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I consider it fraud when a consumer is induced to buy something under the belief that it is a different article. I am not referring to the inferiority or superiority of New Zealand butter; I merely desire that the customer may know what he is buying and may get what he wants.

Mr. BROWN: On the other hand, if this butter is simply going out as butter, not labeled, I do not see how the question of fraud can enter into the transaction.

Mr. FRASER: There is a bonus of $100 paid to creameries under this vote. Would the minister tell us on what basis that bonus is given?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This bonus of $100 is intended to assist in the provision of cooling rooms for small creameries which have not a sufficient turnover to justify their putting in a cold storage. That grant is offered the creameries provided they comply with inspection conditions, and of course these cooling rooms cost a good deal more than that. This is an encouragement to them to put in their own money in order to provide the very necessary requisite of a cooling room.

Item agreed to.

Cold storage warehouses, $467,837.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this large increase?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The increase is due to the construction, under the Cold Storage Act, of a large warehouse at Halifax and another warehouse at New Westminster. Perhaps I might give the details of this vote:

Fourth instalment to United Farmers' Cooperative Company, Limited, Toronto, Ont., $1,732.

Third instalment to Eloi Cote, Chicoutimi, Que., $480.
Second instalment to Pictou County Dairy Company, Limited, Stellarton, Nova Scotia, $3,500.
Second instalment to A. Landry, Riviere du Loup, Quebec, $875.
First instalment to Nova Scotia Public Fish and Cold Storage Terminals, Limited, Halifax, Nova Scotia, $326,250.
First instalment to Pacific Coast Terminals Limited, New Westminster, British Columbia, $135,000.

Mr. LUCAS: What will be the total cost of the buildings at Halifax and New Westminster?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The total subsidy is 30 per cent of the total cost; we pay half the subsidy the first year while the other half is spread over three or four years, so these amounts will represent 15 per cent of the total cost.

Mr. LUCAS: What percentage is paid by the government towards the cost of these buildings?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We pay 30 per cent of the total, under the terms of the Cold Storage Act.

Item agreed to.

Fruit, including grant of $8,000 to the Canadian Horticultural Council, $336,000.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I notice this vote includes $8,000 for the horticultural council. Will the minister tell me the names of the president and secretary of that organization ?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: While my deputy is looking up that information I might tell my hon. friend that there is an increase of $46,000 in the vote, which increase is largely returnable to the treasury. This amount is to provide for the inspection of fruit in British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec, and this money will be repaid very largely through the charge of $3 for every car inspected. There is some slight statutory increase in salaries, in addition.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister tell us who compose the horticultural council and what institutions or societies are represented on it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Burrows of Ottawa is the secretary and Mr. J. H. Lavoie, Quebec City, is president. The Canadian Horticultural Council represents 216 horticultural and allied industry organizations having a membership in excess of 85,000. I will give the list of officers.

Mr. SENN: I asked what societies were represented by that council; are they producers' societies?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, I understand they are all producers' societies.

Mr. SENN: Will the minister say whether the dealers are represented?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will get that information.

Mr. McMILLAN: The shippers, the jam manufacturers, and all the manufacturers of these lines are represented.

Mr. ROWE: The consumers' league.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The membership of the council is as follows:

Hon. President
Colonel H. L. Roberts, Grimsby, Ont.

Past President
J. T. Mutrie, Vernon, B.C.

Members

Fruit Growers
Thos. Abriel, Nakusp, B.C.
Paul Fisher, Burlington, Ont.
W. J. Tawse, Macdonald College, Que.
H. A. Slipp, Keswick, N.B.
V. B. Leonard, Clarence, N.S.

Vegetables Growers
Fred A. Lewis, Vernon, B.C.
Herbert Sulkers, Winnipeg, Man.
W. J. Cooke, Kingston, Ont.
Thomas Rowley, Leamington, Ont.
J. H. Lavoie, Quebec, Que.
J. J. McEvoy, Montreal, Que.
F. W. Bishop, Paradise, N.S.

Nurseymen
E. B. Luke, Montreal, Que.

Florists and Gardeners
Chas. Craig, Ottawa, Ont.

Canners
W. R. Drynan, Hamilton, Ont.

Amateur Horticulturists
J. E. Carter, Guelph, Ont.

Western Canada Fruit Jobbers
Herbert Emery, Winnipeg, Man.

Eastern Canada Fruit Jobbers
W. J. McCart, Toronto, Ont.

Committee Chairmen
Publicity, E. B. Luke, Montreal, Que.
Plant Registration and Ornamental Horticulture
W. T. Macoun, Ottawa, Ont.
Transportation
H. L. Roberts, Grimsby, Ont.
Legislation
W. J. McCart, Toronto, Ont.
Standard Score Cards and Statistics
Professor T. G. Bunting, Macdonald College, Que.
Markets
Paul Fisher, Burlington, Ont.

The officers of the council are as follows:

President
J. H. Lavoie, Quebec, Que.
First Vice-President
Paul Fisher, Burlington, Ont.
Second Vice-President
Charles Craig, Ottawa, Ont.
Secretary-Treasurer
L. F. Burrows, Ottawa, Ont.

Mr. SENN: The reason I asked the question was that I had heard from different sources that the growers themselves were not represented on the council to the extent that the other allied interests were.

An hon. MEMBER: Such as politicians.

Mr. SENN: Such as the shippers and canners; they appear to be in the majority on the council.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I do not think we should allow this vote to go through.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The canners have a representative in the person of Mr. Drynan of Hamilton.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to ask the minister—

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Have I the floor, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. EVANS: I would like to know why a grant is made to this horticultural council. What public service do they perform?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They look after the interest of the horticulturists and the fruit interests, in the same manner as other organizations. I think it was in 1923 or 1924 that they undertook to institute a registration system so that any new plants, shrubs, trees, or anything of that nature which had been propagated and introduced as new varieites could be registered and recorded.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I do not think that we should vote this $8,000 to the horticultural council, as their chief activities seem to be in the line of politics. Their chief ambition seems to be to impose a certain fiscal policy upon the government which fiscal policy is not that of the government.

An hon. MEMBER: What is yours?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): A year ago last March this organization held a convention in the Chateau Laurier at which they drew up a schedule of values which were to determine the duties to be levied by the government of Canada upon certain imports. The secretary Mr. L. F. Burrows, has an office in this city. I believe that office is located in a government building, and I do not know whether or not he has to pay any rent for it; I do not think he does. He is registered in the telephone directory of this building, and his telephone is attached to our central. In addition to all this, he is getting $8,000 per year and he has been conducting a very active lobby within the very walls of this building. He admitted as much to me last spring, sitting there in the corridor, and I found him there again yesterday although I do not know what he was doing. I do not think it is the function of this government, or any government, to vote public funds to any political organization in order to carry on political propaganda throughout the country.

Mr. STIRLING: I would like to make a few remarks in connection with the Canadian Horticultural Council. The view has been advanced that because this council has been dealing with the matter of protection, which the industry considers to be desirable, therefore it should no longer receive assistance from this government. Let us consider for a moment the history of the council. It came into existence at the instigation of the Minister of Agriculture. Prior to that time the minister and his predecessor had found it very difficult to obtain information from the various sections of the industry throughout Canada which have since been affiliated in the horticultural council. When the government desired information in connection with the regulation of the industries they were put to considerable expense in collecting that information in regard to fruit, vegetables, flowers, bulbs, plants and kindred subjects. Therefore the minister decided that it would be a good thing to foster the creation of an association of these allied interests, and the horticultural council came into existence in 1924. It has an office in Ottawa with a resident secretary, and since that time whenever any question has arisen with regard to the allied industries the minister has been able to obtain the necessary information through the machinery so created. The industries organized under that council considered that protection was desirable. Was it wrong of the council to be the means of collecting the evidence and of laying it in an orderly fashion before the tariff advisory board? Under our law we see to it that even a murderer has his case properly presented to the judge. Is it wrong, when the allied interests considered that protection was desirable, whether they be right or whether they be wrong, to use this piece of machinery for laying their case before the tariff advisory board? The minister brought this council into existence; it is a child of the minister's. I have never looked upon the minister as a person who would desire to eat his own young, even though on occasions, in moments of vexation, he may desire to bite the one that comes from Weyburn. But the council does present the case before the tariff advisory board on such matters as seasonable tariffs. What other organization in Canada could so readily draw together all the points in connection with the case and present it in orderly fashion before that board? I can hardly imagine that the minister will take seriously the plaintive cry of the free traders. It is not many years since forty members from Quebec pleaded with the government for further protection on vegetables. I remember that the petition contained the name of the present Secretary of State before he became such. He probably has forgotten that he signed it. It contained the name of the chief government whip and the names of thirty-seven or thirty-eight other members from the province of Quebec. The president to-day of the horticultural council is Mr. Lavoie, a man keenly interested in fruits and vegetables in Quebec. I cannot imagine that the minister would be so obdurate as to cut off this grant or that the fruit growers and vegetable growers in Quebec, the maritime provinces, or Ontario or British Columbia would be pleased at his doing so. I cannot imagine that the cutting off of this assistance would be popular in Canada, simply because certain free traders asked that that be done. They are perfectly at liberty to follow the dictates of their consciences with regard to their policy; but why should they have such an influence with the government as to get them to withdraw this grant? I suggest that such action would be most unpopular and I can hardly imagine that the minister will listen to this Jeremiah cry.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have listened to the argument of the hon. member for Yale with a good deal of interest. By the same principle and the same argument, if this vote passes, as it probably will, we should grant $8,000 to the council of agriculture in order that they may be able to present the claims of agriculture. They should be equally important with the council of horticulture as a political interest, and by the same token, a grant of $8,000 should be made to the consumers' league so that they may be able to present their views. I submit that those two grants should be made along the same lines.

Item agreed to.

Seed, feed and fertilizer control, including grants to seed fairs, etc., and necessary buildings, also grant of $13,000 to Canadian Seed Growers' Association, $625,000.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What is the nature of this seed, feed and fertilizer control?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This branch is presided over by Commissioner George Clark and his duties are outlined in the item. Part of his duty is to look after the seeds, including the garden seeds, field seeds, and also the clovers and grasses. The feed is under the Feeding Stuffs Act. That act has been revised in parliament during the last few years. The fertilizers are the artificial ones.

As regards grants to seed fairs, those subventions were made for many years to seed fairs before I had anything to do with the department. The item also covers necessary buildings and a grant of $13,000 to the Canadian Seed Growers' Association. The increase in the vote is due to the necessity of erecting a seed laboratory in the city of Ottawa owing to the old one, which was a private dwelling originally, having to be dismantled. It was in the way of the new building that is being erected and it has had to be torn down. Therefore in order that we may have proper accommodation, a new laboratory is to be constructed on the experimental farm, for the purpose of housing the staff of the former seed laboratory which was situated near the power plant.

There is $150,000 for the establishment of a seed cleaning plant and storage plant in Saskatchewan. This is expected to be and will be, I think, in the city of Moose Jaw. This building is being erected primarily for the purpose of taking care of the government's cereal products which sometimes require treatment. We have not the facilities at the present time to treat them. For instance, let me take the case of reward wheat, one of our finest wheats, the best I am aware of that has been introduced. It has a blemish called blue smut on the inside of the wheat. It cannot be treated in the regular way that loose smut can. It has to be treated with hot water and we are obliged, for lack of facilities, to send out to 5,000 farmers wheat that is contaminated with this blue smut, and ask them with their lesser facilities, to try to treat it with hot water and thereby kill the germ inside it before they sow it. We have found in the past that it is somewhat dangerous to treat the wheat two or three months in advance, but we found by experimentation last winter that if we treat it and dry it, we can do it safely without retarding the germination of the wheat. The purpose of the new building is to treat new varieties of seeds that may develop blemishes so that we may send them out clean to the farmers and not polluted as has been the case during the past few years. Many farmers are complaining that with their scanty facilities they cannot take care of the wheat we send them if it has blemish. We should be able when we have this laboratory in operation to send the seed out in a state of purity, free from disease. We anticipate in the near future to have developed completely—I do not know how many years it will take, but we are working towards it—a rust-resisting wheat. Should we attain that with all the necessary qualifications as to purity, quality, early maturing and prolific power and then find it has some blemish, it is very necessary that we should be able to offset that by whatever treatment is required before we send it out to the farmers. When we get these facilities, it will be incumbent upon the department to supply all the farmers who carry out the experiments, with one bushel of clean wheat.

A similar service should be supplied to adjoining provinces as soon as they are ready to cooperate with the department in that respect. It has always been my intention that it should be so. This vote provides for only one cleaning plant, however, as there is only one organization ready to make use of the service at the present time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister state that he will agree, when the other provinces are ready, to make a grant on the same basis to the other two provinces?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, just as soon as they are ready, we are ready. We will not even wait until they organize as has been done in Saskatchewan. We will be ready to cooperate with the Alberta Department of Agriculture with whom we have had some correspondence.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the department not already got in touch with the minister in this matter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. As I understand the arrangement, the Department of Agriculture in Alberta administered the seed plant themselves, but owing to the expense of the business and the owner requiring the plant for himself for some purpose, they are deprived of those facilities. They are trying to meet the situation the best way they can, but even if they do not organize a cooperative registered seed growers' association such as they have in Saskatchewan, we will be prepared to deal in the same way with the departments of agriculture of the two adjoining provinces for the purpose of giving them the same kind of service. It is felt by a good many that these seed cleaning institutions should not invade the domain of the private seed merchants by handling poultry supplies, bee supplies and artificial fertilizers which cannot be properly considered to belong to a seed cleaning plant, and I am prepared to state that those reservations will be inserted in the lease.

Mr. ROWE: I think the Minister of Agriculture has skated around the whole question and absolutely evaded giving an answer. How much rent is it proposed to ask from the registered seed growers' cooperative association of Alberta? Here you have a $150,000 grant—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Might I disabuse my hon. friend's mind of the idea that this is a grant? It is the cost of the additions to the government's seed cleaning plant that we require for our own service. It will have a capacity of 100,000 bushels, and we are leasing the balance to the registered seed growers' association of Saskatchewan. The ownership is in the government and the site continues in possession of the government. If we cannot make a satisfactory lease with the registered seed growers' association, the department may have to operate the plant. With regard to the lease, we have not prepared any draft yet except in a tentative way such as I have outlined. I think that there should be reservations in the lease that this cooperative seed growers' association, whose purpose is to handle their own goods largely, should not engage in selling merchandise such as that to which I have referred. In spite of these restrictions there will be a regular cash rental—

Mr. ROWE: How much?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have not worked that out for the very good reason that we do not know if it be worth anything to them this year, because of the lateness in starting construction, and consequently they may have to store some of their grain in some other building and transfer it later. The building season out there for concrete work is very short. The rental for the first year, in my estimation, should be quite small, and after that I think it should be on a graduated scale, starting with say three or four per cent and going up to five per cent or whatever rate government money is worth, and then stopping at that figure for the balance of the period of the lease. It would continue at five per cent, say, for ten years, but that is just a tentative suggestion.

Mr. ROWE: The whole thing seems to be tentative. It is very strange that this cooperative association of farmers, in whom the minister and I are really interested as members of the same vocation, should be made a gift of a building worth $150,000. It is unfair to every other organized business with which it will come into competition. I would ask the minister what the A. E. Mackenzie Company, the seed distributors of Brandon, the Hogg and Lytle people, the Steele, Briggs people and the Rennie people might have to say about this. I have as much sympathy with cooperative marketing and cooperative production in the agricultural districts as the minister or any other hon. member, but it does seem to me absolutely unfair that the minister and this government should hand out to the registered seed growers' cooperative association a building and establishment worth $150,000, to enter into competition with organized business interests of the same character.

The minister might well take into consideration the progress that has been made in Prescott, Russell, Grenville, Carleton, Renfrew, Lanark, Pontiac, and other counties in the Ottawa valley. They have not been assisted by the department, and while there were only two seed cleaning plants in these counties in 1914, there are now fourteen. In a large seed-growing province like Saskatchewan there is one plant established at Moose Jaw, and I ask any hon. member interested in agriculture to say how this is going to be of any particular advantage to the different farmers throughout Saskatchewan. I leave it to hon. members on the other side. I know they will agree with me that this is simply a hand-out from the Department of Agriculture to a purely business and commercial interest. It is one of the examples of ruthless extravagance and political hand-outs on the part of this government. I say that in all fairness to the Minister of Agriculture, whose friendship I have always appreciated. I have never belonged to a cooperative association because they always had some sort of politics mixed up with them. I am a farmer, and I have spent a lot of my time down here. I am interested in cooperative organizations, in cooperative marketing and cooperative production, and I have much in common with every other farmer in this country, but I say that here is a sample of an unjustifiable hand-out, whether it goes to the farmers or not. As I have pointed out we have fourteen seed cleaning plants in the Ottawa valley, for the establishment of which this government can take no credit. They are operated on a purely private basis and are a benefit to the districts al through the Ottawa valley. They have all the equipment which the minister will provide in this $150,000 plant. They are provided with the clipper cleaner, the Marot grader, the Carter disc separator and all the equipment that you will find in any seed cleaning plant. The products of the registered seed growers' cooperative association of Saskatchewan come down through Ontario and Quebec and every other province of this Dominion. I have every respect for the seed growers of Saskatchewan and I should be glad to see them get every assistance possible, but it is not fair to the farmers of Saskatchewan or to the business interests of the rest of Canada for the minister to hand out $150,000 to a purely commercial organization, and I ask the minister to correct me if I am wrong when I say that it is a purely commercial organization. There may be some five or six hundred farmers in that organization, but I know well that they paid their manager $5,000 last year, and any organization that can pay their business manager $5,000 a year does not need $150,000 from this government. I say in all fairness to my fellow farmers from Saskatchewan that this is an absolutely unjustifiable hand-out, and of no particular benefit to the original producers of Saskatchewan. It seems to me that the minister could have used that $150,000 to much better advantage if he had spent it like the Quebec government is doing. It grants a subsidy of 25 per cent for the establishment of seed cleaning plants all through that province. They have all the equipment that this $150,000 plant has, but they touch vitally the farmers interested. This is a $150,000 hand-out to the commercial interests of the seed grain trade of Canada. I know that the minister and his colleagues as well as members of both sides of the house are aware that the seed firms I have mentioned are in rebellion against this thing. It is absolutely unfair to the seed trade of the Dominion, and it is of very little benefit to our farmers. I buy hundreds of bushels of grain from Saskatchewan, not for seed but for feed. It is all very well to talk of this vote being for the benefit of the Saskatchewan farmers, but it is for the benefit of a commercial organization in Saskatchewan.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In reply to the statement of the hon. member I may be permitted to give an outline of the Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association. He has said that it is a purely commercial organization. That is incorrect. The Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association is made up of between 1,000 and 1,100 farmers of the province.

Mr. ROWE: Only 750.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Between 1,000 and 1,100. It has been stated around the corridors for some time by those who oppose this vote that Mr. A. E. Mackenzie, a millionaire seedsman has described this as a purely commercial organization. The organization functions under a provincial charter, because a special act had to be passed in connection with this seed pool—for it is a seed pool—just the same as a special act had to be passed for the organization of the wheat pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Producers, Limited.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How is this comparable with the wheat pool, which is a truly cooperative organization?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association, or the seed pool of Saskatchewan, is more truly a pool than is the wheat pool.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Is it not a joint stock company?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No. Like the wheat pool it was formed under a special act.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I think I am right.

Mr. ROWE: Certainly it is a joint stock company.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Perhaps my hon. friends will allow me to proceed. All the members of the Saskatchewan seed growers' association have taken stock in the company. That stock was not taken with the hope of ever obtaining dividends, but merely as a donation to the organization and to forward membership in it. It is a non-profit organization so far as the company is concerned. The farmers all over the province who are growing registered seed have it inspected by the government seed inspector; it is shipped to this plant from all over Saskatchewan, the freights being pooled on the inward shipments; there it is again examined, cleaned, and sealed, and then it is sold at the lowest possible price to the farmer. Only a very small spread between the cost of the registered seed and the cost of ordinary wheat going into the market channels is obtained by the registered seed grower. Because we have not had the proper facilities in Saskatchewan for handling our pure seed, a good many hundreds of thousands of bushels of seed that should have been sowed in the province have gone into the ordinary channels of trade, and in that way the Dominion has lost a great deal of money and a great deal of crop each year. I compliment the minister on his foresight and his business ability in agriculture in loaning this building to an organization such as the Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association. In the past we have given large grants—never too large—in aid of agriculture. For instance, in connection with the bull loaning policy of the government thousands of dollars were spent every year. A vote of $150,000 for a building to ensure pure seed for the greatest grain growing province in the Dominion is a drop in the bucket compared with the advantage that will accrue not only to the province but to the Dominion generally from the return of a better crop from better seed. My hon. friend objected because a farmers' association wanted to compete with private corporations. These private corporations have been active in Saskatchewan for the last thirty or thirty-five years.

An hon. MEMBER: Commercial interests.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes. Had they supplied the demand for good seed, or registered seed, there would never have been the necessity for forming the Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association. But seeing that that demand throughout Saskatchewan was not supplied, the farmers took it into their own hands, as they have done in regard to a great many other things in that province, and they are making a marked success of the organization. It is only a few years ago that they started into this business, and the production of registered seed in Saskatchewan has gone up by leaps and bounds ever since. My hon. friend stated that the Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association paid their manager $5,000. That statement also is incorrect. The government of Saskatchewan in order to help an organization of this kind has supplied it with a man who costs the province $5,000.

Mr. ROWE: He gets $5,000 nevertheless.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): From the government of Saskatchewan.

Mr. ROWE: It does not matter.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I hope it will be continued.

Mr. ROWE: That government is through now.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): And likely that policy will be through also.

Mr. ROWE: It looks like it.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does my hon. friend say this is a non-profit sharing organization?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes.

Mr. ROWE: Do they not sell this seed grain throughout the Dominion in competition with other companies?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes.

Mr. ROWE: Then how are they a non-profit organization?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It is a pool.

Mr. ROWE: But they sell their seed grain throughout all parts of Canada in competition with other seed companies.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Surely. It is not their seed they handle, it is the seed of the farmer.

Mr. ROWE: But they are in the commercial business.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The wheat pool is in the commercial business too.

Mr. ROWE: Sure.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Have you any objection to that?

Mr. ROWE: It is not too good this year.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I think the wheat pool has been of great benefit to this country, and the sooner my hon. friends realize that organizations of this kind should be fostered by the government the better it will be for agriculture.

Mr. ROWE: It did not do much good in Ontario this year.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): So far the Saskatchewan registered seed growers' association have been carrying on as a true pool. They have obtained their finances in this way. Every farmer shipping and selling seed through the association allows to be deducted from the sale price of his seed five per cent, and that five per cent is used by the seed growers' association to finance their operations. That is formed into what is called a revolving fund, and at the end of five years the 5 per cent begins to go back to the farmer to whom it belongs. Besides the seed pool, there is a pool for each kind of seed which is shipped into the plant. The seed growers' association now pool the freight on the seed from all parts of Saskatchewan to their plant, and it is their intention to pool out the freights as soon as they get proper statistics and data on the subject. This building is not given to them; part of it will be leased to them for the work they are carrying on, and I trust that the Minister of Agriculture will not make that lease too costly to them, because they are doing a work which his department should have been doing in this country for a good many years. If the Department of Agriculture themselves endeavoured to carry out the work which the Saskatchewan registered seed growers are doing to-day it would cost the country a good deal of money. This is a voluntary organization and is the best of its kind for the distribution of those new seeds which are being developed by the Department of Agriculture on the experimental farms. You have here a thousand growers of seeds who specially prepare their land for it, and when a new seed has been developed and the type set that seed can go to an organization of this kind and can quickly be multiplied and developed by growers whose farms are being properly inspected and checked. The seed is kept pure and can be multiplied very quickly so that the country as a whole can get the benefit of it much more rapidly than would be otherwise the case. Too often in this house we criticize the work of the department and of certain servants of the government, or of the people, who are carrying on a great work for Canada in the development of new grains. I have some little knowledge of the system which is employed, having had the privilege of attending an agricultural college some years ago, and I can truthfully say that there is no work which takes so much labour and shows so little apparent result as the work of Mr. Newman and his staff. I do not think there is any department of the government which has done more for this country than that branch has done in the last few years. It would pay every member of this house to take a trip to the experimental farm in Ottawa and to the experimental farms in their own provinces and see the vast amount of work that is being done, and the great good which is being accomplished by these men in the seed branch and in other kindred branches of the Department of Agriculture. I repeat that there has never been a more forward step taken by the Minister of Agriculture, so far as western Canada and Canada as a whole is concerned, than the erection of this building and the leasing of a part of it to an organization such as the registered seed growers of Saskatchewan.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Will this plant be available for the use of all the farmers of Saskatchewan?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Not only for those who happen to belong to the pool?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It requires only a dollar to belong to the organization. Anyone who is not a member, desiring to ship in a car of seed, can pay a dollar and automatically become a member.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): How much space in the building does the government intend to use?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have distributed between 10,000 and 12,000 bushels this year and we may require between 15,000 and 20,000 more.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What is the total capacity?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One hundred thousand bushels.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): And it is proposed to lease the remaining capacity?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I consider this a good move but it should be undertaken by the provincial government. I konw that in the eastern provinces the seed cleaning plants have been aided with provincial money, and I am at a loss to know why the provinces which have helped seed cleaning plants should be asked to contribute towards a seed cleaning plant for Saskatchewan or for the three prairie provinces. The hon. member for Pontiac suggests that there is need of stimulation along certain lines in Saskatchewan. I notice that a part of the vote goes to fertilizer control. What is the nature of that control, what is the number of inspectors, and so forth?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps I might make a few observations regarding the necessity for better seed throughout Canada as well as in the west. During the war there was a good deal of laxity in the matter of quality of production. The demand abroad for food of all kinds, including meats, was so keen that almost annything went, with the result that bacon, for instance, deteriorated. The same was true of many of the other farm products, among others grain; because grain was grain and, as I say, everything seemed to go. Shortly after the war, however, an agitation began, to get back once more to quality, and this department, before I became minister, initiated a policy in that direction, in order to place production on a quality basis. And the quality of seed was taken into consideration. We instituted four or five years ago a policy which did not require any particular additional expenditure, except for the conversion to this special purpose of the subventions which had been given to seed exhibitions in the past. Wherever it was desired to have a seed cleaning plant in lieu of the seed grant for exhibition purposes, we established these small cleaning plants. This was done right across Canada from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island. There are eight or ten of these plants assisted in various ways in Ontario—small plants costing from $1,000 to $1,500 apiece. There is also one in Prince Edward Island, and there is another in British Columbia. Let me try to show how general was the demand that someone should take a forward step of this kind. After all the foundation of satisfactory cereals lies in the improvement of seed: like begets like, other things being equal. With that principle in mind, the people throughout the country who were either actively engaged in the business or who were looking on interestedly, realizing the importance of the matter, have been passing resolutions urging the desirability of such action. For example, the National Research Council of Canada recently passed a resolution recommending the establishment of seed warehouses for collecting and distributing seed of approved varieties. This resolution states that undoubtedly the use of good seed would go further than any other single factor in improving the quality of the wheat crop. And the agriculture committee of this house, at page 7 of their report last year, made this recommendation:

> In order that the high quality of our export wheat be maintained, and in order to discourage, as far as possible, the growth of undesirable varieties of wheat, we would urge that one or more seed warehouses be established for the purpose of collecting and distributing seed of approved varieties, and that an experimental flour mill of sufficient size be established in order that experimental work in milling and baking may be conducted on a scale that will give results in line with those obtained in commercial mills.

