Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka): I would like to ask the Prime Minister when we may expect a decision of the cabinet on the repealing of the tax on motor and pleasure boats on the Muskoka lakes.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I doubt if my hon. friend's wish in that particular will be met at any rate while the house is in session.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will it be met after the house rises?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That I cannot say.

[Mr. Cahan.]

NATURAL RESOURCES OF WESTERN PROVINCES

ADMINISTRATION OF WATERPOWERS IN ALBERTA, SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 311, respecting water-power in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain. The minister said he proposed making a more lengthy statement.

Mr. STEWART: This bill is to meet the request of the house formulated in a motion that the administration of water-powers alone should be transferred to the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and that these water-powers should be administered in the same manner as is provided for in the Railway Belt Waters Act, and under an agreement similar to that existing between the province of British Columbia and the Dominion government. In the case of British Columbia the Dominion government is the owner of the lands—the railway belt and the Peace River block. In the three provinces mentioned the ownership of the waters remains within the jurisdiction of the Dominion government. At first glance it would appear to be an easy matter to outline the provisions by statute and to declare in what manner this was to be done. The law officers of our department, as well as the law officers of the Justice department, found it most difficult to do that. I have had them prepare what I am offering to-day, that is, legislative authority to make agreements, and in all particulars where they will apply the provisions will be similar to those of the Railway Belt Waters Act. That is briefly all I am asking to be done to-day.

I understand that in one case in Alberta, while they have not in any sense passed a water-powers administration act, they have as a government secured authority from their legislature to take advantage of this legislation when passed by the Dominion parliament. So that the matter will be simply one of agreement between the two governments, this government binding itself to turn over the complete administration of the water-powers of the province.

I may observe in passing, however, that some difficulties are bound to arise in connection with the administration of these powers. In every instance in which a water-power will be created the streams are interprovincial. This has caused us a good deal of difficulty in the province of Manitoba; and without in any way reflecting on any authority I think it is fortunate that the federal government had some control in relation to the administration of water-powers as between Ontario and Manitoba. Some very serious difficulties arose there, and I think I am safe in saying that it was by the good offices of the federal government that these difficulties were ironed out, with the result that they enjoy a complete utilization of the Winnipeg river and of the waters that flow out of Ontario into and through Manitoba. No doubt the same situation will present itself in connection with the administration of the water-powers of the three western provinces, but it is highly probable that the transfer of all these resources will take place in the near future, and the water-powers will, of course, go with all other resources. But from this date on, whenever the provinces are ready to avail themselves of it, they will have complete control of the administration of the water-powers, subject, of course, only to the same provision as is contained in the Railway Belt Water Act, namely, the right of veto on the part of the Minister of the Interior of the federal government.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister stated, I think, that Alberta had passed legislation which would enable the province to take advantage of this act. Was this act referred to the government of Alberta and has it been approved by them?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; that was unnecessary. The act merely gives us authority to transfer the administration—not the water-powers but the administration of the water-powers—to the provincial government.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I hope that when we are in committee on the bill the minister will indicate in what respect this legislation is of particular advantage to Alberta. I should like to know the extent of the water-powers in Alberta affected by this legislation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All the water-powers of every sort not already allocated.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Except that within the park areas.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, and in reserves.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is left?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are reserved in the British Columbia act in that respect.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But what is there left in Alberta outside the park areas?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not prepared to say offhand, but there are indications of a good many chances to establish water-powers on the Athabaska river. All these rivers fall very rapidly from the mountains. On the Red Deer river there are possibilities.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): This bill means really nothing; it is merely a pretence and that is all, for the simple and obvious reason that it is predicated on the assumption that the property ownership remains in the Dominion, and that the administration may, subject to the power of veto of the Minister of the Interior, be granted the province. In other words, if the province prepares a lease which is in any sense dissimilar from the ones now in use, the minister's veto power may be exercised—I do not say will, but may be. But there is a greater difficulty which we must face sooner or later, and that is that there are no water-powers in Alberta outside the parks. Such water-powers as are in the province of Alberta must necessarily be water-powers that have their source in the Rocky mountains, and with the wide extent of the boundaries of the Rocky Mountains park and other parks in the north, it is now painfully apparent that there can be no utilization of these water-powers for industrial and commercial purposes so long as they remain in the park, for the park authorities have made it perfectly clear that they will allow no one to undertake hydro-electric constructions within the park. That has been made perfectly clear, and they have gone so far that I ventured the other day to direct the minister's attention to the rather ridiculous position taken in relation to a dam away up in the mountains in connection with the Spray lakes. The minister himself felt that the situation was little short of ridiculous. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) is very much given to the maintenance of the beauties and scenic attractions of western Canada. I submit, however, that we must face actualities, and the fact is that there are in Alberta no water-powers which are at present not within the park areas. For that reason, so far as we are concerned, the bill is nugatory

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is only one within the park area which it is possible to develop and that is lake Minnewanka.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that further north there may be, by utilization of storage—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have cut that out under the new boundaries.

Mr. BENNETT: The new boundaries have not yet been settled?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BENNETT: If the minister contemplates changing the park boundaries then he and I are at one. But as the boundaries now stand—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Spray lakes will be outside.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, that meets the position to which I am directing attention.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. COOTE: Under this bill will the province have jurisdiction over the water-powers on rivers where irrigation rights have been granted—that is to say, where the right has been given to utilize water out of these rivers for irrigation purposes?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; that applies already to Bow river, both irrigation and power development being provided for.

Mr. COOTE: Will the government wish to retain control or to have the final say in regard to what may be done in the way of developing water-powers on the rivers in view of the interest they have in the irrigation system?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot conceive of any difficulty arising by reason of the water-powers. The water-powers that can be established will all be out of the irrigation outlets; they are all lower down. You might develop power at Bassano but that has been already granted for irrigation purposes, and irrigation in that case would be paramount.

Mr. COOTE: It is conceivable that the government might be asked at some time to have reservoirs created for water for irrigation purposes, and that water might be required at a time of year when the power company might be seeking a franchise and be desirous of getting water for power. In other words, there is room there for a conflict of interests as between those concerned in irrigation and those who are developing power. Would the Dominion government in that case wish to retain control of those rivers for the protection of those interested in irrigation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will notice that the bill provides that all grants made heretofore are fully protected and cannot be interfered with. But in any case irrigation is paramount. As to the question whether the establishment of a storage dam in the mountains for power purposes would result in a conflict between the power and irrigation interests respectively, that of course could happen; but in the plan now contemplated as affecting the southern irrigation district this would not occur. I have gone very carefully into that point. That happened perhaps in other cases where irrigation was established, but it would not affect the irrigation in this particular case.

Mr. COOTE: It does seem to me there is quite a possibility of friction between the Dominion government and the provincial governments; a provincial government might perhaps want to use some storage of water for power purposes and the Dominion government might want to use it for irrigation. I was just trying to find out how this bill would affect a situation of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT: They can use it for both.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. I do not think there will be any conflict as between the Dominion and the provinces; the only conflict I fear is the conflict which may arise as between the provinces themselves. There may be claims if storage dams are created in order to obtain more power; it may be said that this is holding up water that should pass down the stream, but that would only apply to the other provinces. It will be remembered that when we had our proposed agreement for the transfer of the resources the province of Saskatchewan asked that the whole Rocky mountain slope be made a federal forest reserve in order that the sources of the interprovincial streams might be maintained. That was one of the provisions of the proposed agreement, but I anticipate no difficulty as between the federal and the provincial authorities.

Mr. ADSHEAD: On the Bow river, entirely outside the park area according to the plans I have seen, there are certain power units which have been established even below the Ghost river, I believe. What will be the position of those units; will they be under the jurisdiction of the province or of the Dominion government?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They will be under the administration of the province. Every license issued from the date of the passing of this act will come under the administration of the province, unless the province refuses to take advantage of this legislation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Have any of these licenses been granted as yet?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The last statement of the minister is very interesting, but it does not really mean very much. The value of the undeveloped power sites still left in the province of Alberta is not very great; they are all within the present boundaries of the park area.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, my hon. friend is wrong in that statement; he is very wrong as far as the Red Deer river is concerned. There may be storage basins in the park area, but there is no power site.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We mean the power development; the possibility will be determined by the exclusion of certain areas now within the park boundaries. In part at least the minister admits that, and in answer to a question by the leader of the opposition he suggested that certain areas now included in the parks were to be placed outside the present boundaries. I would like to ask the minister when he proposes to bring in that legislation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not propose to bring it in at this session, but for the information of the hon. gentleman I may say that the Spray lake proposal comes within the park boundaries. The only possibility of increased power in the Banff national park would be the raising of the level of lake Minnewanka, which now is raised considerably and which is used as a storage basin by the Calgary Power Company.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is not much good.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I admit that, because the water freezes on the way down, but the utility of that basin could be increased very materially by raising the dam. We have objected to that; I say frankly that I have objected to it and I suggested to the Calgary Power Company that they take the Spray lakes.

I want to make our position clear with regard to the Spray lakes. After a great deal of negotiation we have practically come to an agreement with regard to that question. A great many members of this house object to that development altogether on account of the scenic properties which will be interfered with, but in order to quiet a public opinion which is becoming aroused over the thought that we are going to trespass on the scenic properties of the national parks reserved for the people of Canada I have tried to readjust the boundaries of the park to cut out all the coal areas, with the single exception of one seam of which we know, and of course with the exception of the precious metals which might be discovered. We have a proposed new line which is fairly satisfactory to the government of the province of Alberta and to ourselves, with the exception of some very minor adjustments, which cuts out the Spray lakes, but of course the Spray river which is the outlet from the Spray lakes area, flows down through the Banff national park, past the golf course and the hotel, to enter the Bow river.

I may say that there is some doubt as to the utility of this development, which involves cutting a tunnel through the mountain almost two miles in length. The damming of the area itself is a small matter, but it has been suggested that we might very well establish a power-house up at the location of the dam and allow the water to come down the Spray river. I may say frankly that I object to that suggestion for many reasons, but principally on account of the fact that the water would be used in very severe winter weather; it would freeze all the way down, leaving large blocks of ice lying about the flat area where the golf course has been located by the Canadian Pacific Railway at some very considerable expense. That would destroy the looks of our park for at least the first month of the tourist season, which is the season when our own Canadian people visit the park.

With regard to the development as first proposed, there is no objection in the world; I have said that the Calgary Power Company may have that license provided that for the months of June, July and August we are guaranteed a flow of 350 second cubic feet daily down the Spray river. We believe that is the smallest flow which will provide against the fire hazard and not destroy the appearance of a very beautiful stream. That is the only restriction which has been placed upon the development of the Spray lakes up to the present time. It will be outside the park boundary and, of course, if this act becomes law it will be under the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But when will it be outside the park boundary?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When those boundaries are established.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When will that be?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Probably at the next session of parliament.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then this bill is not of much value just now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This bill will place the administration of the Spray lakes under the province, with the exception I have stated. As I have said, we are in agreement with regard to the park boundaries with the exception of a small portion at the northern end of Jasper park; all the other boundaries have been agreed upon by the two governments. There is a small area about which there is a slight difference of opinion and that is the only portion of the boundary upon which we are not in agreement. It has been all surveyed and it is all allotted on the map; except for that one area we might very well have brought in that legislation this session. I anticipate some trouble, of course, because we are putting in force very stringent reservations with respect to mining development and developments of other kinds within the park boundaries, but I have tried to get everything capable of development outside the boundaries of the park.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the act changing the park boundaries will not come down this session?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, but I do want to make it clear that as far as the Spray lakes are concerned, if this bill passes I cannot issue the license for that development, but if the province desires to create a storage dam there it can do so provided we get 350 second cubic feet during the months I mentioned.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it not rather the other way round? The park area is not affected by this bill, and only the minister can deal with it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Spray lakes will be outside the park.

Mr. BENNETT: Not this year.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not until the amending act is passed, but I want to make it clear that we do consider these lakes outside the park area now for administration purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: But they are within the park area now and we are not going to amend the National Parks Act this year, so they will continue to be within the boundaries of the park and this bill will have no effect.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is this bill dependent entirely upon the Spray lakes or, for that matter, on lake Minnewanka or some other storage basin that may be found later on at the head of the Red Deer river? There are certain sites on the Athabaska river.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The minister mentioned 350 second feet which will be reserved in order to preserve the flow. Is it not a fact that the minister has received a letter from the Calgary Power Company saying that they have no further interest in the matter?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I have a letter stating that if we go beyond 150 feet they will not be interested.

Mr. SPENCER: Do I understand that the Calgary Power Company will have the opportunity of developing this Spray lakes site?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the province is agreeable.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I confess that previous to this morning, I had not read this bill, but I think that we are dealing with a very serious question, one which affects the relationship between the provinces and the Dominion. In this bill the Minister of the Interior reserves the right to control the water-powers within the park areas. Under the British North America Act the ownership of the national parks is vested in the provinces.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would point out to the hon. member that the provinces do not own the park or the land itself; at the moment we are dealing with the property of the Dominion, not with the property of the provinces.

Mr. EVANS: This question is bound to cause trouble in years to come. As I say, the British North America Act does not give the ownership and control of any part of the Dominion to the Dominion government; those areas are all within the provinces and the provinces have the sovereign right with respect to them. Why should this government say that they have the power to restrict the operation of the water-powers and assume control over those powers within the park areas? I confess that I view this bill with some suspicion. The natural resources should be turned over to the provinces and although we have had many promises that this would be done we are now asked to pass this particular bill before the fulfilment of those promises. A year ago the Prime Minister himself made the promise that the three western provinces would receive their natural resources after the last session of parliament, but we are still in the same position.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Will the effect of this bill be to give to the three prairie provinces control over their water-powers until such time as their natural resources are returned?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is not the intention to transfer the ownership at all; it is administration only.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): But they will have control?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They will have control by administration, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Subject to the veto of the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This bill is identical with the British Columbia Act.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Civil government—immigration and colonization—salary, $314,505; contingencies, $45,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice that there is an increase in the salary of the deputy minister; would the minister explain the basis of that increase?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): It was made by order in council. I suppose the government thought that that was an adequate salary, or at least that the deputy minister was deserving of that increase.

Mr. IRVINE: Is the deputy the only one to receive an increase? There have been no increases issued around the House of Commons at all, or is that within the power of the minister?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Item agreed to.

Immigration outside service—salaries, $1,080,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister give us the particulars of the increases which amount to nearly $200,000?

Mr. STEVENS: They have amounted to $330,000 in four years.

Mr. FORKE: That is due to the general increase in immigration work in the eastern district on account of the opening of new highways and bridges between Canada and the United States all along the international boundary. It has been found necessary to increase the staff at certain points as follows:

Head office at Ottawa	4
Hamilton	1
St. Leonard, N.B.	1
Niagara Falls	1
Bridgeburg	3
Ellis Island, N.Y.	2
Seasonal immigration inspectors at various points	8
Total	20

Owing to increased immigration in the western provinces it has been found necessary to increase the staff at certain points, as follows:

Winnipeg	3
Calgary	1
Regina, new agency	2
Saskatoon	1
Seasonal immigration inspectors at various points on the boundary line	8
Total	15

Mr. BENNETT: How many new employees would be included in that increase?

Mr. FORKE: Thirty-five.

Mr. BENNETT: That would not use up the whole $185,000; 35 people would hardly average that much.

Mr. SPENCER: I rise to protest against the amount of money that is being spent in the Immigration department. I am not particularly criticizing the minister of the day, but the whole policy for many years past seems to be wrong. I have some figures which I wish to place upon Hansard. Some of them have been given before, but as they are important they are worth repeating. The estimate for the present year is $3,462,900, or an increase of $178,267 over that of a year ago. The census of 1921 shows that Canada had a population of 8,788,000, while the immigrants received in the period from 1921 to 1928 numbered 962,000; the births in Canada from 1921 to 1928 have been 1,939,000, making a total that we should have of 11,689,000 people.

If we deduct from this number the deaths of 824,000 during those years, we should have a balance remaining of 10,865,000. According to the Bureau of Statistics, the estimated population for 1929 is 9,655,000, or a shrinkage in eight years of 1,210,000 people. We have been spending around $3,000,000 a year on immigration and losing at the rate of 1,210 people in eight years, or in other words we have been losing people just about as fast as we have been bringing them in. Furthermore, a number of people who come in do so on their own, and if we charge the whole cost against those people who come in through seeing immigration literature, this would make the figures still worse.

Going back as far as 1881, I find that we have brought in altogether, according to a statement made by the Minister of Immigration as reported in Hansard of March 15, about 5,000,000 people. But we have paid out, according to the departmental figures, to bring in that number of people, no less a sum than $51,618,024. It seems to me that if all our departments pursued the same policy as the Department of Immigration, where we are paying out a great deal of money and not getting results and where, if we are getting the people, we are not keeping them, this country would be about bankrupt. Furthermore, the great effort for many years has been to place the incoming immigrants on the land, which is about the last place that we should attempt to place them, as long as farming is practically the poorest paying business in this country.

The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) during the budget debate placed some illuminating figures on Hansard. She showed that in 1926, of insurance funds to the amount of some $73,000,000 invested in farm mortgages. there was in round figures a loss of $1,313,000, while at the same time investments made to the amount of $192,000,000 in urban mortgages, or two and three-quarter times as much, showed a loss of only $256,000, or one-fifth the loss that was made in investments in rural mortgages. It has been shown more than once that every $7 invested in agriculture brings a return of $1. Any man who has been in the game for the last twenty or twenty-five years knows, taking everything into consideration, that is practically correct. On the other hand, we find that an investment of $3 in industry brings a return of $2.

I want to comment for a moment or two upon some of the propaganda that is being used. A great deal of it is half true, which is far worse than a direct lie. People who do not know any better are likely to think what is being said is absolutely true and are misled by it. The other day I saw a pamphlet entitled "Boy Settlement in Canada" issued under the authority of the Minister of Immigration, and the following is a quotation from it:

> The settled portions of Canada lie in much the same latitude as do the British isles, except that some portions of Canada reach further south than any part of England. Indeed, the southernmost parts of Canada are further south than any part of France. The seasons in Canada correspond with the seasons in Great Britain, and the practices and customs of the people are practically the same.

That is absolutely correct as far as latitude goes, but climatic conditions in the two countries are entirely different; practices in many ways are also quite different, and the statement is very misleading. I do not think for a moment the Minister of Immigration saw that pamphlet before it went out because I believe enough in his honesty to feel that he would not have allowed it to be issued. This is a further statement from the same pamphlet:

> Why should one select farming in Canada as a life pursuit? Because it offers all the advantages which have already been set down as contributing to real success. There is first the prospect of a good financial return from the very beginning.

That in itself is not true. There have been a few fortunate men who have in a short time probably made a good return on their outlay, but the minister knows as well as anybody else in the house that the majority of people who take up farming, either east or west, do not make a fortune and do not make an easy living in a short time. I should like to quote the following from the speech made by the minister only the other day:

> I say that quite a large percentage of those who started with open prairie under very favourable circumstances have failed.

That is quite different from the statements made in this pamphlet issued under his authority. This is another statement that the minister made:

> Will the population that is at present living in Canada gain by a tremendously increased immigration?

Mr. FORKE: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. SPENCER: I am reading from Hansard a statement made by the minister in the house a few days ago. The minister said further:

> But a large immigration does not necessarily mean that we shall be happier or more prosperous.

In that I quite agree with him. Yet he brings in these estimates showing an increase year after year and asks us to pass them without criticism. I should like to refer to another statement that has been issued. I cannot blame the Minister of Immigration in this case, but I picked up a pamphlet issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; a quotation from which is as follows in reference to last year's crop:

> Not only has the generality of crop production been uniformly fine and satisfactory but many yields have been recorded which would in other countries be considered exceptional or beyond possibility but to which western Canada in her bumper years has grown accustomed.

There is a misleading statement. It goes on:

> Yields between 50 and 60 bushels to the acre have been fairly common—

That is referring to last year's crop:

> —and there have been many in excess of this, ranging as high as 88 bushels per acre, which, for the extent over which production was secured, is considered a world record.

Nothing could be more misleading. I cannot blame the minister or his department in a case like this, but at the same time I think it is his duty or the duty of his officials to contradict such extraordinarily foolish and irrational statements that are going out supposedly on accepted authority. We all know that there was great promise of a fairly good crop last year, but we also know that owing to a disastrous frost before the crop ripened, the yield was cut down easily one-third and much more in some cases, and the average yield in the province from which I come was 18 bushels per acre instead of reaching to 50 or 60 or 88 bushels per acre.

Not only are we spending this large amount directly under the Department of Immigration, $3,462,000, but under the land settlement board, according to the estimates, we are also spending $1,400,000, and under the Department of Health, we are spending on immigration, $300,000 and I understand that the railways have also paid approximately $1,500,000 to bring in immigrants, or a total of $6,662,000. At the same time, with all this expenditure, we are not increasing our population. It does seem to me that we would be ahead in this country if we closed down for the time being our Immigration department. The work could easily be looked after by, say, the Minister of Agriculture, who would know where agriculturists were needed. The Minister of Labour would also be in a good position to say when more labour was needed in Canada, and probably the work of the Minister of National Health could be increased a little because he has already considerable work to do in connection with immigration. It does seem to me that we are spending a lot of good public money uselessly through this department. I am not going to criticize the minister because I think probably he is doing his work as well as any other minister who has filled that position, but the whole immigration policy of this country for the last twenty years or so has been wrong. Since 1881 we have spent over $51,000,000 and brought in 5,000,000 people, most of whom we have lost. I think that fact proves my contention.

Further, such schemes as are being put forward for forcing more people into this country, and putting them on the land to grow greater quantities of wheat, is another proof that the policy we are following is along false lines. It is only this year that having only two-thirds of the crop we expected last year, with the world's crop being somewhat large, prices have dropped lower than we have had for several years. What would prices have been if our crop had developed as we hoped it would in 1928?

Then we have people—I am glad to know they are not farmers, and they will not be farmers, because they see too clearly the direction in which we are drifting—but people who are not farmers who eventually hope to take advantage of those who are on the land are advocating different immigration schemes from time to time. The minister knows perfectly well that it is a false line of argument to say that we need more people in this country and particularly on the land. What we should aim at is to improve conditions so that there will be a decent standard of living on the farms, and when the man on the land is assured of a reasonable return on his capital outlay and from the labour he expends, then we need not be afraid of not getting enough people into this country; because the job then will be to keep them out. But to-day when those engaged in the basic industry of this country are not enjoying a decent standard of living, and the minister knows perfectly well that they are not—the standard of living of the farmer from the east to the west is not nearly so high as it ought to be considering the amount of capital he invests and the amount of energy he puts into his work—we are going out to seek immigrants, but until we get a decent standard of living for the man on the land, is it worth while to spend any more public money trying to get immigrants to come to this country to farm?

There is one other point. Other hon. members have asked for figures showing how many Canadians have left this country, but we are always given the reply: "Oh, the figure cannot be stated. The cost of gathering that data is too much, so we have not kept a record." I would ask why cannot the same officials who check the people coming into the country also check the people going out. Then we would know where we stood. At the present time we have to go to the officials at Washington to find out how many people have left this country for the United States. Surely with all the money that is being spent on this department we should have an accurate statement of who is coming into this country, who they are, what they do, and how many leave. I do think that we are making a tremendous mistake spending a huge sum of money every year on immigration, when we are not doing any more than just keeping our population at its present level.

Mr. FORKE: I might make some explanation of the increase in this vote as compared with last year. The vote this year is $1,080,000; last year it was $1,033,955, but owing to a mistake of the accountant that amount was not included in the estimates last year, and so we asked for a supplementary estimate of $138,955 last year, which we did not get. The Minister of Finance told us that we had better try and get through with what we had, and we had to do so. We were accordingly unable to create the organization that we had in mind last year, and we had to carry quite a number of employees as temporaries who should have been on the permanent list. The temporary list will be smaller this year owing to a number of the temporaries being put on the permanent list.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the amount expended last year?

Mr. FORKE: We got along with less than the amount asked for. In reality there is not much difference between the vote this year and last. I cannot say just how much the expenditure for temporary help was increased owing to our not having the amount in the estimates last year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely the minister can tell us exactly what was expended last year independent of whether these men were temporary or permanent employees.

Mr. FORKE: The actual amount spent was $863,841. I should perhaps make an explanation right here. Although this estimate calls for a certain amount of money it does not follow that that amount has been spent. I think I will be able to show that before I am through.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. MANION: If the minister spent only $895,000 last year why is he asking for $1,080,000 this year? It is over $200,000 more.

Mr. FORKE: My deputy informs me that the reorganization that was intended last year did not go into effect, and the amount of money that we intended to spend last year was not spent.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister explain the reorganization he refers to?

Mr. FORKE: Well it extends all through the service, putting it on a more efficient basis. We may not be getting very many immigrants but we are getting sufficient to require a very efficient service.

Mr. MANION: Does the minister mean that the whole service is to be reorganized, every branch of it?

Mr. FORKE: It has been reorganized. The reorganization is complete.

Mr. MANION: And it will cost $200,000 more to handle it.

Mr. FORKE: I suppose it will.

Mr. GARDINER: What proportion of this vote is purely for the purpose of securing immigrants?

Mr. FORKE: That more properly belongs to the next vote. I think I can give you the details. This is the cost of the permanent outside service.

Eastern district	$521,495
Western district, 109 employees	159,675
Pacific district, 17 employees	61,840
United States, 39 employees	80,855
British Isles and Irish Free State, 115 employees	181,830
The continent, 20 employees	31,820
Womens' division, Canada, 18 employees	29,325
Juvenile immigration division, 7 employees	12,000
Unforeseen expenses	1,070

That makes up the total of $1,080,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the Auditor General's report that there is given a list of places where the minister has agencies, presumably for the purpose of getting immigrants. Will the minister tell us how many immigrants he gets, for instance, from San Francisco, where he has an agency, or is this just a place where some good Canadian can go for a winter holiday? I am surprised that I do not see in this list such places as San Diego and Florida, although I notice an agency at Manchester, New Hampshire, which is in the Green mountains, or the White mountains. I suppose that is a good place for a summer resort but not much of a place to get immigrants. Will the minister explain the necessity for an office at San Francisco or Spokane?

Mr. FORKE: I had better read down the whole list.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Just give us San Francisco for example.

Mr. FORKE: There were 132 inquiries, 426 interviews, prospects of 35 farmers, and others who called were 12. Forty-seven heads of families came to Canada, 93 people all told, and they brought in from San Francisco last year capital to the amount of $163,240.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the cost of the office at that point?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The cost of that office was $13,000 according to the Auditor General's report.

Mr. KELLNER: Does that include the oil prospectors and operators?

Mr. FORKE: My deputy handed me the wrong paper. I was rather surprised myself at the numbers that I had to read out. The number of inquiries last year at San Francisco was 1,593; heads of families, 188; number of immigrants, 463; number of carloads of settlers' effects, 2; value of effects, $402,120; good prospects outstanding, 47.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do I understand that the value of two carloads was $402,120?

Mr. FORKE: That is what it says here.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Well you had better have those figures revised. Would the minister just explain that $402,120, the value of two carloads of settlers' effects?

Mr. FORKE: That is the total brought into the country. They brought in two carloads, and the total effects included cash and everything else amounting to $402,120.

Mr. SPENCER: Where is the office from which we had 47 families?

Mr. FORKE: That was for the same place, but it was only a monthly report.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any information as to what pursuits those families engaged in when they came to Canada? Were they farmers?

Mr. FORKE: I think they were all farmers. I have not the report here. Farmers are the only clas that we are recruiting over there.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no recruiting going on for any other class except farmers as far as that office is concerned

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. KELLNER: Will the minister kindly answer the question I put to him? Why cannot we check up the people going from Canada to the States?

Mr. FORKE: I am not an expert at that. My deputy informs me that to do that would take about double the organization we have.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is that because there are so many leaving?

Mr. FORKE: With regard to the figures we get from the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, I believe they probably overstate the number of people who really leave Canada. The other day I looked over some statistics of the number of people in the United States born in Canada; the number is growing less every ten years, so that if the volume of emigration to the United States was as great as it is claimed to be, the number of native born Canadians in the United States would be on the increase.

Mr. MANION: But a large proportion of those going over from Canada are not native born Canadians. They are people who are naturalized Canadians, and they usually put themselves down as English, Irish, Scotch, French, or whatever nationality they belong to, so that they are not entered as Canadians at all. Now frequently the minister and his officials make precisely the same statement which the minister has just made, namely, that these figures are all wrong which we obtain from the American offices in regard to Canadians going to the United States. On what ground do they make the statement? Surely the United States authorities have no reason for padding their immigration list to show a larger proportion of Canadians entering that country than actually do go in. Indeed, there is far less reason for the United States to pad their immigration figures than there is for the Minister of Immigration here to pad his. Are we therefore to draw the conclusion that the minister is judging the United States immigration department by his own? Are we to conclude that the Canadian figures are wrong and that they are being padded? Unless the minister can prove to us that the American figures are wrong I see no reason why he should question them. We do not keep any record ourselves of Canadians leaving this country, so that the only means we have of finding out is to take the figures given by the officials of the United States immigration department. And those figures, we are always being told, are wrong. I repeat, unless the minister can prove that they are wrong it is time the government stopped challenging them. I personally have no reason for believing that those figures are wrong. On my desk I have the figures for the past ten years and I can tell the minister that a large proportion of Canadians leaving this country are not native born but naturalized.

Mr. FORKE: I do not like to exaggerate the number of people leaving Canada for the United States.

Mr. MANION: We are not exaggerating; we are giving the official figures.

Mr. FORKE: Instead of making the number larger I should prefer to make it as small as I could.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We find that other ministers take the same view.

Mr. FORKE: Hon. members know that the statistics for past years will show that the condition was much worse years ago than it is now.

Mr. MANION: Never. The worst years we have had have been the past six or seven under this government, and I make that statement without fear of contradiction by anyone. There is no doubt whatever that, according to the figures supplied by the United States, the worst years we have had were those particularly from 1923 to 1927. The last two years have not been quite so bad, but generally speaking the last six or seven have been the worst period we have ever had of emigration to the United States. There is not an atom of doubt about that. I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong, but I do not think I can be corrected because I have checked the figures. I resent the implication that we wish to paint things worse than they are; we paint them simply in accordance with the official figures of the United States. I want to tell the minister that we are just as optimistic as he is in regard to this great country; in fact, we are more so, because the other day he uttered a wail of despair about Canada. He took the same attitude as has been taken this morning by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer). We have a country containing immense areas, magnificent resources and vast possibilities, a country with a greater future than that of any other country in the world. To my mind there is not the slightest doubt about that; yet the minister and the hon. member for Battle River throw up their hands and say, "We do not want immigrants to come to Canada." Are we going to put up our shutters and bar our doors and windows against prospective Canadians?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. SPENCER: Let people come in naturally; don't force them.

Mr. MANION: Every country that wants immigration must take the proper means to see that it gets the right type of immigrant, and to this end there must be some organization. I do not agree for a moment with the hon. member in this regard. I do not dispute the suggestion that there may be too much money spent on immigration for the results we are getting; I am not sure that this is not correct. But I do not see how you can possibly handle immigration without an adequate organization, and certainly I cannot endorse any such idea as that this magnificent country should put up its shutters and close its doors completely, taking the stand, "We have great resources; let us hang on to them and keep other people out." Surely we have a more encouraging conception of Canada's future greatness. I personally do not understand the attitude taken by the hon. member for Battle River and by the minister himself.

Mr. FORKE: It is rather unfortunate that I should be attacked by the hon. member for Battle River and then by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) for entirely different reasons. One complains that I am admitting too many immigrants and the other suggests that I do not admit any. I see that the Toronto Globe makes the statement that I am like Daniel in the lions' den.

Mr. MANION: And just as helpless, I am afraid.

Mr. FORKE: Let us hope the Lord is with me anyhow.

Mr. POWER: The lions roar but they don't bite.

Mr. FORKE: I take second place to no hon. member in my faith in this Dominion, and I do not like to hear the hon. member for Battle River speaking about excessively hard times. According to the speeches heard in 1921 and 1922, there was nothing but ruin and degradation and misery facing us at that time.

Mr. GARDINER: Was that not correct at that time?

Mr. FORKE: But we are all here and just as well off.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister was better off then.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister was one of those who were wailing then.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The item under discussion is an important one; will the minister give the headings of expenditure. What, for instance, is the expense in connection with advertising?

Mr. FORKE: This item is entirely for salaries; I can read over the list if my hon. friend wishes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, I do not want the individual salaries. I thought there were some other items besides salaries.

Mr. FORKE: No, this is entirely salaries.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me that for a department which is showing as little result as the Immigration department the least we can do is to keep salaries where they were before. I do not see any excuse whatever for increasing salaries in this department. If we are getting somewhere there might be some excuse, but this is a hopeless proposition; it is absolutely impossible; you are wasting money.

Mr. SPENCER: Since the minister has gone over to the other side he has lost touch with agriculture in this country. He knows perfectly well that agriculture has been in trouble for many years, and the hon. member for Fort William will realize this too if only he will look into the matter closely.

Mr. MANION: We have few of the troubles which my hon. friend deplores so much.

Mr. SPENCER: We are spending $51,000,000 and bringing in 5,000,000 people and losing them. Is that good business? I think it is bad business.

Mr. FORKE: We do not spend $51,000,000.

Mr. SPENCER: I am taking your own figures.

Mr. JACOBS: I have been discussing immigration estimates for the last ten or twelve years and I am further behind now than when I started. I am not impressed with the policy of the government; I never was; I have always criticized them and I think rightly so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But never voted.

Mr. JACOBS: There never was a vote on these immigration estimates in the house.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No? Well, let us have one now. I will support any resolution you propose for reducing this estimate.

Mr. JACOBS: What good will that do?

Mr. CHAPLIN: It will save a lot of money anyway.

Mr. JACOBS: As a matter of fact, I am in favour of spending much more than we spend now. I am in favour of the open door; I want to bring into the country everyone who wants to come and who is white, healthy and mentally and morally fit. That is the party to which I belong and I am sorry to say I have not one follower yet.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): What about the Minister of Finance?

Mr. JACOBS: I do not know what his views are on this point; he is so busy with finance that he cannot bother with immigration.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not move a resolution with regard to this one-man party you talk about?

Mr. JACOBS: Who will second it? I merely rose to answer the statement made by the hon. member for Fort William. He speaks about the overwhelming exodus from this country, particularly in the years 1924-25. He should know that was due entirely to the quota law of the United States; in 1924 they put into force a very drastic quota law which made it imperative for them to allow Canadians into their country if they were to have any immigration at all. Under the two per cent quota only some 100,000 or 150,000 people from Europe are allowed to enter the United States, but all native born Canadians can go into the United States without let or hindrance, and I should say they are rather a good element to have; they are as good as any immigrants the United States could get and they are equal to any of the people residing in that country now, so it is not at all surprising that they put into force this rule which prevents unrestricted immigration from Europe. This is the only country from which they can draw immigrants.

Mr. BENNETT: Mexico is on the same basis.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The trouble with us is that the whole of Europe is going into the United States through Canada.

Mr. JACOBS: My hon. friend should know that is not what is happening.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do know; I am on the border as much as you are, and that is what is happening.

Mr. JACOBS: I think my hon. friend is on the border of unreason when he makes that statement; we have here the figures showing the number of people who enter Canada. My hon. friend should know how difficult it is for people to come to this country; the rules are being applied in a most drastic manner, because it is the wish of this parliament. It seems to me that the Minister of Immigration should have some support here. We have the hon. member for Fort William on the one hand and the hon. member for Battle River on the other advising different courses; those behind cry "forward" and those in front cry "back", so what is the minister to do? He cannot take the advice of both.

Mr. BENNETT: He can stand still, as he is doing now.

Mr. JACOBS: I am almost ready to admit that that is partly true. I find it rather difficult to agree with anything the leader of the opposition says these days, and even when I do agree I have to look over the proposition carefully to make sure it is not something in the nature of a Trojan horse. Last year, in the agricultural committee, we heard some forty or fifty witnesses, each with a different policy. No one wished to help the minister in anyway; rather their desire was to embarrass him. Perhaps after all these policies are tried out, which will not take very long, they may come back to my policy, which is the policy we had previous to the war, when we let any person enter this country who wanted to do so. If an immigrant is unfit; if he cannot make good; if he is a public charge, send him back to his own country. We have the right to do that, but what object can there be in keeping out people who want to come to Canada to earn their living and help build up this country? I cannot see that there is any logic in that; personally I believe the minister would open the doors wide in the way I suggest if he received any support in this house, but he is not supported. The hon. member for Fort William advocated the other day that we should bring in men and sheep; he wanted to divide the population.

Mr. MANION: No, I did not advocate bringing in sheep; I advocated building up the sheep population by a proper policy.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, bringing in men and bringing up sheep.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: You want to bring in the goats.

Mr. JACOBS: No, I want to send the goats back if they turn out to be goats. Up to the present there never has been any difficulty in absorbing immigrants in this country. I venture to say that in the great city of Montreal, which has a population of about 1,250,000, there are not 500 people unemployed, and those people could obtain employment if they went after it. That condition exists in every city throughout Canada, and there is no reason why that should not be so. This country is just on the eve of an immense expansion; we read every day about the mines in the north, the lumbering, the pulp and paper industry and so on, but only certain classes of people will do the menial work connected with these industries. To use the expression of my hon. friend from Fort William, you cannot get red-blooded Canadians to do work that Italians, Czecho-Slovakians and others will do. They will not do it; Canadians have gone up in the social scale and the digging of canals, the building of railways and all that sort of work must be done by the foreigner. In the second generation the foreigner's children will not do that work either; they will want to become members of parliament, university professors and so on, and that is only right. This is a country for ambitious people; it is a country of ambition.

Under our immigration regulations the map of Europe is divided according to racial lines; for instance, an Austrian cannot come to Canada unless the minister permits him to enter, while on the other hand a German has no trouble coming here. It would take a person more clever than many hon. members of this house, including myself, to tell the difference between an Austrian and a German. Why should Austrians be kept out and Germans permitted to enter? I cannot see any reason.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I will tell the hon. gentleman one reason. As a matter of experience one finds that frequently the German is the man who owns, controls or directs a business, whereas the Austrian gravitates towards that lower class of labour to which my hon. friend has referred. That is a very marked difference between the two.

Mr. JACOBS: I do not see why a barber who comes from Berlin is a better man than a barber who comes from Vienna.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): That is not the proper comparison.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, it is; they do not make any distinction between Germans and Austrians in that respect. Then we will not admit Italians. I am not here for the purpose of eulogizing the Italians or any other people, but accepting the theory laid down by the Immigration department, I claim an Italian from the north of Italy is quite as good as a German from central Germany; there is no difference. Why should a man from Italian Lombardy be refused entrance to Canada while a German from Berlin or Frankfort is permitted to enter?

Mr. KELLNER: We get Italian immigrants now.

Mr. JACOBS: We are not getting very many of them.

Mr. FORKE: Mussolini will not let them out; he needs them all at home.

Mr. JACOBS: That is a good reason why my hon. friend will not let them in; he is in alliance with Mussolini.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): They are dodging Montreal, that is all.

Mr. JACOBS: We have room for Italians in Montreal, and we have room for other people from Europe; we have been taking them for 150 years and so has the United States. I say it is silly on the part of this country, which is looking for population according to my hon. friend from Fort William, to refuse admittance to these people.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will my hon. friend say that no Italians enter Canada?

Mr. JACOBS: Italian agriculturists are allowed in, but that is all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That applies to other countries too.

Mr. JACOBS: That applies to every other country in Europe. Take Russia, a country with 140,000,000 people of stern, hardy stock; I think every one will admit that these are people who should be welcomed to Canada, because they know what work really is. They have been living close to the ground, and that is the class of people we want in a country like this, which is just beginning its expansion and development. These people are not allowed to enter this country except as farmers, and it is almost impossible for them to farm because they have no money. Within the last few years they have been given certain plots of land by the bolshevist government, but many of those people are not satisfied with conditions existing in Russia.

Mr. SPENCER: I would remind the hon. gentleman that 957 Russians entered last year.

Mr. JACOBS: That makes quite a hole in 140,000,000. I venture to say that perhaps of that 957 I brought in 950, and someone else brought in the other seven. Many of those people were coming to join their relatives and friends on this side; fathers and mothers joining their children and children joining their parents, but they are the only class which are permitted to enter this country. It is quite true that these people do not speak English but we can have them avoid Toronto because a person must speak English there in order to talk at any public meeting; we will allow them to come to Montreal. They pick up the language pretty rapidly. It was only just recently that some young lad from Russia, a boy of eighteen years of age, won the oratorical prize in English in some Ontario town.

An hon. MEMBER: It was the Ontario championship.

Mr. MANION: I notice that a French Canadian from Quebec won the oratorical contest at Toronto where my hon. friend from Winnipeg was one of the judges.

Mr. JACOBS: They do not need to go to Toronto to win oratorical prizes; every French Canadian could win a prize in the province of Quebec without exposing himself to the dangers of Toronto. If any member of the committee is sufficiently interested in how these foreigners, particularly Russians and Poles get on in Canada, let him pick up any newspaper published in Montreal this week and he will find that out of 443 graduates from McGill university over 100 were of foreign extraction, and I venture to say that 95 per cent of the prizes won were won by those foreigners. I think that indicates their worth. If you do not want to open the doors wide, open them at least half way and give people of this type a chance. There is no danger of this country becoming bolshevized or Russianized by permitting these people to come in. Take the case of those people out in the west, the Galicians, the Ukrainians and others who have gone on the farms. I do not know of one case where an unworthy foreigner is allowed to remain in this country because he is immediately sent back under the provisions of our deportation laws. I think we are making a serious mistake in enforcing the immigration laws as we do. We have the opportunity of our lifetime right now when the American doors are closed to every form of immigration. For 150 years the United States permitted immigrants to come into that country, and they have become very great as the result of that policy. They would not have been the United States they are to-day had they depended simply on the plain living, high thinking Puritans who came over in the Mayflower. It is the mixture of the races which has made that country the greatest in the world, and we can stand a little of that mixing here without fear that our whole British system will go under. The second generation of the foreigner is quite as good as the native born Canadian; he has lost his language—perhaps an unfortunate thing—by his attendance at the public schools, and he has taken on the colour of his surroundings. He becomes even more patriotic than the native born Britisher; he sings the national anthem with much more gusto than the man who comes from the Clyde or the Mersey. I am not finding any fault with that because I think it is a fine idea to inculcate these principles into the children. In the second, third and fourth generation these children will be not only as good as the native born, but perhaps better.

Mr. SPENCER: In 1928, 166,000 people were brought into the country, of that figure 81,000 were brought in from countries other than Great Britain or the United States.

Mr. JACOBS: They were intended for the farms.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is a pretty wide open door.

Mr. JACOBS: It is not a wide open door. I would like to have the figures of the Russians and Poles and Czechoslovakians who came to this country not intended for the farm.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Apparently you blame Toronto for not allowing these people to come in.

Mr. JACOBS: Not at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why pick upon Toronto; I am not from Toronto, but I would like to know why the animosity towards Toronto?

Mr. JACOBS: A regulation was passed in Toronto recently declaring that no one could speak at a public meeting except in English.

Mr. GEARY: It was not a municipal regulation.

Mr. BENNETT: The constitution of the United States says that.

Mr. JACOBS: That is the impression that has got abroad, that they cannot talk in their own tongue where they hold public meetings; they will be refused a permit unless they talk in English, or perhaps also in French.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. BENNETT: That is a police regulation.

Mr. JACOBS: A man may be talking in his own tongue and they may think that he is talking sedition while he may be eulogizing the king. Does the hon. member say that foreigners can hold public meetings and talk in their own tongue?

Mr. GEARY: They do it every day in the week.

Mr. JACOBS: What about the municipal regulations?

Mr. GEARY: I do not know whether or not the hon. member was in the house when this matter was discussed, or whether he is simply indulging in a popular form of amusement by attacking Toronto.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is all.

Mr. JACOBS: That has been an amusement which has been consecrated by years of usage.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If you are not satisfied with the immigration laws why do you not attack the government?

Mr. JACOBS: I have been attacking the government; this is my form of attack.

Mr. FORKE: He attacks me every week.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He is afraid to attack, that is all.

Mr. JACOBS: I always have attacked the government; perhaps I have made a mistake.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In that case, why do you not vote in the right way?

Mr. JACOBS: There was one occasion when I was not present in the house, but if I had been here I would have voted for my hon. friend. He should not cast that up to me, but should reckon it unto me for righteousness. I do not believe that any remarks I make, no matter how often they are repeated, will be of any utility in causing the government to change its views, and the reason is quite plain. Every government keeps its ear to the ground, this government as well as other governments. The Union government had exactly the same rules in force as the present government.

Mr. MANION: They apparently did not hear very well.

Mr. JACOBS: Probably not, or they might have been in power to-day.

Mr. MANION: They must have had wadding in their ears.

Mr. JACOBS: Or perhaps they did not have any brains behind their ears.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member may have his brains behind his ears, but most of us have ours in front or above.

An hon. MEMBER: Or in between.

Mr. JACOBS: I do not know very much about the human anatomy.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does the hon. member make that suggestion with reference to the present government, about their brains being behind their ears?

Mr. JACOBS: Not at all, I would be hurried to the tower if I did. Influence more powerful than I possess would have to be used in order to bring this government, or any government which may succeed it, into line with my ideas. My hon. friend from Fort William talks very glibly about what he would do, but I want to tell him that were he in power, which the Lord forbid, he would take the same view—

An hon. MEMBER: It won't be long now.

Mr. JACOBS: —which the present Minister of Immigration has taken.

Mr. MANION: Not at all.

Mr. JACOBS: Perhaps he would change it by adding a few more sheep.

Mr. MANION: Those sheep seem to be worrying my hon. friend. I could understand that if it were pigs he was objecting to, but I do not know why he should object to sheep.

Mr. JACOBS: I may say with regard to the pig, it never crosses my lips; it must not, but as regards sheep, I think we can be on common ground.

Mr. BALDWIN: I shall have to take the hon. member to task. It has appeared in Hansard for many years that the hon. member for Stanstead has said that he is willing to allow to come to Canada everyone who is law-abiding and prepared to work. It was such a policy that built up the population of the United States to more than 75,000,000 before they imposed any restrictions even upon public charges who had to be cared for by municipalities. In this country we have very much better climatic conditions, and from a geographical standpoint we do not have, as they do, the Mexicans to the south, of whom there have come into the United States something like 5,000,000. They are getting quite numerous in the great city of Chicago. I would not have any barriers whatever against people coming into Canada from any other part of the world, because our climatic conditions would prevent the coloured races coming here to any great extent. I have no apologies for making the remarks that I have made in past years, and those remarks have been quoted by former ministers of immigration. To-day I would pursue the same policy. I would not allow one dollar of a vote in the estimates of the department under consideration if every Canadian when he was at home or abroad would tell of the beauties of this great country and of its wonderful opportunities, inviting people from every other part of the world to come here and enjoy our great resources as regards soil, mines, fisheries and timber. We have in this immense country resources such as no other country in the world possesses. We have, in the develoment of our great hydro-electric industry, vast possibilities. At the present time we have in this Canada of ours, from the centre to the circumference, a wonderful period of development. Not one person within the realm may go without work and we could invite thousands, tens of thousands, aye, even hundreds of thousands of people to come here and go to work on their own initiative.

I believe a policy of assisted immigration brings to this country a pussy-footed, spineless people who are not worth while. If we would just advertise to the whole world that this is a most wonderful country, there would be no difficulty in getting people to come here. Enthusiastic Canadians travelling through the greate centres of the United States and letting it be known that the Canadian abroad is a live wire; that he can speak for his country, can do far more for immigration than a dead-wood official sitting in an office in Manchester, New Hampshire, San Francisco or other places. Such officials have not enough life to show that they have a soul of their own, to say nothing of their being ambassadors to bring people to this country. It is a shame and a disgrace—and I do not care what government undertakes it—to assist certain immigrants to come to this country to the exclusion of others. As I said before, I would allow everyone to come here, and I am against voting a dollar to assist people to come. Let our wonderful resources be made known, perhaps by advertising. Let people know that they can come here, enjoy the full rights of Canadian citizenship and take up, on their own initiative, some business that will make them rich and successful. We have many examples of that, but this pussy-footed, sissified, spineless people whom we are assisting to come to this country are not worth two cents either to Canada or to themselves. They will become public charges and I am against a dollar being voted on their behalf. Let us take down the bars and invite everybody to come here. There is no danger. The hon. member for Stanstead has been quoted perhaps as saying that he would put some restrictive measures against the coloured races. I am not strongly opposed to them. I have seen black people with white hearts and I have seen people with white skins who are black and dirty-hearted.

In the Niagara belt they have not enough people to gather the fruit. Sometimes we are eating cherries canned in the United States while our own cherries, peaches, strawberries and other fruits are lying on the ground an inch thick in the Niagara belt. It is sad to think that intelligent members of parliament will cavil over immigration restrictions. The charge should go back to the Union government for their work in keeping Scandinavians and other good people out of Canada, but I am glad the war period is over and the results of the harsh words that were said here in those days are dying out. I feel keenly that such a vigorous, virile people as we are with such a vast and amazing country, are not making greater strides in regard to population. As was said by the previous speaker, the United States were keen on putting a quota restriction against other countries while they left an open door for Canadians and Mexicans. The reason why they leave an open door for the Mexicans is that there are vast stretches along the Santa Fe and the Union Pacific where a white man cannot work with the thermometer running from 110 to 120 degrees for months, so that they gladly welcome the Mexican to that labourious work in the intense heat of their southern climes. It seems to me too elementary for parliament to be talking about immigration restrictions as they have been since I came here twelve years ago. I want the hon. member who preceded me to remember that that I have always advocated, as he has done, that no one should be prevented from coming to this country.

Mr. MANION: There has been a discussion for some time as to the number of Canadians going into the United States. and their racial origin. I have under my hand figures sent me at my request by the Immigration department of the United States, and it is worth while giving them because I think they should be on record. The heading is:

Immigrant aliens admitted to the United States from Canada (last permanent residence for a year or more)—

[Mr. Baldwin.]

So they do not have to be naturalized in Canada. It is just the permanent residence here for a year or more.

Mr. JACOBS: They must be born in Canada to be allowed in under the quota.

Mr. MANION: Let me read the statement. The heading is:

Immigrant aliens admitted to the United States from Canada (last permanent residence for a year or more) during the ten fiscal years ended June 30, 1919 to 1928, by principal races or peoples, showing annual average with comparative per cent, as specified.

I will take just the year 1928:

African (black)	161
Armenian	43
Bohemian and Moravian	51
Bulgarian, Serbian and Montenegrin.	27
Croatian and Slovenian	41
Dutch and Flemish	800

The next few items I am going to read constitute the sad part for Canada:

English	24,253
French	14,227
Irish	10,672
Scotch	13,077

Mr. JACOBS: Any soda with those Scotch?

Mr. MANION: Well, they do not take Scotch and soda over in the United States now; they make it up fresh.

Finnish	79
German	3,005
Hebrew	1,761

That is the race my hon. friend should feel sorry about. I am sorry, too, because they are good friends of mine, and I have a lot of them in my riding. To continue:

Race or people	1928
Italian (North)	256
Italian (South)	148
Lithuanian	65
Magyar	158
Polish	474
Roumanian	82
Russian	228
Ruthenian	221
Scandinavian	2,242
Scotch	13,077
Slovak	271
Syrian	78
All others	196

Mr. JACOBS: That was on the two per cent quota. They only permitted two per cent from those countries, but in England, Ireland and Scotland the two per cent is very much larger based on the population in the United States previous to 1890.

Mr. MANION: That is possibly correct. The total for 1928 was 73,154. I will also put on record the totals of those leaving this country for the United States for the ten years, as given by the United States officials.

1922	46,810
1923	117,011
1924	200,690
1925	100,895
1926	91,019
1927	81,506
1928	73,154

The years 1923, 1924, 1925 and 1926 were the big years.

Mr. FORKE: For some of those years Newfoundland is included.

Mr. MANION: This does not include Newfoundland.

Mr. FORKE: Newfoundland is included from 1920 to 1925.

Mr. SANDERSON: Has the hon. member the figures of those who returned to Canada from the United States during the last three years?

Mr. MANION: No. I have asked for those figures, but none of those who leave this country for the United States are entered there as Canadians, and none leaving the United States are entered as Canadians. They are entered according to nationality. For instance, it gives the number of American citizens leaving.

Mr. CAHAN: Mostly tourists going through Canada.

Mr. MANION: No. The figures I have given are people who have gone over there to live and to make their permanent home in the United States.

Mr. JACOBS: As the hon. gentleman remarked, there was a large increase in 1924.

Mr. MANION: Yes. The worst year was 1924, and the four worst years were 1923, 1924, 1925 and 1926.

Mr. JACOBS: That was after the quota law was put into effect.

Mr. MANION: Possibly that is to a certain extent true, but it is also true that times were worse in this country then than they are now, and that more people were going across. I gave these figures the other day but not for the separate years, and I showed that from 1919 to 1921, for which the Conservatives were responsible, the number leaving this country for the United States averaged 66,000 people, and for the six years during which the Liberals were in power from 1923 to 1928, the average was 111,000 a year.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, we are still dealing with immigration. I wanted to take two or three minutes to finish some figures that I had, but I gave the figures to Hansard and I have not yet received them back. I have sent for them. The point that I want to make is that the United States statistics as to our emigration to the United States, in addition to giving the number of people coming over from Canada according to nationalities or races also gives them according to occupations, and I notice that out of the 73,000—I think that was the figure for last year—who went to the United States, there was a large proportion of skilled artisans and professional men. In other words, of the 73,000 who crossed to the United States there were about 23,000 who were skilled artisans or professional men. That is my recollection. If that figure is not correct I will correct it when I get the figures.

Mr. CAHILL: Canadians?

Mr. MANION: Of those that went from Canada. They were English, Irish, Scotch, French and other nationalities. That means that out of those thousands there are 23,000 men whom we have trained to be either skilled or professional men. The cost of training a boy to a profession is tremendous in this country to-day. I know it rather well myself. It runs into a large amount of money, when you think of a boy growing up to eighteen or so and then going to college for at least four or five years; it means probably the expenditure on the part of the parent of something like $10,000. That is what is spent by the parent, but what of the money being spent by the provinces on educational facilities, universities and so forth? I have tried three or four times to estimate, if possible, the amount it costs this country to educate a boy to some profession, and we are losing some thousands of these men to the United States. While the skilled man is not perhaps so costly to the country yet the professional man is terribly costly, and the skilled man is certainly costly as well, when everything is taken into consideration, and we must bear in mind not only the cost but the loss to our country of those men who have gone to another country to produce wealth for that country. We are losing very heavily. I merely wish to impress that point. I have sent for the papers; they are not down yet, but I will let the figures go as such, and if they are wrong I will correct them when the papers come down.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I think I would be very remiss in my duty, Mr. Chairman, if I did not take this opportunity to deal with certain phases of the question of immigration, especially in view of the insidious insinuations and provocative statements that have been made by many of our newspapers in Canada, and by many of our public men, with respect to the alleged belligerent attitude of our so-called foreigners in Canada, and the implied inference as to their unfitness to qualify for Canadian citizenship.

My desire to take a little of the time of this house has been greatly stimulated by a sheet called The Advocate of the National Association of Canada, published at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, dated February 15, 1929, in which all the vituperative vitriol at the command of Bishop Lloyd has found vent in a bitter denunciation of the central Europeans, in fact, of all foreigners in Canada. I cannot regard the subject matter printed in The Advocate in any other light than as a frame-up against the central European, an attempt to make him the goat of all our social ills, and to credit him with all the dirty work committed by somebody else. And while I am not prepared to prove the neurotic and unchristian Bishop Lloyd as the chief instigator of all this business, I am safe in saying that this kind of propaganda meets with the hearty approval of this false apostle of the Prince of Peace.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to read a letter which Bishop Lloyd sent to the ministry of the Protestant churches of western Canada. I am not so much concerned with the first part of his letter. He has made one statement, however, to which I wish to direct attention. He has said:

> These dirty continentals coming in are out of all proportion to the British immigrant.

I have some statistics here, given me by the Minister of Immigration which proves that this statement is absolutely untrue. In the year 1926-27 we had coming into Canada 122,966 immigrants. Of those 49,000 were from the British Isles; 30,000 were from the Scandinavian countries, and only 42,000 were from other countries. In 1927-28 the immigrants from the British Isles numbered 50,872; from the Scandinavian countries 30,702; and from other countries such as the central European countries 42,000. In 1928-29, 58,880 immigrants came from the British Isles; 29,000 from the Scandinavian countries, and 48,703 from such countries as the central European countries. Those figures disprove the statement made by Bishop Lloyd in The Advocate.

The second part of the letter reads as follows:

> The Ottawa committee recommended to parliament the nonrenewal in its present form of the existing railways' agreement expiring in 1930. But why should this western country be inflicted with another three years of these dirty, ignorant, garlic-smelling, unpreferred continentals as we have been in the last three years? Surely this country ought to be able to govern its railways rather than let the railways demoralize our population.
> It is no use appealing to the Roman Catholic clergy to help, because they, as well as the poor type politicians are the profiteers. The best work in this connection is being done by the National Association of Canada, but whether you lend your assistance in that way or not, at least you might write your individual protest to the government and approach your municipalities and urge them to take some step to mitigate this national nuisance.
> Believe me to be,
> Yours very faithfully
> (Sgd) George Exton Lloyd,
> Bishop of Saskatchewan.

That is a letter from Bishop Lloyd to the ministry of the Protestant churches of the western provinces dated June 29, 1928. Six months later The Advocate published a news item which read as follows:

> The "Unpreferred European" Question
> We have copied from the "Saskatoon Star-Phoenix" the following special telegram. It is probably quite correct and indicates that the National Association of Canada are in for a great battle to maintain these three western provinces as really "British" territories. It also clearly indicates the length to which these "continentals" are prepared to go under the guidance of the agents of the railway and steamship companies:—
> Central Europeans in the West to Petition Ottawa—Object to rule
> Articles in Wide Range of Languages Issued On Prairies
> Special to The Star-Phoenix
> Winnipeg, Man., Feb. 6.—Central Europeans domiciled in western Canada are preparing to deluge Ottawa with petitions protesting against what is termed "The discriminatory ruling against the entrance into Canada of more than a very limited number of central Europeans".
> 50,000 signatures
> The first of these petitions is signed by 50,000 naturalized Ukrainians and is to be supported by at least two other national groups, the Hungarians and Czechoslovakians, who also are said to be getting petitions under way.

Articles discussing the reduction planned in immigration from the non-preferred countries by the department of immigration are circulating throughout the west in Ukrainian, Polish, Czechoslovak and Hungarian papers. One of these articles carries the following:

"The department's gratuitous insult to a fine type of solid and thrifty Canadian citizenship will require a great deal more explanation than has so far been forthcoming, before it can be accepted as justifiable by any class of Canadian in any part of Canada."

Ukrainian petition

The Ukrainian petition will carry a preamble, it is understood, pointing out that the Ukrainians form the third largest racial group in Canada; that they were good enough to produce a goodly portion of the national wealth; to contribute their full share of the taxes; to serve in the war and to support the Red Cross; that, in fact they were considered good enough to assume and carry their share of the responsibilities of the country and now the government turns around to say that their relatives are not good enough to be admitted to Canada.

The petitioners will point out further, it is understood, that in 17 ridings they can elect their own candidate to the federal house if driven to unite on an issue of sufficient importance as to affect their very existence in this country. The petition forms are expected to be in circulation within a very few days.

Mr. Chairman, the surprising thing about this whole shady affair is the fact that this same news item appeared simultaneously together with much editorial comment in many of our chief newspapers throughout Canada. It looks to me very much like a conspiracy to bring the foreign born Canadians into conflict with the native born Canadians. On February 26 I asked the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) whether he had received any of those alleged petitions and his reply was emphatically in the negative. Anticipating, however, the passive attitude which I knew would be taken by our press, I immediately sent a copy of Hansard to all those newspapers that had given so much publicity to the aforementioned false rumours. Not one single newspaper in Canada so much as mentioned my question of February 26. On April 18 I again asked the Minister of Immigration concerning the receipt of any petitions from Ukrainians in the west, and needless to say I was told that no such petitions had been received. Relative to the question I asked the minister on February 26, I beg to place on Hansard two editorials from two Ukrainian newspapers in the west. The first editorial, under the caption "Ukrainian protest re immigration", which appeared in the Ukrainian Voice of February 13, 1929, reads:

The Free Press Daily, February 6th, 1929, published a sensational news item, wherein certain unnamed Ukrainians planned to deluge the government at Ottawa with protests against the restriction of Ukrainian immigration. It is noted that 50,000 Ukrainians contemplate signing those protests reinforced by further petitions from Hungarians, Czechoslovaks, and other nationalities. The Ukrainian protest is supposed to proceed from the premise that the Ukrainians are the third nationality with respect to numbers in Canada; that they were materially instrumental in producing a large part of the wealth of Canada; that they paid their share of the taxes; that they did their bit in the great world war; that they supported the Red Cross; that they performed all their duties as citizens— and now the government repays them by disallowing their relatives entrance into Canada. It is noted further that said protest contemplates threatening the government, should said government not ease up on the matter, with a reorganization of Ukrainian forces, with a view to electing their own members in 17 electoral districts.

All our efforts with respect to acquiring information as to just which Ukrainians plan said protest, have met with no success. It appears therefore, that 50,000 Ukrainians are planning a protest, and a threat of electing 17 members to parliament; but no Ukrainian knows anything of this matter, and if he does know anything he has not the courage to admit it. The Free Press, alone, evidently is cognizant of the matter. Nevertheless, this did not prevent this daily newspaper from forwarding to the Ukrainians some fatherly advice wherein they were dissuaded from doing anything foolish, and wherein it was also noted that neither the Ukrainians nor any other nationality from central Europe resident in western Canada, had any real grounds to register any grievance against the recent departmental restrictioon on the number of immigrants from central Europe, and neither has another daily newspaper, the Winnipeg Tribune, been backward in its reprimands. This daily offers the following question to the Ukrainian leaders: Do you protest as Ukrainians, or as Canadians? In view of your threat to elect 17 members it behooves us to reinforce our own strength and make every effort to safeguard ourselves from any further danger in this respect.

Irrespective of what our views may be on restricting immigration from central Europe, we wish to state most decidedly that not one of the responsible Ukrainian leaders in Canada has had anything to do with the news item in the Free Press; and that if mention is made anywhere of any action contemplated therein, such action in our opinion, is tantamount to mere bluff and provocation.

The second article, entitled, "Insidious insinuation", appeared in the Canadian Ukrainian of February 20, 1929:

Some time ago a sensational news item appeared in the Winnipeg English newspapers with respect to a concerted action of Canadian Ukrainians, protesting against the recent immigration restrictions, adding that 50,000 persons of Ukrainian, Hungarian and Czechoslovakian origin are planning to deluge Ottawa with petitions, and that in the event of a refusal the Ukrainians would elect their own members in electoral districts of Canada. This mysteriously originated item, promulgated with lightning-like rapidity through the length and breadth of Canada, evoked many various comments in the Canadian press.

The most noticeable thing in the whole affair is the fact that everyone else seems to know something about the matter except those who should be primarily interested, namely the Canadian Ukrainians. It thus becomes very evident that some unknown person who has an axe to grind wishes to further his interests at the expense of the Ukrainians. This can be inferred from the extreme haste with which this false rumour was so widely propagated; it can be detected in the awkward manner in which two contradictory lines of action are contemplated, including as it does in this fantastic manoeuvre the Hungarians and Czechoslovaks, and finally concluding with a foolhardy political threat.

We believe that the new immigration restrictions will not hurt the Ukrainians very much since they will, notwithstanding, still be able to bring in their relatives and friends to Canada on affidavits or special permits; and that only those central European nationalities would be affected which had none of their own farmers in Canada.

Notwithstanding this, however, we understand that certain interested factors are furthering their efforts in the same direction with a view to finding real facts to prove their untenable theory. It is therefore, quite possible that some group of impostors, posing as "representatives of the Ukrainian population", for certain considerations will allow itself to be utilized in the above-mentioned scheme, even going so far as to actually rallying our citizens in western Canada with a view to deluging Ottawa with petitions in the interests of the Ukrainian people.

We therefore most decisively wish to note that this whole affair is the initiative of some non-Ukrainian body; that nobody has the right in such an irresponsible manner to abuse the good name of the Canadian Ukrainians. The new immigration restriction with respect to farm labourers from central Europe will do us little harm if our farmers make an early effort to secure permits for their relatives and friends and thus give them an opportunity to arrive here early in the spring.

This thoughtless Free Press item has done much to compromise us in the eyes of the Canadian public, arousing as it does the fictitious menace of a political separatism. Canadian Ukrainians should therefore shun any move that would harness them to the wagon of hostile and false interests.

Hon. members will agree with me, after hearing these denials, that there is some sinister power in Canada whose main purpose is to engineer a so-called pogrom against Ukrainians in Canada, to compromise them in every possible manner, and whose despicable plans have no doubt gained the sympathy and unqualified support of the Advocate and Bishop Lloyd, the would-be Bismark of Prince Rupert, who has this to say in the Advocate:

> Here in Saskatchewan we have a score of nationalities kept within barricades to prevent their becoming full Canadians, a little Ruthenia here, a little Latvia there, a ltlle Slovakia, a little Roumania, a little Poland and so on.

It is a crime against these people that they should be thus kept prisoners within their national compound and prevented from full assimilation as Canadians.

Yes, and it is a crime against Christianity, against civilization and against Canadian unity when a bishop, who should be following in the footsteps of the Prince of Peace and preaching the gospel of eternal love and the brotherhood of man, can see nothing better in Central Europeans than a class of "dirty, ignorant, garlic-smelling, unpreferred continentals." Notwithstanding this indictment by the "saintly" bishop, does it not seem passing strange that from amongst these "dirty, ignorant, garlic-smelling, unpreferred continentals" have sprung such world figures as Paderewski, the world's greatest pianist; Tolstoy, the world's greatest philosopher and humanitarian of the nineteenth century, and from whom Bishop Lloyd might learn many a lesson in humane and temperate conduct; Madam Curie, the lady who discovered radium, an element which some day may help to cure even so hard-crusted a personage as Bishop Lloyd; Caruso, whom Bishop Lloyd would no doubt designate a dirty, ignorant, garlic-smelling, unpreferred dago, but the records of whose golden voice may even now be giving supreme pleasure to the goodly bishop, if such a thing be possible to one of such warped sensibilities—and a host of others whom the time limit set on my speech will not allow me to mention.

I do not think it is necessary for me to reiterate my views on immigration. These views were fully covered in a speech I delivered on June 7, 1928, and it would be superfluous for me to repeat what I said on that occasion. Suffice it to say that I am heartily opposed to the subsidizing of immigration because I believe it is based on a vicious principle. I do not believe in too great an influx either, because I do not believe the economic conditions of Canada today warrant such an influx.

In the few moments left at my disposal I do not intend to deal with any general arguments with regard to immigration, but I do intend to flay and flout the ignominious references made by Bishop Lloyd to the central Europeans. The central Europeans are neither dirty, ignorant nor unpreferred, and as for being garlic-smelling, I consider such a weakness a thousand times better than filling one's mind with the hideous and discriminatory epithets I have mentioned, which appeal to the mentality of, and could be uttered only by, a moron. I repeat most emphatically, Mr. Chairman, that the central European is not what Bishop Lloyd would make him out to be; his opinion is an insult not only to the central European but to humanity in general. It is true that most of these central Europeans are rather poor when they come to Canada, but they make up for this "disqualification"—and I would put that word in quotation marks—by their thrift, their sturdiness, their perseverance and their determination to reclaim homes for themselves on our prairies.

Once these Europeans come to Canada they stay here; they are stickers in the fullest sense of the word. It does not take them long to fulfil their homestead requirements; it does not take them long to pay off their debts and obligations, and that is more than I can say for a number of those so-called preferred European immigrants. In the old country their fare was the simplest and poorest, yet they finely thrived on it; they had very few home comforts as we know them in Canada, yet they dearly loved their rude dwellings. They were family men in a much closer sense than is usually known on the North American continent; they lived, they loved, and their whole world was the land on which they worked. They retain in Canada those fine characteristics for which they were noted in the old country, and unquestionably Canada has been a gainer thereby. One can draw this conclusion from the speech of no less an authority than the Minister of Immigration, delivered in this house on March 15, 1929, as follows:

> To prevent misconception I want to pay a tribute to the people who have come from those countries. They have made contributions of permanent value to the life of the Dominion; they are taking an active interest in Canadian problems and government, as witness members of local governments and one member of foreign birth in the Dominion parliament. They have worked in our lumber camps, helped to build our railways and highways, dug our ditches and given good service for wages received. They have cleared thousands of acres of our scrub land in the northern part of the prairie provinces and have made the wilderness blossom as the rose. They have built their modest homes; in many instances they have every modern item of equipment on their farms and have purchased more machinery and equipment in recent years than other agriculturists, and they have added to the wealth of the country by the production of millions of dollars' worth of farm produce. They have not lagged behind in other respects; they have sent their children to high schools and universities, fitting in this young and growing nation.

Then, Mr. Chairman, one of the hon. members opposite referred to certain Russian boys who have received prizes in different lines of endeavour. I could name hundreds of those boys and girls in Canada who have received prizes in public and high schools as well as universities. Only two years ago a young girl, whose name I have forgotten but who originated in the southern part of Russia, received the highest marks obtained at one of the Toronto universities.

Arvo Vaara was sent to gaol for uttering in Canada certain seditious sentiments and in his charge to the jury Mr. Justice Wright had this to say:

> —was the article calculated or intended to excite ill between different classes of the King's subjects, because that comes within the definition of sedition—

If Vaara, because of this article, was sent to gaol for six months I contend that Bishop Lloyd should be sent to gaol for six years, because his reference to the different races in Canada was just as bad as the article written by Vaara in the paper which he edited somewhere in Ontario.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to immigrants from Europe I do not believe there should be any of this humbug and tommyrot we hear about the superiority of one race over another. I challenge any member of this house or any scientist to prove biologically that one race of people could not do as well as another race under similar circumstances. What does our Minister of Immigration have to say on this point? Allow me to read another passage from his speech:

> A good deal of controversy exists in regard to continental and British immigration. I have never agreed, Mr. Speaker, that there are superior and inferior people. There are backward and forward people and backward and forward nations. We all know, looking into the dim past, that geat nations have existed and have passed away, and left little more behind than a name. In more recent times, we also know that nations have reached the peak of progress and civilization and have then faded out of the picture, as it were, and other nations have taken their place. That is what has happened in the past and doubtless the same will happen in the future. Some nationalities, however, are much more easily absorbed than others, and we have to take that into consideration in considering this question of immigration.

Doubtless there is a good deal of truth in that statement, but the last sentence is open to challenge. Measured by any standard whatever, I fail to see wherein and how it takes longer to make a desirable Canadian citizen of the central European than is the case with any other European. He learns English just as fast; he educates his children just as well; he serves on school and municipal boards just as readily, and in the matter of paying off his debts and obligations he need not take off his hat to anyone, be he a foreign born or a native born Canadian citizen.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, having these facts in view, I think it is not fair to classify these immigrants as non-preferred. Supposing the Minister of Immigration were to call the members who sit to the left of the Speaker the non-preferred party, would the Conservatives like it? They certainly would not, because deep down in their hearts the Conservatives feel that they are just as good as the members who sit to the right of the Speaker, and perhaps better. It is only human nature for any man to think he is just as good as the other fellow, and it is also human nature for him to resent the insinuation that he is in some way inferior. That is what this stupid classification does; it differentiates; it discriminates; it prejudices; it provokes and, in a word, it tends to stimulate a bitter antagonism among the newcomers to Canada.

Mr. FORKE: I would like to just point out to the hon. gentleman that there is nothing in the Immigration Act or in the regulations which speaks of preferred or non-preferred immigrants. That is a common expression, but it is not embodied either in the act or in the regulations.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Perhaps not, but that is what it amounts to in practice. Now, think of the future; suppose you were the Hungarian or Ukrainian or Bohemian or Czechoslovakian father of a couple of intelligent, athletic and alert young men who were just beginning university courses, to whom it was remarked by their Anglo-Saxon fellow students that they were a couple of bohunk sons of an unpreferred immigrant. You would not like the reflection; neither does the immigrant. I say again we must think of the future; why should future posterity suffer because of the folly of the present generation? Whilst it may be true that a rose by any other name smells just as sweet, still I do not think it would be very flattering to the rose to call it garlic. So why not give the immigrant his due and call him by the name he deserves? The discriminatory application of the words "preferred" and "non-preferred" can do nothing to bring about that unity without which no country can become really secure and great.

I would like to deal with a suggestion made by Bishop Lloyd's Advocate with regard to the segregation of our immigrants in large colonies as being inimical to their complete absorption as Canadian citizens. When I speak of the susceptibility of the immigrant to assimiliation and his readiness in accepting our laws and our constitution, I know I am dealing with a subject which is of grave concern to those whose patriotic fervour and ardent love of country foresee in the existence of any foreigners within our borders a potential menace. It is little wonder that the advent of any newcomers to our shores is a signal for a great stir in our social, educational and political circles, directed, no doubt, with a view to finding the best method of coping with the problem of welcoming the immigrant and making of him, in the shortest time possible, a desirable citizen sharing with us all that such citizenship entails. There are some good people in Canada who would come to the aid of the immigrant purely from an altruistic, humanitarian point of view; others would exploit him to the limit or else help him for practical opportunistic reasons; while people of the type of Bishop Lloyd would herd all our immigrants on one ship and then let it sink in the middle of the ocean.

The Advocate foresees a great menace in the segregation of immigrants in large colonies and, therefore, I would infer that as an alternative measure it would sandwich all our newcomers in with the rest of the nationalities; but would Bishop Lloyd be willing to have Hungarians, Poles and Ukrainians as neighbours? Not on your life—no dirty, ignorant, garlic-smelling, unpreferred immigrant is going to be permitted in his back yard; and here we have the key to the whole situation. The idea of mixing the races in this way is a good one so long as each race is willing to tolerate the other; but when you have a situation where one element is offensively trying to lord it over the other you create the germs of a dissension which is bound to keep the races apart no matter how willing each component element may be to do its part in the attainment of one common ideal. The rest of us tolerate the immigrant only in so far as he looks up to us, but as for accepting him into our social circle, that is another matter. It is another matter to the immigrant also. If he has any gumption at all, and he usually has, he will discern the discrimination and he will resent it. How? Simply by leaving the community in which he resides and moving to a district where he knows he has an even chance, or in other words, where he knows he will find his own level. All this talk of assimilating the immigrant without extending to him a helping hand, without meeting him half way and without giving him a square deal is mere cant; it simply cannot be done.

There is no question in my mind that the best way to deal with assimilation is to leave it alone. Let us remember that the psychology of our immigrants cannot be changed in a generation but that this metamorphosis will come about only by a slow and gradual process as man becomes inured to his new environment. Our would-be reformers lose sight of this fact when they charge the immigrant with the retention of what one would call a certain sentimental bond with the land of their birth. This, in my opinion, is not a regrettable propensity. It is a universal and spiritual quality which has manifested itself in mankind the whole world over for countless ages; it is the natural impulse which transports in imagination or in actuality the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) to his little village in Wales; our Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) to his wonderful Scottish highlands; our Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) to his beloved Leicestershire; and our Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady), and all other Irishmen in the house, to their beautiful lakes of Killarney.

I once had as a neighbour an adorable old Scotch lady. Unaware of her presence on her veranda one evening I put on the gramaphone an old Scotch song, "The Bonnie Banks o' Loch Lomond." When she heard the strains of what was to her a very familiar old melody, she came right over to our porch and made me play it over and over again, crying after each time I played it as though her dear old heart would break. It is because of this innate quality inherent in mankind that I think we should be very careful how we meddle with the sensibilities of other people; for if you take away what is human and natural in a person without replacing it with something better or at least something just as good, you destroy his usefulness, not only to himself but to his newly adopted country as well. For this reason I believe that the best way to deal with assimilation is to leave it alone. Our immigrants know very well that it is futile to try to swim against the current and so they are not offering the resistance which our would-be professional reformers claim they are.

I am very well acquainted with this ambitious reformer type. He or she usually is a dogmatic university graduate, or a hard-boiled crank like Bishop Lloyd, who imagines that the future welfare of the world rests on his or her shoulders. They start out by concocting a tailor-made scheme for the complete absorption of the foreigner, believing that the remedy can be applied in the same manner as feeding the machines in our great industrial plants. They overlook absolutely the personal and human element with the result that their efforts are met with the righteous indignation and hearty contempt of those they so thoughtlessly wish to help. You cannot treat an immigrant as a menial and expect him at the same time to accept our citizenship wholeheartedly and unqualifiedly. If shown sympthy he will reciprocate; if shown antagonism he will react toward it. The only method which should be followed is that of absolute fair play. Let us meet him half way and extend to him a helping hand and give him a square deal. This is the one and only way of assimilating the immigrant.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I desire to give the correct figures which I promised the committee I would let it have. During 1928, 18,730 skilled labourers and 3,884 professionally trained people left Canada for the United States, making, in round figures, 23,000, which was the figure I gave. To illustrate the heavy drain this is on the country, I would like to point out that in 1924, the heaviest year of emigration, we lost 41,345 skilled labourers from Canada, according to the American figures.

I would like to make a correction in regard to Hansard. I stated that Hansard had the papers I required and they had not been returned, but I find that they had been placed in a closed envelope on my desk and I had not noticed them. I do not wish to do Hansard any injustice in this regard.

I think the whole house has listened with a very great deal of interest to the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I believe the people of Canada can take pride in the fact that one who, although born on this continent came of Ukrainian parents, has been able to deliver, as member of this house, a speech of which any hon. member might well be proud.

The hon. member quoted from the remarks of the Minister of Immigration and I would like to supplement what he said with regard to foreigners, or what I choose to call new Canadians, by saying that many such statements also have come from this side of the house. I would like to warn the hon. member and some of his friends against the tactics which were employed in past elections, and particularly in the last one. A man who had no connection with this house, who was not a candidate for election, but who was a Conservative and who happened to get up on a platform to speak at a Conservative picnic, criticized the so-called foreigners and that speech was used throughout the whole of western Canada as a criticism which was made by this party. The speech was printed and sent to all sections of the western country where there was a newcomer or foreign population, and used with such marked political effect that it cost our party many thousand votes. It has been stated many times that the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen himself lost his seat because of that very statement for which he was in no way, by any stretch of the imagination, responsible. I just wish to point out to my hon. friend, for whom we all have a great deal of respect, that he, enlightened, educated, able to put forward his ideas as he is, would be well advised to inform those of his people who have not had his opportunities, to be just a little careful at times in blaming a whole party for the irresponsible statement of somebody who has no direct connection as a candidate or a member of that party.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Do I understand the hon. gentleman to suggest that this emanated from me?

Mr. MANION: Certainly not. I did everything I could to compliment the hon. member. I had no intention of doing anything else.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Before one o'clock we were discussing a certain item, and the minister told us that the expenditure on the same item last year amounted to $863,000. Now he is asking us to vote $1,080,000 or an increase of more than $200,000. I wish to point out some items that appear in the public accounts of Canada. We are, for instance, maintaining an office at Detroit. Imagine keeping an office at Detroit at an expenditure of nearly $15,000 when we could have an office on our own grounds at Windsor, only half a mile away. Imagine keeping an office at Saginaw, Michigan! The minister may say: Well, this has been done before. In that case it is time for a change. Imagine keeping an office at San Francisco, another at St. Paul and another at Spokane! Is the committee aware that in the whole of Germany we have only one office, at Hamburg; only one office in France, one in Holland and one in Riga, Latvia, but we have forty in the United States. If a United States citizen wants to come to Canada, does he need to go to Detroit, if there is Windsor across the river to come to? The thing to me is absolutely absurd. From the results which we are receiving from this office there is no occasion for the minister to ask us to vote $200,000 under this item. I therefore beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Fort William:

That vote No. 54 be reduced by the sum of $200,000.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. WARD: We have for several days been treated to a feast of—I do not know what you would call it—from the opposition as to why we should spend a sum in the neighbourhood of $300,000,000 on an immigration scheme according to the resolution of the hon. member for North Vancouver.

Mr. MANION: That was not the resolution. That was his suggestion.

Mr. WARD: I notice the hon. members all supported it. It occurred to me that we might erect along this wall in very large letters just opposite my hon. friends across the floor, the motto "Consistency". During the last eight years, while I have been in the house, we have had a number of new theoretical ideas as to how or why we might improve conditions in this country, but of all the illogical, half baked, ill-digested theories that have been presented to the house in those eight years, the scheme of the hon. member for North Vancouver is the worst. It was clear evidence of a man with no practical experience whatever. To those of us who have had experience in the clearing and settling of land, it was so ridiculous that—well, I give the party credit for almost withdrawing the motion yesterday.

We have now the spectacle of the hon. member for Lincoln moving a motion to reduce this item by $200,000; although a few days ago his party were prepared to force the country into an expenditure of $300,000,000 on a scheme that would have cost us another $300,000,000 to get the people out of the difficulties into which they would have fallen had we ever attempted to carry out that scheme. Surely it is time we commenced to grasp the facts, to get two feet on the ground and to consider these matters in the light of the best interests of Canada and not to run off at tangents as hon. members opposite have been doing all through the debate. I very much favour the philosophy of the hon. member for Vegreville, and I want to congratulate him on the excellent speech he has just made. No other member during the whole debate kept two feet closer to the ground and discussed the matter in more fundamental terms than he did.

I am opposed to assisted immigration of any character. I have often said that I think we should have a policy of an open door, with certain restrictions so that no man would be admitted to Canada unless he was financially—

An hon. MEMBER: Consistency!

Mr. WARD: My hon. friend over there says: Open the door and let them come in from any part of the world. If we opened the door and said that no man should be admitted to this country unless he had at least $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000, which it costs today to establish oneself on any kind of a farm, we would perhaps secure a different class of immigrants. As the hon. member for Vegreville says, in our present condition the people of central Europe are about the only ones who can establish themselves upon a farm. The people from Great Britain cannot unless they are pap fed, unless we provide them with $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000 to buy a farm and equipment and then educate them along farming lines. I am opposed to a system of assisted immigration to this country whether the people come from Great Britain or central Europe. I think the system is vicious, but if we intend to continue a system of assisted immigration, we might very well say that we shall open the doors to all the white nations, but under certain restrictions, physical, mental and financial, so that we shall get a class of citizens who will take care of themselves when they come to Canada.

Mr. ARTHURS: My hon. friend stated that the estimates presented by the minister amounted to $3,000,000. As a matter of fact, they amount to $3,462,000, in addition to which there is before the house an estimate for the Soldier Settlement Board amounting, so far the Department of Immigration is concerned, to $1,400,000. This department some years ago, was started for the purpose of settling returned soldiers in Canada and by degrees it has become a part of the Department of Immigration, so much so that in their report of 1927 they make this statement:

There has been continued development during the year of the strictly colonization features of the board's work. Land Settlement branch officials have undertaken:

(1) Settlement and establishment on the land of families brought forward by the Department of Immigration and Colonization under the 3,000 British family scheme.

(2) Settlement on farms of continental families brought forward by the railways under the government continental family scheme.

(3) Placement and aftercare of married and single British farm workers recruited by the Department of Immigration and Colonization, including trainees from British training farms.

(4) Investigations of the bona fides of nominations made by residents of Canada in favour of residents of Great Britain, and aftercare of British farm workers, married and single, brought forward by the Department of Immigration and Colonization, as a result of such nominations.

(5) Aftercare of British farm workers brought forward by the Colonization departments of the two great Canadian railways, and by the Ontario government.

I would like to call particular attention to this last. This is a charge against the Department of Immigration under the vote of the land settlement board, now so-called.

(6) Investigations concerned with applications to the Department of Immigration and Colonization, for the admission to Canada of alien immigrants.

Last year this was a subject brought forward very prominently before a committee of the house and apparently it had been investigated by a subdepartment of the Immigration department itself.

(7) Investigations of the settlement conditions of foreign farm workers, brought forward by the railway companies.

These are two items under the railway companies' agreement.

(8) Investigations of applications for commutation of pensions.

(9) Surveys to ascertain lands available for colonization.

(10) Reception of distinguished guests from Great Britain and other countries, who desire to report to their governments on settlement opportunities.

In other words, this department is attempting to conceal the fact that they are spending under another guise practically $1,500,000 each year, which is not included in the estimates of the department but is attributed to the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member has accused the department of trying to conceal expenditures or publishing them under false pretences. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am not. The minister admits that this money has been expended by the department.

Mr. FORKE: By the land settlement board, under the Department of Immigration.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is only camouflage.

Mr. FORKE: It is not camouflage.

Mr. ARTHURS: As a matter of fact, has this sum been expended or not by or for the Immigration department?

Mr. FORKE: It has been spent by the land settlement board for the Department of Immigration.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is all I said in the first place.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. gentleman said that the expenditure was camouflaged under the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. ARTHURS: Yes, I said that, and I believe it yet.

Mr. FORKE: Let us be fair. All the work that is carried on under the Soldier Settlement Board is charged to the board. Then we have a land settlement board, under the Department of Immigration.

Mr. ARTHURS: There is only one board, and the minister is now talking of that board as the Soldier Settlement Board. That is what I complain of. There is only one board, and the minister calls it the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. FORKE: If the hon. gentleman would only allow me to finish, I have no wish to mislead anybody. The land settlement board has the same personnel as the Soldier Settlement Board. When the Soldier Settlement Board is dealing with the soldier settler, it acts as a board under the act. When it acts as the land settlement board, it is under the control and direction of the Immigration department. There is no attempt at all to conceal the facts. The first item under the Soldier Settlement Board estimates is for Soldier Settlement Board work, and the second item is for land settlement board work under the Department of Immigration. There is no camouflage at all.

Mr. ARTHURS: I said most distinctly that the first item was under the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. FORKE: But the hon. member said the expenditure was camouflaged.

Mr. ARTHURS: And the minister has confirmed everything that I said. In the twenty or thirty times that he has mentioned that board just recently he called it, as Hansard will confirm, the Soldier Settlement Board. As a matter of fact, two-thirds of the activities of that board are land settlement work which is directly attributable to the Department of Immigration and has no connection with soldier settlement at all. While the vote for soldier settlement this year is $1,000,000, the vote for immigration is $1,400,000, but every dollar of the overhead of this department is charged against the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. FORKE: No, that is absolutely wrong.

Mr. ARTHURS: Show me where I am wrong.

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Mr. FORKE: I have tried to explain, but I cannot furnish my hon. friend with the intelligence to grasp it.

Mr. ARTHURS: The estimates speak for themselves, and I am willing to put my intelligence up against that of the Minister of Immigration. The vote reads, $2,400,000 for the Soldier Settlement Board. Now $1,000,000 of that is for soldier settlement purposes, and $1,400,000 for immigration purposes. The minister agrees with that. He has not denied it in any particular, but every bit of the overhead is charged against the soldier settlement.

Mr. FORKE: To show how absurd the position of the hon. gentleman is and how he has not grasped the situation, let me say that the last part of vote 60 reads, "Amount required for general land settlement advances," and $690,000 of that is British money that was advanced.

Mr. ARTHURS: The estimates do not show that.

Mr. FORKE: It is the fact all the same.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am talking of the estimates as they appear. I have already pointed out that the Soldier Settlement Board themselves state in their report of last year, covering the year 1927-28, that their principal activities, 65 to 70 per cent of their activities, were directly attributable to the Department of Immigration. I have mentioned some of them, and I will read a little further. If the minister wants a little more, I will give him all he wants.

Mr. FORKE: The total vote for land settlement administration is $600,000 for administration instead of $1,400,000. Perhaps we can straighten this out better when the soldier settlement estimates are up.

Mr. ARTHURS: The point I am trying to make is, why does not the minister bring down these estimates under his own department?

Mr. FORKE: They are under my own department.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why are they not shown under the Department of Immigration, and why is this document I hold in my hand not one of the documents distributed to hon. members by the distribution office at the House of Commons?

Mr. FORKE: The land settlement branch of the Department of Immigration issues a statement along with the Soldier Settlement Board statement.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why are they not issued under your department?

Mr. FORKE: That is a matter of detail.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, it is a matter of convenience. I venture to say there are not fifty, perhaps twenty or even ten members of this house who have received a copy of this report which I hold in my hand.

Mr. FORKE: That may be true.

Mr. ARTHURS: It is not distributed to the members of this house.

Mr. FORKE: Oh, yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, it is not. The minister is absolutely wrong in that. I had to send for it. I want to go a little further, Mr. Chairman, I am quoting now from the report of 1927-28:

> The relative importance of these strictly colonization activities is shown in the diaries of the field supervisors of the board. The diaries show that more than 65 per cent of the time of field officials, during the period from April 1 to September 30, was spent in connection with general land settlement as distinct from soldier settlement. During the period under review, 27,561 visits were made in connection with soldier land settlement, while 48,413 visits were in connection with general land settlement and departmental investigations. The total mileage travelled was 1,167,265, and of this a total of 406,849 miles was on visits to soldier settlers and 760,460 miles in connection with other settlers.

This proves conclusively, Mr. Chairman, that the major portion of the activities of the Soldier Settlement Board—so called by the minister, not by me—relate to the Department of Immigration, and obviously their estimates should be presented by that department, and presented in the ordinary way. There is no question that the reports of this board are not issued in the ordinary way by this government, but separately by the department itself. They are not distributed in the way that the estimates, or the report of the minister himself, are distributed.

Mr. FORKE: Oh, yes; I laid those reports on the table at the commencement of the session, and they are available to every member of the house.

Mr. ARTHURS: I did not say anything about that. I simply said that they were not distributed in the ordinary way as are the reports of the Department of Immigration, and the minister cannot deny it.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know anything about the distribution. I know they are laid upon the table and are available.

Mr. ARTHURS: They are not available unless you send for them. I said before that the expenses of the Immigration department were approximately $3,000,000. As a matter of fact the estimates for this year are practically $5,500,000. There is also an estimate for the land settlement board, about which we have just been talking, of $1,400,000. We also have an expenditure by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and have had for many years, of $750,000, and about the same for the Canadian National. All these grants come directly or indirectly out of the people of Canada. There is also a vote for quarantine, directly attributable to immigration, of about $200,000 or $250,000. There is also the rent, upkeep, and so forth, of buildings in connection with this department. In other words there is a total vote for immigration outside of the railways, amounting to about $5,162,900, and the railways are paying about $1,500,000 in addition, all of which comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada.

Then we must remember that we have in Canada certain provinces at least which are directly interested in the immigration question. Ontario, the province from which I come, expends quite a considerable sum annually, and maintains an office in Great Britain. In 1928 Ontario paid $176,128.92 on account of immigration, according to the public accounts. Then we have various other agencies. We have the Church of England council of empire settlement; we have the Church Army of the Church of England; we have the Salvation Army; we have the Catholic emigration society; the orphan homes of Scotland; the Doctor Cossar homes; Fegan's home; Church of England waifs and strays society; British immigration and colonization association; Doctor Barnardo's homes; National Children's Home and Orphanage; Middlemore's homes; and a whole lot more that I am not going to enumerate. Every one of these institutions is supported by church organizations, or supports itself. The minister is attempting to delude—I do not want to be called to order—the house into the belief that he has brought into this country a certain number of immigrants during the last fiscal year. As a matter of fact, nine-tenths of these immigrants have been brought in through the agencies to which I have referred, agencies which have no part or parcel in the estimates of $5,100,000 of the Department of Immigration.

I remember two or three years ago that the minister had a little squabble with the Salvation Army. I will not say that he sent his officers, but his officers went for the express purpose of trying to make trouble with this particular organization. As a matter of fact the Salvation Army were able to cure the whole evil, and to prove that they had done nothing irregular or contrary to the law. They have had had the direct support of the province of Ontario, and they have brought into Ontario during the last two years over 2,000 boys under nineteen years of age. I am glad to learn that the minister has withdrawn his antagonistic attitude towards this particular organization, and is now supporting it, in some degree at least. I might mention that Ontario is supporting this particular organization more than any other agency so far as they are concerned, they are contributing to the Salvation Army at the rate of about $17,000 per year, or about one-eighth of their total expenditure, being satisfied that they are bringing the right kind of immigrants into Canada.

The minister in his defence some days ago stated that we were receiving more immigrants than we deserved. He did not exactly use the words I have just spoken, but he said that he did not want any more immigrants to enter Canada unless they had opportunities afforded to them before coming to Canada. The members for Marquette, Rosetown and Southeast Grey have practically told the government that they should cease all activities so far as immigration is concerned. But in spite of the advice of their friends—because they are their friends—the government continues to make expenditures.

The minister has stated—I have not the figures under my hand at the moment—that we have received from the United States upwards of 33,000 returning Canadians. We have in Canada 245 constituencies, which would mean that there would be an average of about 150 returning Canadians to each constituency. I defy any man in this house to get up and state on his word of honour that 150 of those who went to the United States from his constituency have returned to that constituency. I am speaking only of the average. So far as I am concerned I have not found one come back. What occurs is this: a native Canadian coming back to Canada from the United States for the summer, or to visit relatives, is asked when he gets to the port of entry, "How long have you been out of Canada?" He may answer, six months; then he is asked whether he intends to remain in Canada. The reply is, "Certainly, if I can get a job"; and he is marked down as a Canadian returning to this country.

But the fact is that these men are not coming back to Canada and never will come back so long as the present policy continues under this regime. What we need in this country is to provide work which will attract back to Canada those boys and girls who have gone to the United States. Provide sufficient employment and you will not only keep in the country those who are already here but you will bring back others who have left.

A good deal has been said about the colonization of the west and considerable criticism has been made of the hon. member for North Vancouver. Some hon. members to my left and others opposite have pointed out that the western provinces were not populated by people from the British isles or by people directly from Europe. The backbone of the whole opening of the west consisted indeed of settlers from the older provinces of the Dominion, and we believe that if you will give to the native Canadian in Ontario and Quebec and in the maritime provinces the same opportunity you are now offering foreigners, or attempting to offer them, you will get all the settlers you desire or need in the western provinces.

Last year there was before the committee a motion which I regret that the minister did not include among the recommendations. That motion asked that provision be made for a survey in each province of the land and opportunities available, and that cooperation be made easy; officials to be appointed by the provinces and the Dominion. It was also recommended that a list be furnished in each province showing the opportunities available for acquiring land for farming, as well as the opportunities in regard to industry. It was further requested that details be furnished the house annually with respect to the operations in the provinces. Under a proper scheme I do not think it would be at all difficult to keep in Canada those who would otherwise emigrate, the young men growing up on the farms. The young man on the farm is under a handicap, because if there are two or more sons on the farm only one can remain, as a general rule. In the past there were two exceptions to this rule: In the first place there was vacant land near the farm where the boys resided, and in the second place there was a subdivision of land, because agriculture and industry went hand in hand and many of the farms, especially in Ontario and Quebec, were being subdivided from 200 to 100 and then to 50 or 40 or 30 acres. That condition does not exist to-day, so that if there are two or more sons on a farm one remains and the others must necessarily leave either to go into some other line of business or to take up agriculture elsewhere. I submit that we should give to these young men the opportunities we are affording the foreigner to-day.

Mr. KELLNER: We have had suggestions from various sections of the house regarding the manner in which the Department of Immigration has fallen down in not bringing more farmers in. It seems to me a logical question to ask—what is the matter with the Canadian farmer? If we look up the statistics we shall find that the Canadian farmer to-day is making more progress than the farmer of any other country the wide world over. For instance, at this very moment the United States congress is holding a special session for the purpose of introducing measures for the relief of American farmers. No one has ever heard of this parliament doing any such thing for the Canadian farmer. In the British Empire the farmers have been relieved of practically all taxes. Nothing of the sort has been done for our farmers. On the other hand, the per capita production of the Canadian farmer is greater than that of the farmer of any other country in the world. So that I believe we have in Canada probably the most competent aggregation of farmers to be found anywhere in the world. I would ask, therefore: What do you expect to do by bringing in from other countries a lot of farmers who are not so competent as the farmers at present in Canada? Take the price of grain to-day, which is lower than it has been at any time in the past fifteen years. Certainly it would be economically unsound to bring in a lot more farmers and have them grow more grain without making provision for an additional market. Dairy production in Canada has been very rapidly falling off in the last three years and will depreciate still further. On the other hand, the Canadian farmers are helping to support the agricultural implement manufacturers, who charge a good deal more for their implements than do the manufacturers of any other country. So that the Canadian farmer has reached the distinctive position where he can get along without government assistance and even in spite of the handicap in regard to the purchase of implements.

The hon. member (Mr. Luchkovich) made a very strong plea for fair treatment to all the farmers we have in Canada and particularly to those of the same racial extraction as himself. I wish to make a plea for what I may term the native-born Canadian, the established farmer in Canada. I do not think I can bring the matter out more definitely than by citing a certain case that occurred in my own constituency. There we had an Indian reserve which the government intended to take over in order to place immigrants from the 3,000 British family scheme. The residents of that district made strong complaint. They claimed that there were many native-born Canadians there who were anxious to get land and were entitled to a certain portion of the reserve. The result was that the land was divided fifty-fifty, part of it being used for immigrants under the British settlement scheme, the rest being sold to residents of the district. The land purchased by native Canadians and established farmers was sold by public auction. There were a large number of real estate dealers there who bid on the land, with the result that it went up to three or four times its actual value. When that land was brought under cultivation the purchaser had to fence it, plough it and provide his own equipment. On the other hand, the land given to the immigrants was not sold at all; the government simply billed it to them at what it cost to take it over and improve it. The land was broken, fences were erected and buildings put up and the immigrant was brought in and placed, although he had not a single dollar. Compare the situation of the native-born Canadian who had to buy his land, improve it and provide his own equipment at market price, and then enter into competition with the man who had not a dollar. Furthermore, the equipment for those settlement farms was purchased through the soldier settlement scheme and the price paid was 20 to 30 per cent less than that paid by the average farmer. So this situation prevails: If an established farmer goes to price exactly the same implements he will be asked at least 10 per cent and on some implements from 20 per cent to 30 per cent more than is paid by the immigrant. I do not think it possible to maintain the enthusiasm or patriotism of the Canadian farmer if he is treated in this way. I do not think there is any question but that the farmers we have in Canada now are just a little superior to any farmers we could bring in from other countries, but without a doubt we are going to lose a number of our farmers if we refuse to give them the same treatment we give our immigrants. So far as nationalities are concerned, we get the good and the bad from all countries, but generally speaking I think we produce people in Canada a little better than we get anywhere else. It is my contention that any special privileges which we give to immigrants from any other country should be available to our native born Canadians and to the established farmers at present in Canada.

There is one other matter I would like to discuss in connection with the assisted settlement scheme. If we should come to a period of extreme depression, which undoubtedly is coming in the agricultural industry, and these fellows get a little behind with their payments, consider the difference between their situation and that of the man who is dealing directly with the implement agent. The ordinary farmer must deal either with the bank or with the implement agent, and when his note is due it must be paid; if he cannot pay it he will be sold out. The case of the immigrant who is working with government assistance, however, is different. A government collector comes around; certainly it would be a serious thing to sell out one of these immigrants and let that advertisement go abroad, so as a result he does not pay at all. If that is carried to a logical conclusion and we come to a period of acute depression, it seems to me that one of two things must happen: Either this great agricultural industry of ours will be carried on as a government undertaking with these immigrants as the hired men of the government or, if the people of Canada will not subscribe to that scheme, eventually a lot of real estate sharks will go in and buy out and operate these farms. Then, instead of having individual farmers who own their own land we will have a few big operators for whom the farmers will be working. It is worth remembering that particularly in England and I think in every other country in Europe there have been a great many fights and a good bit of bloodshed in order to remedy that situation, and it does not seem reasonable that at this late date Canada should evolve a scheme which will carry her into the pit from which the countries of Europe have had such a hard time escaping. I believe that before we engage in a scheme of immigration too ambitious for this country, that matter should be considered.

Then we must consider the question of markets and the further question of special privileges which are granted to our immigrants but are not granted to our established farmers. I think if we put these facilities at the disposal of the farmers we have now it would be only a short time until the production would greatly exceed any prospective markets we may have for farm produce.

[Mr. Kellner.]

The proposals which are being considered in the United States at the moment undoubtedly will hurt the western farmer. There is no doubt that butter, which is very largely produced in northern Alberta and sold across the line, will be practically shut out of the American market. On the other hand we have the competition of butter from Australia and New Zealand; these countries ship butter to Canada under a duty of one cent per pound, and their governments pay a bonus of about five cents for every pound of butter exported. So I feel that Australia and New Zealand butter will come into the larger cities of the west, particularly during the winter months, just as cheaply as Alberta butter can be produced, because the bonus given the farmers in Australia and New Zealand just about covers the cost of transportation. It must be remembered also that butter produced on grass alone can be produced much more cheaply than is the case where cows must be winter fed for six or seven months. When this parliament gets down to consider the real problems which confront the Canadian farmer to-day I think we might be in an intelligent frame of mind to deal with the situation, but it seems very illogical to me that we should advocate a huge influx of immigrants without considering what they are going to do if they get here and how we are going to dispose of what they produce.

I want to compliment the hon. member for Lincoln on moving a reduction in this vote; his attitude is quite different from that taken the other night by the hon. member for North Vancouver, who suggested an expenditure of $300,000,000. The absurdity of that suggestion apparently is becoming plain, and now we are offered a suggestion which, all things considered, is much more intelligent.

I want to make just one or two comments with regard to the Department of Immigration and Colonization and the minister who is in charge of it. I think probably he has done a service to Canada by falling down on the job, to use a term we often hear; I am satisfied that it would have been a sad thing for Canada if he had made a success of his job. We have here a department which is of no practical use at all; since we have that kind of department the best thing to do is to put in charge some one who will make a failure of it, because in that way it will be the greatest success.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the minister has had a good rest in listening to these speeches, so now I would like to ask some questions and obtain some information with respect to his department. He has told us that on the continent of Europe we maintain seven examination stations. What is the procedure by which an intending immigrant who has received a permit from the department may find his way to one of these examination stations?

Mr. FORKE: I understand that he comes down to the port of embarkation, where we have an officer who conducts the examination.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Surely the minister can see that there is a great hiatus in that procedure. If we have no offices on the continent how does the immigrant get his information and his instructions with regard to his examination?

Mr. FORKE: He is directed by the transportation companies, who are doing the recruiting, and I might inform the hon. member that this is one of the great hardships in connection with the whole immigration matter. Most of the immigrants are given a preliminary examination by their own doctor, perhaps 600 miles from the port of embarkation; they are passed as being healthy, but when they come to the port, say Riga, the medical officer of the department examines them and one member of the family may be turned down. That is one of the hardest propositions the department has to meet. The family sell out and come down to the port, where they find that they are forced either to leave one behind or go back to their home town. The department does not do any recruiting on the continent; that is all done by the transportation companies, who are supposed to be careful to see that no one is brought forward who cannot pass the examination at the port.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Our expenditure there is wholly in the interests of the transportation companies?

Mr. FORKE: Our expenditure there is wholly in the interests of Canada, to prevent people coming here who should not be allowed to enter the country.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): We are carrying on these examinations in order to aid the transportation companies?

Mr. FORKE: It is really to prevent a hardship being imposed on the people when they arrive at Quebec. We could make that examination at Quebec but the hon. member knows what would happen; it is much better to stop them on the other side and for that purpose we send over our medical officers to make the examinations in order to prevent all possible hardship.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are you preventing it?

Mr. FORKE: To a very large extent.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister compare the two sets of figures for the two different years, 1927-28 and 1928-29, in connection with the rejections? He will find that the rejections are arising only in two places, in Great Britain and Italy.

Mr. FORKE: I should have mentioned that there is both a medical and a civil examination, and I think the examinations have been more rigid during the last year or two, which may account for the difference.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In spite of all that you have still three hundred rejections at the ports of Canada. I am trying to find out what improvement has been brought about through this changed method. I can find no difference except in Great Britain and the examination of the Italians; as far as the other countries are concerned, there has been no reduction whatever.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member knows that that matter comes under the Department of Health, and when those estimates are up the minister may be able to give a better explanation than I can with regard to these examinations and rejections.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am only asking for information respecting the report of the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Mr. FORKE: What page is that?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is on pages 27, 28 and 32.

Mr. FORKE: I have no doubt it is correct.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I claim that we are making that expenditure in Europe in the interests of the transportation companies. Under the law if a transportation company brings an unsuitable immigrant to Canada it must return him, but we are placing upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of Canada this large expenditure in order to maintain these offices simply in the interests of the transportation companies.

Mr. FORKE: I beg to differ with the hon. member.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I doubt very much if this is having the result expected, because they are still coming to the ports of Canada and suffering the great indignity of which the minister speaks in being rejected here. They are rejected at the Canadian ports in spite of the examinations carried on by the medical representatives of Canada in Europe. The minister says that we are doing a great deal of good, but I think a great deal of harm is being done. After having these immigrants passed by our own Canadian examiners we turned back some 300 in one year, and 500 in the other. I cannot explain that, and I would like the minister to offer some explanation. If it is a great injustice and hardship to be turned back, say at the port of Amsterdam or Rotterdam, it is a much greater hardship to be turned back at the ports of Quebec, Montreal, St. John or Halifax, after having been examined by our own Canadian medical examiner. We are making this expenditure for no other reason than that of saving the transportation companies some money.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member is wrong when he says that we are merely trying to save the transportation companies some money. As a matter of fact, an immigrant coming to this country has three or four barriers to get through. The transportation companies do soliciting in Europe by means of their own officers in the different communities from which the immigrants come. They make their selections with the knowledge of the barrier which has to be passed at the port of embarkation, and they are very careful in making those selections, knowing that they will be liable for the return of the individual free of charge should he be refused entry into Canada. During January of this year there were some 1,444 examinations reported. Of that number, 1,349 were passed, 3 were certified in class (a), 36 in class (b); 49 in class (c), 2 in class (k), 4 in class (m), and 2 awaiting further report. This makes a total rejection of 96 of the number which came forward at that time. From his own medical knowledge the hon. member will know that to receive all who arrive at the port of Quebec would be impossible. A boy or a girl who has passed the physical examination may develop an epileptic fit while on board ship. That case is reported by the ship's surgeon to the officer at the port of debarkation. Tracoma may be discovered on board ship, which may have been overlooked in the examination, and these cases are all reported. As I see it, the advantage of this system is that we see the individual in his home country and make our selection there. Oftentimes a man may be able to earn a living although he has some physical defect which has been certified to, and he is admitted. To say that this work is being done in the interests of the transportation companies is entirely outside the fact.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the various classes he mentioned?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These are included in the Immigration Act. The classifications are as follows:

(a) Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane at any time previously;

(b) Persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with any loathsome disease, or with a disease which is contagious or infectious, or which may become dangerous to the public health,

(c) Immigrants who are dumb, blind, or otherwise physically defective,

(d) Persons who have been convicted of, or admit having committed any crime involving moral turpitude;

(e) Prostitutes and women and girls coming to Canada for any immoral purpose and pimps or persons living on the avails of prostitution;

(f) Persons who procure or attempt to bring into Canada prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or other immoral purposes;

(g) Professional beggars or vagrants;

(h) Immigrants to whom money has been given or loaned by any charitable organization for the purpose of enabling them to qualify for landing in Canada under this act, or whose passage to Canada has been paid wholly or in part by any charitable organization—

And so forth. That is outside of the medical field. Then we have;

(k) Persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority;

(l) Persons with chronic alcoholism;

(m) Persons not included within any of the foregoing prohibited classes, who upon examination by a medical officer are certified as being mentally or physically defective to such a degree as to affect their ability to earn a living.

That includes all the classes, I think.

Mr. SPENCER: Of the numerous questions that are asked an immigrant, I understand one is: What religion do you belong to? What gain is there in the departmental officials finding out what religion a man or woman believes in? I know the question is obnoxious. It is not liked by many who have to answer it.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think the statement is ever published. It is taken for statistical purposes. Probably it serves a useful purpose to know what the religion is of people coming into the country. Even a minister of immigration is always learning something and I found out just lately that Protestants are supposed to say what denomination they belong to. I think, if the classification were to be made as to Roman Catholics and Protestants or something like that, it would be quite sufficient. The way I found that out was that a very good friend of mine who is a Protestant but who does not belong to any denomination, was asked the question: What church do you belong to? He said that he did not belong to any: that he was a Protestant.

Mr. GARDINER: How did he get in?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know, but he got in. I think the two divisions are sufficient. Of course there are rationalists, agnostics, and so forth, but the two main divivions, Protestants and Roman Catholics, might be sufficient. I am only giving that as an opinion because I have not looked very carefully into the matter. My deputy informs me that the different churches are very anxious to obtain these statistics. They look after the people when they land and the information serves a useful purpose in that way. For instance, the Anglican Church look after immigrants belonging to that faith and the churches do valuable work in taking care of immigrants after they land in this country.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am not quite satisfied yet in regard to these medical officers examining intending immigrants at continental ports. While I am not opposed to a medical examination, yet I think we are assuming a responsibility which perhaps we have no right to assume, I would sooner have these men retained at St. John, Halifax, Montreal and Quebec and have their rigid examination there than have the poor immigrant put to the injustice of being examined overseas by a medical man of our own selection, a man who, according to this report, has been especially selected. The Minister of Immigration is not responsible for this, but the Minister of Health is. It is stated that these medical men are specially selected—I do not know what the special selection consists of—they are trained specially and in spite of that, several hundred people have been sent back not on account of all the excuses that have been put forward to-day because we have a list of the reasons for their deportation. The examination falls down because, so far as I know, the medical men are not supposed to look into the civil causes of deportation.

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Therefore the department is not preventing that immigrant from coming here. A history of criminality is one of the great factors as regards deportation and that escapes the department. We are paying for a partial medical examination; the other examination is foregone and the immigrant comes here. I think Canada could not only well afford to reduce this item by $200,000 but cut out the medical examination, bring these officers back to Canada and let them make a rigid examination at our ocean ports. In that case you would not have this long list you have of reasons for deportation, such as anaemia, asthma and arthritis. I could quite understand trachoma and venereal disease springing up on the date of embarkation, but here are a dozen or so diseases which have escaped detection, and these people have come to this country and been sent back. Consequently we are bearing an expenditure that I think is absolutely unnecessary. I really believe that a place has been made over there for some fellows who have political leanings of some kind, and they have gone over there to take these jobs. I think there should be fewer cases of returns than have been showing in the last two years, or there will be still stronger condemnation of the medical inspection.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In considering this subject of immigration it had been, and indeed still is, my purpose to confine my remarks mainly to the subject of land settlement, and with that end in view I propose to reserve them until that particular item is before the house. I have been driven, however, to making a few remarks by an apparent misapprehension on the part of members of this house, a misapprehension which has been expressed a good many times and on a good many occasions, as to the attitude of those in our corner of the house, and of the farmers we represent in regard to immigration. I think perhaps the whole misapprehension may be epitomized in the words used by the hon. member for Fort William, that we were ready to close the shutters and lock the door, and, as it were, put a no-admittance sign on Canada—please keep out.

Mr. MANION: I did not speak of the party as a whole. I was speaking of my hon. friend from Battle River (Mr. Spencer) and of the minister himself.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I appreciate that his remarks were directed towards some remarks that had been made by the hon. member for Battle River, but the hon. member for Battle River was expressing in his way, as we all do in our own way, a feeling which is very generally held not only in this corner but also amongst the farmers whom we represent. That feeling is this, not that we should lock the door and tell people to keep out, but that we should not go out into the streets and into the highways and byways in an endeavour to compel people to come in. In other words, we want to have the door open simply with the policemen at the door, if you care to put it that way, to see that only those enter who will make decent inhaibtants of the house when they get in.

There is another exception which is taken by the farmers of my riding, and I presume of many others, but in my province particularly, to the immigration policy as it is at present enforced, and that is that they cannot nor can I see why farmers alone should be encouraged to come to Canada, why the farming profession should be picked out as the one profession whose requirements demand a greater population, and as the one profession apparently into which an influx of people will do, not harm, but good.

Mr. FORKE: May I point out to the hon. member that the regular fare from Great Britain, which is £18, has been reduced to £10 for all parties, no matter who they are. That is under an arrangement between the Imperial government and the shipping companies. The Canadian government has nothing to do with it. These people are coming out cheaper than the actual cost of their passage.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Precisely. I have no desire to place the hon. minister or the policy of the government in any wrong light, but it is obvious that so far as encouragement is given, and so far as any distinction is drawn—and that distinction is drawn in countries other than Great Britain—the farming class is what you might call the preferred class; I am not using that term in any unpleasant sense. In other words, such encouragement as is given, is given primarily to those who are prepared to engage in agriculture.

Why is that? There are several reasons advanced, some of which are reasonably sound and some of which, in my opinion, are not. One opinion is that agriculture in a country such as Canada, with fairly large areas of good land, and without exaggeration I can say that we have fairly large areas of good land in Canada still not brought under cultivation, farmers are more likely to make a success than immigrants of any other class because they are not dependent upon being hired or engaged by other people but have a reasonable opportunity, and a greater opportunity than that offered to other professions, to become self-supporting citizens and to make good for themselves and be an asset to the country.

Another reason that is advanced is this, that in agriculture alone and in agricultural products alone the law of supply and demand does not operate as it does in other industries. That is, the impression is held by many that it is impossible to over-produce on the farm. Those who share that point of view recognize that the market for manufactured goods of almost every kind and the opportunity of labour to find a place for itself in any other industry is fairly well limited, that you cannot increase the production of manufactured articles without damage unless you see before you a market that is capable of absorbing that increased production. But in the case of agriculture so many people, men in public life, men writing in the press, and men discussing it in private life, seem to be under the impression that this law of supply and demand does not operate in connection with farmers, and that no matter how much the farmers produce it will not affect their well-being or the prices they receive for the products they produce, that we can absorb almost an infinite number of farmers in this country without affecting adversely those who are already engaged in the business in this country. To my mind that is altogether a mistake and an erroneous impression. The market for foodstuffs, just like the market for all other goods, is limited exactly by the effective demand for that produce; that is, not only by the desire or the need which may exist for that produce, but by the ability to purchase as well as to consume that production. The effective market is limited in the case of farm products just as it is in the case of all other products. It certainly is my impression, an impression which I think is borne out by irrefutable facts, that at the present time we are fairly close to the point of producing all that we can consume without so congesting the market as to bring financial distress on all those engaged in the industry.

There is another reason, and this is not one which is advanced but one which is certainly held by many people. They feel that any increase in our population is good in itself, no matter what may become of the people who come here, no matter in what circumstances they may find themselves, no matter what effect the presence of those people may have on other people now here. There is the feeling that population in itself is an end, an objective to be attained, and not merely one of the means to attain an end. With those people I take decided issue. I think with them that the greater the density of population, the better, so long as that population can find work or can produce, and produce at a profit, and live comfortably on a decent standard of living. I say at once that I agree with those people that the greater the density of population, under those circumstances, the better for Canada and the better for those already in Canada. In saying that I am looking back some forty years to the time when I as a small boy went with my parents to western Canada at a time when western Canada was, not an unknown wilderness, but still in the embryo stage, and when settling as my family did in what is now the most densely populated part of Alberta we found ourselves with our nearest railway station in Calgary, 100 miles away. We know and I know the hardships, the discomforts, the physical and financial disadvantages which faced us through lack of population. We had no roads, no schools, no churches; we had no social life, and the handicaps and the hardships imposed upon us by the mere fact that so few people were there induces me to believe that other things being equal a comparatively dense population makes a better country to live in than a country that is empty and vacant.

I am not referring now to the taxpaying ability of the new immigrant. I think that that is one of the most absurd arguments that could be advanced to induce people to come here, to say that we welcome them because they will shoulder a percentage of our debt and assist us in reducing our taxation. In another way density of population works to the good not only of those who are here but of those who come because by increased tonnage on the railways we can properly reduce our railway rates and provide better roads and better facilities for all. That is good for all of us here. But I repeat that that again is limited. All these advantages are swept aside, they do not exist by mere population alone, but by population plus the ability of that population to produce at a profit, to build up homes for themselves and to live decently.

The next reason that is advanced is this. We want population to improve our traffic conditions, to provide more money for the banks, to increase the market for our manufactured goods. We find it impossible to bring in any large supplies of labour because the labour organizations are so strong and so effective in their united voice that they will not permit it. We cannot bring in large delegations of professional men because the professional organizations now here would certainly raise very strenuous objections. We cannot bring in more retailers and people of other classes because those already engaged in the business in this country, speaking with united voice, would make that political suicide for any government. But we can bring in more farmers, because through their lack of unity in the past they were unable to render or articulate their disapprobation or to express resentment in any practical manner.

In saying those things I am not finding fault with the present minister or the government for holding those views, but I am trying to show that many people who speak on platforms and write in the press, and advocate in private increased population by mass immigration, hold this view in the bottom of their hearts. That was true a few years ago. It is becoming less true day by day and I say that the farmers have found themselves, they have found each other, and they are now able to speak articulately and unitedly as to their needs. And who has a better right Mr. Chairman, to speak on this subject, or to hold views on this subject than the western farmer? He belongs to a class comparatively small in numbers, it is true, a percentage only of the total population, but he is primarily interested in any scheme of immigration on a large scale such as suggested, or in any scheme of colonization on a large scale which is suggested and which has as its object the placing of more farmers in the prairie provinces. The farmers already there are expected to accomplish wonderful work in the way of assimilation. Assimilation is to them, not a phrase but an absolute reality. They will be the people who will be affected adversely or beneficially by this influx of people. The farmers, through their provincial governments must supply the means of education, must supply hospitals, must supply roads, must supply all those things which the people need. Those men and women are the ones par excellence who should have a voice in our immigration policy.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the hon. member tell the house what he thinks of the speeches delivered by the member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) in the last ten years about people leaving the farms?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Well, I may say at once, of course, that although I think highly of the member for Rosetown I am not responsible for him, nor am I his interpreter, and perhaps you will pardon me if I express for a few moments my own opinion instead of commenting on his. He is perfectly able to explain his own views at any time. But it is a fair question, why the people leave the land, and I was coming to it in a moment.

I have been going over the reasons Mr. Chairman, why so many people advocate immigration on a large scale, and why those same people think in their minds all the time of an influx of farmers into this country, and particularly the western provinces, and naturally, as my colleague says, they have no particular intention of following their own advice and going out there themselves and building up one of those happy, free, independent homes.

I was endeavouring to point out that the farmers themselves were entitled to hold very strong views on that matter, and I was endeavouring to show that there was a misconception as to their motives, and a misconception as to their actual statements of fact. The statement of their policy, as I can see it—and it is not contradicted by anything said by any member in this corner of this house—is this: We are prepared to leave the door open to immigration under reasonable restrictions as to placement and the quality and kind of people who come here. We say, come here if you think Alberta is good—and we think it is—come here, take things as you find them, work your way up, act upon your own initiative in coming, follow your own line when you get here, and take upon yourself responsibility for your failure or success. That is what we say, but that is a long way from the policy of maintaining either agencies or publicity departments or any other factor to induce or morally to compel people to come here. That is the difference between my interpretation of the farmers' attitude towards immigration and the interpretation placed upon their attitude by others who are not so familiar with their views as I am myself.

Mr. FORKE: Most of the immigration from central and southeastern Europe last year was based upon a direct request from the farmers of the three prairie provinces for farm help.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Precisely.

Mr. FORKE: We simply tried to fill the demands of the farmers of the three western provinces. It might be news to the hon. member for Red Deer to say that I had a request from Alberta just a few days ago, asking if we could possibly supply six hundred more farm labourers for Alberta.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That covers two points. I can assure the minister, however, that I am not trying to make any unfair statements on the matter at all. I quite appreciate the fact that a large number of people from certain countries, people who otherwise could not enter, are permitted entry on the personal nomination or personal application of farmers in western Canada. If a farmer in western Canada has made good, if he thinks that his brother coming out can also make good, and if he is prepared to find employment for him, then I say that that is the best kind of immigration policy we can have, and the immigration policy as far as publicity is concerned that we have always advocated. But when the hon. the minister speaks of 600 labourers, that perhaps brings up a slightly different point. If those 600 were individual applications from men who themselves were prepared to offer employment then all right, but if it was simply an estimate placed upon the potential needs of a district by people who perhaps are not qualified to have an opinion, then it is a very different question altogether. . I am fairly familiar with the workings of the department, because I have tried to follow the work in its different branches, not in an antagonistic spirit but in order to work with them if I can for the betterment of conditions here. And in doing that I found myself up against that very thing the minister has spoken of; the intimation to the department by individuals, or groups of individuals, that there will be certain mass vacancies, and that certain districts can absorb so many hundreds, or so many thousands of farm help, which is a very different thing from personal nominations, and while I approve of the one I am far from approving of the other.

Just one more point in that particular connection; I have indicated our attitude, or my conception at least of our attitude, towards the subject of immigration itself. And I have indicated that we are not opposed to immigration as such, but we are only opposed to what is commonly called assisted or encouraged immigration, that is over-encouraged. We are willing to have people come in if they are decent people, but we are not so far gone in Canada that we must give approval to the idea of going out into the highways and byways morally compelling people to come. We are particularly opposed to that because those who are compelled to come are almost invariably people of our own class whom we will have to assimilate, and our condition will be adversely or beneficially affected by them. Again I say that if any in Canada have a right to speak on immigration it is those who will have to shoulder the burden of immigration, the burden of assimilation, and to whom assimilation is not a mere sounding phrase but a natural matter of everyday life in connection with neighbours for whom they have had no responsibility and in the selection of whom they have had no choice.

That brings me to the next point. I read with a great deal of interest, and followed very carefully the discussion in the agriculture committee of last year, and I studied, so far as I could study, the recommendations. The recommendation there which struck me as being the soundest and the most sensible, and offering the greatest potentialities for future success in our work was that simple suggestion that to the provinces themselves should be delegated a greater part of the responsibility, a greater part of the authority as to how many and what classes should come into those provinces.

Mr. FORKE: But how can you get them to take it? They do not like to.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Possibly they do not like to, but I am inclined to think, from such knowledge as I possess of the views of one at least of the provincial governments, that if given that right and given it without strings—given that right so that they would be not merely expressing an opinion but taking action—they would undertake it. And more than that, I believe it is the only method whereby you will properly provide for immigration; for, after all, once the immigrant crosses the portals of this country he ceases to be a responsibility of the government who brought him out and becomes a direct responsibility of the province, who have had no say as to whether or not he should be here. And that to my mind is wrong.

Working with our municipal authorities, discussing the matter with our own government, I have found this. We have the very finest machinery in the world for ascertaining how many people can be properly and profitably absorbed in a province during the year. We have information on which a competent committee decide as to where people may properly go, as to the kind of people who are desired, as to the occupation which will afford them opportunities. Through all the various municipal councils in the provinces the authorities can supply, and I am sure, from applications to myself, that they would be willing to supply, full statistics as to any possible vacant farm which may lie within their boundaries, as to the amount of capital that would be necessary to enable a farmer to go on that farm, as to the kind of people they would like to have in the district—and this depends partly on the class of people already settled there. They could furnish the government with that information, and I am sure they would.

I have a suggestion to offer, and I do not claim that it is particularly a constructive one or particularly a new one. However, let that suggestion come from whichever side it may, it should be tried out partly from time to time—and in this lies our only hope of mastering the problem of increased population. My suggestion is this: The provincial governments, through municipal machinery, know what employment is in sight for the year; they know what lands are available; they know what the effect of increased population on the farming industry generally will be in the province; and they might make a reasonably intelligent report. On that report the Department of Immigration here could act through its agent, admitting any desired number of immigrants, seeing that their destination was wise, advising them as to the parts of the country to which they might go, giving them all information possible as to the means of reaching their destination, and supplying them with information as to the best way in which to carry on after they had arrived. There is a great work for the Immigration department to do in the elimination of the unfit and in giving information and advice to those people who come to the country, often bewildered and ignorant of our habits and sometimes of our language. The department could do a splendid work in that way. And it should give to the provinces some at least of the authority which should go with the responsibility that becomes theirs the moment an immigrant enters Canada.

My time is almost up, but I was asked a question which I shall try to answer. The question is: Why are so many people leaving the farms? In the first place, it is undoubtedly a question of dollars and cents; that is what strikes one primarily in looking into the matter. Is farming a congenial business, is it a profitable business? Well, the minister knows that while it is one of the finest forms of life—and I believe this because I have followed it all my life—farming is a life that imposes upon the man who pursues it a great many hardships. He has to face hard physical labour; he has to work out in the snow and rain and cold winds; he has to take a sporting chance as a gambler with nature, as to whether or not he will have any results at all from his year's toil. He has to face all these conditions; he has to work hours longer by far than those which are put in in any other industry. except possibly in this house; he has to work under conditions more uncertain than those that prevail in any other occupation; and frequently he has to work in loneliness and deprivation so far as social comfort is concerned. And when you add to all this the fact that no farmer—no farmer, at least, of whom I have knowledge —ever made more than a decent living, while many farmers, to my knowledge, in spite of honest and earnest effort have failed and gone down, you can see the reason why farmers leave.

But there is another reason and perhaps it is more fundamental still. To my mind it does not make very much difference in the long run how profitable farming is; you are bound to have an exodus from the country to the cities, and for this reason. During my lifetime in that province—and I am still a comparatively young man—the productive ability of every man has increased four or five times through the introduction and use of labour-saving units of machinery. The result is that it is requiring a smaller and smaller percentage of men to produce the necessary amount of food. While that does not apply absolutely to all Canada—because we feed other countries than our own—it undoubtedly does apply to agriculture as a whole, and there is no question that it must and will apply to Canada generally as time goes on. A smaller and smaller percentage of men will remain on the land and a larger percentage will go to the centres, because in these centres are new industries providing for all the new wants, and luxuries which, deplored by some, are in my opinion a dispensation of Providence in that they absorb the labour continually thrown off from the basic industries by the adoption of larger and larger units of machinery. Throughout the world, therefore, and in this country as well—for Canada is not immune from the law of supply and demand—no matter how profitable farming may be, no matter how agreeable the conditions may be made, no matter how hard men may work, it will happen inevitably that a larger percentage of men will be found in the cities and a smaller percentage on the land. But while that is true it does not mean that we should add thereto the factors of economic uncertainty and lack of economic reward.

I must apologize for having spoken at greater length than I had intended. I got up in the first place simply to correct a misapprehension with reference to our attitude towards immigration, and I did not expect to be led into so long a discourse as I have made. My chief interest at the moment is to direct the attention of the committee to the question of land settlement, a question regarding which I have some knowledge, with which I have been fairly closely in touch, and on which I hold some fairly strong opinions. However, I shall leave that until the proper item comes up. In the meantime, I repeat for emphasis —because apparently it is an exceedingly difficult thing for other people sometimes to appreciate the fact—that we are not opposed to people coming into the country but that we are opposed, for the credit and for the economic future of Canada, to the idea of going out and inducing or assisting them to come here.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. FORKE: Some of the remarks that have been made lead me to believe that this is an opportune moment to make a statement as to the actual cost to Canada of immigration. We have heard the figure of five millions stated, and I have seen six and a half millions reported as having been suggested in a public speech not very long ago. I have the figures for last year and I will give them. The cost of securing immigrants for Canada was $1,404,463.30; that is the actual cost of our immigration offices and the seeking and securing of immigrants. The care and placement of these immigrants after landing in Canada was $196,294.12. This makes a total, for recruiting immigrants and taking care of them after arrival in Canada, of $1,600,757.42.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that include everything?

Mr. FORKE: That is the cost of bringing them to Canada and looking after them.

Mr. ADSHEAD: In what way do you take care of them?

Mr. FORKE: Well, getting the immigrant a situation, if he is farm help, or getting him placed if he is a farmer.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There were some immigrants who came to Alberta for whom the province had no responsibility but who were brought out by the minister's department. They were stranded in Calgary and we had to take care of them. Hospital bills were incurred amounting to some $1,000 towards which we asked the department to contribute, but they washed their hands entirely of responsibility in the matter. Will some of the money to which the minister has just referred be used to take care of these immigrants? Will his department pay that bill?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know who those immigrants were:

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do the figures which the minister has given include cost of civil government?

Mr. FORKE: No, they do not include civil government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is not that part of the cost of immigration?

Mr. GARDINER: The minister said it cost $196,000 odd to take care of immigrants after landing. Will he explain exactly what he means by taking care of them? How far does that go?

Mr. FORKE: Under the care and placement of immigrants we have the following:

Women's division	$ 34,141 01
Grants to societies	14,750 00
Inspection of juveniles	27,542 47
Agencies	119,860 64

I presume that latter item has to do with the placing of immigrants under the three thousand family scheme, single farm labourers, juveniles and so on. I cannot itemize it, but is the money actually spent in Canada looking after immigrants?

I did not finish my statement; to make up the total vote of last year there is also an amount of $784,742.66 for the preventive service. I think everyone will recognize the face that even if we had no solicited immigration we would still have those people coming to Canada who are willing to come on their own, and they would have to be examined. Then there is another thing which the house may have forgotten. During the last few years and particularly during the last year the United States made a great clean up, I think every crook in that country has headed towards Canada lately, and if we had not possessed a good preventive service we would have had a large increase in our population made up of that kind of people. Some people cannot understand why there should be any immigration inspectors at all, but not a day passes without some undesirable characters being turned back at the border. Then there is the administrative service, amounting to $480,165.36, making the total estimate for last year of $2,865,685.44. In order to obtain the total amount spent by the department there must be added $600,000 which was charged up to the land settlement branch under the Soldier Settlement Board, and that will give a total of about $3,400,000 as the actual amount spent last year. I do not know where my hon. friends secured the figure of $6,000,000; I cannot see where that came from at all.

Mr. LUCAS: Does that include medical inspection also?

Mr. FORKE: No, the medical inspection accounts for another $300,000, but that would have to go on even if there were no immigration. We might have a smaller staff, but we would still have medical inspection.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then there would be the medical inspection overseas, which would account for another $300,000, and that would bring the total to nearly $4,000,000.

Mr. FORKE: Probably that would be correct.

Mr. GEARY: I do not understand that, when the total as shown by the Auditor General's report, page 836, is only $3,065,000.

Mr. FORKE: That is for 1927-28?

Mr. GEARY: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to follow up the question I was asking a few moments ago, with regard to the immigrants being required to state what religion they profess. The minister suggested an amendment to the regulation so that the immigrants would not need to give so many details, but then he said this information was useful both for the census bureau and for the churches, which were glad to get it. First I would like to ask the minister if this information is passed on to the churches?

Mr. FORKE: If they ask for it.

Mr. SPENCER: Whether they ask for it or not I know that representatives of the churches usually meet the immigrants at the port of debarkation and ask them personally as to their religion. I passed through the immigration sheds at Quebec in 1927 for the purpose of seeing how this was done. I found different ministers asking the immigrants personally to what churches they belonged, so I think it is quite unnecesary to ask that question if it is done only for the purpose of supplying information to the churches. As far as the census goes, we get all the information we need from the census statistics, so I think we would be well advised not to ask that question at all. I take it for granted that no one of good character will be refused entry because of his religion, so I do not see why the question should be asked at all.

Mr. FORKE: These facts are all recorded in the index book on board ship before the immigrant lands. All the religious societies have agents at Quebec, and some at Montreal.

Mr. GARDINER: So there is no escape at all.

Mr. FORKE: I think they do very good work there. The representatives of the churches are given an opportunity to look at the index book, and they look after people of their own denomination when they land. They get in touch with the friends of the immigrants, tell them they have landed and when they will arrive at their destination, and taken altogether I think a useful purpose is served. There is no publicity; this information is never published but is simply obtained for those people who are anxious to get these figures. As I said before, I do not think anyone would be turned back if he simply said he was an agnostic, with no religion at all, so long as his moral character was all right.

Mr. SPENCER: But does the minister realize that many people object to being cross-examined in that way?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): What is objectionable about it?

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member who just interrupted may not object, but certain people of whom I have knowledge do object.

Mr. FORKE: As a matter of information we think the benefit outweighs any objection which might be taken to it, and the statistical bureau gets that information also. This is not done in order to annoy or restrain these immigrants; it is largely for the benefit of the different religious denominations who like to get that information and really, from my own experience during the last three years, an immigrant is much better off if he is looked after by a religious society, regardless of what denomination he belongs to.

Mr. BARBER: In these figures there are certain amounts set aside for the repatriation of Canadians.

Mr. FORKE: It is not in the vote.

Mr. BARBER: I have the Auditor General's report, and on page 23 of part H, under "colonization," I find a sum amounting to about $35,000. Under that there appear salaries and wages, $9,204.19 and travelling expenses $25,081.61. In the first instance, the salaries were paid to fourteen clergymen and the travelling expenses were paid to eighteen clergymen. This question was up in the house some time ago and we were advised by the minister that this was for the purpose of repatriating Canadians.

Mr. FORKE: What year is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. BARBER: 1927-28. Are those clergymen still employed by the government?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. BARBER: What has been substituted for that service?

Mr. FORKE: We have been cooperating with the provinces and have offered to pay 50 per cent of any amount expended on repatriation. The only province which is actively engaged in this work is the province of Quebec, but one of the maritime provinces is thinking of taking up the work. The same offer stands open to every province of the Dominion.

Mr. BARBER: What was the amount expended last year?

Mr. FORKE: We set aside $50,000 as the maximum for any one province.

Mr. BARBER: Was that expended?

Mr. FORKE: My deputy informs me that we expended $29,680 last year.

Mr. BARBER: In one province?

Mr. FORKE: And the province of Quebec spent $46,000, so apparently part of their expenditure must have been in colonization work. I discussed this matter first with Premier Taschereau when he was here a year ago last summer, and then the Minister of Mines and Forests came here and we entered into that bargain. I could not see my way clear to do anything for the province of Quebec which would not be open to all the other provinces. I expect that one of the maritime provinces will go into repatriation work in a short time in an endeavour to bring back some of their people from the New England states. I think the money is well spent, probably bringing in the best results of any money we spend upon immigration.

Mr. MALONEY: In connection with this question of repatriation, I would like to read a letter which I received from New Bedford, as follows:

I have just read your speech in the House of Commons on immigration in Canada. I was specially interested in that part of your speech in which you refer to the French Canadians of New England. Let me tell you that if the government of Ottawa would only lend to a family, say, $1,000 you would have a train going to the Peace River every two weeks of good farmers of Canadian stock who wish to go back to their country and make a home once more on the farm. The Quebec government offers us money to go to the Abitibi district. We don't want to go there, we want to go to the west. We are starving in here and our government does not want to help us get to our mother country. I know quite a number of my friends who wrote to the government in Ottawa asking them for help to go back and every time the answer was "We have no right to do so."

Believe me,
Yours truly,
J. Vachon.

Mr. CAHILL: Where is that from?

Mr. MALONEY: New Bedford.

Mr. FORKE: A French Canadian who has been residing in the States for a number of years and who wishes to return to Canada is granted the same rates on the railroads as an immigrant from Great Britain.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not better rates?

Mr. FORKE: He gets the immigration rates. It is the railways which grant those rates. The hardship arises through the fact that a French Canadian who has remained in his own province has to pay the full rate when he desires to go to the west, while the French Canadian who has gone to the States and wishes to return is granted the cheaper rate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We were told earlier in the session that the government would not continue to extend aid for highway development or for technical education upon the ground that it was a vicious principle for the federal authorities to subsidize the provinces. I would like to ask upon what principle the government is now subsidizing the provinces in order that they may carry on this immigration scheme?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think it is in the nature of a subsidy. They have settled some twelve or thirteen new parishes in the province of Quebec, and I think the money is well spent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not suggesting that the money is not well spent, but I do suggest that the principle is one which was called a vicious principle earlier in the session and I am anxious to know how it is being justified in this case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I say to the hon. member that immigration is one of the two subjects which are placed under the joint control of the federal and provincial governments by the provisions of the British North America Act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That does not touch upon the principle.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the constitution.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The principle of one body raising funds and the other body distributing them.

Mr. VENIOT: There are jointly interested.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, in discussing this immigration question I shall deal with it almost entirely as it concerns the population, colonization and settlement conditions in my own province of New Brunswick. As you are aware, that province, like the other maritime provinces, has suffered from the migration of its people to the United States and to the six western provinces.

In 1901 we had a population of 321,120; in 1911 this had increased to 351,880, and in 1921 it had increased to 387,876. It might be well to note at this point that the province of New Brunswick has an area of 27,895 square miles. As the greatest migration was from 1921 to 1928, it is doubtful if there has been any increase in population during those years. While the other provinces suffered a loss of population by migration to the United States during that period, New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces suffered an additional drain by migration to the west and to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. While we regret the conditions which forced our people to leave their homes, that regret is tempered, to some degree, by the fact that many of them remained Canadians by locating in other provinces. There is not this feeling towards the other migration as the New Brunswickers who have gone to the United States are lost not only to New Brunswick but to Canada. It is quite possible that in the New England states and the six Canadian provinces west of the maritimes the New Brunswickers and their descendants outnumber those who remain in their native province. This is not as it should be. New Brunswick is a province of varied and valuable resources. Sixty per cent of it is valuable mixed farming land; there are great pulp and timber resources, valuable water-powers, never-failing fisheries, excellent transportation, and its products are at the Canadian outport for the European trade.

Through St. John many European and British immigrants enter Canada, but the only ones who remain in New Brunswick are those specially selected and brought there by the local government. Do not think that I, as a New Brunswicker—and I believe I represent the prevailing sentiment in that province—am jealous of the expansion in population, wealth and development of Ontario, Quebec and the west. We do not ask the government to relax its work in colonization and settlement in those provinces; in fact, we urge even greater efforts in their behalf. We welcome Canadian development in every part, but we do ask greater consideration, greater activity, better results in retaining our own people, repatriating those who have gone to the United States, and more satisfactory efforts in adding to our population from the people of Great Britain and Europe, who would conform to our laws, customs and ideals and stimulate development, thus increasing our population, production and wealth.

I believe our local government is more effectively dealing with colonization than any other provincial administration. The New Brunswick government has entered into an agreement between the overseas settlement committee of the British government and the Canadian government. Under this agreement it is proposed to settle 500 British families on semi-improved farms in New Brunswick during the next five years. The provincial government buys the farms, which are sold to the settlers at actual cost, the amount being repayable over a period of twenty-five years with interest at 5 per cent amortized, the first payment begining two years from the 31st day of October next following the date of the agreement. The interest accruing between the date of the settler taking up the farm and one year from the 31st day of October next following is added to the purchase price of the farm and amortized as stated. The British government advances an amount not exceeding £300 for initial payment on farm and for farm stock and equipment. This amount is amortized on the same basis and under the same agreement as the purchase price of the farm to the provincial government. The payments made by the settler from time to time are applied pro rata to the amount owing to the British government and the New Brunswick government. The Dominion government, through its organizations in the British isles, makes the selection of the settlers and the provincial government receives them on their arrival, places them on the properties to which they have been allocated, and gives them the necessary care thereafter. The British and Dominion governments, under an agreement with the steamship companies, provide reduced rates whereby a settler can be brought to the province at minimum cost.

Under this scheme it will be noticed that one hundred new families will be added to the population each year. The full complement was placed last year and the province is now working on placing the same number of families this year.

In addition to this scheme the New Brunswick government has made with the Dominion government an arrangement whereby, under the extension of the three thousand family scheme, New Brunswick is to receive fifty British families per annum, thus bringing the whole quota up to 150 families annually to settle in the province. In addition the New Brunswick government contributes towards the Cossar farm, through which British boys are brought to Canada and placed in homes. There were 124 of these boys placed on the farms of New Brunswick last year through this agency.

The province of New Brunswick is also bringing in Scandinavian settlers. In this work the province cooperates with the railway offices, the federal government having no offices in Scandinavian countries. In 1927 the province brought in 451 Scandinavians, including thirty-six families, and in 1928, 444 Scandinavians, including forty-one families. These are excellent settlers, many of them purchasing farms on their own account and others being assisted by the government through its farm settlement board. New Brunswick is the only province having a farm settlement board giving assistance to its own people to purchase farms. Prior to the 31st of October, 1928, the government had purchased 633 farms, mostly for New Brunswick people. Of this number 336 had been paid for in full at that date.

This will indicate the activity and the effective colonization policy being pursued by the present administration. British families are being brought in and placed on the land, as also are Scandinavian families, and many New Brunswickers are being assisted in the purchase of farms. As I stated before, I believe the New Brunswick government is dealing more intelligently and effectively with the migration settlement problem than any other administration in Canada.

The province of New Brunswick can carry a much larger population than it has at present. With its agriculture and timber lands, its water-powers, fisheries and industries, there should be in that province, at least, 1,000,000 people. The necessity of increasing the population not only of New Brunswick but of the maritime provinces generally, which have suffered from loss of population and increased debts, is plainly apparent. There must be more population, greater development, production and wealth to place them on a sound financial and prosperous basis. The provincial government, with its limited resources, being what it is, I appeal to the Dominion government to increase its active cooperation towards settlement in New Brunswick. Surely the efforts of the New Brunswick government, which are so outstanding, should receive strong recognition from the federal government.

The financial resources of New Brunswick for settlement purposes are necessarily limited. The Dominion government has transferred to the provinces the full financial responsibility for technical education and highways; in addition, the provinces must face the burden of fifty per cent on all old age pensions. It is true that New Brunswick has not yet adopted the old age pension scheme, but this is a problem to be dealt with in the future. With the drain to come on the provincial treasury for technical education, highways and old age pensions, there cannot be any large sum for settlement and colonization.

There is a further consideration. The federal government proposes to deal very generously with the four western provinces in the financial returns necessary to be made in the transfer to them of their natural resources. New Brunswick hopes the federal government will deal generously with these provinces. But it surely must be realized that the same generosity has not been displayed towards New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces. If the same provincial subsidies and terms are granted to New Brunswick as are proposed for the four western provinces, this will relieve the financial stringency and permit of greater efforts in colonization.

I believe that the conditions, as I have stated them, which confronted the government of New Brunswick, and the active efforts on the part of that government with its limited means to increase the population of the province, demand greater efforts on the part of the federal government towards the same end. Our people feel keenly witnessing the thousands of British and Europeans disembarking at the port of St. John and travelling west to the other provinces, and none remaining in New Brunswick. New Brunswick is essentially a mixed farming country. It seems to me that we have not had the corresponding development in mixed farming that there has been in grain production. New Brunswick is particularly fitted to produce cattle, horses, hogs, sheep, poultry and dairy products. Would it not be as well, without reducing our efforts to develop the grain-growing areas of the west, to stimulate the development of the mixed farming areas both in the west and in the east? It does not appear right to me that we should have imports from other parts of Canada into the maritime provinces of meats when we have in those provinces every requisite for their production. In addition, we are on the sea, and any surplus production should readily find a market in Europe. There would be little railway transportation required, and therefore the cost of placing the meats and dairy products of the maritime provinces on the European market would be lower than from any other part of Canada.

The New Brunswick government recognizes and gives credit to the cooperation of the Dominion government in settlement and colonization. But our conditions are peculiar, and we believe that that cooperation should take an even more practical and generous form. We do not ask that our people who have gone to other parts of Canada be urged to return to their native province, but we do ask that an effort be made to repatriate some of our people from the United States, and that these be supplemented with British settlers and settlers from other European countries who are adapted to the conditions which exist in our province.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. BARBER: Under the heading of "Great Britain and the continent of Europe, Miscellaneous," I find an item of some $8,000 spent for the packing and distributing of Canadian peonies. What was the object of sending those Canadian peonies overseas?

Mr. FORKE: That was in 1927.

Mr. BARBER: I think I may ask for an explanation of this item even if the expenditure took place in that year. Why was this expenditure made?

Mr. FORKE: It was in commemoration of confederation year. These peonies were sent from Canada to Great Britain, and were exhibited all over London and throughout the United Kingdom. To show just how well these peonies were preserved, they were sent over to London, were distributed from the railway offices, from Canada House and all the principal buildings in London and throughout the United Kingdom, and some of them arrived back in Canada in perfect condition after having crossed the ocean twice. I think that was money well spent. It was one of the best pieces of advertising that has been done for Canada.

Mr. CAHILL: Under vote 55 I notice an item for Canadian boys. I would like to know what percentage of this item was spent last year, and what is proposed for this year.

Mr. FORKE: None of this money has been spent. The department has been trying to make an arrangement with the different provincial government similar to that made with the Imperial government, and if the provincial governments would come through, I think that there would be no trouble in getting the Dominion parliament to meet them. The British boys are supposed to have saved $500, to have lived and worked on a farm, and must show that they were capable, industrious and intelligent. Then the British government will advance to them a loan of $1,250 and the Dominion government a like amount, making a total of $2,500, which with the $500 already saved gives the boy a capital of $3,000 on which to start farming. If the provincial governments would come through and meet us in the same way as the Imperial government has done, I have no hesitation in saying that we would make a similar arrangement with them. I am longing for the time when we can do for the Canadian boy exactly what we are doing for the British boy.

Mr. CAHILL: Was there an item in the estimates last year for this same purpose?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, but we have never been able to make an arrangement with the provincial governments.

Mr. CAHILL: No money has been spent?

Mr. FORKE: No. There is a great deal of talk about the tremendous amount of money that has been spent on immigration and assisting people to come here, but all that we are spending in that direction is our share of the assisted passages for people who are going on farms. This government has never contributed one dollar of cash towards any settlement of land up to to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it is very desirable to make that statement because the position is much misunderstood in the country. Perhaps the minister would amplify it.

Mr. FORKE: When the British government offers a loan of $1,500 to the British boy if we will provide a like amount, it is very difficult to say that we will have nothing to do with it. A vast amount of money has come into this country and been spent under that scheme.

Mr. BENNETT: How much altogether?

Mr. FORKE: I could not say offhand, but the deputy will look it up. We hear a great deal said about the large amount of money that is being spent on bringing people in from outside in comparison with what is being spent on the settlement of Canadians. What we are spending is for the assistance of these people after they come here, giving them assistance and advice along the lines the hon. member for Red Deer spoke about. I think the house has a wrong impression as to the amount of money that is being spent by the Canadian government to bring immigrants to this country. I want all the facts brought out. I have nothing to hide, and if the house does not like the facts—

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. BENNETT: You have a majority behind you anyway.

Mr. FORKE: It seems rather difficult to get them in line this afternoon.

Mr. LUCAS: The minister said a while ago that if the provinces would come forward and provide loans for the Canadian boy as the Imperial government is doing for the British boy, the Dominion government would pay its share. What would be the position if an individual took the place of the province in putting up the amount of money required to settle Canadian boys? Would the Dominion government put up an equal amount?

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO ESTABLISH DOMICILE

The house resumed, from May 21, consideration in committee of Bill No. 75, respecting the domicile of married women in proceedings for divorce—Mr. Ward—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 2—Married woman separate from husband.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, this bill brings before the house a very interesting question on constitutional law. The question is, have we the right to do something or not? What are the rights of this parliament, and what are the rights of the legislatures in each province?

Sometimes we have every sympathy for a sad case, or for some people who are in trouble. If a beggar goes to another man and says "I am destitute, I want some help, I badly need assistance," and the other man gives him a counterfeit one hundred dollar bill, that is no help at all for the beggar, because if he goes to a store and tries to change that bill the merchant will have him arrested and sent to gaol. The help, therefore, that we give to people must not be counterfeit help, so to speak, but help that really does assist. I heard some of my colleagues in the house relate some very sad divorce cases. For instance, the husband goes away and leaves his wife in charge of a family without any money. What can the wife do if the domicile of the husband is where he is, and if he does not happen to live in the country in which the couple had resided then where is the domicile, or where can the wife have a domicile in order that she may be able to take divorce proceedings against her husband?

There are some very sad cases indeed. But Canada has a constitution, granted by the imperial parliament, and we can help people who are in trouble only in accordance with our rights under that constitution. In order to know what kind of help we can give to people in such destitute circumstances, or to know whether we can give them any help at all, we must refer to the British North America Act, enacted by the imperial parliament in the year 1867. Section 92 of that act, paragraph 13, reads as follows:

> Exclusive powers of provincial legislatures.
> 92. In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say,—
> 13. Property and civil rights in the province.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Read marriage and divorce in section 91.

Mr. POULIOT: I will read what I have to read, and when my hon. friend wants anything read he will do it himself.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Read what Taschereau says about it.

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell you later what happened at the interprovincial conference, and it will be a good lesson for you. Section 146 of the British North America Act, relating to the admission of other colonies into the Dominion, reads thus:

> It shall be lawful for the queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, and from the houses of the respective legislatures of the colonies or provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, to admit those colonies or provinces, or any of them, into the Union, and on address from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada to admit Rupert's land and the Northwestern Territory, or either of them, into the Union, on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the addresses expressed and as the queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this act;—

"Subject to the provisions of this act," therefore subject to section 92.

> —and the provisions of any order in council in that behalf shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

There is also the following provision in the British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Victoria, chapter 28, section 4:

> The parliament of Canada may from time to time make provision for the administration, peace, order, and good government of any territory not for the time being included in any province.

When the province of Prince Edward Island entered confederation the following address was passed, as found in the schedule to the order in council of Her Majesty in council admitting that province into the union in the year 1873:

> We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects. . . . humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing:
> That the constitution of the executive authority and of the legislature of Prince Edward Island shall, subject to the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, continue, as at the time of the union, until altered under the authority of the said act, and the House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island existing at the date of the union shall, unless sooner dissolved, continue for the period for which it was elected.

So that we see that even after confederation, after the British North America Act was passed, an order in council was issued by Her Majesty in council, in which reference is made to that act; and the statement appears that when Prince Edward Island entered the Canadian confederation it should be subject to the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867. It will be seen, therefore, that the constitution has not changed and that this parliament is vested with certain powers and rights exclusively, while the legislature of every province is similarly exclusively vested with peculiar rights and powers. But what is most important to know is the fact that in that part of the act which refers to the powers and rights of the provinces there appear the words "exclusive" and "exclusively". This means that the provinces may do certain things which this parliament cannot do. And the fathers of confederation were wise when they incorporated those provisions in the act inasmuch as they obviate conflicts in law.

What member of this house will dare to say that domicile is not a question of civil right? Domicile is the place where a person, in the legal sense of the word, has his place of business. The domicile of the head of a family is the place where that man is supposed to have permanent residence, the place where he lives all the time. Domicile comes from the Latin "domus," meaning a house or home. Domicile therefore is the place where a man has his home. A man has only one domicile, and it is not only the place where he can exercise civil rights under the law; it is also the place where he may be found when anyone wishes to sue him in any case in which he is the defendant. Domicile is the place where he conducts his chief business and where he lives.

Now with regard to the family: the wife has the same domicile as her husband. I could cite some old precedents to that effect, not only from the history of the province of Quebec but also from that of England. For example, I could cite the case of Queen Marie Henriette of England, who was a daughter of Louis XIII. That queen of England was born in France where she lived for twenty-five years, and she was Queen of England when she died. Her heirs claimed the right to her estate, amounting to 100,000 crowns, and they would have been entitled thereto had the French law applied in England. But it was decided that she could not have any other domicile than that of her husband in England. This case is reported in Phillimore's Law of Domicile, pages 28 and 29.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What edition?

Mr. POULIOT: I have not a note of the edition. This is an old case, but there are other cases decided by the privy council. Now I submit that the fact that domicile is a question of civil rights, the fact that the exercise of civil rights comes within the purview of the province exclusively, shows very clearly that even if we were of the same opinion as the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) it would be impossible to carry his point of view because we have no power to pass any such act.

But there is something else of considerable importance. I have here a very interesting book called Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, prepared by the clerk of this house, who is an authority on questions of constitutional procedure. I have taken some notes from that book and now I wish to refer to Beauchesne, Rule 520, page 154:

> When the chairman of a committee has been ordered to make a report to the house, he shall leave the chair without question put.

Therefore the amendment moved in committee on May 7 by the hon. member has been sent to the chairman of the committee of the whole who has been ordered to report, but the amendment is not attached to the bill and is not before the committee. I may quote further from Beauchesne, rule 409, at page 129:

> No member may amend his own motion, but with leave of the house he may withdraw it and substitute another.

The hon. member cannot amend his own bill except by unanimous consent, even though his amendment is supported by our charming colleague, who is not in the house at present; I refer to the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail).

We are confronted with a very peculiar situation. The hon. member for East Toronto said some time ago that the bill should be amended so that a woman could not obtain a domicile outside of Canada for divorce purposes, and my hon. friend from Swift Current moved an amendment which was to the effect that the words "or otherwise" should be struck out. My hon. friend from Dauphin came along with a further amendment, which he read, but there is no amendment before the committee now. Instead of putting questions the hon. member for East Toronto should renew his suggestion; in any case the hon. member for Dauphin might get a friend to bring in a proper amendment, or if my hon. friend from East Toronto thinks it is so important to have that amendment made he should see that it is done properly. So I ask you, Mr. Chairman, whether the bill is amended as it is now before the committee?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): The amendment is moved by the hon. member for Swift Current, and not by the sponsor of the bill.

Mr. POULIOT: Was the question put on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): No.

Mr. POULIOT: Then is there an amendment before the committee now?

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): There is an amendment before the committee, which has been read.

Mr. POULIOT: Who seconded the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): There is no need of a seconder in committee.

Mr. POULIOT: Then let me take this opportunity of congratulating you, Mr. Chairman.

Now, to sum up, this is a serious situation. I do not wish to obstruct this bill but I would like to state my views in connection with it. The question is very simple. There are some sad cases of women who are in despair because they have been abandoned by their husbands, but what does this house do in the case of divorce? This house cannot legally impose any charge upon the guilty party, and we have had some very interesting discussions in connection with this question This house cannot impose such a charge because those are civil matters relating to the provinces, in which we have absolutely nothing to say. So if that argument is sound when we speak of alimony it must be sound when we speak of domicile, because the question of domicile is a question of civil rights just as much as the question of alimony. In addition there is something more serious, the question of the children belonging to the family. The children should be looked after and protected, and I think every member of this house will agree at least in principle with the eloquent presentation of this problem which was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Labelle.

Now I would like to take up the question put me by an hon. member opposite, who asked, "What did Mr. Taschereau do in that case?" Let me tell the committee that at the last interprovincial conference the question of amending our constitution to meet the new requirements of the country was fully discussed. Some premiers, members of the conference, thought the boy who was growing up could not always wear the same clothes.

Mr. SPENCER: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member who is now speaking discussed this subject for fifteen minutes last Tuesday night, and it is not fair to the rest of the members of the committee that he should be permitted to speak more than forty minutes altogether.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not wish to take up too much time, but I believe this is a most serious question.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): On the point of order, I think the hon. gentleman has a right to speak more than once in committee. He has not yet exhausted his forty minutes to-night.

Mr. POULIOT: At that interprovincial conference some premiers held the view that the constitution should be amended by unanimous consent to meet the new requirements of the country.

Mr. DUNNING: Speaking further to the point of order, I think the hon. gentleman now speaking actually had the floor at the conclusion of the hour devoted to private bills the other evening. In that case surely he cannot continue now for another forty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): I am sorry to disagree with the Minister of Railways, but another member spoke after the hon. member for Temiscouata.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): The hon. member for Lisgar spoke, I believe.

Mr. POULIOT: I spoke for only five minutes on Tuesday last. Some other premiers at that interprovincial conference held the view that the constitution should not be amended. Others stated that the constitution should be amended to meet the new requirements of the country, but the premiers of Ontario and Quebec were of the opinion that the constitution should not be changed in spite of those new requirements. I sincerely believe that the day the guilty party is forbidden to remarry we will have much fewer divorce cases before this parliament, but that cannot be done without amending the constitution. It will be a very good thing when that is done for that purpose because we will probably have only one-half the cases which now come before this parliament, and I do not think that any member will complain about that change for the better.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman, although I am opposed to the bill, either in its original or its amended form, I think every opportunity should be afforded for its discussion by the house. I need not go into the constitutional aspect of the question, because the question of what constitutes domicile is well settled. With all due respect to the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Pouliot) domicile is not what he says it is; it is not where the husband happens to be, but is an entirely different thing. It depends a great deal on intent to remain and to make the place where he happens to be his domicile.

Our divorce jurisdicition is operated under the laws of England as they stood. I think it was, in 1870, and the laws of England regarding divorce are indissolubly connected with our jurisdiction. I need not go back to the time of Louis and Catherine in order to refer to the case cited by my hon. friend, because we have more recent cases decided by the privy council, notably—Lord Advocate of Scotland versus Jaffray, which was followed in the Cook case. I view with a great deal of disfavour any attempt to make a special ruling in regard to the law of domicile. That is a matter of private international law or common law, and has been too well established to be interfered with lightly. As far as I know this is the first time that it has been proposed to pass legislation directly affecting what is or what is not to be a domicile. The law has grown up after years of consideration and I think it may be taken to be firmly established. The husband's domicile is the domicile of the wife, not only because she has agreed to live with him but because of the unity which came into effect with the marriage tie. I think the Jaffray case is perhaps the leading authority on this question. In that case the domicile of the husband had been transferred to Australia, and notwithstanding the fact that a separation under the English law might have been ordered under the circumstances, and the court said that there was no reason why a divorce could not be obtained if the action had been taken in the proper place, that is Australia, the court saw no reason to interfere with the well established law applying to divorce by making any variation in that part of it which related to domicile.

It seems to me that the amendment is very loose, and I do not see how this house can pass it. Apparently it is proposed that for the purpose of securing a divorce—

Mr. THORSON: Only.

Mr. GEARY: —for the purpose of securing a divorce a domicile may be obtained by the wife. She must be deserted by and live separate and apart from her husband for a period of at least two years, but the bill does not say how that is to be determined. I suppose an action will have to be taken or the matter settled in a legal tribunal to determine whether or not she has acquired a domicile and whether or not she has been deserted under the circumstances set out and has lived apart from her husband for a period of two years.

Mr. THORSON: In petitions for divorce it is a necessary part of the evidence to establish domicile. Under this particular act a separate domicile may be acquired by a married woman and it will be necessary for her in her action for divorce to establish, in the first place, that she has been deserted, and, in the second place, that she has acquired a separate domicile, in order to give the court jurisdiction to pronounce a decree of divorce.

Mr. GEARY: I do not think that anyone who has read the act will doubt that it will be necessary for some tribunal to determine that the woman has acquired a domicile, a domicile for this one specific purpose. If my hon. friends had wanted to enable the wife to sue in certain jurisdictions, it seems to me that it might have been effected by leaving out all reference to domicile, and then it would have read:

—and lived separate and apart from her husband for a period of two years and upwards, and is still living separate and apart from her husband, may commence an action for divorce in the province praying that her marriage may be dissolved, and that the courts of that province shall have full jurisdiction in the premises.

I view with a great deal of distrust any interference by statutory enactment with this well established principle in divorce, because there are so many complications which might follow, such as successions after death and so on, and it would be very difficult for us to guard against every eventuality which might occur where the wife could be given by statute a particular domicile.

I do not think we are concerned with the question of whether or not it is a matter of civil rights. This house has jurisdiction in the matter of divorce. We have a bill here which will give a domicile to a deserted wife in the place where she is living, and not in the place where her husband's domicile may be. We are not concerned with whether or not the provinces desire to assume the responsibility for enacting such legislation with regard to their own court.

Apart from all this, I would say that without any question this bill would simplify the obtaining of a divorce.

I do not understand the attitude of my hon. friends opposite who profess that they do not want to see an increase in divorce in this country, but still object to giving the province of Ontario the right to have a divorce court. Everyone knows that where a divorce case is tried in open court, subject to all the rules of evidence and the careful scrutiny of same, there is very little likelihood of a divorce being granted in a mistaken case as may happen before the Senate committee, rushed as it is. I do not agree with the actions of that committee in many ways; I think it is overpressed and it is not a tribunal properly set up to look into the evidence and make a proper adjudication thereon. Each province should have its own divorce courts where these actions could be tried in the usual way, and, as I said before, I do not understand the attitude of my hon. friends opposite who, professing to a desire to restrict the ease with which a divorce may be obtained, still vote against a divorce court being established in the province of Ontario.

I agree thoroughly with them that we do not want anything which will make it easier to obtain a divorce. In regard to the marriage tie there has grown up a sort of premeditated uncertainty which is endangering the social life of this country. I think we are making it much easier to obtain divorce by passing such a law as is here suggested, and for that reason, aside from the interference with the private international law and common law of the country, I am absolutely opposed to this bill. As I said before, the domicile of husband theory is not based only upon the fact that the wife has agreed to live with the husband, but one of the members of the court, I think, it was the late Lord Chancellor, said in the case to which I have referred:

"It is quite possible there may be cases in which the husband may deprive the wife of her remedy by changing his domicile" but this application of the law of domicile which has been invariably adhered to in the English law regarding the dissolution of marriage "preserves that unity of idea and fact with regard to the domicile of the married parties which has hitherto always been upheld by the law."