Part of that recommendation is carried out under this vote; the first step in carrying out that recommendation is this $150,000 which is not a grant, as my hon. friend stated, but which is desired in order to construct a government seed warehouse for cleaning and storing seed grain, so that when large volumes of seed which have been held by farmers who cannot afford to hold it over to spring is being sold, it may be retained by these seed associations in the accommodation we will supply. That has been an important question in the west for fifteen years. The management of the old cooperative elevator at Regina was requested many times to adopt a policy of this kind but they thought they should confine themselves to commercial grain only, and so far as I know this is the first step to be taken in the way of a general policy of this nature. We have taken care of the requirements of eastern Canada by the arrangement with the small plants to which I have referred.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I suppose the title to this building will always remain in the crown?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and the title to the site as well.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is the business of this warehouse limited to registered or approved seeds?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As far as Saskatchewan is concerned it is limited to registered and certified seeds, but conditions may be different in the other two provinces, and I am told that they may require high class commercial seeds to be handled as well. We will vary these services to suit the requirements of the different provinces.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it the idea that this will be the one distributing centre for the three provinces?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we are prepared to render the same assistance to the other two provinces as soon as they are prepared to make use of this service. Then I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Dufferin-Simcoe that in a return made this year to the hon. member for Maple Creek, in which he asked by what amount the revenue obtained from the administration of the Grain Act exceeded the expenditure in each year, or in other words how much the amount collected in fees exceeded the amount required to administer the act, the answer made by the Department of Trade and Commerce was as follows:

1925-26	$1,083,679
1926-27	573,287
1927-28	625,043
1928-29	672,180

That makes a total of over $2,700,000 collected in fees for weighing and grading in excess of what it cost to administer the act. Having regard to the fact that this large amount of money was levied on the farmers and went into the general revenue, surely it is not too much to spend $150,000 and then charge them interest on their own money. So the committee will see that this is not a proposition which will do any harm; we are simply using part of these revenues to put up a government plant which will be retained in the name of the crown so that supervision may be exercised by whoever occupies the position of Minister of Agriculture in years to come, in order to see that the proper kind of grain is used in these seed houses, and that spurious seeds are not taken in and good seeds contaminated, in order to protect the seed of the whole country from contamination. It is a well recognized fact that Canada's wheat is gradually deteriorating in the markets of the world, and in view of that fact some such step as this is imperative.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not know whether the minister is trying to block his own estimates, but I should like to ask him if any part of this building has been constructed as yet?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are the plans prepared?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And the ground purchased?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The ground was transferred to the government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister says, "Look at us; see what we have done. We have collected over $2,000,000 of a surplus under the Grain Act and we are going to spend some of it in this way." By looking at the minister's estimates it will be seen that he is spending it all right; he is a wonderful spender. He says, "Oh, I propose to spend only $150,000 on this enterprise," but I want to point out to the minister that every province in Canada is looking after its own seed grain as far as the cleaning is concerned. Now the minister proposes to go into an enterprise which will compete with private firms in that line.

Mr. DONNELLY: Does the federal government not pay to the province of Ontario a certain amount for the seed houses in this province?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is so, and we do that also in the maritime provinces and in British Columbia.

Mr. DONNELLY: Has the Department of Trade and Commerce any authority to collect from the farmers of western Canada over $2,500,000 more than they really need? As I read the statutes, the Department of Trade and Commerce is supposed to collect only enough to pay for the cost of weighing and inspecting the wheat, but I believe that during the last few years they have collected more than they require. What is their authority for doing so?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The fee is $1 per car for grading and inspection, and $1 for weighing, making a total of $2 per car. The volume of wheat has increased enormously and the revenues have been suddenly inflated; the larger volume of grain has been more economically handled, and therefore the fee of $2 which was about right formerly is now found to produce a surplus.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister tell us—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I was following the question just answered by the minister.

Mr. BANCROFT: I would like to bring to the attention of the minister the need of some regulation and control over the sale of binder twine in this country, and I bring it up under this item—seed, feed and fertilizer control—because the inspection of binder twine is administered by the seed branch of the Department of Agriculture.

I wish to take a few moments, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this matter of binder twine, which is sold in Canada in bales which weigh 50 pounds gross or 48 pounds net. The farmer pays for fifty pounds of twine or the gross weight of the bale. The twine is labelled 500 feet, 550 feet, 600 feet or 650 feet per pound. The 600-foot per pound twine is the twine which is most commonly used in western Canada. A farmer can easily detect short weight in his twine because he can check that quite easily, but he cannot detect short length. To check the twine for length it would be necessary to unwind the whole bale. A bale weighing 48 pounds of 600-foot twine should measure 28,800 feet, or about 5½ miles of twine. Once the twine is unwound it cannot be used for harvesting purposes, therefore the farmer should be safeguarded against short-length twine by the provisions of the act under which the sale of binder twine is regulated. The present Inspection and Sale Act of 1906—there has been nothing done since 1906, Mr. Chairman, and since then there has been a great increase in the consumption—does not provide the proper safeguards in this matter I would like to read a few sections of this act which regulates the sale and inspection. Section 347 reads as follows:

[Mr. Donnelly.]

> Upon or attached to every ball of binder twine sold or offered for sale in Canada there shall be a label with the name of the dealer and the number of feet of twine per pound in the ball marked or stamped thereon.

Section 352 reads as follows:

> Every dealer who sells, offers for sale or has in his possession for sale in Canada any ball of binder twine not properly and correctly labelled with the number of feet per pound in the ball, as required by this part, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one dollar and not more than five dollars for each ball of such binder twine—

This is the important part of this section:

> —provided, that no deficiency in the number of feet of twine contained in any ball shall be deemed to be a contravention of this section unless the deficiency exceeds five per centum of the length indicated by the label.

Section 347 provides for the tag to be attached to each ball, which tag shall state the number of feet in each pound of twine. Section 352 provides that no twine shall be deemed to be short unless the shortage exceeds five per cent of the length indicated on the label. These are the only provisions in the act to safeguard against short-length twine. There is no provision in the act regarding the tensile strength of twine and no provision for the checking of salvaged or reconditioned twine. It is true that the inspectors in the seed branch of the Department of Agriculture have done splendid work in checking the binder twine offered for sale in Canada, yet their effectiveness is limited by the inadequate act under which they operate. The act states that binder twine can be five per cent short of the length indicated on the tag and still be legal, and that provision makes possible a systematic shortage. Take a bale of binder twine labelled 600 feet per pound, containing forty-eight pounds net of twine; it should measure 28,800 feet per bale, but the five per cent leeway allowed under section 347 amounts to 1,440 feet, so the manufacturer could sell a bale labelled 28,800 feet, which might contain only 27,360 feet, and which would still be legal under the present act. A farmer purchasing five hundred pounds of 600-foot twine which measured just up to the minimum required by the act would be paying for 288,000 feet and would be receiving only 273,600 feet; he would be 14,400 feet or nearly three miles short.

I went to a few hon. members of this house to inquire as to their purchases of binder twine.

I went to the Minister of Immigration and I learned that his annual purchase of binder twine amounts to 1,500 pounds of 600-foot twine. The hon. minister believes that he is purchasing 28,800 feet of twine in every bale, but if the manufacturer takes advantage of the five per cent leeway allowed under the present act, the purchase would be 43,200 feet or more than eight miles short in the 1,500 pounds. I went to the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance)—who has moved back to this side of the house—and found that his annual purchase amounts to 1,300 pounds of 600-foot twine; his shortage would amount to over seven miles if the manufacturer took advantage of the leeway allowed under the present act. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Steedsman) has an annual purchase of 1,000 pounds, and his shortage would amount to 28,800 feet, or nearly 5½ miles. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) has an annual purchase of 1,000 pounds, and his shortage would be the same. The hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Milne) has an annual purchase of 600 pounds of 600-foot twine, and his shortage would amount to 17,280 feet, or nearly 3⅓ miles.

The various brands of binder twine offered for sale in Canada each year are checked by the government inspectors and by some branches of the organized farmers. Those inspections show that some firms put out twine which measures well up to the standard, while others seem to be trying to keep just to the five per cent shortage allowed by the act. I have a few figures which I would like to give, taken from some of the inspections.

Ten bales of binder twine labelled 550 feet per pound, or 522½ feet of minimum length allowed under the present act, measured as follows: 507, 528, 554, 559, 594, 518, 550, 555, 560, 597. This was a good lot of twine; there were three short, one correct and six overlength; the average was well above the lengths stated on the tags.

Here is another lot of 24 bales of another brand, labelled 550 feet per pound, and which measured as follows: 505, 517, 524, 528, 510, 522, 525, 531, 534, 538, 541, 548, 550, 556, 531, 533, 538, 541, 543, 550, 551, 560, 558, 578.

An hon. MEMBER: Take it as read.

Mr. BANCROFT: This is a very poor lot; of the 24 bales, two were the correct length, five were overlength and eighteen were short.

Mr. ROWE: Give it to Hansard.

Mr. BANCROFT: Here is another lot of thirteen bales, labelled 600 feet per pound, and which measured: 556, 563, 572, 572, 596, 613, 557, 568, 572, 576, 609. The minimum length allowed by law, as the leeway is 5 per cent, is 570 feet. Two of these bales were overlength and eleven were short.

I have two more measurements which I would like to give. Ten bales of twine, labelled 550 feet per pound, or 522½ feet minimum length allowed under the present act, measured out as follows: 507, 518, 528, 550, 554, 555, 559, 560, 594, 597.

This is an exceptionally good lot. Three were short, one correct and six overlength. Another lot of nine bales, labelled 600 feet per pound, measured out as follows: 565, 577, 600, 600, 605, 613, 613, 616, 625.

This was an exceptionally good lot. There were two short, two correct, and five overlength.

Mr. ROWE: Are these mostly from the United States?

Mr. BANCROFT: We have a very small importation of binder twine from the United States. These figures show that the binder twine sold in Canada varies greatly in the mater of length. If we take one bale of 550-foot twine mentioned in one of these inspections, this bale measured out 505 feet to the pound. This 48-pound bale was 2,160 feet shorter than the length stated on the tag. This bale was found to average 505 feet per pound, or 45 feet short on each pound in the bale. It takes two feet of twine to bind a sheaf of grain. This particular bale tied 1,080 fewer sheaves than it would have tied had it contained the full length stated on the tag. Probably because of the leeway allowed under the present act, the method of measuring binder twine as it is being wound into balls, is the worst hit-and-miss business you ever saw. In fact, it is not measured at all. The twine is wound into balls on rapidly revolving spindles. When the ball attains a certain size, it is shoved off the spindle automatically and a new ball is commenced in its place. I would suggest that each bale of binder twine offered for sale in Canada should carry a label stating the number of feet of twine contained in the bale. That is, a bale containing 48 pounds net of 600-foot twine, would be labelled "This bale contains 28,800 feet of binder twine." No leeway should be allowed. The manufacturers can, if they find it necessary, attach measuring devices on twine machines.

Proof that the 5 per cent leeway is not necessary is found in the advertisements of some of the binder twine manufacturers. I have two advertisements under my hand. This advertisement of a certain company reads:

This harvester twine is guaranteed for length, strength and weight—the ball of standard manila must contain at least 4,400 feet of twine.

That is the 550-foot twine.

If you buy a "cut-price" ball and it falls only 50 feet short of this standard, the shortage means 25 bundles that must be bound out of the next ball. In such a case, each succeeding ball assumes an additional handicap of 25 bundles. This handicap amounts to 150 bundles by the time you have used a single bale of twine.

Another large binder twine concern in Canada, speaking of their particular 600-foot twine, say:

It is the only twine which is guaranteed 28,800 feet per bale.

All we ask is a guarantee of the number of feet of twine in the bale. The act should also prohibit the sale of binder twine that has a tensile strength of less than 60 pounds.

Another safeguard which should be in the act is to provide for government supervision in all cases where binder twine is salvaged and reconditioned. I have under my hand an instance of some salvaged binder twine which was reconditioned, rewound and offered for sale in western Canada two years ago. This twine was being offered for sale at about two cents per pound below the market price. Twelve bales of this were purchased and weighed. This twine was being sold as 50-pound bales gross weight or 48 pounds net. These bales were weighed by three men, each of whom made an affidavit as to the accuracy of these figures. The gross weights of these twelve bales were as follows:

Pounds	Pounds	Pounds	Pounds
41½	41½	42	42½
42½	43	44	41
41	44	41½	43½

I would suggest that anyone desiring to salvage or recondition binder twine must apply to the minister for authority to do so.

These are the main items that, I think, are needed in an act to control the inspection and sale of binder twine in this country. I know the minister and his departmental officials have been working in this matter, and I hope the minister is in a position to-night to state to the committee that a bill will be brought down that will properly safeguard the farmers in the purchase of binder twine.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Selkirk is to be congratulated upon the perseverance with which he has pressed this matter on the attention of the department. I have a bill now ready, and I propose to submit it to my colleagues. If it is favourable to the house, it will then be submitted to the committee on agriculture where the whole question can be thoroughly threshed out.

[Mr. Bancroft.]

Mr. EVANS: I have one more word to say regarding the seed house at Moose Jaw. I am in complete accord with the proposition that a grant should be made for it. I am not in accord with the method of help that the government is giving to this scheme. The minister has already quoted the fact that the co-operative elevator of Saskatchewan was a success. It was a success for the simple reason that the ultimate ownership of that scheme came into the hands of the farmers themselves under a cooperative plan. I would like to see the government give us the help that is needed to establish the house, but instead of a rent, they should strike a number of years in which the whole sum to the government could be paid back with interest and the ultimate ownership should be vested in the cooperative company of farmers themselves. This is the only way in which it can succeed, and when I say this I have in mind other institutions which have been established on a plan similar to that on which we are now thinking of establishing this one, and which have failed. There is no other way, to my mind, to give us the help we need in this matter than a purely cooperative plan.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Earlier in the evening I asked about the number of inspectors that were engaged in fertilizer control, and I have not yet been able to secure an answer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The services that are supplied by this branch cover seed, feed, fertilizer, hay, pests, poisons, binder twine. There are thirty-seven in all.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): How many on fertilizer alone?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are all qualified to perform any of these services, and they do so as the work fits in.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Has the minister found any violations of the act of late years?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, every time any restriction is imposed upon the public there are always violations of such acts. After the first six months or a year of operation, we endeavour to see that they do not get away with such violations without prosecutions being instituted.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I am in sympathy with the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk and I appreciate the sympathetic hearing that was given to him by the minister. This inspection might well be extended into other fields. I have in mind at the present time the steel products which are used by farmers for roofing and siding on farm buildings. Anyone driving through Ontario or the eastern provinces must have been struck by the fact that steel roofs that have been on a few years become rusty. There is a great loss to the farmers because these products are not made up to a certain standard. I just throw out the suggestion that this matter might be well looked into, as well as binder twine. I have had it drawn to my attention by many individual farmers and by agricultural representatives throughout Ontario that it is desirable that steps be taken to see that steel products are manufactured to a certain standard, and that they are properly galvanized.

Item agreed to.

For experiments in dehydration of fruits and vegetables, $29,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I notice that there has been an increase in this watered stock. I would like to know something about it.

Mr. McRAE: If we cut out the importation of some of the American fruits and vegetables we should not need so much dehydrated fruit, and the vote would be less.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Is not this a provincial responsibility? We were told a little while ago what Ontario was doing in connection with its seed. I think this is something that the fruit-growing provinces ought to do for their own industry.

Item agreed to.

Live stock, including grants to exhibitions, feeder shows, etc., $1,530,000.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Why is there an increase of $50,000 in this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The work of the live stock branch and of the exhibition branch is constantly increasing. We have a large chain of exhibitions across Canada that seem to require greater expenditure to take care of them. We are continuing the class B fairs. The committee will remember that we discussed them last year. Part of this increase is due to the continuation of the twenty-two class B fairs. We are also giving assistance to various exhibitions in connection with their winter fairs.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The grants to the class B fairs will be continued?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, to those already established.

Mr. TUMMON: Last year the minister practically gave the house to understand that the grants to class B fairs would be discontinued, and for that reason a number of us who have class B fairs in our constituencies did not press for grants, but towards the end of the session in reply to a question by the hon. member for Argenteuil the minister said that he would reconsider the matter. I belive the grants to the class B fairs have been paid during the past year. There are perhaps six fairs in Ontario that come within class B—Kingston, Belleville, Stratford, Peterborough, Lindsay, Renfrew. Of those six I think only Peterborough receives a grant. I submit that the other class B fairs are just as much entitled to the grant as Peterborough. It would save a lot of discussion if the minister would just say that he would treat all these class B fairs alike.

Mr. McRAE: Is the grant distributed with any regard to the percentage of population in the various provinces?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are trying to equalize it and have done so to some extent, but it is very difficult. For instance, no matter how you try to equalize it, Ontario gets the most because of the Toronto fair. That really does not belong to the province but is for the entire Dominion. Nevertheless, every province persists in pointing to Ontario and saying: Look at what Ontario is getting. I did take the stand last year as indicated by my hon. friend, but the government reconsidered the matter in view of the very strong feeling that seemed to exist especially in the prairie provinces. They seemed to take the ground that once a B fair always a B fair, so we considered it advisable to continue the grants to these B fairs, holding them down to the present incorporated institutions.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: How much are you giving them this year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The same as last year, $1,500.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): We did expect that the minister would keep his word. We did not press the matter any further when he said last year that he would not continue the grants. Then he went west on a trip and afterwards changed his mind. It has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction throughout Ontario that notwithstanding the minister's statement he has carried on the policy that he affirmed he was going to discontinue. Further, when the minister says that Ontario is getting the largest grant, there is the fact that one place in Ontario gets the most of it and many other fairs receive nothing. The minister must admit that that policy cannot continue and that he must treat all alike. I think that in all he does he looks at things in a reasonable way, but there is no reason of any sort in a policy under which you give a grant to one class B fair and nothing to five or six other class B fairs. I ask the minister now if he cannot see that his policy is causing a great deal of dissatisfaction. All the rural population feel there is an injustice in this treatment, and I hope the minister will now say, "We will treat you all alike."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If we give to this and that fair we shall not be able to stop until we have covered every little hamlet in the Dominion.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the minister lays down a certain policy of course he will treat all alike so long as they fulfil the requirements of that policy. I am only asking the minister to establish such a policy.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend has made such a courteous representation that I will give it full consideration during the recess.

Mr. McRAE: In view of what the minister has said, will he kindly go back a step and tell me that the fair associations in my province of British Columbia may expect their proportion of this appropriation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Since my hon. friend inquired into this matter we have made a business arrangement with the city of Vancouver for the construction of a winter fair building on the same terms as in Ottawa and elsewhere.

Mr. SPENCER: I congratulate the minister on continuing the grants to these B fairs. I feel they have done a great deal of good. As one of those who appealed to him to do this I am very glad to hear his decision.

M. LUCHKOVICH: I think the grants should be given to the B class fairs because they deserve them. In my opinion these fairs are doing more to encourage agriculture than the A class. How long are these grants to be continued?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not likely to make any particular effort in the near future to discontinue them after the experience I had last year.

Mr. ROWE: How much of this vote goes to the Canadian national exhibition?

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The regular grant of $5,000.

Mr. ROWE: The construction of a very important building in the Canadian national exhibition grounds is being held up because of certain action by the minister's department. I think he will agree with me that the Canadian national exhibition plays a much more important part in the agricultural life of this country than probably any other fair throughout the Dominion. Since its establishment the attendance has grown from 100,000 to over 2,000,000. Every province is represented there. It has been truly termed the "show window of the nation." The minister would have been well supported by all sections of the house had he granted the request of the exhibition board for a substantial contribution towards the new live stock building. The very fact that the imperial government have spent over $90,000 on fixtures for the British Empire marketing building in the grounds shows their appreciation of the value of the exhibition for British Empire trade.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And for Canadian trade.

Mr. ROWE: Yes. Hon. members on the other side may say that the exhibition is of great benefit to the city of Toronto, but I would point out that the 350 acres forming the exhibition grounds are exempt from civic taxation. The minister knows what the city contributes towards this great enterprise, which I submit, is truly the greatest advertising agency we have in the Dominion. I have no hesitation in saying that the Canadian national exhibition does more to develop empire trade than any other organization in this country. The minister might well have included at least that small grant of $17,000 to supplement the city of Toronto's and Ontario's grant. I should think the committee would approve of the inclusion in the estimates of this sum, or if it is not in the estimates then the amount should be taken from some other vote, for the Canadian national exhibition. I do not consider it a provincial or an Ontario fair; it is a Canadian fair and is advertising Canada to-day just as much as any other enterprise in the Dominion.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I must congratulate the hon. member on his loyalty to his fair and to his province. But I would ask him this question: Has he ever seen the Calgary stampede?

Mr. ROWE: I saw it in Calgary and also on the Canadian national exhibition grounds, and it was only a minor event in comparison to the Canadian national exhibition.

Mr. LADNER: The world's poultry congress is to be held in London next year. Canada occupies a particularly prominent place in that coming event by reason of the fact that one of her highest and best officials, Mr. F. C. Elford, is president of the congress. He is a gentleman with a high reputation and is internationally known. In view of the fact that this exhibition is held once in three years, and considering the rapid development of the poultry business in Canada and its extension to foreign markets, is provision being made in these estimates for Canada's participation in the congress?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the supplementaries there is $25,000 for the purpose.

Mr. KENNEDY: Does the minister's department control the regulations in regard to the grading of meats?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: What progress have we made in Canada in the grading of meats for home consumption, including beef, pork, mutton and lamb?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have regulations only with regard to beef and poultry. The positions of graders of beef have recently been advertised and are now under consideration by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. KENNEDY: The department has spent a good deal of money to encourage the production of lamb in Canada and has carried on strenuous progaganda to keep up quality. But we are permitting New Zealand mutton—old bucks I believe—to come into Canada for sale all over the country as lamb. What on earth is the use of spending government money to encourage farmers to produce lamb when we allow mutton to come in from New Zealand and be sold throughout the country as lamb? This at once spoils the market for the article which you are encouraging the farmers to produce. I think it is foolish. We ought to have a grading system which will protect the consumer against exploitation in this regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have given more attention in Canada to the grading system than anywhere else on this continent and I think we might try it out on beef on the voluntary basis before beginning with lamb—even the old fashioned lamb my hon. friend refers to. The United States has tried the system but it is nothing to write home about. I think, however, that if we in Canada persevere to the end we shall succeed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How long have the voluntary grading resolutions been in force?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As regards beef, the regulations have just been gazetted and the advertisements for graders have been only recently completed. The matter is now before the Civil Service Commission and until we have the graders appointed we cannot consider the act in force.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the minister anticipate that the butchers are going to ask him to send his inspectors to stamp their meat?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They will ask the department to have their beef graded. The regulations apply only to the abattoirs, who have already had several conferences with the beef grading committee which has travelled throughout the country for the last twelve months, and they have agreed to cooperate with us in a voluntary way.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is there any constitutional difficulty in the matter of beef grading so far as the provincial governments are concerned?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have no difficulty, and in any case the provinces have passed the necessary concurrent legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY: If the department can prevent mutton being sold as lamb they should take steps in the matter at once.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I appreciate my hon. friend's support of the general policy of meat grading. We are now at the stage where home consumption is satisfied by home production, and we intend to try out the system with beef before applying it to lamb. We have had a number of representations, and I expect to go to the Pacific during July, when I shall make diligent inquiries into the desirability of pursuing the grading system further in the direction indicated.

Mr. ROWE: Does the minister propose to make to the Canadian national exhibition the grant I suggest? The exhibition is worth more than $5,000, especially when they are putting up a building of such magnitude as the one I have mentioned. The Canadian national exhibition contributes $36,000 annually in floor space to the British Empire marketing board and when it can do that surely it is only reasonable that this government should give that fair $17,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I find myself very much in sympathy with my hon. friend's representations, but I think he and I could make better progress if we did not say so much about it to the house.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask the minister if his department is responsible for the health of the animals imported into Canada?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, certainly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And I understand there is quite an expensive quarantine establishment maintained?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): With very efficient officers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I hope so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The point I want to get at is that the minister is taking all possible precautions to prevent diseased animals and animals likely to be diseased from coming into contact with our own animals?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I would like to know why this department has seen fit to deduct $10 per head from the remuneration or damage paid the farmers who have had imported hogs slaughtered for hog cholera. Perhaps I had better put it this way: It has been brought to my attention that at least in the province of Alberta several farmers were induced to import some Chester white hogs. An active campaign was carried on by the importers and by the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture to prevent the farmers from importing those hogs, but in spite of the information they received they did import them. This importation could be made only through the quarantine station and after the officers undertook to see, as far as they could, that the farmer and the country were protected from any possible contact with hog cholera. The Chester whites came in; they were in quarantine; they passed quarantine and they went out to the farmers. Possibly as a result of the importation of those hogs, and possibly because of some other reasons, hog cholera broke out and many herds were slaughtered. The farmers were to be paid a certain amount of money, about 75 per cent of the value of the animals, but in the case of the Chester whites the department saw fit to deduct $10 per head in addition, so that instead of the farmers receiving 75 per cent of the value of the hogs they received 75 per cent less $10 per head.

The shocking thing about it is that when I wrote the department protesting against this deduction of $10, the reply from the department under date of May 8 advises me that it is true that the Department of Agriculture is responsible for letting these hogs into Canada; they admit responsibility, but say that the hogs were permitted entry only after the quarantine period. That is all the more damaging to the department. The officers of the department examined these hogs thoroughly, or at least they had every opportunity to do so; at all events these hogs spread hog cholera and now the farmers concerned are penalized in this way; they are stung twice, first on the Chester whites as breeding stock and then by the fact that they were disease carriers. The department comes along and deducts $10 per head from their remuneration. I cannot understand that, and I want the minister to let the committee know just why the department has taken this unfair advantage of these farmers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Both the Department of Agriculture at Edmonton and the federal department did everything the law allowed them to do to exclude these animals altogether. They were quarantined at the point of entry, as my hon. friend indicated, but evidently the signs of the disease were not distinguishable at the time of the quarantine. We have a working arrangement with the United States under which they recognize our certificates of cleanliness and we recognize their certificates on all animals, but apparently in this instance some of these certificates have not been absolutely reliable. I can assure my hon. friend that if I had had any kind of weapon with which to keep out these hogs they never would have entered Canada, but my hon. friend must remember that once a minister begins to exclude animals from the United States there is always the suspicion that he is doing so to protect the home market.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not protesting against the minister's action in quarantining the hogs or trying to keep them out; I think he acted wisely, but why penalize the farmers $10 per head extra?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This matter has not been brought to my attention until now, to my recollection; the outbreak occurred when I was absent from Canada, and since then we have been fairly busy. I will make inquiries into the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is not good enough. Here is a farmer who is entitled by law to 75 per cent of the value of the animals slaughtered. The department is supposed to protect him against the introduction of diseased animals, but failed to do so. I am not blaming the department; accidents will happen, but as a matter of fact the department did fail. The farmer was not only stung with these hogs as breeding stock but, after the department's failure, he is penalized another $10 per head. That is absolutely unfair; under the law the farmer is entitled to the whole 75 per cent of the value of the animals slaughtered, and as representing the interests of these men I must insist on that 75 per cent being paid in full. The department has no legal right to deduct an additional $10 per head; that is a clear swindle on the farmers who are concerned in this matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend has not the right angle on this question. I understand the situation now better than I did when my hon. friend introduced it, and under the law the minister may or may not pay compensation. We may exercise our discretionary power in that matter, and if there are any peculiar or exceptional circumstances under which this contagion broke out, indicating that the farmers were responsible for it—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But the farmers were not responsible for it. What chance has a farmer to inspect hogs in quarantine?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the farmers had not bit so freely when they were exploited by the men who imported the animals there would have been no difficulty. I would have liked to stop these men from buying the animals, but there was no provision by which I could save them from themselves. This expense was loaded on the country as a result of the importations; if there had been no importation there would have been no trouble, but the farmers insisted on buying these hogs against the advice of all the officials. They brought the animals in; they were primarily responsible for the introduction of the disease, and the officers of the department considered themselves justified in withholding a portion of the compensation in order to indicate that farmers always run a risk when they import animals of that description against the advice of the provincial and federal officials.

Mr. SPENCER: It seems to me that the Department of Agriculture could have prohibited these hogs from being brought in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How?

Mr. SPENCER: If they are allowed to come in under proper inspection then there should be some responsibility upon the government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the hon. member will agree to give the department the authority to exclude animals which are under suspicion I can assure him that I will be delighted to take the initiative in asking for that authority by way of legislation or regulation. At the present time I do not think we have the regulative powers to do it; there is no law that I know of upon which regulation could be based. I feel now and I felt then that the goverment of the day should have the authority to exclude suspected animals coming from a country which was filled with hog cholera. But if I had taken that action I know the attitude which would have been taken by many hon. members in this house; they would have opposed it upon the ground that there was an element of protection introduced by the exclusion of animals under the guise of trying to keep out suspected animals. Section 6, as amended, reads:

> The minister may order compensation to be paid to the owners of animals slaughtered under the provisions of this act.

It is entirely optional and sometimes we exercise that option. I am open to further information on this point. I think that the officers were justified in only allowing part compensation to the farmers who were responsible for bringing in these diseased animals from the United States.

Mr. SPENCER: Were the purchasers of these hogs notified that they would be penalized, as it were, if hog cholera were found? If it was intended that an extra charge should be made, I think it would have been only fair that these farmers should have been notified.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is enough in my hon. friend's contention to justify my reviewing the case. My officers are very careful in deciding a matter of this kind and I am disposed to take their finding until I have further evidence placed before me that it is wrong.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very glad that the minister has taken this attitude. I think he realizes the hardship imposed upon these men. They are not rich men and they cannot afford these losses. They have had to wait a long time for their payment, and they are asking for interest. They have had to go to the bank and borrow money, not on the $10, but on other moneys due them; they had to borrow money to carry on their spring work instead of being able to carry on with the indemnity from the department. They have suffered a heavy string of hardships throughout this whole matter, and I hope the minister will reconsider the whole question. When the minister suggests the meaning of the word "may", I would refer him to his hon. friend the Minister of Justice from whom he will probably get the information that in most of these cases the "may" is taken as an imperative; that is, it shall be paid. It is not used in the ordinary colloquial way. I have not read the section but I presume that the "may" is not altogether discretionary; it may be, but I would like the minister to look into it. I wish to put a letter on record so that the minister will have it before him when he is considering this case. I protested to the department because of this reduction, and I received the following reply, dated May 8:

> I have your letter of the 6th instant, with reference to the Chester white hogs imported and subsequently slaughtered suffering from hog cholera, and in this connection I would advise you that it is true that the Department of Agriculture is responsible for letting these pigs in, but they were permitted entry only after all the quarantine period which the law allows had been served. That is, they were kept in quarantine for thirty days after entry—

And yet the department did not find a trace of hog cholera. The letter continues:

> —and were released on a certificate from United States veterinary officers stating that they had come from a herd which had not been serum treated, and they had not been in contact with any herd in which hog cholera had been present six months prior to entry. Consequently, this department did all it could to protect the health of our Canadian live stock in this particular matter.

Apparently they failed in this case. The letter continues:

> The trouble is that the pigs were sold to Canadians by a bunch of sharpers—not to use any stronger term—who apparently found some way of deceiving the United States officers, and in getting certificates which apparently were quite in order. These imported hogs were sold to our Canadian farmers in face of all the information given to them about the breed of pigs that should be used in Canada to get the best results, and in face of the strongest representations of our federal officers and, I believe, of the provincial officers as well.

On that point Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the department and to the minister that very frequently there are others besides farmers who are stung by sharpers once in a while; even the department has been stung at times. That is no legitimate reason why the farmers should be refused their fair compensation. The letter continues:

> The farmers were deluded into these transactions by the hope of extraordinary gains. For instance, they were told by the agents of the United States company selling these pigs that "all their sow pigs from the first two litters would be bought at a stated price—$25 at that time, provided they weighted 125-135 pounds at six months and met the standard of the open gilt sold the farmer." We think that this is one of the reasons why farmers were induced to act against the well-known recommendations both of the provincial and federal departments of agriculture. They were also warned of the risk of the introduction of disease.
>
> We put the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on the track of these agents, and finally the traffic was stopped, due partly to the fact that the dealers did not live up to the promise of taking the young pigs off the hands of the farmers, and partly because we made things so hot for them that they desisted.
>
> Under the circumstances I felt that we could not justify anything in the way of paying for these imported pigs at the expense of the country which had already suffered so much on account of the introduction of disease due to the persistence of these farmers in acting contrary to the recommendations of both departments. So far as the law is concerned, we could, of course, pay for these hogs, but I am still of the opinion that we should not do so.
>
> Yours very truly,
> J. H. Grisdale,
> Deputy Minister.

While some blame may be attached to the farmers for acting as they did, we must admit that even the minister himself sometimes acts contrary to the advice of his own officers, and very properly so. For some reason or other the farmers thought that they were in for a killing; they were, but it was not the kind of killing they expected. Under all the circumstances, I hope the minister will give consideration to these men and allow the additional $10 per head.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wish to assure the hon. member for Bow River that I had no desire to be harsh with these farmers who were misguided, or who exercised the wrong judgment in this matter. As my hon. friend says, we are all disposed to do that; if we deprive everyone in the world of the initiative to do right or wrong we would soon have a breed of people who would not be worth their salt. While I am open to further information I am closed to importunity, but we would need a little more information before we would be justified in changing the decision. I would direct the attention of my hon. friend to the section of the regulation under which the officers acted, and I think in view of the circumstances they acted quite properly. Section 2 reads in part:

Such compensation may be withheld—

I agree that sometimes "may" is not permissive, but is rather mandatory and might mean may or shall; but I do not think in this case any such discretion can be exercised in respect to the use of the word "may":

Such compensation may be withheld in whole or in part whenever the owner or the person having charge of the animal has, in the opinion of the minister, been guilty in relation to the animal of an offence against this act, or whenever the animal being a foreign one was in his judgment diseased at the time of entering Canada.

It is evident to my mind it was this latter proviso upon which the officer acted. Notwithstanding that, I have lost enough animals myself during the last almost fifty years in the west, before there was any compensation, to know exactly how a farmer feels when he finds his animals have to be slaughtered without reservation on account of any kind of contagious disease like glanders, cholera or the like. My disposition would be to err on the side of leniency if the circumstances of the case warrant that conclusion.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): In western Ontario last fall there was an outbreak of hog cholera in some of the counties such as Essex and Kent. The hogs were inspected and slaughtered. Recommendations were sent in for compensation, but this spring I received communciations from different farmers complaining that as yet they had not received compensation for the hogs. I should like to ask the minister whether all those claims have been paid?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Could some means not be provided whereby the compensation could be paid more promptly? It seems a hardship to many farmers, at a time when they are expecting this money to meet fall expenditures for taxes, payments on implements and other things, that they should lose their entire herd and then have to wait until the spring before they can receive from the department the money which is granted as compensation for losing their hogs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is the first time for many years—and we simply did not anticipate it—that we have had such a large amount of bovine tuberculosis in a certain area in the province of Quebec along the United States boundary. This ate up our money so rapidly that we ran out of funds and the payment of those overdue accounts had to be extended into the current year. The reason was an underestimate of our requirements. It was due to the fact that we had these outbreaks of hog cholera in Essex and Calgary quite beyond our anticipations. In addition to that, there was the large percentage of bovine tuberculosis that was quite beyond any of our experience during the last seven or eight years. We shall be more on our guard this year. We shall simply have to stop the work if we find that we run into an unexpected lot of diseased animals of any kind that is going to take up our money. We will simply not contract the debt and we will let the work stand until the current year comes around, rather than contract the debt and have the people complaining of not being paid. With the additional amount provided in the supplementary estimates I do not think we shall have any difficulty this year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister would be very unwise to carry out a policy of that kind and I do not think he is serious in his suggestion. If he finds an outbreak of hog cholera anywhere, I am sure he will take all necessary precautions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not mean to suggest that I would not take care of hog cholera outbreaks.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am sure the minister did not. How did the difficulty ever arise? Would it not have been possible to secure the necessary money by governor general's warrant? Has that not been done in other cases?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. gentleman is asking a rather awkward question. I had no thought of discontinuing the work in connection with any contagious disease such as has been referred to, but in the case of the large areas in which we eradicate tuberculosis, we can stop the operation of that at any time. I would not suggest not dealing with an outbreak of hog cholera. As regards governor general's warrants, the government do not like to exercise that option any more frequently than they have to.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I agree with that, but there are occasions when they have been used.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend knew how valiantly I endeavoured to meet these accounts, I do not think he would complain.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): When were the farmers recompensed for the slaughter of those hogs?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In that district they were all completed about five or six weeks ago. I think everything is cleared up in the districts that have complied with the "clean-up" conditions.

Mr. COTNAM: Under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act does the department grant remuneration to farmers who have experienced the loss of cattle suffering from hemorrhagic septicaemia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That does not come under the Health of Animals branch.

Mr. COTNAM: Is there any way whereby the department can grant remuneration in cases of that kind?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not that I know of.

Mr. KENNEDY: In regard to imports of mutton from New Zealand and elsewhere, is it possible for the Department of Agriculture to arrange that the statistics be kept in such a way that we can tell what quantity of lamb and what quantity of mutton come in? At the present time the whole thing is so jumbled up that one cannot tell what it is.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will try that out.

Item agreed to.

Health of Animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,450,000.

Mr. BARBER: I wish first to register a protest against the delaying of perhaps the most important estimate until the dying hours of the session. I want to draw to the attention of the committee what I consider a very raw deal that has been handed out to the dairymen of certain sections of the Dominion. I refer to those areas in which the department is carrying on a campaign to eradicate bovine tuberculosis. I do not think any hon. member objects to the action of the department along those lines. We want to clean this up, but the unfairness comes in when the farmers, the dairymen, are called upon to pay about 75 per cent of the cost. I have two complaints to make. The first is the compensation that is allowed, and the second is the delay in payment. As I have said, the compensation is sufficient only to compensate the man for about 25 per cent of the cost of replacement of his herd. This means that the farmers, in order to protect the consumers of milk and in the interest of the public health of the country, are contributing 75 per cent of the cost. In regard to the compensation I cannot hold the minister altogether responsible because the compensation is provided for by statute.

[Mr. B. W. Fansher.]

As perhaps hon. gentlemen are aware, a good grade cow is valued under the act at $50 and the compensation allowed is $33.33. It would cost the farmer to replace that cow to-day $125 to $150. For pure breds the maximum valuation under the act is $150, and the compensation two-thirds, or $100. As far as the Fraser valley is concerned, last year the third test was made in that district, and 286 cattle were slaughtered for which the average compensation, including pure breds, was a little over $39. This is not sufficient to enable the farmer to replace the cattle in his herd. To increase the compensation it would no doubt be necessary to amend the act. Therefore I cannot hold the minister entirely responsible for the amount of the compensation awarded, but I do hold him directly responsible for the delay in the payment of this compensation. Provision was made in the estimates last year, on the basis of the loss not being over perhaps 1½ per cent; I believe it was under that. But an estimate was made and a sum provided in the estimates. I find to-day that in respect of the cattle slaughtered last October and November the farmers of the Fraser valley were deprived for five or six months of the compensation that was awarded to the amount of $10,050.30. I consider that the minister is altogether responsible. I have under my hand a letter from a man in my district in which he says:

> It seems to be an unfortunate fact that throughout the Fraser valley district, tuberculosis is more or less prevalent. Although it is claimed that the average affected is low—ranging perhaps approximately one per cent of the total dairy cattle—yet in some sections the loss has been heavy and I know of instances in my own district (Matsqui) where some farmers have lost the greater part of their herds. One farmer has lost his entire herd. I have lost eight head out of approximately twenty. The compensation value arbitrarily placed upon these condemned cattle in my herd was $32 each. I am assuming that other owners of condemned cattle have been promised payment on a similar scale, which is approximately about twenty-five per cent of their commercial replacement value. Cattle were found to be affected by tuberculosis in the opinion of the department's veterinary inspector, and were condemned in October of last year. To date no payment has been made that I can ascertain in our district (Matsqui). It all seems manifestly unfair, particularly as in some instances where the loss of cattle has been great and the entire herd taken the farmer has been left absolutely without means to carry on because he has not the means in the absence of any remittance from the government to even partially replace his dairy herd.

I wish briefly to put this before the government: I think the compensation is too low, and in order to eradicate bovine tuberculosis we should not expect the farmer to pay 75 per cent of the cost. In addition, there is no reason whatever for the delay of five or six months in the payment of the small amount of compensation provided. In regard to my district, I charge that this amount has been transferred to meet payments in other districts. This amount was included in the estimates last year. It was the third and final test for bovine tuberculosis, and the officers of the department could estimate the losses. They knew what the probable losses would be, but over $10,000 has been held back from the farmers in my district. I think that that is very unfair, and I lodge a strong protest against the action of the minister in that regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As to this raw deal that my hon. friend speaks of, he is an hon. member who usually uses very moderate language. I would say to him that there are hon. members whose constituencies had overdue accounts ten times as large as the one he mentions, and when the circumstances were explained to them there was not a word of complaint. My hon. friend represents the beautiful valley from which the cities of New Westminster and Vancouver get nearly all their clean milk, and it was for that reason that we started a campaign early in that section to ensure to those cities the best milk supply obtainable. I would also point out that Canada gives larger compensation for this class of diseased animals that are slaughtered than any other country in the world, and 33⅓ per cent higher than is granted in the United States. I hope that such a delay in the payment of compensation will not occur again, and it probably will not because we shall have to have more leeway. I say further that there was no disposition on the part of the department or of my officials to discriminate against my hon. friend in the matter of the time when the compensation should be paid. There was only one place in connection with which we did give a preference, and that was with regard to the animals slaughtered for hog cholera. We paid the compensation in that case; we had sufficient money at the time to clean up the disease earlier in the year. The owners of these animals were peculiar sufferers, and we paid the accounts around Calgary before paying other accounts in the eastern provinces, for the reason that Alberta had the first outbreak. But there was no discrimination against my hon. friend. The amount he mentions, $10,000, was not a big amount when compared with what other parts of the country had to put up with. There was no raw deal in connection with it at all, but a good service was rendered, and the compensation was paid just as promptly as we had the money to do it.

Mr. BARBER: In regard to protecting the cities of New Westminster and Vancouver, I am not blaming the minister for that, but the figures I have given show that the farmers of the Fraser valley are paying about 75 per cent of the cost of cleaning up bovine tuberculosis.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all.

Mr. BARBER: Yes, according to the replacement value, and I consider that that is very unfair. As far as the other matter is concerned, I think the minister will agree that he knew that the third and final test was coming on in the Fraser valley and that a certain amount would be required, something like $14,000. Of that amount $4,000 was paid, and the other $10,000 was transferred to some other district.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is quite off his eggs.

Mr. COTNAM: I think the Minister of Agriculture is very fair-minded and very sympathetic. Speaking of hemorrhagic septicaemia in cattle, I would draw to his attention a case, of which he is no doubt aware, which occurred in North Renfrew about a year ago. I understand that a case of hemorrhagic septicaemia was discovered and diagnosed as such by the veterinary surgeon who was called in. Several farmers in the district became very much alarmed and asked the veterinary surgeon to inoculate their cattle against this disease, which was considered very contagious. The cattle were inoculated in good faith by the farmers of the district, but the serum was not satisfactory and many of the cattle died, in fact whole herds were wiped out. I am not blaming the veterinary surgeon, for I know he is a reputable and reliable man, nor am I blaming the firm that supplied the serum, but it was very unfortunate indeed for the farmers. I have always found the minister fair minded, and I would ask him if he cannot under the act compensate these farmers for the heavy losses they sustained, or at least make them some compassionate allowance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hemorrhagic septicaemia is not a contagious disease, nevertheless it is fatal. It can be taken care of by the farmers injecting their cattle with an immunizing vaccine. As my hon. friend indicates, we have on more than one occasion made compassionate allowances, but I would have considerable hesitation in doing so in connection with losses due to this particular disease, because we would then have to apply the same principle to losses from all diseases, whether contagious or not. This is not a contagious disease, and therefore we are not justified in dealing with it under the act. My hon. friend certainly has my compassion, but I do not know how I am going to exercise it in the way he suggests.

Mr. COTNAM: The circumstances were rather unusual in this case, because the vaccine was administered in good faith, and it is very unfortunate that these farmers in trying to protect their cattle against an outbreak of the disease should have incurred very heavy losses. I know some of them will not recover financially for several years. I would urge the minister to make some allowance to these farmers. Otherwise the case will drag on in the courts, and from what I know of the circumstances I am afraid those interested will not recover much, if anything; by way of damages.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will my hon. friend send me a communication detailing the circumstances so that we may have the matter looked into?

Mr. COTNAM: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister; I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. FRASER: Last year I put before the minister the case of an official of his department in the city of Kamloops. It was for payment for the inspection of 146 stock cars. Unfortunately I had to leave before he came to a decision. His decision was against me. I want to review the case to-night to a final conclusion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Go to the mat, as it were.

Mr. FRASER: Yes. Must I take up the time of the house to review this case? I am quite prepared to do it, but I think he is fully advised of all the circumstances. The man earned $146. Your officials are prepared to say that he performed those services and earned the money. Still you refuse to pay him. Am I to understand that you still persist in that attitude?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not reviewed the case for the last few months, but I think the man was paid a full time salary, and when he was doing this car inspection he was just simply putting in part of his day's work. If we recognized the right of any officer to be paid two salaries, one for full time and the other for extra work, we would be running into all sorts of difficulties, because an embarrassing precedent would be set. For instance, our seed branch staff of thirty-six men perform services of five or six different kinds. This man—his name is Smith, is it not?

Mr. FRASER: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Smith was given full salary as a fruit inspector, and in addition he was inspecting stock cars. Well, that was part of his day's work. When he was doing that he was not inspecting apples.

Mr. FRASER: I want to put the minister right on the statement he has made. That man never inspected one stock car during the time he was inspecting fruit cars. He put in from twelve to fourteen hours every day during the whole time he was employed in the fruit branch inspecting fruit cars, and every single stock car was inspected after hours. Does that meet the situation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Was he instructed to do so?

Mr. FRASER: He had an official appointment and was discharging the duties of that appointment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The official correspondence does not indicate that the work was done after hours. The question was raised and this is the first time we have been told that it was extra work. I do not doubt my hon. friend's statement. It is generally understood that when an officer on full time pay works out of hours he is not so well qualified for his full time pay. We were under the impression that we were paying two men, both of the name Smith, and there being as a matter of fact only one man in the case this gentleman enjoyed two salaries for a period; and having received that double salary for a while he thought he was entitled to it for good. But after we discovered that the two Mr. Smiths were in reality only one Mr. Smith we reduced the salaries to one.

Mr. FRASER: Let me state the matter further. This full time job lasted only five months, at a salary of $125 a month, making $625. The total the man earned for the two jobs was $825 a year, and out of that $825 you deduct $146. Now he earned that $146. He inspected the cars and earned the money and you have refused to pay him. Is that a fair proposition? He was engaged for five months and that engagement as junior fruit car inspector was entered into with the full concurrence of his superior officer. In the first instance he was a stock car inspector and nothing else, and when this other position was open he made application to the Civil Service Commission, who appointed him with the full knowledge of his superior officer. His total earnings, as I say, for the whole year amounted to $825 and the department has deducted $146 which it has refused to pay him for work done overtime. He discharged his duties as car inspector to the satisfaction of the department and was paid $125 a month, and after hours he inspected cars, for which work he is entitled to $146. But that is not all. Had you told the man at the end of the first month that you would not pay him, the situation would be different; but you allowed it to drag for five months and at the end of that time refused to pay him. That was the first intimation he had that he would not be paid. Now I am not making this appeal, especially at this late hour of the session, without justification. I submit that the man is entitled to this $146 and unless the minister assures me that he will be paid I will give him all the trouble I can before he gets his estimates through.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is not a Christian spirit.

Mr. McRAE: He hasn't been to church today. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FRASER: Just a moment; I have the floor. I want an answer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We have spent more than $146 since you started.

Mr. FRASER: I haven't started yet.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend isn't through yet—

Mr. FRASER: I want your answer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This matter was brought to my notice on more than one occasion and it is so complicated that I do not know whether my hon. friend's recital of it is correct or not, not having the file before me.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Give him a cheque for it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. The matter was submitted to the Civil Service Commission and they decided that we should not pay it, and we submitted it to the Justice department, whose decision was the same. Am I to override these two decisions? I thought it my duty to be guided by their advice. I asked the deputy to review the whole case and I read the whole file myself; and I asked the deputy to get an opinion from both these bodies. He did so and I have acted on their advice. We do not want to hold back money that belongs to someone; we should be delighted to pay it and be through with this fracas that has occurred every year.