I believe that should be maintained in this country; that parliament should not interfere with that well-established principle, and, therefore, that the amendment should be negatived.

Amendment agreed to on division: Yeas, 36; nays, 28.

Section 2 as amended agreed to on division.

On section 3—Retains domicile of husband until she acquires domicile of choice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not want to repeat what I have already stated three or four times in my opposition to this bill, but may I direct the attention of the committee to the fact that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said the other day that we would establish a Reno in Canada, or a number of them? This, however, is going to be worse than Reno, because residence in Reno for three months is necessary in order to acquire a domicile for the purpose of securing a divorce, whereas under this bill a woman may go to Manitoba or Saskatchewan and say: "I am going to establish my domicile here for my divorce", and she will start divorce proceedings the next day. That is much worse than Reno, and it is what my hon. friend is asking for.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister is entirely in error.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not in error.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a matter of judicial determination whether or not the two factors of fact and intention exist. Unless the court decides that there is an intention to remain in that jurisdiction forever, together with the fact of residence, no domicile is established, and the judicial determination takes the case out of the Reno class.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is entirely wrong. He need only read the amendment to see that. It says that a woman, after she has been living separate and apart from her husband for a period of two years, may go to any province in Canada in which there is a court having jurisdiction to grant a divorce, and she may there establish a domicile of her own choice for the purpose of instituting proceedings.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In Reno she would have to stay three months. In Manitoba or Saskatchewan she need stay only one day.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the minister knows the law of domicile better than that. For a domicile to be established, a judge in the forum in which she appears must be satisfied (a) that she has gone there with the intention to remain there forever as her home, and (b) that the fact of residence has been established.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend is right, the bill is entirely unconstitutional because she would have to go there and establish a domicile. Only the province has jurisdiction in that matter. We, the federal government, have no jurisdiction. We must bring the bill within the question of divorce solely and absolutely; if you go outside of that, you go outside the jurisdiction of this parliament. My hon. friend by his amendment has sought to bring the bill within the jurisdiction of this parliament by not touching the question of domicile as a whole but confining the bill to establishing domicile for the purpose of divorce and for that purpose only. It is stated in the bill, "a domicile of her own choice," for that reason, and she can acquire that domicile in a day, while at Reno it takes three months.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Has not the minister overlooked the fact that section 3 begins with the words "for the purposes of this act"?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know that.

Mr. THORSON: The amendment provides that sections 2 and 3 of the bill as printed are deleted, and the amendment is substituted for those two sections. The amendment has been carried by this committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the amendment that I am discussing.

Mr. BENNETT: The amendment has been carried.

Mr. POULIOT: Can this parliament by any act change the nature of domicile?

Mr. THORSON: This parliament undoubtedly has the right to lay down the conditions for divorce, one of which at present is that the parties to the divorce action shall be domiciled in the province in which the court is exercising jurisdiction. This bill proposes to give to a married woman who has been deserted by her husband the right to acquire a separate domicile as one of the conditions for bringing an action for divorce. I think there is no question as to the jurisdiction of this parliament to pass an act of this sort.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think so. I do not say no.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): May I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the amendment is substituted for sections 2 and 3 of the bill? That amendment has been carried, and therefore the bill is carried. This discussion therefore is entirely out of order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree, but it was because you called section 3, Mr. Chairman, that I spoke.

Preamble agreed to, on division.

Title agreed to, on division.

Bill reported.

Mr. STEVENS: In order to get an idea as to just how the money is being spent, I have been looking up the Auditor General's report for the year ended March 31, 1928, and I find page H-23 under "Miscellaneous" an item for advertising, Desbarats Advertising Agency Limited, Montreal, amounting to $61,865.09. What would that be for?

Mr. FORKE: That is for advertising in the United States. That advertising agency works on a percentage basis, and the advertising is done in a number of farm journals. This year we are giving the work to the Advertising Service Association of Toronto.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the total amount being spent in the United States? I have it in the report in a score of items but it is difficult for me to get the total cost. Can we be given that?

Mr. FORKE: I am sorry to say it would take some time; you would have to get all the salaries, office expenses and advertising.

Mr. STEVENS: I would refer the minister to the office in Fargo, North Dakota, the expenses in connection with which amount to $14,767.53; the one at St. Paul, Minnesota, amounts to $19,829.56; the one at Spokane, Washington, amounts to $11,076.11, and the one at San Francisco, California, amounts to $13,301.68. Now if we turn over to the European agencies we find that the agency at the port of Hamburg, which is the point of departure for most of the European immigrants, amounts to $7,483, while Riga amounts to $5,509, and Rotterdam, $6,176. There is a marked difference between the amounts paid to these agencies respectively. The offices in the United States are costing very large sums, whereas these main embarkation offices in Europe are costing about one third of what we are paying to the American agencies, notwithstanding that quite obviously they are giving much greater results so far as numbers are concerned. Can the minister explain the reason for the difference?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think you can very well compare the work done by the United States offices with the work carried on by the continental agencies. The continental offices are merely inspection points. They carry on no propaganda of any description but simply pass the immigrants. I had the pleasure of seeing a shipful of immigrants examined at Paris and as I watched the performance it occurred to me that the inspection was rigid enough for army purposes. However, I suppose it is absolutely necessary to be careful in these examinations. The United States offices, on the other hand, are engaged in an active campaign in immigration and maintain a considerable staff. Immigrants from the United States brought in last year, in the way of cash and effects, property to the value of $14,971,670. They are a good class of immigrants.

Mr. STEVENS: Does that include the two cars which carried $400,000?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: What would they be bringing in—diamonds?

Mr. FORKE: This represents settlers' cash and effects.

Mr. STEVENS: Did they bring the cash by freight?

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend will have his joke, of course.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many new offices have been opened in the United States in the last two years and how many closed?

Mr. FORKE: Two have been closed but no new ones opened.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What two were closed?

Mr. FORKE: One in Indianapolis and the other in the east.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many immigrants from the United States have been sent back by the American patrol at the border?

Mr. FORKE: I cannot give that information offhand.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is important, is it not?

Mr. KENNEDY: I notice in this item, in the statement of the purposes for which the money is being voted, a reference to loans for stock, equipment and so forth, for Canadian boys, which loans may be authorized by the governor in council. I listened carefully while the minister was making his statement and I gathered that no money was advanced last year for this purpose by order in council.

Mr. FORKE: It comes under the grant for immigration or colonization societies, amouunting to $35,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: And that has been actually advanced?

Mr. FORKE: Not one dollar has been spent yet. As I explained before dinner, the boy will have to have $500 and must work long enough on the farm to show that he is possessed of intelligence and industry and is capable of managing a farm. The land settlement board will have to decide that. After that question has been settled—I am referring now, of course, to British boys; I will discuss Canadian boys later—$1,250 is advanced by the Dominion and $1,250 by the imperial government. This makes a total of $3,000, and the money will be spent under the care and direction of the land settlement board.

I spoke about the Canadian boys; I made the statement that the Dominion government would be ready and willing to advance the same amount to Canadian boys provided we could get any of the provincial governments to grant an equal amount, either by way of a farm or in cash, to take the place of the grant by the imperial government. Last summer I took up this matter with the governments of the three prairie provinces and their excuse was that they did not have their natural resources; they said if their resources were returned to them they might be able to come to some arrangement along that line, so that is how the situation stands at present, although I hope in the future to be able to come to something definite. In regard to the British boys not a dollar has been spent as yet; it may be years before the money is expended, but it has been and will continue to be provided. As to this item for Canadian boys the chances are that the money will not be spent this year, although I hope we may come to some arrangement.

Mr. LUCAS: Before six o'clock I questioned the minister as to the attitude of the department in case a private individual agreed to assume this responsibility in place of the province.

Mr. FORKE: In that case the province would have to agree to assume the aftercare of the boy. That is not new; the question has been discussed from that angle also, but nothing has been accomplished as yet.

There is nothing like speaking plainly at times. With the exception of some in the province of Quebec there has not been any great desire shown by Canadian boys to go farming. I do not say there are not some boys of this kind in other provinces, but the same desire is not shown elsewhere that we find among the young French Canadians. At least two-thirds of the boys growing up on our farms in western Canada—and I can speak for Manitoba if not for the other provinces—have no intention of continuing farming. I would like to see the boy who wants to farm given every possible encouragement by the government.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister tell us if the government has considered reversing its decision with regard to allowing Barnardo boys of school age to enter Canada?

Mr. FORKE: Barnardo boys over fourteen years of age.

Mr. McGIBBON: I was referring to Barnardo boys of school age.

Mr. FORKE: Fourteen years is the limit.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister tell us for what reason?

Mr. FORKE: I think almost every society dealing with juveniles has recommended that the minimum age be fourteen

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister be good enough to name these societies?

Mr. FORKE: The child welfare societies of the different provinces have made that recommendation, together with the provincial governments. Really I have seen no great desire to have the minimum age lowered except on the part of the Barnardo people and the Marchmont homes, which are operated by the Cadbury people, who make cocoa and chocolates and so on. I had the pleasure of having dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Cadbury, and I could never hope to meet finer people; if I could have done anything for anyone I would have done it for the Cadburys.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely a good meal would not influence the minister?

Mr. FORKE: It might help; and we had chocolates also.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the minister recognizes the fact that for years this work has been carried on successfully. He must recognize that the best citizens of this country are our own people; the second best are the British, and the most successful of those British born citizens are those who come to Canada at school age, which permits them to be educated in the institutions of this country and moulded into the political, social and economic life of Canada. I have been credibly informed that only one society has objected to bringing out these younger children. They are being sent to Australia; there is no objection to them in that country, and I have been told that of the thousands of these children brought to Canada less than two per cent have been charged with any crime. To-day many of these boys are occupying positions in this country with great distinction, and it does appear to me that when an organization will bring children to Canada, pay for their keep in this country with money raised in the old land, educate the boys and girls to be Canadian citizens and have them inspected every three or four months, you have an organization doing the very work this government wants done. The Barnardo people have told me that they know of only one organization in this country which has objected to the admission of these children, and if the minister knows of others I think he should give the names.

Mr. FORKE: I have mentioned the child welfare societies and the provincial governments, and the British government itself does not encourage the emigration of children under fourteen.

Mr. McGIBBON: That movement is going on between England and Australia at present.

Mr. FORKE: Not to a very large extent.

Mr. McGIBBON: It has been transferred from Canada to Australia. Perhaps the minister might say whether the Ontario government officially objects to these children being brought in?

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. FORKE: My deputy says he does not know that the government of Ontario has officially objected.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister said so.

Mr. FORKE: Probably I was mistaken.

Mr. McGIBBON: If you were mistaken with regard to the Ontario government perhaps you were mistaken with regard to the other provinces.

Mr. FORKE: There are the provincial child welfare associations.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is only one organization, and I am told it is the only association which has made any objection.

Mr. FORKE: With the exception of the one of which my hon. friend spoke I do not know of any organization that has asked that children under fourteen years of age be brought to this country.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not asking for those who have requested the government to take this action; I want to know those who have objected.

Mr. FORKE: It is a matter of opinion. I have no doubt the hon. member thinks it would be a good thing to bring in children under fourteen years of age, but in the department we have taken the opposite stand, believing it to be in the best interests of the young people themselves, and these welfare societies have taken the same view. Possibly we may be mistaken, but it is thought that children of tender age coming to a new country might find themselves in uncomfortable surroundings, and it has been deemed advisable to draw the line at fourteen years of age. It may be a mistake, but we think it is best in the interests of the children themselves.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have no hesitation in telling the minister that in my opinion it is a mistake. This policy has not been in force in Canada for many years; this is a recent change. I can safely say that I have observed hundreds of these boys in my own district; I know one family which has had thirty-five of them. These boys and girls are brought to Canada; they are educated here by money collected in the old country, and without that education I believe you cannot lay the foundation for the very best Canadian citizenship. A boy coming to Canada above school age is barred from entering any of the professions here because he has not the necessary primary or secondary education; the girls cannot become nurses; these children cannot enter our universities and take professional courses. They are handicapped in many lines of business, and I claim that the minister and his department have deliberately shut out the very best type of immigrant we can get. They are British; they are young, and without expense to the government they are inspected, every three months with regard to girls and every four or five months with regard to boys. An inspector is sent to their homes, and if necessary they are brought to Toronto where they are not subject to any outside influence and where they can tell exactly how they have been treated. This government has deliberately reversed the policy which was in force for many years and under which some 280,000 boys and girls were brought to this country, of whom over 98 per cent made good; less than 2 per cent of the immigrants were declined. I am credibly informed that no provincial government has objected to this policy. Objections were made by one organization, headed by a lady who had no doubt good intentions but who probably does not know very much about bringing up children. I think the minister should give us a little more information than he has up to the present.

Mr. FORKE: My deputy suggests that in the morning I give you all the resolutions which have been passed by different societies and sent in to the department.

Mr. McGIBBON: Let it go until the morning.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I asked the minister where the two offices in the United States which were closed were located, and he could not tell me at the moment.

Mr. FORKE: They are at Harrisburg and Portland, Maine.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What were the grounds for closing those offices?

Mr. FORKE: They were closed upon the advice of the officials.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Did the officials justify the continuance of the other offices? Does the minister say that all the other offices in the United States are productive of good in the immigration policy of Canada?

Mr. FORKE: I have the list here.

Mr. RYCKMAN: You have read the list already.

Mr. FORKE: I think they are rendering very good service. Of course I do not want to hide behind my officials, but I think everyone will recognize the fact that a minister has to trust to his officials to a large extent in matters of this kind. These offices were closed and the territory in respect to other offices was widened out.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Are those offices inspected regularly?

Mr. FORKE: Oh, yes; we have a commissioner of colonization who inspects them regularly. If results are not being obtained an explanation is requested.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister tell us why the Detroit office could not be as efficiently carried on in the city of Windsor?

Mr. FORKE: It is a matter of opinion, but I do not think so. The Detroit office is a good office and has been producing very good results. Some complaints were made this afternoon about the San Francisco office. The agent there, Mr. Roche, is an elderly man and perhaps a younger man would be able to obtain better results in that office.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has the minister ever been in Detroit?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister does not know the relative situation as between Detroit and Windsor?

Mr. FORKE: I have looked at the map.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They are only five or six minutes apart by ferry or by bridge. Does the minister not realize that one who wished to come to Canada could go to the office in Windsor just as conveniently as to the office in Detroit? We would thus be carrying on the business in our own country instead of in the United States.

An hon. MEMBER: You would not be able to get the Detroit gunmen.

Mr. FORKE: I think the United States people are more likely to go to the Detroit office than to come over to Windsor.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Anyone wanting to come to Canada would come to the city of Windsor to ask for information.

Mr. CAHILL: They would be in Canada then.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That would be too bad.

Mr. FORKE: That office has been in existence for quite a long time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then I suggest that the minister consider making the change.

Mr. FORKE: All right, we will take it into consideration.

Mr. KELLNER: The minister states that the government has not spent any money to provide land or equipment for the immigrant. When the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) was speaking last evening he complained about the high prices which an immigrant had paid for land, and the minister said that nothing was being paid at the present time. If the government has not advanced any money why is the hon. member for Fraser Valley complaining about the payments being so high and the minister stating that they were not being made?

Mr. FORKE: Those people came in under the three thousand family scheme on money supplied by the British government. The Canadian government undertake to collect that money and pay it over to the British government; they are not collecting the money for themselves.

Mr. BARBER: It is being charged up against the people just the same.

Mr. CAHILL: We are collectors.

Mr. McGIBBON: I must object to the minister coming before the house in the last days of the session and knowing absolutely nothing about his own department. Whenever we ask a question the minister replies, "I have not the information, I will give it to you later." I think that attitude is a discourtesy to the house.

Mr. FORKE: If the hon. member states that it is done through ignorance, I am quite willing to bow under the yoke.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do not put words into my mouth.

Mr. FORKE: But I do not consider that it is a discourtesy, because I will give the members every courteous answer I can.

Mr. McGIBBON: The trouble is that we cannot get information.

Mr. FORKE: I think you are getting a fair amount.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister any information with regard to domestics entering this country? Can he tell us how many remained here after the second year?

Mr. STEVENS: And how many got married.

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. FORKE: The following domestics came in under the assisted passage scheme during 1928-29, and were received at the following places:

Halifax	8
Montreal	728
Toronto	1,445
Winnipeg	125
Calgary	207

The department have made arrangements with the following organizations to receive houseworkers who are also placed by the employment service:

Nova Scotia, Halifax: Catholic Women's League.

New Brunswick, St. John: Young Women's Christian Association; Rosary Hall.

Quebec, Que.: Young Women's Christian Association.

Montreal: Catholic Women's League Hostel.

Ontario, Ottawa: Young Women's Christian Association; King's Daughters Guilds; Rosary Hall.

Kingston: Young Women's Christian Association.

Toronto: Catholic Women's League Hostel.

Hamilton: Young Women's Christian Association.

London: Young Women's Christian Association.

Saskatchewan, Saskatoon: Teacher's Hostel accommodating girls for British Women's Emigration Society.

Manitoba, Winnipeg: Catholic Women's League Hostel.

Alberta, Edmonton: Church of England Hostel; Young Women's Christian Association; Catholic Women's League Hostel.

British Columbia, Vancouver: Young Women's Christian Association; Queen Mary's Coronation Hostel.

Victoria: Young Women's Christian Association.

Kelowna: Joyce Hostel.

Those are the numbers of domestics that come out and the different organizations that look after them.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Can the minister tell us the possibilities of finding these girls within two years?

Mr. FORKE: Our officials have endeavoured in every case to follow up and find out what becomes of these girls. No doubt a number of them disappear. Many of them do not stay where they are placed but drift into other lines of work. The Salvation Army is the only organization I know of that claims they keep all their women just where they place them. Women's immigration is probably more difficult to conduct than men's. More care is taken to look after women when they arrive at Quebec or Montreal. They are taken charge of by conductresses and conducted to a distributing centre whence they are sent to the place where they are required. We have found by experience that many of these women come with two addresses, the one to which they are ostensibly going, having been recruited for it by the Immigration department; the other to which they want to go and to which they will eventually go if possible.

Mr. McGIBBON: When these domestics come here, say from northern Europe, or, indeed, from any country, what provision does the government make for following them up and looking after them?

Mr. FORKE: In Canada?

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, for those who cannot speak the English language.

Mr. FORKE: The hostels are really clearing houses. I have under my hand a statement of the houseworkers by origin arriving at ocean ports during the fiscal year, all of whom are looked after, sent to the hostel and distributed by our own officials. Those who come out under the different associations are looked after by them and a report is made by the organization as to where they have gone. There is no method of keeping a girl in domestic service if she does not want to remain, at least none that I know of.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister does not get my point. I have had complaints from people who have hired these girls who cannot speak the English language. When they no longer require their services there is no place for the girls to go to and they are under the necessity of finding another job for them before they leave their first employment. There is no agency in Toronto to which to send them, no organization that cares a fig for them; they are left in this country, not being able to speak the English language, practically helpless.

Mr. FORKE: There is in every large city a hostel towards the maintenance of which the department subscribes. Our officials are supposed to keep an eye on the girls when they go into domestic service. Of course everyone will recognize that it is impossible in every case to keep track of a girl if she is determined to slip out of sight. I know the difficulties our women's branch has in looking after these girls.

Mr. McGIBBON: My point, if I can make it clear to the minister, is this: these girls do not slip out of sight. They come to Toronto and somebody employs them. When that employer is through with them, there is nobody to look after them. They cannot speak the English language; they have no place to go to and their employer has to keep them until he goes out and finds another place for them.

Mr. FORKE: I had the great pleasure of visiting the Toronto hostel and addressing the girls there on one occasion. That hostel is a home for any girl in Toronto who has come from a foreign country, and if such girls go there, they will be treated as well as their mothers would treat them.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who is in charge of it?

Mr. FORKE: I was at the hostel, but really I do not know where it is as I was taken down there in a car. It is in the city of Toronto.

Mr. McGIBBON: This is another example of the great efficiency of the department and of the minister.

Mr. FORKE: If friends drive one in a car to a point in a city the size of Toronto I do not think it is surprising that one should not know its exact location. It is a very good hostel. Hon. members from the city of Toronto ought to know something about it. It is a large institution, well run, and a great credit to that city and the people who are in charge of it. When those girls go there these are the different organizations that look after them:

Women's Auxiliary, Anglican Church.
Girls' Friendly Society.
United Farm Women of Ontario.
Toronto Catholic Women's League.
Presbyterian Church.
Women's Patriotic League.
Toronto Young Women's Christian Association.
Municipal Chapter of the Imperial Order of Daughters of the Empire.

Ladies connected with this organization were kind enough to take me down to see the hostel.

Georgina House.
Traveller's Aid.
Women's Institute.
Women's Christian Temperance Union.
Toronto Local Council of Women.
United Church Missionary Society.

All these organizations are interested in the girls and are assisting the Immigration department in seeing that they are properly looked after.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do they take care of them in their homes?

Mr. FORKE: The hostel is the home.

Mr. McGIBBON: Where is it?

Mr. FORKE: I am informed it is on Jarvis street. If I were in Toronto, I could soon find out where it is.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is all the minister knows about it.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, my hon. friend will have to be content with that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): When I raised this question, I was interested in another phase of the matter. I was wondering whether the minister and his department made any attempt to follow up and find out the result of this policy. We have a two-sided policy—agricultural labour and domestic assistance. I wanted to know if the minister had followed up these cases to find out if Canada was getting any results from this immigration. I can speak only for our own section, but it is my belief that you cannot find fifteen per cent of these domestics in Canada after two years, and under this policy you are only paying out good Canadian money to provide splendid domestic assistants for the United States. As soon as they have finished one year's service here and paid off their indebtedness they are on the train bound for New York City, where they get big pay. Has the minister any information on that? I know that in our district you will not find fifteen per cent of the Scotch domestic servants here after two years. They stay just long enough to qualify for entrance to the United States. If that is the case generally, we are simply providing another means for the United States getting the domestic help that they badly need, and are spending money without much result so far as this country is concerned. I do not blame the girls for going. The ones who come into our district are splendid girls.

Mr. FORKE: The department uses its best endeavours to see that these girls stay in Canada, but I am afraid that there is too much truth in what the hon. gentleman has said, and that quite a large number slip away across the border. At the same time we could never begin to fill the demand for these girls in Canada. All we can do is to get the best girls we possibly can and send them to the points that are asking for them, and then follow them up and try to keep them in the employment to which they have been sent. I admit that quite a large percentage do leave the country. I believe that some come with

[Mr. McGibbon.]

United States addresses in their pockets and are just awaiting a chance to slip over the line. We try to meet that situation as best we can. The demand from Toronto, Winnipeg and other large cities for these girls is great. I think my hon. friend will find that the situation he complains of is worse in the smaller towns than in the big cities.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister is familiar with the difficulties in the Calgary hostel in connection with the women that came there. Would it be possible for the minister to indicate who selects these girls and what effort is made to secure the right type when they come to Canada? I think the minister through his official will understand what I mean without my going into details. Some of them have not been exactly the type that it is thought should be brought over. What supervision is exercised?

Mr. FORKE: The girls that are recruited in Great Britain are recruited mostly by our own women officials.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry to hear that, because I could not have thought it possible that some of these girls could have been recruited by any of our own people. I will speak to the minister personally about it, because certainly the situation is very undesirable, very.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. gentleman refers to immigration from the United Kingdom?

Mr. BENNETT: They came to the west from the United Kingdom. As a matter of fact some of them came from north of the Tweed.

Mr. FORKE: It is a very difficult situation.

Mr. BENNETT: I know.

Mr. FORKE: I have looked at it this way. Fathers and mothers will think twice before they let their girls go to a new country unless they know that they are going to a good home.

Mr. SPENCER: According to a return which I received, over 16,000 female domestic servants entered Canada in 1928. Would the minister tell the committee how many of these spoke the English or the French language, and how many spoke some other language?

Mr. FORKE: All I can give is the countries from which they came. I am afraid that my hon. friend will have to guess the tongue they spoke. The figures are as follows:

Albanian	5
Arabian	1
Armenian	4
Austrian	50
Belgian	58

Mr. SPENCER: Do I understand that Japanese are encouraged to come in as domestic servants?

Mr. FORKE: There is a gentleman's agreement between the British government, the Canadian government, and Japan under which a very small quota comes in every year.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the quota?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know that I am at liberty to disclose that. I think the Prime Minister mentioned the agreement in the house, and perhaps gave the number. It is only a small number.

Mr. SPENCER: If it is a gentleman's agreement, an international agreement, surely the members of this house are privileged to know how many are allowed to come in.

Mr. FORKE: I did not say that it was an international agreement, but a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. SPENCER: Surely the 245 members of this house are entitled to have that information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I point out to the minister that the list which he has read does not purport to give domestic servants only? Many of those who came out came to get married or to meet their relatives, so this is not a list of domestic servants. It says underneath the table:

The foreign women listed in table above were destined either to husbands, relatives, or to be placed in domestic work.

Mr. FORKE: They were all brought out under the care of the Immigration department. It was a mistake, of course, to read them out as domestic servants. As stated at the bottom of the table, they were destined to husbands, relatives or to be placed in domestic work.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think there is a great deal in what the member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) said, that the government should make some permanent arrangement in regard to those who cannot speak the English language very well, and who perhaps after a certain time have terminated their agreement. With regard to this hostel that the Minister has spoken of, the arrangement there simply is that these girls are kept for twenty-four hours.

Mr. FORKE: I have mentioned the places where hostels are run under the auspices of different organizations.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The arrangements are only for the detention of those girls there for twenty-four hours, whereas a girl should be kept in some place until she has another place of employment to go to. I think the government could very well take up that line of work.

Mr. FORKE: When I visited that hostel there were, I would say, almost 200 girls there who were working in the city of Toronto, and who had come to the hostel when they arrived in Canada. They go there in the evening to pass a social hour. It is a home for domestic girls who have come from abroad.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What they do is to form an overseas club, which is a splendid idea. They have their own entertainment, but unfortunately, from what I know about them, they stay there about two years and then go away, and it seems to me that we are just providing a splendid class of girls for the United States. I do not agree with what the minister said about these girls. I know something about the Scotch girls, and I say absolutely that his statement is untrue. The Scottish domestic who is brought out here is a splendid type of girl, and she can usually get any place she likes and can demand her own pay in the United States.

Mr. FORKE: I think the hon. member misunderstood what I said. I cast no aspersion against the character of any girl. If I did, I did not intend to.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I thought that was the gist of what the minister said, that you could not get a good type of girl to leave her home and come to do domestic work. I find it to be very opposite as far as Scotch girls are concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON: I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that on January 1, the international bridge between Detroit and Sandwich is likely to be opened, and provision should be made in the supplementary estimates to take care of the additional immigration officers who will be required for that post.

While I am on my feet, I may say that before I went overseas I had some correspondence with the minister in connection with the annoyances at the ferry docks at Windsor and Walkerville where we have practically adopted the United States system of inspection, which I do not approve of. I do not know what has been done in the meantime, but I have made inquiries since I arrived in Ottawa on Sunday, I received a telegram to-day from a thoroughly reliable source, which reads as follows:

> Undoubtedly a feeling exists here that there is too much immigration red tape at the ferry docks. Objections come from Canadians returning from Detroit.

What I am anxious to have is a statement from the minister placed on Hansard which will satisfy my constituents in regard to the situation there. If the minister was going back and forth between Windsor and Detroit every day he would be stopped every time and asked where he lived. He might live in Timbuctoo, yet he could tell the officer that he lived in Walkerville or Windsor or Sandwich and go on. It is mere child's play, and I am sure the minister would think the same thing if he watched the proceedings at the ferry dock. It is more annoying in the winter than in the summer. In the winter you usually get a cold northwest or northeast wind; I have timed myself and found that it took sometimes from five to fifteen minutes to get through in the rush hours. It all depends on how long the officer will question some of the people going through. For instance, I know some people who have lived in Windsor for years and years who have an English accent, and these officers will not take their word; they catechise them just as they would a school child. I am sure it is the desire of the department that harmonious conditions should prevail there, conditions that would satisfy the people living in the border cities. A Canadian, born in Canada, who has lived in Windsor nearly all his life, certainly objects to getting an identification card to return to his own country from his everyday work in Detroit. I know I would not do so, and I do not think we should call upon them to do it. I am anxious to assist in any way I can. When people have to remain on the dock in the winter time, with a cold wind blowing, they are liable to catch a heavy cold. I have received hundreds and hundreds of complaints, and I have tried to assure those who complain that the department will ultimately work it out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. FORKE: The extra help has been provided for the new bridge in the estimates this year. In regard to the examination crossing at Windsor, an officer has been sent down there several times to inspect and report and his report has always been favourable. I shall be glad, however, to look into the matter again, and to have things smoothed out as far as possible. My deputy informs me that everything is working very well at the present time. Is the telegram the hon. member referred to of recent date?

Mr. ROBINSON: It is dated to-day. I know it is from a thoroughly reliable source.

Mr. FORKE: I will see that a thorough investigation is made.

Mr. ROBINSON: I think one of the difficulties is due to the fact that the officers are so frequently changed. When a stranger is put on there he will stop everyone. Then others feel that if they let some go through whom they recognize as persons who live in Windsor or the border cities, complaint will be sent in against them that they are not doing their duty, and they tell me that in order to avoid that they have to question everybody whether they know them or not.

Mr. FORKE: I will have an examination and report made.

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the minister a question with respect to the appointment of an official at Sutton, Quebec, under his department? We have heard a great deal of Sutton recently in connection with the Post Office Department. I have received a communication with respect to an appointment in the immigration service at that place. Perhaps it is not possible for the minister to go into it now, because he is dealing with his estimates, but it may be that he will give us the information at a later date.

Mr. FORKE: The information will be given.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister, in giving the details of the item, mentioned $65,000 for deportation cases. How many cases of deportation occurred last year?

Mr. FORKE: For medical reasons, 519; public charges, 430; criminality, 426; other causes, 257; persons accompanying those deported—if for example, a husband and wife come out and the wife is deported, the husband goes back with her—254, or a total of 1,886 By nationality, these were 1,047 British; 297 American; other countries, 542. It is one of the most difficult and one of the saddest aspects of the work of the Minister of Immigration to be under the necessity of deporting people, for it touches his humanity as nothing else can.

Mr. SPENCER: It would seem from the figures the minister has given that by far the largest percentage of those who are deported come from the United States.

Mr. FORKE: No, the British figure is 1,047 and the United States 297.

Mr. SPENCER: But the proportion of people coming from Great Britain is greater than that from the United States.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, it is larger.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the fact that there are so many deportation cases to be explained by an inefficient inspection before the immigrants leave for this country?

Mr. FORKE: If an immigrant, after his arrival in Canada, commits a crime within a year, we send him back, and no examination on the other side could possibly have obviated that.

Mr. BENNETT: Over 400 are accounted for by criminality.

Mr. FORKE: Criminality and public charges comprise half the cases and you cannot very well anticipate those causes. If someone comes here and becomes a burden on the public there is noting to do but send him back where he would be better taken care of among his own people.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the minister say that the number of those becoming public charges was 519?

Mr. FORKE: No, 430.

Mr. GARDINER: Would they become public charges in the municipalities in which they reside?

Mr. FORKE: Yes; they would be unable to make a living and therefore nothing could be done with them. Someone has to look after them and so they are deported. Probably they are kept in the immigration buildings for a time until a sufficient number are ready for deportation. Of course those that are deported from the different ports generally go back by the next steamer.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume that those who are deported as public charges will probably have lived in Canada for some time.

Mr. FORKE: They may or may not.

Mr. SPENCER: You cannot deport after five years.

Mr. FORKE: We draw the line at five years; after an immigrant has been five years in the Dominion we do not think he should be deported.

Mr. SPENCER: Those deported for medical reasons numbered 519. Does this mean that the examiners on the other side fell down in their work?

Mr. FORKE: What we consider a really thorough medical examination on the other side began only last year.

Mr. SPENCER: But 519 came through.

Mr. GARDINER: How is the present system working in comparison with the old?

Mr. FORKE: I think it works better; it is much more rigid. The fact that a number of persons may be deported does not argue that the inspection is not efficient, because, as I have stated, the inspection is much more rigid than it was in former years.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give some information regarding the training farms in the old country? What experience do immigrants get there?

Mr. FORKE: If you will let this item go through that question can be answered under the next vote with reference to empire settlement.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister informed us a little while ago that there was one man kept in Peace River. What is a man there for? What are his duties?

Mr. BENNETT: To keep the peace.

Mr. FORKE: That is in connection with repatriation work. We are giving $5,000 to the Salvation Army, $1,000 to the Anglican church, $1,000 to the Presbyterian, and $1,000 to the United church. Those are all the grants given. In connection with repatriation work in Quebec, in relation to French Canadians returning from the New England states and going to Peace River or northern Ontario as immigrants, we have two Catholic priests acting under the department, one in northern Ontario and one in Peace River. These repatriation fathers receive no salary but we have been allowing them $100 a month and expenses. I thought that was due to the Catholic community as their share of the grants that were being paid.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give us details of the amounts paid to the various societies under the item for immigration purposes?

Mr. FORKE: I have mentioned them all.

Mr. GARDINER: You gave some of them. I should like to have the grants given to all organizations engaged in immigration work.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know of any other organizations getting money. I have given certain grants including those to workers in Peace River and northern Ontario. Then there is $5,000 to the Salvation Army, $1,000 to the United Church of Canada, $1,000 to the Anglican Church and $1,000 to the British Settlement Society of Toronto, which is the continuing Presbyterian Church. I do not know that I am greatly in favour of making grants to religious denominations in this way, but these people are doing splendid work in selecting and placing immigrants and I think the money is well spent.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not think the minister gave us the particulars of the grants to the provinces.

Mr. FORKE: I gave that information this afternoon; or does my hon. friend refer to the British boys?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The direct grants to the provinces.

Mr. FORKE: There are no direct grants to the provinces, unless my hon. friend means in connection with repatriation, and I went into that matter very carefully this afternoon.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. SPENCER: Does the minister call upon these societies which obtain government grants for any report as to how the money is spent?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, they report exactly how many immigrants they bring in and where they place them, and our officials also check up their work. I must say that the church societies especially bring in a very good class of people.

Item agreed to.

Empire settlement scheme, including grants to immigration societies, provinces, women's hostels, etc., as may be authorized by the governor general in council, $1,000,000.

Mr. CAHILL: This appears to be quite an old item in the estimates, but I do not think it adds very much to Canadian immigration or benefits Canada in any way. I think the expenditure of $1,000,000 proposed here could be made to much better advantage on many other things in Canada, and I believe that the general opinion on this side of the house at least, and I believe throughout the country generally, is that assisted immigration is a mistake on the part of Canada. We have a good country here which naturally attracts people, and if we were to eliminate assistance to immigrants I think we would attract a more desirable class of people, increase our immigration and satisfy our own people to a greater extent than is the case with this assisted immigration.

I have discussed this matter on previous occasions, and while I do not expect many hon. members on this side of the house to support me, feeling perhaps that loyalty to their party is stronger than any other feeling at present, still I believe that if a free vote could be taken without any obligation to support the government or the minister in the matter, this item would be defeated by a very large majority. I have no criticism to make with regard to the present minister; I think perhaps he is doing as well as any minister could under the circumstances, but the time has arrived when Canada would be much better served by allowing healthy, energetic and enterprising young people to come here of their own accord instead of taxing the people of this country in order to assist what may be more or less undesirable class of people to come to Canada. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I would go so far as to say that we might abolish the Department of Immigration altogether without any great hardship to Canada. I think if we must have our present quota of ministers, a minister of mines would serve a much better purpose than a minister of immigration. Any restrictive measures necessary in connection with immigration could be undertaken by the Department of Justice and the medical inspection of immigrants could be looked after by the Department of Health. I believe if we entirely eliminated the Department of Immigration more people would seek entrance to Canada than is the case to-day. I would even say that where we have caused a certain amount of hardship or grievance by the appointment of medical officers in Europe we might well withdraw those appointments and leave everyone free to come to Canada on an equal basis subject to our willingness to admit them. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I desire to move in amendment:

That vote No. 56 be reduced by three-fourths of $999,999.

Mr. BOULANGER: I heartily support the amendment just moved, for reasons I have previously indicated and which I do not intend to repeat to-night. This afternoon we had consistency and logic preached to us, and if I desire to be consistent and logical I must support the amendment.

I should add that in supporting this amendment I do not impute any blame or criticism to the Minister of Immigration; we realize that he is an honest and capable man doing his level best with a bad job, but we do blame the policy, for which the minister is not responsible. He inherited that policy and he is trying to navigate as best he can with it, but in my humble judgment this policy is a misuse of the taxpayers' money. More than that it is useless, because we have been told that all the people whom we bring to Canada at such great cost do not stay here. For these reasons I desire to support the amendment.

Mr. POWER: While I am not perhaps prepared to go the length to which my hon. friend from Pontiac wishes to go, in this item is included grants to provinces. I am prepared to leave out those grants, but in order to show that I heartily approve of the principle enunciated by the hon. member for Pontiac, namely that this government should no longer vote money for the assistance of immigrants, I am prepared to vote for his amendment. I firmly believe that the vast majority of the people of this country no longer wish any of the taxpayers' money to be expended in inducing people to come to Canada. If they wish to come here we should allow them to do so, provided we surround their entry with certain medical and moral safeguards but to have an agency in Europe or in any part of the world to ask people to come here after describing to them in glowing terms the future they will have in this country I think is going altogether too far. I do not believe that ten per cent of the members of the house are prepared to get up and say that they desire more assisted immigrants in their own constituencies. I will say that we do not want any more in my constituency. The members rise in their seats and say that we must people the fertile plains of the west, but very few of them would be prepared to say that they have room in their own home towns or their own home cities for any more people from the other side.

Mr. GOTT: Bring back the Canadian boys.

Mr. FORKE: I would like to offer a word of explanation in regard to this vote. The total amount spent last year amounted to $634,699.70. The Dominion government pays the full amount of the passage and then later on the imperial government repays its share. When we strike the estimate we have to allow for a sufficient amount to cover the total cost of the passages, but that amount is reduced by what is repaid by the British government.

Mr. GARDINER: What are the items which go to make up that total?

Mr. FORKE: That figure of $634,699.70 was all that was taken out of the $1,000,000 vote of last year. A balance of $365,300.30 was never withdrawn from the Dominion treasury. The same thing will probably happen next year, and to a larger extent. That amount was made up in the following manner:

Salaries..	$ 22,399
Administration and general expenses..	42,738
Canadian share of passage grant.. ..	532,228

As far as Canada was concerned, the total cost of the assisted passages amounted to $532,228, which is a long way from the $1,000,000 which many members seem to think we are paying for these passage grants. A grant of $20,640 was made to hostels and societies, and our share of the passage loans, which are recoverable, amounted to $16,693.17. That reduces the total expenditure for last year which will not be returned, to $618,592. I think a very careful analysis of the whole Immigration department activities by an expert accountant would be a very good thing, and if it is my luck to present the estimates another year I intend to have that done so that I will be able to show the house that the amount spent on immigration is very much smaller than the estimates would appear to indicate.

I would like to point out to the house what the imperial government is contributing towards that amount. The figures I am giving include the whole period during which the Empire Settlement Act has been in force, the last six years. As Minister of Immigration I had no connection with the bringing in of that act. It has been in force for six years and will run out at the end of the present year. That would be the proper time to take such steps as are being taken here to-night. We have an agreement with the British government which we cannot repudiate and I do not think the hon. member who has moved the amendment realizes that fact.

Mr. GARDINER: When does that agreement expire?

Mr. FORKE: The last day of the present year.

Mr. GARDINER: The fiscal or the calendar year?

Mr. FORKE: It will be the calendar year. That would be the proper time to take such steps as are being taken at the present moment. This government has entered into a bargain with the imperial government which it is in honour bound obliged to carry out. The British government has paid, under this Empire Settlement Act, $4,105,977.43 in loans and passage grants. That expenditure was made in connection with the three thousand family scheme. That passage money will never be repaid, except the small amount which has been loaned, but the land grants will be recoverable. In all the British government has paid out in cash $9,105,977, and of that amount $5,000,000 will be recoverable from those brought out under the three thousand family scheme. I would like the committee to pay attention to this, because it is very important.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. FORKE: The Dominion government has paid out in passage grants during the six-year period the amount of $1,814,891.40. That is a much smaller amount than the $1,000,000 per year which some members seem to think this country is paying out.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Would not the minister classify the grant to the provinces as assisted immigration, just the same as this item?

Mr. FORKE: They are not the same.

Mr. CAMPBELL: You do not consider that grant as assisted immigration at all?

Mr. FORKE: You mean the $10 we pay for every boy which the province brings out?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the minister has missed my point.

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. FORKE: You mean the $50,000 we are paying?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. FORKE: I think that is a different thing altogether; that is entirely a Canadian arrangement and the British government does not come into it at all. We can step out or continue that arrangement just as we see fit. It is an agreement which we have made, open to every province in the Dominion, that the Dominion government will pay 50 per cent of the cost of the repatriation work carried on by the respective provinces.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not object to the amount at all, but I am saying that if there are objections to this $1,000,000 vote, then the same objections would apply to the $50,000, and my hon. friends raised no objection to that.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that $5,000,000 spent by the imperial government expended by the land settlement board?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that expended for the purpose of acquiring land?

Mr. FORKE: No, it is for stock and implements. This is the $1,500 which is loaned under the three thousand family scheme, and it is recoverable.

Mr. GARDINER: The different amounts the minister gave totalled $18,000,000.

Mr. FORKE: No, $9,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: That is for loans, passage money and so forth. The three items he gave, come to $18,000,000.

Mr. FORKE: No, there must be a mistake somewhere.

Mr. GARDINER: I am speaking now of the money spent by the imperial government.

Mr. FORKE: The imperial government has spent on loans and passage grants $4,105,977.43, and on loans, land grants, $5,000,000, making a total of $9,105,977.43.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood the minister gave an item of $9,000,000 for cash advances.

Mr. FORKE: No, that is the total amount.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give any information as to the total value of land used by his department for the purpose of settling British settlers under the British land settlement scheme?

Mr. FORKE: I think we can get that better when the soldier settlement and land settlement estimates come up. These lands have all been revalued and sold to British settlers on twenty-five-year amortized annual payments.

Mr. GARDINER: It does not come under the empire settlement scheme at all?

Mr. FORKE: It is part of the empire settlement scheme. We provide the funds.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has not the information until we come to the soldier settlement estimates?

Mr. FORKE: It would be more convenient to get it at that time. I will try to arrange to have it.

Mr. GOTT: Although I have no intention of supporting the amendment, yet I think possibly not the Minister of Immigration, because he may not be here another year, but the department should take heed and discontinue a great deal of the unnecessary expense it is incurring in the United States. In Boston, Columbus, Chicago, Detroit, Fargo, Great Falls, Harrisburg, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Manchester, Omaha, Saginaw, St. Paul, Spokane, Syracuse, San Francisco, Woonsocket—in all these places immigration offices are maintained. I doubt whether there is any business for a number of these immigration offices.

Mr. FORKE: I went over these item by item and mentioned all the business done at these offices. If hon. members are not in the house, it is pretty hard to have to go over them the second time.

Mr. GOTT: I notice the minister was not in touch with the situation at the border or at the Detroit office. I would suggest that the Detroit office be moved to Windsor, because that business could be taken care of at Windsor just as well as at Detroit.

Mr. FORKE: That has all been discussed with hon. members on my hon. friend's side of the house.

Mr. GOTT: If the minister is not more closely in touch with the other offices in the United States than he is with the Detroit office, he should not discuss any of them, I notice some huge expenditures in maintaining offices in the United States. In one there are four clerks and in most of them there are one or two clerks and an immigration agent drawing $3,120 a year. Stenographers are maintained; in several offices there is only one, indicating that there is very little work to be done, and I believe several of these offices could be closed without any loss to the Dominion. In view of the opinions that have been expressed to-night, the department should take heed and reduce these huge expenditures for maintaining offices in the United States.

Mr. FORKE: There is only one thing I want to say: I know the hon. member will be very sorry if I am not here next year as head of the Immigration department.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the hon. gentleman is going.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like the minister to give the committee some further information with regard to the $532,000 paid out for passage grants. How many people came in under this item?

Mr. FORKE: There is a little difference in the two numbers, owing to the conditions under which they came in. The Canadian statement is 89,321 and the imperial government's is 87,284, a difference of about 2,000. The difference arises in the way some passage grants are paid. Actually 89,321 people came in.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is just one question I should like to ask in connection with this vote and the amendment. I believe my views are pretty well known; at least, I endeavour to express them clearly. Am I correct in assuming that the larger part of this vote is already under commitment; that is, to fulfil commitments, either legal or moral, with the British government and other organizations, and that this money now is practically morally due; that is, that commitments have been entered into covering almost the full extent of the money, which commitments will not be discharged until the end of the present year?

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member is quite correct. The people are coming in now and getting their passage money at reduced rates under this agreement. I do not think we can do anything but leave the estimate as it is for the present year.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is what I think. A notice of motion as to a future year's policy might be quite in order, but I feel strongly on the question of the commitments we have entered into and I would hesitate very much before refusing to vote for money which we are almost bound in honour to pay, unless we are prepared to cancel the commitments we have made.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the minister give us the items in regard to assisted passages?

Mr. FORKE: We have an estimate of $1,000,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But that covers several schemes. How much is for assisted passages?

Mr. FORKE: That will depend largely on the movement.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How much was it last year?

Mr. FORKE: $634,000.

Mr. NEILL: I notice the empire settlement scheme has about run out. When will it finally cease?

Mr. FORKE: The end of the present year.

Mr. NEILL: This calendar year?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: How is the three thousand family scheme working out?

Mr. FORKE: That will be better answered under the land settlement estimates.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the minister be satisfied if the amendment were carried?

Mr. FORKE: I certainly would not.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister tell the committee just how much we are indebted to the British government? Personally I should like to support the amendment before the committee, but I wish to know the actual extent of our commitments, because we cannot break our pledge if we are committed.

Mr. FORKE: We have been carrying on since the month of January under the present year's estimates and we will carry on until the 31st December of this year. The amount will depend entirely upon the number of immigrants who come out under the assisted passage scheme.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister been approached as to any extension of this agreement?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think so.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any possibility of the minister entering into another such agreement?

Mr. FORKE: I am not going to promise ahead. I have listened to what has been said in the committee to-night, but I am not going to make any promise.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister consult the house before making a further agreement?

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. FORKE: If the house was in session I would certainly consult it, but I might be called upon to take the responsibility when the house was not in session. It would be a matter for the government, not the minister, to decide. The minister, of course, has power to enter into an agreement, but from what I have learned and from what I have heard in the house to-night I would not be prepared to enter into any agreement with the British government unless it was an arrangement made with the Canadian government as such.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has evidently heard the opinions that have been expressed here to-night. Before voting on this item I would like some definite information from him. Will he promise to consult the House of Commons before entering into an agreement similar to the one he now has?

Mr. FORKE: If the house is in session it can be done at the time. The hon. member knows my private opinion about this, and I do not think I should be called upon to make a statement as to what I am likely to do twelve months hence. I think the hon. gentleman should be content with that answer. He is asking me to commit myself when I do not know what the circumstances will be in the future.

Mr. SPENCER: When was this arrangement entered into?

Mr. FORKE: In 1923.

Mr. SPENCER: The reason I ask is this: If the minister intends to make a new arrangement, is he going to make it for one year or for six years, in view of the feeling of the house on this matter?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think it is fair for hon. gentlemen to seek to commit me as to what I shall do twelve months hence. I am responsible for what is taking place at the present time, and I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I attempted to say now what I shall do twelve months hence. I do not know what the circumstances will be then.

Mr. GARDINER: Would it be asking too much to ask the minister to consult this house before entering into another agreement?

Mr. FORKE: I believe in parliamentary government wherever possible.

Mr. NEILL: I find myself in a good deal of accord with the remarks of the two hon. gentlemen directly opposite. Apparently this is about the first time that some of the more remote members of the house have had a chance to express themselves on this immigration policy, and it is easy to see from the remarks that have been made that hon. gentlemen do not stand for a largely assisted immigration policy. I do not want to embarrass the government if they have made commitments that we must in good faith keep, but I entirely agree with the leader of the Progressive party that we are entitled to some statement, if we vote this money, as to whether we will be consulted before a similar policy is inaugurated in the future. The minister says that we must in good faith pass this estimate, but he can make the same remark next year or the year after. What I would suggest—I do not want to be put in the position of bartering with the government at all—would be that, if we pass this vote to relieve the government of the unpleasant position of having made commitments and not being able to fulfill them, which we do not want to see, he will very seriously consider the feeling that has been exhibited here to-night and will consult this house before he goes into any extensive system of assisted immigration in the future. Speaking for my district, I have consistently opposed it and I know that that is the feeling of the people I represent. I came out in the steerage myself, unassisted, and nobody hand-fed or pap-fed me when I got here, I am quite willing that other people should have similar opportunities.

Amendment (Mr. Cahill) negatived.

Item agreed to.

Chinese immigration—salaries and contingencies, $70,000.

Mr. BARBER: I suggest that this item stand because there are several members who wish to discuss it.

Item stands.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We should like to take up a railway item.

Mr. BENNETT: You can only take supply for a department with respect to which the motion to leave the chair was made.

Mr. LAPOINTE: On Thursday and Friday—

Mr. BENNETT: Thursday and Friday, automatically.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But to-day we can take any department.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not any department. You cannot go into supply for any department without a motion previously made.

Mr. DUNNING: The motion is general, and the estimates of any department can be taken up.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think so.

1. The creditors at their first meeting may choose any person, except the official receiver, as authorized trustee.
2. Yes.

3. The trustee is subject to the supervision of the court and is required to deposit with the court a bond of an approved guarantee company in connection with each estate, satisfactory to the court, conditioned for the proper administration of the estate.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 312, to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill was framed for the purpose of obviating a difficulty which might arise upon the retirement of Mr. Justice Mignault which is to take place on September 30 next, under the provisions of an act which was passed by this house a few sessions ago, making retirement compulsory at the age of 75 years. I wish simply to express my personal opinion that despite the general grounds presented to the house when the act for compulsory retirement was passed, probably no man on the supreme court bench of Canada is better qualified, physically and intellectually, to perform the functions of his office than is Mr. Justice Mignault. Personally, I think it is a public misfortune that his compulsory retirement is necessary at this time, and I desire to give expression to a view which I have heard expressed in the province of which I have the honour to be one of the representatives, to this effect: In case a judge has been appointed for life it is a serious breach of contract when that judge is compelled to retire at an age and at a time when he is thoroughly equipped, physically and intellectually, for the performance of his judicial duties, and especially in view of the fact that his compulsory retirement necessitates his taking a pension which is very considerably less than the salary which would otherwise be paid to him under his contract with the state. I am simply giving expression to a view which I think is generally prevalent among the legal fraternity in my province, that in Mr. Justice Mignault's case there should be some exceptional consideration given by the government to the fact that he is retired by an act of parliament which is in apparent breach of his contract with the state, and he is thereby compelled to accept a pension which is much less than he would otherwise have received, and at a time when he is physically and intellectually competent to perform his judicial duties.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of course, this bill is general in its character and does not apply to any special case. With regard to the act passed two years ago, parliament in its wisdom thought it well to fix an age limit so far as federal courts were concerned. If the hon. member was aware of the representations which are coming to the Department of Justice at the present time concerning the other courts in Canada, perhaps he would admit that the provision is a sound one. However, I fully concur in the tribute which he has paid to the particular gentleman he has referred to.

This bill covers not only the case of a judge who has retired after having reached the age of 75, but of a judge who has resigned. Section 27 of the act reads:

> Any judge who has heard the case and is absent at the delivery of judgment, may hand his opinion in writing to any judge present at the delivery of judgment, to be read or announced in open court, and then to be left with the registrar or reporter of the court.

The purpose of this bill is to allow a judge who has resigned his office, or who has been retired after having reached the age of 75, to be considered absent, within the meaning of this section, for a period of six months, so that he can give his opinion to any judge who may be present when the judgment is delivered.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I propose to call attention to one point made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), and direct the attention of the house to the fact that when the legislation was passed which compelled the retirement of a judge of the supreme court at the age of 75, the Minister of Justice was good enough to say that he would consider the matter before the event happened which would necessitate the retirement of the judge in question, especially as it affected his compensation. That judge undoubtedly has a contract with the state which entitles him to receive a salary for life or until such time as he resigns. New legislation has been enacted which limits his employment by the state merely because he has attained a given age without regard given to any consideration which he may urge. I think the government would be well advised to consider whether or not, in all cases of this kind where a contract has thus been amended, the judge should receive full salary. There are half a dozen cases which will be affected because I think there have been only two appointments made since the legislation in question was enacted. Undoubtedly one of the terms of these contracts governing new appointments is that they are subject to retirement at the age of 75 with the consequent pension which they will draw by reason of the services rendered up to the time of retirement. It may seem rather strange that attention should be directed to the matter in this way, but when a servant of the state, whether judicial or otherwise, has a contract with the state and we impose a new term in that contract, I think we must have regard to the terms and conditions under which the original contract was made. Although it may seem out of the ordinary that a judge should draw full salary when he is retired compulsorily, nevertheless, good faith and good morals, in my judgment, impose upon us that obligation and it is an obligation which we should not lightly disregard. I pointed that fact out to the minister when the other bill was under consideration, and when he speaks of parliament in its wisdom adopting that bill it must always be remembered that the wisdom of parliament consists of the majority of parliament. I do not believe that the Canadian people would approve of our departing from the general principle that the government must as in times past have respect for the sanctity of a contract made between a servant and the crown when he entered the employment of the state.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I had a resolution upon the order paper two years ago compelling the retirement of all judges, but the Minister of Justice rather forestalled me, and promised at that time that he would take the matter up with the provinces. I would like to ask the minister if he ever did that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If I am allowed to answer my hon. friend, I may say that the matter was called to the attention of the interprovincial federal conference last year. Though several of the provincial representatives were in favour of some such change as that suggested by my friend some of the provinces were not ready to acquiesce in the demand, and of course, we cannot do anything as far as the high courts of the provinces are concerned without changing the British North America Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Chinese immigration—salaries and contingencies, $70,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to ask my hon. friend for a statement on one matter. It will be observed that in the reports issued from time to time by the department certain newcomers are within what is known as the "preferred class," and others marked as "other countries." I can find nothing in the statute that warrants this distinction being made, and I gathered from what the minister said the other day that it was an arbitrary division. I am quite certain that there are settlers of a type within the class coming from other countries who have quite as much claim to be within the preferred class as those that are there now, and if the minister will give us some explanation to be placed upon Hansard it will help to answer many questions that are received, and at the same time, I think, settle a problem of some difficulty in the minds of many people.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): There has been made a rather arbitrary division of countries on the continent of Europe from which immigrants may come. I will mention the first class of countries in Europe. The regulations governing the entry to Canada of European immigrants may be summarized as follows:

Northern European countries: France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Germany.

Immigrants from the above countries are eligible for entry to Canada provided that they

(a) are in possession of valid passports;
(b) can pass medical inspection; and
(c) can maintain themselves until employment is secured.

That deals with countries of northern Europe. Then the other European countries covered by the railway agreement are as follows:—Austria, Hungary, Poland, Roumania, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia, Bulgaria, Jugo-Slavia, Czechoslovakia. The only immigrants who are admitted from the countries covered by the railway agreement are:

(a) Farmers;
(b) Farm labourers who have a reasonable assurance of employment on the land;
(c) Houseworkers;
(d) The wife or child under 18 years of age of any person legally admitted to and resident in Canada who is in a position to receive and care for his dependents.
(e) Persons who satisfy the minister that their labour or service is required in Canada.

I do not know whether I should attempt to read the railway agreement or not. It is quite a lengthy document. Perhaps I can summarize it in a few words.

Mr. BENNETT: That is satisfactory to me.

An hon. MEMBER: Are you putting it on Hansard?

Mr. FORKE: I can put it on Hansard.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was that agreement authorized by regulation of the department, or by order in council?

Mr. FORKE: By regulation of the department; it is an agreement between the Department of Immigration and the railway companies.

Mr. BENNETT: Approved by order in council, I think.

Mr. FORKE: Probably it was. I think it was entered into in 1922. It was during the time that Mr. Robb was the Minister of Immigration. It was felt some move should be made to stimulate immigration, and this agreement was entered into between the Department of Immigration and the railway companies with that end in view. The purpose of the agreement was to encourage the movement of agriculturists, agricultural workers and domestic servants. They were to be healthy people of the labouring class, fit to care for themselves when they came to this country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who determined the countries that were to be preferred or non-preferred?

Mr. FORKE: The Department of Immigration.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And was that approved by order in council?

Mr. FORKE: I think it was. Of course, that was in 1922.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister be sure on that point, and let us have a copy of the order in council?

Mr. FORKE: The whole agreement is here. I will put it on Hansard if necessary. I do not desire to waste the time of the house.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not wasting the time of the house.

Mr. FORKE: That was carried on quite successfully until—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is simply impossible to hear at this end of the house.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: There is so much conversation going on in the house that it is almost impossible to hear the minister at this distance.

Mr. FORKE: This was carried on quite satisfactorily until the spring of 1927, when perhaps the transportation companies got a little too enthusiastic and recruited a very large number of immigrants. It was a late spring. The snow lay long on the ground in western Canada, and there were quite a large number of immigrants arriving in Canada for whom there were no work for several months. I was absent in Europe at the time, but the cabinet issued an order stopping immigration for the time being. There was no complaint from the railway companies. Some hardship was experienced, however, by the people in Europe who had been recruited and were ready to sail when that order was issued. It was, however, better for them to stay in their own country than to come over to Canada and wait here for weeks until employment could be found for them.

After that I had a meeting with the colonization departments of the railway companies and discussed the whole situation. I had inserted in the railway agreement a clause to which they were quite agreeable to subscribe, providing that at any time should the Minister of Immigration think sufficient numbers were arriving in Canada, he could, after giving notice, ask the railway companies to stop bringing in immigrants. As most of the members are aware, we had a meeting, I think last fall or in any case, during the winter, to discuss the whole immigration problem. After discussing the matter with the colonization departments of the railways, I came to the conclusion that if they were to bring out the same number of farm labourers they brought out the previous year, we would have a surplus. They asked me at that time the percentage I would like to have come, and stated they would be quite satisfied. After investigation and after consulting with the provincial governments, I came to the conclusion that about 30 per cent of the number of single farm labourers who came from Europe last year would be sufficient to meet the needs of the country this year. Later on, there came from the transportation companies some protests, but they were not serious. The two presidents signed a letter which was published in the newspapers, condemning my action.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister thinks that was not very serious?

Mr. FORKE: I think subsequent events have provided that I was in the right, and I did not feel very much hurt about what the presidents did, nor do I think they felt badly about what I did. No harm was done to anybody in regard to that.

There was no thought in the mind of the department that one country was preferred before another, but the railway companies were not recruiting in northern Europe. Anyone coming from the first list of countries I have mentioned in northern Europe, came upon their own; no recruiting was being done there, and in this respect the so-called non-preferred countries were perhaps in a superior position because recruiting was really being carried on in them for immigrants. I think I have made that plain. I will repeat: I have no idea of inferior or superior people. The people from Austria or Czechoslovakia are just as good as any others, and it was not with any idea of inferiority or superiority that these regulations were framed.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has the minister ever considered landing by ship on the Pacific coast immigrants who intend to live in British Columbia, instead of, as is done at present, landing them at Atlantic ports and taking them by rail across the continent? I am told that there are running from northern Europe lines of ships which would be prepared to go in for this class of business. These ships would be of the tramp class, freighters, but provision could be made for carrying passengers as the ships usually come out fairly light. Then the ships would be available for transporting our products from the Pacific coast back to the old country. I am informed that proposals of that kind have been made to boards of trade, and so on. I do not know whether the matter has ever been put before the minister or not, but I would suggest to him that it is worthy of consideration. I am speaking about immigrants who intend to go to British Columbia and the western part of Canada who might more easily approach their destination via the Pacific than via the Atlantic.

Mr. FORKE: The transportation of immigrants from the continent of Europe is entirely in the hands of the two transportation companies who recruit those immigrants from those countries I have mentioned, commonly called the non-preferred countries. The Department of Immigration takes no part whatever in regard to ocean passages or railway rates. I have never thought of the matter in the way in which the hon. member presents it. I do not know whether it would come under the jurisdiction of the department to say how immigrants should come. I will, however, keep the matter in mind.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I was referring to what might be called the preferred class, although I do not know exactly the definition of that class. I was referring to the people of northern Europe. It seems to me that the department should be interested in a matter of that kind. If it is possible to arrange a cheaper and more convenient passage for people who come to this country, the minister should be interested; he should not leave it entirely to the transportation companies. There is too much of the transportation companies running the immigration to this country. I should like to see the department taking an intelligent interest in the matter and certainly the proposition that I have put forward should come within the scope of the department. The minister can sit back and say: I do not know anything about it; that is not a matter for me; it is a matter for the transportation companies. But that is not good enough, and I would suggest to him that he should really look into the matter.

Mr. FORKE: I shall be glad to look into it, but when an immigrant is leaving the old country or northern Europe, he buys his own ticket and arranges for his own transportation. I am quite willing to answer any questions. I do not want to be discourteous and I promised the leader of the opposition yesterday I would give him the information I have given, but I would remind the house that we are dealing with the estimates for Chinese immigration. I do not want to be discourteous in connection with any question that is asked.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister a moment ago referred to the fact that he had reduced the number of farm employees or people that were going into farming to 30 per cent. In respect to the agreement with the transportation companies, is there anything reduced to writing? Is there anything in it beyond what the minister has stated?

Mr. FORKE: We have it in letters exchanged between the presidents of the two railway companies and myself whereby an agreement was reached.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has that been reduced to an agreement, or is it merely an understanding?

Mr. FORKE: I think the president of either of the railways has confidence in the minister.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not care about the presidents; I am speaking now as a member of parliament, and I want to know something about this agreement.

Mr. FORKE: The presidents of the railways have my letter stating my terms, and I have their letters stating theirs. That is in addition to the original agreement, which is signed by the heads of the colonization departments of the two railways.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister tells the committee that he practically washes his hands of a certain affair. The minister says: Why, the transportation companies have everything to do with this.

Mr. FORKE: I did not say so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Well, Hansard will show what the minister said.

Mr. FORKE: Well, we shall see.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister said in effect that he had nothing to do with the matter; that it was being looked after by the transportation companies, and that the people bought their tickets and came to this country on their own.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On this question of trusting so much to the railways—

Mr. FORKE: I want to appeal to the committee. I have had about two days of this discussion and have got the estimates passed. We are now dealing with Chinese immigration. If the committee wants to discuss the other estimates all over again, that is all right.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister is to blame for this. He brought the matter up.

Mr. FORKE: I did so in response to a question asked by the leader of the opposition yesterday. As a matter of courtesy I was quite willing and ready to give him the information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely the understanding was that we would be able to discuss the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to refer to one matter, if I may, now that the discussion has gone this far. I want to quote a paragraph from the Free Press of January 11, 1929:

> The defect in the arrangement arose from the fact that a double interest entered into the activities of the railways. There was the permanent interest of Canada, which was general and remote; and there was the immediate and special interest of getting third-class passengers for the ships that were owned or controlled by the railways. There was thus an obvious incentive to employ up-to-date methods of salesmanship with the eye concentrated pretty much upon the early payment of passage money. This was supposed to be guarded against by regulations, which put upon the railways the obligation of placing these immigrants and looking after them for a period of time. There is a good deal of evidence available that, although things have been better the last year, the railways put an interpretation upon these obligations which did not interefere to any serious extent with the business of selling tickets. To drop an immigrant down in a district where there was a reasonable presumption that his services would be in demand, or to place him in employment, temporary in character, were regarded as filling, roughly, the requirements of the agreement.

I would say that the railways have not only a very immediate interest, twofold in character, that of generally extending the welfare of Canada and, incidentally, of increasing their own dividends and secondly, of being able to sell tickets, but they have a third interest, and that is that very often the railways have used the immigration agencies to supply them with cheap labour for their own construction work. It does seem to me that corporations which are thus so vitally interested ought not to be allowed any special consideration.

The minister speaks of recruiting immigrants. That is the very thing to which many of us object—recruiting immigrants, bringing them in here for certain purposes.

Mr. FORKE: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I should not have to go over all my estimates again. This vote has been passed, but if the committee consents I am willing to hear the hon. gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN: Strictly speaking, the hon. gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggested that as the discussion had gone so far there was a point that I wished to add, but if the minister refuses to permit me—

Mr. FORKE: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member was not in his place when this matter was being discussed, and why should I have to go over the whole thing again because he happens to come in this morning?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was in my place when the matter was being discussed. The question was raised, and I wanted to emphasize one particular point in connection with it, but if the minister declines to permit this, I shall have to take another opportunity.

Mr. FORKE: It is for the committee to decide.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister promised me some information. I do not suppose that we are precluded from discussion simply because the item has been passed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wanted to point out that we talk about recruiting immigrants, and it does seem to me that we are often oblivious to the welfare of the people who are already here. I would like to see some greater coordination between the Department of Labour and the Department of Immigration. In fact, so far as I am concerned, it seems to me that if we need immigrants the Department of Immigration should be made part of the Department of Labour so that we would bring in men only as they are actually needed, and only in so far as their coming will not interfere with the welfare of the people already here.

The minister says that he does not discriminate against any particular class, but that he encouraged immigration from northern Europe. I would suggest that whether they come from southeastern Europe or northern Europe, or from England itself, very often their coming here decidedly interferes with the welfare of the people who are already resident in Canada.

I want to trespass on the patience of the house to read a paragraph or so from a letter that I received a little while ago from a labour man which is typical of scores of letters that I have received in the past.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman wants to speak for another forty minutes on an item that has already been passed. He takes up a good deal of the time of the house as it is, and even asks his colleagues to appear for him in the house when he cannot appear himself. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that you give your ruling on the point of order now.

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to support the objection just taken by my hon. friend opposite. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that he wanted to ask a question, and then—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I said nothing about asking a question.

Mr. MacLAREN: He now proposes to read letters. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that he is entirely out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I ruled a few moments ago that the remarks of the hon. gentleman did not pertain to the item now before the committee. The item my hon. friend is discussing was passed yesterday, and his remarks are not relevant to the item now under discussion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understood that the minister gave permission. I ask the minister if he will permit me to go on.

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out that the committee has to be considered, not the minister alone. If the committee decides to hear the hon. gentleman, very well.

Mr. McGIBBON: Can the minister now give me the information that he promised yesterday?

Mr. FORKE: I have the address of the Toronto hostel here.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister promised to give me the objections that had come from provincial governments and different societies against the admission of Barnardo children.

Mr. FORKE: That information is being prepared, and I will see that my hon. friend gets it as soon as it is ready.

Mr. McGIBBON: I say again, Mr. Chairman, that it is discourteous to this house for the minister to come here and not know the ABC of his department. We have to wait days and days for information that he ought to be able to give offhand.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to ask why this vote that we are supposed to be discussing, and relating to Chinese immigration, has been increased. The increase is $5,000 only, but the amount was pretty high to begin with, and it was increased last year also. I would point out that about five years ago we passed an act practically excluding all Chinese immigration, and the only Chinese immigration allowed now is of transients, people who are coming here temporarily, such as nurses, missionaries and so forth. Very few of them come in and they can stay under their permit for only a few months. I do not suppose that on an average more than sixty or seventy enter in a year. Moreover, if my memory serves me, that immigration is limited to only two ports in Canada. Consequently the handling of this Chinese immigration is very simple, and one would suppose that the cost would not be much. Yet we find here a vote for $70,000 for Chinese immigration, or something like $1,000 for each temporary immigrant admitted. I would like to know the reason for the increase in this vote, and whether we should not rather be moving in the opposite direction and be decreasing the expenditure.

Mr. FORKE: Salary increases account for a part of the increase. I will read the different items, and the hon. gentleman can draw his own conclusions. This amount is required to provide for the salaries and expenses of the officers and employees engaged in connection with Chinese immigration and the administration of the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act. The salaries amount to $41,485. The other items are:

(2) Travelling expenses of officers doing Chinese investigation work and inspection of boats carrying Chinese crew; expenses of prosecution and deportation of Chinese other than those dealt with under the Opium and Narcotics Drug Act, printing and stationery; uniforms; telegrams; telephones, cablegrams, etc., $12,800.

(3) Hong Kong office contingencies, $4,200.

Living expenses of D. F. Warren, $2,000; office rent, $1,500; travelling expenses, $200; printing and stationery, $150; cables, postage, light, $250; miscellaneous office expenses, $100—total, $4,200.

(4) Expenses under the Opium and Narcotics Drug Act, including legal and deportation expenses, etc., $11,515.

Total Chinese immigration salaries and expenses, $70,000.

For fiscal year 1927-1928 the expenses were: Chinese immigration expenses proper, $50,781.54; Opium and Narcotics Drug Act expenses, $10,456.43—total $61,237.97.

The net expenses for the 8 months ended November 30, 1928, are:—

Chinese immigration salaries and contingencies, $38,923.76; Opium and Narcotics Drug Act, $7,710.07—total $46,633.83.

Estimated Chinese immigration expenditure for 1929-1930 based on the eight months of the fiscal year 1928-1929 ended November 30, 1928 —$69,950.

Mr. NEILL: May I interrupt the minister. That is as good an answer as I could receive; a lot of money is spent in enforcing the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. This, of course, is a most worthy cause, but why mix it up with Chinese immigration?

Mr. FORKE: Because the immigration authorities automatically take charge of anyone convicted under that act. The moment he is convicted he comes under the control of the department and we may have to fight the case in court.

I have here a lengthy statement with regard to the operations of the Chinese Immigration Act and perhaps I had better read it. I think the hon. member for Fraser Valley—

Mr. FRASER: Cariboo.

Mr. FORKE: Cariboo, rather—wanted this information:

Section 5, subsection (c), of the Chinese Immigration Act provides for the landing in Canada of only two classes of immigrants of Chinese origin or descent, namely, merchants and students. Such immigrants must be in possession of valid passports issued by the government of China and endorsed by a Canadian immigration officer at the place where passport was granted or at the port of embarkation. Thus the law makes it necessary for this department to have a representative in China to investigate applications for these two classes and to grant or refuse the visa called for by the section in question.

Officials Employed at Hong Kong.

Name—Position—Salary—

Mr. D. F. Warren— Commissioner of Immigation for Canada.—$4,200 per annum, plus $2,000 living allowance.

Miss R. Judah—Stenographer—$3,120 Max. (About $1,560 Gold at present rate of exchange.)

Li Kam Hi—Messenger—$660 Max. per annum. (About $330. Gold.)

Duties of Hong Kong Official.

1. To investigate all applications for visas made in accordance with subsection (c) of section 5 of the Chinese Immigration Act.

In the case of merchants this necessitates investigation of the firm in China to which applicant belongs to establish if applicant has sufficient capital investment and is connected with class of business such as would warrant classifying him as merchant within meaning of the act. (Merchant means a person devoting his undivided attention to mercantile pursuits, who has $2,500 gold or more invested in a business dealing exclusively in goods grown, produced or manufactured in China, or in exporting to China goods grown, produced or manufactured in Canada, and who has conducted such business for a period of at least three years. Restaurant keepers, laundry owners, rooming-house proprietors are not considered merchants.)

In the cases of students, our officer investigates their educational status and financial standing in order to establish if qualified to enter a Canadian university and if sufficient funds are forthcoming to permit studying in such university without working in Canada during period of study.

2. To check up vessels arriving from Canadian ports and identify Chinese deports for the purpose of establishing that they have really left Canada.

3. To examine Chinese persons returning to Canada under outward registration (sections 23 and 24) for the purpose of establishing that after registration persons actually left Canada, and, further, are returning within the two year period as limited by statute.

4. Passing on doubtful cases of other nationalities referred to the office by consular and other officials and by transportation companies.

Note.—Duties referred to in Nos. 2 and 3 are precautionary measures performed by our office owing to the fact that he is at Hong Kong, and are considered further safeguards in the general operation of the law.

Effect of having officer at Hong Kong.

1. Prevents all inadmissible cases coming forward to Canadian ports of entry with resultant costly investigations, examinations and attempts to secure landing by court proceedings.

2. Additional protection against fraud in returning registered Chinese.

3. Lessening of number of applications at Pacific Coast ports of other nationals not admissible under Immigration regulations.

Registration (Section 18 Chinese Immigration Act, 1923).

The law required every person of Chinese origin or descent in Canada to register within twelve months after June 30th, 1923, and further provided that persons who were absent from Canada during this period and who had the right to return under the law might be registered on their return.

Number of registrations to date total approximately—55,706. (1921 census 39,587 Chinese). Of this number 48,305 were males, 1,302 females and 6,099 children under 18 years of age, distributed as follows:—

British Columbia	31,116
Alberta	4,657
Saskatchewan	3,961
Manitoba	2,146
Ontario	9,377
Quebec	3,753
New Brunswick	270
Nova Scotia	404
Prince Edward Island	19
Not specified	3
	55,706

Result of Registration.

1. Establishing actual number of Chinese in Canada.

2. Establishing number illegally in Canada. So far 36 actual cases discovered where deportation effected; several other cases under investigation. Will probably be more when records completed.

3. The location of 624 Chinese who secured entry as merchants previous to amending of the old Chinese act in 1921 and who on investigation were found not to be of the merchant class. Head tax of $500.00 each was collected in these cases under authority of Section 27 of the Chinese Immigration Act; revenue in this connection $312,000.00.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How long has this office been open at Hong Kong?

Mr. FORKE: Since 1923.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Since we have restricted immigration what is the sense of going to the expense of opening an office at Hong Kong? The minister intimated that the reason was to make it easier for us to prevent undesirables from entering this country, but if that is true why pick on Hong Kong? There are other cities such as Canton, Amoy and Shanghai which are just as large and from which just as many people come. This is just another case of extravagance.

Mr. FORKE: I think that is the only place from which they can sail.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You might as well cut it out altogether.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): May I ask how much money was spent for immigration in Nova Scotia during the last year?

Mr. FORKE: I will be glad to supply my hon. friend with that information. Those items were passed yesterday and I have left all my papers at the office. However, I will be glad to obtain that information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I would remind the minister that Nova Scotia is a farming country, and we would be delighted to have a number of families located on the farms in the province, which farms can be purchased for less than the cost of the buildings. Has anyone been sent by the department to look into that situation and ascertain what could be done to place people on those farms?

Mr. FORKE: I am glad to inform the hon. member that the department has made a complete survey of the whole province, and the chances of settlement there are very good. We are now in negotiation with the Nova Scotia government with regard to a scheme similar to that in force in New Brunswick; negotiations are now in process and I think everything is moving favourably.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I am glad to get that information. May I have a copy of the report?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to ask the minister a question in regard to Chinese immigration. The other day I made a few remarks in regard to the immigration question generally, and when I referred to this very situation the minister justified the expenditure for the Hong Kong office by virtue of the fact that he collected a certain amount in fees for visas. I understood the minister to say a moment ago that he collected only about $30 in fees of this kind. Am I correct?

Mr. FORKE: No, we collected $60, but if the hon. member will allow me to say so, I do not think that was the reason I gave. The act compels us to have an office there for that purpose.

Mr. FRASER: I understood the minister to say that only $30 was collected by way of visa fees in Hong Kong.

Mr. FORKE: No, we collected $60.

Mr. FRASER: That is the total of all the fees collected there?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: You collect other fees at the Hong Kong office, do you not?

Mr. FORKE: No, I do not think anything more is collected there.

Mr. FRASER: Then let me ask a general question. How much money does the Department of Immigration collect during the year? How much revenue do you turn in yearly?

Mr. FORKE: I just gave those figures not five minutes ago; $30,795.

Mr. FRASER: You have responsible officials who collect that revenue, and I would like to ask the minister if the government is protected with regard to the funds collected by these officials, by means of guarantee bonds. Are your officials bonded?

Mr. FORKE: My deputy informs me that they are all bonded.

Mr. FRASER: Under what system?

Mr. FORKE: The bonds of the guarantee companies; those are the only bonds we take.

Mr. FRASER: Do you know how much money you pay in a year for that purpose?

Mr. FORKE: I cannot say exactly, but my deputy informs me that it is a very small sum.

Mr. FRASER: Some time ago I put a question on the order paper in this connection, and I would like to read that question and answer as the basis for another question:

> How much of the consolidated revenue has been paid by each of the departments of the government as premiums on security bonds of its employees, in contravention of the Public Officers Act, R.S., chapter 164, section 5?

The answer from the Department of Immigration and Colonization is as follows:

> This department has paid $1,963.75 on account of guarantee bonds for its employees since the organization of the department on April 1, 1918.

What puzzles me is this: Under what authority do you pay for these bonds?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know whether there is anything in the act to prevent us from doing so if we wish. I cannot give the exact authority under which these payments are made but I do not think it is against any provision of the act.

Mr. FRASER: Very well. To continue, I will read from the Auditor General's report for the year ending March 31, 1928. At the bottom of page XIII I find the following:

Bonding of Government Officials

The Public Officers Act (R.S., chapter 164):

(1) Designates the classes of officials required to furnish security bonds (section 5);

(2) Authorize the governor general in council to direct that, in cases where the policy of a guarantee company is accepted, the amount of the premium be deducted from the salary of the official (section 29);

Is that the practice in your department? Do you deduct the premium from the salary of the official?

Mr. FORKE: No, I do not think so.

Mr. FRASER: The report continues:

(3) Authorizes the governor general in council to make regulations for the establishment and maintenance of a fund derived from contributions by the officers concerned (section 30).

Is there any such fund in your department?

Mr. FORKE: No, but I think I might answer all these questions by saying that I think we have authority under the Immigration Act to pay all expenses incurred in the administration of the act, so I do not think there is anything to prevent us from paying the premiums on these bonds if we wish to do so.

Mr. FRASER: I am a little puzzled as to the whole procedure. I want the minister to understand that my criticism is not specially directed to his department; I have the same criticism to offer in connection with perhaps a dozen of the departments, but I want to find out from the minister just what procedure has been adopted. As far as I am concerned I am very doubtful as to whether there is any statutory authority for these payments. At any rate, the report proceeds:

From the last two sections referred to, it seems a reasonable inference that the cost of the bonds should be borne by the officials and not by the government. With but a few exceptions, however, the premiums are paid from pubic moneys and, so far as I have been able to determine, only in the case of one branch of the service is any part of the premiums repaid by the officials. In the cases of two departments there is parliamentary authority for paying the premiums from public moneys, in some departments the payments have been authorized by the governor in council, but in a number of departments they appear to be made merely on departmental authority. Under the authority of the Post Office Act a guarantee fund, such as is contemplated by section 30 of the Public Officers Act, has been maintained in that department for a number of years and has accumulated to such an extent that no contributions by officials have been required since April 1, 1919.

[Mr. Forke.]

That system has been inaugurated in the Post Office Department and now that fund takes care of all the premiums. The last paragraph dealing with this matter is as follows:

On account of the lack of uniformity in the practice and in the application of the above provisions of the act, I would suggest that consideration be given to the advisability of an amendment which would dispel any doubts as to the interpretation of these sections by stating definitely whether these payments should be made from public moneys or should be borne by the bonded officials.

I would like to ask the minister what consideration he has given to that recommendation?

Mr. ROBB: Before my colleague answers I might just say, respecting the quotation read by the hon. gentleman as to the Post Office Department meeting these payments from a fund, that the Post Office Department does nothing of the kind; that fund is used at times by the Post Office Department to pay into the treasury the amount of any losses. My opinion is that it would be much better for the service if the fund were used to pay the premiums on guarantee bonds.

Mr. FRASER: I am very glad to hear that expression of opinion by the Minister of Finance. My object in calling the attention of the department to this matter was to see if some improvement could not be made, because as far as I can see there is no coordination between the different departments with regard to this matter. I understand, then, from the Minister of Finance that in his opinion guarantee bonds should be issued for all officials of the service. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBB: In my judgment, when officials of the service are guaranteed by a guarantee company we should pay the premium, and if officials occupy responsible positions they should be guaranteed by such companies. Then if they go wrong they will have to deal with the guarantee company and not with political friends who will lobby the minister and try to get them out of their difficulty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why should they not pay their own premiums?

Mr. ROBB: I am not raising that issue at all.

Mr. FRASER: That is one of the issues. The Minister of Finance has given us certain information; perhaps he would tell us what is done in connection with his own officials.

Mr. ROBB: I am not sure; I know they are bonded by a guarantee company but I am not sure how the premiums are paid.

Mr. FRASER: I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that he secure that information before his estimates come up, because I will probably put the same questions to him.

Mr. ROBB: I anticipated that and I am preparing for it.

Mr. FRASER: Then let me read the second question which I placed on the order paper:

Does the government propose at the present session of parliament to amend chapter 164, section 5, of the revised statutes, as indicated by the Auditor General in his 1927-8 report, volume 1, on page XIV?

The reply from each department is the same, "No information." Now I would like to ask the minister whether he has given any consideration whatever to the recommendation of the Auditor General, and what he proposes to do.

Mr. FORKE: This has been a custom in the department for years, and I will admit that I have paid no particular attention to this recommendation. I still think that under section 80 of the Immigration Act we have authority to pay this money if we desire to do so. I may be wrong, but that is my opinion.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister give me an answer to my question with regard to his statutory authority for making these payments? I will not press it now, but the minister might get me that information.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, I will be glad to get it.

Mr. FRASER: We might consider all the departments when the estimates of the Minister of Finance are up.

Mr. CHURCH: The province of British Columbia is not the only province which suffers from this Chinese immigration. To me the immigration policy of this government is a Chinese puzzle; as a matter of fact they have no immigration policy. We are only spending a little more than we did 30 years ago on this problem. In every city and town in Ontario the police commissions are having trouble with these people, who are taking the bread and butter out of the mouths of the women and girls of Ontario by doing domestic work. In Toronto the police commission have had trouble with the Chinese population all the time, particularly in connection with their restaurants. The minister talks about bonding them, but that does not mean a thing; a bond will not check them up. What about the middlemen, the people who bring them here? Where do they come in? Conditions in Vancouver are such as to create a veritable Asiatic peril and it is a wonder the people do not rebel against such economic conditions resulting from the activities of so many orientals. In this vote the government provides $60,000 for salaries and contingencies in connection with Chinese immigration, but look at the next item; only $4,000 is provided for the relief of poor, distressed Canadians driven out of their own country by the immigration policy of the government. If the minister is equally good as Minister of Immigration and as Minister of Emigration, he will be very successful because he, by reason of the government policy, has driven out of this country 700,000 of our own people to seek work in the United States.

At a meeting held at Kingston of the general synod of the Church of England in Canada, representing all dioceses in this country, a resolution was passed dealing with this particular matter and with the immigration policy generally, and urging British immigration now being discriminated against. This government spends $400,000,000 yearly to maintain this country but they can find only $3,500,000 to spend on one of the greatest problems we have to face. Last night some hon. gentlemen wanted to reduce one of these votes by a million dollars; some western members say we have enough immigration; they are free traders with regard to industry in the east but protectionists when agriculture and their own home affairs are concerned.

I wish to protest against this item of $60,000 for salaries and contingencies in connection with Chinese immigration. I venture to say that hundreds of thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money is spent through the police departments of the country in checking up these people, and I know that in Toronto they take the bread and butter out of the mouths of our own poor women and girls. In the richer districts of Toronto, Hamilton and Winnipeg I have seen people engage Chinese to do their domestic work rather than pay a Canadian girl or woman a living wage. I say there should be a closed season for Chinese immigration for a period of five or ten years, or until such time as we may think it advisable to admit them again and give the British-born a chance.

Further, I desire to protest against the language used by one of the western members of this house in referring to a bishop of the Church of England. Let me say that Bishop Lloyd fought with the Queen's Own at Cut Knife in 1885, and did a great deal to save that great western country for the British Empire. He is not here to defend himself and we do not know whether or not the words quoted really came from him. When the Anglican synod of Canada met at Kingston two years ago they protested against the present policy of discrimination against British born immigrants. It brings to my mind the description by the poet William Cowper, when referring to the great fire of 1666 in the city of London he deplored the undue proportion of Europeans in the population of England. He declared that London was over-run with Europeans, and had become the common sewer of Paris and of Rome and had sucked in the dregs of all corrupted states.

We do not want that in Canada. A solution should be sought by the government for this great problem, but we will never be able to solve it while we have a free trader as commissioner of immigration. The first cornerstone of an immigration policy is to keep the people we have now and to provide work—provide an economic trade policy that will give jobs to British born immigrants. The government does not do that.

Seven hundred thousand of our men have gone to the United States and the government only provides $4,000 for the relief of distressed Canadians outside of Canada, while they ask us to vote $70,000 for Chinese immigration, an increase of $5,000 over last year. The minister's policy is nothing else but a Chinese puzzle; it has been one which retards immigration rather than encourages it. It is no wonder that the British born in this country are beginning to wonder whether Canada is going to continue to be a British and a white man's country. Mr. Bruce in Australia is regulating this European and Asiatic immigration; he is going to make that country a white man's country. We are spending to-day on immigration $3,500,000, which is a million more than was spent in 1896, but we have not solved this problem of immigration and colonization. We might just as well close up the shop if the present policy is to be continued.

St. Catharines, Barrie, Belleville, Hamilton and other Canadian cities and towns are filled with Chinese labour and with Chinese restaurants. In some way these orientals have been able to get into Canada and to obtain licenses and they are forcing the white man's restaurant out of business. The women are being driven out of laundering, housekeeping, domestic work and the restaurant business, and their places are being taken by Chinese labour. The government should declare a closed season and say that they will stop Chinese immigration for the next five or ten years or until such time as British immigration is brought up to a point more in keeping with the policy and traditions of a British dominion. The people of this country are beginning to wonder whether our country will continue to be British or whether it will soon be under the control of these Asiatics and Europeans. Time will tell. The economic policy of the government is driving Canadians to the States to look for jobs while the government brings in European and Asiatic immigrants to take their place.

Mr. BARBER: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to see that this oriental question has come home to some of the people in eastern Canada. For years those of us from British Columbia have kept this matter before the house and before the people of this country. On June 8 of last year, when this same item was under consideration, the Prime Minister made an announcement concerning Japanese immigration, and I think I am quite in order when I refer to that matter.

This Japanese problem is one of the greatest we have in British Columbia, and it is growing year by year. During the Easter recess I visited my district and attended a meeting of the berry-growers, and I was impressed very much with the results of the policy of the present administration along the lines of restricting Japanese immigration. That meeting was made up of 200 growers and close to 50 per cent of that number were Japanese, and an interpreter was necessary to interpret the resolutions and other business which came before the meeting. The people of our province are up in arms against this invasion by orientals.

An hon. MEMBER: Why do they employ them?

Mr. BARBER: One man told me at that meeting that he would like to have a photograph of the gathering to be sent to the Prime Minister. Last year I brought to the attention of the house a few figures concerning Japanese immigration. Those figures were as follows:

1923	369
1924	448
1925	501
1926	441
1927	475

There has been a gradual increase year by year.

Mr. FORKE: Did the hon. member say that there were 497 Chinese immigrants who came into this country?

Mr. BARBER: Japanese.

Mr. FORKE: I think the hon. member is mistaken.

Mr. BARBER: It was 475 in 1927.

Mr. FORKE: There is an agreement between the Japanese, the British and the Canadian government limiting the immigration to 150 per year.

Mr. BARBER: I beg to differ with the minister. When the Prime Minister made his announcement last year he said that that agreement would not go into effect until September 1, 1928. I have received the following figures from the bureau of statistics, showing the number which came in during the calendar years:

These Japanese are permitted to enter the country under another classification, that of returning Canadians. In two years, 2,223 Japanese have entered this country in that way. During the fiscal year of 1926-27 there were 888 males and 312 females, a total of 1,200; and in 1927-28, there were 766 males and 257 females, a total of 1,023. We, in the province of British Columbia, are of the opinion that there is a great leakage through this particular channel. We would urge the minister to check up this matter and we believe that he will find that some of these Japanese return to Japan and others come back on their papers.

The Prime Minister said last year that an agreement had been entered into, through diplomatic channels, to take effect on September, 1, 1928, which would limit the immigration to 150 per year, and that the so-called picture bride would be barred. I have the immigrations by months for 1928, and I will give them for the last four months of the year, which would be the months after this agreement came into effect. These figures are as follows:

September	24
October	21
November	43
December	12

I have not been able to obtain the figures beyond December of 1928. During the four months, 100 have come in, and there are still eight months to run. We shall watch with interest the new arrangement which the Prime Minister has told us he has made. I just wish to draw to the attention of the minister and the committee the manner in which this problem is being handled. The committee will now begin to realize that it is one of the most serious problems which face us in many districts in British Columbia.

Mr. SPENCER: Only last night I inquired as to the number of Japanese allowed into Canada, but at that time the minister refused to give the information, saying that he did not think he had a right to give it. Just a moment ago he gave to the hon. member for Fraser Valley the very information for which I was asking. Why did he change his mind?

Mr. FORKE: I have had time to think the matter over. I was not aware that the Prime Minister had used the figure when he spoke, and I did not want to be the first to give out the agreement until I felt I was justified in doing so.

Mr. SPENCER: The number now is 150 a year?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the portion of this appropriation spent for the suppression of the narcotic drugs traffic. Does his department take charge of this altogether, or is is divided between the Department of Health and the Department of Immigration?

Mr. FORKE: The prosecutions under the Narcotic Drugs Act come under the Department of Health, and then when a man is convicted he comes under the Department of Immigration when we deal with him in regard to deportation.

Mr. GARDINER: It is only in relation to that one matter that the department spends any money under this item in connection with the traffic in narcotic drugs?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. SPENCE: This is one of the items to which I seriously object. I see no reason whatever for an increase in an item of this kind, seeing that Canada is not desirous of getting Chinese immigrants. Nevertheless it is proposed to increase this item by $5,000. My idea is that it would be more in keeping with the immigration policy that should be adopted by this government to reduce the item by $5,000. The minister a little while ago was talking about the class of people he would allow to come into Canada.

Mr. FORKE: Will my hon. friend allow me? This is a preventive service. An increase may be right or wrong, but the service is to prevent the Chinese from coming in. It may not function, but it is a preventive service.

Mr. SPENCE: Does the minister, deep in his heart, think he is justified in asking for an increase of $5,000 in this item? No one in this government ever thinks of reducing an item. Every year it is an increase in each of the departments. The less business the government does, the more money it wants. If a merchant were to do business in that way, he would not remain long in business and neither should the government. A few minutes ago the minister was speaking of the classes of individuals admitted. Does he consider a man running a Chinese laundry as a merchant?

Mr. FORKE: No. When I read my statement I said so explicitly.

Mr. SPENCE: I did not catch that. We have now only 55,000 Chinese in the whole of Canada, and yet we are proposing to spend $70,000 in administration. Is the whole thing worth it?

Mr. FORKE: This is to keep them out.

Mr. SPENCE: Well, for heaven's sake adopt some policy that will keep them out, and not waste the country's money. I could advocate some ways of doing this which might be more crude than that adopted, but these Chinese should be kept out, and the whole immigration policy should be changed. I do not wish to criticize the minister, because I have great faith in his integrity of purpose, but he is certainly not capable of controlling the situation and the government behind him is to be blamed more than he, because this is the policy of the government and not his. The minister can keep on saying: This has been done for years. But if it is wrong, it is up to the minister to change the situation. The whole world has been revolutionized since the war. Why not revolutionize the department and get assistance in this regard from the other ministers of the crown? I have heard the lamest excuses put forward in the house. I have been in business for many years; I have sat on boards and councils, and I have never seen a more unbusinesslike administration than this one. You can compare it with nothing but a town or county council. The absolute nonsense that is talked across the floor of this house is disgusting to many of us.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Spence.]

Relief of distressed Canadians outside of Canada, $4,000.

Mr. ROBINSON: I should like to say to the minister that I am in full accord with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) that the immigration office at Detroit should be moved to Windsor. It is only three short blocks from the Detroit ferry dock, and many people who wish to settle in Canada think they are compelled to come to Windsor to meet officials there in order to make arrangements for settling in Canada. I have had them calling at my house; and have received letters stating their intention to move to Canada in order to go into farming, and I have to refer them to the Detroit office. I feel it would be a good move on the part of the department to change the office to Windsor. The minister has promised to give the matter consideration and I trust the result will be that the office will be moved. When speaking last night in connection with immigration at the Walkerville and Windsor ferry docks the minister stated that he would have an examination and a report made. My opinion is that the reports which come from the officials themselves give only one side of the question. If the officials who are sent down to Windsor to make the investigation and report, would consult with the chamber of commerce, service clubs and the real estate board, they would get at the actual facts of the situation, and I am sure this would be of assistance to the department.

Mr. FORKE: I will make every investigation; I think I shall slip down there some day in order to watch the proceedings and see just how things are operated.

Mr. ROBINSON: I wish the minister would. We would give him a hearty welcome.

Mr. HEAPS: What are the regulations of the Department of Immigration in connection with the importation of men who come to this country under contract from other countries and who displace labour here? I ask this question because the item relates to relief of distressed Canadians outside of Canada. As a result of contract labour from other countries displacing our own, there are a number of distressed Canadians in Canada and I should like to see something done for them. For instance, there are those whom the Rapid Grip Company and other companies have displaced. Has this to do with the Department of Immigration or the Department of Labour? Who is responsible in a case of this kind?

Mr. FORKE: My deputy informs me that the whole of this appropriation is scarcely ever spent. There is only a very small portion of it spent. This is to provide for assistance to bona fide Canadians who may happen to be stranded away from Canada or who may be in need of temporary financial help. Most of the cases occur in the British Isles and the expenses are under the control of the Director of European Emigration, London. In cases involving payment of transportation to Canada, for which we obtain a specially reduced rate, an undertaking of repayment is obtained from the person assisted, which repayment the department endeavours to collect from him upon his return to Canada, or from his parents or relatives if he happens to be unable to refund the money himself. The net expenditure for the fiscal year 1927-28, was $1,379.36, and the collections during that year amounted to $753.46, so that it is really an infinitesimal sum.

Mr. HEAPS: I realize the purpose of this vote and I am trying to relate it to the contract labour that is brought into the Dominion, and which displaces men born in this country, and who in consequence of this imported labour find themselves in a distressed condition. What are the regulations in connection with contract labour that is brought into this country for no other purpose than to displace men who are already in a job? Is this matter connected with the Department of Immigration or with the Department of Health?

Mr. FORKE: That is opening up a wide question into which I cannot go at the present time. We are not supplying any money for that purpose.

Mr. HEAPS: I have in mind the case of Rapid Grip Limited, of Toronto. In that particular case men were brought in from the United States or from Germany and other continental countries to take the place of the men in Toronto who were working for that concern. I know that the Department of Labour was in negotiation with that company for quite a long time. Who is responsible for allowing these men to come in to take the place of men who are already employed in this country?

Mr. FORKE: The department is quite willing to assist immigrants who are temporarily in distress and are unable to take care of themselves, but if a man becomes a mendicant it is a case for deportation.

Mr. HEAPS: Is there any way of protecting the men who are employed in this country against this imported contract labour?

Mr. FORKE: There is an Alien Labour Act which is applicable to the United States, but its enforcement does not come under my department. All that can be done, as far as I know, is to apply that act.

Mr. BENNETT: I think this matter should be discussed when the labour estimates are under discussion. I have some inquiries to make with respect to it. I think my hon. friend from North Winnipeg will agree that this is a matter that comes under the Department of Labour.

Mr. HEAPS: I just wanted to find out whether it came under the Department of Immigration or under the Department of Labour.

Item agreed to.

Buildings at St. John, N.B., $8,900.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Five or six questions were asked in the house recently in regard to the question of conductresses, who are supposed to be nurses, and the answer given was that the appointments had not been made. Have they been made since?

Mr. FORKE: Appointments have been made in two or three districts but not in all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The positions were advertised and the qualifications called for graduate nurses. Will the minister give the names of those who have been appointed, and state whether they are graduate nurses?

Mr. FORKE: I shall be glad to get the names. They have to be graduate nurses, and the appointments are made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. McGIBBON: Same old story—no information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): As the matter is related to this vote, I would ask that it stand until we get that information.

Mr. FORKE: It has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): These conductresses work in these buildings at St. John.

Mr. FORKE: This amount is required to make the last payment on a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is from buildings like this that these conductresses work. Will the minister say that that is not so?

Mr. FORKE: This is an obligation that we have to meet.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have nothing to do with that. But the work of the conductresses has to do with the immigration building.

Mr. FORKE: I will supply that information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): When?

Mr. FORKE: Immediately.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the minister give the details of this expenditure?

Mr. FORKE: The details are as follows:

Under an agreement entered between the Department of Immigration and Colonization and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the department is bearing one-half the cost of construction and maintenance of the following buildings necessary for the proper handling of immigrants arriving at the port of St. John West:—

Baggage shed, our share, $88,048.28; detention quarters, our share, $55,748.68 ($5,748.68 extras totally paid by department); waiting room, our share, $20,419.11—total cost to department, $164,216.07; extras already totally paid by department, $5,748.68—$158,467.39.

This sum of $158,467.39 is payable in ten yearly instalments, plus interest at the rate of 5½ per cent on outstanding balances at end of each year.

Summary of amounts required for the fiscal year 1929-1930—

Waiting room, ⅒ share, $2,041.91 (10th instalment); interest on outstanding balance Jan. 1st to Dec. 31st, 1929, $112.30—$2,154.21.

Immigration quarters, ⅒ share, $5,000 (10th instalment); interest on outstanding balance Jan. 1st to Dec. 31, 1929, $275—$5,275—total, $7,429.21.

Provision for our share of repairs, $1,470.79 —total $8,900.

The above amount of $8,900 is to cover the last instalment that has to be paid in connection with these buildings.

Mr. GARDINER: When was this contract entered into?

Mr. FORKE: Ten years ago.

Mr. GARDINER: The first item is to provide a baggage shed at a cost of $88,000. Is that not really a transportation matter and not connected with the Department of Immigration at all?

Mr. FORKE: The buildings were put up under agreement between the Department of Immigration and the Canadian Pacific Railway. The agreement was entered into ten years ago, nine payments have been made, and this is the last. It is difficult for me to give offhand all the details of a contract that was entered into ten years ago.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. GARDINER: It appears to me that this parliament should have no responsibility for making payments in connection with baggage sheds and so forth, which are really a matter for the railways. Now that the agreement has been entered into, I suppose that we must meet our obligations, but I trust that the department will not enter into any such arrangement in the future, because this is simply assisting the railway company to provide part of the railway properties.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in his seat, but in his absence I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the terrible exhibition we have had in conducting the estimates of this department through the house during the last two or three days. It is the worst exhibition of incompetence that we have had in this house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend takes a pessimistic view.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How is it that some of these buildings are built out of appropriations of departments other than the Department of Public Works? Why does this not come under the Department of Public Works?

Mr. FORKE: This contract was entered into in 1919. The hon. member cannot expect me—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I certainly would. Why should not the minister be able to give the information?

Mr. FORKE: I can if I am given time. I have already promised the hon. member that I will give full information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No, you started out by saying, why should the hon. member ask me about what happened in 1919? Why should not the minister know? It comes under his department.

Mr. GARDINER: I would suggest that the item stand until the information is brought down.

Mr. CANNON: The information has been promised.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is not carried.

Mr. McGIBBON: The Solicitor General is not going to put it over the house like that.

Mr. CANNON: I was saying that the minister was willing to give the explanation and was ready to do so.

Mr. McGIBBON: For the last three or four days we have had these assurances of willingness to give the information, but we can get practically no information. We would like to know whether we are going to get it this year or not. The minister has been in charge of this department some years; surely when he comes here with his estimates, with his deputy beside him, we ought to be able to get some information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I was promised an explanation by the minister and I insist on it.

Mr. FORKE: I will get all the information I possibly can.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want it.

Mr. FORKE: I will let you have the information.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There will be supplementary estimates, I am told, in relation to the Immigration department, and I suggest that when they are before the committee my hon. friend will get the explanation he asks for. He might let this item go through in the meantime.

Item agreed to.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Care of patients and medical examination of pensioners, $2,600,000.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Chairman, on two former occasions when we were in committee I asked that vote 232 be called. The discussion in each case has centred around the health section. I would therefore suggest that we call vote 244, and that we complete the discussion on the section of health, and proceed to items under that section.

Item stands.

The administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, including the laboratory of hygiene, $150,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the few remarks I made the other night I endeavoured to show the field of activity that was designed for this department, not only by the constitution but by the act that brought the department into being. Some of our friends opposite have suggested that services which are now being rendered by the health department had previously been and could now be carried on by other departments of government. There is no doubt that that is true, but those who were responsible for the amalgamation of those services must have realized that there was a necessity for closer application on the part of those who were qualified to deal with them.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I was indicating, Mr. Chairman, that under the old organization where the Department of Immigration controlled the medical inspection service that service was not efficiently performed, with the result that we introduced into Canada trachoma, which has spread as far west as among the Indians of British Columbia. We also found that our asylums were being filled with mentally deficient people; the hospitals were being filled; the charitable insitutions were crowded by incompentents. Since the Department of Health has taken over that work I think I can say with certainty that conditions have very greatly improved, and this is due to the thorough inspection carried on. It is suggested that the quarantine service could be carried on under the Department of Immigration. As a matter of fact, that service at one time came under the Department of Agriculture, and we know from history that during that period many epidemics did originate from the quarantine stations. I am pleased to say that since the Health department has been in control of this service not one case has got through.

Regulations in relation to foods and drugs were formerly under the Department of Trade and Commerce, but since they have been placed under the Health department a considerable amount of research work has been done and the elimination of impurities from foods and drugs has been effected in great measure. The benefit which has resulted to the public from the health standpoint is inestimable. When it is realized to-day that scientific methods are followed in the preparation of foods, and that there has been a great evolution in this matter of refrigeration and in relation to the preserves that go into foods, many vegetable colourings being discarded and aniline dyes substituted for them, many of which dyes are poisonous, one can readily understand that a considerable amount of research and investigation is necessary in order properly to supervise the preparation of these products.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to pure food products, does the minister handle that branch of the public service?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the minister is speaking of just now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister recalls the criticisms made by the producers of maple sugar and maple syrup in the province of Quebec as to what was done in the adulteration of some of their products. I understood that the government had taken action in this matter and also with respect to butter. Perhaps the minister, without interfering with the sequence of his remarks, will offer some observations in that regard.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have a Maple Products Act whereby the Department of Health is empowered to take samples from the shelves, just as is done in connection with ordinary food products, and have these samples brought to the laboratories to be tested for purity. A pure maple product is required; that is the standard. A great deal of work has been done in this direction and some prosecutions have been entered into. There has been some complaint from the sugar producing districts in Quebec to the effect that the service has not been as efficient as it ought to be. I would point out that the laboratory work in connection with maple products is one that requires probably the greatest degree of care, inasmuch as it is very easy to add cane and other sugars to these particular products, and the adulteration is very difficult of detection. The old lead standard had been in vogue, but in practice it was found difficult to apply. In some districts that standard would run as high as 9 per cent, while in others and at other seasons, it might be as low as 1.5. That standard, therefore, is not altogether reliable, especially in view of the fact that there is a great variation in the districts in which the commodity is produced. It is true we have not as large an inspection service as we should like to have. If we had more inspectors we could bring more products in to be tested. Among the producers themselves there is a desire to turn out a pure product. The trouble comes after the producer has sold his product to the manufacturer; it is then that the adulteration occurs. We have, however, been successful in checking adulteration. I know of one firm's products having been taken from the shelf—one of the largest firms in Canada—and it was a good lesson to them. There has been a suggestion that the administration of the act might be better conducted under the Department of Agriculture, and that is under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: Why?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Well, some of those who made representations on the question thought that the Department of Agriculture was a little closer to the producer than the Health department and that consequently it could exercise greater control over the product at its source. I find, however, that in all probability the product is not very much disturbed at its source; it is after it leaves the point of production that adulteration takes place.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Perhaps it is easier for that department to get more inspectors.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know about that.

Mr. BENNETT: They have 1,300 now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I fancy cooperation would produce a better service. The control of culinary and drinking water on the great lakes has been taken up by the department.

Mr. BENNETT: Has it touched Ottawa yet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have no jurisdiction in Ottawa, unfortunately, but on the great lakes and international waterways we have that jurisdiction and our service has been of considerable importance. For instance, typhoid fever was at one time a very common disease on ships on the great lakes; I am pleased to say that last year there were only four cases of typhoid which were reported in that service. In the administration of the Proprietary and Patent Medicines Act, which was formerly under the Department of Trade and Commerce, there were sold at one time 60,000 preparations of this character; the number has been reduced to 6,000. Many exaggerated and misleading claims have been disposed of and the public has been spared a good deal of money. It was never the intention of the Department of Health to merge the activities of the province into a distinct unit, as has been suggested. But in cooperation with the provinces, through the Dominion Council of Health, we have been able to do work which I think has been quite effective.

The establishment of a research laboratory is desirable and I have no doubt that when the time is opportune such a laboratory will be established in Canada. But as I said the other night, the securing of a personnel for such a laboratory is more important than the expenditure of money in buildings and equipment. The government is not unwilling to provide money for the establishment of a laboratory of this character, but at present it would seem that the duties of the department in connection with the administration of the Food and Drugs Act occupy the present laboratory staff to the full, and the establishment of a research laboratory would mean the appointment of a staff of very considerable size with quarters of its own, together with a considerable outlay for equipment of a very expensive kind.

It was suggested to the committee that more money was being expended in connection with the health of animals than was spent in connection with the health of human beings. If my hon. friends would take into consideration the large sums of money spent by the provincial governments and the municipalities, together with the amount spent by the Dominion government in this regard, they would get a total expenditure of many millions of dollars. I have said, and I do not think it can be contradicted, that the Canadian people are making just as much progress in health matters as is being made by other countries throughout the world. We are fortunate, I think, in having, as deputy minister of the department a gentleman well known to health authorities not only in Canada but throughout the world as having exceptional knowledge of public health matters; I refer to Doctor Amyot.

The complaint has been made that the report of the department is too brief. That may be so, but a short study of the report does not give an accurate idea of the activities carried on or the amount of work done during the year. For instance, at page 10 of the report it will be noticed that 416 samples of narcotic drugs were analysed during the year. One might write a book on the work done by the police under the supervision of the department in seizing 416 samples of these drugs and in the prosecutions which followed. In that regard I think we might say that in Canada the organization which controls the use of narcotic drugs is as efficient as any similar organization to be found anywhere in the world. The work last year was exceptionally well done, and we secured many convictions in the courts. I believe that to-day in New Westminster penitentiary there are over 60 people who have been sentenced to terms of from five to seven years for trafficking in these drugs, and the same situation prevails in Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal.

At page 33 of the report we find that patent medicines for cancer, diphtheria, diabetes, typhoid fever and other diseases are no longer permitted to be sold. That statement takes only a few lines, but it means that the public will be exploited no longer; it is a bald statement of fact. On page 39 we find that the total number of cases of typhoid on the great lakes during 1926 was only four. That is a brief statement also, but it means a great deal to those who know the character of that disease as it formerly existed on the great lakes before this service was undertaken. On page 47 of the report it will be noted that during the year 5,217 sailors were treated at Canadian ports. That statement means more than it indicates in words, but we can say that sailors coming to our shores receive treatment equal to if not better than that given by any other country in the world. That service is well organized in the larger ports of Canada, where we have officers under salary. In the smaller ports the customs officers act as our agents and where medical assistance is required it is furnished by local physicians either under fees or on a small salary basis.

Mr. BENNETT: That is particularly so with regard to the quarantine stations, is it not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That includes the work at quarantine stations; the service is more or less inter-related.

I do not wish to continue at greater length than is necessary. The item under discussion is No. 244, and there is a slight increase this year. Perhaps I might be permitted to just indicate the expenditures made under this vote. This appropriation is to provide for laboratory and inspection service dealing with the adulteration and misbranding of human foods and of all drugs employed for the treatment or prevention of diseases in man or animal; the control of the export, import and sale of all habit-forming drugs; investigations and prosecutions in connection with traffic in narcotics and the protection of the public against the frauds of advertisers and money seekers trying to put out dangerous drugs or medicines, the composition of which is unknown to the public. We have food and drug laboratories at Ottawa, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Halifax, Montreal and Toronto and also a laboratory of hygiene at Ottawa. This laboratory furnishes bacteriological, biological and biochemical data and reports on the qualities of foods, raw or manufactured; disinfectants; water supplies; pollution of shellfish areas and of shellfish and examination of diseased tissues, and it determines the potencies of the drugs, curative serums and vaccines mentioned in the schedule on page 14 of the Food and Drugs Act, as amended in 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister did not do anything about the infection of the oyster beds in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We made an investigation some two or three years ago, when the epidemic came over here from the United States. Our officers were brought in at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the typhoid epidemic?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, and at that time I think we made a health survey in Prince Edward Island as well.

Mr. BENNETT: I was referring to the parasite which destroyed the oyster beds.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We had nothing to do with that.

As I said, this laboratory tests the serums and vaccines and biological products. It is estimated that $10,000 of the $15,000 increase will be required to carry on the increased inspection service at Montreal and Toronto; for the provision of scientific apparatus urgently needed to cope with the demands of advancement in food and drug work and to make replacements of certain laboratory apparatus which, in the course of time, has become either worn out or obsolete. An additional $5,000 will be required for investigations and prosecutions in connection with the traffic in narcotics. The amount voted in 1928-29 was $135,000, of which $134,956.39 was spent.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think the minister's statement has furnished additional proof, if any were necessary, for the statement I made the other evening that there is no originality and no initiative in this Department of Health, and there has been none since it was formed. Of course, if the minister is going to take credit for the work done by the provincial governments and the municipalities and for the preventive work of the mounted police he can make a very plausible statement, but when you get down to the real facts the minister has not been able to tell us of anything new which has been contributed by his department in order to preserve or improve the health of the people of this country. I have listened to the minister very carefully in my desire to secure some information or facts which would justify the existence of this department, but I have heard nothing of the kind. The minister has stated that he is going to hand back to the Department of Agriculture some of the work he took away from it—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not say that.

Mr. McGIBBON: —evidently with the idea that the Department of Agriculture can do it better than the Department of Health. I can see no other reason.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not propose to let my hon. friend put words into my mouth which I have not used. He can make his own statement but he cannot make a statement for me.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am in the judgment of the house if that is not a reasonable deduction to be taken from what the minister has said.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not at all.

Mr. McGIBBON: I stand to be corrected if the minister can produce any evidence to the contrary. But I say again that as far as doing anything to preserve or improve the national health of Canada, we have yet to learn of the first thing which this government has done. It is true that they have been inspecting some foods, some proprietary medicines and doing other routine work which was done in the past I think just as efficiently as it is being done to-day—in fact, I am credibly informed that it is being done by the same staff. If that be true, what right has the minister to assume that this work was neglected in the past?—because that is the only deduction we can draw from his remarks. That, I say, is about all the department has been doing.

There are many ways in which this government could improve the public health. Last Thursday night I referred to the great wastage of life and pointed out that in practically every instance the government had done nothing to improve conditions. The government might assist in the establishment of whole time county health offices. I think I am correctly informed when I say that the minister has absolutely refused to consider that proposition; he hides himself behind the British North America Act and states that the department is restricted to doing certain things. I have in my hand a letter given to me by the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) in which the statement is made that the minister refused absolutely to take that matter into consideration. It is undoubtedly within the power of the department to assist in the establishment of full time county medical health offices.

The minister has referred to what his department has done as regards quarantine, but I would direct his attention to the epidemics of rabies which occurred in the province of Ontario. I am not blaming the minister for that, because I know that matter comes under the Department of Agriculture, but it must be remembered that the disease entered this country from the United States; that it has caused the provincial government a great deal of alarm and has necessitated the expenditure of a considerable amount of money.

The minister referred also to the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act and to the number of convictions which had been made under that act during the past year. I asked the government the following question:

How many persons were convicted last year for illegally selling any of the following drugs; opium, morphia, cocaine, or any of their derivatives?

If the minister's statement is correct, the answer which I received to that question must be wrong. According to the answer I received from the Deputy Minister of Health there were only 61 convictions in the whole Dominion of Canada, and I find that ten of that number were professional men of one kind or another. I also asked for the estimated number of drug addicts in Canada, and the answer was given as 8,000. If the statements made by the minister are correct, then I ask him: Where are those 8,000 adicts obtaining their drugs? The minister tells us that there has been a great diminution in the importation and sale of these drugs, but I find that there are still 8,000 people, according to the estimate made by his department, still using them, and only 61 convictions were made during the last twelve months.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We do not prosecute the addicts.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to direct the attention of the house to some of the methods used by this department in dealing with this drug evil. I received a letter from a medical man in my district, who I believe is just as innocent of dealing in these drugs as any hon. member in this house. If the name is necessary I will give it, but I do not think it is called for at the present time. He wrote as follows:

In regard to the conviction against me for breach of the Narcotic Act, I will give you the particulars as concisely as possible. Some time in August, 1926, Fraser called at my office and asked how much he owed me. He had broken into my office on three occasions, the last time being about three years before. He had done considerable damage, and stolen what morphia and syringes I had on hand, and some cash, and a sweater, possibly more. I asked him if his conscience was troubling him. He said that he was in very bad shape at that time. He paid me $20 and I said that would do although it did not nearly cover me. He was dressed very neatly and I hardly knew him, as he changed so much in appearance. I asked him how he was getting along and he said that after he was arrested in Gravenhurst he had been in an institution and had cut down to one-quarter the amount he had previously taken, and that he had been out a year and had reduced to about one-fifth and was gradually reducing the amount. I gave him some good advice and warned him to be very careful, etc. He got up to go and then asked if I could spare him a few tablets. I replied that I did not know how many I had but would look. I gave him about 20 tablets, gr. ¼ each. The point is that I did not know the act, and did not think I was in error any more than if I dispensed a bottle of stomach mixture. I had never read the act, or ever received a copy of it. I considered I was giving medicine which I knew he required, and thought that I had a license to dispense. He came back on three more occasions, and I gave him tablets each time.

Some time in January, 1927, Miller a mounted police, came in and served me with the summons. I immediately called up T. N. Phelan, my solicitor in Toronto, and he was the first to inform me that I had committed a breach of the Narcotic Act, and advised me to settle if given the minimum fine of $200, and have the other charges withdrawn. This was done, and I paid $257.50.

I later had to appear before the council and nearly had a two months' suspension for infamous and disgraceful conduct, but got off with a severe reprimand.

I could not understand why the government sent a spotter down here to get me, unless I was using more morphia than the average physician. I had never had an addict in for years before and only used it in the practice. No doubt you know that I have a good obstetric practice, and as a routine I left six morphine tablets after each case for after-pains, with instructions to burn the tablets that they did not use.

I think that is all that it is necessary for me to read.

I am credibly informed that this is the common practice of the department, to send around their sleuths to try to catch the medical men who are ignorant of this act, bring them into the police court and have them fined. No one wants to pay a fine if he does not feel that he should pay it. Another point is that once a physician is fined on a charge of that nature he is almost automatically barred from the practice of medicine; that is the serious part of it. I would ask the minister if this practice, which has been fairly general in the past, has been discontinued?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member was informed over a year ago that the department did not employ the type of investigator which is referred to in that letter. That incident happened back in 1926. The investigations to-day are conducted by the mounted police; the department does not send people in to pry upon the doctors.

Mr. McGIBBON: What do they do?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): When information comes to the department that some member of the medical profession is selling drugs, we make careful inquiries and if it is found that the statements are true, the man is investigated. If trafficking is discovered, he is brought into court, usually on a summary conviction if it is his first offence. If it is found that there has been regular trafficking and if he is what is known as a drug trafficker, he may be proceeded against under indictment. That is the practice of the department and it will not be relinquished. But no medical man need get himself into trouble if he will comply with the act.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister cannot put up a straw man merely for the purpose of knocking it down. I was not referring to the trafficker.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Neither was I. I was referring to the case the hon. member mentioned, and the question he asked as to the procedure. I have given him the procedure now in vogue in the department. The hon. member for Kingston brought up a case and he had the idea that the department had proceeded hurriedly and without proper knowledge with regard to the matter.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the minister referring to the case I brought up?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. We received information from Kingston that a certain medical man was supplying narcotics. That information, coming to the department, was investigated and the investigation brought forth a report.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is the minister referring to the case I mentioned?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. The report was not satisfactory to the department, but later on the officer of the mounted police went into that doctor's office and bargained for narcotic drugs. He found in the office supplies done up and addressed to parties in Ottawa for sale. Those packages were opened and drugs sold from them. That was the story. Our friends cannot complain if medical men get themselves into positions of that kind, but the department are not and have not been for the last two years, employing any addicts in their service.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is no question as to the fact that the medical man was selling drugs, but it was found out that he was an irresponsible medical man who never should have been allowed to practise. When the time came, if attention had not been drawn to that fact, I am satisfied the department would have proceeded against him with the usual prosecution instead of having him confined where he is now or where he was sent afterwards. The man was irresponsible; he should never have been allowed to practise, but he was practising and he did not know what he was doing because he was under the influence of drugs all the time. Surely the mounted policeman should have become acquainted with the type of medical man with whom he was dealing and said: This is not a case for prosecution; it is one for putting him in an institution; he is an addict himself.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not see how my hon. friend can take that stand. Our business was to check this man's traffic in narcotic drugs. He had his own connections in Kingston and if it was known there that he was irresponsible and a fit subject for an institution, that surely is the duty of the local people. We did not intervene on that ground; we found that he was trafficking and trafficking for profit.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister say that he would defend the prosecution of the man? Application was made a dozen times for his confinement in an institution.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We dealt with the facts only as we found them.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But I would expect common sense to be used in connection with the prosecution. A mounted policeman should be a very good judge. This man has been in gaol and detained in different institutions. It is not fair to say: We are going to prosecute him. I quite admit perhaps the department had no knowledge of that, but it certainly changed the prosecution after the matter was drawn to its attention, and I will give the minister credit for that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We stayed the prosecution.

Mr. McGIBBON: I just want to make it clear that the case we are now dealing with is not the one to which I referred.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am prepared to give the minister all possible assistance in the house as well as out of it to prosecute criminals who are trafficking in these drugs, but he must exercise ordinary precautions not to stigmatize men whose reputations are clear. This is not the only case I have in my riding and in every case where they have been convicted, they have been convicted through ignorance of the law. I have had complaints from many parts of the province, and I am informed that the same course of action is still being pursued. I would be glad to have the minister's testimony that it is not.

Mr. HOWDEN: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario contends that the individual whose case he stated, was hardly used by the department. I cannot see this. Ignorance of the law, we are told, is no excuse, and certainly for the last twenty-five years I have understood thoroughly that it is against the law to give morphine to an addict.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Coming back to the statement made by the minister and for information only, I should like the minister to tell us now what work was undertaken by his department to prevent or lessen typhoid on the great lakes?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have required the owners of ships on the great lakes to furnish a separate water supply for culinary and drinking purposes. Formerly they took the water from the lake; now it comes from certified sources of supply. The tanks are inspected from time to time and samples of water taken. These samples are examined with the assistance of the laboratories of the provincial government; if things are not found to be in proper shape on the ship the owners are notified, and until repairs are made the ship does not sail. The water supply is being very carefully checked especially on the great lakes and on some of the western lakes. I have under my hand a chart giving the number of cases of typhoid as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1924	30
1925	7
1926	4

This shows a gradual decline since this system was inaugurated.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Of course the work of inspection there is largely provincial.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, entirely under our direction.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The water supply must be protected. I will come to that point a little later on. In regard to the food question, we are quite in sympathy with anything that will make for pure food, but last year I took up with the minister the question of sausages. The colouring substance which is and has been for years used to give the sausage a slight tint which makes it what it really is, has been acknowledged by the minister, his chemists and his department, to be non-injurious. Then what is the idea of worrying the manufacturers of the sausage for using that colouring? Could some common sense not be used and the department say: This is not an injurious substance? On the other hand, if you are going to forbid its use, why permit its sale in shops and so forth? The department can say that the butcher, the manufacturer of sausages, is aware of this; that ignorance of the law is no excuse. But the butcher's trade is handed down from father to son and these men would like to know, because they have asked me, whether some change could not be made so that they could manufacture the sausages. The department is welcome to take care of the meats. This is not a preservative of meat. The minister admits that it is not, that it is simply used for colouring, and that it is used in connection with a cheap food entering into the dietary of a great many people. If there is any argument in favour of continuing the prosecutions for the use of colouring matter, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department are of the opinion that if the people desire to eat sausage meat, they should have a pure product. It is well-known that in the better abattoirs and better shops, where meat is properly taken care of and there is proper refrigeration and care in handling, meat can be kept fresh and will make sausages that will stand up. This product that my hon. friend speaks of, sodium hyposulphate, if sprinkled on meat that is going bad, will hold it; there is no question about that; but in this country, where we have an excellent supply of meat and good refrigeration, I do not think we need a product that my hon. friend, for instance, would not want to eat in his sausage. That is the advice and the information which the department gives me and so far as I am concerned, it sounds good to me. I do not think it is well to try to freshen up with a product of this kind meats that are undergoing early putrefaction.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Let us settle this matter. Surely the minister knows as well as I do that it is not a preservative; it is used only for table purposes, for colouring or tinting. Now if the department rules that that is a meat preservative I will withdraw any objection that I have, or if the deputy says it is a meat preservative I will withdraw my objections; but I say that it is not, and the chemical reports that have been issued by the department support my contention.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will freshen meat and give it a better colour.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is tinting, I admit that; but it is non-injurious and is not a preservative. I am not going to stand up for the defence of any injurious or poisonous meat or for any product that will preserve such meat. But I think the minister and his department should take a stand on this question, and if they will rule that it is a preservative and has a chemical action, well and good; I will withdraw all my objections.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As far as the use of small quantities of this product such as is customary in the trade is concerned, I would not say that it is a preservative, but it does freshen and brighten meat.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister admits, then, that its only action is the tinting.

I have a few remarks to make, Mr. Chairman, on the general question. The minister defends the position in which his department is to-day on the ground that it has no authority. Its only authority is to deal with things that are perhaps secondary to public health. I differ from the minister, and I would point out where he gets his authority to step in and take action such as has not been taken by his department in the past. The minister quoted from the act:

> Cooperation with the provincial, territorial and other health authorities with a view to the coordination of the efforts proposed or made for preserving and improving the public health.

I contend that the word "preserving" gives him all the authority he requires to step in and preserve the public health of this Dominion. In connection with the Montreal typhoid epidemic, the minister had all the authority he needed to step in and say that the epidemic was a menace to the general health of the Dominion. I believe that he has sufficient authority under the act to protect one part of Canada from another part in which there is an epidemic.

I think perhaps the minister has done a little work in gathering up some little pieces and putting them together, but it it a patchwork quilt, and that is about all it is. There are other things that he should take in. I see no reason why the health of the Indians, for instance, which is a federal matter, should not come under his department. In fact, in connection with the whole health work of this Dominion, federal and provincial, there is duplication and overlapping, with a little bit being done by this department and a little bit by another department, and a little bit by the provincial authorities, and with no special authority over the whole. I think the minister should gather up all these things and put them together. The minister said that his department does a certain amount of national research work, but there again there is duplication because the provinces and the National Research Council are also working on that. The federal Department of Health may also take up the work and do a little bit more. While you are preparing your laboratories, you could turn many problems you have over to the research council, and I hope that they will be rather more practical problems than those engaging the attention of the council to-day, because judging by the report of the council they are not engaged on problems that are of any practical importance at all.

The minister and the department have a big field before them if they will only go into it and assert their rights. The minister may differ, but I believe that the preservation of the public health, not the preservation of the health of the man in Ontario or Quebec, but the whole national health, comes under the jurisdiction of the minister, and when any part of the country becomes a menace to other parts I contend that the minister has the authority to step in. A typhoid epidemic, for instance, has no limits. A man in Ottawa or Kingston or any other city may catch the typhoid germs and in two weeks he is down with typhoid, and he becomes a menace not only to his own city but to every part of this country through which he travels. The disease spreads all the faster because of the ease of communication, and you may next hear of the disease in Winnipeg shortly after the man in Ottawa or Kingston contracted it. The minister has read of the spread of sleeping sickness, which began in a small community of 350,000 people in central Africa. If the diseases had been confined to that little community, it would not prevail all over the world to-day. I contend that the minister has the authority under the act to conserve the health of any part of this Dominion, and wherever he sees a menace he can step in. He stepped in in connection with the water supply of boats on the great lakes. There is no question in my mind that that was a provincial matter, because the water supply is obtained only in the ports, and any city supplying impure water would be responsible. When you realize that fifteen million people, equal to the population of five or six great cities travel on the great lakes, you can realize the great field that is open to the minister, and I am glad that he has gone into it. If he is going to take credit for that, he can also step in in connection with other provincial matters. He could certainly see that water is made fit for the travelling public. I think every province would unite with the minister if he would take a strong stand. There is a great opportunity awaiting the department, and the minister should gather up all this health work that is going on here and there and bring it under his department, and make the department one big, strong, health department. He has the authority to do so under the act.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In reply to my hon. friend who seemed to question my statement in regard to the number of convictions in the province of British Columbia, there were 67 convictions in that province in the year 1928-29, according to a return that has been given to me, and throughout the whole of Canada 189 federal convictions and 173 provincial.

In regard to what my hon. friend from Kingston City has just said in regard to epidemics in the larger cities, like the epidemic in Montreal a few years ago, the Department of Health acted only in an advisory capacity at that time. We did support the provincial health board after they were compelled to go in and take charge. Although they went in without authority, it was their duty to go in, and they got the necessary authority at the next session of the legislature. During the epidemic we had the opportunity of using the power that is in us. When the country districts were under quarantine and their milk was not being accepted on the American market, we were able as a national department so to arrange matters that the quarantine was lifted. They had the quarantine continued in the city of Montreal for some months, and it was only when the Department of Health at Washington were assured by the Canadian Department of Health that the things that should be done in Montreal had been done, that the quarantine in Montreal was lifted. Where our field existed we went in and helped to organize a health department. I do not think, however, that it would have been acceptable to the city of Montreal for us to have gone in in any other capacity.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): When you discover the source and then delay taking action, that is criminal. If you have not in your Health department men who can discover the source in a few days, then some other department should be allowed to deal with the matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is where I find fault, where a delay is occasioned by the department. For the sake of the health of the rest of the country they should say: "If you cannot find it we can, and we will send you a man who will do it."

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are ready to do that.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will the minister make a statement to the committee regarding leprosy in the Dominion, informing us as to the number of cases, the increase or diminution of the disease, and any other matter in that connection that would be of interest to the committee.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That comes under our quarantine vote. We have two stations in Canada, one at Williams Head on the Pacific, and one at Tracadie, New Brunswick.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is mentioned under health.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, under the vote on quarantine. We have eight cases, I think at Tracadie, and some ten or twelve at Williams Head. I am informed the cases at Tracadie, with the exception of two, are probably non-active to-day.

Mr. MacLAREN: Where is the Williams Head station?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Victoria, B.C.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is there not one near Grosse Ile, Quebec?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. There are just the two, all cases are confined in these institutions.

Mr. MacLAREN: How does the number compare to-day with say ten years ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The number is gradually decreasing. In 1899 there were twenty-five cases; in 1916 there were fifteen cases.

Mr. MacLAREN: Where?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is the number of cases in Canada.

Mr. MacLAREN: The total number?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, and to-day I find there are ten.

Mr. MacLAREN: I may be mistaken, but I was informed last year—not in the house—that there were cases of leprosy on the island of Grosse Ile, near Quebec.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is not correct?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will the minister inform us who the medical officer is at Tracadie, and what his salary is?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Doctor Langis. His salary is $3,360.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is there any research work or scientific investigation regarding the treatment and the nature of leprosy at Tracadie at the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are not doing any research work at Tracadie, but we are using the latest treatment. Some research work, I think, is being done at Williams Head, where the cases are more active.

Mr. MacLAREN: Who is carrying on the research work there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Doctor Brown, the chief officer there.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to clean up this matter regarding the accuracy of our records with respect to convictions under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. The record that I have here is for the same year, I think, as the minister gave, and indicates that his figures are about more than three times the amount given to me. I would like to know whether or not the records we get from this department are reliable.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The information that I have here, given in answer to a question by our late friend the former member for Frontenac-Addington, shows a total of 343 cases dealt with. That, I think, coincides pretty well with what I have given my hon. friend here.

Mr. McGIBBON: That does not answer my question at all. The minister simply repeats what he said before. I have a return here for the year ended September 30, 1928. The question is, "How many persons were convicted for illegally selling any of the following drugs: opium, morphia, cocaine, or any of their derivatives?" The answer is 61. The minister gets it up in the hundreds. This return is signed by the deputy minister.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): When was that return made?

Mr. McGIBBON: It was made this session.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What date?

Mr. McGIBBON: February 26.

Mr. MALONEY: Does the ministers' three hundred odd cases mean convictions?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is rather strange that there should be two questions. I am reading the return as taken from Hansard on February 27th, and it shows a total of 343 cases in 1928.

Mr. McGIBBON: The point I am making is that we cannot rely upon the information we get from this department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the statement to which my hon. friend is referring.

Mr. McGIBBON: I will send it over if the minister doubts my word.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am very glad to have inquiry made, but there is surely something wrong.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is the same difficulty we had this morning in connection with the Department of Immigration.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; my hon. friend should not complain, because we are trying to give him information.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister be good enough to give us the convictions by provinces?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The federal convictions were Nova Scotia, 1; Quebec, 83; Ontario, 15; Manitoba, 5; Saskatchewan, 7; Alberta, 11; British Columbia, 67; making a total of 189. The municipal convictions were: New Brunswick, 3; Quebec, 30; Ontario, 53; Manitoba, 18; Saskatchewan, 1; Alberta, 2; British Columbia, 66; making a total of 173. The grand total therefore is 362.

Mr. McGIBBON: In comparison with the number of addicts, does the minister consider that the percentage of convictions is high enough?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The 8,000 addicts have nothing to do with these convictions.

Mr. McGIBBON: But they must be getting their supply somewhere.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Generally speaking we have had a good year. We have caught some large traffickers and with the cooperation of the municipal police we have also secured many of the smaller ones. These have been apprehended and taken to court.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is nice for the minister to take credit for what the municipalities are doing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am willing to give credit where it is due, which my hon. friend is not prepared to do.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) entered a strong protest against the sentence meted out to one of the medical profession who had been convicted of supplying narcotics to addicts. From what the hon. member said it would appear that this doctor was irresponsible. Does the minister find many cases of irresponsibility among the professional men?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, some of them are irresponsible.

Mr. GARDINER: Can you give accurate information?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I should say that a medical man who has become a trafficker is not fit to be at large.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the position of the patients of these irresponsible medical men? Do not these patients deserve some protection? What is the department doing to weed out irresponsible doctors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of my hon. friends are complaining because we are arresting these men and putting them in jail. Wherever we find indications that there are such men we proceed against them. Of course, each province has its own register of medical men and action can be taken against irresponsible doctors and their names struck off the roll.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any information as to what the various colleges of physicians and surgeons are doing with respect to irresponsible men?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): From time to time they have occasion to deal with conditions existing within their respective provinces and when warranted they take the license from a man and prevent him from practising.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the department take active steps to see that the public is protected against such doctors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As far as we can, yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What action do you take? Give us some information.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Department of Health does not proceed against the ordinary practitioner for malpractice; that is not the function of the department. If my hon. friend should suffer from malpractice on the part of a doctor he could proceed against him; that would be his duty. If a doctor has been convicted of malpractice it is then a matter for the College of Physicians and Surgeons in his particular province to deal with him. And they do deal with such men from time to time. Surely my hon. friend does not suggest that the Department of Health should inquire into the capacity or incapacity of members of the profession and take proceedings. This is well regulated to-day under the various laws of the provinces and it is not a field which it was intended that this department should enter into.

Mr. GARDINER: I asked the minister whether he had found many irresponsible medical men and the answer he gave would indicate to me that he had and that the colleges of physicians and surgeons in the various provinces are not looking after their business. I submit that the minister's department has some responsibility in this regard.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is wrong when he says there are many irresponsible men.

Mr. GARDINER: I merely took your answer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I never stated anything of the kind. I am glad to say that there are not many irresponsible medical men. I do say that when a medical man gets to the stage where he is trafficking in narcotics he should not be allowed to practise; and he is not, because he is prosecuted.

Mr. GARDINER: Under this item is provision made for the testing of proprietary medicines?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that merely for purity or for efficacy and purity as well?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Both.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What action did the minister and his department take after his attention had been drawn to the fact that this man who was being prosecuted was an irresponsible practitioner? Did the minister report him to the register of the medical council of the province, or what did he do? I am referring to the Kingston case.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know just what was done. We proceeded against this individual, and while preparations were being made to have him arraigned in court a further inquiry was made, probably at the instance of the College of Physicians and Surgeons or of some of his friends. The result was that he was committed to an institution and we withdrew the prosecution. As regards referring these cases to the college, it is not necessary; the cases are known through the newspapers and the courts. The profession is aware of these cases.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is hardly a good enough procedure for the minister to follow. When this case arose I pointed out that a grave injustice was being done an irresponsible person. Had the minister, after his attention had been directed to the matter, looked into it carefully, he would have found that this mounted policeman did not even bother his head; all you had to do was to look at the man to know that there was irresponsibility there. The minister would then have applied to the registrar of the medical council of Ontario to take action. It was when I wrote concerning the case and called attention to what would happen that certain friends, realizing that the man would be prosecuted, took action. I pointed out at that time the injustice of prosecuting such a man. That man might have sold the drug to children or to anyone else, because he was irresponsible. He was not the type the minister would get after for purposes of prosecution. It is quite true that he took money, but, as I say, he was not responsible at the time; and it seems to me that there should have been, as the act provides, cooperation between the federal department and the provincial authorities in the interests of public health.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The chief officer tells me that after conviction the department does notify the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But why prosecute an irresponsible man?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is hardly fair.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is easy to say "Here is a man selling drugs for money," and so on, but I am sure that if the minister knew the case as well as I do he would not support the prosecution. The federal department easily could have cooperated with the province of Ontario in order to get that man out of the practice of medicine.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is our business to get him out of the practice of trafficking in drugs.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Am I to understand that to be the position of the department? I should have expected a medical man to be more compassionate in the case of a fellow practitioner than to have him sent to gaol and publicly punished and then, when he came out, have the whole thing repeated. I do not think that is cooperation for the public good.

Mr. KAISER: Perhaps I might be permitted to complete the remarks I made the other evening, which unfortunately I was not able to finish at the time. I want to emphasize the fact that the public health workers and public health authorities of Canada disagree absolutely with the attitude of the government and the Minister of Health in regard to the jurisdiction of the Dominion in this important question. In order that I may present the authentic attitude of the public health officers I desire to read part of a speech which was made at one of their meetings here in Ottawa:

> In 1849, probably because the return of cholera, legislation was enacted by the parliament of Canada to establish a "Central Board of Health" and further regulations were passed in 1866.
> Four of the provinces entered confederation in 1867 and others at later dates. The basis for confederation was the British North America Act which definitely set down the matters hereafter to be within the jurisdiction of the provinces. The subjects not mentioned came under the control of the Dominion parliament. As health is not mentioned at all in the act, it would seem that the control of health matters should have remained within the jurisdiction of the Dominion.

I think the reason for Dominion jurisdiction should be plain to the minister, if he has ever paid any attention to the requirements of national health. In connection with any other question on which joint action of the provinces is necessary that then becomes a Dominion matter. Can anyone tell me when there ever was an epidemic which came just to the borders of Ontario or any other province and then stopped? Surely, with this in mind, it cannot be argued that the question of health is not a matter for Dominion jurisdiction.

A great deal has been said with regard to the efforts put forth by the various provinces and municipalities in Canada in connection with the matter of health, and I would like to place upon Hansard exactly what is being done by these provinces and municipalities, as follows:

	Provincial	Municipal
Alberta	$171,365 00	$150,000 00
British Columbia	82,154 00	132,145 07
Manitoba	96,000 00	79,000 00
Nova Scotia	74,924 72	121,226 67
New Brunswick	97,298 28	60,103 14
Ontario	753,250 00	1,300,000 00
Quebec	622,000 00	150,000 00
Saskatchewan	222,726 23	521,875 39

That gives an aggregate expenditure by the provinces and the municipalities of $4,563,068.50, which, added to the expenditure of the Department of Health, makes a grand total of $5,454,529.32 for public health work. The addition of the sums spent by voluntary societies probably would bring this expenditure to over six million dollars. In other words, we spent about 54 cents per head in connection with public health as compared with an expenditure of about $2.55 per head, which, as I pointed out the other night, is necessary in order to carry on anything like efficient public health service.

In this connection I would like to read also an editorial from the Canadian Public Health Journal with regard to the question of creating health units in various parts of the Dominion. As I mentioned the other night, we are the only country claiming to be civilized that has not resorted to this method of grappling with the question of national health. The editorial states:

> One cannot but feel that, in view of the proven fact that organization of the county health unit type will definitely save life, a determined effort should be made to make such organization possible for the whole of Canada. The relative poverty of any section of the country should be no reason why that section should be neglected. After all we are all Canadians whatever province we live in, and surely the duty of the Dominion government is to see that in every part of Canada the most valuable of our assets—human life—is cared for.
> Dominion subsidy of the provinces on condition that the provinces and municipalities do their part is the only solution of the problem. The Canadian Public Health Association has no hesitation in urging every member of parliament to give vigorous support to such a project in the full belief that the Dominion-wide scheme which should result would pay heavy dividends in the lives and health of citizens saved for Canada.

There are so many things which could be done by the Department of Health that it would undoubtedly weary the house and perhaps even the minister, if that were possible, to enumerate them. But I want to ask the minister whether his department has joined in the world-wide effort now being made to grapple with the disease of cancer. We know that in Canada this terrible scourge is spreading rapidly, as is the case in all other civilized countries, and we should endeavour to do something to mitigate its effects. There is not sufficient radium in Canada even to take care of the patients able to pay the tremendous fee charged, let alone to take care of the afflicted poor people of this country in order that they might have some hope of relief and of stopping the onrush of this disease.

The old practitioners in Canada can remember the terrific feeling they had when in other days they stood beside the bedsides of children suffering from diphtheria and who died by the hundreds and thousands. We remember when antitoxin was discovered and marvelled at the results obtained. The most gratifying moment I ever had as a practitioner or as a man interested in the public health of this country was when the provincial board of health, of which I was a member, was enabled to give the people of Ontario this wonderful remedy free of charge and thus enable the poor children of our province to have access to relief from the terrible scourge of diphtheria. Old medical practitioners will tell you that up to the time this antitoxin was discovered they never knew of a case of laryngeal diphtheria being cured. From the date of its discovery many are able to say that they have never seen a case which has been fatal.

The Dominion government should step in and lend its aid to some of these progressive movements and offer a service to the poor people of our country at cost or better. When I think of what could be done and when I see how little has been done by this department, when I look at the words "Minister of National Health" there is only one picture that comes to my mind, and that is: a golden breast plate on a basswood coffin.

Mr. WHITE (London): Could the minister give us some information as to the prevalence of cancer in this country; whether it is on the increase or decrease?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am satisfied that it is on the increase; I have not the figures here but there is no doubt that this disease is increasing.

Mr. WHITE (London): What is being done by the department to fight this terrible disease?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department has not undertaken any investigation of that character. Investigations are being carried on in the universities of the world and by other organizations, but I am sorry to state that up to date very little progress has been made in the effort to find a cure.

Mr. WHITE (London): I have some figures, compiled by a specialist in the treatment of cancer in this city, and which deal with the prevalence of cancer and the mortality rate. I have not checked these figures but I assume they are correct. This specialist states that in 1906 the mortality rate per 1,000 in the city of Ottawa due to cancer was 69.5; twenty years later, in 1926, that rate had risen to 115. In 1906, the mortality rate from tuberculosis was 156, and in 1926 it had decreased to 71.2. These figures show that while the mortality from tuberculosis has decreased 54 per cent, the mortality from cancer has increased 66.33 per cent.

It seems to me that the Department of Public Health might very well consider conducting a program of education so that the people of this country would be advised as to what steps to take in these cases. The educational work with relation to tubercular treatment started about twenty years ago, and the above figures show the degree of success that has attended that movement. It seems to me that cancer could be handled in the same way. I agree with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) when he says that we should have a supply of radium, but there is another phase of the matter which should be considered. In certain cases radium can be used to excess with resultant harm rather than good, but in view of the fact that the ravages of this disease are increasing so rapidly it seems to me that the Department of Public Health should pay some attention to this matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: How much of this amount of $150,000 is for salaries?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Salaries, $83,575.

Mr. McGIBBON: What does the balance represent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Travelling expenses, $5,500; printing and stationery, $4,000; scientific apparatus and chemical supplies, $14,500; legal expenses, $30,500; sundry expenses, $11,925; making a total of $150,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister give us some details of that $30,000 for legal expenses?

[Mr. J. F. White.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Those expenses are incurred through proceedings taken under the Food and Drugs Act and under the Narcotics Act. I do not think I have the details before me of the information which the hon. member would like to have as to who received these fees. I think there was a return brought down a week or two ago giving the information for previous years.

Mr. McGIBBON: We are having a repetition of our experience this morning; when we desire information we cannot get it. In every case we receive the answer that a return is going to be brought down some time, probably next year or the year after. The outstanding feature of the last few days in connection with the estimates for every department, has been that we are unable to obtain any information. Does the department retain any solicitors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not the duty of the Solicitor General to handle some of these cases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department pays the expenses involved in the prosecutions, although the Department of Justice taxes the costs. I have a report here for the legal expenses for 1927-28, if the hon. member is interested in that. The payments were as follows:

P. Monette, Montreal	$11,215 82
Phelan and Richardson, Toronto	1,295 70
Wood, Hogg and Bird, Vancouver	1,951 10
Accounts under $1,000	6,401 24

There are many prosecutions, and it runs into a good deal of money.

Mr. McGIBBON: What department employed those lawyers?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Justice department.

Mr. McGIBBON: And has not the minister or his department anything to say about that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We apply to the Department of Justice for the services of a lawyer. We have been doing work with their cooperation and seeking to get a firm of lawyers who will specialize on the work in the larger centres. That is being done in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. We think we get better results in that way.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are all those firms on the patronage list?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know anything about a list?

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the name of the firm in Toronto?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Phelan and Richardson.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to draw the minister's attention to many requests which members have had with regard to full-time health units and the suggestion which has been made that the Department of Health should help these units throughout Canada, providing the money that has so far been provided by the Rockefeller Foundation. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to very excellent speeches which have been delivered by several hon. members on this side of the house who happen to belong to the medical profession. Assistance to these health units was advocated by one of them the other night, but I do not think the minister gave any reply in regard to the matter. This seems to be an excellent opportunity for the Department of Health of the Dominion to step in and do some really constructive work. There is not the slightest doubt that although these health units have only started in a small way in Quebec and British Columbia—and I understand an effort is being made to start some in Alberta—nothing would do more for the public health than a properly organized effort in this respect supplemented by help from the Dominion. Without taking up further time of the committee, I should like the minister to make a statement as to his opinion in regard to this suggestion and whether or not some help may be expected in the near future.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): With the idea of the establishment of health units in Canada the department is thoroughly in accord. We think it is an excellent measure, but to date the government have not considered that they should provide a portion of the money required to develop these units. It has seemed to us that if this policy is to become general throughout Canada and to be applied in various counties or districts, which would form units, it should remain, as it is to-day, under provincial control. That is the system which has been followed largely in the United States, where the conditions are very similar to our own, the only variation being in the devastated areas in the Mississippi district where the federal government stepped in and contributed. Outside of that the matter is left to the municipal or state authorities.

Mr. SPENCER: Did the Rockefeller Foundation not give a great deal of help in the United States?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, in the United States, and also in Quebec. That is a field which they have undertaken and in which they are doing very good work.

Mr. SPENCER: As Canadians we cannot very well expect to receive help continually from an outside association.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the Rockefeller Foundation are doing in that regard what they are doing in very many other fields with the tremendous funds at their disposal. It is true that they have come into Canada at times and subsidized various experimental institutions and health organizations. I think the work carried on by the mental hygiene council here is being subsidized very largely by the Rockefeller people. These health units are made up of counties or districts where the population would run from 20,000 to 30,000 and the annual cost is estimated at from $10,000 to $15,000. Under the system, a full-time medical officer is stationed at a point within the district. He has a staff of nurses, assistants, clerks and so forth; he carries on a campaign of education, and is at hand to control epidemics. No doubt that plan is working well, not only in the United States but in some of the provinces and in other countries. So far the Dominion government has not considered the matter of giving grants from the federal treasury to these health units.

Mr. SPENCER: I take it for granted that the government has not closed the door on the possibility of a grant being made.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; it is being considered.

Mr. COTNAM: I should like to get a definite statement from the Minister of National Health with regard to his attitude on the question of establishing local health units, and whether his department intends to co-operate with the municipalities and the provinces in this matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have just said no; it has not been so decided at present.

Mr. COTNAM: It seems to me that the Department of National Health functions for the purpose of not functioning. It is very difficult to understand why we have a department of national health. I should like to know exactly what the functions of the department are. In what way is the department contributing to the general health of the Dominion of Canada? There can be no question in the mind of anyone in this country to-day that the greatest question of all is the preservation of our national health, and the federal Department of National Health is simply juggling with the question in order to avoid spending a little money to help the provinces in their work of maintaining the public health. The time has come when there should be a little more cooperation. This is not a political question; it is a great national question—the preservation of the health and happiness of the people of Canada.

The hon. member for Ontario a few moments ago spoke about the use of radium. Is it the intention of the minister or of his department to nationalize the supply of radium in the Dominion? This is one of the live questions in the country to-day as regards the public health. The supply of radium in most of the cities is owned by private individuals, and as everyone is aware, radium is a very expensive metal and the treatment is also costly. At the present time radium is owned only in small quantities by medical men in various cities. I think the statement was made a short time ago that some eight private physicians in Toronto and the Toronto General hospital own all the radium in that city. Radium to-day has become one of the outstanding necessities in the treatment of the great plague of cancer which is abroad throughout the land. Practically every medical man in Canada who has had any experience in treating malignants, knows that there is no question that malignancy at the present time is greatly on the increase, not only in this country but throughout the world. Any method which even promises something of hope to those poor people who suffer from cancerous diseases, anything that will offer them any hope of life or relief from pain, should be supported by the Minister of National Health. In Sweden at the present time they have nationalized the supply of radium, and the government and the Department of National Health should nationalize our supply so that in convenient places they could have establishments with adequate supplies of radium where these sufferers could be sent. People who cannot afford the treatment should not be deprived of the right to have it if it is going to lengthen their lives or relieve them from suffering. If that radium were supplied by the government and placed in accessible localities with men skilled in its use, this would be indeed a great boon for the poor people of the Dominion. There are many people in this country who are wealthy enough to procure treatment in places where radium is obtainable in sufficient quantities, but unfortunately many men own radium in such small quantities that it is not adequate to relieve the trouble it is intended to relieve, and so I would impress on the minister the necessity of coordinating the work of his department with that of the provincial departments and considering seriously the necessity of establishing medical health offices in counties throughout the Dominion to cooperate with the provincial departments of health. I would also urge upon him the extreme necessity for nationalizing the supply of radium in this country, and considering in what way he can best cooperate with the provinces in order to relieve the suffering of people in this country who are afflicted with cancer and at the present time are not able to get the radium treatment.

Mr. WHITE (London): Would the minister make a statement as to the treatment of cancer and the activities of the department in that regard?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have said that we were not dealing in any way with the treatment of cancer.

Mr. WHITE (London): Is not that within the functions of the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have not done so up to the present time.

Mr. COTNAM: I feel very keenly on this subject. I do not think it is the business of the national health department to shuffle all the responsibility and all the work on to the provinces and the municipal health authorities. I would like a definite statement from the minister as to what is to be the attitude of the government and of the department in this matter, whether they are going to back up the provinces and the municipalities in the conservation of the general health of the Dominion. It is a shame that in this country we are spending more on our live stock than we are spending to conserve the health of the people. I believe that the minister should look into this matter very, very carefully and give his decision to the house. Let us know just exactly what the department is doing or whether it has done anything at all towards mitigating the terrible scourge of cancer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have been very frank. I have told my hon. friend that the department has made no study of cancer, that that work is going on in various universities and laboratories throughout the world. It is now the subject of a great deal of research. I do not wish to repeat what I have said in this house on a number of occasions, but up to the present time our laboratory work has been devoted to maintaining the purity of our food products, maintaining the standards of drugs and medicines that are required, and protecting the public in relation to the proprietary medicines which heretofore were on the market.

There is nothing in the estimates for health units. I informed my hon. friend a few moments ago that we were thoroughly in sympathy with the health unit idea, but that it did not seem opportune or advisable for the department to supplement what the provinces are doing because it is generally understood that the more decentralized health matters are, the better. What we are doing through our committee on public health has been to bring together and synchronize the various activities that are provincial or interprovincial in character, but I do not believe that the people of this country or that this government or the department are desirous of going into the provinces and trying to supersede or override the provincial health authorities. I can understand my hon. friend and many people desiring that from the treasury of this country there should be money paid to the provinces, but we have been told by those who are in charge of the provincial governments that unless these grants can be made continuous we had better not come in, because it would only involve the provinces in expenditures which they are not ready to undertake. At the interprovincial conference it was decided that it was desirable that the Dominion government should keep within its own field and the provincial governments within theirs, and that if the subsidies granted under the confederation agreement are found to be insufficient for the present needs of the provinces, the matter of increasing those subsidies should be considered. It is well understood in this house that that matter is being given consideration by the government. If the subsidies to the provincial governments are increased, and if they wish to develop health units out of the increased revenues, that is their business, and I have no doubt that they will do it without desiring some outside authority to supervise them.

Mr. COTNAM: The minister says that his department is in sympathy with the health unit movement. It is only natural to suppose that the minister of health would be in sympathy with health matters throughout the Dominion, but the people are looking not so much for sympathy as for assistance. Sympathy may go a long way, but it does not accomplish much. I think the minister is not taking a proper stand with regard to the matter. It is the business of his department to cooperate with the provincial authorities and coordinate the work of his department with that of the provincial department of health in every possible way even to the extent of making grants or using money for research work with a view to mitigating suffering and increasing the general health of this Dominion.

Mr. HOWDEN: I do not propose to answer at all for the Minister of National Health. I quite agree with the hon. member for North Renfrew that the rural health depot is a very desirable movement, and I would certainly like to see the federal health department make grants if possible, towards that movement. However, as we have heard on frequent occasions, it is the desire of the provinces, as far as we can understand, that grants be made at one time to cover everything, and since this is a provincial matter, doubtless in that way sufficient allowance will be made for the provinces to indulge in the rural health depots.

Just a word with regard to radium, Mr. Chairman. The radium treatment for cancer is by no means final and definite. If this government supplied a sufficient amount of radium to meet the needs of all the cities and all the surgeons throughout Canada it would cost millions of dollars, if not billions. Many years ago they used to try and cure cancer by burning it out with plasters of zinc sulphate. This was very often in the hands of quacks. Then came the time when we endeavoured to cure cancer by cutting it out, and if we got at it early enough and cut wide enough we were sometimes able to cure it for a few years. And now we have radium and X-ray, but the treatment is by no means definite and conclusive. If we had arrived at the stage where we were certain of there being a cure for cancer, I would say yes, by all means, let the federal government, the provincial governments, and any other government buy radium for the citizens of Canada. But we are not past the experimentation stage yet, and I think it would be decidedly unwise and quite unjustifiable for the federal government to spend a large amount of money in a supply of radium.

Mr. COTNAM: Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree with the honourable gentleman in that statement with regard to radium, for this reason: He says that because we cannot cure all cases of cancer, and because it is not a sure cure the federal government should not spend any large amount of money on radium. In the history of medicine, had we all accepted that dictum from the beginning we never would have arrived anywhere. We would not today be curing diphtheria with diphtheria antitoxin. Radium to-day is accepted as a treatment for cancer which in probably 30 or 40 per cent of the cases is as efficient as surgery; it is much less painful and it is just as sure, and if we can relieve 35 or 40 per cent of the malignant cases that people are suffering from to-day I think we should do everything possible, not spending as the hon. gentleman suggested possibly billions of dollars for radium, because that amount is not necessary, but probably one million dollars which would provide sufficient radium to alleviate a great deal of suffering and sickness, and in many cases prevent the death of people who are afflicted with cancer to-day. I do not think any private individual in this country can afford to own so much radium. Many of the men who are using it to-day are using it in such small quantities that it is not doing the work it is intended to do, and furthermore, many of them have not the experience or training necessary for the proper administration of it in connection with malignant diseases. I am asking that the government do something to assist in obtaining a national supply of radium, even if it only helps to control the scourge, and that they provide men who are skilled in the use of radium, in order to make the best use of that agent which is recognized to-day as one of the most efficient means of treating certain types of cancer.

Item agreed to.

Pollution of inland waters, $16,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the Minister explain what is being done on this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This appropriation is being expended in maintaining the purity of the water of the inland lakes that is used for culinary and drinking purposes by the shipping of those lakes. There are employed a chief sanitary engineer at a salary of $3,780; an assistant engineer for western Canada at $2,820 a year, and a junior engineer at $1,800 a year. That is a salary list of $8,400. Travelling expenses and miscellaneous $7,600. This work not only relates to the purity of water on the great lakes, but also drinking and culinary water on international and interprovincial trains.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I would like to ask the minister if there is anything being done through his department to prevent the pollution of water in rivers in western Canada? I recall being asked the question in my own constituency. Quite a number of people are required to use water from the South Saskatchewan river, and they stated that the water is polluted in many cases by refuse being thrown in, or in various ways it is polluted upstream, and they are obliged to use that water for drinking and cooking purposes because they cannot get well water.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our activities are confined to international waters such as the great lakes. The pollution of the rivers of the province would come under provincial control. It is true that where information is brought to us that pollution does take place we call attention to it and direct the authorities to take action, but it is under local control.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: In the case I refer to the river runs through two or three provinces. Suppose, for instance, the pollution takes place in the province west of Saskatchewan, what authority would Saskatchewan have to take action?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have authority there and would act in conjunction with the province.

Item agreed to.

Marine hospitals, including burial expenses of destitute deceased mariners and grants to institutions assisting sailors, $240,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister tell us how many patients they have had in these hospitals in the past year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some five thousand odd. I think I gave the committee a few minutes ago the number treated in these hospitals. This is an expenditure for the treatment of sick and distressed mariners, who come to our shores as well as those employed on Canadian ships. We operate two marine hospitals, one at Sydney and one at Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. At other ports provision is made as far as possible for treatment of sick sailors, in the various local hospitals. Where there is no marine or designated hospital provision is made for their treatment at private residences. This fund is derived from the shipping that comes to our ports. Two cents a ton is charged for one voyage up to three, that is a ship coming into the port of Montreal would be taxed two cents on her tonnage which would go to this fund. This fund has been in existence since confederation, and the expenditure is very little less than the revenue obtained. Last year we collected $220,048 and expended $189,969.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are these patients all treated free?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is the same treatment accorded to Canadian sailors in other ports?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Similar arrangements are made.

Mr. McGIBBON: If this fund is nearly self-supporting why does the minister ask for such a large grant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is paid into the consolidated revenue, and we ask each year for a vote of this character.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is not necessary.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We do not use the money that is collected. It is paid into consolidated revenue.

Mr. SPENCER: Can the minister give us the number of destitute mariners that have had to be buried on this side?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am informed comparatively few, probably two, or three, or four, depending on circumstances.

Item agreed to.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts; public health in other districts; Tracadie and Bentinck island lazarettoes, leprosy generally and Public Works Health Act, $210,000.

Mr. FRASER: I see this refers to salaries. What amount of revenue does the Department of Health collect?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The revenue collected in the department amounts to $287,759.48. That is made up as follows: from the Food and Drug Act, $11,193.55; from opium and narcotic drugs, $7,078.50; patent medicines, $7,140.75; sick mariners' dues, $223,283.46; casual revenue, $39,063.22. That will be found on page 77 of the report.

Mr. FRASER: Let me ask the minister if the officials who are responsible for the collection of that revenue are bonded.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of them are, yes.

Mr. FRASER: I suppose the minister is familiar with the requirements of the act with regard to public officers. Under section 12 he is required to register these bonds with the Secretary of State. Have these officials been properly registered?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. FRASER: I have the report here and the minister's officials do not appear therein. What is the explanation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The sick mariners' fees are collected by the Department of National Revenue in conjunction with our department, and that is a large item. These are bonds in connection with those officers.

Mr. FRASER: Do I understand from the minister that the officer who collects these fees for his department is an official of the Department of National Revenue and not of his department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are agents for our department in the collection of these fees. They are shown under the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. GARDINER: What is meant by "salaries and contingencies in organized districts"? What districts have been organized?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The organized districts are those where there are quarantine stations, as at Victoria, Halifax, Sydney, St. John and Grosse Ile in Quebec.

Item agreed to.

Immigration medical inspection, $300,000.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister might give us an outline of this.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This appropriation is to cover the cost of medical examination of immigrants before embarkation and on arrival at Canadian ports, in accordance with section 5 of the Immigration Act, which stipulates that persons who belong to prohibited classes, physically, mentally or socially undesirable, shall not be permitted to settle in Canada. It also covers the cost of operating the detention hospitals at ocean ports where immigrants who require medical attention are kept. The increase is due to additional provisions made for more efficient medical examination overseas. It is estimated that the roster doctors now being appointed—there are about 450 British men now in that service—will examine about 25,000 prospective immigrants on a fee basis. The average cost will be about $2 each, but it is expected that the British treasury will refund 50 per cent of the fees paid. That is an arrangement entered into last year. Medical officers are also transferred temporarily from Quebec to other stations in the winter and are paid an allowance of $100 a month during that period. Under this vote salaries and living allowances overseas amount to $189,022.50; travelling expenses, $56,500; maintenance of detained persons, including furnishings for an addition to the Savard Park hospital, Quebec, now under construction, $14,000; roster doctors' fees, $25,000; miscellaneous, printing and stationery, $15,477.50. We have overseas 24 doctors. These were located within the last year more in the centres of the population, the work in the rural parts of Great Britain being done largely by what are known as roster doctors. We have our own roster and make our own selection of British doctors, and, as I have said, there are some 450 of these acting for us this year. On the continent we have men stationed at points of embarkation, namely, Riga, Danzig, Hamburg, Rotterdam and Paris. We meet the people as they come in and they are examined. In Great Britain the service is more extensive.

Mr. LUCAS: How many doctors are there in Great Britain?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are 21.

Mr. GARDINER: Canadian doctors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: Are these stationed or do they travel about?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are stationed at the larger centres and they travel within that area.

Mr. McGIBBON: In view of that fact, how does the minister explain the enormous sum of $56,000 for travelling expenses?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Although these men are confined to the centres they will from time to time visit rural districts, keeping in touch with the roster doctors on the staff.

Mr. McGIBBON: It seems to me that $56,000 for travelling expenses out of a total of $300,000 is out of all proportion. They must be taking a good many Cook's tours.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. There is a large sum spent every year in the transfer of officers from Quebec to St. John and Halifax during the winter, and back again in the spring. Experience has also shown us, in regard to the work on the continent, that with the rush of applicants coming in it is necessary to send men from the offices of Great Britain to various points on the continent to facilitate matters.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the department must be badly organized when 25 per cent of the total expenditure is taken up in travelling expenses.

Mr LUCAS: Is it the intention of the department to retain the Canadian doctors in Great Britain now that they have appointed roster doctors there?

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There must be a number of Canadian doctors in Great Britain to supervise the work, yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What are the salaries paid?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The grade 3 medical officer, who is the chief officer, receives $5,250; grade 2, $4,590. and grade 1, $3,810.

Mr. LUCAS: I was under the impression that, according to the recommendations made last year, after the appointment of roster doctors the department would gradually withdraw the Canadian doctors with the exception of a few at certain points. Apparently, however, they are all still there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are withdrawing some of them.

Mr. LUCAS: If I remember rightly, the number was originally 15; now it is 21.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; we had as many as 25 in Great Britain at one time. There have been two or three retirements and resignations but we are not increasing the number; on the contrary, we hope to reduce it.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the minister think it is necessary for these doctors to be paid travelling expenses amounting to $56,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They must do a great deal of travelling.

Mr. LUCAS: That seems a very large expenditure.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a good deal of travelling back and forth, and that includes the travelling expenses of our service here as well.

Mr. GARDINER: Are they paid any living allowance over and above their salaries?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; $75 per month to grade 3 officers; $60 per month to grade 2 officers and $55 to grade 1 officers. That allowance is paid overseas only.