Mr. FRASER: I do not question the minister's statement that the payment has been turned down by the Civil Service Commission, but this is the first time that he has given me that information.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is just this winter that both decisions have been given.

Mr. FRASER: If the minister had information of this nature he should have communicated it to me but he has not done so during this session. I have the file with all the correspondence and there is absolutely nothing on that file to indicate what the minister has just informed me. This is the third session I have been following up this matter. I had it before the minister last year when I followed it through the department from the junior officials right up to the minister. I went into the matter with the greatest care and I now tell the minister that I am convinced that this man is entitled to the money he has earned. He is entitled to the $146. I want a satisfactory assurance from the minister on this occasion.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: A cheque.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, I must have a cheque.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not intentionally hold back the information with the idea of springing it on my hon. friend in the house; not at all. I read the file last winter and asked my deputy to get a decision. But I have had a few other things to do since then and have not inquired what the decision was; I have only just now got it. The hon. member cannot therefore say that I have taken an advantage of him and sprung something to disconcert him when bringing up his case. I did not know until now what the decision was.

Mr. FRASER: If I cannot press the matter without bringing in the political end, I am prepared to bring in the political end now. I have submitted every argument and I have followed the matter with the greatest care. I do not want to make any rash statements and I wish if possible not to touch the political phase of it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is that political end?

Mr. FRASER: The minister informed me that there was no reason for the dismissal of this man except a political reason.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend must have been dreaming.

Mr. FRASER: I am not dreaming; I came to that conclusion by deducting.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER: As I say, that is what I concluded by deduction; it was not a straight statement by the minister, and I am going to tell the members of the committee exactly why the minister will not pay this man this $146.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let us have it.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, we will have it. In the first place let me tell the minister how I arrived at that conclusion. I met the minister in his office by appointment to discuss this matter, and when I went into his office I said, "Now we will have a talk about this Smith claim in Kamloops." The minister said, "Smith? Oh, yes, that is the man who was carrying your voters to the poll on election day." Is that not political?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, on his behalf.

Mr. FRASER: On your behalf. You did not get that information from me; I did not have it at the time and I did not know what the minister meant, because this man had never submitted the political part to me. When the minister made that statement I immediately wrote Smith and asked him about it. To give the committee the whole situation, I would like the committee to understand that I met Mr. Smith only once in my life, and I never knew him until he got into this trouble with the department. He is not even an acquaintance of mine. He lives in the city of Kamloops, where he was performing his duties for the department, and I have followed this matter up consistently and persistently only because he has been so unfairly dealt with in a political way.

I wrote Mr. Smith and asked for an explanation of the minister's remark. He said, "Yes, I quite realize what this means. On election day I had a lady friend working in the Kamloops hospital. It was a rainy day, and on my way to vote I called around to take this lady friend to the polling booth in my automobile. I took her there and back to the hospital. When I returned to the hospital I was met at the door by the matron, who asked me to take two patients from the hospital to the polling booth, since it was a wet day and they would not be able to get to the booths unless they were taken there. I consented and took the two ladies down to the polling booth. I did not know either of them; I had never seen them before; I asked no question about their voting or anything else. I took them down to the polling booth and I brought them back to the hospital, and unquestionably some of the zealous friends of the Liberal party observed me, a government official, twice go to the polling booth and deliver voters, and they so reported to the minister."

That is the reason underlying the refusal of the Department of Agriculture to pay this $146. I am sure the minister does not want this kind of thing to go on, after all, but the fact of the matter is this: I am convinced that he has had communications from the Liberal organization of the city of Kamloops; he has been apprised of these facts; he refuses to pay this bill and discharges the man. This man is a returned soldier with a tubercular affection; he was ordered to the hospital and did not put in a proper application for leave of absence. For that reason he was discharged from the employ of the government.

I submit with all the force at my command that it is not fair or right to discharge an official in that way, particularly a returned man who has tubercular trouble and who received only $825 per year. I want to hear what the minister has to say in this regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend has indicated that this money has been withheld because of the fact that this gentleman took a number of ladies to the polling booth. I do not know that that is such a serious offence, but I can assure my hon. friend that that was not part of the evidence upon which the Department of Justice based its decision. I do not think that information was sent to that department and I am sure the Civil Service Commission had not that information. My remark was only intended to let my hon. friend know that I had some complaints of that nature. At any rate, Mr. Smith was continued in our employ for some time after this dispute about salary.

Mr. FRASER: No, you are wrong.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what the file indicates, and he was let out finally for an entirely different reason. I have not the file here, but my recollection is that he was signing blank certificates indicating that these cars were inspected, and farming them out to a substitute, and we never knew whether or not the cars were really inspected. That was the difficulty.

Mr. FRASER: When this man was ordered to the hospital by the doctor he did ask a man to carry on his work and he did sign these blank certificates. There is no question about that; I am not disputing it, but what could the man do? Kamloops is a long way from Ottawa. If a man is ordered to the hospital by his doctor what better can he do than to put in a substitute during his absence? Let me tell the minister that the man who did the inspection while he was in the hospital had helped him in the stock car inspection previously and was acquainted with the work, so the inspection was carried on just as efficiently during his absence. I submit that this is only a paltry excuse.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then will it suit my hon. friend if I submit this question a second time to the Civil Service Commission and to the Department of Justice? We will submit all the evidence on the files and all the additional evidence my hon. friend has in his possession, and if they say I should pay this account it will be paid. Is that fair?

Mr. FRASER: This man inspected 146 cars for you, to the satisfaction of your officials. Why should that question be referred to any other body? Your own officials will certify that the work was done efficiently and this man is entitled to that $146. If it were only for one month I would not have persisted in the matter, but when you drag a man along for five months and allow him to fill a dual position I think in all fairness you should pay him without referring his account to any commission. You could put a special vote in your estimates to-night if you wanted to, and it is only fair that you should do so.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think I could do that.

Mr. FRASER: You can do anything you like in matters of this kind.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we cannot raise the amount, although I think it could be reduced. I could not override the decisions given by the commission and the Justice department. They will have to rescind their decision after hearing new evidence, before any different action can be taken.

Mr. FRASER: I quite understand the limitations imposed on the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have spent over half an hour on this item of $146. I have no doubt as to the sincerity of my hon. friend and of the minister, but if we passed to another item and allowed these two hon. gentlemen to have further conversation with respect to the particular matter under discussion, they could possibly come to some agreement.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I would like to ask—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Allow this item to stand in the meantime.

Item stands.

Pensions—To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to Mrs. Beatrice Bell, widow of the late Graham A. Bell, of an annuity at the rate of $1,750 per annum, to commence from April 1, 1929, and continue thereafter until the remarriage or death of the annuitant, $1,750.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will someone explain just why this item appears in the estimates? I would like to know what principle governs these cases.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Allow the item to stand and it can be taken up when the minister gets the information.

Pensions—to hereby provide, nothwithstanding anything contained in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to Rebecca J. Farrow, widow of the late Robinson Russell Farrow, of an annuity at the rate of $1,411.60, to commence from October 3, 1928, and to continue thereafter until the remarriage or death of the annuitant, $2,109.79.

Mr. SPENCER: Could we have some information on this item?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we had better pass to the next item and allow that one to stand.

Pensions—To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to the widow of the late Chief Justice Taschereau, of an annuity at the rate of $1,200, to commence from April 1, 1929, and to continue thereafter until the remarriage or death of the annuitant, $1,200.

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to know why it is necessary to provide for pension in a case of this kind.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is a vote to cover a pension to the widow of the late Chief Justice of Canada, who had been the Deputy Governor General and a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This case was called to my attention by various members of the house and especially by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). This lady was in difficult financial circumstances, and in consideration of the fact that her husband had served this country for so many years, parliament considered the payment of an annuity. I hesitated in recommending this because I thought it might create a precedent, but upon investigation I found that a precedent had been already created. I found that Lady Lafontaine, whose husband had been Chief Justice of the Appeal Court of Quebec, had been granted a pension. I found also that Lady Cartier had been granted a pension and so I recommended to the Minister of Finance that this item be included in the estimates.

Mr. HEAPS: What was the income of the late Chief Justice? I believe he died before the salaries were increased, and was receiving $7,000 per annum.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When did the Chief Justice die?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think it was in 1905 or 1906.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Has this pension been paid since that time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When did it commence?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is the first year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Why should it commence now?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there some special need at the present time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That has been represented to me, and I must say that the most insistent representations were made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the Minister of Justice always acquiesce in representations made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Apparently she was mistaken, for she told me that her friends would support it.

Mr. HEAPS: If any other representations are made to the hon. minister by the hon. member for Southeast Grey will he acquiesce in them?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not necessarily.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is very difficult to object to a particular item of this character, and it is next to impossible to decide wisely when we do not know the circumstances connected with the particular case. Perhaps it is not desirable that all the conditions should be revealed to the general public, but I think we are creating a very dangerous precedent when we begin to pick out certain individuals and take the public money to pay pensions to them. I do not see why one particular class of people should be considered in a different light from those in another class, or one individual be given assistance denied to another. As my hon. friend behind me suggests, if you select the widows of judges, why not the widows of former members? Why not people outside of politics altogether? In connection with the old age pensions we were very particular to insist that the beneficiaries should have their private affairs examined very carefully, and if they have any other income, that is deducted from the amount they would otherwise receive from the public funds. I do not think it is a good principle to begin to pick out this, that or the other individual who happens to have some particular friend in the government and pay them annuities out of the public funds. Probably any one case out of a thousand which might be brought here would arouse our sympathy, but I cannot support this particular case without having all the details placed before the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I desire to support what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. Anyone drawing the substantial salary of the late Chief Justice Taschereau should have provided for his widow through insurance. Most of us are forced to get along on smaller incomes than that, and we are compelled to take out the necessary insurance to provide for our wives and families. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, this is establishing a very dangerous precedent. I do not know just what representations were made to the hon. minister by the hon. member for Southeast Grey, but I know that this is the first time that he has acted in conformity with her representations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: She is not the only one who made the representations.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the minister will go through Hansard, he will find many other representations that the hon. lady member has made that are more deserving than this one, but that he and his colleagues have totally ignored, and I certainly cannot subscribe to the principle contained in this item.

Mr. HEAPS: From what the minister has said, it would appear that this lady has been a widow for about twenty-four years. This is an extraordinary procedure, to my way of thinking. After this lady has been a widow for twenty-four years, it is proposed to grant her a pension of so much per annum. If there were any necessity to give her a pension, it should have been granted immediately she became a widow, and not twenty-four years afterwards. I am inclined to think, if this matter were allowed to stand over until to-morrow, we might get a little information. We do not know the position of the lady, whether she has an income from any other source or whether she is really in need of the amount it is proposed to give her each year. I do not think the minister has given that information.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I said that this item was inserted because it was represented to me that she was in need of it.

Mr. HEAPS: I am informed—I do not know whether my information is correct or not—that there are immediate relatives of hers who are well able to take care of the lady in question, and who ought to do so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member's information is wrong.

Mr. McRAE: This is a very bad precedent to establish and I entirely agree with what has been said on this subject by other hon. members. I will move that this item of $1,200 be reduced to $1.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I desire to say that I withdraw the item.

Mr. McRAE: That is satisfactory.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I inserted it because of representations made to me by members on the other side, of both oppositions.

Mr. MANION: The minister says: "Of both oppositions". He absolutely adheres to the statement that members on our side of the house asked for this pension?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. Last year I had representations that this should be done.

Mr. MANION: From members of the Conservative party?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. However, it is dropped.

Item withdrawn.

Pensions—To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to Mrs. Beatrice Bell, widow of the late Graham A. Bell, of an annuity at the rate of $1,750 per annum, to commence from April 1, 1929, and continue thereafter until the remarriage or death of the annuitant, $1,750.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member for Peace River inquired about this. Major Bell died on January 13, 1929. Under his will, made some years earlier, his estate was left entirely in trust for his three sons and no provision was made for his widow. The late Major Bell had served the Dominion for over thirty-eight years and was eligible, in respect of length of service, for a pension of $7,000 per annum, which he could claim when he reached the age of sixty; his age at his death was fifty-four years. He had been a contributor for thirty-five years to superannuation fund No. 2, under the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act, and had contributed sums amounting to $3,510.36, which were entirely surrendered to that fund due to Major Bell's oversight to elect to transfer to superannuation fund No. 5. Had Major Bell died prior to January 1, 1925, Mrs. Bell would have been eligible, under the Widows' Annuities Act of 1927, to receive a pension of $1,750 per annum; or had Major Bell elected to transfer to superannuation fund No. 5, Mrs. Bell would also have been eligible, without any cost to Major Bell, for an annuity of $1,750.

Major Bell could, under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act of 1924, have elected to transfer from superannuation fund No. 2 to superannuation fund No. 5, and by an additional contribution equivalent to the difference between the 3½ per cent rate of contributions to fund No. 2 and the 5 per cent rate of contributions to fund No. 5, plus 4 per cent simple interest, have provided for an annuity for Mrs. Bell of $3,500. It seems reasonable to consider that Major Bell's apparent neglect to provide for Mrs. Bell must have been occasioned through his devotion to his work having kept him from giving sufficient consideration to the situation in which Mrs. Bell might be left in the event of his death. So we are giving the superannuation as if he had transferred to superannuation fund No. 5.

Mr. SPENCER: What was the estate of Major Bell when he died, and is anything being done by the sons for their mother?

Mr. ROBB: I have no information. All I am interested in is the obligation of the state to a public servant who served the public for thirty-eight years and who contributed to that superannuation fund.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Again in this case I think some of us can appreciate the sympathy extended by members of the cabinet to the widow of a colleague, and that is undoubtedly to be commended. On the other hand, it seems to me that we in this house ought to act in such a way that we can justify our action before the public at large, and that the precedent will constitute a general law. We are often accustomed to listen in this house to cheeseparing policies with regard to amounts that are to be paid to certain of the more poorly paid officials in the employ of the government. Again and again during this session I have called attention to the fact that some people in the employ of the government are receiving only $85 a month and nothing is done in the case of their widows. Nothing whatever is done should the children not be able to provide for their widowed mothers. In regard to old age pensions, if children are in a position to provide for their parents, old age pensions are not paid. I cannot see that we are justified in setting up one law for the well-to-do, the well-placed, the well-paid, and a totally different law for the poorly paid people who have no high official positions.

We are given no information at all with regard to the estate of the late Major Bell. We are told that he had quite a large estate, and that he left that estate entirely to his sons. Major Bell may have been wrapped up in his duties, as has been suggested, but surely he was very much lacking in forethought if he devoted the whole of his estate to his three sons and made no provision whatever for his wife. Further than that, while I do not know any of his three sons, or their circumstances, I cannot understand how sons who have inherited an estate from their father can leave their mother without any support whatever. The fact that they are sons of a highly respected official who served his country well does not change the situation in any degree. I cannot see that we can go on picking out here, there and yonder certain officials whose positions have enabled them to endear themselves to the public or to certain highly placed people in the government, and provide them annuities, and yet make no provision for the thousands of other government employees who, after all, in their own particular station have served the public just as faithfully as those who, throughout their lifetime, served in a high position and at a high salary.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I understand there is fundamental difference between this item and the one we were discussing a few moments ago, and that is, had Major Bell's payments to the superannuation fund been applied differently, this would have given his widow a pension to the extent of $1,750 a year. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL: So far as that is concerned, it puts the matter in a different category from the other; but I want to remind the minister of this: there are many civil servants who have paid large amounts of money into that fund and yet on their dismissal or death there is not a dollar coming to them or their dependents. I discussed a case with the minister last year of a poor man whose wife at that time was sick in hospital, and who was absolutely penniless. He had paid $350 into the superannuation fund, but due to a technical fluke, if I may call it that, he was not able to secure anything. The treasury board did have the power under the act to repay him that money, but they absolutely refused to do so. If they were not prepared to do so in that case, where this man and his family were in a state of absolute penury, I say it is rank injustice to do it in this case. I am not complaining of the case before us so much as I am complaining of discrimination. If the law can be got around in this way or switched around—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the hon. gentleman sure of his facts when he states that the treasury board refused to pay that man anything when they had authority to do it in a case such as he mentions? I have been a member of the treasury board ever since coming to Ottawa and I have no recollection of a case of that character ever having been refused by the board. While I am on my feet may I say that if it had not been for an oversight on the part of this official his widow would have been entitled to $1,750 per annum under the law, and I do not believe that there is a man in this House of Commons who is going to deny to any individual what he would have been entitled to receive but for a technicality. I can assure my hon. friend that the treasury board will not turn down a case such as he mentions if the facts are properly brought before it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They did turn it down.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to be sure of that before taking my hon. friend's word, although, of course, I must accept his word.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I gave the facts to the Minister of Finance last year when his estimates were before the committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have never known the treasury board to turn down a case that could possibly be justified, and I resent accusations of that character.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The same accusations were levelled at the Minister of Finance last year and he accepted them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All I have to say is that this minister is not accepting them.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps not, but the Minister of Finance is in a more responsible position than the Minister of the Interior, and he did accept them. The man was dismissed. The act—I am speaking from memory—gives the treasury board power to deal with cases of that kind, but it did not make it compulsory for the board to pay the man, and I say that if you can deal with cases like the one before us by putting an amount in the estimates to correct an injustice—I am not complaining so much of this particular case because I think it is only correcting an injustice—I say that you should do the same in other cases.

Mr. ROBB: I do not recall the case to which my hon. friend refers, but the treasury board have one rule that they follow, and they are compelled to follow it under the act. If the official was dismissed for irregularities, for theft in office or being drunk on duty or anything of that sort, then under the act we cannot pay him, but wherever under the act we can legally pay him, the treasury board is disposed to deal generously with the public servants.

Another hon. gentleman a moment ago referred to those in minor positions. The Civil Service Superannuation Act provides the same privileges for the lower paid servants as for the higher paid, except that the compensation is based upon the salary and the amount that has been paid in. My hon. friend from Mackenzie has very correctly stated the position. I am not going to argue it at any length, but if hon. gentlemen do not wish to pass this item the responsibility will not be upon the government.

I repeat, Major Bell died on January 13, 1929. Had he died on January 1, 1925, under the law Mrs. Bell would have been entitled to exactly the amount that we are asking the committee to vote to-night, so we are only giving her what she is entitled to under the law.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say that in succeeding parliaments, innumerable cases of this kind will undoubtedly arise. I have no doubt that a great many civil servants have not taken the precaution of protecting themselves by coming under the provisions of the Superannuation Act, and from time to time parliament will have to do something of this nature to look after such cases.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will they all be treated the same way?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Exactly, as provided under the act. I want to put myself on record as saying that I am prepared to vote in parliament the sums necessary to compensate these people if through any lack of attention on their part they have failed to take advantage of the act.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Do I understand that Major Bell has paid in sufficient in the way of premiums to warrant his widow receiving this amount of $1,750 had he not made that slight error?

Mr. ROBB: Exactly.

Mr. QUINN: I have no opposition whatever to offer to this item, but I have a case to submit to the committee. It is that of a man who has served, not for twenty or thirty years, but for fifty-two years. This man entered the service of the imperial government in the year of confederation, in 1867, may I say to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why say it to me?

Mr. QUINN: Because I want the Minister of Justice to pay special attention to this. This man entered the transport service of the imperial army at Halifax and served continuously from that time until the transport service of the imperial government was turned over to the Canadian federal authorities. He continued to serve until 1919. Now here is where I condemn the Tory government, or the Union government, whichever you choose to call it.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): It is all the same.

Mr. QUINN: A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. This man served his government and his country for fifty-two years and nine months as a captain in the transport service at Halifax. He was dismissed with a paltry gratuity of $900, not $900 a year, but a lump sum gratuity of $900. I brought this matter to the attention of the Hon. E. M. Macdonald when he was Minister of National Defence, the very first year I entered this parliament, in 1926. I also brought it to the attention of the present Minister of National Defence, and in all fairness to the minister, I wish to say that he saw no way of providing for this man. He is now eighty-five years of age, and since 1919 he has been living, I do not know how, on this paltry gratuity of $900. If an item is brought down in the supplementaries under any department, I do not care which, I guarantee to the Minister of National Defence that not a member on this side of the house would oppose it, and I appeal to the minister to include such an item this session. I am suggesting it to the Minister of National Defence, to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Justice—that they put an item in the supplementary estimates to pay that man an annuity until the day he dies. He is eighty-five years of age.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They will not need to pay him very long.

Mr. QUINN: I submit you are not dealing with all civil servants along the same lines when you deny this man a small annuity for superannuation.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Lest there might be a misunderstanding in the case of the civil servant that I mentioned a moment ago, I may say he was dismissed, not for any of the offences mentioned by the Minister of Finance, but for inefficiency, although, speaking from memory, I think he held the position for over three years, which would seem to negative even that charge. I am not particularly objecting to the estimate; I would be prepared to support any similar vote where money had been paid in and through some technical error it had not been properly applied. But I say if the principle is going to be invoked in one case let it be invoked in another. The principle on which this government acts seems to be: to him that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. The higher up civil servants and their dependents are well looked after, but the poorer civil servants—this man drew a salary of only $70 a month—could not secure $350.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to protest against passing this item in favour of Mrs. Beatrice Bell, for the same reasons as those set forth a moment ago when opposition was taken to a vote for a pension to Lady Taschereau. If the act allowed a pension in the present case, the house would not be called upon to approve of this item. No exception should be made. The same rule should apply to everybody. If Lady Taschereau has no right to a pension, in consideration of the services rendered by her husband who, at his death, was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, I deem that the services rendered by Mr. Bell do not warrant any more the granting of a pension to his widow.

I wish to add that I was informed that Mr. Bell left to his children an estate of $75,000, and nothing to his wife. I cannot see why the government should be called upon to support the widow when her husband could have left her a sufficient amount to provide for her needs. I am opposed to this item and I trust that the hon. members of this house will concur in my views.

[Mr. Quinn.]

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am not going to oppose this grant, but how can a member go back to his constituents and say, "I voted for such and such a grant, but I cannot do anything for your case because death took away your husband just two or three months short of the time when he would have qualified for superannuation." This is a letter from the chief accountant of the Finance department in reference to the case of a widow in my constituency:

> Under the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act, to which your husband was a contributor, it states that no allowance may be granted to an employee who has less than ten years' service. At the time of Mr. Hamilton's death his service was only nine years, five months and twenty-five days.

Here is a case where the man lived within four or five months of the time when he would have qualified for superannuation and left a widow and daughter without means of support, yet nothing is granted to them.

Mr. McRAE: I would ask the Prime Minister if the committee in approving this vote may consider that the precedent so established will be the policy of the government with respect to future cases of this kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Each case, I think, has always to be considered on its merits. If another case presented itself in which the circumstances were as distressing as these are, I have no doubt the house would take the same view.

Mr. McRAE: I do not think that quite answers my question. There is a principle involved here. I quite agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said a few moments ago with respect to this case. Many hardships, many injustices, many unkindnesses are suffered by people under circumstances very similar to those surrounding this case. When considering such a case as this where the husband has left what might be considered a comfortable fortune to his family and has deprived his wife of any participation in it, it is only fair that we should also take into consideration many of the smaller claims as outlined by members on this side of the house. It is only right that an equal measure of justice should be accorded to these minor claims that have even more merit than the one in question.

Mr. BENOIT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to state in this house that the government of Canada must not consider itself in the present circumstances, in the light of a charitable institution. I am told that Mr. Bell earned much more than Sir Elzear Taschereau, I therefore cannot understand why we should grant a pension of $1,750 per year to the widow of an official who received an annual salary of $12,000. I must further add that if Mr. Bell left his estate to his children, the latter should have sufficient filial affection to look after their mother. I strongly protest against the passing of this item for a pension of $1,750 for the widow of Mr. Bell.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, in view of the attitude of the committee the item is now dropped.

Item withdrawn.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What about the premiums that have been paid in?

Mr. ROBB: The law takes care of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I promised my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre that I would move the adjournment of the house at twelve, but if it is desired to continue—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know whether the house would care to go on a little longer.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not see, Mr. Chairman, that we are making any progress. We cannot possibly finish to-night, and I think we ought to carry out the arrangement as to the hour of adjournment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are certainly not getting through many items.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at twelve o'clock (midnight).

Friday, June 14, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. C. E. FERLAND (Joliette) moved the first reading of Bill, No. 398, (from the Senate) to amend the Bankruptcy Act as respects locality of a debtor.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COMMUNICATION WITH SENATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the government in the Senate apparently has complained that certain news was lost in transit between the House of Commons and the Senate. Can the Prime Minister give us any information as to how it was lost?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am afraid I have no information. My hon. friend will have to judge for himself, as I will have to do.

VISIT TO WASHINGTON OF PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): We are all very much interested in the persistent reports to the effect that the Prime Minister of Great Britain is likely to visit Washington in the near future, and the suggestion has been made that the Prime Minister of Canada may be asked to be there at the same time. Since this is probably the last opportunity we will have to make such an inquiry, I would like the Prime Minister to say whether he has any information on the subject?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): This is another case in which my hon. friend has just as much information as I have.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Air services—Royal Canadian Air Force—further amount required, $250,000.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): This amount is required to make preparation and do preliminary work in connection with a permanent combined land and seaplane training station. As the committee knows, Camp Borden was used as a concentration camp in 1916; later it was used by the imperial munitions board for a time and then was repurchased by the department and has been in use more or less temporarily as an air force training camp since about 1920. Frome time to time representations have been made that Camp Borden was not satisfactory even for the purpose of land plane training, and it has been found very necessary to increase seaplane training, particularly in view of the very large amount of work we do in this country which requires seaplanes. It is felt that a double overhead should be done away with as soon as possible and that the department should have a combined station. A large number of sites have been examined and, as I said the other day, it would seem as though Trenton is the most desirable site to be found so far. I could go into much greater detail if the committee desired, but this vote is for the purpose of commencing the construction and development of a combined station.

Mr. TUMMON: The minister made this announcement the other day on another item and I think he intimated that the matter might be discussed when this vote came up. Needless to say, I am very much pleased that the department has decided on the bay of Quinte as the place where this camp will be located. This question of the establishment of a camp for the Royal Canadian Air Force for both land planes and seaplanes, along the bay of Quinte, has been discussed for many years in that district. For some time it was expected that Camp Mohawk, a few miles west of Deseronto, would be selected. This camp was operated quite extensively by the Imperial government during the war and was looked upon as a very excellent camp. The people of that district expected the camp to be established there, particularly in view of the fact that in the report of the Department of National Defence for 1926, under the heading, "No. 1 Flying Station, Camp Borden" the following appeared:

> The air station at Camp Borden, at present in use, is that which was built during the war by the Imperial Munitions Board as a training station for the R.A.F. units recruited in Canada. The station, though admirably suitable for flying operations on a large scale, is too large for the present establishment of the R.C.A.F. Maintenance charges in general are altogether disproportionate to the present strength of the R.C.A.F. The camp is, as well, isolated and difficult of access. For these reasons it is hoped that accommodation, on a more suitable scale, involving smaller maintenance charges, may be made available at an early date for the training of the R.C.A.F.
>
> With this in view, an excellent site has been surveyed at Deseronto for a joint seaplane and aeroplane base, and it is hoped that funds may be made available for the construction of the necessary buildings in the near future.

Naturally there was considerable disappointment at Deseronto when it was learned that another location had been decided upon. I would like to ask the minister if he would make a statement as to the considerations which contributed to the making of this choice.

Mr. RALSTON: If the committee will permit me to say so, I think it would be undesirable at this time to put on record the factors which were considered in respect to something like thirty different places which have been examined. The reports are confidential and perhaps it would not be in the best interests of the service to have these matters spread on the record; the towns themselves might prefer that they should not be. A deputation from Deseronto recently interviewed me and asked that the proposal in regard to Trenton be reconsidered. Deseronto had been under consideration and in 1926 it was thought to be the best site, but after that time Trenton came into the picture and a thorough examination was made of that site. I wanted Deseronto to feel that their claim had been thoroughly considered and I told them that our one object was to obtain a location which was most suitable to the service, having regard to the many factors which had to be considered. I told them that Trenton had been selected after a full investigation by responsible technical officers, and I could not hold out any hope that any change would be made. In order that the citizens of Deseronto might be assured that every angle of the matter had been studied, I offered to have the relative facilities, the advantages and disadvantages of the two localities checked up again in order that no paramount feature in favour of Deseronto might be overlooked.

Mr. THOMPSON: Would the minister advise the committee as to the amount which has been expended upon Camp Borden, and the amount which it is calculated will be necessary to expend upon the new camp at Trenton?

Mr. RALSTON: Camp Borden was a concentration camp in 1916, and 40,000 men were quartered there, while the proposed camp will have a capacity of 500 men. The committee will see that a comparison between costs of a camp for 40,000 and one for 500 would not be a fair one. We have made a careful estimate of the existing facilities at Camp Borden, outside of the land itself, and have arrived at the conclusion that notwithstanding the cost the buildings and plant would represent only a valuation of $234,000 for the purpose of being usefully utilized in connection with the development of a permanent station at that camp. Outside of that, the total expenditure at Camp Borden could be regarded as an expenditure for a military concentration camp for war purposes, and not for aviation in time of peace. The amount which was paid for Camp Borden in connection with aviation was $375,000, which was paid to the imperial munitions board at the time the buildings were taken over on a 25 per cent basis.

Mr. THOMPSON: What has been the total cost of the camp to date?

Mr. RALSTON: I will give my hon. friend the construction items. Since that $375,000 was spent, the air board has spent $37,000 on construction—I will give my hon.

friend the round figures—then the air force spent $60,000 and the Canadian corps of signallers spent $14,000. The air board has spent on maintenance $110,000, the air force $175,000 and the corps of signallers, $20,000. The actual capital expenditure since that time has therefore been $111,000, because my hon. friend will understand that the items for maintenance do not enter into the calculation because they are annual expenditures which would be required in any event.

Mr. THOMPSON: What did it cost the government before that?

Mr. RALSTON: The whole 17,000 acres composing the camp were not of course used for the air force by any means. The total amount expended on the whole camp up to the time the imperial munitions board took it over would be about $1,584,000 for construction, and about $21,000 for maintenance.

Mr. THOMPSON: What will the new camp cost?

Mr. RALSTON: The buildings at either camp would cost about the same. It is estimated that necessary buildings and improvements at Camp Borden would cost about $1,400,000, while the estimated cost for buildings at some other point, without married quarters would be $1,100,000 and with married quarters about $1,500,000. In addition to the $1,400,000 which would be necessary to be expended at Camp Borden, the committee will understand that we would have to spend probably $500,000 to provide a seaplane base at another point.

Mr. ROWE: This camp being situated in the riding which I have the honour to represent, it seems to me that at this time, when we are talking so much about economy, this would be a very extravagant move for the government to make. Anyone familiar with Camp Borden will readily appreciate that the camp should be sufficient to maintain the nucleus of an air force, and especially in view of the efficiency of that camp in times of war. I quite appreciate that the vast acreage would not be needed to maintain a training camp, but it is situated inland and this factor was considered as being of great importance by the Imperial government and by the royal air force. The Imperial government and the Department of Militia and Defence recommended this site very highly. Criticism has been made as to lack of transportation to the camp, but it is situated on a switch only four miles long on the Canadian Pacific railway and five miles long on the Canadian National railway. It is only about half a mile from a good highway, and it seems to me that with the conveniences which are at the camp at present it would be sufficient to maintain a training camp for the purposes for which the minister proposes to vote this money. The camp has been equipped with seventeen hangars, one hundred and twenty by sixty feet each; each hangar capable of housing six aeroplanes, or a total of about one hundred. There is an engine shop, sixty by forty; a carpenter shop, sixty by forty; two large barracks eighty by eighty, two storeys high, each capable of housing comfortably seventy-five men, all steam heated, electric lighted, with other quarters for married men; twenty cottages for married officers and their families; school for forty pupils; hospital capable of looking after thirty-five or forty patients. It has in fact, everything necessary for the comfort of the soldiers, and the only feature that could be improved is the location for a hydroplane base. Further, it is within fifteen miles of Kempenfeldt bay, which would be a most appropriate place for a base for hydroplanes. Surely it is a consideration if a camp is situated where there is a denser population and where there is heavy traffic on the highway similar to that at Trenton. Hon. members who are familiar with the Toronto district know the trouble they have had at Leaside in keeping the traffic back and avoiding accidents. There is a large patrol force there in order to keep the traffic back when flights are being made.

I wish also to impress upon the committee the fact that a camp situated on the boundary line between this country and a foreign country is not as appropriate for a military camp as a camp situated some fifty miles away, as the present Camp Borden is. That was a feature which was strongly impressed by the British government on the royal air force when it was established at Camp Borden. The United States has fifty-three aeroplane bases and only three of them have accommodation for hydroplanes and aeroplanes as combination bases, and surely if such a large country as the United States consider it sufficient to have, out of fifty-three, only three with hydroplane facilities, we should take this increased expenditure into consideration. Moreover, I think only one of those fifty-three, the one at Mount Clemens, is anywhere near the boundary line. It is for the committee to consider whether it is wise to spend millions of the public money to establish a military camp close to the international boundary to replace a camp that has cost between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

The sum of $375,000 that was paid by this government was only about twenty-five cents on the dollar of what the camp cost the British government. While there are 16,000 or 20,000 acres of camp ground it is not all used for aviation. There is an aerodrome a mile square. It has been recognized by most eminent authorities on aviation that Camp Borden is one of the best camps in the British Empire for such a purpose. At Leaside and other camps, after heavy rains, they cannot take off with their planes, but at Camp Borden, owing to the sandy loam, they can take off in safety fifteen minutes after the heaviest rain. It is an absolute extravagance to waste Camp Borden which has cost the country so much money, and a camp which was sufficient in time of war should be sufficient to maintain the nucleus of an aviation force in time of peace.

Mr. THOMPSON: I feel that I must join with my colleague from Dufferin-Simcoe in protest against this expenditure. Undoubtedly the amount already expended on the site has been upwards of $2,000,000 and it will take a like amount to establish a camp at Trenton. I venture to assert that when the Trenton camp is finished it will not be equal to what we are going to scrap at Camp Borden. During the present session the government have retained, to a certain extent, the sales tax which falls so heavily upon the poor people and they have done so on the ground that they need the money. The government have also refused to contribute toward highway construction and technical education on the ground that they have no money to spend on such objects. Now we are asked to scrap a camp, costing upwards of $2,000,000 and to establish a camp on a new site.

If the minister is sincere in his statement that he wants to make a combination camp, why does he not utilize some of those magnificent stretches of water that are almost in the immediate vicinity of Camp Borden? He could establish at several points an auxiliary camp to be under the jurisdiction of the main camp, which would serve the dual purpose equally well and at a very small cost to the people. The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe has mentioned Kempenfeldt bay within fifteen miles and an auxiliary camp could be established there. He could even go to lake Couchiching with the town of Orillia near by and a camp could be established there. If he wants to go on the southern shore of Georgian bay, all in the county of Simcoe nearby, there are such places as Collingwood, Penetanguishene, Midland, Coldwater or Victoria Harbour, Waubaushene or Fesserton, all on land-locked harbours, and they are admirably situated for this purpose. Now we are asked to give up all that we have spent there and duplicate the expenditure in a new place. Has the minister considered what a serious thing it is for that community to lift out bodily a population of 700 souls and transport it to a new location altogether? This camp has been in existence for fifteen years; social and business relations have been established, and all this is going to be disrupted by the action of the minister. I think he would be well advised if he would let the matter stand in abeyance and look more closely into the question of Camp Borden. Camp Borden was not chosen hurriedly in time of war. If the minister will study the records of his department, he will find that the military authorities had for years previously thought of establishing a camp there. It seems to me that this proposition is a useless expenditure of money, and the matter could be handled much better than by scrapping the valuable camp we have at Camp Borden.

Mr. TUMMON: I am not at all surprised at my good friends from the district where Camp Borden is situated being anxious to retain that camp there. As to the suitability of a location for a camp, I do not feel that I am in a position to speak as an expert. I must put myself largely in the judgment of those who are capable of selecting a site for such a camp. The location at Trenton has been mentioned by my hon. friends in comparison with Camp Borden. While I cannot take the position that I am capable of judging, yet there are advantages there that in my opinion should be looked upon as of special importance as regards the location for such a plant. It is on the bay of Quinte, a landlocked body of water. It is protected on the north by the mainland, on the south by the county of Prince Edward, and on the west by that strip of land which connects Prince Edward county with the mainland. It is close to a prosperous and growing town, with a city on the other side to the east. There is a paved highway running between Toronto and Montreal, and both the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National railways, thus affording not only rail and highway transportation but water transportation as well. If a larger body of water is needed, lake Ontario is only a few miles away What I have said in regard to Trenton can I think be said with equal force of Camp Mohawk. The minister has said that he proposes to investigate further the camp at Mohawk, and I think that will meet the approval of those most interested.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am not going to discuss whether Camp Borden is suitable or not. I wish to consider this question from the point of view of economy. I think the minister, before the item goes through, should and must make a further statement in regard to this selection. It has always been considered that the camp near Deseronto was an ideal air force camp. Until within a few short weeks it was practically accepted as the site for the new camp. Here is a camp that has been tried, where there has been service and training, and it has proved absolutely satisfactory to everybody, and to my knowledge satisfactory to the whole area. But now within the last few weeks a new site has been selected. I think the house should know the reason why such a change has been made.

It must be accepted that Mohawk camp is absolutely acceptable both from past experience, and according to the advice of the technical officials in the department. I have spoken with them and I know that it is absolutely acceptable to them. I have no interest in the removal of the camp from Camp Borden to any other place, except from the point of view of economy, but I have felt that if any change was to be made, no better place could be selected than Camp Mohawk.

I want the house and the committee to realize that we have at Camp Mohawk today all the water supply ready for use. That means a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Are you going to scrap Camp Borden with all the expenditure that you have made there, and are you going to scrap Camp Mohawk with all the expenditure that has been made at that place? I have seen a letter to the effect that it had been practically decided to make Camp Borden the permanent camp. Neither of these two sites, Camp Mohawk and Camp Trenton, is in my constituency, but both are a short distance away, and I do say that when several hundred dollars can be saved in the selection of a site, we should insist upon saving that money. I think it is up to the minister to explain this sudden change of location. Not only that, but there are numerous cement bases at Camp Mohawk all ready, which with a very little expenditure could be enlarged and made suitable as buildings. The camp was actually used during the war and has been used ever since, and it has proved acceptable to all parties. I will guarantee that it is acceptable to the technical officers of the department, and that they consider it preferable to moving to a site that was never formerly considered by anybody. You have these two sites on the same body of water. Training, I believe, can be done under more favourable conditions at Camp Mohawk, where you have a well protected site. It has always been a training ground. Before the selection of Petawawa camp, Deseronto artillery camp was the only training camp in Canada. Here is a camp fixed up with a water supply ready for use, with concrete bases that can be made use of. I have no doubt that the technical men might say that these concrete bases would not be acceptable. I know both grounds and I want to know what are the advantages of this new camp pointed out by the technical men. Never mind the feeling of the people of these two towns; it is the country and economy that we are interested in. Surely there cannot be so much difference between two places only fifty or sixty miles apart that we must suddenly scrap hundreds of thousands of dollars and start a new camp. I want to know what are the advantages of this training camp before I will vote for it.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend might be satisfied with what I suggested, that I am perfectly willing, and have so told the deputation from Deseronto, to go into the matter further with the object of making absolutely sure as to the relative advantages of these two places. I can give my hon. friend in detail what the technical officers represent as the advantages, but after all it seems to me, having given my hon. friend that assurance, he might be reasonably satisfied. I can assure him that there has been no change in the last few weeks. Trenton was first discussed by the officers in July, 1928, and I have here a list of no less than a dozen technical officers of the department, including the engineers, all of whom favour Trenton, but at the same time in view of the fact that the deputation came to me with such strong representations, I undertook to make further investigation to see if any of the paramount features, which Deseronto alleged, had been overlooked. I hope my hon. friend will accept that. Our only idea is to find the very best site, having in view the interests of the service and nothing else.

Mr. MANION: What would be the objection to leaving Camp Borden where it is to be used by the land air forces, and establishing at Trenton a camp for the water air forces? I understand that in the United States except in very rare cases they do not have the land forces and the water forces in the same station. In the interests of economy, I would ask the minister if it would not be advisable to leave the land forces where they are, and to establish the water forces at Trenton.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think my hon. friend got the figures that I gave. I pointed out that if we stay at Borden we will still have to make a very substantial permanent expenditure of something over one million dollars; the buildings there are not fireproof and we have had over half a million dollars fire losses; that we have $1,700,000 worth of technical equipment and stores there and therefore Borden would have to have permanent structures if we were to stay there. In addition to that, if my hon. friend's suggestion were accepted we would have to have another base for seaplane training at Trenton or some other suitable place.

Mr. MANION: I did not mention Trenton particularly. I meant the point decided on.

Mr. RALSTON: It would mean not only double expenditure in connection with plant, but also double overhead. Dealing with what my hon. friend from Kingston—

Mr. TUMMON: Might I just say a word before the minister proceeds? Reference was made to the air organization in the United States. Is it not a fact that there they have two different services while in Canada we have only one?

Mr. RALSTON: That is the answer. In the United States there are three air services as a matter of fact, the navy, the military and the Department of Commerce. Here all the air services are combined under one department. One hon. member said that the United States have 53 training stations while we have one central station. I think our form of combined organization will lead the committee to the conclusion that it is in the interests of economy that we combine our seaplane and land plane training if we possibly can. That is what we are endeavouring to do. We are not scrapping Camp Borden as a permanent aviation plant; it never was such. There is, as I have said, plant at Borden to the value of $234,000 which might be utilized in connection with a combined station; but when you got through with spending over a million dollars you would have only a land plane base, with disadvantages which I need not take the time of the committee to enumerate. I can assure hon. members that the matter has been carefully looked into by the officers of the department, and they say that Borden cannot be made a suitable place for an aviation training station. My hon. friend said that the British authorities reported something to the contrary. I think he will find that that is not so. They simply took an army concentration camp such as we had and adapted it as an aviation camp; but it was not primarily an aviation camp and was not so constructed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I mention that it takes a little time to arrange for the proceedings of prorogation, a number of matters having to be considered in connection therewith. I would suggest, therefore, to the committee that we leave over for the time being items that are likely to be discussed at some length and dispose of what might be termed non-contentious items, in order that the government may be able to form some idea as to the hour at which prorogation can be arranged. We have taken nearly one hour on this single item. I think we might well proceed with other items and take up this particular item again if it is going to involve much more in the way of discussion.

Item stands.

INDIANS

Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—

Hospitals, medical attendance, etc.—further amount required, $25,000.

Supplies for destitute Indians—further amount required, $30,000.

To provide farm working outfits for graduates of Indian schools, $15,000.

Surveys—further amount required, $5,000.

Sioux—further amount required, $8,000.—Total, $83,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Under this item I wish to draw the attention of the minister to the sale of section 26, township 32, range 32, west of the first meridian. This land was formerly used as pasturage by the Keeseekoose Indian reserve. At different times there was talk of its being thrown open for sale. A number of people wrote to the department asking to be given an opportunity to bid. There are letters on the file showing that departmental officials promised to notify some of these people when the land would be offered for sale. However, it was finally withdrawn in 1926 and remained as pasture. Later on apparently a certain party got after this land and it was sold to him privately at a good deal less than its actual value. One of the gentlemen who had correspondence with the department, a barrister and real estate agent, tells me that he had offers from bona fide farmers in the district as high as $20 an acre; but the land was sold privately for $10 an acre.

The council of the village of Pelly asked for a right of way through this land to a quarter section on the beach of Racing lake, where they have a recreation ground. After considerable correspondence the department agreed to grant them a road allowance, the papers so far as I know were all completed, and all that was necessary was to have a survey of the road. There was some detailed work done in that connection and finally the village authorities did have a surveyor on the ground. The road was laid out, there being no doubt whatever about accepting the word of the departmental officials, because the matter was settled so far as they were concerned. However, after the survey was made and after they had done some work on the road they suddenly found that the land had been sold, and the party who had purchased it then stepped into the picture. On appealing to the departmental officials we found, as they had to admit, that consideration had to be given to the purchaser; and a good deal of correspondence is still going on. But the village even at best must now pay the other party a considerable amount for the land. They have been kept out of it for a long time and at the moment they are not absolutely sure that arrangements can be made.

I protest, first, against the failure of the department to carry out the promise they made, that they would notify the people in the district when the land was sold—and it was apparently sold to a man whom we suspect of being a political favourite, for very much less than its intrinsic value. That is the first complaint; and the second is that a direct obligation was undertaken by the department to provide the village of Pelly with that road. On the strength of the assurances given by the officials this survey was made, and later on the department's promise was deliberately disregarded and the land sold to private parties.

I wish to quote from sessional paper 169 a letter dated August 27, 1926, to the secretary of the Department of Indian Affairs, and signed by W. M. Graham, Indian commissioner. The letter reads:

> On the 12th instant I wrote, recommending withdrawal from sale of section 26-32-32, W1st in the Keeseekoose reserve, as the area can be profitably used by the Indians as a pasture and I shall be glad if you will inform me whether the action recommended has been taken.

A further letter, No. 7 on the file, dated September 3, is addressed to Mr. Graham, the Indian commissioner:

> Replying to your letter of the 27th ultimo, under your file No. 310-6, I may say that the sale covering section 26-32-32, W1, Keeseekoose reserve, will be withdrawn from our sale list and reserved for the Indians in the reserve, as requested.

Apparently up to that time the matter was closed, and then appears a letter from George W. McPhee, the honourable member for Yorkton, dated December 15, 1926. It is addressed to the Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, and is marked personal. Before I read that letter I wish to commend the minister for his decision to leave personal letters in the file and to bring them down in sessional papers. On a previous occasion I had a good deal of argument with the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) over this question of including in the file personal letters of a really public nature and bringing them down. I consider it an infringement of the rights of parliament to withhold such letters, and in this case, whatever blame I attach to the Minister of the Interior in other respects, I commend his fairness in putting these letters on the file. This particular letter reads:

> Mr. McKay wrote last summer to Mr. Graham, Indian commissioner, asking with respect to section 26, township 32, range 32, west 1st, and he received a letter dated June 18, giving the acreage of this section. Mr. McKay wanted to buy the west half and forwarded a certified cheque for $200 deposit. This was returned to him on the 30th of August, stating that the land had been withdrawn from sale. I know this land and I feel satisfied that it is not required by the Indians and should be in the hands of someone who will make it productive. Mr. McKay has offered $7 an acre for the west half and $2 an acre for the east quarter of this section.

The letter is signed George W. McPhee.

First I want to call attention to the fact that the hon. member for Yorkton takes upon himself to say that the land is not required by the Indians, whereas in fact there is a letter on the file from the Indian commissioner who states that the land is required for pasturage; moreover, there is a further letter which I shall read, written by the Indian agent, saying that the land is required for pasturage. As a matter of fact, I know that up to that time the Indians of Keeseekoose had no other pasture land. There is a letter from the minister to Mr. McPhee dated December 20, 1926. It reads:

> I have received your letter of the 15th instant, with reference to the desire of Mr. Norman McKay, of Verigin, Saskatchewan, to purchase a portion of section 26-32-32, W. 1 M.
>
> The department, I may say, was not aware that Mr. McKay had made application to purchase these three quarters, as Commissioner Graham some time ago recommended the withdrawal of this section from sale on the ground that the Indians required the land for pasturage purposes. Mr. McKay's application therefore did not reach the department. For the reason stated, this section is, of course, not at present listed for sale, but I have instructed the officials to request Commissioner Graham to report in the matter, and to state whether in his opinion the land is still required for Indian use. I shall be very glad to write you further in the matter in due course.

Then there is a letter, which I will not delay the house reading, from the assistant deputy and secretary to Mr. Graham at Regina, asking for a further report. Next is a letter dated January 7, 1927, addressed to George W. McPhee, Esq., M.P., Yorkton, Saskatchewan. This reads:

With reference to my letter to you of the 20th ultimo, relative to the desire of Mr. Norman McKay, of Verigin, Saskatchewan, to purchase a portion of section 26-32-32, W. 1 M., I enclose copy of a report submitted by Commissioner Graham, of Regina.

You will observe that in the opinion of the Commissioner, this particular parcel of land is required by the Indians for pasturage and hay purposes.

Then there is a letter addressed to the Department of Dominion Lands from Pelly, Saskatchewan, dated May 14, 1927:

I understand that the above section of land has been held by the Indian department and used by the Indians south of Pelly for pasture land; and that recently this section has been turned back to the department and is to be sold.

If this is correct when and how is it to be sold? Will it be by public auction or private sale? A party spoke to me to-day who wishes to bid on this land and I will be glad to hear from you as to how and when it is to be disposed of.

This letter is signed J. M. Telford, who is a barrister dealing in real estate in Pelly.

Next is a letter dated June 8, 1927, to J. M. Telford of Pelly, Saskatchewan:

Replying to your letter of the 14th ultimo, in connection with the above land, I may say this section is still being reserved for the use of the Indians for pasturage and hay purposes. In the event of the land being thrown open for sale, you will be advised.

This is signed J. C. Caldwell, in charge of the lands and timber branch. I direct particular attention to the last sentence. I submit that when a responsible officer of the department writes a letter of that kind to someone in the country it should be taken seriously and there should be someone in the department who feels in honour bound to carry out the obligation undertaken. Yet this promise was deliberately disregarded. The land was sold at private sale for at least not more than half of what some of the farmers, with whom Mr. Telford was in communication, had offered to pay.

[Mr. Campbell.]

There are many other letters dealing with the same matter, but I do not wish to delay the house reading them. There is in the file a letter dated August 19, 1927, to Mr. Fred J. Malakoff, signed J. C. Caldwell, informing him that the land at that time was not available for sale. On November 3, 1927, a letter was written to E. A. W. R. McKenzie, Jr. Indian agent, by J. C. Caldwell, as follows:

Will you kindly advise the department, at your earliest convenience, if section 26, township 32, range 32, W1-M, is still required for the use of the Indians for pasturage and hay purposes.

Here I want to draw the attention of the minister to this fact: On November 23 there was a letter from Kamsack, Saskatchewan, to the secretary of the Department of Indian Affairs, Ottawa, as follows:

Replying to your letter No. 68970-4 of the 3rd inst, regarding section 26, township 32, Range 32, W.P.M. I beg to advise that this is the only pasture that the Keeseekoose band have for their cattle and is still required for pasturage and hay purposes.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) E. W. R. McKenzie,
Indian Agent.