Mr. GARDINER: How are these grades determined?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): By the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GARDINER: Upon examination?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON: Would the minister tell us how much is paid the roster doctors and how much is paid the Canadian doctors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The roster doctor works on a fee basis, averaging about $2 for each examination. It is estimated that approximately 25,000 immigrants will be examined on a fee basis and, as I said before, 50 per cent of this amount will be paid by the British government.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In view of the fact that immigration is to be curtailed and in fact restricted entirely to agricultural labourers and domestic servants, will the minister say why it is now necessary to maintain this inspection and, in fact, increase the item by $100,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The immigration has not been curtailed as yet; it is larger than ever this year. If the immigration falls off and the service is not necessary, of course this amount will be reduced next year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But my point is that in spite of these inspectors in the old country we are in the unfortunate position of returning from 200 to 300 people each year, even after they have been inspected. Does the minister think that is a very good report; does he think it is fair to these people to be sent back after they have been passed by our selected inspectors overseas?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it can be shown that there has been a falling off in the deportations because of physical unfitness since this service went into operation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister any figures showing that falling off?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. In 1927-28 there were 104 rejections on medical grounds and last year there were only 81. Many of the deportations are not made on medical grounds but come about because of the inability of the immigrant to make good. He may have some slight physical defect which would not bar him from Canada; if he fails to get along he magnifies his trouble and blames it for his failure, and to-day the municipalities are very insistent that these people who cannot take care of themselves shall be sent back. I think that largely accounts for many deportations.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Evidently the minister misunderstood my question; I am not referring to deportations but to rejections at our ocean ports. According to page 39 of the report of the Department of Immigration for 1926-27, 539 immigrants were rejected after being accepted in the old country. The following year there was a reduction, but that reduction only applied to Great Britain and Italy. The minister has pointed out that in one year we had 104 rejections, and in the other year 81; I take that to mean rejections made on the other side.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, those rejections were made at ports of arrival.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then again there is a tremendous difference between the figures of the Department of Health and those of the Department of Immigration. If the rejections numbered only 81 I do not think there would be a great deal of trouble, but here are two official reports. Which are we to believe? We are given what we believe to be official figures with regard to rejections at ocean ports, but the figures of the Department of Health are quite different. According to the figures of the Department of Immigration in one year there were over 500 rejections and in the other year over 300, yet the minister has told us that there were only 81 rejections in the one year and 104 in the other.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am giving the figures for the year just closed.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have no figures for the year just closed, but I think we have here sufficient evidence of the fact that there is a good deal of unfairness and injustice done these people. I quite understand that according to the law final acceptance is made on this side, but it does seem strange that after an expenditure of $200,000 we should reject 300 people after they reach this country.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They were not all rejected because of physical unfitness.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): We do not know the reasons for their rejection, but I do not think criminality, for instance, would arise in the short period of the voyage. Will the minister give me the reason for these rejections?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Rejections are made in some cases for lack of funds, for immorality, for criminality, for misrepresentation and for many other reasons.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister mentioned immorality. Does he mean that in some cases immorality has occurred after the immigrant has left the other side and before he reaches Canada?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Possibly, but these matters are handled by the immigration authorities. In some cases immigrants may be in Canada for a month or so before they are sent back.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That may be so with regard to deportations but it would not apply to rejections at ocean ports.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are many reasons for rejection.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where would you get the evidence of criminality or immorality after the man left the other side?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That tendency might reveal itself on the trip over, through theft and so on.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is more serious than I thought. Instead of having a medical inspection perhaps it would be better thoroughly to inspect the individual before he leaves.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Inquiries are made.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister seen the list of deportations? In view of the pronouncement which has been made that immigration will be lessened, instead of increasing this vote it should be decreased.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There has been no lessening in immigration; in fact it is greater from Great Britain this year than it was last year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If there was coordination between the departments the Minister of Immigration would advise that he was going to lessen his work and the expenditure could be reduced in that regard.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There will be that coordination, undoubtedly.

Item agreed to.

Venereal diseases, $100,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Could we have some information as to the progress which is being made along these lines?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a service in which the provincial governments cooperate with the federal government. There are some 56 clinics in operation throughout the various provinces which provide free treatment of venereal diseases. Laboratory facilities are also provided for diagnoses, and in addition there are subsidiary clinics in the hospitals and institutions where treatment is given. The patients in remote districts are treated through an arrangement with the local physicians. This grant is divided according to the population of the provinces, and the expenditures for 1927-28 were as follows:

Nova Scotia	$ 5,790 00
New Brunswick	4,287 22
Quebec	26,098 47
Ontario	32,425 93
Manitoba	6,743 67
Saskatchewan	8,372 80
Alberta	6,504 21
British Columbia	5,798 23
Printing and stationery	2,837 58

Under the arrangements with the provincial governments they are to spend a like amount of money.

Mr. McGIBBON: This seems to be "a vicious principle" which is followed in the latter part of the minister's estimates, but which cannot be followed in the first part of the estimates.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This arrangement originated shortly after or during the latter part of the war, when it was represented that there would be the necessity of establishing clinics. At one time the amount voted was $200,000. There is no doubt that the establishment of these laboratories and clinics throughout Canada has done a great deal of good and the work being done in the various provinces by certain public health bodies has been very helpful. This is particularly true of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which provinces have been very active in the matter of controlling these venereal diseases.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any information as to whether or not this control is becoming more efficient?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I could not say that we have succeeded in controlling infection from venereal diseases, but where early care and treatment has been given the results have been very satisfying. Human nature has not changed very much.

Mr. SPENCER: Is there any compulsory registration? While I am on my feet may I ask whether the department keeps any statistics based on reports received from the different hospitals, which would show whether or not the disease is increasing?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Every case is recorded and registered; reports are received each month from the clinics.

Mr. SPENCER: How about those who do not attend the clinics?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If we do not get in touch with them we have no report, but every case which comes in contact with the clinics is reported on.

Mr. SPENCER: Do the medical associations report to the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The medical men do, not the associations.

Mr. HOWDEN: The provincial health laws require that all these cases be reported as soon as they are discovered.

Mr. GERSHAW: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the minister's statement that considerable good is being done through the work of his department, not only in the way of actual treatment but through the literature which is being broadcast throughout the country. The department publish a great number of booklets dealing with the care of infants, the care of mothers, and subjects of that nature, and these are circulated and may be obtained by anyone who is interested. I believe they are doing a great deal of good. Like other members of the house, I have received quite a few petitions from different organizations throughout the province of Alberta urging me to use my influence with the department to have assistance given in establishing health units, and I am glad to hear the minister say that the door is still open. I hope his department will be able to help the provincial organizations in the establishment of these units in the different provinces, more especially in the more remote districts. We had a very interesting discussion this afternoon on cancer, but I hope that that discussion will not give the people of this country the impression that that disease can be cured by radium treatment. If that should happen I am afraid it will only bring further disappointment to many sufferers. As we know, radium will cure some cancers, if they are in an accessible position and if treated early, but in other cases the results obtained are not as satisfactory as we would like them to be. The hon. member knows that a great deal of research work is being done by the Rockefeller Foundation and like institutions and should the department undertake similar work it would be duplicating what they are doing in this connection. But I do not think the people suffering from this disease should be allowed to get the impression that radium will eliminate their trouble.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and National Health—care of patients and medical examination of pensioners, $2,600,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): On the suspension of this item two evenings ago I asked the minister for certain information. I think it was in regard to the number of patients by provinces and the amount of money spent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend inquired regarding the reorganization of the departments of health and soldiers' civil re-establishment. These departments were amalgamated by an enactment of last year. The deputy minister of health became the deputy minister of the new department, which is now termed the Department of Pensions and National Health. The functions and activities of the former department of health have continued to be administered as a separate entity. For some time the fusion of these two departments will be somewhat difficult. There will be maintained for some years the section dealing with soldiers' affairs and the section dealing with health as we have been discussing it this afternoon. But it is possible to bring about fusion in certain instances. In Vancouver we have the Shaughnessy hospital where we have been looking after the veterans. Vancouver being one of our large seaports, it will be possible to treat a certain type of injured mariner or a mariner requiring surgical aid in Shaughnessy hospital through the staff employed under what is now known as the pension section. From year to year I have no doubt that as conditions develop there will be a union of the two services.

Prior to reorganization we had what might be considered dual control. That is, in the head office the director of medical services was responsible to the deputy minister, whereas in the field the medical officer was responsible to the director of medical services and the administration was responsible to the director of administration. We have made these services directly responsible to the deputy minister.

Possibly the most important item of the reorganization has been the consummation of an agreement with the Board of Pension Commissioners whereby the board have been provided with the necessary staff, medical, clerical and stenographic, both at head office and in the districts. This will enable the Board of Pension Commissioners to control the persons required to prepare the data necessary to accompany applications for pensions to the point where the board are able to adjudicate on the question of entitlement to pensions and to assess, in cases of injury or disease, the degree of disability present. This staff at present is lent to the pension board and consists of about 100 employees. With this service coming within the purview of the Civil Service Commission, it will then become attached to the Board of Pension Commissioners.

The Department of Pensions and National Health has continued to give effect to the ruling of the Board of Pension Commissioners in the matter of payment of pensions authorized by the board and in the matter of maintaining the necessary statistics and records for such payments. The department also continues to care for what may be termed the auxiliary services, such as the custody of files, which must of necessity be used by the board and the department; the issuance of transportation to men called in for examination for pensions; the medical examination of all men for admittance to hospitals. The above arrangement has been made after consultation with the Board of Pension Commissioners and with their concurrence. In addition to the above, many changes have been made in the method of handling the internal work of the department. Practically all the recommendations of the Scott report have been carried out.

I think my hon. friend asked for a comparison in regard to the staff. The total number employed by the department on January 31, 1929, amounted to 1,973 persons, including 100 lent to the Board of Pension Commissioners, and in March, 1928, the number employed was 1,969. This would indicate a slight increase, but that is accounted for by the fact that whereas on March 31, 1927, we had 48,027 disability pensioners, on March 31, 1928, there were 50,635 and on March 31, 1929, there were 54,620. This means that there is an additional number of pensioners receiving benefits under the Pension Act and under the treatment and hospitalization that is given to that class. In addition, the reopening of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act has necessitated the addition of some ten or twelve officials to take care of new applications and to issue policies, and again some of our medical officers, who heretofore have been on a fee basis, have been placed on a part-time salary basis, thus saving the department considerable sums of money, besides being more satisfactory.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. BENNETT: Did the minister state how the sum of $250,000 was spent that was given for indigent cases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will come to that. The total number of soldier patients admitted to treatment during the fiscal year 1928-29 was 8,890 as compared with 8,191 in the fiscal year 1927-28. I have indicated that there is a very considerable increase in the number of disabled men who are receiving pensions for disability and injury, these additional cases being obviously entitled to treatment of their pensionable disability when need arises. My hon. friend the other evening asked in regard to sheltered employment. The care of this class, a problem of the department to which a great deal of thought is given, is causing much worry to the department. Many of these veterans are getting old and are probably suffering from disease incidental to old age. The department is sometimes criticized for the unfortunate position in which these individuals find themselves. Usually they are unable to secure adequate employment, they are too old to be satisfactorily trained in new trades, and are unwilling to be placed in a category where they have to request assistance from the department in the way of unemployment relief. If they are married they do not want to be separated from their families, and they do not want to go into the hospitals or other institutions where they can receive treatment and care. Many of these cases are pensioners who do not require hospital treatment for injury or disease received on service, but rather what is called veterans' care or domiciliary care. Under the recommendations of last year we are taking care of many of these cases. Just here I might explain that when the public works estimates were under consideration the leader of the opposition asked in regard to the construction of a hospital in Winnipeg for the care of the soldiers in that district, and it seemed to be his impression that this hospital was being built and made a standard hospital. That is not the case. As a matter of fact for a period of years we have rented quarters where the convalescent cases or cases requiring veterans' care could be looked after. We have now built in Winnipeg a hospital of 250 beds to which that type of case will go. The active cases requiring surgical or medical treatment will continue to go to the general hospitals in that city.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is this an attempt to take care of the inactive cases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, largely.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are they of the old class?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Largely.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is this the first move to provide a sort of home for these inactive cases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I imagine that eventually it will become that. There is a number of cases in every locality where nothing can be done for the patient in the way of medical or surgical treatment. He requires some place where he can be taken care of. Winnipeg is the only place between the great lakes and Calgary where we have a government institution of that kind.

In the case of the individual who is having difficulty in securing employment in industry, we in cooperation with the various employment bureaus throughout Canada have been selecting these cases. Where they cannot learn a trade, they may be able to perform some operation in the manufacture of some article, and we are trying to place them with various industrial establishments where they can do work of that nature. Some are being taken care of in that way. Unfortunately there are some who are unemployable, and who will have to have something in the way of institutional treatment or care.

My hon. friend also asked in regard to staff terminations. The figures are as follows:

Staff Terminations

	H.O.	N.S. & P.E.I.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
1927-28..	22	11	3	37	86	6	6	4	8	183
1928-1929..	33	11	7	33	105	16	3	8	10	226

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In regard to those patients, the number this year is 8,890. When Mr. Melville came to me I asked him if it would be as easy to give the figures by provinces and for two years, this year and last. I just wanted to see what increase had taken place.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On March 31, 1929, the figures were as follows:

District	General Treatment	Mental	Tuberculosis	Total
A—Montreal district ..	90	275	27	392

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What are the figures for the year before?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Those are not shown by districts.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Melville said that he would have a table prepared covering the two years, this year and last.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will get that for the convenience of my hon. friend. The proportions do not change much from year to year. We handled more cases last year by six or seven hundred. To continue:

District	General Treatment	Mental	Tuberculosis	Total
B—Halifax district ..	117	39	42	198
C—Ottawa district ..	81	5	13	99
D—Toronto district..	297	9	82	388
F—London district ..	138	427	76	641
G—Winnipeg district.	206	65	44	315
H—Regina district ..	40	82	25	147
I—Calgary district ..	163	50	16	229
J—Vancouver district.	161	98	46	305
K—St. John, N.B. district..	53	4	27	84

I shall be glad to give my hon. friend a copy of that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is just to see how this keeps up and where the increases are. Where is the increase of 700 generally made up, in what type of cases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is made up of the increased number of pensioners as compared with a year or two ago, and the fact that we are treating more people for non-pensionable disabilities. There have been quite a number of that type coming in since last winter. And then again there has been the soldier who is not able to get into institutions for care and treatment who has come to us to receive care and attention in our institutions. Under the veterans' care there were 115 of that type in our hospitals.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And this is the first year that this type comes under the recommendation made that the department should not turn away the veteran.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Exactly.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I wanted to study this matter to find out just where the increase was, and until I get the information I am not prepared to make the remark I desire to make. Where are the mental cases cared for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Those in the Quebec area at Ste. Anne's hospital; at Halifax in the provincial mental institution, and the same in New Brunswick; in Ontario at London, in the departmental hospital, Westminster; in Manitoba we use the provincial institution; the same in Alberta, and the same in British Columbia.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is there still an inspector of hospitals in connection with these cases? It formerly was Dr. McCoomb; is he still in the employ of the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is there any inspection made or care taken of these cases? Is there any special relation between them and the department after they are confined to those provincial institutions?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Doctor Cathcart is the chief psychiatrist in the department. He is at the present time making a survey of those institutions in western Canada. Last year he made a very comprehensive survey in eastern Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would the minister state where the tubercular cases are treated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In Nova Scotia at Kentville; that is a provincial institution. In the Toronto district, at the Mountain sanatorium at Hamilton, the Calydor sanatorium at Gravenhurst, the Byron sanatorium at London; in Manitoba at Ninette sanatorium. That is a private organization. In Saskatchewan at Fort Qu'Appelle; in Alberta at Robertson, and in British Columbia at Tranquille, near Kamloops; in New Brunswick at the River Glade sanatorium, and also the St. John county hospital.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There are some cases treated in general hospitals.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have some in our own hospitals.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the wish of the ex-servicemen with regard to treatment in general hospitals?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It varies. When I was in British Columbia last year I found men there who would have been better off at Kamloops, but they asked to come back to Vancouver. They preferred to be in the tubercular ward there. I do not think there is any prejudice one way or the other.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is really a condition that belongs to the case.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Just a word or two in regard to the reorganization. It looks as if the minister's reorganization has been to transfer 100 medical men from under the old soldier's re-establishment department to the pension board.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend said 100 medical men; that is not so. A staff of 100 has been transferred. That is an important part of the reorganization, but not all, because that established a relationship between the pension board and the department which I am afraid did not exist before.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then what was known as the "D.M.S." is now known as what?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Director of Medical Services.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): He is still the D.M.S.?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. He is responsible to the deputy.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The only difference then is that these medical men, and the staff connected with them, are transferred directly from the soldiers' re-establishment department to the pension board.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood the minister to say that the members of the staff who had retired in the two years he gave numbered 183 in 1927-28 and 226 in 1928-29. Is that correct?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is correct.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Following that up, will the minister now give me the number added to the department during those two years.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I gave the number of retirements for 1928-29; I will now give the number of appointments per district:

	1927-28	1928-29
Staff appointments at headquarters	36	44
Prince Edward Island	5	12
New Brunswick	3	3
Quebec	24	38
Ontario	69	91
Manitoba	9	12
Saskatchewan	4	1
Alberta	4	16
British Columbia	7	18

This makes a total for 1927-28 of 161, and 1928-29, 235.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the necessity for so many appointments?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In 1928-29 there were 129 resignations; 15 retired on account of ill health; there were 30 surplus; 16 were unsatisfactory; there were 4 cases of misconduct; there were 21 doing temporary duty; and there were 10 deceased.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many resignations were asked for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know of any asked for, although there may have been some.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many of these were civil service appointments?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not very many.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): None?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not very many.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would it be one per cent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Less than that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister now give us the names of the medical officers appointed last year? First, I should like to have those appointed at headquarters and secondly those added to the different units—that is, full time appointments. Beginning with headquarters, what medical officers were appointed in the last twelve months?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At headquarters there was the Director of Medical Services, Doctor Millar, and Doctor Davies is doing temporary work in connection with insurance. If my memory serves me, those are all at headquarters, except that Doctor Burke of Toronto entered the service three weeks ago and is now at Ste. Anne.

Mr. McGIBBON: Whom did they replace?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Doctor Millar replaced Doctor Arnold, the former medical director. Doctor Davies is merely a temporary appointee, working under the extended insurance act.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister is not prepared to answer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I think so.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would as soon have the list of officers appointed in the last twelve months.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Of course, in the field appointments have been made of men who are doing work on a fee basis from week to week. I have not that information at the moment. There are men resigning or dropping out and others being appointed. They are not permanent; they are on a fee basis and their services are obtained from time to time. I have not that information here, but it can be secured and I will see that my hon. friend gets it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Now I am going to sum up my opinion of what has been brought out during the course of our investigation into these matters. Under this item there are two or three points to be considered. First there is the reorganization, and in making a criticism at this time I must say that one has to forget personal feelings. We all have a kindly feeling for the Minister of Pensions, but as members of parliament it is our duty to investigate the conduct of public affairs, to draw conclusions and if possible to make sensible or reasonable criticisms which at the same time should be constructive. When this department was reorganized one year ago we were led to believe that with the dismissal of the assistant deputy minister and several other officials some really constructive work would be accomplished and there would be a reduction in the cost of conducting this work, but what do we find? There has been no reduction at all but rather an increase in every way. I should like this committee to consider for a few moments what has happened. In order to do so you must take your bluebook together with the estimates for the last two years, and that will give you an idea of what has really been accomplished in the way of reorganization.

I find that this department has been reorganized to this extent: There has been dropped an assistant deputy minister whose salary was $4,860; in his place there has been added a chief executive officer whose salary is $4,920. There has been dropped in this reorganization one pathologist and bacteriologist whose salary was $2,820, and there has been added one assistant chemist at a salary of $2,940. There has been dropped one senior clerk at a salary of $3,480, and there has been added one chief clerk at a salary of $3,480. There have been dropped two accountants at salaries of $2,720 and there has been added so far one clerk at a salary of $2,100. In all, the reorganization of this Department of Pensions has resulted in the staff remaining fixed at 93, and there has been an increase in expenditure of $80,000. The total increase in this department has now cost this country $344,000, and that is the result of this reorganization.

Then this item provides for the care of patients. Let us again look up the estimates for two years, and we will find what has been done. In 1927 we were asked to vote $2,075,167 for the care of patients; in 1928 we voted $2,092,339 for this purpose, and this year we are asked to vote $2,600,000. We have no objection to everything being done for these men who have suffered and who to-day are in ill health as a result of the war, but look at the other side of the picture. In order to look after these returned men, whose care cost us $2,075,000 in 1927, we expended $2,713,000; that is, it cost us $2,713,000 for officials and so on in order to provide for these patients for whose care we voted $2,075,000. In 1928 we voted $2,092,000 for the returned men, but it cost us $2,688,384 to expend that sum, and this year we are asked to vote $2,600,000 for the returned men and $2,900,000 for administration. In these days when we believe it possible to reduce staffs and give better treatment and better care with a smaller expenditure, the cost of administration in this department is increasing by leaps and bounds.

How is that increase explained, Mr. Chairman? I can explain it in one or two ways, and first we might look at the report having reference to the hospitals. At Christie Street hospital, Toronto, there are 370 patients; to care for those patients we have a staff of 36 medical officers, practically one for every ten patients, and hospital staff of 198, one for every two patients; at Ste. Anne's hospital there are 398 patients, with 13 doctors and a staff of 193; at Westminster hospital there are 480 patients, with 14 doctors and a staff of 202. It does seem that, having undertaken this reorganization, the minister might have been expected to come to parliament this year and say, "We have reduced expenditures in the way of administration; we have been able to do better work and better results have been obtained for less money," but what do we find? The minister says that two years ago they released 183 members of their staff, and last year 226 were dropped. One would say it was good work to reduce the staff of the department to that extent, but what has happened? To-day the minister comes to parliament with figures which show that while the staff numbered 1,969 a year ago, it now numbers 1,971. Instead of a reduction we have an increase all along the line, and this is the supposed result of the reorganization. I have that criticism to make of the two matters which come under this one item, reorganization and the care of patients. I think that criticism is fair and is one which this house should consider, especially the minister and his department. Surely it is not necessary at this late date for the minister to say that he requires $2,900,000 in order to give the returned men some $2,600,000 in the way of hospital assistance, allowances and so on. I will have further criticisms and further questions in regard to the other items, but that is my criticism of this one. It is based on the minister's own figures and on the figures given in the bluebook of his department, and is my interpretation of what has been accomplished by the minister in the way of reorganization and the care of patients.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If the hon. member had waited probably he would not have fallen into the error under which he seems to be labouring. It is true that there has been an increase of $150,000 in the vote this year; it is also true that we show an increase in staff, but for the year 1928-29 the salary vote is $211,056 as against $277,208, showing a saving of some $60,000, although there has been an increase in the staff. That increase is brought about by the temporary employment of some 10 or 12 people in the insurance department, and by the fact that we have transferred some of the medical men from a fee basis to a part time basis.

I would like to explain to the house just how the increase of $150,000 is made up. It is estimated that it will cost $200,000 to take care of the free treatment of indigent pensioners, that is, pensioners who, under the act as it originally existed previous to last year, were not entitled to treatment except for their pensionable disability. Then we have an amount necessitated by the legislation of last year, being the amount of pensions in excess of compensation rates previously received by men undergoing treatment by the department, the payment of which pensions is now suspended in accordance with the Pension Act, section 29, amended in 1928. This totals $100,000, making a total increase of $300,000 in this vote. Then we have a decrease of $145,000 brought about by transferring the wages of operatives employed in the orthopaedic and surgical appliances factories and depots which were previously paid through this appropriation, to the salary vote. This decrease leaves a total increase of $155,000, due to the amendments which were passed last year.

The hon. member indicated that our staff was too great at Christie street hospital, and that the cost of running the hospital was too high. I would like to give a comparative statement of the costs per patient in civic hospitals as compared with our hospitals. The civic hospital costs are as follows:

	Per day
50 to 100 bed hospital	$3 45
100 to 200 bed hospital	3 21
200 to 300 bed hospital	3 47
300 to 400 bed hospital	3 58
Over 400 bed hospital	3 69
Average cost	3 45

The cost per patient in our hospitals are as follows:

	Per day
Camp Hill hospital	$2 58
Lancaster hospital	2 87
St. Annes hospital	2 75
Christie Street hospital	3 43
Westminster hospital	2 16
Deer Lodge hospital	1 72
Col. Belcher hospital	2 62
Shaughnessy hospital	2 86
Average cost	2 68

The hon. member says that our staff is too large considering the number of patients. It is true that we are well staffed in our hospitals, but we must be. There must be a change of nurses every eight hours; changes of orderlies are necessary, and we have a general service which is peculiar and necessary to a hospital such as Christie street. In Christie street hospital I think we have as well equipped and as well managed a hospital as any institution in Canada or the United States. I do not think it is necessary to go further into the matter of the staff, other than to say it is in line with the organizations in other hospitals. It is not fair to say that there are so many attendants for each patient, because we have not only the medical staff, but the clerical staff, the nursing staff, the orderlies, the engineers, and the electricians, just like any other hospital.

As far as the expenditures are concerned, we are operating to-day at a lesser cost than any other hospital in Canada, and we include the medical services rendered, an item which is not ordinarily taken into account in the cost of running a civilian hospital.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that the answer?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it is a pretty effective answer.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister think that it is fair to make a comparison between a general hospital and a hospital which has no overhead charges or anything of the kind?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We include our doctors' services, which is not taken into account in a civilian hospital. We do not count our rentals or the full maintenance or upkeep, as that part is taken care of by the Public Works department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In other words, it is no basis of comparison and is no answer to my criticism.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a complete answer.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the minister sees my point.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The one offsets the other.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister is not taking into account the overhead costs, the repairs or upkeep of the buildings; they all come under the Public Works department and the estimates of that department will show an amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars for that purpose. My criticism that there has been no serious reorganization still stands; in other words, there is no reduction whatever. The minister has picked up in one body, as in a bag, a staff of 100 with its medical officers, and transferred them from the director of medical service of his department to the department of pensions.

That is the reorganization which has been made. In other words, he has taken a medical man who was under a senior medical man and placed him under a senior administrative officer with no medical man at the head. When we come to the items concerned, I shall have some criticisms and suggestions to offer with regard to other medical officers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There are two angles from which one may approach the subject involved in the item under discussion. Both, I think, are legitimate features; both must be kept in mind, and both are important. One is that from which it has been dealt with by the hon. member for Kingston, who has carefully studied the administrative cost of the method and the results of the reorganization, and has made a very close analysis of the matter from that point of view. I shall not go into that at all, because the other angle from which I wish to approach the subject, together with this one, practically covers the whole question.

The particular feature to which I wish to refer is the service given or the service which may be necessary. On that point I want to speak for a moment in regard to perhaps the most important question that was before the house and the committee last year in connection with the subject of our returned men. I refer to the problem, which we attempted to face and the importance of which we realized, of the men who, not pensionable or carrying very small pensions, find themselves now broken down under what is sometimes called "burning out," sometimes called premature old age, but all, in the opinion of most of us, the result of their experiences overseas.

I am bringing the question up with a dual purpose, the first being that the country—I need not say parliament, because parliament always has the matter in mind—may not forget those things which happened ten years ago. The public memory is short and the vision of things that are passed is very apt to die away. From two points of view it would, to my mind, be very unfortunate if we forget this. The first is, of course, the debt we owe to the men themselves; the second is that, as time goes on and the tangible results of the war fade out, a new generation arises that has not had the experience through either itself or its friends of what war means. If the memory of these things is allowed to die, one of the greatest possible bars against a future war has been broken down. That is one reason why I should like to keep this subject before the people of the country. The other is the matter of the debt we owe. We believe this premature old age or "burning out" is definitely one of the phases of the war which has passed. I think, too, it is one of the phases that we must face more and more seriously as time goes on, and one of the phases in which we shall have the sympathetic interest and assistance of the whole country. In reference to that, and as illustrating my point, namely, that the country as a whole is prepared to accept the problem and deal generously and fairly with it, may I read a very short resolution that was passed by one of our farmer organizations? This resolution was passed unanimously by the United Farmers of Alberta at their annual convention last January, a convention of, I presume, as representative a body of taxpayers as will be found in Canada. The resolution reads:

> Whereas, it is generally recognized by medical men that soldiers who have suffered the hardships of active service are more susceptible to numerous ailments and diseases by reason of such service;
> Therefore be it resolved, that we petition the Dominion government to enact legislation granting free medical attention and hospital treatment to all men who served in the Canadian forces overseas during the great war.

This question was brought before the committee last year and was definitely dealt with by them. Their inquiry took the form of a recommendation which again formed part of their report. The preface to the recommendation enumerated the different methods which we are employing to meet the situation, all the different organizations that are trying to deal with these problem cases and care for these men. Then the committee's report stated it as their firm conviction, not only that the problem existed, but that before very long any government in power must take cognizance of it and be prepared to bring down a definite policy to meet it.

As I listened to the minister this afternoon, I noted, with some pleasure, that a number of the minor recommendations were gradually being put into force; that the basis of hospitalization, as given without cost, was being widened and now includes to a large degree the small pension class, those who, pensioned for war disability, still have not a pension which enables them to live. The reason is that a man might have only 20 or 25 per cent or less pensionable disability due entirely to war service, but he might, in addition to that, have other disabilities which, although not attributable to war service, taken in conjunction with the first render him unable to support himself. To that extent the report is met, but the definite part of the report was this: that the government was asked, through all its various agencies, by way of commission or otherwise, to investigate the question, to see what had been and could be done to meet the problem, and to ascertain, if it thought wise, the methods employed in other countries than our own in meeting the same question. The report concluded with the emphatic statement that, this information having been obtained by the government, it must then be prepared to come forward with some fairly definite policy to meet the situation.

That was the report of the committee, and those are the observations which I have to make—a summing up of facts of which I think everyone is cognizant, a summing up of the opinions of the committee as found in their report of last year. Based on that, I am going to ask the minister to go a little further in informing us as to the extent to which the government followed up that preliminary inquiry and as to the result so far as it may be a guide in the formation of a policy which may meet the situation.

Before taking my seat I should like to say one personal word, not in connection with myself, but in connection with the minister. I am not going to discuss at this moment the question of administrative ability, or the results, either from the administrative or from the economic point of view of the reorganization of the department. But I am going to say this, and I think all in this house, whether they are critical or not, can say the same: Forgetting these other things, we are glad to have a minister who at least takes a sympathetic view of this question, and who did I believe give to the committee all possible assistance, both personally and through his department. I would ask the minister to trace the steps that were taken to conform with the report of the committee last year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The committee last year made a recommendation as to treatment:

> That provision be made for free hospitalization without pay and allowances in respect of non-service disabilities for all pensioners who are unable to provide the same at their own expense.

That recommendation has been acted upon, to the advantage I think of those who have not the wherewithal to pay for the treatment which they would ordinarily secure at their own cost.

We have the problem of what to do with the man who is getting old and burning out. He cannot find employment and he has his difficulties. He has a small pension. Under the legislation that existed previous to last year he would not be entitled to treatment except for his pensionable condition. To-day that case is provided for. As far as the accommodation available within our own institutions and within contract hospitals is concerned, we have gone as far as the American people if not further, because they provide that they will take care of the soldier who is in distress, and who has not the means to provide for his own care and treatment only so far as the accommodation in their military hospitals will permit. They do not go into the contract hospitals except in the possessions outside of the United States.

I made a statement this afternoon in regard to some of those cases where the men are disabled and are growing old. The officers of the department in conjunction with different organizations in the larger centres are trying to find some form of employment for these cases in addition to what is given in the vetcraft shops that are maintained by the department in the larger centres throughout Canada. I stated that if it was found, after study of the individual case, that a man owing to age or disability, could not be trained to follow some occupation, he might yet be able to carry on some particular operation in an industry, and in that case he would be trained by the department to do that particular job, and we would seek employment for him in that industry. During the time of his vocational training the department would subsidize and maintain him. If he was able to learn that one operation and could fill a place in that industry doing the thing he had been trained to do, he would become self-supporting and earn a decent livelihood. That work has been going on for some time. As time advances, these cases become more difficult because the men are growing older and they have suffered from the fact that they have not been able to have the employment which they certainly would like to have had. The results in our vetcraft shops last year were rather encouraging. We took in 169 new men, and 132 were discharged, the total number on strength being 296. It is the object in these shops to train a man, and afterwards to find him employment outside the shop, keeping the personnel of the shops moving on from time to time. Last year I think we were more successful than previously in bringing in some who had been outside and in finding places for those who had been trained within. I might add that we have a departmental committee which is collecting data in regard to this type of case. That information is being assembled in the department. This year it is proposed to have competent officers go into the various centres and study the problem there and see what is being done, and within the next year or two I am in hopes that it will be possible to evolve a policy that can be followed.

We are now some years away from the war. As was stated by the committee which did such excellent work last year, and by the House of Commons, our problems are not settled yet. For some time yet, before they are completely settled, they will require consideration from year to year. I mentioned this afternoon the new building that was being constructed in Winnipeg with a view to providing a place where a certain type of case, if it does not require active hospital treatment, could be sent to be cared for under conditions that are more pleasant and probably better and less expensive than in a general hospital.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Minister of Public Works gave the house to understand that the Winnipeg General Hospital had served notice that the soldier patients had to leave. I think the superintendent of the Winnipeg General Hospital states that that is not correct. Would the minister be good enough to explain the situation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I had an opportunity last year to meet the superintendent of the Winnipeg General and the authorities of the St. Boniface hospital. It was indicated to us that they could not increase our accommodation within their building; in fact, they needed to build additions to take care of the civilian population, and they could give us no further bed space. We had previously had control of Deer Lodge, an old wooden building, where we were taking care of some seventy or eighty cases, convalescents and cases of that type. We decided that within that very large area extending from Port Arthur to Regina and even further west we required some place that could be used for the care of convalescents and for veterans' care, and that is what this institution will be used for. That is a step which I think will be taken in other parts of Canada. It is true that we have some buildings that could be utilized, and they are being kept in shape in case it should be necessary at a later date to utilize them; but no such building existed in Winnipeg to take care of the type of case that I am speaking of. As regards those who are suffering from active illness or require active medical or surgical treatment, they will go to the general hospitals in the city of Winnipeg.

I was going on to explain that we have in Canada a medical service provided through various organizations—in the railway service of Canada, in the great mines, and in the lumber camps. Many pensioners are working in those occupations. There is no reason why this parliament should assume treatment of men who are already protected, and they will be excluded from the proposals that I have just outlined. We also have excluded the infectious case, the case of tuberculosis, the case of insanity, and the case of venereal disease. Insanity is a charge upon the province, and it is taken care of. For tubercular cases provincial sanatoriums have been provided. As I have already stated, in the matter of industry where medical services and surgical arrangements have been made, they are taken care of.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are any grants being made to provincial tubercular institutions for veterans who are being cared for by them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If they are suffering from tuberculosis due to war service, we pay for that. If they are suffering from insanity due to war service, we pay for that. But in the field the case is not pensionable, tuberculosis for instance, becomes a provincial charge just as it is for any civilian; and in regard to infectious diseases, the same. I hope that I have covered that sufficiently.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am glad indeed to see that there is a movement in that direction. I will admit that it is a pretty slow movement, but still it is there—

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): Order. The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Maloney) had the floor.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Chairman, I really do not wish to intrude on the hon. member for Red Deer, because I agree entirely with many of the sentiments which he has expressed, as I do with those of the Minister of Pensions and National Health. He has referred to the case of the tubercular patients, also those who happen to become insane. Of course both, if the result of war service, are entitled to care and treatment at the expense of the people of Canada. I would like to remind this house of the fact that more than 500,000 men left Canada during the war to do service in Europe in defence of what we believed to be right and justice. Before these men left Canada they were promised aid of every kind should they return. A great many did not return. The great bulk, of course, did, many of them maimed for life. Those who came back diseased as the result of their service are receiving the care and attention of the government of this country, but it has been my fortune as a practising physician to come in contact with a number of men who for four years served their country faithfully and well overseas. These men to-day are suffering from tuberculosis. They received their discharge as medically fit; many of them, anxious to get out of the service, afraid to bring to the attention of the medical officer their real physical condition, were allowed to go as medically fit. Others who may have been looked upon as medically fit at the time of their discharge are to-day, through the exposures to which they were subjected during the war—although the result of those exposures may not have been patent to the medical officers when they received their discharge—suffering from tuberculosis, insanity, or other diseases. I will say this for the Minister of Pensions and National Health that in respect to any case that I have brought to his attention, he has been, as my hon. friend from Red Deer has said, most sympathetic, and in one or two instances he has insisted on these tubercular patients particularly receiving one or two months sanatorium care. That appears to be the extent to which he may go by virtue of his position as the head of this department. What I would like to suggest to the Minister of Health and Pensions is this, that before the next session of this parliament he endeavour to have an amendment to the Pensions Act prepared which would give him authority, or give parliament authority, to allow those who served overseas and who are to-day suffering from tuberculosis, cancer, or some other terrible diseases—even though they were discharged as medically fit—to be admitted to a government institution so that they may be cared for. As representatives of the people and as citizens of Canada it is our duty to help these men who were prepared to sacrifice their very lives in the defence of Canada and the empire.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I want to corroborate what has been said by the hon. member for Red Deer and the hon. member for South Renfrew. During the last year I have had occasion to deal with returned soldiers' problems, and if there is one thing that I have met with that could be likened to a stone wall it is this answer: 'This is a post-discharge disability and not attributable to war service." It has seemed to me that unless a soldier could directly prove, as in a court of law, that the particular disease from which he was suffering was due to war service, there could be no recognition of his case. I do not think the minister needs an amendment to the act. What I do think is necessary, however, is more sympathetic attention from the medical officers who examine these men. I have two particular cases in mind. There was a man—he is not in my constituency, so I am not looking for a vote—who, when he came out of the war was discharged as A-1. He was anxious, like many others, to get back to his farm and to his family. He never went to hospital or to the medical authorities. He said there was nothing wrong with him except that he had had a slight wound in his back, and he never asked for a pension. But in later years he found that this wound in his back was giving him trouble. He went to the hospital or to the medical authorities in Calgary, and they admitted that he had a slight wound in his back which was affecting him slightly. He was awarded a small pension. We have been trying for some time to get something more for that man We are simply told, "We cannot prove that his trouble is due to war service." They say, "We know his blood pressure is going up, we know his pulse is away beyond normal and that he is dying, but we cannot prove that his trouble is due to war service." After an infinite amount of trouble the man was taken to private doctors who found what the medical authorities ought to have found. He was one of those men who would hardly open his mouth to say anything for a pension; he would rather suffer and die. He was dragged out from under a wagon on his farm in an unconscious condition before he had even applied for a pension. When the private doctors took him in hand what did they find? They found that this man was suffering from a shrapnel wound in his back which was lessening the amount of expansion of his lungs, and that on several occasions he had been badly gassed. But these facts were not reported to the medical authorities, and the army medical men did not seem to have questioned the man to find out. It took two private doctors to do it. That is one case, and it is one of insanity. We are told that the trouble cannot be proved to be due to war service, but I contend that you cannot prove it to be due to anything else. To-day that man is in the asylum while his wife and children are trying to get along on the farm as best they can. The minister should instruct the medical authorities to be somewhat more sympathetic in their consideration of these cases and to examine such a man as this with the same close attention as they would any of their own patients. Let them make the examination with the object in view of attributing the trouble to war service rather than to undertake the examination with the determination to prove that the man's condition is due to something else. These examiners sometimes make the statement, which fills one's heart with bitterness—"It is not on your sheet; your trouble must be due to some post-war cause."

Mr. ARTHURS: There is one suggestion I have to offer to the minister. Is it not possible for his doctors to suit their golfing hours to the convenience of men to be examined, particularly in urgent cases? I know of one man who was sent to Toronto for examination for supposed tuberculosis. This man was a pensioner. He was in Toronto for some thirteen days and he informs me that all the examination he received was a cursory one when the doctor—not the ordinary doctor, because I must give the department credit where it is due; this man was filling a vacancy —came in after golfing and examined him along with a number of other men. This man had travelled 200 miles or so and was superficially examined and then sent home. He was taken back, it is true, and examined, but a proper examination should have been made in the first instance. I submit to the minister that the golfing hours of the doctors at Christie street should not interfere with their professional duties.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have my hon. friend's statement and will check it up; we will look into the matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: I take this occasion to voice an objection which I have received personally from a number of patients at Christie street hospital. This is not hearsay; these men have themselves informed me of the facts. After going through major operations they were denied the comforts of a private ward and instead were wheeled out to the public ward and left there to recuperate, to the discomfort both of themselves and of other patients. This is actual fact and I think it is an absolute disgrace to this country that after men have fought for its liberty and have suffered to the extent of becoming inmates of one of its hospitals they should be made to undergo treatment of this sort, being placed in what is equivalent to association with pauper patients in public hospitals. Is the minister aware that this is the fact?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am very doubtful. I am satisfied that we have an excellent staff of men at Christie street, associated with whom are the best men in the city of Toronto. I am very sorry to hear my hon. friend make this charge. I shall certainly have inquiries made and if our soldier patients are not receiving the attention which they should have, the matter will be looked into. Let me say, however, that I have been attached to the department now since 1926, and while it is true that occasionally there are complaints from individuals or their friends, I know of no organization in Canada or in any other country, carrying on work of a similar character, which receives as few complaints as we get at headquarters from the various hospitals. Generally speaking, the men themselves who are treated in the hospitals appreciate the type of surgeons and medical men employed, and I do not think it helps matters for my hon. friend to make such a statement. With regard to the joke about golfing surgeons, that also will be looked into. I understand that these men have definite hours and the patients are being moved through the hospitals more rapidly than before.

Mr. ARTHURS: Too rapidly.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, not too rapidly. They are receiving treatment and are being moved to their advantage.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is skilful; he is answering an objection I did not raise. I am not complaining about the doctors; I am protesting against the treatment which patients receive after operations in the hospitals. And this comes to me not from one but from many patients. On inquiry I have found that the practice to which I have referred is common. There are always exceptions, of course, but this practice is not exceptional. I hope the minister will see that it is remedied.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Now that the minister is in a sympathetic mood I will make certain representations to him. He says he does not think these things happen. Well, I will put up some cases I know of as having actually occurred. He knows as well as I do that there are good men and bad men in the service; he knows that there are careless and indifferent men. He has in Ottawa a man who did not see service but who nevertheless says that any married man who went overseas was a damned fool for having done so. Now how much sympathy can you get from such a man? Here is another case: A certain man for two years was described as a lead-swinger. He was sent to Christie street hospital and at my special request he was operated on there and found to have a fractured spine, three vertebrae being tubercular —a most serious condition. Yet, as I say, that man for two years had been called a lead-swinger by medical examiners in the service. Just two or three weeks ago an employee in this department died suddenly. That man was on service with me. When he was examined in the city of Ottawa he was told that his trouble was his wife. What can you say when such things as these take place? What will be the feeling of the examiner in such cases as these who finds, for example, that the patient whom he has been describing as a lead-swinger, on going to the hospital is found to be in a most dangerous condition, having to have three vertebrae removed? What sort of heart has the man who examines a patient and dismisses him with some silly diagnosis?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No doubt silly diagnoses are made.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister has now a newly appointed medical officer in Toronto. I did not wish to refer to this, but this matter having been brought up I feel it my duty to mention it. This man is Doctor Smirle Lawson. A man told me distinctly that this doctor was sent to examine him and he saw in the place a picture of Sir Henry Drayton. The doctor asked, "Is that man a friend of yours?"—pointing to the picture. The patient replied, yes. Then there is nothing the matter with you, said the doctor. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that when anything like this can happen such a man has no right to be examining our returned soldiers. Sir Henry Thornton, for example, has instilled the proper spirit and morale into the employees of his department, and I think that might be done in this case as well. If the minister will simply say, "I will not stand for such examinations" he will see that proper care is given these returned men. I have here a written report on an Ottawa man which was sent me the other day, and I would like the minister and the members of the committee to listen to it:

> Physically he is of the asthenic build, tall and spare, with fair muscular development, however, with the exception that in the lower abdominal region of both sides there is a muscular laxity which might easily be corrected by proper exercise. . . . .

Imagine that; a man who was old enough to enlist eighteen years ago is now told that there is a laxity in the lower part of the abdomen which could be benefited by proper exercise, and the report says there is no doubt that this laxity contributed originally to the hernia which occurred during the war.

> There are some stigmata present: The ears stick out prominently in the lower half, the upper being directed inwards close to the skull. He wears strong glasses corrected for both astigmatism and myopia, which he had changed not over six months ago. The sclero-corneal margin is not an exact circle, but is irregularly ovoid in shape in both eyes. The whites of the eyes are bluish in colour, suggesting a deficiency in the sclerotic coat, an infantile relic. There is considerable scoliosis in the lower thoracic region with convexity towards the left. In accordance with the curve of the spine the lower part of the left chest posteriorly appears to be small.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a man is sent up complaining of certain symptoms following an operation for hernia which was produced in the war, and against that are put up conditions which might have gone against his enlistment but which do not enter into the question now. He has now returned, with these infantile relics which are mentioned; he has given four years of good service; he lost one brother in the war, another brother is a chronic invalid in Christie Street hospital and he is not getting a pension. I hold that that kind of an examination is absolutely unnecessary. I think it is not right that a man who complains of pain following an operation which was occasioned by the war should he told that he is asthenic, that he is not physically well developed and that he has astigmatism, which he had before enlistment and in spite of which he served four years overseas. In other words, it looks to me as though this man is being framed with all the stigmata and so on which possibly could be brought up against him in order to prevent him from getting his due. Either the man has a condition which was occasioned by the operation necessitated by the war or he has not such a condition. I did not intend to refer to these matters, but the minister said he doubted whether this sort of thing went on, and I thought this a good way to show him. I realize that the minister has good and bad men in the service; he has negligent men, with some of whom I have had to deal, and there is only one thing to do. Whether the man is a political friend or opponent he should be told that the first duty of this country is fair treatment to the returned men regardless of politics.

Mr. MALONEY: Whether the difficulty lies in the angle at which the ear appears to hang; whether it is due to laxity in the lower abdominal regions or whether it is due to tuberculosis, insanity or any other disease, I would like to ask the minister this question:

If we have another session of this parliament would he be prepared at that time to introduce an amendment to the present act giving to himself or some other body authority to bring these people under the law and give them the aid to which they are entitled?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter is being considered, and some advance has been made this year.

Mr. MALONEY: Will the minister consider that point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend knows that is now under consideration, and considerable advance has been made this year.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister be good enough to tell us how many patients received treatment under the regulations recommended by the pension committee last year, and what was the cost of extending medical aid to indigent soldiers for disabilities not due to the war?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There have been 600 or more cases in and out during the year, increasing our hospital days by about 200,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: And what is the cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We estimate that under this vote it will cost some $200,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: Were any such applicants refused?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I do not think any were refused if it was shown that they were in need and could not afford treatment.

Mr. McGIBBON: How was it ascertained whether they were in need?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Under the recommendation of the committee last year.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister says these treatments were given if it could be shown that the men were in need, and I would like to know what proof they must furnish as to their being in need?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Inquiries are made in each case. I know of one case which was brought to my attention this year in which it was suggested that the hospital bill of a certain returned soldier should be paid by the government. Upon investigation it was found that this man had a good position and that he was unmarried and living with his parents, who were well to do, so we did not consider that the bill should be paid by the department, since the condition, which was acute, was not pensionable. The recommendation of the committee last year was very plain; they suggested that provision should be made for free hospitalization for non-service disability for all pensioners unable to provide such treatment at their own expense. That has been carried out to quite an extent this year, and in all some 600 patients have received treatment.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister contradicted himself; in answer to my first question he said that no applications had been refused, but he has just told us of one which was refused.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I said that no application was refused which was within the restrictions imposed by the committee last year, and having regard to the conditions I mentioned a few moments ago.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think the minister mentioned the limitations later, but I am quite willing to accept his statement. Here is the point: Is the evidence of a medical man who might examine one of these patients sufficient to meet the requirements of the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. POWER: A medical man cannot say whether or not a person is destitute, any more than anyone else.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am simply asking for information. Who is the final authority?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The superintendent of the hospital where the application is made will ascertain the facts through the channels at his disposal, and he decides.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is his decision final?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not necessarily.

Mr. McGIBBON: Where would the appeal lie then—to the minister?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. McGIBBON: Where to?

Mr. KING Kootenay): It would probably come to headquarters. There are also appeals made to the minister, and that will always be the case.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what he is there for.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not objecting to that; I would rather go to the minister than follow down the military routine.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That would be very difficult.

Mr. McGIBBON: I just wanted to know what procedure to recommend to these people when they come to me.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Have them apply to the medical superintendent of the local hospital.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion with respect to the matter now under consideration. Could not something be done which would swing the evidence required to determine whether a condition was post-war or war a little more to the side of the person affected? I have experienced the greatest difficulty in reconciling my judgment to the judgment of the authorities as to whether or not a present condition was post-war or war. I do not think any court of law would require evidence to be offered on behalf of the plaintiff in a negligence action such as is required by the department in these cases. During the last twelve months the department has applied a much severer test in these cases than is required to render a defendant liable for negligence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think the hon. member really means the department; is he not referring to pensions?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am speaking about at the moment. Last year the chairman of the committee, in discussing this matter, made it abundantly clear that the very sincere efforts of the committee would be expended towards making the discretion so elastic that the injured soldier would receive the benefit of any doubt that might exist, and if there was any doubt as to post-war or war causation, the benefit of that doubt would be given in favour of war causation.

Mr. POWER: May I explain?

Mr. BENNETT: I have just one word more to offer. I have had a large number of cases of that kind brought to my attention, but I do not desire to make any further observations about them for the simple reason that this matter has been dealt with so fully by my colleagues that it is unnecessary for me to make any further comments.

The second matter I desire to comment on is the delay. I know of cases which have been kept under consideration not for one year, but for two years or more, and then suddenly the man is told that his condition is attributable to war causation. A considerable period of time has intervened between the moment the man became unable to earn anything and should have had attention, and the time he is told that he will receive attention. It is not too much to say to that man, "We will give you that back pension."

Mr. POWER: The statute restricts the period of retroaction to six months, and the committee felt that it should not go beyond that.

Mr. BENNETT: It is only a question of the application. The law is all right, it is the administration of it which is at fault. I do not think we could have a better illustration placed upon Hansard than that given by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross). I think the house will agree, and I do not think the medical members of the house will think it an unfair criticism, when I say that that case offers the strongest possible illustration in connection with this matter. I put this proposition to the minister: Why should these men, sometimes without friends and stranded, have to run the gamut of the pension board and the appeal board? They may be told to obtain some additional evidence, and they are put to the necessity of collecting that evidence. I think the committee must have intended something better than that.

The minister answered a question put by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) as to how a man who is suffering is to obtain hospitalization. I put this case to the minister, and this is not an imaginary case, it is a real one: A man finds himself in serious financial straits. He is physically unable to work; he is suffering from an illness and he goes to a military hospital and applies for free hospitalization. They say to him, "We cannot take you in." Between the time of application and the time of admission I have known of cases where the man was well-nigh dead by the time he reached the hospital. There is not one member of the house who does not know what that means. I do not think parliament meant that at all. An ex-service man in a condition such as I described who applies to a hospital should be taken in at once, and the inquiries can be made. He would then be receiving immediate treatment and would be better able to get along. There have been cases where admission was finally granted and the poor man was not alive at all. That is a condition which the minister can remedy. All he has to do is to say to his medical men, "If a man apparently in indigent circumstances comes to you and applies for hospital treatment, take him in and then make the inquiries." It is a sad reflection upon this country to see these men, as I have seen them, I am sorry to say, dependent upon the generous treatment of their fellow men and the kindness of those to whom their condition appeals. They are forced to rely upon the kindness of their friends to place them in a hospital or a private institution or some place where they can get enough to eat and receive decent care and attention which will keep them out of pain.

Those are the two matters I wished to comment upon; the granting of relief in the form of pensions, and making it a little more speedy and easy to obtain hospitalization.

Mr. POWER: Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the last portion of the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and the minister tells me that he is also heartily in accord. It would seem to be a serious ground for complaint that applicants should be obliged to wait until their cases are investigated before they can obtain the treatment which they need so badly. I think the minister should give the strongest possible instructions to his medical superintendents and others to see to it that they act first and investigate afterwards.

I think the next point is a more serious one and will be more difficult to settle.

Mr. BENNETT: It is more difficult, yes.

Mr. POWER: The matter of the onus of proof, that is really what it amounts to. This was seriously considered last year by the committee. It has been said very often in this house and throughout the country that if a man was accepted for the army then the onus of proof should be upon the government in refusing him a pension.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the hon. member agree with that?

Mr. POWER: No, I do not, and I will explain why. That point of view was presented very clearly to the committee by the soldiers' organizations. One class of patients was mentioned, I think it was the amputation cases, which seemed to be more deserving of consideration than any other class, but the committee refused to place the burden of proof upon the shoulders of the government. The committee felt that if it was the government's duty to make evidence against a pensioner, if I may put it in that way—and I think my hon. friends will follow me—and if an applicant for pension should at once be granted it unless the government could show that the man was not entitled to it, we would be face to face with an almost impossible situation in this country.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: That was not the case I meant; that is the extreme case.

Mr. POWER: That is the extreme case. There is perhaps a great difference between that case and the ordinary ones which we have every day where a returned soldier makes application for pension and the board turns him down on the ground that there is nothing in his war record, in the medical evidence or in his medical history sheet to show that the disability was due to service. But let me put the matter in this way to the committee. The statute provides that pensions shall be awarded to persons who suffer from disability or disease incurred on active service or due to service in the forces of His Majesty.

Mr. McGIBBON: Or for aggravation.

Mr. POWER: I am leaving out for the moment the question of aggravation, because that is more complicated. Before almost any court evidence would have to be adduced that the disability or disease was incurred on service or due to service. The Board of Pension Commissioners, I am informed—and this was shown quite clearly to the committee last year—allowed, in order to connect the disability with the service, evidence to be made which might not be allowed in any court of law. For instance, we were told by the chairman of the Board of Pension Commissioners, the chief medical officer and other members of the board that they would permit a comrade of the soldier to appear before the commissioners and say: "Well, at such and such a date I have a recollection that Bill Jones told me that he had severe pains in his chest," evidence dating back eight or ten years, circumstantial evidence—

Mr. BENNETT: As to appendicitis.

Mr. POWER: Evidence of appendicitis, of pneumonia. I know a number of cases were cited by the members of the Board of Pension Commissioners wherein they stated that they had accepted evidence which, to my mind, would not have been accepted in a court of law. On the other hand, the chairman of the Board of Pension Commissioners says: "If you tell us that the onus must be on us to disprove the claim, then I must state quite frankly to the committee that it will be impossible, in the vast majority of cases, for me to find any such evidence, because we have not at our disposal, nor do we think the country should have at its disposal the machinery to go seeking evidence contrary to that made by a soldier before the board." That, perhaps, would commend itself to the committee generally.

Mr. BENNETT: That was not the case I was making. I said that they required too strict proof to relate the condition to the service. Do I make the matter clear to my hon. friend? If there is an action for negligence, my hon. friend knows that, before you can succeed, you must prove that the damages suffered are related to the cause alleged. My difficulty has been that they are too strict in their requirements as to the relation of the condition to the service rendered. It is not a question of onus of proof at all.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps they are too strict in asking for evidence showing the relation of the disability to the service. The committee refused to allow any presumption.

Mr. CAHAN: Is there not a strong legal presumption that necessarily arises from the fact that the government examined a man and found him sane and whole before it enlisted his services?

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend from Rimouski suggests to me that there is the certificate of discharge and the medical evidence given on discharge, but it never entered into the minds of any committee that the medical evidence and certificate of discharge should be taken as valid proof of any obligation which the state might have to the soldier or as to the condition of his health.

Mr. CAHAN: I am speaking of the medical examination on his enlistment.

Mr. POWER: I think my hon. friend makes a very good point; that is, there should be a presumption that the man was in good health at the time he enlisted. I am sorry to say that the conditions surrounding the enlistment and the acceptance of our soldiers when they went overseas were such that we can rely very little on the medical evidence given at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: The man should not suffer for that reason. He went away and served the state on the strength of that certificate as to his health.

Mr. POWER: I do not think the theory laid down by the hon. gentleman has as yet been sufficiently explained to any committee which has dealt with the matter to permit them to accept that generally as a rule of conduct, nor, do I think the pension authorities, generally speaking, will accept it. There have been cases known where a man with a wooden leg was accepted for services overseas.

Mr. CAHAN: That must be facetious.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a fact.

Mr. POWER: There was the case of a man with a glass eye. In order to cover such cases we put specifically in the act a clause referring to those disabilities. We said that a man might not claim pension on the ground of some disability which might have been obvious before he enlisted.

Mr. CAHAN: I am asking this simply because I think my hon. friend is thoroughly informed as chairman of the committee.

Mr. POWER: He has forgotten by this time.

Mr. CAHAN: He is not an expert surgeon or physician and therefore he may satisfy the curiosity which I have as to the basis of some of the decisions which have been rendered. Assume that you give some weight to the legal presumption that a man, who was examined and who enlisted upon that examination, was sane and sound at the time of his enlistment. Supposing, on the other hand, you give some weight to the fact that we must acknowledge from actual experience that men came through and received their discharge under conditions which made it impossible to ascertain their exact condition at the date of discharge. I have come into contact with hundreds of these men who have come to me and, although I am no expert, although I know nothing about medicine, nothing even about my own ills, I am convinced, from coming into contact with men whom I knew at the time they enlisted whom I knew at the time they were discharged and whom I have known since, that it was impossible at the time at which they obtained their discharge for the ordinary physician to form any idea as to whether they were not then liable to develop serious mental and nervous diseases. Four out of five men whom I know, who came through the war, came through with disabilities which did not fully appear until after they had obtained their discharge. I do not wish to make personal references, but I have come into contact day by day with men who went through the war, and it was only the exceptional man who came through without serious physical or mental deterioration as a result of the war. I am sure that many of them have since shown physical disabilities, unknown at the time of their discharge, which ought by some process of reasoning to be referred back to their experiences during the war.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend has probably had experience in drafting legislation. Had we at the very beginning of our career in pension legislation said, "We are going to name a board of pension commissioners, and to this board we will give absolute discretion in the awarding of pensions," I personally am of the opinion that we would have done a very good thing. Instead, however, we have built up pension legislation, and on every occasion when this legislation was revised, it was revised to bring in one particular set of cases, and in opening the door wider to include that particular set of cases, we probably allowed in hundreds of other cases that were not as deserving as they might have been. On many occasions it has been the judgment of this house that we should surround the discretion of the pension board with certain safeguards. I can remember arguing on both sides of that question myself, arguing one year that the board should have discretion, and then the next year, after it had badly exercised that discretion, arguing that we should take it away from them.

Mr. McGIBBON: That was after you crossed the floor.

Mr. POWER: No, from both sides of the house. I never defended the board.

Mr. CAHAN: I can bear witness that the hon. gentleman has always acted with fairness and impartiality.

Mr. POWER: Thank you, sir. It is extremely difficult to legislate for these cases which my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George and I believe deserve a pension, that is of men who ten years after the war are beginning to feel the strain of the war, who at the time they left the army were just as healthy, or appeared to be, as when they joined, but who on account of the strain of those four years are beginning to feel they are not the men they might have been had they not gone through it.

Mr. CAHAN: More seriously broken than that.

Mr. POWER: I am taking the lighter cases, but I will go further and take the case of the man who when he returned was apparently in perfect health but has since broken down mentally and is now in a mental institution. We cannot prove that this man's mental disease is due to his war service. If we take the premises of my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George we could say he was sane when he went over; we know the difficulties he had to meet, and we should therefore assume that those difficulties had some effect on his mental equilibrium. I am quite willing to agree with my hon. friend, but let him remember that bringing in these cases will go a long way to increasing our pension bill, and not only that, it will lead to the bringing in of persons who do not deserve to receive support and assistance from the state. After all, every man who put on a uniform is not entitled to a pension. Some of them came back better off than when they went over. Let us be frank. We can have every sympathy and pay every respect—

Mr. CAHAN: You mean better off physically.

Mr. POWER: Yes, better off physically; I will say that. The open air life and the hardships probably did many of them good. I am not stating as a general proposition that the war was a good thing for a man instead of his daily dozen; not at all; but I do say that the exercise that he got, the physical training and the setting-up exercises in the open air did help a great many men to a healthier standard. But that has taken me away from my argument.

Either we must say to the board, "You have discretion to award a pension to every man who was a soldier; now use your discretion," or else we must surround the board with certain safeguards. If we are going to surround it with certain safeguards we must make the soldier prove the relationship between his service and his disability. If we say that he is not obliged to prove this, then we leave the door open. I agree with the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George that the members of the pension board might allow the natural inference which the man in the street would draw to have a greater sway over their opinion and their appreciation of the disability which is brought before them.

Mr. BENNETT: The irresistible inference.

Mr. POWER: Yes, but it is extremely difficult for anyone to draft legislation which will include in it an inference.

Mr. BENNETT: It cannot be done.

Mr. POWER: The whole matter then lies in the kindness of heart, if I may so put it, of the persons who are appointed to administer the act.

Mr. CAHAN: Or rather in their judgment.

Mr. BENNETT: Is not the difficulty that the irresistable inference which we say should follow is too often measured by purely technical and professional evidence rather than by those standards which the average man uses in a jury negligence case?

Mr. POWER: Absolutely. We are in entire agreement, but I do not know how to get over that difficulty.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is not the judgment of the pension board based on the report of the examining medical board, and ought not the doctor who examines the returned soldier to help him connect his disability with his war service?

Mr. POWER: I quite agree.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If the medical authorities at the first examination would help him to connect his disability with his war service he would get a better show than he now does, when he tries to establish that years after the war.

Mr. POWER: I quite agree, but it must not be forgotten that this parliament has also set up certain assistance to the soldiers through the appointment of official soldier advisers in the different districts, and the official soldier adviser, after some experience in handling these cases, while he perhaps does not know all the technical details of every disease, does know as much about the subject as the ordinary lawyer would who was presenting the case, and he knows what evidence he should produce in order to obtain a judgment in favour of his client. Besides, and I say this advisedly, I have had a large number of pension cases in which there were some involved technical medical points; I have submitted them within the last year or so to the service bureau of the Canadian Legion, and I find that the unprofessional staff, men who are not doctors or lawyers, connected with the Canadian Legion understand far better than any doctor or any lawyer with whom I have ever conversed just what evidence should be submitted to the board in order to win the case. I am saying that without in any way wishing to appeal to the legion. It is simply a matter of practical experience. These men, having worked at this for a number of years, know their job probably better than the ordinary physician or lawyer.

Mr. CAHAN: And know the psychology of the judges.

Mr. POWER: Yes, I had forgotten that. Perhaps I had better not say it.

Mr. McGIBBON: With a great deal of what the hon. member for Quebec South has said I agree. He will recall that on the pension committee last year it was suggested by some of us, and confirmed by the Board of Pension Commissioners, that a great deal of this trouble resulted through the soldiers' cases not being properly prepared. A suggestion was made which I think would have overcome a great deal of this difficulty had the committee adopted it, namely, that these men be allowed to employ their own solicitor or some competent person to prepare their case. To my mind, after sitting on a number of these committees, that has been the whole crux of the trouble. Take a man away back in the country; he is probably not sufficiently educated, does not know the law or does not know the procedure to follow, and he has no one to advise him. I remember distinctly asking some members of the committee if they did not think that is where the great trouble lay and their reply was in the affirmative. I am going to suggest to the minister that he take that into consideration; that these men making application for pensions have the privilege of employing their own solicitor at a stated fee, which need not be very much, so that their case will be properly prepared before it is presented to the board.

Mr. POWER: I remember very well that before the committee last year the member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) urged with considerable eloquence the proposition which he has just placed before this committee, but the other members of the committee did not see fit to agree with him. The argument against my hon. friend was that the members of the committee did not consider that we should create in this country a class of pension lawyers. We fear that by inserting in the act provision for the payment of fees to any solicitor who wished to take on the case of a returned soldier we might create such a class of lawyer, and I am informed that in the United States this class has not raised the standard of the bar, the standard of any person. That is why the members of the committee did not favourably consider that recommendation.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, but I think they made a mistake.

Mr. POWER: We may have.

Mr. BENNETT: There are just two questions that I would like to ask arising out of the discussion. Does the minister think it is a fair thing that a soldiers' adviser should be a Liberal politician who seeks votes and is a member of the legislature? I regard that as a crying scandal. I am not mentioning any names at all, but here is a man who is a soldiers' adviser; he is a member of the local legislature; he is a Liberal candidate. Is that fair and right and just? I leave that to the minister. The second point is this: the minister said, "we accept evidence that would not be accepted in a court of law," which is quite true. Does the minister think the recommendation of a minister to the medical branch of the pension department, under personal cover, is sufficient reason for the favourable consideration of a case?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Soldiers' advisers are appointed on the recommendation of the various soldiers' organizations. I think my hon. friend has reference to one individual who took part in a recent provincial election but who retired from the position of soldiers' adviser.

Mr. BENNETT: He has been appointed again.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): After the election he was reinstated in his position at the request of the executive of the soldiers' organization in that province. I do not know that there would be anything very harmful in that. He is well thought of by the soldiers' organization and has been doing very good work.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the minister leaves that, what does he think of that same gentleman actively participating in a Dominion election on behalf of his party? That is the point I am desirous of making.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are not civil servants.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. That means that the federal government is paying for a soldiers' adviser to assist them in getting votes at the election. Is that fair?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of the soldiers' advisers assist the other party too.

Mr. BENNETT: The point is this—and the minister does not seem to realize it—is it fair and just to the soldiers who may desire to vote the other way to find themselves in the position where they are relying upon the assistance of a soldiers' adviser who is telling them their duty is to vote for the government? This is a concrete case. I am not mentioning names, for reasons that are obvious.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it is very bad practice, but it applies to both parties.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no such case as the one I have mentioned.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not as being a candidate for election.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: No, and resigning and coming back when the federal election is on. I am sure the minister will agree that human nature is being put to too great a test when we ask a man whose case is just in the balance to decide whether he will yield to the importunities of his adviser who says: vote for Doctor King; don't vote for his opponent or vote against the government. This gentleman conducted a political meeting in a particular locality that I will not mention at the moment. It is the principle that I am contending for. It is too much to ask human nature to resist the temptation to please the one who can assist him.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it is bad practice myself.

Mr. ESLING: Mr. Chairman, the recent speaker, I think it was the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) referred to the soldiers' adviser and said he could very well be of assistance to a man who was applying for a pension or for hospital treatment. Before dealing with that I would like to ask the minister if a pensioner or an exserviceman in straitened circumstances who is suffering and requires hospital treatment can have access to a local hospital.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ESLING: On whose recommendation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In practically every locality we have a local representative of the department. If he finds a pensioner eligible for treatment he can place him in the hospital, advising the medical representative of that district, and that advice comes through to headquarters.

Mr. ESLING: When you speak about the local representative, is he the local medical examiner?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ESLING: Well, the local medical officer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ESLING: It is not necessary for him to appeal to provincial headquarters or to the head of the provincial unit?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He must report to provincial headquarters.

Mr. ESLING: Yes, but can this local representative of your department put that man in the hospital for treatment without charge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, if it is an urgent case and he can show it was necessary to put him in the hospital.

Mr. ESLING: Supposing this soldier is suffering and is in straitened circumstances. He has a family and is unable to employ a physician, and has not the proper facilities at home for care; is he permitted to have treatment at a local hospital other than one of the hospitals connected with the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend knows that we are dealing with some 500,000 or 600,000 men who went overseas, and there must be some rules and regulations made to apply. I think we made it very evident that on the recommendations of the committee of last year provision has been made for the treatment of pensioners with non-pensionable conditions. In case a man is taken suddenly ill, and the case is urgent, he can go to the local doctor, and if the case is as the hon. member says it is it will be taken care of, there is no doubt about it. But I will assure him of this: there will be a thorough inquiry and the man who recommends that case for hospital treatment will be held responsible for his diagnosis.

Mr. ESLING: I have no intention of being captious at all. I merely want to ask the minister if the recommendation of a local physician knowing the case—I am talking about small communities, not of our large centres where there are departmental hospitals —would be accepted for the free treatment of a returned man, whether he be a pensioner or not, if he is in straitened circumstances? I am bringing this to the attention of the minister for the reason that it is a request from one of the local legion, and now is a good time to have a clear and perfect understanding of the matter, because by the time a man goes through a lot of formality and correspondence and communication very often his condition becomes worse than it would be if he were given immediate care.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have men in the field who receive a fee for attendance. There is a regular fee arranged between him and the department. He is not a regular salaried officer. There are many of these men scattered throughout the Dominion, available in all small communities. Now to give the right ad libitum to an officer to receive into his office, or to go to the applicant's home, or to place in a hospital any applicant he sees fit would involve the country in a tremendous bill of costs. We must have rules and regulations. If a case is urgent and the man can prove this to the department the officer can certainly admit the case. But we could not have on the staff an officer who would adopt this practice indiscriminately. We have cases coming before us from time to time where it is represented that great urgency exists, and we have found out that there is so such urgency. We have also known it to be represented that a man had not the means to take care of himself and we have discovered the fact to be otherwise. All the facts are taken into consideration by the officer in charge, who knows the local conditions, but you cannot run wild in these matters; as I say, there must be rules and regulations. I am safe in saying that we have gone further than most other countries in this regard, in that we are to-day giving pensioners treatment for non-pensionable disability, and we are adding greatly to the number of patients who are being admitted to hospital. As regards the representations made by my hon. friend, I have stated that if the case is one of urgency and the local officer can so show to the head of the department he is entitled to take that patient in.

Mr. ESLING: Must the local medical officer necessarily go to the head of the department? I do not want to be captious, but is it not within the discretion of the local officer to send a man to a hospital which is not departmental? The minister knows that there are no departmental hospitals in the interior. May I ask him whether there is one in his district?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. In regard to the pensioner coming in for treatment—the pensioner who has a non-pensionable condition —we require him to go to the departmental hospital. That has been the practice in the United States, and the man is admitted only when there is room for him, the pensioner of course having first consideration in the matter of accommodation.

Mr. ESLING: But the departmental hospital may be a considerable distance away. Where, for instance, is the departmental hospital nearest to the minister's own community?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have in the district representatives—

Mr. ESLING: But I am speaking of the departmental hospital.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): —who report to the head of the department. If the local medical officer can prove that a man requires immediate treatment his recommendation will be accepted.

Mr. ESLING: I do not seem to be able to get my case to the minister. I want to know whether the local medical officer has the discretion to place a man in a hospital, other than a departmental hospital, without communicating with the nearest departmental official.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What type of case?

Mr. ESLING: Any type of case where a man is ill, or has a disability, or is in straitened circumstances. It would cost him a considerable sum to go to the nearest departmental hospital.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We should expect a man to go to the departmental hospital or to a hospital with which we had a contract.

Mr. ESLING: Well, where is the departmental hospital nearest to the minister's own community of Cranbrook?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In Vancouver.

Mr. ESLING: And it costs $25 to get there and $25 to return; that is the ordinary fare without travelling expenses. Moreover, considerable delay is involved. Would it not be more expeditious, and would it not be to the advantage of the man himself, to have him placed in a local hospital?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In all probability that would be the practice.

Mr. ESLING: If the medical officer saw that the man was in straitened circumstances and was ill, surely that ought to be done. Will the minister not concur in the suggestion that there should be some local discretion among the medical examiners employed by the department? Are these local medical examiners permanent, and are they paid a salary, or do they receive fees.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some act on fees and some receive a salary.

Mr. ESLING: I do not know of any man who could be of more assistance to returned soldiers than the soldiers' adviser. Now let me cite a case. Here is a man who went overseas and was wounded. He applies to the medical board or to the local medical examiner and is informed that it will be necessary for him to have an X-ray taken. The man has a wife and family. He has been working in the woods or in the mines, and his disability increasing, he is compelled to cease work. It is suggested by the medical examiner that he should have an X-ray taken. He writes to tell me that he had the X-ray taken at a cost of $25. He was able to borrow $15 of that amount but he still owes $10. Does the minister think that is a reasonable condition to exist? The pensions board has all these facts before it. It does not seem to me that a man who has been overseas should be subjected to any such expense as that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Now I know my hon. friend wants to be fair.

Mr. ESLING: Yes, I do.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): May I point out to him that the question of eligibility for treatment under the act is with the pensions board. Last year we extended the recommendation of the committee and we are to-day giving treatment to pensioners for non-pensionable disability. It is true, as my hon. friend says, that the people who live in the large centres have an advantage. That applies to everyday life; there are advantages accruing to life in the larger communities; there are larger hospitals and more and better experienced men. Obviously, therefore, the smaller community is at a disadvantage in this regard. The man who enters a civilian hospital to-day with a non-pensionable disability is, under the law of the country, a liability to the civil population if he cannot take care of himself, be the hospital provincial or municipal. The committee last year recognized that in certain cases it was desirable that, even though the condition was not pensionable, the pensioner should receive treatment. The department is trying to use its judgment in dealing fairly with this type of man, although we do not wish to load up the hospitals with cases which are not entitled to be there. At the same time, with respect to those who have not the means to take care of themselves, we wish to do all we possibly can for the returned men. In my own experience I know that sometimes in the interior, when a man is in great need and requires to be taken to a hospital for treatment, the municipal authorities will say, "We will help this man out. His ticket to Vancouver will cost $25; we will send him there and he will get better treatment than he could get in our local institution." We are following the course of the American people in that regard. We have increased very materially this year the number of patients in our hospitals, and I suppose it will show a further increase next year. I know that service is provided, and while there is the difficulty which my hon. friend has suggested I can tell him that in a case of that kind, where hospital treatment is urgently needed, it will be within the power of our local officers to admit those cases and then show the department that a mistake has not been made and that the case is one which properly should be treated.

Mr. ESLING: I was not speaking of people who are able to pay; as the minister said, we do not want to load up these hospitals with people of that kind. I was referring to the man who is in straitened circumstances.

Now let me proceed to the question of the soldiers' advisers, of whom the hon. member for Quebec South spoke. I believe the services of these men would be invaluable in the local communities if their services were available, but unfortunately they do not seem to be available. I want to ask the minister if he does not consider that ex-service men would be much better off if the soldiers' adviser were made a full time employee.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps I might answer that question, since the matter was considered by the committee last year. As a matter of fact the official soldiers' adviser is a part time man, but he receives a monthly salary; in my mind I had the adviser confused with a man working on a free basis. That is to say, the soldiers' adviser may occupy himself in some other business; if he is a lawyer he may take other clients and so on, but it was clearly shown, for example, that the representative of the department in Winnipeg who, if I may say so, is a very brilliant man, had no time for any outside work.

However, to come to the question asked by my hon. friend, I am not prepared to say that the official soldiers' advisers throughout Canada are the best men that could be found, but I am prepared to say that in every case of which I have knowledge, at any rate up to last year, they were appointed on the recommendation of different soldier organizations. With reference to the question of making them permanent officers of the department, if that is done my hon. friend will find immediately that they lose their status with the returned men, who at once begin to think that these men are paid to turn them down. I think that has been the experience throughout the history of this department. The moment an officer became permanently attached to the department the soldier thought, "This man is in the department and it is his job to turn me down; the government has hired a lawyer to prevent me from putting my case through." I do not make that statement in any derogatory way with reference to the returned soldiers, but I am sure that will be the feeling throughout the country if these are made full time positions, and that was the conclusion to which the committee came last year.

Mr. ESLING: When I make that suggestion I am voicing the sentiments of local branches of the Canadian Legion in my constituency. Many of them have sent in resolutions to the provincial convention at Chilliwack, strongly urging that the soldiers' advisers be given full time positions. Their attitude is that it is not necessary for all soldiers' advisers to be doctors or lawyers.

Mr. POWER: As a matter of fact it is not necessary, and in most cases it is not so.

Mr. ESLING: The soldiers want a man with a practical knowledge of the problems and troubles of the returned man, and as the hon. member for Quebec South said a short time ago, such men can be of great help to the returned soldiers. Some of these advisers receive $3,000 per year together with travelling expenses, and I want to say that there are many very capable returned men who are familiar with the problems facing the returned soldier and who would be very glad to get such a job. Resolutions from the Nelson, Trail and other branches of the Canadian Legion are very strongly in favour of soldiers' advisers being appointed on full time, and these resolutions are being presented to the provincial convention at Chilliwack. There is only one full time soldiers' adviser; he is a barrister and receives a salary of $4,100 yearly; others who are on part time receive from $1,200 to $1,800, and in some cases up to $3,000.

Naturally we must speak on these matters from our local standpoints; I am not very much concerned with the conditions in Quebec or in Ontario, but I am concerned with the conditions in West Kootenay and if I am compelled to bring politics into the matter I will have to do so. All these local branches of the Canadian Legion, of which there are about twelve in my district, are unanimous in this opinion. Here we have a soldiers' adviser who receives $3,000 a year and another $1,000 for travelling and office expenses, and it must be remembered that he is not limited to that $1,000. In the amendment which was introduced last session provision was made that the soldiers' adviser should visit the various portions of his district whenever the minister so instructed him, so I say he is not limited in the amount of his travelling expenses. The local branches in my district feel that a soldiers' adviser would better serve the men if he made regular, periodical trips to these local branches and met with the members. He might visit them on their regular meeting nights and listen to their troubles, and in that way he would do a great service. For instance, here is the case of a man who went overseas; he was physically fit, a wholesome, upright young fellow, and while he was overseas he received shrapnel wounds in both legs. He was in the hospital in England for some six months, and when he returned to Canada he went into a broker's office in Winnipeg. There he sat down to his work and did not use his legs very much; consequently he did not feel the effects of his wounds at that time. However, some two years later he returned to his little farm in West Kootenay and as soon as he started to follow the plough or the harrow his heels gave way and he was practically incapacitated. It was up to that young man to prove that this disability was due to war service, but as yet he has not secured a physician who will certify to the pensions board that such is the case. So there are two points to be considered: Are you going to take the decision of the physician or are you to accept the conclusion that this disability resulted from those shrapnel wounds?

Here is another case in which the soldiers' advisers might have been of great assistance. This man stated that he received a questionnaire from the department with regard to the revaluation of his land, but it was so complicated that he simply threw it aside and did not make application. In that case a soldiers' adviser would have been of material assistance.

Now I want to take the case to which the leader of the opposition referred. In five years time I think this soldiers' adviser has been in my district only once, except when he was there on political business. He was there in the early part of January, apparently as soldiers' adviser. He paid one visit in August, 1924; he was there twice in October, 1925; once in April, 1926; and again in October, 1927, and on each and every occasion he appeared on the public platform compaigning for my opponent. I do not think a man who is in receipt of a salary of $3,000 a year and is allowed his travelling expenses should be carrying on such practices. Does the minister really approve of these soldiers' advisers taking part in political campaigns when they are in receipt of a salary from the federal government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I gave an answer to a similar question asked by the leader of the opposition a few moments ago. I think it is a bad practice for people in receipt of government salaries to engage in active politics. But it must be remembered that these men are not appointees of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: That makes it much worse.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are appointed upon the recommendation of the soldiers' executive in their district, and are not considered as being civil servants under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. ESLING: But the final appointment comes from the minister?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh yes, the minister has to make the appointment, but it is made on the recommendation of the soldiers' organizations.

In regard to the resolutions which the hon. member has spoken of, undoubtedly these will be submitted to the central organization and when passed upon by that body they most likely will come to the department and later on be presented to parliament for consideration. I do not think that much can be gained by discussing resolutions of that character, when they must go to the central soldiers' organization to be passed upon.

Mr. ESLING: Would the minister not agree with the suggestion that it might be well to provide, at the next session of parliament, that these men be made full time employees? When the minister provided that they should receive their travelling expenses I do not suppose he intended them to make political trips. I am in receipt of a letter from the Canadian Legion at Trail, which goes to show that there is a considerable political complexion upon this matter. The letter, in part, states:

—the matter of the so-called soldiers' adviser certainly needs some attention. This gentleman recently made a trip through this district—

That was the first official trip to Trail since he was appointed in 1924. The letter continues:

—and, as far as I can ascertain, this was the first appearance of the adviser since his appointment.

Having wired his intention of visiting us he duly arrived and was met by our president (H. P. Kingwell, Esq.,). Following a few minutes of general conversation the adviser left Mr. Kingwell, promising to meet him again at 3 p.m., when it was the intention of Mr. Kingwell to introduce the adviser to several of our pensioners whose claims were not receiving the attention they merited.

At 4.30 p.m. the adviser telephoned to the effect that he was detained. During his stay in fact in Trail he only spent about half an hour on actual business and then left for Grand Forks.

When a man is paid a salary of $3,000 per year and also receives his travelling expenses to visit these different branches of the legion, I cannot imagine the minister approving of such a hurried visit as the one mentioned in the letter. The legion had cases which they wanted to present to him but they had no opportunity of doing so.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. member for Quebec South, who has given the committee such valuable information in regard to this department, use his good offices and influence with the minister in an endeavour to speed up the soldiers' adviser at Vancouver and have him do a little actual work on behalf of the returned soldiers instead of using his time in political activities. If he would handle some of that work it would save the rest of us a good deal of trouble; we have to do certain work for the returned soldiers which he is paid to do.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be very glad to look into that matter.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Is it not a fact that the soldiers' adviser at Vancouver tendered his resignation some months ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister give us the particulars of that resignation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was just preceding or during the election when he accepted an office under the local government and we were advised of his resignation. After the election the matter was brought to my attention by an executive officer of the legion and it was recommended that he be reappointed, and this was done.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a fact that it was practically voting day before that resignation was tendered to the minister? Can the minister give us the date of the resignation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I was away at the time.

Mr. ESLING: Perhaps I can answer the hon. member, because I happen to have a little information regarding that matter. The adviser received a salary of $3,000 per year and also his travelling expenses. In 1928, apparently in July, as that was the date of the election, $23.45 was paid to Mr. Bruce Boyd. That amount represents the salary for three days, based upon an annual salary of $3,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Boyd did the work; he was the law partner of the adviser and he did the work and was paid for that.

Mr. CLARK: Can the minister give us the actual date of the resignation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information before me at the moment, but I shall be glad to get it and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. CLARK: Does not the minister think that these soldiers' advisers should be considered in the same light as any other civil servant and be obliged to refrain from political partisanship?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it would be just as well, yes.

Mr. PRICE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question regarding the treatment of returned men, and why it is necessary to send these men long distances when the work can be done right at home. The minister claims that he is practising economy, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that in the city of Moncton we have a returned man, named John R. Leaman. This man was taking pneumothorax treatments. He was being sent to the sanatorium at River Glade and the department was paying his expenses. For a time he had a pass on the Canadian National Railway, but at the present time the department goes to the expense of sending this man to River Glade and then carrying him into the sanatorium, a distance of four miles from the station, or a total distance of about twenty miles. This work could be carried on just as well in the city of Moncton at the Hotel Dieu, as Doctor Landry is a specialist in this line. I might mention that Doctor Landry was giving this man special treatments on the advice of the doctor in charge of the sanatorium at River Glade, but payment of that bill has been refused. I would like to know why it is necessary that the department should go to the extra expense of sending this man to the Jordan sanatorium at River Glade, when the work could be done at an up to date hospital, second to none in Canada, by Dr. Landry, who is an expert in pneumothorax treatments.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I cannot reply to my hon. friend in regard to the particular case to which he has referred. There are many cases coming before the department; but, generally speaking, in the matter of treating cases of that character, we prefer to have them sent to a sanatorium. As I explained a little while ago, there is in New Brunswick the River Glade sanatorium and the St. John county hospital, which are the ones used.

Mr. PRICE: The department claims to be acting along the lines of economy.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, what is best in the interests of the soldier.

Mr. PRICE: That is no answer at all. This doctor is a very capable man and I would ask the minister to look into the matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I wish to direct the attention of the minister to a case I have brought before the department, and which has also been brought to his attention, as well as that of the Prime Minister, by the soldier himself. This is the case of a man who was gassed in France in 1918 and, while he was sent home as being physically fit, the question of gassing at the front was admitted by the department. He applied for pension in 1920 and carried on until 1922 without any result. I want to read to the minister the description he gives of the symptoms he experienced while in France and which he has felt ever since, although he has not been able to secure the consideration which he thinks he should have had. Prior to 1924 he tried without success to get his case properly before the Board of Pension Commissioners in order to secure a pension. In that year I took the case up for him and presented it to the federal appeal board, which at that time decided that he had a pensionable disability. This is the affidavit which he presented to the federal appeal board:

> In May or June 1918 was gassed and was sent out to the horselines. I was taking treatment when out there. I was only able to walk 100 yards and in October was gassed again and was sent to the hospital and from there to convalescent camp. All the time I was there I was taking treatment for the same thing which I have now—

These are the symptoms to which I would ask the minister to listen:

> —a pain in my left side and I am short of wind and am not able to do my day's work. I also take headaches and have sore eyes in the morning. When armistice was signed we were all sent back to our battalions without an examination. I was taking treatment when I left convalescent camp. I did not get a medical board before I left the army. I got examined by one doctor and I have been suffering from this trouble ever since I got gassed in May or June 1918. I was all right when I enlisted and have been taking treatment from Dr. Grey, Dr. McNiven and Dr. Nelson since I left the army.

I want to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that this man gives an almost exact description of chronic gas poisoning as is given by Major General Sir William MacPherson in his record of the medical services in the war, and I am going to read the symptoms detailed in his work.

[Mr. Price.]

Mr. POWER: Was this man's application turned down by the Board of Pension Commissioners?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Yes.

Mr. POWER: Does the hon. gentleman expect the minister to overrule the decision of the board?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I am not asking for that. I will come to that point if the hon. member for Quebec South will have just a little patience. This is an extract of the evidence that was submitted to the Board of Pension Commissioners in this man's case:

> Gassing has been admitted by the military authorities. Also in October, 1920, Dr. Anglin diagnosed bronchitis due to gas poisoning. In August, 1920, Dr. Richards states that stereoscopic plates show fibrosis of the lung. On November 4, 1922, he was examined by Dr. Elliott who ascribed his condition to gas poisoning and estimated his disability at 35 per cent minus 10. Dr. Seaton also estimated his disability at 25 per cent. Dr. Leonard Murray on May 23, 1923, diagnosed a mitral insufficiency and Dr. Elliott again on May 23, 1925, diagnosed his condition as chronic gas poisoning and reaffirmed his statement that the man's disability was about 35 per cent.

Dootor Elliott in 1925 diagnosed the man's condition the same as he did before, namely, gas poisoning with a disability of 35 per cent. In 1924, after the Board of Pension Commissioners had refused to accept him as a disability case, the matter was taken up before one of the members of the federal appeal board, who decided in favour of the soldier, that he was suffering from a disability received on service. That decision of the federal appeal board was contested by the Board of Pension Commissioners, who appealed the case to a quorum of the federal appeal board. The quorum of the board decided again in favour of the soldier, stating that he had a disability due to service. The point is that the man having tried for a number of years before the Board of Pension Commissioners to get a pension, after the federal appeal board gave the decision and after the appeal was decided in his favour, they granted him a 20 per cent disability and paid him on that basis. After he had received that pension of 20 per cent for a short time, I hardly know how long, the Board of Pension Commissioners had him reexamined and reduced his pension to 10 per cent. At that time I took his case up with the Board of Pension Commissioners and had him reexamined. I also secured from his employer a statement with regard to his condition and the number of days he had lost. This is what the employer said:

> The above has shown us a letter from you asking him to obtain from his employer the amount of time he has lost through disabilities.
> He has lost a total of 201 hours during the year 1925.
> We would like to go further and state that this man is married with two children, and is of an ambitious type. Since coming from overseas, he has been unable to do manual labour where any physical exertion was needed, and even on the work he is doing, at times is plainly working on his nerve. We have known this man as an employee for several years, both before and since the war, and his ambition to keep going in spite of his disabilities has earned our admiration.

These are the points in connection with this case. He undoubtedly is suffering from chronic gas poisoning. Let me read the symptoms as described in Major General Sir William MacPherson's book in regard to the medical services in the war, published in 1923. He says at page 402:

> Commonest feature—prolonged inability for severe muscular effort or even moderate exercise, associated with tachy cardia and rapid shallow breathing.
> The men's wind was gone and to some extent their nerves.

This is exactly what this man said. Among the other effects are giddiness on standing, headaches, and general vascular instability. This man complained of dizziness.

> It was closely allied to disordered action of the heart.
> Mild bronchitis in about 15 per cent of all cases.

The only part of this man's disability for which he is receiving a pension is chronic bronchitis due to gas poisoning. Among the other symptoms of gas poisoning I quote:

> Disordered heart action—irritable heart, precordial pain, exhaustion, dyspnoea, persistent tachy cardia after exercise, in one-third of total.
> Spasmodic nocturnal "asthena" either alone or in conjunction with irritable heart in less than a third.
> Exercise caused intense headache, giddiness and slow pulse (abnormally).

Thirty-five per cent of the above cases after three months' treatment persisted and were sent home for prolonged treatment. One group was composed of those who had not apparently been gravely gassed. I quote again:

> Condition supposed to be due to thickening of pulmonary epilhelium and bronchilitis obliterans.
> Causing deficient oxygenation of the blood similar to that found at high altitudes.

Every medical man who has examined this soldier stated that he has the symptoms of chronic gas poisoning, but they have not stated that he is suffering from chronic gas poisoning. Doctor Murray said that he had fibrosis of the lung, which follows the description given by Major General MacPherson—shortness of breath; those are exactly the words that Major General MacPherson uses. The man is admitted to be suffering from chronic bronchitis, which is found in almost thirty-five per cent of the gas poisoning cases, and yet the pension board will recognize only one symptom of gas poisoning, refusing to accept the other symptoms of gas poisoning as due to service, and those other symptoms are those of which the man complains most and which keep him from doing his work properly. Why the board and the department—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not the department.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Has the department ever taken it up with the board?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have referred the case to the board, I presume, with whatever arguments my hon. friend presented. We do not advise the board as to their judgments.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Here is a case where for three or four years the board absolutely refused to acknowledge that the man had any disability whatever.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am very sorry to hear that.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): After the man had got the decision of the appeal board the pension board absolutely refused to accept any symptom of gas poisoning except chronic bronchitis, although the other symptoms are present showing that the man is suffering from chronic gas poisoning. I would ask the minister to take this case up with the board and see if they cannot be influenced to give to this man better consideration than he has so far received. I might add that I have this case before the board now. I asked to have this man brought before a board in the city of Toronto to consider whether his other symptoms could not be regarded as establishing chronic gas poisoning, so that he could be given consideration for that disability. He had been receiving free treatment for chronic bronchitis, but not for the symptoms of chronic gas poisoning.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to bring the case to the attention of the board with the remarks which my hon. friend has made.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment relief, $250,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: How has this money been spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This expenditure is made by the board to those who are pensioners for disabilities incurred while on service, to those who have received a final payment by agreement, and to former members of His Majesty's forces, provided, however, that the disabled members of the imperial forces arriving in Canada not subsequent to December, 1924. Assistance is provided in winter where investigation indicates that distress would be occasioned if help were not forthcoming. Help is given to single men at the rate of $30 per month; man and wife, $45, man and wife and one child, $57; man and wife and two or more children, $67. Assistance is granted in kind in the form of orders on the local grocers, coal dealers, bakers, and so forth.

Mr. CAMPBELL: How much was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount spent was $378,000.

Item agreed to.

Operating expense and working capital, $300,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for this increase of $10,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Contingent expenses of the board which heretofore were paid out of a separate vote granted to the commissioners are included in this appropriation. In other words, we have taken in $10,000 that was formerly paid out of their vote.

Mr. SPENCER: What is working capital in a case of this kind?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Office supplies and expenses, telephone and telegraph, travelling expenses, stationery, motor transport, advertising, transportation of staff, and so forth. The expenditure last year was $271,000.

Item agreed to.

Employers' liability compensation, $75,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How does this come under this department instead of the Department of Labour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote is used for this purpose: Where a pensioner seeking employment goes to an employer, and the employer says, "You are disabled; you are a bad risk in my mill; I shall probably have to pay a compensation fee," the government assumes the payment of the compensation awarded by a Workmen's Compensation Board in the case of injury to the pensioner of 25 per cent and upwards who gets employment under those conditions. It is a very good provision and has been in operation for some years. The amount spent last year was about $20,000.

Item agreed to.

Sheltered employment, $175,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is sheltered employment?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These are the vetcraft shops in Halifax, Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Victoria.

Item agreed to.

Federal appeal board, $130,000.

Mr. ESLING: To whom does the federal appeal board report, or does it make a report?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They make a report to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. ESLING: Has it been brought down yet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know.

Mr. ESLING: Is it in printed form?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Mr. ESLING: In the report of the Department of Pensions and National Health naturally you look for some details with regard to the appeal board, but it is impossible to find any.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to get my friend a copy of the report.

Mr. ESLING: It is not even indexed. The only reference either in the estimates or in this report is that the amount is $130,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will make inquiry and let my hon. friend have the report.

Mr. ESLING: Is one printed each year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so but I cannot say for certain. I believe it was tabled early in the session.

Mr. ESLING: I asked the minister the same question last year, and he was not able to give any information. It is the most natural thing in the world to read the report of the Pensions department in an endeavour to ascertain what the board is doing, but it is impossbile to find anything about it in the report.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the information.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL REVENUE

National revenue, salaries, $745,840; contingencies, $50,000.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I would ask that the item stand, Mr. Chairman.

Item stands.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

National defence—salaries, $764,875; contingencies, $70,000.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I would ask that the item stand.

Item stands.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Grant to last post fund, $20,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How many soldiers have been buried under this fund in the last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In Alberta, 19; in British Columbia, 24; in Manitoba, 15; in New Brunswick, 3; in Nova Scotia, 3; in Ontario, 43; in Prince Edward Island, none; in Quebec, 40; and in Saskatchewan, 17, a total of 164.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does that include headstones for indigent soldiers? In 1928-29 there does not appear to be anything but I know there was a considerable amount paid out of the grant.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, we supplement the amount required to carry on this work in each province. We are carrying in the estimates this year $20,000.

Mr. SPENCER: It does seem an extraordinary thing that eleven years after the war, in a new country like this with all its potential wealth, we should have to bury such a large number of soldiers at the expense of the state.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is done in conjunction with the organization that is looking after it.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—European war and active militia, $42,000,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Is the increase due to the recommendation of the soldiers' committee?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, $1,600,000.

Item agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 30, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

On motion of Mr. Hay the report was concurred in.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. WILFRID GIROUARD (Drummond-Arthabaska) moved that the second report of the joint committee of both houses on the printing of parliament be concurred in.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the opinion was expressed by an hon. member that one or two of the reports should be printed. Perhaps it would not inconvenience the mover to let this motion stand so that an opportunity may be afforded that hon. member to look into the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion may be altered accordingly to-morrow.

Motion stands.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, where a member is sick or is in attendance at a meeting of a special committee,

I do not think there would be any objection, but when a member is simply absent from the house I do not think the bill should be called.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

OTTAWA COMMERCIAL RADIO STATIONS

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton):

1. What number of commercial radio stations are in operation in Ottawa, and what are their names or letters?

2. What license fees are paid by each station?

3. What is the total revenue from these stations?

4. What operating hours, if any, are given each station?

5. That wave length is given each station?

6. What is the total number of radio receiving set licenses issued, and total revenue from this source per annum?

7. Is the department of radio telegraphy making any serious attempt to alleviate the chaotic conditions as between commercial radio stations and the radio receiving public, in so far as allotment of commercial hours, wave lengths, etc?

8. When will the radio department be in a position to stabilize the conditions of radio as at present existing, and what action is the department at present taking in this regard?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Two.

Canadian National Railways, Jackson building—CNRO.

Dr. G. M. Geldert, 282 Somerset street W. —CKCO.

2. Fifty dollars per annum.

3. One hundred dollars per annum.

4. CNRO—2.55 p.m. to 4.30 p.m. daily except Sunday; 7.00 p.m. to midnight Monday and Thursday.

CKCO—10.30 a.m. to 12.00 p.m. Sunday; 7.00 p.m. to 11.30 p.m. Sunday; 7.00 p.m. to midnight Tuesday.

5. 434.8 metres.

6. Total private receiving licenses issued in Ottawa during fiscal year ended 31st March, 1929, 7,030. Total revenue for same period, $6,415.65.

7 and 8. Wavelength allotments are made in accordance with standard practice on the North American continent, the separation between channels being 10 kilocycles. The channel assigned for Ottawa was selected from the limited number available for use in Canada after due consideration of the technicalities involved and with a view to the minimizing of interference between stations. Complete immunity from interference of this class is difficult in the case of receivers of the less selective type and those which are located in the immediate vicinity of a broadcasting station. Hours of broadcasting are arranged by the stations to their mutual satisfaction and are registered with the department. The department maintains a staff for the purpose of dealing with preventable interference, a great deal of which has been suppressed throughout the Dominion. Special cars fitted for this work are operated in the larger centres including Ottawa.

REPARATIONS CLAIM OF FRANCIS WILLIAM CLARKE

Mr. CAHAN:

In the case of Francis William Clarke, who filed a claim (case 799) on account of the death of his wife and loss of personal effects by the sinking of the steamship Lusitania, but who was so ill at the time of the hearing before Commissioner Friel that he was unaware of the hearing being held, and whose claim was dismissed on account of claimant's absence, without prejudice to its being taken up again should occasion arise, will the government provide an opportunity for this claimant to be heard in support of his said claim?

Mr. RINFRET:

The case of Francis William Clarke, No. 799, will be dealt with under the provisions of an act to provide for the payment of claims for compensation for loss sustained by the civil population of Canada during the late war, which is now pending before the senate, as and when enacted.

VALIDATION OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved:

That the following orders in council, laid on the table on the eighth day of February, 1929, be approved:—

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette between the 20th December, 1927, and the 28th November, 1928, in accordance with the provisions of Section 75 of the Dominion Lands Act, chapter 113, R.S. 1927.

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette between the 20th December, 1927, and the 28th November, 1928, in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph c, Section 21 of the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, chapter 78, R.S. 1927.

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette between the 20th December, 1927, and the 28th November, 1928, in accordance with the provisions of Section 31 of the Yukon Act, chapter 215, R.S. 1927.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Would the minister explain?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is merely to carry out a provision of the Dominion Lands Act. Hon. members will recall that for a number of years a resolution was not passed in the house, and I was forced to get special legislation covering that omission to validate many of the cancellations of leases for Dominion lands and mining leases. This is simply carrying out the provision of the statute. The orders in council are placed on the table, remain there a reasonable length of time, and then by resolution are validated by the House of Commons.

Mr. BENNETT: Do I understand that all the orders in council that are mentioned in the resolution have been laid on the table?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty is that we are giving approval to orders in council that may be ultra vires entirely of the executive. I apprehend, however, that a mere approval of the House of Commons gives no validity legally to an order in council that is otherwise ultra vires because the mere approval of only one branch of parliament, instead of the three branches that constitute the legislative power, would not give validity, so I suppose there is no harm in approving them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is merely carrying out the provision of the act.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE

SALARIES OF PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. F. WHITE (London): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). I have received several telegrams from professional and technical men throughout the Dominion the gist of which is that they are vitally interested in the report of the royal commission on salaries and would request the government to make provision so that the recommendations of the royal commission may become effective for this current year. I was not aware that the report of that commission was about to be issued, but evidently there has been a widespread report to that effect, and possibly the Minister of Finance could give the house some information upon it.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I hope that my hon. friend will not run away with the idea that he is the only member of parliament who has been receiving these telegrams. It occurs to me that the so-called technical men must have more time and money to spend on sending out telegrams than on government work. So much for that. Considerable lobbying is being carried on, I observe, from telegrams coming into the department, so much so that it takes about the whole time of one secretary to reply to those coming into the Department of Finance. But that is not the only lobbying that is being carried on by people who are serving the state, and serving it well, and who think that they should be entitled to greater remuneration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The question that I was asked to put to the minister in the telegram that I received was whether or not he would make provision in the supplementary estimates to deal with the report that might be made by the royal commission on the salaries of professional and technical civil servants, so that they would not have to wait a year for the benefits of any recommendations made in their favour, but would get the benefit for the year 1929. Apparently the telegrams are so worded as to catch both the Minister of Finance on the one hand, and those who sit to the left of the Speaker on the other.

Mr. ROBB: Answering my hon. friend, who is a privy councillor, he understands quite well that anything going into the supplementary estimates must first have the O.K. of His Excellency the Governor General in Council before it can be submitted to parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: I never heard of the words O.K. in a statute.

REPORTS OF HARBOUR COMMISSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Yesterday I asked a question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin). Since then he has privately given me a certain amount of information, but I would like the reply to appear on the records of the house, and therefore I would ask if he would give the information to the house regarding the reports of the harbour commissions. I understand that the report of the St. John harbour commission has not yet been received. If that is so, I would ask the minister when these reports are expected to be submitted to the governor in council.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): All the reports of the harbour commissions have not yet been printed. We have received typewritten copies of the reports from the harbour commissions of St. John, Halifax and Vancouver. Up to the present time the only printed reports that we have received are from Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers and Chicoutimi. I understand that the other reports are being printed and will be available in a very short time. As soon as they are available I shall be pleased to give my hon. friend a copy of each of them.

Mr. MacLAREN: My question was rather: when should these reports be submitted to the governor in council?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no definite time fixed by the statute.

Mr. MacLAREN: The minister will agree that the reports have an important bearing on the passing of his estimates, and that we should have these reports before the estimates are under consideration.

Mr. CARDIN: The harbour commissions throughout the country are not considered or discussed under the estimates of the Marine and Fisheries department. There is no item in the estimates of that department giving the opportunity to discuss the harbour commissions. The operations of the harbour commissions are discussed when the affairs of the different commissions are before the house. They are dealt with under a special law governing them.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I think the minister will remember that last year and the year before we discussed this question and the undertaking was that an opportunity would be offered to discuss these matters in the light of the reports that might be made. I was under the impression that there was a definite time fixed by the statute within which the reports should be made, but apparently the minister has to make the collection himself, and must ask for and gather all these reports; otherwise, he would not receive them. I think it is highly desirable that they should be before the house so that they may be discussed when the estimates are under consideration.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no objection to repeating what I have already said, that an opportunity can be given to hon. gentlemen to discuss anything relating to these harbour commissions, and the discussion can be wide open. These reports, as a matter of fact, are published and distributed all over the country. According to the law these reports are made not to the house, but to the governor in council, but they are available to anyone desiring information in regard to the administration of any of these harbours. As far as I am concerned I am quite ready to give every opportunity to any hon. member and to the house generally to discuss the affairs of these harbours.

DOMINION ARSENAL, LINDSAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. PECK (Peterborough): I would remind the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) that an order was passed by the house on the 24th of April last for a return in regard to repairs to the Lindsay arsenal. The return would be a very simple one to prepare, but it has not yet been brought down.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): There was one return tabled.

Mr. PECK: This is a supplementary one. The order was passed by the house on the 24th of April last, and is overdue.

Mr. RALSTON: I will look into it.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE PROSECTIONS —MR. HARRY BRONFMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): On the 16th day of November last in the town hall of Craik, the Attorney General of Saskatchewan told the electors in Arm River constituency—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. EVANS: I am going to put a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Put the question.

Mr. EVANS: He stated that the prosecution of Harry Bronfman would be carried through to the bitter end. Did the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) give the Attorney General of Saskatchewan that assurance?

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Evidently there is an election going on in Saskatchewan. I may tell my hon. friend that I have nothing to add to what I stated the other day.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved the second reading of Bill No. 313, to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. CANNON (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as the house will recall, early in the session a special committee was appointed for the purpose of examining into the Elections Act and to recommend amendments which would improve the electoral system which now prevails in the Dominion. That committee has sat throughout the session, has held numerous meetings, heard a large number of witnesses, and has brought in a report attached to which is a draft bill containing the unanimous recommendations of the committee. I wish, Mr. Speaker, not only on behalf of the government but on behalf of the members of the house, to offer my hearty thanks to all the members of the committee for the work which they have performed, and for the unanimity of the decisions which they have reached. And may I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to make a special reference to the work done by the chairman of that committee, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power).

The legislation which is now introduced embodies the unanimous recommendations of the committee. I am ready to give any explanation on the bill that may be necessary when the clauses are considered in committee. May it suffice for me to state now that this legislation contains chiefly two new principles in our electoral system. The first concerns the appointment of the returning officers. Under the existing law returning officers were appointed by the governor in council upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State. There had been an attempt to give to the office of returning officer the character of permanency, but on account of the feeling which prevailed in the two leading parties in Canada, it has been the custom for the party in power to appoint the returning officers, and if that party did not happen to be returned to power the returning officers were dismissed and replaced by others. As a result, there has been among the members of the committee a feeling that this system ought to be altered, that the governor in council, that is the government or the party in power at the time of the issuing of the writs, or before, should no longer have the authority or the power to appoint the returning officers but that that authority and power should be vested in the chief electoral officer whose actions are surrounded by such safeguards as to guarantee his entire and complete independence in these matters. That is the first amendment, the first new principle introduced in this legislation, namely, the appointment by the chief electoral officer of all returning officers throughout the Dominion.

The second new principle introduced by this legislation is that of the appointment of enumerators to prepare the election lists in urban centres. It appeared from what was said by members of the committee, and by witnesses who were heard before that committee, that in rural constituencies the present system of making up the lists has given, if not complete satisfaction, at least considerable satisfaction, and that only minor alterations will be necessary. On the other hand, in the large urban centres, the present system of making up the electoral lists is open to a great deal of criticism, and that for three reasons. The federal list which was made up for the purpose of the election was based on the provincial list then existing, if there was such a provincial list, and that as a result there were many inaccuracies in the Dominion list and the candidates had to go to considerable trouble and expense to check up that list; that the delays were very often prolonged, and that as a consequence of those delays the lists were put in the hands of the candidates at a time so near the election date that they were practically useless. By this bill we do away altogether with provincial lists as a basis for the Dominion list, and the work of drawing up the list is assigned to officials, to be called enumerators, who will be appointed by the returning officers, and who will perform in the urban centres the work that at the present time is done in the rural constituencies by the enumerators.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): By registrars in the rural districts.

Mr. CANNON: Yes. My hon. friend is right.

Mr. CAHAN: Enumerators in the urban centres.

Mr. CANNON: They are called registrars in the act, but they are really enumerators on account of the character of the duties which they perform.

Mr. CAHAN: We have had a lot of contention about it. They are enumerators in the urban districts but the duties performed by the enumerators in the urban districts are performed by registrars in the rural districts. In the city districts they are called enumerators, and in the rural districts they are called registrars.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is right. In the act they are called registrars. As a result of the introduction of this second new principle, the list will be completed in the rural constituencies twenty-one days before election day and in the urban constituencies eighteen days before election day. These are the main features of the bill.

I may say in conclusion that the bill also contains certain ancillary amendments to ensure the proper working, in view of the new provisions which have been introduced. This legislation is brought down at this session upon the recommendation of the committee because it has been represented by the chief electoral officer to the committee, and by Colonel Biggar, who acted as legal adviser to the committee, that it would take considerable time to work out these amendments and put them in such shape that they would be of practical use in the next general election, if this election is held within a year or later. I gathered from what was said that it would take a year practically to put these amendments into working condition. These are the main amendments brought in, and I repeat that I will give any additional information or particulars when each clause is being considered in committee.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Urban polling division.

Mr. HEAPS: The bill has not been distributed and I am at a loss to know what is before the committee.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): There are no copies of the bill available just now and I do not see how we can proceed.

Mr. McINTOSH: There are fifty copies for distribution and most of them are on the other side.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I have been told that there are none to be distributed.

Mr. CANNON: In a few minutes there will be a copy for every hon. member, but all the clauses of the bill may be found in votes and proceedings.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) is apparently of the opinion that we were favoured with a larger number of copies on this side. It is only a case of coming events casting their shadows before.

Mr. POWER: It was that contingency that this act was designed to cover.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I wish to call attention to the wording of paragraph (y) of section 3, which reads:

"Urban polling division" means a polling division which is wholly contained within a place having a population of more than 10,000 persons and being, under the provincial law, a city, town or incorporated village.

In my opinion the word "and" at the end of the third line should be "or." A place with a population of 10,000 cannot be a village; it is a city.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that the change proposed by my hon. friend will not meet the difficulty. There are two things necessary: first, that it shall have a population of more than 10,000, and secondly, that it shall be incorporated under provincial law. Being incorporated under provincial law it may be a city, town or incorporated village; but if there is any incorporated village having a population of 10,000 it will not come within the provision of this section of the statute. I am not interested to know whether or not there is an incorporated village having a population of more than 10,000, but if there is or should be then it would come within the statute, and not otherwise.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Am I to understand that this applies only to a municipality having a population of 10,000 and to no other? That is the effect of it now; as it stands, it applies only to a municipality with a population of 10,000.

Mr. CAHAN: A population "of more than 10,000."

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But a town might not have a population of 10,000; the population might be only 5,000. As I read the section now, it applies only to a corporation having a population of at least 10,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: More than 10,000.

Mr. POWER: I am not prepared to discuss the question whether the legal phraseology meets the intention of the committee, but that intention was that any town or collection of dwellings, if I may put it that way, containing 10,000 persons, should be treated as an urban polling division. If a town contains a population under 10,000 it should be treated as a rural polling division, except that under certain circumstances the chief electoral officer might decide that it was an urban polling division. This was intended to cover cases of fast-growing towns, mining municipalities and so forth, where the people are not well known one to another, and where a system such as is in force in the cities should be brought into effect. It is left to the discretion of the chief electoral officer to decide whether or not a town of under 10,000 shall be subject to urban registration, every place with a population of over 10,000 being subject to such registration without any discretion whatever.

Mr. BRADETTE: There is an anomaly in this section. I believe that the ruling about the population of urban centres, as included in the revised Electoral Act, is not definite enough. The hon. member for Quebec South mentioned the rapid increase in population in certain mining centres, but that should not be a reason why we should not try to stop the abuse of creating urban centres out of sections which should remain absolutely rural.

Mr. POWER: The whole idea underlying urban registration is that there must be in such districts a closed list, and there must be an opportunity for checking that list, giving candidates some considerable time before the election. That is the idea underlying urban enumeration, registration and revision. In rural districts we do not provide for that because the people of a small community are assumed to know one another and there are no opportunities for personation or for false entries on the list. It is different in fast-growing communities. As an extreme case I might cite a community with a population of 4,000, a community which has just sprung up within two or three months. I mentioned mining communities because it is more likely to occur in connection with that industry than with any other. It would perhaps be advisable that the chief electoral officer should have the right to decide that in such a community, in view of the fact that people do not know their neighbours, there might be a system of urban registration as a safeguard against the offences which might be committed under the act in connection with the other system where people are not acquainted with their neighbours.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Polling day to be half holiday.

Mr. HEAPS: Under the old act the voter was entitled to two additional hours off in order to go and cast his vote and nothing was deducted from his wages for that time. Under the wording of this new section it is provided that the afternoon of polling day shall be a general holiday in Canada. This means that the average working man—and the same applies to women—will probably have a part of his wages deducted for the time he is off. I think this provision is rather a backward step. Under the present act they are given two hours with pay, but now you are giving them five hours without pay. I would like to suggest an amendment to this section, but since I have had the bill in my hands for only a few moments I have not had time to draft a proper amendment which would give the working people the privileges they enjoyed under the old act. Perhaps the minister would be prepared to place such a provision in this act.

Mr. CANNON: The amendment as we have it now was carried in 1925, and at that time it appeared to have the support of the labour people; because of some mistake the amendment did not reach the Senate and was not included in the legislation of that time. I may state that the opinion of the government is similar to the opinion of the committee; we thought we were meeting the wishes of the labour people in Canada by reintroducing that amendment. However, if it seems more satisfactory to revert to the old provision I have no objection to dropping this section entirely.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. HEAPS: Perhaps this might be allowed to stand in order to give me an opportunity of considering the matter. I do not know whether it is the intention to complete consideration of this bill to-day, but I would like time to consider this matter.

Section stands.

On section 5 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 11—Office for returning officer.

Mr. CAHAN: It would be well to correct the spelling in the last line. The word "noted" should be "notice".

Section agreed to.

Sections 12, 13 and 14 agreed to.

On section 15—Preparation of lists.

Mr. ARTHURS: Subsection 5 provides a penalty of not less than one dollar or more than five dollars in respect of each name illegally dropped off the list, and I would point out that such a fine is totally inadequate. Under this section an election could be vitiated very easily, and if fines were imposed the total amount would be very small. I think the penalty should be much greater.

Mr. CANNON: This is a special penalty imposed in addition to any other penalty which may exist. The other penalties contained in the act are very severe.

Mr. CAHAN: Section 12 gives the penalty which is applicable.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will look at page 5 he will see the other penalties. These officials are liable to the general penalities in addition to the penalty mentioned in this section.

Mr. ARTHURS: My contention is that in itself this penalty is a farce and does not amount to anything. If there is to be a penalty at all it should be much greater.

Mr. CANNON: The members of the committee had this idea. Some people are in no way frightened by very heavy fines; if you mention fines of $1,000 or $500 they are not at all impressed, but they understand a fine of fifty cents or one dollar much better.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is that the general idea of the Department of Justice?

Section agreed to.

On schedules A and B to section 32:

Mr. CAHAN: One paragraph of this schedule appears to have been drawn in a slightly different way from what I thought was the intention of the committee. Rule 20 reads:

> Any voter qualified to vote in any polling division in the district allotted to any registrar, and duly entered in the list of voters for such polling division, may make oath before such registrar alleging the death, disqualification, or real residence and appearance in another list—

And so on. I think any voter in the electoral district, especially in our city districts should be entitled to make such a protest.

Mr. POWER: There is no objection to that, but I believe this is an exact copy of the former act, and that is why it remained in this amendment. That provision was in the old act, but there is no objection to my hon. friend's suggestion, and I think the point is well taken.

Mr. CAHAN: In a large city, where there are many tenement houses and a large number of people resident in a polling division, sometimes it is difficult to get a proper scrutineer. The man who makes that search and makes out an affidavit disqualifying another person should be a pretty reliable man, and I think you should be able to select him from the voters in the entire electoral district rather than from those in any particular polling division.

Mr. POWER: Then my hon. friend's suggestion would be that the clause read something like this: "Any voter qualified to vote in the electoral district for which the registrar has been appointed." Is that correct?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Mr. POWER: Colonel Biggar has just pointed out that the registrar is not likely to have before him the complete list of all the voters in the entire electoral district. In the ordinary course he will have before him the list of twelve polling subdivisions which comprise his registration district, but he will not have the complete list of all the electoral divisions, so it would be fairly difficult for him to check up in order to see whether or not the objector is a voter in that particular electoral division.

Mr. CAHAN: I think it would be quite sufficient if an elector, coming before the registrar, made oath that he was a qualified voter. At least that would be presumptive evidence that he was a voter and he should be allowed to file an objection against a name on the list which properly should not be there. I think that should be sufficient, because it is so difficult in some of the city divisions where you are limited to the polling division to obtain the aid of those who are really qualified to examine into the qualifications of the voters on the list.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. member will permit thi ssection to stand, we will insert the proper amendments afterwards.

Mr. ROBINSON: Is any provision being made for the man qualified to vote but who objects to being put on the list because the assessor might assess him the $5 poll tax? In Walkerville and Windsor we find many cases where single men avoid being placed on the list in order to escape the $5 poll tax.

Mr. POWER: There is no provision made for compulsory registration or voting, if that is what the hon. member means. Where a man's name is placed on the list by the enumerator he will have a pretty hard time to get it off unless he is willing to swear that he is not qualified to vote.

Schedule stands.

On section 16—Polling day.

Mr. KAISER: Mr. Chairman, has an endeavour been made to ascertain how many people are carried to the polls in any constituency and having neighbours vouch for their being residents of the district?

Mr. POWER: In rural polling divisions it is done very generally, but I do not think any record is kept. The information could be obtained by looking at the poll books for the rural polling subdivisions throughout the country.

Mr. KAISER: I suppose the Solicitor General concurs with the chairman of the committee in stating that this practice is pretty general. I desire to state that it is not general, that very few people vote in that way. I believe that very simple factor prevented the committee from considering a matter which, in my opinion is of supreme importance. We all believe in what might be called educated democracy; we believe that the people should be the jury which pronounces upon governments. As a matter of fact, what happens? In Canada 66 per cent of the people who are entitled to vote go to the poles to register their vote, and of that 66 per cent, 33 per cent are carried to the polls by the energy and efforts of the political parties. One-third of the people of our country only are sufficiently concerned with the affairs of Canada to go to the polls and register a vote without being urged to do so. That condition is not peculiar to Canada; it obtains in a great many countries. We have gone to a great deal of trouble to work out amendments to take care of matters which are insignificant as compared with this. Our efforts should be directed towards those who do not vote or who do not care to vote, just as is done in other countries.

In Australia, for instance, they had only 48 per cent of the people casting their votes in general elections; the percentage rose to 50 and the government of Australia began to recognize the fact that something should be done to induce the people to cast their votes without being carried to the polls. What was the result? In the two last general elections over 90 per cent of the people on the voters' lists went to the polls and voted. I am not saying that we in Canada should carry out the methods adopted in other countries, because that might be considered as compelling the people to vote. But what I do say is this: Something should be done with regard to the man who does not vote, and I consider that it is quite within the rights of the people who make the laws of the country to ask the jury to appear at the polls once in four years and pronounce upon the conduct of the government. It is surely not asking too much of a man to say that he should appear once in four years to register his vote. If there is a reason why he could not go to the polls, nothing should be done, but if there is no reason, measures should be taken to impress upon him the importance of casting his vote. The first and the simplest suggestion I have to offer is this: That man's name should not appear upon the voter's list for some little time. I would not say how long that time should be, but there is an absurdity in looking up these people every four years and going to the cost of preparing lists, putting the same people on those lists year after year, and election after election, and then having 30 per cent of them absenting themselves from the polls. Thirty per cent of the cost is absolutely wasted. I would like to place upon Hansard a letter which I received from the Prime Minister of Australia, dated March 16, 1927, as follows:

Dear Dr. Kaiser:

With reference to your letter of the 8th January, I have very much pleasure in forwarding you herewith copy of the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918-25, and copy of the Electoral and Referendum Regulations, Statutory Rules 1926/201. I am also enclosing a graph which shows in respect of each eection and referendum held since the inception of the Commonwealth:—

(a) the number of electors enrolled;

(b) the number of electors to whom ballot-papers were issued; and

(c) the percentage of electors to whom ballot-papers were issued to electors enrolled.

[Mr. Kaiser.]

I cannot recall press criticism of any consequence against the introduction of compulsory voting. At the 1925 federal elections the government was returned to power with a very strong majority in the House of Representatives and it secured every vacant seat in the Senate. In the press after the elections there was much comment as to whether compulsory voting had been responsible for the government victory.

Some sections of the press took the view that the introduction of the compulsory voting did not affect the proportion of votes in favour of the government, while other sections claimed that it had materially assisted the government. The outstanding feature of the voting, however, was the large number of electors who recorded their vote, the percentage for the last election being 91 per cent. Prior to the introduction of the compulsory voting in 1917, the percentage of federal voters was 78.30 and in 1922 it fell to 59.36.

It is rather difficult to gauge the effect of the compulsory voting at the last federal election, as at the time owing to the activities of the communistic element in Australia there were many people who had previously voted for the Labour party but who did not do so on the last occasion.

I very much appreciate the remarks which you have so kindly made regarding my recent visit to Canada.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd) P. M. Bruce.

Those are the simple facts in connection with Australia. I would like to see similar ideas given currency in this country to the end that greater attention might be paid to the 66 per cent who either do not vote or who have to be carried to the polls, and less attention to the 33 per cent who voluntarily go to the polls.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In his opening remarks, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) stated that the committee had no knowledge that many people had their votes sworn in on election day. In my experience in western Canada, and I think in the experience of practically all the members from that section of the country, we find that in the rural districts many votes are sworn in on election day. Our enumerators have long distances to travel. Some people live in remote parts of the polling divisions and are missed in making up the electoral lists. The result is that on election day, in practically every poll in the rural districts of western Canada, a few are sworn in who are entitled to vote.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In answer to the last part of the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario, may I point out that it is a common thing in the rural districts to find from 75 to more than 90 per cent of the electors turning out on voting day. This is all a matter of whether the electors are interested in the election or not. If they are not interested, no amount of law will make them vote. You could prosecute and go to a great deal of trouble in the matter and yet you could not force them to vote unless they were interested in doing so.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member for Ontario put his views before the committee in a very interesting way, but the committee, after having considered the views as expressed by the hon. member, decided not to include them in their report. This legislation is along the lines of the unanimous report of the committee. I hope the hon. gentleman within a very short time will manage to have more converts on his side and then we shall introduce compulsory voting in Canada. This year, however, apparently the members who sat on the committee and considered the question, were not ready to go as far as the hon. gentleman was prepared to do.

Mr. KAISER: The Solicitor General was very courteous to me from the beginning of the discussion and I have no fault to find with him. All that I endeavoured to do was to begin casting a few seeds so that some day something along the lines I suggested might be done. There is no harm in doing that.

Mr. JACOBS: May I say a word or two with respect to subsection (2) which reads:

> The day fixed for the poll shall at any election be a Monday, unless the Monday of the week in which it is desired to hold the poll
> (a) is a holiday as defined by the Interpretation Act; or > (b) at a general election, is a day which is generally observed by the residents of any province as a day for religious exercises and is declared to be a holiday by the law of such province.

Why is it that those who drafted this section fixed Monday as a rigid, definite day upon which the election should be held? Perhaps it is because it so immediately follows Sunday that the electors come to the polls in a holy frame of mind.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And it is two days from Saturday.

Mr. JACOBS: That would make people of my persuasion half as religious on Monday as those who attend church on Sunday. A number of holidays, which are observed by the people of my persuasion, take place in the autumn of every year. If it were to happen that the election should fall on any one of those days, it might mean that I would disappear from the house at the next election and also my good friend the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. The latter would be a calamity frightful to contemplate.

Mr. CHAPLIN: For the hon. member.

Mr. JACOBS: It seems to me that this clause ought to stand over for further consideration. I am sure it is not the desire of any hon. member to have a law passed which would in any way interfere with the franchise of British citizens who hold religious views different from those of the majority. I am sure that is not the idea and there are people of my persuasion to be found in every electoral district in Canada. It is only right that I, as a member of that persuasion, should point out to the government the difficulty of adhering to a rule of this kind. There ought to be some flexibility. If it be found that Monday is a religious holiday observed by a number of people, it should be changed to Tuesday or some other day which would be agreeable.

Mr. CANNON: The reason why the amendment was inserted was that it was represented by the chief electoral officer and by Colonel Biggar that, by having Monday as election day, it was more convenient to fix the dates upon which several different things were to be done by officials and so forth. I appreciate the argument brought forward by my hon. friend. He wishes the clause to stand. I might point out that subsection (2), as it reads now, states:

> Unless the Monday of the week in which it is desired to hold the poll (a) is a holiday as defined by the Interpretation Act.

Mr. JACOBS: That would not apply.

Mr. CANNON: That would not apply to holidays which are not included in the Interpretation Act. We might let the clause stand for the present and see if we cannot devise some way of meeting my hon. friend's wishes.

Section stands.

Sections 17, 18 and 19 agreed to.

On section 20—Name not on list.

Mr. ESLING: We on this side have not had an opportunity of looking at the bill. I just want to ask the minister whether it has been made clear in this section as to a voter casting his vote in the electoral district or in the polling division. For instance, the act specifically provides for a residence of two months in the electoral district. Then when the man comes to cast his vote, the instructions sent to the deputy returning officer read "in the polling division" and not "in the electoral district" so that one contradicts the other. I brought the matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. CANNON: The idea which underlies this clause is as follows: In a rural constituency, if a man found that his name was not on the list, he could, by taking the appropriate oath, register his vote, whereas the same privilege does not exist in the cities. But the returning officers were prone to interpret the act as meaning that if a man's name were not on the list, he was deprived of his vote. This amendment is inserted in order to make the matter very clear that if a man has his name on the list he is entitled to vote at the appropriate polling station, and in order to make the distinction very clear as between rural and urban polling divisions.

Mr. ESLING: I understand that. My question is whether the act has been changed so as to make it specific whether the qualifications call for a residence of two months in the electoral district or in the polling division.

Mr. POWER: The oath has been changed to suit the wishes of my hon. friend. I remember well that he made certain representations to the committee with regard to the oath to be taken by people in rural polling divisions, and I think the oath has been changed to suit his views.

Mr. FRASER: To be quite clear on that, do I understand from the answer that has been given, that the principle has not been changed, but that it has been made a little more specific?

Mr. POWER: Exactly. At the present time in order to vote under those circumstances the applicant for a vote must take the whole oath. He is not allowed to swear as he did before simply that he resides in the electoral division. He must take the whole oath, that he has resided in the division for two months, is a British subject, and so forth.

Section agreed to.

On section 21—Advance polls.

Mr. SPOTTON: I have not had time to read this section carefully, but I would point out that there has been a great deal of misunderstanding in the rural constituencies in regard to advance polls. If the chief electoral officer is advised that there is a certain number of railway men, commercial travellers and others who want to vote at an advance poll he will establish an advance poll for that town. It may be a town of three or five thousand people. The question did arise where there was an advance poll in one town and commercial travellers, railway men and railway mail clerks went to the returning officer of their own municipality and asked him for a certificate to allow them to go over to the neighbouring town and vote at the advance poll there. I can understand that in any city constituency there might be trouble about it, but there would be very little trouble in a rural constituency where everyone knows everyone else, and it would seem to me to be well that in a village or town where there are commercial travellers, railway men or railway mail clerks, they should receive a certificate from the deputy returning officer of their polling division allowing them to drive over to the neighbouring town and vote at the advance poll there. There was a difference of opinion about this question in our by-election, the Conservative lawyers holding that the men could go over and vote, and the Liberal lawyers holding that they could not. I should like the Solicitor General to make the point clear.

Mr. POWER: Under the law at that time the Liberal lawyers were right.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will read subsection 2A of section 21 he will see that it provides for the case he mentions.

Mr. SPOTTON: I take it, then, from the Solicitor General that a railway mail clerk, a commercial traveller or any of the classes I mentioned, has a right to drive over to a neighbouring town where there is an advance poll being held and vote in that constituency.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, if the chief electoral officer so directs. The chief electoral officer may direct that an advance poll may be used for a certain area, not only for the place where it is situated but for adjoining sections.

Mr. SPOTTON: He may so direct, but would it take in the entire rural constituency? It would be necessary to secure his ruling in the matter prior to election day.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, but under this law the returning officers will be made permanent officers, and they will organize their constituencies and be in a position to make all these arrangements with the chief electoral officer in advance, so I think the needs of the situation mentioned by my hon. friend will be met.

On section 22—When polls to be open.

Mr. LADNER: Instead of having the hours from two to ten o'clock on Saturday would it not be better to fix an earlier hour? What objection would there be to having it from eight o'clock on the day immediately preceding the voting day, because circumstances might arise which would make it advisable for citizens to vote in the morning.

Mr. POWER: The answer is to be found in the note. This matter was discussed in the committee. The note says:

> The proposed extension of hours on Saturday is thought likely to meet the necessities of the situation without compelling the election officers and candidates' agents who serve at advance polls to give up their regular employment for the purpose.

One of the reasons why voting day was fixed for Monday was that then there would be the whole afternoon of Saturday as well as Thursday evening and Friday evening for the advance polls. If it came in the middle of the week it would mean withdrawing from their regular occupation the number of people usual to man the polls. The same objection arises with regard to Saturday morning. It is a matter of convenience for the candidates and the electoral officials and for the public generally.

Mr. LADNER: Does not the hon. member think that any inconvenience to the candidates and electoral officials would be outweighed by the convenience to the public at large being able to vote on Saturday morning while in town on their business, and then they could have the whole of Saturday afternoon free.

Mr. POWER: These are advance polls for people who have no business in the towns—commercial travellers, railway men, mariners and so forth.

Mr. LADNER: But they may want to go away.

Mr. BRADETTE: Is it provided in this bill that newly naturalized citizens will have to have their naturalization papers with them in order to vote?

Mr. CANNON: There is nothing in the law about that.

Mr. BRADETTE: The law should provide for that because in my home town I have known fifty people to vote on the same naturalization paper who were not entitled to vote at all.

Mr. CANNON: If he takes the oath it is not necessary for him to show his naturalization papers.

Mr. BRADETTE: In this country a great many newly arrived people are easily made the tools of other interested people. I know for a fact that interested people, knowing that these newly arrived do not appreciate the value of their naturalization papers, will use them for fifty other people who are not entitled to vote.

Mr. POWER: That is somewhat in line with the suggestion frequently made that people who register at hotels should carry their marriage certificate with them. If we were to insert any clause of that sort in the act every person who went to the polls would have to produce his birth certificate or his naturalization certificate. It was felt that when we provided that people could be sworn as to their qualifications we were going as far as we could go.

Mr. CAHAN: And there is always the penalty for perjury.

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. BRADETTE: In some sections of Europe they have to bring their papers to be allowed to vote.

Mr. CANNON: Not under the law.

Mr. BRADETTE: There is an anomaly there. A good many people with the best intentions are voting when they are not entitled to vote. I have a good many of them in my section, and some interested people make it a point to see that these people who are not entitled to vote do vote.

Mr. POWER: Swear every one of them.

Mr. JACOBS: There are a good many people who vote that way, but I do not agree with my friend that they do it with the best intentions.

Mr. HEAPS: If the suggestion of the hon. member were carried out it would prevent hundreds of legitimate voters from voting on election day. I have seen cases myself, of men who have been in this country for twenty or thirty years who have been precluded from voting on election day; their names were on the list but the returning officer positively refused to allow them to vote, and I am glad to have the assurance of the Solicitor General that these people will now be allowed to vote. As I say, I have known hundreds of men and women who have been in this country for many long years being sent out of a polling booth on election day because they did not have their certificates with them; they were told to go and fetch them, but they went out of the polling booth anad never bothered to return. It should be the duty of the returning officer to see whether these men and women are naturalized or not. If he is not satisfied that a man or a woman is a Canadian citizen he should swear them, and if he feels then after they have been properly sworn that everything is in order they should be allowed to vote.

Mr. BRADETTE: In our section of the country practically one-fifth of the people are not on the list; there are many people up there whose votes were taken away from them in the manner mentioned by the hon. member, but that statement does not do away with the fact that hundreds, yes, thousands of people are voting and who are certainly not entitled to vote.

Section agreed to.

Sections 23 and 24 agreed to.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Chairman, if hon. gentlemen will turn to page 29, there is a schedule which includes the constituencies where the fifteen-day system will exist instead of the eight-day system which is general throughout the Dominion. It has been generally agreed that this schedule 3 might stand, and any member of the house who wishes to have the name of his constituency included might so inform the officers of the house.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What page is that?

Mr. CANNON: Page 28.

The CHAIRMAN: There are a number of other sections before we reach that.

Section 25 agreed to.

On section 27—Two weeks interval between nomination and polling days.

Mr. CANNON: This is under section 27, as to the names of the constituencies—

Mr. CAHAN: Let us pass this act up to the point—

Mr. CANNON: The said act is amended by adding to schedule 3 thereof—

Mr. CAHAN: We have had form 35. We have not yet passed form 36 following.

Mr. CANNON: No. We are at section 27 now, page 28.

Mr. CAHAN: We have not reached it. Let us pass everything up to section 27, which we have not yet done.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, that is done.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, I have been listening and I did not hear the forms.

[Mr. Heaps.]

Mr. CANNON: We are at 27 now.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it proposed to allow this section 27 to stand for further consideration?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Section 27 stands.

Sections 28 and 29 agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish this committee to have any misunderstanding. We have passed clause 25—

Mr. POWER: There is a section missing.

Mr. CAHAN: Which included form No. 36, but I did not hear you call section 26 of this act.

Mr. POWER: No, it appears to be missing.

Mr. CAHAN: I mean section 26 at the bottom of page 26. I have not heard that section called. It may be because I did not understand, but that section 26 is important.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend has any remarks to make let us go back to section 26.

Mr. CAHAN: It is not a case of my making any remarks, it is a question of this committee passing 26.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend misunderstands me. If my hon. friend did not hear 26 being called let us go back to it, because I would be delighted to hear from him.

Mr. CAHAN: It is not a question of hearing from me. I have nothing to say, but every section should be called.

Mr. CANNON: It was called.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I am in error, but I did not hear section 26 called.

Mr. CANNON: Well, it was called.

Mr. CAHAN: I was listening carefully. If section 26 was called there is no doubt about it. I have no objection then to going to 27.

Mr. POWER: May I call the attention of the committee to section 27 which has been allowed to stand? The chief electoral officer, during the course of his period in office, came to the conclusion that a large number of constituencies which were not now in the schedule of what I might call two-week constituencies, that is to say, between nomination day and election day two weeks must elapse, should be added. For instance, in the western provinces: Manitoba—Brandon, Dauphin, Lisgar, Macdonald, Marquette, Neepawa, Portage la Prairie, Souris; in Saskatchewan—

Assiniboia Humboldt, Kindersley, Last Mountain, Long Lake, Mackenzie, Melville, Moose Jaw, Qu'Appelle, Rosetown, Saskatoon, South Battleford, Swift Current, Weyburn, Willow Bunch, Yorkton; in Alberta—Acadia, Battle River, Bow River, Calgary West, Camrose, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, Vegreville, Wetaskiwin. It was suggested in the committee that members of parliament who thought it was in the public interest that their constituencies should be placed in the schedule could have the same done by way of amendment.

Mr. CAHAN: But election day would be the same for all of those constituencies.

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): With regard to section 29, would the Solicitor General say whether that applies to past elections or future elections?

Mr. CANNON: Future elections. The committee was of opinion that these amendments should apply only at the next general election, that they should not apply to the by-elections which will be held during the present parliament.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): But if the present members of parliament are candidates at the general election will this apply to them or not?

Mr. CANNON: Any member of the present parliament.

Mr. LADNER: What about future parliaments?

Mr. CAHAN: The act is amended for that purpose, and we have this last clause saying:

This act shall not apply to the election of any member to the present parliament.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): It seems to affect general elections as well as byelections.

Mr. CANNON: It will be in force at the next general election.

Mr. CAHAN: Could not that be stated a little more clearly?

Mr. CANNON: I do not know how it could be worded any more clearly than it is; the word "to" makes it perfectly clear. It is not "of."

Section stands.

On section 4—Polling day to be half holiday.

Mr. THORSON: I suggest that instead of taking the clause which is now in the bill we should go back to the old clause and substitute the word "three" for the word "two" in the second line thereof. That would give the employee three hours in which to vote and it would not deprive him of pay for any portion of time on election day.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why does he need three hours—to have a drink?

Mr. THORSON: In parts of Winnipeg many persons work as far as ten miles away from their polling division.

Mr. POWER: I understand that the government have no objection to accepting this amendment, but as chairman of the committee I wish to dissociate myself from it. We considered the matter thoroughly and came to the conclusion that the federal parliament had no authority to grant a holiday with pay.

Mr. CAHAN: With compulsory pay.

Mr. POWER: There is, it is true, a clause in the Dominion Elections Act providing that every employer shall on polling day allow every elector, his employee, at least two additional hours in which to vote and that no employer shall make any deduction from the pay of such employee. I think it is a question of civil rights and contract and not one for the federal parliament.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS COMMITTEE

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac): With the unanimous consent of the house I would like to present the thirteenth report of the select standing committee on railways and canals.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS OF CANADA

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon): With the consent of the house I desire to move that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill 84, to incorporate the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada, be now read a first and second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the first and second times and concurred in.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL TERMINAL FACILITIES

The house resumed from May 27 consideration in committee of Bill No. 254, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain terminal facilities with grade separation and other works at and in the vicinity of the city of Montreal.—Mr. Dunning.—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: Certain sections of this bill were allowed to stand in order to give me an opportunity to consult the law officers in order to make sure that the intentions which I expressed to the house and which were agreeable to the house really had been carried into effect in the bill. A careful check of the matter with the law officers of the department and those of the Department of Justice convinces me that the bill as drafted does in fact leave the Board of Railway Commissioners in exactly the same position with reference to this work as they would be in reference to any other piece of work done by the Canadian National, but in order to establish that fact beyond question and to satisfy the house generally as to the clarity of the legislation, in connection with section 7, which was allowed to stand, I propose to eliminate these words, commencing on line 13:

> Detail plans of crossings of railways and crossings by the railway of streets or highways shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

By the elimination of those words there can be no doubt but that the provisions of the Railway Act with respect to the powers and duties of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and those of the Canadian National Railway Act, will apply to the works contemplated by this bill.

In connection with section 8 a similar question was brought up by the hon. member for South Toronto, and I now propose a redrafted section in order to make it quite clear that the matters dealt with in this section are not within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners in any case, and to provide a manner whereby they may be dealt with. The redrafted section reads:

> Where streets or highways are affected by the said works but are not crossed by the company's tracks or diverted incidental to any such crossing and by reason thereof the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada has no jurisdiction under the Railway Act with respect thereto, the company may with the approval of the governor in council, enter into agreements, where it may be desirable, with the city of Montreal or with any other municipality with respect to such streets or highways or with respect to the opening of new streets, the closing of existing streets and ways, the making of diversions or widenings of such streets or highways, and the making of sub-streets, subways or overhead facilities in connection with such streets or highways, and the apportionment of the cost thereof.

I think that amendment will make it quite clear that the agreement contemplated is one with respect to improvements, which, under the Railway Act, are not within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Many objections were offered to section 10 of the bill, and I propose to move that that section be struck out. I think these amendments will meet the various objections raised the last time this bill was in committee.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, before this amendment is taken up I would like to take this opportunity to present a few views on this matter. This proposed station will not be a union station, but a station for one railway only. Does the minister propose the same equality of treatment for other places as for Montreal herein?

The port of Montreal has developed in a wonderful manner. The city of Toronto has had to pay about $12,000,000 to have a viaduct constructed there. During the past eight years, since I have been a member of this house, the Dominion of Canada expended $15,000,000 to construct a great bridge at Montreal. This parliament should only be concerned with interprovincial or international bridges, or where navigation is affected, but the Dominion government paid the full cost of this purely municipal bridge for the city of Montreal or a bridge between two provincial municipalities. A great real estate movement is taking place in the city of Montreal in connection with this particular proposition. Land is being bought up by speculators whereas the whole business should be handled by the government. The government could buy more land than is needed and then take advantage of the unearned increment. The city of Montreal should be contributing 50 per cent of the cost of this work. In the old days of the railway commission, the late Mr. Justice Mabee gave a ruling which affected every municipality making an application for the removal of level crossings. His ruling was that where the highway had been there ahead of the railway, the railway paid, but where the railway had been there first then the municipality should shoulder the whole burden of the work.

The city of Toronto gave the Canadian Pacific Railway a right of way down the Don river for $600 per year, when it would have cost them hundreds of thousands of dollars to get into the heart of the city. The city leased the station site, that is the new union station site, to the Grand Trunk for a station and the railway leased part of it to the post office. The cost of the station at Toronto will come to about $6,000,000, while the viaduct will cose about $32,000,000. The member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) said that it would cost $10,000,000 before they got through, but the city of Toronto will have to pay over $12,000,000 in order to provide a viaduct and rights of way for the railways for a distance of fifteen miles along the water front. The minister's amendment does not cover this phase at all; the railway commission cannot change the agreement between the government of Canada and the Canadian National Railways and a third party, such as the city of Montreal. They cannot interfere with vested rights; their duty is to enforce the Railway Act and any provisions of that act as to plans, routes, and other technical layouts.

I have no desire to cripple the national railways, far from it; I hope they grow in strength from year to year. I think they have been doing far better than anyone expected. This burden of $50,000,000 is being put upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of Canada. If this amount were not being expended in this way reduction in the income tax and sales tax would be possible but the government insists upon continuing to spend money like water. It seems to me that this particular matter might stand over for a while. The government should say to the city of Montreal, "We are not going to continue to place the municipal burdens of the city of Montreal upon the people of Canada." New highways, town planning, new subways, widening of street, and other local improvements are to be made at the cost of the people of Canada. The principle property and civil rights in the province is involved when a municipality receives consideration of this kind. If the minister were up and doing he would say to the people of Montreal, "It is nearly time that the municipality paid for its own municipal work," and not have that cost saddled upon the people of the province of Ontario and other provices in the Dominion of Canada. The rest of the country has been asked to pay too much money for the benefit of this municipality: this city is well able to take care of its own municipal burdens.

If this were a union station the argument might be a little different. The suggestion was made that union station should be built in the city of Hamilton, to be used by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo Railway, and the Grand Trunk, but nothing has come of that proposition. The city of Hamilton, like Toronto, was asked to contribute. The government can build an elevator in Port Huron, which might just as well have been built in Sarnia, and they are quite content to pay the cost of the elaborate improvements which are being made in the city of Detroit instead of having that city pay a fair share of the cost of those Canadian National improvements.

This is a very improvident bargain as far as the people of Canada are concerned, and it might very well stand for another year. The government should ask the city of Montreal to pay $20,000,000 towards the cost of this work. The time has come for someone to stand up and say something about this matter. Does the minister propose similar equality of treatment for the other cities in the Dominion, or similar grade separation? If that is the case, then the city of Toronto would have a good claim for a refund of the money it has paid. In 1911, 1912 and 1913 we attempted to arrive at an agreement with the railway commission, but we were told that not a dollar would be spent in Toronto unless we came across with $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 for the grade separation viaduct work along the waterfront. I do not know of any state government in the United States that is doing this for the municipalities. Certainly the state of New York would not do it. The cities of Buffalo, Rochester and Cleveland have had to spend millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money in order to carry out similar improvements. If you go along lake Erie, the cities of Toledo and Detroit have had to spend money to remedy the evils of these level crossings. If the city of Montreal is to go scot-free in regard to level crossings and bridges as well, what is the next municipal service that that city will want the Dominion to pay for? It will not be long before they want the country as a whole to pay for a new trunk sewer service or a new water supply. If you read the Municipal Act in the Code of Quebec, you will find that these services are all municipal. I have looked over the situation and what is proposed to be done is nothing but municipal town planning. The government is going to contribute more than half of this money in order to do town planning in Montreal. Look at the own planning in Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, where they have widened boulevards which are a great credit to the people of those cities. Are they going to come to parliament to ask the government to pay part of their cost out of the public treasury? No. If we are going to pass this legislation, there will be an agitation made to the government for the refund of the cost of improvements such as these. The city of Toronto could make out a strong case for a refund of $10,000,000 for viaduct work from this parliament.

The port of Montreal is one of the largest ports in the world. The administration of that port is not, I think, excelled anywhere else, and the people are going to get back every dollar spent on that port. But as regards this local town planning scheme, a very strong case could be and has been made out that the city of Montreal should shoulder some of these burdens itself and not unload its town planning and other municipal improvements upon the Dominion.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Robb moves that section 7 be amended by striking out the words beginning in the thirty-sixth line with the word "detail" down to and including the word "commissioners" in the thirty-ninth line.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Robb moves that section 8 be amended to read as follows:

8. Where streets or highways are affected by the said works but are not crossed by the company's tracks or diverted incidental to any such crossing and by reason thereof the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada has no jurisdiction under the Railway Act with respect thereto, the company may with the approval of the governor in council enter into agreements, where it may be desirable, with the city of Montreal or with any other municipality with respect to such streets or highways or with respect to the opening of new streets, the closing of existing streets and ways, the making of diversions or widenings of such streets or highways, and the making of sub-streets, subways or overhead facilities in connection with such streets or highways, and the apportionment of the cost thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 10 has been struck out.

Mr. BENNETT: I was about to suggest to the minister, looking at the bill in its amended form, that it would make it perfectly clear if a special section were added stating that matters with respect to the crossing of streets or highways by railways and the crossing of railways by streets or highways, shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners as provided by the Railway Act. As the bill stands now, there is no reference as to how the matter is to be dealt with. My hon. friend's submission is that the provisions of the Railway Act will therefore apply. Might it not be desirable to state in the bill itself that the provisions of the Railway Act with respect to crossings of railways and so forth shall apply? I am offering this as a suggestion, and another suggestion which I have in mind and which, I suspect from the conversation I have had with the minister, he will not accept, is that an amendment be made to the legislation by adding a section declaring that:

This act shall come into force on proclamation by the governor in council after approval of the plans of the said works by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the whole scheme?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I am still most desirous, if possible, of bringing about a simplicity of terminals which, admittedly, this does not do. Whether or not, as I already said to the minister the other day, if an opportunity were afforded before an independent tribunal for all parties concerned to be heard, a plan might result that would bring about the creation of union facilities, I cannot say, but I have thought a great deal about this. I sent to the library and got the life of the late J. J. Hill for the purpose of refreshing my memory about what he said of the desirability of great terminals in a large city like Montreal. I have not forgotten the fact that these terminals can in no sense be made profitable by passenger traffic. I remember that the president of the road has said that the passenger traffic produces no profit so far as this terminal is concerned, and I realize that something between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 per annum must be provided by the traffic on the system to pay interest and depreciation upon those properties. The amount may be a little more. When I say that, I mean not only the sum now presently contemplated to be spent, but the $12,500,000, authorized and expended on the previous scheme, together with the accumulated interest which is large, and the $1,500,000 of securities which the hon. member mentioned the other day. This means that when the property is completed five or six years hence, it will involve a fixed annual charge of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, and if my idea as to the ultimate cost is fairly correct, the fixed annual charge will be nearer $5,000,000 than $4,000,000. That money will not in any sense be made out of passenger traffic except that there may be in suburban areas some passenger traffic that may be profitable. Within the last five years the Illinois Central have spent $30,000,000 in terminal facilities in Chicago. They have changed from steam to electricity, and the result has been that a loss of $5,000,000 in the terminal traffic of the Illinois Central has been converted into a yearly profit of $1,000,000, a change altogether of $6,000,000 by reason of an expenditure of $30,000,000 in electrifying the terminal facilities and suburban lines of the Illinois Central in and about the city of Chicago. That is an exceptional situation owing to the lake front and the heavy congestion of passenger traffic to the east of the city of Chicago, providing revenue on a very large scale.

This scheme has been described in some quarters as ambitious. It must be so, if the principles in connection with terminals as laid down by Mr. Hill are to prevail. After all, a great railway must have great terminals. It must look to the future. It is not sufficient to look to to-day. It must look beyond the conditions of to-day and see to-morrow, and more than to-morrow; it must see the day after.

There are acute differences between the two systems with reference to these terminals. The minister and I have discussed this matter. One system thinks that a through traffic terminal is not necessary. The other says that a through traffic terminal is essential both for traffic south, east and west. I realize that the expenditure of money sometimes is the best method to ensure the making of money. In other words, I realize that money that is not profitable can at times be made profitable by the expenditure of large sums of money. I have not forgotten the boldness of Mr. Harriman and the courage with which he crossed Salt lake at an expenditure of $9,000,000, with a short cut-off or his construction of 332 miles of road to take the place of 374 miles of abandoned road, in order to make large sums of money. I am not unmindful of other similar instances in the history of railroading, but I am also remembering that this is a country of only 10,000,000 people.

There is one factor that I hope the minister will not overlook. We own a railroad a very considerable portion of which is in the United States, and the president of the road has told us that the most profitable mileage that we have to-day is that portion of the Grand Trunk that lies in the United States. That is a very serious situation because it must be admitted by every thoughtful observer that when you have a very substantial section of your national railway in another country, the question as to its profitable operation does not depend on anything that you can do, but depends upon conditions as to traffic that exist in that other country, together with the maintenance of a rate that will enable a profit to be made. We have no control over those conditions. We cannot control the situation on the Vermont section as to profit and loss after we have completed our investment and taken up our receivers' certificates. We cannot change the situation in respect to Portland and the terminals there, or in respect to the Grand Trunk Western and all that is involved in the consolidation of the many lines included in the system. These are matters that are beyond our control, and at the present time some sections of the road are highly profitable. We realize in the light of what the president of our own railway has said that we must rely on freight traffic proper to pay the annual interest and charges on this terminal; in other words, passenger traffic will produce no profit, and that directly affects every producer of freight on the system. It affects the man on the prairie, the manufacturer in the east, the automobile manufacturer to some extent on the Grand Trunk Western lines, and I do not think it would be too much to ask that before these plans are finally acted upon by the governor in council the whole matter should be considered by an independent tribunal. I confess to the minister that in looking about for that independent tribunal, the only reason why I fixed upon the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada was because it is the only tribunal which is charged under our general laws with responsibility in connection with railroads. I do not say that I think it is the best tribunal in the world. There are many difficulties that I see. Mr. Ruel's view is that it is undesirable to submit any Canadian National railway matters to the Board of Railway Commissioners. In putting this amendment before the minister for his consideration I apprehend, as he said to me in discussing the matter, that he may not accept it, and that it may be my duty when the bill is read a third time to-morrow formally to offer this amendment for the consideration of the house.

I had not intended to speak at such length at the moment, but I do confess after having followed the development of the railroad situation in Canada with a good deal of interest for the last thirty years, and having been particularly interested in it in the days of the old Grand Trunk and National Transcontinental, I ventured upon the role of a prophet and made a prediction which, though it was not generally accepted at the time I made it, proved to be right in the end, and both Alberta and Saskatchewan were called upon to pay on their guarantees of interest on branch lines of $13,000 and $15,000 a mile respectively.

Few people realize what it has meant to those provinces to have the national railways consolidated. Had they not been consolidated and taken over by the crown, a burden would have been imposed upon the provinces that would have been very considerable and although some people think that British Columbia would have escaped, I think that thoughtful observers who have studied the economics of the situation, as did at least one of the directors of the Canadian National, who is now the deputy minister, will agree that the province of British Columbia would have been called upon to pay substantial sums of money but for the taking over of the Canadian Northern by the crown. Bearing in mind the six or seven lean years that Joseph experienced in Egypt, which lean years have also been known in Canada, and that these days will come again, and that somebody must find between $4,500,000 and $5,000,000 every year to pay the interest on the investment which we will have in these terminal facilities, I have made the suggestion I have. I am sorry the minister feels that it cannot be accepted. I shall have to turn over in my own mind the desirability of submitting the suggestion in the form of a formal amendment when the bill is under consideration for third reading.

I want to say that the minister has approached this matter certainly not with a desire to press it upon the house in a sense of it being a government measure, although, of course, it is a government measure, and he has endeavoured to eliminate, by striking out the section to which I directed attention the other day, and in making the changes which he has submitted to the house to-day, those sources of difficulty which I think he will admit the experience of the past has taught us are present, with a view to ensuring so far as possible that there shall be a minimum of such difficulties to be encountered in connection with this undertaking; but there are still many matters of great moment that will rest for their solution upon the discretion and ability and fidelity of the men concerned. It is for these reasons that I have ventured to make this suggestion to the minister, and as the bill will not be read a third time to-day I shall in the meantime consider whether or not it will be desirable to submit a formal amendment.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall not deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest for the reason that it is quite apparent that he is under a complete misapprehension as to the scope and purpose of the bill before the house, and the leader of the opposition and others I feel sure would not associate themselves with his remarks in that connection.

With regard to the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, as I stated at the outset careful consideration was given to the suggestion which he made, and I fully appreciate the force of his remarks just now in relation to the importance to the national system of that portion of the railway which is located in the United States. I should not like, and I feel sure that he would not like, his remarks to be interpreted as implying that the national system is dependent for its profitable operation upon that part which is located within the United States. Some 1,600 miles out of a total of 22,000 miles in the system are located in the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that the system was dependent upon it.

Mr. DUNNING: I was saying that I felt sure my hon. friend would not want that impression left.

Mr. BENNETT: I made it perfectly clear that the president had said that that was the most profitable mileage which they had. That is on record.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not disputing the record; I was proceeding to analyse it in order that there might not be an impression left in the country by the hon. gentleman's remarks that the system was in any sense dependent upon its American mileage. Some 900 odd miles of that American mileage, which is comprised in what we call the Grand Trunk Western system, undoubtedly is the most profitable 900 miles of the system, but it is only 900 miles out of a total of 22,000 miles. The rest of our American mileage, comprised within the Vermont Central, of something over 400 miles, and the line down to Portland in the neighbourhood of 200 miles, cannot be described as exceptional money-makers, but I would not depreciate for a moment the value of the Grand Trunk Western portion of the system.

I wish to examine for a moment my hon. friend's suggestion that he might move an amendment on the third reading. I do so in order that we may get an appreciation of what it would mean, and in order that the house may get an appreciation of the reasons which prompt the government in hesitating very much to accept any such suggestion. In connection with the expenditure of any money on railroads in Canada, whether publicly or privately owned, the first move would be the action of the proprietor in authorizing their management to expend the money, and we are, as I pointed out the other day in this house, in the position of representing the proprietors.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the government.

Mr. DUNNING: Parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is the governor in council.

Mr. DUNNING: Parliament is conferring authority upon the governor in council to authorize the management to expend, under terms set out by parliament, the moneys dealt with in this bill. The proprietorial relationship must not be lost sight of. The Board of Railway Commissioners has, under the law with respect to all railways, a very definite function, and it is not in any sense to be confused with the function of proprietorship; they are not in the position under the law of advising the proprietors of a railway as to how and upon what works the proprietors should expend their own money.

Mr. BENNETT: Not their own money.

Mr. DUNNING: The proprietor's money.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the railways' own money.

Mr. DUNNING: The proprietor's money I said. The Board of Railway Commissioners, to put it in a manner I feel sure my hon. friend will not disagree with, is not under the statute creating it placed in a position where it can advise the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian National Railways, or any other railway, as to the manner in which those railways shall expend the money of the proprietors. The function of the Board of Railway Commissioners is judicial as between those proprietors represented by their management and the public who may be affected by the works which are to be built, constructed or operated with the moneys which the proprietors have allocated for that purpose. My hon. friend, I am sure, sees the principle I am trying to point out. In no other case has it ever been proposed that the Board of Railway Commissioners should be called in to pass upon what the proprietors themselves should authorize to be expended upon their own works. But the Board of Railway Commissioners are always authorized to come in and examine the relationship between that expenditure and the rights of the public, or the rights of individuals in relation thereto. We are proposing in this case to preserve intact the functions of the Board of Railway Commissioners and their relationship to undertakings of this character. And I hesitate very much to establish that, in addition to exercising that function, which is judicial in character, the Board of Railway Commissioners should assume one of the functions of management in determining the nature of the works to be built with the moneys provided by the proprietor. That is the matter of principle which I had in mind as an objection to what is proposed by my hon. friend.

Having said that, let me go further and say. that so far as the government is concerned it is under no illusions as to the far-reaching character of proposals of this kind. The government appreciates to the full the responsibility of embarking upon an enterprise of this kind. But we all recognize, all of parliament I think recognizes, representing as we wo the proprietors, that this is something which we must undertake. We have, whether we will or not the responsibility, and the final responsibility for the operation of two billion dollars' worth of the people's property in this railway system. And here is a problem which has been studied for many years, a problem which is recognized on all hands as one which is crying for solution as no other single problem on the railroad is crying for solution. A result of the studies which have been made by the officials of the railway and by the management, has been submitted to outside opinion; that outside opinion has been submitted to the house, and we have gone as far as we think we can go in that direction. But, nevertheless, I would say to my hon. friend this; the government does not take the position that the door is closed in so far as unionizing this work is concerned. I think I can say that with the entire concurrence of the government.

Mr. CAHAN: What do you mean by "unionizing"? It seems to me an awful word.

Mr. DUNNING: Making of the terminal a union terminal. The door in that respect is not closed. The door in that respect will not be closed during the years in which the project is being developed, during the building years; it will still be open for other parties desiring to come in and to create of this project a union terminal; the door will still be open for them to do so; the field for negotiation is still open.

Mr. CAHAN: That means the field with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. DUNNING: Absolutely. It is still open. But we may as well face the facts, Mr. Chairman. The leader of the opposition stated them in one way. I will state the same set of facts in another way although there would not be any difference of opinion between us as to what the facts are. They were related in the committee and again when this matter was before the house previously, that the Canadian Pacific Railway does not believe that a union terminal at the tunnel site would be suitable or economical from the point of view of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian National Railways do not believe that a union station at Windsor street would be suitable or economical from the point of view of the best interests of the Canadian National Railways. That difference does exist. We cannot overcome it. The leader of the opposition the other day pointed out very clearly that the only way to overcome it would be to exercise the powers of this parliament to force one or the other to go into the terminal of the other. And no one has yet suggested that the power of parliament should be used to force the Canadian Pocific Railway to go into the tunnel terminal, and no one has yet suggested that the power of parliament should be exercised upon the Canadian National Railways to force them to go into Windsor street. The issues are too great for parliament to attempt to exercise force in connection with that matter.

That is, I think, all I have to say on the matter. I trust my hon. friend will appreciate the reasons which prompt me in hesitating very much to set up the Board of Railway Commissioners as advisers to the management of any railway. To my mind it would impair, and possibly conflict with, the operation of their judicial function which they would undoubtedly be called upon to exercise in connection with many phases of the same matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course, the minister appreciates that the commission could be authorized to do so. I felt after looking casually through the report that the hon. minister was good enough to give me the other day that if the wealth of learning about terminals that could be brought before the commission was brought before the commission by experts of outstanding ability on this continent it might create such a situation as would inevitably induce the management of the two enterprises to go into a union station enterprise. I might say that I wholly agree with my hon. friend that the commission as such is neither qualified nor empowered to compel either one road or the other to take the action suggested, but my hope had been rather that with the evidence that might be brought before the commission as such the deferring of the coming into force of the act would bring about such a state of affairs as might induce the parties affected to realize the desirability of taking the action which we so much desire, and thereby lessen what I conceive to be a very heavy load to be borne by our national system. That is the whole reason behind my suggestion. I did not go into detail because I thought the minister realized that I was not for a moment suggesting that some of his appointees on the Board of Railway Commissioners would be the best people to determine on a plan of the magnitude of the one now before the house.

Mr. DUNNING: I had in mind previously that my hon. friend apparently had more faith at this stage in the Board of Railway Commissioners than he had at an earlier stage in the session. But I would say in that regard, to repeat in rather more amplified fashion what I said a moment ago, so far as the government is concerned, in authorizing the carrying on of these works, the door is still open. And, of course, as my hon. friend knows, it is within the power of the government, if the government so determines, to refer any matter such as this to the Board of Railway Commissioners. And I can go as far as this: If there does appear any hope of a solution, more advantageous to the country, to the national system and to the Canadian Pacific system, being arrived at by conference or in any other way, the government will not hesitate to use the power which it has to refer to the Board of Railway Commissioners any question the solution of which might involve a better scheme or a better arrangement than the one now proposed.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Has not the railway commission power to compel the railway companies to have a union station in any town? Is that out of their jurisdiction entirely?

Mr. DUNNING: They have no such power.

Mr. CAHAN: I find very confusing indeed the explanation of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) with regard to proprietorship and the suggestion that the members of this house represent the proprietors. Is it not clearly expressed in this bill, and in the other enactments which apply to the Canadian National Railways, as an entity in itself, that it so far comes under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners that, acting in its judicial capacity, the board has the same jurisdiction to decide as between the Canadian National Railways and any other public interest, as between the Canadian National Railways and any city or municipality, and as between the Canadian National Railways and the harbour commission of Montreal, for example, in so far as the Canadian National is a railway corporation, as it has when any similar issue arises between the Canadian Pacific Railway and any public interest, between the Canadian Pacific Railway and any municipality, or between the Canadian Pacific Railway and any other public corporation?

Mr. DUNNING: The only difference is—I think this has been mentioned before—that with respect to the approval of actual detailed plans of a railroad, the Canadian National Railways, by virtue of its original statute enacted in 1919, is required to secure the approval of the Minister of Railways, whereas any other railway is required to secure the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Subject to that one qualification, what my hon. friend says is perfectly correct as to the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners over the Canadian National Railway. But I cannot understand what the hon. member means about being confused as to the term proprietor which I used. The proprietors of an ordinary railway are, of course, the shareholders.

Mr. CAHAN: We all know that, of course; it passes without comment. But we are not dealing with this matter now as merely the proprietors of the Canadian National Railways; we are dealing with it as the parliament of Canada, giving powers to an institution known as the Canadian National Railways which we have already constituted by statutes of this parliament. I would rather deal with the matter from that point of view, and I do still think that in all respects in which the Board of Railway Commissioners, as a judicial body, has jurisdiction as between, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway and any public interest, or between the Canadian Pacific Railway and any municipal or civic interest, or between the Canadian Pacific Railway and any other corporation constituted by this parliament, the Board of Railway Commissioners might well have the same jurisdiction when a similar issue arises between the Canadian National Railways and such bodies as I have mentioned.

Mr. BENNETT: The section in the Railway Act to which the minister has referred is not broad enough to enable him to make reference to the board. I looked it up the other day and this was one of the reasons that impelled me to offer the suggestion I did. The section in question is 69:

(1) The board may appoint or direct any person to make an inquiry and report upon any application, complaint or dispute pending before the board, or upon any matter or thing over which the board has jurisdiction under this or the special act.

(2) The minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, appoint and direct any person to inquire into and report upon any matter or thing which the minister is authorized to deal with under this act or the special act.

The limitation as to the reference is that it must be a matter which the minister is authorized to deal with under the Railway Act or under the special act.

Mr. DUNNING: Under this act.

M. BENNETT: But this is a special act empowering the minister to deal with a limited number of matters. For instance, the very section with which we were dealing, section 7, authorizes the Minister of Railways to deal with the question of railways and canals and the crossing of canals. The Minister of Marine must deal with the harbour of Montreal, but the minister is not as such authorized to deal with the plan as a whole.

Mr. DUNNING: I will give my hon. friend the section in a moment.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think my hon. friend's construction can be placed upon it.

Mr. DUNNING: Take the beginning of section 7; that will help my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well. That section begins:

The general plan or plans of the said works and amendments or additions to such general plan at any time made, shall, on the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be subject to the approval of the governor in council.

But that is not the point. What we are dealing with is, for instance, the question of cost. We have had no details yet as to the question of cost; no engineers' estimates have been submitted. We have merely men standing up and saying that in their opinion it will cost so much. But this vote is for $50,000,000. So far as we are aware, it might be $10,000,000, because that is all that is to be spent this year; and the total cost is said to be $51,400,000. It is abundantly clear that four years from now, if the appropriations overrun, the matter is to be dealt with in the way I have indicated; and the only difficulty I see is this—and the minister put his finger on it a moment ago: How is the governor in council to obtain its knowledge to deal with this matter in the public interest, representing the people of Canada as a whole, as distinguished from its political action as the government of the day? It was for that reason that I made the suggestion I did, rather than that the matter should be dealt with simply by the governor in council. In other words, I was endeavouring to ensure that there should be detailed information in connection with this matter placed before some tribunal that would approve generally of the enterprise, beyond mere statements such as I heard the other day—I do not care how long the situation has been studied—and the views of the minister himself. The minister knows more about this matter than any other member of the government; yet I venture to say that if I examined him to-day I could within a few minutes indicate that his knowledge was not such as would warrant him in undertaking to expend such large sums of money if he were in the position he once occupied in connection with a great industry in western Canada. In short, he has not secured that detailed information which he would insist upon having in connection with any enterprise he had to do with, before authorizing so relatively large an expenditure as that which is here involved. All I am urging is that the approval should be secured of some body, with a volume of expert testimony behind it, as to the cost of the scheme, the plans, feasibility, general relation to the future, the adequacy of all the facilities, and every other question involved in the undertaking, having regard to what Mr. Hill pointed out as being in the ultimate analysis the important thing to consider. I was trying to make sure that all these matters would be dealt with before the minister and the government were pushed—I am not using the word offensively—into the position where they had to decide upon some course of action.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to illustrate what I had in mind a moment ago when I addressed a question to the minister. The last three lines of section 7 are as follows:

> Detail plans affecting the property of the harbour commissioners of Montreal shall be subject to the approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The harbour commission of Montreal is a corporate body having certain express powers delegated to it by this parliament; the members of that board have a practical knowledge of the conditions of their property and a large experience in dealing with the whole undertaking. Suppose a difference of opinion arises between the management of the Canadian National Railways and the harbour commission, with respect to detail plans which affect the property of the harbour commissioners of Montreal. Should not such a difference of opinion be referred for settlement to a judicial body such as the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. DUNNING: This has reference to detail plans.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, and those are the important plans. If this section provided that general plans should be first approved by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that would have had another signification, but the actual plans which are prepared by the management of the Canadian National Railways, when once approved by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will have full force and effect in so far as they affect the property of the Montreal harbour commission. I do not think the political head of such a department as that of Marine and Fisheries should have the sole and exclusive decision in regard to issues which may arise, which are likely to arise and which in my opinion inevitably will arise between the harbour commissioners of Montreal and the executive of the Canadian National Railways in carrying out the detail plans for this enormous development. I am not in the confidence of the harbour commissioners at all; I have not approached them nor have they approached me, but I am sure they have very definite opinions as to the best method of carrying to completion those terminal facilities having regard to that harbour, and I understand that the leader of the opposition has suggested that in matters of this kind, where issues arise between the Canadian National Railways and other corporate public bodies, those issues might well be placed before a judicial body such as the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. DUNNING: The point raised by my hon. friend is of some importance, but I should like to explain why the particular phrase to which he is referring was inserted in this bill. It will be noticed that in the first part of section 7 the authority to approve of general plans is given the governor in council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals. In connection with the detail plans affecting an enterprise which, in its relation to parliament, is under the overseeing eye, if I may use that term, of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it was thought that in case any difficulty arose between the harbour board and the railway executive the harbour board should not be placed in the position of having to appeal to the Minister of Railways, but rather to that minister who is particularly charged with looking after harbours and harbour interests.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not that mean that the issue will be settled by political considerations?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot quite see that.

Mr. CAHAN: Let us assume for the moment that grave differences of opinion do arise between the harbour board and the management of the railways, just such issues as might arise between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the harbour board, with reference to electrification or any other matters which might come up. It would take us days to consider these plans in all their details. Now, why should that decision be left to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; what special knowledge does he possess of matters of this kind? I am not speaking particularly of the present minister, but what equipment, what qualifications are possessed by the minister presiding over the Department of Marine and Fisheries which enable him to decide intricate engineering problems such as those which may arise between these two corporate bodies? Why should such issues be left to the decision of a mere political head; why should they not be left to the Board of Railway Commissioners, who at least have expert advisers to assist them and who have a procedure, a practice and a method whereby they may summon all interests affected and hear expert evidence as the basis for their decision?

Mr. DUNNING: I might point out to my hon. friend that this does not take away any of the powers otherwise possessed by the Board of Railway Commissioners; if the matters affecting the property of the Montreal Harbour Board do come within the purview of the Board of Railway Commissioners, under the Railway Act, then their approval certainly must be secured. As a matter of fact my hon. friend is inaccurate in one particular; he says that the plans do involve works on the property of the Montreal Harbour Board. That is not the case.

Mr. CAHAN: I may be mistaken, of course, but on the plan I saw that line running through property which either has been acquired or is in process of being acquired by the board of harbour commissioners, and I think issues are likely to arise in that connection. Perhaps I should not say so decidedly that these issues are likely to arise, but they may arise, and it is so probable that they will arise that in the bill before us the minister is providing a method of determining such issues if they come to a head. By the express terms of this section he has placed the power to make such a decision entirely within the discretion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who, while he has a certain oversight over the Montreal harbour commissioners, should not it seems to me be vested with jurisdiction to decide issues which may arise as between those harbour commissioners and the management of the Canadian National Railways. I do not think I can say more.

Mr. DUNNING: Just to complete what I was saying regarding the harbour commission property and the work to be done thereon, I might say that the plans contemplated by this bill cover work to be done by the Canadian National Railways which will connect the harbour commission's tracks. The plans contemplate also certain work which will be carried out by the harbour commission and which it is agreeable to carry out. I would point out to my hon. friend that the Montreal harbour commission have been made fully aware of the contents of this bill as they relate to themselves, and that commission is quite satisfied with the arrangements made.

Mr. CAHAN: My information was that they had not been fully consulted. I was not told that by one of the harbour commissioners, but received my information from another source. Why vest in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the sole discretion of deciding such issues as they arise?

Mr. GUERIN: Mr. Chairman, there is one matter which should be included in this particular bill, and that is provision for the electrification of the system within the city of Montreal. The railway is to be elevated over certain portions of the city but, as far as I can see, there is nothing in the bill which provides that the system shall be electrified. Electrification is absolutely necessary; otherwise the undertaking will be most destructive to property in the vicinity. We are suffering a great deal of inconvenience at the present time due to the non-electrification of the railways within the limits of the city; in fact, I believe Montreal is the only city on the American continent which puts up with the smoke nuisance existing in the city. We are suffering from the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway as well as from those of the Canadian National Railways, and I think something should be done to ensure that in densely populated municipalities the health of the people shall not be endangered by the continued use of coal-burning locomotives within the municipal limits. I had hoped that provision would have been made in this bill for the electrification of the system within the city limits. I believe that all railway systems within the city of Montreal should be electrified.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Guerin), I might inform the committee that it is proposed to electrify the tunnel.

Mr. BENNETT: The tunnel is electrified now.

Mr. DUNNING: To provide for the increased traffic which will be brought about by the completion of this larger scheme. The Canadian National Railway has conducted some very successful experiments and tests in the use of Diesel locomotives, and it is proposed to use Diesel powered locomotives very extensively in the operation of the terminal scheme.

The matter of general electrification comes within the realm of railway economics. Such schemes depend upon the density and the constancy of the load, because hon. members will appreciate that the power must be there at all times. The cost of producing the power must be paid whether or not it is uitlized to the fullest extent. I cannot give offhand what might be called the datum point of economical electrical transportation, but there is a point at which the traffic becomes heavy and constant enough to make it economical to electrify a line. For instance, at the present time it would not be good practice to electrify the line between Ottawa and Montreal; the load is not sufficiently constant to make that proposition economically sound, as it would cost far more than to operate under the present method. On the other hand, in a terminal such as the Pennsylvania station in New York city, where the density is ever present, electrical operation is very economical. I can say to my hon. friend from St. Ann that the Canadian National is watching very closely the development of traffic densities in and around the city of Montreal, and I can assure him that no time will be lost in putting in such improvements when they are warranted.

Mr. GUERIN: Would the use of the Diesel engines mean that coal would have to be burned?

Mr. DUNNING: They are powered by oil.

Mr. GUERIN: There would be no smoke?

Mr. DUNNING: There is very little.

[Mr. Guerin.]

Mr. CAHAN: It is an explosion of oil rather than the burning of it.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity of congratulating the citizens of Montreal upon having such excellent terminal facilities for that metropolis of the Dominion of Canada.

Sir EUGENE FISET: What about Quebec?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: This city is in the province of Quebec. They should take great pride in the facilities which are being provided by the Canadian National system. I think the declaration has been made to the house by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that it is the policy of the Canadian National system to provide proper terminal facilities in most of the large cities of Canada. While I congratulate the citizens of Montreal upon the treatment they are receiving at the hands of the government, I would like to see the people of the old city of Quebec treated in the same manner. Montreal, Toronto and many other cities in this Dominion have been treated quite generously by the Canadian National system while we have been endeavouring for over twenty years to obtain the proper terminal facilities in the city of Quebec. We were told by the government of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier that the city of Quebec was the real terminal of the Transcontinental and the Canadian National railway systems, and that we would have proper facilities. We were promised those facilities in 1910, when the Hon. S. N. Parent was chairman of the National Transcontinental railway commission. Proper engineering plans were prepared; a site was decided upon, and a contract was entered into between the city of Quebec and the Transcontinental railway. The city of Quebec consented to give a most valuable property fronting on the St. Lawrence, the Champlain market, a property worth more than $5,000,000. A contract was given to a contracting firm to erect a million-dollar railway station, and there was constructed from the Quebec bridge to that station a road six and a half miles long. After the change of government in 1911, a year later, the contract was cancelled; all work was postponed, and an agreement was entered into between the Transcontinental and the Canadian Pacific whereby the Transcontinental was to use the Canadian Pacific railway facilities at a rate, if I am not mistaken, of $200,000 a year which the Transcontinental paid to bring people into the city of Quebec and then hand them over to their competitor, the Canadian Pacific.

As I have said, the citizens of Quebec have been making requests of the governments that have been in power from 1911 to 1921, but they have always been told that their requests were under consideration. I remember in 1917 and 1918 asking some questions of the then Minister of Railways, the Hon. Doctor Reid, and the then Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Mr. Carvell, and that was the answer which was given. The Minister of Public Works at that time said that the way in which the work had been carried out in the city of Quebec was a tragedy. They admitted that our need was most urgent and that something should be done. The present government seems to be well disposed towards the city of Quebec, but we fail to see that anything is being done in our city. A few weeks ago I put a question on the orders of the day, but the same answer was given me by the government, namely, that the matter was under consideration.

Quebec is the oldest and one of the most important cities of the Dominion; it is the only one which has contributed towards railway development, towards the building of the Quebec and Lake St. John railway and the building of the Canadian Northern railway, and it has given to the Canadian National railway system a property worth more than $5,000,000 in order to obtain proper facilities in the city of Quebec. We are ashamed to say that we are treated as a flag station rather than in the way we should be treated. I do not blame the government, but I say that there is lack of attention on the part of the administration of the system. Sir Henry Thornton does not treat the people of the city and district of Quebec in the way in which we should be treated, and whenever an opportunity is afforded me I will protest as I have done to-day against the way in which we are treated in our city. I am glad to see that the government is dealing so generously with the city of Montreal and I hope it will press the urgency of our needs upon the administration of the railway and do something to render justice to the citizens of Quebec in whose behalf I will continue to protest.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee has considered all the sections with regard to which the bill was allowed to stand.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the minister was going to make an amendment to paragraph (d) in the schedule.

Mr. DUNNING: That was done.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Pensions—civil flying, $5,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How much of this vote was spent last year?

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Only a very small amount, $240.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister give us some particulars of this item? We do not get much information from the two words "civil flying." Is it for encouragement to civil flying or for damage to men who may be hurt?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For men who may be hurt in the government service.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Dominion roads and bridges—generally, $5,000.

International bridge over river St. John between Clair, N.B. and Fort Kent, Me., the state of Maine to provide $130,000, $130,000.

Interprovincial bridge over Ottawa river at Hawkesbury, the Quebec and Ontario governments each to contribute one-third of the cost, $40,000.

Ottawa—maintenance and repairs to bridges and approaches, $12,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Before we take up any item I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that the air in the chamber is very hot. It is very close in here, and I wonder if there is no way in which it can be remedied to give us a chance in this hot weather. Is it not possible to have some of these windows open or electric fans going?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is very warm, and just half an hour ago I requested the engineers to see if it was not possible to get in some colder air. The difficulty is that it is pretty hard to find any cold air to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: Are these windows permanently fastened?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, but if they are opened they let in air of a temperature of ninety degrees.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Why not damp the curtains as was done last year and then open the windows? You would then have cooler air in the chamber?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It is not a question of getting cold or hot air, but a question of getting some air.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just a few moments ago I felt just as my hon. friend does and I looked at the thermometers. The one at the end of the chamber read 75 degrees, and the one that I keep here shows a higher temperature than that. I will read a memorandum that I have just received from my secretary, and I shall be glad to have any suggestions that hon. gentlemen can give:

I have just been down to the basement with the engineer of the building and gone over the machines with him. The air which is being pumped in for ventilation purposes registers ninety degrees. With the machines going as hard as they can, this is being reduced to seventy-six degrees. It has been pointed out, however, that with the windows and doors around the chamber open, hot air is flowing in which is raising the temperature above the temperature of the air which is being pumped into the chamber through the ventilating machines.

I have urged the engineer to keep the machines going just as hard as he can, and to do everything possible to lower the temperature in the chamber.

Mr. MANION: I have listened to this story from the Minister of Public Works—I am not reflecting on him personally at all—every time that we have sat here in June. Personally I am tired of these engineers' opinions; I do not think they are any good. Here we are in a stone building and it should be one of the coolest places in the capital. Even the rooms upstairs are cooler than this chamber. I think it is time that we ignored the opinions of the engineers and got some of these windows open and let this air out. It is a case of letting a breeze through the chamber. The engineers have made a complete fizzle of it, and it is time we tried another scheme. The air is absolutely unbearable here to-day.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The air is being changed all the time. It is not a question of pumping in fresh air and getting the old air out, because the air is being continually changed. There is no place very cool in the city to-day.

Mr. MANION: I differ. You can go into all kinds of residences in the city to-day and be perfectly comfortable, yet this big stone building is one of the most uncomfortable buildings in the city of Ottawa. I think that the ventilation system is defective; I have thought so ever since we came into this new building. I will admit that during the winter this year it was better than past years. I am not criticizing the minister at all, but I do not believe that the engineers are familiar with what they should do. This chamber should be a cool chamber, and it is anything but a cool chamber. It is terribly hot.

Mr. BENNETT: At times I have seen it pretty hot in the winter.

Mr. GUERIN: The air should be put into circulation by means of fans or something of that kind. The value of that is quite generally recognized. Even if a person is confined to a room, if the air is put in motion he does not suffer. If there is nothing better to be done I think it would be well to install a certain number of electric fans to keep the air in circulation and give us a chance to breathe.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I would suggest to the minister that first of all the heat in the radiators should be turned off, because there is heat in these radiators at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right. I found heat in the radiators the other day. Somebody did not have the coal supply all burned up.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Damp the curtains and open the windows, and then you can get fresh air in. We did that last year.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister was good enough to allow discussion on any subject relating to public works on this item which stood over. I am desirous of calling his attention again to the fact that there is a very pressing need at the present time of a reasonably small grant for dredging in the harbour of Parry Sound. The harbour of Parry Sound is probably one of the best harbours, if not the best, on the great lakes. It usually has water enough to float any boat on the great lakes, but unfortunately conditions there are somewhat peculiar. The government wharf at that point is situated near the mouth of the Seguin river and below a point where there existed for many years one of the largest sawmills on the Georgian bay. The result of the year's activities of that mill was that a great accumulation of bark and other mill refuse was deposited in the stream. During the last two or three years in succession we have had, unfortunately, high water in the river, and on two or three occasions large dams have broken away causing an extremely heavy flood which moved this mill refuse and deposited it at or about the government wharf. The government have attempted to remedy this condition during the last two years by using one of the boats belonging to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, tying her up to the wharf and endeavouring to blow this sawdust and refuse out of the way by the revolutions of her screw. This has not been successful. The only result has been to blow it away for a distance of about twenty feet immediately opposite the wharf and the refuse has piled up in a heap where it is an obstruction to any boat trying to approach the wharf. The result is that many boats have had difficulty approaching the wharf and some have been unable to tie up to it at all. A large shipping company in Chicago which operates several of the largest passenger boats on the great lakes runs a seven-day excursion every week from Chicago to various points on the great lakes. The only Canadian port of call is Parry Sound. These boats carry an average of 800 passengers on each trip, so that they are one of the greatest advertising agencies that we have for Canada. These boats coming in and going out of Parry Sound pass through a part of the Thirty Thousand Islands of the Georgian bay in daylight, both ways. Many people from Chicago take advantage of these weekly trips and become regular tourists in Canada. Many of them have purchased cottages in various parts of northern Ontario. It is very desirable therefore, that these boats continue this service. This steamship company has advised the town council of Parry Sound that it will be unable to make Parry Sound during the present season on account of the depth of water, as they have no desire to jeopardize their boats. The matter was taken up with the Department of Public Works, and assurance was given to the council that a grant would be made sufficient to do this small amount of dredging in order to remove this refuse in front of the wharf during the present season. Well, the main estimates are down and nothing has been put in. After all, these boats are so large that they are the ones principally affected. These people visiting Parry Sound on these weekly trips—probably a thousand or fifteen hundred per week—have the privilege of taking back with them to the United States goods to the amount of $100 free of duty, and very many of them take advantage of that privilege. The result is that a large trade has grown up there, principally in woollens and linens, all of which is advantageous to us as Canadians. I would therefore impress upon the minister the necessity of making at least a reasonable grant in the supplementary estimates for this very necessary work. I would also point out that this is not going to be a recurring vote. The circumstances are as I have stated them. The refuse from this old mill has been swept down and is now lying in front of the government wharf in Parry Sound. When it has been removed there will be no second visitation; everything has been swept away and the river is absolutely clear owing to the very heavy freshets that we have had in the last two or three years. I hope the minister will take this into his most serious consideration.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend but I will say to him that a deputation interviewed me in regard to this very matter not very long ago—I would say within the last two weeks, probably—and urged upon the department the very things that he has now urged.

Mr. ARTHURS: I may also say, Mr. Chairman, that this matter has been before the minister for the last two years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, the information that was given to me by this committee is not as accurate as I had thought, because I was told that on account of the extra flooding this spring the amount of sawdust and other refuse brought down from where they formerly had saw mills made the harbour much more impossible of access this spring than it had ever been before. Of course, as my hon. friend knows, the water has been particularly high this year, and this is a matter which comes or could come properly within the category of the things that could not very well have been foreseen at the time the main estimates were prepared. I would say to my hon. friend, however, that it has already received the best consideration the department can give it.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, in these dying hours of the session I hesitate to take up very much of the time of the house, especially in view of the extreme heat which many of the thin men in the house feel so greatly. But I have not unduly trespassed on the time of this house during the present session, consequently I feel that it is my duty, on behalf of my constituents in the town of Goderich, to place upon record the great national importance of Goderich harbour, and to try to show that it is a national necessity that the work there should be proceeded with in a more energetic manner.

I have not risen to criticize the Minister of Public Works with regard to the amount placed in the estimates this year for harbour improvements at Goderich, namely $205,000, which, when he viewed Canada from coast to coast, was perhaps the amount he thought we were justly entitled to. I am not at the moment complaining of the amount of the vote. What I am asked by his own political friends to do is to stress the fact that the work should be proceeded with energetically and that the amount placed in the estimates be spent. Last year there was placed in the main estimates $75,000 for this purpose, and the people of Goderich and western Ontario were delighted when the minister brought down in the supplementary estimates an additional $100,000. But they were not so delighted when they found at the end of the year that out of this $100,000 which he brought down in the supplementary estimates he had spent only $10,000. The minister may meet with difficulties which I do not understand, but what we would like to have done is—

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just a moment, so that there may be no misunderstanding. Is my hon. friend under the impression that only $10,000 was spent on the harbour of Goderich last year?

Mr. SPOTTON: No, I did not say that. I said that $75,000 was brought down in the main estimates. Then the people of the town of Goderich and western Ontario rejoiced to know that the minister had brought down an additional $100,000 in the supplementary estimates. But of this additional $100,000 they were chagrined to learn that only $10,000 was spent. In other words, of the $75,000 in the main estimates and the $100,000 in the supplementary estimates—$175,000 in all—the department expended only $85,000; $90,000 was returned to the treasury and is handed back to us again this year.

This is the point that I am trying to stress; we are satisfied with the $205,000 which the minister has placed in the estimates, provided it is spent. But when the government and the department sent out the information that for the purposes of a certain public work, $175,000 is to be appropriated, thus getting the advertising effect of that announcement, and then spend only $85,000, holding back $90,000 and handing it to us again the next year, we think they are very much in the position of an old gentleman up in my native township who used to give his son a penny to go to bed without his supper, and when the poor little fellow was sleeping the old man stole the penny and gave it to him again the next night. Now, I admit that this administration is an excellent advertising institution, and I want them to get full credit for everything they do. But I wish to state this: that every school child in the town of Goderich knows that this government took the advertising effect of $175,000 last year but spent only $85,000. In fact, Mr. Chairman, if you take the revotes of the last four years the total almost equals the $205,000 which we are getting this year. The minister explained to the deputation that he had his troubles, that as the estimates were late in going through it necessitated some delay in getting the work started. I should think that with unfinished contracts, and with a government who have a large submissive majority at its back, there should be no difficulty in the administration carrying out any work they wished to undertake. Any contractor should know that.

Now I wish to place a few things on Hansard. I do not propose to be taking this matter up every year if I am longer in the house, but I do wish to make a brief review of Goderich harbour as presented to me by friends of this government, and which they wish to have presented to the Minister of Public Works. In 1896 Mr. Cameron, who had represented since confederation the constituency in which the town of Goderich is located, made the statement that in 1870 at his request Sir John A. Macdonald had appointed a commission to take evidence and to view the situation right along the coast line from Sarnia to Tobermory. That commission reported that Goderich was the only harbour of refuge along that stretch of 150 or 200 miles, and Sir John Macdonald's administration, at the request of a Liberal member representing that riding, took action in the matter. Sir John showed him every courtesy, without striving to make Mr. Cameron believe that because he was of a different political persuasion he should come hat in hand and on bended knee before the throne of the Minister of Public Works. Yet the other day, when I rose in the house to ask that another town in my constituency be given a public building, the answer of the Minister of Public Works was in effect that I had a nerve to ask for anything else in my constituency in view of the expenditures that had been made on this great national port, which was founded by the party to which I belong and which has been maintained by every government up to the present moment, despite the fact that in nearly every instance the sitting member has been politically opposed to the administration of the day.

The Hon. James Sutherland, Minister of Public Works in 1903, stated that up to that time Canada had spent $713,341.43 on the harbour. Before I proceed I wish to point out to hon. members of this house that this is no ordinary harbour seeking a little donation. Through the activities of this harbour the Canadian National Railways, our own system, takes in over $1,000,000 of revenue in freight annually while the Canadian Pacific Railway takes in over three-quarters of a million. We had afloat in the harbour last year 22 vessels carrying five and three-quarter million bushels of wheat. Last year twenty million bushels of wheat were handled at this port. In cargo deliveries to Canadian ports Goderich stood third, exceeded only by Port Colborne and Montreal. In cargo deliveries to lake Huron and Georgian bay ports Goderich stood first. It appears to me that the Hon. James Sutherland, the former Minister of Public Works, had a very good grasp of the situation and he sounded somewhat of a prophetic note. According to Hansard, Mr. Kemp of Toronto arose and asked this question:

> Does this constitute all that the people of Goderich demand from the Department of Public Works?

The then Minister of Public Works replied:

> No,. demands have been made, not only from Goderich, but the whole of the district and from Toronto west, that a breakwater should be built at that port. I myself believe it is a matter of necessity, if we are to have the benefit we should have on lake Huron. At present mostly all the shipping goes up the American side of the lake because we have not any harbour of refuge on the Canadian side. There are in addition splendid facilities already erected there in the shape of an elevator and other improvements at the harbour. I am very much impressed with the representation that a great deal of the grain of the west might be taken care of here if we had the proper facilities. However, the discussion of that matter will come up more properly when I ask the house to consider an appropriation for the purpose of improving Goderich harbour.

I should like the minister and the house to note this particularly:

> I do not think it is a local work, but national in its nature. And the shipments to Canadian ports depend a great deal on our being able to take care of the grain which comes to these lake ports. Larger vessels could come to Goderich than to many of the other places. I am informed by the Grand Trunk that they would be prepared to take care of the grain, and that perhaps from fifteen to twenty millions of bushels could be easily handled if there was a very moderate expenditure on the harbour.

This was in 1903, and twenty-six years later —a quarter of a century—I am glad to be able to rise in this house and say that the prophetic utterance of the Hon. James Sutherland, a Liberal Minister of Public Works, has come true, and that in the past year there have been twenty million bushels. Mr. Maclaren, who represented North Perth at the time, said:

> I have many communications from that part of the country with regard to the harbour, and they say that for two hundred miles along the shore of lake Huron there is not a safe harbour for steamers to enter in case of storm. The grain men and millers all through that part of the country are very anxious to have the harbour put into proper shape. I may say also that I have a resolution passed by the Board of Trade of Stratford, and letter and telegrams from Mitchell, Seaforth, Goderich and all along the line; and I think the government should do something to put the harbor in proper shape. So far as I am concerned, I will do everything in my power.

I do not wish to go into any historical review of the situation by taking up the Hansards of the various years since confederation, but it has been freely admitted by every Minister of Public Works that Goderich is a harbour of national importance. Once more I would impress upon the minister the fact that any harbour which will contribute $1,000,000 in freight rates to the Canadian National Railways and three quarters of a million to the Canadian Pacific Railway is a harbour that should receive every consideration. On the strength of the sympathetic attitude of the present administration the Goderich Elevator Company has gone ahead with an expenditure this year, there being in course of erection a one million bushel extension to their elevator, at a cost of $350,000; and they confidently anticipate that the work will be proceeded with vigorously.

If we are going to have sessions of parliament lasting away on into midsummer, with estimates being brought down only at the close of the session, then we are going to have a perpetual excuse for holding up a work of such importance nationally; and if that be the case I would appeal to the Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Mackenzie King) to call this house in session earlier in the year, say in the month of November, and let us get home by Easter. This would give the public works of Canada a chance. It is not the fault of hon. members on this side of the house that these estimates are going through at this late hour. I believe there are some unfinished contracts in connection with these public works, and while we are satisfied with the amount of $205,000 we believe all that money should be spent. We feel that it should be more; we feel that this government as well as previous governments has not kept pace with the activity of that harbour, but at all events we desire to get away from this business of putting $175,000 in the estimates and then spending less than half that amount.

I want to leave that thought with the government; I know the Minister of Public Works feels his responsibility, and I would appeal to the government to get away from petty politics. They should not go into constituencies during by-elections—I am not speaking of my own riding in particular; this has reference to the constituency of Victoria and others—and try to bribe the people of Canada with their own money. We believe that this is the money of the people of Canada which will be spent for the development of Goderich harbour. If it is to be a personal donation from this government I would suggest that the minister dress up as Santa Claus, get a few reindeers, have the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who knows the blue water highway well, drive him there and present the gift, if it is a national necessity it should be proceeded with vigorously, but if it is not a necessity not one dollar should be spent. We are just asking what the merits of the case demand, and I want to protest against the administration making promises during both by-elections and general elections which apparently they have no intention of fulfilling. I think it is not a very big jump at all from that sort of thing to the man who, running for alderman or mayor of a city, goes around promising public works in order to get votes. In fact Mr. Chairman, to my mind there is no difference between offering a public bribe for a bunch of votes and the straight purchase of so much per head.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just a moment. My hon. friend knows very well that I was Minister of Public Works at the time of the last by-election in his riding. Does he mean to suggest that I went about promising public works to anyone in that riding, or making suggestions of that kind?

Mr. SPOTTON: I do not; I think I placed myself clearly on record last year to the effect that the Minister of Public Works did not do so, and I am prepared to stand by what I said then. However, I never heard of his slapping on the wrist any of the fellows who did that sort of thing, and I appealed to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works through the press to come out in the newspapers and say that regardless of how the vote went this harbour would be treated in a businesslike manner.

Now I wish to place on Hansard a report from the Lake Shippers' Clearance Association showing the relative importance of the various harbours, together with the statement of a gentleman who is deeply interested in this matter and who knows much more about it than I do. I have never wearied the house very much by reading articles, but I propose to place this statement on record for all time:

Grain Traffic Through Goderich

Annually we handle from fifteen to twenty million bushels of grain from vessels to cars, principally of Canadian origin, shipped from Fort William and Port Arthur. The major portion of this grain is destined for domestic milling and feeding requirements in Ontario and Quebec, with the balance going for export abroad through our Canadian eastern seaboard ports, and for domestic distribution in New England states. In 1929 we have handled through the "transit" elevators 17,000,000 bushels of Canadian and American grain, while an additional 4,000,000 bushels has been handled through the elevator of the Western Canada Flour Mills. The freight revenue on this will amount to over $1,800,000 of which our Canadian National Railways secures over 60 per cent. Additional to the grain traffic from our harbour is that of salt, coal, timber and other merchandise.

The first grain elevator at Goderich was built in 1860 by the Buffalo and Lake Huron Railway, as a utility for handling grain from Milwaukee and Chicago for furtherance to New England points by the Buffalo gateway. In 1890 it was converted into a facility for handling Canadian western grain from vessels to cars, for distribution to Ontario millers. In 1898 a company consisting largely of Ontario millers built a more modern structure of 500,000 bushels capacity, replaced in 1906 with one of concrete. The extension of the Canadian Pacific to Goderich in 1907 increased the field for domestic distribution, which necessitated the addition of another 500,000 bushel storage. In 1923 this was doubled to 2,000,000 storage capacity, and now in 1929 the capacity is being increased another 1,000,000 bushels, and the mechanical equipment being enlarged and speeded up to make this elevator second to none on the lakes. Similarly the flour milling industry has grown at Goderich, and with it the manufacture of coarse and table salt. A mill of Ogilvies and Hutchinson which in 1875 served the local community and ground out probably 100 barrels a day, now the Western Canada Flour Mills, works to a maximum capacity of 2,300 barrels of flour and fifty tons of salt per day, every day in the year but Sunday.

That Goderich still stands to the fore in the handling of Canadian grain shipments through lake and bay ports is evidenced in the statement published by the Lake Shippers Clearance Association, Fort William, for the year ending July 31st., 1928, copy of which is herewith attached. This, of course, is exclusive of American grain. You will observe that with the exception of Port Colborne and Montreal, which are principally export points, Goderich exceeded Port McNicoll, Midland, Tiffin, Depot Harbour, Owen Sound and Sarnia.

Goderich, in the earlier schooner days, was established as a harbour of refuge, but in 1880 when steam carriers were supplanting the slower sailing vessel, the safety of this port for the larger craft was no more. Shallow draft in the harbour and an unprotected entrance made the mariner shun the place in stress of weather. Fortunately our governments realized the possibilities of the port and after private enterprise had demonstrated a determination to develop grain distribution and flour milling it was found necessary to build breakwaters and deepen the channels and harbour basin. But our Public Works departments have not kept pace with the development of traffic, especially in the accommodation of winter storage cargoes.

Last fall some twenty-two steamers held cargo for winter unloading, utilizing every available foot of space, and when this was filled other consignments had to proceed to Buffalo, Toledo, Erie and Fairport, where American railways secured the haulage on their export cargoes. Most of these storage vessels are American owned, which seek winter mooring at lake Huron ports so that they may make an early start in spring, to lake Michigan ports or to the westerly coal ports of lake Erie before Buffalo may be freed of ice. They find their winter mooring charges and shifting much cheaper at lake Huron ports than obtains along the expensive frontage of American ports. That the almost land-locked harbour of Goderich is secure is evidenced from the results of the gale of March 7th of this year, which shifted many and sank one or two steamers at lake Erie ports, to say nothing of the damages to wharves and bridges, while at Goderich every steamer remained secure.

While these twenty-two steamers of varying capacities held five and three quarter million bushels of grain last winter, there is ample area, if properly developed, for from thirty to thirty-five steamers of larger capacities which would easily accommodate twelve million bushels. The rail haulage on this grain would serve to keep our railways quite occupied throughout otherwise lean months, and similarly distribute valued wages to a number of men when they most require it. To attain this it is necessary that our Government prosecute promptly and expeditiously the program of improvement which has been requested of the Department of Public Works.

The following comparative statement taken from the records of the Lake Clearance Association, for the week ending December 14th., 1928, shows the quantities of grain carried afloat for winter storage, ex-Fort William and Port Arthur shipments:

At Canadian Ports:	Bus.	American Bus.
Goderich	5,268,067	446,867
Montreal	1,753,921
Midland	4,880,495
Owen Sound	2,107,064
Kingston	138,801
Port Colborne	3,659,668
Port McNicoll	2,248,982
Sarnia	4,739,694
Tiffin	1,160,632
Toronto	1,031,391
	26,988,715

At American Ports:	Bus.
Buffalo	14,414,738	Unknown
Cleveland	215,148	"
Erie	5,360,084	"
Fairport	1,927,679	"
Milwaukee	102,802	"
Toledo	1,368,667	"

It has been conclusively demonstrated that the handling of grain through Goderich is of a permanent character and that any harbour development is of national advantage, directly benefitting those who grow the grain in the west, the transportation facilities, lake and rail, the milling and feeding trade in the east, and in fact the consuming public in Ontario. Quebec, and abroad.

The expenditure in harbour deveopment at Goderich is not of any speculative venture; on the contrary, it is returned four-fold to the public in the economic distribution of their cereals through a most convenient gateway, and to our railways in profitable haulage on the grain and subsequently on the flour product. Once dredged this harbour stays dredged—there is no river or back wash to deposit silt, gravel, or other debris.

In cargo deliveries to lake Huron and Georgian Bay ports Goderich stood first.

Mr. ELLIOTT: By whom was this article written, and what is the date?

Mr. SPOTTON: It is dated April 2.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This year?

Mr. SPOTTON: This year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Whose statement is it?

Mr. SPOTTON: I will not give the name of the man who sent it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that a statement read in that way should include the name of the party signing it.

Mr. SPOTTON: I have a very good reason for not giving that name; I will read it as my own statement and take the responsibility for it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: You have not done that.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): I am afraid the hon. gentleman is completely out of order, and I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that the whole discussion is out of order. We are discussing vote No. 70, roads and bridges.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was understood that when the item of harbours and rivers generally was brought before the committee again any item of that nature could be discussed. While we are not discussing harbours and rivers at the present moment, I would like every latitude to be given to the hon. member.

Mr. SPOTTON: The minister was courteous enough to permit that, and I wish to thank him.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was an understanding which I entered into. I think the committee should have the name of the author of that article in order to know just what weight should be attached to it; that is quite clearly a rule of the house.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): I would call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that the hon. member has stated that it was some notes he was reading.

[Mr. Spotton.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, Mr. Chairman, that is not the fact.

Mr. SPOTTON: The Toronto Telegram said quite recently that they did not care who read the speeches, what they were interested in was who wrote them; the minister seems to have taken the same attitude. This is the first time I have ever read anything in the house, and I think I should be given the privilege of placing on Hansard this article which was sent to me by a gentlemen who I think knows more about the harbour of Goderich than any other person in Canada. I have a very good reason for not wanting to divulge his name, but if the Minister of Public Works presses me I will give that reason to the house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I was not pressing the hon. member, I was simply raising a point of order. If the hon. member will father the article himself, that will render it as innocuous as possible.

Mr. SPOTTON: The development of Goderich harbour is not a speculation; once that harbour is once dredged it will remain dredged, because there is no river or backwash to deposit silt, gravel or other sediment. I do not know to what extent the minister is carrying on the work there at the present time, but I do hope that it is being proceeded with as speedily as possible. I notice in a Liberal paper that the minister stated to the delegation which visited him that the proposed expenditures were as follows:

> The minister informed the delegation, that the federal government intends to do all it can, within reason, to make Goderich the port it should be. He said every effort would be made to initiate the work early in the season, if parliament approves the departmental estimates at an early date.
> The minister gave the delegation details of the proposed expenditure this coming summer, as follows: Completion Forest dredging contract, $70,000; completion Jackson Construction Company, contract on north pier, $22,000 and $43,000 on moving wharf; completion Vance Construction Company contract on south pier, $9,500; Killmer and Barber, dredging contract,

$5,000; improved dockage accommodation, $5,000, and a start on $143,000 contract for partial removal of ship island for improving turning basin in the inner harbor, $50,000.

I would direct the attention of the minister to the fact that this is Ship island and not Indian island, and when I send a communication to the Minister of Public Works with regard to Indian island I refuse to be misrepresented to the present occupant of Ship island as having designs upon his island. I am not making any attack upon the minister as to the amount of his estimates; I believe the amount is quite fair and I do not think the minister should get peeved when, at the request of Goderich citizens, I ask him that as much as possible of the money be spent this year and not less than fifty per cent of the amount as was the case last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to follow my hon. friend through all his discussions, but I would just say that I am in the judgment of the people of Goderich and of the people of that county as to whether or not they are being treated fairly. They visited the department a short time ago, accompanied by my hon. friend, and they expressed their appreciation of what was being done by this government. The hon. member has his own views with regard to Goderich harbour; perhaps they are better known in that particular district than they are down here, and I do not intend to quarrel with him in any way. I do not know whether my hon. friend keeps closely enough in touch with Goderich to know that the dredging is proceeding at the present time and that contracts were let last year amounting to $205,000, and therefore the difficulty which he has anticipated as to this work being held up until these estimates are passed does not apply. I have been given to understand by the people of Goderich that the work is proceeding satisfactorily to them.

The hon. member is quite within his rights in making any statement or offering any criticisms with regard to the manner in which the work is proceeding at Goderich, but nothing he can say will divert this government from the fixed policy which it has announced of doing what it considers to be ample justice to the port of Goderich. I would direct the attention of the hon. member to a fact which he omitted to tell the house, that since the year 1922 the amount of $662,070 has been expended by this government upon the harbour at Goderich. I have a report of the engineer of that district, dated December 17, 1928, in which he says that when navigation officially closed for the season on the great lakes Goderich had a winter fleet of 22 steamers, the greatest in tonnage and value ever assembled there. I do not intend to proceed any further, Mr. Chairman, as I do not think I need to offer any argument to convince the people of Goderich that they are receiving fair treatment at the hands of this government.

Mr. SPOTTON: I just desire to repel the covert threat conveyed by the minister's remarks, which is quite in accord with his attitude on a former occasion. The minister is simply coming back to the point which I tried to stress when I quoted his remarks from Hansard; when I urged upon the member for Victoria to see that the government spent this amount of money $46,000, the member for Victoria replied, "They always do, do they not?" and I said, "No, they do not." It is not a habit but a gift with the present minister to put large-sounding, advertising amounts in the estimates and then spend only a percentage of them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What does the hon. member say to the fact that we have entered into binding contracts?

Mr. SPOTTON: The full amount was not spent last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contractors did all they could.

Mr. SPOTTON: The minister is quoted in Hansard as saying, "That is a suggestion for North Huron," and there are other remarks which do not appear in Hansard. He says now that notwithstanding anything that the representative for that riding might say and in spite of the way they are represented, it would not divert this government from their fixed policy of procedure. I am glad he is going to carry on so manfully, and I wish to congratulate him on that policy. But he must not forget that there have been other governments and there was a government bearing the heat and burden of the day, a war government, that put an item of $200,000 in the estimates in 1915. Some day another government may be in power, and if I have the honour to have a seat in the house—if the minister will not carry out his threats to bring about my retirement—I shall stress still more forcibly to the new government that this work should be carried on. My whole point with the minister is this: I am requested to say that the citizens of Goderich are satisfied with the amount in the estimates, but they will not be satisfied if that amount is not spent. We do not believe in getting $205,000 and having only $100,000 of it spent.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I want to make an appeal to the minister in connection with a portion of estimate No. 142 in regard to the interprovincial bridge over the Ottawa river at Hawkesbury, for which bridge an item of $40,000 has been in the estimates for a good many years. The proposal of the government is to build this bridge, provided the Quebec and Ontario governments will each contribute one-third of the cost. The difficulty of the position is that three governments are interested in this matter, and someone has to take the initiative. In all courtesy to the Minister of Public Works, I say that in his position he is the natural person to take this matter up with the other governments. I want to urge upon him that he ask the representatives of the other governments to meet him, talk the matter over and see if there is not some way whereby this very important and necessary work may be built. I want to ask him as a personal favour to take the matter up with the other governments and see if some solution cannot be found. Perhaps the minister does not know the location. The bridge is very urgently required, because there is no bridge over the Ottawa river between Ottawa and Ste. Annes, a distance of 110 miles or thereabouts. I know that at or near Hawkesbury and Grenville many lives have been lost in the last twenty years owing to the fact that people had to cross the river in the fall or spring of the year when the ice was bad and perhaps unwisely took the chance of crossing on bad ice. For humanitarian reasons, therefore, this bridge is very much needed and we have been agitating for it for a long time. With the present development of motor traffic there is a great necessity from the commercial point of view for the building of this bridge, because, if motorists coming from the United States were able to cross at Hawkesbury they would get into the north country via the shortest possible route instead of having to go to Montreal and taking a roundabout route. In the north country back of Grenville there are many lakes and wonderful scenery to attract people from the United States, and if this bridge were built it would be greatly used by motorists who desire to visit that section.

When the Borden government was in power, at my request it was decided to build the bridge and in 1914 tenders were called for the purpose. Unfortunately they came in just about the time war was declared, and on account of the war it was considered impossible to go on with any public works that were not absolutely necessary, so that no tender was accepted. As a matter of fact if the war had not intervened, this bridge would have been commenced in 1914 and completed many years ago. At that time it was the intention of the Dominion government to pay one-half the cost of the bridge, and on that basis arrangements were made with the provincial governments each to pay one-quarter. The minister tells me that the policy of the present government is to pay only one-third of the cost of bridges such as this, and he absolutely refuses to alter that decision. There should be a conference between the authorities of the Dominion and the two provinces on this particular point and with regard to this very necessary work. The counties on either side, one of which I have the honour to represent and the other being the county of Prescott in Ontario, have very little money spent in them. We are satisfied to have our friends from the great lakes and other parts of Canada receive the greater part of the public money that is being spent by the minister's department. We do however demand that this small expenditure be made, and surely in all fairness the people of those two counties ought to be helped to have this bridge built which is so very necessary for the preservation of life and also for the use of tourists who bring so much money into the country. Therefore I appeal to the minister to take a personal interest in the matter and to try to get the representatives of the provinces together to find a solution so that this bridge may be built in the near future.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a matter that has been before the government for some time and in regard to which the attitude of the government, as my hon. friend said, is quite well known. It is true that in the earlier years, as I am able to read the history of interprovincial bridges, it was clearly intended at the time of the passing of the British North America Act that bridges between provinces other than military bridges should be constructed by the two adjoining provinces. Practically the same rule applies as between counties. I am able to speak of the province of Ontario especially, and that rule applies as between two counties. Between townships, the two townships would build it, and between a township and a village the cost would be borne half by each. That has been the practice. Following out that, you would naturally expect that bridges that were not originally military bridges would be built by two adjoining provinces on an equal basis. However, the system has grown up under which the Dominion has contributed different proportions of the cost of bridges at different times, but for the last fifteen years the policy has been consistent.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Not for so long as fifteen years, I think.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Since the interprovincial bridge over the Chaudiere was built, and I am informed that that was fifteen years ago. Where two provinces have decided upon the necessity of a bridge, I think the Dominion government has since that time agreed in every case to contribute one-third of the cost, each of the two provinces contributing one-third. I quite agree with what my hon. friend has said with regard to the right of a county like either of the two he has mentioned. They do not require much expenditure in the way of wharves, breakwaters and that sort of thing, and they should receive some reasonable consideration by way of assistance, so far as it is legitimate for this government to assist in transportation facilities. I was under the impression after a conference I had with my hon. friend some time ago that he was going to be good enough to see one or two or both of the representatives of the provinces with regard to taking the initiative. I question the wisdom of the Dominion, as a general rule, taking the initiative in regard to an expenditure of which the two provinces really have to be the judges to a large extent, and in relation to which their outlay between them is twice as much as that of the Dominion. But I do agree with my hon. friend as to the necessity of a bridge at this point, and as far as I am concerned I am not going to stand on any formalities if I can be of assistance in getting all the parties together and getting an arrangement completed. I know that my hon. friend will be glad to join with me in offering his good offices in getting all the parties together and having this much required bridge got under way at the earliest possible moment. I shall be glad to have a conference with my hon. friend and anything that can be done in the matter I shall be glad to do.

Mr. MAYBEE: I would direct the attention of the minister to the revote of $41,000 for Cobourg harbour. I assume this is to complete the dredging in that place. I would ask the minister just how the matter of the repair of the esplanade stands between the department and the town of Cobourg.

Mr. ELLIOTT: As my hon. friend will know, the title to the site on which the work will be done is in the town of Cobourg. Some time ago they agreed to transfer that to the Dominion government, but for one reason or another—I do not wish to attach any criticism to the town in connection with it—through no fault of this department the town was unable to complete that transfer until a couple of weeks ago. It is the intention to proceed with the dredging right away.

Mr. MAYBEE: I understand from the minister that the town have completed their part of the arrangement satisfactorily.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, within the last two weeks.

Mr. MAYBEE: Then there is no disagreement between the department and the town as to the department going ahead and repairing the esplanade, and there will be no delay in making the repairs.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is only fair for me to say to my hon. friend—he probably knows something about this—that now that we are committed to what is know as the esplanade proposition a more ambitious program, a larger scheme, is proposed by the town. They are urging that at the present time, and I might say that it is under consideration. But just to what extent we can vary the arrangement we made last year I cannot say.

Mr. MAYBEE: Is the minister aware that the esplanade has slid into the harbour since the high water that came with the last storm? At the present time the harbour is not in use for shipping as previously; shipping is being diverted from the harbour of Cobourg to other ports, and the town of Cobourg is thereby losing considerable harbour fees. I would also call the minister's attention to the shipping that has been done at this port. The waterborne tonnage for the port of Cobourg for the year ending April 1, 1929, amounted to 345,600 tons of coal and 115,201 tons of merchandise, or a total of 460,801 tons. The outward tonnage amounted to 194,223, or a total tonnage of 655,024. That means 92 tons for every man, woman and child in the town of Cobourg, which is the highest record, I believe, for any town in the Dominion.

I would also direct the minister's attention to the fact that the town is still under considerable obligation for the cost of the harbour, having debentures that do not mature until 1934. They are therefore very desirous of having the revenues from the harbour maintained so that this obligation can be taken care of.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say to my hon. friend that I am quite aware of the revenue. Before we decided to proceed with any scheme of improvement there the possible business to be done was considered very carefully. He is aware of the fact that the proposal known as the esplanade scheme involved abou $40,000. Since that time recommendations and requests have been made, very urgently, to take out the rock necessary to give them a 22 foot depth and build there a harbour that would give them a 22 foot depth right up to the esplanade wharf. That would cost about $140,000, involving a good deal of blasting. I should be very glad if my hon. friend, who knows the local situation, would give me his views as to the comparative merits of the two propositions; they are not entirely in harmony.

Mr. MAYBEE: That is as to the depth?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, as to whether to go on with the scheme that was considered last year of repairing the esplanade wharf, or the other scheme of building a larger wharf.

Mr. MAYBEE: I would certainly urge that the harbour be made to accommodate the vessels drawing the greater depth.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They do now up to the esplanade; this would be an addition.

Mr. MAYBEE: Not over 15 foot draft, I understand, and I believe that considerable shipping that would have come into the harbour last year was lost owing to lack of a greater depth of water. I certainly would urge upon the minister that they make their program to fit the greater depth for the harbour.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not a question of depth; it is a question whether the harbour should be extended to the larger size.

Mr. MAYBEE: I think the shipping of the harbour justifies that expenditure.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The present shipping does not. It depends to a large extent upon the relative merits of Port Hope and Cobourg with regard to certain shipments of coal and ore that are liable to go to the one place or the other. When this was started a year ago it looked as though those were going to go to Cobourg. It looks now as if the parties most directly interested have some notion of using Port Hope.

Mr. MAYBEE: I think that that traffic is temporarily diverted due to the present condition of Cobourg harbour. That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Either harbour is available for use at the present time.

Mr. MAYBEE: Not for unloading coal from the esplanade, as it has all slid into the harbour as well as some of the railway track.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: They cannot do it at Port Hope either.

Mr. MAYBEE: I understand that some of the shipments of the coal company go to Port Hope in preference to Cobourg.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did my hon. friend say that he understood that they were going to Port Hope in preference to Cobourg?

Mr. MAYBEE: I did.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, that is the information we have.

Mr. MAYBEE: It is due to the esplanade at Cobourg being unavailable.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, no, because there is no accommodation at Port Hope now.

Mr. MAYBEE: Certainly they cannot land and unload at Cobourg. That is the fact. I would like to ask the minister if he will have placed in the supplementary estimates an amount at least necessary for the work on the esplanade. Has the minister had an engineer on the ground and been advised as to the present condition of the esplanade?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Our engineers have been going as rapidly as they can all over the flooded areas where the washouts have been particularly heavy this spring. I do not know that there is a very recent report in regard to Cobourg, but we know pretty well the condition there through various reports that have reached the department. My hon. friend asks if it is our intention to put in the supplementary estimates an amount to provide for harbour improvements at the esplanade. I would call his attention to the fact that the item already in the estimates at page 41 is an item for Cobourg harbour improvements, $75,000. That is for the esplanade and dredging in the harbour.

Mr. MAYBEE: I understand from the estimates that that is only a revote of the $75,000 that was voted last year, and that that was being expended upon dredging and some repairs to a pier.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of that amount $34,000 is a new vote entirely; $41,000 is a revote.

Mr. MAYBEE: My understanding is that it will require that or more for dredging.

Mr. CLARK: The minister stated that some fifteen years ago the principle was recognized of giving grants toward the construction of interprovincial bridges. Sixteen years ago the principle was recognized of giving grants to bridges, within municipalities, that crossed public harbours. An act was passed by this parliament in 1913—I cannot at this moment give the name of the act, but it was a subsidy act for the purpose of assisting in the construction of a bridge over the public harbour of Vancouver. Unfortunately the war intervened and the bridge was not constructed within the period of time laid down in the act. After the war the demand for a bridge in that particular part of the harbour was so urgent that the municipalities surrounding, the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia, constructed the bridge. This government declined—well, I would not say they declined to give a contribution at that time, but the contribution was made through the harbour board of the city of Vancouver. In that particular instance it was very natural that the contribution should be made in that way, because the bridge was a toll bridge and the harbour board of the city of Vancouver will be able to liquidate the advance through the return on the investment, because it is a paying proposition and eventually they will receive back dollar for dollar that has been advanced. For some years past the city of Vancouver has suffered greatly owing to the lack of a bridge across another portion of the public harbour from the foot of Burrard street over False creek. I want to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that in this instance all the international traffic that comes into the city of Vancouver must necessarily cross that public harbour at one or other of two or three points on False creek. There is great congestion of traffic. It has been almost unanimously recognized that another bridge must be provided. With that in view, the province of British Columbia has agreed to contribute a very substantial sum of money towards that bridge. The Canadian Pacific Railway has agreed to contribute a very substantial sum of money towards that bridge. The city of Vancouver was quite prepared to contribute the major portion required for its erection, but it did request the Dominion government to make a contribution inasmuch as the bridge crosses a public harbour. Now the principle has been recognized of contributions towards interprovincial bridges; the principle was recognized by statute sixteen years ago of contributions towards bridges crossing public harbours, and the principle is recognized of contributions towards international bridges. And I would point out that an enormous amount of international traffic crosses the bridges over Vancouver harbour. Recently, and after this government's refusal to make a contribution, a by-law was submitted to the electors of Vancouver for the construction of this bridge, involving payment by the city of Vancouver of the total cost with the exception of the contributions by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the provincial government. But although the people voted on that by-law and indicated that a tremendous majority was in favour of the bridge, the by-law was unfortunately defeated by a few votes because it required a two thirds majority. Since the defeat of the by-law I have received numerous letters on this subject from public bodies and others, which indicate to me the certainty that the bridge must be built, for the city is suffering in the meantime to a great extent through want of it. In view of these facts is the minister prepared to do what he has done—and I am not criticising him for having done it—in connection with the interprovincial bridge at Hawkesbury? In this case, apparently, the government is prepared to take the initiative; but I would point out that in the matter of the bridge which I am discussing the initiative has been taken by the province of British Columbia and the city of Vancouver. There is an urgent demand for that bridge. In view of these circumstances will the minister not consider placing in the supplementary estimates a vote as an offer to the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia that if they wish to proceed with the construction of the bridge this government will contribute a sum sufficient to take care of the extra cost entailed, by the fact that the bridge crosses a public harbour belonging to this country and a harbour which must be protected.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The matter my hon. friend has brought up has received a good deal of attention by the department. He knows, of course, that this is not an interprovincial bridge but a bridge within a harbour in the province and within the city. It does not come within the category of the interprovincial bridges.

Mr. CLARK: I said so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Inasmuch as the bridge is within the harbour, the department has decided that it comes under the harbour commission, which is really controlled by the Department of Marine. The minister in charge of that department was good enough to consider the matter with me and we gave it the best attention we could, and so far as this department was concerned I had little difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the matter was outside our jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARK: Does it differ from the bridge over the second narrows for which this parliament passed a bill sixteen years ago, offering a subsidy of $350,000? How does it differ in principle from that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was a railway subsidy.

Mr. CLARK: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my information is correct, it was in the act with regard to railway subsidies.

Mr. CLARK: I do not think so; I think it was a special act.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then my information is entirely erroneous.

Mr. CLARK: My recollection is that it was a special act, although I have not seen it for years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend will find that these are the facts.

Mr. CLARK: In that case I will look it up and have the information here at eight o'clock. At the moment I am quite satisfied that it was a special act relating to this particular bridge, although the subsidy may have been granted because of the railway. May I point out that three railways will use this bridge. The Canadian Pacific Railway already have a bridge which crosses the harbour and which is used by the Canadian Pacific and the British Columbia Electric Railway, and it is the only means of access for the Canadian National Railways to that side of the harbour. If this new bridge is constructed it will give access to that part of the harbour to the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific and the British Columbia Electric Railway. And that reminds me I think that the British Columbia Electric Railway is also contributing; it may be doing so in the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway but the fact is that there is a railway contribution. And if it is to be of benefit to the Canadian National Railways I suggest that the government should take the matter again into consideration. Apart from the position of the railways, the fact that extra cost is entailed by reason of the bridge crossing a public harbour should warrant the government in contributing to that enhanced cost. The work is for the protection of one of the most important harbours in the country.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I desire to table now, if I may do so, reference No. 97, asked for by the hon. member for Fort William, containing all correspondence entered into by the government in connection with the dredging contract for the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William during the year 1928. I do not see my hon. friend in the house at the moment, but I promised to lay the correspondence on the table at the earliest possible moment.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not customary, and in fact I think it is not permissible, to table papers in committee. The clerk must enter them on his scroll.

Mr. CLARK: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were discussing the question of a bridge over the harbour at Vancouver and I undertook to advise the minister of the statute which authorized the subsidy. I find that the subsidy was originally authorized by the Railway Subsidies Act, as the minister suggested, but it is authorized by an earlier act than I had thought at the time; the act was passed in 1908 and renewed in 1912 and 1913. So the principle of granting subsidies for these bridges has been recognized for twenty-one years. In view of the fact that this subsidy was authorized for one bridge over a portion of Vancouver harbour but was never used; in view of the fact that the bridge which was then contemplated has been built; in view of the fact that every cent which may be advanced by the Vancouver harbour commission will be repaid with interest out of the earnings of the bridge; in view of the further fact that the bridge which is now contemplated and for which this grant was asked is a rail bridge in addition to being a bridge for general purposes over the public harbour, I consider there is very much more merit to this request than to any of the requests I have heard for bridges over rivers or between provinces, and I would like to ask the minister again to take this matter under consideration and recommend this grant to the government.

The city of Vancouver is only asking that the government pay whatever extra cost may be entailed by reason of the fact that we must protect the public harbour when constructing the bridge. What could be more just than that the country should pay the extra cost so entailed? It will be necessary, if the bridge is constructed, to have either a swing bridge or a lift, and I believe if the country pays that extra cost the people of Vancouver will be satisfied. I submit that the principle of granting such subsidies has been recognized; we are not asking for anything unreasonable but merely the actual cost entailed by reason of the fact that we are crossing property belonging to the country. In addition to that there is the fact that the country has already recognized the claim of Vancouver for the bridge over this harbour, although that grant never was used. I do plead with the minister that in all fairness this matter should be reconsidered by the government and very much better reasons given than those so far advanced if the government insist upon refusing this request. Before I sit down I should like to ask the minister if he will table the papers relating to this request and to the refusal on the part of the government.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. First of all, I think perhaps my hon. friend is under some misapprehension as to the manner in which this grant was made previously. If he will look at the estimates for 1925-26 he will find that the vote was not under this department at all, although for his purposes I quite agree that it does not make any difference what department it comes under.

Mr. CLARK: I did not think there was a vote in 1925.

Mr. ELLIOTT: At page 59 of the estimates for 1925-26 my hon. friend will find that in the miscellaneous items presented by the Minister of Finance there is included the following item:

Grant to the Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company towards construction of bridge over the second narrows of Burrard inlet, B.C., being revote of portion of subsidy authorized by statute, chapter 46, section 3, 1913. Revote, $100,000.

The total amount provided was $270,000, while the act provided for $350,000.

Mr. CLARK: I think the minister is under a misapprehension. Was that money not voted to the Vancouver harbour commission and in turn loaned by the harbour commission to the bridge company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it was voted exactly in the terms I have mentioned. My hon. friend is correct in saying that chapter 46 of the statutes of 1913 authorized a grant of $350,000, but I understand that the entire amount voted in 1925, $270,000, was spent.

Mr. CLARK: And was it not charged to the Vancouver harbour commission, who are under obligation to repay it to this government with interest?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think the harbour commission was in existence at that time.

Mr. CLARK: My impression was that every cent of money advanced by the country in connection with that bridge was charged to the Vancouver harbour commission with the obligation of repayment with interest. I should like to have confirmation of that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not intend to argue with my hon. friend about that, but if there was such an arrangement it must have been a subsequent one; it could not have been done under this vote if the terms of the vote were carried out. I realize that the matter is one of importance and already we have given it a good deal of consideration. As the situation now is, I think this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Marine and Fisheries department and not the Public Works department, but from the standpoint of the people who need the bridge I do not suppose that that makes any real difference.

Mr. CLARK: The minister says that he has actually consulted with his colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We heard the deputation together, and we have had numerous consultations in regard to it. I shall be very glad to see if there is anything further which can be done.

Mr. CLARK: What has the minister to say about the fact that this bridge will carry a line for the Canadian Pacific Railway and will provide a means of access to the Canadian National Railway for that portion of the harbour which lies south of False creek?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think that is correct.

Mr. CLARK: What has the minister to say with regard to that feature of it? Are we not justified in asking the government for a grant upon the basis of the principle, already recognized by parliament on numerous occasions under the Railway Subsidies Act? During the past years many subsidies have been authorized under that act for bridges for one or the other of these railway companies, while it is refused in this instance.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand that that act is not resorted to at the present time to the extent that it formerly was. Such matters naturally come within the jurisdiction of the Department of Railways and Canals, and not of the Public Works department, and this particular matter, because it involves a harbour, comes under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I shall be very glad to take this matter up again with the different departments involved and see if there is any possibility of bringing about a change in the viewpoint which was taken when this matter was considered before.

Mr. CLARK: In addition to the viewpoint to be taken of the grant as such, will the minister canvass the situation and advise the city as to what other possible course there may be? For instance, after the situation is canvassed it may appear to the minister that we would be perfectly justified in asking for a subsidy under the provisions of the Railway Subsidies Act. It may appear that we are justified in asking for a grant in the estimates because of the extra cost entailed by the fact that the bridge crosses a public harbour and it has been found necessary to provide a draw and go to the expense of special construction. Then again, it may appear that this is a proper subject for action by the Vancouver harbour commission. I cannot overestimate the importance of this matter to the city of Vancouver. The bridges over that harbour carry practically all the international motor vehicle traffic which comes into the city. I ask the minister not only to consider this matter, but to advise the city of the course which would be the most advantageous for them to pursue in this connection.

I do not know whether it comes under this item or not, but I should like to have some information in regard to the New Edinburgh mill property, as to how much has been spent on that building since its purchase.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That would come under the heading of public buildings, not harbours and rivers. There is no item in the present estimates for the New Edinburgh mill property, but I would refer my hon. friend to the particulars of expenditures which were tabled in the house.

Mr. CLARK: Under what heading?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was the return which was made relating to the expenditures in connection with the New Edinburgh mill.

Mr. CLARK: Would that be up to date?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is; if not, I shall be very glad to furnish my hon. friend with the details up to date.

Mr. CLARK: Has anything been done to utilize the water-power?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not so far.

Mr. CLARK: Is it lying idle now?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. CLARK: A year ago the minister estimated that it would yield an annual return of $26,400, and that estimate has not materialized.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It will, when we start to utilize it. Up to the present time the demands have not been sufficient to justify the expenditure necessary to utilize these powers.

Mr. CLARK: Has the minister attempted to sell this water-power?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. CLARK: Has the minister attempted to lease it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. CLARK: In the meantime we are losing the interest on the minister's estimate of the value of $200,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend wants to be fair about this matter.

Mr. CLARK: At page 4105 of Hansard of 1928 the minister made the following statement:

> It is obvious, therefore, than an average of 1,100 horsepower could be obtained and if this power was disposed of as rated, it would yield an annual return of $26,400 for 1,100 horsepower at $2 per month.

I would like to have some information as to what has been done in that connection.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is quite correct regarding the statement which was made. That statement was made in accordance with the valuations of expert valuators which we had before us at the time, and I believe it is still correct. It is expected that the whole of that power will be required for the purposes of government services in connection with the research buildings when they are in operation. The government considered that it was not wise to go to any extra expense in order to develop the power and distribute it for the one building which we are occupying at the present time. I shall be very glad to give my hon. friend a comparative statement showing what it costs to buy the power under our present rates and the cost of developing this water-power. This statement should be considered in the light of the fact that in the near future we expect to utilize all this power. It was not considered advisable to develop it at the present time and enter into contracts which could be made only for a short period of time.

Mr. CLARK: The purchase price, as I recall it, was $525,000. Can the minister tell us what portion of the total investment is being utilized in the public service? We know $200,000 of it is not being utilized, and we are losing, it is estimated an income of $26,400.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are, at the present time, utilizing from the standpoint of strict operation practically nothing but the building that is used for the Bureau of Statistics. Engineers and architects have been working out a plan for the research buildings and for some other buildings that, it is expected, will be built upon the site. Of course the main part of it is site for public buildings yet to be erected, and none of that is being utilized.

Mr. CLARK: Are some of the existing buildings going to be torn down?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I fancy so, though I think we may be able to utilize for research purposes the big building at the other large mill, and probably utilize in one way or another most of the buildings that are there.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister has touched a very important item, that of research. Will he be good enough to tell us what they are doing in that regard?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not want to limit the discussion, but I respectfully suggest that we would make better headway if we tried to confine ourselves at least to the item with which we are dealing. We are now dealing with item No. 142, which does not at all touch what my hon. friend has suggested. What my hon. friend refers to was passed under item No. 117 some time ago, and in view of that perhaps I might endeavour now, as far as I can, to answer, without the details before me, any questions that my hon. friend cares to ask in regard to that. Under 117, there is an appropriation of $750,000 for National Research Council laboratories. The operation of the buildings, of course, comes under the department of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I shall be glad to furnish my hon. friend with any information that is available in my department.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister himself brought the matter up, and that, I think, is my justification.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I brought it up in answer to a question of an hon. member with regard to the power.

Mr. McGIBBON: This is one of the most important things that the government has taken up. In fact, the government has been rather slow to act, and, if I might express an opinion, it has allowed the government of Ontario probably to steal a march on it in this regard. Would the minister tell us what they are doing and what they propose to do with regard to research?

Mr. ELLIOTT: From the standpoint of this department I might say that nearly a year ago Messrs. Sproatt and Rolph, architects of Toronto, were engaged to act in conjunction with members of the research council in devising what would seem to be the best and most up-to-date buildings that could be provided for the purposes of the researches that it is proposed to carry on. The class of buildings and laboratories required involves buildings that will be used for purposes of a very technical nature and we have been from time to time impressing upon the architects the anxiety of the department to be able to let a contract at an early date in connection with these buildings. It is hoped that before long we shall be able to do that. I do not think my hon. friend will have any reason to complain that the Department of Trade and Commerce have not been diligently devoting attention to equipping themselves with the best facilities that can be provided for carrying on the researches necessary.

Mr. BOYS: Is there any definite scheme for the utilization of either the power or these buildings? There evidently was something of that sort very definitely in the minister's mind when he addressed the house on June 9 last, when he stated:

> We are going to use them for lighting, heating and various other services.

The minister then elaborated upon the subject, pointing out the available horsepower and so forth, showing that the matter had been receiving attention. He stated that the country would receive some $26,000 as a result of the proposition. What, if anything, has been done in furtherance of the proposal he then presented to the house?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Was my hon. friend in the chamber a few moments ago when I answered the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard in regard to that very question?

Mr. BOYS: If the minister answered the question, I did not hear it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did, but I have no objection to answering it again.

Mr. BOYS: I do not want the minister to repeat, but I will put this very definite question to him: Is there at present any definite scheme under way for the utilization of these buildings? If so, are there plans that we can examine?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend, I take it, is referring to the buildings?

Mr. BOYS: Both power and buildings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have answered with regard to power that it is expected to be utilized entirely.

Mr. BOYS: But up to the present nothing has been done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. With regard to the buildings, one of the main buildings is now being utilized. The other is in process of being fitted up for temporary purposes of research until the research buildings are completed. Quite substantial progress has been made along that line.

Mr. BOYS: I wanted to find out whether there was any definite scheme. The minister said that the architects were now preparing plans. Is that what the minister referred to as being for temporary purposes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; that is for permanent buildings. The work of fitting for temporary purposes the large mill that is not now being utilized is under way and the other building has been occupied, as my hon. friend knows, for nine months.

Mr. BOYS: I ask this because with two or three others I went to look the buildings over, and as I looked at them—stables, factory buildings and so on—from a layman's point of view I could not see how they could be utilized as they were for government purposes; it seemed to me that it would be necessary to pull them all down and erect new buildings. I was wondering if any scheme was in contemplation. If so, the committee should know what the scheme is and whether the expenditure is justified. The minister says that so far nothing has been done with regard to power, and it is a question whether a further expenditure of money for the utilization of power would be justified.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend's question; because I could not understand how a member of the house as diligent as we all know he is would not know that the Bureau of Statistics has been housed in one of these buildings for nine months or thereabouts. We are thereby escaping a rental of about $64,000 per year. We have our statistics now housed in a building that is absolutely fireproof, and if my hon. friend looks it over I think he will agree that it is a building exceptionally well suited for the requirements of that branch.

Mr. BOYS: What expenditure is involved in connection with fitting that building for the purpose for which it is being used?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Around $75,000, a little over one year's rent. The other building is in process of being equipped for the purpose of research until the new buildings are complete. The office that is on the corner of Stanley and Sussex streets has turned out to be exceptionally well fitted for the purposes of the research council and has been in use by them for some months.

Mr. BOYS: I would like to know whether there is any scheme of a comprehensive nature under way for the permanent use of these buildings beyond the use to which the minister has referred, which is of a permanent character, and the temporary use to which he referred a moment ago.

Mr. ELLIOTT: So far as the statistics branch is concerned in all probability that work will be carried on in that building for a number of years. So far as the other building is concerned it is expected that even after the new buildings are erected, as there is certain work that requires a building in the nature of a factory, it will be utilized as well as some of the other buildings; in fact I think that there will be none that will not be utilized.

Mr. BOYS: That is in contemplation, but there is nothing definite yet?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite so.

Mr. BOYS: Would the minister mind my interjecting something here which I realize is utterly out of place? The opportunity may not again present itself to me; I refer to the Barrie post office. I would ask the minister to make a note of what I am going to say. I understand that it is impossible to carry on operations inside the Barrie post office, if there is a serious rainstorm, without the use of umbrellas. It might be well if some attention was given to this matter and the roof made watertight. These repairs are absolutely required for the comfort of the officials of the post office and for the preservation of the building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am very glad indeed to have this or any other matter that is of importance to my department brought up, whether it properly comes under the item we are discussing or not, because I think we are all anxious to do the things that are absolutely necessary. I have some information with regard to the Barrie post office. I know that repairs are necessary, but I am not able to say offhand whether they are of such magnitude as to require a special vote. I rather think they are not so great that they cannot be done out of the general vote. It is the intention of the department to make some repairs there either out of the general vote for buildings or out of a vote in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BOYS: Before even venturing to say what I did I took the precaution to ascertain whether or not the situation had been brought to the attention of the district engineer and of the department, and I was given to understand that it had been, and on more than one occasion. I really feel, therefore, that I was justified in bringing the matter up to-night.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I regret that I am not able to say at the moment just what the decision was, except that some repairs were necessary at that place, which we shall make either out of the general vote or out of a special vote.

Mr. CLARK: In connection with the New Edinburgh mills water-power, is there sufficient water-power there to operate continuously the year round?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My recollection is that there is about 1,100 horse-power available there the whole year.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. BOYS: The minister said 800 last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: From 800 to 1,100, but I think you will find it is nearer 1,100.

Mr. CLARK: Are there some portions of the year when there is not sufficient water to operate at all?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the low water season there is not as much water available as during the period of high water.

Mr. CLARK: What is available during the low water period?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have just said that my best recollection is from 800 to 1,100 horse-power, and I think it is nearer 1,100, according to the best information I can get.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—Alberta—Saskatchewan—Alberta and Saskatchewan telegraph and telephone lines—general repairs and improvements, $21,000.
Island Hill—Ile à la Crosse telegraph line—clearing right-of-way, $11,500.
Peace river—building for telegraph service, $5,000.
Reconstruction of Grouard—Peace river telegraph line, $3,800.
Telegraph line from Peace river to Fort Vermilion, $75,000.

Mr. McRAE: I want to take this opportunity to compliment the hon. minister on this vote of $75,000 for a telegraph line from Peace River crossing to Fort Vermilion. It is not in my constituency, but I happen to be very familiar with the situation, and I must say that this is a very much needed improvement and will bring into touch with the world several communities one of which at the present time is about two hundred miles from transportation facilities. I hope the minister will see to it that the usual telephone facilities which are granted on the government telegraph lines will be extended to this line, at all events in Battle River, Keg river and several smaller places where a telegraph operator would hardly be justified, but where I think a telephone would perhaps serve these smaller communities equally well.

While I am on my feet, I want to say that these government telegraph lines which serve such a large area in the northwest as well as in British Columbia are among the most accommodating and best run of all our services, from the superintendent down. I want to speak a word for these men who are responsible for this service throughout that far-flung country. They give, with the assistance of their families, practically a twenty-four hour service. You can reach them and send a message at any time during the day or night, and I hope that when salaries are being readjusted, the work done by the employees of the government telegraph lines, and particularly the men out along the line, will not be overlooked.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—British—Columbia—British Columbia Northern District—general repairs and improvements, $17,450.
British Columbia Vancouver Island District—general repairs and improvements, $14,000.
Mainland telegraph and telephone lines—general repairs and improvements, $8,000.
Telephone line from Dawson Creek to Sunset Prairie, $2,650.
Telephone line from Rolla to Rolla Landing, $2,500.
Yukon telegraph system—general repairs and improvements, $18,870.
Extension of telephone line on Galiano Island, $2,025.—Total, $258,945.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is it that is wanted?

Mr. BENNETT: Just where the lines are.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say to my hon. friend that they are within the British Columbia mainland system, on which we had a total expenditure last year of $68,337. Then there is the Vancouver island system, on which we had a total expenditure last year of $156,509. I can give my hon. friend more detail if he wishes it.

Mr. FRASER: What do you mean by the northern district; what does that include?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The requirements are:

1. General repairs—Queen Charlotte Islands line, $2,414.00.
2. General repairs—Alice Arm to Stewart, B.C., $1,331.25.
3. Purchase of rowboat for use in line repair work between Alice Arm and Stewart, B.C., $60.00.
4. Ashcroft—Highland valley line, $750.00.
5. Ashcroft—Forestry line, $450.00.
6. 100 Mile House—Canim lake line, $3,200.00.
7. Quesnel—Barkerville line, $1,260.00.
8. Clinton—Gang Ranch line, $250.00.
9. Lillooet—Lytton, $6,500.00.
10. Ashcroft—Savona line, $750.00.
11. Repairs to Barkerville buildings, $500.00.

That is how the $17,000 is made up.

Mr. CLARK: What about Vancouver island? Where are the improvements there?

Mr. FRASER: Mr. Chairman, I just want to extend my thanks to the minister for including in that vote $500 for repairs to the Barkerville building. Some of the other items there are also very necessary, but that was particularly brought to my attention last fall, and I examined the building and my conclusion was that unless you repaired it this year it would be falling down next year. I must, therefore, compliment the minister for giving us the $500 for the repairs to that building.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister give us the detail of the Vancouver island repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This $14,000 is required for the improvement to the Vancouver island district lines, and is made up as follows:

Estevan section, $135.
Nootka section, $75.
Sidney inlet section, $175.
Vargas island, $240.
Tofino section, $100.
Kakawis branch, $50.
Ucluelet section, $130.
Uchucklesit section, $200.
Bamfield section, $175.
Pachena section, $150.
Clo-oose section, $100.
Carmanah section, $150.
Camp Bay section, $175.
Port Renfrew, section, $175.
Jordan River section, $175.
Shusartie to San Josef bay, $225.
Sea Otter cove to Holberg, $225.
Quatsino section, $250.
Alert Bay section, $300.
Rock Bay section, $275.
Campbell river section, $190.
Union Bay section, $150.
Parksville section, $200.
Port Alberni section, $150.
Sooke section, $150.
Victoria section, $100.
Bowen island section, $150.
Whytecliff section, $250.
Squamish-Cheakamous section, $100.
Seaside park section, $100.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. CLARK: Some of the places the minister is now reading are on the mainland, not on Vancouver island at all.

Mr. FRASER: In that connection I would like to ask the minister a question. He mentioned a moment ago the Squamish-Cheakamous section. Have you a telegraph service there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I see there is $100 for general repairs and improvements, as requested by the general superintendent of government telegraph service in a memo dated December 17, 1928.

Mr. FRASER: Have you any record of the requisition then for the extension of that service?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not have that here. I have here only the detail relating to the items that we have placed in these estimates.

Mr. CLARK: In view of the fact that many of the places the minister has referred to as being included in this Vancouver island district are on the mainland, will the minister give us a statement of the constituencies in which these votes are allotted, with the amounts?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not here the information by constituencies. I shall be glad to furnish my friend with a statement of it, but I am not sufficiently familiar with the constituencies to be able to say just from glancing at the places. But these are the requisitions made.

Mr. CLARK: How does it happen that there are so many mainland points included in Vancouver island?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The superintendency is on the island, and all that comes under it, I take it, is included in the Vancouver island district. It is served by a superintendent at Vancouver.

Item agreed to.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to have the same information in regard to the mainland telegraph and telephone lines as in regard to the others.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $8,000 is required for general repairs and improvements to the mainland telegraph and telephone lines throughout the province of British Columbia, as follows:

1. Kamloops section, $793.50.
2. Barriere section, $331.75.
3. Chase-Revelstoke section, $1,437.50.
4. Golden-Invermere section, $5,361.55.—Total, $7,924.30 say $8,000.

Mr. FRASER: A year ago the department sold the Merritt-Vernon section to the British Columbia Telephone Company. Are any negotiations being carried on at the present time for the disposal of these lines to the same company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not say to the same company. There are two companies who would be reasonably in the market for the purchase of whatever lines we have to sell in that district, and we contemplate advertising for tenders in two or three weeks' time for these lines.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate allowance to Alphonsine Thibault, widow of the late Paul Thibault, foreman at Bic, P.Q., who was fatally injured by an accident while on duty, $3,355.—Total, $1,036,355.

Mr. FRASER: There is an item here of $130,000 for the national gallery. What is that for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $130,000 was requested by the board of trustees to provide for the operation and maintenance, workshop supplies, upkeep of premises, purchase of works of art, management of exhibitions and the usual travelling scholarship of the National Gallery of Canada.

It is proposed to expend the 1928-29 appropriation as follows:—

To continue necessary work on Canadian war memorials if new storage provided, $10,000.

Salaries and wages, $10,000.

General maintenance, etc., $25,000.

For additions to the National Gallery collection, $85,000.—Total, $130,000.

Mr. CAHILL: I may be out of order in what I wish to represent now, but as this item is miscellaneous I would suggest to the minister that if possible, if not out of this vote then out of some other this year, he provide silencers for the typewriters in the stenographers' rooms. These people work under most difficult conditions. They are doing arduous work and the rooms are not as well fitted for the purpose as they might be if the machines were supplied with silencers. If this were done it would add very much to the comfort and possibly to the health of the stenographers in this building. I may add that neither the officials in that room nor any of the employees there have mentioned this to me, so that I am not pleading for anyone in particular. I do think, however, that it would add to the efficiency of the work and make for the health of those in the government service in that department.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to direct the matter to the attention of the Speaker, under whose jurisdiction it comes.

Mr. CAHILL: It would be a good thing if the minister would visit the room.

Mr. IRVINE: Now that the minister has promised to call the attention of the Speaker to the necessity for supplying the machines in the stenographers' rooms with silencers, I wish he would direct His Honour's attention to the fact that we have no gymnasium in this parliament, nor a shower bath. It might be good for the health of the entire assembly if we had something of that sort in the basement.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a good deal to be said in favour of the suggestion.

Mr. SHORT: With reference to the condition in some of the rooms under the Public Works department, I wonder whether the minister ever visited the offices of the pensions board. The condition there is a disgrace to this government. It is a discredit to them that they should ask the officers of so important a department as that to carry on their work in the present offices. The ceiling is tumbling down and the whole room seems to be badly out of repair; besides, it is barely furnished and is totally inadequate for the purposes for which it was intended.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am glad to have information in regard to that building, which comes under this department. It does not belong to the department but is one of the numerous buildings which we rent.

Mr. MALONEY: Does not the government own the Daly building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Daly building now almost belongs to the government, most of the payments having been made. I am not going to enter into a discussion as to the wisdom of the purchase of that building, but we shall try to keep it in reasonable repair. I will have the matter looked into.

Mr. MALONEY: The minister will not discuss the wisdom of that purchase, but what can he have to say with regard of the Edwards sawmill at Rockcliffe? That is the most ridiculous transaction in the history of the Public Works department. If the minister will go to the sawmill he will see the conditions under which many fine young ladies and gentlemen have to work, and I am sure he will agree that by comparison the Daly building is a palace.

Mr. CLARK: I am sure the purchase of the Daly building will readily bear comparison with the most recent purchase by this government of the New Edinburgh mills. Nothing would be productive of more good than to have the taxpayers of the country view these two purchases and make the comparison for themselves. That comparison certainly would be a reflection upon the business ability of this government and particularly that of the Minister of Public Works. The minister has just admitted that of the total of $525,000, $200,000, from which he estimated just a year ago we would receive an annual revenue of $26,000, will not produce one dollar in revenue. There is no chance that we will ever obtain any revenue from that money, and the minister as well as every hon. member of this house knows that to be the case. The minister also knows that he will never utilize that power except at great extravagance; if he ever utilizes it for the public service of the country he will be wasting money, because we can buy power from the Hydro Electric Power Company for far less than it will cost to generate the power there. If the minister had investigated this matter as he should have done he would know very well and would be able to tell the committee that he cannot generate power there the year round. His statement in that respect will be found to be just as inaccurate as the statement that this sum would bring in annual revenue of $26,000 to the country.

I did not intend to make any comment upon this situation until I had reviewed this return, which relates more particularly to it, but quite apart from the return I do think this house is entitled to a very frank statement from the minister showing every dollar that has been spent on that property since it was purchased a year ago, together with a complete estimate of what it is expected will be spent during succeeding years, also giving the proposed development of the property and the cost of such development. I would like to know also if the minister has had this power question investigated by an expert and a report made as to its value. All we have at present are some very general and irresponsible statements which have been made to this committee with regard to the value of this water-power. What could be more irresponsible than the statement made by the minister a year ago that this power was worth $200,000 and could be operated so as to bring a revenue of $26,000 annually to this country? I think we are entitled to a detailed and very frank statement of just what has been spent in the development of the property, what is expected to be spent, what the minister proposes to do with the water-power, and so on. I think we are entitled to know how he justifies that expenditure, and we should know if any engineers in Canada will certify that the water-power is capable of economical development.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to give my hon. friend all the information starting with the return he has already received and bringing it right up to date, showing every dollar that has been expended on that property since it was purchased. I cannot add anything to what I have already said in regard to the manner and time in which the power generated there is to be utilized. Neither can I make any definite statement with regard to what is to be done in the future, because that is more or less problematical, but I shall be very glad to explain what is to be done with each vote as it comes along. Of course my hon. friend is entitled to detailed information in each case, and I shall be pleased to furnish it.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In connection with this item for the national gallery I would like to know under what system these purchases of pictures and other works of art are made. Are they purchased by the board of directors?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, it would be much better if we could get some order; I cannot hear what the hon. gentleman is asking.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): Order.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was asking the minister under what system these paintings and other works of art are purchased, and on whose advice.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The purchases are made by the trustees of the national gallery. There is an amount of $85,000 in the estimates which, as my hon. friend knows, is part of the general vote for the national gallery, and with that sum of mony the trustees purchase these works of art. I do not know whether or not my hon. friend wants the personnel of that board.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am not particularly concerned with that, but I should like to know whether the members of the board are competent to judge of the merits of the works of art or if they have technical advisers who assist them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are gentlemen who are supposed to be competent to judge in these matters, and that is the reason they are appointed. I may say that these gentlemen are sufficiently interested in art to give their services entirely free; only their actual disbursements are paid by the government. One member of the board is a gentleman living in Regina who has a very fine gallery of his own; he is quite an authority on matters of that kind. Another member resides in Ottawa and he also is supposed to be one of the best authorities in Canada. Another member of the board is a very eminent, well known gentleman, whose name I will not mention since I have mentioned no others. There are five members altogether.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is quite satisfactory as far as it goes; the members of the board are to be highly commended for their work and we owe them a debt of gratitude for giving their services in this way. However, I had a reason for asking these questions, and it is this: It has been drawn to my attention from time to time and from different parts of the country by artists and sculptors—and I may say at once that I do not consider myself a judge of these matters—that the purchases are not made on a nation-wide basis, but that there are one or two definite schools of art and a certain number of individual artists and sculptors from whom practically all the purchases are made. As to that of course I cannot speak from my own knowledge, but this suggestion has been made by gentlemen who are themselves artists and who feel that the system under which the purchases are made is not impartial and nation-wide but is confined to certain classes of art and certain small, select cliques of men. If that be the case I do not think the gallery is serving its purpose, which I understand is to present for our view and examination and for the benefit of those from other countries a fairly typical and representative collection of the various phases of art in this country in order to show just how we are advancing in these cultural ideas. I should like very much to have some comment by the minister with regard to this matter, because these gentlemen at least were very serious, and if their allegations are true, as I have said, I would not consider that the gallery is fulfilling its purpose.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In reply to the hon. member for Red Deer, I would say that three or four years ago there seemed to be some difference of opinion which developed rather acutely with regard to whether or not the various schools of art were receiving the same amount of attention from the trustees. I think that matter has adjusted itself quite satisfactorily because I do not think there has been a single complaint from any of the schools during the past two years. I do not make that statement positively, but I do know that there has not been any trouble of any account and everything seems to be going along quite harmoniously. I agree with the hon. member when he says that the object of the gallery would not be served unless the different types of art were being equitably dealt with. I doubt very much if it is possible to get a body of men together who will give as much time and care to this work as do the present body of trustees.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The representations which have been made to me by different individuals were made within the last eight months. In order to satisfy myself and others who are interested, I had purposed asking for a list of the purchases and the names of the artists in order to ascertain whether or not there was any ground for the criticisms which had been made.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The list of purchases is not a very long one and I shall be very glad to furnish the hon. member with a copy of it.

Mr. GEARY: It would appear in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Perhaps this matter is not looked upon as being very important.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh yes, it is.

Mr. McGIBBON: Apparently most of us on this side of the house have got to the point where we have to take the crumbs from the rich man's table. The member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) asked a very specific question of the Minister of Public Works and we would like to have an answer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have answered the question.

Mr. McGIBBON: I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What was the question?

Mr. CLARK: I thought the minister heard the question. What the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) is referring to is the fact that the answer was not complete. The minister stated that he would be very glad to bring down a return showing the expenditures made upon the New Edinburgh mill up to date. I think the hon. member desires a statement as to the plans for the utilization of the water-powers and the plans for the utilization of the buildings which are now on the property but which are unoccupied, and a statement as to the construction of new buildings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not know whether the hon. member for Muskoka was in the house when I made my answer, but I shall be very glad to make it again.

Mr. McGIBBON: I heard all that the minister said.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is all I have to say.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, although the item is passed and I may be out of order to a certain extent—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): Now that the hon. member calls my attention to the fact that he is out of order I might mention that I was waiting for some hon. member to do so. Under the circumstances I must rule that the hon. member is out of order, although he may proceed with the consent of the committee.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The item under discussion concerns the National Gallery of Canada, and I was going to ask the Minister of Public Works if it was his intention to put in that gallery the picture which I hold in my hand. It is really a scientific work and he should have this picture of the New Edinburgh mills framed and put in the National Gallery of Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: Put it in the archives.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This picture might be inserted in the National Gallery of Canada—

Mr. DUNNING: "Inserted" is a good word.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It certainly would not be out of place, although it is rather hard to find the water-powers estimated to be worth about $200,000. If the minister would mark that particular item on this picture before it is framed it would give the people of Canada some idea of its value. A picture of the Plaza building, which the minister evidently prizes so much, might be put in the gallery also.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the hon. member's question is a fair one, and I can assure him it will receive the most careful consideration. There are many different schools of art in this country to-day and I will submit his picture to the trusteees of the national gallery and tell them that the recommendation has come from a gentleman for whose recommendations I have the highest possible regard.

Mr. McGIBBON: As the minister has made such a brilliant suggestion—I notice that the brilliancy has come almost entirely from this side of the house—will he tell us what he has to offer from his own side?

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, I have a question to ask with regard to the gallery—

An hon. MEMBER: Which gallery?

Mr. HEAPS: The national gallery. There is a splendid selection of works in that gallery, but I think it should be made possible for the people to have entrance at fairly reasonable hours. At present the gallery is closed at five o'clock in the afternoon and during the daytime hardly a person enters the building. Anyone coming to the city, or anyone residing in the city has no opportunity of getting into the gallery before it closes, and I suggest to the minister that it be allowed to remain open until eight or nine o'clock in the evening. I hope he will pass this suggestion on to the proper authorities.

Mr. MALONEY: Will the minister—

Mr. HEAPS: Could I have an answer from the minister?

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the hon. member will permit me, perhaps I should answer the other question first. At the present time the national gallery is open every day from nine to five, including Saturdays, except legal holidays. In order to allow freedom for putting up exhibits, necessary cleaning and so forth, local visitors, who can visit the gallery practically at any time without much inconvenience are not usually admitted before ten o'clock, but this rule is always relaxed in the case of out-of-town visitors who may be unable to attend at the regular hours. The national gallery is also open on every holiday in the year except Christmas Day from ten to five p.m. The point my hon. friend raises was brought up, I do not know whether by himself or some other hon. member, a year or two years ago. There has been very little complaint that the gallery is not open long enough during the day. As the hon. member will understand, the total amount allowed for salaries, for running the gallery, is somewhat limited, and it is felt that the present hours fairly meet the requirements of the case. You have to be reasonable with the people in charge of the gallery, and at the same time try to place at the disposal of the visiting public at reasonable hours what is to be seen there. I think the matter is working out fairly well.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think it is working out fairly well, because on one or two visits I have made to the gallery, the only people I saw there were the attendants and policemen. There was hardly anyone else there because the hours are unsuitable for the average person who wants to visit an institution of that character. Unless the people visit the gallery it loses the purpose for which it was created, and consequently I think, without any hardship, the minister might try new hours. I do not think the average person wants to visit the gallery at nine or ten o'clock in the morning. The most suitable time is in the evening, and if there is no particular difficulty in the way of employing a few additional people in order that the gallery may be open longer hours, I would like to have the hours run from twelve noon until eight o'clock in the evening. The minister might try that anyway and see whether more people will visit the gallery than is the case at the present time. I do not see the good of having all these beautiful works of art there in such numbers and the place almost deserted. The money is more or less wasted unless the place is patronized by a large number of people, either from Ottawa or from the Dominion generally.

Mr. MALONEY: Does the destruction of the city hall come within the scope of the capital city beautification scheme launched by the government? If so, when does the minister propose to commence the destruction of that building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it has been explained here before that that is part of the general scheme. It does not come under this department.

Mr. SPENCER: Under whose department does it come?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend knows the bill that was passed a year or two ago appointed the federal district commission which has charge of the arrangement.

Mr. SPENCER: But who answers in the house for the federal district commission?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is the Minister of Finance. I think he is responsible for the grant.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the Minister of Public Works be good enough to tell the committee the qualifications for a picture being placed in the national gallery, and whether the picture of the present Minister of Public Works and his confreres will be placed there?

Mr. CLARK: Some years ago there were in the national gallery very fine portraits, I think by Orpen, of General Lord Byng, General Sir Arthur Currie, Major General Lipsett, former commander of the Third Canadian Division, who was killed in action in the service of his country, and others, that were ornaments in that gallery. Have they been removed with the other war pictures that formerly hung in the gallery?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not in a position to give my hon. friend an answer to that question.

Mr. CLARK: Is any member of this government on the national gallery committee?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. CLARK: The hon. member for Argenteuil has quite frequently drawn to the attention of the Prime Minister the question of the disposition of the war pictures. I am satisfied from the answers given by the Prime Minister that the portraits of Lord Byng, former commander of the Canadian corps, former commander of the Third Army, and former Governor General of Canada; of Sir Arthur Currie, the last commander of the Canadian corps, and of Major General Lipsett, who, as I say, died fighting in the service of his country, now rest in some basement of this city. Before this vote is passed, I should like to know whether or not I am correct in my assumption.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did my hon. friend say that they were at one time in the national gallery?

Mr. CLARK: Yes, and I have searched since on several occasions to see whether they were still hanging there, I could not find them, and I assume, as the Prime Minister said, that they have been buried in some basement in the city.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the pictures to which the Prime Minister referred were the war memorial pictures. I do not think they include portraits of these gentlemen. It is of no use my attempting to tell my hon. friend something that I cannot tell him, but I am not aware of any portraits of that kind having been removed from the national gallery. I shall be glad to make inquiries.

Mr. CLARK: I would suggest that this particular item stand until the minister secures that information. I consider it of vital importance to this particular vote. I should like to know what we are voting the money for. If pictures of that kind cannot find a place in the national gallery, I am opposed to this vote and I should like to have an opportunity of discussing it in the light of that information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend wants to be fair and I tell him that I will obtain the information and give it to him. If he is disposed to hold up the item until that information is given, I cannot prevent him from doing so, but I think that ought to meet the requirements of the case. I will make inquiries and furnish my hon. friend with the information.

Mr. CLARK: In justice to the minister himself, the vote should stand, because the suggestion that I have made is, in my opinion, a very serious reflection upon the government, and if my assumption is incorrect, I certainly do not want to make that reflection. I feel, however, that I am justified in making that assumption from the remarks that have been made by the Prime Minister himself on several occasions. I have noted them every time they were made, and I have thought of these pictures. I have gone to the gallery and made a search to see whether I could find them. I have asked the attendants if they are there and they tell me they are not. I may have missed them, and I want to be sure. If I am correct in my assumption, I seriously wish to debate this item before it is passed.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not think we can allow the present minister, like the others, to sit quietly in a kind of philosophical way and let these items go through. In the last few days we had before us the Minister of Immigration who knew practically nothing about his department. The Minister of Pensions and National Health knew practically nothing about his department, and to-night the Minister of Public Works, as item after item is called, practically says that he can give us no information. I for one, therefore, protest against any item going through on which we cannot get any information. Like the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard I have been in the national gallery three or four times in the last few weeks, and I say that these pictures are not there, and we can hold the government responsible for their not being there. I can conceive that this government has not any particular warmth of imagination for the war heroes of this country. Look over the ranks of the cabinet ministers and their followers and you can see that, but we on this side have a little different conception of what our duties are and what they should be.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not like the publicans and sinners on the other side, said the Pharisee.

Mr. McGIBBON: These portraits should be given a proper place in the national life of this country, and I for one purpose to see that done. If the minister has no information to give us, then so far as I am concerned this item will stand until we get the information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to a portion of the remarks of my hon. friend I do not propose to attempt to reply.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is your duty to reply.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is no more my duty to reply, I submit, Mr. Chairman. than it was his duty or his privilege to make the remarks that he did. He did not know what he was talking about or he would not have done so. As far as the items in this vote are concerned, I think I have all the details than can be provided. If there are any details in connection with these items which hon. gentlemen want, and which we have not here, I shall be glad to furnish them. If my hon. friends feel that the time of the house can be better spent in discussing these items further, I have no objection.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This matter may not be of interest to more than half a dozen or so of us, but there are some of us who are interested in this question. If we let this item pass without getting the information we have no good reason later for discussing this question of the disposal of the portraits painted by a distinguished English artist named Orpen. For that reason I do not think it is unfair to ask that the item stand over until the information is given, and when the information is given the item will pass at once. I for one would be pleased if the minister would let this item stand, and between now and to-morrow he could ascertain where these portraits are. If they are in the building, then all discussion is ended.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to meet my hon. friend because while he may think that I think he is unreasonable, I do not. I have known him a long time and I have never found him unreasonable. I want to meet his wishes. We will have supplementary estimates to consider later, and there will be abundant opportunity at that time to discuss this matter on any item that my hon. friend chooses, and in the meantime I shall be very glad to furnish him with the information. I hope that that will meet his views.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would like to accept that but I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that some hon. members who are interested in a particular question cannot always be in the house when that question comes up. There were one or two items that I wanted to discuss but they went through to-day and I had no opportunity to discuss them. I am sure that there will be no delay if this item stands; I believe it will save time. Will the minister say that when the item is called again he will see that those interested in it will be in their places to discuss it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will undertake to hold some item until my hon. friend and his friends are in.

Mr. McGIBBON: That may suit my hon. friend from Kingston City, but not me. This item is going to stand until we get the information or the minister will have to force it through the house with the majority behind him.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. McGIBBON: I move, Mr. Chairman, that this item be struck out.

Mr. CLARK: Included in this vote is a number of other items, one for a national monument on Connaught Place, in regard to which I would like to ask some questions. I think I am correct in saying that the minister stated to me quite clearly that this item for the national gallery might stand. I accepted his word and stopped all further observations I had to make on the subject. If this item is allowed to stand we can go on to the next one.

Mr. CAHILL: And hunt up the pictures in the meantime.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is not in order. He cannot move to strike out an item, but only to reduce it.

Mr. CLARK: We want to debate this particular item, not some other item. If I am justified in drawing the conclusions I have drawn, I want to vote against this item, but if I am wrong I will hold up both hands for it. Therefore I think I am justified in asking that the item stand. The minister was perfectly clear in his statement when he said that the item might stand until he secured the information so that we might have a vote on it. Here is a vote of $130,000. We desire certain information which can be furnished by the minister. Some of us at least may want to vote against this item. I certainly want to vote against it, but if I am wrong in the inference I have drawn from the remarks of the Prime Minister I want to vote for the item. There are several other members of the committee in exactly the same position. We are entitled as members of parliament to the privilege of not only expressing ourselves but of standing up and voting on any money item that may appear in the estimates. We cannot pass an intelligent vote on this item unless the minister furnishes us with the information.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. CLARK: As far as I am concerned I want that information before voting on the item.

Mr. McGIBBON: There is no possible chance of carrying this item to-night. The minister sits there and practically ignores this side of the house. He cannot do that; he cannot conduct himself in that way. When we ask him for information we expect a reply.

The CHAIRMAN: When the debate ceases it is the duty of the Chair to put the question.

Mr. McGIBBON: The debate has not ceased yet.

Mr. CLARK: We are asking the minister for a statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Would it not be advisable to let this item stand until the minister can give the information?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will say that he thinks the attitude of his friends is reasonable I will be perfectly willing to let it stand.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I object to that. My leader is not going to say whether my attitude is reasonable or not. I am going to be the judge of my own attitude; I am responsible for my conduct in this house. If the minister is not prepared to answer the question we will go on to another item and return to this later. There are two items before this on which I would like to get information. The first is "operation and maintenance of inspection boats". What does that refer to?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required for the maintenance and operation of the following inspection boats:

Wauketa (Toronto) part season, $3,000.
Walrondo (Victoria) part season, $5,850.
Marion (Nelson) new hull, $6,000.
D.W.P. (Charlottetown), $2,000.
Sachem (Fort William), $2,500.
Contingencies, $650.—Total, $20,000.

These boats are used by the district engineers in inspecting works in the different districts, and are a necessity for the proper investigation and examination of the various engineering works throughout the country.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are any of these boats on the St. Lawrence?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would it not be wise if you had one there instead of paying $75 a day for an inspection boat, which is really just a small botor boat? I am speaking of the one used last summer on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend will find, if he looks into the cost of maintaining a boat and the cost of hiring one for temporary work, that in the long run, for the work which has to be done on the St. Lawrence, it is cheaper to hire.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Seventy-five dollars a day would soon eat up this estimate.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, if you had days enough.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The next item is "maintenance and operation of water storage dams on Ottawa river and tributaries, surveys in connection therewith, and settlement of land damages". What are these storage dams?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Timiskaming dam and Quinze dam.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the purpose of these storage dams?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: The object of these dams and sluiceways on the Ottawa river and its tributaries is to store the spring floods and augment the low water flow, thus equalizing the runoff of the Ottawa valley throughout the year.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister tell us what the object of that is?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have just given my friend the object.

Mr. McGIBBON: I beg your pardon. The minister has not given me the object. I think, Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to an answer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am sorry if my hon. friend did not hear me. I stated that the object is to store the spring floods and augment the low water flow thus equalizing the run-off of the Ottawa valley throughout the year.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not an answer to my question. I asked the minister what that was for. I hope he comprehends the question now. I am entitled to an answer to that question.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I do not think the minister should turn this matter into something of a farce. What is the purpose of equalizing the flow? That is the question, and it is very plain. The minister says that is was done to equalize the flow. Who is benefiting by it? Why is it sought to equalize the flow?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The object of equalizing the flow as my friend, I would have thought, would consider, is to have it higher at low water and lower at high water.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I think I am entitled to know why it is better to have it higher at low water and lower at high water. Who benefits from it? Any of your friends?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, this is a system that has not originated in recent years, as my hon. friend will probably understand. For instance, it is used for various purposes—in the floating of logs at low water. It is sometimes very difficult, if the flow is not controlled, to have water enough for the floating of the logs.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is that a Dominion obligation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, it has been assumed.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister knows that it is not.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My friend knows more about it than the minister.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think I do.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not going to get into an argument with my hon. friend.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think we are entitled to an answer to this question. Equalizing the flow means one of two things. The minister has mentioned one of them, that is, getting enough water for the floating of logs, and the other is electrical power. Who is going to benefit by it? That is what we want to know.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course my hon. friend will know with regard to the logs that the man who is floating the logs will benefit.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who is he?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The lumbermen further up the river.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who are they, friends of the government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: A number of them are not as good friends as I would like to have them, but I am in hopes that they are getting more friendly all the time.

Mr. McGIBBON: What electrical power is there behind it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not able to say to my hon. friend.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is the same old story. Minister after minister in the government knows nothing about his department. We have had the Minister of Immigration, the Minister of Health and Pensions, and now the Minister of Public Works. Later on we will have the Minister of Agriculture, and probably some more, and when we ask for information they can tell us nothing about their own departments. I make this statement without fear of successful contradiction: this is done for one of two reasons, either to help lumbermen who have logs to float down this river, or help to develop electrical power. What right has this government to do that? That is what I want the minister to answer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am sorry my hon. friend does not think I am trying to give him information.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are not trying.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am doing the very best I can.

Mr. McGIBBON: Well, it is a mighty poor effort.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But of course I have a difficult subject. My hon. friend surely realizes that the man who is floating logs down is aided, when the water is very low, by having that water dammed, if it is too low.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it your business to dam it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend will subside for a moment, because he is not adding very much to the discussion.

Mr. McGIBBON: Neither are you.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Take it in regard to power, the very thing my hon. friend was speaking of a few moments ago—power at the mills. If your flow were uniform the whole year round you would be able to utilize it to the full extent. I should have thought that was an elementary proposition.

Mr. FRASER: I am very much interested in the remarks of the minister in regard to lumbermen floating logs down the river and the government providing a sum, which I presume is annual, for the maintenance of these dams. But I would ask this question: Do the lumbermen pay for that service? Is there a charge for the use of the water which is provided and for which we pay $20,000 a year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is one of the aids to navigation; I know of no concern that pays for it. It is a matter of the control of navigable waters.

Mr. FRASER: There is no charge?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. If my hon. friend is really interested I can give some examples of just what was done, and explain why it was done. Take the condition at North Bay, where the Nipissing enters into French River. At one time it was complained by some of the lumbermen who were operating along the Nipissing that at very low water they were unable to float their logs by reason of the insufficiency of flow. What is called a sluiceway was made at the point where the Nipissing enters the French river, and that was intended to serve two purposes. First of all, by putting in these stop logs, they raised the height of the water in low water and provided enough water for floating the logs, and when the stop logs were taken out the effect was to widen the point which before was narrow, and that gave greater scope for the water to get away. That is one example of the control of dams.

Mr. FRASER: I am very much obliged for the explanation, but my trouble is an entirely different one. On behalf of some lumbermen on the Fraser river I applied this winter for them to be allowed to put up, at their own expense, certain works on the Fraser river to catch their logs, and that permission was absolutely refused them. Now I find that the man on the Ottawa rriver not only has the privilege of doing that but you pay for it. What is the reason for this difference in treatment as between the lumbermen of Ontario and those of British Columbia? That is my point. Those lumbermen were absolutely refused permission to do what they wanted. All they wanted was leave to erect these works, and to erect them at their own expense, and that was denied them by the department. And it has been denied them for the last three or four years. I submitted the matter to the department in detail this year and was denied that permission. What is the explanation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not know the case to which my hon. friend refers particularly.

Mr. FRASER: I can give it to you.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The control of navigation is to a certain extent vested in this department under the Navigable Waters Act, and if the engineers report that the work proposed is likely to interfere with navigation then permission is refused.

Mr. FRASER: The minister cannot get away with that; there is absolutely no navigation on the river. I grant you it is a navigable river and has been navigated, but at the present time and for the last ten years there have been no boats operating on the river nor are there likely to be any.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What was the purpose of the permit?

Mr. FRASER: For catching their logs.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does not my hon. friend know that a river on which logs are floated is navigable?

Mr. FRASER: I do not know the legal definition of a navigable river, but I do know that this river has been navigated. As a matter of fact I have navigated it myself and I know that it can be navigated again. But I should be glad to know why there has been this difference between the treatment meted out to the lumbermen in British Columbia and that which has been given the lumbermen in Ontario. The lumbermen in British Columbia are merely asking for permission to erect certain works. It does not seem fair to me.

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: Our treatment is the same to everyone; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. FRASER: Well I can inform the minister that he has never spent one dollar for the lumbermen in British Columbia, while evidently he is spending it in Ontario and making it an annual charge on the people of the Dominion.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will my hon. friend say that this government has not spent millions in the Fraser river to allow the lumbermen to get their lumber out? I think the Fraser river is an unfortunate example.

Mr. FRASER: The Fraser river, it is true, is 1,200 miles long, but I am talking about the stretch from Prince George up to mile 53. That is the part to which I have reference, and at the present time we have in that locality 25 operating saw-mills, all in the same difficulty. They canont get permission from the government to erect the necessary works to hold their logs properly.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would call the minister's attention to the fact that the lumbermen of Muskoka have to erect their own dams for floating their own logs. Why should they have to do this when the government of Canada gives assistance to lumbermen in the Ottawa river and pays the expenses? Why this discrimination?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. McGIBBON: It will not be carried until the minister has the decency to answer the question.

Mr. DUNNING: Withdraw.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I hope my hon. friend will not persist in that sort of language.

Mr. McGIBBON: I hope the minister will not persist in his attitude towards questions from this side of the house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Something depends, of course, on the question. I should say that the people of Muskoka are getting exactly the same treatment as the people in the rest of the country—

Mr. McGIBBON: Getting nothing.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —with regard to these dams.

Mr. McGIBBON: They are getting nothing at all, but here you have a vote for the lumbermen on the Ottawa river. What does the minister mean by saying they are all getting the same treatment?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Any question I put to the minister is quite sincere, and I expect a plain answer. Apparently none of this money was spent last year. Is that correct?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, $26,552 was spent to March 31.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Then why is there a revote of $50,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a practice which was more in vogue years ago than is the case at present. We are cutting it down from $100,000 to $50,000 this year in view of the fact that we spent only $26,552 last year.

Mr. RYCKMAN: When I asked the minister why this service was given he said it was to equalize the water flow; when I asked for what purpose that was done he said it was to help the lumbermen operating on the Ottawa river which, of course, is a navigable stream. The minister knows very well that in Ontario we have the Rivers and Streams Act, and none of the lumbermen of whom I know are leaning on the federal government. I think a short statement should be made by the minister explaining why the government is spending this money on the Ottawa river for the benefit of those who float logs on that river. That is a reasonable question, and I think we should have an answer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is for the control of the river for the floating of logs, for power control and for general navigation; it is not limited to any one thing. If I give the details of just what it is intended to include under this vote perhaps my hon. friend will get the point I am trying to make clear. For instance, in connection with the Timiskaming dam the sum of $8,800 is set apart; of that amount $4,968 is for maintenance and $3,834 for operation. For the Quinze dam $9,000 is set aside, $7,000 for maintenance and $2,000 for operation. These dams are operated by labourers who are required to work the various sluices and gates which are necessary.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am not interested in those details, since I know what the item covers, but I would like to know from the minister if any service of this kind is rendered by the Dominion government to a private interest in any other place in Canada, and if so where that service is rendered.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is the case I have already given, the control dam at the outlet of the Nipissing into the French river.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is that under this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is under the collection of revenue item.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The Nipissing development is for hydro-electric purposes. Will the minister be good enough to tell the committee if any service similar to this on the Ottawa river is rendered in any part of Canada?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are storage dams on the St. Maurice in the province of Quebec. I can only refer to those we have noted here.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The vote for the St. Maurice is not under this item, surely?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no vote in these estimates in regard to the St. Maurice development.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Then will the minister say it is fair to state that in no other part of Canada is a similar service rendered under vote 149?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have already given the case of the French river; I cannot recall any others, and with that one exception I think my hon. friend's statement is quite accurate.

Mr. FRASER: In view of that statement I would ask the minister to look very carefully into the situation I mentioned a short time ago. I know these people in British Columbia are subjected to a good deal of annoyance, and I also know that is a large, important proposition.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will my hon. friend give me the name of the stream?

Mr. FRASER: The Fraser river.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That covers a lot of territory.

Mr. FRASER: I will give the name of one of the mills which has been very insistent in submitting the matter to me. I refer to the Sinclair Spruce Mills, whose post office address is Sinclair Mills, British Columbia.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to look into the question.

Mr. FRASER: That is only one of the mills affected; there are half a dozen others. The Sinclair Mills have studied the situation thoroughly; they have a large file in that connection which I have perused and they can explain the situation to the minister much more clearly than any of the other companies.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I began with a very serious question, and perhaps all this would not have been necessary if the minister had been a little more generous with his information and had told us that this is a very old vote and that it is intended that it shall be gradually decreased. However, I want the minister to consider whether or not the expenditure on these storage dams is not being made for other purposes than simply the floating of logs. The minister knows very well that water-powers are being developed now both above and below this point, and that this expenditure may be of benefit to the power development higher up. Has the minister any information in that connection? I also think the minister will find that the situation now is somewhat different from what it has been in the past; in some cases this storage development is interfering with those who are interested in the upper waters. Has the minister any data as to whether this work is of benefit to others than the lumbermen?

Mr. ELLIOTT: These dams were built many years ago and are fairly permanent structures. I do not think there is any prospect in the reasonably near future of abandoning these projects.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is this storage of water of any benefit to the power companies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It benefits all the power companies who are interested in a steady flow of water.

Mr. McGIBBON: Now we are beginning to get a little more light. We discover that the Dominion treasury is paying out money to help the lumber and power companies, presumably friends of the government. What lumber companies float logs down this river?

An hon. MEMBER: The J. R. Booth Company.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The E. B. Eddy Company, the Booth Company, the International Paper Company and the Gordon Company.

An hon. MEMBER: Senator Gordon.

Mr. ELLIOTT: For my hon. friend's information, I would advise him that the work was done about 1914.

Mr. McGIBBON: As the government has been so generous in this instance, will it extend that generosity to the people and the lumber companies in my riding? They are building their own dams and running their own lumber mills, and I was wondering whether these other companies are in the preferred class.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the circumstances are similar to those under which this grant was made, they will reecive consideration from the department.

Mr. McGIBBON: On what grounds does the minister give assistance to these private companies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Every case has to be settled on its own merits. I went over the file in connection with the Gordon Company not so long ago. They complained that during the low water periods they could not operate their mill. If there are any companies in the hon. member's territory which would come within this category, they will be treated in the same way.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would hate to think that the minister is as simple as his explanation would lead one to believe he is.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister dispenses money from the public treasury in order to aid private companies, and I have asked him his authority for doing that; I am not concerned with his excuses.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It is done through money voted in the estimates.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. McGIBBON: I can talk just as long as the minister can, and he will not get this item through before eleven o'clock if he is going to take this attitude. I am asking upon what grounds he takes money out of the public treasury in order to help private interests. I am not concerned with the requests which these private companies make to him; I am asking him what justification he has for spending the money of the taxpayers of Canada in order to help private companies.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It comes largely under the heading of navigation, and the various phases of it are merely incidental. These things were started by my hon. friend's friends years ago, and are being continued by the present government.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Can the minister tell us what settlement has been made as to land damages?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would the hon. member be good enough to speak a little louder? I cannot hear him.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What settlement has been made as to land damages; what is the amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is impossible to tell in advance what the damages are going to be; that would include any land damage caused by the works erected by the government, through flooding or otherwise.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What has been paid in the past?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are no claims under consideration at the present time, but an amount must be provided to take care of any claims which may arise.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The land in this neighbourhood will be land belonging to these companies; I do not see how there can be much damage done in doing that work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The item of $4,000 is being set aside to pay damages which may arise through the flooding of lands by the storage dams. At the present time there are no claims under consideration. However, claims may arise during the year and it is to provide for that contingency that the sum of $4,000 is required. In 1928-29 one claim of $100 was paid to Odilon Champoux. That is the only claim which was paid during 1928-29.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister be good enough to answer the question I asked a while ago? I am going to keep on asking it until I receive an answer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Which question?

Mr. McGIBBON: I asked the minister what justification he had for spending money from the public treasury of Canada in order to help private companies.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Navigation.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not my question.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is my answer.

Mr. McGIBBON: Navigation does not concern private interests. I am asking the minister on what grounds he justifies the expenditure of the money of the taxpayers for the benefit of private interests.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I regret that I have not made it clear to my hon. friend. It is done for the purpose of assisting not only public but private interests. All the people who use the waters are assisted by anything which is done to assist navigation.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister has changed his attitude; when I asked the question he said it was done for the purpose of floating logs.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is one phase of navigation.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are these streams navigable?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is getting into the legal question as to what is a navigable stream. I think the best ruling on the subject is that any stream which will float logs is a navigable stream.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are there any boats plying up and down these streams?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are tug boats and some passenger boats on the Ottawa river.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister give us the names?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I cannot do that.

Mr. McGIBBON: I submit that we are entitled to the information. The minister is asking parliament to grant him a certain sum of money and we have a right to know what he wants it for.

Mr. DUNNING: Just as a matter of mercy to the rest of us, as it is extremely hot, would the hon. member say whether he was really serious in stating that he did not intend to allow the item to pass to-night? Because, if so, there is no use in the rest of us staying here. A quorum would be sufficient.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister should ask the Minister of Public Works whether the matter is serious or not.

Mr. MANION: Let us adjourn. It has been a long, hot day.

Mr. CLARK: If the Minister of Railways wants an answer to his question, may I say that I do not think the item will pass to-night. The matter is very serious. We asked as politely as I think any minister could be asked, that one particular item be allowed to stand for what are, I am sure, most excellent reasons. I understood the Minister of Public Works to tell me that the item would stand. I consider this is a vital appropriation and I think the reasons I advanced were quite sufficient to justify the Minister of Public Works in saying: Yes, this particular item may stand; I shall be glad to let it stand and we can discuss it further in the light of the information I shall bring down. The minister apparently thought he could bulldoze the members on this side and push the item through. That is the inference I have drawn. I certainly have made up my mind in regard to the matter, although so far I have not had very much to say. Others have had plenty to say, and consequently I have not found it necessary to say much; but I can assure the Minister of Railways that I have enough to say to keep this item under discussion until eleven o'clock unless the Minister of Public Works will grant what, I think, is a very fair request. I do not think we were trying to take any advantage of the Minister of Public Works. I will outline the matter again if the Minister of Railways was not present.

Mr. DUNNING: I heard what the hon. member said. I have been here all the time waiting for some business to be done.

Mr. CLARK: Does the Minister of Railways not think it is a matter of interest to the Canadian people to know what disposition has been made of the portraits of two former commanders of the Canadian army, a former governor general and a former commander of a Canadian division who was killed in action in defence of his country? If he does not think that is of interest to the house and to the people of Canada, I am of an entirely different opinion.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. CLARK: No, but what am I to infer from the minister's statement that he was waiting for some business to be done? I am waiting just as patiently as he is. I do not think the Minister of Railways will say that I am an obstructionist. I am not attempting to obstruct the business of the country, but I can assure the minister whose estimates are now under discussion, that I am not going to be bulldozed. I am asking for information which is perfectly legitimate. I am asking for the whereabouts of three pictures that are of vital interest to the people, pictures which, if they belong to this country, should be given a place in the national gallery. All I want to know is where they are now and why they are there. In the light of that information I should like to discuss further this particular item relating to the national gallery. If it be found that those pictures do not belong to the national gallery, do not belong to the Dominion of Canada, the matter is settled so far as I am concerned. If they belong to the country and will be put in the national gallery, it is also settled. But I think we are entitled to the information as to where they are and what disposition is proposed to be made of them. It is a very simple matter to allow this particular item to stand over for a day. The minister does not have all his estimates through; he admits that he will have supplementaries, and this item can stand and be discussed with the supplementaries. At that time it will not take two minutes if he will just give us the information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I made the suggestion which, I thought, was a reasonable one, namely, that my hon. friend or any other hon. member should have the fullest opportunity of discussing the matter under the supplementary estimates which will be brought down very shortly. I had hoped he would see his way clear to agree to that proposal. I do not want to appear to be—well, I am not going to say as obstinate as some of us think some of our—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Opponents are.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —opponents are.

Mr. CLARK: It is the minister who is obstinate.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is not helping himself by a remark of that kind.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my suggestion is reasonable.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I pointed out to the minister that the question of these portraits was perhaps in a different position from that of any other item; that it was an item which affected us a little more than some others that we could discuss under some other subject, that, therefore, we did not care to bring up under a general item a discussion in regard to the portraits of our former commanders; that we preferred to have it under this item. The minister tried to bluff us on that. I went immediately to another question that is of interest to me as one born and brought up along the Ottawa river and knowing almost every foot of it. I know the reasons for these expenditures and I know there are now arising on the Ottawa river conditions which were not there a few years ago. The government of the day is proposing other matters in the way of power development, having arranged just lately for the Chats falls development. I felt that the time had come when, perhaps, the Department of Public Works would consider whether this work which we were doing in the way of benefiting the lumbering industry was not now going to the benefit of one or two other industries, and whether it was not time to consider the question of distribution of the expense. I know these facts. I have travelled the Ottawa river and I know the upper waters as well as the lower. I pointed out one or two things that are occurring and any question I asked was put with a special object, with the interest of the people of Canada at heart and not with the intention of blocking. I stopped when the minister said that he could not see our point of view, namely, that we did not care to discuss on the general item, the question of the portraits of our former commanding officers, and I went on to deal with the other matter. There was no attempt on my part to block the estimates.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I feel it necessary to say a word, because I have asked half a dozen or more questions. The minister has referred to the reasonableness of his suggestion and to the attitude taken with regard to the national gallery item. What has happened? These three paintings, the work of a most distinguished artist, who has painted a portrait of His Majesty the King, were hanging in the national gallery. They have been removed. The information was—and I was in the house and heard it—that they were in a cellar. The minister is asking for an appropriation of $130,000 for the national gallery. He could not get these three portraits for $30,000 of the $130,000. These portraits by a most distinguished artist are in a cellar, and yet the minister is asking us to-night to vote $130,000 to buy more pictures that cannot compare with the ones that were in the gallery and that have been removed. Who has the reasonable side of this? There is no doubt about it. We want to know where those pictures are. We take a pride in the portraits and in the artist, and we are not going to vote $130,000 without knowing where these valuable paintings are, and why they cannot be put in the gallery or some other suitable place. If there is anything unreasonable in that, then I am unreasonable, but I submit that I am not.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend was present when the explanation was made by the right hon. the Prime Minister as to the location of the pictures that are known as the war memorial pictures. I am not in a position to say whether the three that have been mentioned here to-night come within that category, but I shall be glad to obtain the information. I do not think hon. gentlemen who want to be reasonable will expect me to say offhand just what pictures are included in the national gallery and what in the war memorial collection. There is no question about it, we have not the accommodation at the present time for all the pictures the very fine group known as the war memorial collection, and they cannot be put on exhibition until accommodation has been provided by way of a new national gallery, which the government has not up to the present time seen fit to provide an appropriation for.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Why could not these three paintings be placed back in the national gallery? Why spend money to the large amount of $130,000 annually—and that is a large amount to some people—when here are three paintings by a distinguished artist that would grace that gallery and yet are not hung there.

Mr. MANION: We have been discussing this question all evening and I think it is a very reasonable request that the information should be given. The minister must see that we are not making any advance at all. It is twenty-five minutes to eleven; we will surely adjourn at eleven and we shall not have made any more progress on this vote by that time. It has been a long hot day and I still adhere to my opinion that the ventilation in this building is abominable. I suggest that the minister would be doing a favour to the whole house if he reported progress, to be followed by the adjournment of the house.

Mr. ROBB: I quite agree with my hon. friend that we will not make any progress on this item, but we will stay and listen to the discussion. We can stay here until eleven o'clock.

Mr. MANION: I am just as young as the Minister of Finance and I can stay here if he can.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the Minister of Public Works why a different situation should prevail on the Ottawa river from that prevailing in any other part of Canada?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say that under the same circumstances there is no different situation prevailing elsewhere. It is the same policy for every part.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is that altogether true? Is it not a fact that there are improvements on the French river, placed there by the Department of Public Works, which are at the present time said to be causing immense damage to the land and houses along lake Nipissing. It is also true that the government proposes to expend $25,000 to build a sluiceway in connection with a dam maintained by the Public Works department, and the province is being asked to put up a like amount for a dam owned and operated by this government.

Items stands.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways—Canadian Government Railways—to provide for additional car ferry and facilities for car ferry service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, $3,500,000.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. DUNNING: It will be remembered that one of the features of the report of the Duncan commission related to the necessity for improved ferry accommodation for Prince Edward Island. I need not go into the reasons therefor, because they have been discussed in the house on many occasions. Last year an amount was appropriated to start the work. In the meantime a careful investigation has been made with respect to the matter, so far as time and facilities would permit, by the Canadian National authorities on behalf of the department. There was a suggestion many years ago that money might be saved and better facilities afforded at lower annual charges if a tunnel were constructed between the mainland and the island. I thought it desirable to have the old reports in that connection looked up and checked by the engineers in the light of present conditions in order to see, facing as we were a considerable expenditure in any event, what were the economics of the tunnel suggestion. Another suggestion was that a causeway might be built across to the island from the mainland.

Mr. MANION: What is the distance?

Mr. DUNNING: The shortest distance across is nine miles. The result of the investigation during the year reveals that a tunnel would cost to-day in the neighbourhood of $40,000,000. Hon. gentlemen will understand that that is not a detailed estimate, because considerable engineering work would be necessary to determine the subaqueous conditions.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a Montreal terminal estimate.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is not nearly as great as that. With respect to the causeway, idea, which is held as sound by a great many people—

Mr. BENNETT: What is the difference between that and the tunnel?

Mr. DUNNING: The estimated difference is $6,000,000—$46,000,000 for the causeway and $40,000,000 for the tunnel—but no engineer will take the responsibility of stating that a causeway, when completed, would stand up and be an effective means of transportation between the island and the mainland.

Mr. BENNETT: What is meant by a causeway in this connection?

Mr. DUNNING: A breakwater structure with a road on top and adequate facilities here and there for the passage of boats to and fro. I do not think that we can regard that as a practical solution of the difficulty. I think the island members on both sides of the house will agree with me that at present we cannot contemplate either a tunnel or a causeway as a solution of the problem. At the same time the trade of the island has been growing very rapidly; it is becoming increasingly apparent that the present ferry accommodation is not sufficient, and if anything happens to the existing ferry then real difficulties of communication will present themselves. We have also investigated during the past year the type of equipment which would be most desirable and economical from the ferry standpoint, having regard not only to the vessel itself and what it will carry but the nature of the terminals now existing, and the changes which would have to be made in those terminals to accommodate the new ferry services.

Naturally, the people of the island desire the best and most dependable ferry service that can under all conditions be provided. It so happens that the existing ferry was not designed to take care of automobile traffic and automobiles crossing to the island at the present time must be loaded on flat cars and run on to the ferry and carried across in that manner—a very cumbersome method, and one which prevents the complete utilization of the ferry in the carriage of the ordinary commerce of the country. The result of the investigation has led us to the conclusion that it would be advisable to build a steam ferry larger than the present one, the dimensions being: length 310 feet, beam 59 feet, with 19 feet 6 inches of a draft. The cost of such a vessel would approximate two million dollars. Improvements to the existing pier at Tormentine, an auto roadway leading on to the ferry ramp, dredging, and so forth, is estimated to cost about $811,000. Improvements to existing pier at Port Borden on the island, auto roadway, ramp and dredging, approximately $592,000. A lay-up wharf, that is, an improvement to the existing lay-up wharf at Borden, and dredging, $192,000. It is proposed—and the members from the island agreed last year that it was desirable—that the new ferry should be an oil-burner because of the greater dependability and greater flexibility in ice conditions of oil-burning vessels. Oil storage pipe lines and equipment generally for oil storage at Port Borden would cost about $172,000. It is therefore estimated that the total cost of providing the new ferry and the necessary facilities at both terminals would be slightly less than $3,800,000.

Consideration was also given to the provision of a larger vessel of broader beam which would permit a type of design more effective under ice conditions, but the cost of such a vessel would be very much greater, as much more extensive alterations would require to be made at the terminals in order to accommodate a vessel of broader beam. And in addition the services by the larger vessel could not be provided for the island in the same length of time. The proposal now before the house involves the building of a 59 foot beam boat, 310 feet in length and the works that I have just described.

In conclusion I wish to say that a careful review of what it is possible to spend this year indicates that it will not be possible to spend the amount of the estimate now before the house, $3,500,000, and I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Finance to move that the item be reduced by one million dollars. The naval designer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries has been loaned to us for the preparation of preliminary plans of the boat. We expect to be able to call for tenders before very long, and have reasonable expectation of delivery within fifteen months thereafter. During that time we hope to have the necessary terminal works completed, and by accepting a 59 foot beam boat we hope to be able to provide the accommodation one or two years in advance of the time that would be required for the larger boat.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the width of the present boat?

Mr. DUNNING: The width of the present boat is seven feet less than the width now proposed.

Mr. MANION: I did not get the reason why the minister is reducing the item by one million dollars.

Mr. DUNNING: We will not spend it this year.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): How does the length of the new boat compare with that of the present one?

Mr. DUNNING: The present boat is 285 feet long, so that the new one would be 25 feet longer and 7 feet wider.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to criticize the item as it stands. In fact I think I am but voicing the sentiment of the people of Prince Edward Island when I express appreciation of the minister's act in making the provision which is now proposed. The only criticism one can offer is the delay which has occurred in the matter. It is more than a year since $1,000,000 was placed in the estimates for this purpose, and yet even now the plans are not completed. I can quite understand the minister's explanation of that to be that many representations were made by local bodies in Prince Edward Island asking for changes; yet I should like to impress upon him the great importance of putting forth every effort to get the boat delivered as early as possible in the year 1930. The heavy traffic in the fall, chiefly the movement of potatoes, commences in the latter part of September and is very heavy by the middle of October. The present boat has been driven to the extreme limit in attempting to take care of the traffic and has not been able to handle it adequately. There is the further feature which is of great importance, the danger of something happening to the present boat. Last winter a slight accident took place, and there was consternation all over the island when it was reported that one of the propellers of the boat had been broken off and that she would have to go to Halifax for repairs in the middle of the winter. An embargo was placed on all freight at a time when it was very important and desirable to move it, especially potatoes, and it is indeed lucky that in the fourteen or fifteen years that boat has been operating a more serious accident has not occurred.

The minister's explanation in regard to the whole matter has been very clear and explicit. With respect to the proposals for a tunnel or causeway, I am of the opinion, as the minister is, that under the existing conditions a car ferry service is as much as we can ask for, especially in view of the enormous amount of money which either a tunnel or a causeway would involve. It is very gratifying that all arrangements have been undertaken to provide particularly for automobile traffic, because, as the minister said, when the present boat was built there was a prohibition against automobiles on the island, and such a thing as carrying automobiles was not contemplated. My only reason for speaking at all of the present condition is to urge that all possible haste be made in the carrying out of the proposals, and that the boat be provided and put into service at the earliest possible date.

Mr. ROBB: I move that vote No. 93 be reduced by $1,000,000.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister tell me where the tenders are being called? Are they public tenders—I mean both Canadian and British? Where will the boat be built, in Canada or in Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: We have scarcely reached that point yet, but if there is a Canadian firm that has the facilities I should like to give it an opportunity.

Mr. MANION: Surely there must be some.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a very special type of construction. The existing boat was built in the old country, at Newcastle on Tyne, I believe. Certainly there will be public tenders, or at least tenders addressed to any concerns which might reasonably be expected to be able to supply the type desired.

Mr. MANION: Is it the intention when this boat is built to have the two kept on the service?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MANION: What revenue has been derived from the ferry as it has been running?

Mr. DUNNING: It cannot be segregated inasmuch as it is a part of the railway service. I can give information regarding trips of the ferry, if that will help. The trips per month in 1928 reached a higher average than for many years; I believe it was the highest average in the history of the ferry. There were 160 round trips per month in 1928. The number of passengers per annum is also increasing; in 1928 it was 73,000. The automobiles are increasing; the number reached the total, higher than ever before, of 7,416 in 1928.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is recommended in the Duncan report that a separate accounting be made of the ferry service, as distinct from the accounting for the Island railways. Has the minister considered that?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not remember a recommendation with respect to a separate accounting for the Island railways, but I do remember something of that sort in connection with the operation of the ferry. I suggest, however, that it would be very cumbersome and difficult. We are really meeting the intention by providing this ferry, not to be charged to the Canadian National Railways, but to the funds of the Dominion of Canada directly.

Mr. BENNETT: But not the operation.

Mr. DUNNING: No; its operation forms a part of the operation of the eastern lines and meets the intention of the Duncan report rather better than an elaborate accounting which would have very wide ramifications. For instance, I mentioned 73,000 passengers: a separate accounting would involve the separation of that portion of each passenger's fare which could be properly allocated to the ferry. And the same with freight, which is a through movement. Separate accounting would be unnecessarily cumbersome and would not be of advantage, whereas this method involves the assumption by the Dominion of the constitutional responsibility which belongs to the Dominion in providing the capital expenditure involved.

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister any idea whether the boat when completed will pay capital charge and operating expenses?

Mr. DUNNING: The annual cost of operation, including interest and depreciation on the scheme we are now proposing, would be $804,800. I cannot give accurate figures with regard to the revenue but am reasonably sure we cannot hope that the revenue would meet the cost of providing the service which is the carrying out of an obligation of confederation.

Mr. MANION: What is the fare across?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no separate fare; it is included in the railway fare.

Mr. FRASER: It is a free service?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I understand that the fare for a single crossing is 75 cents and the charge for automobiles $4. The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) is of considerable importance. The cost of operation certainly cannot be taken care of by passenger traffic, and under present methods of operating it increases the deficit on the railway line there. That, in turn, is charged to the eastern lines, and when railway matters are discussed the charge is always made—and it is a fact—that there is a loss on these lines. The loss would be minimized to a considerable extent if this ferry, which is a direct obligation of the Dominion and is not part of the railway service, could be taken out of the Railway department altogether in the matter of expenditures. In regard to the work done last year, I gathered from the statement made that about $220,000 was expended out of the $1,000,000 voted. Can the minister give us an idea as to what was done?

Mr. DUNNING: That does not appear to be on my file. If I can supply the information privately to my hon. friend I shall be glad to let him have the details.

Mr. MANION: One hon. member told me that he wanted certain details and I should be glad if the minister would report progress. It is eleven o'clock anyhow.

Mr. BENNETT: Is any part of the depreciation and fixed charges upon the investment which the minister mentioned a moment ago taken into consideration in determining the deficit in the operation of the eastern line?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 31, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

THE LATE MR. ROCH LANCTOT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, hon. members of this house learned yesterday afternoon, I am sure with sorrow, of the death at his home at St. Constant, Quebec, of Mr. Roch Lanctôt, member for Laprairie-Napierville. Mr. Lanctôt had been in ill health for some time past; indeed, he was unable to be present at all during this session of parliament and was absent during the latter part of the last session. His death therefore, was not unexpected. At the same time, I am sure it will bring a feeling of sadness to the hearts of all present to realize that we shall not again see within this chamber or about the corridors of parliament, his familiar figure.

Mr. Lanctôt was in his sixty-fourth year. In years of representation in parliament he was one of the oldest members. He came into the House of Commons after the general elections of 1904 and was again returned in the elections of 1908, 1911, 1917, 1921, 1925 and 1926, a continuous service, as a member of parliament, of some twenty-five years. During the whole of that time Mr. Lanctôt was very faithful in the discharge of his duties as a member, in attendance upon the sittings and work of the house and in representing in parliament the interests of his constituents and, in particular, the interests of the agricultural classes with which he was specially identified. It was characteristic of his concern for the people and their welfare that, in addition to being a member of parliament he should have continued to interest himself in municipal affairs. He was, at the time of his death, mayor of the parish in which he lived.

Mr. Lanctôt was a true son of the soil. He was born in the country; he came to Ottawa for his early education, but thereafter returned to the farm and devoted himself to rural pursuits. He was not only a son of the soil but a lover of the soil and was true to the soil. Had he lived in France he would have been spoken of as a peasant proprietor; had he lived in Great Britain he would have been referred to as one of the yeomen of the country, the class of men who in both these lands are the backbone of the nation, and who are known throughout the world as the salt of the earth. In Canada he brought to the rural life of our country what was best in the rural life of these older countries, with which through blood or birth he was associated. A true representation of the type of man of which Mr. Lanctôt was an outstanding example is given, it seems to me, by Gray, in his Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard:

> Some village Hampden, that, with dauntless breast,
> The little tyrant of his fields withstood,
> Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
> Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.

Mr. Lanctôt had many of the characteristics of a Hampden. He was a man of sturdy independence and of sterling integrity; one who would not submit to arbitrary measures; who was fearless and courageous; prepared to stand alone for a principle in which he believed. He had many of the qualities of a Milton. He possessed a deep religious conviction, a strong faith. He was a lover of nature and there was about him, in his love of the simple and beautiful things of life, in his broad human sympathies and great friendliness of heart, not a little of the poet and the philosopher. He had, too, many of the attributes of a Cromwell. He was one who had a hatred of caste and of class; he was a great believer in the commonwealth, the commonweal, and at all times and on all occasions he stood for the rights of the people. This is the man who has passed away from our midst.

Speaking more particularly of the party to which he belonged, may I say that we had in him one of the firmest of upholders of Liberal principles. He was an intimate friend and strong supporter of Sir Wilfrid Laurier during the time that Sir Wilfrid was the leader of the Liberal party. In the ten years that it has been my privilege to be in the leadership of the party, he accorded to me a like friendship and an equally loyal support. Personally I feel his death very deeply. I am sure that feeling is shared in equal measure by all who sit on this side of the house, and I believe it is felt in great measure by all members of parliament, irrespective of party.

May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to convey to his widow the sympathy of this house in her great bereavement. The house I am sure will feel sympathy for the constituency as well, the constituency which has lost a member who has represented it continuously and faithfully for so long a period of time. Perhaps nothing more worthy could be expressed of his name and his fame than to say he was as much respected and beloved by members in this house of parliament as he was honoured by the constituency which over a quarter of a century gave him an unbroken confidence.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I, on behalf of those who are associated with me to your left as well as on my own, express my great sympathy with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and his party in the loss they have sustained by the death of a beloved colleague? Mr. Lanctôt possessed those qualities that endeared him greatly to those with whom he was associated, and I can readily understand the reason for the moving sentences with which the Prime Minister expressed the sense of the loss sustained by him and his party in the passing of Mr. Lanctôt. It was my privilege to know Mr. Lanctôt for many years. I did not know him nearly so intimately as the Prime Minister and his colleagues did, but I knew enough of him to realize something of his sturdy character, sterling qualities and the devotion he gave to the service of his country. It may well be said that he was desirous at all times of adding to his store of knowledge. Perhaps some members of the house will recall a speech that he made on one occasion in which he indicated that he came here a young man desirous of learning and that he had learned much by his experience in this house.

He was a very devout man and a son of his church in the true sense. I think from a brief conversation I had with him that he would describe himself as a Canadian with all that it involves—a son of the soil who loved his native province with a devotion that was sometimes touching, one who loved the soil as only perhaps a Canadian can who is proud of his country, proud of its achievements, and looks forward to its future with great hope.

He was a man of real integrity of character, and his views were not easily disturbed once he had arrived at a conclusion. While my hon. friend the Prime Minister described him as a very strong supporter of his party, I am bound to say that in the discussions that I have had with him, not less than in some of his public utterances, there was a strong indication that while his views were generally in accord with those of the Prime Minister, he held very conservative principles and I think most of those who knew him well will agree that that was so.

I am glad to associate myself with the Prime Minister in the sympathy that he has expressed for Mr. Lanctôt's family, who have lost a loving and devoted husband and a father whose memory will be cherished with pride and satisfaction. He has rendered service to his country. His character and his achievements will serve as an example to those who come after him in the community in which he lived. His love of his country was manifested in every possible way in which it could be done within the sphere of his influence. The quotation which the Prime Minister has made from the poet Gray I would supplement with this other stanza:

> No farther seek his merits to disclose,
> Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
> (There they alike in trembling hope repose,)
> The bosom of his Father and his God.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, it was with regret that we heard of the death of Mr. Lanctôt late yesterday afternoon. Mr. Lanctôt was for many years a very very faithful member of this house and I am sure that he served his constituency well. We in this corner of the house desire to associate ourselves with the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in paying tribute to the memory of the late Mr. Lanctôt, and we also wish to express our sympathy to his widow and his family.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): May I be allowed to voice my deep appreciation of the work of Mr. Lanctôt, of his very attractive qualities and of his sterling worth? He had a charming personality. He had two things in common. He had a deep love of the people who live on the land and till the soil, and he was extremely interested in the peace of the world. With me he believed that if we continued to train our boys and girls in military methods, we would continue to use military methods. For all of these reasons I want personally to associate myself with the three members who have spoken in appreciation of the work which Mr. Lanctôt did for the coming generations in this country.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

KING'S BIRTHDAY—SATURDAY SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The motion on the order paper with respect to Saturday sittings in order to be moved at this time will require the unanimous consent of the house. Before asking for that, may I say that in now presenting the motion I am doing so with a view to hearing hon. members express their views and feelings on the wisdom of sitting to-morrow. I recognize that we have had a pretty hot week so far as the temperature is concerned, and a good many I imagine are feeling its fatigue and exhaustion, none more so than the members of the administration. However, we are quite prepared to sit to-morrow and continue with the work of the house with a view to hastening the termination of the session if such appears to be the wish of hon. members.

May I say in regard to sitting on Monday that last year, as I recollect it, the house sat on the King's birthday but adjourned during the afternoon in order that hon. members might attend the garden party given by Their Excellencies in honour of His Majesty's birthday. We had thought of following a similar procedure this year but again, if Mr. Speaker would permit it, I would like to have an expression of the views of the house and the government will seek to be guided in its final decision in the matter by what appears to be the general view.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will put the motion. It is moved by the Prime Minister:

That on Saturday, the first day of June, 1929, and every Saturday thereafter until the end of the session, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Fridays.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It is undoubted, Mr. Speaker, that the notice of motion now given by the Prime Minister has only become necessary because it was found that the first motion was not sufficiently broad to cover the matter, for it was originally intended to deal with to-morrow as well as every succeeding Saturday until the house prorogued.

I think we are all desirous of doing our best to expedite the business of parliament. We certainly should not sit for three sittings to-morrow. Whether or not we should sit until six o'clock to-morrow is a matter in respect to which those who sit to the left of the Speaker are entirely in the hands of the majority of the house. If the majority of the house so desire, we certainly are willing to expedite business by sitting.

With respect to Monday, I think the course suggested by the Prime Minister is one that might well be followed. We can have a sitting in the morning, adjourn for the afternoon, and sit in the evening from eight until eleven. I see no reason why that should not be done, and those associated with me are quite willing to assist in carrying out that idea.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): So far as the sittings on Monday are concerned, it is agreeable to us to sit in the morning and in the evening, as the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition suggest, leaving the afternoon free for those who desire to attend the garden party. But to sitting on Saturdays we have very strong objection. We have been having three sittings every day all week, and we have other business in our offices that we must attend to, and with three sittings a day we have not very much opportunity to take care of that business that our constituents expect us to take care of. Saturday is the only day we have left in which to do that business.

I want to draw the attention of the house to a very important point. The members from the maritimes and we from the west have to sit here week in and week out. We cannot go home on Friday night and come back on Monday night like most of the members from Ontario and Quebec. It is the practice of this house not to transact important business on Friday or Monday; no important votes are ever taken on a Friday or a Monday. The consequence is that we who have to sit here all week can only mill around, if I may use that expression, until the other members come back. We get tired of this kind of business. We do not think it is fair. Then when we come to the end of the session there is a great rush, against which we have always protested. As far as we are concerned we will not consent to sitting on any Saturday during the rest of this session. I understand that this motion is not in order, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it was not placed on the order paper in time. Therefore I raise objection against the passing of the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: If objection is raised, I must declare that it is valid, because the motion is out of order unless there is unanimous consent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is understood then that the house will sit on Monday morning and adjourn on Monday afternoon. I therefore move that this motion be withdrawn with the consent of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Resuming again at eight o'clock on Monday?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is understood then that I adjourn the house tonight at eleven o'clock until Monday morning as usual.

Motion agreed to.

MIXING OF WHEAT FOR EXPORT

CORRECTION OF INACCURATE STATEMENT BY CORRESPONDENT OF LONDON NEWSPAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct the attention of the ministry, and especially the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) to a most mischievous and inaccurate statement which appears in the morning newspapers. This mischievous and inaccurate statement is the report of some publication in London, England. The diplomatic correspondent of the London Morning Post is reported by Mr. Lukin Johnston of the Southam Press as having said:

> One aspect of American activity in Canada requires close attention and that is in the mixing of low grade American wheat with Canadian, and exporting it as Canadian. This must affect, in a measure, the Canadian market abroad.

As that statement, Mr. Speaker, is inaccurate, is mischievous and calculated to do irreparable harm to our wheat industry overseas, I ask that the Minister of Trade and Commerce take the necessary steps to correct it.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank my hon. friend the member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), for calling the attention of parliament to this statement which, as he says, is entirely inaccurate. Neither from Montreal, Halifax, St. John or Vancouver is a Canadian western certificate issued on anything but all-Canadian wheat, and how the impression has gone abroad as to the mixing of Canadian and American spring wheats in Montreal I do not know. But I think at this time it might just as well be stated clearly to the house that there is an admixture of Canadian and American durum wheat, but that wheat does not go out under a Canadian western certificate. The wheat that is mixed at Montreal is what is known as macaroni wheat or durum wheat. Those wheats of both Canadian and American origin are sold out of American seaboard ports and out of Canadian ports on what is known as an open or seaboard certificate, which does not give the country of origin, either passing through an American port or a Canadian port. The statement that they are low-grades or high-grades as of either country is incorrect. Durum wheats are used in the macaroni trade in Europe, and the buyers know exactly what they are getting. In many instances the admixture may consist of a high-grade American durum and a low-grade Canadian durum. In other instances it may be that the grade of Canadian durum is higher than the grade of American durum, and I think it is with regard to this admixture which is sold on an open or seaboard certificate in both countries that the impression mentioned has been created. But may I repeat again, that all wheat passing through Canadian ports on Canadian certificates is entirely of Canadian origin, and that the statement referred to by my hon. friend, and contained in The Citizen this morning, is incorrect.

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he can explain the origin of the word "durum"?

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot give my hon. friend the origin of the word "durum" as applied to this particular variety of wheat. I mentioned in my previous remarks that it was descriptive of a certain flinty wheat which was used in the macaroni trade.

FISH TRAPS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a request of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin). I have a telegram from Ucluelet, a small fishing place on the west coast of Vancouver island, saying that they are forwarding a petition with a thousand names on it against salmon traps, and that further largely signed petitions will follow. I asked a question about this some weeks ago but did not get any reply. I presume I will be within my rights in debating the matter on the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and in order that we may do so intelligently I would ask if the minister will be kind enough to lay on the table the report of Commissioner Ellis who was appointed to investigate. The sittings concluded about six weeks ago, so the report should certainly be available now.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I shall do the best I can to meet the request of my hon. friend.

POST OFFICE SIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General whether or not there is any accuracy in the report that the enamelled post office signs that were formerly printed in blue on a white ground have been withdrawn, and signs with red letters on a white ground substituted therefor. I was asked to bring the matter to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General for the purpose of having him reply to that inquiry, and also to ascertain whether or not there is a contract pending for the purchase of the enamelled signs, and if so whether the Postmaster General will bring it down. I do not expect him to be able to give an answer at the moment, but I have had a communication asking me to bring the matter to his attention.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I am not in a position at the moment to give a reply. I will have the matter looked into, but I really think that it belongs to the Department of Public Works.

CANADIAN FLAG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to an article appearing in the Regina Leader of May 25, in which it is stated that at a meeting there our Canadian flag was in danger, and that the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King had appointed—

The SPEAKER: The article should be sent to the clerk and read to the house.

Mr. DONNELLY: I would like to ask the Prime Minister if a committee has been appointed, as stated, consisting of six or seven Roman Catholic priests to provide a new flag for Canada.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): If I understand rightly, the hon. gentleman asks the question as to whether it is true that a committee of six priests has been appointed to devise a new flag for Canada. I cannot imagine a statement more remote from the truth, or more absurd.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the third reading of Bill No. 254, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain terminal facilities, with grade separation and other works at and in the vicinity of the city of Montreal.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I had an amendment which I had prepared but left upstairs. Perhaps by consent this can stand till the afternoon.

Motion stands.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from May 30 consideration in committee of Bill No. 313, to amend the Dominion Elections Act—Hon. Mr. Cannon—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. POWER: Section 27 was allowed to stand in order that members might express an opinion as to whether or not in certain constituencies the period between nomination day and election day should be two weeks. I have now a list of such constituencies and I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke), that section 27 be replaced by the following:

Schedule 3 of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

Schedule 3: List of electoral districts in which an interval of two weeks between nomination and the polling day is to be allowed:

Province of Ontario: Algoma East; Algoma West; Fort William; Frontenac-Addington; Grey Southeast; Hastings-Peterborough; Kenora; Rainy River; Muskoka-Ontario; Parry Sound; Port Arthur-Thunder Bay; Renfrew North; Renfrew South; Temiskaming North; Temiskaming South; Victoria.

Province of Quebec: Charlevoix-Saguenay; Gaspe; Pontiac.

Province of Manitoba: Brandon; Dauphin; Lisgar; Macdonald; Marquette; Neepawa; Nelson; Portage la Prairie; Provencher; Selkirk; Souris; Springfield.

Province of British Columbia: Cariboo; Comox-Alberni; Kootenay East; Skeena; Vancouver North; West Kootenay; Yale.

Province of Saskatchewan: Assiniboia; Kindersley; Humboldt; Last Mountain; Long Lake; Mackenzie; Maple Creek; Melfort; Melville; Moose Jaw; North Battleford; Prince Albert; Qu'Appelle; Rosetown; Saskatoon; South Battleford; Swift Current; Weyburn; Willow Bunch; Yorkton.

Province of Alberta: Acadia; Athabaska; Battle River; Bow River; Camrose; Lethbridge; Macleod; Medicine Hat; Peace River; Red Deer; Vegreville; Wetaskiwin.

Yukon: Yukon Territory.

Miss MACPHAIL: Why is Southeast Grey given two weeks between nomination and election day when many other Ontario ridings have only one?

Mr. POWER: In quite a number of constituencies in Ontario at the present time there is a period of two weeks between nomination day and polling day. The former chief electoral officer, Colonel Biggar, prepared a list of constituencies which in his opinion should come within this category by reason of administrative difficulty, a difficulty which he felt could be met if the period were thus extended. Amongst these was Southeast Grey. If the hon. member would prefer it otherwise the list can be amended accordingly.

Miss MACPHAIL: I just wondered why it was included. I have no objection.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I believe Moose Jaw was put in amongst those in which two weeks are allowed. The only reason for having two weeks is that it makes it easier for the returning officer to arrange for the polling subdivisions and for the ballot officers going out. In the constituency of Moose Jaw, which is half city and half country, not covering a very great area, I do not think there is any necessity for two weeks. I would rather have one week.

Mr. POWER: I move that the constituency of Moose Jaw be omitted.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: I would move that section 26 of the bill be called and approved. I notice by Hansard that my contention was correct, that this section had not been read and passed. I think it is necessary that it should be called and I move accordingly.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish to associate myself with the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) in asking that section 26 be called. I was responsible for the statement yesterday that I had heard it called. I was under the impression that I had, but Hansard does not indicate this to have been the fact.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 26 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Section 26 agreed to.

On section 15—Preparation of lists.

Mr. POWER: With regard to section 15, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George thought that schedule (a) could be made more clear. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, that section 15, schedule (a), rule 20, be amended as follows:

> Any person, whose name appears in the list of voters for any polling division in the electoral district, may make oath before a registrar giving particulars of the list upon which his name appears, stating that he is qualified to vote in the electoral district and alleging the death, disqualification, or real residence and appearance on another list, of any person on the list for any of the polling divisions in the registration district for which such registration has been appointed,

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 16—Polling day.

Mr. POWER: I would ask the committee to revert to section 16, which is not quite clear. This section amends section 40 of the act. Subsection 1 reads:

> The governor in council shall fix the day upon which the poll shall be held at any election, and such day shall be named in the writ of election; at the general election the writs for all the electoral districts shall be dated on the same day.

I would add the words "and shall name the same day for the poll."

Mr. BENNETT: That is very desirable.

Mr. KAISER: I direct the attention of the committee to the answer given by the chairman of the special committee (Mr. Power) and by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) yesterday, which answer is correct, namely, that no record is kept of those who take oaths. They are permitted to vote on taking the oath as in form 25. Provision should be made in this bill for a record of the various oaths that are being taken by voters so that we may have access to them for future use in amendments to the Elections Act. I asked the electoral officer if he could give me information as to the number of votes polled under this section by virtue of the oath and he gave me the same answer as the hon. members gave me yesterday, that no record was kept. When you are appointing a permanent electoral officer or permanent returning and deputy returning officers, these experts should surely be able to give an intelligent account of the proceedings on election day. I think provision should be made somewhere in this bill whereby more information would be provided in regard to what takes place in the various polling booths on election day than is ascertainable at present.

Mr. CANNON: I do not know if it would be possible to devise a practical method of securing the further information which my hon. friend wishes to have, but I might suggest to him that in view of the fact that the committee has considered other amendments than those included in the present bill, with the idea of having the further amendments adopted at the next session of parliament, my hon. friend might take up this question with the committee so that it might be considered when the legislation is being prepared next year.

The CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment before the committee. Mr. Power has moved that subsection 1 of section 16 be amended by adding the words "and shall name the same day for the poll."

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) drew the attention of the committee yesterday to the fact that on Mondays there are at times certain religious feasts observed by those of the Hebrew faith and that it might cause some inconvenience to those people if an election were held on a Monday on which one of those religious feasts was being observed. In answer to my hon. friend I may say that I have absolutely no doubt that if the attention of the government were drawn to such a situation the governor in council would see to it that no such Monday would be chosen as election day, so any inconvenience such as that indicated by my hon. friend certainly would be overcome.

[Mr. Kaiser.]

Mr. JACOBS: I might point out that these fasts and feasts may occur on Mondays or Tuesdays; they are not definitely fixed.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 4—Polling day to be half holiday.

Mr. HEAPS: Yesterday I asked that this section stand in order to consider the question of the half holiday which, under the present bill, would be observed all over Canada. As I pointed out then, under the old bill employees were given two hours off with pay, but under this bill they would not be paid for this half holiday. In other words, they are to be denied certain rights they previously enjoyed, and I did feel that this was a retrograde step. I would be very much in favour of a half holiday, of course, if the employees received pay for that time off, but not otherwise. I do not think it was the intention of the committee to penalize employees in this way if they desired to exercise their franchise.

Yesterday I was under the impression that just before the one o'clock adjournment an amendment had been moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson), but on looking up Hansard I find that such was not the case. However, I see that the chairman of the committee accepted the suggestion on behalf of the government, for which I am very grateful.

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. HEAPS: My hon. friend shakes his head; I will quote what he said:

> I understand that the government have no objection to accepting this amendment—

Such being the case, I do not see now why the chairman of that committee should shake his head and object to the statement I am making. I think most members of the house will remember that just before one o'clock yesterday the hon. member did make the statement as reported in Hansard.

Mr. POWER: If I may just interrupt, I may have made the statement but I have no recollection of doing so. I really did not intend to say that.

Mr. HEAPS: I will attribute it to the heat, but I presume that the Hansard reporter took down exactly what the hon. member said, even though he does not remember making the statement.

Mr. POWER: I did not mean to say it; I think my hon. friend will permit me to make that correction. I am quite clear in my own mind that I did not mean to attempt to bind the government, over which I have no power or influence, or even to bind myself, over whom I am presumed to have some influence.

Mr. HEAPS: I must say that the hon. gentleman is very modest. However, Mr. Chairman, I intend to move an amendment to section 4 as follows:

That section 14 of the Dominion Elections Act be substituted for section 4 in the present bill, No. 313, except that the word "three" shall be substituted in the second line for the word "two".

The effect of this amendment, which I hope will receive the support of the government, will be to give men and women who are employed in factories and elsewhere three hours off on election day without any deduction from their pay.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not make the motion in the exact terms in which you wish it adopted?

Mr. HEAPS: I think that is what I have done; I think this covers exactly what I wish. As a matter of fact I thought this amendment had been moved yesterday; only a few moments ago I learned that this was not the case, so I drafted this amendment hurriedly to cover the point. The only change from the old act I am asking is that the word "three" be substituted for the word "two," which would make the section read as follows:

Every employer shall, on polling day, allow every elector in his employ at least three additional hours other than the noon hour—

Mr. CAHAN: I would suggest that in as much as section 4 had been adopted—

Mr. HEAPS: No, it has not been adopted; if that had been the case I could not have made this amendment.

Mr. CAHAN: You are substituting the old section and inserting the word "three" instead of two."

Mr. HEAPS: Yes. It has been stated that this parliament has no power to legislate along these lines. I cannot say as to that, but nevertheless I do know that in past years the large employers of labour in this country have carried out the spirit of the act and have given to their employees the two hours provided for in the old elections act, which we are now amending. I know what has happened in the large shops out west; on election day they closed down at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, so the employees were given two hours off with pay. I believe the same practice has been followed by other companies employing large numbers of men and women. Under this bill now before us a half holiday is declared on election day; that is something I would like to see carried out, and I believe the wording of my amendment is in accordance with the intentions of the committee. The large employers of labour usually keep open from 8 to 12, and then from 1 o'clock in the afternoon. They would probably work from 8 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock in the afternoon under this arrangement, and I think every large employer of labour in the Dominion would follow that practice. I am not so much concerned with the question of the powers which we have under the British North America Act, because it strikes me most forcibly that whenever anything comes up which concerns the working people of this country the British North America Act is always brought forward to their disadvantage. Under the old act the employees were given two hours and when we try to extend that by one hour we are told that we have not the power to do so. It was done in the past, the employers of labour carried out the spirit of the enactment of parliament and I feel quite satisfied that if this amendment is adopted they will carry out the spirit of the amendment in the same way as they carried out the provisions of the Dominion Election Act.

Mr. POWER: I have a copy of Hansard before me and I find that the hon. member is quite correct; I did intimate that the government seemed to be willing to accept that suggestion, but I said also that as chairman of the committee I wished to dissociate myself from it. May I repeat briefly my reason for taking that stand; it is quite true that there are provisions in the act whereby an employee may, for a period of two hours, absent himself from his work for the purpose of voting, and the act states definitely that the employee shall not forfeit his pay for that time. That provision has been in the act for some time, and there has been no protest about it. As a matter of fact, as the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) has said, the employers all over the country have entered into the spirit of the act and have not contested the validity or the legality of that provision. The point I wish to make is this; it is of doubtful validity. In saying that I am not giving my own opinion only, because in the legal sense I do not think it would be considered as worth very much, but those who know something of our laws have declared as of doubtful validity an enactment by which the parliament of Canada seeks to bind an employer to pay an employee for something, which is only a matter of contract and therefore falls within the jurisdiction of the provinces. In a matter of at least doubtful validity, when we stretch that period to three hours, the employers of labour might say, "We were willing, without going to the trouble of appearing before the courts, to allow our employees two hours' time, but three hours would be of considerable consequence to us." An employer of labour employing three, four or five thousand hands, might find that the cost would be somewhat excessive. I am under the impression that it is quite likely that some employers might not be willing to comply with the spirit of the act, and might decide to test its validity. In my opinion, and in the opinion of many whom I have consulted, if that is done it will be found to be invalid and the labourer will be in the position where he will not receive any holiday or any pay.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: He would not receive any pay if it were a half holiday?

Mr. POWER: None at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then he would be no worse off than he would be under the proposed change.

Mr. POWER: I am not suggesting that the half holiday would be an ideal arrangement, nor that the previous arrangement of allowing two hours is ideal, but I say that I do not wish to associate myself with the proposed change to three hours for these reasons: First of all, I do not believe it is good law, and secondly, I do not believe it is in the interests of the labouring classes. I am not opposed to this principle in any way; if it were possible to grant a half holiday with pay I would be only too willing to do that.

Mr. NEILL: Suppose the act is left as it is, and the day is made a public holiday; could an employer refuse to pay an employee's wages for a period which has been proclaimed to be a public holiday?

Mr. POWER: Undoubtedly.

Mr. NEILL: I question if he could deduct those wages.

Mr. CAHAN: If the contract between the employer and the employee is a monthly one, then the employee must be paid by the month, no matter how many days are declared to be public holidays; the same principle would apply to a weekly contract.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. NEILL: But not where the employee is being paid by the day?

Mr. CAHAN: If he is being paid by the day, and a half day is declared to be a public holiday, he will only receive pay for the half day that he has worked.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, it may seem to many members to be a matter of small consequence as to whether or not payment shall be made for one hour or two hours, but I think the very fact that we have to debate this matter is an indictment of our present wages system. Many of these men have to pare things down to a very fine point, and I take it that the real purpose which we have in view is to enable as many as possible of these men to exercise their franchise. Unless provision is made for a certain period when they can take time off, it is impossible for many of them to do so. A great many of the electors in Winnipeg work in the railway shops at Transcona, and in order to vote they must travel a distance of eight or nine miles to Weston, the western suburb of Winnipeg. Unless they have time off it is impossible for them to do that. They should be allowed several hours off, or given a full half holiday. I recognize the fact that there may be some difficulty, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, but I can hardly conceive that where the employers are willing to give two hours, they would go to the trouble of appealing against this legislation when one hour only is added to the free time. In case the validity of the act is tested, the worker would be in no worse a position then he would be under the proposed arrangement for a half holiday. It seems to me that we might very well take the chance and give the three hours which would actually meet the requirements of the time necessary for voting.

Mr. POWER: The hon. member and myself are in substantial agreement, but it is only a matter of opinion. I give it as my opinion that the employers of labour, when they find they must allow pay for three hours, are not as likely to enter into the spirit of the act, as they have been in the past when they were obliged to allow two hours only. It is my impression that they will test the validity of the act, but that is only my opinion.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, the committee in presenting these amendments sought to limit them to proposals on which we were practically unanimous. We sought to avoid bringing before the house at the close of the session any issues which might be disputed.

Inasmuch as this trouble has arisen, I suggest that the Solicitor General give favourable consideration to the withdrawal of section 4 of this bill repealing section 14 of the original act, and allow the original section 14 to stand. I think that would, for the present session, be preferable and would allow further consideration of the proposal made by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, when other matters are brought before the house next year, because a number of controversial issues in respect of the Dominion Elections Act must come before us next session in the bill then to be introduced, I understand, by the government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If there is any difficulty over validity, is there not a possible difficulty in the Dominion parliament forcing an employer to give a half holiday for election purposes? It seems to me that might readily be construed as interfering with freedom of contract. If objection is taken to the payment of wages for one hour, objection might easily be taken to the cessation of work for half a day.

Mr. POWER: It is for three hours.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, for one or two or three, I do not care which it is, the principle is the same. If objection is taken to that, objection might be taken to the forced cessation of work and the tieing up of the entire plant for a half day.