To my mind this is the worst offence of which the department is guilty. Here you find the Indian agent, a man on whose recommendations they must depend, informing the department that this was the only pasturage land available for this Indian band, yet in spite of this the department deliberately disregarded the obligation entered into with Mr. Telford and disregarded as well representations of the Indian agent, all in the interests of one man who desired to secure this land for much less than its actual worth.

Then there is a letter under date of November 30, 1927, addressed to the hon. member for Yorkton, in which the official takes the stand that the land is not for sale. Some other correspondence follows, with which I need not weary the committee, but in this correspondence it is suggested to Mr. McPhee by the departmental officials that he might discuss this matter with Mr. Graham. The letters which passed between Mr. McPhee and Mr. Graham are not in the file, and one can only surmise what actually happened, but I find a letter from Regina under date of April 23, 1928, addressed to the secretary of the Department of Indian Affairs, as follows:

In reply to departmental letter No. 68,970-4, of the 11th instant, I have to say that I am of the opinion that section 26, T. 32, R. 32 west of the first meridian could now be disposed of without adversely effecting the interests of the Keeseekoose band.

Your obediant servant,
(Sgd.) W. M. Graham,
Indian Commissioner.

What caused Mr. Graham to change his mind between the time he wrote the original letter and this later date is hard for one to understand. The other letters are not material to the point I wish to discuss; there was considerable correspondence between the village of Pelly and the department with regard to this roadway through the land to their recreation grounds on the shore of the lake.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will it shorten the discussion if I say to my hon. friend now that any promise which has been made by the department with respect to that road will be carried out? I judge from my hon. friend's statement that the department committed itself to a road; the road was surveyed and in the meantime the sale took place, and now the village is being asked to pay for that road. On behalf of the department I will say to my hon. friend that I will see to it that the promises contained in the correspondence are carried out by the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am glad to have that statement from the minister; it will shorten the discussion very considerably. In the meantime, however, there has been a long delay and the village not only had to settle with the department according to the original agreement but now they are obliged to settle with the new purchaser, and it has cost them considerably more than it should.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The correspondence must indicate that the road was to be granted before the survey took place; I suppose that is the fact. I want to make it quite clear that however the department obligated itself with regard to that road, that obligation will be carried out.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I appreciate that, and I am only sorry the minister could not carry out the other promises of his department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not dealing with that at the moment; I thought I could shorten the discussion in this way.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It will shorten the discussion very materially, because there are about a dozen letters it will not be necessary to read. However, there is one letter I should like to read, written from the village of Pelly to the Department of Indian Affairs, Ottawa, under date of May 9, 1929:

It seems that we are never going to get cleared up in this matter, and I feel that most of the difficulty is due to the action of your department. You instructed us to go ahead and have the survey made for the road across section 26, then you disposed of the land without reservation of this road and consequently threw us in considerable trouble and expense. When a committee of people are endeavouring to act in the public interest in obtaining facilities for a summer resort, and doing the work entirely gratis, at considerable trouble to themselves and also some expense, we feel that we should be assisted instead of hindered by a department of the Dominion government. If you will look up your file in connection with the sale of section 26-32-32-W1st. you will see that I made enquiry about it and you informed me that it was being used by the Indian people for pasture and it was not for sale, but when it was to be offered for sale I would receive notification about it. The next thing I heard it was sold to MacKay of Verigin. This does not seem a very fair deal either.

We were proceeding to take expropriation steps in the matter of this road, then came a letter from the Department of Highways informing us that your department had written asking for the ten dollars per acre and that you would issue the transfer for this road. We stopped the expropriation proceedings and sent in the $10 per acre. Now after three or four months we get word from the Department of Highways that you have the money and that we are still to reckon with MacKay for his equity. I think a situation like this absurd and that your department has certainly been very unfair. Here it is spring again and we are still held up in the use of this road. It is very discouraging and I certainly think your department should take some steps to assist us out of the difficulty that you have got us into. Kindly let us know the price paid for this property by MacKay, so that we may have some idea of what he may be entitled to over and above the $10 per acre. Trusting you may be able to get this matter straightened out.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) J. M. Telford.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall make my answer as brief as possible; I will not need to deal with the question of the road, since I have already answered my hon. friend on that point. First let me say that this dispute with regard to the road was first brought to my attention by my hon. friend; evidently the negotiations have been carried on in the department. I just want to reassure him that whatever the department agreed with the village of Pelly to do will be carried out, regardless of the fact that the sale has taken place.

With regard to the sale itself, there have been one or two instances of this kind recently; there is one pending now, and I have decided that for the future the same system which prevails in the sale of Dominion lands will prevail in these cases, that is, by public auction after being advertised for a considerable period. I am bound to say that the statements made by my hon. friend and the letters he has read with regard to the situation up to 1926 are correct. I remember the circumstances very well, but from 1926 on I had not heard of the matter until my hon.

friend raised the question the other day. I look upon Mr. Caldwell as being one of our most efficient officers, and I look upon Mr. Graham as a man who has always tried to protect the interests of the Indians. These two gentlemen are the ones who handled this sale, and I am not seeking to escape any responsibility when I say that the sale had taken place without my knowledge; I did not know that a sale had been consummated until the other day. They had full authority to conduct that sale, but I am putting into effect a regulation that no sale of land shall take place hereafter until it has been publicly advertised and that it shall be sold at public auction. That will avoid these little charges being brought that more could have been obtained for the land. Upon looking into the file, I found that Mr. Graham decided, as he is in a position to decide, being the Indian commissioner for the three prairie provinces, that this land was not required and could be offered for sale. He put an upset price upon it and the land was sold at that price. If I talked all day I could not say any more than that, but I want my hon. friend to understand that in the future there will be no Indian lands sold unless they are publicly advertised. If my hon. friend has any suspicion as to political interference by these officers, I would say that Mr. Caldwell was secretary to the Hon. Arthur Meighen, and I think Mr. Graham's politics are well known. I have not inquired of either one of them as to their politics, and I am satisfied that these men used their best judgment. If they went wrong in this particular case, then they erred in their judgment, but I am inclined to think that when my hon. friend looks into the matter very carefully he will find that this was consummated in the interests of the Indian department. The fact that others were not notified—I am not offering any excuse because I did not know that that occurred and I cannot discover from the file that a promise was made to the individual mentioned by my hon. friend—is regrettable, but in the future the land will be advertised in the locality in which it is to be sold and the sale will be carried on by an auctioneer.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is on my part more than a suspicion of political interference; I think it amounts almost to a certainty. The activities of the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) are so obvious that one can draw no other conclusion. I am not attaching any particular blame to these officials, and I do not think that Mr. Caldwell's politics enters into the matter at all.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

These men are civil servants and have no particular politics, but I do think that political pressure was brought to bear upon them. I had a great deal of business to do with Mr. Caldwell and I have always found him ready to carry out his word, but in this case the fact that he did fail to carry out an obligation which he entered into with these settlers in the Pelly district seems to me to be evidence of political interference. I am very glad indeed to have the assurance of the minister as to the public advertising of these lands, and I am sorry that he had not put this policy into effect a year or two ago, because in that case it would not have been necessary for me to take up so much time of the committee during the dying hours of the session in debating this matter. It would not have caused the trouble and inconvenience to the settlers in the Pelly district, as well as arousing their suspicion of political interference.

Mr. McPHEE: I want to satisfy the mind of my hon. friend that there was no political interference in this case at all. The negotiations for the purchase of this land were carried on in a fair, square and aboveboard manner, and there was no personal intervention except by correspondence. I think the following quotation from Pope's Essay on Man expresses pretty well the attitude of mind of the hon. gentleman:

> All seems infected that the infected spy,
> As all looks yellow to the jaundiced eye.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have no desire to keep this argument going, but I would like to point out that the very fact that the hon. member for Yorkton was so anxious is evidence of political interference. There was nothing to prevent these other gentlemen from corresponding direct with the department. Mr. Telford is a lawyer and real estate man in the village of Pelly, and he carried on his correspondence direct with the department.

Mr. BRADETTE: Is an amount being included in this vote to assist the hospital at Cochrane?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is an amount provided for a wing for the hospital.

Mr. BRADETTE: Is that an addition to the present wing?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): An addition.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I would like to ask the minister for some information with regard to the $15,000 to provide farm working outfits for graduates of Indian schools.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When these boys and girls are graduated from the schools the church authorities encourage them to marry and settle down. We have formulated the policy of building a small house, buying a team of horses, a plough, and then, if possible, having a group of them get together and buy a binder which can be used jointly, and the vote is required for that purpose. This means of acquiring farm working outfits obviates a very vicious practice, that of the Indians buying goods on credit.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I have no criticism to make of the vote; I simply wanted information.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses connected with Canadian national parks, historic sites, care of indigents in the parks, etc.—further amount required, including an amount to reimburse the provincial Government for the salary of police magistrate at Waterton Lakes Park, $34,698.

Costs of litigation and legal expenses—further amount required, $15,000.

Amount required to pay salaries and expenses connected with seed grain and relief collections, including half of expenses of seed grain and relief adjustment board—further amount required, $2,400.

To provide for expenses connected with the Supervisory Mining Engineer's Office due chiefly to the recent mining activities in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan—further amount required, $27,500.

To provide for the payment to the province of Saskatchewan of one-half of the amount disbursed by that province for relief to needy settlers, $47,969.23.

To provide for surveys required in the Roseau river watershed in connection with reference re this matter made by the governments of Canada and the United States to the International Joint Commission, $15,000.

To provide for the expenses incurred under the Lake of the Woods Control Board Act, 1921, and under the agreement between the Dominion, Ontario and Manitoba, confirmed by the Lac Seul Conservation Act, 1928, for the construction of a dam at the outlet of Lac Seul and its operation by the Lake of the Woods Control Board and for the remuneration, at the rate of $1,000 each per annum, of Messrs. J. T. Johnston and K. M. Cameron, Dominion members of such board, the money expended to be reimbursed to the Dominion by the licensees of developed power sites on the Winnipeg river in Manitoba (revote), $144,091.10.

To provide for the expenses connected with Canadian national parks, historic sites, etc.—further amount required to provide for the purchase of the Southwold Indian earthworks site in the county of Elgin, $2,500.—Total, $289,158.33.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Could the minister give the committee some information with regard to the item of $47,969.23, to provide for the payment to the province of Saskatchewan of one-half of the amount disbursed by that province for relief to needy settlers?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is a three-cornered obligation between the municipalities, the provinces, and the Dominion government, for relief in the purchase of seed grain. These amounts are required when the municipal authorities are unable to collect any portion of the advances which have been made. From time to time we are served by the provincial government with notice respecting accrued amounts which they are unable to collect, and they ask us to pay our share.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is that policy carried out in the other provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. In Alberta matters are being settled very largely by a board.

Mr. PARENT: I desire to commend the minister for publishing J. B. Mandley's report of 1928. This is a very excellent report, but I would like to urge upon the minister the publication in a short time of this report in a more complete form. My information goes to show that titanium ores can be used to-day as a pigment for paint. Tests have been made in European countries demonstrating the feasibility of their use for this purpose. I do not know that the Department of Mines has taken up the question of this particular use of these ores. Would it be at all possible, between now and next session, to have an engineer examine into this matter further with a view to ascertaining whether there is sufficient public interest to justify any expenditure in connection with such an investigation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are pursuing that investigation.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to this amount of $47,000, to provide for the payment to the province of Saskatchewan of one-half of the amount disbursed by that province for the relief to needy settlers. Has that recently been disbursed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The provinces carry the losses. This is just the same as in Alberta. When it is ascertained that the amounts cannot be recovered, we divide the loss. We are simply carrying out the old agreement that was made.

Mr. GARDINER: This is the old agreement. I thought it was to cover recent disbursements?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—grant to the Western Stock Growers, $5,000.

Mr. FRASER: Who are the Western Stock Growers? What is this amount required for?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a very active association with headquarters at Calgary, and is largely composed of ranchers; it does not take in the farmers. We have from time to time given them grants to assist them in their work.

Mr. FRASER: Is the minister sure that he has the name correct?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Is it not the Western Stock Breeders' Association?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. FRASER: I know an association called the Western Stock Breeders. Is this the same one?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. This association is named correctly. It covers all of southern Alberta and part of southern Saskatchewan. Ranchers constitute 90 per cent of it.

Mr. FRASER: Does it include in its membership any of the British Columbia stock growers?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not sure; I cannot say definitely.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Post Office—Outside service—to compensate the widow of the late Thomas Jackson who was fatally wounded by bandits following the robbery of the Toronto and Fort William railway post office in train No. 4 near Parry Sound, Ontario, on August 18, 1928, $1,000.

To provide for payment of allowances from April 1, 1929, to railway mail clerks in charge of railway post offices, in accordance with provisions of order in council, P.C. 394-487, dated March 21, 1929, $160,000.

To provide for the readjustment of the salaries of certain postal employees in western Canada who were dismissed in 1919 and subsequently reemployed, to give them payment as from the date of their reemployment for services actually performed at the rates of remuneration paid to other employees for similar service, $100,000.—Total, $261,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the very minute amount of $1,000 to compensate the widow of the late Thomas Jackson who was fatally wounded by bandits following the robbery of the Toronto and Fort William railway post office in train No. 4, near Parry Sound, Ontario, in August, 1928. Is that per annum or is it just a total amount?

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. VENIOT: That is the total amount.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It is a minute amount for a woman who lost her husband who was in the service when he was killed by a bandit. Just a few moments ago, under vote 373, we gave $1,200 to a man who lost an eye, and under vote 374 we gave $1,350 to a man who had sprained his knee. When we come to a man who lost his life, we give the widow $1,000 and that is all. I have no power to move to amend to make the amount $2,000, or I would do so. But I would be satisfied if it were an annuity for $1,000. Surely such discrepancies as these should not occur.

Mr. VENIOT: This was not an employee of the government. The person unfortunately killed under these circumstances was not, at the time he was killed, engaged in protecting government property. The bandits, after holding up the train and stealing from it, stole an automobile in which they placed the property taken from the train. While escaping, they ditched the automobile close to a farm house. One of the bandits went to the farm house to get a team to haul the automobile out of the ditch. During the progress of the work of hauling the automobile out of the ditch, the man who got killed had gone with his son to help the bandits, not knowing that they were such.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was he killed accidentally?

Mr. VENIOT: I will explain. During the progress of hauling the automobile out of the ditch, those who owned the car and who had been following it up, came along. Two of the bandits escaped and one remained in the automobile. Shots were exchanged between those who owned the automobile and the two bandits who were hiding in the woods, and in the shooting this man was killed. The Ontario government, according to reports that I received, compensated the two brothers who owned the automobile, and the Canadian Pacific also gave them small amounts. When the matter was brought to my attention, in view of the fact that this farmer had been killed under such circumstances and that others who had been wounded, had been paid small amounts ranging from $250 to $300, I felt that we should at least recognize the services rendered by the man who lost his life and I recommended an amount of $1,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Why is it necessary to insert this item of $100,000 to provide for the readjustment of the salaries of certain postal employees in western Canada? Does the act not provide for that?

Mr. VENIOT: While this is statutory and the amount is fixed as an estimate of what it may cost, I consulted with the legal authorities and I was advised that the amount had to be inserted in the estimates and voted, because the statute reads: "Not to exceed $100,000."

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This could not be in any way considered a second $100,000?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: We seem to be voting $100,000 in the act and another $100,000 in this estimate. To my lay mind I could not understand how they could be one and the same.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I raised the same question at the time, and I was informed by the Department of Justice that the amount had to be voted.

Item agreed to.

Governor general's warrants, 1928-29—payment of expenses, Manitoba natural resources inquiry (governor general's warrant of August 1, 1928), $15,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the total cost of the Manitoba natural resources commission?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think it would be possible to give that information at the present time. The accounts are not all in as yet.

Item agreed to.

Governor general's warrants, 1928-29—to cover cost of testing cows and destroying such as are diseased (governor general's warrant of October 18, 1928), $100,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Why is it necessary to have a governor general's warrant for this purpose? I understand it has always been the policy of the department and the government to cover the cost of testing cows and destroying such as are diseased. Surely there must be an item in the estimates for the purpose. Why was it necessary so early after the session last year to have another amount provided by governor general's warrant?

Mr. ROBB: The question raised by my hon. friend is on a parallel with the criticism made of the Minister of Agriculture the other night in connection with delay in the payment of compensation for cattle and swine destroyed under the act. It is only fair to the Minister of Agriculture to say that when he was preparing his estimates for last year, the treasury board reduced the estimate that he put in. In August or September the Department of Agriculture represented to the treasury board that they wanted an additional $200,000 to meet compensation payments owing to an epidemic. We compromised by giving them $100,000.

Item agreed to.

Civil Service Commission—Contingencies—further amount required, including $1,500, to meet the cost of entertaining delegates to the National Assembly of Civil Service Commissions of the United States and Canada, which will be held in Ottawa in September, 1929, $16,500.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not going to delay the committee at all, but I wish at this stage simply to make a suggestion to the government. It arises out of the discussion that took place on the civil service and civil service matters this year, when we discovered that an apparent injustice is being worked on many people who apply for position and pass an examination. While the act provides for a reasonable probationary period, under a ruling of the Justice department the deputy ministers and the ministers have the power of dismissing without a fair trial the person appointed.

Mr. VENIOT: Not dismissing.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Of refusing to accept them; it is the same thing exactly All I am going to do at this stage is to ask the minister in charge to consider favourably the introduction next session of an amendment to the Civil Service Act which would provide for a fair trial before dismissal, in order that this injustice may not occur again. I went to the trouble of drafting an amendment which I now put on Hansard for the minister's guidance. Section 24 would be amended to read as follows:

24. The deputy head may, at any time before the expiration of six months, reject any person assigned or appointed to any position under his control or direction, provided such person has been given a fair trial therein, or he may extend the period of probation within which such person may be rejected for another six months, and the cause of rejection, or the reason for extending the period of probation, shall be reported by the deputy head to the commission. Provided further that, the commission may, at any time before the expiration of six months, cancel the appointment of any person who has been assigned or appointed, if it be discovered that such appointment was made without a full knowledge of the essential facts, or under circumstances which involved misrepresentation.

I put in the proviso in order to protect against the possibility of misrepresentation by the applicant, or the possibility of facts arising which would justify dismissal; for example, it might be discovered after appointment that the appointee had a criminal record. I do not wish to press the matter at this stage, but I am going to ask the minister to take into his favourable consideration the introduction of an amendment to meet certain of the objections that were raised this year.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the hon. member suggest that if a man had a criminal record he would not give him a second chance?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I would not go that far.

Mr. RINFRET: I promise my hon. friend the very best consideration of his amendment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would call the attention of the government to the very severe indictment of some of the departments as found in the unanimous report of the three civil service commissioners. I had proposed to deal with this at some length, but I shall reserve the right to take it up next session. I hope that amending legislation will be brought down, and that in the meantime conditions will be very much improved.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It was brought out plainly in the house this session that when returns from the Civil Service Commission are ordered by the house the officers of the commission decide what papers shall be sent down to the House of Commons. My own feeling is that that is entirely improper. I do not propose to discuss it here, but next session I am hoping that the matter will be brought up so that we may be sure that when the House of Commons passes an order for the return of certain papers from the Civil Service Commission, those papers will be brought down.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish very strongly to support the position taken by the hon. member for Argenteuil and to point out specifically that in the returns made by the Civil Service Commission this year with respect to the Post Office Department there was held back from the file in almost every case the form which I hold in my hand, and which is essential to a full and proper understanding of the cases. This form is C.S.C. 240—Application for the position of postmaster. From most of the files that was withheld. The other form which should be included is C.S.C. 71—the report on applicants for a postmastership. Without these two forms a clear understanding of the case is obviously impossible, and I think provision should be made that in the future, irrespective of what may be the opinion of one or two commissioners, these public documents should be attached. I understand that in this particular case the chairman of the commission was quite willing and urged that the documents in question be included in every file, but the other two commissioners refused to approve the suggestion. That should not be the case.

Mr. RINFRET: I will take the matter up with the Civil Service Commission.

Item agreed to.

House of Commons—To provide for the full sessional indemnity to members of the House of Commons—days lost through absence caused by illness, official public business, or on account of death during the present session—notwithstanding anything to the contrary in chapter 147 of the revised statutes, 1927, an act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, or any amendments thereto. Payments to be made as the treasury board may direct, $40,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the meaning of the phrase "official public business"? Does that mean public business in connection with their work in the House of Commons, or public business that they may have in the cities where they reside?

Mr. ROBB: It is a phrase that has been used for many years in the estimates. Generally speaking, it applies to ministers who may be absent from the country on public duty. The ministers in the administration of their departments may be absent from Ottawa.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does it include such public business as attending elections in other parts of Canada?

Mr. ROBB: So far as this government is concerned that is not the case.

Mr. ADSHEAD: A number of members, I do not wish to mention any specifically, absent themselves from this house on the plea, I suppose, that they have personal business at home. That is what I was told by one member. He said he had paired with another member. I said, "Well, you are going to support blindly what your party proposes, and the other member will oppose blindly, for that is the effect of your pair." They draw their full indemnity.

Mr. ROBB: They do not come under this.

Mr. GARDINER: Are there many cases where members of the House of Commons and the Senate do not draw the full indemnity?

Mr. ROBB: I must refer my hon. friend to the Auditor General's report.

Mr. MANION: They all take the oath.

Item agreed to.

Legislation—general—printing, printing paper and binding, $60,000.

(B) Authorized by Statute

Senate

Salary of Speaker, $6.000.
Indemnity to senators, $384,000.
Transportation expenses of Senators, $5,000—total $395,000.

House of Commons

Salary of Speaker, $6,000.
Salary of the Deputy Speaker, $4,000.
Indemnity to members, including additional indemnity to Leader of Opposition, $990,000.
Travelling allowances, $14,000—total, $1,014,000.

Summary

Senate, $169,460.
House of Commons, $662,021.10.
Library of Parliament, $79,425.
General, $60,000.
To be voted, $970,906.10.
Authorized by statute, $1,409,000—total, $2,379,906.10.

Mr. KENNEDY: What has been done in regard to the salaries of members' stenographers?

Mr. SPEAKER Subject to the decision of the Board of Internal Economy, and at the request of the chief of the stenographic branch, I have decided to increase the salaries of the stenographers by one dollar per day. I may say that I have received a vote of thanks from the staff. They are all satisfied.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is it retroactive?

Mr. SPEAKER: It starts from April 1.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the increase apply, for instance, to your own secretary, to my secretary and to the secretaries of the whips?

Mr. SPEAKER: What salary does the hon. gentleman's secretary get?

Mr. GARDINER: Five dollars a day.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is the maximum.

Mr. GARDINER: Then the secretary-stenographers who have more responsibility than the stenographers are not getting any increase. Now all the stenographers will be on the same salary basis.

Mr. SPEAKER: If I go beyond the established minimum and maximum it creates a precedent which would be invoked in other branches. As I have said, the staff is satisfied. However, I will look into the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: I would impress upon the Speaker this point, that a secretary such as mine has more important duties to discharge than the ordinary stenographer's.

An hon. MEMBER: Not a particle.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will look into the matter.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand a vast improvement has taken place because of the action of the Speaker and the Board of Internal Economy, but everything is not yet satisfactory. For instance, the room is too small; the noise caused by a number of typewriters in operation at the same time is distracting; many of the typewriting machines ought to be scrapped.

Mr. SPOTTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. KENNEDY: A little over a year ago the senate stenographers got an increase up to $5 a day as a maximum, retroactive to the beginning of the last session. I wish to quote from a report of the committee of internal economy, sessional paper No. 4 of 1928, page 5:

Whereas the staff was twice reorganized but never classified since the year 1921—

This is dealing with another matter, but I wish to quote the argument:

—while certain senate officers have recently been given higher salaries than similar House of Commons' officers, although the business of the lower house in consequence of its long sittings is far more exacting than that of the senate, and regard should be had of this fact in appointing employees and fixing their salaries.

Mr. SPEAKER: That has been done by the senate itself. I have consulted the chief of the stenographic branch, Mr. Smith, who knows everyone of our stenographers downstairs, and he says they are perfectly satisfied. There are some other discrepancies as between the senate and the House of Commons yet to be adjusted. For instance, the accountant of the House of Commons, although he is far busier than the accountant of the senate, yet ranks lower in salary. Some day there must be an adjustment made as regards the officers of the two houses.

Mr. KENNEDY: This session the Prime Minister made a good deal of the point that the government should be a model employer. As the senate and the House of Commons staffs are practically one organization, it seems to me ridiculous that the officials of the House of Commons do not get the same pay for the same kind of work as their fellows in the senate.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the further payment of claims for compensation for loss sustained by the civil population of Canada during the late war, interest thereon and cost of administration, $4,200,000.

Mr. FRASER: When will those cheques go out?

Mr. ROBB: Not until they are approved by the governor in council at least.

Mr. FRASER: How long will it be before the cheques are mailed?

Mr. RINFRET: As soon as the session is over and this is assented to. We have made preparations and some of the cheques have been already written, and we expect that before the end of two or three weeks at least most of the claimants will have been reached.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All the supply has now been voted with the exception of a few items relating to agriculture. I do not know whether hon. members would care to continue in session now or resume possibly at two o'clock; if we were to do so we might make certain of having prorogation at five. If the committee is agreeable I will move that we continue sitting now.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: We might pass all the items except No. 45 in the main estimates.

Mr. KENNEDY: I do not think it is fair to go on now. Members interested in certain items may have gone, thinking the house would rise at one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It takes a little time to arrange for prorogation; His Excellency has to be advised in time to attend. Would it be taking too much for granted if I were to advise His Excellency that prorogation might conveniently take place at five o'clock, assuming that we resume at three?

Mr. GARDINER: How many items are left?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The only items are No. 45 in the main estimates, and in the supplementaries 361-2-3-4-5.

Mr. MANION: We might pass them all now and reserve discussion under the main item.

Mr. KENNEDY: There is one which I wish to discuss.

Mr. FRASER: Has item 1 been passed yet?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: When was it passed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some days ago.

[Mr. Kennedy.]

Mr. FRASER: It stood over at my request; I had a question to ask the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ROBB: It must have been passed in the absence of my hon. friend; it was a question of bonding. The hon. member can bring it up again.

Progress reported.

Resolutions read the first and second time and concurred in.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFUNDS OF FEES AND CHARGES—RULING, MR. SPEAKER

Mr. ROBB: I have been requested to make a motion for the remission of certain amounts paid in relation to legislation that did not go through, but I do not feel that I can make that motion in view of the ruling you gave, Mr. Speaker, the other day.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may inform the house that several members have asked for the remission of fees in connection with bills which have not been proceeded with. It is essentially contrary to section 35 of the Consolidated Revenue Act, which stipulates that any fees received by the officers of the house shall be deposited at the bank, when they become the property of the Receiver General of Canada. To remit such fees would require an estimate from the Minister of Finance.

Section 54 of the British North America Act is quite specific in this regard; no expenditure can be made unless it is preceded by a message of approval from His Excellency. This is quite clear under the Consolidated Revenue Act as well as under the British North America Act and therefore the request is absolutely untenable and cannot be entertained.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If hon. members would agree, I would move that the intermission to-day shall terminate at two-thirty o'clock. That would give us an extra half hour as leeway in arranging for prorogation at 5 o'clock.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It seems a very unfair motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Very well, I will drop it immediately.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Some members have gone away—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was merely seeking to accommodate the house; that is all.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Progress reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, June 14, 1929.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day at 5 p.m., for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. C. Mieville,
Secretary to the Governor General.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,450,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: I stated that I wanted a little information with regard to item 363, which provides a grant of $100,000 to the executive committee of the World's Grain Congress. I would like the minister to make a short statement with regard to this item, and I particularly want to know whether this $100,000 is the full amount the Dominion government will contribute, and also whether or not a statement will be rendered showing the details of the expenditure, the salaries and so on, or whether this is a straight grant.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I asked my deputy to prepare a short statement giving a synopsis of the situation, and this synopsis is before me now. This grain show and congress to be held in Regina in 1932 is to be international in character, and the governments of all possible competing countries are being communicated with. The show is to be held on the Regina exhibition grounds, and the exhibition board there is planning to erect quite extensive buildings to accommodate the show. The manager of that exhibition is very closely identified with the preparations, as are also the president and directors, who are named in a little pamphlet which is before me; I can give the names if desired. The different ministers of agriculture throughout Canada are included also.

Contributions toward prize money are being sought from the Dominion government and from many companies and associations interested in one way or another in grain; the railway companies might be particularly mentioned in this connection. It is anticipated that very generous prizes will be offered for wheat of different varieties and the coarse grains as well as for grass and clover seed. A tentative prize list has been worked out and much interest is being displayed in the matter by governments and by farmers, particularly those on the prairies.

I may say that this movement was started by a number of leading farmers and others in the province of Saskatchewan with the intention of having it under provincial auspices. After they had worked along those lines for a year or so they came to the conclusion that diplomatic connections with other countries would not be very easily obtained through provincial sources, so a large deputation came to Ottawa and asked that the Dominion government take it over. My department now has charge of the affair, as we had charge of the World's Poultry Congress two years ago. All the preliminaries have been engaged in and in Toronto last November a large meeting was held of all those interested in this movement for the purpose of arranging a tentative prize list. Those interested in this matter include all ministers of agriculture and prominent men interested in the agricultural life of the country; there are subcommittees, finance committees and all the other requisites in connection with a large enterprise of this nature.

Replying to the second part of my hon. friend's question as to whether any further assistance will be sought, I imagine that it will, according to this memorandum. One of the purposes for which this vote is asked is that the officers may go about the country from place to place in order to canvass for subscriptions for this prize list, and that will cost quite a bit of money. Among others I anticipate that all governments will be given an opportunity to contribute. I might also point out that while some are disposed to make the prize list and the exhibition proper the great feature of the show, that is not in the minds of those who are initiating this great movement. They have recognized that during the last few years, particularly since the war, the quality of Canada's wheat has been depreciating, and the primary object of this great enterprise is to improve the quality of our wheat, partly through an exhibition, at which all competitors will be inspired to attempt to excel each other, and partly through papers and addresses on the various diseases to which the cereal world is subject, so the educational value of such a show will be very great.

Mr. KENNEDY: It seems to me that we are going to pay a big price for this show, and while the instructional value of the addresses and papers may amount to something it seems to me that $100,000 or possibly $200,000 spent in scientific work would go much further in providing a way to overcome diseases such as rust and smut. I have a great deal of doubt as to the value of this vote, but I do not intend to oppose it in the meantime. However, I would like to know what control may be exercised, as far as this house is concerned, with regard to the expenditure. Are we absolutely through when this money is expended, or will there be a report made to this department giving all the details?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This department will be well represented on the various boards, and I happen to be the chairman. Among other things which will be taken up at the various conferences—because there will be some six or eight sections running concurrently in order that all the ground may be covered in a reasonable time—are soils, physics, chemistry, bacteriological cultural methods, weeds, experimental methods of seed production and registration, farm management, fertilizers, eradication or control of insect pests, agricultural machinery, harvesting, markets, grading, merchandising, storage and transportation requirements, and also milling and baking tests. It is a very comprehensive program indeed.

Mr. KENNEDY: Are there any of these questions on which we have not pretty full information at present?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have never found an occasion of this nature, which brings together all the experts of the wheat growing world, which has not been of very great value indeed. It has been my privilege from time to time to attend a number of international conferences both in the United States and Canada, and I have obtained a great deal of very valuable information from them. I think it is generally conceded that we should use all the forces available to put our wheat once more in its old position.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): As an advertising project I think that this has merit; I think it will be a fine way of attracting the attention of the world to Canada and its possibilities, agricultural and otherwise. The educational work carried on by the Department of Agriculture has conveyed to those of us who are interested enough to study all the information which is known about this subject. Will a complete accounting be made of the expenditure under this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That will be made to parliament?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is more than a grant, then?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. There will be a very close supervision kept of the expenditure because we are well represented upon the committee.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A mere supervision of the expenditure is not enough; will the house be presented with a statement, properly audited?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What progress is being made with regard to the prevention of tuberculosis in cattle?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The matter of tuberculosis eradication was taken up by the committee on bovine research which met in Ottawa last winter. Very extensive experiments were reported, both by the authorities in Alberta and by the various subcommittees throughout Canada which are cooperating in this work. Nothing was brought forth which would indicate that any additional light has been thrown upon the virtues of any superior system other than the one we are trying out at the present time, the B.C.G. This vaccine has received a good deal of publicity and it is admitted that a certain amount of immunity is imparted to the young animals through inoculation, but that immunity is only of comparatively short duration and has not proven to be 100 per cent perfect. Further research work has been undertaken, not only here, but practically in all the research stations in the world, including that of the League of Nations, in an endeavour to find out the actual virtues of the B.C.G. vaccine.

Until our scientists are able to discover a more effective method, we propose to continue along the line we are following. The last court of appeal to which the B.C.G. vaccine has been submitted is that of the League of Nations, but they have decided on further experimentation before giving any decision. I believe a six-year period of research has been decided upon before this vaccine can be recommended, and perhaps not then.

Mr. GARDINER: What progress has been made with the research work being carried on at Hull?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have obtained the least immunizing results from our work with B.C.G. at our Hull laboratory and the most immunizing results from the provincial laboratory in Alberta. I think the difference in results is due to the length of time the experimental animals were kept before being slaughtered and to a certain degree some difference in the virulency of the germ or tubercle bacilli.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any literature available which would give those interested the results of these experiments?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is the report of our own department and the report of the research council. We have received some reports from the League of Nations which are very interesting, and if we could pick out the most interesting parts and have them embodied in a small bulletin I think it would make very interesting reading.

Mr. GARDINER: I would suggest that the minister take into consideration the printing of this literature and its distribution to the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will.

Mr. LUCAS: How many restricted areas are there in Canada, and how many have been added during the past year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is the Fraser River valley, in British Columbia; Last Mountain area in Saskatchewan; Carman district in Manitoba; Prince Edward county in Ontario; the Beauharnois-Huntingdon in Quebec, which extends eastward to the Richelieu river and then further eastward to the St. Francis river; a small area in New Brunswick about ten miles out of Fredericton; the entire province of Prince Edward Island; the entire province of Nova Scotia, with the exception of Cape Breton. We intend to extend this year the Carman area in Manitoba northward to lake Manitoba. The principal work to be engaged in this summer, however, will be in the province of Ontario between the junction of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers and the Rideau canal. That area will take in a little over ten constituencies and I think it will keep us fully occupied for the next year. Four constituencies will be added in the province of Quebec in order to connect up the area with eastern Ontario. We are trying to build up a beautiful Ottawa, and we should endeavour to build up an hygienic Ottawa as well.

Mr. LUCAS: What amount of compensation was paid last year?

Mr. BROWN: I hope the minister will keep in mind the extension of the common area southerly and southwesterly from its present boundary and taking in the municipalities of Pembina, Stanley and Rhineland. This would round out the common area by extending it to the international boundary. I think application has been made from at least two of these municipalities to be included in the area.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that it will be necessary to include but one municipality in order to reach the international boundary, and to include one on the east to reach the Red river; the area would extend to the international boundary on the south, the Red river on the east and the Assiniboia river on the north, which would make a very satisfactory area.

Mr. LUCAS: What amount of compensation was paid last year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For restricted areas, $867,132.

Mr. LUCAS: That is getting very close to a million dollars, is it not?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The other was the accredited herds and we have about thirty areas under what we call the municipal order; for instance, cities like Ottawa and Guelph are under the old municipal order of fifteen years ago. That and the accredited herds make up the balance between this sum and $1,000,000.

Mr. FRASER: What is the status in connection with the $146 to which I referred?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Might I ask my hon. friend the result of the negotiations between himself and my deputy since this morning? He will recall that at the nice little conversation that took place in my office, I pointed out that I did not see how, with three authorities deciding in writing against his contention and in favour of mine, we could make any progress. So it was proposed that he and my deputy should endeavour, by going down to-morrow morning to the Civil Service Commission—I do not know what kind of weapons they are going to take with them—to get results.

Mr. FRASER: I claim the decision made by the Department of Justice and the Civil Service Commission was hardly fair to the man who was claiming the compensation. Am I to understand that if I am to make that point clear, the minister will pay the $146?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would be glad to pay that amount and get rid of the whole question, but I do not see how I can do it. We have dozens and, indeed, hundreds of such claims, and if we pay a claim without justification, we open the door to innumerable others.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to say a few words to the minister in regard to the salaries of the research men in his department. It is very hard for some of us to understand the policy of the Department of Agriculture in connection with the expenditure of money for different purposes. I think the minister is on record as saying that the research men in his department should be paid higher salaries than they are receiving at the present time. He will not deny that we have lost the services of several valuable men who have been engaged in research in connection with rust, simply because we did not pay them sufficient salaries. I thought a year ago that no doubt by this time the salaries of such men would have been readjusted, but no action has yet been taken. I was wondering whether the minister would be good enough to tell us why he is granting $100,000 towards the grain exposition which is to be held at Regina and has not yet succeeded in getting fitting salaries for men engaged in research work. I am credibly informed that we are going to lose some more of these men this year because the government has dilly-dallied with the question for so long. The government finally got a report from the Civil Service Commission, recommending an increase of salary to these men. The Minister of Finance, who last year would not give us any encouragement in regard to the matter, because, as he said, the Civil Service Commission had not reported, now assumes the attitude that he is going to have another commission inquire into the case again. Has the minister not been able to convince the cabinet that it is really necessary that these research men should be paid a little more, and would the minister say that in his opinion the expenditure of $100,000 for the grain exposition is more justifiable than paying these men increased salaries? I am anxious to know the attitude of the minister. Does he think this advertising scheme is more important than the retaining of these research men in his department, because I am satisfied—and the minister must be of the same opinion—that he is going to lose one or two valuable men if their salaries are not adjusted before another year passes by?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As my hon. friend knows, we have had from the Civil Service Commission a report which has in turn been referred to a commission composed of Mr. Beatty, Doctor Murray and Sir George Garneau. While the matter is before that commission, I do not see how we can make any comments that would be germane to the question, except that I might say that I have never ceased endeavouring to have agriculture recognized as being on a parity with other departments in the matter of salaries. I have always taken the ground that a technical man in agriculture is worth just as much to the country as a technical man in any other department. That was not recognized even by the Civil Service Commission, until about a year ago. The question has arisen: What constitutes a technical man? And the committee has that question before it.

Mr. COOTE: Opposition is often expressed to the proposal to pay the research men in the Department of Agriculture a little more money because it is said that the department is spending too much money now. I am not saying that such is the case; but if the cabinet are willing to spend only a certain amount in connection with the Department of Agriculture, it would be much better to spend this $100,000 in paying these research men higher salaries and to do without the grain exposition which is, after all, merely an advertising proposition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, no.

Mr. COOTE: While they are advertising we may lose a man whose services might be of just as much value to the country as those of Doctor Saunders, the man who propagated marquis wheat and placed it on the market for the benefit of the farmers of Canada. The minister is pursuing a rather unwise policy in this regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no reason in the world why both these services should not be carried on and both these expenditures made. The situation would not be improved by abandoning the world exposition because, as I understand the question, it is one not of the money, but of deciding what constitutes technical men. That is what the Beatty commission is working out now. My deputy reminds me that the other day he and others had the opportunity of being heard before the commission. I was not there, but I can imagine what kind of evidence my deputy would give and I understand that it was favourably received. Everything is being done that can be done in this regard. Long before I came here I was told that the staff were constantly on the job, endeavouring to get their technical men on an equality with others,

Mr. COOTE: If this commission should decide that a number of men who are now engaged in what is called research work in connection with rust at Winnipeg, are technical men, is there any provision whereby the salaries of such men can be adjusted now without the necessity of waiting until parliament meets again?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Prior to a recent ruling, we could get an adjustment by a new classification, but apparently such general advantage was taken of this that a ruling was made that any such classification would not take effect until the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. GARDINER: Could the minister explain the reason why these men cannot secure increases when it seems to be so easy for the deputies to secure them?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend asked a question in regard to the proposal to grant increases to technical men. As he knows, a royal commission has been appointed and at the present time is meeting expressly for the purpose of advising the government what, in the opinion of its members, should be paid to these professional and technical men in the government service. The government hopes to be governed in its decision by the report of that commission. The fact that it has appointed this commission is evidence of the desire of the government to see that those coming within the categories mentioned are properly and adequately paid.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the Prime Minister if that was not the purpose of the reference to the Civil Service Commission of this same question some time ago?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was, but unfortunately the Civil Service Commission gave an answer that I do not think my hon. friend would approve of. Certainly the government did not approve of it. We think that the suggestion of the Civil Service Commission was most inadequate. We felt that the professional and technical men were entitled to very much better recognition than the Civil Service Commission was prepared to grant them, and for that reason we appointed a royal commission to look further into the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It will take its guidance, I take it, from the remarks just now made by the Prime Minister that the salaries should be increased over the rates recommended by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think as respects certain of those concerned that my hon. friend may take that pretty much for granted.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That will be all to the good, but I frankly look with a good deal of dread and disappointment at the continuous delays on the part of the administration in this matter. They have simply passed the thing on from one year to another. The Prime Minister's excuse at this moment may be a very legitimate and a very laudable one, that the government desire to give an increase to the technical men greater than that proposed by the Civil Service Commission. I think perhaps that that is worth while waiting for. In the meantime let us hope that the words of the Prime Minister may be an encouragement to these technical men who are now thinking of leaving their present positions in Canada, and that that encouragement will help them to continue in their present positions.

Mr. COOTE: My only reason for delaying the committee one minute on this question is that I am credibly informed that we are liable to lose one or two of the most valuable men we have engaged in research work in connection with rust, which after all, is one of the biggest problems facing agriculture in Canada. If the remarks of the Prime Minister are correct, I am a little surprised that the government did not accept the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, and if they felt that the technical men were not being adequately compensated by the increases recommended by the Civil Service Commission they could then very well have appointed the royal commission which is now sitting and empowered them to recommend further increases to such of the technical men as they think should receive it. As I said, we are very liable to lose one or two men, particularly one whom we should find it impossible to replace, and who will likely go to the United States at an initial salary of $10,000 whereas we pay him around $3,000. The government should take a little more intelligent interest in what I consider to be some of the most vital questions affecting agriculture in Canada to-day, instead of taking so much interest in these advertising shows.

Progress reported.

Resolution read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I beg to move:

That the resolutions adopted in committee of supply on April 24, 25, 26, 29, May 3, 6, 10, 20, 28, 29, 30, 31, and June 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, be now read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. FRASER: I asked the Minister of Finance a question just before the committee rose at one o'clock—

Mr. SPEAKER: There can be no debate on the motion.

Mr. ROBB: By unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman might put his question.

Mr. FRASER: I had asked the Minister of Finance a question in regard to the audit board and he made the following reply: "Perhaps later on I might let any one item stand and give that information to my hon. friend when I have secured it." I wonder if the minister would put the information on Hansard.

Mr. ROBB: The information with respect to the Board of Audit which my hon. friend asked for is as follows:

Board of Audit

Remuneration—Annual

Chairman, Gordon W. Scott, $4,000.
Members, L. E. Potvin, $3,000; E. J. Howson, $3,000.

The rates of compensation for skilled assistance, authorized by the treasury board, are:
Partners, not over $50 per diem.
Senior clerks, not over $35 per diem.
Assistant clerks, not over $15 per diem.

In addition to these rates both the members of the board and their assistants are allowed actual travelling and living expenses.

Work authorized and completed

Treasury board minute of February 21, 1927 authorized inquiry and investigation into certain branches and accounts of the Department of Finance. The report of the board was completed on December 16, 1927 and tabled during the session of 1928.

Treasury board minute of March 24, 1927 authorized the board to inquire into and report on the financial affairs of the Quebec harbour commission. The report of the board was completed on January 16, 1928 and tabled during the session of 1928.

[Mr. Coote.]

Treasury board minute of March 24, 1927 authorized an audit of the affairs in connection with the enemy property and debt accounts. The report of the board was completed and laid before parliament during the present session.

Work authorized but not yet completed

Treasury board minute of November 16, 1928 authorized the board to inquire into and report on the accounts and records of the Canadian government elevators and the western and eastern grain inspection divisions.

Treasury board minutes of January 25, 1929 authorized the board to inquire into and report on the financial affairs of the following harbour commissions:

Halifax harbour commission.
St. John harbour commission.
Montreal harbour commission.
Quebec harbour commission.
Chicoutimi harbour commission.
Three Rivers harbour commission.
Vancouver harbour commission.
New Westminster harbour commission.

Treasury board minute of January 25, 1929 authorized the board to inquire into and report with regard to the loaning operations of the Soldier Settlement Board of Canada.

Treasury board minute of January 25, 1929 authorized the board to inquire into payments to the Canadian National Railways under the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Treasury Board minute of January 25, 1929 directed the board to inquire into and report in regard to collection of naturalization fees by the clerks of courts.

Expenditures of the government in connection with the board to March 31, 1929 were:

Fiscal Year	Compensation to Members	Other Expenses	Total
1927-28.. ..	$10,000	$61,317 64	$71,317 64
1928-29.. ..	10,000	59,851 71	69,851 71

Mr. FRASER: In regard to premium bonds, I have been reviewing this question considerably during the session, all based on the report of the Auditor General. I do not propose to discuss it at the present time, as I have already spoken about it, but I would suggest that the minister appoint an inter-departmental commission to review the whole question of indemnity bonds so far as the collection and distribution of the revenue of the country is concerned. As chairman of the commission I would suggest Mr. Finlayson, the superintendent of insurance, and as to the other members, the Minister of Finance knows his officials better than I do.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has already brought this matter to the attention of the house. He may recall that I said some days ago that we had asked the Department of Justice for a ruling as to the legality of the procedure. We have made up our minds to have an inter-departmental inquiry made if the ruling of the Department of Justice is that the present method is not legal. In any event, I think that it would be profitable to have an inter-departmental inquiry, so that we can report to parliament next session.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, the sum of $243,168,149.17 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 365, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORT ON ORGANIZATION OF THE STAFF

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to lay before the house the hardy annual—the report of the organization of the staff of the House of Commons.

On motion of Mr. Rinfret the report was concurred in.

PRIVATE BILLS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move that the house proceed to the order "private bills."

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

THIRD READING

Bill No. 357, for the relief of Isabella Henderson.—Mr. Heaps.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 316, for the relief of Catherine McRae Beattie McRae.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 337, for the relief of Edward Ernest True.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 338, for the relief of Glennville Wesley Potter.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 339, for the relief of Elizabeth Mitchell.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 340, for the relief of Edith May Enfield.—Mr. Howden.

Bill No. 341, for the relief of Lillian Elizabeth Barton.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 360, for the relief of Ruth Oretta Taaffe.—Mr. Donnelly.

Bill No. 361, for the relief of Frank William Benson.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 362, for the relief of Hilda Rebecca Allison.—Mr. Jelliff.

Bill No. 363, for the relief of Sydney James Black.—Mr. Hay.

Bill No. 364, for the relief of Llewellyn John Chubb.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

LOUIS COIT DARGAVEL

The house in committee on Bill No. 348, for the relief of Louis Coit Dargavel—Mr. Casselman—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. HEAPS: This bill, Mr. Chairman, provoked considerable discussion last Tuesday evening, and by a majority vote it was referred back to the private bills committee. I think it hardly fair under the circumstances that the measure should be brought up at this late hour; it is not right, because there is so much involved in it. Certain evidence was supposed to be submitted to the senate committee but they claim they had not time to go into the matter. I do not think we should rush these bills through the house with undue haste without giving the parties concerned an opportunity for a proper hearing. This undue haste leaves a bad impression, and for the sake of the house itself I think we should adopt a better method of dealing with these cases. I do not want to move an amendment, but in view of the fact that the bill was referred back to the special committee for the purpose of taking further evidence I think we should have an explanation from the chairman of the committee as to why the matter is now before us without having been properly inquired into.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. HEAPS: No. Is the chairman of the private bills committee present?

Mr. BROWN: I was prepared to speak in opposition to this bill and to give reasons why it should not carry. When the bill was before the house a few evenings ago I was not then familiar with the evidence and therefore I did not vote on the question at that time; I was entirely ignorant of the circumstances.

Afterwards I reviewed the evidence to the best of my ability and I wish now to place before the committee as well as I can the situation as it appears to me.

The petitioners in this case seemed to rest all their evidence, in the first place, upon the alleged fact that the respondent and the co-respondent had been living together as man and wife in a certain block in the city of Rochester. A witness was brought before the senate committee to prove that. The janitress testified that these people had been living there under the assumed name of Rugg. The name of the co-respondent is Kottmeir. The janitress, as I say swore that these people had been living there under this assumed name. She was brought here evidently at the earnest solicitation of a private detective named Wilcox. If you read the evidence you will see that it required a good deal of persuasion on the part of the private detective to get that woman to come; but finally she was persuaded to appear and give evidence. Later evidence was brought that entirely rebutted that testimony. It was shown that Rugg was not a fictitious name but the real name of a man who had been living with his wife in these apartments at the time in question. There was at least suspicion that perjury had been committed in the case. It was shown that the woman who was living in these apartments did not in any way resemble the respondent; the respondent is, I understand, a woman of medium size while the wife of Rugg was a large, tall woman. So that this at least gives countenance to the belief that there had been perjury in the matter. At any rate, the evidence was completely overthrown by the testimony of the former janitor, a man named Shaw, and of his wife, who proved that Rugg and his wife had occupied the apartment at the time the respondent and the co-respondent were alleged to have occupied it. The testimony on that point seemed absolutely conclusive, and the whole case rested in the first place upon that allegation. But when that was overthrown they sought to bring in evidence on another point. This private detective Wilcox accordingly swore that he had seen the respondent and the co-respondent going into another apartment or apartment block—for there seemed to be some confusion on that point—on three different occasions. On two of these occasions, he said, he watched them going into the apartment but he did not see them coming out, and on the third occasion he saw them going in at a certain time early in the afternoon and coming out about five o'clock. This is an entirely uncorroborated statement on the part of the private detective, who we have reason to believe was guilty of bringing forward false testimony in regard to the other apartments. His testimony is entirely unsupported. At the very best it would be only negative evidence; he says he saw them going in but did not see them coming out. On the third occasion however, as I say, he saw them coming out a few hours later but he did not follow them further than to the door of the apartment house. When the case was brought before the senate committee counsel for the respondent wished to bring forward further evidence; at least, he sought a delay in order that he might submit additional testimony. And to support his request for an adjournment he produced certain affidavits. He did not produce them by way of evidence, because the senate committee does not admit affidavits as evidence; he produced them to support his plea for a further adjournment. He was not granted the length of adjournment he wished; he was given a short adjournment which did not afford him an opportunity to bring the evidence he wanted. The affidavits produced are here and I believe they are in proper order. I am not accustomed to dealing with these matters, but so far as I can see they are in perfectly proper order. And the affidavits are to the effect that during the time covering the dates on which the respondent and the co-respondent are said to have been seen going into the apartment house, the man was sick in bed and therefore could not possibly be seen by the private detective as alleged. There is, it is true, another incident that took place in the Oliver apartments, but even in respect to that incident nothing more than an inference can be drawn, and both the respondent and the co-respondent give what seems to be a reasonable explanation of what happened there.