Mr. CAHAN: This parliament has legislative jurisdiction to declare a holiday or a half holiday for the purpose of carrying out any public business over which parliament has exclusive jurisdiction; that is, such business as a general federal election.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But in practice that penalizes the worker.

Mr. CAHAN: That may be so, but in this case, in order to avoid penalizing the worker any more than he is at present penalized, I would suggest that for the time being we should revert to the terms of the original section 14 of the act, because I think a good deal is to be said in support of the suggestions made by the chairman of the committee which has for some months been considering the bill amending the Dominion Elections Act. That is, if you impose too much upon the employer, you will find that he will contest the matter, whereas at the present time the giving of two hours as a holiday with full pay has become a general standard and accepted. But there is a very strong body of opposition against extending the time, and as we wish now to reach amendments which are generally acceptable I would suggest that we might drop clause 4 of the bill and allow for the present the original section 14 to stand.

Mr. THORSON: When I suggested this change to the committee when it was last in session on clause 4 of the bill, I had in mind a situation which became very evident in Winnipeg at the last election. Many of the workers who live in South Winnipeg, St. James, Weston and other western suburbs of the city of Winnipeg, work in the Transcona shops which are from ten to twelve miles distant from their homes and from the polling subdivisions where they cast their votes. They leave their work at Transcona at three o'clock; it takes them half an hour to an hour to get home; they wash and change, and then they pile into the polling booths in the last hour or so of polling day.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The polls close at six o'clock.

Mr. THORSON: Yes. The result was that a great number of these men were not able to vote. That was one of the reasons I had in mind for suggesting that the word "two" before the word "hours" in the original section 14 should be struck out and the word "three" substituted therefor. I am not prepared to admit the constitutional invalidity of section 14 of the present act. I think the Dominion parliament, having jurisdiction to legislate with regard to the subject of Dominion elections, may set forth the conditions and circumstances under which the elections shall take place.

Mr. CAHAN: There are various contentions both ways, but we cannot decide the matter.

Mr. THORSON: I am not prepared to admit that section 14 of the present act is ultra vires of this parliament. I think the argument can be made just as strongly for its validity as for its invalidity; in fact, I think the argument for its validity is stronger than that for its invalidity. Rather than see clause 4 of the present bill stand, I would prefer the old section 14 of the present act. If it is the sense of the house, I would prefer, for the reasons I have stated, to have three hours instead of two given to the employees.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why not extend the hours of voting?

Mr. THORSON: That might be one method of meeting the particular difficulty I had in mind, for instance, by extending the polling hours to seven in the evening. I do not know whether the committee has that in mind or not in any subsequent report that it may bring down.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There is no doubt that the old act gave a special privilege to one particular class. No argument is being advanced to give a farmer two or three hours' pay for going to the polls. No argument is being used to give a fisherman so much extra time to get to the polls. In my judgment, we have stretched our authority in giving the two hours. Let us be content with that. Do not let us exaggerate the thing and ask for so much that we may regret it later. This is a tax upon the employer of labour. If it is proper to give two hours and if it is within the law, as my hon. friend who has just spoken, says, to give three hours, why not half a day, and, if half a day, why not a whole day? Do not make an absurdity of the thing. We have gone far enough. No manufacturer or employer of labour has made a great deal of fuss about the matter. We are giving a good deal; do not let us carry it to an absurdity.

Mr. CANNON: When this clause was under consideration yesterday, I stated on behalf of the government that, if it were the desire of the house, I saw no objection to the withdrawal of the clause from the bill and to our reverting to the old law. When I made that suggestion, the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) who now moves his amendment, stated that he was not in a position to decide whether this would be acceptable or not, and the section was allowed to stand, I reiterate that the government has no set opinion; that we are introducing in this case legislation along the lines of the recommendations of the committee. It seems as if this half holiday without pay might not be as satisfactory as the two hours with pay as provided for under the old act.

I am not going to prolong the debate by discussing the question whether we were within our constitutional right in legislating as we did in the past. There is one side that has been expounded, that is, that salaries and wages are matters of contract and civil rights and, generally speaking, those matters are within the purview of the provinces and not of the Dominion government. But there is also another side that might be urged, and that is that this question of declaring that wages are to be paid during those two hours might be considered as a matter ancillary to the general scheme of legislation regarding elections. These are two viewpoints, one which would indicate that we are not within our jurisdiction, and the other which might indicate that we are perfectly within our province when we have legislated as we have done in the past. I repeat, I am entirely in the hands of the committee and we will stand by the opinion of the committee as it is expressed.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I am in favour of this amendment for various reasons. In the first place I do not think any deduction will be made for the half holiday from the pay of monthly employees such as clerks. With regard to other employees, it is not necessary for any of them to take the half holiday. If a man is employed in the steel works, for instance, and his work is necessary, he can stay at work, and if he works he will get extra time for holidays. I think this should go through as we arranged it in the committee.

With regard to the eight-hour day, I do not see how a man who is working only eight hours a day can take three hours off in the afternoon because that leaves him only one hour to go back and work, and that is hardly worth while. I think the sensible thing to do is to make it a half holiday.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. HEAPS: We now have the situation where we either have to accept the half holiday without pay or the provision of the existing Dominion Elections Act, and if I have to choose between the two I prefer the existing act to the provisions of the bill now before us.

There is one point that I would like to bring to the attention of the chairman of the special committee. It is rather an important point which he raised. I do not understand much of the law on this question—

Mr. POWER: Neither does the chairman.

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. member (Mr. Power) made the statement here to-day that the validity of the existing act could be challenged and that under the act the worker would not be entitled to two hours with pay. This would raise a very important question. Assume that at some future time some employer or someone interested challenges the act, and that it turns out as the chairman of the committee thought it would turn out. It would mean that hundreds of thousands of electors would have no opportunity on election day of going to the polls and casting their votes. I do not say that anything of that kind will happen, but if it does then it means that we would have to recast completely the provisions of this act. That danger occurred, to my mind, when the chairman of the special committee gave that opinion, either as a lawyer or as the chairman of the committee, I do not know which.

Mr. POWER: As a very poor lawyer I gave that opinion.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not think, since I have been in this house, that a special committee of the house has ever sat with a more sincere desire to obtain amendments that would be satisfactory to all concerned and that would be fair and impartial to all interests. On this section there were differences of opinion. They arose in this way. All the large corporations employing men and women have a rule almost universal in this country that if employees are brought back on a holiday to work they are paid double pay for the time in which they are engaged in such work. Large corporations such as the steel and coal industries cannot shut down for a half day conveniently, and therefore when there is a half holiday they arrange to bring back a certain number of men to keep their works in operation, and they pay them double time. So if we declare this a half holiday a large body of the workingmen and workingwomen of this country who desire to work on that half day will receive employment at double pay for the time in which they are employed.

Mr. POWER: Is it not possible that it will have quite the contrary effect to what was intended and that a large number of people will remain at work at double pay rather than go out and vote?

Mr. CAHAN: There is the difficulty. We believe in liberty of opinion and liberty of action within certain limits in this country. I am simply stating how this question appeared to the committee. On the other hand, the ordinary day labourer who is employed in the village factory or in the small store in the smaller urban centres has no difficulty whatever in arranging with his employer for ample time to go out and vote. The relations between employers and employees of that class are so amicable in this country that very little difficulty has arisen in respect to voting. I prefer the half holiday for this reason, that it assures the hundreds of thousands of men who are employed in the larger factories and the great industries a half holiday for them to go to the poll, and if they are brought back to work for the purpose of carrying on the operations of the company it entitles them to double pay.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A few moments ago the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George was arguing against the amendment of my colleague, and suggesting that it would be wise under the circumstances to leave things as they were, but as soon as the amendment is turned down he suggests that now we adopt the half holiday.

Mr. CAHAN: I beg pardon. That is a mis-representation of my intention. My intention was not to make an argument but to state to the committee the views that influenced us when we were dealing with the matter as a committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But the effect is as I stated, whereas a few moments ago the hon. gentleman was suggesting that we leave things as they are; he now suggests an amendment. I submit that that is hardly a consistent attitude. There may be some truth in what the hon. member has said in regard to a few people in the large industries, but there is a very large number of shops where men are not brought back to work on a holiday. I should say that the vast majority are not brought back and paid double time for the holiday. The suggested plan would work a substantial injustice in their case. It would seem to me that when we remember the very narrow margin on which a great number of the workers have to operate, it is highly desirable that they should be given the opportunity to vote without being penalized too much for so doing. Further than that, I would point out that whilst the relations between employer and employee may in some instances be amicable in many instances they are not of the most cordial nature. It may be all very well to say that a man is free to go and vote, yet in a great many plants a man is not free unless his employer gives him the opportunity. I myself have had difficulty with large employers in that connection who paid no attention to existing legislation for providing suitable hours in which their men could go and vote. They said they could not arrange to let them all go at the same time, and so on. It is quite true I was representing the interests of the employees, but I would take that position whether a man were voting Liberal, Conservative or Labour.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the hon. gentleman in favour of continuing the original section?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Most decidedly.

An hon. MEMBER: We are all agreed.

Mr. CANNON: I think the committee would be satisfied if we simply dropped the clause, and left the question open; we might attend to it next year. That is section 4, subsection 14.

Mr. BOYS: I agreed with the clause as it appears now. I did not take the trouble to look it up myself, but I was informed—I think the information came from the chief electoral officer who appeared before the committee—that this very question was dealt with in the house in 1925, and that by a vote of 54 to 32 the change was then made, and that merely by oversight it was not incorporated in the act. I feel that that being so it would be very proper now to adopt what was done in 1925. I have no very pronounced views on the matter myself, and if they who feel that they have some right to speak for labour think that it would be better to revert to the previous subsection whereby two hours are given with pay I would have no objection to that. On the other hand, I have no desire to oppose the suggestion of the Solicitor General that the matter be dropped now, and with many other matters to be attended to which will be subsequently referred to in another report of this committee it might well stand to be dealt with at the next session of parliament.

Section withdrawn.

On section 20—Name not on the list.

Mr. NEILL: Might I ask the permission of the committee to refer to another section which came up yesterday in the house when I was attending a rather important committee? It is a small matter but it is rather important. With the consent of the hon. Solicitor General, who I suppose is in charge of the bill, I would like to insert one word in section 20. If you will refer to section 20 of this bill you will find that it deals with the question of allowing, as it is known in popular parlance, a man or woman to swear himself in on election day. I am talking entirely of rural matters. This does not concern the urban electors at all. There is a privilege there where a man can, as I say, go and swear himself in, on complying with certain formalities, and it is a highly-prized right in those country places. It is a safeguard against a lot of things; it is a safeguard against corruption, if such should exist, although it does not in the district that I represent; it is a safeguard against carelessness which might exist, or ignorance of the local deputy returning officer, who has no desire to do an injustice. Under the old act a man went there and he swore, aided by a voter who was on the list, that he had resided in the electoral district the regulation number of days and that he was now a resident in the polling division. Now they have gone further, he has to swear not only that he has been the regulation number of days, and so on, but that so far as he is aware his name does not appear on the list of voters prepared for any other polling division. That is the trouble. Those registrars, as they are called, who put the names of people on the list, are paid so much a head, and sometimes for that reason, and sometimes due to pure carelessness, they just take the last list, or some other list, and they jam on every name that is there, men who have been away for years, or men who have been dead for years. They do not put them on deliberately; they simply take the list and will not be bothered checking up to see whether Bill Jones has left the district, or has gone to heaven or to some other place in the meantime. Then the man comes along on election day and wants to vote in this other polling division where he has been residing for perhaps six months. He knows his name is on the old list, or someone tells him so; he may be aware that he is left on the old list, but—improperly. What is he going to do? He has no remedy; he loses his vote. That is not the intention of this amendment.

Mr. ADSHEAD: He can vote at the polling division where he belongs.

Mr. NEILL: But he does not want to. He cannot afford to take a long trip. His interests are in the polling division where he then resides. We are proposing to make it easy for the workingman, and for everyone, to vote. I would ask the Solicitor General to be permitted to insert this one word. It is not the way I would like to have it, but I know it would open up a lot of discussion to change the whole section. I would ask leave to insert the word "properly" down on the second last line of the section, so that it will read that the man has got to swear that so far as he is aware, his name does not "properly" appear on any other list. There is no opportunity for abuse; he has to have someone who lives there swear to his identity. He has got to swear himself that he has resided in that polling division. It is rather a retrogade step from the old act. If the Solicitor General would allow me to put in that one word "properly" it would, in great part, meet my objection.

Mr. CANNON: I have no objection. I think that would improve the section.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the chairman of the committee whether the committee gave any consideration to the question of proportional representation which question, I think, was presented to the committee.

Mr. CAHAN: We had a speech on it yesterday before this committee.

Mr. POWER: The committee did give some consideration to the question of proportional representation. We even invited representatives of labour to appear before us to give us their views on it. They did speak briefly. We also heard another witness who told us what he thought of proportional representation, but the committee did not see fit to change our present system.

Mr. CAHAN: Nor to introduce so controversial a question where we were anxious for unanimity.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Vote No. 93—Railways, to provide for additional car ferry and facilities for car ferry service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, $3,500,000. This vote, on motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) last evening has been reduced by $1,000,000. Shall the item carry?

Mr. MacLAREN: I think this includes the estimate for a new ferry.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MacLAREN: Some reference was made to this matter last evening, and since then I have refreshed my memory with regard to the accounting in connection with the ferry service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island. I wish to quote from page 28 of the report of the royal commission on maritime claims. The particular reference to which I wish to direct the attention of the minister is this:

> We further recommend that, so far as the ferry boat service is concerned, it should not be run as part of the railway operations, but should be run by the railway administration under separate account for the department. We feel that, by reason of its association with railway accounts, this service does not get the attention it should receive.

This bears out substantially what was represented to the minister last night. Now at the present time the operative charges are included in the accounts of the railway lines on the eastern division, and it is recommended otherwise in the Duncan report. Not only that; it is fair and reasonable that the operative charges should not be included in the eastern lines operating account, where it does not properly belong. The reason is obvious: it makes a much larger deficit in these accounts than otherwise would be fairly represented. I do not think the minister has any particular objection except the difficulty of accounting. I believe his attitude is one of preparedness to recognize that, provided the difficulties of accounting are not too great. He says there are very considerable difficulties in the matter of separate accounting.

Mr. DUNNING: There is, of course, no difficulty in separate accounting for expenditures. The only difficulty relates to separate accounting so far as revenues are concerned.

Mr. MacLAREN: I take it there are difficulties at any rate.

Mr. DUNNING: Entirely in relation to revenue.

Mr. MacLAREN: The recommendation of the Duncan report is that the accounting be separate. The minister says that will not be an easy matter. There is nothing more unsatisfactory than the present method.

Mr. DUNNING: Why?

Mr. MacLAREN: Because it heaps up the deficits in the operative expenses on the eastern division of the railways and makes the apparent deficit larger than it actually is. Another reason is contained in the Duncan report; that is, that more attention would be given this important service. I submit that some other method than the present should be adopted; it is absolutely the worst so far as having the true results of operative expenses on the eastern lines is concerned. The minister says there are difficulties, whatever they may be, in the accounting. It seems to me that accountants possess considerable powers of adaptability and resourcefulness, and surely they can arrive at some system whereby the accounts will be kept separate without too much expense and too much labour. If there are difficulties—and on that score I cannot express an opinion—I believe they should be overcome, or at least an attempt should be made to overcome them. I would even go the length of suggesting, if this is the last recourse, that the operative expenses on the car ferry service be arrived at in a fair way by estimate, allowing that amount to be written off the operative expenses of the eastern lines.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not prepared to admit for a moment that the deficit on the eastern lines is largely inflated by the operating loss on the ferry.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is to that extent.

Mr. DUNNING: No one knows to what extent it exists. I think we can get the exact cost of operating the ferry; I believe it is in the neighbourhood of $200,000 a year. That is the cost of operating the ferry, exclusive of interest and depreciation, which, of course, is taken care of by the fact that the ferry is built out of an appropriation by this parliament. No interest is charged to the railway with respect to the cost of this ferry or the cost of the work; it is borne by parliament. Therefore, so far as interest on capital is concerned, that interest does not operate to increase the deficit on the eastern lines; so that the operating cost is the only matter to consider.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is the only point I have raised.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, the operating cost is $200,000 a year. My hon. friend desires that we should endeavour to ascertain the proportion of every ticket issued from any point on the mainland to any point in Prince Edward Island, or vice versa, which should properly be credited to the ferry.

Mr. MacLAREN: I said I would be content with an estimated amount.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid if I came here with an estimated amount from year to year my hon. friends would question its accuracy, and with all deference I submit that a statement of revenues should be exact or should not be submitted. An estimate would be open to all sorts of suggestions as to the possibility of manipulation and so on.

Mr. MacLAREN: We would not do that with the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I thank my hon. friend. Yesterday I gave the number of passengers and the amount of freight; those 73,000 passengers came from many different places and part of their through tickets was passage over this ferry. Accounting machinery would have to be set up to take out of those tickets the proportion properly chargeable or creditable to the ferry. I am not prepared to admit that the ferry at present does not pay the cost of operation; I would doubt very much if there is very much of a deficit, having regard to the fact that the capital cost is borne and is proposed to be borne, under the estimate now before us, by the Dominion government. It becomes part of the public debt and involves no interest charge on capital to be charged against the eastern lines. I think if the amount to which my hon. friend refers could be arrived at it would be found to be rather small.

I will tell my hon. friend what I will do; before this session is over I will endeavour to get some kind of approximation of the revenue which would be properly creditable to the ferry for last year. Of course we can very easily get what it cost to operate the ferry, and in that way we will get some idea as to whether or not it will be worth while to set up an elaborate accounting service to separate these revenues in order to show what would be properly creditable to the ferry.

Mr. MacLAREN: I think the minister has said enough now to justify my remarks. Let us find out about it then, if the minister does not know the actual figure. I think it would be reasonable to let us have that amount first.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not pretending that I can tell my hon. friend the exact amount; that certainly would involve in the first place the checking of 73,000 railway tickets, and in connection with freight it would involve very much greater difficulties. Potatoes are shipped from the island on a through rate basis, which includes transportation on the ferry, and we would have to find some way of allocating to the ferry its fair proportion of the freight rate paid on every carload of potatoes. If my hon. friend understands my proposal as one which involves accuracy I must withdraw it, because I cannot guarantee the accuracy of an estimate. Every word I say emphasises the very great accounting difficulty involved in the separation of such a short journey from a through freight rate or a through passenger fare.

Mr. MacLAREN: At any rate, as a preliminary move I suggest an estimated amount; I think that would be quite all right for now, although I would not accept that as the final word. We must get some idea of how this is working out, and surely it would not be a very difficult thing to arrive at a reasonable and fair estimate of the operating expenses as compared with the income derived.

Mr. BENNETT: We should be able to get that roughly.

Mr. DUNNING: As I pointed out, the expenditures are easily ascertainable, and I will undertake to see if there is any means by which we can get even a reasonable approximation of the revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: On the basis of 75 cents a passenger and $4 a car you could get some general estimate.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member who was speaking at one o'clock is not in his place, but I do not think I can add anything to what I have previously stated regarding the revenues of the ferry. The question raised by the hon. member for St. John Albert (Mr. MacLaren) really had nothing to do with the merits or otherwise of building a new ferry; it had to do rather with the principle of ferry operation.

Item agreed to.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

Hudson Bay railway and terminals—construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500, $6,500,000.

Mr. JELLIFF: Could the committee have a statement as to what is being done at Fort Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: This vote is to cover work on the Hudson Bay railway and terminals. So far as the railway work is concerned, it is for the purpose of paying the Canadian National Railways, who are acting as the agents for the minister in the construction of the road. The work at the port is being done by the forces of the department, under the control and direction of the chief engineer, and the division betwen the two, as estimated for this year, is $4,500,000 for the railway and $2,000,000 for the terminal. The steel reached Fort Churchill in March last, but approximately 100 miles still requires to be graded, as it is merely a skeleton track, This work is being pushed forward by the Canadian National Railways as speedily as possible.

As I explained last year, we expected to use most of last year in getting stores, equipment, machinery and plant into the port and in providing buildings for the accommodation of the men and plant in the expectation of being able to proceed with the dredging work during the summer of 1929. I may say that that expectation was fully realized, and the two dredges which were built last year were towed into Fort Churchill from Montreal and all the equipment necessary to start dredging this summer is now on the ground. In addition, we took in some 15,000 tons of other material and plant, and I think I can say we are now well equipped to commence the actual work of dredging a channel from deep water within the harbour to the site of the dock itself. I think that is the general information desired by the committee. The expenditures on the port itself up to the present time have been very largely for plant and have been made in the proportion I have indicated.

Mr. SPENCER: I am sorry that I was not in the chamber when the minister began his explanation, but would he be good enough to give us a statement with regard to the position which the government has taken as to the townsite; on what terms it was turned over to the Manitoba government and whether or not there are any restrictions as to private speculation.

Mr. DUNNING: I undertook last year to examine into this matter very carefully, and it was determined that it would be better to turn over the control of the town site to the provincial authorities, who under the constitution, are in control of municipal development. A careful survey of the east peninsula was made by the officers of the department and of the Canadian National Railway, in order to determine what area would be required for the purpose of the railway and for the purpose of the port; in other words, what area was required for Dominion government purposes. That area was set out on a plan and the remainder of the eastern peninsula as shown on the same plain has been turned over to the government of Manitoba. No restrictions were placed upon the government of Manitoba in receiving it from the Dominion, but discussion revealed that the government of Manitoba had determined to go carefully into the best method of dealing with a municipality of that particular type. I feel sure that satisfactory plans will be evolved by the local government who, of course, have the legislative jurisdiction in respect to municipalities.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to ask a question in connection with the Beach property. While on a passenger train one day I was spoken to by one of the representatives of the Beach estate, and it would appear—I made a note of the matter—that the original homestead was granted to Beach, I think in 1905, and in 1928, so far as I can remember, the minister expropriated all the privately-owned property on the eastern peninsula at Fort Churchill. I believe that is correct. These people have been paid no money since, so far as I can ascertain. It is more than a year and a half since the property was expropriated and the principle which the railways have always proceeded on is that when property is taken, the people must be paid for it. At the moment they have not been paid for it, so far as I understand the matter—I am asking for information—and there is no likelihood of their being paid within the immediate future. The minister might state what the situation is.

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure my hon. friend that the delay in settling for the property expropriated is in no sense the fault of the department. We have been ready to go ahead with the exchequer court proceedings. If my memory serves me aright—and I am practically certain it does—application was made for delay by those representing the owners of the property in order that they might have someone go up there and look over it. My understanding is that the case is set down for hearing at the next sitting of the exchequer court in the province of Manitoba, but I am quite sure that the department is proceeding as rapidly as possible in the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: My point is that, as I understand the matter, the government has taken possession of the property.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: The government expropriated the whole area without any restriction or limitation of any kind. The people who owned the property are out of possession of it and they have received no compensation.

Mr. DUNNING: So far.

Mr. BENNETT: I remember the late chairman of the railway commission, Mr. Justice Mabee—

Mr. DUNNING: I think the hon. member stated the date of expropriation wrongly. The date was the fall of 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: I said 1928. I was wrong in my memorandum. It was 1927, apparently, which will be two years ago this fall. I made a note that it was two years ago and I did not know exactly what that meant. I remember Judge Mabee taking the view that if railway companies did business in that way, he would quash the expropriation proceedings entirely. The reason is this: that in fixing compensation, regard is had to the date of expropriation. If you let the matter drag beyond a given time, then you have another set of principles upon which to fix expropriation damages than you otherwise would. I recall that the Railway Act was amended to meet that situation. For two years these people have been out of their property; somebody else is in possession. They have received no money in compensation and they have to go to the exchequer court. The offer in this case was, I think, $10 a lot, because the property had been subdivided. I understand the matter is to be determined by the exchequer court in its sittings, not in Manitoba, but in Moose Jaw this fall. The submission I make to the minister is that if this were a railway company dealing with the matter as an ordinary railway company would, the delay would be such that regard would be had to the conditions at the later date and not as they were when expropriation proceedings commenced in 1927.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend mean the added value to the property by reason of these works?

Mr. BENNETT: By reason of the fact that when expropriation took place, the future of the port as to development had not been settled, and if you had to take the piece of property to-day, you would pay more for it than you would two years ago. The Railway Act was amended to provide that if the railway company did not proceed to do something within a given time, the damages had to be assessed as of the date when they came in de novo. This is not an unreasonable view to take.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): With regard to the point brought up by the leader of the opposition, the Beach case is a special one. In the first place, a homestead was given to the elder Beach.

Mr. BENNETT: About twenty years ago.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): This homestead was then traded to the government for the land that now belongs to the Beach estate. Any rights that the government may have had over the homestead lands for railway purposes or expropriation were given up, I think, at the time this land was traded for the homestead. This is a special case and it should be treated specially and as rapidly as possible by the department.

Mr. DUNNING: Both the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Moose Jaw will, I am sure, appreciate the fact that I do not intend to try an exchequer court case in this committee. I was rather dealing with the question which the leader of the opposition raised as to the delay. I have since made sure of the facts. Every effort was made by the department to arrange with the parties for a hearing this spring just passed, and it is at the request of the other parties that the delay until the fall occurs.

Mr. BENNETT: I assume there was an offer of so much money.

Mr. DUNNING: Under the law there had to be.

Mr. BENNETT: What was it?

Mr. DUNNING: The committee will appreciate that it was a matter of some difficulty to arrive at the value of property situated four miles from where the port of Fort Churchill will be, property which had been left as nature made it since the original shack was built.

Mr. BENNETT: Then how does the minister justify expropriating it?

Mr. DUNNING: I justified my action in the house a couple of years ago, and I think the house generally approved what I then said. Part of it is undoubtedly required for railway purposes. I will not go further into that at the moment unless I am pressed. I am willing to enter into a debate on the general desirability of expropriating property, but I do not desire to delay my estimates more than can be avoided. To arrive at a value to offer for property of that description was a matter of some difficulty. I gather from the legal staff that they arrived at it by taking the value mentioned in the probate of the will of one of the original owners of the property. That is, we took as a basis the only thing in sight which would afford a basis.

Mr. STEVENS: The last legal process to which the minister refers would hardly be fair. This, if I recall aright, was a homestead taken up by a man called Beach about twenty or twenty-five years ago. In those days, to go there was quite a trip for anyone to take. He went there; I think he took his wife with him and they lived on the property for some years. While there necessarily was not very much clearing or farming of the property, because there is not much of that done at Fort Churchill, nevertheless the man lived there and settled on the property, having in mind, as far as I can judge, the fact that some day Fort Churchill was destined to be the site of a city or a town, a point of export. That foresight on his part, his efforts to get there and the time he spent there are worth something. He was, in other words, a typical pioneer. The railway comes along and decides that Fort Churchill is to be the railway terminal. In the meantime Port Nelson had been going on for fifteen years and this man Beach might very well have thought that as far as he was concerned the railway would never come there, but still he stayed with his property. I think his father died later, but Beach held this property. The minister shakes his head. There is no doubt that the property was held under the control of Beach in some form. There was some difficulty about the homestead entry and so forth, but in any case the man was in possession of the property when he died. Then the railway decided to go to Fort Churchill. The minister says that this is three or four miles away from where the actual railway works will be located, and that it is a question whether the property owned by Beach will be required for railway purposes at all. The government decided, perhaps wisely—I am not criticizing them at all for that—that it was better for the government to control the whole townsite, and therefore they decided to take in all the property that was likely to be townsite property and own it. That is not acquiring property for railway purposes. Mark you, I am not complaining because the government took control of the townsite, because I think the minister's objective was to prevent unwise speculation in townsite property in a prospective terminal. I think the government was wise in doing that, but if the government felt that in the public interest it was desirable that they should own the townsite, it was due to this man Beach or to his estate that he should get the full value of his property. Instead of simply taking the property over as an abandoned homestead, it should have been regarded as part of what would be a valuable townsite, because if the government is going to exercise control over that townsite and reap the full benefit which some people think in future years will be very great, these property owners are certainly entitled to a very different basis of valuation than simply as land taken over for railway purposes. That, I think, is the point at issue.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend does not quite appreciate what the situation was. I would be the last to detract from the pioneer spirit and the foresight of William Beach, but facts are facts and the exchequer court will no doubt take into consideration all the facts. That is why, instead of attempting to settle it in any other way, the exchequer court is to deal with the matter. My hon. friend is wrong when he assumes that either William Beach or the estate of William Beach or any of the Beach family own all of the property in question. The property was subdivided and sold many years ago; not all of it, but much of it.

Mr. STEVENS: Only part of it.

Mr. DUNNING: Parts here and there of that quarter-section were sold to people in the west and elsewhere who believed that Fort Churchill was destined to be a port.

Mr. STEVENS: That is true.

Mr. DUNNING: I have had letters from people who paid as much as $600 for a lot twenty years ago in Fort Churchill. I do not know how much Beach made by the sale of the land to others, or whether he made anything. Very often when a man subdivides his quarter-section everybody but himself makes money out of it, and in all probability real estate operators and manipulators made the money and not Beach. I am not in a position to discuss that but I do know that there are now hundreds of owners, if my memory serves me. We have not got track of them all yet. There are people in the United States owning lots on this quarter-section of Beach's, and there is a very good reason why we cannot get track of them. Many of these people own this property for one reason and one reason only, and that is that there was no means of getting rid of it until the government took it over for the purposes of the Hudson Bay railway. There was no means of getting rid of it even by tax sales because there were no taxes up there and no taxing body. They held the property in spite of themselves.

Mr. STEVENS: Foresight.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend may call it foresight if he wishes. In saying these things I trust I am not to be considered as attempting on behalf of the government to take from the Beaches or any of the other owners that which is justly their due. I take this position: There is a tribunal, the exchequer court of Canada, to decide what is right as between the crown and the subject in a situation such as this, and I have no doubt that the exchequer court will take into account all considerations which could be advanced here in connection with the matter; in fact, I doubt very much whether we are really in order in discussing it at the length we have been doing, having regard to the fact that it is before the exchequer court. If anybody objects to that procedure of taking it before the exchequer court, then it is a proper subject for discussion, because it could be withdrawn from the court and other means of settlement adopted, but frankly I know of no better means.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister perhaps has not taken fully into cognizance the point I was desiring to make. Section 171 of the Railway Act reads:

> In granting any such sanction, or in giving leave under any provision of this act to take lands without the consent of the owner, the board may fix a period
> (a) within which the company must acquire the lands or take the necessary steps for such purpose; or
> (b) within which the notice hereinafter required to be given, preliminary to proceeding to arbitration to fix compensation or damages, shall be conclusively deemed to have been given.
> 2. In the event of the order granting such sanction or leave, whether made before or after the passing of this act, providing no such time limit any owner or person interested in the lands may apply to the board for an order that the company shall acquire such lands or take the necessary steps for such purpose, within such time as the board deems proper, and thereupon the board may make such order in the premises as appears just.
> 3. Where no time is fixed by the board as above mentioned, if the company, within one year after any such sanction or leave has been given by the board, or in any case where no such sanction or leave is necessary, if the company within one year after the plan, profile and book of reference have been deposited with the registrar of deeds, does not either acquire the lands covered by such sanction, leave, or plan, profile and book of reference, or give the notice hereinafter required to be given preliminary to proceeding to arbitration to fix compensation or damages in respect thereof, the company's right to take or enter upon, without the consent of the owner, any part of such lands which it has not within the said year either acquired or given such notice in respect of, shall at the expiration of such year absolutely cease and determine, unless the board, after notice to the owner and upon such terms as the board may deem proper, otherwise orders.

The point I am making is this: This man's lands were taken from him compulsorily, without his consent. Secondly, the crown, as distinguished from the railway company, filed expropriation proceedings against the whole of that land regardless of whether it was required for railway purposes or not. I think it is proper to use that word "regardless," because it is not asserted by the railway that these lands were to be used for railway purposes. Had it been a private enterprise taking over these lands without the consent of the owner, then under section 171 of the Railway Act, which was inserted in the Act at the instance of Judge Mabee, then chairman of the railway commission, the notice would have lapsed and they would have had to start de novo to take the lands, and the principle with regard to compensation would govern as from the date of the filing of the new notice, which, of course, changes the whole situation, as the minister will see. It is because of the long delay in taking the proceedings, which the minister now says was partly attributable to the owners themselves, that I was endeavouring to bring the matter to his attention. I am frank to say that I know very little about it except what was told to me by a gentleman whom I have often met travelling up and down this country for the last twenty-five years. What the minister says about the lots having been sold is true, but multiply the number of cases by five or six hundred and you get into an intolerable situation. The crown when it expropriates, as distinguished from a railway company that expropriates, has been offering compensation that poor unfortunate people have been compelled to take, and which they would not take at all from a railway company where they could take proceedings before the local district court judge and have compensation fixed in the local court. But people who are not in good circumstances naturallly think with much doubt and diffidence of approaching the exchequer court, because they cannot afford to go into litigation against the crown. They have not the facilities. I direct attention to that, because I do not think those people have been treated with the consideration that would be accorded to them were they the owners of property that had been taken from them without their consent by a private railway company.

Mr. DUNNING: What would my hon. friend suggest I might now do?

Mr. BENNETT: I think what might be done is to revise the whole basis upon which compensation has been offered. This is not in the hon. minister's department, but in the Department of National Defence; a situation arose in North Vancouver, and I must say I feel very sorry for the poor old lady who had a lot out there for which she paid several hundred dollars. They appropriated and she lost her property. She said, give me another lot equal to this but, of course, that was not done. I think she got less than $100. This is a case in which the basis of compensation is wholly inadequate.

Mr. MANION: I have seen a good many expropriation proceedings. I am not speaking of this case at all, but one or two things in connection with expropriation proceedings have struck me rather forcibly for a number of years. I notice in practically all expropriation proceedings, and probably there is a good defence for the attitude, that the judges, whoever they may be, whether exchequer or county court judges before whom expropriation proceedings of any kind are taken, invariably hear a good deal of evidence as to the utility value at that moment. Frequently it can be shown before these courts that the actual utility value is very, very little, and as a consequence some man who had the foresight perhaps fifteen or twenty years before to purchase a piece of property with the prophetic idea that it was going to be required by a railway or some other company, has that property taken from him for practically nothing, although not only the original purchase but the carrying charges may have cost him a good deal of money. I have seen not one but many cases where properties were expropriated, and that was the ultimate result to the man concerned. I admit that in many instances a railway or a government may require property for very good and sufficient reasons, and in that case it is right to expropriate. But this is the principle I wish to offer as my suggestion—not in regard to this case but in regard to cases in general: I do not believe that either the government or the railways in this country should expropriate property at any time unless there is absolute need for that property. That, in my opinion, is a principle that should be laid down. I have seen cases of expropriation where the railway, or the person concerned for whom the expropriation took place, did not have actual need of the property in question, and this would appear to be such a case. A large area of land was taken for the purpose of preventing speculation; I remember reading something of it in the press, and I think I am right in that. There probably is a good defence of such a course, but there is also a good defence of speculation. If some man had the foresight to see that some day the land would be valuable, I rather think it a good argument that his foresight should be taken into consideration, a thing which is very rarely done before any of the courts I have seen adjudicating on expropriations.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) spoke a moment ago about the homestead of this man. I want the minister to correct me if I am not right, but I think this is the position in regard to this matter; this land was homesteaded by William Beach, who figured that at some time in the future there would be a city at Fort Churchill. There was some trouble about getting title to the homestead in the first place, but finally William Beach did get title. After that, when the government had an idea of going into Churchill, or Nelson at one time, as I understand it, a deal was made with William Beach and his property was taken away from him then, and in place of it other property was given to him. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says that this is expropriation. I claim that it is reexpropriation, that the land was taken from this man in the first place, and in lieu of that land he was given the land which is now held by the Beach estate. Then the government comes along and takes the land again, and this is a special case different altogether from any of the others that may be there. This man has already given up certain rights to the government on account of the port at Churchill, and the government comes back and asks him to give up rights again. Briefly, that is the case. That man had the foresight to go there, and on account of having given the land away he should be given abundant compensation for it.

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to give an instance, for the minister's benefit, of how this question of expropriation by the crown works out, an instance in Vancouver not long ago to which attention was drawn; a small lot of land was held by a man who had bought it, from a speculative standpoint, and the land has been expropriated for the purpose of a rifle range near Vancouver. He paid a few hundred dollars for it; he paid taxes for something like ten years. Under the expropriation proceedings this man was awarded $14.75 for his lot, for which he paid a few hundred dollars and several years' taxes. I brought the case to the attention of my leader. The matter is absolutely too small to take proceedings in, and yet the property has been taken on the initiative of the crown. There is no request from the individual. Surely there is some compensation coming to a man whose property is taken away from him against his wishes and without any application from him.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot confirm what the member for Moose Jaw related, as to the circumstances, because I approached the matter only from the point of view of the situation in which I found it. Standing on that east peninsula myself in 1927 I had to face this situation; that a quarter-section of land four miles from where the dock would most naturally be placed was owned by a number of private parties. The ownership had not changed for a great many years; the land was entirely covered with brush; there never had been any attempt at development of any kind. And, in addition to that, on the original government townsite—the peninsula was surveyed, as I think my hon. friend knows—there were here and there lots—I forget how many, but quite a few—that in some way or other in the past had also passed into the hands of private parties. I had to face the problem of what would result when it was announced that Fort Churchill was to be the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway. I had hoped to get a little support on account of the government having prevented the kind of speculation which undoubtedly would have involved hundreds, if not thousands, of Canadian people in serious loss. Everyone knows what happens in such cases. That quarter-section of land, four miles out, would have been acquired, or some arrangement would have been made, and real estate promoters would have got hold of it; the publicity regarding the project which has developed since the change in port was made would have been used to exploit it; people everywhere would have been encouraged to buy lots at outrageous prices and inevitably would have lost a great deal of money. No one has yet suggested any other means of preventing that sort of thing than the means I have employed on behalf of the government. True, not all of the property is required for strictly railway purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: How much of it? What fraction of it?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot answer exactly as to the size.

Mr. BENNETT: I am told, practically none.

Mr. DUNNING: A comparatively small amount I agree. But these people are to be compensated. That, of course, was a question I had to face in reaching the decision and I was advised that there was in Canada an exchequer court whose business it was to decide as between the subject and the crown with respect to values in such cases. Later it developed that legally we had to make an offer in order to start the machinery of expropriation, and our people were further concerned as to what offer should be made. I can well imagine the criticism I should have encountered in this house had we made any considerable offer for property so situated—property which was of no use for farming purposes, in fact, of no use for any other purpose than the possible extension of Fort Churchill to a point four miles beyond the docks. I can imagine the criticism that would have been made, and justifiably, if I had offered any large sum. Finally the legal officers of the department discovered that one of the principal owners had died and it was necessary, in probating his will to declare a value for these lands, which really had no intrinsic value.

Mr. BENNETT: But his death was prior to Churchill being selected.

Mr. DUNNING: Exactly; and will my hon. friend contend for a moment that that decision to go to Churchill should have the effect of giving to the owners of private property there an unearned increment in connection with what was brought about thereby?

Mr. BENNETT: The exchequer court will settle that.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and that is exactly my point. There is just as much argument, from the point of view of the ordinary citizen, against any unearned increment going to the speculator in such a case as there is on the other side. I am not going to pretend to settle that; I did not pretend to settle it in the first place. I referred the matter to the exchequer court, and in settling the amount which should be offered, our legal officers proposed the amount stated in the probation of the will plus, I think, 15 per cent for forcible taking. At any rate, $11.75 per lot is the offer which was made to start the exchequer court proceedings, and the exchequer court will determine whether or not we should pay more. Of course, we shall have to pay whatever the court awards. But I will put it up to this house: It is not yet too late to surrender to these private parties all the property other than that which is required for the railway purposes, and if this committee of the House of Commons thinks that would be in the best interests of Canada I should like to hear the views of hon. members on the point.

Mr. RYCKMAN: A gentleman who owned one of these lots, or several of them—I do not know whether acquired from the Beach estate or not—saw me with reference to what should be paid. He received this notice of expropriation but he did not receive any offer of $11.75 per lot. On his behalf I wrote to the department—I regret I cannot recall his name—and I received a very courteous reply intimating, as I remember, that the matter will be proceeded with immediately in the exchequer court. But I cannot learn that any sum was at any time offered to him.

Mr. DUNNING: I can explain that.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is that right?

Mr. DUNNING: It may be in an individual case. We were in this difficulty, that we could not make offers to all, for a large number of them are completely unknown and cannot be found; some are in the United States, and others in England and elsewhere. And so an offer was made to the principal owners, the Beach estate, the largest individual owner. Exchequer court proceedings are being taken in that case in the hope of settling a scale of compensation which can be applied generally in connection with the expropriation.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is it correct that $11.75 is the largest sum offered?

Mr. DUNNING: It is the only sum.

Mr. CAHILL: Since the minister has raised the question as to the principle of expropriating property to save people from themselves, I want to voice my objection. I am not familiar with the case except as outlined by the minister to-day, but I do think it is a bad policy for the government to expropriate private property if the principal purpose of expropriating that property is to save citizens from themselves in speculating therein. I think it is uncalled for on the part of either the Dominion or the provincial government to take that attitude.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not want to save people from themselves, but I did think it was the duty of the government, in connection with a wholly government enterprise, to endeavour to save people from being exploited unmercifully, not by themselves, but by others, and not in the ordinary speculative sense of market transactions but in connection with something which, judging from my experience in the west, would undoubtedly be the subject of misrepresentation and would undoubtedly be sold at a figure far in excess of actual value.

Mr. CAHILL: I do not think the government can avoid that difficulty arising in any event. At any rate I do think it is bad policy for the government to expropriate property on any pretext other than the necessity of the government for that property. I rise merely to object to the principle involved in that course. If it were left to me, I would simply let the Beach estate retain the property and dispose of it to the best possible advantage, exercising their own judgment with respect to misrepresentation. No one would be hurt if that were done, whereas under the other procedure it is possible that people may be injured. They will certainly have agreements and it is uncalled for on the part of the government to interfere in the matter at all except for the necessities of the railway, in taking what property is required for railway purposes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am in accord with the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill). He says he thinks it is unwise; I think it is unlawful. I do not believe the government can do it under the British North America Act. What is the position? I should like the minister to consider this. He says that on behalf of the government a large extent of property is expropriated so that speculation therein may not take place, although the Dominion may not want it for the actual purposes of the railway. Then what happens? This expropriation may not be resisted by the man who could resist it. He allows the government to hold that property and the government builds the railway. There is settlement there and improvements follow; as suggested, a considerable city grows up. Now the government is taking an enhanced value for property which it could never use in connection with the railway and has a lot of property to which it is not entitled and which belongs to the individual.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister asked what suggestions could be made, and later on he inquired whether the committee would have the government abandon the whole project to speculators. I suggest this. Inasmuch as the government is apparently going into a townsite proposition—because that is what it amounts to; the minister cannot escape it, for there is bound to be a townsite at Churchill—in that case there is going to be a large expenditure. Between the $34,000,000 and another $8,000,000 to finish, there is going to be a townsite.

Mr. DUNNING: The government is not going into townsite business. It has turned over to the government of Manitoba all the area which would be used for ordinary townsite purposes.

Mr. STEVENS: The government of Manitoba, then; it makes no difference to me which government it is. What I suggest is this. The property expropriated, which was originally taken by persons whose foresight indicated that at some time there was going to be a port there, should be taken from them on a share basis; that is, whatever value accrues to that property later on should be shared with these people. I think it is an unfair thing to expropriate that property under the aegis of a railway company or a railway development, or under the power of the crown, and prevent these people from reaping some return on the investment they made ten, twenty or thirty years ago. I think this movement started about twenty-five years ago and was carried on for perhaps ten years. There is objection to wild speculation, but there is no doubt that these people went in there, some of them locating on land and others purchasing on a purely speculative basis. However, they paid their money for the land; the minister has said that in some cases $600 was paid for some of the lots. Why should not these people have an opportunity to get back some of that money?

Mr. DUNNING: Then my hon. friend suggests the withdrawal of the expropriation proceedings?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not say that at the moment. I would not encourage wild speculation, but I think the element of vicious speculation which has been described by the minister will be abundantly provided against by the fact that the government itself, or the railway company, will make announcements from time to time as to what the likely business of the port will be. There is not much danger of vicious speculation being carried on if the government does its duty in issuing fair, truthful and accurate reports of this kind. Frankly, I think it is unfair to deprive these people of the opportunity of reaping some return on their investment.

Mr. IRVINE: I have not been able to ascertain what the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me in this discussion have been objecting to in connection with the townsite at Fort Churchill. So far as I have been able to understand it, their objection has been to some detail in connection with the expropriation.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the objection is to the principle.

Mr. IRVINE: Then I wish to congratulate the minister on standing up for that principle. I do not know whether my agreement with the minister comes about because for once he is right, or whether it is because I am wrong—

Mr. BENNETT: You are both wrong, as usual.

Mr. IRVINE: —but at any rate I am bound to express my opinion on this issue. Anyone who knows anything at all of Canada in particular and of the entire North American continent in general knows that the inflated values of land and especially of townsites has been one of the greatest curses in the development of the west. I do not think there is any doubt about that; I do not think even the hon. gentlemen who are objecting to this principle will take issue with that statement. It is all very well to object to the principle of expropriation in a case of this kind, which I presume has been carried on intelligently by the minister after investigation, but what about the expropriation which takes place after a big boom, when people who have put a little money into land find themselves unable to hold the land because of inflated values, and it goes back either to the original owner or to the city. What about that kind of expropriation? It is not called by that name; it is part of the game, part of the gamble, and we forget about it, but after all I presume that is the thing the minister is trying to prevent. I do not know that this ever has been done before.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think it has.

Mr. IRVINE: For that very reason I wish to congratulate the minister on having had the courage to make this one experiment. Heaven knows we have had sufficient experiences of the other kind, and I do not believe anyone wishes more of them. There is not a town in the west that is not an object lesson in bad speculation of this kind, and if anything can be done to prevent that sort of thing in the future development of western Canada, it should be carried out; if this is not the way to do it I want to find out how it can be done. Let us have other constructive suggestions.

I have no quarrel with this expropriation; I think the course taken by the minister was the courageous one, which showed initiative and statesmanship on his part. I hope the venture will be a success; I presume now it will be continued by the provincial government, but I hope they will carry out this idea. If the experiment fails we will know enough not to do it again, but after all this is a comparatively small experiment in itself. If it is successful, as I am sure it will be if it is carried on properly, then we shall know how to prevent speculation in land in future, and that will be a fine thing for everyone concerned.

Everyone knows that the increase in land values is not due to any individual but rather to the population at large; it is a social value which should not be monopolized by any individual or any concern. By this course which has been followed by the minister the social values which have been created by the people will be left to the people instead of being taken by a few individuals who happened to get in on the ground floor when the developments began.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to support the position taken by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. It may be that the family which went in to Churchill to homestead some years ago have certain claims upon the government; as a matter of fact I think they have, and their rights should be safeguarded. Ostensibly they took up homestead land; possibly they had some ulterior motives, but at least the land was granted to them on the ground that it was agricultural land, which is in an entirely different class from a townsite. I do not see why an individual family should reap all the benefits from a townsite when they secured the property in the first place as agricultural land; I cannot see that they are entitled to all the enhanced value. Further, with regard to those people who made early investments, those were distinctly speculative in character. It might be the part of wisdom and of justice to allow some fair return on investments made by those who went there in the early days and perhaps from the very first advocated this scheme, but if we do that I think we are going as far as we should go.

The principle of excess appropriation has been adopted in a great many countries, including Great Britain, and I am inclined to think that some of us, as I suggested on a previous occasion, from now on will be drawing the policies of Great Britain to the attention of the house much more than has been the case in the past. In connection with the construction of one of those great thoroughfares in the city of London I remember that the principle of excess appropriation was adopted; a great deal of land on both sides of the highway was taken over and the enhanced value of the land on each side was sufficient to pay for the entire improvement. The same thing has been done in other countries. I am not discussing the question of whether or not such action comes directly under the Railway Act, but I do not see any objection to the recognition of the principle, and it is the principle involved to which objection has been taken.

As the hon. member for Wetaskiwin has said, the enhanced value of the land is entirely a community created value. The fact that individuals have been able under our laws to appropriate what really belongs to the community is no reason why we should continue that policy in future, especially in such a case as this where the government has, by its own action, constructed a road which is definitely responsible for the enhanced value of the land. I hope the minister will see his way clear to carry through his policy in that regard.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no desire to avoid this discussion, but, of course, the source of the support makes me rather scratch my head and wonder as to whether or not I have made a mistake.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it must convince the minister that he is wrong.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is convinced that I am wrong?

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely; I have been convinced from what I have heard.

Mr. DUNNING: That observation by my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, is more or less of a counterweight to the discomfort which I was feeling a few moments ago at receiving support from the far corner. In this country, matters of equity and justice are decided by our courts, and the exchequer court will decide the equitable treatment to be given the owners of property. I can well imagine what would have happened in the house had I not taken this action.

Mr. BENNETT: What nonsense.

Mr. DUNNING: I would have been asked how many friends of the government had lots in Fort Churchill.

Mr. BENNETT: Four miles away from the port?

Mr. DUNNING: That would not matter.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Did not the hon. member see the same thing in Calgary?

Mr. BENNETT: Six miles away.

Mr. DUNNING: I am fairly well satisfied that this will not work out disastrously for any one concerned. I must suggest that the expropriation of a quarter section of land is after all a comparatively small part of the great development of the north country occasioned by the Hudson Bay railway, and I would rather encourage the committee to a discussion of the matter in hand rather than on this one quarter section.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. BOYS: I understand the minister to say that the lands in question had been handed over to the Manitoba government?

Mr. DUNNING: Not this quarter section.

Mr. BOYS: Have any of the lands which are being expropriated been turned over to the Manitoba government?

Mr. DUNNING: As I explained a few moments ago, in the area immediately surrounding that site there were occasional lots which were owned by private parties, and they were expropriated. Some of these may be in the area which has been turned over to the Manitoba government, but the land comprising the Beach homestead is four or five miles away from that point, and it was not thought necessary to turn that land over to the Manitoba government for townsite purposes. In addition, there is the matter of a water supply for the port. This will involve the consideration of the drainage area a few miles out, and it may be considered that the Dominion should retain that particular part of the peninsula, and also of all other crown property. It must be remembered that this quarter section is completely surrounded by property which has never left the ownership of the crown.

Mr. THORSON: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the passing of this item, but there are certain matters connected with the Hudson Bay railway which are of vital interest to the people of the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba and I think they should be brought to the attention of this committee. The hon. Minister of Railways is to be congratulated upon the energy with which he has pushed forward the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, but he has not yet finished the task which he has undertaken. There are two questions of particular interest to the province of Manitoba and to the city of Winnipeg which have been the subject of a great deal of discussion during the past year. The first has to do with the freight rates which will prevail on the Hudson Bay railway, so far as Manitoba points are concerned, and the second relates to shorter and more direct railway connection between the city of Winnipeg and the Hudson Bay railway itself. These questions have been widely discussed and have been the subject of two resolutions passed by representative bodies in the province of Manitoba. The first of these resolutions was passed at the city of Winnipeg on February 12 of this year by a representative gathering of business men from all points in Manitoba meeting in conference with the Winnipeg Board of Trade.

I think there were 128 delegates at that meeting, representing 51 different boards of trade. They passed unanimously the following resolution:

Be it therefore resolved: That in the opinion of this meeting it is Manitoba's just right that it should be maintained in equally as good relative position in respect to railway facilities and rates for the marketing of its produce, both crops and live stock, as well as its products of the mines, lakes and forests, as it heretofore enjoyed.

And that in any construction of new routes or rearrangement of traffic or rates that this position be provided for either by the construction of such lines of railway as may be necessary to effect that result which the Union of Boards of Trade may endorse or by the equalization of rates as will compensate for any altered position in which the people of Manitoba as a whole may be placed in the shipping of their products by reason of newly constructed lines in adjoining provinces or exchange of commerce between the various parts of the province.

And that for the purpose of insuring such protection that the parliament of Canada and the various ministers thereof as well as the Board of Railway Commissioners be memorialized on behalf of the residents of the province setting forth fully their case in this respect.

On April 9, of this year the second resolution was passed, by the legislature of the province of Manitoba as follows:

1. Whereas there is a need for a more direct railway connection between the agricultural areas and distributing and manufacturing centres of the province of Manitoba upon the one hand and the northern natural resources and the Hudson bay seaports of the said province, upon the other for the purpose of improving and facilitating trade; of participating in the import and export trade through the Hudson bay, and developing the said northern natural resources.

Therefore, be it resolved, that this house hereby approves of the action of the Hon. Charles Dunning, Minister of Railways in the federal government, in authorizing the compilation and coordination of all existing data as to the alternative routes for such more direct railway connection, with a view to ascertaining which route or routes is the most suitable.

2. That this house hereby respectfully urges that such compilation and coordination be carried forward without interruption or delay until completion, and that, as soon as possible thereafter, a decision be reached as to the most suitable route or routes over which to construct the aforesaid direct railway connection, and that the work on such direct railway connection be forthwith commenced and carried forward to completion with all dispatch.

3. That this house is of the opinion that, pending the completion of such direct railway connection, the railway rates between the shipping points on the existing lines of railroad in southern and western parts of the province, upon the one hand, and the shipping points on the Hudson bay and Flin Flon railways, upon the other, should be adjusted, having regard:

Firstly—To the railway rates which would or could prevail, upon a mileage basis as if the projected direct railway connection so decided upon, as aforesaid, were actually completed and in operation.

Secondly—To the actual and potential competition by water haul over Manitoba's great lakes and the Red, Saskatchewan and Nelson rivers.

Thirdly—To the favourable geographical position of southern and western Manitoba, with respect to northern Manitoba and the Hudson bay.

Fourthly—To the fact that northern Manitoba is, or should be, tributary to the province of Manitoba, on at least as favourable terms as any other province, in view of the expenditures, undertakings and administrative responsibilities of the government of Manitoba in the development of northern Manitoba.

And that, in the opinion of this house, eventually by such more direct railway connection, and in the interim by such rate adjustments, effect should be given to Manitoba's just right to be maintained in equally as good a relative position as regards railway facilities and rates upon freight moving into and out of northern Manitoba, as Manitoba has enjoyed until the date hereof.

I think this second resolution may be considered as being the opinion of the people of Manitoba as expressed by their elected representatives. I do not need to argue at any great length the benefits which would accrue to the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba through shorter and more direct railway connection between the city of Winnipeg and the Hudson bay railway. These benefits are obvious. There have been four proposals put forward. The first is that a cut-off be constructed from Mafeking to The Pas; the second is that the present Canadian National Railway line east of lake Manitoba be extended from Gypsumville to the Hudson Bay railway; the third is that a water and rail route should be established from Winnipeg by way of the Red river, lake Winnipeg, the Nelson river, and then by rail from a point on the Nelson river to connect with the Hudson Bay railway; and the fourth is that a railway line be constructed east of lake Winnipeg to connect with the Hudson Bay Railway.

I do not propose to enter into any prolonged discussion as to the relative merits of these various proposals. I realize, of course, that a great deal of study must be undertaken with respect to the various proposals that have been brought forward, but there are certain facts which, I think, should be placed before the committee in order that it may understand clearly the importance of this question of shorter, more direct railway connection between Winnipeg and the Hudson Bay railway. The present distance between Winnipeg and Fort Churchill by rail is approximately 960 miles. The construction of the Mafeking cut-off would reduce that by a comparatively short distance, I think about seventy miles, but the extension of the line from Gypsumville to the Hudson Bay railway would reduce the railway distance by more than 200 miles, and the establishment of the rail and water route or the construction of the road east of lake Winnipeg would shorten the railway distance by more than 330 miles, or more than one-third of the present distance. I do not wish to delay the passing of this item, but we feel in Manitoba that we are entitled to share to as full a degree as possible the success which, we are confidence, will attend the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, and that we are entitled to be placed upon an equality with our sister province to the west in the enjoyment of the benefits that will follow from the completion of this new outlet to the sea. I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways to state to the committee and to the country at large what consideration has been given by the government to the proposals that have been put forward, and what action will be taken with regard to them.

Mr. DUNNING: It is very difficult to review, without going into great detail, the ground that has been traversed by my hon. friend. Broadly speaking, it is a question of adjusting the present railway systems of the west so as to enable the Hudson Bay outlet to be reached most economically by all parts of the area which it might reasonably be expected to serve. I regard this not as a Manitoba question, or a Saskatchewan question, or an Alberta question, but rather as one relating to the railway economics of that part of the country.

As is well known by members of the committee, the Canadian National branch line program of 1927 and also of 1929 gave evidence of the desire of the Canadian National to provide such links as would make possible the fullest utilization of the Hudson Bay railway. But I am free to say that the work of the Canadian National along that line so far has been with regard to the outward-bound shipment of grain and other western produce rather than with regard to what may be termed inbound traffic which, of course, is as yet uncertain in volume. That must be worked out. I have every faith that such traffic will exist, but as to its movement, a great deal depends upon what ocean rates may be established after the port is opened.

With regard to the specific question to which my hon. friend directs attention, that is a more direct route from the city of Winnipeg to the north, it is difficult to give a definite answer as to which would be the more practical solution which should be embarked upon. In fact, I believe I am correct in saying that those in Manitoba who have given the question painstaking and careful study, as indicated by my hon. friend, are not themselves absolutely agreed upon any particular solution of their northern outlet problem. I think the best course to follow in connection with the matter is to investigate carefully the practicability of the various proposals advanced and any others which may develop out of them in order that we may be sure that the expenditures we are proposing to the house are wise. My hon. friend will surely not expect me to say anything regarding the rate aspect of the resolutions which he read. The matter of railway rates is, of course, one for the railway commission to deal with and I shall not, at the moment at any rate, attempt to discuss that phase of the question.

Mr. FORKE: That is the important part.

Mr. THORSON: Will the hon. minister be good enough to undertake on behalf of the government that the department will investigate as fully as it lies within the power of the department to do, the feasibility of the various proposals for shorter and more direct railway connection that have been advanced?

Mr. DUNNING: Some weeks ago, as a result of representations of the character to which my hon. friend refers, I gave instructions to the deputy minister that that should be done. I do not want to be bound to a particular day or hour at which it will be completed because the department has very many enterprises and investigations going on, but I can assure my hon. friend that it is intended to investigate the whole matter of possible northern routes from Winnipeg.

Mr. WARD: This year?

Mr. DUNNING: Please do not ask me to bind myself to completing it this year.

Mr. WARD: No, but will the survey be made this year?

Mr. DUNNING: At least a start will be made this year. The field of investigation is much larger than some people think, but I can assure my hon. friends it will be undertaken as soon as possible. I would prefer not to be bound to a definite promise as to time because that is rather uncertain.

Mr. WARD: But some progress will be made this year?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I can guarantee that some progress will be made this year.

Mr. BANCROFT: Quite a bit of progress?

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to the Hudson Bay townsite, I find that the privy council dealt with a couple of the clauses that we have discussed, in the Boland case in 1926. When I heard the hon. member for Pontiac make the observation that he did, coupled with the speech of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, I realized that we were getting into dangerous waters. To assert that a minister of the crown, of his own mere motion, can file an expropriation plan and thereby deprive a citizen of this country of his property, and thereafter fix a price for it based upon any assumption that is thought desirable is at variance with all the principles that govern our law, and when the hon. gentleman cheered so loudly about unearned increment from property, certainly it was not their property that was being taken.

An hon. MEMBER: Both of them have gone out now.

Mr. STEVENS: Having saved the country.

Mr. BENNETT: You may be sure that it is a dangerous principle to lay down that the decision of the minister shall not be called in question except by some person acting for him or for the crown. He can go to work and expropriate property in the name of the crown and fix compensation on the basis of what somebody else fixes for probate purposes. That is all wrong. When you talk of unearned increment, that unearned increment belongs to the provincial government, not to this government. What about the unearned increment of the Chicago man who bought a lot in good faith for $600 many years ago? The minister has said that he himself is the saviour of the country; he is saving it from speculation.

Mr. DUNNING: No, from exploitation.

Mr. BENNETT: All right. He comes down from Fort Churchill and gives an interview to the press of what he has done and makes a hero of himself as the great saviour of his country from exploitation. Is he going to save from exploitation every townsite on this railroad or not? Is he going to save from exploitation every townsite on the Canadian National? If he is going to do that on the Canadian National, is he going to do the same thing in respect to the Canadian Pacific? Is he going to save every community from exploitation? Here was a quarter-section of land four miles from the docks, and the minister, when he is nailed down, says that practically no portion of it is required for railway purposes. He does not take it for the railway; he expropriates it for the crown, and the section says that that proceeding cannot be called in question except by the minister or some person acting for him or for the crown. In the Boland case the railway desired to expropriate a piece of property and the first judge yielded to the contention that they had the same powers that the crown had and so, as the railway wanted the land, it could be taken. The case was appealed to the appellate division in Ontario, and Lord Dunedin, when the case was decided in the privy council, where the judgment was reversed, said:

> It is not a conclusion to be easily reached that they should act in such a manner with all the powers of an autocratic despot.

Those are words that every thoughtful man should ponder. We have now diplomatic relations with the United States. Since this parliament began, the rights of an American citizen were alleged to have been infringed in this country. He makes representations to Washington, and Washington makes representations to our diplomatic representative as to what is to be done. In this case we have a man in Chicago buying in good faith a lot in Fort Churchill for $600. According to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin and the hon. member for Winnipeg, what is wanted is some red-blooded, virile, strong minister who will say, "I will save Canada from exploitation. I will take this man's property and offer him $11.75 for it." Does not that come within the language of Lord Dunedin. I say that you cannot reach a conclusion favourable to the minister except by assuming that the minister is to act with all the powers of an autocratic despot. That is not the function of the Minister of Railways in Canada. There are ministers who think it is, not necessarily the Minister of Railways. When you talk of unearned increment, whom are you taking it away from? A man puts $600 into a lot, and you offer him $11.75 and say that the Dominion can take the difference between the $600, and the interest on it for those years, and $11.75, although there is a commandment that says "Thou shalt not steal."

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows how unfair that is.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not unfair.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said "Thou shalt not steal." He insinuates that the government is stealing this property.

Mr. BENNETT: What else is it? According to Lord Dunedin—

Mr. DUNNING: I do not care what Lord Dunedin or any other lord said in regard to that. It is not stealing. The government of Canada is taking something which had no value whatever save as the government of Canada gave it value—

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman sit down?

Mr. DUNNING: —and will pay for it whatever the court decides.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman once more must remember that this is not the Saskatchewan legislature.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend—

Mr. BENNETT: I have the floor.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the usual cry. What is it now?

Mr. DUNNING: I will state the point of order as soon as my hon. friend takes his seat.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the point of order?

Mr. DUNNING: The point of order is this, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend has cast reflections on the conduct of another legislative body in this country, as he frequently does.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not a question of order.

Mr. DUNNING: I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to rule on the point of order, and while I am on my feet I will raise another point of order, as to whether it is in order by inference to accuse the government of Canada of stealing.

Mr. BENNETT. Stealing. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, was that references were made to another legislature. I said, "This is not the Saskatchewan legislature." That is all. The hon. member raised a second point of order. He says: By inference I accuse the government of stealing. I made no such observation. I said that there was a declaration, "Thou shalt not steal" and that still stands. The hon. gentleman says that he cares not what Lord Dunedin or any other lord says. The Lord I had reference to was the Lord of all creation, and I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman's statement as to his freedom in regard even to that.

Mr. DUNNING: This surely cannot be allowed, Mr. Chairman. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement. He stated that I had no regard for the Lord of creation.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. BENNETT: He said that he did not care what Lord Dunedin or any other lord said, and I said that it was the Lord of all creation that made the statement I was referring to.

Mr. POULIOT: Our Lord said: You shall love each other.

The CHAIRMAN: I heard the hon. gentleman's remarks with respect to another legislative body, but I did not take it that there was anything derogatory to that other body in his references. With respect to the other matter, I fail to see that there is a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: I was observing, Mr. Chairman, that it is not right to say the difference between $11.75 and $600 should be taken by anybody, whether it be the collective power of the state or somebody else. It is not right to say that the crown, unless it requires it for the overwhelming interest of the country, should take that property away and say, we will give you $11.75. We have a certain principle in connection with these matters. The principle is that a man who has the right of possession and of title to a property cannot have it taken away from him lightly unless it is required for the overwhelming interest of the state. And in this instance the crown—not the railway, mark you, but the crown—expropriates this property, and tenders the man who paid $600 for it, $11.75. Then the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) says the minister is to be congratulated because he expropriated another man's property, not for the railway but to prevent exploitation. I submit to this committee and to this country that the minister has undertaken a responsibility which cannot be narrowed down to Fort Churchill; he must make it apply to every part of Canada through which this system carries its ramifications and lines. That is a position which he cannot maintain. If we are to be the guardians of the people of the country with respect to their speculations and their purchases, well and good, let us say so. We have in British law this principle running down for a thousand years, that when a man buys property and pays for it and gets title to it, it cannot be taken away from him by compulsory proceedings unless the interests of the state are paramount to the private interests. We hear about the question of unearned increment. It might be well to remember the legislation passed in Great Britain by the Right Hon. Mr. Lloyd George in connection with that very thing, and yet we lived to see the day when it was quietly repealed.

Mr. DUNNING: I have only a little to say. I sometimes envy the ability that makes it possible to take half a truth and twist it around with most dexterous language into something which is entirely untrue.

Mr. BENNETT: That is strictly out of order.

Mr. DUNNING: If my friend cares to raise a point of order I will argue it.

Mr. BENNETT: Not at all. The great parliamentary experience of the hon. gentleman should be a guide to his conscience.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend finds the cap fits him I hope he will wear it. I made no reference to my hon. friend, and I am very glad that he confirms what I said. The facts are what count, and the facts are simple. Here was a decision to be made by a government—it could not be made otherwise—as to the change of location of the port and of the terminal of the railway. Here was certain property, the greater part of it owned by the crown, a small part owned by a large number of private individuals, the majority of whom had ceased to have any hope of getting anything out of it.

Mr. STEVENS: But whose judgment was now being vindicated.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps that is so.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps it is so.

Mr. DUNNING: As a matter of fact if those people had any complaint it should be directed against the government which changed the port from Churchill to Nelson in the first place, because the judgment of the individuals who acquired that property was exercised before the original contemplation of Churchill as the port, and government action took the port away from Churchill completely, and not action by this government. However, this situation existed, as I said a while ago. It had to be faced; decision had to be made. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition recited the circumstances correctly up to a certain point, and there he stopped. He says the minister autocratically—he uses the language of Lord Dunedin, or some other lord, but I would like to read the whole of the judgment before I would accept that part of it as being the complete expression of Lord Dunedin's opinion; that would only be fair. And then my hon. friend says there is a law, "thou shalt not steal," with the plain inference that the government was stealing this property from those people. That was the clear insinuation of my hon. friend. After all, what is the fact? The government says it was in the best interests of this country, having regard to all the peculiar circumstances surrounding Fort Churchill, for the state to take this land. And there is a statute which my hon. friend read, the Expropriation Act, which enables a minister of the crown to file expropriation plans. Those plans were filed. Then my hon. friend stops and says dramatically, "thou shalt not steal." He knows perfectly well that no stealing is either intended or possible. The Exchequer Court Act was passed by this parliament. Why? To insure that in cases where the government of the day decided in its wisdom, or lack of it, that a certain piece of property was required for governmental purposes, machinery should be available by which the rights of the subject could be protected. My hon. friend says, "thou shall not steal." Does he attach any importance whatever to the fact that there is an exchequer court in Canada, one of the high courts of this country, set up specifically for the purpose of insuring that nothing shall be unjustly taken from the subject by the crown? The minister did not take this property, the government did not take it, without compensation. The government took it subject to the provisions of the Expropriation Act and subject to the decision of the Exchequer Court of Canada as to the value of the property, which, when determined, will be paid to the owners thereof.

In fact most of the discussion this afternoon on this matter, Mr. Chairman, is out of order, because the subject matter of the value of this property is now under adjudication by one of the high courts of this Dominion. Nothing that we say here should affect, at any rate, the judgment to be rendered by that court. I know that the exchequer court will not, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition intimated, steal this property or allow the crown to steal it from the people who own it. If it were possible for the government to steal the property of any individual I should be one of the first to cooperate with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in setting up machinery to prevent it. Neither the crown nor anyone else has the right to steal. But "stealing" is an entirely wrong word to use in connection with a transaction of this kind.

I do not know that we can, with advantage, further discuss the matter. It is before the court. There is one way in which it could be dealt with here, and that is by a motion, on the part of members who feel as strongly as the leader of the opposition does that this policy is a wrong policy, that the proceedings for the expropriation of the privately-owned property on the peninsula at Fort Churchill should be withdrawn. That will require an expression of opinion from this house as to whether or not the government took the proper course in what it did on that occasion. The house cannot settle the value to be paid for the property; that is a matter for the exchequer court. But this house can pass very easily upon the principle as to whether or not, having regard to the unique circumstances, the proper policy was pursued.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. minister has perhaps overlooked one fact. It was to that fact my criticism was directed. Section 1 of the subsection under which he acts reads as follows:

> In all cases, when any such plan and description purporting to be signed by the deputy of the minister, or by the secretary of the department, or by the superintendent of the public work, or by an engineer of the department, or by a land surveyor duly licensed as aforesaid, is deposited of record as aforesaid, the same shall be deemed and taken to have been deposited by the direction and authority of the minister, and as indicating that in his judgment the land therein described is necessary for the purposes of the public work; and the said plan and description shall not be called in question except by the minister, or by some person for him or for the crown.

That is the section, and I hope the minister gets the point of my criticism, which is also the point of the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) and the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross). It is this: that the right to take the lands required for any public work shall not be called in question, except as herein provided. And the minister distinctly said that he took the land to prevent exploitation. That is my criticism. But let me read the rest of the clause:

> And the said plan and description shall not be called in question except by the minister or by some person acting for him or for the crown.

In other words, the question whether or not this land was required for a public work is a question which the unfortunate persons who bought the land may not litigate, inasmuch as it can be litigated only if the minister calls it in question. That was really the point of my criticism, with respect to which I made the observation I did. I trust the minister realizes what is at issue. It is not a question of exploitation. The minister himself this afternoon distinctly said that most of the land was not required for public work.

Mr. DUNNING: Not for railway purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: But that is the only reason for which he could take it.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: No; I will discuss that.

Mr. BENNETT: And the statute so declares.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend confuses—

Mr. BENNETT: The minister said he wanted to prevent exploitation. That being so, and the section being as it is, I say that the lands in question do not come within the section; and these people have property taken away from them for, mark you, a consideration that may or may not be adequate. But that was not the issue. The minister will not admit that it is not required for public work, and no question can be raised except by himself or by some other person acting for the crown.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is confusing two statements I made, or ignoring a part of one or the other. The statute under which the expropriation was made is just what he is quoting—necessary for a public work. This afternoon I was asked the question: Is this required for railway purposes? I said, no, beyond a certain small portion of it which the railway or part of its yards might conceivably require. May I point out to my hon. friend that no expropriation at Churchill could be completely covered by the term railway expropriation. Docks and other works connected with the port are distinctly public works and not railway works.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this required for a public work?

Mr. DUNNING: At the time the expropriation was contemplated a decision had to be made immediately.

Mr. BENNETT: That has to be taken by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DUNNING: No. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that under that section the minister acted within his powers, and if the minister did not he will be told in court very plainly.

Mr. BENNETT: No; they cannot question his judgment.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is surely evading the point.

Mr. BENNETT: No. Here are the words:

> —the same shall be deemed and taken to have been deposited by the direction and authority of the minister, and as indicating that in his judgment the land therein described is necessary for the purposes of the public work;

Mr. DUNNING: I have allowed my hon. friend to interrupt me. Now I hope he will allow me to complete the statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Excuse me; the minister raised the question.

Mr. DUNNING: When I was at Churchill I was compelled to indicate my views to the government in order that government action might be taken, and an immediate decision was necessary, a decision in advance of the determination of detailed plans of all that would be involved in the Fort Churchill works, harbour, railway and everything else. As a matter of fact, the chief engineer tells me now that this area will quite probably be required for water supply purposes for the town and works on the east peninsula. I know that portion of it will certainly be required for railway purposes. The question I was asked this afternoon was in relation to railway purposes, and I told my hon friend frankly that we did not know yet how much land in the vicinity of Churchill would be required for bona fide port development purposes. Particularly is that true with respect to areas containing gravel, a large quantity of which will be required in connection with concrete works. At the time the expropriation was filed there was no doubt at all as to the possible need of this particular quarter-section for bona fide public work development at the port, either in connection with the railway or in connection with the works themselves.

Mr. STEVENS: Then it was not taken to prevent exploitation?

Mr. DUNNING: That was a very important factor in my mind in recommending the course to be followed—undoubtedly.

Mr. BENNETT: Then he has no right.

Mr. STEVENS: Which is it?

Mr. BIRD: I wish to make some remarks with regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr Thorson). I had not intended to speak, but the remarks made by the minister in reply to the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) raised a doubt in my mind as to the appraisal of the situation by the minister. I should like to impress upon him that the public of Manitoba are very much exercised about this matter, and I should not like the minister or the house to think that this is a question of connecting Churchill with Winnipeg. It is a broader question than that; it affects the connecting of southern Manitoba with northern Manitoba. Unfortunately nature has divided Manitoba in a diagonal fashion by the great lakes of Manitoba, an obstruction which has not been felt in years gone by, for the reason, as everyone knows, that northern Manitoba was but a hazy possibility until two or three years ago. But with development in mining north of The Pas, and with the prospective seaport at Churchill, northern Manitoba has become the land of hope and glory for southern Manitoba, and we are all very much disturbed in our minds as to the immediate future.

Manitoba, as all hon. members know, is very restricted in an agricultural sense. We have pretty well reached the extent of development agriculturally, and the opening up of the northern part of the province in the last few years has created a new spirit throughout Manitoba. But we find that there is just a possibility of this prospect vanishing from before our eyes, because we have no railway connection whatsoever between north and south. The great lakes, as I say, cut our province practically in two.

I do not think there is any public question so vital to Manitobans at the present time as this one. The hon. member for Dauphin will agree with me that there is no subject on which it is easier to call together a public meeting than this one; irrespective of party, we are all deeply concerned and interested. I should not like, therefore, to have the impression go abroad, from what the minister said in reply to the hon. member for Dauphin, that he is not thoroughly apprised of the state of public opinion in that province. I do not think he meant it in that way, but it seems to me that he conceived there was no haste, that there was considerable time in which to discuss the matter, and that no decisive step was necessary this year. If that is so, the minister ought to revise his attitude. I believe that public opinion is so unanimous in Manitoba and so much in earnest that the minister ought to pay very close attention to this matter and do something substantial this year. An investigation ought to be set on foot. I think the investigation could be easily finished this year so that the question of some concrete scheme might be faced next year, and I do not think the problem is so very big.

I am sorry these alternative schemes mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre have entered into the question and created some difficulty. I do not think the combined water and rail route should be considered at all; I think it is one of those fanciful propositions which really might be swept aside at once. As for the Gypsumville proposition, that has considerable merit, but the minister will admit that it means the construction of an entirely new Hudson Bay railway, a proposition which I think parliament will not be likely to consider for some years. However, I would remind the minister that the original Hudson Bay railway, which runs through the length and breadth of old Manitoba, is still in existence and that with very little adaptation, very little straightening out and the addition of cut-offs it could be made a very effective connection between northern and southern Manitoba. It would have advantages to which the other routes cannot lay claim at all. The old Canadian Northern runs diagonally across Manitoba to the west of the lakes and connects up the most fertile, productive and picturesque parts of that province. In addition to that, there is almost a direct connection between Winnipeg and The Pas which, as far as I can see, for all future time will be the basis for the great mining development in that country.

I would not like the minister to think this is simply a matter of connecting Fort Churchill and Winnipeg; in its broader aspect it is a question of provincial patriotism. We feel that we do not want to be deprived of the advantages which for all these years we have imagined would be ours. It would be strange irony if the province which has been foremost in advocating the Hudson Bay railway should be finally deprived of those advantages, which certainly will be the case if within the next few years some way is not found to connect us up more directly with the Hudson Bay Railway and with the other developments in that northern country. I am afraid all the forecasts made during my advocacy of the Hudson Bay railway in this house in years gone by will fall short of fulfilment if we do not very shortly get some connection with the road.

As I have already said, I do not want to leave with the minister the impression that I think he is treating this matter too lightly, but his rather offhand reply to the hon. member for Dauphin made me feel that his attitude would create a great deal of dissatisfaction back home in Manitoba.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry if the brevity of my replies to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Dauphin gave the impression of offhandedness. I can assure my hon. friend that continuous representations in connection with these matters have been made to me during the last several months, especially by the hon. members from Manitoba, and I had no intention of conveying the idea that I did not regard the whole matter as one of very serious importance. I certainly do so regard it. If it were as simple from the point of view of the people of Manitoba generally as it is to my hon. friend from Nelson, who would build a connection from Mafeking to The Pas as the most satisfactory solution, the proposition would not be so difficult, but unfortunately the people of Manitoba do not agree that that is a satisfactory solution of the difficulty. I am not prepared to say, and no one else is prepared to say, what is the best thing to do having regard to the situation which has developed; I will go further and say that none of us will be able correctly to estimate what is best until we know more about the volume of inbound traffic via the bay and the ocean rates which will prevail. By that I do not mean that there should be any delay in tackling this problem, but I do say that this one uncertain factor is of very considerable importance in connection with its solution.

If I had desired to be so offhand as my hon. friend feared I was, I might easily have said that this was a proper problem for the management of the Canadian National Railways. I did not do so because of a recognition on my part and on the part of the government that the Hudson bay policy is a matter of government policy rather than of Canadian National Railway policy, although it must be remembered that all the connections at every point south of The Pas are Canadian National connections, and I am not sure that as a parliament we can undertake the building of another Hudson Bay railway down into the southern area, as my hon. friend indicated. I think he said that he doubted whether it would be possible to bring the government portion of the Hudson Bay road, as distinct from the Canadian National portion, south to Winnipeg. I am inclined to agree that before embarking on any project of that kind the government would have to consider very seriously many different aspects of the question. I did not tell my hon. friend from Dauphin to go to the Canadian National management, as I would have done in connection with an ordinary branch line, for the reason I have indicated, because at present this is a matter of government policy. Because of that fact I am prepared from a departmental point of view to investigate all these possible solutions and I will give the assurance that this investigation will be undertaken just as soon as we can organize for it. It was only when my hon. friend from Dauphin tried, with very good grace, to pin me down to a definite time for completing that investigation that I refused to be bound, and I think the house will appreciate that it is very difficult for me to be definite in that regard, bearing in mind the volume of work on hand in the department in connection with the Hudson Bay railway and many other great undertakings in various parts of the country.

Mr. CLARK: I should like to ask the minister who lets the contracts for the construction of either the railway or the terminals?

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with the railway the Canadian National acts as agent for the minister and handles the contracts just as its own contracts are handled. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre obtained information in the special committee on railways and shipping with regard to the contracts let by the Canadian National in that regard. With respect to the port itself no contracts have been let; the work is being done and has been done by the forces of the department up to the present.

Mr. CLARK: That is, the work on the terminals is being done by day labour and there is no cost plus contract at all?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no contract.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister say what proportion of the total number of contracts for the construction of the line was let on a cost plus basis?

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend is dealing with new construction, which of course is all with which I have had anything to do, no portion of the work has been done on a cost plus basis.

Mr. CLARK: Does the minister formally approve the contracts negotiated by the Canadian National Railways before they become effective?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: And the minister states that there have been no contracts of any kind at all relating to the Hudson Bay railway which have been let on a cost plus basis?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know of any and I think that was the answer which was given, after investigation, to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), who asked a question relating to the matter. These answers are a matter of record in the proceedings of the special committee.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It is in the evidence.

Mr. DUNNING: It is in the evidence, yes. The following question was asked:

> What portion of the work is being done by day labour or what portion on a cost-plus basis, and if so, by whom is such work being done?

The answer given was as follows:

> The culverts, the telegraph lines, the track laying, the ballasting, and rehabilitation is being done by the Canadian National Railway forces, and no portion of the work is let on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. CLARK: That would mean it is being done by day labour?

Mr. DUNNING: By day labour.

Mr. CLARK: Practically all the construction, including the terminals is being done by day labour?

Mr. DUNNING: The only exception is the grading on the new portion of the line. My hon. friend will find that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre asked all these questions.

Mr. CLARK: The minister is making a too frequent reference to what was brought out in the committee. If the house has to accept what was brought out in a special committee, we will not get very far. Personally, I have not had the time to read the evidence given before the committee.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will ask the question I will answer it, even though it means that it is being answered for a second time.

Mr. CLARK: If it has been answered already in this house then the minister is justified in his attitude.

Mr. DUNNING: I thought my hon. friend would be satisfied to know where it could be found.

Mr. CLARK: I thought the hon. minister was complaining that I am going over ground which has been already covered before a small committee of eight members; if that is going to be his attitude, then I shall certainly be an objector to any such committee.

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend does not understand me as making that complaint. I was merely indicating to him where he could conveniently find the information about which he was inquiring. If he desires me to repeat that information I shall be happy to do so, but it is already printed in the evidence. If my hon. friend will repeat his question I will be glad to answer it.

Mr. CLARK: If the minister will give me the reference in the evidence where the answers can be found, that might hasten matters. I would like to know what portion of last year's vote was spent in contracts and what portion was spent on day labour.

Mr. DUNNING: In order to answer that question intelligently it will be necessary to separate the two pieces of work, the railway and the port. In connection with the railway, the grading work was the subject of tender. Seven tenders were received and the lowest tenderer received the contract for the work at the price of $1,270,100. With respect to all the other work on the railway it was done entirely by Canadian National forces on a day labour basis in the same way as the Canadian National carry out similar work for themselves. The department audits the day labour costs of the Canadian National on the work and the department pays the amount necessary to meet the accounts of the Canadian National in that regard.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a new departure for a railway company to construct its line by day labour? Has it not always been recognized as being the best practice to call for tenders for certain sections of the line and let the contracts to the lowest responsible bidders?

Mr. DUNNING: That is true with respect to grading, and that is being done by the Canadian National at the present time in connection with all their work. The balance of the work such as ballasting, track laying, small bridges, culverts and telegraph lines is all done by Canadian National forces on a day labour basis. I am not sure of the practice of other roads, but I believe it is the same. For instance, large steel bridges would be matters of contract as my hon. friend can well understand that the day labour force of the railway would not be equipped to do work such as that. The practice followed here is the practice which has been followed by the Canadian National for some years in connection with their work, and it has been found to be satisfactory in operation.

Mr. CLARK: I assume that engineers' estimates are given for particular sections of the line before the work is commenced. Will the minister state whether or not those estimates have been exceeded, and if so, in what instances and by how much?

Mr. DUNNING: In answering my hon. friend's question, we have to take into account the character of a large portion of this work. Some 332 miles of the railway were, as my hon. friend knows, built a considerable number of years ago and were allowed to fall into very bad disrepair. That matter was all threshed out in the house during each of the last two sessions, and to estimate accurately what would be required to rehabilitate the old track, a large portion of which was not and could not be used for many years, was a matter of some difficulty. I do not think I have available the original estimate of the cost of rehabilitation which is, of course, the major factor. I can give the estimate of the cost of completion of the line from the Limestone river to Churchill, because that is all new work. Up to date I believe I am correct in stating that it is reasonably close to the estimate. Of course the work is in process of being carried out and it is impossible to give final figures in connection with that part of the work which is new work, that is the only new work on the railway.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister give the committee, then, the original estimate for the rehabilitation of the line and the actual cost?

Mr. DUNNING: The rehabilitation is not yet completed, but I will give such information as I can.

Mr. CLARK: Has the minister any information to indicate whether or not the estimates of the engineers are being exceeded?

Mr. DUNNING: The original estimate is likely to be exceeded with respect to the rehabilitation of the old line to mile 332. That statement is subject to the qualification that it depends upon what may happen with respect to subsequent settlement of embankments where the later are founded on frozen material which may disintegrate over a period of years. Then we have on the new portion of the line a problem which is also a qualification, namely, the possible cost of dealing with snow trouble across thirty-odd miles of open tundra. That is, there are thirty-odd miles of completely open country which, in those latitudes, produces a special snow problem that may add somewhat to the cost. There is a third qualification applying to the old line, namely, a possible cost of putting gravel ballast between mile 100 and mile 356, rather than leaving the present sand ballast, because in that area there is a stretch of the line which does not happen to contain locally adjacent ballast pits, and so far the best locally available material, pretty sandy in character, has been used. If the order is given to use gravel ballast drawn from considerable distances, that will be a qualification tending to increase the expenditure.

Mr. CLARK: Has the minister an approximate estimate of the amount by which the original estimate of the engineers will be exceeded? There must be some report on that.

Mr. DUNNING: As nearly as I can gather from the reports of the Canadian National engineers with respect to the matter, the original estimated cost to build the line from mile 356 to Churchill, that is what I call the new railway, was $7,543,000. It is not expected that that item will be exceeded save as affected by the qualification which I mentioned a few moments ago. With respect to the rehabilitation, the figures I have are of an inclusive character, including both the old line and the new, and I am trying to separate them as I go along, although it is somewhat difficult to do so. The present estimate of $29,300,000 to rehabilitate and also to complete the line to Churchill includes original cost figures, the cost of building the line originally. There is an estimated expenditure, from April 1, 1926, of $13,973,000, indicating an additional cost of $2,700,000 against the estimate for the lower standard, or about $1,362,000 greater than the estimated cost for the higher standard.

Mr. CLARK: I must confess that I am completely in the dark. I asked the minister whether he had an estimate of how much it would cost to rehabilitate the line. Let us fix that matter now. That was not my whole question. I asked him how much the original estimate for the rehabilitation of the line would be exceeded. I suggested to him that he must have from the engineers some statement as to the approximate amount by which the original estimate would be exceeded. I am now suggesting that we start at the beginning. Will the minister state what was the engineers' original estimate of cost for the rehabilitation of the line?

Mr. DUNNING: There were a number of qualifications, as my hon. friend will remember, to engineers' estimating upon such an uncertain proposition as rehabilitation. I am now having the black records searched to see whether we have any definite estimates from any engineers at any time as to what it would cost to rehabilitate the old line. My hon. friend will understand there were no standards whatever to apply to such a job. In some cases the cost was greater than it would have been to build an entirely new line. Then there would be stretches that would not be so bad. The best information I can give to my hon. friend is in this form. This is an old estimate by the Canadian National as to what might be required:

1A. Branch line standard rehabilitation from LePas to mile 332, $3,000,000.

1B. Better standard and facilities for heavier traffic Le Pas to mile 332, $4,373,000.

The total estimated cost, inclusive of the line to Churchill—that is the awkward feature because new line and rehabilitated line are used everywhere in the figures I have before me—is $12,611,000.

We are not in a position to say that that cost is being exceeded, until we get further along with the work but from the reports of cost we anticipate that difficulties of the kind that I referred to a little while ago, will develop to a point which may involve higher cost on the rehabilitated portion of the line than the estimate.

It appears, however, at the present time that the new line from mile 356 to Churchill may be expected to be completed reasonably within the figure I gave of $7,543,000. As I pointed out, our experience in those northern latitudes is that it is not possible to say with certainty when you finish a line, that it is really finished; that is, troubles are likely to develop in subsequent years and to require to be adjusted by capital expenditures.

Mr. CLARK: Apparently the major portion of this work consists of rehabilitating the line. The minister is unable to tell the committee what was the original estimate for the rehabilitation of that line?

Mr. DUNNING: That is the figure I gave.

Mr. CLARK: I want to be sure about this. I understood the minister to say that the cost of rehabilitation and of building a new line to Churchill was $12,600,000.

Mr. DUNNING: That is rehabilitation and constructing a new line.

Mr. CLARK: Exactly.

Mr. DUNNING: Of which $4,373,000 was the original estimate for rehabilitation.

Mr. CLARK: Plus $3,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: No; that $3,000,000 was for another standard, a lower standard. If one standard were adopted, the cost would be $3,000,000. If another standard were adopted, the cost would be $4,373,000. The question is not one of adding the two amounts together.

Mr. CLARK: Then the estimated cost of rehabilitation is $4,373,000 on one basis and $3,000,000 on another. Which basis was adopted?

Mr. DUNNING: The higher.

Mr. CLARK: What has been the cost to date?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is asking a type of question for which it is rather hard to get the answer out of information I have, which necessarily relates to the whole job, not merely to the part of it which goes to mile 332 and is rehabilitation, but I will try to get the information my hon. friend wants.

Mr. CLARK: Are the accounts not kept so that one can pick out the portion that relates to rehabilitation and that which relates to any ten-mile section of the road?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course the accounts are so kept, but I would ask my hon. friend not to expect me to bring all the accounts of the department here. I will get the information and I hope I may be able to extract it from the summaries which I have. But I would point out to my hon. friend that in spite of my bringing somewhat voluminous information, he has succeeded in presenting a question which requires a closer examination of the accounts to get an answer, but I will get it. Down to March 31st of this year we have expended through the Canadian National on rehabilitation, $4,413,000. That is to mile 332.

Mr. CLARK: What remains to be done?

Mr. DUNNING: I can best answer that by taking an estimate here given that it may exceed the amount originally estimated by about $1,362,000.

Mr. CLARK: That would be about 30 per cent more than the original estimate. I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say. My hon. friend is making the calculation.

Mr. CLARK: The original estimate was $4,373,000, and it is estimated that that will be exceeded by $1,362,000, which is roughly 30 per cent in excess of the original estimate. Apparently all this work on the Hudson Bay railway is being done on this basis—estimate, day labour, and then later we face excessive cost. Certainly we do in this case up to about 30 per cent. A contractor is bound to give a more accurate estimate than that. We could ask numerous contractors for their estimates, and the one who gives the lowest estimate could be tied down to that amount, and he would not be paid an excessive cost to the amount of $1,362,000 as in this case. The country would be saved money by constructing that line on a contract basis rather than by day labour or on a cost plus basis.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend wants to be fair, but again he is confusing two things—the reconstruction or rehabilitation of the old line and the building of that portion of the line which is new. He is basing his criticism upon an engineer's estimate which was made on the cost of rehabilitation. I am critical of engineers as a general rule, but I certainly think they cannot be criticized very severely in connection with an attempt to estimate what it will cost to rehabilitate 350 miles of railway over muskeg, with all the variable conditions of the track. That was an effort to give us something to guide us, and the engineers made it quite clear that there were none of the usual factors present which would enable them to estimate with any degree of accuracy. When it came to building new track we did let a contract, but my hon. friend is surely not under the impression that any contractor would make a bid for building a road through that country on a lump sum basis and stand by it. The Canadian National is doing the work under virtually the same conditions as those upon which a contractor would undertake it; that is, a unit price, so much per yard for this, that and the other material. A contractor would never think of tying himself down to a lump price for the whole job.

Mr. CLARK: I realize that.

Mr. DUNNING: When my hon. friend draws the conclusion that we could have saved money by letting a contract for this rehabilitation to some firm other than the Canadian National, I cannot agree with him at all. If we had asked for tenders for that work, in view of all the variable factors connected with it and the different kinds of work involved, we would have had to pay more than it will cost us to have it done by the Canadian National, with experienced forces and equipment of their own. If we had let a contract for that rehabilitation to some outside contractor we would have had to pay interest on the equipment and all that sort of thing. The Canadian National has the equipment in its own service and hence could perform and did perform that service more economically than a contractor could possibly have done.

Mr. CLARK: The minister, then, is of the opinion that day labour is more economical than tender and contract?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows that I did not say that. In connection with this piece of work, being of the character it is, it was more economical for us to get the Canadian National's regular forces to do that work for us, paying them actually what it cost them, than it would have been to let a contract to a contractor who because of the uncertainty of the volume and character of the work involved would undoubtedly have allowed a tremendous margin for safety in addition to his ordinary profit.

Mr. CLARK: A lot of the new work is being let on the day labour basis, is it not?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CLARK: I understood the minister to say that only the grading had been let by contract.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. CLARK: And that the remainder, the terminals and the laying of steel, was being done by day labour. Am I correct in that?

Mr. DUNNING: So far as the terminals, the roundhouses and that sort of thing are concerned, the Canadian National follows the same practice as it does with similar structures on its own lines. That class of work is done by contract. But again, I repeat, there are certain kinds of work which the Canadian National management, who are experts in this work, and who have proven by their successful management of the road that they know what they are about, have found can be most economically done by day labour; and we take their word for it that the application of precisely the same principles by the same men is the best and most economical way of building this new road.

Mr. CLARK: Are the terminals being built by day labour?

Mr. DUNNING: When my hon. friend says terminals, just what does he mean?

Mr. CLARK: I understand that this estimate that we are considering is for the Hudson Bay railway and terminals. I think the minister should be in a much better position than I to say what the terminals are. He has the information surely; I have not, and I am asking him. If there are no terminals, why is the word "terminals" used in this vote? It is a substantial amount, $6,500,000. What are we voting this money for if there are no terminals? If there are terminals what are they and how are they being built?

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend is not serious, but I will try to comply with his request for information in so far as I can, and in so far as his questions are reasonable.

Mr. CLARK: Does the minister say it is unreasonable for me to ask what the terminals consist of, when the word "terminals" is used in this vote?

Mr. DUNNING: I understand fully my hon. friend's object. and I will try to be as courteous as I can in helping him to attain it. My hon. friend started by asking whether the terminals were being built by day labour. I asked him what he had in his mind when he asked the question regarding terminals.

Mr. CLARK: The terminals that are being built under this vote.

Mr. DUNNING: I will try again. Such structures as the Canadian National, for their own railway, would have built by contract—I have in mind roundhouses or station buildings—are being let to contract by the Canadian National in the case of the Hudson Bay railway. Such work as would be done on the Canadian National lines by the company's own forces is being done by the company's own forces in this case. All the work which is at present being carried on by the departmental forces in connection with the harbour terminals, the dredging work, and so forth, is being done by day labour.

Mr. CLARK: I wonder if the minister could tell whether in the committee the list of the contracts which have been let and are outstanding was given, with amounts.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it was not asked for. I can supply that readily.

Mr. CLARK: I should like to have that.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know that I have it before me. There was just the grading contract, and I believe there was one contract for a steel bridge—

Mr. CLARK: The minister stated that the contract had been let for roundhouses, for instance. He now states that only the grading contract—

Mr. DUNNING: I was going on, if my hon. friend had not interrupted me, to speak of the possibility of there being contracts in connection with roundhouses. I know my hon. friend does not want to delay me, and that he is serious in seeking all this information, and I am very anxious indeed to give it to him. We have not at the moment a list of all the contracts let by the Canadian National Railways up to the present time. Such a list will be secured and will be supplied later, if possible to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: This money is being voted by parliament, and it is being voted for a government undertaking. The Auditor General, therefore, should have control over the expenditure so far as this work is concerned. Is there any evidence, other than the payment to the Canadian National Railways, by which we can check it up in the public accounts?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is quite right in stating that this being an expenditure by the government of Canada, of the funds of Canada, it is subject to the audit of the Auditor General. As to the agency relationship, the department, I presume under the direction of the Auditor General,—which is the same arrangement as exists in the department itself,—that is, under our own auditing staff, audits the accounts of the Canadian National Railways as presented to us, the day labour sheets, and all that sort of thing, in the same manner as the departmental audit staff deals with any other expenditure that is in progress.

Mr. BENNETT: That partly answers the question I am asking. To-day we vote, we will say, three millions dollars for the Hudson Bay railway. To what extent has this parliament, through the public accounts committee, the power next year to examine those accounts? As I see it, none at all.

Mr. DUNNING: Offhand, I do not know what the legal position is, but I would certainly expect the public accounts to have authority to examine everything. That would be my attitude absolutely.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it not a fact that the moneys are paid to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And that all we have control over is that the Canadian National Railways get the money, and we have no way of checking its expenditure of that money.

Mr. DUNNING: I consent to the principle right now that we are entitled to follow their expenditures right to the end when they are acting as agents for the crown in this matter.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister sees the the difficulty, does he not? If we had the expenditure made by the government direct to a contractor—and the Canadian National Railways must occupy that position either as contractor or as agent—we would then have in the public accounts committee all the expenditures made in connection with the Hudson Bay railway. At the moment all we have is a check to the Canadian National Railways; the Auditor General's report does not deal with that money so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised that the amounts paid to the Canadian National Railways are itemized in the public accounts.

Mr. BENNETT: Part of them; and in that connection I could not quite follow the answer given by the minister to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark)

Mr. DUNNING: That is what I am advised. Quite frankly I have not checked up on that feature of it, but I have no doubt at all as to the matter, particularly with respect to the public accounts committee having the right to follow these expenditures completely to the end. And I am advised that details of the amounts paid to the Canadian National Railways are given in the public accounts.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right, but the answer to a question asked by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard is certainly at variance with that understanding.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not recollect the answer.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a dredge at Port Nelson at the end of a pier. I think it cost one million dollars delivered at Nelson, did it not?

Mr. DUNNING: I will get the accurate information. There are many years of history behind this project, and it is very difficult to have everything here.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not want to press the minister to answer what he is not in a position to answer. My advice is that the dredge cost something like one million dollars and is lying across the pier, thirty feet at each end, with just enough extension at one end to balance the machinery at the other, and the dredge is in good shape. But another dredge was purchased and brought in to be used at Churchill, and two new lighters from eastern Canada were brought to Churchill although there were boats at Nelson which, while a little out of repair, could easily have been put in commission. That is a matter about which I should like a statement from the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know the original cost of the suction dredge. My best advice is that it was delivered to the government of that day at some point in eastern Canada at a cost of $270,000, to which must be added, of course, the cost of taking it up there, which would be very considerable. I do not want again to appear condemnatory of previous governments in regard to what was done, but my answer to my hon. friend may involve some little criticism in that connection. However, I will relate the facts as I know them. The material to be dredged at either Churchill or Nelson cannot be successfully and economically handled by a suction dredge. That was proven in the effort to use the suction dredge in question at Nelson, and the material at Churchill does not differ very much from the material at Nelson. I have related in this house before the circumstances of the storm which occurred before my time, and resulted in the dredge landing in its present position, substantially as stated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. As to the suggestion of my hon. friend that it could easily be taken down and at little expense, I should like to say that the engineers are not agreed as to how that dredge is to be taken down from its present position either economically or safely. In view of the fact that it was certainly not suitable for any work we had up there, I did not deem it the part of wisdom to spend money on it at the present time, and, instead, secured the kind of dredge which everyone agrees can handle the type of work requiring to be done at Churchill.

Mr. BENNETT: Were they purchased?

Mr. DUNNING: The contract let for the building, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Who supplied the new dredges?

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian Vickers.

Mr. BENNETT: There were two, I am informed.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What did they cost?

Mr. DUNNING: Churchill No. 1, $357,500; Churchill No. 2, $360,650. My hon. friend read or made some statement with regard to lighters at Nelson which might have been used and were not. I want to assure him that all floating plant there which was at all serviceable was put into shape and moved to Churchill and is there at the present time. There is left at Nelson no floating plant which is usable.

Mr. BENNETT: There were two new lighters bought, were there not?

Mr. DUNNING: We have a dump scow that is new, and a barge, and we got another scow from the Department of Public Works. The rest of the equipment, outside of tugs, is the equipment which was at Nelson and which is being put into shape. We had also at Nelson one tug which has been reconditioned and is in use at Churchill.

Mr. BENNETT: Was there a fire in the roundhouse at Churchill last summer?

Mr. DUNNING: No; my hon. friend's informant is evidently referring to what I mentioned in the house last winter. I gave then an account of a fire which had occurred in the roundhouse at Nelson, not at Churchill.

Mr. BENNETT: Then there has been no fire at Churchill since the operations were commenced there, by which any locomotives or materials were destroyed?

Mr. DUNNING: The fire occurred at Nelson.

Mr. BENNETT: It is advisable to clear this point up, not for my purposes but for the information of those who may read it and wish to be satisfied as to what the facts are.

Mr. DUNNING: The fire was at Nelson.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the government be in any sense responsible for the care of labourers who went to Churchill in the summer of 1928?

Mr. DUNNING: What does my hon. friend mean by "care"?

Mr. BENNETT: There were eighty-five workmen who were supposed to be at Churchill last year, including store bosses, blacksmith bosses, tractor bosses and superintendents and foremen. My information, given me by a reputable citizen desiring to find out the facts, is that twenty out of the eighty-five were superintendents and foremen, while the rest were labourers. The foremen received eighty cents an hour and worked fourteen hours a day and the labourers received forty cents in the warmer weather and forty-five in the colder and paid a dollar a day for board. We will leave it at that for the moment. Would the department know anything about this, or would it be the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: If what my hon. friend is stating relates to Churchill—

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, Churchill.

Mr. DUNNING: —then the workmen at the port would be departmental.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am advised.

Mr. DUNNING: If they were working on the railway they would be Canadian National people. If my hon. friend would give me a copy of his statement I should be glad to have the facts ascertained and submitted to him.

Mr. BENNETT: The statement sent to me is interlarded with observations and queries, and I could not detach the statement itself. I am anxious to ascertain whether or not the Department of Railways and Canals carried on operations at Churchill in the summer of 1928, what wages were paid, and whether there was a doctor in charge of the men.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: How many men were there? Then there is another question—

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend ask the questions one by one? I have a record of all the operations at Churchill and perhaps I could answer them more intelligently that way.

Mr. BENNETT: It might be a good thing to put them on the record and my hon. friend could look them up in the meantime. The first question is this: Did the Department of Railways and Canals carry on, direct, operations at Churchill during the summer of 1928, employing some eighty-five men or thereabouts, of whom twenty were superintendents and foremen, the others being workmen? And what was paid the foremen per hour, and how many hours per day did they work?

Mr. DUNNING: We have more men than that.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the summer of 1928.

Mr. DUNNING: While the information is being looked up, I may advise my hon. friend that last summer's work consisted very largely in getting ready for the actual work of this year. Some fifteen thousand tons of cargo were taken in and unloaded, temporary piers were built, temporary tracks laid, two dredges taken in, bunkhouses built, and a lot of work of that character done. As I said a moment ago, a doctor is there appointed by the department to look after the men, and there is a limited hospital accommodation.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the doctor's name?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: The total number of men at Churchill last year was three hundred and thirty-six.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the whole time, including the summer.

Mr. DUNNING: In 1928, yes. The numbers by months were: February, 17;. March, 30; April, 62; June, 227, making a total of 336.

Mr. BENNETT: How many stayed on the work?

Mr. DUNNING: They practically all stayed until the work was curtailed, and the staff put on a winter basis.

Mr. BENNETT: When was the work closed down?

Mr. DUNNING: Our last boat last year left Churchill about October 15 and there was a progressive reduction from that point on as the men could be taken out.

Mr. BENNETT: What was labourer's pay?

Mr. DUNNING: Forty to forty-five cents per hour.

Mr. BENNETT: How many hours a day?

Mr. DUNNING: Time and a quarter for time over ten hours and Sunday time.

Mr. BENNETT: Time and a quarter?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And what did the foremen get?

Mr. DUNNING: Foremen-labourer, does my hon. friend mean?

Mr. BENNETT: There were both superintendents and foremen; what did they get?

Mr. DUNNING: There are different kinds of foremen. Does my hon. friend mean the foreman-labourer?

Mr. BENNETT: That will do for one.

Mr. DUNNING: Foreman-labourer, fifty to eighty cents an hour.

Mr. BENNETT: Anything for overtime?

Mr. DUNNING: The same arrangement for overtime; over ten hours, time and a quarter.

Mr. BENNETT: And board was paid for at the rate of $1 per day? Who ran the boarding house?

Mr. DUNNING: It was part of the organization.

Mr. BENNETT: Who was the doctor in charge?

Mr. DUNNING: Doctor Walton.

Mr. BENNETT: What did he receive in the way of pay? Was there a fixed deduction from the men's wages?

Mr. DUNNING: He received $250 a month and board.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the employment of the men commence at The Pas?

Mr. DUNNING: For a time, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Were any of those men who went to Fort Churchill rejected because of medical unfitness at Fort Churchill and paid from the time they left The Pas until they returned?

Mr. DUNNING: The engineer advises me that there was only one such man.

Mr. BENNETT: Only one?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Was there a man taken on at Tisdale, subsequently rejected at Churchill and sent back at a cost to the country of $75 or $80?

Mr. DUNNING: The engineer in charge states that he can remember only one such case and it does not come to his mind where the man was sent from. He was sent out with the idea that it was cheaper to do so than to keep him in the hospital there.

Mr. BENNETT: Was there a man named Scott employed as a carpenter on the recommendation of Curtin and Grant, barristers, Regina?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend might ask some of his own friends about the letters they sent me and the endeavours which were made to get men employed.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not dealing with the minister himself but with Curtin and Grant of Regina.

Mr. DUNNING: As far as I know Curtin and Grant of Regina had no power in the matter at all. Mr. Curtin is a friend of mine; I know him very well and he has recommended men to me on various occasions, but not as a barrister or anything like that. With regard to the man named Scott, what is it my hon. friend wants to know?

Mr. BENNETT: Was there a man named Scott who was sent up as a carpenter at 75 cents an hour? According to my information he did not know a crosscut saw from a rip saw.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend mentioned Scott previously this session. There were four Scotts there, working at different occupations.

Mr. BENNETT: This man was employed as a carpenter at 75 cents an hour.

Mr. DUNNING: There was a Scott who was a carpenter.

Mr. BENNETT: Classified as such?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, classified as such and working as such.

Mr. BENNETT: It is said that he did not know the difference between a jig saw and a rip saw.

Mr. DUNNING: Can my hon. friend make that statement on his own responsibility?

Mr. BENNETT: No. I am getting enough, much more than I expected. Then there was a man named Don Collins—not John—a former druggist and a brother of Matt Collins of the Saskatchewan Liquor Board. Was he employed; how long was he there; how long did he stay and what did he get? He was taken in to drive an engine at 85 cents an hour.

Mr. DUNNING: Is my hon. friend making that statement?

Mr. BENNETT: I am asking questions.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is putting statements on record and I want him to be fair to me in these matters. Inasmuch as my hon. friend is reading constantly from a document I am beginning to think I have a right to ask for that document.

Mr. BENNETT: You can keep on beginning, because you are not going to get it.

Mr. DUNNING: I think someone should take responsibility for some of the statements my hon. friend is making. I am willing to answer questions.

Mr. BENNETT: Then suppose you do so. If the minister would answer questions he would advance the work of this committee. I asked if there was a man named Don Collins employed as an engineer at 85 cents an hour.

Mr. DUNNING: Then my hon. friend went on to make a lot of statements about the Saskatchewan Liquor Board and so on.

Mr. BENNETT: I said he was a brother of Matt Collins of the Saskatchewan Liquor Board.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know that there is a Matt Collins on the Saskatchewan Liquor Board.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say you did.

Mr. DUNNING: The engineer informs me that there were two Collinses, one of whom was an engineer and the other a timekeeper. He is not sure which one of them was Don.

Mr. BENNETT: Does he not know their initials?

Mr. DUNNING: We have not the list of employees here. Has my hon. friend any criticism to make with regard to the employment of these two men? I am asking for my own information.

Mr. BENNETT: I will deal with that when the time comes. I am asking questions of the minister now; his estimates are before us. The public money is being spent and I am inquiring as to how it was spent. Now I want to know if a man called Buck Freeman was hired; if so, was he hired by a man named Miller of Ottawa, again on the recommendation of Curtin and Grant?

Mr. DUNNING: Is my hon. friend asking questions or making statements?

Mr. BENNETT: The minister knows exactly what I am doing.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend should be fairer to me than that.

Mr. BENNETT: I will put the question again. Was there a man named Buck Freeman taken to Churchill as a carpenter at 75 cents an hour; was he hired by a man named Miller, of Ottawa; was that done on the recommendation of Curtin and Grant; what was his physical condition when he went to Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: The engineer cannot recall any such circumstances as those related by my hon. friend. I know nothing of the matter myself.

Mr. BENNETT: How many storekeepers were employed?

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 247, for the relief of Henry Feldman.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 250, respecting The Dominion Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Ryckman.

Bill No. 251, to ratify and confirm the organization and the election of directors of Family Trust, and to change the name of that company to Financial Trust Company.—Mr. Laflamme.

Bill No. 280, respecting Alliance Nationale. —Mr. Mercier (Outremont).

CENTRAL FINANCE CORPORATION

The house in committee on Bill No. 283, respecting Central Finance Corporation.—Mr. Lang— Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Object.

Mr. COOTE: Has this bill been printed?

The CHAIRMAN: It will be found on the Senate file.

Mr. COOTE: Have these bills been before the banking and commerce committee?

The CHAIRMAN: All have been before that committee.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth) (for Mr. Lang) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to call Your Honour's attention to the filing of these bills. It is impossible for any hon. member, unless he spends an hour or so, to find a bill on the Senate file. The letters are all mixed up.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is letter P2 of the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I know that. It is impossible in a reasonable period of time to find a bill on the file. I should like to have a brief explanation of the bill before it is passed. As a matter of fact, I think there should be a revision of the rules with respect to the filing of these bills. They could easily be filed and numbered in some simpler form. They are a hopeless muddle at the present time.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member's suggestion is a good one, and instructions will be given to that effect.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member for South Timiskaming (Mr. Lang) is ill and has asked me to take charge of the bill to-night. The bill passed the Senate committee and was before the banking and commerce committee of the Commons. The superintendent, Mr. Finlayson, found no objection to it in any way. As a matter of fact, no objection was raised to it in the committee by any member. It is a bill, as I understand it, for the relief of those who have to borrow small amounts of money and who cannot be accommodated by a chartered bank where certain securities are required. They borrow from this company which, I understand, has been doing business for a number of years and is in a sound, healthy financial condition. It is for the relief of those who from time to time borrow small amounts of money and give their own notes or those of their friends. That is about the substance of the bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member said that the company had been in operation for a considerable time. What is it asking for?

Mr. SANDERSON: It has been in operation carrying on a certain form of loan business, but not the particular business it asks for under this bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is asking for an extension of powers.

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the powers it is asking for?

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not know that I can answer that question, although I was present at the committee when the bill went through. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) were here, he could answer it, because it went through his department and was endorsed by his superintendent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I see it deals with an increase in the interest rate.

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 309, respecting The Dominion of Canada Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company, and to change its name to "The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company"—Mr. Geary—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Name changed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is this a senate bill?

The CHAIRMAN: This is not a senate bill; it is to be found on the House of Commons file.

Mr. RYCKMAN: This bill has been before the banking and commerce committee. No objection was taken to it by the Superintendent of Insurance. There was no conflict of opinion on any point. The bill provides merely for a change of name, saving of rights, and an increase in the capital stock. The company is an old-established and flourishing insurance company. It deserves all it asks for and everybody has conceded this.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Bill No. 333, for the relief of Vera Alice Griffin.—Mr. Sanderson.

SAM GLADSTONE

On the order for the second reading of Bill No. 318, for the relief of Sam Gladstone.—Mr. Jacobs.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I notice that several of these bills are being presented with the sponsor absent. These sponsors live in Toronto and Montreal, and they say they are unavoidably absent. They are usually unadvoidably absent on Friday evening. I think we shall have to ask that these bills stand until the sponsors are present. Some of us who come from a distance are utterly tired of carrying on business in the absence of members who find it convenient to be away over the week end.

Motion stands.

FLORENCE GERTRUDE SINGER

Mr. A. J. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park, for Mr. Lawson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 237, for the relief of Florence Gertrude Singer.

He said: The sponsor of this bill was called away from the city last night but will be here to-morrow. In his absence I would move the second reading of this bill. He is very regular in his attendance in the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: There can be only one rule.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Might I ask what that rule is, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is that the sponsor of the bill must be present. I am quite willing, however, that the motion be put by the hon. member for Toronto-High Park if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON (High Park): I would ask for unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not been able to hear at this end of the chamber one word of what has been said.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Toronto-High Park has said that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) is constant in his attendance at the house but has been called away and will be here to-morrow, and has asked the unanimous consent of the house, in the absence of the sponsor, to move the second reading of this bill.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not like to be discourteous, but there have been a number of other bills standing in the name of the hon. member for West York. I cannot see how we can object in the one case and let other bills pass.

Mr. SPEAKER: The objection is well taken.

Motion stands.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

REPORT

First and final report of the joint committee of both Houses of Parliament on the restaurant. —Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: When the committee rose I was asking the minister a question with respect to the employment of two or three persons named; I wanted to know whether or not he could locate them.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not catch what my hon. friend said.

Mr. BENNETT: I had given the minister the names of several persons, asking if they were employed and if so in what capacity, at what rate per hour, how many hours constituted a day, and the allowance for overtime.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will give me the names, I have brought down the files in reference to all these employees and I think we can pick them out.

Mr. BENNETT: The first one was Don Collins.

Mr. DUNNING: Donald Joseph Collins was an engineer operating the dinky locomotive. His rate of pay was 65 cents per hour and the hours worked were June, 30; July, 336¼; August, 351; September, 338 and October, 372½.

Mr. BENNETT: At sixty-five cents per hour?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, with time and a quarter for over ten hours whenever more than ten hours were worked in one day.

Mr. BENNETT: The next was Buck Freeman.

Mr. DUNNING: If the man in question was Charles Freeman, who apparently was the only Freeman we had, he came in as a carpenter at 75 cents per hour and on August 1 was disrated to the status of a labourer and reduced to 45 cents per hour, and he continued in that capacity until October. The number of hours worked were June, 30; July, 340; August, 293; September, 289 and October, 291. From August 1 he was paid 45 cents per hour and prior to that time he received 75 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: At the same rate for overtime?

Mr. DUNNING: The same condition applied to all overtime.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there anything in the records with reference to a man who became mentally deranged and was taken out?

Mr. DUNNING: The engineer advises me that during the winter of 1927-28 there was such a man, but not during the past year. This man went wrong mentally during the winter and was taken out.

Mr. BENNETT: Apparently this man has been confused with someone else. Were the supplies which were purchased for the operation of that camp acquired by tender or otherwise?

Mr. DUNNING: The purchasing department had charge of that in the usual way; I have no personal knowledge of it, but we will get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: My information is that they were not purchased by tender.

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubedly the general policy of the department is purchase by tender.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason for my question. Will the accounts in connection with this expenditure be available? In the answers given the other day before the select standing committee it will be observed that during the year 1928 over $6,000,000 was expended, and that about $319,000 has been expended under the 1929-30 estimate. Of that expenditure $2,770,000 was made at the Fort Churchill terminal by day work and for material.

Mr. DUNNING: That would probably cover equipment purchased, including the two barges and the tugs, which would account for a very considerable amount.

Mr. BENNETT: There was spent on the railway roughly $3,390,000. The answer given to the first question was that the only contracts let by tender amounted to about $1,270,000, and therefore the balance of the money must have been otherwise expended.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not quite understand that.

Mr. BENNETT: The first question put in the select committee was with regard to contracts, and it was stated that the only contract, which was let to the lowest tenderer, was for $1,270,000. Therefore the remainder of the expenditure must have been made on the basis of day work or under some other scheme worked out by the Canadian National system. I was seeking to ascertain whether it is correct to say that the expenditure, less the amount mentioned as being the amount of that contract, was expended on day work or under the system mentioned in connection with the operations of the Canadian National?

Mr. DUNNING: Subject to this contract into which the Canadian National entered with the Canadian Bridge Company, Limited, for the fabrication, delivery and erection of steel superstructures for two bridges.

Mr. BENNETT: How much was that?

Mr. DUNNING: I will have to refer to the order in council which it was necessary to pass approving of the contract. Section 2 of the order in council states that the lowest tender received was that of the Canadian Bridge Company, Limited, which for both structures amounts to $60,740.90, being $2,109.80 lower than the next tender.

Mr. BENNETT: There seems to be some difficulty there, because in the answer to the question asked in the select standing committee no mention was made of the tender to which the minister has referred. However, we will leave that for the moment; it is quite clear that some $6,000,000 was expended last year, and I am endeavouring to ascertain what part of that amount was expended under contracts which were let after tenders had been called for.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: Expended on the railway?

Mr. BENNETT: The figures with which we have been supplied give the total expenditure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, as $6,159,562.95, and I am endeavouring to ascertain what part of that amount was expended under contract after tenders were called for.

Mr. DUNNING: Then my hon. friend is including both the port and the railway in his question?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: My deputy advises me that probably the reason why this $60,000 was not included in the railway expenditure was because that contract was let during this railway year. In any case it was not included, but it is the only addition to the figures which have been given in that connection. Now with respect to the port, I am having the matter of supplies checked up, but I never have been advised that anything other than the usual practice of the department has been followed in that regard. The dredges, of course, were constructed under tender and contract, and that applies also to the hopper barge and the scows, and in addition one scow was acquired from the Department of Public Works. Other equipment which was at Nelson and which was still useable was conditioned and removed to Churchill. Nelson accounts would, of course, be credited with the salvage value of the material which was moved from there to Fort Churchill.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a substantial sum of money, $6,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: The great bulk of it was on railway account.

Mr. BENNETT: At little over half.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I have the details before me, and my hon. friend will probably be able to follow them. They are as follows:

Dredge Churchill, No. 1	$357,500
Dredge Churchill, No. 2	360,650
Dump Scow	42,000
Hopper Barge, Chesterfield	200,000
Repairs to the Ocean Eagle	18,600
Hopper Barge foremost	90,000
Tug Graham Bell (not yet built)	110,000
Shear Legs	11,200

Mr. BENNETT: Was that all spent in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929?

Mr. DUNNING: The tug Graham Bell is not paid for; all the other items were expended in the fiscal year and would be included in the figures. I rather expected that these matters would be examined into in the public accounts committee, and I should be very glad to have that done.

Mr. BENNETT: There was some difficulty in arranging for enough meetings to deal with the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: The details of the expenditure chargeable to capital on the Hudson Bay railway and terminal appear in the Auditor General's report, part W-57.

Mr. BENNETT: And does that cover all the expenditures or only those which were made by the department itself as apart from the expenditures made by the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: The Auditor General's report gives the detailed accounts paid to the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BENNETT: When I looked through the accounts I assumed that they covered both the departmental expenditures and the railway expenditures.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: But in view of the answer which the minister gave this afternoon to a question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver Burrard (Mr. Clark), I put this question to the minister: did the railway company call for tenders for any part of the work in connection with the Hudson Bay railway as agents for the department?

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian National called for tenders for the grading and for the two bridges of which I spoke; with respect to the other supplies with which the department was charged by the Canadian National, such as ties and that sort of thing, they were handled by the purchasing department of the railway under the system which prevails in connection with the purchasing of the railway's own supplies. There is one item which is the subject matter of negotiation between the department and the railway, brought about through number one relay rail being used.

Mr. BENNETT: That is eighty-pound steel.

Mr. DUNNING: Nothing less than eighty pounds. It is necessary to set a price for that material, but the price which is set is the same price as is used by the Canadian National within its own system and in connection with new branch line construction.

Mr. BENNETT: Tenders were called for the grading of 300 miles.

Mr. DUNNING: No, for the grading of the new work.

Mr. BENNETT: How much would that be?

Mr. DUNNING: One hundred and fifty-four miles.

Mr. BENNETT: That would include everything?

Mr. DUNNING: Just the grading.

Mr. BENNETT: But that would include the total mileage?

Mr. DUNNING: The total mileage of new work.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that $1,270,000 contract the contract for the grading?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the only contract there is?

Mr. DUNNING: Other than the contracts for the bridges.

Mr. BENNETT: How much was allowed for extras on the grading, if any?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no allowance; the contract entered into by the Canadian National Railways with the contractor is a unit price contract.

Mr. BENNETT: I will take the answer given before the select committee.

Mr. DUNNING: That answer was based upon the computation of the quantities involved.

Mr. BENNETT: In order that the minister may not be misled, I will read the question. It is as follows:

How many tenders were received, and what was the figure in each instance?

The answer given is as follows:

Seven. $1,270,100; $1,377,700; $1,388,300; $1,496,500; $1,836,150; $1,855,450; $1,899,100.

Mr. DUNNING: Grading contracts are made on unit price tenders and the figures are extended using the same multiplication factor which, as my hon. friend knows, is the number of units estimated by the engineers to be involved in the job. That computation was carried out in this case and the gross amount arrived at, assuming that the yardage is correct, was the figure given in reply.

Mr. BENNETT: How much did it cost?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course the contract is not completed.

Mr. BENNETT: The grading is finished.

Mr. DUNNING: As I said this afternoon, there are nearly one hundred miles of skeleton track.

Mr. BENNETT: And that is just laid on the frozen ground?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: How much has been paid thus far on the contract?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not that information before me.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to have that because it involves the question of classification, about which there are so many stories.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not anticipate that there will be any classification difficulties in this case, because there is comparatively little rock along that section.

Mr. GOTT: The minister is in apparent good health; could not he raise his voice a little?

Mr. DUNNING: I will do the best I can.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no desire to inconvenience the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall get that information.

Mr. BENNETT: Any one reading the statement made in the select committee would assume that a contract was let for the grading at a price of $1,270,000; as a matter of fact, the minister says that this work is let on a unit basis.

Mr. DUNNING: All such contracts are.

Mr. BENNETT: As the work is not finished, I should like to know how much has been paid out. Who was the contractor?

Mr. DUNNING: Stewart & Cameron.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the unit cost? I should like to have that information for a very special reason?

Mr. DUNNING: I have a schedule here which I will read. The contract is made up of the following schedule of prices, in the usual form which the railway company uses for this purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like the unit cost of each item.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: The unit cost alone, or the estimated quantity and the unit cost?

Mr. BENNETT: The estimated quantity and the unit cost.

Mr. DUNNING: The statement is as follows:

	Unit cost
Clearing, 2,200 acres	$30 00
Grubbing, 1,200 acres	75 00
Cross-waying, 10,000 square feet	100 00 per 100 units
Solid rock, 5,000 cubic yards	2 00
Loose rock, 10,000 cubic yards	1 00
Hard-pan, 25,000 cubic yards	50
Earth or other material, 2,960,000 cubic yards	35
Over-haul, per 100 feet over 500 feet free-haul, 40,000 cubic yards	05
Riprap, 1,000 cubic yards	3 00
Culvert excavation, 10,000 cubic yards	40
Freighting supplies, et cetera, 14,000 ton miles	1 00
Cross-cutting winter roads, 80 acres	45 00
Cordwood for fuel in engineer's construction camp, 500 cords	10 00
Supplying of material for and erection, of four log houses for engineers' headquarters, lump sum of	4,000 00

Those things that are dealt with are in accordance with the call for tenders. Then the quantities are extended in the contract, making up the total referred to. I will find out just how much has been expended to date and give my hon. friend the information later. I do not know that I can get that to-night.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister realizes what I want. Owing to the difficulty in the public accounts committee, I want to know what sum has been paid that contractor.

Mr. DUNNING: I will get it.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to know also what amount of the work is still undone; what sums were paid as extras, if any; what variations of classification, if any, were made.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member means in quantity of each classification?

Mr. BENNETT: Not quantities at all. The engineers' estimates upon which payments were made, classified the material in a certain way, and I would like to know what those classifications were and whether, in the aggregate, there was a variation between that and the estimate of the engineers when the tenders were called for.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be glad to get that information.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister cannot get it now?

Mr. DUNNING: No, and my hon. friend will appreciate the fact that the work not being completed and these quantities being aggregated as estimated quantities, I doubt whether—

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly the reason I am asking for this information. Does the minister realize what I mean? That is a contract based upon unit costs on an estimate of material. I want to know how much the total is. It amounts, I understand to $1,270,000, as the minister stated.

Mr. DUNNING: Assuming the quantities were correct.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to see the variation between the quantities which it was alleged were the quantities upon which payment has been made to date, and conditions as indicated by the contract, and I should like to know what the classification was with regard to rock, riprap, hardpan and so forth; that is the engineers' classification upon which payment was made. Who is the supervising engineer?

Mr. DUNNING: The chief engineer of construction of the Canadian National, Mr. Gzowski, is in supreme charge.

Mr. BENNETT: But who is the supervising engineer who classified and estimated the quantities?

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. H. A. Dixon, chief engineer of the western region is, I am advised, responsible for the classification of work in that region and for the estimating of the quantities.

Mr. BENNETT: Who was on the job?

Mr. DUNNING: The man on the job is Major J. G. McLachlan.

Mr. BENNETT: Was he on the job all the time?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, the Canadian National put him on the job when rehabilitation first commenced.

Mr. BENNETT: And he has been there continuously since then?

Mr. DUNNING: I think so.

Mr. BENNETT: Could the minister look up the correspondence between the late deputy minister and Major McLachlan by telegram and letter as to classification? I understand the minister himself to say he knows nothing about it.

Mr. DUNNING: The present deputy advises me that he knows of no such correspondence on the part of the late deputy minister, but we shall have that looked up.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister must have the last estimate, because it usually recites the previous one upon which payments were made, showing the advances made to the contractor.

Mr. DUNNING: We shall get that.

Mr. CLARK: The minister stated that he had some answers to give to me.

Mr. DUNNING: I understood they were included in the answer I gave a moment ago as to the contracts let by the Canadian National on the construction of the road. I answered a similar question put by the leader of the opposition as regards the contract for the grading and the $60,000 contracts let by the Canadian National for the building of two steel bridges.

Mr. CLARK: Were the amounts and names of the contractors given?

Mr. DUNNING: As regards the grading, the contractors were Stewart and Cameron under another contract price which we have just been discussing, amounting, on the basis of the estimated quantities, to $1,270,000, and for the two steel bridges the contractors were the Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville, the two contracts amounting to $60,000 for the superstructure, The substructures were erected by the Canadian National's own forces.

I should like to make just a general statement regarding the work which was carried out last year, in justice to the men engaged in and controlling it. The department and the Canadian National are well satisfied with the work which the men responsible were able to carry out last year under very difficult conditions. The work done in preparation for this year's work certainly merits appreciation on our part. The men worked well. The department endeavoured to feed them well, and so far as the Canadian National forces were concerned, their work was undoubtedly appreciated by the department. In respect to the answers that I may give on behalf of the Canadian National, I would naturally prefer that the officers of the company might be in a position to give that information directly. That was our intention in the special committee. The point arose early in the sessions of the special committee as to whether questions relating to the Hudson Bay railway would be answered before that committee. Sir Henry Thornton stated that he would be very glad to have his officers give information to the committee in connection with the work done by the company on the Hudson Bay railway in exactly the same way as they were prepared to give information respecting any other railway.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the date of the grading contract?

Mr. DUNNING: I will give that in a moment. To continue my statement, the committee was very busy in connection with an exhaustive examination of the general accounts of the Canadian National railway, and not much time was spent on the Hudson Bay railway. I think the hon. member for Vancouver Centre presented some questions in writing which were answered by the department or by the railways, and there was not much discussion. I think it would be better in connection with this work, as in connection with all Canadian National railway work, to examine wherever practicable the officers of the railway concerned in the work. The department has to deal with this matter entirely as it would deal with an ordinary Canadian National piece of construction, and I feel sure that the officers of the company would be just as ready to give information respecting it as they would with respect to any other line that they may have under construction. The date of the contract was November 1, 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: Providing for completion on or before when?

Mr. DUNNING: Time for completion, from mileage 356.5 to mileage 450, by October 15, 1928; from mileage 450 to Churchill by September 1, 1929.

Mr. BENNETT: The part that was to be completed by 1928 was completed within the time limit?

Mr. DUNNING: That is my information.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed that the whole was to be completed by September, 1929; that is some time hence. The reason I am asking these questions must be apparent to the minister. Since the contract was awarded we have spent over $6,000,000 on the railway. The minister has said that much of the grading still remains to be done. I am endeavouring to ascertain how much has been paid to these grading contractors.

Mr. DUNNING: I will get the figures for my hon. friend. I think my hon. friend forgets that a skeleton track has been laid from the end of the grade, from mileage 450 to Fort Churchill, and that includes all the rails and ties involved in that. However, I will get the figures and give the information later.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister would do this. We will complete as nearly as possible the discussion on this item, and then perhaps the minister can report progress and we can conclude the discussion in the light of the information that the minister will supply on Monday. The Minister of Finance spoke to me before dinner and said that one of his colleagues would be ready to go on, because I anticipated that the Minister of Railways would not be able to give all this information this evening. Perhaps the minister might be able to go on with some canal items, and this item might stand in the meantime.

Mr. THORSON: Perhaps the hon. leader of the opposition after his lengthy cross-examination of the Minister of Railways, has now received sufficient information to enable him to communicate to the committee whether he has changed the opposition which he displayed towards the construction of the Hudson Bay railway in 1926, when he stated to the committee that he was opposed to the construction of a single additional foot on the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. BENNETT: Go on and give the rest. Here is a gentleman who poses as the dean of a law school. He may be able to take hon. gentlemen's amendments away from them and appropriate them as his own, but he cannot make a citation and call himself a member of the profession if he quotes only the part that suits himself.

Mr. THORSON: I am asking whether he has that additional knowledge now to enable him to indicate to the committee whether he is of the same view with regard to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway and the terminals as he was in 1926. The leader of the opposition prides himself on his excellent memory.

Mr. BENNETT: He does not.

Mr. THORSON: I must give him credit for possessing a splendid memory. He gave a splendid example of it this morning. He said in 1926—

Mr. BENNETT: In this house.

Mr. THORSON: Yes:

From the information I have I could not under any circumstances vote to extend the railway a single foot beyond the present end of steel.

Further on he gave some reasons for his opposition to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. He gave as one of his reasons the opening of the Panama canal and the possibility that wheat might be diverted from its present channels and go to the markets of the world through the Panama canal. Secondly, he gave as another reason that it would divert traffic from the Canadian National railway. Throughout his speech is one of opposition to further construction of the Hudson Bay railway. Is the hon. leader of the opposition now in possession of sufficient information to enable him to say to this committee that he is now favourable to the construction and completion of the Hudson Bay railway, or is he of the same view that he held in 1926 when he opposed the construction of a single additional foot of the Hudson Bay railway? I am sure that this committee would be interested in knowing what his views are and whether his opposition to the Hudson Bay railway scheme has altered or not.

Mr. BENNETT: I can readily understand the distrust which those who have to deal with the hon. member have. Twice within the last five minutes he has left an entirely erroneous impression. I said, "from the information I then had" He commenced his question by leaving that out and also wound up his question by leaving it out. What sort of mentality has a man who is supposed to teach the young men the ethics of the profession and who will make a citation in part and leave out the vital part?

Mr. THORSON: I read the whole of it.

Mr. BENNETT: Not until you were driven to it—like the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg which he appropriated as his own. Let us deal with what took place in 1911. I came to this house and in the first speech that I made to this house I declared unequivocally for the Hudson Bay railway and for its immediate completion, and I gave reasons for it. In the meantime, from 1911 to 1926, certain events happened in this country through the action of the hon. gentleman's friends in connection with the National Transcontinental, the Grand Trunk, and the Canadian Northern railway company, that brought disaster on this country financially in connection with its railways. The hon. gentleman seems not to have memory enough to remember it. I am glad that I remember these things. I came to this house and I made that statement. Now the hon. gentleman at this late date, in 1929, wants to know what my opinion is. I pointed out in 1926 that from the information I then had I did not feel warranted in supporting it, but this house did appropriate the money, and in 1926 when the election was on, my then leader read a statement which I read to the electors of Portage la Prairie, and which was misstated in the press, just as the hon. gentleman is misstating my attitude to-night. This misstatement resulted in my having to go to a great deal of trouble and effort to secure from the Canadian press a statement that was made in every daily newspaper in Canada that my attitude had been misrepresented and that an injustice had been done to me, when in fact I had repeated the language of my leader in Portage la Prairie. I still say we have not yet proven that as a grain route the Hudson Bay railway is a success. It was built as such, but a continuation or extension of the precambrian field into that particular country and the construction of this line gives promise of its being a success. This is the story; the Conservative party up to 1922 spent $14,467,000 on the road, and since that time ten million dollars have been spent. It is true that there have been spent on Port Nelson some six million dollars, and a little over three and a half million dollars have been spent on Churchill since that port was selected. So far as I am concerned, my position is a very simple one. When this country's financial burdens were great after the war, when this country was in grave difficulty in connection with her national expenditures, I placed myself on record as requiring further information before I could throw myself wholeheartedly into this enterprise, to which I had given my fullest support, with all the power at my command, when I came into this house in 1911 and made my first speech in it. The Minister of Railways spoke this afternoon of stating half the facts and thereby misstating the whole truth. That is the kind of language he used this afternoon, but the hon. gentleman who has spoken chooses to read a part and then leave the rest out. I have only this to say; the minister knows perfectly well that what I said was the opinion of most of his friends with respect to this enterprise. I am one of those who believe that it is always desirable to cut your garment according to your cloth, and everything I said in the House of Commons in 1926 with respect to the Hudson Bay railway, if read in its entirety, will bear out what I said. If we had plenty of money, few obligations, few liabilities, there is no reason why we should not have gone ahead in 1911 and completed the enterprise quickly. The minister himself said in 1926 what his proposals were with respect to the matter, but mineral discoveries have made it possible to proceed with more expedition than we otherwise would, and with more confidence, which is more to the point.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to get into this fight, but if my hon. friend will please refrain from quoting me he would be on safer ground.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister's speech is on Hansard.

Mr. DUNNING: I would much prefer to have it quoted from Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: Than from my memory. He is quite right. I hesitate to rely upon my memory, in this house or elsewhere. I desire to rely on the record as far as possible.

Mr. THORSON: I asked the hon. leader of the opposition to indicate whether from the information which he has now obtained he is favourable to the Hudson Bay railway since in 1926 he was opposed to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. He certainly left the impression upon his own followers in the house that he was opposed to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. He may have advanced as a reason for that position the fact that he had not sufficient information at his disposal. But I should like to ask this committee whether we would have had the Hudson Bay railway in as advanced a state of completion as it is to-day if the members of the government had taken the same attitude towards it as the hon. leader of the opposition took to the construction of it at that time. There could be no doubt whatsoever in the minds of the people of western Canada what the attitude of the hon. leader of the opposition was with regard to the Hudson Bay railway, and had it prevailed we would not now have steel laid to Churchill.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I suggested to the minister that the matter should stand, and that we should proceed with the other items, so that the questions he will answer might be dealt with.

Item stands.

Trent canal—construction and betterments, $13,300.

An hon. MEMBER: Explain.

Mr. DUNNING: For the acquisition of additional land submerged or affected by canal construction in 1904 on the Balsam-Simcoe subdivision; $4,000 outstanding and new claims for right of way, damages, legal fees, and so forth, $4,500, the whole of which is a revote, and lockmaster's house, $4,800.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal—construction, $10,000,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the minister if the date set for the opening is the same as that set last year?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said "the date set". He will remember that one year ago I was very careful to say that I would not indicate definitely the date, but that our expectation was during 1930. We still have that expectation. There is no reason at the present time for us to change our view in that regard.

Item agreed to.

To provide for contribution of $32,000 to the town of Thorold and $18,000 to the village of Merritton towards the costs of constructing filtration system, $50,000.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. DUNNING: For many years the town of Thorold and the village of Merritton have been obtaining their domestic water supply from the summit level of the Welland canal under leases from the Department of Railways and Canals, and under which the department assumes no liability as to the purity or other conditions of the water.

Until construction operations commenced on sections Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the Welland ship canal, this source of supply was satisfactory but the extensive dredging necessary for these portions of the ship canal work has during the past several seasons made the waters in the summit level of the Welland canal turbid and unsafe for domestic use—these conditions prevailing in spite of the fact that the contractors for the various sections have taken every reasonable precaution to reduce to a minimum the turbidity of the water resulting from their dredging operation.

By reason of the unsatisfactory condition of the water supply the board of health of the province of Ontario, in the interest of public health, instructed both the town of Thorold and the village of Merritton to install filtration plants in their water supply systems, and, although the department has no legal liability in either case, the capital expenditures by these municipalities consequent upon the instructions of the provincial board of health have been largely necessary by reason of the unavoidable condition of the waters of the Welland canal resulting from the construction of the Welland ship canal. It is really on compassionate grounds, if one can view it that way. I do not anticipate much opposition from the other side. There might be if the constituencies were Liberal, but I feel sure there will be no opposition.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not think the remark of the minister is called for.

Mr. POWER: Not at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not think the minister has any right to say there is no legal responsibility and that the question is merely a moral one. As a matter of fact, the minister knows, and I know, that a former minister of the crown, when the Welland canal was originally projected, agreed with all these municipalities to take care of their water supply and this is the outcome of that agreement. That is all there is to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I have met the situation to the best of my ability, but I am bound to stand behind the opinion of the Department of Justice, that there is no legal liability. Be that as it may, I can say something that will please my hon. friend. In the supplementary estimates I hope to take care of St. Catharines as well.

Mr. POWER: I understood yesterday from the Minister of Finance that it was not considered proper for any minister to disclose in advance what was going to come down in the supplementary estimates, and it is particularly improper for the minister to disclose to hon. members opposite anything so agreeable.

Item agreed to.

Trent canal—improvements, $274,175.

Mr. STINSON: Will the minister explain this vote?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount required is made up of the following items:

Item agreed to.

Welland canal—improvements, $30,000.

Mr. SPENCER: When will this work be finished.

Mr. DUNNING: This is for the existing Welland canal. We are still hopeful of opening the new canal in its entirety some time during the summer or fall of 1930. I do not wish that to be taken as a promise because large undertakings of this kind sometimes involve unforeseen delays, but that is our expectation.

Item agreed to.

Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada: maintenance and operation, $309,220.

Mr. SPENCER: Can the minister give us the reason for this increase?

Mr. DUNNING: Statutory increases and new positions involve an increase of $18,180; reductions amounting to $1,560 deducted from that figure leave a total of $16,620.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Are motor cars supplied to members of the board, and if so, to what members?

Mr. DUNNING: There is an item here for one official car, $3,000; but that amount is for the maintenance of the official railway car of the board, and there is nothing in this vote for the maintenance of any automobiles.

Mr. BENNETT: Could the minister say when Mr. Commissioner Norris resigned as a member of the legislature of Manitoba? If my information is correct he continued to be a member of the legislature long after he was appointed to the board and did not resign his seat in Lansdowne until it suited the convenience of Mr. Bracken to have him do so. It has been suggested to me that we should have some statement as to whether a man should be eligible for an appointment of this kind while still a member of a provincial legislature, and I would like to know definitely when he resigned.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the information before me, but I will obtain it for my hon. friend, perhaps he might allow this item to pass in the meantime.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous services, including salaries and expenses of experts employed temporarily, $38,000.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Does this item include Mr. Palmer's recent fee?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—railways and canals—including H. F. Alward, solicitor and counsel at $6,000, $274,065; contingencies, $8,900.

Mr. FRASER: In connection with this vote I should like to ask the minister whether the officials of this department who have to do with the collection of revenue are bonded?

Mr. DUNNING: As a matter of fact most of the revenue of the department is not handled by the officers but comes in the way of payment on leases and that sort of thing. However, wharfage fees are collected at some points and I am finding out now as to the officials who are responsible for the collection of those fees.

Mr. FRASER: What revenue is collected by the department?

Mr. DUNNING: For the last fiscal year the total revenue of the department was $1,237,022.98. I notice one item here under the heading of miscellaneous revenue, "wharfage and storage"; that amounted in all to just $40,000. I will procure the information with regard to the bonding of employees and give it to my hon. friend on any item, if that will serve his purpose.

Mr. FRASER: I have some further questions along the same line. I do not know whether or not the minister was in the house the other day when I put certain questions to the Minister of Immigration—

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. FRASER: Then I will read the question, which I asked of the several departments of the government:

> How much of the consolidated revenue has been paid by each of the departments of the government as premiums on security bonds of its employees, in contravention of the Public Officers Act, R.S., chapter 164, section 5?

This was passed as an order for return, but I find that no reply was received from the Department of Railways and Canals. The officials of this department collect a substantial amount of revenue and I should like to know why the requirements of the statute are not complied with and why the question was not answered.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry, but my officials do not recall any return of that nature to which an answer was not given. I must have my hon. friend's statement checked up, but I can assure him that officials of the department who do collect revenue are bonded.

Mr. FRASER: Are they bonded under a guarantee company or do you carry the insurance yourself?

Mr. DUNNING: It is under a guarantee company.

Mr. FRASER: Answers to this question were not received from the Departments of Labour, National Defence, Justice, External Affairs, Agriculture, Post Office, Railways and Canals and Public Works. I should like to have those answers.

Mr. ROBB: I directed the attention of the officials of the treasury board to the questions asked by my hon. friend the other night and requested them to prepare for me a complete statement, since I expected the matter to come up later. I hope to be able to have that information for my hon. friend early in the week.

Mr. FRASER: For all departments?

Mr. ROBB: I will ask for a statement from all departments.

Mr. FRASER: Under section 12 of the Public Officers Act each department is required to register with the Secretary of State within one month after the bond is entered into a statement of that bond. I have a statement which was laid upon the table and I find no return from the Railway department. Section 32 of the act provides that a report is to be laid upon the table within fifteen days after the session opens. This report was tabled but the information contained therein is very meagre; there are only 38 bonds registered for all departments, and those which are registered involve quite small amounts. I do not think this question of the bonding of officials is being followed up as it should be.

Mr. ROBB: With regard to the question asked the other evening by my hon. friend, I have directed the attention of the officials to the matter of the legality of the payments referred to in my hon. friend's question, and I have asked them to obtain an opinion from the Department of Justice.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps the matter which I would like to discuss, Mr. Chairman, is not entirely appropriate to this item, but it is near enough. I suppose we are allowed a certain latitude of give and take in discussing these estimates especially when they are being put through so quickly.

On January 16 of this year, Mr. G. G. McGeer, on behalf of the council of the United Farmers of British Columbia, presented an appeal by way of a petition to the privy council, which in this case is the cabinet, against certain rates from the prairies to the coast. I am not going to start at this day and date to argue the whole question; I desire only to indicate briefly the situation and ask the minister when a decision is likely to be given. The question at issue is the discriminatory rates allowed on wheat for export going from the prairies to British Columbia, as compared with the rates on wheat of an inferior grade for domestic consumption. The export wheat is generally numbers 1, 2 and 3, while the domestic wheat used for poultry feed is generally numbers 5 and 6, yet the more valuable wheat takes a rate less than half the rate charged for the inferior grade. The rate on export wheat from a central point of the prairies to Vancouver is 21 cents per hundred, and the rate on wheat for domestic use in British Columbia, taken out under identically the same conditions, is 41½ cents; a very heavy discrimination. It was brought out in the argument that Alberta grain could be landed in Yokohama for 50 cents a ton less than the same grain could be landed in Vancouver for domestic use. It would seem more profitable for our poultrymen to migrate to China and raise their eggs there and ship them to Canada. It was shown that the difference in rates amounted to something like $1,000,000 a year to our British Columbia poultrymen. The cry is being raised for protection against eggs coming in from the United States and China, but here is a method which can be used, without raising the bogey of a tariff, which would give very substantial relief. The Minister of Railways will probably offer the time-honoured argument that export rates throughout the world always take a lower rating. I do not think that that argument will apply in this case, because there is no competing water route. In most cases where a lower export rate is quoted it is generally quoted in connection with water competition in whole or part, but there is no such thing as water competition between Calgary and Vancouver. Even allowing that the export rates should be lower—I do not allow that proposition, and the argument of Mr. McGeer does not allow it; in fact, he argues against it quite successfully, I think—than the rates for domestic use, I would point out that perhaps ten years ago there was a certain spread between the two rates. But in the course of time, through the application of various legislative enactments, the export rate has been reduced but the spread was not reduced accordingly. The export rate was reduced again but the spread still increases. Assuming that the spread between the export rate and the domestic rate ten years ago, was just and fair, which I do not agree to, it cannot be just and fair to-day, because that spread has been increasing. As each successive decrease in the export rate was made no appropriate and corresponding reduction was made in the domestic rate, so that to-day the spread between the two rates is something like double what it was a few years ago.

Mr. LADNER: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, this is an important point which I think will have to be decided now because of the possibility of this discussion extending. We are now in this position; the parties have appealed to the privy council, from the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners in a particular case. The hon. member is now asking me a question and I am in the position presumably of being one of the judges of the court which will be trying this case. I do not know much about the rules of the house, but I do know that I cannot enter into a discussion with respect to a matter which I shall be compelled to hear in a quasi-judicial capacity. I do not object to my hon. friend bringing up this subject during the discussion of my civil government estimates, although, as he himself acknowledges, it hardly relates to that matter; but when I see indications of its developing into a debate I think it well to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the position into which we may be driven. I can give my hon. friend this information without any impropriety: the privy council has set the date of the hearing, I believe for some time in September. I can confirm that date with the clerk of the privy council, but in any case the date of the hearing has been set.

Mr. NEILL: The matter has not come up yet?

Mr. LADNER: When the minister rose I was on my feet intending to raise the point which the minister referred to. Not that I disagree at all with the argument of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, on the contrary, I support it enthusiastically, but there is a certain form of procedure in our judicial system, which in my judgment—I think when the hon. member's attention is drawn to it, he will agree—should be followed with respect to these matters. As a matter of fact I am acting as counsel for the government of British Columbia and have in hand an appeal covering the same subject matter in which the United Farmers are interested. Although tempted many times to do so, I have refrained from discussing this matter, which is one of extreme importance to the people of British Columbia and of the prairies. It is an appeal from the Board of Railway Commissioners, a judicial body, to the Privy Council of Canada, another judicial body. Under the practice of our courts it is not considered good form, in respect to matters occupying such a position, either to spread propaganda or to discuss them in parliament or the press. I submit to my hon. friend, although I heartily concur in the viewpoint he has placed before the committee, that this is not the place to enter into the matter; otherwise it would invite a general discussion, and I have in my room upstairs an argument which would take three or four hours to deliver and which could be submitted with advantage to my province.

Mr. NEILL: I thank the minister for his courtesy in allowing me to introduce this in not exactly the technically correct place. He has stated that the case is now before the privy council and that he does not wish to prejudge it now. I can quite appreciate that. He states it will not be heard until September. That is all, I presume, I can do in the matter just now. But this house being the highest court in Canada—and the Minister of Railways says he is one of the judges—I know of no better occasion than here and now to present my views before the minister on behalf of British Columbia.

Mr. KELLNER: I wish to submit, on a point of order, that the question which was introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is not the question which is submitted to the governor in council. The question which I understand, is submitted to them is that of Crowsnest rates not applying on Alberta grain going to the coast. The question my hon. friend introduced was as to the discrimination between domestic and export rates, a different question entirely. During the session of 1925, when the Railway Act was before the house, we had the assurance of the Prime Minister and, I think, of the Minister of Railways as well, that the Crowsnest rates would be made applicable to grain going from Alberta to the coast. That is the question which, I submit, is shortly to be brought before the governor in council, and not the question of discrimination between domestic and export rates.

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure my hon. friend that he is under a misapprehension in that respect.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the anomalies of our present system is that after the Board of Railway Commissioners has dealt with a matter there is an appeal to the governor general in council, that is the privy council, which is a political tribunal. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will recall that one of the leading journals of western Canada a few months ago pointed out that in the end this meant that governments must accept responsibility in connection with even matters of freight rates, although a tribunal was appointed that heard the case in the first instance. I said to my hon. friend from Vancouver South, who has been retained to act in this matter, that clearly no answer could be given by the Minister of Railways in connection with it because he could not give an answer on an ex parte statement by the hon. member himself, and to involve us in an argument would probably take longer time than the hon. gentleman would care to give to the question. But we have the anomaly that while there is an appeal on a question of law under certain circumstances to the Supreme Court of Canada, there is an appeal on questions of fact to the privy council which is a political body, and that involves, it seems to me, with all due deference, a prohibition against the minister giving answers to questions that are asked in the House of Commons touching matters that must be considered by him and his colleagues who must give judgment after hearing all parties concerned.

Item agreed to.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—canals—staff and repairs, $2,690,812.

Mr. BENNETT: Before we dispose of this item, I had intended to ask the minister some questions with respect to the item of civil government and particularly with reference to the salary of the deputy minister. I was under the impression the civil government item had not passed. I think the house is entitled to a statement in this regard in view of the dual position which the deputy minister occupies as a director of the Canadian National railway system and Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. The position is somewhat anomalous and may lead hereafter to some difficulties. I think it is not an unfair request that the minister should make a statement to the committee.

Mr. DUNNING: The item being passed, I do not wish to revert to it, but I will make a brief statement of the position. The house, of course, is aware of the serious loss which the department and the service of the country suffered in the death of the late deputy minister, Major Graham Bell, who had been a servant of Canada for more than thirty-eight years in various capacities, rising to Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals and a director of the Canadian National Railways. The problem of replacing Major Bell was a very difficult one. After casting around, the government determined on the appointment of the present deputy minister, Mr. R. A. C. Henry, who had had a number of years' experience in the department and who, since reorganization, had been in the service of the Canadian National Railways as Director of the Bureau of Economics. I think all will acknowledge that Mr. Henry is eminently qualified in every way to serve. Frankly, I do not think I need enlarge upon the difficulty of securing, at the salary usually available for a deputy minister, the services of a man of the type required, who has to deal day by day with the high officers of the two great railway corporations. After the problem had been considered, it was decided to appoint Mr. Henry to the position at the salary usually accorded a deputy minister, to appoint him director of the Canadian National Railways, as his predecessor, Major Bell, had previously been, and, in addition, to take a few months of actual experience in the work to find out what extent the Canadian National Railways might properly be charged with a portion of his salary in respect to the services rendered as director of that institution. When I say a portion of his salary, I mean the enlargement of his salary beyond the amount ordinarily paid to a deputy minister. The committee will understand the problem when I say that Mr. Henry was receiving as Director of Economics of the Canadian National Railways more than half as much again as a deputy minister's salary. It is one of those difficulties which arise in connection with departments of this type dealing with such large affairs and requiring of its deputy minister a degree of ability and experience which the customary salary, as allowed by parliament, will not command. That is the difficulty, and I may tell the leader of the opposition that, as to the ultimate arrangement, nothing definite can be said to be settled. It was highly important that a capable and efficient deputy minister should be appointed. That was the first essential to keep the service operating and I am sure all who know Mr. Henry will applaud his selection, which I recommended to the government from the point of view of efficiency, ability and knowledge required. I am hoping that we shall succeed in making arrangements to retain Mr. Henry's services permanently. The problem had to be met immediately, and while I appreciate fully the difficulties involved, the solution arrived at is, I think, the best possible having regard to all the circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT: The situation is obviously an embarrassing one to deal with. I have heard nothing but the highest recommendation and commendation of the gentleman in question. But apart altogether from the National Railway and leaving out the Canadian Pacific, it must be remembered that we have in Canada the Michigan Central railway, the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo railway, and one or two other independent lines, the first named being the most important of them. The difficulty is that under the act the Department of Railways and Canals and the deputy minister must deal with problems of very great importance affecting sometimes questions that intimately concern the operations of the road of which the deputy minister is a director, and it is not right to ask the gentleman to assume responsibility as a director, and then act in a judicial capacity in establishing relations between his company and other companies under the act in question. The position with Mr. Bell was entirely different. He was merely a nominal director of the Canadian Northern acting as a liaison officer between the government and the railway. The present incumbent occupied a position of great importance with the railway company and has now assumed the position of deputy minister, and it is very difficult to divorce a lifelong association with the railway company from one's duties in a new capacity. Until 1911, during a number of the formative years of my life, I was associated with a railway company, and for many years afterwards I found it exceedingly difficult to approach problems with that free and disinterested mind which is absolutely essential for the conduct of business. I merely mention that because it does appear to me that the difficulty is much greater than the minister has indicated. There are very serious problems with which the deputy minister has to deal, and there are unconscious influences that shade and temper one's judgment, as I learned in my own life during a period of five or six years after I divorced myself from my previous employment with a railway company. That is a fact that cannot be lightly disregarded. I mention it because I think it is in the public interest that it should be mentioned. It is not a pleasant thing to refer to on the floor of the house, but the minister must realize that in the conduct of public business there are duties cast on those who sit to the left of the Speaker which are not pleasant but which must be discharged if it is not fairly to be said that they are derelict to the duties devolving upon them.

Mr. DUNNING: These further remarks move me to say that both the minister and the deputy minister of railways are in a somewhat anomalous position in view of the present railway situation in Canada. Under the Railway Act of Canada the minister and also the deputy minister have a definite statutory relationship and responsibility with respect to all the railways of Canada, but with respect to the Canadian National railway the minister occupies the position of representing the proprietors. He is, of course, for that reason open—I will not say to the suspicion—but to conjecture that he might be inclined to favour the Canadian National system. In my capacity as Minister of Railways I have tried to be as judicial as one humanly can, and the deputy minister is just as capable, if not more capable than myself, of absolute fairness in these matters. But there is this to be remembered, which will be of some comfort to the hon. leader of the opposition, and I am sure he knows it already: that since the institution of the Board of Railway Commissioners the major part of what might be called the judicial functions of the minister and the deputy minister as between the different railways has been transferred to the board.

Mr. BENNETT: Not wholly.

Mr. DUNNING: Not wholly; because it is impossible to transfer them wholly, but certainly that anomalous position has been lessened by recent developments. I make no complaint over the question being raised by my hon. friend. I deem it of vital importance to the conduct of the Department of Railways and Canals that I should secure as deputy a man having the experience, training and ability, beyond all question, to deal with all phases of the department's work, and I am satisfied that in Mr. Henry I have such a man.

Mr. BENNETT: Would it not be desirable that the country should pay him a salary commensurate with his work on the principle enunciated in connection with the post office workers that the labourer is worthy of his hire? The deputy minister, with the best intentions in the world, sits at the board and arrives at a conclusion with respect to a matter of policy that greatly affects the interests of one or two or three of the other railways in this country. He must then give effect to that policy in his capacity as deputy minister so far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned with administration in connection with that policy, and it is placing upon him a burden that is very difficult. He has to make invidious distinctions which, although I think he is a very highly trained officer, he must at times find it a little difficult to make. An ordinary person such as myself found that difficulty very acute from 1911 to 1916. I should like to see the country pay a sum for such services as would gratify the wish of the minister that he should have about him a deputy upon whose judgment, knowledge and ability he can with confidence rely.

Mr. DUNNING: The situation in that regard is, as I indicated, still unsettled. I shall bear in mind my hon. friend's observations, although I would point out that if we once concede, as I think we must, that Canada's tremendous railway interests demand that the Deputy Minister of Railways should be a man capable of acting at least as vice-president of a railway corporation,, then the magnitude of the problem from the point of view of adequate remuneration becomes apparent. I shall not discuss it further except to thank hon. members opposite for the manner in which they have referred to the matter.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does this department have control over the right of way of steamships passing through the canals?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. We control the flow of traffic through the canals.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then I have three complaints which I would like to bring to the minister's notice. I tried to bring them up last year, but no action was taken. First, certain boats have right of way over all others. Second, there is the right of way that is given to what is known as package freighters, but there is a complaint that this right of way is given to package freighters carrying non-perishable fruit and that any boat not classed as such, when it comes to the entrance of the canal, may have to wait some hours till these other boats go through. The third complaint is that two American boats known as the Twin Ports and Twin Cities ran all last summer with right of way in Canadian canals which was not granted them in their own American canals. This right of way was given to the Twin Ports and the Twin Cities over the steamship Keystate. The complaint says that all last year and this year these two boats have been given the right of way. They are a faster boat and the same right of way is not given them over their own American canals.

Mr. DUNNING: I remember my hon. friend raising the matter a year ago, and I am not sure that I then read the regulation. So far as the three boats which he mentions are concerned, it is a question of which class they fall into under the regulations. I will read regulation 24 which relates to priority of passing through locks:

As regards priority of passage through the canals or locks, the following shall be the order of precedence:—

1. Any government vessel.
2. Vessels built and navigated for the express purposes of the passenger traffic, running on schedule time; also excursion steamers and market boats.
3. Vessels carrying general merchandise or package freight running on schedule time and taking on, or delivering freight at local ports en route.
4. Vessels built and navigated for the express purpose of freight traffic, even though carrying passengers to some limited extent; also private pleasure boats, yachts, skiffs, canoes, etc.

In the case of a vessel of the first or second class, above-mentioned, approaching a lock and being within such distance that she would be seriously or unduly delayed if any other boat lying in the tier and over which she has precedence were passed through before her, the lock shall be held for her accommodation.

Any violation or attempt to violate these provisions of precedence shall subject the owner or person in charge of the offending vessel to a penalty of not less than five dollars, and not exceeding one hundred dollars.

I shall be glad to have the cases referred to looked into again.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would like to read this, because I asked the complainant to give it to me in writing. Last year he gave me the complaint that they arrived at the canal some hours before and yet had to wait there simply because these other two boats had sent a message ahead that they were on their way. This is the complaint:

First, there are several Canadian boats which are listed as package freighters, but carry non-perishable goods such as iron, pipes, etc. westbound, and grain cargoes on the return trip. These vessels do not run on schedule yet they are being given the right of way, and due to the congestion in the canals we are compelled to wait from ten to twelve hours to enter the locks and then permit these boats to go ahead of us. Whereas a light ship requires only about twelve hours to pass through the canals these others take approximately twenty-four hours. At present there are a large number of boats which have a just claim for the right of way, and we are therefore delayed enough by these.

My second complaint is regarding the movement last year of two American boats, the Twin Ports and Twin Cities. These vessels were refused the right of way in American canals but still were given the preference over Canadian boats in Canadian canals.

In the third place I would like to refer to conditions at the west entrance to the Cornwall canal, Dickinson's landing. In previous years there was a float there which enabled boats to enter the lock in safety but it has been removed; and due to the current caused by the flow of water used for power purposes, the approach to the canal is now dangerous.

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to the Cornwall canal, the last matter which he mentions, the improvement necessary there has been undertaken and is now practically complete. With respect to the former matters I shall be glad, this being a matter of record, to have them carefully investigated.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The reason I read this was so that it would be on Hansard. This is from the captain of the steamship Keystate. He feels that his complaint is fair.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—J. L. Weller, $3,500.

Mr. SPENCER: This is a larger amount than most of the other items in the same category. May we have a short explanation?

Mr. DUNNING: This is the same vote as last year. Mr. Weller entered the service of the department in 1883 as an engineer in canal construction and operation. In 1900 he was appointed superintending engineer of the Welland canal, which office he held till 1912 when he was appointed engineer in charge of survey and design of construction of the then proposed new Welland ship canal. He remained in charge of the work till 1917, when it was closed down owing to the war, and his services were dispensed with. From January, 1919, to March, 1927, the services of Mr. Weller were retained in a consulting capacity because of his early connection with the development of the Welland canal plans. He is now retired, and in view of his services it was thought that $3,500 was not an unreasonable allowance to make. He is a very old man and has no other pension rights whatever.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the vote which we had reached last evening when we stopped. I want to hand to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark) the statement which I promised him yesterday with regard to the total expenditure up to date on New Edinburgh mills. That includes everything. The net total for the acquisition of the property and the fitting up of the buildings includes $36,047.94 expended on alterations, heating and electric fittings, and the shop that is at present being fitted up for the research council.

Mr. STEVENS: May we have that statement put on Hansard?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. The statement is as follows:

My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) asked for a statement of the National Art Gallery purchases. I have had a statement copied, which I will hand to my hon. friend. I have also had prepared for him, and will hand to him—which is perhaps the most convenient way for him to get it—the annual report of the National Gallery for 1926-27, and also for 1927-28, and the catalogue. I desire to state with regard to the pictures to which my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard, the hon. member for Kingston and the member for Muskoka referred, that I had hoped last night before the discussion ended to be able to give them the information they asked for. Some of the staff got in touch with the director and asked whether he could give any information with regard to the whereabouts of these three pictures. Unfortunately he was not able to do this offhand with any degree of definiteness. There are in the gallery about 6,000 pictures which are exhibited at various points throughout Canada, being lent to local galleries, and it is difficult for even the director to be able to say offhand just where these particular pictures are.

Mr. BENNETT: All he can say is, they are not here.

Mr. ELLIOTT: He cannot say even that without checking it up. However, he gave me a statement this morning with regard to the three pictures referred to. I have the following memorandum with regard to these portraits:

Lord Byng: This portrait by John Sargent belongs to the national gallery collection and not the Canadian war memorials and was purchased in 1925 from the national gallery vote. It has been hanging in the collection ever since and is hanging now on floor No. 2.

General Currie: This portrait by Orpen belongs to the Canadian war memorials collection. It has hung temporarily in the national gallery at various times and is at present on loan to His Excellency the Governor General, at government house.

General Lipsett: This portrait, also by Orpen, belongs to the Canadian war memorials. It has been exhibited temporarily in the national gallery at various times.

It was withdrawn first for loan, at the urgent request of the commandant, to the Royal Military College, Kingston.

Later it was again lent to Sir William Orpen for the purpose of making a replica for presentation to General Lipsett's native town. Merthyr Tydfil, at the request of that city. It has now been returned and, pending the usual rearrangement of the exhibition in the national gallery it is being kept with the rest of the Canadian war memorials collection in the new fireproof storage space in the auditorium building.

Mr. CLARK: Since what date has the Sargent picture been hanging?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Since it was purchased.

Mr. CLARK: I made a very careful search a few weeks ago and asked particularly for it but I could not find it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have given my hon. friend the statement submitted to me by the director and I take it to be correct.

Mr. CLARK: What jurisdiction has the director of the gallery over the war memorial pictures?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The national gallery has been the custodian of the Canadian war memorials since 1919. The national gallery has exhibited them temporarily twice and they have also been exhibited twice in Montreal and Toronto during that time. The whole collection consists of 360 paintings and sculptures and prints, and it would be impossible to exhibit them permanently in the national gallery for want of space. The national gallery, out of its own fund, has paid for necessary restoration work and upon its representations to the government last year, better and more perfectly fireproof storage was secured for them in the auditorium building. The collection is there now waiting for the building of a new national gallery which it is expected will include a special wing devoted to them. The trustees of the national gallery have never ceased to urge in every annual report and through every other possible means the necessity of providing a permanent and public home for the Canadian war memorials.

Mr. CLARK: What proportion of this year's vote will be expended on new pictures?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The sum of $85,000.

Mr. CLARK: Does the minister think he is justified in purchasing new pictures when we have nowhere to hang them?

Mr. ELLIOTT: These picutres that are being purchased are by noted artists and include what are considered by the trustees of the gallery to be works of special merit which they should obtain. Not only are they exhibited in the gallery, as far as it is possible to display them, but part of the scheme is to lend them to various local organizations from one end of the country to the other. They are kept on exhibition practically all the time in one place or another.

Mr. CLARK: I cannot possibly understand why these war memorial pictures should be locked up in basements. Why is it necessary that portraits of men like General Lipsett should be stored in some basement in the city of Ottawa? Why should not such a portrait be hanging in the gallery? From personal observation I know that there are in the gallery things which I at any rate consider absurdities when compared with such portraits. If the minister will visit the gallery he will see there pictures of ducks and bunches of roses and geese and numerous landscape scenes, as well as George Washington, who, it is true, was a great character and all that. But why should there not be some portraits of our own national characters? I cannot understand a policy that excludes from the gallery the portraits of men who have made history for our country, while we hang there things that are really of no interest to the public. I should like to know from the minister who the men are that administer the gallery.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The present board of trustees comprises Mr. Harry Southam, of the city of Ottawa, the chairman, who is replacing the late Doctor F. J. Shepherd of the city of Montreal. The other trustees are Mr. Norman MacKenzie of Regina, Hon. Vincent Massey, and Mr. J. O. Marchand, architect, of Montreal, with Doctor MacTavish of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. CLARK: I hope the minister will direct the attention of these gentlemen to the remarks that have been made on this subject and suggest that consideration be given to hanging some Canadian portraits in the gallery. I am quite sure that if some of these men will visit the gallery they will be able to eliminate some of the roses, some of the fruit and perhaps some of the foreign gentlemen and consider making space for the portraits of our own men who have made history for this country, and which are now buried in some of the basements.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to have my hon. friend's representations forwarded to the trustees. May I point out, however, to my hon. friend that matters of art are decided only partly by the identity of the person whose portrait is being painted. The question of who the man was is important in regard to the persons to whom my hon. friend has referred, and I quite agree with him with regard to the importance of General Currie and the other gentleman to whom he has alluded. I hope I have not left in his mind the impression that the portrait of General Lipsett has been stored permanently in a basement; it is not in a basement but in the best fireproof space available in Ottawa for the storage and preservation of these various pictures at a uniform temperature and proper humidity.

Mr. CLARK: But that is only a recent development; they were formerly in the basement of the Victoria building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is quite so, but they have been transferred. The portrait of General Lipsett has been moved from one place to another, just as the other portraits have been placed on exhibition in various places, and this happened to be the only one of the three pictures referred to which at present is temporarily stored in the auditorium building.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister tell us whether all precautions are taken when these pictures are loaned to see that they are not destroyed or injured?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, they are fully insured.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am not sure whether the information asked for is wholly of a character that can be produced. Some of it may be confidential. If we pass the motion in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue, I would like it to be understood that the minister will reserve such rights as he has in the matter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In the absence of the hon. member for Bow River, perhaps the motion had better stand.

Motion stands.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Right to marry again.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children involved, and if so, what provision has been made for them?

Mr. LAWSON: There are no children of this marriage.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MARION ANN TERRY

The house in committee on Bill No. 286, for the relief of Marion Ann Terry—Mr. Taylor—Mr. Power in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Right to marry again.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any children in this case? The sponsor of the bill is not here, and perhaps it had better stand.

Mr. SANDERSON: The sponsor is ill and cannot be here. He has asked me to sponsor this bill in his absence. There are three children.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there any provision being made for them?

Mr. SANDERSON: We have no power to make provision for them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not necessary for us to go into that; we need not grant the divorce until provision is made. All I ask at this stage is are the children being provided for? According to the information now before us we are breaking up a home and making no provision for the children.

Mr. SANDERSON: The children are now in the care of the petitioner.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is she in financial circumstances to enable her to care for them?

Mr. SANDERSON: I understand so.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Where is the sponsor in this case? I am given to understand that he is sick. It is rather remarkable the number of hon. gentlemen who are sick at the end of the session! But if the sponsor is ill, we had better let the bill pass.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported read the third time and passed.

CHARLES EDWIN WALKER

The house in committee on Bill No. 296, for the relief of Charles Edwin Walker—Mr. Sanderson—Mr. Power in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is a bill to which the attention of the private bills committee should be especially called. The respondent denies that she is guilty. There are several corespondents named in this case. As I understand it, at the present time the respondent is in receipt of a separation allowance. She believes that this is simply a "frame-up" in order to relieve her husband of the responsibility of paying this separation allowance. In this case, as in a number of others, there is no notification given to the respondent before she comes to the divorce committee of the Senate as to what charges she is to meet. When she appears before the committee charges are introduced of which she has no knowledge whatever, and hence she is not able to produce witnesses in refutation of those charges. Further, only a limited amount of money is granted to her in order that she may make good her defence, and this allowance is not sufficient for her to call the witnesses necessary when several corespondents are named. I call these allegations to the attention of the private bills committee in order that this particular bill may receive careful consideration there. If not, I am afraid we shall have to take it up in detail and ask for the evidence here on the floor of the house.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I feel somewhat the same way as my hon. friend. When the charge of adultery is brought against a woman she should have full particulars and ample time to prepare her defence. When she goes before the divorce committee and swears positively that she has not committed that offence, I give great weight to her evidence, because my experience is that in civil cases a woman hesitates very much before she perjures herself. I think a great deal is to be said in favour of this bill being reheard by the private bills committee, or at least being postponed for further consideration by this house.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): Shall section 1 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): Those in favour of section 1 will please say "aye."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): Those opposed will please say "nay."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Mr. BOYS: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether anybody appeared on behalf of the respondent when the bill was before the private bills committee. I do not know what the proceedings were there; I have not the record before me. One would almost imagine that if the respondent denied the charge, and asked for an opportunity of calling evidence to prove the falsity of the allegation by the petitioner, her request would have been granted. I do not know whether she asked for the opportunity or not, but there is one sure thing, if she asked for it, and it was refused, there was no reason in the world why she should not have appeared before the private bills committee when they had the bill under consideration and given some indication of her evidence and asked permission to call witnesses. From my knowledge of the atmosphere in the private bills committee this session, had that been done I have no doubt full opportunity would have been given her. If no such request was made of the committee why now should we be asked to send the bill back? I certainly do not want to stand against any woman wrongly accused, but it does seem to me there should be some finality to these proceedings. I am in accord with what has been said that perhaps the opportunities given to the respondents in these cases are more or less insufficient. There is nothing in the petition except the allegation that a certain woman has committed a certain offence with a certain man on divers occasions. Perhaps that procedure should be amended. But that is not before us at the present time. The divorce committee dealt with this bill. I think we ought to be told whether the request that I have referred to was made. If it was made and refused, why did not the respondent through her counsel, or through my hon. friend, if he is interested—as he has been in other cases and taken action and well taken it—appear before the private bills committee instead of waiting until we get to the last days of the session before raising this point? It does not seem to me to be fair to the other side—and there are two sides to this question. I think before we send this bill back to the private bills committee, somebody with knowledge of the situation should acquaint us with the proceedings before the divorce committee and before the private bills committee when the bill was under consideration there.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, personally I know nothing with regard to the evidence in this case. It is some two weeks ago since I had a letter from the respondent asking that something be done for her protection.

Mr. BOYS: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I think the time has come when some stand should be taken by this house as to what right any member has to introduce and place upon Hansard letters written to him privately by one of the parties to a divorce action, which letter could never be admitted before a committee of this house or any court of justice.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. BOYS: I am raising a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): The member for Simcoe has the floor on a point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will please sit down.

Mr. BOYS: My point of order is that no member of this house has a right to quote from a private letter he received from one of the parties to a divorce suit, which letter would not be admitted before either the divorce committee or the private bills committee or any court of justice.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): With all respect to the judgment of the hon. member for Simcoe, I am inclined to think that his point of order is not well taken. In my view any member of this house has a right in debate to quote any document if he will produce it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have that ruling. But it may relieve the mind of the hon. member for Simcoe if I tell him that I had no idea of reading a letter. He complained that this matter ought to have been brought to the attention of the house at an earlier stage. I stated that several weeks ago I had a letter from the respondent urging that something be done in the case. Now—

Mr. BOYS: Is not that quoting from a letter?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, that is not quotation; it is a reference.

Mr. BOYS: You might as well read it as state what is in it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. gentleman let me have the floor for a moment? A few minutes ago he complained that nothing had been done, and inferentially he suggested some of us should have done something. I say I had no personal knowledge of this case, but that one of the parties concerned had written to me simply because I had been taking a stand in a general way against these cases. She had written to me asking that something should be done. I had brought one or two cases before the house. In this case I did not want to weary the house at the time by reading another letter into the records and making another appeal. I am not a member of the private bills committee; I have to attend other committees of the house and to do work outside of this divorce question. I take it for granted that the members of the private bills committee, including the hon. member from Simcoe, should have given some consideration to this case when it was before the committee, but apparently nothing was done.

Mr. BOYS: Would you suggest that we should delay it without a request from the respondent?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggest that every bill which comes before the private bills committee should receive consideration.

Mr. BOYS: I suggest that the hon. gentleman had better read this case and the other cases before he starts to object to what has been done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would remind the hon. member for Simcoe that the only two measures which have been held up in this house and have been referred back to the private bills committee have resulted in one being withdrawn and the other voted down. Out of 250 cases coming before this house, only two were carefully examined by the private bills committee and both of them were rejected. I do not suggest that this proves that if all of the 250 were so considered that they would all be rejected, but I do say that it is a most remarkable thing that such a decision should have resulted in regard to these two. When I, as a private member of the house, am appealed to to take such action as will delay a case of this sort, it seems to me that I have a perfect right to voice an objection to proceeding with the bill. This woman the respondent in this case, claims that the whole matter is a frameup, and so far as I am able to observe the procedure as carried on by the Senate committee, the way is wide open for a frameup. Here let me emphasize a point which I mentioned and which I think is worthy of the consideration of this house: the respondent was given no opportunity whatever to know what charges were being made against her. Several corespondents were named, and it would require a very heavy expenditure of money for her to bring witnesses from a distance in order that her case might be established, and possibly the evidence against her refuted.

Mr. BOYS: Did the respondent's counsel before the divorce committee ask for an appeal?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, I believe so.

Mr. NEILL: Was the respondent represented by counsel?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, but that did not altogether meet her need, because she had not the money to bring the witnesses who were required.

Mr. BOYS: My hon. friend knows that if she requires money an allowance is made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A certain allowance is made, but I would ask the hon. member how far $75 will go in paying fees of counsel and in bringing witnesses to testify to several distinct charges. Here is one fact I gather from the evidence; the most material witness for the respondent was not able to be present. It is a queer thing that we should damn a woman in this way simply because it does not meet the convenience of the Senate committee to postpone the case.

Mr. STEVENS: Is the evidence to which the hon. gentleman has just referred the evidence in this case?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quoting from:

> The petition of Charles Edwin Walker for a bill of divorce from Eva Mary Leroy Walker: report of the committee on divorce, together with evidence received by the committee. Minutes of evidence, the Senate, Ottawa, April 22, 1929.

On page 9 I read:

> Mr. Shorey: Mr. Chairman, before the evidence is taken I want to make a formal application for a postponement on behalf of the respondent. I assume ordinarily that it would be made after the plaintiff's case is in. I do not want to delay the taking of evidence this morning, but there is one witness in particular for the respondent, a Mrs. Irene Henderson, a cousin with whom the respondent has been living practically since the respondent and her husband separated, who is a most material witness for the respondent. In March she had a major operation. . . . .

And she was not able to be present. What was the answer of the Senate to that? I read a little further on on the same page:

> The Chairman: One of the difficulties is this: the committee is made up of different members, and you cannot always get the same members together to hear the second part of the case.

That is a beautiful court. Part of the jury is present to hear one part of the evidence and another set of members wander in to hear the second part. So the divorce committee refused to grant the delay in the case. They were anxious to get through with a grist of business and so the case had to be proceeded with. The woman not having the opportunity of bringing her witnesses and not having the funds with which to do so, not having any knowledge until she came here as to what particular charges she would have to meet—all these things are contrary to the practice of any respectible court; and when the matter does comes before our committee there is no check whatever in regard to the case. Under these circumstances I think I am quite right in asking that this bill should be either voted down at the present time or be referred back to the committee for consideration. I am aware that the members of the private bills committee do not want to be held up in their work; they do not want to have to reconsider these matters at this late hour in the session. But if they cannot give the case proper consideration it would be far better to have the bill withdrawn rather than, in haste and irrevocably, to pass on this woman a judgment which could never be recalled. This, it seems to me, is a reasonable position to take.

Mr. SANDERSON: I move that the bill be referred back to the private bills committee.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is not in order at this stage. Shall section 1 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: Progress might be reported, and when the Speaker is in the chair the motion can be put to have the bill referred back to the committee.

Mr. SANDERSON: I move that progress be reported.

Motion agreed to and progress reported.

PELEE ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) advise what steps have been taken for the safeguarding of Pelee island which has been lately partially destroyed and the occupants of which are very fearful of what will happen in the future if preventive steps are not taken.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): The matter to which the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) refers was investigated last week by the engineer for that particular district. This is one of the many complaints we have received of flooding which has taken place within the last two or three weeks. My recollection of the report is that the flooding was very bad on Pelee island, but any remedy suggested does not come within the scope of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BENNETT: It is suggested that a very small expenditure now might save some more later on. That was the only reason why I was asked to bring the matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think what my hon. friend refers to is the breaking away of dykes. They were not, if my information is correct, originally constructed by this department, or by this government, but are drainage works.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is it not a fact that the taking away of gravel and sand from part of this island is more or less accountable for the trouble to-day?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It has not been so reported by the engineers.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think it would be well for the minister to make inquiries in that regard.

PRIVILEGE—MR. THORSON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): I rise to a question of privilege. On Friday evening the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) made with regard to me certain statements which are not correct. In reply to a question put by me as to the hon. gentleman's attitude to the Hudson Bay railway, he made amongst other statements, the following observations with regard to myself:

> He may be able to take hon. gentlemen's amendments away from them and appropriate them as his own.

Later on he said:

> Not until you were driven to it—like the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg which he appropriated as his own.
> [Mr. McQuarrie.]

These statements are both irrelevant and incorrect. I realize, of course, that the hon. gentleman was excited when he made them, but I cannot allow them to remain on the record uncorrected. I deny that I have ever appropriated any hon. member's amendment as my own. If the leader of the opposition had taken the trouble to consult Hansard, he would have seen that the statements of which I now complain are incorrect.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): With respect to the question of privilege raised by the hon. gentleman, there was no excitement about the matter at all. I could not hear very well what the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) said, but what I did say—

Mr. THORSON: I rise to a point of order. I have made a denial absolutely that I have ever appropriated any other hon. member's amendment as my own, and that statement must be accepted by the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: What I observed was that, listening the other evening to the hon. member for North Winnipeg, my hearing indicated that he said that one of his amendments had been appropriated by the hon. gentleman. It was to that I referred. If my information is incorrect, my statement is incorrect and unwarranted in fact, but I certainly understood the hon. member for North Winnipeg stated that to be the fact. I will turn up Hansard and see what he said in order to be certain. But if his statement was as I heard it, my statement is correct.

Mr. THORSON: Do I understand the leader of the opposition to accept my statement that I did not at any time appropriate any other hon. member's amendment?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is this: that if the statement made by the hon. member for North Winnipeg is correct, I accept that statement. If the statement made by the hon. member who has just spoken is correct, I must accept that statement. I have therefore to take the choice between the two and I have not yet decided which to take.

Mr. THORSON: I think the leader of the opposition should abide by the rules of the house. I have made a denial that I ever appropriated any other hon. member's amendment as my own. I make that statement as a member of the house and it should be accepted.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the leader of the opposition has accepted the statement of the hon. gentleman.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. BENNETT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I have a more difficult matter to speak to with respect to a representation made in a newspaper, apparently indicating why the hon. gentleman asked me some questions the other evening. This appeared in a newspaper published in Saskatoon—and perhaps the observation of the Minister of Justice the other day that there is an election in Saskatchewan may also have something to do with this—"Tories block Hudson bay port." Those who were present the other evening will recall that no objection was taken to the project, but an effort was made to ascertain how much money had been expended in the past, there having been no opportunity in the public accounts committee to elicit this information. If the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) were here—and I in common with every other member regret that it is necessary for him to go to the hospital—he would agree, as the record shows, that no effort was made to block the vote; further, that I stated clearly that the party with which I am associated stands squarely behind the enterprise, and has done so from its inception, and that at the Winnipeg convention it passed a resolution which it will be my duty to endeavour to carry out, namely, to see that that road is completed without unnecessary delay.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I understand from the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that the opposition desire to raise certain matters for discussion on the motion to go into supply. Several of the ministers are absent this morning attending the funeral of the late Mr. Lanctôt. I have explained the situation to my hon. friend, who has agreed that if we give an opportunity for discussion later in the day, we may be permitted to go into supply immediately. I will undertake to say on behalf of the government that when we have concluded the morning session, it will be moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day, and to-night at eight o'clock any matter may be brought up for discussion.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister was not present for the moment, and I agreed with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that if possible we would make that arrangement. The Prime Minister to whom I communicated the matter this morning, has stated the communication correctly.

Mr. SPEAKER: As we approach prorogation, it is always understood that the committee of supply may report back and sit again the same day, so we shall follow that rule to-day.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works—chargeable to collection of revenue—graving docks:

Champlain graving dock..	$ 97,000
Lorne graving dock..	42,000
Esquimalt graving dock.	81,400
Total..	$220,400

Mr. KAISER: When may we expect the supplementary estimates?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): That is a matter in regard to which the Minister of Finance would be able to give my hon. friend more information than I can, but I expect them very shortly.

Mr. BENNETT: They were promised for Friday last.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think that is correct.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers generally, $30,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This item was discussed and was allowed to stand. I am not sure whether it was passed.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister explain this term "generally"? Is it miscellaneous?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, it is.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What is this for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the general vote for harbours and rivers, to cover general expenses. It is not limited to any one province.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is more to cover emergencies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What class of emergencies would be done under this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to cover travelling expenses, printing, stationery, instruments and so forth which cannot conveniently be charged against any one item in particular of the general appropriations for construction, improvements or repairs in the different provinces.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and Telephone Lines

Prince Edward Island and mainland, $7,000.
Land and cable telegraph lines, lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels for cable services, $218,000.
Alberta and Saskatchewan, $114,000.
British Columbia, mainland, $36,000.
British Columbia, Vancouver island district, $132,000.
British Columbia, northern district, $88,000.
Yukon system—main line, $139,000.
Telegraph and telephone services generally, $5,000.—Total, $739,000.

Mr. FRASER: What repairs or improvements are proposed on the Yukon system? Does this vote cover repairs proposed to be made during the present season?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the maintenance vote. It is required for working expenses, including salaries, repairs, supplies and living expenses in connection with the system for the year 1929-30.

Mr. FRASER: What repairs are proposed to be made on the Yukon system under this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The repairs intended to be covered by this vote are estimated to cost $25,000. That is a general lump sum to cover repairs, renewals, office supplies, materials for the line, blankets, and so forth.

Mr. FRASER: There are no specific repairs in mind at the present time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: With respect to the telephone lines in the interior of British Columbia, a sale was made last year of some of the lines to the British Columbia Telephone Company. Is it proposed to sell any more of these lines?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I answered that question the other day when we were considering vote 148, but I shall be glad to answer my hon. friend's question. It is proposed this year to sell lines north and east of Kamloops. They will be advertised and sold if satisfactory tenders are received.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The sale is going to be advertised this time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Last time the lines were not advertised for sale at all; they were sold to the British Columbia Telephone Company without any advertising for tenders. I believe that the Okanagan Telephone Company, which has been carrying on business in that territory for quite a number of years, was not given an opportunity to buy those lines, but that instead the British Columbia Telephone Company was allowed to go into that territory, and I am informed that the Okanagan Telephone Company was prepared to make an offer for the lines if there had been any competition. Would the minister explain why no opportunity was given to other companies to bid on the lines the government proposed to sell last year? The minister perhaps knows something about the Okanagan Telephone Company, or at all events his deputy will, because it is quite a large concern and has been carrying on business for a great number of years. It would seem to me to be most unfair to cut in on the Okanagan Telephone Company, one of the pioneers in that district, in the way that has been done. I have not got it here but in my room I have a lot of correspondence in connection with the matter, and it seems to quite aparent that this deal with the British Columbia Telephone Company was put through behind the backs of the Okanagan Telephone Company, which had been I think negotiating for some time with the government. The Minister of National Health (Mr. King, Kootenay)) who is a cabinet minister from British Columbia, knows something about it. I think certain conferences were held in British Columbia with the directors of the Okanagan Telephone Company. Perhaps the minister could give us an explanation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to do so. I do not think that the Okanagan Telephone Company will say they were not given an opportunity to bid on the line that was sold last year. My hon. friend will remember that this matter was under discussion a year ago when the estimates were before the house. Of course I have not the details here, but I can assure my hon. friend that what took place was this: The Okanagan Telephone Company was interested only in a very small portion of the line, and they wrote the department I think making perfectly clear that they were interested in only a small proportion of the line that was to be sold. That particular portion was the best revenue producing part of the line, and it was felt that we could not sell it without selling the balance. We had only one bidder for the whole line, and it was sold to that bidder. I understand that the Okanagan Telephone Company is this year in a position to bid for the lines that are proposed to be sold, and they and everybody else will have an opportunity to tender.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am afraid the minister's information is not entirely accurate because I was informed by the manager of the Okanagan Telephone Company just shortly before I left for Ottawa that had they known that those lines would be sold by the government they certainly would have offered a better price than the government got from the British Columbia Telephone Company. I think the statement was made by the previous Minister of Public Works that the government would not sell any part of the line unless they got rid of the whole thing, but as a matter of fact the government did sell only part of the line. That is what I am objecting to, and that is what the Okanagan Telephone Company objects to, that the government did sell a part of the line without giving the Okanagan Telephone Company a chance to bid on that part at all. I do not know that this vote should go through until we have some further information from the minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The whole section, of which the part that the Okanagan Telephone Company proposed to purchase was only a very small part, was sold.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But the price that the government put on the line when the negotiations were taking place with the Okanagan Telephone Company was very much higher than the price at which the lines were sold. If I remember correctly the price which the government got from the British Columbia Telephone Company was $100,000. Am I right?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think you are too high; I think it was less than that, but I would not say positively. I shall be very glad to show my hon. friend the correspondence, and I think I can satisfy him that the statement I am making as to what took place is absolutely accurate.

Mr. McQUARRIE: In any event the minister states positively that with respect to any future sales a chance will be given for other concerns in British Columbia to bid?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is correct.

Mr. CAYLEY: How did the federal government come into possession of these lines?

Mr. ELLIOTT: These are part of the lines that were originally constructed for the purpose of giving to the settlers in the outlying districts, where no commercial company would undertake to build, facilities to enable them to keep in touch with the rest of the world.

Mr. CAYLEY: I notice there is one line in Prince Edward Island. Was that built by the federal authorities?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is part of the arrangement made at confederation to provide Prince Edward Island with telephone communication to keep the people in touch with the mainland.

Mr. LUCAS: Why are there two votes dealing with telegraph and telephone lines; vote 313, $739,000 and vote 147, $258,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Vote 147 is for construction and does not include salaries. The other vote includes salaries for maintenance.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the mileage of the federal telephone lines in Alberta?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot offhand give the mileage for Alberta. I have a statement which I shall be very glad to hand to my hon. friend, showing the total mileage of telephone and telegraph lines.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister given consideration to the possibility of consolidating the telegraph lines from Edmonton to the Peace River country? I am told that the lines run in close proximity to the railway telegraph lines. I am not personally familiar with the situation, but I have had a few letters about it. If the minister has not given consideration to such a consolidation, will he have his officers look into it this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The object of these lines is to provide accommodation where there is no other means of communication. The matter to which my hon. friend refers has had consideration, and the general policy of the department as far as possible is not to have two lines in close proximity. One line is expensive enough in that sparsely settled country.

Mr. COOTE: I am not suggesting that any telegraph lines should be discontinued to points that are not served by the railway telegraph lines; but from the map it appears to me quite possible that there might be a consolidation of some of the lines running from Edmonton up to the Peace River country.

Mr. NEILL: This is a departure from what I think should be the established policy of the government. I would consider it of interest to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) if he can distract his attention for a moment from the divorce bills. This is a departure from the principle of government ownership. The government builds these telegraph lines and then as soon as they become profitable, or nearly so, they hand them over to a private company. It is not fair to the system. And it is not fair to the principle of government ownership, towards which we are supposed to be working all the time. I can see the day when perhaps this policy will be extended all over British Columbia. It is altogether undesirable because we have had some experiences of privately owned telegraph lines. While they are well conducted business propositions, the private companies are absolutely coldblooded and will not give accommodation unless there is good money in it for themselves. The government telegraph service, like the Post Office Department, gives some assistance to the outlying pioneer districts. If this principle of selling out is extended, I can see the day when those people will be cut out from such facilities. When the service becomes profitable why not keep it on and so help to balance up some of the unprofitable sections?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If it is decided to go into government ownership and operation of telephones—

Mr. NEILL: And telegraph lines.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —telegraph and telephone lines, because they are working together so far as those the government operate are concerned, perhaps there is a great deal to be said in favour of it.

Mr. NEILL: You are in it now.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, but only for the purposes of providing facilities that are not otherwise obtainable. We are not in it as a commercial proposition. If it were entered upon as a commercial proposition, then my hon. friend will see we would endeavour to take over what no doubt he has in mind—we would take them all over and run the profitable as well as the unprofitable lines.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why should the government turn over the profitable lines to private companies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The reason we build these lines in the first place is to supply facilities that a commercial company will not supply because it does not look like a profitable venture. As soon as some commercial company will take them over and operate them in conjunction with other lines that they have, which make them profitable, the government endeavours to get rid of the deficit by handing over those lines.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But why should the government do all the pioneering work and be at all the loss of initiating a system and then as soon as it becomes profitable turn it over to a commercial company? It seems to me the government should retain the system when it becomes profitable.

Mr. NEILL: On the principle enunciated by the minister we shall find the government selling the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Further, as regards telegraphs, have we not a system of practically government-owned telegraphs in connection with Canadian National Railways?

Mr. ELLIOTT: For the operation of the railways; that is correct.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But in commercial work, in connection with the railways?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, part of it anyway.

Mr. EVANS: There are still in Saskatchewan some telegraph lines which I do not think are needed. There is a part of the old line from Qu'Appelle to Battleford, and New Humboldt, some twenty miles, still in existence, and this side of Battleford, at a place called Baljennie an operator is maintained all the time, although there is not much work to do. All he gets over the wires are the market reports, and there is absolutely no need of that line. I understand that the line was only a year or two ago practically renewed from Baljennie to Battleford. It may be needed further northwest up to Fort Pitt and further up, but the other part of the line is certainly not needed and there is no reason why we should pay an operator to be there all the time doing nothing.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is the name of the line?

Mr. EVANS: I am referring to the line from Baljennie to Battleford, twenty odd miles.

Mr. ELLIOTT: From the data I have I am not in a position to say whether or not that line is still being operated, but I am able to give to my hon. friend details in connection with the lines we operate in Saskatchewan and Alberta. The mileage in the two provinces is as follows:

The mileage is made up as follows:

In Alberta—	Miles	Miles
Edmonton-Hudson Hope	739½
Athabasca-Fort McMurray	245
Athabasca-Lac La Biche	78
Mooswa-Onion Lake	37
Junor	8
		1,107½

In Saskatchewan—
Pegasus to Barnes Ferry	14
Battleford-Isle la Crosse	335
Lloydminster-Onion Lake	42
Assiniboia-Willow Branch	84
Grouard-High Prairie	38½
Dawson Creek	8
Kilkerran	6
		527½
Total		1,635

The total mileage the government operates is around 10,000 miles.

Mr. EVANS: Is that line running down to Willow Branch still maintained—and from Moose Jaw south?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am under the impression that it is, but I cannot say.

Mr. EVANS: It is not needed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I can assure my hon. friend that the moment it is not needed it will be discontinued. There is this difficulty in regard to the lines that are not largely used: unless someone else is willing to take them over, there may be a few people along the line who are using it and who would feel it a great hardship if the service were discontinued.

Mr. EVANS: But in this case it crosses a great many of the railway lines and runs alongside some of them. Moreover, the whole country is pretty well served by telephone as well.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am obliged for the information and I will make a special inquiry to see just what the conditions are.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is there a government telephone line running north from Edmonton? If so, why not join up with the Alberta government lines from Edmonton?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the one from Edmonton north is a telegraph line.

Mr. ADSHEAD: That is in conjunction with the Canadian National Railways at Edmonton.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the principle on which these lines are built?

Mr. FRASER: I want to ask the minister a question in connection with the fourth item in vote 313—British Columbia, mainland. That vote has been reduced from $92,000 to $36,000. Is that on account of the sale of the lines south of Kamloops during the last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: How much of the $92,000 of last year's vote was actually spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The revenue was $22,485. For 1928-29 the expenditure was $114,183.42 to March 31. That is Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He is asking for British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: The total vote was $92,000 for British Columbia.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The expenditure last year on the British Columbia mainland was $59,978.10 out of the $92,000. That is why the appropriation has been reduced this year.

Mr. FRASER: This year $36,000 is being asked to carry on these lines. It is proposed also to sell the lines east and north of Kamloops. Tenders are being called and the proposition is to dispose of the lines. Suppose these tenders are accepted: there is an important administrative office in Kamloops; what is to become of that office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the line is sold the office will of course be discontinued. If the line is sold to another company the office will disappear so far as we are concerned.

Mr. FRASER: What about the men in the service? What will become of them? A certain number of official positions will be abolished and what will become of the officials who have no jobs left?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the past, as largely as it has been possible to do so, those who were operating lines sold by the department have been taken over by the purchaser. That is usually what does happen and what we hope will happen to a large extent here.

Mr. FRASER: I do not think you have ever had to face a situation exactly like that which exists in Kamloops at present. There you have had an administrative office with administrative officials in a central location; you have sold the lines south of the city, but of course you have not done away with the administrative offices. However, now it is intended to sell the lines to the east and north of the city and there will be no need of those administrative officials in the future. I am not concerned about the ordinary clerks or operators, because they will probably have an opportunity of being taken over by the purchasing company, but some of the administrative officials have spent a long time in the service. I know that one man, the superintendent, has been in the service for twenty-five or thirty years, but now his office is to be abolished and I would like to know what disposition is to be made of this man and other ranking officials in that office.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say anything definite about what will happen to the general superintendent or any particular officer, but I can assure my hon. friend that it will be the aim of the department to provide, as far as it can be done, for those who are not taken over by the purchasing company.

Mr. FRASER: I suppose it has not been decided whether it would be possible to move these administrative officers from Kamloops to Ashcroft?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We cannot say at present

Mr. BRADY: I would like to ask the minister whether any extensions are contemplated in the telephone system of northern British Columbia?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will turn to vote 148 on page 45 he will find that it includes the extensions which are proposed for this year. The vote of $88,000 to which he refers is for the purpose of operating the lines we have at present and does not include the construction of new lines.

Mr. BRADY: I have before me a resolution from the Associated Boards of Trade of Central British Columbia with reference to telephone facilities in the northern part of central British Columbia extending from Terrace for about three hundred miles along the Canadian National line, embracing the whole of Ominica county as well as the Skeena. I think perhaps at this time it would be well to let the minister know the great needs of this part of Canada in regard to an up-to-date telephone system. The resolution, I propose to read, is very brief:

Whereas present telephone facilities throughout the central interior of British Columbia are most inadequate, and many settlements are without this means of communication altogether;

And whereas this large district, which is increasing in commercial importance every year, has to depend on insufficient telegraph facilities, and a tri-weekly mail service;

And whereas telephone lines traversing important parts of this district not served by telephone would be of very great benefit to the various business interests established in the district, and to settlers:

Be it therefore resolved that this convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Central British Columbia do ask that the Dominion government have a survey made of the situation herein related, with a view to the construction of telephone systems where required, at the earliest possible moment.

I will not delay the committee very long, but I would like to draw attention to the remarks made by the minister a few minutes ago. He said that the department was desirous, so far as it was possible and without considering the commercial aspect, of giving these aids to the scattered settlements throughout Canada. Ontario and Quebec do not call upon this government to develop their telephone systems—they are able to look after their own—but I honestly think this department has been very dilatory in coming to the aid of the settlers in those districts of central British Columbia who must depend on the Dominion government. I travelled in that country last fall and found that places like Colley Mount, in the Francois lake district, where there are very fine farms and numerous settlers, have no connection with the outside world. The result is that there is a retardation of development, because the people are reluctant to go far away if they do not get telephone accommodation.

Once more I would ask the government to heed the requests of the people who go to such trouble to present their needs to this department; I think at least the government should have a proper survey made in order to find out really what extensions are necessary so that definite steps may be taken to assist in the settlement of these areas. I believe that the money spent in telephone extensions in a country which is being settled is money which undoubtedly will bring results later on. I hope this matter will receive the sympathetic consideration of the government.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will be very glad to inquire into the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. It is the desire of the department to impress upon the people who go to the outlying districts of the country the fact that they will not be cut off from the more settled portions of Canada and that they will be provided with facilities for communication with their friends and business connections so far as it is reasonably possible to do so.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would like to ask the minister a question with reference to the telegraph service from Vancouver north along the coast of the mainland. I believe the line runs as far as Pender Harbour, and I understand that the service given is not satisfactory in that the offices are closed on Sundays and holidays. In the summer time a great many people go to the seaside resorts up along the coast and when an accident happens or someone becomes ill on a Sunday or a holiday there is no way in which a telegram can be sent. It seems to me that some arrangement could be made whereby messages would be accepted by the Canadian National Railways Telegraph Company for delivery in Vancouver on Sundays and holidays. The men who send the messages are available because the offices are generally located in their stores. I have endeavoured myself to send out messages on several occasions but have found that it was impossible to do so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: These lines are pretty primitive, and a great many offices are located in the houses of the operators. These men are usually available but they cannot be expected to stay on the job all the time. There is only one operator at each office, and there are bound to be periods when he would be taking time off. However, the sugestion made by my hon. friend is worthy of consideration and I shall be very glad to look into it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am afraid I have not made myself clear to the minister. The trouble is not with the men who send the messages, but with the delivery of the messages in Vancouver.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The hon. member's objection is that the receiving end is not kept open.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Yes. I suggest that it might be possible to make an arrangement with the Canadian National so that they would accept messages from along the coast and deliver them in Vancouver on Sundays and holidays. They could also send out messages where the operators could be reached.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No complaints have reached the department with reference to the particular matter the hon. member has mentioned. We have an arrangement with the Canadian National applying to certain places.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. McQUARRIE: This item is not carried as yet, because I desire to speak with reference to the Okanagan Telegraph Company again.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): With the consent of the house I would like to advance Bill No. 254 in connection with the terminal facilities at Montreal, if my hon. friend is ready to proceed with that.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I thought we were going on with supply after eight o'clock. That was the arrangement.

SUPPLY—AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. M. C. SENN (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to direct the attention of the government and of the house to the very serious condition of certain branches of the agricultural industry, particularly that of dairying. Hon. members on the government benches are continually boasting of what they choose to call the abounding prosperity of the country. If the prosperity of which they speak is as general as they would lead us to believe, it should be shared at least by such an important industry as agriculture. I am afraid, however, that they will have great difficulty in persuading the average farmer of the Dominion of Canada that he enjoys that prosperity. The fact is that agriculture is not prospering today, and I intend to submit to the house two reasons out of the many that might be advanced for making such a statement.

First of all, let me say that ever since this government came into office in 1921, there has been a steady depreciation in land values. In many communities, large numbers of farm holdings are being offered for sale, and in many instances it is impossible to sell those farm holdings for the value of the buildings themselves. In fact, from my own observation and experience I feel that I am safe in saying that land values have depreciated by from 30 to 40 per cent during the past seven or eight years, since this government came into power.

My second reason for making the statement is the fact that there is a continual exodus from our rural communities. In many country districts it would be difficult to find a concession or even a farm from which young men and young women have not gone to our cities and to the country to the south for the purpose of finding a job and making a living. It is entirely unnecessary for me to advance any further proof of the fallacy of the government's claim of prosperity. Members of the government themselves, I believe, are more or less aware of the true state of affairs in this respect. I think it was the late member for Frontenac who, speaking in the house on the budget, quoted from a speech delivered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) some time previously in which he used these words:

> The fact of the matter is, that the farmer is spending more to-day than 100 acres of land will ever yield.

I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce or any other member of the government will not contend for a moment that the standard of living of the farmer should be lower than that of any other class in the community, and it is surely a serious condition of affairs when 100 acres of land will not yield a sufficient income to maintain a reasonable standard of living for the owner of the farm and his family. The responsibilty for this lack of prosperity in the agricultural industry must be laid at the door of the present government. They must be aware of the financial position of the average farmer, and if so, they have absolutely failed to take any measures to assist him in improving his position.

Just as it is true that agriculture is the basic industry of Canada, it is also true that the foundation of agriculture is dairying. In all the provinces the average farmer, while producing other lines of farm products, produces a considerable quantity of milk. It will be found that in the central provinces, in the maritimes and in British Columbia every farmer is producing dairy products, and prior to a short time ago it was true that the dairy business was expanding quite rapidly in the prairie provinces also. The dairy business cannot be built up in a day, or a month or a year; it takes a number of years properly to equip a dairy farm, to build up a dairy herd and to put production on a dairy farm upon a paying basis. But after that has been accomplished, the ultimate success of the industry depends very largely upon the stability of the market and the prices which the farmer can procure. Perhaps hon. members on the other side of the house will not agree with me in the statement that I am going to make, but I am sure hon. members on this side will very largely agree that the greatest factor in stabilizing prices of farm products, with the exception perhaps, of wheat, is the home market itself. The continued invasion of our home markets by foreign producers has done much to create a lack of confidence in the mind of the dairy farmer and to discourage him. In fact it has brought the industry almost to the verge of disaster. On the one hand we find that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and the government are spending large sums of money every year to aid the dairy industry by regulating the standards of dairy produce, by provision for proper grading of dairy products and the accreditation of dairy herds, while on the other hand the government has sat quietly by, absolutely neglecting the most important matter of all, that of taking proper measures to retain the home market for the Canadian producer. Other countries are doing everything within their power by means of tariff duties and regulations to safeguard the interests of their agricultural population. We have a concrete example of this in the recent action of the congress of the United States. Not content with the provisions of the Fordney-McCumber tariff, they have taken more extreme measures to assist agriculture, while our government, knowing the condition of the Canadian farmer as they must know it, has sat quietly by, inactive and impotent. Although there has been and is to-day a general demand that the duty on poultry products be increased, the government has done absolutely nothing; indeed, in some ways it has been worse than negligent. Last year, by rescinding the order in council giving the Minister of National Revenue power to set a fair market value on natural products, it worked a great injury to the fruit and vegetable industries, while in other ways, especially by its trade agreements, as has been repeatedly pointed out by hon. members on this side of the house, it has materially injured the farming industry, particularly dairying. The order in council of September, 1926, extending the provisions of the Australian agreement to New Zealand is a striking example of this very thing. I wish to show briefly—I am not going to quote many figures—the effect of the New Zealand agreement on the dairy industry and upon agriculture generally in Canada.

In the fiscal year 1925-26, just before the New Zealand agreement came into effect, Canada had an exportable surplus of butter of some 23,303,000 pounds, while for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, Canada had to import some 25,000,000 pounds of butter to meet her own requirements. That is a difference in the three years since the New Zealand agreement came into effect of approximately 50,000,000 pounds. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking on the budget some time ago, tried to explain this by saying that milk products in other forms than butter were being exported in increasing quantities to other countries. and that better returns were being obtained than would have accrued had the milk been manufactured into butter. I have a report in my hand which was sent out by the dairy and cold storage branch of the Department of Agriculture, which goes a long way towards disproving the minister's statement. It shows the amount of milk and cream exported prior to the agreement and since, as well as the amount of condensed milk, powdered milk, evaporated milk and casein, and in every instance the report shows distinctly that there was a less amount exported in 1929 than in the fiscal year 1925-26, prior to the agreement. In the fiscal year 1925-26 Canada exported some $7,843,000 of milk and cream, and in 1928, $6,460,000 worth, or a decrease of approximately $1,389,000. Of condensed, evaporated and powdered milk there was a decrease in the calendar year 1928, as compared with the fiscal year 1925-26, of some 8,000,000 pounds, the value of which was about $750,000. There was also a decrease in the export of casein, so that the contention of the minister that exports of other forms of milk products than butter are increasing is scarcely founded on fact.

Further figures which I obtained from the Bureau of Statistics show that the number of dairy cows in Canada decreased in the year 1928 by some 102,000. On the other hand, the statistics show that while this decrease has been going on in Canada, the number of dairy cows in New Zealand has been increasing by some 50,000. If the dairy industry in this country were in a flourishing condition one would naturally expect that the population of our dairy herds would be increasing, and that our milk production would also be on the up-grade. However, we find that our milk production is not on the up-grade. In the year 1927, the production of milk in Canada was reduced by some 340,000,000 pounds. The figures are not available for 1928, but it is only reasonable to suppose that when the population of our dairy herds decreased by some 100,000 milch cows, the production of milk in the same period would also show a decrease. I do not intend, however, to go any further into that phase of the question, because no doubt it will be dealt with later on.

That the Liberal press of this country are more or less alive to the situation is very apparent. They have been trying to explain the present conditions, and they have been spreading propaganda, in some instances at least, to the effect that the price of butter in Canada is higher than in other countries. I have here, however, a statement of prices taken from the Montreal Gazette showing that during the past six months the price of butter in New York and Chicago has been uniformly from six to eight cents per pound higher than in Montreal. That, it seems to me, is sufficient evidence that the price of butter in Canada is not higher than it is in other countries.

But the dairy industry is not the only branch of agriculture which is being affected adversely by this trade agreement. Other classes of farm products such as are being produced in Canada are coming into the country in ever-increasing quantities. Let me refer to beef. Frozen, chilled and fresh beef came into Canada from New Zealand last year in quite an increased quantity over the importations of former years, the increase between the years 1926 and 1929 amounting to 1,875,000 pounds. The same can be said of fresh, frozen and chilled mutton. Just here let me say that only the other day I had a gentleman in my office whose home is in New Zealand, and he said to me quite frankly that this trade agreement has been a real boon to the New Zealand farmer because of the increased quantities of mutton and beef which they are now shipping into Canada.

In regard to other farm products, I have a return that was asked for by the late hon. member for Frontenac-Addington, dated February 27, 1929, showing that of farm products of a class or kind produced by Canadian farmers there was imported into Canada during the fiscal year 1926 some $2,725,000 worth from New Zealand, and in the year 1928 over $9,461,000 worth, or an increase of some $6,736,000. We must bear in mind that every pound of meat which is brought into the country replaces a similar amount of the Canadian product in our own home market. I have given the house figures which I think demonstrate quite clearly that there has been a steady falling off in milk production during the past year, that there has been an encroachment upon the Canadian market by foreign agricultural products, and that in a great measure this serious condition has been brought about by the provisions of the New Zealand trade agreement. I do not intend to weary the house with any further figures. That the dairy industry is in a critical condition is acknowledged by everyone who is acquainted with the facts. Our milk production is decreasing; our dairy herds are being depleted; foreign agricultural products are finding ready access to our markets. Agriculture is labouring against great odds because of unfair competition.

To my mind the remedy is simple. Measures should at once be taken by the government to ensure the full benefit of the home market to the Canadian producer. I fully believe in the development of trade within the empire. Nothing is more desirable than trade agreements of mutual advantage to sister dominions; but we cannot afford to pay too high a price to attain that object. The ruination of the dairy industry is too great a price to pay. We cannot afford to purchase trade concessions in foreign markets for certain of our industries, if the whole burden is to be borne by some other one industry. I believe the government should negotiate with New Zealand with a view to bringing about a more equitable trade arrangement. If that cannot be accomplished, the agreement should be terminated before our dairy industry is absolutely bankrupt.

Mr. W. E. TUMMON (South Hastings): Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from a dairy district, where practically every farmer is a dairy farmer, I am naturally interested in anything that concerns or affects the dairy industry. I have listened carefully while hon. gentlemen in this house have declared that the importation of butter at one cent per pound duty did not injuriously affect our dairy industry. As I have listened to them it has seemed to me that they could not be in very close touch with the dairy industry, at least with those whom this importation of butter most vitally concerns, namely, the producers—the dairy farmers.

In a great agricultural country like Canada, where all governments in the past have sought to encourage and foster the dairy industry, a country which has gained a place as one of the leading dairy countries of the world, it does seem to me reasonable that we should at least be able to supply our own requirements. I think I am voicing the opinion of thousands of those who are engaged in the dairy industry to-day when I say that had there been no importation of butter at one cent per pound duty, our butter production would have kept pace with the times, and we would not now be importing such large quantities of butter.

For years the dairy farmers of the district which I have the honour to represent were urged by the department of agriculture to engage in winter dairying. We were told by the dairy and cold storage branch that our prospects for increased prices for butter would be better could an all the year round supply be provided. Now, in a country like Canada an all the year round supply can be provided only by winter dairying. Up to within a few years ago winter dairying was on the increase in our district, but at the present time, with the exception of the production of sweet milk for our towns and cities, winter dairying is practically a dead issue.

Dairying in Canada made great progress from 1900 until 1926. What is the reason that it has not continued to forge ahead? Is the dairy farmer less patriotic than he was in 1926? Is he less capable of producing to-day than he was a few years ago? Rather is the failure not due to the fact that a few years ago this government took away the slight advantage which the dairy farmer held in his home market, and forced him—nothwithstanding the fact that he must stable his cattle from six to seven months in each and every year and give them extra care—forced him, I say, to take a price for his butter based upon the competitive cost of producing a pound of butter fat in a country where conditions as to climate and feed are very favourable.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the dairy farmers of this country have a right to expect fair play. Fair play is all they ask. It is a significant fact that Canada is the only British dominion that permits the importation of butter at 1 cent per pound duty. Australia has a duty of 12 cents per pound; New Zealand, 7 cents; South Africa had a duty of 4 cents per pound, but in 1926 when Australia succeeded in shipping large quantities of butter into South Africa the duty was raised to 10 cents per pound to preserve the home market to the South African producer; the United States has a duty of 12 cents per pound, and if indication counts for anything now, that duty will soon be raised to 14 cents per pound; Argentine has a duty of 6.18 cents per pound; while in Canada, where dairying is carried on perhaps under even more difficult conditions than in any of the countries that I have named, this government has decided that the only protection the Canadian dairyman is worthy of is one cent per pound. Since that decision was made and became effective, in 1925, the farmers of the Antipodes have been capturing the butter market of Canada. The Australian treaty was made applicable on and after October 1, 1925, and at that time by order in council the 1 cent rate on imported butter was extended to New Zealand. It is true that Australia did grant certain concessions to Canada in return for the concessions that Canada granted to her; but as far as I am aware neither then nor since has New Zealand granted any concessions to Canada in return for the concessions that Canada granted to her.

Now, I should like the house to note for a moment the imports of butter from Australia and New Zealand for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1921, to March 31, 1925, or the five years preceding the coming into effect of the Australian treaty and the New Zealand order in council. I will not weary the house with all these figures. I might say that I have two or three other tables here that I shall ask the indulgence of the house to place on Hansard. I do not take up much of the time of hon. members, and I trust that this indulgence will be granted to me.

The figures are as follows:

For the five years ending March 31, 1921, to March 31, 1925, the total importations of butter from Australia were 310,890 pounds; from New Zealand, 7,154,907 pounds—a total of 7,465,797 pounds. It will be noted that of this total only 310,890 pounds came from Australia. From these figures it is evident that New Zealand butter was better known and better liked in Canada than was Australian butter. Notwithstanding any effect of the Patterson scheme in the importation of Australian butter, the granting of the same concessions to New Zealand took away from Australia, as it were, the advantage which she hoped would accrue by the concessions which Canada had granted to her.

Now, let hon. members note the quantities of butter imported from these two countries for the four fiscal years following, that is 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929.

Year	Pounds
1926..	4,828,468
1927..	5,705,960
1928..	14,195,789
1929..	24,952,611

It is a significant fact that during the last three months of the fiscal year just closed —that is to say, January, February and March—the importations were as follows: 1929, 7,660,681 for January, in comparison with 3,183,289 for January 1928; February 1929, 6,598,476 in comparison with 3,052,311 for February 1928; March 1929, 3,259,145 in comparison with 2,676,492 for March 1928. In other words, there was a total increase of 8,606,210 pounds for the three months January, February and March, 1929, in comparison with the corresponding three months in 1928.

Some people will ask, what about the consumer? They will say that if it were not for this importation of butter at one cent a pound duty the consumer would have to pay more per pound for this product. I am not so sure of that. The most discouraging thing the Canadian dairy farmer has to face to-day is the fact that he is not secure in his own home market. The people in the towns and cities of the districts I have the honour to represent are not much concerned about a few cents a pound on butter. They believe that the greatest asset they can have is a prosperous farming community at their door. They believe that a prosperous farming community right at their door is of greater value to them than a prosperous farming community three thousand miles away. Similarly, the farmers of that district believe that towns and cities at their door, where workmen are busy making the tools and implements they require on their farms—and the farmers of Canada at large require—are of greater value to them than prosperous towns and cities in the United States or anywhere else in the world.

The foundation of the entire dairy industry is the production of milk and the success of any one branch of that industry is no indication of the success of the industry as a whole. A farmer, if he is geographically so situated, will perhaps send his milk to the cheese factory this year and next year to the creamery to be made into butter. That is a common occurrence throughout Ontario. I repeat, the success of any one branch is no indication of the success of the industry taken as a whole; but the production of milk is the foundation or basis of the entire industry. Upon it all branches of the dairy industry are built. From 1910 to 1926 the dairy industry in Canada made great strides forward; but something seemed to have gone wrong in 1927. It is well to remember that the Australian treaty and the New Zealand order in council went into effect fifteen months prior to the beginning of the year 1927. Let us note what the total dairy production in Canada was for the two calendar years 1926 and 1927—that is, the total dairy production of Canada expressed in pounds of milk and covering milk made into butter, both dairy and creamery, home made and factory cheese, miscellaneous factory products, and milk consumed fresh or otherwise. The figures for the years from 1924 to 1928, inclusive, are as follows:

Year	Pounds
1924	12,318,538,000
1925	12,651,308,000	Increase over 1924—332,770,000 pounds
1926	13,407,340,000	Increase over 1925—756,032,000 pounds
1927	13,060,242,000	Decrease from 1926—347,098,000 pounds
1928	Not yet available

I regret that the dairy statistics for the year 1928 are not yet available, but I will venture this opinion, that when they are available they will show a corresponding decrease in the basis of the entire dairy industry production of milk in comparison with 1927. Let us take the decrease of 347,098,000 pounds in the foundation of the dairy industry in 1927; at the usual average ratio of 3·5 pounds of butter fat to 100 pounds of milk, this would represent 12,148,429 pounds of butter fat. A pound of butter fat is equivalent to 1⅛ pounds of butter. Thus the decrease in the milk production in Canada in 1927 compared to 1926 is equivalent to 14,378,115 pounds of butter. Now we have a rather interesting comparison. If we go back and look at the importations of butter into Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1928, which covers the milk producing periods of 1927, we find that the importations were 14,195,789 pounds. In other words, the shrinkage or decrease in the base or foundation of the entire industry in 1927 compared with 1926, expressed in pounds of butter, agrees with the amount of butter imported during the same period from the Antipodes, and most of which came from New Zealand. There could be no stronger evidence to show that the importation of butter at one cent a pound duty from the Antipodes is gradually driving the Canadian dairyman back. The two oldest branches of the dairy industry in Canada are cheese production and butter production. The importation of butter into Canada at one cent per pound duty does not come directly into competition with such branches as sweet milk for cities, condensed milk, sweet cream for ice cream and sweet milk and cream for exportation into the United States. The New Zealanders cannot compete directly with these branches. But the importation of butter does directly compete with those dairymen who follow the two old natural branches, the production of cheese and the production of buttter. The dairy farmers who follow these two branches are for the most part geographically so situated that they must depend upon these two lines for a market for their milk, and often, if they are so situated, they may change from one branch to the other from season to season.

I think this is clearly demonstrated if we look at the figures for Ontario. In 1927 as compared with 1926 the production of milk decreased by 473,924,430 pounds, but notwithstanding there was an increase of 5,930,745 pounds in the production of butter. However, there was a decrease in the production of cheese of 23,257,067 pounds. There was a total decrease in the production of dairy and creamery butter in Canada of 230,340 pounds as compared with 1926; that is a comparatively small reduction, but the reduction in factory and home made cheese amounted to 33,776,051 pounds. Here again, if you take the pounds of milk necessary to make this quantity of cheese in addition to the pounds of milk represented in the decreased production of butter, you will find that it agrees. Thus in the year commencing fifteen months after the New Zealand order in council came into effect, under a duty of one cent per pound we had an importation of butter amounting to 14,195,789 pounds, which is equal to a reduction of 347,098,000 pounds of milk, the production of which is the foundation of the dairy industry, and the effect of that importation was reflected in the decreased production in the two natural branches of the dairying industry, cheese and butter.

On page 9 of the pamphlet issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce in connection with dairy factories we find that during 1927 the total delivery of milk to cheese factories in Canada was 1,384,860,282 pounds, but the decrease in the production of milk in that year as compared with 1926 is equal to about one-third the entire cheese factory supply of milk in Ontario in 1927.

If we exclude Ontario and consider the other eight provinces, the decrease in the production of milk is greater by 42,425,128 pounds than all milk supplied to all cheese factories in those eight provinces in 1927. As the previous speaker (Mr. Senn) has said, there has been a great decrease in the number of dairy cattle in Canada; in 1927 that decrease amounted to 75,275 milking cows, as compared with 1926. It may be said that United States dairymen are coming to Canada and buying our cattle. Why should they not do so? They are protected and secure in their home market, and they can come to Canada for our cattle. Surely there is something wrong with the dairy industry of this country, and when any business begins to go back it is time to look for the cause and apply a remedy. The dairy farmers know something is wrong and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) knows something is wrong, or if he does not know I wonder what he meant when he spoke before the National Dairy Council at the King Edward hotel in Toronto last November, where he is reported to have said:

> You know that for the last year or two Canada has been relying on the west for the production of butter, and the west has rallied to that reliance by increased production. As far as I can see there is no visible increase in eastern Canada, and the west has been converted during the last decade and a half from an importing country to an exporting country in butter. But now there has been a cessation of that increase during the past two years. We will not inquire into the reasons for it.

Then there was laughter.

> There may be many and just as you will look at it, right up in Saskatchewan people differ as to the cause of it.

Then there was great laughter.

> I feel that is true, but common sense will suggest to both east and west that whatever the causes may be, few or many, they should be removed at the first opportunity, otherwise our production of butter and other products is going to decrease. The west was your best bid for the production of butter, but whatever the cause or causes—it may be due to our poor class of dairy cattle; in our hard times we may have been induced to sell off our best cattle—

Imagine a minister of this government talking about hard times during the past two years! If a member on this side of the house made that statement he would be accused immediately of talking blue ruin.

> —with the result that production gradually went down—it may have been due to non-nutritions feed during the winter and bad falls, which sometimes come about, or it may be a combination of all these and some other things.

Then there was great laughter, but the minister continued:

I take this ground, with your admonitions right in my mind; and I think it should appeal eventually to all of us that whatever the disabilities and limitations of the west to better production may be they should be diplomatically, quickly and quietly removed, whatever they may be.

That is the attitude we on this side of the house are taking on this matter, that the handicaps or disadvantages under which the Canadian dairyman is labouring to-day should be quickly and quietly removed. As the previous speaker just said, this is not a question of empire trade, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) does not look upon it as such. Speaking in Woodstock on September 21, 1925, the Prime Minister is reported to have said:

There is one condition of that treaty which says that we are free to alter or to abrogate it altogether on six months' notice. I say to the farmers of Oxford that if the Australian treaty does any injury to your industry I will undertake to say on behalf of the government that I will give that six months' notice on short order.

I say this is not a matter of empire trade but a matter concerning the welfare of the dairy industry of Canada. That is why we bring this question to the attention of the government, and in the words of the Minister of Agriculture we say that the handicaps under which the dairy industry is labouring should be diplomatically, quietly and quickly removed.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman who brought up this question on the motion to go into supply made the broad statement that this government had done nothing to help the farmers of Canada. When he made that statement I recalled the opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite in 1924 when we reduced the duty on agricultural implements, on dairy utensils and on machinery required for work in our orchards, and removed altogether the sales tax from agricultural implements and dairy utensils.

Mr. HANSON: Beautiful.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. gentleman opposite says "beautiful," but I can recall that he was one of those who kept the house in session day after day protesting against this reduction in the duty on agricultural implements and on dairy utensils which we were told would ruin these great industries.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason the treaty was made.

[Mr. Tummon.]

Mr. ROBB: The agricultural implement industry in Canada is in better shape to-day than it was when the reductions were made. If the statements presented by my hon. friends to-night had any foundation in fact we would be unanimous in a desire to find out what the trouble was and how a cure could be effected.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What does the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) say about that?

Mr. ROBB: As to the prices received for the products, I intend to show that the dairy industry is in a better position to-day than it was prior to the introduction of the Australia-New Zealand agreement. I fail to understand the logic of my hon. friends opposite. They do not want to trade with the United States because that country is placing restrictions against our products.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not quite correct; we are not allowed to trade with the United States.

Mr. ROBB: I will show my hon. friend in a moment that we are allowed to trade with the United States.

Mr. CANTLEY: Upon unequal terms.

Mr. ROBB: They do not wish to trade with the British dominions because, they say, they believe in the proper method of trading—paying with their own products. The favourable balance of trade for the years 1924 to 1929 inclusive as between Canada and Australia and New Zealand amounted to over $130,000,000.

Mr. IRVINE: What does that mean?

Mr. ROBB: That means that we had a favourable balance of trade of over $130,000,000 more than we bought from them.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is that a good thing?

Mr. ROBB: Do hon. members argue that the men employed in the factories of Canada; the men employed in the woods getting out lumber and carrying it to the saw mills and to the paper mills; the men who are employed on the railways hauling to the seaboard; the men on the docks—do they say that those men and their families are not consuming our farm products? I submit that this condition has brought about a greater consumption of farm products in Canada.

My hon. friend made a comparison between the position of the Canadian farmer and that of the United States farmer, mentioning the greater advantages which the American farmer enjoys. My reading of the press within the last few months has convinced me that the United States farmer, the man who has been enjoying the high tariff protection which hon. gentlemen opposite are preaching, is in a very much worse position than the Canadian farmer.

Mr. CANTLEY: He wants more protection.

Mr. ROBB: He wants more protection, but what he really needs is a lower cost of living. I will admit at once that the dairy farmers of Canada would be helped very materially by a lowering of the cost of the feed products required for their stock. I will admit at once that under our freight tariff arrangement we encourage the export of bran and shorts rather than their consumption in Canada. The millers prefer to export bran and shorts, not only because of the favourable freight rate but because of certain restrictions which prevent the miller from putting the mill-run screenings in the bran and shorts for local consumption while he is permitted to include them in the material exported. It is much more profitable for the miller to export, and that is a matter which might be deserving of some consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: Next year.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friends have tried to argue that the dairy industry has been ruined. I propose to offer in evidence against that argument statements which have appeared in two newspapers, both loyal supporters of the hon. gentlemen opposite. The first statement appeared in the Montreal Gazette in connection with their annual survey of the trade of Canada. That paper has as commercial editor a gentleman who for many years has reported the dairy exchanges throughout Canada and who has been a very close observer of the conditions relevant thereto. Experts maintain that last year there was a greater production of milk and that dairy cattle have increased in value.

Mr. BENNETT: "Experts maintain"!

Mr. ROBB: This is what Mr. Bark, commercial editor of the Montreal Gazette, had to say on January 4, in his annual survey of farming conditions in Canada.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He was not acquainted with your statistics.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend say that the Montreal Gazette is not a reliable paper?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not the paper, it is Mr. Bark.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Bark said:

It is the production of milk that counts, and there is more milk produced in Canada now than ever before.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not so.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Bark continues:

On account of having no export surplus of butter, the price in Canada is not regulated by the world market, as it is when there is a surplus, and while we have been importing butter the price here has been from five to twelve cents above the price producers would have received if they had been obliged to export a surplus.

That is a statement made by a gentleman who has made a close survey of market prices prevailing throughout the world.

Mr. STEVENS: It is the opinion of one individual.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend say that the prices quoted are not correct?

Mr. BENNETT: That is inaccurate.

Mr. STEVENS: They are wholly inconsistent with the government's own statistics.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. James Newbigging, president of the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association, had the following to say at London on January 9, 1929:

The growing local trade in eastern Canada continues to absorb a greater quantity than is being produced and must for the winter season depend on imports to supplement the supply.

Mr. STEVENS: He claims the production has fallen off.

Mr. ROBB: Then there is another statement made by a gentleman who has been very prominent in the dairy industry in recent years. This gentleman is a very good personal friend of mine but he is opposed to Australia-New Zealand trade agreement. He is secretary of the National Dairy Council, and I might mention that this council does not consist of farmers, but is largely financed by the cold storage operators and not by the farmers of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: Are they any the worse for that?

Mr. ROBB: No, they are none the worse for that.

Mr. HANSON: Why say so?

Mr. ROBB: This gentleman, Mr. W. F. Stephen, speaking at the same meeting in London, made the following statement:

From the summary of trade for the twelve months ending November, 15,758,251 pounds of butter were brought into Canada.

That is for that particular twelve months. The statement continues:

It is generally conceded that 1928 has been one of the best years for the industry. Prices for dairy products have rated high, with cheese prices leading all others, running about three cents per pound over 1927.

Hon. gentlemen opposite were very much alarmed recently when the United States indicated that they were going to raise the duty on milk and cream, and we have still echoing in our ears the lamentations of hon. gentlemen opposite that this great dairy industry was going to be ruined. The answer to that from my part of the country—and I claim to represent one of the best dairy sections in the Dominion of Canada, exporting large quantities of milk and cream to the United States, as they do throughout all the eastern townships—and the answer to that right in the district surrounding the city of Montreal is to be found in what was published recently in the papers in regard to the increase in price to milk producers. I have under my hand the Ormstown Bulletin, which has great admiration for my hon. friend opposite and his party and supports them regularly. This paper is published in the county of Chateauguay, and I find this statement in the issue of May 30, 1929:

Mr. W. L. Carr, Director of the Montreal Milk Producers' Association reports that at the price conference between the milk producers' association and the Montreal dealers held on the 23rd instant, an agreement was reached that the price of milk on the Montreal market for four months, commencing June 1, will be $2.39 per 100 pounds f.o.b. railway stations Montreal.

It goes on to state:

This is three and two-thirds cents per gallon better than for the five months' period during which summer prices ran last year.

With that advance in price, surely no one will argue that the dairy industry is not receiving good prices. We are getting higher prices than if we were exporting our surplus to London, England, as we did in former years. A price of $2.10 per 100 pounds for 3½ per cent butter fat is equivalent to 52½ cents per pound for butter. When Canadian dairymen can sell their milk for $2.10 per 100 pounds, you cannot blame them very much if they are ready to buy butter anywhere they can get it for 45 cents per pound. They are getting the equivalent of 52½ cents per pound for butter and they are becoming just as good traders as any other persons in business.

Just one word more in conclusion. My hon. friends opposite who to-day are assuming interest in the dairy industry have very short memories. They forget the days not so long ago when they permitted the import free of duty of oleomargarine—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. ROBB: —and the ingredients required to manufacture it. During that period there was the competition in one year of 15,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine imported into and manufactured in Canada. I am ready to take the judgment of any dairyman throughout Canada whether he prefers competition from oleomargarine or competition from butter coming from anywhere, butter that he himself can buy for his own family. As long as he is getting from $2.10 to $2.40 per 100 pounds for his milk, he is not complaining.

I repeat that something must be done for the dairy industry of this country by way of adjustment so that they will be able to buy their feedstuffs a little cheaper. The two great factors on a dairy farm are, first, labour, and, second, feedstuffs. There has been a scarcity of labour on the dairy farms. Feedstuffs are not only high in price but in some cases unobtainable and it seems to me it would become hon. gentlemen opposite better to try to remedy that condition than to place higher tariffs against butter that is required, not only in the cities, towns and villages, but by many of the farmers throughout the country.

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the least surprised that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) is extremely urgent in his support of the order in council which was passed by the government and which enabled New Zealand to receive the benefits of the Australian treaty. The Australian treaty is the child of the Minister of Finance. His predecessors had failed time and time again to draw Canada and Australia nearer together on the question of a commercial treaty. The Minister of Finance succeeded. Unquestionably he obtained benefits for Canada, and the dairy farmer of the Dominion paid for those benefits in golden butter. In the session of 1925, after a very considerable debate, parliament accepted the basis of the Australian treaty. No sooner had that session ended; no sooner had hon. members returned to their ridings, than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), speaking at Woodstock in September, pointed out that there was a method whereby Canada could be safeguarded should damage result. He pointed out that there was in the treaty a clause which would enable the government of Canada to give six months' notice to the other contracting parties, under which notice it would be possible for Canada to draw back on the treaty. Five days later the government of Canada presented to New Zealand on a platter the terms of the Australian treaty. Whether or not it was reasonable for the Prime Minister to make any reference whatever to New Zealand when he spoke in Woodstock on the 21st of September is a matter for conjecture, but the fact remains that whether or not the government of Canada at that date realized that New Zealand would be asking for those terms, Canada gave those terms to New Zealand, and although questions have fairly often been asked in the house as to what Canada received in exchange from New Zealand, we are yet in ignorance that Canada received anything.

After that, the dairy interests of Canada approached the government on many occasions, pointing out the difficulties that the dairy farmer in this country was subjected to on account of the importations of butter from New Zealand and Australia. At first the serious matter was butter from Australia, but as Australia adopted a plan known as the Patterson scheme, which produced what one might call a fictitious price for export butter, it was open to Canada to apply her dumping duty. That was applied, and butter from Australia ceased to come in quantity. Australia, perhaps not unreasonably, regretted that Canada had adopted this method of dealing with her importations, but it was interesting to Canadians to be able to remind Australia that not very many months before, Australia herself had applied very much the same treatment to New Zealand butter entering Australia. The National Dairy Council in their annual meeting in February, 1928, drew the attention of the government to the fact that the butter coming in from New Zealand, increasing and ever increasing, was a serious menace to the dairy interests in Canada. Their delegation met the privy council. They went so far fourteen months ago as to ask the government to rescind that order in council as regards New Zealand, but the government—the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) we must presume, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) who fathered this arrangement —were of the opinion that they were better informed than the dairy men of Canada, and no action was taken to assist them. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that we have got into this difficulty primarily for the reason that we are governed in this country by a government whose fiscal policy reminds one of Nebuchadnezzar's image; for were we to describe this ministry member by member one could hardly avoid remembering that the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) prates of freer trade, that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) has achieved immortality by his accurate reference to Canada's protectionist policy, that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) has seen the light, that he would infinitely prefer his principles to override his desire for power, that he is busy day by day and week in by week out endeavouring to lead his colleagues into the paths of protection. Then we have the Minister of Agriculture, who on his arrival in Ottawa was undoubtedly a free trader from Saskatchewan. He has received a higher education in Ottawa, and he realizes to-day that there is nothing so very evil in a protectionist policy. He is assisting the Minister of National Revenue to lead the composite cabinet which governs this country into paths of protection, but unfortunately the Minister of Agriculture has been suffering from insommia. On occasion, when, unable to sleep, he rolls over and discovers a lump in his bed which on examination proves to be a pound of New Zealand butter. He examines the wrapper on that pound of New Zealand butter and finds that it is a Canadian creamery wrapper, but unfortunately when he minutely examines it he fails to discover in the most minute print the fact that the butter came from New Zealand. The Minister of Agriculture was present when the National Dairy Council met in convention in February of last year. They made their statements in his presence and they came back at him again and again endeavouring to enlist his sympathy. When his turn came to speak he spoke in these words:

> Let me draw your attention to another difficulty since we are pointing out difficulties in connection with the Australian treaty. Our western people, as you know, are preferably low tariff peaple. The moment they begin to agitate for a raising of duty, even though it is only to get it back to where it was, they are put in the embarrassing position of being high tariff on butter but low tariff on farm implements. It is no joke to take this position. I suppose it can be done, but it requires explaining. So you will sympathize with us all. I am sure you feel it yourselves.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who was it said that?

Mr. STIRLING: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, addressing the annual convention of the National Dairy Council in 1928. That the National Dairy Council may have altered its stand to a certain extent is perhaps explainable; for I have not yet heard in this house a contradiction of the statement that I have made, somewhat in allegory, that New Zealand butter is being wrapped in Canadian creamery wrappers and sold to the unsuspecting consumer as Canadian butter. Perhaps when the hon. minster speaks in reply, or on his estimates, he may give us some much wanted information on that subject.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Who is doing that?

Mr. STIRLING: I refer the hon. gentleman to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who knows everything connected with dairy farming in Canada.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It is not the Canadian farmer who is doing it anyway.

Mr. STIRLING: I have not suggested for one moment that the Canadian farmer is doing any such thing, because if it is being done in Canada it is being done to the detriment of the Canadian farmer, and he knows it. I do not know whether this government will consider the question of giving us any assistance in this matter, but I do know that the dairy farmer in the west and in British Columbia, which is beyond the west, is most rapidly altering his position with regard to tariff questions. He realizes that mixed farming is in a different category from wheat farming. He realizes that if he is not permitted a fair chance of selling his butter in the domestic market he has got to go out of business. The fact that the hon. Minister of Finance should use as his stock argument to-day, as heretofore, that the dairy farmer in Canada is getting more for his butter, leaves me absolutely cold. The price that the dairy farmer gets for his butter makes, I think, very little difference when you remember this fact, that the milch cows in Canada are decreasing, that the calves are being vealed, and that the hogs are not being raised in the same numbers that they were, while at the time the number of milch cows in New Zealand is increasing. If the Canadian dairy farmer were satisfied that he is getting better prices for his butter to-day, would he be selling his milch cows? Would he not rather be increasing the size of his herds, and would he not be endeavouring to keep the domestic market for his own use? Canada is ceasing to be an exporting country and is becoming year by year an importing country. Is that a safe position for our dairy industry?

Mr. WARD: If it be the case that protection would increase the dairy herds of Canada, why is it that the cattle population of the United States has decreased by something like 17,000,000 in the last fifteen years?

Mr. BENNETT: It is larger this year than it was last. Surely the hon. gentleman knows that.

[Mr. Stirling.]

Mr. STIRLING: I would suggest, in the first place, that I was not preaching protection at this moment as the panacea of this ill. I was pointing out that the government of this country four years ago put over a trade agreement with a sister dominion, to which I have no objection, but the government bought the benefits of that trade agreement at the expense of a certain industry in this country which our Dominion Department of Agriculture and the departments of agriculture in all the provinces in this country are doing their very best to build up, and the result of that trade agreement has been a millstone around the necks of the Canadian dairy farmers.

Mr. WARD: I cannot compel the hon. member to answer my question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. STEVENS: You certainly cannot.

Mr. BENNETT: Because it is not a correst question.

Mr. STIRLING: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when I am through, as I shall be in a few seconds, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) should tell us his own solution for the difficulties which confront the dairy farmer to-day. It appears to me that this government, having gone into a trade agreement with a sister dominion, and having then presented the terms of that agreement to another sister dominion—with both of whom we should like to trade if it is to Canada's advantage—must find a solution for this matter. Whether it be that they must adapt the arrangements that they had in mind when they were negotiating this treaty is for them to decide; but on the decision that they make the dairy farmers of this country will decide whether or not they will support the administration.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this question, largely to express my sympathy with agriculture and its difficulties. Perhaps I take quite a different view from that held by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house who have given us their views. I think I mentioned some time ago that the condition of agriculture is one of the world's problems of to-day. It is not only in Canada, in the United States, in Great Britain or on the continent of Europe that the farmers are having difficulties; as I said before, the condition is world wide.

I believe that to-day the farmers of Canada are more prosperous than those of any other country on the face of the globe. I do not mean that our farmers are getting everything they ought to get or that they are in the best position they could possibly attain. At the same time I am perfectly satisfied with the truth of that statement. In Denmark I found the farmers working on ten acres of land and making a living, but they were working from daylight to dark and were living with a frugality and working under such hard conditions as none of our western farmers would submit to. Coming over to Great Britain, I found hundreds of thousands of acres of grass land that it would not pay the British farmers to cultivate, and those Danish farmers were cultivating their small patches of land and selling their bacon and dairy products in the city of London. That is one of the conundrums that my hon. friends opposite may be able to solve.

A good deal has been said about our people going to the United States. Does any one know of any Canadians leaving Canada to farm in the United States?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Many from my county have gone over to the state of Maine. I can count them by the hundreds.

Mr. FORKE: It may be so, but I am surprised.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You are always learning.

Mr. FORKE: If hon. members on the other side are satisfied that Canadians in large numbers are leaving Canada to go over to the United States to farm I very much doubt it. I think you will find them in the larger cities working at other occupations. Hon. gentlemen opposite know perfectly well that there is no exodus of Canadians to the United States to take up farming.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) made a speech the other day about the large number of educated Canadians going to the United States. I once made a speech of the same kind in Montreal, and I was surprised next day to see in large headlines in the Montreal papers that the hon. member for Brandon was against education! You see how things can be twisted. I did not notice that the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William were treated in the same way. It will surprise the house to know that every year 25 per cent of the graduates of Acadia university go to the United States.

An hon. MEMBER: Why do they go?

Mr. FORKE: That is a question which perhaps some one may be able to answer.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is easily answered: you are responsible.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FORKE: But only 5 per cent of the graduates of the university of Winnipeg go to the United States. Tell me the reason why? Tell me why the maritime provinces are importing their butter at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: So is Ottawa.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FORKE: These are economic conditions and cannot be explained by merely laughing at my statement. To-night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) mentioned oleomargarine. I well remember that exactly the same type of speech as hon. gentlemen opposite are making to-night was made in this house at the time—that the dairy business was being ruined by the importation of oleomargarine.

Mr. HANSON: What about processed butter?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend was in the house at that time and he heard all the speeches then made.

Mr. HANSON: You voted for it too.

Mr. FORKE: Are the farmers of the United States prosperous to-day? What is the trouble with them? They are being caught in the same vicious circle. As the price of their products rises, so also does the cost of production. Our farmers will find themselves in just the same vicious circle if they think they are going to be benefited by protection. But I am not going to discuss the fiscal issue. I simply rose for the purpose of expressing my sympathy with agriculture and with our farmers in the difficulties they have to meet. I feel perfectly certain that the imposition of a duty of 2 or 3 cents per pound on butter will not solve the problem in the satisfactory way expected. There is something very subtle in the word "protection". When the farmer or any other producer has difficulty in putting his product on the market, and the word "protection" comes to his ears, it has a subtle influence over him and he thinks that such a remedy would benefit him. I do not know of anything more plausible than the argument for protection, yet every economic authority in the world has stated time and time again that the whole theory of protection is wrong in substance and in fact.

The other day I picked up a United States publication called Farm and City Life. From it I jotted down the following in connection with farm operations in the United States:

Farm population smallest in thirty years. Nearly 5,000,000 left the farm in the last 20 years. Not entirely due to hard times.

93,500,000 in the cities to-day; 75,000,000 in 1920. One person on the farm; 3.4 in the city, compared with 2.4 nine years ago. Increased production tends to balance these conditions.

Probable that increase in consumers will over-balance increase in efficiency of production, and gain will be to the farmer.

Why are people leaving the farm? Is the farm population declining in resourcefulness and ability as well as in numbers? Replies were received from 2,745 farmers. Some said it was a poor business; they could not make ends meet. One fourth were leaving the farms from physical disability—retired farmers. One in 40 had saved money to live easier and to move where more advantages could be found,—to the town or city.

The drift of young men and women to the towns is as old as time. One half were better on the farm; the cost of living consumed wages.

Advantages of country life—health; close to nature; the spacious character and independence of country life.

Upon the whole the country loses in efficiency and ability by the drift from the farm.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I ask the minister a question? Is he in favour of continuing the present importation of butter from New Zealand?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think it will make any difference.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are you in favour of continuing it?

Mr. FORKE: I am not in favour of continuing or discontinuing it; I will leave trade to make its own balance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FORKE: I do not see just exactly where the amusement comes in. I have listened to several speeches to-night, and listened respectfully, and I sympathize with the farmers in their difficulties. I should like to see them get the best prices possible, and if it is likely to improve the condition of the farming population by any change in economics I shall be only too glad to support such a change. But I am thoroughly convinced that putting a cent or two more on butter would not benefit the farmer in the long run, because as we can see in Australia to-day the farmers are caught in a vicious circle. The farming population in Australia at the present time is in a worse condition than the farmers of Canada, and the same is true of the farming population of the United States; and the reason is just that; they are working in a vicious circle of high production costs which more than counterbalance any increase in production which they may have.

I hope to see the day when the farmers of this country will enjoy prosperity in an increasing measure. I am one of those who believe that no country will be great unless its roots are firmly planted in the soil, and I deplore the effect of present world conditions on agriculture—not Canadian conditions but world conditions. There is a tendency for agriculture to sink lower in the scale and I deeply deplore the fact. It would be disastrous to Canada if the farming population of this country ceased to be a healthy, robust yeomanry and sank to the level of a peasantry. Our country will prosper just in proportion to the prosperity of the farming population. I wish to see industry prosper too, but unless agriculture prospers this country as a whole will not progress. I rose merely to voice my sympathy with the agricultural people. They are the people to whom I belong and whom I love.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): At the time it was introduced I opposed the Australian treaty because I believed that agriculture was sacrificed—at least it was not considered—in order that markets might be found for certain manufacturing interests in Canada. I want to support the Conservative members who have spoken, although I am not sure that I can support their remedy. They have not proposed one, but they have only one remedy for everything so I presume it is the same one. But so far as I have followed their speeches I think they have told the truth in regard to the condition of agriculture; agriculture is not in a sound condition. As regards the figures which have been given with reference to dairying, I am not sure whether I should find them the same if I looked them up; one can get figures to prove almost anything one sets out to prove. I shall not, therefore, enter into a discussion of the figures. I want to say a word or two, however, about the subject generally.

I was opposed at the time, and am still opposed, to the idea of the Australian treaty for the reason that the basic principle of that treaty was that the manufacturing industry in Canada should be considered while agriculture was not. Let me point out to the members of the opposition that I was opposed to the attitude they took on reciprocity for just the same reason. In the defeat of reciprocity the people who worked towards that end were thinking not of agriculture but of the manufacturing industry, and I think we can truthfully say that the policy of Canadian governments, regardless of whether the government at any time has been Liberal or Conservative in name, has been to put the good of the manufacturers and their allies first, and the good of the great and basic industry of agriculture last. To my mind that is putting the cart before the horse. We have had it that way for a long time, and that accounts for the condition in which we find agriculture to-day. Protection is only a part of the contributing cause; there are many other things involved in the question which I do not intend to go into at the present moment.

One hon. member who spoke—I do not know him and therefore I cannot name his constituency—said that the people of the Canadian cities were very much concerned about the Canadian farmer. I am sorry to disagree with him; I do not think that statement is true. Of course, I do not mean that the people of his city are not concerned; but they are far above the average in intelligence. I find that the city people to whom I talk—and I have talked with people of many cities—know very little about the condition of agriculture, for they are of the opinion, generally speaking, that agriculture is in a flourishing condition. They judge that by the prices they pay—the retail prices. If the dairy industry in Ontario could work out a cooperative system such as the wheat producers have developed, it would in some measure help to improve conditions.

I want to say only one word more. Protection, so far as the farmer is concerned, is in my opinion a snare. It may be that here and there the farmer would gain something; but I am absolutely convinced that on the whole he would lose much more than he gained, because he would then put himself in the position where he could no longer fight the protection of, for instance, the manufacturers. He would have lost the ground on which until now he has stood. So that if one could get a cent or two more per dozen for eggs, or a cent or two more per pound for butter, so far as the ordinary farm in Canada is concerned, that would have mighty little to do with the margin left over at the end of the year—if the farmer was happy enough to have one. The prices the farmers pay for the goods they consume and the prices they get for all the goods they sell are the factors that contribute to the margin when the year's business is balanced. If the Canadian farmer wants to learn about protection, let him look a little more closely into the condition of agriculture in the United States. The hon. member for York-Sunbury, (Mr. Hanson), I believe, seriously suggested that a great many farmers were going from Canada to the United States. I do not think he intends the house to believe that he really meant that statement.

Mr. HANSON: I said that in the neighbouring state of Maine, which adjoins my constituency, 25 per cent of the farmers of Aroostook county, 25 per cent of the farmers of Washington county, 25 per cent of the farmers of Somerset county, were recruited from the counties of Charlotte, York and Carleton in New Brunswick. That is the statement I made, and I can prove it.

An hon. MEMBER: Fifty years ago.

Mr. HANSON: No, within the past ten years.

Miss MACPHAIL: Then certainly the farmers in the maritime provinces must be in a bad way.

Mr. HANSON: They are, since this government came in.

Miss MACPHAIL: Anyone who thinks that one government or another is so important as to affect the condition of a basic industry like agriculture has a very childish mind. I have known of some farmers who did leave Canada to go to the United States to farm but I have not known of one who bettered his condition by so doing; and some whom I have known intimately very much regretted the change. That is all I care to say. As to the condition of agriculture as described by Conservative members who have spoken, I fully agree. The Australian treaty did not consider the agricultural industry, with that I agree. But with the proposed remedy which, though unspoken, is to be inferred from their speeches, that protection will cure the farmers' ills, I do not agree.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): It is very fitting and necessary that this house should spend some time considering the basic industry of Canada. I am sorry that the house could not have had some definite information that this matter was to have been brought before us at this time. Had that information been afforded us, we should now probably have available the material which we have collected during the years and which bears upon the subject before us. As it is, we are more or less compelled to speak on a moment's notice and to depend upon our memories for whatever facts we may bring forward.

I should like at the outset to point out that I do not think we shall solve this problem by the kind of discussion we have heard to-night and which we will doubtless continue to hear until the subject is disposed of. The element of party politics is ever present in all discussions on the floor of the house, and I presume none of us is absolutely free from that feeling in the discussion of whatever subject may be under consideration. No doubt each one is trying his best to secure some advantage for his own particular party or group. That is one of the phases of our present parliamentary system which we must grin and bear. I do hope that in the very near future, however, the government will take the necessary steps to institute a thorough inquiry into the entire agricultural industry, an inquiry which will be quite untainted with partisanship and which will be conducted with a view to obtaining the facts as to the actual economic condition of the farmer and the general outlook of the industry and discovering what can be done to improve those conditions.

I am sure most of us will be grateful to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Senn) who has brought this very important question to the attention of the house. No one will say that the agricultural industry of Canada is on a sound basis at present; in fact perhaps we must admit that agriculture does not seem to be on a very sound basis in any country. When all is said and done the agricultural problem of Canada is not peculiar to this country; there are agricultural problems of a very serious character everywhere, and perhaps one reason for this condition is that agriculture itself is passing through a phase of industrial development which perhaps we have not fully understood and to which we are not able quickly to accommodate ourselves. However, there are problems which are peculiarly Canadian, some of which might be mentioned in passing before I proceed to deal with the specific matter to which the attention of the house has been directed. I think agriculture is suffering, among other things, from over-capitalization, with regard to the high prices paid for both land and machinery; and it is also over-capitalized because in relation to the amount produced the overhead is much too great. I would say also that agriculture is suffering from having to pay a much too high rate of interest. This is one of the chief hardships of agriculture in western Canada in particular. I believe that agriculture in Canada is suffering also from a decided discrimination in taxation. The dairy branch of agriculture has been affected by the Australian treaty; I do not think anyone can seriously deny that and it is the dairy industry as affected by the Australian treaty which is before the house to-night.

[Mr. Irvine.]

I want to associate myself with the sentiments of the hon. gentleman who introduced this subject; indeed I must say that the dairymen of the riding of Wetaskiwin, which I have the honour to represent, have spoken emphatically on this issue. The Minister of Finance goes to the Montreal Gazette to find out what the cows are doing, but he should go to the farmers of Canada to get that information. I venture to say that the minister will not go to the Montreal Gazette for the cream for his porridge to-morrow morning, and I do not see why he should go to that newspaper for his information as to the economic condition of the dairymen. At any rate, I know that the dairymen of my own riding have expressed themselves in no uncertain way to the extent that the Australian treaty has hurt their business, and that is the question now before us.

The hon. member who introduced this subject quoted figures to prove at least to his satisfaction a very material decrease in the production of butter and a further decrease in the number of dairy herds, with a corresponding increase in the production of butter and in the dairy herds of New Zealand. I do not know whether or not his figures are accurate, but I noticed that the Minister of Finance produced another set of figures. I think it is to be deplored that there seems to be no way of getting accurate figures. If we cannot get them right we would be far better off to leave them out entirely, but surely there is some source to which we may go for figures which may be accepted by both sides of the house. Apparently it is the practice for one side of the house to get the facts which suit them and for the other side to disregard those facts and secure quite different information. I am not charging that the hon. gentleman who introduced the subject gave incorrect figures, but it is very strange that the Minister of Finance should find it necessary to quote another set of figures practically the opposite of those given by the first speaker.

Personally I have no doubt that there has been a decrease in the dairy herds of Canada and in the production of butter, but as to the actual number of cattle or millions of pounds of butter I do not know. I would also agree with the minister that there has been an increase in the price of dairy cattle, but there has been a greater increase in the price of beef cattle which fact has affected the price of dairy cattle, so that certainly does not prove that the dairy industry has not been affected by the Australian treaty. I want to point out to the Minister of Finance and to the government that discrimination has been shown against this branch of agriculture by the Australian treaty, a discrimination in the sense that the little protection which was given the farmers on the one or two items upon which a tariff is practicable was taken away and no corresponding reductions were made with regard to the articles which enter into the production of the commodities so dealt with. That is a discrimination. It has been said that the benefits to Canada of the Australian treaty were purchased and paid for by the dairy industry. I do not think there is any doubt about that; if the dairymen are to be deprived of the protection which they had on the one or two articles on which it was possible to place a tariff, then they should have a corresponding reduction in tariffs on highly protected items which enter into their business.

It does not require any statement from me to prove that the farmers of Canada generally have expressed themselves as being opposed to tariffs, but I think I am correctly interpreting the opinion of the farmers of my own province when I say that they ask for equal treatment in this regard. If it is impossible to give them the same protection which is given to everyone else, then protection should not be given to anyone. That is their challenge. If you universalize protection, then no particular class will suffer. The nation may suffer or it may gain, as the case may be, depending on which is the correct view, but if you protect every class then no class will be unduly burdened. You must do one thing or the other; you must either protect the farmers equally with all other classes or you must not protect anyone. That is the position which the farmers in the west are beginning to take. They are opposed to tariffs, but they are saying also that they should receive equal treatment. If you are going to protect the manufacturers and then take off the protection which the farmers had, conditions will be a great deal worse. Protection is not a moral issue, it is a matter of dollars and cents. It concerns the implements and other things which the farmer needs, and no farmer can afford to set himself upon a moral pedestal and say: Because I have subscribed to a so-called Liberal doctrine for twenty years, that is no reason why I should allow my business to suffer from an injustice of this kind. This is not a moral question, it is an economic one, and economic principles alone must govern. In taking this new attitude the farmers of the west cannot be said to have abandoned their principles; they stand just as ready as ever for free trade.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. FORKE: Who authorized the hon. gentleman to speak for the farmers of western Canada?

Mr. IRVINE: The same ones who authorized the hon. minister to speak for them. I should like to ask the hon. minister who authorized him to speak for them. I am speaking directly for the greatest farmers' organization in the Dominion of Canada, and he was not.

Mr. FORKE: You say so.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. minister varied from the first principles of that organization, and discarded the principle upon which he was elected. If that is not a sufficient answer for the hon. minister I can give him more information, but I think that is all I need to say now.

Mr. FORKE: Anything which the hon. member can say will not hurt; go ahead.

Mr. STEVENS: That comes well from a minister.

Mr. IRVINE: Perhaps if the hon. minister had a little more understanding it might hurt a little more; if he has not and it does not hurt, so much the better for him. I will challenge even the hon. gentleman who assumes to have the right to speak for all the farmers and say so far as I know there is no farmer organization in western Canada which has not expressed itself as being in favour of the principle of free trade, they are the only people however who do express those ideas. Nevertheless, they are saying: Since you will not give us free trade, do not protect everyone else and leave us to pay the bill. That is the position they are beginning to take, and surely it is a reasonable one.

What does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) have to say in reply to this question which has been brought to the attention of parliament, this question which is engaging the serious attention of a very important branch of the agricultural industry in Canada? What remedy does the minister offer to parliament and to the people of Canada? His first point is to attempt to prove that the Conservatives had done even worse on one occasion. Mr. Speaker, I know that that is a very common political answer, and I do not suppose the minister is open to any more severe criticism for making it than is any other minister who has adopted that attitude in past years. I suggest to the minister that it is too much of an old-fashioned argument, it is too stupid an argument for a brilliant man like himself to present. I would ask him to drop that kind of parrying and face the question squarely. What do the farmers of western Canada care about the allegation that on one occasion the Conservative party advocated the bringing in of oleomargarine and that such is said by the Minister to be much worse than what has been brought in by the Liberal party? That is no answer to the argument; it is not even recognizing the problem, and is unworthy of the minister.

Then the minister disputes the fact that there is a problem; he says it does not exist and that the removal of protection has increased the industry, given higher profits to the farmers, and, according to the Montreal Gazette, has produced more milk and more of thing else which goes to make a flourishing industry. I hope that someone will be in a position to challenge the minister's figures. I am quite satisfied that they are incorrect, but I am not going to offer another set of figures.

Then the minister offers a solution to the dairymen of Canada. He tells them that, although they have been receiving less for their butter and have suffered a little through the reduction in the tariff, the country has been able to ship out $130,000,000 worth of goods to New Zealand more than would have been possible had this reduction not been taken away. If the minister wanted to make a donation of $130,000,000 to New Zealand, why should he ask the farmers of Canada to assume any sacrifice in order to make that possible? The donation could have been made direct without touching the tariff on butter at all. If he did not make a donation to New Zealand of $130,000,000, for which he received nothing, then what did he do? What is the meaning of this? I would say to the minister that that argument is a half-baked platitude and one which never was and never will be true in relation to international trade. There is no such thing as a favourable or adverse balance of trade. It must be built up either by debts or through making presents to the other people. Surely the time has come when the minister should stop making these meaningless statements as an excuse for having done something which he should not have done, or for not having done that which he should have done.

The minister next quotes from the newspapers and claims that the Montreal Gazette has a more accurate knowledge as regards milk than have the cows and the men who milk them. I suggest that he consult with the men in western Canada who are milking the cows and find out whether or not they agree with him that the Australian treaty has improved their industry. If it has not improved that industry, why does not the minister frankly admit it? I would not blame him for having made the experiment, but I am blaming him for denying that a certain thing has happened when those engaged in the industry concerned and best qualified to know assert that it has. I blame him for refusing to face the issue.

Then the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) rises to extend his profound sympathy to the down-trodden agriculturists of Canada. We all know that the Minister of Immigration is a very sympathetic gentlemen; he could not help but be sympathetic to anyone, and in extending sympathy to the farmers he is only extending that which he would extend to anyone else. At any rate there can be no doubt that the farmers who had to reduce their production of butter last year because of the treaty which the Minister of Immigration helped to put into effect, will be very glad of his sympathy and probably will be better with it than they would be without it. But I fail to see how it will raise the price the price of butter or improve the industry concerned.

The Minister of Immigration tells us next that conditions are not as bad as they might be. That is always one of the pleas of the Minister of Immigration. I was going to say I should like to see conditions so bad that he would not say that, but I will take that back and express it in this way—I should like to know how bad things would have to be before the minister would agree that they were bad enough. The argument of the Minister of Immigration in his concluding remarks was that protection does not protect. He did not say it in so many words, but this is the logic of his argument: that the manufacturing industry would be far better off without any protection at all, for surely it follows that if the dairymen are better off without protection the manufacturers also would be better off without protection. If the manufacturers are better off with protection, then by the same token so would the agricultural industry be better off with it.

Mr. FORKE: I would ask the hon. gentleman to continue his own speech and not to put words into my mouth.

Mr. IRVINE: I would not think of putting words into the hon. member's mouth, because they would so ill fit the reasoning of my hon. friend that they would be incongruous, and I have sufficient of the artistic in my nature to be ashamed of incongruities. I am trying to get at the reasoning of my hon. friend. Maybe there was not any, but I understood he was endeavouring to reason, and that the basis of his reasoning was that protection did not protect. I have heard my hon. friend argue that manufacturers in Canada are a privileged class; that protection does them good; that it gives them higher profits. We have never said anything different from that. Our objection to protection is that we have to pay the price the manufacturer gets. That is the argument against the protection of the manufacturer. I never heard anyone say that the manufacturers were not protected, and that protection was not good for them, until the minister argued it to-night. The same logic must apply to agriculture or the dairy industry as to manufacturing in respect to protection. If manufacturers are benefited by protection, then to the same degree must the dairy industry be benefited by it, or there is nothing in the principle of protection. I am not arguing for protection: I am simply pointing out that it must be as true in the one case as in the other, and we get nowhere by arguing that protection does not protect. Protection does protect those who have the privilege, but other people have to pay the price.

The fact of the matter now is that under the Australian treaty the men who produce butter in Canada had their protection reduced in order that protected goods of Canadian manufacturers could find a market in New Zealand and other countries in return for the butter that was shipped into this country under the price at which the Canadian producers could afford to produce it. That is the situation. Therefore the pious wish of the Minister of Immigration that he would live to see the day when the farmers would be out of all their troubles will not avail much, if we will not face the fact, which is that the Australian treaty has been detrimental to this industry. The question is whether some other way can be found to relieve the pressure which the Australian treaty has brought to bear upon this industry. That is the problem of the government. But the solution of this question is not going to be assisted in any way by a complete denial of the fact, a denial by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that there has been any harm at all done to the industry, an argument by the Minister of Immigration that protection does not protect, and by not facing the fact that the Australian treaty had a direct and detrimental effect upon the dairy industry.

That is the situation as I see it, and as I indicated at the outset I doubt whether a discussion of this kind, thrown as it inevitably always is upon a partisan basis, will get agriculture very far. I would suggest that at another session of parliament the government should institute a careful inquiry into the whole subject of agriculture in Canada from an economic standpoint, with a view to finding a remedy. If the United States, for instance, as some hon. gentlemen opposite would suggest, has followed the wrong course in raising the tariff on agriculture. as they may have, we will learn a lesson and will not follow their example. But certain it is that agriculture in this country requires some kind of assistance or direction, whether it be in the way the United States are doing or in some other way, and we must find our own way. We will not find it by refusing to admit the problem or in refusing to study it in a proper manner.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, while I agree with many things which the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has said, there are some in regard to which I feel it incumbent upon me to differ with him. I am very glad to hear him point out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that there is no such thing as a favourable balance of trade, and also to the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) that there is no such thing as an adverse balance of trade. When I spoke on the budget I think I made the same remark. I took occasion afterwards to get the chief statistician of the Dominion of Canada to analyse the favourable and unfavourable balances of trade for three years, and we found exactly as my hon. friend has said, namely, that there is no such thing as an adverse or a favourable balance of trade. It is made up of either services or goods in each case. Therefore when my Liberal friends boast of having a favourable balance of trade, it is an empty boast, and if my hon. friends criticize them for having an adverse balance of trade, it is an equally futile criticism.

But when the hon. member for Wetaskiwin states that he is speaking for a large number of farmers of Alberta and that they should be equally protected along with the manufacturers—

Mr. IRVINE: I did not say that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I understood my hon. friend to say that if the manufacturers had protection, the farmers should have equal protection.

Mr. IRVINE: Or else cut off all protection.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Exactly. I am glad to say that the farmers with whom I am associated take exactly the opposite view. In fact I stated so in my budget speech and I do not wish to rehash that again. They dealt with the Australian treaty and they passed a resolution at their meeting pointing out that for the small increase they might get, if they got any, they would be at the mercy of the manufacturers who would demand on their manufactured products a greater increase which would entirely offset any benefit that might accrue to the farmers.

Mr. IRVINE: Has my hon. friend read the resolution passed at the last annual convention of the United Farmers of Alberta?

Mr. ADSHEAD: No.

Mr. IRVINE: That is the only body that speaks officially for the farmers of Alberta.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I am speaking for the United Farmers in my district who spoke to me. I know the resolution they passed.

Mr. KELLNER: Is the hon. member aware that the pool farmers in the three prairie provinces have before the tariff board at the moment an application for increased duties?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I am not, but I have before me the resolution of the United Farmers of Manitoba reading as follows:

Whereas, the United Farmers of Manitoba in their annual conventions have repeatedly condemned the policy of tariff protection as being an unjust method of taxation, as subsidizing the industries protected at the expense of all other industries, and as unduly raising the costs of living and production, especially for those engaged in agriculture, and have demanded its abolition,

And whereas, the farmers cannot consistently oppose protection for other industries while claiming it for their own,

Be it therefore resolved, that the executive board of the United Farmers of Manitoba protest strongly against the action of the Canadian poultry pool in asking for the increase of the duty on eggs and for the permanent maintenance of an arbitrary valuation of frozen eggs for customs purposes because such action places agriculture as a whole at a serious disadvantage in resisting the demands of other industries for increases in the tariff.

Mr. FORKE: I would suggest that the hon. member hand that resolution to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) to read over.

Mr. IRVINE: May I suggest that there is no organized farmers' movement in Manitoba, and my hon. friend is largely responsible for it.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. gentleman states what is not true.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I wish my two hon. friends would allow me to finish my remarks.

It is perfectly true that no amount of protection would increase the farmers' production. Wheat is the greatest agricultural product of the west, its production last year amounting to about 500,000,000 bushels. Protection is merely a will-o-the-wisp for the farmers of this country. If they accepted it even as regards butter they would be placing in the hands of the implement industry and other manufacturers a lever by which the manufacturers would take out of the pockets of the farmers ten times the amount the farmers might receive from the tariff on butter.

Let me go a little further. I was very much interested in the statement of my hon. friend from Yale (Mr. Stirling) that Australian butter is being wrapped in Canadian creamery wrappers and sold in Canada as Canadian butter. By whom? Certainly not by the farmers. Then it must be by the dairymen, those very gentlemen who came to the Minister of Finance and asked him for an increased tariff on butter. They must have perpetrated the fraud—for a fraud it is—if it was not the farmers; and certainly, I say, the farmers would not do it.

My hon. friend spoke of the lack of authenticity of figures, how hard it was to get accurate figures. The acting leader of the opposition, speaking on the budget quoted figures as to the imports under the Australian treaty. His figures were accurate because he got them from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, but unfortunately he quoted figures on only one side of the question. He told us at that time that the imports of Australian and New Zealand butter for the calendar year ending December 31, 1928, were close to $6,000,000, or to be exact $5,916,669. That is perfectly correct; those are the official figures. But he did not quote the figures on the other side. He did not show the amount of money that was received by the Canadian farmers for the milk which they exported to the United States. These same figures are shown also by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and they are just as reliable as the figures quoted by the acting leader of the opposition. They show that the exports of milk and its products from Canada to the United States for the calendar year 1928 amounted to $8,749,932. Of course our farmers could not both export their milk and make it into butter. Placing the two sets of figures side by side, we see that for the year 1928 butter from Australia and New Zealand came in to the amount of $5,916,669, and that in that same year our farmers exported milk and its products to the United States to the amount of $8,749,932; in other words they actually benefited to the amount of $2,833,263.

But even if the price of the Canadian farmer's butter was lowered a little by these importations from Australia and New Zealand, would my hon. friends like to ask the workingmen of their district to pay four or five cents a pound more for their butter? I put that very question to some farmers in my constituency; for I have a mixed constituency, with several hundred workingmen working in the shops. I said to the farmers, "Because you have the opportunity of raising the price of your butter a few cents a pound, do you want me to carry the message to these workingmen that because you have that opportunity you are going to charge them four cents a pound more for their butter? Butter is now 45 to 50 cents a pound." They said, "We do not want any such thing as that. We do not want the Australian treaty to be touched." That was the advice of the farmers to whom I spoke about it. I do not know why it is, but as the lady member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) said, some hon. gentlemen seem to think that the one and only remedy for every ill in Canada is protection. If it is the dairy industry that is suffering, their remedy is to put on more duty; if it is the woollen industry, put on more duty; if it is the steel and iron industry, put on more duty. It was rather amusing to watch two hon. gentlemen who appeared before the tariff board last fall, the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley), one arguing for free coal for his industry in Hamilton and the other arguing for a duty to protect his own particular industry. While I agree that agriculture on the whole is not in a flourishing condition in Canada to-day, I do say that the panacea for all our ills is not protection.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): This question coming up to-night is not altogether a surprise. That the industry of agriculture is in a bad way I do not think anyone on either side of the house will dispute. I want for a few minutes to go into the causes of the difficulties that are being experienced in that industry. The present situation dates very largely from the time of the war. During that period those who were conducting the affairs of this country put into force various war measures, and at that time we thought we would be patriotic in listening to them and following their advice. The farmers, being then largely unorganized, were the only class that had their produce commandeered, and their wheat was commandeered at about 50 per cent of its value, according to the price that all other producers and manufacturers were getting for what they produced. Not only that, but we were advised to borrow money and extend our farming operations; in fact, we were advised as well to go into the raising of live stock and were assured that the banks would lend us all the money we wanted. Some of us unfortunately listened to that advice, and to-day we are suffering on that account. Some of my neighbours borrowed money at the banks to purchase live stock, and in less than two years, before those animals could be matured, the banks foreclosed on them. The banks even then had hard work to clear their own by foreclosing, and the farmers to-day are out of business. These are things that we cannot overlook. We have not yet recovered from that period, and we can see no hope because both sides of this house maintain a system which makes high the cost of all our commodities. We are suffering because of protection as it is enforced to-day, and the strange thing is that while hon. gentlemen on one side of the house argue as though they were maintaining a free trade policy and the other side accuse them of being practically free traders, as a matter of fact we have very high protection; the people hardly know to what extent that tariff wall exists, or how high it is, and because of the discriminatory application of the tariff wall the whole burden to-day falls on the agriculturists. If there is one thing the matter to-day with the egg and poultry producer and the butter producer it is the high cost of all their commodities.

First of all let me deal with the distributing system which we have in Canada to-day. I go down the street in Ottawa and I look into the windows of the butchers' stores. We are sadly put to it on the farm to find a paying market for our beef. The price of beef is over 300 per cent higher in the shop windows than that which the farmer gets for his dressed carcasses. Thirty-five to forty-two cents per pound is a common price in the Ottawa butchers' stores. Thousands in this city are going hungry for beef because they cannot buy it, yet the farmer cannot sell it at a profitable price.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That would be a very good reason why a number of people in the city of Ottawa should be paid higher wages, including those in the civil service.

Mr. EVANS: The hon. gentleman still misses the mark. Because of one class being protected we have put the interests of that class entirely out of line with the interests of the whole community; and because of high prices it becomes impossible to distribute these goods at anything like a reasonable price over the cost of production. Beef is a case in point.

In this house I have often protested against some of the methods of the manufacturers and distributors. But let me quote one of the manufacturers themselves, a vice-president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in 1927. He attributes the cause of the hard times in the maritime provinces to the "short-sighted selfishness"—I want to say that those are not my words—to the "short-sighted selfishness" of his own class. Mr. L. W. Simms—the gentleman to whom I refer—said:

> Turning to industry: the story of the maritime provinces under this head since confederation is a long series of tragedies. Some would-be comforters have tried to convince us, without knowledge of the facts, that the hard times in the maritimes were but the result of post-war depression that was common to all sections; but this industrial record belies them. You will find splendid industrial plants in many places in the maritimes standing gaunt and empty or the stark ruins of once thriving industry staring mutely in a setting of tumbling cottages, once happy homes, their owners forced to go to New England for a livelihood. Not a few of these have been bought out, closed down, and dismantled by central Canadian competitors.

The very men who were boasting about protecting the home market for agricultural produce destroyed the home market of the maritimes, bringing those provinces down to the position where they had to come to this house and ask for direct help. Then again he says:

> Prior to confederation and the building of Intercolonial, central Canadian factories, even when they could compete at all, had naturally to lay their goods down at any point in the maritimes on a basis of world competition.

That is one thing our Canadian manufacturers will not do to-day—face world competition. As I have said before in this house, the export of manufactured goods is carried on at the expense of the agriculturist, who foots all the unjust bills passed down to the point where they can go no further—to the man on the land. That alone is the cause to-day of the hardship on the farms of Canada. But let me quote from Mr. Simms a little further. He says:

> A year or so ago, a circumstance occurred—

This was in 1927.

> —which is unfortunately not an isolated instance of the nationally disruptive forces that commercial life has been guilty of. The jobbers of central Canada in a certain commodity went to the producers of this article, all of whom happened to be located in Ontario, and stipulated that no jobber in the maritimes was to get within 10 per cent of the price they received. The size of their combined business was too important to be ignored, so the manufacturers agreed. Quite by accident a maritime wholesale house discovered the discrimination and protested vigorously. One manufacturer yielded to his protest for fair play, with the result that the central Canadian jobbers punished him by depriving him of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of business.

But let me sum up in Mr. Simms' own words:

> The government and the railway commission may do much to adjust more equitably the burden of our abnormal 3,700 mile length and one hundred mile width; but the business men of the country can, I believe, do much more by getting together and substituting broad patriotism for short-sighted selfishness.

These are the words of one of the Canadian manufacturers themselves. I have spoken already about the unjustly discriminatory way in which protection has been applied. I have a document here prepared by a tariff expert, which goes to show how utterly unfair our system of protection is. I know that our farmers cannot be protected as long as they have such an exportable surplus, for prices will be the world prices and they will have to accept them. But this unfairness in the application of the protection system is beyond our comprehension. For instance, take the importation of one class of article which every housewife must use—cooking utensils. Each importer has a certain status under the rules of the distributing combine. The importers are classified as small dealers, large dealers, departmental stores, jobbers and consumers. The small dealer gets a discount of 50, plus 15, plus 5 per cent. The rate of duty is 30 per cent. The value for duty then becomes, for the $100 worth, $40.38. This statement was prepared when the sales tax was in effect. So the duty is $12.11 and the sales tax was $2.62. The large dealer gets a discount of 50, plus 15, plus 10 per cent. The rate is 30 per cent. The value for duty is $38.25. The duty is $11.47, the sales tax $2.48. The department store gets a little better treatment still, the discount being 50, plus 15, plus 15 per cent. The value for duty is $36.13. The duty is $10.83 and the sales tax $2.40. Then I come to the jobber; he gets a discount of 50, plus 15, plus 20, per cent. The value for duty then becomes $34.01, the duty is $10.20, and the sales tax $2.21. Let us come now to the consumer. It does not matter if he does buy in foreign countries at manufacturers' prices, because there is no discount allowed under our tariff system so far as the consumer is concerned; so that his rate for duty becomes $100 in comparison with $34.01 for the jobber. In other words, his duty is $30 instead of $10.20, and his $100 worth of goods in the foreign country becomes $135.50, while for the jobber it becomes $46.42, for the department store, $49.36, for the large dealer, $52 and for the small dealer $52.51. I ask hon. gentlemen whether they can see any fairness in that. Can they carry on a callous campaign for protection, putting the burden on the consumer in this way? How long will this system last? How long will the people stand for it? They have stood for it so long only because every journal in the country is a tied journal and the people are not getting the truth of the system as outlined and administered at Ottawa. These things are unfair.

Take the very product which the farmer raises, and the finished article therefrom, and what do we find? We find to-day that he pays for his sack of flour nearly one cent a pound on the average higher than that same Canadian made flour is sold for—flour of the same grade —on the other side in Liverpool. That also is an injustice, is it not? And then when I say that the one side of this house is maintaining exactly what the other wants, let me refer to a little incident of the budget this year—and I will name only leather. The price of hides is pretty fair at present, but we cannot always find a market for them. Let us take leather and the articles made therefrom. We find this year that the Minister of Finance put leather for mitts and gloves on the drawback list, and the importer, the manufacturer, gets one third of a rebate in duty. But what about the consumer? The whole duty of 35 per cent is maintained on the finished article. At that time, coming up to the house here one morning, I saw a man with a pair of yellow mitts on, and he told me he had paid a dollar for them. The real price of those gloves was 65 cents, but the tariff compelled him to pay 35 cents more for them—an article he needed and must use in this climate before he could do anything in the way of earning his wages. This is also an injustice, surely.

Coming again to the commodities which the farmer most needs, what do we find? Take agricultural implements, for instance—and these are last year's figures, with the duty standing as it is. I will not give the hundreds, but the value of goods made in Canada, agricultural implements, was $38,269,000 the value of implements imported was $18,946,000; the value of goods exported was $17,412,000, and the value of goods consumed in Canada $39,802,000. The amount of duty collected on the imported portion is $944,893, and the total paid in wages $10,088,000. The additional cost to the farmer, the cost of the tariff, was just exactly $2,000,000. And most or a great part of the raw material can be had in our own country.

But there are some items even worse than that. Take for example such a commodity as cotton goods. Made in Canada these goods amounted to $76,274,000; imported, $31,000,000; exported, only $410,000. Consumed in Canada were goods to the extent of $107,373,000. The amount of duty collected on imported goods was $6,612,000, while the total wages paid in the whole industry amounted to $13,860,432. The extra cost of the tariff to the consumer of Canada was over $9,000,000 more than the wages paid in the whole industry, or $22,-423,000. Is it any wonder that one company in the textile industry can boast of paying 291 per cent and can come barefacedly before the committee and say, "We are not running these mills for the glory of God"?

I thought I would give a few of these facts to show why to-day agriculture is in a bad state. I have letters coming to me every day from settlers in Saskatchewan—people who are amazed at the foreclosures that are taking place in their district. And what are the government doing? What are the opposition advocating? What are they doing to-day to keep agriculture going in Canada? Oh! a vigorous policy of immigration—but only immigration.

There must be some equity in the administration of the laws, Mr. Speaker, and some of the unjust laws must be removed from the statute books. One class must share the benefits which the others are enjoying, and if you are going to bring in immigration from central Europe—people who will be content to adopt a lower standard of living than we are accustomed to in this country—then something will have to be done. These things cannot go on unnoticed any longer by the people of western Canada, and the longer I am in this house—I say this in all seriousness—the more I am convinced that the time is coming, indeed it has already gone, when western Canada can see no use in being tied up to the east. I hate to say that, but you are creating such a sentiment throughout the west, by unjust legislation in this house, and the time will come when the test of confederation will have to be made, because we cannot go on this way. We are not inferior to any eastern manufacturer or city man. We are making our living, and if there is one class on which this country will have to depend yet more than on any other I say it is a virile, contented population on the farms of Canada.

Motion agreed to on division, and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Telegraph and telephone lines—

Prince Edward Island and mainland, $7,000.

Land and cable telegraph lines, lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels for cable services, $218,000.

Alberta and Saskatchewan, $114,000.
British Columbia, mainland, $36,000.
British Columbia, Vancouver Island district, $132,000.
British Columbia, northern district, $88,000.
Yukon System—main line, $139,000.
Telegraph and telephone service generally, $5,000.—Total, $739,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Before this item is carried I desire to make an explanation in answer to a question asked this morning by my hon. friend from New Westminster. He was under the impression that the Okanagan Telephone Company had not been given an opportunity of tendering on the sale of telephone lines which was made last year. Since the morning session I have looked up the file and I find that there was correspondence with the Okanagan Telephone Company as far back as 1923. In one letter, which I think I showed my hon. friend, they indicated that they were interested in only two parts of the line, that is, from Enderby to Sicamous and from Enderby to Salmon Arm. The section of the line which was sold last year had been run for some time at a yearly deficit of about $30,000; before that line was sold the head of the telegraph service, Major Gobeil, got in touch with the president and manager of the Okanagan Telephone Company and was again advised by them that they were not interested in purchasing the whole section.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That was just previous to the sale?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, just previous to the sale. Negotiations were carried on and the sale was made to the British Columbia Telephone Company for $50,000. By that time this company had made arrangements to construct lines which would be operated in competition with the section sold. This year it is proposed to sell some other portions of line, including the sections from Enderby to Sicamous and from Enderby to Salmon Arm; this sale will be by public tender and will be advertised in different sections of the province so as to give every one interested an opportunity of tendering.

Mr. STIRLING: I am surprised to hear from the minister that in 1928 the superintendent of telegraphs again got in touch with the Okanagan Telephone Company.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was in 1927.

Mr. STIRLING: Were letters exchanged or were the negotiations carried on by way of conversations?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The superintendent went out and got in touch with the officials by wire.

[Mr. Evans.]

Mr. STIRLING: And in 1928 he was told they were not interested?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1927.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to call the attention of the minister to the fact that on April 29 I asked for some information in regard to the gentleman upon whose recommendation certain work was done in the maritime provinces. On that occasion the minister said that if I would allow the matter to go over he would give me an answer. I did not obtain that answer; consequently on May 8 I placed a question on the order paper as follows:

1. What is the name and the address of the gentleman recognized by the minister, resident engineer, or other officer of the Department of Public Works, as having the patronage of the county of Pictou during the year 1927 and part of 1928?
2. Who succeeded to the patronage of the county during the latter part of 1928 and 1929?

The answer given is that there is no individual so recognized. I do not think that answer is correct, and I would like to know if the minister still adheres to that as being a correct answer to my question.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I do adhere to that as being a correct answer.

Mr. CANTLEY: In that case I would refer the minister to the correspondence from Mr. T. J. Locke, district engineer for the province of Nova Scotia, who wrote Mr. John A. McLean that on the recommendation of Mr. A. McColl he was appointed foreman in charge of repairs to channel piers, Bailey's brook. That letter was written on May 29, 1928. Then on July 4 Mr. Bennett, assistant engineer, wrote Mr. Locke as follows:

Saw MacIsaac at noon to-day but had to leave immediately to catch Mr. McColl at Malignant Cove.

He also stated that Mr. McColl had advised him that he was going to wire the Minister that day that if he did not accept the engineer's report that the work be done by day labour, an engineer should be sent from Ottawa so that he might be assured as to the wisdom of the advice tendered. Then on July 13 I find that the same engineer, Mr. Bennett, reported that the work done at Bailey's Brook was the worst he had ever seen. The man who did that work was appointed on the nomination of Mr. McColl, and this foreman was ordered to discontinue the work; in other words he was dismissed. Then on Jply 26 I find that Isaac Arbuckle was notified that upon the recommendation of Mr. McColl he had been appointed foreman in charge of repair work to the Canadian National wharves at Pictou. Again on September 8 I find that the district engineer writes Mr. McLean that no further work is to be done by him on the Bailey's Brook wharf, and as a matter of fact work was suspended for two months or more, at the dictation of Mr. McColl, during the best part of the season and resumed only late in the season, again upon the recommendation of Mr. McColl. Then another gentleman was appointed, and so on; I could go through page after page of this same sort of thing, but in spite of what is disclosed by this correspondence the minister tells me that the information given in reply to my question was correct. I say it was not correct, and it is for him to explain, in view of this correspondence, why he says that information was accurate.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to answer my hon. friend, to his entire satisfaction, I hope. I would say that there was considerable correspondence with my hon. friend himself. In looking over the correspondence I find that he has been fairly active in the county of Pictou. This was particularly true during the summer of 1926, when the party to which he belongs for a short time controlled matters in that and other ridings throughout the country. I would direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact that when work is to be done in any particular county or constituency, naturally some local man is consulted with regard to the local situation. If a foreman is required, the engineer of this or of any other department could not be expected blindly to engage the man without having him recommended by someone. That has not been the practice for a number of years in that riding or in any other riding. There is a great deal of difference between consulting a man as to whom he would recommend, and accepting that recomendation or continuing the man in service when he has proved to be unsatisfactory.

Mr. BENNETT: Or if his politics were bad.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When you are looking for a foreman, that question is not nearly so important as are his qualifications for that particular job.

Mr. CANTLEY: They were more important in the case of McLean; that has been abundantly proven.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When he was reported upon as not being satisfactory he was promptly dismissed.

Mr. CANTLEY: Then the department took the recommendation of the same man with regard to another appointment, and that did not turn out well either. McColl has been recognized again and again, and is still so recognized. The statement of the minister is not a fair one, nor is it a true one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member is getting aggressive.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1929-30

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1930, was presented by Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe, the house adjourned at 10.59 p.m.

Tuesday, June 4, 1929

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS OF PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I beg to move:

That for the remainder of the session all private bills from the senate when received from that house be read a first and second time and referred forthwith, and that standing order 105 respecting the posting of bills be suspended in reference thereto.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is only one means of evading what is a distinct responsibility of this house, and I take most decided objection to setting aside the rule in this case.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I understand the hon. member to be giving notice of motion, Mr. Speaker, and that to move the motion now requires unanimous consent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Under the rules, as no notice was given of this motion, unanimous consent is required before the motion can be put. The motion will have to stand.

Mr. BROWN: Then may I ask that the motion serve as a notice of motion?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then it goes in with the regular motions?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It goes in with the regular notices of motion?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. It goes in with the routine motions. It has to do with procedure only.

Motion stands.

POST OFFICE SIGNS

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) inquired on the orders of the day on Friday last whether or not there was any accuracy in the report that the enamelled post office signs that were formerly printed in blue on a white ground had been withdrawn and signs with red letters on a white ground substituted therefor. In reply to his inquiry, I wish to give the following details:

The enamel post office signs printed in blue on white background are still in use on about 11,000 post offices, and will continue to be issued to all post offices except those situated on main highways.

In 1923 the Post Office Department introduced a red enamel sign with the words "Post Office" and the name of the post office in white letters thereon, for use only on post office buildings situated on main highways only. Applications to tender on 731 of these signs were issued to eight firms and only three of these firms submitted quotations, namely, The W. F. Vilas Company, Cowansville, Quebec; the Thomas Davidson Manufacturing Company, Montreal, Quebec; and the McClary Manufacturing Company, Montreal, Quebec.

As the tender from the W. F. Vilas Company, Cowansville, was the lowest received, the contract was awarded to that firm. This sign, which shows the words "Post Office" and the name of the post office serves a twofold purpose:

(1) It designates a post office.

(2) It gives the name of the place, thus assisting tourists.

Since the introduction of the sign in 1923, numerous requests have been received for the extension of its use, but the department has confined the issue to post offices situated on main traffic highways only; therefore, the blue lettered white enamel sign bearing only the words "Post Office" is still being issued to all offices not situated on main tourist traffic highways. There is no contract pending for the purchase of additional signs.

Yesterday in conversation with the leader of the opposition I promised that I would have the tenders produced. The staff is now busy copying them, and I will hand them to my hon. friend as soon as they are ready, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

EIGHT HOUR DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) what progress, if any, has been made in connection with legislation for an eight hour day.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): The matter is still under consideration.

CANADA'S FINANCIAL POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) to an article appearing in this morning's Citizen, entitled:

Federal Reserve Board Actually upon Defensive
American banker trying to shorten sail for possible squall and Canada has interest in it.

The article is written by Mr. Paul Reading and is dated Montreal, June 3. He makes certain statements that reflect upon our general financial position, and I direct the attention of the minister to it, without at the moment going into detail, so he may, if he thinks it desirable, make such answer as he deems the gravity of those statements may warrant.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Who is the writer?

Mr. BENNETT: Paul Reading.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Speaker, I have not read the article, but from the statement made by my hon. friend I should say that Paul Reading's presentation of the Canadian financial position is like the report of Mark Twain's death—very much exaggerated.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this might be a convenient moment for me to make a statement regarding the government's intention with respect to the sockeye salmon fisheries convention. I notice that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has given notice of motion that the third report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries be concurred in. That is the report which recommends that this convention should be approved by the house.

I might say that when the resolution respecting the convention was introduced it was the hope of the government that hon. members would feel that the convention was so much in the interests of this country that it would meet with approval on all sides of the house. However, as hon. members are aware, there appears to have been a considerable difference of opinion in the committee to which the convention was referred—a difference of opinion as to the ends which the treaty would attain and the motives of the government in having entered into it. Taking all circumstances into consideration, the government has thought it would be inadvisable to proceed to obtain approval of the treaty by parliament at this session.

I wish, however, to make perfectly clear the position of the government in the matter, so that there will be no possibility of misunderstanding. This treaty has been negotiated primarily in the interests of the province of British Columbia, and were it not that the opposition to the treaty has come almost exclusively from hon. gentlemen opposite who represent constituencies in that province, the government would not have hesitated one minute in proceeding with the treaty. The premier of the province has sent me the following message:

Victoria, B.C., May 30.

Press despatches intimate ratification of salmon treaty by Canada likely to be postponed consequent upon news from Washington that American senate may not consider question at present session. It is the earnest desire of this government and I am assured also that of the general public of this province that Canada should not by postponement jeopardize a work fraught with such vast potential importance to British Columbia and the Dominion. Canada having spent so many years of active endeavour in the first place to stop or restrict the destruction of this essential food asset and later to ensure measures for its restoration and protection, it would be a misfortune now that we are on the threshold of success if Canada hesitated to take the step which would complete the work so far as she is concerned. A postponement at the present time would be ground for belief that Canada is not in earnest on this question. It is urgently pressed that it be shown by prompt ratification that the dominion so far as it can do so has removed any objection in the American senate that Canada has stood aside. The government urgently request ratification at present session.

S. F. Tolmie.

What I wish to make quite clear, Mr. Speaker, is that any hesitation on the part of the government in submitting the treaty for approval at this time is in no way due to any delay in the expected ratification thereof on the part of the American senate. Mr. Tolmie says:

Press despatches intimate ratification of salmon treaty by Canada likely to be postponed consequent upon news from Washington that American senate may not consider question at present session.

Let me repeat, the action or possible action of the American senate has nothing whatever to do with our action in this matter. Indeed, we intend, if hon. gentlemen opposite from British Columbia after visiting their province between now and next session come to view the matter in a different light, as we believe they will, to reintroduce the resolution to approve this treaty early next session. In the meantime the American senate will have had an opportunity to pass upon the treaty. I wish to make it perfectly clear that we intend to ask parliament to approve the convention next session, if in the interval it is ratified by the American senate, and we hope that in the interim hon. gentlemen opposite will find that the government of the province of British Columbia—which entertains the same view with respect to this treaty as does our government—is right in regard to it.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the conclusion at which the right hon. gentleman has arrived is a sound one in the premises. I do not know that that will strengthen his own opinion, but at least that is my view.

The treaty in question was signed in March last, and knowledge of it came to this house some time in April. It is well that public opinion in regard to the matter should have an opportunity to crystallize. It is a treaty for sixteen years, it involves matters which most of us think of tremendous importance, and therefore the necessity is very pressing that opportunity should be afforded to those who will be affected to decide what the treaty really does mean. I think everybody will be grateful to the Prime Minister for this opportunity for public opinion to crystallize in regard to the treaty.

I may say Mr. Speaker, that so far as we who sit to your left are concerned, with respect to all matters dealing with international relations we approach them in a spirit entirely nonpolitical, or at least we endeavour to do so. It is with us not a question of Liberal or Conservative, not a question of the opposition or the government. I think we are all agreed that a satisfactory treaty is desirable. In view of the fact that the propagation of sockeye salmon takes place in the province of British Columbia and that the larger number of the salmon has heretofore been caught in American waters, it becomes of great importance that we should, if possible, arrive at some arrangement with our neighbours. A satisfactory treaty is therefore not only desirable, but is necessary for the preservation of the industry and the making available for food of this very valuable fish. But that a treaty is desirable does not make it imperative for a public man to accept as the last word any treaty that has been submitted; and there are acute divisions of opinion as to the desirability of this particular treaty. Some of the terms of the treaty are found upon analysis to be most undesirable from a national viewpoint.

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order. If the hon. gentleman is to be allowed to discuss the treaty, shall I also be allowed to discuss it?

Mr. BENNETT: I am only endeavouring to deal with the question raised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King); I am not going beyond that.

Mr. NEILL: I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is well known that no debate may take place on a question arising on the orders of the day. But the right hon. the Prime Minister made a statement, and it has been always customary for the leader of the opposition to reply.

Mr. NEILL: To make a statement in reply, but not a speech.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The leader of the opposition may briefly reply to the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the rules provide in a case such as this, when the Prime Minister makes a statement, that whoever occupies the position I hold for the moment is entitled to make a statement in reply.

Mr. NEILL: But not a stump speech

Mr. BENNETT: The impertinence of the hon. gentleman has become so proverbial that most members in this house are unaffected by it; it is received with that disdain and contempt with which it should be treated. I was observing that, believing as we do that a treaty is desirable and necessary, we have studied this treaty from the national point of view and find that there are acute differences of opinion with respect to some features of it. I am not aware of the views entertained by the Premier of British Columbia, but when I read the record it becomes quite apparent that he at least was not conversant with the terms of the treaty as it was negotiated; and the expressions of opinion he has given in the telegram that has been read make it, I think, perfectly clear that that condition has not entirely been changed. For instance, during the last twenty-four hours, I may say to the Prime Minister, one of our members has received a communication from the fishermen themselves who think that under present conditions it is not desirable to proceed with the resolution approving of the treaty. I do not desire in any sense to discuss the merits of the resolution at the moment except to observe that there are clauses in this treaty which many of us consider inimical to the national interest, and some of which at least we are uncertain as to the jurisdiction of parliament to enact or to become a party to, in view of the provisions of section 132 of the British North America Act. We are all agreed that if possible a treaty which will be fair to all parties should be negotiated between the United States and Canada, whereby those who live to the south of us may benefit from the fact that we are entirely responsible for the propagation of the sockeye salmon, while we, by reason of our less favourable geographical situation, may receive a larger proportion of the fish so propagated when they return from the sea at the end of the third or fourth year of their life. Under these circumstances I congratulate the Prime Minister upon taking the course he has, which I think is in the public interest, wholly devoid of any political consideration, and which will enable the public, by careful study and research, to ascertain fully what is involved in this treaty at this time. In that attitude we approach the solution of the problem, and not in any narrow party sense.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is one point in my hon. friend's remarks to which I should like to refer and that is the statement that some hon. gentlemen opposite have received a communication from the fishing industry or from those interested in it, urging that the matter should not be gone on with at this stage. In the circumstances I feel I ought not to allow the attitude of the fishing industry to be in any way misrepresented so far as it is known to the government. I have received a telegram signed by Richard Gosse, representing the British Columbia Packers Limited, which is as follows:

Understand provincial government strongly pressing for ratification of Fraser River treaty this session. This request is strongly supported by entire fishing industry of British Columbia as not only does treaty give far better proportion of catch to Canadian packers and provides for improvement of propagation but does not interfere with Canadian rights as province has jurisdiction over development of watershed and besides commission can only recommend any course they desire to the government.

Richard Gosse,
British Columbia Packers Ltd.

I think I ought to give that communication to the house as well as the one from Premier Tolmie, in order that hon. members may know that the government is fully apprised of the views of the fishing industry of British Columbia and of the British Columbia government with reference to this matter. I hope I have made it clear that our only purpose is not to proceed in the teeth of opposition on the part of members for the province which is mostly concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister misunderstood me if in speaking of the fishing industry he thought I was dealing with the packing industry; I was referring to the fishermen who catch the fish. Mr. Gosse, as I know, represents the packing industry; he is, I believe, president of the British Columbia Packers Limited. The communication received by one of my friends, who is not in the house at the moment, was from the association of fishermen—those who catch the fish. It was they to whom I referred and not the packing industry. The very terms used by Mr. Gosse, as to the government having control over the commission, involve one of the points about which great uncertainty prevails, and with respect to which we are endeavouring to ascertain what is meant. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) has just come in and has handed me the telegram signed by Mr. Maiden. It reads:

At to-day's monthly meeting fishermen opposed ratification Fraser River Sockeye Treaty this year. Am going north to-night. Send further communications regarding matter to R. Marshall.

That was yesterday, and it was followed by a letter in the same sense. The Prime Minister thought I was dealing with the packing industry as distinguished from those who are engaged in catching the fish.

DURUM WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): What does the government understand by "durum" wheat, and how did that variety get its name?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): There are a number of varieties; there is amber durum and red durum. I cannot, on a question of this nature, raised on the orders of the day, go into an explanation of all the intricacies of durum wheat. If my hon. friend cares to put a question on the order paper I shall be glad to supply him with all the details.

Mr. McGIBBON: It was introduced into Canada from the United States, to which country it came from Siberia.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL RAILWAY TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. J. A. ROBB (for Hon. Mr. Dunning, Minister of Railways) moved the third reading of Bill No. 254, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain terminal facilities with grade separation and other works at and in the vicinity of the city of Montreal.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In accordance with the statement which I made a few days ago, I desire to move an amendment to the motion for the third reading of this bill. I think we are all agreed that the passenger and terminal facilities in Montreal in connection with the Canadian National Railways are wholly inadequate, and that new facilities should have been provided long ago. I think, further, we are all agreed that delay in commencing the construction of such facilities should not be permitted. The only question for consideration is as to the extent to which we should commit ourselves in providing such facilities; that is all.

The measure now before the house contemplates the expenditure of $51,000,000 or $52,000,000 in addition to the sum which we have already expended, together with the incidentals that must be taken into consideration having regard to the fact that the work will not be completed for some five years. It is not too much to say that the probable expenditure will therefore be something like seventy-five or eighty million dollars, or perhaps more. That includes, of course, the fifty-one million dollars provided by the new legislation, the cost of the old terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and the obligations which we are under with respect to securities in connection therewith.

Having regard to all these facts I think there is only one desire on the part of all members of this house, including the members of the government, of the opposition and of the Progressive party. That desire is to provide in the great city of Montreal, which contains practically one-tenth of our population, such facilities as will be in keeping with our nationally owned railway and such as will meet not only the requirements of to-day but also those of many days to come. It is the duty of railway statesmen to foresee not only the requirements of to-day but those of many years hence, and the other day I ventured to point out that Mr. Hill possessed great claim to fame because he had foreseen the requirements in connection with terminal facilities on his railways with a vision such as is given to very few men.

There is no doubt that the scheme now before us may be regarded as an ambitious scheme, but any proposal which has vision as to the future may be regarded by the men of to-day as being somewhat ambitious, and therefore this is a criticism which may be passed over. However, we cannot overlook the fact that at this moment we have made commitments that are extremely heavy. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) placed upon Hansard the other evening a statement of the financial obligations of this country in connection with our national railway system, and I observe that we have maturing during the next year national obligations amounting to something like $150,000,000. This means that the Dominion of Canada must provide within the next year something like $300,000,00, and that amount will only take care of the expenditure for one year in connection with the terminals.

Now let us assume for the moment that we desire to construct terminals at Montreal in keeping with the growth and potential greatness of our national railway system, and we must realize that this will cost a very substantial sum of money. It seems to me that we must ask ourselves two questions; first, is it possible to provide facilities which may be used by both great transcontinental railway systems? In other words, is a union terminal possible? The second question is, what is the minimum sum for which we may provide facilities which will meet the necessities for the present and the immediate future? Those two questions should be studied from every angle. With respect to the first question, this is largely a matter to be settled by the railway companies themselves; the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways must determine whether or not they can provide union terminals. From the evidence now before us it would appear that the efforts which have been made in that direction have not succeeded, and therefore we may take it that while the door is not closed to further negotiations, up to this moment no arrangement has been made looking for the provision of union terminal facilities in Montreal. In my judgment it is highly desirable that such provision should be made; having regard to what I have observed in travelling over the country, it is very desirable that we should have as few passenger railway stations as possible in any one city, and that wherever feasible union facilities should be provided and utilized. I think every hon. member of this house will agree with that statement.

Leaving that point for the moment, and having regard to the fact that no arrangement as yet has been consummated between the two railway companies, we must ask the next question: Are these proposed facilities the best that can be provided having regard to the present obligations of this country, financial and otherwise, both with respect to railways and to our own national financing? Obviously I cannot answer that question; the right hon. Prime Minister should not be asked to answer it, and no member of this house is in a position to give a proper answer. That question can be answered only by experts, men who have devoted their lives to this kind of work. I am not unmindful of the fact that the president of the Canadian National railway system is himself an engineer of note and repute, and he told the committee that in his judgment this was the only feasible scheme; I am not unmindful of the fact that the engineers of the Canadian National system hold the same view nor, have I forgotten that Mr. Palmer, an English engineer, has approved of the existing plans with certain modifications. However, I do submit that when you contemplate an expenditure so vast as $50,000,000 it is the course of wisdom to have a report made to the government based upon expert opinion of such a character that it will satisfy two requirements; first, it must be disinterested, and secondly it must be of such a high reputation that it carries conviction by the conclusions at which it arrives.

As I have said, I do not for a moment underestimate the wisdom, the knowledge, the foresight, the capacity and the large experience of the president and staff of the Canadian National Railways, but it is our money that is being spent and not the money of the railway company. The company is the medium through which our money is expended, and when I submit that a report should be made by an independent body I am only stating what most business men would regard as reasonable to suggest. No captain of industry contemplating large capital expenditures ever fails to take into consideration not only all the factors which he himself may know and understand or the difficulties he may himself appreciate; he always secures expert opinion, not from one source or perhaps two, but from many sources. Those of us who are familiar with the vast undertakings which have been successfully carried forward on the American continent sometimes have wondered why they have been so long in commencement and in completion. The fact is that in each case it has been thought desirable to secure expert opinion upon every phase of the matter, and that always involves time.

Therefore I think I am within the judgment of this house when I say that most of us believe that some opinion other than that of the railway company itself should be secured. As I have said, I am not for a moment lessening in any way the value of that opinion. The plans are prepared; the railway company has submitted its designs and the other day in the committee the president of the company was quite frank when he said, "I am ready to consider any alternative plans which may be submitted, but up to the moment I know of no plans that can take the place of those I now submit for your consideration." That was his position, and it may be that that is the only position it is possible to take; I do not know. I do suggest, however, that, confronted with that situation in any ordinary business, every thoughtful proprietor, every proper master of his business, would suggest that the very best expert opinion be secured that possibly could be obtained.

Therefore I proceed to the conclusion that an expert opinion is advisable, and that this opinion should be so valuable and so well supported that it would carry conviction by its very finding; also, as I have said, it should be disinterested. The difficulty with which I am now confronted is a difficulty which I am sure the Prime Minister must feel and which I know the Minister of Railways appreciates: where is that disinterested tribunal to be found? To suggest that we should set up a commission of our own choosing would be unfair to the administration and unfair to the railway companies, because we are not in a position properly to select the members of that commission. I for one feel unequal to any such responsibiliy, and I doubt not that members of the government feel very much the same with respect to this matter. Where, then, can we secure that disinterested tribunal? I have looked about this country as best I could, I told the minister what I now say publicly; I have thought a very great deal as to where we could secure this tribunal and frankly the only body I know of is the Board of Railway Commissioners That board is not entirely satisfactory but it is the only body which I know of to which this matter could be referred. Of course, within itself it is not qualified to make any finding; all it could do would be to hear the expert testimony which would be brought before it. There are many objections to the board which it is not necessary for this house to canvass, but on the other hand, it is the only body I know of in Canada to which this matter could be submitted. I presented my position the other day as clearly as I could to the Minister of Railways and I think he saw my difficulties and understood them. If the Prime Minister has any tribunal which he can name it will be quite acceptable to me if it answers the first qualification—disinterestedness. I submit with great confidence to the house and to the country that when we embark upon an expenditure as vast as this we should have the approval or disapproval of a tribunal which has been predicated upon expert testimony of such character as will carry conviction beyond peradventure.

I think it is agreed that we must rely largely upon freight earnings to defray the fixed charges upon the money invested in these terminals. It has been indicated quite clearly that the passenger traffic is not profitable nor is there any likelihood of it becoming profitable except possibly through suburban traffic. I mentioned the other day the Illinois Central terminals in Chicago, those dirty, smoky terminals along the lakefront. Those conditions have been eliminated during the last few years by the expenditure of $30,000,000 and an annual operating loss of nearly $5,000,000 has been converted into an annual profit of $1,000,000 by means of the suburban traffic. There is no such congested population on the island of Montreal which would bring about that result, because the entire population today is about one million. That may be doubled within a reasonable time and there may be some improvement in traffic receipts, but when one looks at the outer and inner circles on the plan he must realize that to make the proposition successful the electrification of this system is absolutely necessary. I asked an engineer the other day what would be involved in the electrification of a railway, including modern devices and equipment. He informed me that it would cost $100,000 per mile. That is a very large sum of money, having regard to all the circumstances and to the fact that the freight traffic must bear the burden. Are we wise in not asking for an immediate report, such as I have suggested? I know the right hon. the Prime Minister approaches a problem of this kind with a great sense of responsibility. That sense of responsibility must necessarily follow when it is considered that a yearly fixed charge of four or five million dollars is being placed upon the country and there is a question as to whether it is to be profitable or unprofitable. In moving this amendment we have suggested that this bill should go into force through proclamation of the governor in council and after approval of the plan of the works by the Board of Railway Commissioners, but if the Prime Minister or the government of the day has some other tribunal to suggest to take the place of that body I am quite content. I am not in any sense wedded to the Board of Railway Commissioners; my difficulty has been to secure a disinterested tribunal to which this matter could be referred.

I do not want to be considered as an alarmist, but I think that a country with a population of less than ten million and which talks as glibly as we do of expenditures of ten, twenty, forty or fifty millions of dollars, fails to appreciate and understand that obligations of this character must be met. When I say that they must be met, I mean that the interest must be paid and a sinking fund must be provided to take care of those responsibilities. Fifty million dollars is a very large obligation and a tremendous liability to create at this time. We are talking to-day in much the same way as this country used to talk before 1914, when we had such a collapse of our railway undertakings other than the Canadian Pacific. It alarms me when I think of the way in which we cavalierly wave our hands and talk about $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 as though it were a mere bagatelle. I was content to be called a pessimist in those days, but we sowed the seed and we are reaping the whirlwind and are paying the shot to-day.

I ask, therefore, not from any political motive nor any other desire than that of making the best suggestion I can to the government of the day, that before we embark on an undertaking of this character we should pause and consider this matter very carefully. I do not make that suggestion in opposition to the terminals, because I have wondered why terminals were not long ago provided in Montreal. These facilities have been imperatively required by the Canadian National Railways for the last few years. The railway system must be losing money because of the inadequacy of their terminal facilities, and I have wondered just how long the Canadian people would tolerate them. But because that condition has arisen is no reason why we should not take those reasonable precautions which business men would insist upon if they were acting as a board of directors dealing with the capital of a company.

So, Mr. Speaker, without dealing with the financial features of this matter beyond what I have said, nor trespassing longer upon the time of the house, I move, seconded by Mr. Stevens:

That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house with instructions that they have power to add thereto the following section:

"That this act shall come into force on proclamation by the governor in council and after approval of the plans of the said works by the Board of Railway Commissioners."

Any action which is to be taken should be taken promptly; there should be no delay and if the government has any tribunal to suggest which is independent and disinterested, I shall be quite content to substitute that tribunal for the Board of Railway Commissioners. I am not entirely satisfied that that board is the tribunal to which this matter should be submitted, but it is the only board of a public character of which I know to which this matter could be submitted for consideration.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the house regrets the unavoidable absence of my colleague the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) who is at present confined in the hospital. The Minister of Railways had given much time to a consideration of the various railway projects coming before the house this year. He had devoted special attention to a consideration of the different branch lines in various parts of the country, to the Hudson Bay railway extension and to the Montreal terminal facilities. He had studied these different questions very carefully. Indeed, all the members of the government know that the Minister of Railways, ever since he joined the cabinet, has been giving attention to such projects. Therefore, we regret he is not present to-day to reply to my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett).

My hon. friend, in presenting his amendment, was fair to this extent: he admits the need of new terminals and better and more economical switching facilities in the great city of Montreal, whence are shipped the products of a large part of the country. He admits that there should be no delay in carrying out the work; indeed, he says that already he is surprised that the people not only of Montreal, but of Canada, have tolerated this condition of affairs so long. I am not astonished at that, because my hon. friend, having had a good deal of experience before the railway commission and, perhaps, knowing that commission as well as or better than many others in the house, realizes the switching charges, for the moving of freight particularly, in Montreal, are very high and he knows that it is the man back home who pays those switching charges. But, having made that statement as to the imperative necessity of the work, my hon. friend suggests that before going on with it, we should refer it to a board in which he frankly tells us that he has not as much confidence as he would like to have. I repeat that he is in a position to know, because he has appeared before the railway commission many times.

Mr. BENNETT: Not as it is at present constituted.

Mr. ROBB: What does my hon. friend mean by that?

Mr. BENNETT: I mean that it is not the board it once was.

Mr. ROBB: That is another admission that my hon. friend is asking us to refer the consideration of this great problem to a board in which he himself has—I will not say no confidence, but little confidence. This project of the Montreal terminals is, so far as the railway is concerned, not a matter of hasty conclusions. The Canadian National railway management have been considering this problem for more than six years. Not only have they been looking into it very carefully through their own engineers, but they have brought to Canada an independent engineer, a recognized and most capable terminal engineer, who has had experience not only in the mother country but in other parts of the world. I understand they have had the advantage of the experience of eminent railway engineers connected with other vast railway transportation systems on this continent. They have examined carefully the terminal facilities in other cities and after all this examination and study have reached the conclusion that the plan now presented to parliament is one that will take care of the necessities of the great port of Montreal not only for the immediate present but for years to come.

What does this terminal plan as presented accomplish? It solves three problems. It solves the grade problem, the crossing problem of the different grades. Everyone admits that with the congested condition now existing in our cities, that is important, and eighty-one grade crossings are taken care of by this readjustment. Is it not important that that work should be proceeded with without delay? It also takes care of the readjustment and coordination of the present transportation facilities and reduces to a considerable extent the cost of switching. It provides for a belt line for freight and passengers right around the city of Montreal and also, unlike the situation that exists in other railway stations in Montreal, where the lines come to dead ends, it provides for a continuation of the system through the city, so that trains coming from the west proceed through to the east and trains coming from the east are able to proceed west. It is not proposed to spend this $51,000,000 immediately because the bill specifically states that the management may take seven years to do the work. I imagine that the people of Montreal and, indeed, the people of all Canada will want this work completed as soon as possible.

Mr. BENNETT: The bill provides for a period of five years.

Mr. ROBB: I thought it was seven. The expenditure covering that period of five years, as stated by my hon. friend, is not unreasonable. In the bill before parliament, the same precautions are taken in regard to the Montreal terminals as were taken in connection with the various branch line bills that parliament has passed. It is subject to the same examination and conforms in every respect to the general Railway Act.

As regards the expenditure, I take issue at once with the leader of the opposition. The people of Canada are not disposed to be governed by commissions. The government of the day are responsible for the spending of the people's money. If the people of Canada decide that the government are unwisely spending the public money, we shall be put out of office and my hon. friend will be put in. But the people will have an opportunity to judge us. Will they have such an opportunity if we turn over to the Board of Railway Commissioners, a board in which my hon. friend has just said he has little confidence, the decision as to whether or not the Canadian National railway management is going to spend this $50,000,000 or $51,000,000? If we do so, what chance have the taxpayers of Canada to turn them out if they are not satisfied with them? So I say to my friend that it is better that a government responsible to the people should be charged with the responsibility of making this decision. Even assuming that we adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend and refer those plans to another board for consideration, how is that other board going to secure the desired information? Have we no confidence in the management of the Canadian National Railways? If we have no confidence in them, the proper amendment to bring in would be that we change the situation and turn over the management of the railway to the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is a business man. Did he ever know of a business man who was engaging in large capital expenditures not calling in experts for their opinions, while at the same time not dispensing with the reports of his own managers and engineers?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has just told us that he questions whether the Board of Railway Commissioners are experts. The Canadian National railway board, through its chairman and directors, responsible to the people through the government of Canada, have not brought this measure to parliament without first taking expert advice. They have not come here hastily, for they have been considering this project for six years. Is it necessary that I should repeat to my hon. friend that they have obtained the advice of an independent expert terminal engineer? They brought to this country Mr. Palmer, who is regarded as one of the best railway terminal engineers in the old world.

There is another railway terminal engineer whose opinion has also been given in favour of this project, a man in whom the country had some confidence a few years ago, and in whom I believe they have confidence yet. I remember that when the government was looking about for a suitable man to take charge of this great national railway system that we had on our hands, there was some criticism of the selection of Sir Henry Thornton. It was recognized that he was an excellent railway terminal engineer and that he had had great experience in providing terminal facilities for railways in large cities, but some questioned very much whether he was a good traffic manager. They said they were not very sure as to that. We know, they said, that the government have selected a good railway terminal engineer, but we are not sure that he is a good traffic manager.

Mr. BENNETT: Who said that?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend recalls that that was the criticism at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: I am frank to say that I never heard it.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: I leave it to the Canadian people to decide whether or not Sir Henry Thornton has proven himself a good traffic manager. I submit that if Sir Henry Thornton was a good railway terminal engineer when he was engaged as president and chairman of the board of directors of the Canadian National railway, he has not lost anything by the experience of the past six years and by the exchange of opinions that he has had with other eminent railway engineers.

We entrust to the chairman and board of directors of the Canadian National railway, which is owned by the people of Canada, the expenditure of about $245,000,000 every year, and no one has suggested that before the management spend part of this money they should consult the Board of Railway Commissioners, a board in which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has but doubtful confidence. If the chairman and the board of directors of the Canadian National railway are to be entrusted with the building of branch lines throughout the country, with the extension of the Hudson Bay railway, and the operation of the vessels that we have on the ocean, surely they are to be entrusted with the expenditure of the money that parliament is voting for the Montreal railway terminals.

I repeat again that it is the government of the day that is responsible. The government must pass on all this expenditure and the government would not pass on any of this expenditure unless it was satisfied, as it is satisfied now after examination, that the railway has obtained the best expert engineering advice and that the terminals proposed are suitable to the requirements of the great port and city of Montreal. The bill provides that the expenditure shall not be more than $10,000,000 in any one year. I repeat that it is the governor in council that must authorize the expenditure of this money. The government of the day is responsible and so I ask parliament, admitting with my hon. friend that there is necessity and immediate necessity for improved railway terminal facilities in Montreal, why we should delay the passing of this measure by referring it to a board in which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has just said that he has but little confidence.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking entirely unexpectedly because I had no knowledge that this amendment would be proposed to-day. The greater part of this work will be carried on in the constituency which I have the honour to represent in the city of Montreal. I have taken particular pains during the last fortnight to ascertain what the general public opinion is in Montreal with regard to the extension of these terminal facilities. Montreal, it is impossible to disguise the fact, is proud of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has brought great credit to the city of Montreal during the last fifty years, and Montreal has always had faith and confidence in the management of that great undertaking. Public opinion, as I understand it, in the city of Montreal is most desirous that there should be a clear and amicable understanding between the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways with regard to terminal facilities; but apparently up to the present time the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not prepared to enter into a joint undertaking for the construction of terminal facilities, believing, as is undoubtedly the fact, that its present terminal facilities and the splendid station and equipment, which it now has, will be quite adequate to the requirements of its own undertaking for a number of years to come, and therefore public opinion, as I understand it, is that the way should be left open, as the development of the terminal facilities of the Canadian National Railways proceeds, for an amicable understanding, if one may be reached, by which the Canadian Pacific Railway may come in and share in those facilities. The door should be left open.

Apart from that, public opinion in the city of Montreal, as I understand it, is so thoroughly dissatisfied with the present terminal facilities of the Canadian National Railways in that city that, so far as it may give expression to the public opinion of this country, so far as it can exercise any influence on the government of this country, it will insist that there shall be no delay in proceeding to remedy the existing distressing and deplorable conditions. Therefore, representing that city, it is necessary, I think, for me to say that the general opinion of the city as a whole is that the work should proceed rapidly and that there should be no unnecessary delay in its commencement.

I have been accustomed to examining engineering plans for a number of years, and I am thoroughly convinced that so far as the engineering problems are concerned, there are no great engineering difficulties to be overcome in carrying out the undertaking for the proposed construction of these terminal facilities in the city of Montreal. So far as construction is concerned, I have no doubt that there will be no difficulty in finding not only in Canada but among the officials of the two great railways men who are thoroughly competent to carry out this great enterprise.

So far as the traffic necessities are concerned, I know nothing about the matter; that necessarily must be left to the management of the railway particularly and peculiarly affected. I entirely agree that the government of this country in carrying through this work must take all the responsibility—and perhaps a large part of the credit. I do urge upon the government that every necessary engineering advice and assistance should be made available to the management of the Canadian National Railways in carrying out this enterprise. But I am not in favour of delay, and I am certainly not in favour of any delay for the purpose of putting before the Board of Railway Commissioners this entire undertaking for its approval, because I believe that board is incompetent to give any better opinion upon it than I am able to give myself. But I did ask the other day that insofar as questions of law and of fact may arise between the Canadian National Railways and other public bodies, those issues should be submitted to the railway commission for decision. But if this entire project is referred to the railway commission for its approval, who are to bring the facts and produce the experts before the commission, unless the Canadian National Railways do so? I regard the suggestion that we should await the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners as one that will be interpreted and understood throughout the length and breadth of the city of Montreal as a means for delay. Consequently I cannot vote for the amendment.

Mr. J. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, as representative of one of the constituencies of the city of Montreal, I deem it my duty to make a few comments with reference to the amendement which the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has just moved to bill No. 254, in connection with the construction of a terminal station in the Metropolis of Canada. The citizens of Montreal are anxious to see the completion of these Canadian National Railway terminals and they are opposed—the majority of them at least—to any delay in this matter.

I therefore ask the house to concur in the views expressed by the citizens of Montreal who, for a number of years past, desire these improvements. Moreover, I see no reason why the government should not take the responsibility of having the representatives of the people vote the sum of $51,000,000 for the construction of these terminal facilities.

I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) as well as with those of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). We should therefore, without further delay, vote in favour of the third reading of this bill, and thereby, prove to the citizens of Montreal that the government acknowledges its responsibilities and is ready to grant their legitimate claims.

Amendment (Mr. Bennett) negatived.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS' ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 170 respecting juvenile delinquents.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the senate has amended this bill by adding two or three subsections which were suggested by the child welfare organizations, and which really improve the bill. There is no objection to them on the part of the Department of Justice.

To section 17 the senate has added subsection (5), providing that when a child has been placed under the surveillance of a foster home outside the jurisdiction of the court, the court may issue a warrant or any other process outside of its jurisdiction for the purpose of reaching such child.

Subsection (3) of section 22 has been amended to read:

(3) Where, under the provisions of this section or of section 20, a sum of money is ordered to be paid, the court may adjudge, either by the order respecting the payment of such sum or by an order made subsequently, that the same shall be recoverable by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party and in default of such distress by imprisonment.

That follows a similar provision in the Criminal Code.

Section 36 has been amended to read in this form:

36. (1) Every juvenile court shall have such and like powers and authority to preserve order in court during the sittings thereof and by the like ways and means as now by law are or may be exercised and used in like cases and for the like purposes by any court in Canada and by the judges thereof, during the sittings thereof.

(2) Every judge of a juvenile court, whenever any resistance is offered to the execution of any summons, warrant of execution or other process issued by him, may enforce the due execution of the same by the means provided by the law for enforcing the execution of the process of other courts in like cases.

There are no other amendments.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works—Asoka column for Canada at Delhi, India, $3,000.

Mr. BRADY: Will the minister explain this?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): This has been requested by the Under Secretary of State for External Affairs. The amount is asked for to provide for the erection of a column, after the style of the ancient Asoka columns, to be placed in front of the new government buildings at Delhi. Four of the dominions were asked to contribute the price of one column.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the suppression of the white slave traffic, $1,500.

Mr. SPENCER: This seems a particularly small grant for the purpose. Surely there is more money spent in this regard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did not intend the chairman to call this vote; it is not under this department.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPENCER: No; I want the particulars.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We might as well dispose of this item. It appears from year to year and is assistance for which the Department of Health takes responsibility in connection with the suppressing of the traffic.

Mr. SPENCER: But what is being done by Canada to suppress the traffic?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall have to get the particulars from the department. I understand that we cooperate with other countries and this is largely in the nature of a contribution to organizations that have this work in hand.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers, $3,079,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister will remember that I asked for a certain letter which was sent to the United States government. It should be on the file.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The letter in question relates to correspondence with regard to the lower lakes terminals. There would be no objection to my hon. friend seeing it; it is in the possession of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I will not enter into a discussion of the matter, but I should like to see the letter.

Mr. PECK: I understand that all these works are done under contract.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Which works?

Mr. PECK: The work under these items generally.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; there is no exception in the vote here.

Mr. PECK: The work is let to contractors—all these improvements which are proposed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. PECK: Do those contracts contain what is usually spoken of as the fair wage agreement?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. PECK: What practical steps does the department take to see that the agreement is carried out?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Whenever there is complaint that it is not being observed, such complaint is investigated. The complaint goes first of all to the Minister of Labour, who guards very jealously the strict observance of the terms of the fair wage clauses.

Mr. PECK: The contract is one with the government and not with the men who are employed in connection with the work. The government is very careful to have proper inspection of the materials, of the mode of construction, and so forth, made by its own engineers. Surely, therefore, it is important that the workmen should be protected by a similar inspection with a view to insuring that they are paid a fair wage for the work they do. It would be a simple matter for some inspector, representing either the Department of Labour or the Department of Public Works, to see that the wages paid from time to time by the contractors to the workmen represent a reasonable return for their labour. If you wait until some complaint comes from the workmen themselves you may wait a long time, because the men who are employed on this work are probably afraid to complain for fear of being marked as labour agitators. I do think that the government should take more active steps than to wait until a complaint is made before investigating. It would be quite possible to insist upon duplicate pay lists being filed with the department, so that if any question came up after the contract was completed an opportunity could be had for investigation. The other day I asked a question of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) with reference to a contract that had gone through his department in connection with some improvements in the Lindsay arsenal, and to my surprise he told me he had no information as to the amount which had been paid the various workmen employed in that work. The result is that now that the work is completed it is absolutely impossible to ascertain whether the suggestion made to me, that fair wages were not paid these employees, is justified; the matter cannot be examined into. This question is one of considerable importance to the workmen of the country, and further steps should be taken to see that they are properly paid.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is an official known as the fair wage officer, whose duty it is to make the very investigation to which my hon. friend has referred, and to see that the clauses are strictly observed.

Mr. PECK: Is there just one officer for the department, and does he examine carefully into all contracts?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I believe there is more than one officer and I understand that close supervision is maintained over the different contracts.

Mr. PECK: Would it be possible to get from that officer a report, annually or otherwise, as to what he actually does for the salary he receives?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Certainly.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend asked for a return the other day which he said had been delayed. I took up the matter in my department and while I have not seen the return myself I understood from my deputy that it had been sent forward to the Secretary of State. I do not know whether or not it has been tabled, but I believe it will give my hon. friend the information he desires.

Mr. PECK: I just want to point out that at present it is impossible to find out how this work was carried on and whether proper payments were made to the working men. The minister stated he was unable to furnish the information.

Mr. RALSTON: I think the answer was that he had not the information at hand here, but I think my hon. friend will find that the additional return will give him the information he desires.

Mr. GEARY: Does every contract contain a fair wage clause, and if so, does the minister remember offhand how it reads?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say offhand; I know the clause is submitted by the Department of Labour before it is included.

Mr. GEARY: Is there a clause regulating the number of hours also?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not in a position to say offhand as to that.

Mr. GEARY: It seems to me that is an important point; the eight hour day, or so many hours a week, is a matter of some importance to the men, and if there is such a clause in government contracts it seems to me the government in employing men themselves might very well insist upon similar conditions being adhered to. I understand that in the Hudson bay work the men are working ten hours a day and there is nothing to show that they are not working ten hours a day on other government work, which is against the spirit of the fair wage clause.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The other day the minister furnished me with copies of the fair wage clauses, the one providing for a specific wage and the other for the fair wage prevailing in the locality. I suppose the government sees that these fair wage clauses are enforced.

Mr. GEARY: There is no doubt that sometimes the men are imposed upon by the contractor.

Mr. ROBINSON: I would like to inquire as to whether the granting of the franchise to the Detroit and Windsor Ferry Company, and also the franchise for the service from Detroit to Amherstburg and Bois Blanc island, come under this department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say definitely but I am under the impression that they do.

Mr. ROBINSON: I would like to know definitely, because there is a matter I would like to bring up under the supplementary estimates.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—second new departmental building, $200,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The supplementary estimates of this department, tabled yesterday, with the exception of an item for messing accommodation at Kingston and one or two other exceptions, are practically all for works under contract or for repairs which have been necessitated since the main estimates were tabled.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice that this item is for a new departmental building; would the minister give us some information in this regard?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is to provide for the preparation of plans, the calling for tenders and so on for the second of the group of departmental buildings. This is only intended to provide for getting things ready to let the contract next year, after the completion of the building now in process of construction.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Where does the minister propose to put this second building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is a matter for the architects to work out as to the details, but it is intended to be in the immediate vicinity of the present building.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is the Confederation building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Surely the minister will allow plenty of space between these buildings? A good deal of ground was purchased there for the purpose of making a second parliament hill, as it were, and surely the minister will not put this second building too close to the one now being constructed. Personally I think the present building is altogether too near Wellington street, as I have said before; some space should have been left between the street and the building. That cannot be helped now, but surely there should be quite a space left between the first and the second buildings, in order to make a beauty spot of that district. Can we get an assurance from the minister that this will be done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend may rest assured that the second building will not be put so close to the building now under construction as to interfere in any way with the harmony of the architecture of the two buildings. However, the details as to the exact location must be settled by the architects. The general plan is part of the scheme worked out years ago, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. HEAPS: But surely it is impossible for an architect to get out plans and specifications for a building until he knows where the building is to be situated. I had thought perhaps the minister might have some information to give the house indicating almost the exact location of the second building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in the immediate vicinity of the building now being erected, but this vote of $200,000 is to provide for a study of the site, the preparing of plans and specifications and so on.

Mr. HEAPS: There has been some talk of having a proper layout of the city so that these buildings might be given a proper setting; I understood that the federal commission had some plan in mind. Personally I do not like the location on Wellington street; I think it is a mistake to put these expensive government buildings in a row on that street. I believe some comprehensive plan should be developed whereby these buildings might be located in such a way as will not interfere with the future development of the city as a whole.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This location was decided upon by a committee after a very careful study extending over a number of years. The plan of the construction of the building to be erected on the area was canvassed and laid out after a lengthy study by a committee, such as the hon. member has in mind, and that committee decided upon the general layout of the buildings.

Mr. HEAPS: And they chose Wellington street as the site for the additional public buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: There is a building on Elgin street, the customs building, which I think could well be torn down and a new building erected in its place. A very fine structure could be erected on the new park and additional space would be provided. Has the department considered that angle of the matter at all?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That would come within the area under the control of the federal commission and I have no doubt it will receive the most serious consideration.