Remember, then, these facts: The statement upon which the whole case was based turned out to be false; it was absolutely disproven. Then there was the private detective, who, we have reason to believe, induced the janitress to come here and commit perjury. I saw her affidavit in which she withdrew the statements she had made. What weight, then, can be given to the testimony of that private detective?—because after all it is on his evidence we must depend. I have reviewed the case very hastily and only as a layman, but it seems to me that the charges against the woman have not been proven, and I think this committee should throw out the bill.

[Mr. Brown.]

Mr. HEAPS: I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HEAPS: I am rather in doubt as to what would be the effect if we rise and report progress now. I am under the impression that if the committee rises and reports progress we will have to proceed with the third readings of the other bills which have been reported. If that is the case I would like the motion to stand, otherwise I would withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is moving that the committee rise and report progress on this bill?

Mr. HEAPS: No, on all the bills; but before the motion is put I would like to know whether it would mean that the other bills will receive third reading now. I do not want to prevent them from being read the third time, but I am opposed to this bill

The CHAIRMAN: Bill 348 is now before the committee and it will be necessary for the committee to decide if this bill should stand while we report progress on the other bills. Is it the desire of the committee that the proceedings in connection with Bill 348 and Bill 296 should stand for the moment while progress is reported on the other bills?

Motion agreed to.

CHARLES EDWIN WALKER

The house resumed from June 11 consideration of the motion of Mr. Sanderson for the third reading of Bill No. 296, for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker.

Mr. FRANKLIN SMOKE (Brant): In the absence of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Sanderson) I beg leave to move the third reading of this bill. I have read very carefully the evidence taken before the senate committee and I think it proves conclusively the charges alleged in the petition. An adjournment was asked for by the respondent for the purpose of producing a cousin named Mrs. Henderson. The adjournment asked for was not allowed but one of ten or twelve days was granted. Mrs. Henderson did not appear at the adjourned hearing, and counsel for the respondent appeared simply to ask for the expunging of certain portions of the evidence. The senate committee then heard the further evidence and found in favour of the complainant. The evidence which it was alleged Mrs. Henderson would give was in the nature of an alibi. The respondent and Mrs. Henderson were residing together, but it is not reasonable to suppose that Mrs. Henderson would have been able to prove where the respondent was on the three occasions upon which it was alleged offences occurred. One might have happened in one month, the next one two months later, and so on; therefore the evidence as to an alibi could not be conclusive. The bill was referred by this house to the private bills committee and the complainant and his lawyer were present but no one appeared for the respondent although the agent in Ottawa was notified. I therefore beg to move that the question be now put.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I was a member of the private bills committee—

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is moving the previous question?

Mr. SMOKE: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: When the bill was before the house I understand that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) moved an amendment thereto; has Your Honour that amendment?

An hon. MEMBER: There was no seconder.

Mr. SPEAKER: The records show that there was no amendment. If the hon. leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Gardiner) will read No. 43 of the order paper he will find that it reads as follows:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Sanderson for the third reading of Bill No. 296, intituled: "An Act for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker" (Without amendment).

There is no amendment before the chair, but the previous question is always debatable.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Do I understand Your Honour to rule that it is not debatable?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is debatable.

Mr. ADSHEAD: As I remember the case, there was a material witness who was unable to appear before the senate committee because she had undergone a very serious operation. This witness was to prove an alibi for the respondent. It would be a very serious matter to this lady if a divorce were granted upon the grounds of adultery without her being given every opportunity to prove otherwise.

Mr. SMOKE: I rise to a point of order. If my motion is debatable the subject matter referred to by the hon. member who has just taken his seat should not be discussed. He is discussing the merits of the case.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is debatable.

Mr. SMOKE: The motion is that the question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was asked a minute ago whether the motion for the previous question was debatable or not and I said that it was debatable. Let me call attention to standing order 38 which reads:

> The following motions are debatable:—
> Every motion
> (c) for the previous question.

Therefore, when a motion is made for the previous question, it is debatable. I have been asked by some hon. members what is meant by the previous question. Those who vote in favour of the previous question, that is, that the question be now put, vote for an immediate decision, without any further debate or amendment, after this vote is taken, on the principle of the bill. After the motion for the previous question is carried, there is no discussion on the principle of the bill.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Smoke) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Baldwin,	Robb,
Bancroft,	Ross (Kingston City),
Bell (St. Antoine),	Ryerson,
Bock,	Sanderson,
Bowen,	Senn,
Bowman,	Simpson,
Casselman,	Sinclair (Wellington North),
Elliott,	Smoke,
Fraser,	Spotton,
Hepburn,	Steedsman,
Johnston (Long Lake),	Stewart (Leeds),
Kay,	Stirling,
Kellner,	Taylor,
McLean (Melfort),	Telford,
McIntosh,	Thorson,
McKenzie,	Totzke,
McPhee,	Vallance,
McRae,	Ward,
Malcolm,	Young (Saskatoon).—40.
Neill,
Ralston,

NAYS

Messrs:

Adshead,	Garland (Bow River),
Benoit,	Heaps,
Bourassa,	Jelliff,
Brown,	Kennedy,
Campbell,	Letellier de St. Just,
Coote,	Lucas,
Fansher (Last Mountain),	Luchkovich,
Forke,	Smith (Stormont),
Gardiner,	Speakman,
	Spencer.—19.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the third reading of bill No. 296, for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker. Moved by Mr. Smoke, seconded by Mr. Senn, that this bill be now read a third time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed, on division.

LOUIS COIT DARGAVEL

Mr. A. C. CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 348, for the relief of Louis Goit Dargavel.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On Section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. HEAPS: I beg to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion (Mr. Heaps) negatived.

Section agreed to on division.

Section 2 agreed to on division.

Preamble agreed to on division.

Title agreed to on division.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the report be received?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Next sitting of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Mr. SPEAKER: The house will have to decide. There is no amendment to the bill. Those in favour of having the bill reported now will kindly say aye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will kindly say no.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the ayes have it. When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. GARDINER: Next sitting.

Mr. SPEAKER: In cases of pressing necessity, the sponsor of the bill can ask for the third reading now.

Mr. CASSELMAN: In view of the statement that you have just made, Mr. Speaker, and considering that this is almost the last minute of the session, this case is urgent, and I would therefore move with the leave of the house that the bill be now read a third time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Next sitting.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is for the house to say. Standing order 77 says:

All amendments made in committee are reported by the chairman to the house, which shall receive the same forthwith. After report the bill is open to debate and amendment, before it is ordered for a third reading. But when a bill is reported without amendment, it is forthwith ordered to be read a third time at such time as may be appointed by the house.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the third time.

Mr. CASSELMAN moved that the bill do now pass and that the title be as on the order paper.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, we did not hear you say that the bill was read a third time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Oh yes, I put the question quite audibly. It is now moved that the bill do now pass and the title be as on the order paper. Is there objection to that?

Mr. GARDINER: Certainly.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour of the motion will kindly rise.

Mr. BOURASSA: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are in full house and a registered vote should be taken upon this motion. The vote cannot be taken by counting heads.

Mr. SPEAKER: I asked that the names be called as usual. Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Casselman) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Bancroft	Robb,
Bell (St. Antoine),	Ross (Kingston City),
Bock,	Ryerson,
Bowen,	Sanderson,
Bowman,	Senn,
Casselman,	Simpson,
Elliott,	Sinclair (Wellington North),
Fraser,	Spotton,
Hepburn,	Steedsman,
Johnston (Long Lake),	Stewart (Leeds),
Kay,	Stirling,
McLean (Melfort),	Taylor,
McIntosh,	Telford,
McKenzie,	Thorson,
McPhee,	Totzke,
McRae,	Vallance,
Malcolm,	Young (Saskatoon).—36.
Neill,
Ralston,

NAYS

Messrs:

Adshead,	Garland (Bow River),
Baldwin,	Heaps,
Benoit,	Jelliff,
Bourassa,	Kellner,
Brown,	Kennedy,
Campbell,	Letellier de St. Just,
Coote,	Lucas,
Fansher (Last Mountain),	Luchkovich,
Forke,	Smith (Stormont),
Gardiner,	Speakman,
	Spencer.—21.

At 4.50 p.m. the sitting was suspended until 5 p.m. this day.

The house resumed at five o'clock.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the senate chamber.

In the senate chamber, His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

BILLS ASSENTED TO

An Act to amend the Railway Act.

An Act for the relief of Calvert Mitchell Carruthers.

An Act for the relief of Florence Jane Sheppard.

An Act for the relief of William Ernest Foulkes.

An Act for the relief of Harry Babington Millward.

An Act for the relief of Alla Chretter.

An Act for the relief of Myrtle Virginia Maulson.

An Act for the relief of Claude Le Cheminant.

An Act for the relief of Alice Gladys Barkey.

An Act for the relief of Irene Mabel Usher.

An Act for the relief of Anna Estella DeNike.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Spain.

An Act for the relief of Louisa Hitchman.

An Act for the relief of Minerva Elliott.

An Act for the relief of Edyth May Shields.

An Act for the relief of Mary Melvina Guerin.

An Act for the relief of Marion Ruth Laidman.

An Act for the relief of Sophia Love.

An Act for the relief of Harry Freeman Switzer.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point on the Murray Harbour Branch to a point on the Georgetown Subdivision of the Canadian Government Railways, in the Province of Prince Edward Island.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from Sunnybrae to Guysborough, in the Province of Nova Scotia.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point on the Dundas Subdivision near Brantford to a point on the Dunnville Subdivision near Cainsville, in the Province of Ontario.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Line from a point on the Garson Branch to the Falconbridge Mine, in the Province of Ontario.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point on the Sudbury Branch to a point in the Township of Fairbank, in the Province of Ontario.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point near Melfort to a point near Aberdeen, in the Province of Saskatchewan.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point near Central Butte or Mawer to a point in Township 18 or 19, Range 10, 11 or 12, West of the Third Meridian in the Province of Saskatchewan.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from Neidpath to a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway near Swift Current, in the Province of Saskatchewan.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from Ridgedale, in the Province of Saskatchewan, thirty miles toward The Pas, in the Province of Manitoba.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point near Unity to a point near the Provincial Boundary in Township 36 or 37, in the Province of Saskatchewan.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point near Hamlin to a point near Glenbush, Medstead or Robin Hood, in the Province of Saskatchewan.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from St. Walburg, in the Province of Saskatchewan, to Bonnyville, in the Province of Alberta.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from Alliance to a point near Youngstown or Dobson, in the Province of Alberta.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point at or near Bulwark to a point in Township 38 or 39, Range 8, West of the Fourth Meridian, in the Province of Alberta.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from Hemaruka to Scapa, in the Province of Alberta.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from a point near Swift Creek to a point near Tête Jaune, in the Province of British Columbia.

An Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line from New Westminster to a point on Lulu Island, in the Province of British Columbia, with Branches therefrom.

An Act to amend the Civil Service Act (Private Secretaries).

An Act respecting The Toronto Terminals Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to authorize the acquisition of the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway.

An Act to authorize consent to the sale of certain cable and wireless telegraph undertakings established under the Pacific Cable Acts, 1901 to 1924 (Imp.), and the West Indian Islands (Telegraph) Act, 1924 (Imp.).

An Act for the relief of Agnes Victoria Leader.

An Act for the relief of Adèle Cawthra Rogers.

An Act for the relief of Madelaine Virginia Lumsden.

An Act for the relief of Edgar Charles Buchanan.

An Act for the relief of Isabel Honor Gilderoy.

An Act for the relief of Harvey Baden Powell Haney.

An Act for the relief of John Campbell.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Nicholl.

An Act for the relief of Marjory Lavinia Bradford.

An Act for the relief of Patrizio Nardini.

An Act for the relief of Constance Mary Kearns.

An Act for the relief of Edna Louise Brown.

An Act for the relief of Wallace Evered Gillespie.

An Act for the relief of Florence May Forbes.

An Act for the relief of Susannah Musson Savery.

An Act for the relief of Maud Parker.

An Act for the relief of Eleanor Vair.

An Act for the relief of Lillian Augusta Dunn.

An Act for the relief of Catherine Goring.

An Act for the relief of Mary Bertha Dupuis Ranger.

An Act for the relief of Ivy Georgina Lloyd.

An Act for the relief of Helen Steele.

An Act for the relief of Annie Forbes Sangster.

An Act for the relief of Charles Stanley Cuneo.

An Act for the relief of William Allan Griffith.

An Act for the relief of Sydney Bishop.

An Act for the relief of Walter Henry Lyne Dixson.

An Act respecting the Canadian National Railways, and to provide for the refunding of certain maturing financial obligations.

An Act to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

An Act to provide for a further loan to the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners.

An Act to provide for a loan to the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners.

An Act to provide for a further loan to the Chicoutimi Harbour Commissioners.

An Act to provide for a further loan to the Halifax Harbour Commissioners.

An Act respecting the Administration of Justice in the Yukon Territory.

An Act to provide for a further loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act to amend the Excise Act.

An Act respecting Joliette and Northern Railway Company.

An Act respecting The Premier Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act respecting a certain patent of Zebulum Colvin Ketchum.

An Act for the relief of Frederick Rutherfoord Zoppi.

An Act for the relief of Thomas Southwood.

An Act for the relief of Bessie Ruth Glass.

An Act for the relief of Edith Marie McFarlane.

An Act for the relief of Cleoniki Paleologou Drakoulas.

An Act for the relief of Nanette Coffey.

An Act for the relief of James Graham McCreadie.

An Act for the relief of Stephen Dymon.

An Act for the relief of Marion Isabel Kemp.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Crawford Copping.

An Act for the relief of Arthur Alderton.

An Act for the relief of Elias Abraham, otherwise known as Elie Abraham Allen.

An Act for the relief of Claude Frederick Burgin.

An Act for the relief of Mary Addie Linton.

An Act for the relief of Edna Maud James.

An Act for the relief of Helen Jane Sim Pittendreich.

An Act for the relief of Alfred Roy Edwards.

An Act for the relief of Molly Vaughan.

An Act for the relief of Myrtle Mary Jane McLean.

An Act for the relief of Jeanie Mathieson Howell.

An Act for the relief of Gordon Asher True.

An Act for the relief of Ida Rosenberg.

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to authorize the acquisition of the Quebec Oriental Railway and the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway.

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to authorize the acquisition of the Saint John and Quebec Railway.

An Act respecting certain employees of the Postal or Railway Mail Service of Canada.

An Act to amend and consolidate the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.

An Act to amend an Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line between Grand'Mere and East Burrills, in the province of Quebec.

An Act to amend an Act respecting the construction of a Canadian National Railway Line, being a joint section from Rosedale southeasterly in the province of Alberta.

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to authorize the acquisition of The Kent Northern Railway.

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to authorize the acquisition of the Inverness Railway.

An Act respecting a certain patent of Cobb Connector Company.

An Act respecting a certain patent of Jean Baptiste Hurteau.

An Act for the relief of Marie Rose Beffre Baer.

An Act for the relief of Ethel Evelyn Farrow.

An Act for the relief of John Alfred Neary.

An Act for the relief of Charles Storey.

An Act for the relief of Eva Alexandra Grayson Smith.

An Act for the relief of Ernest Gillespie Simpson.

An Act for the relief of Laura Grace Osborne Lea.

An Act for the relief of Gertrude Helena Martin.

An Act for the relief of Laura Warren.

An Act for the relief of Ethel Elizabeth Kelley.

An Act for the relief of Andrew Ralph Wilson.

An Act for the relief of Marion Jane Stewart.

An Act for the relief of Mildred Muriel Lange.

An Act for the relief of Linda Lydia Snowdon Pascoe.

An Act for the relief of John Garbery Hickman.

An Act for the relief of Lydia Alice Hinch.

An Act for the relief of Allan Plant.

An Act for the relief of Pansy Jean Van Luven.

An Act for the relief of William Treslove.

An Act for the relief of Annie Letticia Smith.

An Act for the relief of Frederick Herman Schelke.

An Act for the relief of Jennie White.

An Act for the relief of Alma Berlinda Swayne.

An Act for the relief of Gladys Evelyn Lawrence.

An Act for the relief of Daniel Ray Bouvier.

An Act for the relief of Edyth Viola Beacock.

An Act for the relief of Bertha Nichols.

An Act for the relief of George Nelson Brown.

An Act for the relief of Albert Victor Walter Holman Homan.

An Act for the relief of James Duncan Gerard.

An Act for the relief of Frances Vera Carter Van Luven.

An Act for the relief of Violet Haney.

An Act for the relief of James Thompson Clark.

An Act for the relief of James Collingwood Darroch.

An Act for the relief of Ross James Smalley.

An Act for the relief of Alexander James Purse.

An Act for the relief of Wilfred Keith Black.

An Act for the relief of Fanny Green Fuchs Webber.

An Act for the relief of Henry Lawrence Jones.

An Act for the relief of Dean William Moncrieff.

An Act for the relief of William John Brett.

An Act for the relief of Grace Viola Byers.

An Act for the relief of Mildred Soden.

An Act for the relief of Mabel Graham.

An Act for the relief of Velma Stella Seadon.

An Act for the relief of Emma O'Grady.

An Act for the relief of Edna Marguerite Stroud Robinson.

An Act for the relief of Gordon Hanna.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Richardson.

An Act for the relief of Angus John Archibald Blaine.

An Act for the relief of Thomas Horace Sillery.

An Act for the relief of George Melville Fulton.

An Act for the relief of Gladys Elizabeth Boyd.

An Act for the relief of Annie Fraser Rice.
An Act for the relief of Clarence Spurgeon White.
An Act for the relief of Gertrude Georgeanna Anderson.
An Act for the relief of Lloyd Edward Angel.
An Act for the relief of George Stanley Warner.
An Act for the relief of Vincenzina Gramigna.
An Act for the relief of Kenneth Evan Thompson.
An Act for the relief of Thomas Matthews Moland.
An Act for the relief of Andrew Townsley Hirsch.
An Act to incorporate the Northern Alberta Railways Company, and respecting the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
An Act to provide for the payment of Claims for Compensation for loss sustained by the civil population of Canada during the late War.
An Act to amend The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.
An Act respecting Water Power in the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.
An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act.
An Act to amend the Penny Bank Act.
An Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act.
An Act to amend the Insurance Act.
An Act respecting Central Finance Corporation.
An Act respecting The Dominion Fire Insurance Company.
An Act respecting Alliance Nationale.
An Act to ratify and confirm the organization and the election of directors of Fami'y Trust, and to change the name of that company to "Financial Trust Company."
An Act to incorporate The Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada.
An Act for the relief of Henry Feldman.
An Act for the relief of Marion Rose Harrison.
An Act for the relief of Robert Wilson Reoch.
An Act for the relief of William Edward King.
An Act for the relief of John Wilson Pickering.
An Act for the relief of Wallace Wellington Corkum.
An Act for the relief of Marion Anne Terry
An Act for the relief of Joseph Edwin Wood.
An Act for the relief of Dora Chearnley Chearnley.
An Act for the relief of William Edgar Baird.
An Act for the relief of Edith Laura Hewitt.
An Act for the relief of Bertha Jane Phelan.
An Act for the relief of Roland Emory Anderson.
An Act for the relief of Olive Marion Gerrard.
An Act for the relief of John Beck.
An Act for the relief of George King.
An Act respecting The New Brunswick Railway Company.
An Act respecting Juvenile Delinquents.
An Act to amend The Precious Metals Marking Act, 1928.
An Act for the relief of Ruth Leonard Wiser.
An Act respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain terminal facilities with grade separation and other works at and in the vicinity of the city of Montreal.
An Act respecting The Dominion of Canada Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company, and to change its name to "The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company."
An Act to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.
An Act to amend the Canada Grain Act.
An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act.
An Act respecting The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.
An Act for the relief of Stella Pearl Duncan.
An Act for the relief of Hurley Alexander Fummerton.
An Act for the relief of Barbara Elise Sewell de la Penotiere.
An Act for the relief of Oliver Milton Martin.
An Act for the relief of Mary Jane Teeson.
An Act for the relief of Sam Gladstone.
An Act for the relief of Charles Smolkin.
An Act for the relief of James Franklin McDonagh.
An Act for the relief of Joseph Louis Philippe Corbeau.
An Act for the relief of Frances Thirza Edlund.
An Act for the relief of Vivian Elizabeth Pearce.
An Act for the relief of Alice Clarke.
An Act for the relief of Kathleen Mary Hambourg.
An Act for the relief of Florence Gertrude Singer.
An Act for the relief of Mabel Bullis.
An Act for the relief of Fanny Elizabeth Reed Kendall.
An Act for the relief of Robert Henry Dunlop Ellis.
An Act for the relief of Evelyn Cowie.
An Act for the relief of Enid Marjorie Judd.
An Act for the relief of Vera Alice Griffin.
An Act for the relief of Cristina Adams Bourne.
An Act for the relief of Ruth Agnes Townsend.
An Act for the relief of William John Blight.
An Act for the relief of Kenneth Blackwood Gibb.
An Act for the relief of Edith Spencley.
An Act for the relief of Annie Farrow.
An Act for the relief of Evelyn Mae Warren.
An Act for the relief of Vera Maud Gendron.
An Act for the relief of Lillian Ainsworth.
An Act for the relief of Sarah Berkovitz.
An Act for the relief of George Frederick Wilson.
An Act for the relief of Roy Franklin Beattie.
An Act for the relief of John George Laney.
An Act for the relief of Albert Nott.
An Act for the relief of John Thomas Legge.
An Act for the relief of Emil Henry Hornburg.
An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.
An Act for the relief of Catherine McRae Beattie McRae.
An Act for the relief of Edward Ernest True.

An Act for the relief of Glennville Wesley Potter.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Mitchell.

An Act for the relief of Edith May Enfield.

An Act for the relief of Lillian Elizabth Barton.

An Act for the relief of Isabelle Henderson.

An Act for the relief of Ruth Oretta Taaffe.

An Act for the relief of Frank Willian Benson.

An Act for the relief of Hilda Rebecca Allison.

An Act for the relief of Sydney James Black.

An Act for the relief of Llewellyn John Chubb.

An Act for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker.

An Act for the relief of Lewis Coit Dargavel.

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons I present to Your Excellency the following bill:

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March 1930.

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the third session of the sixteenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I desire to express my appreciation of the expedition with which you have conducted the proceedings of the session of parliament now concluded, and of the attention given by you to its exacting duties.

It is gratifying to observe that it has again been possible to effect a further reduction of taxation, and also a substantial reduction in the public debt.

The improvement in Canada's financial position has been paralleled by a continuous improvement in the financial position of the Canadian railways and by a steady growth in manufacturing and in domestic and foreign trade. The acts making provision for another comprehensive program of branch line construction by the two railway systems, for the acquisition by the Canadian National system of certain lines of railway in different provinces, for the construction of adequate terminal facilities at Montreal, for the completion of the Hudson Bay Railway and harbour facilities at Fort Churchill, and for further loans to the harbour commissioners of our national ports, are indications of your recognition of the urgent demand for more adequate transportation and trade facilities.

The policy of promoting the expansion of trade by assisting the establishment of steamship services abroad has been amply justified. The Canadian National service inaugurated last year to ports in South America has required the addition of more ships than was at first contemplated, and the West Indies service has attracted an inereasing export trade. Provision has been made for an increased service to South Africa, also for establishing a new connection with Australia and New Zealand. Provision has also been made for an increase in the number of trade commissioners in foreign countries.

Resulting from an exhaustive inquiry and a unanimous report by the standing committee of the House of Commons on agriculture and colonization, amendments have been made to the Canada Grain Act respecting the storage, shipping, mixing, inspection and grading of grain, which it is believed will more adequately protect the standards of Canadian grain and prove of benefit to the producers.

With a view to the improvement of the existing electoral system, a special committee of the House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the Dominion Elections Act and the Currupt Practices Inquiries Act. After devoting much time and study to the several subjects submitted for its consideration, this committee also presented a unanimous report, in accordance with the recommendations of which important amendments to the Dominion Elections Act have been enacted. Among other changes introduced by this legislation, provision is made for the future appointment of returning officers by the chief electoral officer, and for a more efficient method of preparing election lists in urban centres.

Among other important measures enacted were bills respecting pensions to employees of the Canadian National Railways, also amendments to the Narcotic Drug Act, the Fisheries Act, the Insurance Act, and the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

The report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the financial readjustments incidental to a transfer to the province of Manitoba of its natural resources has been received. The report will be made the basis of negotiations between the governments of the Dominion and the province with a view to effecting a final agreement.

A postal convention has recently been signed whereby the rate of postage between Canada and France has been reduced.

The approval of parliament has been given to the general treaty for the renunciation of war; to the protocol for the prohibition of the use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases, and of bacteriological methods of warfare, and to the convention and protocol between Canada and the United States regarding the Niagara falls and the Niagara river.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the generous provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The progress of His Majesty's convalescence has given cause for deep thankfulness during recent months. I share your sincere hope that the complication which has lately developed may be of brief duration and that His Majesty's health may soon be completely restored.

In taking leave of you at this time, I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon your labours.

This concluded the third session of the sixteenth parliament.

END OF VOLUME III.