Mr. HEAPS: In my opinion, Wellington street is not the most suitable location for these new government buildings. It is only possible to erect the buildings along one side of the street and the result will be that we will have fine, imposing government buildings on one side and a bunch of shacks on the other. I do not think that is a proper setting for the city of Ottawa, and I think a proper scheme should be devised by competent persons to develop the city of Ottawa in the proper manner rather than in a haphazard sort of way.

Mr. McGIBBON: I will take this opportunity of asking the Prime Minister if he has given any consideration to the matter of making the city of Ottawa a federal district where he would have control of everything in the line of architecture?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is a question which is under consideration all the time. I am not in a position to make any announcement at the moment but I hope that that may be brought about in the course of a short time.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that the government is now renting offices in about forty different buildings in Ottawa; is it the intention of the government to erect buildings from time to time as finances permit which will take care of the entire civil service?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The intention is to proceed with reasonable expedition in the erection of buildings to house the different government services now located in a large number of buildings for which the government has to pay rent.

Mr. FANSHER (East Lambton): What departments of the government will be housed in this new building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That matter has not been decided as yet.

Mr. ROBINSON: The minister has stated that his department grants the license to the Detroit and Windsor Ferry Company, and I would like to inquire when that license will expire?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the data relating to that, but I will be very glad to obtain the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. ROBINSON: This ferry company has a very valuable franchise. The island of Bois Blanc, a Canadian island, opposite the town of Amherstburg belongs to Canada but the ferry company operates a boat from Amherstburg to the island. Two American immigration officers are stationed there and when a British-born family of recent residence in Canada desire to go to the island for picnicking purposes they are not permitted to do so by these immigration officers. I feel certain that if the general manager of the ferry company were not so stubborn some arrangement could be made whereby British-born subjects would have the privilege of going to the island. The ferry company take the view that passengers from Detroit to Bois Blanc, or Bob Lo as it is called, are not questioned when they return to Detroit, and also claim that it would offer a sort of roundabout way in which undesirables or those not on the quota list could get into Detroit without being questioned. I think this matter could be overcome by the assurance of the chief of police, the mayor or some other responsible party in Amherstburg, that the British-born citizen had no intention of landing in the United States, but would return to Amherstburg. This is a humiliating position, and I have received many complaints about it. I do not think the United States would tolerate a similar condition on their side, and I feel sure that the matter can be amicably adjusted by the department.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The department grants the license for the ferries, but has no control over the regulations of the immigration department of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON: The ferry company operates a boat called The Papoose, which runs only from Amherstburg to the island. I do not think it is right that American immigration officers are permitted to station themselves at a Canadian port and prevent British subjects from going from one part of Canada to another.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to direct the attention of the minister to a matter which I think can be remedied very quickly; I refer to the sidewalks around the parliament buildings. Sidewalks as a rule are made to walk on, but it is impossible to walk on these. They have been in a bad state for some time and I should like to know whether the department is going to take measures to see that they are repaired. Is any action going to be taken against the contractor who built these sidewalks?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was not thought advisable to do anything to them while the house was in session; that is, to start tearing up the sidewalks or effecting repairs. The contractors to whom my hon. friend refers have undertaken to resurface the portion that was laid by them and which is unsatisfactory. That will be done just as soon as parliament prorogues.

Mr. HEAPS: I hope the department will see that the contractors put on a proper surface, different from what they put on before.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I see under this item an amount for Ottawa departmental buildings, and I should like to say a word as to the location of the second departmental building. The Prime Minister has taken a great interest in the beautification of Ottawa and is causing a good deal of money to be spent in that regard. The location of the new buildings will make a tremendous difference in the appearance of the city. I am rising simply to ask him personally to look into the plan and see whether he thinks the location is all right. We have bought a large piece of land all the way along Wellington street and it should be made a beauty spot. I do not want to insist upon this because I may be wrong, but I think the present building has been put altogether too near the street. This is not necessary, because there is plenty of land to give more room and there should be at least space for a driveway in front of the building. I know it has been stated that the reason the first building was located where it is, was so that it would be in line with the Chateau Laurier, but after all, the whole section in that part of Wellington street should be a new feature by itself, like a second parliament square, though not exactly the same as ours, but with plenty of open spaces, grass and so forth to make it a thing of beauty. I simply appeal to the Prime Minister to give the matter of the location of the second building his personal attention.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend can rest assured that no building will be located without the Prime Minister's most serious consideration being requested, and, I know, being very freely given.

Mr. BENNETT: I was rather interested in what the hon. member for West Essex said. Certainly it seems to me to be improper that, because a foreign company owns a Canadian island in Canadian waters passengers running from a Canadian port to that island should be subjected to almost the indignities to which he referred. I think the minister has it in his power to put a stop to that sort of thing.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to look into the matter and to do whatever can be done.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. SPENCER: No.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Hudson Bay railway and terminals: construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500, $6,500,000.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. leader of the opposition asked certain questions in regard to the engineers and the engineers' certificates, and with regard to the Stewart and Cameron contract. The amount paid to Stewart and Cameron by the department to March 31, 1929, was $1,025,578; the amount required to complete the contract is $974.422. The total estimated amount to be paid to Stewart and Cameron is in round figures $2,000,000. The reasons for the increase are an increased quantity of material above that estimated. The original engineer's estimate of the work covered by the Stewart and Cameron contract was $1,907,000.

My hon. friend also asked with regard to classification. Strictly speaking there has been no change in the classification from the four original classes of material: (1) solid rock; (2) loose rock; (3) hardpan; (4) earth and other materials. There were, however, four extraordinary orders issued under the provisions of the contract: (1) for excavating frozen material; (2) for excavating ditches in winter, as it was deemed necessary for such work to be done in the winter in order to facilitate drainage when the spring thaw came; (3) erection of eight engineers' camps, not included in the original contract; (4) brushing on top grade, which brushing was found necessary on account of the muskeg embankments, the embankments being too soft to bear track being laid, which was given to the contractor to be done ahead of the track, as he had men in camps in advance of the tracklaying.

My hon. friend also asked something as to the engineers. The chief engineer under the contract was the chief engineer of the construction department of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Gzowski, who as such has the final say as to classification, work orders and price fixing orders. Such action, however, is taken on the advice and after consultation with the other engineers down the ladder, particularly the district engineer, Mr. J. G. MacLachlan, who in turn was continuously on the work and in touch with the resident engineers. Mr. Gzowski, Mr. Dixon and Mr. Burns made many trips over the line, and Mr. J. G. MacLachlan was practically continuously on the job with the exception of necessary trips to Winnipeg, and on one occasion he had to go out for medical treatment in Winnipeg, but not during the progress of the work.

My hon. friend also wished to know whether the deputy Minister, Major Graham Bell, had sent any telegram or other communication to Mr. MacLachlan, the district engineer in connection with the classification under the Stewart and Cameron contract. The answer is that there is no record on the departmental files of any such telegram or communication.

Mr. BENNETT: There were a number of questions which arose out of that, but in view of the absence of the minister, who is unfortunately ill, I think I shall have to let them stand. I thank the acting minister for the information that he has been able to secure under great difficulties. Before I leave that, I should like to put on record, so that the attention of the minister will be called to it, a telegram that came to me from Mr. W. J. James, of Prince Albert, and I am sure that the hon. member for Prince Albert will be greatly interested in this:

Have read press report of discussion in house regarding Churchill terminal and Beach subdivision in 1908 and following two years. I bought several lots in Beach subdivision paying three hundred dollars each knowing that some day it would be a port. As yet received no notice of expropriation or offer in connection therewith. I know of twenty-five others at this place that bought lots and obtained title and are in same position as myself. Would like to know if our rights are to be taken away without notice or compensation.

I merely put that upon the record in view of the discussion the other day, so that it may be brought to the attention of the minister when the opportunity comes later. In any event the deputy minister will take notice of it.

I suppose the acting minister has no figures in connection with the Flin-Flon branch of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I will leave that, in the absence of the minister.

No purchaser of such guaranteed notes, securities or obligations shall be under any obligation to inquire into the application of the proceeds of any guaranteed issue, $53,750,000.

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps it will facilitate matters if I state to the committee that all these railway estimates were referred to the railway and shipping committee, where they were very carefully reviewed, and the report of the committee I believe was unanimous.

Item agreed to.

Maritime Freight Rates Act

Amount required to provide for payment from time to time during the fiscal year 1929-30 of the difference, estimated by the Board of Railway Commissioners and certified by the said Board to the Minister of Railways and Canals, as and when required by him, occurring on account of the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls (referred to in section 9 of the said Act) on all traffic moved during 1929, under the tariffs approved, by the following companies:—

Atlantic Quebec and Western Railway.
Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway.
Canadian Pacific Railway, including Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Co.
New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company.
Cumberland Railway and Coal Co.
Dominion Atlantic Railway.
Maritime Coal Railway and Power Co.
Quebec Oriental Railway Co.
Sydney and Louisburg Railway.
Temiscouata Railway, $1,050,000.

Mr. POWER: I desire to inquire of the Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Robb), as I would have inquired of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning)—whose absence I in common with all other members of the house deeply deplore—if any steps have been taken by the government to remedy the situation which has arisen in Quebec, a situation created by the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act to the city of Quebec and the surrounding country. It would appear that owing to that legislation the city and port of Quebec have been seriously discriminated against. The Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General and members from the district of Quebec have received memorials in protest, and it has been quite conclusively shown to the Minister of Railways and others that owing to the application of this legislation the harbour of Quebec is, so to speak, divided into two: freight shipped from Levis, which is in the harbour boundaries of Quebec, obtains considerable advantage over freight shipped from the city of Quebec, so much so that at the present time the merchants of the city of Quebec meet competition from the maritime provinces almost at their door. Within 50 or 60 miles of the city of Quebec the freight rates are on a par with those from Halifax; whereas the merchants of Levis have received benefits which even they did not anticipate.

I submit that this was on oversight at the time the legislation was passed. For many years Quebec and Levis were in the same rate zone. Serious injury has been occasioned to the merchants and the shippers of the city of Quebec, and they have protested vigorously. They have taken their protests to the proper authorities here. Moreover, they went down to the maritime provinces and explained their case to the boards of trade of Halifax and St. John. Not having anticipated that this matter would come up for discussion this afternoon, I have not the documents at hand which I should have, but I believe their representations received not only a sympathetic hearing, but I am under the impression that resolutions of these boards of trade were passed favourable to the contention of the representatives of the port of Quebec. Under the circumstances I would urge that some action be taken without delay in order to remove the discrimination which exists against the city of Quebec.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. POWER: I should like to hear from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Thank you for your inquisitiveness.

Mr. ROBB: I know the Minister of Justice is in sympathy with anything that concerns the city and port of Quebec. As the house knows, a delegation from the city of Quebec recently presented to the Minister of Railways the case which has been so well presented this afternoon by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). I am advised by the officers of the Department of Railways that the minister promised to urge upon the traffic department of the railways the necessity of reviewing the case fully. Beyond that I am quite sure my hon. friend does not expect me to go to-day.

Mr. POWER: I should like some further assurance that if the traffic department cannot make that arrangement the government will amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act at the next session of parliament. In fact it should have been amended this session. I think the government should consider seriously such an amendment. I do not think the people of Quebec city will be satisfied with the minister's assurance that representations have been made to the traffic department. We can make those representations ourselves, and probably we shall get just as far. It should be the duty of the government to remove any injustice that has been created by a mere oversight—on the part of whom I do not know.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend as a good lawyer would scarcely expect the government to pronounce upon the matter until it has heard the evidence from the officers of the department.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, it would appear that the member for Quebec South is under the impression that the Maritime Freight Rates Act was intended to bring redress to the province of Quebec. I would remind him that that legislation was enacted to give relief to the people of the maritime provinces. So far as the city of Quebec is concerned we are not very much interested. But we are interested in getting our products into the city of Montreal. To cut us off—as we are cut off—several hundred miles from Montreal, means that we get only about five-eighths of what we should have got by way of relief. Montreal is the gateway, the first point in the upper province, so-called, where we can find a market or get in touch with Ontario. It was understood thoroughly that we were to be given special rates to enable us to enter that territory. As I say, that has not been done. I have not the slightest objection to Quebec participating in the rate referred to by the member from Quebec South, but I think he totally misapprehends, as I stated in my opening remarks, the object of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. If he will join with me and other members from the maritimes to have the Maritime Freight Rates Act extended to Montreal, I am with him.

Mr. POWER: In reply to the unselfish remarks of my hon. friend, I shall be glad to join with him in any way—

Mr. CANTLEY: Then start on the right track.

Mr. POWER: I never claimed, nor did anybody else in the city of Quebec, that the Maritime Freight Rates Act was intended for our relief; but I did wish to make it clear that that legislation was not intended unjustly to discriminate against the port and city of Quebec. The effect of the introduction of those rates has been to deprive the merchants of Quebec of the opportunity to sell their goods in territory which from the earliest days has been recognized as their own. Anyone who is familiar with the geographical situation of the province of Quebec will know that almost all the territory between Montreal and Three Rivers on both the north and the south shore of the St. Lawrence river is fully covered by the business people of Montreal; whereas the territory below the city of Quebec, between it and the New Brunswick border, has been for years that in which the Quebec merchants were able to carry on their business.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): You are referring to the city of Quebec?

Mr. POWERS: Yes. The effect of these rates is that we are no longer able to carry on business there.

Mr. HANSON: Will the hon. member go ahead and prove his proposition? I am sympathetic, but I should like to hear from him something more than a mere assertion.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend's point is absolutely well taken. Unfortunately I did not expect this matter to be brought up today and I have not with me the memorial of the Quebec board of trade. It is quite clearly stated that on certain articles the rate from Quebec to Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere, eighty miles below Quebec, is about equal to that from St. John to the same point, which is about four hundred miles. I do not remember all the details, but if that is the case, and if it can be shown, then there is an unjust discrimination. No favouritism should be shown in that territory. That is the point, and it should be the duty of the government to make a more serious investigation into the matter than has so far been made.

Mr. PARENT: I am glad the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) has brought this matter to the attention of the committee. I for one, as a member from Quebec, have had occasion more than once to meet representatives of the various commercial interests of that city with a view to bringing to the attention of the government the discrimination under which the city of Quebec is labouring by reason of the freight rates consequent upon the Duncan report and the act based thereon. As stated by the hon. member, it is well known that the city of Quebec has always been regarded as a part of the maritime provinces so far as traffic is concerned. Everyone who has spent a few years in Quebec will remember the time when we had a ferry which often carried full trains across from Levis to Quebec and from Quebec to Levis, in the traffic between the maritime provinces and that city. Knowing all the circumstances, and being under no doubt at all as to the city of Quebec having been all along regarded as a part of the maritime provinces in the matter of freight rates, we were very much surprised to learn that in the Duncan report only the city of Levis was mentioned; and no one at the time protested, for the simple reason that it was inconceivable to the people of Quebec that the mention of the word Levis alone could be taken to mean anything else than the inclusion of Quebec city itself. The city of Levis is, of course, a splendid place but it is not to be compared in importance to the city of Quebec; everyone will concede that. It is well known that our commercial people have long done business with the maritime provinces, carrying on a considerable trade with them. When the word Quebec was omitted from the timetable the officials of the department and of the railways concluded that the special freight rates did not apply to that city. It is then that the question began to attract attention, and as soon as the discrimination was realized the members representing that city, the board of trade and the various interests of Quebec took action to bring the matter to the notice of the government. I may say that so far we have received a very sympathetic hearing, but that is about all that we have obtained. I am glad that the members from the maritime provinces appear to be in sympathy with our claim in this matter, and I sincerely trust that as a result of these combined efforts the government will see its way clear to giving the city of Quebec the freight rates which the maritime provinces enjoy under present conditions.

Mr. MacLAREN: It may be true, and I think it is, that we are sympathetic with the desires of the people of the city of Quebec, but I cannot say that we are sympathetic to the point of wishing them to get what they ask for in this particular case. The minister will no doubt give due consideration to all the representations submitted to parliament, but he will find that there is a very strong and widespread objection to this application from the city of Quebec. There is one way that is suggested of helping to meet the situation and that is, instead of having the point fixed at Levis, that it be extended back some miles to St. Charles or some station nearer the maritime provinces. In that way there might be eliminated any difficulty arising between Levis and Quebec. In the meantime, while we wish our friends in Quebec every consideration, we do not propose that anything shall be done which will interfere with the Maritime Freight Rates Act as passed by parliament. There may be some way by which to meet the situation so far as Quebec is concerned without disturbing the maritime rates. But what is proposed just now by hon. members from Quebec we consider to be very injurious to the act which gives us the 20 per cent reduction.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I assure my hon. friend that the matter has been submitted to the various maritime boards of trade and as recently as last week ten of them out of twelve had approved of the demand made by Quebec in this respect. It is really as much in the interests of the maritime provinces as of Quebec itself that this request is being made. As the hon. member for Quebec South had said, it seems anomalous that part of Quebec harbour should be subject to the preferential rate while the other part of the harbour is not. May I say—and I am surprised that my hon. friend from Quebec South forgot to say it—that when the delegation came to submit this request the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) recognized that the grievance existed, stating that the officers of the department would try to find a means of remedying it, perhaps without the necessity of having recourse to legislation. But he added that if legislation were necessary it would be considered prior to the next session of parliament. I may tell my hon. friend that we are far from trying to hurt or in any way impair the charter which has been given the maritime provinces; far from it. The demand made by Quebec, if opposed by those interested in maritime matters, such as the boards of trade, would not be entertained, I am quite sure. But it is with the consent and the approval of our friends from the maritime provinces that the subject has been brought to the attention of the government.

Mr. MacLAREN: If the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will carefully and judicially read the resolution prepared by the maritime boards of trade, I do not think he will be able to put upon it the interpretation which he has now given to the house.

Mr. RALSTON: I have heard of the representations which have been made but I have not had an opportunity to listen to them directly nor have I been able to consider them fully. I feel, however, that the hon. member for Quebec South ought to accept the assurance that these representations will be considered. Speaking for myself, I do not feel that I should bind myself, or consider myself bound by these representations until all sides have been heard and everyone who is interested has had a chance to present his case. I am not sure that it is enough that the Quebec representatives have waited upon the maritime boards of trade and discussed the matter with them. Until the views on all sides have been formally put on record and considered, I think judgment should be reserved. In my opinion, the present moment is not opportune to make a declaration; we should wait until everyone has had an opportunity to present the matter. I am not sure that there is a clear view in the maritime provinces as to just what is implied in regard to the question of implementing the Duncan report or carrying out the principle contained therein with regard to special provision for freight rates.

Mr. MacLAREN: Nor is there a general consent of the boards of trade. I think the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) will agree to that.

Mr. CANNON: As one of the representatives of the section of Quebec which might be affected by the matter brought up by the hon. member for Quebec South, I may say that this matter offers first of all some local difficulties as between the people of Quebec and the people of Levis, which must be settled, and other difficulties as between the people of Quebec and the people of the maritime provinces which also must be adjusted. This is a matter which certainly cannot be settled by simply bringing it up in this house and asking the government immediately to bring about a settlement. Only recently the government has been called upon to give its attention to this matter; the Minister of Railways received a delegation; the board of trade of the city of Quebec is now in touch with the boards of trade of the maritime provinces, and I have no doubt that everyone interested will be satisfied when it is stated that the government is giving the matter serious attention. Pending the outcome of the negotiations now going on between the different commercial interests it would be useless for us in this House of Commons to attempt to bring about a settlement. This is a matter which will have to be examined very carefully and I have no doubt that in conjunction with our friends from the maritime provinces, next year we might be in a position to reach a satisfactory adjustment.

Mr. POWER: I am afraid I must take issue with the Solicitor General as to the date at which this matter was brought to the attention of the government. It is all very well for my hon. friend to say that this is an occurrence of only recent date, but after all four months surely is a sufficiently long time even for this government. The Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice will recollect that shortly before the beginning of this session they were interviewed in Quebec by a delegation from the board of trade and by the members for the Quebec district, and when the necessity and urgency of the matter was presented to them they said they would take action as soon as it was convenient to do so.

Mr. CANNON: And they recommended to our Quebec friends that they get in touch with our friends from the maritimes and try to reach a settlement, and that is what is going on now. I do not think we are helping to bring about a settlement by this present discussion.

Mr. POWER: I am not prepared to agree with my friend the Solicitor General; I am one of those who believe with President Wilson in the principles of open covenants, openly arrived at. I would much prefer to discuss this matter fairly and openly on the floor of the house with my hon. friends from the maritimes in order that we may be able to come to some settlement. Had we continued to agitate in the Quebec papers I am afraid those papers would have been read by very few of the hon. gentlemen opposite; some of them would not be able to read those papers, so I thought it best to bring the matter before the members of the house in this way as we brought it to the attention of the members of the government four months ago and again one month ago, at which time we were told that our request was receiving the consideration and sympathy of the government.

Mr. STEVENS: Serious consideration.

Mr. POWER: Yes, serious consideration. Now I suggest that we might be told that some steps are being taken, at any rate, to put an end to this situation, and it is not sufficient to tell us that because the hon. member for Quebec South rises in his place and draws the attention of the house to a matter affecting his constituency and his city he is probably disrupting certain negotiations of which he at any rate knows nothing. If I had been informed that negotiations were going on or that the work was progressing favourably possibly I might have been able to return to my constituents and tell them to be patient a little longer, but they are tired of being patient and they would like to have some assurance from the government that their claims will be dealt with.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if I caught the language of the Minister of Justice correctly; sometimes I do not hear very well, but I thought I heard him mutter the words, "Et tu Brute."

Mr. LAPOINTE: I beg your pardon; was my hon. friend asking me something?

Mr. BENNETT: I was asking the Minister of Justice if I was right in thinking I heard him say, "Et tu Brute."

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, that is a language I do not usually use.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is rather amusing to find some of our friends from Quebec apparently now of the opinion that the Maritime Freight Rates Act was passed for the benefit of the central provinces. My understanding is that the Maritime Freight Rates Act arose out of a recommendation of the Duncan commission, which pointed out that we in the maritimes were handicapped by 250 miles of railway built or diverted for strategic purposes, and to overcome that extra mileage we were to be given a preferred rate.

My contention is that when the western point to which those rates should apply was determined that was not done fairly; that point should have been Montreal, because as I stated before, Montreal is the gateway through which we can or must distribute our products throughout the central and western provinces, since we have practically no trade east of Montreal. I have not the slightest objection to getting into Quebec on the same terms, but our trade with the city of Quebec and that part of the province of Quebec east of Montreal is comparatively slight. At Montreal we practically encounter the inflow from the foreign markets of Great Britain, Belgium, Germany and Europe generally and there we also meet the Ontario producers of iron and steel who ship by water. Unless we can get fair rates to the city of Montreal we will derive very little benefit from the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We are interested not at all in the traffic going east; that is not the important matter. What we are interested in is the opportunity to get into the markets of these central provinces; the eastern traffic affects us very little. I am content that we should pay any reasonable rates as far as the trade going east is concerned, but we must have an opportunity to get into the central markets.

Mr. POWER: I can hardly be under any misapprehension as to the purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act; for two or three years we heard nothing but appeals from the maritime members for relief and justice. I may say, however, that the members from Quebec never opposed this legislation on that ground; on the contrary, all the members from Quebec were only too glad to help relieve the maritime situation in every possible way. We were quite willing to be of assistance to the maritimes; we were glad to help them in any way, but I do not think we should be called upon to ruin ourselves for the sake of helping our neighbours. That is the position.

Item agreed to.

Department of National Defence—militia services—administration, $317,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: What explanation has the minister to offer for the general increase in the militia estimates over last year, particularly in view of the fact that this year the Paris pact was signed?

An hon. MEMBER: This is a Liberal government.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I do not think the question is quite justified by the estimates as they appear on page 26 of the main estimates. My hon. friend will see that there is no increase in the military estimates. There is an increase in connection with the naval vote, and there is another increase in connection with civil air operations. The increase in the naval estimates is brought about by the purchase of two destroyers to replace the Patriot and the Patrician which, it will be remembered, were presented to Canada in 1920 by the British government along with the cruiser Aurora. Although this item appears to be increased this year I would point out that in fact it is not an increase over last year. There was an increase last year of $900,000 to take care of the first payment on account of these two destroyers, but this amount was not used. Had it been used the vote this year would have been the same as it was last year, but in view of the fact that it was not used it was necessary to revote that amount plus the amount of the second instalment which will be due this year.

I have the details of the civil air operations if they are desired by my hon. friend, but I can assure her that they are not military in any sense of the word but are connected with the increased service which the civil government branch of the department is providing, particularly for the Department of the Interior.

Miss MACPHAIL: If they are not military in character why do they come under the Department of National Defence?

Mr. RALSTON: As my hon. friend knows, that is a matter of organization. The air board which was formed some years ago was put under the Department of National Defence, and it has remained there. In view of the representations which were made two years ago it was thought advisable to divorce completely the civil government operations from the so-called military operations—I will explain that when we reach the particular items—and a distinct civil government branch was formed. This branch is in the same position as other administering services which perhaps have nothing to do with the particular name of the department.

Mr. GEARY: Are the civil pilots trained by the military personnel?

Mr. RALSTON: The camp at Borden trains civil pilots, as well as military pilots. It may be some relief to some of the members of the committee, whose views I know very well, to learn that in view of the increase in civil aviation and in the demands made, not only for the government services but to assist in connection with aviation in Canada, that the camp at Borden is being used principally as a training ground for civilian work. Perhaps that may be regarded with something of a shock by some members of the committee who may feel that we are going back on military training, but it was felt that the training which we could give at Camp Borden was necessary and essential for the promotion of civil aviation in this country where aviation is so beneficial.

Mr. GEARY: Are the pilots technically trained at Camp Borden?

Mr. RALSTON: We require that those accepted for training shall have undergone a course of applied science at some university. This technical training is being given by universities throughout the country. We do not take a man in off the street, so to speak, and try to make a pilot out of him; we ask that he have some preliminary training. We have neither the force nor the facilities to conduct an elementary school, and therefore the student must have already the theoretical training before he is admitted. We believe that the success of aviation depends very largely upon the safety with which it can be carried on, and safety, after all, is made up of ground organization as well as the actual flying ability.

Mr. SPENCER: Is there any lack of men applying for training in the civil air service?

Mr. RALSTON: There is no lack of men applying, but I must say that none too many meet our qualifications. In that regard, I would say to the committee that a number of provisional pilot officers were required this year. We circularized the flying clubs and schools but we have not been able to find the required number of partially trained men. I do not intend that as an invitation to members of the committee to recommend various gentlemen. We have been very careful in our selections, believing, as I said a moment ago, that the very foundation of aviation in this country requires that the men be thoroughly trained.

Mr. GEARY: Instruction is being carried on at various places and one hears of many bad accidents where a lad, probably on his first solo flight, has crashed. At times these men have been seriously injured, and at other times the crash has resulted in death. I do not say for a moment that that is brought about through insufficient training or anything of that sort, but I would like to ask the minister what steps are being taken to make certain that there is that degree of instruction received and ability shown before the men are given a flying license.

Mr. RALSTON: Without casting any reflections upon the organizations, I think the accidents to which my hon. friend refers have occurred mainly in flying clubs, especially those occurring this year. The service this year has been singularly free from accidents, although we had one bad accident last year in the west. These flying clubs are purely civilian organizations and the department assumes no responsibility for their maintenance, upkeep or supervision except that which would be taken in connection with a commercial organization such as, for instance, the Western Canada Airways. The department requires that the pilots shall pass our tests, and they are medically examined every six months. The machines are inspected before a license is issued, and are inspected each year before the new license is given out. In addition to that we are constantly in touch with these clubs. In connection with the accident which occurred the other day, while the department was under no obligation we immediately conducted an inquiry in an endeavour to find out the cause of the accident in order that we might take steps to prevent a recurrence of such an accident. Where lack of judgment has been shown or anything else brought to light which would indicate that something was wrong with the machine, we immediately advise these clubs to that effect. These flying clubs are generally managed by groups of enthusiastic men who are keen on aviation, and we are always afraid that familiarity will breed contempt. We are endeavouring to get them to see that what I said a minute ago is absolutely essential, namely, ground organization. That means inspection every morning of the machines and every part which may be frail or give way; that they must observe regulations which we lay down in regard to these flying clubs; that the instructors must be passed as medically fit, because in no branch of activity in Canada is it so necessary that men shall be medically fit and that certain disabilities shall be absent as it is in connection with flying.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the department give any supervision to these flying clubs and the instructors to see that the proper training is given?

Mr. RALSTON: The general answer is no; that is to say, except to examine the instructors whom the flying clubs use and see that they are licensed pilots and pass our regulations. We examine the machines and see that they comply with the necessities for a license. Then we examine the so-called pupils to see whether they are fit to receive either a private or a commercial license as the case may be.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the usual length of time for an applicant to receive his certificate under the department's training?

Mr. RALSTON: Fifty flying hours for a commercial pilot and ten flying hours for a private license. A private license means that one cannot carry passengers.

Mr. LUCAS: But how long does he usually have to spend at the training course in order to secure that certificate—six months or a year?

Mr. RALSTON: Anything from a month up. It depends upon the man. As regards our own pilots, these young pilot officers whom we are training, they spend three vacations, sometimes four. That is to say, in order to get their full training for both ground instruction and flying, they have to spend a year or so. For the pupils in the flying clubs a month would be the very minimum, but the course usually takes a great deal longer than that. A man will be in the air for perhaps a few minutes only the first day, and I think from a month to six months would be the minimum.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to know whether non-commissioned officers and men disabled in the air service receive a pension, whether in case of their being killed, their dependents receive a pension, and if so, how much.

Mr. RALSTON: I think I furnished my hon. friend with information along that line last year. I do not have it in my mind at the minute, because it involves amounts and regulations, but I shall be glad to give the information before the committee rises. Is my hon. friend dealing with the members of the department? Of course, my hon. friend knows that no pensions are paid in respect of those who are pupils in flying clubs.

Mr. IRVINE: I have tried to get the information from the regulations and have absolutely failed. Perhaps the minister could tell me in a general way whether the non-commissioned officers and men in his department who are engaged in flying, receive a pension in case of disability or death.

Mr. RALSTON: In a general way I may say yes, they do.

Mr. IRVINE: I think there are some peculiarities about this.

Mr. RALSTON: If there are any jokers and if my hon. friend will point them out, I shall be glad to see that they are remedied.

Mr. IRVINE: I cannot find any jokers because they are so wrapped up in the regulations.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend knows of any case where there has been some reservation or condition and if he will bring it to my attention, I will take it up at once. If men are hurt while they are engaged in the service, it is the intention that they shall be pensioned.

Mr. BRADY: I was not in the chamber when this item was brought up and perhaps the minister has already replied to the question I am going to propound. In view of the great number of young Canadians who are very anxious to enter the Royal Air Force, I should like to know what are the essential educational qualifications.

Mr. RALSTON: Speaking of the position of a pilot officer, let me say that generally the educational qualifications required are graduation from a university or from the Royal Military College, or that a man is actually attending a class in applied science at a recognized university and undertakes to finish his course in that respect. Hon. members will understand that applied science, physics, dynamics and aeronautics, is essential in connection with the care and handling of the machine. If such an undertaking is given, the applicant will be considered for training, as I indicated a little while ago, during his vacation for the three or four years that he is attending a university. Therefore the issuing of his pilot's license will probably be coincident with his graduation from the university.

In connection with airmen, that is, those who are not pilot officers, we do not insist on educational qualifications. We have no definite standard. We would like them to have matriculation qualifications, but what we insist on is either that they shall be students at a technical college for two or three years or that they shall have worked for, say a year or two in connection with gas engines and machinery of that sort. Many of our airmen are mechanics, men who have been connected with garages, who have had to do with automobile engines for a substantial period of time. We do not take a man off the street, for instance, out of a grocery store, and make him an airman, because we have not the facilities nor the personnel for giving him elementary training.

Mr. BRADY: As this is a very important question and as I said, so many young Canadians are ambitious to enter the Royal Air Force of Canada, it is evident from what the minister has said that nothing is definitely stated regarding the qualifications, say of cadets. As regards age, boys of eighteen years are ambitious to enter the Royal Air Force. What is the minimum age at which a young Canadian is allowed to enter that force? If there is any rule I should like to know it, because I know many young men to-day who have matriculated from the various high schools into the different universities and who are now engaged, just as my hon. friend has said, in grocery stores and other lines of business, but who are not engaged in what we call technical industries. I would like to have that point cleared up because I have on my file over sixteen letters of inquiry regarding it, and when the minister gives me the information I shall be able to inform my correspondents.

Mr. RALSTON: He must be over the age of eighteen years and under the age of twenty-one when he commences his course. The case to which my hon. friend refers I understand is that of a university graduate in applied science who has gone into some other vocation. If he is physically fit, is within the age limit and complies with all the other requirements, he would be eligible for consideration.

Mr. BRADY: Thank you.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have a complaint to make in regard to the civil air operations. Perhaps it does not come under this vote, but if the minister will give me the information I can report back later. A young man named Keeley in my constituency entered for a course of civil air training. At that time the department recognized these commercial companies which had been formed for the training of aviators for commercial flying. The young man entered the service of a company which was recommended by the department. That company very soon afterwards became bankrupt, and the young man then entered two or three other companies, but for one reason or another his training was deferred. Finally he came to the stage when he was to make his solo test flights. Everything had been satisfactory up to that time. He had been examined by medical officers and had been seen by the officer in charge, but when he came to take his solo trial flights it was found that he had one defect, that he was wearing glasses. I am not going to justify the acceptance for the service of any man with a defect, but it does appear to me that some person up to that time should have noticed that he was wearing glasses. He had taken this course with the intention of receiving a certificate for commercial flying and his people had spent $2,000 on his training, but after the expenditure of that amount and the failure of two or three of these guaranteed commercial companies, it was ruled that he could not take his solo test flights because he was wearing glasses. I am behind the department's examination. I have seen it, and I think the requirements are pretty nearly perfect, but I do think that in this case someone made a mistake, and that this young man should not have been allowed to go on with his training to the point where it has now become burdensome to his people, if he is not to be granted a certificate. He entered the service of one company after another and had passed every test up to the time of his solo flights. He had made a landing or two perfectly. The minister kindly took the matter up and said that he would give him a certificate, but it would not be a commercial certificate. Of course that is what the young man was training for, and that is what his people spent the $2,000 for. But through a defect which some person should have noticed this young man is not allowed to take his final tests, although he could really qualify, and he cannot in consequence get his certificate.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is quite right in saying that he brought the matter to my personal attention some time ago and I was trying to get into my head as he was speaking the exact facts. As I remember it, this student was examined by outside medical men, I think, on two different occasions.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the minister will remember, these two men who examined him were the department's own accepted examiners.

Mr. RALSTON: Right, but I mean they were not men in the service. My hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong, but I understand that this young man's father was an oculist himself.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: And the application which the young man signed set out the physical requirements for a pilot, but in some way or other he missed that. The file came into the head office and he went on with his training. He was not actually turned down. He was allowed to see if he could qualify. The point in that case was this: I said that if he could qualify, pass our tests and make successful landings without his glasses, he would receive his certificate. It seemed to me that that was a case in which the young man took that risk when he went into training. If he could make successful landings without glasses, he would be granted a certificate. If he could not, then in the interests of the safety of his passengers and for his own safety he should not have a certificate. That was the ground I took. I think the young man took his risk in that respect. He was not turned down because of the fact that he wore glasses, but because he did not pass a test which he must pass without glasses. We have to provide for the case where a man in an accident may lose his glasses and be compelled to land either alone or with passengers without glasses.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I can only speak from the information I got from the young man and his father. I do not think that at that time it was absolutely necessary that a man should not wear glasses, because certain ones did wear glasses. I do not think he was refused the certificate because he did not make a landing without glasses, because I think he could do so. I do not know that he has ever been given the opportunity.

Mr. RALSTON: I think so.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think not, because just recently I received a letter from him. I am not going to defend the passing of any person with a defect, but I say that this man entered when the restrictions were not so rigid as they became later, and I do not think he knew at the time he entered that wearing glasses would prevent him from getting a certificate. I am absolutely certain of that.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend is mistaken as to the regulations. They have always been the same; the restrictions were not made any more rigid after the young man came in. As a matter of fact, as I understand the general regulations, those wearing glasses are not taken, but this was a case where a young man had been allowed to train with glasses, and while we take this extraordinary precaution of saying that a man who wears glasses had better not be allowed to become a pilot at all, we did say in this case that if this young man could make successful landings passed by the officers of the department we saw no reason why a special exception should not be made in his case. My hon. friend may be right in saying that he has never tried to land without glasses, but I am quite positive that I wrote to my hon. friend and told him that the young man would be given the opportunity to pass the test without glasses if he cared to do so. It is a case perhaps of being over-strict in connection with a matter where we would rather be over-strict than otherwise.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Surely the minister must admit that the requirements with regard to eyesight are much more strict than they were three years ago. I can prove that. Three or four years ago you had not a man who could make the eye tests that they are making to-day. Am I right or wrong in that?

Mr. RALSTON: I could not tell my hon. friend that. All I can say is that the regulations have not changed.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Two or three years ago, when this young man began his training, there were none qualified to make such an examination. Since then you have had men taking a course in the old country, and they can now make the tests. They are extending their experience and teaching others, but at the beginning, three years ago, you did not have a man who could do it. I do not think you had at that time two men in Canada who could make the examination they are making to-day, and I will stand by that.

Mr. RALSTON: I speak with the greatest deference in the presence of my hon. friend who, of course, understands thoroughly the service requirements of any man, particularly with regard to medical qualifications; but I am instructed that my hon. friend is wrong, that we have medical men who had, as my hon. friend had, to do with war service, and who were qualified and so regarded, and that the inspections were made by men who were acknowledged then, and are still, as qualified. My hon. friend is quite right that in this as in any other science we are seeking further information and are endeavouring to perfect it but I would not want to admit either on behalf of the department or of those officers, that they were not qualified to make the examinations.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I should like to know the names of the men who could make those examinations three years ago as they are making them now.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know whether it is fair to discuss the names of individual men across the floor. May I send over a name to my hon. friend?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is the minister sure that there is no condition, expressed or understood, that in the granting of a commercial license the pilot shall be in any way whatsoever connected with the reserve military forces?

Mr. RALSTON: It is unconditional in that respect.

Mr. GEARY: If a man learns to fly can he take a machine into the air without a license?

Mr. RALSTON: The only man who can go into the air without a license is a pupil who is recognized as such. The requirements are that he shall not go three miles beyond a licensed airdrome. The individual who takes his examination somewhere else must come to us for a license.

Mr. GEARY: The license is granted under dominion auspices?

Mr. RALSTON: That is correct.

Mr. GEARY: Does any province grant flying licenses?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. GEARY: In the case of automobiles each of the provinces naturally issues its own license. Is there any difference in regard to flying; is it regarded as a dominion or as a provincial matter?

Mr. RALSTON: It has been considered by the federal authorities to be a dominion matter. Perhaps my hon. friend knows that a reference has been prepared and probably will be submitted to the courts with regard to the relative jurisdiction of the federal and provincial authorities in that respect.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no reason why a province could not license a flyer who did not go outside the provincial boundaries.

Mr. RALSTON: We are contending further than that, I may tell my hon. friend the leader of the opposition.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of the Department of National Defence are to me more significant this year than in any former years in view of the fact that this session the house has listened to a very excellent debate upon the Kellogg pact or the pact of Paris. The need of renouncing war as an instrument of national policy was felt by all hon. members, since that pact passed the house unanimously, and Canada is now a party to it. While the explanation of the minister as to why the estimates have increased sounds plausible enough, it is rather difficult for any minister of national defence, even the clever gentleman who now occupies the position, to explain why the estimates have been increased from $11,000,000 in 1922 to a bit better than $20,000,000 in 1929,— and all the time we have talked about how much we love peace. It does not sound consistent. I should like to see Canada take the stand that we actually mean that we will not consider war as an instrument of national policy, that we will not continue to waste this amount of money on military affairs.

I should like to see the cadet vote struck out altogether. I think that the expenditure on the non-permanent active militia is an absolute waste of money; it is no good either from a military or a non-military point of view. I can see no reason why the Royal Military College should be given a grant when we have declared ourselves to be a peaceful people, searching for new and peaceful methods of settling disputes. I can see no reason why—and I should like the minister to give the reason, if there is any—civil aviation should be under the Department of National Defence. Why it is not under the department of transportation where quite naturally it belongs? Let us reorganize and keep civil aviation away from the military authorities, so that there cannot be the slightest suspicion of any relationship between civil aviation and the military authorities.

Not only the people of Canada but the people of the world, particularly the common people—and I am one of them—have eagerly been waiting for relief from the cost of armaments. Disarmament was promised at Versailles in 1919, just ten years ago, and yet nothing substantial has been done to bring it about. On the contrary most of the nations have done just what we have done, increased rather than decreased their expenditures for things military. While this has been going on the really great men of the world, the outstanding statement and thinkers and writers, have been saying again and again that if we keep on the way we are going nothing but another international conflict can be the result.

Sitting in the chamber this afternoon I have been reading a book by Lord Robert Cecil in which he points this out in the most pessimistic vein. It is well known that he is devoting his life in trying to prevent the happening of that which he thinks is ahead of us unless we change our methods. He is one of very many outstanding men who have said again and again that unless we disarm —and of course as well try to eradicate the economic causes of war—that unless we go to the root causes of war we will continue to have war. We cannot possibly wait until we have security before we disarm. It is my opinion that armaments do not bring security, but quite the reverse. Therefore we must start to disarm sometime, and to me now is just as good a time as any other, and just a little bit better. Possibly it would have been better if we had done so before, but from new on there is no time so good as the present for bringing about disarmament.

I know the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is very much interested in this subject, and he very well voiced the change of opinion of the people in the following words:

> The world has moved forward. A new psychology of peace is gradually replacing the war psycology of the past.

That is very true indeed. The Prime Minister used equally clear words on this subject, saying:

> War will annihilate civilization unless civilization undertakes to annihilate war.

Indeed, though we are not willing to do much more than talk about it, still the mere talking about it has made peace so popular a subject that even the Minister of National Defence has referred to himself, more or less jokingly, as the Minister of Peace. I recall that to his mind at the moment.

Mr. RALSTON: Not as a joke.

Miss MACPHAIL: Then that makes it even more essential that he should make his department look as though it were a department of peace. The Prime Minister will remember that last year, in reply to my suggestion that we have a peace bureau, he said that every department of his government was a department of peace. One would think that with so many departments all working towards peace we should have absolute security without spending $20,000,000 to insure it by war-like means. The Prime Minister of Canada also said in relation to the pact of Paris—and I believe this has been quoted in papers throughout Canada:

> We should make the principle underlying this treaty a basis of consideration in all matters of foreign policy.

I think we should go further than that and make it a basis of consideration in all matters of domestic policy, to which the work of this department belongs. Everyone says that we want peace, and excellent speeches have been made in this house upholding that idea. I am thankful for that much advance. But that in itself is not enough. Mr. Briand, speaking of the pact of Paris, said of it:

> Such a treaty means a beginning and not an end.

That is something which members of this committee should remember: the treaty is a beginning and not an end. Having declared that we believe in peace and that we are renouncing war as an instrument in the settlement of international disputes, we need to go further and act as though we really meant the words we used. I think the leader of the opposition made possibly the clearest contribution to the idea of the need of further action. Speaking in the debate on the pact of Paris, he said:

> The first step to be taken if this treaty is to be maintained and enforced by the Canadian people is to bring about disarmament.

He is absolutely right. And we cannot bring about disarmament in another country; we can bring it about only in our own country, and I know of no country which is in such an excellent position as Canada to begin and to set an example which I am sure would be gladly followed by all other countries in the world.

The amount of armament we have is after all useless if we really intend to go out and use it in aggression or even in defence. Our geographical situation leaves us in an excellent position. We have no one who could be regarded as an enemy except the United States of America, and we are in no position, seeing that we have a very much smaller population, to arm ourselves sufficiently well to contend with that great republic.

Some nation will have to take the lead in disarmament and I covet for Canada the honour of leading. Recently I read that a group of ministers—not government ministers but ministers of the gospel—in the little state of Denmark were asking their people to create a public opinion strong enough to persuade the government of Denmark to lead the world in this great work of disarmament. They see clearly that to the nation that leads in this respect great honour will in future be due. I see no reason why Canada should not take the lead. Moreover, Canada and the United States have experimented in disarmament and have found the results to be entirely good. We have a very long history associated with disarmament, a history going back over one hundred years. A Quaker in the United States named Henry Rush decided after the war of 1812-13-14 that it would be better for both his country and Canada if they disarmed. He talked about the matter sufficiently, and was influential enough to get the idea accepted by the administration of his time. The Rush-Bagot treaty was the result. What that treaty has saved us in the actual expenditure of dollars and cents, and possibly in life, no one can estimate. No country has felt more secure than Canada has as the neighbour of a powerful and very rich country, the United States. Neither country is in the least afraid of the other because both are friends. Our long border line of some three thousand miles is the most secure in the world because on either side there are friends who wish only good to the country that lies beyond. Our two countries went further; we have carried out what must be the work which will follow the pact of Paris. The pact of Paris is simply the enunciation of a principle, and in working out a peaceful method of settling disputes means must be found either of giving to the League of Nations more power, and supporting it with a stronger public opinion or setting up new courts of settlement. In the case of Canada and the United States, this house is familiar with the machinery which was set up and is known as the International Joint Commission, which followed on the Waterways Commission. The Waterways Commission was instituted in 1902; the International Joint Commission followed and was founded in 1909. This body has been able to settle all disputes which, without its intervention, would have been irritating and troublesome. With the experience we have had, and with the confidence we have gained in the principle of disarmament and of arbitration, there is no reason why we should not give a lead to the world—a lead which the world stands in great need of. If little countries in Europe—and we can think of ourselves as little for the moment, seeing that we have a small population—felt in relation to their neighbours, as as secure as we do, Europe would not be in the turmoil in which it finds itself at the moment.

Within recent weeks some encouraging things have happened. I consider that the advent to power of Ramsay MacDonald—it looks as though he will be Prime Minister of Great Britain—is a great step towards world peace. I am convinced that Ramsay MacDonald will put the peace of the world first and will shape his policies, national and international to that end. Coming almost on the same day is the report of a speech made by President Hoover on the occasion of the decoration of civil war veterans' graves on memorial day. President Hoover made a splendid speech. I am sure hon. members have read it and so I will not weary the house by quoting from it, except a very brief passage. Referring to the pact of Paris, he said:

> The pact. . . . implies that nations will conduct their daily intercourse in keeping with the purpose of the agreement, and that they shall endeavour to develop instrumentalities of peaceful adjustment to remove disputes from the field of emotion to the field of judicial consideration.

[Miss Macphail.]

We have done this in other things. While we have not attempted it internationally, we have applied the principle to the relations of individuals within the nation. We will no longer put up with two individuals or two groups of individuals flying at each other's throats when they want to settled their disputes; they must carry every argument to the courts and have it decided there. There is no reason why we should not do this this in international matters; logically it is the next step to take, and again I seriously urge that Canada could do a great service to the world by saying, "We are not a military people; we do believe in peace, and we have no enemies." It is nonsense to spend $20,000,000 in order to keep up what is really only a parade stunt, which is of no use and which has a bad effect on our mentality. Let us get rid of it. Put aviation under transportation, where it belongs, and if you really feel more secure and sleep better at night by retaining the permanent force, personally I have no objection to doing so. Then something would be required for administration, for general supplies and so on, but I would like to see the rest of this expenditure absolutely done away with. I think the common people of Canada are heartily sick of military things, and in keeping up this department in this way the government is out of accord with the sentiment of the people.

I hope the Minister of National Defence and, indeed, all members of the government, will take this question into their very serious consideration. A great power such as Great Britain or the United States cannot disarm as easily as we can; we are a young and virile people without very many fears or race prejudices. We have not very much to be afraid of; we are in the position of an interpreter between the two great powers, Great Britain and United States. We love them both; we have much in common with each and I can think of no better way of cementing that friendship which has been slightly strained during the past year than by disarming at least in part; and personally I would be quite willing to go all the way. I think we are working towards the time when we will have an international police force for the protection of the world rather than separate forces in each country. I would be quite willing that we should contribute to such a force. For the present I think a move toward disarmament would be our best contribution to the peace of the world.

Mr. CAYLEY: May I ask the hon. member a question? She suggested striking out the item for the Royal Military College. Would she also suggest that the same action should be taken if a similar sum were given to a royal peace college or something like that?

Miss MACPHAIL: There are two schools of thought in Canada; one, security through peace, and the other, security through armaments. If the government would set up an international college of peace and give an equal amount to such a college I would be content to have them run a race and see what would happen, but now the government is backing one school and doing nothing for the other. The students at the Royal Military College usually come from wealthy families; if these families cannot afford to educate their sons elsewhere that is their own lookout.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not my intention to go into the details of this expenditure of $20,000,000, or almost $21,000,000 with the supplementary estimates, which we are proposing to spend this year on national defence, but at the very beginning of this discussion I should like to back up, if that is at all necessary, the remarks of the hon. member for Southeast Grey.

I do not think we need to say very much about the evils of war; almost everyone is willing now to admit these. Only a few reckless adventurers or a few ruthless profiteers, of whom I do not think we have very many in Canada, would deliberately attempt to foster another war or would rejoice in any friction which might occasion war. However, we must face the fact that another war is quite possible so long as conditions remain as they are. While perhaps we are making no particular effort to prepare for the chemical warfare which undoubtedly will be of the most disastrous character, at the same time no one can read what scientists are saying without realizing that in another war we shall undoubtedly run the risk of wiping out civilization itself. As it is, the piled-up debts of the past war constitute all the memorials we need, and I think it should be emphasized that about half the revenues which are obtained in this country go to pay the interest on the money we spent in the last war. We do not need anything to remind us of the ravages of war; if anything were needed, that reminder would be furnished by the poor wrecks of men with whom we have to deal and with whose cases we have dealt in a very inadequate way.

The point which does arise is this: Is the maintenance of a military force an insurance against war? I am inclined to think that the Minister of National Defence and the members of the government generally take that position, but as I look at the Prime Minister, at the Minister of Justice or at the other members of the government whose private opinions I know, I can hardly believe that with their knowledge of world affairs and of world history they should continue to maintain that position. The reason, I suppose, is simply that changes in policy are so hard to make, and since there is a general tradition which has been built up through hundreds of years that the only way we can protect ourselves is by force of arms. It is hard to substitute a new idea. Surely, however, the last war demonstrated the futility of armaments; even our newspapers are beginning to recognize that fact. I read an editorial in the Ottawa Journal, of April 20, 1929, as follows:

> The truth—all that has happened since 1918 bears testimony to it—is that war is a game in which both sides always lose. That being so, the lessons of the last great war having been brought home with such terrible poignancy, it is up to all of us to try to do something to prevent the recurrence of such another catastrophe.

I might also refer to Earl Grey, in whose book, Twenty-five Years, I find the following:

> The military power in Germany chose the time and precipitated the war; but that is not the real and final account of its origins. The enormous growth of armaments, the sense of insecurity and fear caused by them, it was these that made war inevitable.

If I may comment on that statement I would point out that in Europe to-day that sense of insecurity undoubtedly persists, especially in France and some allied countries, and it is responsible for the forces of these countries being maintained on a war footing—a condition which tends to produce more wars. We in this country have an opportunity to get away from some of those old world evils if we only have sufficient courage, imagination and originality to branch out along new lines.

Undoubtedly we are in a different position this year to that which we occupied last year; it will be remembered that a year ago the Prime Minister emphasized the importance of peace and insisted that his was a peace government. The Minister of National Defence urged that he was at the head of a peace department, and to-day he says he was not joking. I do not think he intended that statement as a joke, but I would say that as long as the instruments of war are maintained we are tending to maintain the possibilities of war. That is my opinion at least; others may take a different point of view. The Kellogg peace pact surely places those who signed it in an altogether different position from that which they occupied a year ago. In the words of an American appeal which went forth a little while ago:

> To increase armaments now is inconsistent with the spirit of the peace pact, an insinuation that we do not trust the nations that have sworn never to attack us.

Surely it is nonsense to prepare for war if we really believe that the nations are going to be true to their pact. Why should we maintain an army when we say that we will not go to war except in self-defence, and when the others affirm the same thing? Surely, if we trust the other nations as we hope they trust us, we ought not to have any army at all. The very maintenance of the Department of National Defence is an insinuation that other people are not going to be as true to their word as we are. The minister shakes his head, but I would like him to take an early opportunity of explaining his position in this regard. I think he will give me credit for having stated my position as I see it, and I think I am stating, as did the hon. member for Southeast Grey, the convictions of a very large number of people throughout Canada. I do not think the situation could have been stated better than it was by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). The hon. member for Southeast Grey has referred already to his speech, but I should like to quote a few sentences. Referring to the peace pact, he said:

> The very essence of this instrument—is that those who sign it. . . . begin at once to destroy by peaceful means those instruments by which peace is rendered impossible. . . . We must, therefore, destroy the instruments that make for war so that when such appeals are made to the emotions there will be no response—no cannon, no navy, no troops. That is the only way by which peace can be made lasting in this world.

I do not know that I would go quite so far as has the hon. leader of the opposition. I am inclined to stress the economic causes of war. I think they are the fundamental causes, and so long as there are economic maladjustments in the world, so long as there is fierce competition between individuals, between groups, between nations and between empires, then so long shall we have war. But undoubtedly another cause which lies side by side with the economic cause is the fact that we are prepared for war, and when there is economic friction the tendency is for us to plunge into war before the people have had time to bring themselves under control.

Mr. BENNETT: There would be no war if there was nothing to go to war with.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Miss MACPHAIL: I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As the hon. leader of the opposition has said, if there were no instruments of war we could not very well conduct a war. On the other hand, as long as we have even ordinary machinery, as long as we have the ordinary chemical establishments, I suppose if it came to a pinch we could transform our ordinary factories into munition plants and convert our ordinary chemical establishments into plants which would be capable of manufacturing chemicals for war purposes. I wish however that we could implement the statements of the hon. leader of the opposition, for I do not believe that we in Canada would be liable to go to war if we had not the instruments by which war is waged.

We have been placed in a position which is different from that in which we were in last year, through our having signed a peace pact with most of the nations of the world. Further, as the hon. member for Southeast Grey has said, another factor must be considered—the probable coming into office in Great Britain of the Labour government. It may be that the Labour government will not have the power which a great many of us would like them to have; it may be that the Liberals will occupy a strategic position, but it is not so long ago that Mr. Lloyd George made the most searching criticism of the present policy, pointing out the futility of war and urging disarmament. There is a larger number of people in Great Britain than many imagine who have signed statements that under no circumstances whatever will they participate in another war, and a very large and influential section of the Labour party in Great Britain has definitely instructed their representatives to refuse to vote war credits.

The position in Great Britain, considered in connection with the general adherence to the Kellogg peace pact, would seem to indicate that it is high time we reconsidered our position and drafted another policy rather than continue this traditional idea of keeping up a department of national defence. Our attitude is something like that taken by the other nations: We want disarmament, but let the other nations do it first. Some of us are inclined to say that Great Britain is too large an empire to risk disarmament; she has too many causes at stake; the empire is too far-flung and there are too many races of an inferior order to permit of this step being taken. On the other hand, we urge that Canada is too small a nation so far as population is concerned to risk disarmament.

Surely Canada is in a peculiarly favourable position; I do not think this can be stressed too strongly. We are side by side with this great nation to the south, a nation which speaks the same language and which has very largely the same British traditions. Her interests are similar to ours at least to a very large extent. Millions of native-born Canadians or their descendants now reside in that country. If the Americans wanted to invade us I fancy that they have a better way of accomplishing that purpose, that is by means of the economic penetration which is going on. If the United States ever conquers Canada it will be in that way rather than by the use of physical force. We need then have no fear of an invading army from the south. Why do we need to maintain ours?

I have asked the minister of this department again and again, year after year, to give the information which is required of any other department—the reason for the expenditure. If large expenditures are to be made in the Department of Railways the minister is required to say that a railway is needed from a certain point to another point. If we are considering expenditures for the Department of Agriculture the minister rises and tells us what situation precisely makes that expenditure necessary. Let the Minister of National Defence tell us whom we are going to fight; against whom we are preparing. Surely, when an expenditure of over $20,000,000 is to be made, we have the right to know who the probable enemy is, especially when we have signed treaties with almost every nation in which we all state that we are not going to go to war. We are signing treaties and at the same time increasing our expenditures for war purposes, is that consistent?

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that we need a police force. In that case, is our present standing army necessary? I do not believe that we will ever need all the soldiers we maintain at the present time in order to quell any little riot which may arise. What about the numerous officers that we have today? I believe one of the great disadvantages in maintaining our standing army is the fact that we have a great many officers running around this country, and because they have no strictly military duty to perform they spend their time at banquets making speeches and attempting to encourage the military spirit. I recall not very long ago the leader of the opposition saying some strong things because the chairman of the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation made a speech in which, perhaps, he encroached a little on the realm of the politician or, at least, may have been in danger of so doing. I should like to know why it is we permit military officers to go up and down this country advocating certain military programs. Surely they are, or should be, as much under discipline as any civil official; they have no right to discuss policy and to tell us whether we should have a larger equipment or not. I noticed only last week in the Montreal Standard of June 2, 1929, an article by Captain H. C. Howard of the Royal School of Infantry, whoever he may be and whatever that may be. The heading of the article is "Could Canada successfully repel an invader?" He disguises the point of his argument somewhat by suggesting that the United States is a very peaceful neighbour and would never invade us; but he asks: supposing she were different; supposing she wanted to invade us, could we repel her attack? I submit that articles of that kind are most mischievous in character. Why should we now be speculating whether or not we could repel an attack? If it is necessary to do that within the confines of some officers' messroom, why is it necessary to write public articles to the illustrated journals and suggest to the general public that one of these days we may be having trouble with the United States; that we would be in a very fair position to repel them, and that they could not accomplish their purpose?

Mr. RALSTON: Was the name Howard?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Captain H. C. Howard, Royal School of Infantry.

Mr. RALSTON: He is not a Canadian officer. We have no Royal School of Infantry.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am very glad of that. That is how the article is signed and it is evidently written from a Canadian standpoint. Obviously the only point of the article would be the case of a possible invasion from the United States.

Mr. GEARY: Was it not the hon. gentleman who, a short time ago, gave the house in detail particulars of how easily the United States could invade Canada?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and my reason for doing so was this: I am not a military man and further my contention was that in such a contingency all our armaments would be perfectly useless and that the only thing for us to do was to act decently so that we might have no such trouble. The military article to which I refer suggests that we have it quite within our power to repel such an invasion, and the inference is that if the people of the United States should undertake to invade Canada, we should stiffen our backs and would be able to stand them off.

Mr. GEARY: Is it not the other way round?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so. But the other way around makes it quite a different proposal. I have been told by those closely in touch with military affairs that our militia with the very short training which they have, is of very little value in case of emergency. I am not prepared to corroborate or to question that statement, but I remember a long debate we had on that subject five or six years ago and I know many people are of the opinion that the greatest purpose that is served by our maintaining a militia is that of keeping alive the military spirit in the minds of the young people who go out to the camps.

As regards the navy, I ask again: Is this expenditure justified? We are told that these new ships that are being built are going to be patrol boats. I am not at all sure whether they are fitted for that purpose. We have not had any clear evidence of that. In the past our ships have been used, more or less as training ships and to no small extent for social functions. I sometimes feel thankful that we have not a waterfront all around Canada or else we would become very quickly militarized by the social functions connected with the visits of these naval crews to the different ports.

With regard to the air force, again I should like to ask a question and I hope the minister will attempt to answer it: Why should our civil aviation department be kept under the Department of National Defence? This is an article which I read in the Ottawa Citizen of March 16 of this year:

> The numerical strength of Canada's fighting aircraft will be raised to nine pursuit planes and six army cooperation machines through delivery of five Siskin and two Atlas all-metal aircraft. . . . The institution of a peace time air force using highly specialized military machines took place last year when four Siskins and four Atlases were purchased by the Department of National Defence. . . . The machines are used in training permanent force officers on war type craft, teaching them aerobatics, bombing, gunnery and the other maneouvres which got to make first-class fighting pilots who can be called upon to act as instructors at a moment's notice should an emergency arise.

My colleague from Calgary asked the minister whether the civil pilots were entirely free from possible military control. The answer of the minister may be technically correct, but I venture to say that if any war broke out, it would not take very long to transform at least a portion of our civil air force into a military force.

Mr. RALSTON: I know my hon. friend wants to deal with this matter fairly. Does he think it would take any longer if the civil air force of Canada were under the department of transportation, the Department of the Interior or the Post Office department? That is the whole point made at the disarmament conference, that if a country has a civil air force, it does not make any difference what department it is under, it is in a better position should war break out than a nation that is not equipped with that craft.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That only confirms my position.

Mr. RALSTON: It does not confirm the position with regard to its being under one department rather than under another.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think it does. My idea is that there is always present in the minds of those who are directing this force the view that one of these days the force may have to be transformed. My point just now was that the very character and build of the aircraft were such that they could be readily converted. The whole idea of possible war is kept to the forefront.

Mr. RALSTON: That is not so. The build of the civilian aircraft is exactly what is required for civilian work. There is no special adaptability, nor are any fittings of any kind put on that aircraft other than what are usually used for that purpose.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is quite contrary, then, to the statement which went out at the time of the purchase of these new air craft. This is the statement as I read it just now:

> The institution of a peace-time air force using highly specialized military machines took place last year when four Siskins and four Atlases were purchased by the Department of National Defence.

Surely that is an indication that this is the very definite policy of the department.

Mr. RALSTON: It is not an indication that civilian aircraft are being used for war purposes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: These are not civilian?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not saying that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But I said: further than that, the very fact that they are under the control of the department tends to keep them all in such a condition that they can be readily converted.

Mr. RALSTON: That was the point with which I was dealing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let me quote this from The Times' correspondent in Brussels:

The committee of experts in civil aviation appointed by the league preparatory commission for the disarmament conference adopted the following resolutions:

It is desirable that the development of civil aviation should be directed solely towards economic ends and should be independent of military interests. Civil aviation should be organized on autonomous lines and every effort should be made to keep it separate from military aviation. If states interevene in any capacity whether directly or indirectly, in civil aviation undertakings, private or state-owned, it is desirable that the state departments dealing with the matter should be independent of the departments dealing with military aviation.

I would call that clause to the attention of the minister. Here we have the preparatory commission on disarmament definitely stating that the policy should be different from the policy that is now being pursued by this government. Let me read that again:

It is desirable that the state departments dealing with the matter should be independent of the departments dealing with military aviation.

The memorandum goes on:

It is desirable that governments should refrain from prescribing the use of military features in civil aircraft material, so that this material may be constructed for providing the greatest possible measure of security and most economic return. In this connection and with a view to differentiating still further between material of civil and that of military aviation, it is considered particularly desirable that as far as possible the use of military aviation material in civil aviation undertakings and in the operations of air transport lines should be avoided.

I suggest that that is a very different policy from that which is being pursued by this government. The Ottawa Citizen, commenting on the present situation, in its issue of February 19, 1927, says:

There is no particularly sound reason for employing the military air forces to observe the movement of mackerel off the Nova Scotia coast, or for attacking an insect pest in western Canada. It is more or less by accident that such work has been allowed to pass under military control.

Quoting from another editorial in the same paper under date of March 30, 1927:

It is important, however, to have the Canadian air policy straightened out, to put the development of civil aviation first, under civil control; otherwise progress is liable to be retarded. Nobody would think of advocating that automobiles should be controlled in Canada primarily for military purposes, although some cars may quite legitimately be designed and employed for training soldiers. When agreements have to be made between provinces concerning reciprocity in automobile licenses, or between Canada and the United States concerning tourist travel across the international boundary line, no one would approve of calling in the military staff organization to conduct negotiations. So long as Canadian aviation is left under military control, however, that is exactly what has to be done.

I pass to one other matter, and that is to the cadet services. A number of us have been urging that cadet training is not necessary here in Canada especially under the conditions that now prevail, and further that cadet training is not in the best interests of education itself. We are witnessing at the present time a curious situation under which officials of this government, military officials, are scattering themselves throughout the country and trying to force their military ideas, their unwelcome ideas, upon an unwilling people. For example, one paper in my own city had this to say recently with regard to an outlying suburb, St. James:

St. James school board is to be heartily congratulated on having rejected the blandishments of Colonel Gillespie, representative of the Strathcona Trust when he came to them last week bearing gifts.

Colonel Gillespie wanted the St. James board to introduce cadet training in its schools. The trust, he said, would pay the board $2 per annum per pupil.

Suspecting that the pill would not prove any too palatable, the Winnipeg school board having refused the advances of the Strathcona trust, the colonel proceeded to coat it. The board could, he said, also have folk dances for the girls. But when asked whether the board could have the folk dances without the cadet training he said he did not think so.

Is not this a most peculiar situation, an undignified position for the department to send its officials out trying to coax the various school boards to take up cadet training, and if possible to sugarcoat the pill by suggesting that certain little privileges would be granted to the girls in the school. I quote again:

Unanimously the St. James school board turned down the proposal to allow this wedge of militarism to enter their schools.

Mr. RALSTON: What paper is my hon. friend quoting from?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: From a Winnipeg paper, the Weekly News of the date of February 8, 1929. The Weekly News is, I am proud to say, a Labour paper. The article goes on:

> Five of the St. James school principals were present at the meeting and every one of them advised against the training...
> With telling effect councillor Hooper quoted no less an authority than Sir Robert Baden Powell against military training for boys.

I cannot do better than quote Baden Powell's statement:

> I find that it has been largely but quite erroneously believed that the boy scout movement is a military one, or at least has militarist tendencies. The mistake is natural, since its figure head holds the rank of general. But it is those who have personally seen something of war who most desire to avert its recurrence on the future generation; it is those who have seen the good and the bad of military training and discipline who can best realize its advantages or disadvantages for educative purposes. Under both these heads I am against using military training for boys. . . .

So much for Baden Powell. Before I close what I have to say on this question of cadet training I should like to quote what may be considered a fair statement of the labour position. Speaking before the Dominion government, when he presented the legislative program of organized labour this year, Mr. Moore, president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, said on the subject of cadet training:

> This matter was again under discussion at our last convention, when it was resolved to request that legislation be enacted to provide for the abolition of all money grants for cadet training and other military activites in schools, and that grants be given for the purpose of physical training instead.
> We desire to emphasize our beliefs that it is in the best interests of the youth that every encouragement should be given to the development of their physical condition instead of instilling into their minds militaristic ideas by the continuance of the cadet system.
> It is our sincere belief that if grants are to be made by the federal government to educational authorities, such grants should be for technical education or purely physical development and not for military training.

What could we do at the present time? We are proposing to spend some $20,000,000 for so-called national defence. There was a resolution on the order paper in the name of my hon. friend from Southeast Grey which I hoped would be discussed, but unfortunately it was not reached. It was the suggestion that for every $100 spent on war preparation, we should spend $1 in encouraging peace. If we spend $20,000,000 on war preparation that would mean that we would spend $200,000 on peace propaganda. Is it too much to ask to spend only $1 on peace for every $100 that is spent on war preparation? Some of us figured out the other day what that $200,000 would provide. It would provide a chair for the study of international relationships in every university in Canada. Does that not appeal to the Prime Minister—a chair in international relationships in every university in Canada? Further, it would provide three or four scholarships in every Canadian university for students from other countries who would care to come here and study our Canadian and British institutions. Could we imagine anything that would advertise Canada more widely throughout the world than having a number of foreign students coming to our various universities, spending two or three years here, and then scattering back to their home countries carrying the good wishes of Canada and some knowledge of things Canadian? On the other hand, that same amount would provide for the sending of three or four students from each university in Canada into different foreign countries to study foreign affairs. To-day we are requiring a certain number of men trained in foreign affairs to be ambassadors, to be trade representatives, and so on. In the future where are these men to come from? I would hope that they would be men of wide experience, men of special training. I would hope that such positions would be open to all. How are those men to be trained? I can conceive of no better way than sending some of our brighter men abroad—

Miss MACPHAIL: And women.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I beg the pardon of our one woman member. I can conceive of no better way than sending some of our brightest men and women abroad to study various languages, various cultures, and international affairs, as seen from other angles than our own, and then have them come back to this country. Such students would wonderfully enrich our life, and from them we would be able to pick certain men and women who, as the representatives of this country, would fill official posts abroad in the days to come.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have long recognized the principle that if we are to have war we must make preparation for war. We have not yet come to recognize the principle that if we are to have peace we must make some special preparation for peace, and must be willing to spend something on inculcating peace and training people for a peace program. I say that that $200,000—anyone can figure it out for himself—would be a sort of glorified international Rhodes scholarship fund, and I can conceive of nothing of which I would be prouder, and that I think would produce a greater moral effect in the world, than that Canada should take the lead in some such scheme. It would put Canada in the very forefront of the nations. To-day the trouble is that we are feebly copying Europe and the outgrown policies of Europe instead of striking out along our own lines in this new world. We are at a period of great industrial expansion. We all recognize that. The victories of the future will be won not by force of arms, but in the economic and social realms. To-day we are carrying forward the old world traditions, spending our millions on outgrown policies, on policies that can only be inimical to the future welfare of the world. In this young country, so full of the sense of the security, we have the opportunity of adopting some of these new policies which I have had time only to indicate.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to deal with what my hon. friends from Southeast Grey and Winnipeg North Centre have spoken of. I am familiar with their views, and they are familiar with mine, but at the same time I feel it is only due to them and to the public of Canada that I should deal with those matters which they have so ably put before the house.

Let me first remove one or two misapprehensions. They have consistently said that we are voting $20,000,000. We are dealing now with the whole vote. Let me point out that that is not quite accurate. It is true that practically $20,000,000 is being voted altogether for the department over which I preside, but the actual vote for militia services, with which I think they have both largely dealt—I will turn to the air services in a moment—is $11,065,000. Right here may I point out that the comparison between that sum and the vote away back before the war is significant. I made the comparison last year and I think it well that the committee should bear it in mind. In 1913-14 we voted for the militia services, not $11,065,000, but $11,273,540. In other words, to-day we are voting substantially less money, nearly a quarter of a million dollars, notwithstanding the fact that a dollar to-day will not purchase anything near what it would purchase in 1913-14.

We are voting $3,600,000, for the naval services. I have explained to the committee how that arises. Last year there was $900,000 that we did not spend; it is included in the present vote. I do not think it should be regarded as a charge this year.

The next item is $1,697,000 for the Royal Canadian Air Force. That is exactly the same as the vote last year. I might as well repeat it now, that the vote for the Royal Canadian Air Force is essential for the benefit of civil government operations and civil aviation in this country. I know my hon. friends will be glad to hear that the Siskins army pursuit planes which we bought last year are the only exclusively military equipment we have, and that we are not buying any more this year. We are buying Moths and planes of that kind for the purpose of civil operations and to teach men in such operations.

As I said to the committee at the outset, we figured that we should turn our attention for the present entirely to civil government operations and civil aviation. We feel there is need for it in this country. Let me deal with what my hon. friends from Southeast Grey and Winnipeg North Centre have said with regard to these services being under the Department of National Defence. We have a military air force; that is to say, it is part of any department of defence. The air force years ago was put under the Department of National Defence. To-day we have many items in the Royal Canadian Air Force which, as I said a moment ago, are purely for the purposes of civil aviation and civil government operations. I do not complain of anybody who wants to argue that the present administration of the department is not satisfactory so far as civil aviation is concerned. That is a matter of opinion. But if we placed civil aviation under another department we would be doubling our overhead. Then the Department of the Interior would want an air force, as would also the Post Office Department and the Department of Railways, each with its own organization, and we would be trebling or quadrupling the overhead in that connection, and would not have uniformity of training. Another drawback would be this, and I cannot stress it too strongly. I had it in mind when I spoke a moment or two ago in regard to the necessity of ground organization. There is no other activity in which you need more, not the sort of discipline known as parade discipline, saluting and things of that sort, but the sort of discipline which will make men follow a certain line of routine day after day and month after month, in order that they may recognize, for instance the necessity of inspecting a certain part of the machine every morning, whether they think it necessary or not. That condition is more easily attained when you have the men doing those things because they are so ordered rather than leaving it to them to decide whether they will do it or not. For instance, they might get the view that "We do not have to inspect the machine this morning, we inspected it yesterday." When I spoke of flying clubs a little while ago it was with that idea in the back of my mind, to see that civilian clubs automatically carried out these regulations. To me it seems to be necessary for the sound foundation of civil aviation in this country to develop that care and caution and ceaseless attention to these matters of detail, which, if not necessary, it is at least desirable that they should be taught by the influence of discipline and routine.

Miss MACPHAIL: Our railway engineers and other railway men who are charged with great responsibilities are not under military discipline, and yet they always have their engines in order and are always ready promptly to respond to the call of duty.

Mr. RALSTON: That is quite so. But I stated that in my opinion there is no activity where the simple failure to carry out a particular order will lead to such disastrous results as the activity of aviation. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why should we not conform to the recommendations of the disarmament preparatory commission?

Mr. RALSTON: I heard my hon. friend quote the recommendations of the disarmament preparatory commission, but I think that commission is a long way from having come to any definite conclusion. That commission has been engaged since 1925 in working out schemes for disarmament but up to the moment they have not arrived at any conclusions, and they adjourned a short time ago with, I am sorry to say, not too bright prospects of a hopeful outcome of their deliberations for the conference of 1931. I am putting up these considerations against the considerations which my hon. friend has mentioned. Let me deal now with the point he made in regard to civilian aviation, and the statement that such aviation is in itself an incentive to war. He suggested that civilian planes and personnel could be easily adapted to the purposes of war. Now as I mentioned the other day, that is the greatest difficulty which the preparatory commission is finding. This difficulty was expressed by the Spanish represntative before the commission, better, perhaps, than by anyone else. It is found that the nation which has the biggest industrial organization; the nation which has the biggest transport organization, purely civilian; the nation which has the biggest aircraft organization; the nation which has the biggest and most efficient chemical organization and the best systems of railways and docks and communications; the best system of scientific research; the best agricultural resources—the nation which is best equipped in all these departments of civil life is the nation which can best afford to disarm, for the simple reason that it can arm sooner than any other, using these very resources for military purposes. We cannot ignore the possibility of these resources being used for the purposes of war. But that, as I was trying to point out to my hon. friend, is far from suggesting that we are adopting these things, or utilising them, or developing our resources chemically, or industrially or agriculturally, or maintaining our railways for the purpose of war. We are not doing anything of the sort. It is apparent, however, that the nation which is best equipped in all these directions can automatically arm itself soonest for war. And so the representative from Spain—he was dealing with the Russian proposals—expressed the view that general disarmament would result in this, that the nation with the greatest industrial resources would find itself just that much further ahead of the small nation which was not so equipped; because every nation at the present time has at least a small defence force, and if each nation abandoned its armaments, and later an emergency arose, the nation with the small force would be much slower in bringing its force back to the status which it held before disarmament.

Miss MACPHAIL: It is all relative anyway.

Mr. HEAPS: Is it not true that the small nations wanted disarmament? What bearing, then, has my hon. friend's statement on such nations?

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid the question is based on a false hypothesis. That statement is not correct.

Mr. HEAPS: My understanding is that the small nations were disappointed in the attitude of the larger countries.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think my hon. friend's hypothesis is correct. Now let me come to another point. Hon. members are right in stating that our geographical position is advantageous. But when they are discussing disarmament, I really do not think they give us credit for the position in which we find ourselves. No nation could be more disarmed than Canada; we have only to compare this country with others in the matter of expenditure. Canada spends $1.59 per head on national defence; the next country is Germany, with $2.60; next comes Russia, with $3; next, New Zealand, with $3.10; next, South Africa, with $3.19; then even Denmark with $3.50, and Norway, $3.84. In other words, we spend much less per capita on national defence than any other country in the world.

Another point made by my hon. friend from Southeast Grey is our geographical position. We are fortunate in this, that we have on either side of us a wide ocean so that we have ample warning of any possible aggression. We are in a position where we may prepare for such aggression.

Answering the comment in regard to the size of the force which we maintain, let me remind the committee that the permanent force consists of one man for every three thousand individuals in Canada—not a very large force; it is not even a decent police force. I wish to say here that I do not, nor does the defence department, regard it as a defence force or a standing army in any sense of the word; it is simply an instructional cadre. Our real defence consists in the non-permanent active militia, which is far from approaching the maximum numerical strength we might maintain on a three year basis, namely, some 240,000 men. Let me give the figures with regard to the militia. In 1914 we had 55,282 men as against 240,000, which would be our possible force, and in 1928, 51,575, or a reduction of nearly 4,000. Take the numbers training. In 1913-14 we gave twelve days' training to 58,563, and in 1928 —disarmament has progressed at least to this extent—we provided twelve days' training for 33,581. In view of these figures, our friends ought to give us credit, in the matter of military expenditures, at least for limiting our activities to a very modest extent, the extent which we are advised is necessary as a minimum.

This brings me to the question asked by my hon. friend: against whom are we preparing? Let me set his mind at rest with regard to the United States. I do not think I can do better than read a statement which was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) not long ago. Speaking at the Assembly of the League of Nations on September 7, 1928, the Prime Minister said:

> The Canadian Minister of Finance, in presenting the budget, does not so much as suggest the expenditure of a single dollar through fear of American aggression. Public moneys are saved and utilised for the purposes of productive industry.

So that my hon. friends may set their minds at rest on that score.

Miss MACPHAIL: I had no fear at all in regard to the United States: I was merely trying to reassure the rest of you.

Mr. RALSTON: I am endeavouring to answer the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do I understand that the standing force exists for the purpose of keeping down any section of our own people who might give trouble?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend misunderstands me.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then it exists in case of aggression?

Mr. RALSTON: I said there was no fear of aggression from the United States. I am very glad I can assure the committee that I am unable to say against whom we are preparing, and I hope I shall never be able to tell. You might as well ask me to state what burglar will break into my house at night and why there is a policeman on the beat near the flat where I happen to live. It is regarded as part of the national equipment to have a defence force, and our defence force is down to the very minimum—less than a quarter of what it might be. We are maintaining a force which amounts to but one out of every three thousand of the population, and we are training 33,000 men in the camps. I do not think we could carry disarmament much further, and we are advised that, because of the wide oceans that separate us from other countries, we can reasonably prepare for self defence if that should ever become necessary.

Let me point out to my hon. friend with regard to the covenant of the League of Nations and the Kellogg peace pact, that both these documents expressly provide for self-defence. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said it was a sort of insinuation against the good faith of other countries to provide a defence force and at the same time sign these documents, but I would point out that the covenant of the League of Nations provides in the first paragraph against resort to war, yet in article 8 it is provided that the members of the league recognize that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety, and so on.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But the situation is different when we all signed.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think there have been any additional signatures.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The United States was brought in by the Kellogg peace pact.

Mr. RALSTON: We are not worrying about the United States, but some other nations are not bound by the terms of these documents. In connection with the Kellogg peace pact let me point out further that while it denounces war as an instrument of national policy, at the same time Mr. Kellogg made an express declaration with regard to self-defence, as follows:

> There is nothing in the American draft of an anti-war treaty which restricts or impairs in any way the right of self-defence. That right is inherent in every sovereign state and is implicit in every treaty. Every nation is free at all times and regardless of treaty provisions to defend its territory from attack or invasion and it alone is competent to decide whether circumstances require recourse to war in self-defence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will we not have to abandon the idea of a sovereign state?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not understand my hon. friend's question; I am dealing with the point of whether or not a country which provides for self-defence is acting at all contrary to the treaties which have been signed, and I have endeavoured to point out that the convenant of the League of Nations expressly provides for self-defence and that Mr. Kellogg, one of the moving parties in connection with the Briand-Kellogg pact, laid down as a principle that self-defence was always excepted. The question is whether or not we are providing too much in that respect; I have submitted some figures to the house and I think they indicate only a very modest preparation.

I would like to give a few more figures. With regard to the training allotment, for this purpose we spent $1,930,000 in 1913, while in 1928 we spent $1,639,000; in 1922 we had 4,099 men of all ranks in the permanent force, but to-day we have only 3,264, a decrease of over 800; in 1922 the permanent force vote was $6,255,000, while to-day there is only $4,950,000. In discussing this question, which was done by both my hon. friends very fairly and logically, I think they both admitted that there was some necessity for a police force, and my hon. friend from Southeast Grey mentioned that she had no particular objection to retaining the permanent force. Allow me to point out that the permanent force accounts for nearly half this vote of $11,000,000, so at least I feel that I have some support from my hon. friends for these estimates.

Mr. CLARK: How many civilians are employed and paid out of the permanent force vote?

Mr. RALSTON: None; they come under the civil government vote.

Miss MACPHAIL: Then I would ask the minister if he would be willing to cut his estimate in half; if so, I will support him.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: That is a very sporting offer, but I cannot accept it. I was endeavouring to point out that the permanent force is only an instructional cadre for the purpose of training the non-permanent active militia.

Mr. CLARK: Did I understand the minister to say that the salaries of civilian employees do not come out of this vote?

Mr. RALSTON: There is quite a large amount in the civil government vote for the pay of civilians, but the actual permanent force vote covers no civilian salaries. I am instructed that 1,671 civilians are employed.

Mr. CLARK: Can the minister state how much they are paid in a year?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot say exactly, but it might be estimated at $1,500 a year, which is perhaps a low average. That would give a total of about $2,500,000.

Mr. BOYS: I would like to ask the minister if any portion of this item or the items contained in the supplementary estimates, where there is an additional amount of $250,000 for the Royal Canadian Air Force and $315,000 for civil air operations, provides for the removal of Camp Borden. The minister will recall that early in January a rather large deputation, representing all parts of the county of Simcoe and including various county officials, waited upon him and discussed this matter and from time to time there have been references in the press to the possible moving of Camp Borden. When the delegation waited upon the minister the question was fully discussed and many reasons were advanced why no such steps should be taken, and I should like to know now whether any estimate, either main or supplementary, is for that purpose. If there is no such estimate I would like to know if the government has reached any decision with regard to this matter.

Mr. RALSTON: I can say to my hon. friend that the item of $250,000 in the supplementary estimates is for the preliminary work in connection with the establishment of an air base at Trenton, Ontario. The plan is to maintain and utilize Camp Borden at least for some time to come; according to the information I have that period will amount to two or three years at least, and on that account we are making certain permanent improvements at Camp Borden. It will be necessary to use both stations at least for a time; this $250,000 will purchase the land and provide for the preliminary work in connection with the provision of certain accommodation for the air force at Trenton.

Mr. BOYS: Then I am to understand that the department has reached a definite decision ultimately to abandon Camp Borden and move the equipment to Trenton?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think I can answer that leading question in that way; I can only say that for the present at least both bases will be used, and whether or not Camp Borden will continue to be used will depend upon the needs of the service. I am instructed that for summer training Camp Borden is at least very desirable and that a great deal of use can be made of it, but I cannot say whether or not it will be abandoned ultimately.

Mr. BOYS: The minister does not suggest that there is need for two camps in Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: I am instructed that eventually this might be possible in the summer.

Mr. BOYS: There might be a necessity for a base for hydroplanes which would have to be located near the water.

Mr. RALSTON: My information has come from the officers of the department.

Mr. BOYS: If there is any thought of the abandonment of the extensive plant at Camp Borden, I would like to know the reason why. The minister intimates that it may be used, but I gathered from what the minister told the deputation that if Trenton is being selected it is with the intention of the abandonment of Camp Borden. If that is to be the case the house is entitled to know of the tremendous financial sacrifice which would have to be made in that connection. It would not be a matter of hundreds of thousands of dollars, it would run into the milions; I think I am quite safe in saying that it would involve a sacrifice of at least $2,500,000 to $3,000,000. If that is the intention I do not want to allow this opportunity to pass without putting upon Hansard some of the figures which the deputation gave to the minister. I suppose the minister has told me all that he feels free to admit, but I can only say that the conclusion I am forced to is that Camp Borden is to be abandoned.

Mr. RALSTON: The officers of the department advise that for the next two or three years at least Camp Borden will be needed, and it is possible that that camp may be needed later, in connection with summer training. As my hon. friend knows, the necessity for a combined sea and land training base makes it very desirable that Trenton should be used. That decision was arrived at after an investigation lasting nearly two years during which over twenty-five different locations were considered by the officers of the department. If my hon. friend desires it, I shall be glad to discuss the financial items with him, but I would say that I have been advised by the officers of the department that it would cost just as much to make Camp Borden a proper base for aviation as it will cost to put Trenton into shape, and we would have the added advantage of a combined base. My hon. friend says that he has figures which show a loss of some millions of dollars, but I do not think that those figures are quite correct. I listened to the discussion which took place when this delegation was here, and I went over the matter very thoroughly with my officers. We came to the conclusion that the expenditures which would be involved in fitting up the base at Trenton would amount to about the same, and I think a little less, than would be required to provide permanent quarters at Camp Borden. We will have the added advantage of the combined base at Trenton and would be overcoming some of the natural difficulties which exist at Camp Borden.

Mr. BOYS: What part of the estimates have to do with the establishment of the base at Trenton?

Mr. RALSTON: None of the main estimates, but the item of $250,000 in the supplementary estimates is to be used for that purpose.

Mr. KAISER: Would the minister give us some of the points which were considered in selecting Trenton as against other points, say Oshawa or Whitby?

Mr. RALSTON: As between Trenton and Camp Borden?

Sir EUGENE FISET: Oshawa.

Mr. KAISER: No, Whitby; why select Trenton instead of Whitby?

Mr. RALSTON: I will look up the reports. I would suggest that this matter can be fully discussed when we come to the supplementary estimates.

Mr. CLARK: Mr. Chairman, if there is one respect more than another in which value results from the vote for national defence, I would say it is from the vote of $2,315,000 for the non-permanent active militia. But in this connection, the minister has stated that the civilians employed in the department were paid $2,500,000, or approximately $200,000 in excess of the total amount appropriated for the non-permanent active militia. It was that militia which made it possible for Canada to recruit 500,000 men during the great war and to send the Canadian corps to France, yet we find that there are civilians employed in the department who cost the country more than is spent upon the non-permanent active militia from one coast to the other. It seems to me that this is a matter which calls for a very careful investigation and some readjustments, because every one who served with the Canadian corps realizes that clerical help, such as is being employed in this department at an average of $1,500 per head, could be secured from the permanent force at salaries of approximately one-third of the amount now being paid. In my opinion, anyone who secures a position in the department should be sworn in as a member of the permanent forces of Canada and should be paid according to the rank held.

An hon. MEMBER: How about the girls?

Mr. CLARK: The minister knows of his own personal knowledge that there never was a more efficient body of clerks than those which we had and trained overseas, and the same class of men could be found to-day in the permanent force. It is a shocking thing that the civilians in the department should be paid $200,000 more than is spent upon the whole non-permanent active militia. The officers, men and certain civilians are spending more money on the militia than is the country, and yet we must tell these people who are supporting the militia that while there is no money for them there is plenty of money to employ civilians within the department. Personally, I am very much opposed to this practice and I think an investigation should be carried on to see that everyone employed is sworn in as a member of the forces and not retained as a civilian.

Mr. RALSTON: The figures I gave to my hon. friend were a pure guess, and my attention has just been called to the fact that the figure of 1,671 included permanent and seasonal employees. For instance we have 429 men who receive $377,900 altogether or something less than $1,000 each.

Mr. BENNETT: Those are all civilians?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. Again one would only have to guess, but the amount is, I think, very much less than that which my hon. friend assumes from the figure.

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. CLARK: I am not assuming. My hon. friend told me it was $2,500,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, I will accept the responsibility for assuming that. I said $1,500, just averaging the salaries. I thought they were all full-time employees. The only way to deal with the matter would be to make up an exact statement. If my hon. friend wants another estimate I might suggest $1,000 as liberal which would mean $1,671,000. I agree absolutely with my hon. friend as to the contribution which is made by the non-commissioned officers and men to the non-permanent active militia. Two years ago I gave figures showing that in nearly 50 per cent of the units either the whole or a portion of the pay is pooled by officers or men or both, this showing a pretty generous contribution to the non-permanent active militia, but my hon. friend will admit that all these other votes for contingencies, engineer services and works, general stores, manufacturing establishments, topographic survey and transport and freight are partly non-permanent active militia and partly permanent force, and very much more for the former than for the latter. So in estimating the amount expended on the non-permanent active militia, one would have to consider the payments under these items as well as the actual non-permanent active militia vote, which really represents only pay and allowances together with expenses in connection with training.

Mr. CLARK: The minister's correction does not alter the principle. The principle of employing civilians in this department is, in my opinion, wrong and ought to be corrected. The country could be saved several hundreds of thousands of dollars if these men were enlisted and given the pay of the ranks they hold. The minister shakes his head. I have heard over a period of years, on I think excellent authority, that the department could be reorganized and that civilians could be eliminated. I believe this, because it agrees with my personal experience. We did not need any civilians overseas in clerical positions and the minister knows that as well as anybody else. The same thing can be done in this case.

Item agreed to.

Cadet services, $500,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How many cadets are there in Canada to-day?

Mr. RALSTON: 133,403.

Mr. SPENCER: Is there any increase over last year?

Mr. RALSTON: There is an increase of 10,000 over last year.

Mr. SPENCER: What provinces does that increase come from?

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry I cannot give the increase by provinces.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the number by provinces?

Mr. RALSTON: It is as follows:

Nova Scotia	3,548
Prince Edward Island	810
New Brunswick	2,900
Quebec	66,045
Ontario	39,990
Manitoba	3,725
Saskatchewan	4,500
Alberta	5,974
British Columbia	5,911

Mr. EVANS: I look upon this appropriation for the cadets as probably the worst item in the militia estimates. This is in my estimation just so much money used to brutalize the feelings of too many of our young people.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. EVANS: Hon. gentlemen may laugh at that, but that is almost a necessity of war and preparedness for war. If we are going to attain the end of peace for which so many efforts are being made throughout the world at this time, we must create an attitude for peace. Instead of that, we are inculcating in our young people the idea that war is the most glorious thing on earth. This is not as it should be. While I am not going to make a speech, I want to emphasize the fact that we are travelling along the wrong road and every dollar that we are spending under this item is making it harder for us to retrace our steps. This is a useless expenditure. While I do not expect the minister to cut it out, he should answer the question why he considers it necessary, and why, year after year, we are spending this money to train these young people in the way we do.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister state to the committee why he thinks the cadet service is necessary?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friends base their argument upon a wrong assumption. I have endeavoured to point out previously that the item covers very largely physical training and not military service or the brutalizing process to which the hon. member for Rosetown has referred. Probably $300,000 of this appropriation goes for actual physical training. The only cadet service and the only cadet corps which are established are those which are expressly authorized by the school districts or the school authorities themselves.

Miss MACPHAIL: On the instigation of the department.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has said that before. I have told my hon. friend from Calgary and I say to the hon. member for Southeast Grey very sincerely: if they can show any case in which there has been instigation on the part of officers, I will deal with it promptly. The whole principle of this is that it is optional with the school authorities. There are about 7,000 teachers who are instructed this year in physical training, who are not cadet instructors, but who are giving their classes the benefit of physical training and whose instruction is being paid for out of this appropriation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister look into the matter of which I spoke?

Mr. RALSTON: I will. I think Colonel Gillespie was the name he mentioned.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister taken into consideration the question of taking away the military part of the service and viewing it from the purely physical standpoint?

Mr. RALSTON: Not if the school authorities desire cadet training. It is all left to the school and provincial authorities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask if there are any children involved?

Mr. CASSELMAN: There is one child, which is being amply provided for by its mother, who is in a position to look after it.

SECOND READING

Bill No. 316, for the relief of Catherine McRae Beattie McRae—Mr. Casselman.

WILLIAM JOHN BLIGHT

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of Bill No. 336, for the relief of William John Blight.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have read the evidence in this case, which seems to me to be one that is somewhat extraordinary in character. It involves, I think, an altogether new principle. The evidence in this case just happened to come to me in a separate envelope, and I suppose that led to my reading it. I have no doubt that there are many other bills that could bear equally careful scrutiny. So far as I can read the evidence in this case, there is nothing in it whatever to prove the charges alleged. It may be that I have not the legal mind, and that my conclusions are not warranted, which just illustrates, if that be the case, that matters of this kind ought to come before a judge rather than before those who are not so well qualified to deal with evidence, but in so far as I have had any experience at all in judging evidence, I think that the findings of the senate committee should not go unchallenged.

We were told the other day when we discussed a divorce bill in the committee stage that we ought to have discussed it earlier and not to have allowed it to pass through the private bills committee and come back to this house before challenging it. I am therefore challenging this bill at this stage.

This is not one of the worst cases that we have. Some of the cases that come before us are absolutely unfit to be discussed in public. I should like to be able to discuss the evidence in this case, but I notice strangers in the gallery. I think on general principles it has been conceded that it is not well that the details in such cases be known to the general public. In our divorce courts generally there is a good deal of reticence about giving details to the public, and I do not want to be in the position of having to discuss details that may not be appreciated at all by those who happen to be in the galleries. On the other hand, the presence of people in the galleries would make it more difficult for those in the house frankly to discuss a matter of this kind. So, Mr. Speaker, before going on to the details of the case, I would suggest that you consider the advisability of asking strangers to retire from the gallery so that we may have absolute freedom of discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the old days of parliamentary practice and custom, in the event of a member noticing the presence of strangers the speaker would order the galleries to be cleared That custom was followed for many years in the British house, and then under Mr. Disraeli—later Lord Beaconsfield—a rule was framed and embalmed in the procedure. This rule is practically copied in our own standing order No. 13, which reads as follows:

> If any member takes notice that strangers are present, Mr. Speaker or the Chairman (as the case may be), shall forthwith put the question, that strangers be ordered to withdraw, without permitting any debate or amendment: Provided that Mr. Speaker, or the Chairman, may, whenever he thinks proper, order the withdrawal of strangers.

It follows that no member by himself can order the clearance of the galleries; but the Speaker is obliged to put the question which I would put: It is moved by Mr. Woodsworth, seconded by Mr. Evans, that strangers in the galleries do withdraw forthwith.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour of the motion will kindly say "aye."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will kindly say "nay."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my humble opinion the "nays" have it. Therefore I declare the motion lost.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to give some of the details in this case, and I shall do so with the least offence possible. I am very glad indeed that this case does not involve what I might term the obscene details that frequently appear in the evidence as presented to the Senate divorce committee. Perhaps it is just as well that the house has decided on this course, for in any case we must bear in mind that now we have with us one woman member, who perhaps has not only a perfect right but a duty to consider matters of this kind; and also we have our Hansard, which in any case gives a report of what takes place in this chamber.

First of all, let me say that, as in most bills of this character, we find a statement of this kind:

Whereas the said marriage and adultery have been proved by the evidence adduced.

I take the ground that the "evidence adduced" is not sufficient to prove the charge of adultery. In this case there are six children. The petitioner was asked whether he had in any way connived at or condoned adultery, and whether there was any collusion.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Will the hon. gentleman permit me a question? He has indicated that this is a case which is not fit to be publicly discussed. We have a parliamentary committee—the private bills committee—which is charged with the responsibility of reviewing the evidence that he is now going to review on the second reading of this bill. Would he not so far consider both public feeling and, as he has often described it, the decencies of the house by permitting the bill to go to the private bills committee, where he or anyone else may be heard, and this case, unfortunate and salacious in some respects as it may be, may there be discussed in much less public manner than in this house. I think I am expressing the wishes of a great many members when I make this appeal to him as a matter of fairness from one member to another.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the way in which the appeal is made, and perhaps that may lead me to leave out a great many of the details. However, I have given the house the opportunity of clearing the galleries. The house has refused to do so, and must take the responsibility for that action. Further than that, as the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) will recall, when the other day we let one of these bills go back to the private bills committee we were censured in this house for not having taken action earlier. I am now taking the matter up on the first opportunity presented, and when I think we have the right to discuss the principle involved. I shall cut down the details to the very limit as—

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is a motion for the second reading of the bill. Its principle may be discussed. The evidence given before a committee in another house cannot be the subject matter of discussion until the bill comes back from our own private bills committee. The hon. gentleman may gratify his desire if and when our committee reports that a case has been made out; but at the moment the discussion of evidence taken before a committee in another house has nothing whatever to do with the principle of the bill, which is this, that on allegations of misconduct the petitioner claims to be entitled to a divorce. That case must be proven before our private bills committee. They may or may not accept the evidence given before another committee. Therefore I submit, sir, that discussion of the evidence at this point is entirely out of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the principle underlying the bill is that of unfaithfulness, and that such unfaithfulness in this case has not been proved. Essentially the divorce is being granted on the ground of desertion, not on the ground of adultery, and therefore I have the right at this time to challenge the passage of this stage of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The principle of the bill is divorce of the parties named therein. It is true that in the other house the evidence adduced in support of the petition has been found sufficient, but that evidence does not govern the decision to be made by the House of Commons. Any member is at liberty to discuss the principle involved in the bill; but the evidence is a matter for the private bills committee, which will duly report to the house. Therefore in my view the point is well taken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the committee to which this bill is referred shall give it their most serious consideration? There will be no respondent present. The respondent is not to be found. There will be no one to represent the respondent. That is the situation. Again, in view of the statements that I have submitted tonight, I would urgently request the private bills committee to give the bill their very serious consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the hon member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has raised a rather interesting point. In some other cases it was said that in dealing with any of these bills the principle of divorce must not be considered. That objection has been made to myself by several members of the house and in several instances. It has been said that the principle of each bill was the ground upon which the divorce was granted to the parties mentioned in that bill. Now what is the situation? What is the principle of each bill? I am not discussing the decision of the Chair; I am considering the various aspects of the bill—

Mr. SPEAKER: May I assure the hon. member that I have never ruled as he suggests; I have never ruled that the principle of divorce could not be debated on the second reading. On the contrary, it is essentially the principle that must be discussed. But my point is that the House of Commons is not governed, in any decision it may render on a particular divorce bill, by evidence taken in another place. The bill is referred to the committee on miscellaneous private bills, from which a report is submitted to this house, and then the house pronounces on the bill in accordance with the evidence accompanying it. I repeat once more that I have never ruled that the principle of divorce could not be debated on the second reading; on the contrary, it is the very principle to be debated.

Mr. BOURASSA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I am very glad that you have given a general ruling which will govern all these cases, especially in the future if the government does not make up its mind to put a stop to this procedure which, under the present system, is degrading both chambers.

There is another point. I suppose it will be admitted that the principle involved in each of these bills is also the ground for divorce. Divorce cannot be granted indiscriminately for any reason whatever; the senate is supposed to have adopted a rule, by which presumably it abides in accepting or refusing petitions brought before it—although I do not think it refuses many. It has been said time and again in this house that the only ground upon which the senate committee grants a divorce is adultery, which has been called the statutory ground. As a matter of fact, as has been previously pointed out, there is no statute defining the grounds upon which divorce is granted by this parliament. There is no law whatever governing the question. In a case like this, or in any other divorce case, I contend that there is first the general principle of divorce and, secondly, the special cause for which the divorce is granted in the particular bill. Now if, as claimed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), this divorce is not granted for the cause supposedly admitted to be the only one for which divorce is granted, then a new aspect of the matter presents itself. Suppose, for example, this case went to the court: the petitioner would have to allege and prove as a cause for divorce the ground which would be stated in the act defining the reasons for which that tribunal can grant divorce. It would form part of the law, and the evidence would have to square with it. When a bill comes before us copies of the evidence are distributed; and if a member of this house who happens to be a member of the court of review passing on the adjudication of the other house finds that the evidence does not corroborate the petition, but that it practically discloses a new ground, then I submit that there is a second principle involved in the bill. Some time ago there passed through both houses a bill granting a divorce for impotency, which at least in the Quebec law is a cause for the declaration of nullity of marriage—not divorce. In this instance, if, as claimed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the evidence establishes not adultery but desertion, then we are granting the divorce for a cause other than that generally alleged to be the only one for which this parliament grants divorce; and it seems to me that this aspect of the case must be examined before the bill passes. If we agree to this, and the evidence is such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has found it, then a second principle is raised. There is the general principle governing all these bills, and there is the particular principle on which the divorce is granted in the bill before the committee. Suppose, for example, a divorce bill came before us based upon the assertion that the petitioner had been insulted by his or her consort; then it would mean that we should be granting a divorce on an entirely different ground. It seems to me, therefore, that on the second reading of any bill the house must consider the basis on which the divorce is granted.

So far as the evidence in this case is concerned, I have not read it sufficiently to form a decided opinion upon it. I merely wanted to emphasize the point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that before granting any bill we should examine the cause for which it is being passed. With regard to the evidence, if we give the bill the second reading it goes straight to the special committee; and when it comes back from that committee—I do not suppose in this instance Your Honour would so rule—it is contended, as we have frequently heard, that this is not the place, in committee of the whole, to review that evidence, that having been done by the special committee on private bills. I hold, however, that the committee of the whole has not only the right but the duty to review the whole of the evidence; therefore if the committee of the whole find that the special committee either has not taken cognizance of all phases of the evidence, or has given a decision based upon something which in the opinion of the committee of the whole is not warranted by the evidence, then it should be the duty of the committee of the whole to report accordingly to the special committee. I wish to make that point clear before allowing it to be said that we are surrendering our full responsibility to the special committee.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I think it might be well for you, Mr. Speaker, to give us a further instruction after the ruling we have received. As I understand it, the only thing that the committee will have before it when it comes to examine the bill will be evidence which is ruled out of discussion to-night. If that is not the case, then it is well that the committee understand now that it will have to take steps to secure new evidence and to make a new examination of the case. I cannot see that we have no right to deal with the evidence in the committee in any other way than we deal with it in this house. In the second place, I agree entirely with the point emphasized by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I have not read the evidence, but according to the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the petition in this case is based, not on the usual ground, but rather on the ground of desertion, which is an entirely different principle.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The ground alleged, adultery, I did not consider proved, but there is also the ground of desertion.

Mr. IRVINE: It is the only ground I am dealing with. If there is no evidence on one ground we must consider the other ground. I think for that reason the house should pass upon that principle; then, when we vote on this bill, we will understand that that is the principle upon which we are voting.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Both hon. gentlemen who preceded me concluded their remarks by saying they had not read the evidence, and I would submit that reading the evidence should be a preliminary to talking about the bill; at all events it would be a useful adjunct. I have been led into sponsoring a bill of this kind for the first time in eight years, and I cannot think why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) should pick upon my little ewe lamb out of all the hundreds which have been before us this session. I do not take it as a friendly act at all either to myself or to my unhappy client, if I may use the term.

The only thing required on the second reading of this bill is that a prima facie case be made out; we are not acting as judges now. That procedure is gone through before the private bills committee, and I believe a prima facie case is easily made out by this evidence. The suggestion has been made that this divorce is being asked on the ground of desertion, but that is not so; the word "desertion" or the suggestion does not enter into the case at all. This divorce is asked on the statutory ground of adultery.

To put it briefly, this couple separated, the date of the separation being sworn to, and six months later the woman admitted to her husband that she was about to become a mother. Perhaps I might read a letter, which is not at all improper.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. NEILL: There is nothing improper about this letter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order. If it was not permissible to read the evidence when I desired to do so, I think it hardly fair that it should be read now. There was nothing improper either about the evidence I desired to read.

Mr. NEILL: Then I will not read the evidence; I will state the case in general terms. The woman wrote a letter admitting the reasons why she was leaving her husband.

Mr. SPEAKER: I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he would facilitate the procedure if he would respect the ruling I gave a moment ago and let the bill go to the private bills committee after second reading. Then when it comes back from the committee, where new evidence may be heard and the old evidence considered, it will be time to examine that evidence and pass upon it.

Motion agreed to, on division; bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

INVESTIGATION OF SUBSIDIARY OF TELEPHONE OR TELEGRAPH COMPANIES

Upon the order being called for the house to go into committee on Bill No. 6, to amend the Railway Act (investigation of subsidiary of telephone or telegraph companies)—Mr. Geary.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the railway committee has recommended the withdrawal of this bill.

Mr. GEARY: I would prefer to have this bill stand until the government measure, which contains a provision similar to that contained in the bill, passes the house.

Bill stands.

PRECIOUS METALS MARKING ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. J. ETIENNE LETELLIER DE ST. JUST (Compton) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 24, to amend the Precious Metals Marking Act, 1928.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private and public bills and orders being exhausted, the house will now revert to committee of supply.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Cadet services, $500,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, I am more opposed to this vote than to any other under the heading of national defence; I think it is the most vicious of all. I am very sorry that it always comes up at the end of the session when hon. members are tired and certainly do not want to hear a speech on the subject, but I feel impelled to make a few remarks once again in connection with this matter. I wish more members of the house would take an interest in this matter and I can promise that if someone else would speak on cadet training I would refrain from doing so.

I believe that cadet training is military and not physical training, as is often claimed by the Department of National Defence. In physical training the health of the individual being trained is the central idea, while in cadet training the protection of the state is the central idea, so that these two are quite different and should not be confused. I think we may conclude that cadet training is military training. Each cadet instructor holding a certificate from the department and possessing the necessary qualification receives an annual grant of $2 per cadet. If I am incorrectly informed I should be glad to have the minister correct me.

Mr. RALSTON: Up to a certain number.

Miss MACPHAIL: Up to fifty cadets, and he receives $1 per cadet in excess of that number. This being the case, we can be sure that if the instructor has a bias on the subject at all it will be in favour of cadet training and the tendency will be for all the teachers who are cadet instructors to go in for cadet training. In addition to this, in the province of Ontario the Department of Education makes a grant of $50 to each school board having an organized cadet corps of not less than 20 cadets.

There came to my hand recently the 1929 year book of the Glebe Collegiate Institute, on page 29 of which I find the following:

> The annual cadet dance of the 94th and 1070th cadet corps was held at the Glebe gymnasium on May 18th. The dance was a colorful event with the brilliant uniforms of our guests from the different military units of the city.

So that is at least one use for the permanent force; they supplied the colour at the cadet dance. There is a very close connection between the military units and the cadet corps. The minister cannot claim that the number of cadets has not increased. This afternoon he claimed that the department is not as military as it was some years ago, but the figures with reference to cadets show a rapid and steady increase. In the year 1909 the number of cadets in Canada was 9,000—again, if I am wrong, I shall be glad to be corrected—and the total expenditure for that year is not recorded. In 1914, the year of the outbreak of the war, the number was 47,000 and the cost amounted to $392,000; the year after the war closed, 1919-20, the number of cadets had jumped to 65,000, and the cost had amounted to $374,000; last year, 1927-28, the cadets had increased to 130,000 and the cost—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Miss MACPHAIL: The applause shows more of the old-time patriotism rather than good sense. The cost had increased to $500,000. According to the statistics of 1926, the number of cadets in Great Britain and northern Ireland was only 34,156, as compared to 112,463 in Canada for the same year. To put it in another way, the province of Ontario had only 1,000 less cadets than Great Britain and northern Ireland. According to the 1921 census, the population of Great Britain was 42,767,530, while the population of Canada in the same year was 8,788,481. If that is patriotism, which I doubt very much, then we are much more patriotic than is the mother country.

In the past war has been glorified, not only in Canada but throughout the world. It had to be glorified to keep it going, because it was a business which necessitated the killing of a lot of people; it caused tremendous misery, and unless some sort of halo was thrown around it, it could never have gone on as long as it has. The schools have been used as the medium for this glorification of war, but public opinion throughout the world has changed and they have denounced and claim to have renounced war. How can we expect to evolve new and peaceful means of settling international disputes and expect them to succeed if we do not give the youth of our country new ideals. Do we expect that these things will come of themselves? Do we think that peace requires no effort, no expenditure and no organization? Apparently the government does, although I know that some of the individuals composing the government do not. However, judging from their actions as a government I can only conclude that they think that peace is a thing which will come of its own volition and is not something which has to be worked for.

Supposing we did not use the schools to bring forth these new ideals, but left the youth of the country free to think the thing out for themselves, then we would be on fairly safe ground. But we do not do that; we superimpose upon the youth ideas which have proved to be worthless and we use the military department to do that at a cost of half a million dollars per year. I think—perhaps I had better not say that; I will go on.

An hon. MEMBER: Say it.

Miss MACPHAIL: The very fact that we have military training in our schools causes the boys who take the training, as well as the girls who do not, to think of war as the one and only means of settling international disputes. They have not been taught any other means of settlement, and so they think that the means which they have been taught is the one to take. As Lord Roberts said: The possession of an art stimulates the wish to practise that art; it is the law of human nature.

The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), speaking in the Kellogg pact debate, quoted Shakespeare as follows: The sight of means to do ill deeds makes deeds ill done.

Both those sayings are very true and they certainly apply to this case. When difficulties arise the student who has been military trained naturally thinks of brute force as the one and only method of settling disputes and does not think of calling upon the resources of the mind and spirit as a means of settlement. In other words, his mind is biased on the subject and he is prevented from reaching higher ground by the very ideas we have superimposed upon him.

I do not think that anyone will deny that teachings in the schools can change the thoughts of a people on any subject in little more than a generation. We have some remarkable examples of that. The military teaching in the schools of Germany changed that country from a peaceful to a military one. The glorifying of commerce in the schools of Japan made that country a great commercial country within a very short time. Through their teaching of goodwill and the spirit of fellowship and brotherhood, the schools of Denmark within a generation made that country one of the outstanding countries in cooperation and peace. I think our schools should be used to develop the idea that no one can be an efficient citizen who has not an international outlook. Our schools should seek to develop the international mind, and we should try to get away from the old days when it was thought: "They should take who have the power, and they should keep who can." That is not so universally the spirit to-day as it was a few years ago. We do not so firmly believe that the race is to the swift and the battle to the strong; we are emerging from a competitive age into a cooperative age. I do not think I need to point out the trends because I am addressing intelligent people who have noted them here and there. To my mind the schools at least should be left free to give the lead on this great subject of reaching higher moral ground; in showing the people that after all the world is a community in which we all live, and that the good of one is the good of all. This afternoon I quoted the right hon. the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition to show that they thought that we had left the old methods behind and were taking up new ways of settling international disputes, and I will not repeat the quotations.

Those who support military training for the youth of this country say that it is a splendid means of instilling discipline. I think it was Brigadier-General MacBrien or Major-General MacBrien—I would not get the titles mixed for anything in the world, as I do not want to take any glory away from him—who, speaking in Montreal on this subject, took great trouble to point out the benefit of the discipline that came through cadet training. I think those who make that claim confuse self-control with regimentation. There is a great difference between discipline as an aid to education and education as an aid to disciplined manhood and womanhood.

The one is force; the other is character. I believe that a cadet is trained not to order his own affairs, but to be an efficient instrument in the hands of his superiors, doing the things that they command for the purposes they desire.

Another great argument that is advanced in favour of cadet training and keeping everybody ready for a world scrap all the time is that, with human nature as it is, we need always to be prepared, going on the assumption that human nature is a very low thing and that it never changes. I was interested in reading what Tagore, the great Indian poet, had to say on this subject. Hon. members will have noticed that Tagore visited Canada, and while he was in the city of Vancouver he addressed the International Educational Conference there. He has this to say about human nature:

> In prehistoric age man ate man. Any claiming it an anti-social or immoral practice would be told it was human nature, but human instinct of cannibalism changed its physical character and took an economic aspect. I know the spirit of fight is ingrained in man, but the urging is also inherent in him to transmute its nature from the brutal to the human. When he has passed through his present state of physical ferocity he will, no doubt, have more than enough to fight about, but on a higher plane, intellectual, moral and spiritual.

I think human nature does change and I do not think the argument that has been advanced is any argument in favour of cadet training.

But probably the strongest argument against it is that it is contrary to the true spirit of education. The purpose of education is to develop the full rounded powers of the individual, to develop initiative, the power of selection of action, the will to act. Education should enlarge the vision of the student and prepare him to live in an ever-widening community.

Mr. SPENCER: Could we have a little more order?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Miss MACPHAIL: It is quite time there were more women in the House of Commons. Women consider the things that affect boys and girls as being of very great importance. Men are too prone to think that only things that concern dollars and cents are important. In any worthwhile educational system the child and the interests of the child, and not the state and the interests of the state, should be the centre. In true education the child would be the centre of interest and everything would revolve around that idea. This would in the long run be better for the state.

[Miss Macphail.]

Military training subordinates the will of the individual, and that certainly is contrary to true education. It kills initiative. An old poem, familiar to us all, describes very aptly what it does:

> Their's not to reason why,
> Their's but to do and die.

There is no selection for the individual and he becomes a machine. I think I put on Hansard three or four years ago a quotation from Bertrand Russell on the Principles of Social Reconstruction. Let me quote three or four lines from John Langdon Daines, a well known English educator. He says:

> The result—

Of cadet training, to which he is very much opposed.

> —is that the young generation has no chance of having free ideals and shaping evolution by their means; instead he is shaped to the existing forms and to the ideas which it pleases his rulers he should possess.

In this case the House of Commons are his rulers. John Dewey, who is very well known in Canada as a distinguished American educator, has this to say about military training:

> Military training "is undemocratic, barbaric and educationally wholly unwise."

We are coming to the time when we shall be scientific enough to take the advice of people who are experts on any given subject. These men whom I have quoted are experts in the field of education and we should listen to them.

Recently a survey was made of the school system of British Columbia by two educational experts, Doctor Putman and Doctor George Weir of the University of Columbia. They had this to say about military training in the schools:

> We take strong exception to the plan of having any part of this work done by militia officers, who naturally give it a military bent.

But as the Minister of National Defence pointed out to me last year, a second commission was appointed and it gave a contrary opinion. Whether that was because the first one did not give an opinion suitable to the powers that be, I do not know. It looks as if it were the reason and I would need to know some of the facts of the case before I would believe it was not. This year many people went to the educational conference in Vancouver, the one that was addressed by Tagore and also by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. What was said there on cadet training, I do not know, but something must have been said about it, because the result of it was that the Lethbridge Board of Education decided, after one of their number had attended that conference, that they would no longer have cadet training in the schools of Lethbridge and they discontinued it. The organized farmers in the different provinces of Canada have again and again taken their stand as being opposed to cadet training. Organized labour has done the same thing many times. Certain women's organizations have taken a similar stand. None of the churches has yet reached that point, but they are getting there. The question has been discussed and a motion to the effect was almost carried last year. There is still hope that some time before long they, too, will take a stand against military training in schools. The most forward-looking women's organization on peace that I know of is the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, whose international president is Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago. These are outstanding women who have given a good deal of time and thought, and indeed much suffering, in the cause of peace. At their Dublin conference, which I unfortunately was not able to attend, they passed the following resolution:

> We women of the Women's International League are of the opinion that the time has come to educate all children for peace; we hold it to be a crime against the souls of ripening youth to picture war to them as a necessity, or even as a moral duty; to train them in war-handicraft and instruct them in the art of killing.

I think that is very beautifully put, and it is all very true.

In conclusion, let me say that I am opposed to cadet training in schools because I believe it is contrary to true education, making the state, and not the child, the first consideration. I am opposed to it because I believe it is not good physical training, because it cramps the mind and lowers the moral sense of youth, causing it to rely upon force rather than upon character. It does not result in self-discipline, and it prevents active and understanding work as a world citizen, as the word is constituted now. It discounts faith and counts on fear. It is contrary to the teachings of great moral and religious teachers of the ages.

To teach military training and the spirit of peace at the same time is to brand ourselves as moral cowards and hypocrites in the eyes of youth, and I know nothing we could do that would be more disastrous for this country and the world at large. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River, that item No. 72 be reduced by $499,999.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to review in a few sentences the history of this movement. Ever since 1862 provision has been made in Canada for cadet training in the schools. Between 1908 and 1910 agreements were entered into between the different provinces under which the provinces that desired physical training and cadet training might have it, and might have grants accordingly. Every province has come into the scheme. The scheme is purely optional. There is no compulsion about it of any kind or description; any school at any time which does not desire it need not have it, and any boy whose parents do not want him to take cadet training does not need to take it.

The appropriation of physical training as compared with cadet training is indicated by these figures: last year there were trained for physical training certificates 6,644 teachers, all at the expense of the country, as against only 318 who trained as cadet instructors.

I have given the syllabus to the committee on former occasions. It includes physical training, squad drill, signalling, the teaching of alertness, preparation for vocations, first aid, scouting, rifle shooting, organized games, lectures on citizenship and lectures by business men and others on various vocations. Those are the general subjects which are taken up in connection with cadet training purely, but physical training constitutes the greatest proportion of the cadet training as carried on in the schools at the present time.

I think the best and shortest answer which might be made is that by far the greatest number of institutions in respect to which the grant is made are in the province of Quebec, that the greatest increase this year by far in cadet training has been in the province of Quebec, that the movement is supported by the clergymen of the province of Quebec, who obviously cannot be charged with a desire to cultivate the militaristic spirit. I do submit, as I have submitted to this committee before, that the amendment should not carry.

Mr. BOURASSA: I cannot let the last words of the Minister of National Defence pass without giving some explanation. His words would leave the impression that generally in the province of Quebec the clergy or the educational institutions are in favour of cadet training. They are not, if the minister will allow me; for I know the province of Quebec a little better than he does. Unfortunately, I admit, some of the educational institutions have been induced to adopt this system, and I must say that some of them have adopted it not from high patriotic motives but simply because of the money grants; and I am not especially proud of them for that, nor do I think that a very large proportion of the citizens of the province of Quebec are especially proud of them for it.

The number of people in the province of Quebec, as elsewhere, who agree with the general principles that have just been expressed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey is much larger than the minister may imagine; but in the province of Quebec as elsewhere there are people who will let themselves go for a long time before they realize the consequences of their action.

The minister says that this movement has been in operation for sixty years. Of course, a good many things have been in operation for sixty years and over. Many things were in operation before the war that led the world to the war. It was because many things were let go for years before the war that the war suddenly caught the world without its realizing what was upon it. Of course, a few men did realize what was coming and a few men took advantage of that blindness of the world at large to prepare for the war and launch it upon the world. But since the war, some of these men even have come to see things differently. There were men in various countries of the world who before the war were preparing both young and older men for war, but who are now endeavouring to prepare them for peace. That is precisely the question. Are we going to do after the war the things that will counteract the forces for war, just as before the war we did the things that prepared for and led to the war?

We send every year a delegate or several delegates to the League of Nations, and we have adhered to every public peace move. Splendid orations have been made by the official representatives of Canada at Geneva and elsewhere to show that Canada is prepared to do everything for the cause of peace. But the cause of peace or any other cause is not advanced simply by speeches. It is advanced by the general trend of public opinion. It is advanced by such moral and political forces as are brought to bear upon public opinion to lead it in the right direction.

If we start with the schools, it is not only the question of cadet training in itself, but it is the whole tendency of education in the schools. It varies according to the provinces and according to the educational institutions; but certainly there are some educational institutions in this country which are still going on as they did before the war, developing in the minds of the children something unnatural which changes the nature of the child, and that is the idea that war and everything connected with war is the most glorious thing for the nation and for the individuals composing the nation. The child goes out from the school with that notion, that the great heroes of history are not those men and women who work for peace or for moral or intellectual progress, but those men who are forceful enough or brutal enough to be great conquerors and victors by force of arms. The heroes of all history are the war heroes. Take most of the textbooks still used in our schools in all the provinces, in Quebec and elsewhere. In the books used in Ontario you will see more names of English officers and generals, and in Quebec more names of French generals before the conquest, but through them all runs the same spirit, that war is the most glorious thing which the nation or the individuals composing it can think of. I admit that this government and this parliament have nothing to do with that part of education, but when you take all these things together, the encouragement given by this government to cadet training. glorifying military heroes in the school textbooks and the general trend given to the child's mind in the schools all over the country, it simply means this, that while we talk peace in public speeches and at international gatherings we are not doing the main thing to prepare the future generations in this country for peace. They are doing more of that in the old countries. They are doing it at present in Germany, in France, also, and, of course, in England, and it is being done not only by individuals but by institutions. They are developing the peace mind, and they are not being discouraged by the public powers. That is especially true of Germany. Whatever view may be taken of the responsibility of Germany in the great war, and probably Germany was chastised by defeat, if there is a country in Europe at the present time which is working for peace in that most efficient manner which is so characteristic of the Germans it is Germany. They have gone to the root of the thing. In the years that preceded the war, and more particularly before the war of 1870, the schools of Germany were said to be preparatory schools for the army. Today the schools of Germany, from the primary school to the university, are the preparatory schools of the peaceful generations to come. Having felt the scourge of war, having realized that war is not only a crime against humanity, but the greatest calamity that can befall any nation, they are now preparing the youth of their country to prevent war in the future. They are not doing it to the same extent in France unfortunately, but there also, there is at least a certain reaction against war. In England the reaction is stronger, and I hope with the political change on the horizon that the work of peace will be enhanced there as well as in Germany.

Well now, what are we going to do, first, as a portion of the British Empire, and second, as one of the nations of the world? Are we going to stand pat? Are we going to proceed along the old routine, which has been followed since 1862 the minister has just said; or are we going to react energetically and intelligently? Are we going to make our professions of love of peace true or not; or, as the member for South-east Grey has said, are we going to stamp ourselves, not intentionally but as a matter of fact, with the stamp of hypocrisy by preaching peace before the world and not putting it into practice at home?

The great difficulty in Geneva to-day is to prepare the nations for disarmament. Everybody admits that it is useless to talk of peace if the nations do not disarm. Why does not the cause of disarmament make more progress? Because some of the nations connected with the League of Nations have not disarmed according to the solemn pledge they gave in the Versailles treaty, on the pretence that under present conditions they cannot disarm. The result is that no nation disarms.

Physical disarmament is of course very important. It is very essential and very practical to reduce the extent and the effectiveness of the weapons of war. But it is still more important to disarm morally, it is still more important to change the mind which produces the causes which finally make use of the arms of war. Warships, cannons, poison gases do not start by themselves, they do not create the causes of war. They are more or less powerful means of war in the hands of the government of any country. But they create the scourge of war the moment the moral causes of war crop up or create the occasion which launches war. The physical means are simply the means to the end, and physical disarmament will not be accomplished, or will be useless, until moral disarmament has been brought about.

Now, can we educate the youth of Germany, or the youth of France, or the youth of England, or of Italy in the love of peace? No, we cannot. But we can do something to educate the children of Canada in the love of peace. Does this government think it is a duty to the Canadian nation to give the various provinces money in order to prepare cannon fodder in the form of young boys taught at school to love war, to love military uniforms, to love the glamour of war until they have tasted of it? If we are sincere in our love of peace why do not we make some offers to the various provinces to help them in establishing some kind of peace education? I am sure that in the province of Quebec some of those institutions to which the minister has referred would be mighty glad to organize a peace department rather than a war department; but they are still doing what the minister says the federal government has been doing—they continue to do what they did before. Well, they should be induced to do something else.

This afternoon I have been reading an extremely interesting lecture given in Paris —and this is a sign of the times—by a Hungarian diplomat, one of the representatives of his country at the League of Nations. Of course, four or five years ago he would not have been listened to in Paris. Discarding his official capacity, and speaking as a human being appealing to his fellow beings, whether of French or of foreign origin, he asked them and I ask now: Why don't we look through this question? If we do, then we find out that there are two or three obstacles to the establishment of peace. One of them, of course, is the absurd system of treaties that was built up in the days of rancour and hatred immediately after the war, built up by the victors against the vanquished, which naturally could not be a sensible peace. But that may be arranged, and of course will be arranged. Common sense will prevail over blind passion. The second obstacle is the system of alliances which arose out of those nonsensical treaties. That also may be arranged. But those two causes will not disappear before you have created in the masses of the people of each country a state of mind which will not only permit but impose such a reform. Disarmament will not be brought about in every country the world over, treaties will not be revised, alliances will not be broken and replaced by the real exercise of the forces of arbitration under the League of Nations, until in all countries that peace spirit is created.

Well, that peace spirit will not grow of itself. We have helped to create the contrary spirit. For generations we have been doing that without realizing the import of our action. Governments were no more realizing what they were coming to than those educational institutions in Quebec or elsewhere are realizing to-day what they are preparing for the next generation. For years they have received a certain amount of money from the federal government to costume a few boys, making them caricatures of soldiers, and they continue doing that. Well, suppose we assisted practically and do something to counteract that spirit, to prepare armies of peace, and to develop the mind of peace in those boys instead of the mind of war. The mind of war develops by itself under that false system. Then with a certain degree of pride and sincerity we could go to Geneva and elsewhere and prove that within the British Empire, as one of the main units of that splendid galaxy of nations, we are helping the cause of peace, the cause of disarmament, and that through the British Empire as well as through our own individual influence at Geneva and elsewhere we are also helping the cause of peace.

So long as we do not take the means to cure the war spirit within ourselves it is almost useless to talk peace outside. It is not altogether useless to do so, because it enables a few people to realize, as the member for southeast Grey realized long ago, and has so expressed it, that there is something false in this system. But this government which is pledged to peace, this government which in the province of Quebec especially has appealed to all the feelings of peace against the warlike party on the other side of the house, should be consistent in Quebec and elsewhere, and advocate a peace policy not only at election time when their candidates appeal to that feeling in Quebec, but in this parliament and in all the provinces of the Dominion.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 15; nays, 56.

Item agreed to.

General stores, $891,800.

Mr. FRASER: I had some correspondence with the department in connection with providing further accommodation for the stores in the city of Kamloops. There is a large quantity of stores there kept in a very unsuitable building and I should like to know whether the minister has made provision for further storage accommodation at that point.

Mr. RALSTON: In the provision which has been made in connection with military district No. 11, there is an item with regard to Kamloops drill hall, providing for increased storage accommodation. I presume that is what my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. FRASER: Is there any added amount?

Mr. RALSTON: No. We know the general nature of the repairs which are being made in the whole district. The repairs are made on request from district headquarters.

Item agreed to.

Manufacturing establishments, $587,000.

Mr. SPENCER: To what manufacturing establishments does this item refer, how many are there, and where are they?

Mr. RALSTON: There is the Dominion arsenal at Quebec. There is also a building at Lindsay but it is not used.

Mr. SPENCER: These are for munitions?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, small arms ammunition and a certain amount of eighteen pounder.

Mr. SPENCER: Are there any private concerns manufacturing ammunition?

Mr. RALSTON: The Dominion Cartridge Company makes sporting ammunition.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it run for private profit?

Mr. RALSTON: The Dominion Cartridge Company makes sporting ammunition.

Mr. SPENCER: Does it make ammunition for export?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think so.

Mr. SPENCER: Where are the uniforms made?

Mr. RALSTON: There a few firms engaged in this line, such as Workman in Montreal, Woods Manufacturing Company in Ottawa, Grant-Holden-Graham in Ottawa, Clayton in Halifax, and various minor ones.

Mr. SPENCER: We need a lot of uniforms for our soldiers, and we have considerable spare help in our penitentiaries—men who are very badly in want of work to do. The penitentiaries make a large quantity of goods for the government in the way of post office bags as well as uniforms for some of the mounted police. Why should not these particular uniforms be made in those institutions? It would be advantageous from the standpoint of prison discipline, inasmuch as it would provide more work for the prisoners, and it would save the country a lot of money.

Mr. RALSTON: We have some war stock on hand. The principal objection to my hon. friend's suggestion is the obvious one, in which the Minister of Labour would be interested, namely, that it would be regarded as competing with Canadian labour.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am afraid that is not true. Organized labour in Canada has stated repeatedly that it wants the inmates of our penitentiaries to be given productive labour with pay in order to provide for the dependents of prisoners. That obstacle is entirely removed.

Mr. RALSTON: If it is with pay I do not see the advantage.

Miss MACPHAIL: There is a great advantage. At the moment the wives and families of men who are serving prison sentences are suffering. The men in the penitentiaries are given their food and they have a roof over their heads; and while one can hardly say that they have the creature comforts, at least they are able to keep life in their bodies. But that is not always true of their wives and dependents. I can see a great advantage in paying prisoners for any work they do. It is time we began to use a little common sense in the government of Canada. There is no reason on earth, except the one the minister can think of at the moment, why uniforms for soldiers should not be made in the penitentiaries. I have talked with a good many men who have to do with getting orders from the government departments for manufacturing units in the penitentiaries, and they have the utmost difficulty getting such orders from the different government departments.

Mr. SPENCER: If the objection were removed which the minister sees from the point of view of his colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), would he still object to placing orders with the penitentiaries?

Mr. RALSTON: I should be glad to consider the question of having garments made in these institutions if this objection were removed and if the workmanship were satisfactory and the proper materials were used.

Mr. BANCROFT: I wish to support the suggestion made by the hon. member (Mr. Spencer). In the institution at Stony Mountain, in the constituency I have the honour to represent, they do exceptionally good work. They make the uniforms worn by the guards, the wardens and other officials of the penitentiaries, and those uniforms are equal in fit and quality to those used by the militia. I feel sure that there would be no trouble at all in getting uniforms of proper fit and style made in our penitentiaries, and I hope the minister will investigate this question and see if something cannot be done along the lines suggested.

Mr. GEARY: Would the minister tell me if he has under consideration the issue of coloured pre-war clothing, also what is the supply of khaki clothing on hand, the supply of pre-war issues on hand which were turned in at the beginning of the war; and what hope the militia may entertain with regard to the issue of the coloured clothing in the near future?

Mr. RALSTON: As my hon. friend knows, representations have been made from time to time with regard to the coloured clothing, but the most the department has been able to do is to authorize the use of coloured clothing on certain special parades. With regard to the supply on hand, I think we have very little pre-war clothing in our own stores; some of the units have some of this clothing but we have very little in the department. I cannot give my hon. friend the quantity of khaki clothing on hand.

Item agreed to.

Non-permanent active militia, $2,315,000.

Mr. SPENCER: The Kellogg peace pact was signed this year, and we must remember that last year the Prime Minister said that every department of the government was a department of peace, although the army of Canada is not very large, still it does not get very much smaller, and I would like to ask the minister, in view of the fact that the world is turning to peace, if he cannot see his way clear to make some slight reduction in the army of this country.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought I answered that question when I answered my hon. friends from Southeast Grey and Winnipeg North Centre; under the present situation I do not see how we can reduce the number any further. As I have endeavoured to point out, there has been a reduction less than it was before the war; money does not go nearly as far now and we are training only about half as many men. I am afraid I cannot accede to my hon. friend's request.

Mr. EVANS: At this time I would like to secure from the government a statement as to their policy with regard to the militia. Surely the minister does not expect us to believe that all these men are necessary for a police force for Canada; that cannot be so. There must be some policy behind the whole thing. Last year there was an increase of $230,700 in this vote. That would seem to indicate that the government has a definite policy, and I would like the minister now to show us the need for this vote and the reason why the expenditure under his department is increasing from year to year. I cannot help but think that we are wrongly teaching young men how to bear arms and giving them instruction in the art of killing.

I was very much struck the other day by reading that Rasmussen, the Danish Minister of Defence, the day after the signing of the Locarno treaty introduced into the Folketing of the Rigsdag of Denmark a bill for the disarmament of the military and naval forces of that country. At the time his colleague Doctor Moltesen, Minister of Finance, declared that the frontiers of Denmark were more secure than ever they had been. Both parties agreed to the disarmament bill on the ground that they were safer under this agreement than they would be than by arming the nation.

I believe that if our government would make a grant which would enable men of foresight and intelligence to study questions which might arise and involve us in interantional affairs we would have no need to pass a vote of $20,000,000 for militia and defence. I want to also emphasize the fact that our action in this regard might very well be misinterpreted in different parts of the world. I think the Anglo-French pact of last year should give us some thought; our action now might be taken as favouring one side or the other. That pact certainly caused a great deal of concern both in Europe and America, and public opinion both in France and in England compelled its withdrawal. I am glad to see that public opinion on this subject is being crystallized; I am also glad to know that the Canadian public are taking up this matter as never before. In a letter which I received the other day from Saskatoon I am told that there is to be a provincial peace conference in Saskatchewan, organized by the women of that province, and every public body which in any way moulds public opinion has been asked to take part.

Coming back to the item under consideration, I think it is quite unnecessary that we should pass it at this time; I cannot see that it is needed and I am going to move in amendment that it be reduced by $2,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I really cannot think that my hon. friend, while he may be serious in the sentiments he has expressed, is serious in moving this amendement

Mr. EVANS: Yes, certainly I am serious.

Mr. RALSTON: As I endeavoured to explain, the permanent force is simply an instructional cadre; it does not even form an extensive police force. As I informed the committee previously, taking all available men from eighteen to twenty-one for three years' service our strength would be something like 240,000, but this item provides for 12 days of training for only 33,000 men. The vote has not been increased over last year; it is exactly the same, so I am at a loss to understand my hon. friend's reference to votes increasing each year. Let me repeat that I do not think my hon. friend is serious in practically suggesting that this vote be wiped out entirely, or in other words that there be no defence force in Canada at all. As I have explained, it is regarded as a part of our national equipment that we should have some defence force. Canada's fortunate geographical position is such that we are not compelled to make the preparations which European countries must carry on; we do not maintain any standing army, and I feel that my hon. friends do not quite appreciate the fact that Canada is disarmed to an extent far greater than any other country in the world. I think that is clearly shown when I point out the fact that the per capita expenditure in Canada is only $1.59 as compared with $2.60 for the next lowest country. Let me point out one other instance. The little country of Guatemala, in Central America, has a population about one-fourth as large as the population of Canada, yet that little country maintains a permanent force of over 5,000 men as compared with about 3,300 in the permanent force in Canada. I just mention that fact to show that we cannot be accused of being over-militaristic and that we are simply endeavouring to maintain a skeleton force which may be called upon in time of emergency. We all hope, just as much as does my hon. friend, that that emergency may never arise. My hon. friend has referred to the very laudable action which was taken by Denmark in connection with disarmament. An editorial appeared in the London Times only a few days ago complaining rather bitterly of Denmark's action in this respect. That paper contended that Denmark was not leaving herself in a position to carry out the international obligations which she had undertaken under the covenant of the league, and it claimed that the action which that country had taken in respect to the so-called disarmament—after all, if you look at the matter carefully you will discover that it is hardly disarmament, because she has made a coast patrol out of her navy and a police force out of her army —was not consistent with her international obligations.

Miss MACPHAIL: In case of trouble within Canada would the non-permanent active militia be called out by whoever calls them out?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not want my answer to be considered as being made glibly, but I would say that that would depend on whoever calls them out.

Miss MACPHAIL: Who does?

Mr. RALSTON: If I remember correctly, it depends on our constitution; I think it is the attorney general of the province.

Miss MACPHAIL: When they were called out in Nova Scotia did the non-permanent active militia go down there?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Miss MACPHAIL: Have they ever been called out in the history of Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: Not that I know of, and that is what I was endeavouring to point out.

Miss MACPHAIL: What good are they?

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid my hon. friend is not listening, or else I am not making myself clear. I have endeavoured to point out that the backbone of the defence forces of Canada is the non-permanent active militia. That is not the police force which I have been talking about; it is the defence force for purposes of defence when necessary.

Miss MACPHAIL: This afternoon the minister pointed out, that we had no fear from American aggression, to prove that he quoted from the speech which the Prime Minister had made in Geneva. He did not tell us just whom we should fear; I have no fear of anyone and I do not think anyone else has. This non-permanent active militia does not belong to the permanent force; if it did I would be more in sympathy with the minister. It belongs to a defence force to defend us against something which does not exist. We need this money for so many things, but I do not want to start discussing that question because it would take too long. I want to say to the minister that it is no dislike of him or lack of appreciation of his ability and his desire to serve his country which has kept us on his trail all afternoon. I wish the Prime Minister would move him on to some other department where we could approve of him and put someone in as Minister of National Defence who might be open to censure. I would like to know where the camps are; how many trained last year, and for how many days; do the same men train year after year or is a new batch sent out annually; what do they do while they train; do they fight sham battles, do they practise bombing, do they dig trenches and try the poisonous gases to see whether they are effective, or what do they do?

Mr. RALSTON: Last year the approximate number which trained at the camps was 33,581 of all ranks. These men received twelve days' training, some at local headquarters and some in the camps. We have not sufficient money to take all these men to camps. The artillery camps are Petawawa, Camp Hughes and Sarcee Camp. The central camp schools are at Camp Borden, Kingston, Connaught, which is near Ottawa, Petawawa and Sarcee Camp. The Central camp schools are as follows:

District—
- No. 1 London.
- No. 2 Niagara.
- No. 3 Barriefield.
- No. 4 St. John's.
- No. 5 Lévis.
- No. 6 Aldershot.
- No. 7 Sussex.
- No. 10 Hughes.
- No. 11 Vernon, Rodd Hill, Heal's and Macauley.
- No. 12 Moose Jaw and Dundurn.
- No. 13 Sarcee.

The district camp schools are as follows:

District—
- No. 1 Port Stanley and London.
- No. 2 Niagara and Huntsville.
- No. 3 Barriefield and Peterborough.
- No. 4 St. John's, Ayer's Cliff and Pointe aux Trembles.
- No. 5 Cookshire, Lévis and Rimouski.
- No. 6 Aldershot and Halifax.
- No. 7 Sussex.
- No. 10 Hughes.
- No. 11 Vernon, Macauley, Maple Bay and Heal's.
- No. 12 Moose Jaw and Dundurn.
- No. 13 Sarcee.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Defence a few moments ago made the statement that a skeleton force was being maintained in the Dominion, but I observe that in the estimates for 1927-28 a total amount of $15,932,812 was provided for national defence; in 1928-29 the amount had jumped to $18,936,446, and in 1930 it is up to $20,123,378, quite an appreciable increase since 1927-28. If we keep on increasing the estimates at this same rate we will be putting a good deal of life into the bones of the skeleton which the hon. minister spoke about this afternoon. I find that practically all the various items show an increase in the past three years, irrespective of what they cover.

ranging from five to twenty per cent. If that is the way the minister preaches peace propaganda I would like to know what he would do if he assumed a warlike tone.

I cannot see the need of this expenditure for national defence, as I think the trend of events is in an entirely different direction. The nations of the world are beginning to realize the absolute futility of armaments, and this is borne out by the report of the League of Nations. I cannot see why Canada should spend the money which she is spending to-day. It is hardly fair for the minister to compare us with some of the smaller republics in South America; it is hardly fair for him to compare us with some of the European countries, because we are in a totally different position. We have the United States to the south of us and, as has been pointed out this afternoon, I do not think we spend one cent in protecting our shores from any possible menace from the south. I do not think there is any likelihood of an invasion from the north, and possibly the same statement would apply to an invasion from the east or west. Therefore, I cannot see why our estimates should be continually increasing, and I trust that the minister will recognize the protests which have been growing from year to year and that next year instead of an increase we will have a considerable decrease in these estimates.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Evans has moved that vote No. 83 be reduced by the amount of $2,000,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does not the minister believe that the reason large numbers of men go to these camps is a very natural desire on their part to gather together out-of-doors in the summer time and spent twelve days away from their daily toil? Has he ever thought of the tremendous good that would come by having camps similar to these, with the military idea wholly eradicated, with the camps given over to physical training, to the goodwill that will be generated by the conferences and to active educational work along any line, cultural, international or anything they like? My opinion, which I may be foolish in voicing for the first time in the house, is that the reason men go so readily to the camps is that deep in their hearts there is a desire of getting together; the need of good fellowship, the freedom from the ordinary toils of life: these are the things that lure them there. The men themselves are not particularly interested in the military idea and might be quite glad if it was eliminated altogether. I give this as a constructive suggestion.

[Mr. Heaps.]

Mr. GARDINER: May I be permitted to ask the minister, in view of the scientific research into destructive forces for war purposes, what value in a future war will be the non-permanent active militia? Will it be of any value at all?

Mr. RALSTON: I can assure my hon. friend that man power is still the basis of any defence scheme or any defence force all over the world. My hon. friend is talking about auxiliaries in the shape of mechanized forces. The principle of military training still holds good.

Amendment negatived.

Item agreed to.

Permanent force, $4,950,000.

Mr. CLARK: I wonder whether the minister could give a statement, not necessarily to-night—I realize he cannot do that—as to how many civilians are employed in this department and the total salaries paid to them over a period of years commencing from say 1910 to date?

Mr. RALSTON: I think I have the information upon which such a statement could be made up. My hon. friend understands that it would take a little time to have it prepared.

Mr. CLARK: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: Complaints have reached me as to the engagement and discharge of men in the permanent force about Christmas time last year. I understand that men enlist for a year with a probationary period of three months. A number of men had enlisted and seemed to be assured of their winter's service, but before the expiration of the three months, to be exact, the day before Christmas, men in different districts were let out without notice. They were put out into the world in the middle of winter, so to speak, after they had enlisted for a year and had every reason to expect that they were settled for that time at least. Complaints as to what was thought to be rather hard treatment have reached me and I should be glad if the minister could give me any information with regard to the matter.

Mr. RALSTON: This was simply a case of not having sufficient money. I thought it was in January. I have under my hand a circular on this matter, from which I will read extracts:

It was found that the permanent force vote would not provide for the strength of 3,272, as it then stood, for the remainder of the fiscal year. The strength would have to be reduced by 112 so as to bring the vote within the appropriation.

These were the men who were discharged.

(a) That all deserters who have returned since September be discharged at once.

(b) To discharge all recruits, except in the cavalry and horse artillery, who have been enlisted this autumn and have not yet been finally approved by their commanding officer; that is, within three months of enlistment.

(c) To permit all other ranks who may desire, to be granted a free discharge, which would be granted under paragraph 386 (xvi) king's regulations, Canada, "his services being no longer required."

The result was that by the end of December —and my hon. friend is right about the date —there was a net reduction of 200 against the permanent force vote. As a matter of fact, out of the 200 there were only 66 of the class to which my hon. friend refers. Most of them were those who requested their discharge.

Mr. GEARY: That is a circular addressed to different depots or districts?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: Could the minister give me the number discharged in each district?

Mr. RALSTON: I think there is a return of the number discharged. The figures are as follows:

Military District	Number Discharged
No. 1	17
No. 2	21
No. 3	10
No. 4	8
No. 5	18
No. 6	51
No. 7	Nil
No. 10	23
No. 11	38
No. 12	1
No. 13	11
Headquarters	1
Total	199

Mr. PLUNKETT: What district is No. 7?

Mr. RALSTON: St. John, New Brunswick.

Mr. PLUNKETT: Were the discharges carried out indiscriminately or proportionately across the whole Dominion? Was the number discharged in the western provinces on the same basis as the number discharged in Quebec and the eastern provinces?

Mr. RALSTON: The discharges were carried out by classes according to the principle which I read in the circular. In St. John it happens that there is no permanent force and there are no recruits. That is why there is not any dicharge there. In military district No. 6, which is Halifax, there were fifty-one.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the minister give us some particulars in regard to this vote? It is rather hard to understand why it costs about $5,000,000 to keep up a permanent force of about 3,300 men.

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to remind my hon. friend that I thought we were reducing this vote a good deal. The vote for the permanent force in 1922 was $6,255,000, and it is now $4,950,000. The purpose of the vote is to cover expenses in connection with the general maintenance of the permanent active militia, including pay, allowances, subsistence, forage, fuel, light, water supply, medical and dental services. The estimate is based upon a strength of 330 officers and 3,068 other ranks, making a total of 3,398 of all ranks. This represents a decrease of 4 officers and 17 other ranks as against last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to have some particulars of the vote. The minister's explanation does not seem to cover the point. There are about 3,330 men in this force and yet it costs about $5,000,000 to maintain them.

Mr. RALSTON: Pay and allowances amount to $4,096,000. The balance is made up of transport and travelling; stores; equipment and supplies; printing and stationery supplies; grants to messes, library, et cetera; light and power; water and taxes; telephone rentals; removing garbage and refuse; medical services; dental services; veterinary services; contribution towards pensions of British army personnel on loan to Canada; courses of instruction, and miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, including premium on surety bonds, advertising and so forth. The big item is pay and allowances.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the pay for a private Canadian soldier?

Mr. RALSTON: The private soldier over eighteen receives pay, $438; allowance for clothing, $182.50; fuel, $54.75; light, $18.25; rations, $182.50, or a total for the single man of $438 pay, plus $438 allowance, or $876. The married allowance is $255.50. So the married man receives $438 pay, plus $693.50, or $1,131.50.

Mr. SPENCER: That is by the year?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. The enlistment is for three years.

Item agreed to.

Royal Military College, $375,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How many students were at the college last year, and what was the cost?

Mr. RALSTON: There were 199 students at the college last year, and the full vote of $375,000 was spent.

Mr. BRADY: I would like the minister to tell the committee as to the real value of the Royal Military College, because I believe there is not an institution in Canada to-day that is doing such a splendid work. You will find there students from the various high schools throughout Canada. They have gone there in doubt as to their future, and they have come out fortified with knowledge and vision, with character beyond words, and they take a prominent place among the bright young men of Canada. I visited the Royal Military College some weeks ago and I found there students from every part of Canada, including western British Columbia, and among them students that I myself had taught in Prince Rupert. I would ask the minister to stand up right now and let us know why he is not adding to this vote, and why he is a little bit timid about showing the educational value of the Royal Military College and asking for only $375,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: What was the number of students who attended the institution in 1920, and what was the cost that year?

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend the number of students, but I have here the number of graduates. There were 33 in 1920, and 34 last year. The amount voted in 1920-1921 was $349,819.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the basis of admission to the college, and do the students pay any of their expenses themselves? I notice that the cost per student figures out to about $1,900.

Mr. RALSTON: First they pay $100 a year, and then for the four years they pay in addition $1,050 for clothing, and so forth; so that the four-year course costs them $1,450. The method of admission is by selection according to merit. My hon. friend will remember the discussion in the house last year. The word "merit" was retained in the statute, and I can assure him that that has been the basis of admission. Allotment is made to the various provinces according to population and applications are received, the educational qualifications being the matriculation examination for the province. There are certain regulations with regard to the age limit and regulations particularly with regard to physical fitness. Having regard to the marks made, showing the scholastic ability of the student, together with his age and physical fitness, selection is made by a selection board up to the allotment of each province.

Mr. BRADY: I am pleased that the minister has given us the qualifications for entrance to the college. For the students from British Columbia, for example, is the senior or junior matriculation essential?

Mr. RALSTON: Without looking up the regulations, I do not think that senior matriculation is required, although senior matriculation gives the student just that much better standing and a preference in selection.

Mr. BRADY: I do feel that the Minister of National Defence has not yet realized the wonderful work that this institution is doing for the youth of Canada. I do say from my knowledge of that institution, and of the young men who were trained there and have come forth from that institution with courage and faith and knowledge and vision, that the minister should stand up to-night and ask not merely for $375,000, but for a larger vote. He should go further; he should encourage in every possible way our Canadian youth to enter an institution wherein virility, purity of life and courage towards attainment are developed to the limit. I do think, sir, that the Canadian people should be proud of the Royal Military College at Kingston and I am glad to be able to say to-night from honest conviction that it is one of the finest institutions in the whole Dominion for educating the young ambitious youth of Canada.

Miss MACPHAIL: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, it is not worth the trouble for me to say that I do not agree with our very affable and polished Irish colleague, but I cannot let his remarks pass without protest. If we want to instil courage in our young men let us elect them to the House of Commons; that will develop it if anything will.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes, it will—if they are men. I think the cost of training our youth at the military college is excessive. It is usually people well able to afford the cost of education who send their children to the military college, and the $1,400 paid by the students for four years is certainly not much.

Mr. RALSTON: It is $1,450.

Miss MACPHAIL: It is not much for four years. But my main objection is not to the cost. As I have said very many times in this house, we have two schools of thought in Canada; one which thinks security can come by peaceful means, and the other which thinks it can come only by military preparation. The military college was established in the days when the latter school of thought was more dominant than it is to-day—for it is still more or less dominant. In those days the blue-blooded young men were sent there. By the way, I do not know how they became blue-blooded; I thought that all Canadians were "red-blooded" anyway. The colour of the blood is a bit confusing anyway. Some of the so-called "cream" of Canada went to the Royal Military College, the idea being that it was a little more exclusive than most educational institutions and that those young men might serve as officers in the Canadian militia in the event of war.

The reason I object to the grant to this college is that the Dominion government is backing the one school of thought in Canada, the military school, and is giving absolutely no help to the other school of thought, which as I said before, think that security does not come from warlike methods. It is high time that we scrapped the military college at Kingston. If the blue-blooded people of Canada—my blood is red—want to train their sons in military tactics, they have already by special legislation taken enough money from the common people to enable them to build a college for the purpose. I cannot sit silent while the House of Commons votes money for the Royal Military College. My own opinion is that it develops snobbery. If it is not military it is snobbish; I think it is possibly both. The young men can go to any university in Canada and be educated for civil life. But, Mr. Chairman, I am getting into deeper water all the time; not only do I disagree with my friend the Minister of National Defence, but now I find myself out of sympathy with the very affable member for Skeena (Mr. Brady).

Mr. BRADY: It is not often, Mr. Chairman, that I really feel at home in the House of Commons, but I do now after listening to the very genial and lovable member for Southeast Grey, who has endeared herself not only to the government—which she often supports—but to the official opposition which she likewise supports, for not later than yesterday evening she supported us on one of the most vital questions that has come before the House of Commons this session. I refer to the debate on the Australian treaty. But much as I revere and appreciate her opinions,—words to me are very significant,—to-night she used three outstanding words when speaking of the Royal Military College — "fashionable" — "blue-blooded" — "snobbery". Now, candidly, I should like to accompany the hon. member for Southeast Grey to the Royal Military College at Kingston, to disprove her statements. During three years only on two occasions has it been my privilege to speak in reply to the very charming and very lovable member for Southeast Grey. After all, hon. members will realize that in the days "when knighthood was in flower" and heroes set out in quest of adventure to rescue some charming female in distress, valour and sentiment were supported by good judgment and discretion. Therefore when to-night I heard the hon. member for Southeast Grey say that the Royal Military College was only for those who are "fashionable," "blue-blooded" and "snobbish", I realized, for the first time in three years that the charming member for Southeast Grey had not visited that splendid institution known as the Royal Military College. Now, I know something of the young men who are educated in the Royal Military College at Kingston. While I would be the last man in the world to reflect upon the integrity, sincerity and truthfulness of the hon. member for Southeast Grey, I must tell her that I know thoroughly the type of young men who go through the Royal Military College at Kingston. The hon. and charming member I know has read her history, and she must know something of the days of the plebeians in ancient Rome. Perhaps there is an analogy between the plebeian and the modern democrat, but I wish to tell the hon. member for Southeast Grey right now, that in my sixteen years knowledge of the Royal Military College not one of the students from British Columbia was fashionable, blue-blooded or snobbish—not one. Who were they Mr. Chairman? They were the young boys who failed to get the benefit of the higher education that the universities afford; they were trying to find their way; they were boys who needed the discipline which the Royal Military College could give in order that they might find their feet. And they found what they sought. I wish to say right now, in the presence of the hon. and gracious member for Southeast Grey, that the young men trained in the Royal Military College in Kingston have come forth from that institution not merely as scientific men—and I know many of them who have taken their B.Sc. and M.Sc.—but as an honour to their fathers and mothers, and they are the pride of the community in which they live. Everyone knows the persuasive powers in this house of the hon. member for Southeast Grey. The moment she rises to her feet, silence reigns in the house, and all give her obeisance. No matter what she says, the male sex bows to her judgment as it has ever done in all ages, to the devoto femineo sexu. Therefore I say that no matter what the hon. member for Southeast Grey says, whether she condemns the Royal Military College or whether she opposes the vote provided for the national defence of Canada, we realize that at least her heart is with us, because I have never yet found myself disagreeing with her even though at times, tentatively, she tries to tell us that if we, the Conservative party, are not good she will vote with the government in power, which she seldom does.

Miss MACPHAIL: Before the resolution carries I want to say that I accept the hon. gentleman's invitation.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Air Force—all expenses in connection with the general maintenance and training of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the auxiliary and reserve air force, including training personnel for civil air operations, $1,697,694.

Mr. BOYS: When the supplementary estimates come up I shall have something to say in reference to Camp Borden.

Mr. CLARK: Is the cost of the air base at St. Hubert, Montreal, included in this vote?

Mr. RALSTON: It is in the next vote.

Mr. CLARK: I can ask the question just as well under this vote. Has the minister reconsidered the decision made by the government last year to establish air bases in other cities, for instance, Vancouver and Halifax? In British Columbia this is considered a very vital matter. Recently the people of Vancouver passed a by-law and they are going to spend $300,000 of the city's own money to establish an air port. It does seem to me that this is a national matter, and in relation to a city like Vancouver, where there is an all the year round port which is likely to become one of the most important ports in North America, the question is one which should engage the attention of the government in a serious manner. Has the government recently considered cooperating with cities like Vancouver and Halifax, where there are national ports, in this very important respect?

Mr. RALSTON: That was considered quite recently, particularly in connection with Halifax. Halifax was very anxious to establish an air port and, like any other city, desired to have assistance given it. We had to give them the same answer we gave Vancouver in that respect. Provision is being made for substantial assistance in connection with the lighting of aerodromes, a matter which has been regarded as a severe tax on the municipalities and those who own them. We have passed an order in council providing for an expenditure of $10,000 as a maximum in connection with lighting, particularly flood lights and special search lights. Boundary lights are, of course, not provided by reason of the fact that each aerodrome has different requirements. But in connection with certain standard lighting equipment the department is making a substantial contribution.

Mr. CLARK: How does the minister justify an airport in Montreal and not at Vancouver?

Mr. RALSTON: The airport at Montreal was established as part of an imperial air route, having regard to the suggestion made at the 1926 imperial conference for the development, if possible, of dirigible communication between Great Britain and the continent of North America. At that time the Prime Minister, who was representing Canada at the conference, undertook that provision should be made for a mooring mast and necessary terminal facilities in Canada, and the aerodrome at St. Hubert was purchased and equipped with that object in view. Perhaps my hon. friend does not know that any commercial companies who are using that aerodrome are paying for the use of it; it is not free.

Mr. CLARK: I raise now the claim of a city like Vancouver; it appears to me that there is a strong claim for the province of British Columbia. During a great part of the year we are five nights on the train from the city of Ottawa—five nights to communicate between the capital of the country and such a city as Vancouver, and six nights so far as Victoria is concerned. We have a strong claim for the establishment of an air service between that part of the country and central Canada; indeed, our claim is stronger than that of Montreal. I appreciate the fact that Montreal has a strong claim, and also the fact that the establishment of the aerodrome there is partly the result of the imperial conference.

Mr. RALSTON: Altogether.

Mr. CLARK: If that was the sole reason—the request of the imperial government—this country would not be spending the money which it is spending on that port. The fact is that this country recognizes its responsibility in developing its airways; that work must be done. Therefore I now advance the claims of the province of British Columbia, because in my opinion it is far more important to establish close and quick connections within our own country than to establish such connections between Canada and some other country.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK: I am glad the Minister of Justice agrees with me; I hope he will bring the matter before council and advocate it very strongly. We on the Pacific coast do feel the need of quicker communication with the centre of Canada, and I think we have very strong claims indeed to some consideration in this respect. We feel so strongly on this question that in Vancouver, as I have said, we have voted $300,000 of our own money for the establishment of an airport for that city, and with all this money being spent we feel that we are entitled to a portion of it.

I bring this matter to the attention of the minister, particularly in view of the fact that if he reorganized his department as I suggested this afternoon, manning it with men sworn in the service of the Department of National Defence instead of civilians employed at very much higher salaries, he could save enough money to go a great deal towards the establishment of a service between the Pacific coast and the central part of Canada.

Mr. MacLAREN: How many cities in Canada have established airports at their own expense, and what are the names of the cities?

Mr. McKENZIE: I should like to ask the minister whether any arrangements have been made between Canada and the United States for the establishment of airports on the border and, if so, what arrangements have been made for joint control.

Mr. RALSTON: No such arrangements have been made. I am having my officers look up the list of cities which have established airports, but perhaps I can give some of them from memory. Kingston is opening its airport to-day and Hamilton is opening its airport on June 6, I believe.

Mr. MacLAREN: At their own expense?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, or at private expense; it is done without any contribution from the Dominion government. London, Ontario, has had an airport for some time, and in addition there are airports at Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and other places. My hon. friend knows of course about St. John, where I think they are spending about $80,000—

Mr. MacLAREN: I think it is about $100,000.

Mr. RALSTON: —and Halifax is spending about $150,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Winnipeg.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, and Fort William.

Mr. BIRD: Would the minister tell the committee how many fatal accidents occurred last year in this service?

Mr. RALSTON: I am informed that there were eighteen fatal accidents in 1928.

Mr. BIRD: How much of the increase is for new equipment, new engines and so on?

Mr. RALSTON: Practically none of the increase will be devoted to new equipment; the greater part will be devoted to the development of air routes.

Mr. BIRD: I should like to take this opportunity to point out that economy certainly should not be practised in regard to equipment. An aeroplane engine is not a very costly piece of mechanism; I suppose $20,000 or $30,000 would pay for the ordinary engine, and I think we should realize that human lives are constantly depending upon these machines.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is under a misapprehension; the cost of an ordinary engine is from $4,000 to $8,000.

Mr. BIRD: Then that makes my argument much stronger, although of course some engines cost much more than that. However, I had occasion to visit one of our larger bases last fall, and although I am not qualified to judge, it struck me at the time that some of the equipment had seen a good deal of service; it seemed to me that some of these engines had been running quite a number of years. Wherever else we economize we should not do so in connection with the equipment of our air service. During my casual visit I was very much impressed with the type of Canadian manning our air service, not only as to personal character but as to the spirit manifested; it seems to me that a new tradition is being created which some day will rival the tradition of the sea. I was also struck with the type of service they were giving in these daily patrols over the waste spaces of northern Manitoba. In the ordinary course of duty these men are performing what I consider to be feats of great heroism, without any notice being taken by the general public; day after day, at the word of command, they take trips hundreds of miles in length over barren wastes. I agree in general with the remarks made on this side of the house to-night; I believe we should reduce our military expenditures, but here is a type of expenditure which is not purely militaristic but which serves a civil purpose as well, and which is helping in the conquest of northern Canada. I wanted to say this word on behalf of the men who are exposing themselves every day in that northern country. I should like to see that their equipment is of the best and that all the modern inventions making for greater safety are supplied to them whatever the cost may be.

Mr. GERSHAW: Could the minister tell us what assistance, if any, is given by his department to the different cities in the establishment of airports?

Mr. RALSTON: I outlined to the committee a few moments ago the assistance we give. We have nothing to do directly with the purchase, the laying out or the preparation of the airports. Our assistance consists of two things; first, we provide the services of officers of the department as frequently as they are necessary, to make surveys of the proposed airports and to advise as to their suitability or as to what is necessary to make them suitable. Then we give assistance in connection with the permanent lighting of these aerodromes up to the amount of $10,000; I think we provide the total cost of the beacon and 50 per cent of the cost of the other lights, and in each case the assistance is limited to $10,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it a fact that the government presents two airplanes to any city which inaugurates a flying club?

Mr. RALSTON: That is a fact.

Mr. SPENCER: Under what conditions is that presentation made?

Mr. RALSTON: The conditions are contained in an agreement, and I will give my hon. friend a brief resumé. The club must have at least ten men who have qualified as pilots, either in the war or by other training; the club must agree to provide an instructor and pay for his services, and provide for the maintenance of the machines and a suitable place for operation. If that is done an agreement is entered into and the department supplies two planes. A bond is taken to provide against injury to the planes through breach of the regulations or on account of negligence. A further provision is contained in the agreement whereby $100 is paid to the club for every man who passes as a certified pilot as a result of the activities of the club. A further provision is that if within one year the club provides another plane, then the department will provide one also.

Mr. CANTLEY: What will be the cost of the mooring mast which is being erected at St. Hubert?

Mr. RALSTON: The total cost, including the amount in the estimates of this year, which will include the cost of land, the work which has been done and which will be done this year, is $1,623,262.16. That includes the land, levelling, draining, mooring tower, winches, hydrogen gas plant, buildings, water supply, railway siding, lighting, fencing, full installation of meteorological equipment, cost of day labour, cost of materials, inspection, miscellaneous items, maintenance and operation.

Mr. CANTLEY: That will complete the project?

Mr. RALSTON: That is what we expect.

Item agreed to.

Construction of magazine, etc., Halifax, $100,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What are the particulars of this item?

Mr. RALSTON: This is a progressive item, to cover the completion of the joint services magazine at Halifax.

Item agreed to.

Mackenzie basin system—radio services—for the maintenance and operation of the Mackenzie division radia system with stations at Dawson, Mayo, Edmonton, Fort Smith, Fort Simpson, Fort Resolution, Aklavik and Herschel island, $140,500.

Mr. BENNETT: What does this cover?

Mr. RALSTON: It covers the telegraph services which we maintain in the Mackenzie basin right up to Dawson city.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any relation between those services and the services maintained by the Department of the Interior and the Department of Public Works? There seems to be a duplication which is very difficult to explain.

Mr. RALSTON: We provide the services for the Department of the Interior.

Item agreed to.

Battlefields memorials, $170,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Have these memorials been completed?

Mr. RALSTON: I think six or seven of them are completed, but the Vimy memorial is not finished and one can hardly guess at the time when it will be completed. I believe it will be at least two or three years. My hon. friend will understand that that is the outstanding Canadian memorial on the other side; the others are comparatively small memorials at some six or seven important points on the battlefields.

Mr. SPENCER: What arrangement is being made to keep the grounds around these memorials in condition?

Mr. RALSTON: The Memorial War Graves Commission which has done such excellent work in connection with the maintenance of the cemeteries are making arrangements with us to do the same sort of work in connection with the memorials.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: What amount is included for Louisburg?

Mr. RALSTON: That would not come under this item.

Item agreed to.

To provide for legal expenses, etc., re-action in connection with regulation of aerial navigation, $13,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Does not the department employ legal men to look after these things?

Mr. RALSTON: This is a reference which was mentioned this afternoon to decide regarding the provincial and federal jurisdiction.

Item agreed to.

Nation Defence—salaries, $764,875; contingencies, $70,000.

Mr. CLARK: Does this item include any increases other than the increase granted to the deputy minister?

Mr. RALSTON: There are no increases in salary at all but there are fourteen new positions in connection with the civil air service.

Mr. BENNETT: Do they come under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: There is an increase in the deputy minister's salary?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister explain that?

Mr. RALSTON: A number of increases were granted in connection with different departments, as the government felt that the time had come when the deputy ministers should be better provided for. The Deputy Minister of National Defence has to handle the militia branch, the naval branch, the military air branch and the civil air branch. In view of his professional qualifications as an engineer, and his long service, experience and efficiency, speaking as minister and head of the department I felt quite justified in recommending the increase.

Mr. CLARK: What is the salary of the chief of general staff?

Mr. RALSTON: $8,000.

Mr. CLARK: I am opposed to this increase, first, on the general ground of increases to any deputy minister at this time. We have in this country numerous civil servants who are not being paid a living wage, whose requests have been advanced at various times during the present session on this side of the house. I see nothing in the supplementary estimates for any increase to the postal workers, who are being paid salaries under $100 a month. It is quite clear from the statements issued by the government that these men are not being paid a living wage according to the standards of government departments; consequently I am opposed to an increase in salary to any deputy minister at this time. I am opposed to an increase to this particular one for very different reasons. First, the men who have occupied the position of chief of general staff are considered the most experienced that the country can find for technical purposes and are supposed to be the most highly trained men we have. For instance, since the war we have had Sir Arthur Currie who, for all practical purposes was chief of staff although perhaps he did not actually occupy the position; and since then we have had General Burstall, General MacBrien, General Thackeray. This country apparently cannot afford to retain in its service men like General MacBrien. If we cannot afford to pay men like that $10,000 a year, we cannot afford to pay a deputy minister $10,000 a year. I am therefore opposed to the payment of any salary such as this to a deputy minister so long as we are unable to pay our civil servants living wages, or to pay men of the experience, for instance, of General MacBrien a salary equal to that now proposed.

I am further opposed to this increase, because in this department we have many soldiers who receive low pay and also we have civilians who are absorbing a very large percentage of the total National Defence estimates. We have not yet received the exact amount that civilians in this department are getting, but this afternoon the minister gave a rough estimate of $2,500,000 which he said later on was, perhaps, too high. In any case, civilians in the Department of National Defence are receiving salaries which are approximately equal to the total upkeep of the non-permanent active forces. Under these circumstances I am opposed to any increase in this vote.

Mr. POWER: May I ask the minister how many generals there are in his department? I memember some years ago there were twenty-three generals employed in the Department of National Defence for something like 3,000 men. In time of war one general was considered enough for a whole brigade, which was a little over 3,000 men, but in time of peace we had twenty-three generals on our payroll. I have never been able to find out just what they did. With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, I do not wish to defend this department or any department which has increased the salaries of the deputies; but may I point out to my hon. friend that after all the chief of staff is really a subordinate officer to the deputy minister?

Mr. CLARK: That is not correct.

Mr. POWER: I may be wrong. If I am, I am subject to correction, but my impression is that the deputy minister is the head of the department and, after all, the chief of staff is employed in that department, no matter what you call him or how much gold braid you put on him. The duties of the chief of staff are confined to one thing; they are duties of a military character.

Mr. CLARK: What is this department for?

Mr. POWER: The department has to deal with a number of things. Among others it tries to run a navy.

Mr. STEVENS: That is well put.

Mr. POWER: At any rate, it tries to train naval cadets. It has a volunteer naval reserve. The deputy minister looks after all that. It is going into the development of aviation. I am not aware that the chief of staff would have anything to do with civil aviation whatever business he might have to superintend in connection with military aviation. Therefore, under the circumstances, not that I am prepared to say that any deputy minister or even that the deputy minister of this department is entitled to a salary of $10,000, I would say that he was entitled to more salary than the chief of staff.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the hon. member move an amendment to that effect?

Mr. POWER: Well, he is getting it, is he not? I cannot move an amendment to give him what he is getting.

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. RALSTON: The committee will not expect me to enter into a discussion of the comparative values of the various officers whom my hon. friend has mentioned. I do not yield to anybody in my admiration of any of the officers of whom he has spoken. At the present time General McNaughton is occupying the position of chief of general staff and is receiving a salary of $8,000 a year. I know my hon. friend will not for a single moment criticize General McNaughton's capacity or ability to do that work.

My hon. friend has brought up the question of civilians two or three times, and I do not quite agree with him on the information I get. My information is that if all the civilians in the department were replaced by military personnel, the increase would be very considerable. I have verified that to some extent and I think I am right; I think also that some of the military members of the staff agree with me. I do not know where the hon. member for Quebec South got the number of twenty-three generals. At headquarters in 1922, we had twelve, and in 1929 there are three.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PENSION BOARD—MEDICAL EXAMINATION

Mr. PETTIT:

1. Is a government employee, being a disabled returned soldier, when called upon for medical examination by the Pension Board, docked any portion of his pay or salary on account of his having received allowances from the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?
2. If so, what departments follow this practice?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. No deduction is or has been made from the pay or salary of a civil servant on account of his receiving travelling allowances from the Department of Soldier's Civil Re-establishment or the Department of Pensions and National Health. No other allowances are paid in respect of medical examination of civil servants by the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada. Prior to the 1st April, 1928, a civil servant while undergoing a period of observation or treatment in hospital enjoyed an income of $30 per month less than while at work. From the 1st April to the 31st December, 1928, his income while in hospital or at work remained the same, unless his pension exceeded compensation, when his income would be reduced by such excess. From the 1st January, 1929, he is granted his full salary plus any allowances to which he may be entitled by way of compensation.

MINING CORPORATION—TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. What mining corporations, if any, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have been exempted by the government from taxation during the past three years?
2. When was such exemption begun and for what period does it extend?

5. Is it not a fact that such corporations, if not so exempted from taxation, would be taxed only on profits?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1 to 4. Taxation is a provincial prerogative. By order in council dated the 13th December, 1910, provision was made that no royalty should be charged on the products of copper mining locations acquired under the provisions of the regulations for the disposal of quartz mining claims on Dominion lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest territories and the Yukon territory, for a period of ten years—that is, up to the first day of January, 1921. By order in council dated the 16th December, 1920, the product in copper of the mineral claims at Flin Flon lake in the province of Manitoba were granted an exemption from the payment of royalty on certain conditions for a period of ten years from the 1st January, 1921. At the time these concessions were granted it was not the policy to consult the province on such points. By order in council dated the 25th November, 1927, the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, Limited and by order in council of the 10th September, 1928, the Sherritt-Gordon Mines Limited were granted, with the approval of the provincial government, exemption for a period of twenty years from the 1st day of December, 1927, from payment of royalty on products on a limited area of their holdings in the province of Manitoba provided smelters and reduction plants necessary for the development of the property are constructed and such products are treated therein.

SUPPLY—DISMISSALS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): As I understand that this motion is for the house to go into committee of supply for the purpose of considering the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, I desire to bring to the attention of the house the case of the dismissal of one Mr. Couture, of St. Bernard, Dorchester county, from his office as inspector of weights and measures, which is under a sub-department or branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I desire at the same time to present facts in connection with this dismissal, which I trust will justify the Minister of Trade and Commerce in granting an inquiry into the charges which have been alleged against this official and which were the grounds for his dismissal. I also intend before closing my address to move an amendment to this motion to go into supply, dealing generally with the matter of dismissals for partisan political activities.

I may state at the outset that in proposing this amendment I am not proposing a vote of want of confidence in the government; I trust that the amendment will so commend itself to the government that they will be prepared to accept it. Paragraph 489 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms makes it clearly apparent that the acceptance of this amendment will not prevent the house from going into committee of supply at the present time. That paragraph reads:

> When an amendment has been adopted to the motion for the house to go into committee of supply or of ways and means, it may be forthwith moved that the house resolve itself into such committee immediately or on a future day.

So that the acceptance of the amendment which I propose would not prevent the house from going into committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

During the last session I had occasion to bring to the attention of the house the case of an official of the Department of National Revenue, one Dumoulin, of Notre Dame des Bois, in the province of Quebec. I wish now to pay tribute to the minister of that department (Mr. Euler) for the manner in which he fulfilled the promise which he made on that occasion. He declared that under the circumstances disclosed in that discussion he believed that Dumoulin should have an opportunity of appearing before a commissioner to prove his innocence of the charges made against him by a member of this parliament. He also stated that, if the innocence of the dismissed employee was proved, he would see, in so far as it lay within his power, that there should be redress—not that the official should be reinstated in office, because the minister held that there was a ruling of the Department of Justice that a minister, after the dismissal of an official, had no power to reappoint him to the same office. But the Minister of National Revenue did declare on that occasion that if on inquiry this official proved his innocence he would have the man reinstated in some other similar office. The minister ordered an inquiry, which was duly held. Evidence was taken and it proved the entire innocence of the dismissed official. I wish to say in commendation of the minister that he did thereupon recommend for appointment the ex-official Dumoulin who had been so dismissed. It is true that Dumoulin on that occasion was compelled again to stand examination before the Civil Service Commission; it is true he was appointed, not to the same but to a similar office; it is probable that although he was proved to be innocent he lost his interest in the superannuation fund to which he had contributed for so many years before his dismissal; and unless the law is changed I do not think there is any doubt that he will lose the priority which he had attained by reason of several years of service in that department—all of which are grave disadvantages accruing from a dismissal which now admittedly had been improperly made.

I have therefore looked into the law with respect to the dismissal of officials, not only in Great Britain but in this country. I find that in Great Britain, as in Canada, the executive and administrative powers of the Privy Council include all those matters which, under our constitution, are entrusted to the sovereign by virtue of the royal prerogative. His Excellency the Governor General acts, in the exercise of that royal prerogative in respect of the domestic affairs of this country, on the advice of the Privy Council of Canada. In Canada those orders in council which are expressed to be made on the recommendation of a committee of the Privy Council and to be approved by the Governor General, make appointments to office, remove from office officials appointed during the pleasure of the crown, and accept resignations and order dismissals from office. We made some slight change from the British procedure by vesting in the Civil Service Commission the power of making appointments to office, but the right of dismissal is exclusively vested in the governor in council of Canada.

In Great Britain officials holding office during pleasure may be dismissed by order in council without cause being alleged, but, so far as I have ascertained, every official dismissed from office for an alleged breach of the law is not dismissed until a complaint has been made before a court having jurisdiction in the matter and until that court, after having heard witnesses at a trial, has decided either by judge or by judge and jury that the official has been guilty of a breach of the statutes. That is the complete protection which is afforded by the British procedure and by the constiutional practice of that country.

In Canada officials of the civil service may be dismissed for political partisanship as defined by chapter 22 of the revised statutes of Canada, section 55, which reads as follows:

> No deputy head, officer, clerk or employee in the civil service shall be debarred from voting at any Dominion or provincial election if, under the laws governing the said election, he has the right to vote; but no such deputy head, officer, clerk or employee shall engage in partisan work in connection with any such election, or contribute, receive or in any way deal with any money for any party funds.
> 2. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be dismissed from the civil service.

Another section provides that the dismissal can be made only by order of the governor in council. This statute, which was introduced into our law in 1918, changed the whole status of the civil service of Canada and should have abolished all other practices with regard to dismissals or recommendations for dismissals which theretofore had obtained in this country. It provides, in brief, that a civil service official may vote if he is entitled to the franchise, but he shall not engage in partisan work in connection with any election; he shall not contribute, receive or in any way deal with any money for party funds. Those are the two classes of offences, and the only classes, which constitute political partisanship under our law, in consequence of a breach of which an employee of the civil service may be dismissed. If the governor in council, which is the government of the day, should dismiss an official of the civil service for an alleged act of political partisanship which does not fall within the terms of this provision of the statute, then I suggest that the government itself is responsible for a breach of the law of this country. A mere charge of political partisanship is not sufficient; political partisanship is merely a legal conclusion drawn from certain facts; and in accordance with British justice—and I may add in accordance with Canadian justice—the complainant is bound to state the specific acts which are alleged to constiute political partisanship, as well as the times when and places where the alleged acts were committed, in order to give the accused full information for the preparation of his defence. Of course, any competent person may lay such a charge, whether he be an ordinary citizen, a member of this house or a member of the government of the country.

I do not wish to use strong terms, but certainly it does outrage our sense of justice and right dealing if the individual who prefers a charge against a civil servant should be permitted to sit as judge and jury and to pass judgment upon his own complaint. Our Canadian law and practice now affords, and should afford, complete protection to an official of the service who has faithfully, competently and efficiently performed his duty, against any fictitious charge which may be preferred against him. If the minister of a department demands efficient and loyal service from those under his supervision, as he should, then it is necessary that the minister should see that those officials who give such service receive his protection, as minister of the crown, against all fictitious, false or deceitful charges made against them.

If you take the Civil Service Act and read it together with the Inquiries Act you will find that our procedure implies several conditions: First, the complaint must be made directly or indirectly to the minister of the crown who has been appointed and solemnly sworn to administer the particular department of government in which the accused is employed; second, it is the bounden duty of that minister of the crown to see to it that his officials, from whom he necessarily demands loyal and efficient service, are completely protected against false and malicious charges or complaints, from whatever source they may emanate; third, except in the case of complete admission or confession of guilt, it is impossible for the minister to fulfil his duty and responsibility in the premises except by ensuring that the accused shall be informed of the nature and details of the charge preferred against him, and that the accused also shall be afforded full opportunity to present his defence and prove himself innocent of the complaint or charge made against him; fourth, to that end it is necessary that the minister, personally or through a commissioner appointed for the purpose, should conduct a full and impartial inquiry into the facts alleged and the issues arising out of such allegations; fifth, our statutes have made full provision for such departmental inquiries. I would refer to the Inquiries Act, which is chapter 99 of the revised statutes of Canada. Section 6 of that act is as follows:

6. The minister presiding over any department of the civil service of Canada, may appoint at any time, under the authority of the governor in council, a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business, or any part of the business, of such department, either in the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service, so far as the same relates to his official duties.

The Inquiries Act vests in the commissioner so appointed very large powers. The commissioner may summon witnesses and require them to give evidence on oath, and he may engage counsel to assist and aid him in such inquiries. However, there are certain matters in which our law allows the commissioner no discretion whatever. The Inquiries Act provides as follows:

12. The commissioners may allow any person, whose conduct is being investigated under this act, and shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel.

13. No report shall be made against any person until reasonable notice shall have been given to him of the charge of misconduct alleged against him and he shall have been allowed full opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel.

Such are the wise provisions of our laws with respect to inquiries into the alleged misconduct of any officer of any department in our civil service. The accused is allowed to be represented by counsel and reasonable notice shall be given to him of the charge of misconduct alleged against him. He shall be allowed full opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel, and the accused is further protected in that even if a report is made against him by the commissioner, in which the minister presiding over that particular department fully concurs, yet the minister may not by his own motion dismiss the accused from his office or employment. The minister can only report the commissioner's findings to the governor in council, and parliament has enacted, for the due protection of the civil servant, a provision that he may be dismissed only by order of the governor in council, that is, by the government of the day upon whom the legal and moral duty and responsibility is placed of assuring to the accused that he has been fully protected in his rights and privileges under the law, including the full opportunity to present his defence and to prove his innocence of the charges of misconduct preferred against him.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house in going fully into the law, but I suggest that it might be considered by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). If an order in council dismissing an official alleges a case which is not true in fact, that official has the right to proceed to the courts and have the order in council set aside. It is obvious in the case of a civil servant who is receiving a small salary of $1,000 or $1,500 per year that through his very impecuniosity he is denied access to the courts for relief against the order in council affecting his dismissal, where it has been procured by deceit, misrepresentation or through any obvious error.

In the case of Dumoulin, which I have just discussed, I think the action of the minister of the crown was entirely commendable—I know that was the opinion which prevailed throughout the length and breadth of the province from which I come, and in many other provinces—and as a result the civil servants with small salaries and humble positions have a confidence, which they did not have heretofore, in the loyalty to their interests of the chief of their department when they are performing their duties efficiently and honestly. It gave to them a new faith and confidence that justice would prevail in the civil service of Canada whenever the facts were brought to the notice of the minister presiding over any department of the civil service.

It was alleged in that case that an official having been dismissed, his reappointment could not be made because appointments must necessarily emanate from the Civil Service Commission. I have looked into the law in that respect and I differ decidedly from the position which has been taken. The report of the Department of Justice was correct in view of the facts presented to it, as to whether the head of a department could appoint to the civil service a dismissed official, but that is not the real issue. The real issue was whether or not, when an order in council had been passed under a misapprehension or misrepresentation, or through any other error, the governor in council of itself had the inherent right to amend its own order or to rescind its own order which had been obtained through misstatements of facts or other errors. I find that in England and in this country the governor in council has an inherent right to rescind its own order when it has been improperly obtained, or to amend and modify it so that it may express the real facts upon which it is founded, and that inherent right has been exercised time and time again in the history of this country during the last sixty years. Incoming governments have reversed the decisions of their predecessors, and governments, on ascertainment of the real facts, have rescinded their own orders in council and have modified them and amended them, and that is the modus operandi in which mistakes can be and should be remedied.

This case which I am now approaching appeals to me because the dismissed official had been some fourteen years fulfilling the duties of his office. He has sent to me commendation after commendation from his superior officers approving of the honesty and efficiency and zeal with which he had performed his duty. He was a man of very modest salary; he had children of his own and he had adopted three other children of a brother who was deceased, and had large family responsibilities placed upon him. His being cast on the street at his age and after so many years of service was a misfortune which few of us, who do not live in lowly circumstances, can fully apprehend. For many years I was one of the executive heads of a large construction works employing thousands and even tens of thousands of men. It has been my duty to be at the bedside of many men just as they were passing into eternity from the ravages of a disease or the result of an accident. Contrary to the ordinary view, I never found a man who seemed to be worried very much about his own soul's salvation. What that man was worrying about was his own wife and children in some foreign land, from which he had come to engage in these works, and who were dependent upon his salary for their well-being. The one thing that he represented to me on his deathbed was: How can my wife and bairns live when I pass out? I have seen other young men from distant lands who seemed to be wild and reckless youths, but who, on their deathbeds, were not concerned about their souls' salvation; each one was wondering how some aged parent, father or mother, in a distant land could survive, if deprived of the contributions which he or she received from his weekly or monthly wage. Therefore I say that dismissals of this kind come home to the families of those dismissed as a cruel misfortune which, if they believe it to be unjust, not only wounds the spirit of the man but wipes out his confidence in the justice of his fellowmen. It must be admitted that justice is the aim and end of all good government, of all efficient and honest administration in this country. Therefore, on this ground I intend to call your attention to the particular facts of the case of Couture.

The documents have been brought down by the minister in compliance with an order of the house. The first letter which is from the Department of the Solicitor General of Canada, is dated February 15, 1927, and reads as follows:

My Dear Colleague:

I beg to recommend the immediate dismissal of Mr. Hypolite Couture of St. Bernard, Dorchester county, P.Q., inspector of weights and measures in the Department of Trade and Commerce, on account of active political partisanship in the course of the three last federal elections and notably that of 1926—and that of my personal knowledge.

I trust you may see your way clear to grant this request.

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) Lucien Cannon.

Honourable James Malcolm,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

Let me direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to that complaint. I am not intending in this discussion to make any partisan recriminations whatsoever. I simply wish to get to the real facts of the case, in the hope that the government of the day may see it in somewhat the same light as I see it and resolve to make just amends. This letter is dated February 15, 1927. The election of 1921 was held on December 17 of that year and five years and two months had elapsed before the charge was made. I suggest that although there is no statute of limitations, still there should be some limitation of time within which charges of political partisanship should be brought. The election of 1925 was held on October 29 of that year, so that one year and four months had elapsed. If the charge of political partisanship, which is spread over all those general elections in a term of more than five years, refers particularly to the election of December 14, 1926, five months had elapsed since that election took place. This is a charge of active political partisanship. I suggest that under the statute an official may be dismissed for actively engaging in partisan work in connection with such election, but it is due to an accused official that the facts indicating political partisanship should be stated so that he may have warning of the grounds of the accusation made against him. A mere charge of political partisanship is merely a legal conclusion; it involves no facts whatsoever. Shortly thereafter I find a communication from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to His Excellency the Governor General in council, file No. 24584:

The Department of Trade and Commerce
Canada

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council:

The undersigned begs to recommend that Inspector C. H. Couture of the weights and measures branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, of St. Bernard, Dorchester county, P.Q., be dismissed from the service on account of active political partisanship in the course of the three last federal elections, the said dismissal to take effect on March 1 next.

In connection therewith, the undersigned begs to attach hereto a letter received from the Honourable the Solicitor General, member for Dorchester, under date of February 15, stating that Mr. Couture has been guilty of active political partisanship, to his own personal knowledge.

(Signed) James Malcolm,
Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Ottawa, February 26, 1927.

On March 2, 1927, the Minister of Trade and Commerce writes to the Solicitor General as follows:

Honourable Lucien Cannon, M.P.,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa.

My Dear Colleague:

I have your letter of the 15th ultimo, recommending the immediate dismissal of Mr. Hypolite Couture, of St. Bernard, Dorchester county, P.Q., inspector of weights and measures, on account of active political partisanship in the course of the last three federal elections, to your personal knowledge.

In accordance with your request, I am recommending his dismissal to council.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) James Malcolm.

I then find an order in council which was passed on March 4, 1927, dismissing Couture from the service, the said dismissal to take effect on March 1, 1927. I will not take the time to read it. The next communication is dated March 4, 1927—a telegram from the Department of Trade and Commerce, reading as follows:

J. A. W. LeBel,
District Inspector of Weights and Measures,
Quebec, P.Q.

Have received instructions that Inspector Couture dismissed March first—Writing—notify Couture.

(Signed) E. O. Way,
Director.

I am skipping some of these telegrams, but on March 5, 1927, the director of weights and measures wrote to Mr. Couture as follows: This is in French. I have made a translation and personally I stand responsible for the translation. I think it is fair and correct.

March 5, 1927.

Mr. C. H. Couture,
Inspector of Weights and Measures,
St. Bernard, County of Dorchester,
Que.

Sir:

Following instructions received from the ministry I telegraphed yesterday evening to the inspector of the LeBel district as follows:

"Have received instructions that Inspector Couture dismissed March 1. Writing. Notify Couture."

This confirms my telegram and according to the ministerial order relating to your dismissal you are accused of political partisanship.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Under these circumstances I cannot do otherwise than to request you to remit your equipment, your stamps and your contingent fund to Mr. LeBel, who will give you a receipt for everything.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) E. O. Way,
Director of Weights and Measures.

Upon the receipt of this letter Mr. Couture wrote to Mr. LeBel, the district inspector, as follows—this is also a translation which I made:

Quebec, March 10, 1927.

Mr. J. A. W. LeBel,
District Inspector,
Quebec.

Sir:

I have received with the most profound regret the letter of Mr. Way, director of weights and measures, informing me that I was dismissed from the service for cause of political partisanship.

I therefore appeal to you to declare if ever you have been witness of any such conduct on my part, and if I have not always performed my duties as inspector of weights and measures to your satisfaction and to that of the department.

It seems to me that the department, under these circumstances, ought, at least, to give me an opportunity to vindicate myself and to grant a complete inquiry, which will bring to the light of day the real ground for any such accusation.

I send you a letter which I pray you to please deliver to Mr. Way, in which I request such an inquiry, and I urge you to please support my request.

I have always done my duty, according to my conscience, and I owe to my family, as I desire to prove to the department, that I am completely innocent of any such accusation.

Hoping that my humble request will receive the consideration of the officials of the department, and subscribing myself with this confidence,

Yours very sincerely,
(Sgd.) Chas. H. Couture.

On the same date, Mr. Couture addressed Mr. Way himself, as follows:

Trade and Commerce
Canada

Weights and Measures Inspection Service

Quebec, March 10, 1927.

Mr. E. O. Way,
Director of Weights and Measures,
Ottawa.

Sir:

I have received the 7th instant, your official letter informing me that I was dismissed from my services as inspector of weights and measures for cause of political partisanship.

I must tell you at once that this charge is without foundation. Not believing that I am guilty of any such infringement of the conduct which every civil employee ought to have, and as every accused, according to the common law, has the right to be heard in his own defence, before being found guilty, I come to solicit from the department that an inquiry may be instituted in regard to my case, and if the proof really establishes findings of political partisanship it will then be necessary for me to bear all the responsibility.

I supplicate you then to be pleased to submit my humble request to the officials of the department, or other officials of the civil service, and I hope that this inquiry will be accorded in all justice and equity.

I remain, sir,

Your very humble servant,

(Signed) Chas. H. Couture.

These letters being received on March 11, on that date Mr. Way, acting officially as inspector of weights and measures, sent this letter to the deputy of the Department of Trade and Commerce:

To F. C. T. O'Hara, Esq.
Department of Trade and Commerce

Ottawa, March 11, 1927.

Inspector C. H. Couture

Herewith please find two letters from Inspector C. H. Couture, recently dismissed, one addressed to me and one to Mr. LeBel, district inspector of Quebec.

Shortly put, Mr. Couture denies that he is guilty of political partisanship, and requests that an inquiry be held into his conduct.

In his last paragraph to me he says:—

"I will ask you to be good enough to submit my humble request for an inquiry to the authorities of the department, and I hope this inquiry will be granted in all justice and fairness."

(Sgd.) E. O. Way,
Director of W. and M.

The deputy minister of the department on March 14 wrote to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a letter in which he enclosed these letters which I have just read and called attention to the dismissal from the service of Mr. Couture. That letter reads as follows:

Ottawa, March 14, 1927.

Inspector C. H. Couture of Weights and Measures, St. Bernard, Que.

Inspector C. H. Couture of the weights and measures branch at St. Bernard, Dorchester county, Quebec, was recently dismissed from the service on account of active political partisanship, at the request of Hon. Lucien Cannon.

Mr. Way, director of weights and measures, reports that he has received two letters from Inspector Couture since his dismissal, which I attach hereto.

In brief, Mr. Couture denies that he is guilty of political partisanship and requests that an inquiry be held into his conduct.

(Signed) F. C. T. O'Hara,
Deputy Minister.

I submit to this house and to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that having received immediately a protestation of innocence such as was contained in the letter submitted to him by his deputy, and asking for an inquiry into the facts, it was his moral duty to take advantage of the authority vested in him by the Inquiries Act and to have proceeded to obtain the appointment of a commissioner to inquire into the facts which constituted or were alleged to constitute political partisanship in this case. Instead of that, the Minister of Trade and Commerce writes to his colleague the Solicitor General on March 17, 1927, as follows:

Honourable Lucien Cannon, M.P.,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa.

My dear Colleague:

As you are aware, at your request, on the grounds of political partisanship to your knowledge, an order in council has been passed, dismissing Inspector C. H. Couture of the weights and measures branch of this department.

I enclose herewith two letters which Mr. Couture has since written, one to Inspector Labelle of the Quebec district and the other to Mr. Way, director of weights and measures, here.

Will you please advise me at your earliest convenience if you are willing to have an inquiry granted.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) James Malcolm.

I suggest that, when a complaint of this nature has been preferred against a member of the civil service, the minister of the department in which that official is engaged should not apply to the complainant to ascertain as to whether the complainant is agreeable to an inquiry into the facts alleged by the complainant. I suggest to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, for whom I have the highest esteem, that that was not what might reasonably have been expected of him as head of the department in dealing with this complaint. The reply to that letter is as follows:

Office of the Solicitor General
Canada

Ottawa, March 21, 1927.

My dear Colleague:

I am in receipt of yours of March the 17th with reference to the dismissal of Mr. C. H. Couture, inspector of weights and measures, in the Department of Trade and Commerce, together with Mr. Couture's letters written to Mr. Way, director of weights and measures, and Inspector Labelle of the Quebec district.

I am returning herewith Mr. Couture's letters for your file and may say that I do not think an inquiry into this matter necessary to corroborate the statement I have already made.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) Lucien Cannon.

Hon. James Malcolm,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

Now Couture had clearly asserted his innocence and had requested an inquiry. He had, I suggest, the moral, constitutional and legal right to be heard in his own defence, and that right should not have been denied him. He was entitled, I submit, to show that the Solicitor General no matter how high placed that office is—I have every respect for the office and every respect for the present incumbent of it, and I am not going to exaggerate my statements with words of bitterness at all—he had a right to show that the Solicitor General had misapprehended the real facts or that he had been misinformed or that he had made his recommendations in error. He had a right to receive from the Minister of Trade and Commerce an inquiry which would enable him to elicit the real facts on which that accusation was based, because it must be admitted that even the Solicitor General is not endowed with omniscience, that even he may at times be misinformed.

Mr. CANNON: It is not a case of being misinformed. I was witness to the act of partisanship.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I will say it is not impossible, as I believe in this case, that if the hon. Solicitor General was a witness his own eyes deceived him.

Mr. POULIOT: Were you a witness yourself?

Mr. CAHAN: I was not, but I have read some of the evidence. I think it at least establishes a prima facie case to that end, and is sufficient to induce the Minister of Trade and Commerce to institute an inquiry into the real facts of the case, so that they may at least be known.

Now, Mr. Couture was dismissed by order in council as from March 1. But as he was away performing his duties, proceeding from one village to another throughout the district, they could not find him for several days, and so the Minister of Trade and Commerce, taking advantage of the inherent right of the governor in council to amend and modify, or even to rescind, its own orders, asked that the order be amended on the grounds that:

> as this employee was out on inspection work it was impossible to get in touch with him until one o'clock p.m. on Saturday, March 5; and that in addition, this officer had to come to Quebec on Monday, March 7, to hand in his equipment, revenue stamps, the money collected the previous week, and the balance of his contingent fund—

Therefore the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

> begs to recommend that the date of Mr. Couture's dismissal be changed from March 1, 1927, to March 8, 1927.

An order in council to that effect was passed on April 4, 1927. There is one man in the department—I do not know him, I never came in contact with him—who at least is a just man, and this letter indicates it:

[Mr. Cahan.]

> Department of Trade and Commerce,
> Ottawa, April 21, 1927.
>
> H. B. Borbridge, Esq.,
> Chief Accountant.
>
> Re ex-Inspector C. H. Couture, > Retirement Fund.
> With regard to the above and the refund of Couture's superannuation moneys, the act apparently only withholds such repayment where there is misconduct. Apparently misconduct can be interpreted to include political partisanship —as this is an offence for which an officer can be dismissed from the service, but it seems to me that when a man has lost his position on this latter charge, the government hardly desires to add deprivation of the officer's contributions from salary to superannuation. Misconduct in relation to dismissal usually implies a moral offence, such as a breach of trust, dishonesty, unauthorized absentations, etc., but on this score Mr. Couture has a perfectly clean record.
> It seems to me then that a submission might be made to council seeking payment to Couture of his superannuation fund contributions on the above lines.
>
> E. O. Way,
> Director of Weights and Measures.

Then on April 22, 1927, the Minister of Trade and Commerce makes a recommendation to His Excellency the Governor General in council to that effect. In the memorandum attached he shows that Couture had been first provisionally and later permanently appointed, that his service at the retirement date was thirteen years, two months and eight days, and that he had contributed to the superannuation fund $401.91. Then the case goes before the treasury board and they recommend this repayment to Couture.

Mr. BENNETT: Was it paid to him?

Mr. CAHAN: The correspondence shows that some months later a cheque was sent to Couture, but he returned it and said he had reason to believe that an inquiry would be granted which would lead to his reinstatement in the service, and that he did not wish to accept the cheque. It was returned by him, and so far as I can ascertain it is now held by the Finance department awaiting the decision as to his application for an inquiry.

Mr. POULIOT: So he was not much in need of money?

Mr. CAHAN: He was not much in need of money! There are a few men in this world who have more regard for their reputation, for their personal honour, than for the mere pittance which they receive from the superannuation fund of this government.

The next letter is from Couture himself, and is also a translation which I personally made. It is as follows:

St. Bernard, July 28, 1927.

The Honourable J. Malcolm,
Minister of Commerce,
Ottawa.

Mr. Minister:

The 7th of March last, for cause of political partizanship, I was dismissed from my duties as inspector of weights and measures, a position which I have occupied since December, 1913, and for which I had obtained my permanent appointment in June, 1914.

The 10th of March last, I addressed a letter to Mr. E. O. Way, director of weights and measures, requesting him to submit my case to you and to the Department in which I urged that an inquiry should be granted to me, in order to provide me with facilities for proving my innocense of the accusations made against me, and of which I am ready to give you full explanation. This letter has remained without reply, and, for your information, I submit to you the enclosed copy.

It seems to me, Mr. Minister, that, by virtue of the British law, a permanent employee, even if he is culpable, has the right to an inquiry, especially when he has fulfilled, to the satisfaction of his superior officers, all his duties, during fourteen years.

I would remind you that I have contributed to the pension funds and that I have an insurance of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) in the insurance of the civil service, an insurance which I pay in favour of my wife and of my five children, in case of accident.

Under the circumstances, it seems to me that an appeal to your spirit of justice justifies me in demanding an inquiry, and I will submit to the consequences of it, if it is unfavourable to my pretensions.

While awaiting a favourable reply to my request, please accept the expression of my most sincere sentiments.

I have the honour to be,

Mr. Minister,

Your very devoted servant,

Chas. H. Couture.

On August 16, 1927, the following letter was despatched to Mr. Couture from the office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

August 16, 1927.

Charles H. Couture, Esq.,
St. Bernard, Que.

Dear Sir:

I am desired by the Honourable James Malcolm to let you know that your letter of the 28th ultimo asking for an inquiry into the question of your dismissal as inspector of weights and measures for the district of Quebec on the grounds of political partisanship has been duly received.

In reply the minister desires me to say that as you were dismissed on the recommendation of one of his colleagues of the government, who had personal knowledge of the situation, he does not see that any good purpose can be served in reopening the matter. He notes that you have taken your refund of contributions to the superannuation fund, and he therefore regards the whole matter as closed.

Yours faithfully,

R. O. Campney,
Private Secretary.

The minister was under an obvious misapprehension with regard to Couture's acceptance of the superannuation fund, but I presume he had been so informed. In this letter the Minister of Trade and Commerce urges that no good purpose could be served by instituting an inquiry. Couture had performed his official duties for nearly fourteen years, enjoying the full confidence of his superior officials and receiving every evidence of their approbation. Now, is it not the bounden duty of the minister at the head of a department who enjoys the loyal support and faithful cooperation of his subordinate officials, to protect them against all charges of misconduct which are not duly supported by evidence? And when such an official asks for an inquiry, protesting his innocence, I suggest to the minister, does it not serve a good purpose, in fact is it not essential to the proper administration of the department, that that official should have full opportunity to vindicate his reputation as a loyal officer and to prove his innocence of the charge preferred against him? I have another letter from Mr. Couture replying to this letter signed by the minister's private secretary. I have had it translated and it reads as follows:

St. Bernard, August 25, 1927.

Honourable minister:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, by the intervention of your private secretary, telling me that I have been dismissed from my duties of inspector of weights and measures, upon the recommendation of one of your colleagues in the government who claims to have personal knowledge of the facts. Permit me to say that I am in a position to affirm, with proof for its support, that the Hon. Lucien Cannon has purely and simply been led into error by jealous and malicious persons who covet my position.

I have informed the Hon. Lucien Cannon of all this affair, and I have reason to expect that with the information which I have given to him, he will do justice in granting me the inquiry which I claim.

I have the honour to be Mr. Minister,

Your obedient servant,

Chas. H. Couture.

The Honourable James Malcolm,
Minister of Commerce,
Ottawa, Ont.

I have another document which was not brought down by the department. Whether it was sent to the Solicitor General—because the correspondence in the department of the Solicitor General has not been brought down—or whether it was sent to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or his deputy, I am not in a position for the moment to affirm. But it is an affidavit of Mr. Couture, a translation of which I have made:

I, the undersigned, Chas. H. Couture, ex-inspector of weights and measures of St. Bernard (Dorchester) declare solemnly that on the 5th of September, 1926, I was present at a public meeting which took place at the public hall in the vicinity of my residence, and that I listened to the speakers, who succeeded each other, with all the respect which I have always given to our public men.

During the speech of the Hon. Lucien Cannon—

It certainly should not be an act of political partisanship, when the Solicitor General is holding a meeting on a public street beside the residence of an official, that that official should step out on that public street to listen to the words of wisdom and eloquence which come from the lips of the minister. Admittedly, however, this man did so.

During the speech of the Hon. Lucien Cannon, a group of young lads, among which I recognized the three young brothers Fontaine, (Armand, Laurier and Daniel) of a very Liberal family, came to mingle with the young girls of the village, of which there were two of mine, adopted daughters, aged respectively ten and eleven years.

I ask the house to note the ages—ten and eleven.

They made a certain noise, which nevertheless did not disturb the meeting. Since these infants were about a hundred feet from the throng, and seeing my niece approaching in my yard,—

His own lawn was a few feet away from where the public meeting was being held—

I knew that she came to restore good order, and it was for that reason that I remained in my place.

The following day, the 6th of September, I was present at a meeting held in the interior of the public hall, by the Conservative candidate, Mr. Robert Cote. Having entered one of the last into the hall, on account of the absence of the mayor, they asked me twice to preside at the meeting. I categorically refused, adding the last time that: "I do not mix myself in such matters."

I did not utter a word during the address, except that being one of the first to leave, I said to a woman that it is growing warm. She replied, "It is warm". I replied: "Pardon Madam, I said it is growing warm".

Evidently the suggestion was that his active partisanship consisted in the statement that the Solicitor General had rather a poor reception in the village.

Mr. CANNON: He is not referring to my meeting at all; he must have reference to the Conservative meeting.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. CAHAN: Then he should not be dismissed for saying, "It is growing warm," referring to the atmosphere, even though someone who overheard his remark sent broadcast the scandal that he was saying that the Solicitor General had received a warm reception at the meeting.

I have never again seen Mr. Robert Cote; I have never spoken to him since that day.

I have been connected with the civil service since 1913, and from that date I have never been present at any other meeting in my county during the electoral campaigns, excepting those which took place in my parish,

And I have signed,

Chas. H. Couture.

Sworn before me at Quebec,
this 17th day of September, 1927,
Aurele Leclerc, N.P.

I suggest, as that is the ground for the charge, that it is not active political partisanship for a member of the civil service to stand on a public street and listen to the orations of the Solicitor General. There is another affidavit, the translation of which was made not by myself but by one of the officials of Hansard while I was busy making the other. It reads:

I the undersigned, Tharsille Ouellette, domiciled at St. Bernard of Dorchester, solemnly declare that on Sunday, September 5th, 1927, at a political meeting held in the public hall (opposite the residence of Mr. Louis Goulet, sr., our neighbour) I was in charge of the house of my foster-father (Chas. H. Couture, inspector of weights and measures), my aunt having left to accompany her daughter and niece, boarders at the monastery of the Ursulines at Quebec.

My uncle was at the meeting. I was in the house busying myself with preparing the dinner. I went out for a few moments to listen to the speech of the Hon. Lucien Cannon. I walked up to the gates of our lawn located at a distance of about 125 feet from the public hall. My two little cousins aged 10 and 11 years (adopted daughters of my uncle, Chs. H. C.) whom I was looking after, were on the sidewalk in the midst of a crowd of Liberal and Conservative small boys and girls, among whom were the three little brothers Fontaine, who were laughing and by their gestures wished to ridicule the speakers and their speeches. I could hardly believe my eyes seeing the little Fontaine, belonging to a well known Liberal family, acting thus.

My first care was to bring back my little cousins to our house and twice ask the others to keep quiet and allow the people to listen in peace to the speakers, adding that it was not nice on their part to act that way.

From there the little Fontaine went with little Goulet (Conservative) to a limousine which was stopped in front of our home and in which was a small boy about ten years old; thinking that he was "a little Cannon," according to them, they began to throw apple cores at him and even to spit on him. The poor child tried in vain to protect himself.

This roused me, so going up to that automobile, I sent the little rascals away, happy at having set free the little boy who fortunately was not a Cannon, as I learned later. Returning to our lawn, I continued listening to the speeches in company with the two little girls which were under my care.

During the dinner I told everything to my uncle who told me: "If you had not done so, I think I would have flogged you."

And I have signed,

Tharsille Ouellette.

Sworn before me at St. Bernard this 6th day of October, 1927,

J. M. Fortin, N.P.

I have here a letter which was sent to the Hon. Lucien Cannon. This also is a translation by one of the Hansard reporters:

St. Maxime de Scott, Que.,
October 12, 1927.

To the Hon. Lucien Cannon,
Solicitor General.

Sir:

Enclosed please find the affidavit of Miss Tharsille Ouellette, niece of Mr. Hippolyte Couture, also a copy of the letter of the ex-parish priest of St. Bernard, the Rev. Abbe Turcotte.

Mr. Luc St. Pierre will write to you with reference to this matter, if he has not already done so.

I have a copy of that letter, which is along the same line.

All this can be added to the request of the Liberal leaders of Dorchester with a view of reinstating Mr. H. Couture in his old position of inspector of weights and measures.

I have also a petition along the same line signed by eighty or ninety of the leading Liberals of the county of Dorchester, merchants, notaries and others of the utmost respectability, praying the Solicitor General to institute an inquiry into this dismissal. The letter proceeds:

As I have had the honour of telling you, sir, it is our conviction to all of us that it would be to the credit of the Liberal party and to your own, sir, to carry out this act of justice. My continuous travelling through this region, especially in Dorchester, makes it very clear to me that all our Liberal leaders of any importance, are unanimous in wanting this thing done. Without any doubt this civil servant enjoyed the esteem and trust of everybody. Many complain of the manner in which Lambert puts the case; they are indignant at the way he runs Mr. Couture down. They even speak of ejecting him should he come forward again. We are convinced that it is but jealousy and petty interests that have conspired against the victim and led you astray. I have no need of recalling —you are as well aware as we are—the unfortunate situation in which this affair places Mr. Couture and his respectable family. Mr. Lambert boasts of being the only one who can within 24 hours have Mr. Couture reinstated. I for one am far from having such great confidence in my humble power. On the contrary I am convinced that the only one who can do it, and do it easily (considering the request and all the documents in his possession), is you, sir.

Allow me, sir, in closing my letter to assure you of my humble and very sincere devotion,

Rosario LeBel.

Next is a letter from the parish priest; this is also a translation, which I fancy I made myself, although I am not sure:

St. Bernard, Co., Dorchester,
March 16, 1927.

To The Honourable Lucien Cannon,
Privy Councillor and Solicitor General.

Sir,—I wish to ask a favour which I know you can grant in all justice.

Mr. Chas. Couture, my parishioner, has just received notice of his dismissal as inspector of weights and measures, without even being granted the means of vindicating himself. I have always known him as a good father of a family and honest citizen and this position allowed him to bring up a large family. He has moreover taken upon himself responsible obligations, such as a life insurance in the civil service and at his age he now finds himself on the street.

I wish to ask you as a minister of justice to grant him at least an inquiry. He will bear all the responsibilities and, as a man of the legal profession, who has always had to vindicate righteousness either at the bar or in parliament, I beg of you to kindly accede to my humble request. From such an inquiry, justice will be satisfied and your high reputation as the representative of our county will be enhanced.

I am, sir,
Your very humble servant,
(Sgd.) J. P. Turcotte,
Parish priest.

On October 17, 1927, the Solicitor General wrote Mr. LeBel as follows; this is also a translation:

Ottawa, Oct. 17, 1927.

Dear Mr. LeBel,

I beg to acknowledge your letter dated October 12, attached to a statement sworn by Miss Tharsille Oullette with reference to Mr. Hippolyte Couture.

Be assured that these communications will receive my best attention.

I am,
Sincerely yours,
(Sgd) Lucien Cannon.

Mr. R. LeBel,
St. Maxime de Scott,
County of Dorchester.

A year after his dismissal Couture received a cheque for $401.92, representing his contributions to the pension fund. He immediately returned the cheque, and the department were somewhat troubled to know what to do with it; finally they sent it back. On March 7, 1928, Mr. Couture wrote as follows:

St. Bernard, March 7, 1928.

Sir,—I have the honour to return to you under this cover the cheque No. 1621 of the amount of $401.91, being my contribution to the pension funds. This cheque has been returned to me by the chief accountant of the Department of Commerce.

I should tell you that I have had the honour of having an interview with the Honourable Lucien Cannon the 3rd instant. He has told me that he would request the Honourable James Malcolm to grant me the inquiry which I claim, then it will decide whether I ought to be reinstated in my duties as inspector of weights and measures. This is the reason why I return to you my cheque.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) Chas. H. Couture.

To the Deputy Minister,
Department of Commerce,
Ottawa, Ont.

Then on March 29, 1928, the Solicitor General wrote the Minister of Trade and Commerce as follows:

Solicitor General
Canada
Ottawa, March 29, 1928.

Personal.

Re: C. H. Couture, former Inspector of Weights and Measures, Quebec.

My dear Colleague:

Referring to our previous correspondence relative to the above-named,—I beg to say that representations have been made to me by Mr. Couture himself, and by his friends on his behalf. Under the circumstances, therefore, I have no objection to an inquiry being granted him.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) Lucien Cannon.

Hon. James Malcolm,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

I wish to commend the Solicitor General for writing that letter; it indicates that the evidence which I have submitted to the house, and which previously had been submitted to him, had some influence. However, it will be noted that he says he has no objection to an inquiry; under the circumstances would it not have been equally commendable, if not more so, if the Solicitor General had insisted that an inquiry be granted? It seems to me that such a course on his part would have been far more consistent with the traditions of the high office which he holds. On April 17, 1928, the Minister of Trade and Commerce replied:

April 17, 1928.

Confidential.
Honourable Lucien Cannon, K.C., M.P.,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa.

My dear Colleague:

I have your letter of the 29th ultimo written in connection with the dismissal of Mr. C. H. Couture, formerly in the weights and measures inspection service at Quebec. With reference to this matter I may say that the deputy minister took the question of his possible reinstatement up with the Department of Justice in February last, assuming that such a step might result from an investigation of the case, but he was informed that this procedure was impossible.

[Mr. Cahan.]

I enclose herewith copy of the letter written by my deputy minister and the reply thereto from the Deputy Minister of Justice. It would not seem possible, therefore, to open this matter at this late date.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) James Malcolm.

I do not think it is necessary for me to read the letter written by Mr. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, to the Department of Justice; the important thing is the reply of the Deputy Minister of Justice:

Ottawa, February 28, 1928.

Dear Sir:

I have the honour to reply to your letter of the 18th instant relative to the question whether a former official of your department who was dismissed from the service by order in council on the ground of having been guilty of political partisanship, can now be reinstated, or whether he will have to apply for a position in the usual course.

I may say, in reply, that if the order in council dismissing this employee has taken effect from its own date mentioned therein, there is no power in the governor in council to reinstate the employee so dismissed and he cannot reenter the service except by appointment under the Civil Service Act or by virtue of special parliamentary authority.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) W. Stuart Edwards,
D. M. J.

F. C. T. O'Hara, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

I suggest to the Minister of Justice that his deputy missed the real point of the question which he was called upon to decide. It is obvious that the Minister of Trade and Commerce could not appoint an official to his department either originally or a second time after he had been dismissed, but the real point was whether or not the Privy Council of Canada, or the governor in council, has the inherent power to rescind, modify or amend an order in council which it has passed under a misapprehension of fact. If an inquiry showed that the Solicitor General, in making this complaint, had been deceived by the reports and rumours which were current, or even that he had not worn his farseeing glasses that day and had been deceived by his own imperfect eyesight, once the governor in council is convinced that a wrong has been done and an order in council issued based upon a misapprehension of facts, then the governor in council has the inherent power to remedy that defect by rescinding the order in council.

I have no wish to weary the house, but I desire to place on record one other letter, which is also a translation:

St. Bernard,
April 30, 1928.

The Honourable Lucien Cannon,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa.

Mr. Minister:

Permit me to importune you one last time.

You have dismissed me as inspector of weights and measures, the 1st of March, 1927, for political partisanship.

I have received the official advice of my dismissal the 5th of March, and, the 10th of the month, I have requested an inquiry of Mr. Way, director of weights and measures, who has not replied.

Since then a great number of your friends and of mine have written you in my favour, declaring to you that never, to their knowledge, have I done an act of political partisanship.

To the curé of Scott you have replied the 9th of March, that you regretted that which had befallen me, that my conduct in the last electoral campaigns had compelled you to adopt the attitude which you have taken. You declare again in this letter that I have encouraged your adversary to insult your family, your wife, and yourself. The curé replied to you that he himself had made an inquiry and that he had soon ascertained that my dismissal was an affair arranged and decided in advance by those who boasted of making me lose my position to obtain it afterwards.

There was a caucus with young Blais of St. Bernard to decide upon my dismissal. At this caucus, amongst others, Mr. Rosaria LeBel and Arthur Giroux of Scott assisted.

Now, you well know the opinions of Mr. LeBel regarding me; as to Mr. Giroux his name appears among the eighty and more names who have requested of you my reinstatement; he has said and repeated that he was deceived.

I, myself, have procured the delivery to you of sworn declarations denying absolutely and categorically that I have meddled in any way whatever with politics since 1913.

As you do not appear to have faith in the declarations of your friends and mine, I have requested an inquiry, this time of Mr. Foran, the secretary of the Civil Service Commission, who has replied to me that the commission cannot intervene and telling me to address myself to the Deputy Minister of Commerce.

I thereupon requested this inquiry of the Hon. J. Malcolm, the 20th of July last. He replied by his secretary on August 10th that inasmuch as I was dismissed upon the recommendation of one of his colleagues, who personally knew the situation, he did not deem it expedient to open an inquiry; that otherwise, I had accepted my cheque for the amount of my contribution to the pension funds, and that he considered the matter closed. Then this cheque I have twice returned; it is now at the Department of Finance, awaiting that the question may be considered.

In the course of an interview which I had with you, on March 3rd last, you asked me to choose whether I desired you to concern yourself with my pension or with an inquiry, adding that I was not obliged to reply immediately, that an inquiry might cause me surprises.

I immediately replied to you that I desired an inquiry.

The 25th of April last, your secretary wrote to me that you had no objection to this inquiry being granted, but that the Hon. Mr. Malcolm had declared that such an inquiry could have no practical result, because of the provisions of the civil service law in such matters, and, in consequence, that it could not be granted to me.

There is my situation. I have been dismissed because of political partisanship, it is said; and I have not had an opportunity to defend myself.

I have employed all the means at my disposal. I have formally denied these allegations; your friends have declared the same thing to you; I have many times requested an inquiry, which has been refused me.

A large number of citizens, Liberal leaders of the different parishes of the county, have requested my reinstatement, which I have not yet obtained.

Without any doubt your good faith has been surprised; you have been deceived, and you ought now to take account of it.

I conclude then that since you have been able to dismiss me by means of false reports, of machinations and intrigues, you have certainly the power, knowing now the facts, to restore my position, and, if I do not obtain it, I will be forced to believe, much to my regret, that you have permitted yourself to commit an injustice.

At least, I should be granted an inquiry, and if the facts and allegations which have led to my dismissal are proved, I will very willingly submit, for I would have merited that which has happened to me.

All I desire is that they will afford me the means of proving my inocence.

Requesting from you the favour of a final reply, Mr. minister,

Your very humble servant,
(Sgd.) Chas. H. Couture.

The Solicitor General's department wrote on May 8, as follows:

Dear Mr. Campney:

Re: C. H. Couture

Hon. Mr. Cannon has asked me to transmit to you, for your minister's attention, copy of a letter received from Mr. C. H. Couture, former inspector of weights and measures, Quebec, which I herewith enclose.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) Pierre Brunet,
Private Secretary.

Mr. R. O. Campney,
Private Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

The letter which I have just read was passed over for the consideration of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A similar letter was written on June 1, 1928, by Mr. Couture direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The reply is dated June 11, 1928, and is as follows:

Mr. C. H. Couture,
St. Bernard, P.Q.

Sir:

Your letter of the 1st instant has been discussed by the minister and deputy minister.

Mr. O'Hara remarks that under the existing laws it is absolutely impossible to reestablish you in your former position. The minister is therefore of the opinion that there is absolutely nothing to gain by the inquiry which you claim and he asks me so to advise you.

Accept, sir, my sincere compliments.

(Sgd.) I. Macartney,
Acting Secretary.

I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce, after having dictated that letter, suffered some slight qualms of conscience, because on June 12, 1928, he wrote as follows:

Honourable Lucien Cannon,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Colleague:

Relative to the matter of Couture. It appears that even if an investigation were granted he could not under the law be reinstated in his former position.

We have therefore written Mr. Couture stating that we did not see what would be gained by an investigation.

We have not definitely refused to grant an investigation. This will depend upon your advice to us.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) James Malcolm.

The minister was putting it up entirely to the person who made the accusations as to whether or not an investigation should be held into the conduct of one of his officials, who, as the evidence before him and before his department showed, had been a faithful official for some thirteen or fourteen years. If I had time I would read the official commendations as to his efficient service which from time to time he had received from his superior officers. If the minister thinks that that is a fair way to deal with a loyal, faithful and efficient employee I cannot agree with him. When a loyal and efficient subordinate officer is allowed to be deprived of his position by means of an accusation, which he is in a position to refute, you destroy the spirit of the whole department over which you preside. When you deal unjustly with a man under you, you destroy the spirit of faithfulness and loyalty of the men who have been loyal to you.

Mr. MALCOLM: That has not been done.

Mr. CAHAN: The reply from the Solicitor General is dated March 16, 1929, and reads as follows:

I have received a letter from Mr. Maurice Dupre, K.C., of Quebec city, regarding Mr. C. H. Couture, the former inspector of weights and measures, and I am sending a copy of same to you, for your information and consideration.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd) Lucien Cannon.

Honourable James Malcolm,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

[Mr. Cahan.]

With the permission of the house I would like to put the letter of Mr. Dupré upon Hansard, as I have not the time to read it.

Mr. MALCOLM: That will be all right.

Mr. CAHAN: I then put this letter dated March 13, 1929, from Dupré to Hon. Lucien Cannon, upon Hansard:

Fitzpatrick, Dupré, Gagnon & Parent,
Barrister, solicitors, etc.,
Morin Building,
111 Mountain Hill,
Quebec, March 13th, 1929.

Copy.

Honourable Lucien Cannon, K.C.,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:—Re: Mr. Charles Hippolyte Couture, Mayor of St. Bernard, county of Dorchester.

As you are aware, Mr. Couture has been dismissed as inspector of weights and measures without any investigation and for supposed political partisanship. Mr. Couture had occupied his position for 14 years.

We are positive that nothing could be found against Mr. Couture even on the ground of political partisanship but in spite of his efforts no investigation has been granted yet, although you have stated in a letter (April 25th, 1928) that you had no objection to such an investigation.

Mr. Couture would like to prove to you and to the public that the grievances against him are illfounded.

You have already before you numerous demands and petitions signed by very prominent persons of the constituency of Dorchester, irrespective of political creeds or opinions, and praying for an investigation.

The reasons alleged, or supposed to be alleged, are that in the course of a meeting, Mr. Couture encouraged some people to manifest against you or your friends. On the other hand, Mr. Couture and his friends emphatically deny such accusations and it is to justify himself and prove the untruth of these accusations that Mr. Couture respectfully prays for an investigation.

Would you have the kindness to grant such an investigation or at least to recommend same.

I apologize for the trouble I am giving you and, with anticipated thanks, I beg you to believe me

Very sincerely yours,
(Sgd) Maurice Dupré.

The next letter is dated April 12, 1928, from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Solicitor General. It reads as follows:

Hon. Lucien Cannon,
Solicitor General,
Ottawa.

My dear Colleague:

Relative to your letter of March 16th, Re C. H. Couture, I enclose herewith a memo which I have received from my deputy minister regarding this man.

Will you kindly advise me if you have anything to suggest that I might do further in this matter?

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd) James Malcolm.

A memorandum is enclosed containing the report from the Deputy Minister of Justice, stating that the minister cannot reappoint him.

Mr. BENNETT: Did he get back his superannuation money?

Mr. CAHAN: He received a cheque and then went to see the Solicitor General. Believing, as a result of that interview, that he was about to be granted an inquiry he returned the cheque, and I understand that it is now in the possession of the Department of Finance.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not cash the cheque?

Mr. CAHAN: No, he did not cash the cheque, he returned it immediately by return mail. I think I read the letter of April 10, 1929, in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

Will you kindly advise me if you have anything to suggest that I might do further in this matter?

There does not appear to be any reply to that letter in the file.

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the matter with you?

Mr. POULIOT: He is through.

Mr. CAHAN: I feel very strongly about this matter. Whether or not this man is reinstated upon proof of his innocence, he has a right to a public inquiry, as provided for by the Inquiries Act, in order that he may exculpate himself from this charge and vindicate his personal honour as a loyal and efficient servant of the department. I trust the minister will take the same action which his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) took, and follow the precedent then established. I am quite sure that it would not detract from the high reputation which the minister has gained as an honest and efficient administrator of the department which has been placed in his charge by the right hon. the Prime Minister.

In my opening remarks I pointed out that in moving this amendment I did not desire it to be taken as a vote of want of confidence in the government, but simply to establish what I believe to be an important principle. I trust the right hon. the Prime Minister will accept this amendment. According to the rules of the house, as I pointed out, if this amendment passes it does not defeat a second motion immediately made to go into committee of supply. I refer to section 489 of Beauchesne. I beg to move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart):

That all the words after "that" in the motion of the Honourable the Minister of Finance be struck out and the following words be substituted therefor:

"In the opinion of this house no person should be dismissed from his employment in the civil service of Canada on a charge of political partisanship until the allegations of fact, on which such charge is based, shall have been investigated by a commissioner appointed under the provisions of part two of the Inquiries Act, chapter 99 of the revised statutes of Canada, and said commissioner's report thereon shall have been submitted for the consideration of the governor in council."

I submit that is in accordance with the law as it stands, although it may not be quite in accordance with the practice that has grown up. If this resolution were adopted as a matter of policy in the administration of the several departments of government, this would ensure that every man who denies the accusations made against him and who asks for an opportunity of proving his innocence, would have an opportunity to do so, such as the law provides. It would further ensure that the governor in council, in considering these matters which strike at the hearts and homes of so many people, would have the facts before them in passing these orders in council, and in taking the responsibility which every government is bound to assume, of exercising the right of dismissal of officials who have been charged with breaches of the law.

Mr. POWER: Is the resolution intended to have a retroactive effect so as to cover the Couture case, or is it only for the future?

Mr. CAHAN: The Couture case, I recognize, must now depend upon the discretion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and upon that of the Prime Minister and of his colleagues. I ask them, and I asked them at the outset, to exercise a discretion in this case in the way that I have suggested, namely, by granting an inquiry now, but to provide for the future I ask that we shall obviate difficulties, misfortunes and even possible injustices of this kind by making provision that these civil servants shall have, upon request, the right to an inquiry where they may have an opportunity of proving their innocence, although they are taking a responsibility there that one does not take in a court of justice, where every accused is deemed innocent until proven guilty. Under the English practice an official who is charged with offending against any statute, is dismissed by the government only when the complainant has gone into the courts and procured an information or an indictment, and a judgment of the court that the man is guilty, so careful are they of preserving the rights and liberties of those employed in their civil service.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal very briefly with this matter as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has reviewed the statements in the case, clearly, concisely and accurately. A member of parliament stated to the minister that he had, not hearsay, but personal knowledge of a civil servant having been actively engaged politically during, not one election, not two, but three elections. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is too clever a lawyer to think that there was any delay in reporting on this man's offence in 1921 or in 1925. Those dates were mentioned purely to show that the man had been, not a late, but a consistent offender. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the practice followed has been a rule which has been accepted by governments for many years and we have no less an authority endorsing the general principle than the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) who, when speaking in the house on April 17 last, admitted that certain dismissals were made on his recommendation, which he contended, and which I contend, he had a perfect right to make.

Mr. BENNETT: That was under an order in council.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes. In the case now under consideration the order was granted and the civil servant was dismissed. Everything that could be done to be just and fair to Mr. Couture with regard to his superannuation was done. The matter was discussed with the accountant of the department and a cheque was offered to Mr. Couture. The cheque was later returned, the Department of Justice, when the matter was referred to them, ruled that the governor in council had no authority to reinstate the man. There are two points which I have to consider. My hon. friend says, first, that the dismissal was a reflection on this man's honour. A dismissal for political partisanship is, in my opinion, no reflection on any man's honour or loyalty. It is no reflection except that the man chose to take an interest in party politics and at the same time to act as a civil servant of Canada. A civil servant of Canada has to make the choice between taking an active interest in party politics and holding his job, and I will say to my hon. friend that it is a very good thing for the Dominion of Canada that civil servants have to make that choice. We have evidence in other countries where civil servants are actively engaged in party politics, and I do not think their governments compare favourably with ours. This man's loyalty to the department is unquestioned. I believe Couture was a good public servant, but he apparently did not appreciate his job enough to keep out of politics.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not give him an opportunity to prove his case?

Mr. MALCOLM: Just a moment. I have to choose between the word of this man and that of a colleague or any other member of this house, I do not care whether he sits on this side or the other, who says that of his personal knowledge he knows a civil servant to be guilty. I have to choose between two men, and a member of parliament has the right to make a request of the minister.

Mr. MANION: Does the minister mean to suggest that if I made a complaint about somebody taking part in politics on behalf of his party, he would dismiss him?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is the right of every member to make such a request.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister dismiss the man?

Mr. MALCOLM: It has not been the practice in the past to extend such a privilege to the opposition party, but that is the right of a member of parliament.

Mr. CAHAN: Has that right existed since 1918, since the Civil Service Act was passed?

Mr. MALCOLM: It has, and my hon. friend knows it has been accepted by both parties. It was accepted on April 17 by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. HANSON: Does the minister want the house to understand that if a member on this side makes a charge on his personal responsibility that a civil servant has been guilty of political partisanship, the minister would dismiss him without investigation? That is the gravamen of the matter.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend has the point entirely wrong.

Mr. HANSON: No, I have not.

Mr. MALCOLM: I say that when a member of parliament makes a request of the minister for dismissal and states that to his personal knowledge the civil servant has taken an active political part in an election, the minister has the right, if he believes the charges to be true, to dismiss without an investigation.

Mr. GEARY: He has the right.

Mr. MALCOLM: That has been held, and it was held by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: I was dealing with the 1911 election before the Civil Service Act was amended.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The act did not change anything in that respect.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am not going to make reference to the dismissals that took place in 1911, although I could refer to many if I chose in my own department. This is the only dismissal that has taken place in the Department of Trade and Commerce since I have taken charge, and I believed that my colleague knew what he was talking about when he said that this man had been consistently guilty of political partisanship. I am not going to deal with the acceptance of the principle of dismissal for political partisanship by citing dismissals in the past, but I do want to refer to the way in which the matter was handled and which my hon. friend thinks was unfair. No good could have come from an investigation because the man could not be reinstated. The only justice that could be done to him was to give him back his contributions which were payable under the Superannuation Act. I had to choose between the statement of my hon. friend the Solicitor General, who did not say that he made these charges on some evidence of others but that he personally knew of the man's guilt, and Couture's statement. I was not going to open an investigation which could have done Couture no good. It could not have reestablished his honour because his honour was never questioned; his loyalty was never questioned. He simply chose to take part in party politics.

Mr. CAHAN: And to violate a statute, and it is on account of his violating the statute that he is charged with political partisanship.

Mr. MALCOLM: He does not violate any law of God or man at all.

Mr. CAHAN: He was violating section 55 of chapter 22 of the revised statutes of Canada, which constitutes political partisanship, and that is the only ground on which the governor in council had the right to dismiss.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not the point I want to discuss. That is not the point of my hon. friend's criticism at all. My hon. friend takes two grounds for criticism. He says that the whole principle should be changed and that this house should support the principle that when a member lays a complaint an investigation should necessarily follow immediately. I am going to submit to my hon. friend that in some cases complaints may be unjust. In cases in the past civil servants may have been dismissed on very slim charges. Does my hon. friend not think it is better to have our civil servants in Canada keep out of politics. I think the best administration will follow if our civil servants vote as they choose but do not actively engage in an election.

Mr. CAHAN: We all agree on that.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is a principle we are all agreed on.

Mr. BENNETT: Just before the house rises, may I ask if the minister would bring down at three o'clock the order in council which was agreed upon by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There was no order in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I think so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There was an agreement as to the rule, but no order in council.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it was embodied in writing.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Speaker, to review very briefly the remarks I made before luncheon, I should like to point out to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that I cannot find any orders in council pertaining to dismissals, except one order passed in 1908, which sets out that a complaint against a civil servant of political partisanship shall be made in writing. The Civil Service Act of 1908 provides that a civil servant may be dismissed for political partisanship. The possible loss of position becomes one of the terms of employment of a civil servant; for he is employed on the understanding that if he engages in promoting the welfare of political parties he is liable to dismissal.

I agree with my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George that Mr. Couture has done nothing for which he can be brought to account in a civil or a criminal court, and that no penalty can possibly be imposed upon him. By the terms of his contract of employment he may lose his position due to the fact that the Civil Service Act under which he is employed provides that he may not do certain things. If on investigation the charges were substantiated the dismissal would of course be justified.

Undoubtedly there is an injustice which my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George points out. If the investigation proves that the charges were not of a sufficient serious nature to justify the dismissal, then the government finds itself in the position brought about by the ruling of the Justice department, that under the Civil Service Act it has no power to reinstate that man. He can only again enter the civil service by going through the regular channels prescribed by the Civil Service Commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I contend that in this particular case all the requirements of the Civil Service Act of 1908 have been complied with and the practice followed by all governments since that time has been observed. Complaints of active political partisanship within the personal knowledge of a member of the house had been lodged in writing against an officer of my department. The charge stated that he had been guilty of active political partisanship on three occasions. I may say that in my opinion it was the only charge which was sufficiently well founded to justify dismissal of an officer of my department since I took office. I took the word of my colleague, a member of the house, when he said that it was on his own personal knowledge that he preferred the charge; that indeed he had been a witness to the man's actions, and therefore knew that he was guilty.

When Couture asked for an investigation into the charge, I referred the request to the member in question, who plainly said that he saw no reason for an investigation as he had personal knowledge that the man was guilty. In other words, I had either to believe the member of the house who very definitely made the charge, and who is in a position to defend his action, or to take the word of the officer who had been dismissed and whose position had been filled by the Civil Service Commission. Two years afterwards, further representations having been made to him, the member did write the letter read by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George stating that he had no objection to an investigation. But my contention is that no good end could be served by granting the investigation. If I could have reinstated Couture I would have granted his request for an investigation.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Under the law as it stands to-day I can do nothing to put Couture back in his position, because the position has been filled by the Civil Service Commission. There will have to be a change in the act dealing with reinstatement before cases such as this can be dealt with.

In so far as the general principle of my hon. friend's amendment is concerned, I do not hold with it at all. As I have said, it is desirable that civil servants should have the freedom of exercising their franchise, but I think it is undesirable that civil servants should take part in party politics. If we adopt the principle that a minister must hold an investigation every time a member of the house charges that some civil servant has been guilty of an act of political partisanship for any party without leaving to the minister the right to turn down the dozens, yes, hundreds of applications that may come for dismissals, following a general election, then whoever are in charge of the departments will be in a turmoil of investigations, considering dismissals. I contend, no matter what party is in power, that the request must first of all be decided by the minister from the point of view of its seriousness, which will eliminate probably 90 per cent of the charges.

Mr. CAHAN: Is not that possible still? That is quite possible.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend agrees with that point. No minister is anxious to worry himself and the officers of his department with many dismissals; the minor requests he brushes aside. When members of the house, complaining against civil servants for being partisans, are forced to put their charges in writing and forced to say that they know the particular persons have been guilty of an offence which is a violation of the terms of employment they do some thinking before making the charge in writing; and I contend that the regulation in this respect has been of great benefit to the civil servants of Canada. But I do not think that the civil service of Canada will be benefited, or that civil servants will be any more secure in their position against complaints, if we adopt my hon. friend's amendment that, no matter from which member the complaint may come, it will be compulsory on the part of the minister to grant an investigation into the charge that has been brought forward.

Mr. CAHAN: I think the resolution calls for such an inquiry only before a dismissal; that is to say, before the governor in council may act, by dismissing the person whom complaint is made against, there shall be a report from a commissioner who has inquired into the charge.

Mr. MALCOLM: If I misinterpreted my hon. friend's amendment—

Mr. CAHAN: That was my intention.

Mr. MALCOLM: —I will withdraw my argument in that regard; but I understood the amendment to imply that every complaint should call for an investigation.

Mr. CAHAN: No, before dismissal, preliminary to dismissal.

Mr. MALCOLM: So far as that suggestion is concerned, there may be much merit in it. As to whether or not the adoption of that suggestion would involve a want of confidence in the government, I am not prepared to say. I would not support my hon. friend's amendment if it meant a want of confidence in the government.

Mr. CAHAN: I did not intend it as a vote of want of confidence.

Mr. MALCOLM: I shall have to leave it to some of my colleagues to interpret the meaning of the amendment. I was about to say that I should be willing to give the hon. member's suggestion very serious consideration, for I do not think the matter is one that can be settled without consideration.

So far as Couture is concerned, if the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) feels that the charge has not been established I shall have no objection to granting an investigation. I must say however that under the present ruling we cannot restore him to the position which has been filled by another. Should an investigation be held and it is proved that the man's offence was not of such a nature as to justify his dismissal, all we can do is to try to place him in some other position. To that extent, if my colleague the Solicitor General thinks it advisable, I am prepared to go with my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. GEARY: I understood the minister to say that this is the only case of dismissal in his department since he took charge of it.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: There were hundreds of other cases—

Mr. MALCOLM: I did not say hundreds.

Mr. GEARY: I understood the minister to say so.

Mr. MALCOLM: I said that in the administration of departments of government there might be dozens or hundreds of minor complaints.

Mr. GEARY: The minister has in mind, I gather, some complaints in his own department.

Mr. MALCOLM: Quite.

Mr. GEARY: Quite a number of them.

Mr. MALCOLM: Often.

Mr. GEARY: In what way would those complaints differ from this one? I understand that in this case the Solicitor General added to his request for dismissal a sentence to the effect that he had personal knowledge of partisanship having been exercised. I should have thought that a written communication from any member of parliament asking for the dismissal of a civil servant on the ground of partisanship would imply personal knowledge on the part of the member; it would imply that the member, before bringing forward the complaint, had personal knowledge of partisanship on the part of the person complained against. Are we to take it that in none of the other cases to which the minister has referred has there been such an indication on the part of the member complaining as to personal knowledge? Is that the distinction?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend realizes, as every hon. member does, that ministers constantly have complaints about civil servants to the effect that they have been engaging in partisan activities, but in a great many cases the evidence is hearsay. Frequently letters are written about men in the civil service; but unless a member of the house complaining is prepared to take responsibility in the matter and to say that he has personal knowledge, I think that ministers as a rule always turn down the consideration of any complaint. And I think it is right that they should.

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps the minister and I are at cross purposes; I am speaking only of requests for dismissal coming from members—any member at all. I suppose a defeated candidate would be included in that category. I am speaking of them and of them only. Surely a request coming from a member, on his responsibility, for the dismissal of an officer must imply that he has personal knowledge of the matter whereof he complains. There is no hearsay about that. Does the Minister, in referring to many other cases, refer to those cases which have been stated in writing by members, but without the addition of such words as, "I have personal knowledge"? Are those the ones he has turned down?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend is quite right. Members are inclined probably to make verbal complaints—

Mr. GEARY: I am speaking of written complaints.

Mr. MALCOLM: —and verbal complaints are not considered; the order in council of 1923 covered that point.

Mr. GEARY: I am not speatking of them.

Mr. MALCOLM: So that to-day a complaint must be in writing. If a man writes complaining about a civil servant and says, "I have heard certain things," I do not take such a complaint seriously. If a member is not willing to say he has personal knowledge and is in a position to defend his complaint in the house, I am not prepared to dismiss a civil servant; I am not prepared to take action on hearsay evidence. That is the type of letter to which I pay no attention.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Do I understand the minister to say that any member of this house, whether he be Liberal or Tory or Progressive, may write to the minister to say that he has personal knowledge that such-and-such a civil servant in the department has been engaged in political partisanship, and the minister will thereupon dismiss that civil servant?

Mr. MALCOLM: Not at all. But the minister has a right to consider a complaint from any member of the house; that is my interpretation of the custom followed for years.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It would be a defeated government candidate on whose recommendation the minister would act.

Mr. MALCOLM: A defeated government candidate would not be a member of the house.

Mr. CAMPBELL: But it is on the recommendation of defeated government candidates that very many dismissals take place.

Mr. MALCOLM: Not of appointments under the act.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has brought forward a matter with which I am particularly concerned, and he has broadened out the debate by incorporating in his suggested amendment reforms, complete and entire, in the system which has prevailed in Canada in relation to civil servants guilty of political partisanship, and the means whereby they may be dismissed. At the outset may I say, sir, that I do not think it would be possible for this house to accept the amendment of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George otherwise than as meaning that it implies a vote of want of confidence in the government, and in support of the interpretation I would quote Bourinot at page 424:

> An amendment moved to the motion to go into committee of supply (or ways and means) does not necessarily involve want of confidence in the administration. When such an amendment simply affirms a general principle, or sets forth a public grievance, and does not directly or impliedly challenge the conduct or policy of the government, it is not, in a parliamentary sense, a motion of want of confidence—

The amendment brought forward by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George implies a challenge of the conduct of the government in connection with this particular matter, and therefore it is a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not follow that reasoning.

Mr. CANNON: I think Bourinot's reasoning is very simple. If on the motion to go into supply a member of the house expresses a general principle to which he desires the house to agree, it is not a motion of want of confidence, but if the amendment implies a criticism of the conduct of the government in any particular matter, it then becomes a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. CAHAN: Is this not merely the statement of a principle, without any particular application?

Mr. CANNON: I do not like to refuse to allow my hon. friend to interrupt, but he has spoken for two hours while I have only forty minutes, and I am going to state my case in less than forty minutes if possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the matter brought up by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is very simple. Many documents have been read; as a matter of fact the entire departmental file has been placed on Hansard, and the purpose for which that file was read is very obvious. Perhaps I might sum up the case and make it very clear and concise so that every hon. member of the house will understand it. A public official in the constituency which I represent had been in the employ of the government for a number of years, and after the elections of 1926, under the practice then existing, as sitting member for the constituency and upon my personal responsibility I wrote the Minister of Trade and Commerce asking for the dismissal of this official on account of partisanship. I do not withdraw one word of that letter which I wrote to the minister and I do not wish to lessen in any degree the responsibility which I assumed at that time and which I am quite willing to assume before the house and the country to-day.

The principle at stake is a principle of the very highest order; the dignity of the house itself is concerned in this matter. If the member for a constituency can state from his own personal knowledge that an official or a public servant of this country has acted in a partisan way, I say with no hesitation at all that if that member of parliament, be he a Tory or a Liberal, wishes to maintain his authority as far as his constituents are concerned, as well as the dignity of the house of which he is a member, there is one duty incumbent upon him to perform; that is, he should see to it that the official is removed from the civil service. This always has been the rule and the practice, and just here I might recall the expression of opinion given by no less a member of the house than the leader of the opposition. Speaking in this house on April 22 of this year, and not dealing with what might have happened in 1911 but with what did happen last year in one of the western provinces, the leader of the opposition said:

> I also recall that the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier approved of the general terms of that order.

That was the order in council which gave power to a member of parliament to ask for the dismissal of a civil servant for political partisanship.

> Action was taken accordingly, and when last session the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) was able to stand up in this house and say of his own knowledge that he believed a given person to have been guilty of political partisanship, you will recollect, Sir, that at once I said the incident was ended so far as we were concerned.

Those are the words of the leader of the opposition, spoken in this house this year; he said that the moment the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) was in a position to get up in the house and state on his own responsibility that he thought a public official was guilty of political partisanship the matter was ended so far as he and his followers were concerned. Why should the attitude taken by the opposition at that time, expressed by the leader of the opposition, be altered through an amendment brought in this morning by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George? Are there to be two leaders of the opposition? Are there to be two attitudes on the same question? Are we to accept the policy laid down by the leader of the Conservative party in April which I have just quoted from Hansard, or are we now to adopt a new platform as laid down by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who at times is represented, at least in our papers, as leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec?

What are the facts of this case? I wish to say first of all that I have been a candidate in the county of Dorchester in the province of Quebec on nine different occasions; I have won some of my elections and have lost others, and I think if you inquired of my opponents you would find that as a rule I have been a good loser. Although I have represented the county of Dorchester either in the provincial house or in this federal house for the last fifteen years, if the official records of all these departments are looked up it will be found that during the whole of my career I have had only three officials dismissed from the service. I do not believe in political retaliation; when a fight is over I think we should forget the knocks and blows which were exchanged while the battle was on. However, certain cases are exceptional, and as I stated at the outset sometimes the very dignity of the member for the constituency is at stake. In this case my dignity and authority as a member of parliament and a member of the government was at stake.

Couture was appointed shortly after the election of 1911 by the then sitting member who is now a distinguished member of the supreme court of Quebec. Couture had had the inspector of weights and measures dismissed by the member and had taken his place, and the very manner in which he had obtained the situation showed that he was a political partisan. We had two elections in my constituency in 1917 and Couture took a very active part in both; during the election of 1921 he was very active; he was more than active in the election of 1925, but according to the general principle which I had laid down for my guidance as a public man in my constituency of Dorchester, I did not ask for his dismissal. When I was holding a public meeting in the parish of St. Bernard in 1927, the parish where Couture lives, I had great difficulty in being heard. I think a member who has sat for a constituency can ask at least that his electors give him the privilege of being heard. What was the cause of the disturbance? The cause was a group of children on Couture's property, and Couture himself standing only a few feet away. That disturbance lasted for over half an hour and he never took any steps to stop it, nor did he do the least thing to allow me to be freely heard.

An hon. MEMBER: What a serious charge.

Mr. CANNON: I ask any member of this house, whether he sits on this side or on the other side, if he were attending a public meeting and a disturbance was being carried on, would he not in all fairness see that a proper hearing was given, not only to the candidate during the election but to the former member who had represented the constituency for several years? A few days after this meeting my opponent conducted a meeting in the parish—I do not wish to reopen the questions which were settled on polling day, because they were numerous and serious and could occupy the attention of any serious audience—and he took it upon himself to make a personal attack against myself. I would have been perfectly willing to allow that to pass, but a personal attack was made against my family, against my wife and against my children; Couture was present at that meeting and gave encouragement to the speaker.

Mr. CAHAN: In what way?

Mr. CANNON: If a member, no matter to what party he belongs, cannot have the right of being respected by public officials, it is about time that we closed the doors of this House of Commons and allowed someone else to handle the public business of Canada.

That is my stand in this matter. When those happenings occurred I publicly told Couture that if my party came back into power I would see that he was fired, and I have kept my promise. There are many Conservatives in the public service in the county of Dorchester, and I recognize and acknowledge their right of voting whichever way they desire, as long as they perform their duties as public officials to their own credit and to the benefit of our country. As long as I am a member of this house, I will not stand for any public official insulting either the sitting member or the candidate in any election.

If the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George desires to introduce a new principle, is he willing to make it retroactive? I have been the object of discussion to-day in the House of Commons because of one dismissal in my county made under the circumstances I have just described. If I wanted to play politics in this matter I would ask the hon. gentleman to take cognizance of the list of those who were dismissed in the county of Dorchester in the year 1911 when there was a change in government.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it.

Mr. CANNON: It is too long, I do not wish to delay the house.

An hon. MEMBER: Put it on Hansard.

Mr. CANNON: I have a list of twenty-seven postmasters who were dismissed in 1911-12 by the then sitting member.

An hon. MEMBER: Rural delivery?

Mr. CANNON: Not rural delivery postmasters. There was no investigation although the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George was then in active politics.

Mr. CAHAN: When was that?

Mr. CANNON: Nineteen hundred and eleven.

Mr. CAHAN: I was not in politics then.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member may not have been in active politics but he was in what I would call potential politics. But did he protest?

Mr. CAHAN: Against what?

Mr. CANNON: Against these dismissals in the county of Dorchester by the then sitting member; twenty-seven postmasters kicked out without any inquiry of any kind being made.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no knowledge of that matter.

An hon. MEMBER: Read the names.

Mr. CANNON: These dismissals were recommended by the then sitting member, but I will not mention his name as he is now a member of the bench. The list is as follows:

Post Office	Postmaster	Date of Dismissal	Cause of Dismissal
Abenakis	Joseph Chabot	1912	Political partisanship.
Coulombe	Stanislas Fontaine	1912	" "
Coulombe	Wilfrid Demers	1916	" "

There was an election in 1916 and I was running for office, but this gentleman was dismissed without any inquiry being made as to his political partisanship. The list continues:

Post Office	Postmaster	Date of Dismissal	Cause of Dismissal
Fir Grove	Joseph Nadeau	1912	Political partisanship.
Frampton	W. J. Doyle	1912	" "
Hennepin	Honoré Morin	1917	" "
Hemeson	John Dillon	1912	" "
Lake Etchemin	Joseph Bégin	1912	" "
Langevin	Misaël Morisset	1912	" "
O'Farrell	Patrick O'Farrell	1912	" "

Even Irishmen were being fired for political partisanship. The list continues:

Post Office	Postmaster	Date of Dismissal	Cause of Dismissal
Ravignan	Alfred Rancourt	1914	Political partisanship.
Rivière Raquette	Amedée Dionne	1913	" "
Ruisseau à l'eau chaude	Jas. Kilgannon	1912	" "
St. Abdon	Omer Faucher	1912	" "
St. Anselme	L. V. Bernier	1912	" "
Ste. Aurélie	Francis Demers	1917	" "
St. Benjamin	O. F. Boucher	1911	" "
Ste. Germaine Station	Léon Lachance	1917	" "
Ste. Hénédine	Mrs. Louise Mercier	1912	" "
Ste. Marguerite de Dorchester	J. B. Bégin	1912	" "
St. Nazaire de Buckland	Chas. Dupont	1912	" "
Ste. Rose de Watford	P. R. Provost	1912	" "
Ste. Sabine Station	Victor Potvin	1913	" "
St. Zacharie	Edouard Groleau	1913	" "
Standon	Arthur Genest	1913	Unsatisfactory management and shortage.

We have at least one case in which there was cause for the dismissal recommended by the then member.

Mr. CAHAN: Those dismissals were all made before the Civil Service Act of 1918 was passed.

Mr. CANNON: Did the hon. gentleman or his party protest? Did Couture protest? Couture had been occupying the position of a man who had been thrown out without any inquiry.

I am coming now to what the hon. gentleman described this morning as the deathbed scene, and the terrible condition in which Couture's family might have been placed. I will say to the hon. member that it was no pleasure to me to have to take the action which I did take, but I took it because I thought I had not only the right to do so but a duty to perform.

Mr. CAHAN: You took that action because of what took place at a meeting at which you were not present and of which you had no personal knowledge, according to your own statement.

Mr. CANNON: In 1911, in the very department that we are discussing now, inspector of weights and measures Mr. Bugeaud was dismissed for political partisanship in December of that year. What about his family? What about the inquiry that the hon. gentleman is asking for? Mr. Guay was dismissed on January 1, 1912; Mr. Caldwell was dismissed on August 1, 1913, and Mr. Prefontaine was dismissed on October 1, 1913. These are four dismissals in the one office in Quebec, and Mr. Couture, whom the hon. gentleman has taken under his wing to-day, replaced one of those who had been dismissed.

The larger question remains: should this be changed? Some years ago it was proposed in France that the death penalty be abolished, and the president answered by saying: "Que messieurs les assassins commencent." "Let the murderers give an example first." In 1911, 12,000 Liberal employees were dismissed without any inquiry. Will the hon. gentleman consent to make his amendment retroactive and allow those 12,000 employees to have an inquiry? That is a fair question. That is a fair way of putting the matter. Would the hon. gentleman allow his amendment to be retroactive in order that the twenty-seven postmasters in my constituency whose names were mentioned, be given an inquiry and reinstatement?

Mr. CAHAN: Certainly I would if any one of them ever asked for an inquiry and it was refused.

Mr. CANNON: I am perfectly willing to accept the hon. gentleman's answer provided it is confirmed by his leader, because, as I stated at the outset, the attitude of the two hon. gentlemen on this matter is quite divergent. The leader of the opposition said that the right thing to do when a man is guilty of partisanship is to dismiss him.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. CANNON: I quoted from Hansard what my hon. friend said.

Mr. BENNETT: I said: When the member says so of his personal knowledge.

Mr. CANNON: This is my case.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister was not at the meeting.

Mr. CANNON: At what meeting?

Mr. CAHAN: At the meeting of Mr. Cotè of which the minister complains.

Mr. CANNON: I am complaining of both meetings, the one where I addressed the electors and the one where Cotè was.

Mr. CAHAN: And the minister was not present at Mr. Cotè's meeting.

Mr. CANNON: I hope the hon. gentleman will be reasonable enough to admit that I know more about what took place in my constituency in 1926 than he did when he was in Montreal.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. gentleman makes a strong argument that Couture says that he should not have been dismissed. Has anyone ever heard of an official who was dismissed claiming that he was rightly so? I have not. To end this incident of a very minor character which has taken up already too much of the time of the house, because I have done only in one instance what other members have done in many where their names have never been mentioned, let me say this: there has been one case in my constituency. As to the larger issue whether the whole procedure should be changed, this is a matter of very serious policy which I leave to the opinion of the house.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say on this matter. I have heard the two-hour speech of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). If he goes to the Calgary stampede this year and meets some Indians there, they will probably call him "Chief Long Breath." The last issue of Life says that besides dance marathons, there might be chewing gum and teeth-brushing endurance contests. Why not have a speech marathon, not for the future, but with a retroactive effect? In this case, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George would be an easy winner, not with his two-hour speech of to-day but with the six-hour speech he delivered two years ago. In France and in England an hon. member would be covered with ridicule if he spoke for two hours on a single case in regard to which he did not know the real facts.

When the Tories were in power, the people who were dismissed were as numerous as the stars of the sky and the sands of the desert. Now the Tories complain and when their friends make trouble during an election, they would like to have them promoted instead of dismissed. I am in favour of the freedom of the franchise for all the employees in the public service; whether they are Tories, Grits, socialists or anything else, they should be entitled to enjoy their franchise with the greatest freedom. But when it comes to canvassing and making trouble at meetings, that is entirely different. I can speak freely on this subject because I have not asked for many dismissals in my constituency. There are some Tories amongst the civil servants in my constituency, but I do not bother about them. They can vote as they like. But if they cause trouble in meetings, they should be told that they cannot long retain their positions. I think this would be a good opportunity to inform all employees in the civil service to-day that if they want to make trouble during elections or at other times by canvassing against the candidates whoever they may be, they run the risk of being dismissed.

I take this opportunity of congratulating the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr Malcolm) and the Solicitor General (Mr Cannon) on their clear exposé of the case.

Amendment (Mr. Cahan) negatived on division.

SUPPLY—FISH TRAPS

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I understand that this motion covers the estimates, not only of the Department of Trade and Commerce but of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and therefore I should like to say a few words in connection with a subject that comes under the latter department. I am rather timid about introducing this, or, indeed, any subject in the house; I am afraid of adding to that terrible reputation which was ascribed to me yesterday, I see, by reading Hansard. I read it in Hansard because I did not hear a word of it at the time it was uttered. I have no objection to those sentiments being uttered in the house; they are his sentiments, not mine. Indeed, I read them with a certain amount of sympathy, because I recognized them as being the emanation of what I myself sometimes suffer from, namely, an over-quick temper and a bilious disposition. I have striven to be more successful than he, and I think I really have been, in concealing my mean disposition in that regard. I have remembered the doctrine put forward by Solomon. "He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." I think I can stake my reputation for courtesy in this house up against that of the hon. leader, who gave me such a terrible reputation. Mr. Speaker, human nature is a curious thing—I am speaking generally now. Some men remind one of sausages. They are very thin-skinned, smooth on the outside, but you never know how much of the real hog is in them until you get under their skin.

I wish to make a mild protest in connection with another matter, and that is the habit some hon. members have dropped into, unintentionally I believe, when they are making some remarks, perhaps a bit of biting criticism or an offensive remark about some other member, of speaking in so low a tone that while the remark is audible to the reporter and to the few members sitting around, it is not audible to the member to whom it is applied, and consequently he has no opportunity either to hear or to reply to it. I am quite sure that this is so opposed to any idea of courtesy or courage that I need only to mention it for hon. members to be more careful in the future in that regard.

As regards the Department of Marine and Fisheries, I want to bring up a matter in connection with fish traps. I should like briefly to outline the situation. On the 7th of April last I addressed the following letter to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

The Hon. P. J. A. Cardin,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear sir:

In Vancouver province just to hand I see notice that Judge Ellis has been appointed by you to inquire whether fish traps for salmon should be permitted in northern British Columbia.

I have heard rumours of this, but took it for granted that as I represent so many of the fishing interest of British Columbia, that I would have been given an opportunity of being heard before such a drastic step was taken.

I understood that for some years past, it has been the settled policy of this government not to allow traps in northern waters. Such has been repeatedly announced as the policy and has been carried out. Why then change it without notice, or at least give opportunity of changing it?

I think the step is bad policy, and equally bad politics. The policy has been carried out for some years. I have heard no demand for a change.

Is it permitted me to ask if there was any demand for a change, from whence did it emanate? Did any boards of trade, organizations of fishermen or of cannery men, ask for it?

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) A. W. Neill.

That was on April 7th, and I have not yet had a reply. On May 14th I brought the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister, on the orders of the day. I briefly stated the situation and asked if there might be an opportunity given for discussion of the matter in this house. I was promised a reply later, but I have not yet had one. Under date of May 31st, last Friday, I brought the matter up again in the house and said that I proposed to discuss the matter on the Marine and Fisheries estimates, and in order to be in a position to do so intelligently I asked if the report of the commissioner who had been appointed, and whose investigation at that time had certainly been completed, would be laid on the table for our guidance in the debate. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries replied as follows:

I shall do the best I can to meet the request of my hon. friend.

The report so far as I know has not yet been laid on the table; if it has been, I am ignorant of it. The estimates will soon be coming up and that is the only opportunity we shall have this session of discussing the matter. I again ask if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not lay this report on the table. I have a telegram from British Columbia to the effect that that report was mailed eight or nine days ago, so it must be in the possession of the government now. I do not want to discuss the matter at this stage, and I am mentioning it only that we may have the report before us when the estimates are being considered, and I would ask that some at least of the estimates be held over until we have had an opportunity to consider the report, and then we can discuss the matter intelligently. This is a matter of very considerable importance to a large number of people in British Columbia.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I have no objection at all to undertaking to comply with the request of my hon. friend.

Mr. NEILL: When? Will it be to-day?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Thank you.

Motion (Mr. Robb) agreed to.

VACANCIES

ISSUE OF WARRANTS BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have forwarded my warrants to the chief electoral officer for the issue of writs for elections in the electoral districts of Lanark, Frontenac-Addington and Laprairie-Napierville.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Laflamme in the chair.

Trade and Commerce—British and foreign news service, $32,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister give a brief explanation?

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This is a grant made to Reuter's news service for distributing Canadian news items in all parts of Great Britain and in foreign countries. The service has been in existence for several years. The total number of news items pertaining to Canada distributed in 1928 was 7,335. Reuter's are distributing news items to a group of British papers, sixty-three in number, carrying out the terms of the agreement by which items of Canadian news are distributed throughout Great Britain and foreign countries. We find that this method is more economical than any other.

Mr. SPENCER: Has the amount been the same for a number of years?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: Was not this item cut in half a couple of years ago, and increased again last year?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, the item was in the main estimates and increased in the supplemental.

Mr. SHORT: Does the minister consider that we are getting good value for the expenditure of this $32,000?

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure my hon. friend that we are getting very good value for it. In 1927-28 we had 13,571 news items regarding Canada wired by Reuter's to different papers in different countries of the world. The figure I gave a moment ago of 7,335 news items distributed in 1928 covers only three-quarters of the year. I do not want to weary the committee with a summary of the papers to which Reuter's distribute news items, but I can assure my hon. friend that in the opinion of my department we are getting a very good service.

Item agreed to.

Commercial intelligence service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with the development and extension of Canada's trade, $750,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister might give us some explanation.

Mr. MALCOLM: This is an increase of $250,000 and is due to the opening of three new trade commissioners' offices and the necessary staffs in connection therewith, and to the contemplated opening of six new trade commissioners' offices and the embarking on a much wider program with a view to expansion of the activities of the department.

Mr. BENNETT: Where are the offices?

Mr. MALCOLM: Chicago and San Francisco, Oslo, Hong Kong and Havana.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What does the minister expect to gain from an office in Chicago?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They will sell us more goods.

Mr. MALCOLM: I cannot make any definite pronouncement to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) as to what business may result from contact with the Chicago market, but it is felt that there is a very great market in Chicago for certain Canadian products, just as there is in New York.

Mr. MANION: If they will let you into that market.

Mr. MALCOLM: It was decided to open up trade offices in Chicago and San Francisco to allow Canadian shippers interested to get in closer touch there than they could through the New York office.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I quite understand the desirability of making reasonable efforts to get into the Chicago market—if the Americans wish us to go there. The trouble is that they do not wish us to go there. Why should we spend money in Chicago when we know that there is not the slightest chance of selling them our goods?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend has had enough experience of the Department of Trade and Commerce to know that our office in New York is of very great service in keeping our shippers in touch with foreign buyers who are visiting that city. I do not think our trade commissioner in Chicago will do any less valuable work than has been done in New York. Many Canadian business men are strongly of the opinion that trade offices in Chicago and San Francisco would give just the same excellent results as have followed the establishment of our trade office in New York. A great many oriental buyers go to San Francisco. We feel that we would be doing a good stroke of business by establishing a trade office there to get in touch with buyers who might be induced to come to Canada. The same remarks apply to Chicago.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister is too good a business man to expect to "put that over." People who want to sell goods go to the place where the market is; they do not depend on an outside competitor to provide them with the market.

Mr. BENNETT: Do those offices do anything in connection with the sale of cereals and other agricultural products?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister name me a single officer of the Department of Trade and Commerce who did anything last year in connection with the sale of wheat?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend is quite right in regard to that, because in so far as the sale of wheat is concerned it is usually sold on contract, and I do not think a trade commissioner could be of very much assistance in that regard or in the sale of newsprint. I may tell my hon. friend from Lincoln that a few days ago a Canadian business man reported to us that, although the Chicago office has been open only two weeks, when he called there he found fourteen men waiting to make inquiries of our commissioner with regard to the market for Canadian commodities which they wanted to sell.

Mr. BENNETT: To sell to us?

Mr. MALCOLM: No; these men were trying to sell their commodities in Chicago, and were asking for assistance from our trade commissioner.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Could the minister tell us one thing they ever sold?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend is a little unfair. The office has been opened only two weeks. I am quite frank to say that the experiment looks advisable to me. If it does not prove so, and the commissioner at that point cannot show that he has been benefiting the Canadian shipper, then I think the opening of the office is subject to criticism.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely, the minister will find it very hard to prove that the trade commissioner succeeds in doing anything on behalf of Canadian shippers. How can he show us that the trade commissioner could do anything?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend knows that these offices can show what sales they make. My deputy has just handed me a memorandum from the director of commercial intelligence stating that one outstanding example of the year's work, so far as the alertness on the part of our trade commissioners is concerned, was reported by one of the firms who benefited. This has to do with an agricultural product—apples. Our trade commissioner at Brussels discovered in November that there was going to be a very excellent opportunity for the sale of Canadian apples. He took the matter up with Mr. Forsyth Smith, the trade commissioner at Liverpool. Mr. Smith notified the Department of Agriculture here, who got in touch with the shippers of apples in the maritime provinces, and for the first time in history, through the activity of these men, we have shipped 85,000 barrels of apples this year to Belgium, valued at $467,000. That market had apparently been left in abeyance until the trade commissioner saw its possibilities and informed our shippers. I think my hon. friend realizes that from time to time we get many letters of appreciation of the work done by our trade commissioners. I admit that the work which passes through these offices cannot be tabulated, because much depends on the energy of the man selling his goods, his prices, tariffs and other considerations; but that our trade commissioners are of great assistance to Canadian shippers can be borne out by the letters we receive from the shippers themselves.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When the minister is asked a question about Chicago, he switches over to Brussels. He puts me in mind of another minister who was instrumental a few years ago in making a treaty with Belgium. He told us in the same flowing language about the enormous quantities of butter the treaty would enable our dairymen to sell to Belgium. "Why," he said, "already contracts have been made in Montreal." But that butter never got into our export returns; it melted somewhere. At the same time the Minister of Justice said: "We are not making this treaty for the old habitants of Jacques Cartier's time, we are making it for the present day farmers of Quebec." I reminded him at the time that the old people who have been dead two hundred years sold just as much butter to Belgium as do their present day successors. The Minister of Trade and Commerce follows the same line—now he tells us about apples. I do not object to making an arrangement through our trade commissioners with people who want to trade with us. But what is the use of making trade arrangements with people who put their tariff up so high that we cannot sell to them. I do object to spending money in a country whose people say deliberately they will not trade with us, that they will put up their tariff so high that it will effectively exclude our products from their market. That is what has hapened in France, and I told the minister a few years ago what would happen there. We enter into a treaty with them, giving them a fixed rate of duty, and we allow them to impose against us a rate of duty variable from day to day. They have changed their rate of duty so that our trade has vanished, and now I understand that wheat, although we made a treaty with them by which we got a minimum tariff, has now gone up, and is going up still further. And it will continue to do so without our being able to do a thing, because we have a stationary tariff.

Mr. HARRIS: Before the minister replies to the hon. member I want to make one or two observations. In his last remarks the minister had something to say about letters he had received from Canadian shippers. I should like him to say a word or two with reference to the letters that he is receiving from shippers who are largely in Europe and abroad. I venture the opinion that never in the history of the Department of Trade and Commerce has there been so much correspondence from manufacturers who find their domicile on the European continent; and at the same time the statistics will show that we are presently receiving from our good neighbour to the south more in the line of manufactured goods than perhaps at any other time in the history of this Dominion. In that same connection I want to point out that a situation has arisen in Canada—the statistics will prove it—which is going to be very embarrassing for this country as one year succeeds another. It is this: the general average of prices in the United States to-day, on commodities made from raw materials which are abundant in this country, is on a level of 10 to 20 per cent higher than are the selling prices of manufactured goods from these raw materials which are enjoyed in this Dominion. This situation arises: immediately there is a small shortage of raw material in that great consuming country of 110,000,000 people, we find that the manufacturers over there come to Canada and take away from the manufacturers of this country their source of raw materials; if they do not take away the raw materials they so enhance the price of raw materials to the manufacturers of this country that one by one those manufacturers find themselves no longer in the position of manufacturers but rather of dealers in perhaps the same finished commodities, buying those finished commodities on the European continent and bringing them here to hold their trade.

The minister in his last words told this house that he was well pleased with the letters he was receiving from shippers in this country. I want him in fairness to the house to make a few observations with regard to the letters he is receiving from the shippers in other lands. To enlarge the point a little further; it is a well know fact that the duty against commodities coming in from the European continent is not nearly so high coming into Canada as that duty is against these European manufacturers going into the United States. The result is that those engaged in industry find that their market price is set by the market price which the shippers in Europe are able to make. The market price for a large part of our commodities is set, not perhaps so much in London and Liverpool, as in days gone by, but in Hamburg, Paris, Lyons, Brussels, Antwerp and Rotterdam. They cannot get their goods into the United States. I hesitate to make the statement—the minister no doubt will enlarge the point for us—but I venture the opinion that they dump those goods into Canada, so that the manufacturer who is trying to make a livelihood in this country finds himself on the one hand deprived of the raw material for the manufacture of his goods, by reason of the fact that the general level of prices in the United States for the finished commodities is a little higher than it is in Canada—finds himself, I say, deprived of that raw material —and at the same time finds his market flooded by finished material produced in Europe and Great Britain. I would ask that the minister be good enough to see to it that every possible protection that is given to us in the statutes as they exist is taken advantage of, so that in the final analysis we shall not remain between the upper and the nether millstones in the matter of industry in this country.

I had the pleasure last year of directing to the minister's attention another point, and I hope that when he makes his reply he will tell us what is being done in that connection. That particular point, hon. gentlemen will remember, had something to do with this fact. Europeans find themselves able to enter their goods into Great Britain free of duty. Great Britain, on the other hand, finds herself able to ship goods to Canada under the British preference. We are glad to have the British preference, but we desire that those who are shipping into this country under that preference shall play fair. We do not want them to ship their commodities into this country under a preference and at the same time, in the same month, replenish their own supply, for their own consumption, from Europe, using the British preference just for the sole purpose of being able to manufacture over there and ship goods into Canada. We do not want them to ship goods under the preferential tariff and at the same time supply their home market with goods manufactured in Europe under conditions such as every hon. member knows exist on the continent. If this process continues, it is not too much to say that it is only a matter of time when we shall find in Canada that our standard of living, of which we make such a boast and are rightly so proud, will deteriorate to the standard of living under which those people in Europe are living to-day, and to which we do not like to refer. I should like the minister to enlarge on these two or three phases of the present trade situation and to give to the committee some idea of what is being done to look after the interests of those people in our midst who are employed in Canadian industry.

Mr. MALCOLM: In reply to my hon. friend, who objected strongly to the opening of an office in Chicago, on the ground that we should not establish an office in a country whose tariff was unfavourable to the entry of Canadian goods, I can only say that I should not care to take the stand that we ought not to try to sell our goods to anyone who will buy them. I should not like to take the stand, that because the United States decided to raise their tariff on two or three items we should step out of the market and say we cannot do anything. Canadian business men have represented to the department the advisability of this country having offices in Chicago. Whether or not those offices are going to be very helpful I will not venture to prophesy, but I think they will. I do think that until it is shown that the offices have not been helpful, it cannot be argued that they should not be established. I fully admit what my hon. friend says; the United States so frames its tariffs as to make it very difficult for us to trade with that country. But that we do trade with the United States the hon. member does not deny; he does not deny that we send many commodities to the country to the south of us. I will not bother to give the list.

Mr. BENNETT: Three-fifths consists of wood and wood products.

Mr. MALCOLM: A good deal of it, yes. With regard to the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) with reference to assistance in the sale of wheat, I may say that only on one or two occasions have our men found themselves able to be of much assistance in this direction. Last year in Mexico, our commissioner, Mr. Wilde, did endeavour to be of assistance to Canadian shippers in a general way by getting some of the Mexican buyers to take Canadian wheat. He succeeded in selling in the year about $300,000 worth. I happen to have his report on the matter before me. Our men in Italy at present are making a survey to assist in getting Italy to buy more of our hard durum wheat, which was under discussion the other day.

Mr. BENNETT: They have placed a duty of 75 cents a bushel on that wheat.

Mr. MALCOLM: I quite appreciate that fact, if that be true, it will be harder for our men, but still because we have duties against us I cannot hold that we should give up the work of trying to promote trade through our comercial intelligence service, which was started many years ago and which has been carried on under many governments. I believe Canadian exporters are of the opinion that the service has been of vast assistance to them, and I think it can be made of more assistance. As a matter of fact I am free to say, without desiring to criticize my colleagues, that I do not think we are more than scratching the surface in the way of giving assistance to the business men of Canada through commercial intelligence. I believe a very great deal more help can be given than has been given, and if I were on the opposite side of the house and one of my hon. friends were minister I would be likely to criticize him for not opening more trade offices.

Mr. BENNETT: It depends where they are opened.

Mr. MALCOLM: I quite agree with my hon. friend that there is not much use in opening offices in places where it is difficult to do business, but I do not admit that because it is difficult we should not try to do business. I do not think we should take everything lying down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think we should refuse to go into the markets of the United States; as far as I am concerned I am just as anxious to sell there as anywhere else—

Mr. BENNETT: We have not a trade office at Geneva, have we?

Mr. MALCOLM: That is a diplomatic office to which my hon. friend is referring; of course, he is a lawyer and he knows more about diplomacy.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister made a reference to hard durum wheat. Will he be good enough to explain what he means by a hard durum wheat?

Mr. MALCOLM: Durum wheat is a very hard, flinty wheat, as my hon. friend probably knows better than I do.

Mr. BENNETT: A macaroni wheat.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes. The word "durum" is a trade name for this particular wheat, which is largely grown in Manitoba. It does not grade in with our red spring wheat at all; it does not mill the same and the flour millers do not use it. It has found its outlet in the macaroni mills on the continent, and according to my information it cannot be mixed with our red spring wheat because of the difference in texture. It is not sold on the exchanges to the extent spring wheat is sold; it is disposed of in smaller parcels and there is a smaller quantity grown.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would like to ask a question in regard to the markets for wheat. I have been informed by people in the grain trade that practically all the wheat for European consumption is bought by a single firm in Liverpool; I am told that one house in Liverpool buys for fifteen European countries. Can the minister tell me whether or not that is correct?

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. MALCOLM: I believe that statement is rather exaggerated.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Among the countries named by my informant were France and Italy, and I recall an incident which took place at the beginning of the session, when the Minister of Finance informed the house that the trade figures did not correctly represent the trade between Canada and France, because he had found that some wheat consigned to Great Britain had eventually reached France. My informant tells me that this wheat was bought by a firm in Britain and the destination changed to France while the wheat was on the Atlantic. It was really an export from Canada to Great Britain; the profit was made in Great Britain, and it was not an export to France at all. Great Britain exported that grain to France.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think that is true.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And I am told that the firm which bought that grain for France buys all the grain for Italy and thirteen other countries as well. I am told that there is no competition at all in the purchasing of grain at Liverpool because this one house controls the situation and buys for practically all the European countries which import grain. If that is so I can understand the lack of competition, and perhaps that is reflected in the price offered.

Mr. MALCOLM: I hardly think that statement is absolutely correct. The pool has some selling offices on the continent, and they are extending those offices; at the moment they are discussing opening an office in Milan, and in fact we have been asked to make some inquiries for them in that regard. They now have an agent in Milan and also have some agents in France. I do not want to labour the point raised by my hon. friend with regard to the crediting of exports to Great Britain, but I think hon. members generally realize that there is a difficulty in compiling consumption figures as against actual trade figures. We do not know whether all the newsprint we sent to the United States actually remains in that country; they may reexport small quantities of it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, but in that case we export directly to the United States, while in regard to the grain the export was made to Great Britain and the Minister of Finance tried to switch it to show that it was really an export to France.

Mr. MALCOLM: It would be an export to France if the grain left Montreal, as is often the case, consigned to a Liverpool broker who bought it for delivery with the option of more than one point of destination. The grain might be diverted to France or to Belgium.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the export was to Great Britain.

Mr. MALCOLM: It would be a sale to Great Britain, but the consumption figure would be shown by France. I think my hon. friend will agree with that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think it is artificial.

Mr. MALCOLM: France and Belgium both keep their figures according to the country of origin; this would be shown as Canadian grain, while we show it as a sale to Great Britain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The object of the Minister of Finance was to give a favourable impression with regard to our trade with France under his treaty.

Mr. MALCOLM: I quite appreciate that.

Mr. EVANS: I understood the minister to say he was opening a trade office in Chicago. What class of goods will Chicago probably buy from us?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is it proposed to open any other offices in the United States in addition to the one at Chicago?

Mr. MALCOLM: No. I cannot tell my hon. friend what commodities we might sell in Chicago but I can give him a few items as to trade which has been the direct result of the work of our New York office this year. That office has been responsible for the sale of lumber to the extent of $3,750, for the sale of canned salmon to the extent of $4,800,000. They have also made some direct sales of Canadian cattle and there is a trade developing between Canada and the United States in certain varieties of biscuits, although this year that trade amounted to only $158,000.

Mr. EVANS: May I take it that these trade commissioners will be experts in appraising the values of the different goods sold in the different countries of the world? Last year two appraisers were appointed for cities in Germany, and I want to ask the minister if the knowledge obtained by these commissioners with regard to the values of different goods will be available to us?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry; I did not quite understand my hon. friend's question.

Mr. EVANS: Will the knowledge and information obtained by these commissioners in the different countries, with regard to the values of different commodities, be available to us?

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure my hon. friend that we have the statistics here with regard to most foreign countries, but I do not know which commodity he would like inquired into.

Mr. EVANS: Anything we have to sell.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend realizes that the very duty of a trade commissioner in a foreign country is to survey the field and, if he finds any opportunity for trade, to forward that information here. It is distributed from the commercial intelligence office here to the various exporters, or the trade commissioner may communicate direct with the Canadian industrialist who is likely to be able to fill the orders the trade commissioner believes can be obtained. His job is to study the market in order to help the Canadian exporter.

Mr. MANION: Does he take the orders?

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure the hon. member that he comes mighty close to it.

Mr. BENNETT: At times he comes too close.

Mr. MALCOLM: He gives every assistance to Canadian firms.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does he assist the live stock business in any way?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, I think every branch of industry is referred to our trade commissioners for information as to available markets. After all is said and done, I think my hon. friend realizes that the question asked by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) is rather a pertinent one. The hon. member asked if he actually took the orders. That is not his duty. His duty is to assist Canadian exporters in every way he can; find information for them and help them to establish connections and agencies. Since the commercial intelligence department was started years ago, I do not think it can be said that any Canadian exporter has received anything but a courteous answer and the utmost assistance when he made inquiries of our offices abroad.

Mr. KAISER: How many countries import wheat from us and how many countries import our flour?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not the statistics as to the countries to which we sell our commodities.

Mr. BENNETT: Every European country buys our wheat.

Mr. KAISER: The figures I have indicate that thirty-six countries import our wheat and some ninety countries import our flour.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is possibly correct.

Mr. KAISER: Are we encouraging the exportation of wheat as against the exportation of flour; how is it that we are able to send our flour to so many countries and our wheat to so few?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the hon. member must realize that every country in the world does not grind wheat.

Mr. SPENCER: With reference to the exportation of wheat, I would advise the committee that the pool have agencies both in France and Italy.

Mr. MALCOLM: They have an agent in Italy, not an agency.

Mr. SPENCER: I congratulate the minister upon opening more trade agencies in the United States, as I think we have waited too long to do this. Although the American tariff is against us, if the United States manufacturer takes full advantage of that tariff there is no reason why our goods should not go over the tariff wall. Would the minister advise the committee of the number of trade agencies which we have and where they are located?

Mr. MALCOLM: We have offices in Melbourne, Australia; London; Calcutta; Glasgow; Hamburg; Liverpool; Paris; Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro on the east coast of South America; Lima on the west coast of South America; New York; Bristol; Milan; Mexico City; Havana; Shanghai; Auckland; Kobe; Batavia; Kingston; Jamaica; Brussels; Rotterdam; Port of Spain; Dublin and Cape Town. The new offices will be located at Hong Kong; Panama; Oslo; Athens; Chicago and San Francisco.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister advise the committee how many trade agents or commissioners the United States have in Canada?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry but I cannot give the hon. member that information.

Mr. BENNETT: They call them commercial agencies.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the department have that information?

[Mr. Kaiser.]

Mr. MALCOLM: It can be secured for the hon. member if he desires it. I think they are called trade commissioners, but I do not know how many offices are established in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: They have one here in Ottawa.

Mr. HARRIS: Would the minister be good enough to answer the questions I asked?

Mr. MALCOLM: I thought the hon. member was making a speech, and I did not get the import of his questions.

Mr. HARRIS: If the minister wants a speech we can oblige him any time he is ready. I asked the minister to make some observations to the house with regard to the amount of service which is being given to importers to this country who are bringing European and other goods to Canada and supplying a demand which could very readily be supplied by our own home industries.

Mr. MALCOLM: The whole object of our commercial intelligence department is to assist Canadians who desire to export; it has nothing whatever to do with the importing of goods. Our trade commissioners do not assist Canadian merchants to find commodities; that is not their job. The trade commissioner's job is to help the Canadian exporter find a market. I hope the hon. member does not think that the work of the Canadian commercial intelligence department has been based on the principle of helping to buy foreign goods? It is based on the principle of selling Canadian goods abroad.

Mr. HARRIS: But they are wandering into the other line of endeavour.

Mr. MALCOLM: Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS: My next question had to do with the commodities from Europe finding their way into Great Britain and replacing consumption there, and Great Britain in turn exporting them to Canada under the British preference. I asked this same question last year and perhaps the minister has had a chance to think it over and may be able to give me a reply this year?

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think the hon. member is fair in asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he is putting through estimates on commercial intelligence, to go into a question which belongs properly to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: Or National Defence.

Mr. MALCOLM: Perhaps. As to the hon. member's suggestion that commodities of continental manufacture might come via

Great Britain and enter Canada under the British preferential tariff, I think he must recall the discussion which took place a short time ago in the house, when the Minister of National Revenue was discussing the enactment of the 50 per cent British labour content requirement. That matter comes purely within the jurisdiction of the Department of National Revenue and this vote has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. HARRIS: The third question had to do with the export from this country of raw material. Are our trade commissioners finding markets for this raw material? Would the minister give the committee some information with regard to how the work of the offices would be divided up as between raw materials and manufactured goods? In other words, how much emphasis has the minister given in his instructions to these trade commissioners as to the service they should give in connection with the sale of raw materials as against manufactured goods?

Mr. MALCOLM: The work of the Canadian trade commissioner is the same as that of any other public servant, he is supposed to be of assistance to Canadian exporters. A Canadian exporter may desire to export newsprint and may ask for a survey. A Canadian exporter may desire to export wood pulp and he may ask the trade commissioner to secure for him some information as to possible markets for that commodity. He may ask the commissioner to find a market for pulpwood. I am giving these illustrations advisedly, because any man who believes in employment in this country knows that it is better to export newsprint than to export wood pulp, and it is better to export wood pulp than to export pulpwood. I hope the hon. member does not think that the trade commissioner has it within his jurisdiction to dictate to the exporter and say to him that he is not doing the right thing when he does not grind his pulpwood up and sell it in the form of paper. These men are employed for the service of Canadian exporters, no matter what their line of business may be. I can quite conceive that my hon. friend might say that we should not ship any finished leather to New York, but if we can ship leather and cannot ship shoes, why not ship leather? I do not think it is within the province of the trade commissioners to dictate; it is their duty to serve. The commercial intelligence branch is a service branch for which this house votes money. It gathers information which it is difficult for business firms to obtain in foreign countries, and supplies the information to Canadian exporters. It is not a department which should dictate governmental policy. It has to do the best it can under whatever policy may be in effect.

Mr. HARRIS: Surely the minister must admit that they have direction. He does not want to leave with the house the impression that they are merely employed on surveys for some of the Canadian exporters. Have they enough business from Canadian exporters to keep them employed 100 per cent of their time? There must be some portion of their time when they are looking for something to do, and when they receive direction from the minister as to what sort of service they are going to render. Will the minister tell us what these trade commissioners are doing during the portion of their time that they must find on their hands when they are not making a particular survey for some exporter of some particular commodity? There must be some guiding policy given by the minister, and surely we have a right to know what surveys are being made and what they consist of.

Mr. MALCOLM: The trade commissioners representing Canada do not waste much time. We have some extremely good men in the service. As regards their not having direction, I do not think the trade commissioners ever had any better direction than they have today under Mr. Chester Payne, the director of the commercial intelligence service. My hon. friend would like some information. May I read the progress reports of the office in Buenos Aires giving new business secured for Canadian firms directly by the office amounting to $164,888.

Mr. BENNETT: For how long a period?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is the new business secured during the year. Newsprint sold through the office by the efforts of Commissioner McColl amounted to $40,000. He sold $31,000 worth of radio supplies. Elastic webb, which is another article that we have been able to introduce into the Argentine, was sold to the extent of $20,000 worth. These are not big items, but they are articles which have not been sold there before by Canadian exporters. There were $15,000 worth of rubber shoes and $14,750 worth of storage batteries sold. Eighteen new agencies were established during the year in the Argentine republic. The market was investigated on certain items for eighty-eight different firms who asked for investigations. Our total exports to the Argentine republic in 1928 amounted to $11,085,000 and I think in 1929 Mr. McColl was able to show an increase from $11,085,000 to $14,493,000. I feel that as respects our exports to the Argentine, a country which is competitive with us in regard to wheat and other grain products but not with regard to manufactured products, the result of Mr. McColl's work of the year has been very satisfactory.

Mr. SHORT: I notice among the list of agencies read by the minister, he does not mention Newfoundand. Are there any commercial agencies in Newfoundland?

Mr. MALCOLM: We have no trade commissioners in Newfoundland.

Mr. SHORT: Does the minister not think that a trade commissioner in Newfoundland could secure a great deal more business for this country than a trade commissioner in Chicago? This is one of our own dominions within a short distance, especially of the maritime provinces, which imports practically all the manufactured articles and a great deal of the food products it uses. I am told that the bulk of its imports to-day is from the United States, of the very articles which could be supplied by Canada. There has been of late a great deal of discussion in the newspapers with reference to Canadian trade with Newfoundland, and all the articles are condemning the government of Canada for not appointing a trade agent in Newfoundland and going over to the cities of the United States where the markets are practically closed against us, establishing agencies there and letting trade that is right at our own doors be captured by the United States. This is a matter that the Department of Trade and Commerce could very well look into. The trade that is nearest home is always the most satisfactory to have. We could supply many of the commodities that the people of Newfoundland are to-day importing from the United States; but if the government does not think that trade is worth looking after and prefers to establish agencies in Chicago and other United States cities where the tariff is so high against us, I think the government is showing very poor business judgment. I thought I would draw the matter to the attention of the minister, because there are splendid opportunities for trade with Newfoundland.

Mr. MALCOLM: We have looked upon Newfoundland as being a very easy country to reach, and one of our own men occasionally goes there to make a survey. At one time there was a trade commissioner's office in Newfoundland and a former minister thought it advisable to close the office because there was not enough work to keep the trade commissioner busy. We had contemplated, if we succeeded in making a proper tariff agreement with Newfoundland, reopening an office. Our business with Newfoundland is not very difficult to look after and it is hard for a man in that country to find enough work to keep him busy. He has not much travelling to do because the business is practically all in the one city, namely, St. John and it is in the hands of a limited number of firms. Our trade with Newfoundland amounts to about $11,000,000 and is quite substantial.

Mr. SHORT: It might be double that amount.

Mr. MALCOLM: It might be, if the Newfoundland firms found it profitable to import from Canada. My hon. friend will realize that Canada has not had any favourable tariff consideration from Newfoundland in the past. The rate of duty is the same on a Canadian article as on a United States article and it is not always easy for the Canadian exporter to increase his business. We are suggesting that Newfoundland should give us an empire preference. If that were done we would probably be justified in opening an office there.

Mr. SHORT: Is it not a fact that Newfoundland just recently tried to negotiate a trade agreement with this country but did not meet with very much success? Did their Prime Minister not visit Ottawa within the last few months and go away very much discouraged with the reception he got in regard to trade relations?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not quite like the idea of my hon. friend from Digby trying to encourage the minister to establish a trade agency in Newfoundland. My experience from a business point of view is that wherever these trade commissioners have meddled, they have interfered with trade instead of benefiting it. My own company, coming down to personal matters, are presently and for a number of years have been doing a very fine trade with Newfoundland. Formerly we did a fine trade with France before the government monkeyed with it, but when they made their French treaty they cut us off entirely from the French market, and that is my reason for saying that I would very much prefer them to leave Newfoundland alone.

Mr. BENNETT: If they are going to make a treaty, yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, because I am not at all sure of the benefits of their treaty-making.

Mr. BENNETT: Every one they have made has been a failure.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister a few minutes ago stated the amount of canned salmon that had been sold in New York owing to representations made by our office there. I would like to inquire whether this was imported into the United States for home consumption, or was reexported from the United States. The minister also said that a considerable trade had been worked up in biscuits.

Mr. MALCOLM: A small trade.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My objection to opening offices in the United States is based on my experience. Whenever my company or any other company that I ever had anything to do with worked up a business in the United States, just as soon as we got the business established, the United States immediately shut off the whole thing by raising the tariff overnight, and I say that simply to open an office in a country like that is an impossible business proposition. It is not right to spend the money on it, because we do not get any lasting benefit from it. I know that, and the minister knows it just as well as I do.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister can speak feelingly on that point.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Very likely, if he has had anything like the experience that I have had. I have got so that I leave it alone entirely. I do not want any Canadian money spent in opening up offices in the United States, in Chicago or anywhere else. You can waste money enough without doing that. My experience has been that just as soon as you work up a trade with the United States it is shot to pieces overnight by an increase in their tariff, and they do not have to wait for congress to meet to raise the tariff.

Mr. MANION: I wish to offer a suggestion to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and that is a method by which he might save this whole expenditure. I assume that this vote is in the estimates for the purpose of helping Canadian business and Canadian business men. My hon. friend himself is a well-known business man, and I think he will agree with my suggestion privately, although he may not publicly; that is to cut out this item altogether and to make a move that will cost this country nothing but will bring about far better results than the expenditure of this $750,000 for trade agencies in foreign countries. Let us treat other countries in tariff matters as they treat us. That is my personal opinion of what we should do. By doing that we would hold the home market, and even if our people did not get the foreign markets because of foreign tariffs, we would get the home market, and in all probability, knowing our attitude, foreign countries would not raise their tariffs so high against us, and we would therefore increase our trade with foreign countries as well, and all that could be done without the expenditure of this money. I am not suggesting cutting out the vote. I am suggesting a method of supplementing the minister's efforts to obtain trade with foreign countries, and that is to treat other countries in tariff matters as they treat us, which would enable us to hold our own home market and get much more of the foreign market than we otherwise would do, because foreign countries then would not treat us with as little consideration as they now do.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is not a man in this house who is better able to protect his business than the minister, and there is no greater protectionist. His business enjoys the highest rate of protection that the Canadian tariff affords. That is true; the minister need not shake his head. In addition to that, he sees to it that a considerable proportion of his raw material comes in free. I do not think that the hon. member who has just spoken can teach the minister very much about protecting the interests of his own business. I leave that for the consideration of the minister and of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was rather interested in noticing that we had two offices in South America. I have sometimes thought, and I wonder if the minister has, that there are good possibilities of increasing our trade there. It has appeared to me that possibly the South American countries offer the most promising field for our exports in many lines of goods that we can find in the world to-day. While, of course, the minister undoubtedly understands his business a good deal better than I do, still for my part at least I would strongly encourage him to reach out into that field and do as much business there as possible. I think if he established three or more live trade agencies there, it would be money well spent. I think we could build up a very much larger business there than we now have. As a matter of fact, as far as I can see, the countries of South America and the Orient are about the two best directions which are now open to us in seeking new markets or extending the markets we now have.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to supplement the observations of the hon. member for Red Deer. Looking over the world at large, if we are going to trade we must make up our minds that we can trade only in those countries where there is the opportunity of selling what we produce. That means that we must sell primarily to those countries that do not produce what we have to sell. That seems to be axiomatic. We start with that, and what are we doing? We start two new offices this year in the United States, one in Chicago and one in San Francisco, and the next thing we find is that the United States increases its tariff on many of the goods that we could sell to them. They are increasing their tariff on beef and other agricultural products, on milk, for instance, and cream. By the elastic provisions of their tariff they can raise their tariff without waiting for legislation. All this is going on. I submit to the minister that in South America there is a very great opportunity, and while we are sitting by, the Americans are invading and securing that market. I think it is not too much to say that in a large way the South Americans would sooner trade with the Canadians than with almost any other people they know, or I will put it this way: Other things being equal, they would give us the preference. I think the minister will say that is so. The office at Panama is highly desirable, also at Buenos Aires, Valparaiso, Lima and up the west coast of South America. All these are very desirable, but when we talk of opening offices in the United States I put this to the minister: He is a manufacturer and he heard the hon. member from Lincoln, who is also a manufacturer, give his experience, and while this is not an experience meeting, because the experiences cannot at all be equal owing to the various businesses and the various tariffs imposed against them, may I say that during the last five years we have every evidence that when Canadian manufactured goods have found a market in the United States that market has been closed to them by the United States tariff, either by changing the classification or by a presidential proclamation, under their elastic tariff provisions, that shut our goods out.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is true.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the intention of the tariff act of the United States. It was put there for that purpose. Therefore let us devote our time and our energy and our money to promoting trade in those portions of the world where there is an opportunity for Canadian products to find a ready market. May I suggest to the minister that if he just had the same desire to promote trade in Canada as he has outside of Canada—

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, I have.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to see the evidence of it.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not my job with these estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister says that is not his job. Others may think that it is his job. But at any rate I do put this to him: has the time not come when the Canadian government of the day should be considering something in regard to the home market? There is $800,000,000 worth of trade that many people in Canada could get by going after it. We import over $1,360,000,000. Last year alone we imported $420,000,000 of iron and steel products. Take electric goods; we send our copper blister to be refined in the United States, and because we have to pay a quarter of a cent a pound more than their own manufacturers pay for the same copper, we buy electric goods made in the United States. The same thing applies to nickel, to asbestos and to various other materials. The development of export trade is highly desirable; but remember this, in developing export trade we are subject to the caprice and the jealousy and the competition of the countries to which we ship our goods, as well as competition from every other country in the world. On the other hand, we have a market at home which last year we threw away to the extent of $1,300,000,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: Oh, no.

Mr. BENNETT: But that is what it gets down to. Do you realize that last year in duties alone on goods imported we collected $200,000,000. That was half of the entire revenue of the Dominion. If the minister will display the same interest in Canadian trade that he shows in his own business, and see that Canadian trade is protected by a tariff similar to that which he enjoys, then our manufacturers will have the business. I put that to him as a Canadian business man of whom we are proud, because he has succeeded in his business.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are getting personal.

Mr. BENNETT: No, we are proud of him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: So are we.

Mr. BENNETT: He has succeeded. Why? Because he has had an opportunity of fair competition with the whole world. How did he get it? He did not get it; his business got it. Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave it to his business—a protection of 30 per cent. The minister's steel, his iron, his logs, his raw material come in free.

Mr. MALCOLM: Oh, no.

Mr. BENNETT: Not wholly, perhaps, but partly. The steel and iron from which you make your castors, the logs out of which you saw your ebony, your mahogany, your teak, your oak—these things come in free, and the reason that a profitable business has been built up in Kincardine, of which this country has some reason to be proud, is that the protection given to this Canadian industry has ensured that it will be maintained in this country against the mass production of the world.

Now, I want the minister to spend a little of his splendid talent and his energy and his vision in doing something for Canada; instead of trying to sell goods in the United States by trade commissioners in New York, in Chicago, and in San Francisco, and then when they get the business opened up, "bing," as the boy says, up goes the tariff, and that is the end of it. I know a case where a Canadian manufacturer established a market in Michigan. He said: "Here is my chance for my surplus product." He made his goods in Toronto, but before he could get his order actually delivered in Michigan the tariff classification became such that those goods could not be despatched. Right within five miles of where I now stand is a factory that tried to make aviation suits for sale in the United States, but the classification was so changed that they could not be shipped into that market. The people of the United States are not going to let Canada invade their market. To keep out our goods they change their classification overnight. I suggest to the minister that he devote some of his splendid talent to looking after our home market. He is a protectionist; the Minister of National Revenue is a protectionist; the Minister of Justice is a Genevaite—that is a little different; the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a collector of curios—and he would certainly like to have a free trader as a curio; the Secretary of State is a protectionist—

Mr. McINTOSH: Complete the picture.

Mr. BENNETT: Well the member for North Battleford is neither.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the Minister of Trade and Commerce in opening up trade agencies in the United States. Contrary to what has been said by the front-benchers of the opposition, trade has been developed with the United States in spite of their high tariffs.

Mr. BENNETT: In what?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): In certain agricultural products. The export of cream and milk from this country to the United States has increased in spite of the raising of the tariff ever since the defeat of the Wilson administration.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman know that on the 18th day of this month it will be increased by 50 per cent?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Yes; but the records will show—my hon. friend can get them and they will prove my contention—that in spite of all the tariff increases on cream and milk there has been a steady increase in our export of these commodities to the United States. I cannot understand the logic of the front-benchers of the Conservative party when they claim to be a high tariff party, and yet say that the raising of the tariff in the United States shoots business all to pieces. It must be a poor rule that does not work both ways. They would raise our tariff to a high level, and then our international trade would be shot to pieces. Surely we realize that in this day and age no nation can live unto itself alone, that we have to be traders the world over.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman realize that we lost $100,000,000 worth of export business to the United States the first year the Fordney-McCumber tariff came into effect?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I admit that it affects our trade for a certain time.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be four times that now.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But we are still very much alive.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Our exports of certain farm products to the United States have increased steadily in spite of their raising the tariff at different times. I have observed that the leader of the opposition in asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce to apply to his department many of the principles he applies to his own business, said that a lot of his raw materials came in free. I believe one reason why the business of the minister has grown and prospered is that he has been able to assess the Canadian consumer to the extent of about 35 per cent on his output.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think my hon. friend will mind being corrected. There never was a duty of 35 per cent on furniture. It is only 30 per cent. The British preferential tariff is 18 per cent. In a great many instances the Canadian furniture manufacturers take no notice whatever of the duty; they sell their goods on a cost-plus-profit basis, and you will find a great many articles of furniture sold at the same price in Canada as in the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then why do you need the duty?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): In my speech on the budget I took our imports of furniture and the duty collected thereon—the average duty under all tariffs—and I know that the average duty was over 25 per cent.

Mr. MALCOLM: That may be.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): That was on actual transactions, not figuring out the percentages at all. If that is so, our furniture manufacturers are accorded that amount of protection.

Mr. MALCOLM: I hope my hon. friend is not arguing that because there is a tariff of 25 per cent on a commodity, the Canadian manufacturer takes advantage of that tariff. He must not argue that way. Every automobile tire is about the same price in Canada and the United States, and that can be shown in regard to commodity after commodity. My hon. friend is not fair if he arrives at that conclusion.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I might be if I did not have specific instances to which I might refer. We know that in 1926 there was a slight reduction of about 10 per cent on automobiles and the price was immediately reduced. Had they not taken advantage of the tariff there would have been no price reduction. Whenever there is a reduction in the tariff there is a corresponding reduction in price. In this house only a short time ago, during this session, the classification of combines reduced the tariff from 10 per cent to 6 per cent. What happened in the west? Many combines had been sold, but the purchasers have received notice that the amount they will have to pay will be less by $60 to $100, although the contract of sale has already been made. This is due simply to the fact that the tariff was reduced from 10 to 6 per cent.

[Mr. B. W. Fansher.]

Mr. BENNETT: Where are they made?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I can show that on several occasions when the tariff has been reduced there has been a reduction in price, and that to me is proof positive that many of these duties are taken advantage of by the manufacturers. The hon. member for Leeds says that combines are not made here. They are made by the Massey-Harris Company.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Of the United States.

Mr. KAISER: The minister says that the function of his department is to give assistance to exporters—all exporters. Does that apply to those who export Canadian whiskey?

Mr. MALCOLM: If we were asked to assist in the sale of Canadian whiskey in any foreign country the commissioners would be glad to give that assistance; that is their duty.

Mr. KAISER: There is something interesting about this trade and there are some phases of the question on which we should have some information. We export to the United States 1,126,000 gallons of Canadian whiskey valued by the department at $16 a gallon. Let us take now the island of Miquelon. There are 3,900 persons living on that island and they import 170,000 gallons of Canadian whiskey per annum. In other words, they import from Canada 51.51 gallons of whiskey for each inhabitant of the island who is not at school. There are 600 children at school in the island, and if they stayed at home and drank as much whiskey as all the adults of the island there would be consumed 42 gallons of whiskey for each man, woman and child in Miquelon—and this is exclusive of the amount of malt beer and whiskey imported from other countries. In Canada the per capita consumption is .31, or one-third of a gallon per head, as compared with 51.51 per head of the population of that little island. Now the curious fact is that the value of Canadian whiskey in Miquelon is only $5.50 a gallon, according to the reports of the department, compared with $16 in the United States. It seems to me that these trade commissioners must be very enthusiastic when they operate in small islands. For instance, in the West Indies, all the large islands consume only a limited quantity of Canadian whiskey, while the small islands consume about the same proportion as the island of Miquelon; and the price of whiskey in the West Indies is $5 a gallon. The fact is that the further away we get from Canada the lower the value of the whiskey becomes. When we get to South Africa we find that the value of Canadian whiskey there is given as $3 a gallon. That may account for some of the vast immigration to South Africa instead of to this part of the world. I am interested to know why the whiskey shipped from Canada should fall in value in these distant places. I do not know why the small islands should want to consume so much whiskey, and perhaps the minister can explain this point; but the fact is that the value of the whiskey gets lower and lower the further away from Canada we get. If a gallon of whiskey goes direct to the United States we get an excise duty of $9 per gallon on it; when it goes to these small islands the people there get it without paying this duty, there being no excise nor export duty in this case. In my opinion all whiskey exported from Canada should be on the same basis as the whiskey shipped to the United States, and if we were to get $9 a gallon, by way of export duty, on the liquor sent to these other countries we should very nearly obtain enough revenue from these two sources—the United States and the other countries purchasing our whiskey—to pay the interest on the national debt of Canada. There is something that should be looked into in this connection. Why should we get $9 a gallon on liquor going direct to the United States while liquor going to these other places does not pay any duty? That is one question. Another question I should like to have answered is why these low values should be placed on Canadian whiskey going to every other country than the United States, until, as I have pointed out, the value drops to $3 in South Africa. May I have some explanation of this?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister answer the question I asked with reference to the salmon that went to New York?

Mr. MALCOLM: Was it a sample shipment?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister told us that his officers were responsible for the sale of some $4,800,000 worth of canned salmon in New York, and I asked whether that salmon was for home consumption or had been re-exported.

Mr. MALCOLM: I regret having made a mistake in that regard. This salmon was for domestic consumption in New York. The British Columbia salmon packers managed recently to get some New York houses to carry their product, and I read the item wrongly. I wish to correct it in Hansard. They received sample orders of $158,000 worth of biscuits and $4,800 worth of salmon—not millions.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The department publishes a journal known as Commercial Intelligence. Does not that paper continually carry certain inquiries from outside countries asking for agents in Canada for the sale of their goods?

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not know that it does. If it carries import advertisements it is without my knowledge.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did not say advertisements; I said, inquiries from houses in the old country asking for agents in Canada for the sale of different commodities. Does it not carry such inquiries?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am informed that no agencies are asked for in the journal except agencies for the sale of Canadian goods.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What I want to know is whether this paper carries notices from foreigners who want to sell goods in Canada, asking for importing agents in this country for the sale of those goods.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think not, and I am informed by my deputy that it does not. I have never heard of it.

Mr. BOYS: I should like to ask the minister one question. He made a statement a few moments ago which interested me very much in view of information I have myself and in view of some remarks that were made in the house last year with regard to automobile tires. The minister stated—and I should like to know whether his statement is correct—that all tires in Canada were sold at the same prices as those charged for similar tires in the United States. The information I placed on Hansard last year, which I am confident was correct at that time, was that there were two sizes of tires actually sold in Canada for less than similar tires of that weight and make in the United States. With the exception of two sizes there was a slight variation in price in favour of the American tires, but in no instance was there a difference of 10 per cent, notwithstanding the fact that we have a duty on tires of 35 per cent.

Mr. MALCOLM: Twenty-five per cent.

Mr. BOYS: Certainly it was 35 per cent last year, if my memory serves me rightly.

Mr. MALCOLM: Speaking from memory I think it is 25 per cent.

Mr. BOYS: I do not really care very much; the point is that they are sold in some cases for a little less and in other cases for a little more than the prices of similar tires in the United States. The minister did make the statement, which perhaps he did not intend to be taken literally, that all sizes of tires were made and sold in Canada as cheaply as similar tires were made and sold in the United States. Is that absolutely correct?

Mr. MALCOLM: No; my hon. friend is quite right in checking me up on the sizes. I believe I used the argument once before. The tire men observe the American schedule on practically all sizes; on some sizes I think their prices are 7 or 8 per cent over the Canadian list, and there are other sizes on which the American list is a little lower. I have not studied the list for some time, but the tire manufacturers claim that with their export business added to their domestic business they can meet American prices. In my opinion the rubber industry in Canada has treated the consumers of its products very fairly. It has reached a production of about $100,000,000 and is exporting about $30,000,000. I only made the statement in reply to my hon. friend from East Lambton when he made the assertion that every industrialist takes full advantage of the tariff. Some may do so; others may not, but I do not think it is a fair statement to say either that no industrialist takes advantage of the tariff or that all industrialists do. There are industries in Canada which have protection but are not trying to get every last cent out of it. Internal competition often controls the price to a very great extent.

Mr. BOYS: I think the fact is that the market is preserved for the Canadian manufacturer, and if the demand is sufficient to keep him working to capacity he can manufacture his product as cheaply as it can be made in the United States. We contend, of course, that protection is not given for the purpose of enabling the manufacturer to make an increased profit; rather it is given to preserve the Canadian market for the Canadian manufacturer.

I should like the minister to say to what extent the tariff is taken advantage of say in the boot and shoe industry, the furniture industry, and the clothing industry. It would be most interesting if we could get some such information with regard to these important articles as we obtained in regard to rubber tires. I have taken the stand with regard to rubber which I took last year, because at that time I went into the matter quite thoroughly. I have not had the opportunity of going into the question with regard to boots and shoes and clothing, but these things are very important to the farming communities. I should be inclined to think that possibly the manufacturers of these articles are doing just as much for the people of Canada as the manufacturers of rubber, who certainly have a very wonderful record. If the minister could give us any information with regard to these products I am sure every member of the committee would be glad to get it.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am not in a position to give my hon. friend the corresponding prices in many commodities, because it is a field of endless study. Rubber tires are on a given list, and it is very easy to make a comparison in that regard, but on the other hand there are many commodities in a different position. There is one particular commodity which was mentioned by my hon. friend from Sherbrooke; silk hosiery is sold at comparative prices in the United States and Canada.

Mr. BOYS: When the minister says "comparative prices" does he mean similar prices?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes. I do not know the situation with regard to boots and shoes but I do know that not many shoes come from the United States; the greater number are imported now from Great Britain. I can tell the committee that in the manufacture of furniture there are some lines where the full 30 per cent is needed, and a couple of million dollars worth of furniture comes in in spite of the duty each year. However, that is a condition of competition which I doubt could be stopped by a duty of 40 per cent. It is worrisome to the factories in the northern United States; Michigan and New York factories cannot meet this competition. On the other hand, I think it is safe to say that in connection with the better lines, Canadian furniture is sold for less than the American price plus the full amount of the duty. I know many lines which do not take advantage of the tariff at all. It all depends upon the kind of furniture.

Mr. BENNETT: There are so many varieties.

Mr. MALCOLM: Style is an important factor. I do say, however, that it is very unfair to industry for any one to state that the tariff is always taken advantage of; that is not always the case.

Mr. MANION: Hundreds of items can be cited in the United States where the price was lowered by the imposition of a tariff.

Mr. BOYS: I like to get things straight wherever possible, and the minister will remember that we had some slight difference of opinion in regard to the tariff on automobile tires. I have the tariff before me and I find that item 592 is as follows:

—tires of rubber for vehicles of all kinds—British preferential tariff 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff 30 per cent; general tariff 35 per cent.

Mr. MALCOLM: I stand corrected.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the discussion which has been going on for the last half hour is not at all relevant to the item under discussion. We are considering a vote for commercial intelligence, but we have been discussing the tariff.

Mr. KAISER: I asked the minister a question some time ago as to why Canadian whiskey is valued at different figures, $16 in the United States, $5 in other countries and only $3 in South Africa. What is the reason for this variation in value?

Mr. MALCOLM: I told my hon. friend that I thought his question should be asked of the Minister of National Revenue when his estimates are up. That question does not come under this department.

Mr. EVANS: I was very glad to hear the hon. member for Fort William say that we should treat others as they treat us. In that case I think we should treat Great Britain as Great Britain is treating us; we should sell where we buy and buy where we sell. I am trying to get at some of the incongruities of this tariff system, and I was rather amused to hear the minister say that the tariff was not used for fixing prices. The minister is establishing a trade agency in the city of Chicago this year, and I would like to ask him how Canada can ship goods into Chicago over the United States tariff wall and still make a profit? The fact then remains that the tariff in Canada is used in order that the consumer may be charged a price which will enable the manufacturer to compete in foreign countries, and that is what I object to. These trade agencies are established in countries which have a high tariff wall against us at the expense of the home consumer. I think this is money wasted and when the manufacturers themselves do not want these agencies established in the United States cities, why not cut out the item altogether?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, I was glad to see the minister get up in defence of the tire industry. I rather expected that he would answer the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fansher) with regard to the automobile industry, but he did not. The member for East Lambton said that a few years ago the tariff on automobiles was reduced and the cost to the consumer was also reduced. The minister knows that that is not the fact, and I think the hon. member for East Lambton knows it too. That statement is not correct and it cannot be proved, because the reduction in automobile prices did not amount to as much as the reduction in the sales tax and excise taxes, let alone in the duty.

Mr. BENNETT: All you have to do is to study the figures.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Some time ago the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) gave us figures which showed that a few days after the tariff had been taken off the consumer had not been benefited by a reduction in the price. The reduction which occurred in the price of automobiles was the amount which was lost to the treasury of Canada through taking off the sales tax and excise taxes.

Miss MACPHAIL: They were that much cheaper.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But the treasury of Canada lost out.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) cannot deny the fact that the price of cars dropped immediately. The consumer was able to purchase them at from $50 for the cheapest car to up in the hundreds less than he would have had to pay had the tariff not been reduced. All the arguments of the hon. member for Lincoln or the whole front row of the Conservative opposition in the house, or of the high tariff men within the Liberal party, cannot convince the purchasers of automobiles that the reduction in the customs tariff did not reduce the price. I can give a personal experience of my own. I had just purchased a Delco lighting plant which bore a duty of 35 per cent. That duty was reduced in the 1926 budget, and the price of the same plant was reduced $90. Other lighting plants are made within Canada, but this particular make is not. The rank and file of the farmers throughout the country had an object lesson in the 1926 budget and one which they are not going to forget. A reduction in the customs tariff will bring about a reduction in the price of these things.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. member can explain why there have been three reductions in the price of motor cars since that time without any change having been made in the tariff.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I will make this observation—

Mr. BENNETT: Just deal with that one.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): If there is another 10 per cent reduction next year in the customs tariff, there will be a big reduction in the price of automobiles.

Mr. BENNETT: There have been three reductions since without any change in the tariff.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The manufacturers have been able to sell more cars and have been able to reduce the price.

Mr. BOYS: Does the hon. member contest the statements which have been made regarding tires? Although there is a duty of 35 per cent, 9 per cent is the highest difference there is in the price of tires purchased in Canada and in the United States. In some cases the identical tire is sold in Canada for a little less. Does the hon. member challenge that statement?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I have not looked into that particular item, but I realize that under certain circumstances a particular industry might be overbuilt. The bonus, so to speak, entices capital into an industry, it becomes overbuilt, and in a short time the promoters of that industry have to put their heads together and take entire advantage of the tariff in order to live. A special committee investigated conditions in connection with the sugar industry a few years ago—I think it was the session of 1922 or 1923—and they found that condition existing in the sugar industry. The industry had been overbuilt, it could not run twelve months in the year, and they had to put their heads together and take advantage of the tariff.

Mr. McGIBBON: How is it that the cost of agricultural implements has gone up since the tariff was reduced?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The price of practically all commodities has been on the increase during the last few years.

Mr. BOYS: Most of them are coming down.

[Mr. B. W. Fansher.]

Mr. EVANS: As the minister is looking for trade in the United States, and has established agencies in American cities, does he expect to trade in those commodities on which there is a large American tariff against us?

Mr. MALCOLM: Naturally we expect to trade in the items we can trade in; we expect the United States to buy those items which they find it desirable to buy. In all the customs schedules of the world I do not think you will find a country with a longer list of free items than has the United States. They have plently of high items, but they have a very long free list. They do not put duties against the things they need.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. MANION: Anything they cannot produce themselves.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not know about that. The list of products which we sell to the United States is quite a long one; it covers three or four pages.

Mr. BENNETT: There are five hundred items.

Mr. MALCOLM: There are a great many items. For instance, we sell the United States coal where it is advantageous for them to buy it.

Mr. BENNETT: On the Pacific coast.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is not a large item, but it runs to half a million dollars. We sell them acids.

Mr. BENNETT: Sulphuric acid goes in free.

Mr. MALCOLM: To the extent of $2,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: It goes in free?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And they use it for manufacturing and sell the goods to us.

Mr. MALCOLM: They may use it for their own consumption.

Mr. BENNETT: I looked into that matter myself.

Mr. MALCOLM: I contend that this discussion has gone very far afield. Because the United States has raised their tariff wall is no reason why we should stop giving assistance to Canadian business men who desire to sell their products in the United States, and I respectfully submit that this item should pass.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister said that very few manufacturers did not take the full advantage of the tariff, but that sometimes it was found necessary to do so. It seems to me that the only way in which a manufacturer would be able to take advantage of the tariff would be by charging less than the full amount. Just as soon as he charges to the limit of the tariff, there is no protection at all as foreign goods will come in over the tariff wall.

Item agreed to.

Electricity and gas inspection, including International Electro-technical Commission, $231,500.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. MALCOLM: The slight increase in this item is brought about by an increase in the staff, salary increases and the fact that certain new equipment has been required to carry on the work of the department.

Item agreed to.

The Precious Metals Marking Act, 1928, administration of, $6,000.

Mr. SPENCER: I suppose this refers to the administration of the act that came before the banking and commerce committee this year?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand the minister had an objection to that act. Is he quite satisfied with it as it has gone through?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am not quite satisfied with the act, but I think it is nearer what it should be than it was before. It provides for the importer putting his name on the imported article.

Mr. GEARY: And the word "imported"?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: In the administration of this act, do we collect anything towards the expense of administering it?

Mr. MALCOLM: There is no source of revenue from the enforcement of the act.

Item agreed to.

National Research Council, $400,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has anything been done to increase the salaries of the men engaged in agricultural research? I understand that some recommendations were made to the minister by the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers, Limited. Has anything been done or is anything proposed to be done in that regard?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am glad to be able to tell my hon. friend that the salaries that were recommended to the minister by the president of the National Research Council for his technical staff were submitted to the commission which is studying the question of civil service salaries, which I believe it is meeting this week. We shall have a report on the matter shortly.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the recommendation is favourable to an increase, will something be done during this session?

Mr. GEARY: I presume what the hon. member would like to know is whether there is any possibility of a report from the commission during the session.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend realizes it is not a subject that can be decided in a few days. We shall have to give the commission reasonable time.

Mr. McGIBBON: What progress has been made by the research council?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend is quite right in asking for a statement of what work has been done. I am afraid I shall have to allow this item to stand until after recess so that I may get a further statement which I thought was in the file. The National Research Council are now established in temporary quarters in one of the buildings in the old Edwards mill, and they are now in a position to function. New quarters are being provided by the Department of Public Works, and construction is expected to start almost immediately on these new buildings. The sum of $300,000 was voted for the work of the research council during the fiscal year 1928-29. They request a further $100,000 for the coming year. This is required for further carrying on the work which they have in the course of preparation.

Mr. BENNETT: How much will be for administration and salaries, how much for researches and how much for buildings, if any?

Mr. MALCOLM: I thought I could get some papers I left on my desk in my office. The grants in aid of research amount to $160,000. Those are the grants to the universities for special work. Scholarships for post-graduate training and research amount to $65,000. The laboratory requires $40,000. An item of $20,000 is set aside for travelling expenses of the council, staff and also of committees. There is $8,000 for administration and $7,000 for library and publications. Salaries, including all the staff of the National Research Council, are estimated at $100,000.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to know whether the National Research Council has the expenditure of this $400,000 entirely within its own hands?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is spent on the recommendation of the president of the council, but it must always be, like any of the other departmental expenditures, approved by the department.

Mr. IRVINE: The reason I ask that is that I know the publication known as the Canadian Field Naturalist has been endeavouring to get a very small grant from the council to assist in giving greater publicity to new species. The council, for some reason or another, has not granted the request and I was wondering whether it would be within the power of the council to grant such a request—

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: —or whether we shall have to take some other means of getting assistance for the Field Naturalist.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the council get requests beyond the amount of money they have to distribute. If my hon. friend has a request for a small or reasonable grant that he thinks is worthy of consideration, and will bring it to me, I shall be pleased to submit it to the council.

Mr. IRVINE: The grant this institution requires is only $200. It is very modest and I think the council should meet the request because it is doing excellent work in the field of research.

Mr. McGIBBON: It seems to me that as regards work of this kind, where an endowment fund amounting to $4,000,000 is being raised in Ontario and the amount at present under consideration is being provided by the Dominion—I am not complaining about the amount, because one cannot have too much money for research—there might be overlapping and lack of coordination which might not be beneficial to the country. Has there been any correspondence between the department and the Ontario government with a view to preventing any overlapping? I commend the minister in regard to this work, as I have commended the government many times in the past for like action. An institution of this kind is the very life-blood of the country, but to get the best out of it we should have coordination and no overlapping.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Mr. MALCOLM: I am glad my hon. friend has brought up that point of endeavouring in every way to avoid duplication of effort, because it is a subject that is worthy of the greatest consideration. I am pleased to be able to say that Premier Ferguson and Sir Joseph Flavelle, who is at the head of the Ontario Research Foundation, have expressed themselves on many occasions as being only too anxious to carry on the work so that overlapping shall not occur. Doctor Tory has had several conferences with Sir Joseph Flavelle and they have discussed the question of preventing overlapping.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How are the subjects of research allotted? Does the student select his own subject or is it selected for him?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend the exact information that he wants.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There are students in the different universities following up different subjects of research. I brought to the attention of the minister two or three years ago, in connection with the report of the research council, the fact that a subject of research taken up one year would perhaps be dropped for two or three years, and resumed later. The report did not indicate that there was any finality in the action taken on the subjects of investigation and research, and it looked to me. from the outside, as if there were an indefinite system in the selection of the subjects of research and their continuance to a finality. Are the subjects allotted to the students, or do they select them for themselves?

Mr. MALCOLM: Each person holding a scholarship selects his own subject in consultation with the professor supervising the work. So far as publicity is concerned, if my hon. friend will peruse the new research journal which is coming out he will find that there is now a continuity of publicity on the problems which are being undertaken. The council has been very thoroughly reorganized during the last year and is following a definite plan, working in conjunction with the provinces. I would commend to my hon. friend the last issue of the research journal, which will give him much more information than I could do.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I looked over the last journal and the subjects seem to be very academic. I wonder if the minister can tell us what application they would have to industry in the Dominion.

Mr. McGIBBON: Suppose a problem is brought to the research institute by some industry and a solution is arrived at; whose property does that solution become? Is it the property of the government, or can anyone get the benefit of it?

Mr. MALCOLM: Anyone having a research problem to solve could take it to the research council, and could retain the ownership, just as is done in connection with the Mellon institute in the United States and the bureau of standards. On the other hand, if the problem is studied on behalf of the government, the patent or the right to the solution is acquired by the state. The Dominion government would then own it. I believe something comparable with the Mellon institute is contemplated whereby any industry will be able to submit a research problem to the council for solution, and will retain the rights thereto.

Mr. McGIBBON: The industry, I presume, would pay a reasonable amount for that service.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, they would pay for the service.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What has been accomplished along the line of engineering standards during the past year?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have no information on that, but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I should like to have it.

Item agreed to.

International customs tariffs bureau, $666.

Miss MACPHAIL: Would the minister give some information on this?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is a contribution which Canada makes to the international bureau for receiving information with respect to tariffs in all countries of the world. The amount paid last year was $588, and this year we are asking for $666.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Who is the head of this bureau, and where is it located?

Mr. MALCOLM: The International Bureau for the publication of customs tariffs was established at Brussels, Belgium, in 1891, as the result of a convention signed by 39 countries. This convention or union provided the means for admitting all nations into membership, and at present the International Customs Tariff Union comprises nearly 200 states or colonies, that is to say, almost every separate customs area in the world. The original agreement among the nations was to continue in force for seven years; then if not denounced, a further seven years, and so on from one seven-year period to another. In this manner, the International Customs Tariffs Union has been continued from its inception down to the present time. Canada has been a member from the beginning.

Miss MACPHAIL: Is the information that is gathered available to the members of the house?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that item No. 326 for $75,000 for the motion picture bureau has been carried. I wished to speak on that.

Mr. MALCOLM: We can go back to it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Printing of parliamentary and departmental publications, including the "Canada Year Book", $130,000.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the reason for the increase in this vote?

Mr. MALCOLM: There is an increase of $12,000 over the vote of last year, and it is mainly due to the fact that the estimates were reduced last year from $128,000 to $118,000. Provision is also being made for the enlargement of the Commercial Intelligence Journal, and for two additions to the list of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics publications—the Calendar Year Trade Report, inaugurated last January, and a proposed bimonthly bilingual précis of exports and imports.

Mr. LUCAS: How many copies of the Canada Year Book are printed annually?

Mr. MALCOLM: We print 7,200 in English and 2,400 in French.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any revenue derived from this publication?

Mr. MALCOLM: The Canada Year Book is distributed without charge.

Mr. FRASER: To whom; to members of parliament?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: I want to register an objection and point out to the minister that this year I did not get a copy of last year's issue.

Mr. McGIBBON: The rest of us are in the same box.

Mr. MALCOLM: Last year's issue is not out yet.

Mr. FRASER: When does it come out? Is it always a year behind?

Mr. MALCOLM: It takes some little time after the close of the fiscal year to get these statistics together.

Mr. FRASER: Will the issue that we have not yet received contain the statistics of the last fiscal year up to March 31, 1929?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: I understood the minister to say that something like 7,000 copies of the Canada Year Book were printed and distributed to members of parliament. Who else are entitled to free copies?

Mr. MALCOLM: They are distributed to the universities, schools and public libraries. Any institution can get a copy on application.

Mr. FRASER: What schools receive copies?

Mr. MALCOLM: Any schools that wish a copy for their libraries are put on the mailing list.

Mr. FRASER: Public schools?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, public schools, high schools, colleges.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To anyone who cares to ask for a copy.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understood the minister to say that the statistics are for the fiscal year ending March 31. Now, it would be much more useful and much more convenient to everybody if calendar year statistics were prepared. We have in the empire more than half a dozen different dates for the close of the fiscal year; we have March 31, we have May, we have June, we have September, and we have December. The difficulty is that anybody who wants to compare statistics over a certain period cannot do so. The most useful ones are those that are compiled for the calendar year. I would strongly impress upon the minister the necessity and the advisability of compiling his statistics to cover the calendar year ending December 31.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. MALCOLM: I will note my hon. friend's observation. I may tell him that we have a calendar year trade report published now, from which he can get trade figures.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am referring to the trade publication discussed here during the last few minutes.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend is referring to the year book. It is rather difficult not to have the year book correspond with the fiscal year returns given by the finance department. I will bring the matter to the attention of the head of the Bureau of Statistics; but I would point out to my hon. friend that as the government accounts are all closed on March 31, it does seem advisable to have the statistics for the same period right through the Canada Year Book. For the benefit of the trade papers we have published calendar year figures for some time.

Mr. CANTLEY: In what publication?

Mr. MALCOLM: They are available in the statements which are circulated every month.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is there any good reason why the fiscal year should not be made to correspond with the calendar year? When I came here originally the fiscal year ended on June 30; then for some reason it was changed to March 31. I cannot see any advantage in the latter over the former. Why not make it the calendar year?

Mr. MALCOLM: I know of no reason. It would be a matter of policy which the Minister of Finance would have to consider. I do not know how many years we have been following the present system.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We started it about 1909. I had a discussion with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) on the same subject, and he strongly advocates that the fiscal year and the calendar year synchronize. Unless there is a good reason for the difference I do not see why it should continue.

Mr. CANTLEY: So far as this matter is concerned there is chaos in the Dominion. In Nova Scotia in the last ten years the fiscal year has been changed three times. The year now ends in September. Go over this Dominion from one coast to the other and I venture to say that in no two provinces will you find their dates corresponding, so that it is practically impossible for any man who wishes to compare statistics in the various provinces to get a resumé of the trade of the country during any twelve months. I see no reason why the fiscal year of the Dominion and of every province should not end on December 31; it would simplify matters greatly from many points of view

Mr. MALCOLM: There is a good deal of merit in what the hon. member (Mr. Cantley) and my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) have stated. No doubt it leads to a great deal of confusion having a different fiscal year in each province and in the Dominion, and it would make for a clearer understanding of the figures if there were uniformity in the matter. I am afraid however that my hon. friend's problem would not be made any easier of solution unless the provinces agreed to compile their statistics as from the same date as the Dominion.

I thoroughly agree with the suggestion and I think it might be made a matter for provincial and federal consideration; it would make for facility in the comparison of statistics. I shall be glad to submit the matter to council.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If the minister would start with the Dominion of Canada before waiting for the provinces to take the initiative, and if he would see that our fiscal year ended December 31, it would be of great advantage to us and others would see the wisdom of it. It must be apparent to the minister, and no doubt it is, that if the fiscal year ended with the calendar year your balance sheet will be out and all your records will be in hand so that we may start business with a clean sheet. As it is now no one knows what will happen at the end of the year. The Minister of Finance does not make a budget any more in this country; he does not know what the previous year has done for him, and he does not make a budget at all for the next year. He does not even make a guess at it. We have stopped budgeting so far as this parliament is concerned.

Mr. CANTLEY: I wish to thank the minister for the very sympathetic view he takes of the matter. No doubt he will recall that at an annual meeting of the manufacturers' association six or eight years ago this matter was discussed very fully and a strong memorandum was directed to the various governments. If the minister would take such action as he suggests, and call the attention of the various provincial governments to the desirability of a uniform system in this regard, the reform could be affected within a reasonable time, to the great advantage of trade and to the satisfaction of all who are in any way interested in statistics affecting the commerce of the country.

Mr. MALCOLM: So far as trade figures are concerned, there is a publication which has been issued for a good many years now giving the figures annually.

Mr. BENNETT: The real truth is, as the hon. member for Pictou has pointed out, that people abroad find it difficult to follow our statistics. Our railway accounts end with the calendar year, and our public accounts with March 31. The result is that the House of Commons will not be in a position for another year to discuss the expenditure made by this government for the year ended March 31, 1929. That is the real difficulty. The minister will recall that we changed it once from October, and then to June and back to March. Certainly in the provinces the same difficulty has been experienced—and it relates to the calling of parliament or the legislature. The real reason behind the present system is that the Auditor General's report may be available in order that the accounts may be as fresh as possible. The fact of the matter is that we have not had a budget speech since Mr. Fielding made his last. Mr. Fielding of course always made a budget speech; he budgetted for the year ending March 31 of the next year. The present Minister of Finance will not take a chance and estimate what his revenue and expenditure will be; he votes his money, but he has never made an estimate of the revenue since Mr. Fielding's budget of 1923. In British Columbia they estimate their revenue by departments, and they deal in the same way with their expenditure. They make a complete budget statement showing the expected revenue from each department of the public service, together with a statement of contemplated expenditures of each department, and their public accounts are prepared accordingly. In recent years the Dominion government has not been doing this and the situation is getting worse, with the result that people outside the country find it difficult to follow our accounts. The League of Nations has been endeavouring to secure uniformity in this matter. The Minister of Labour, through the representation which Canada will have, should be able to secure a system of uniform accounts, particularly with the aid of the Minister of Justice. But this has not been done. All we have been able to do is to get a uniform policy with respect to free trade, which some hon. gentlemen say it is desirable to follow but which the Minister of Finance says is no good. Cannot the Minister of Labour do something for us?

Mr. SPENCER: I suggest to the leader of the opposition that we need not go to British Columbia to find an up to date system; we have one in Alberta along the lines he has pointed out.

Mr. CAYLEY: To whom are copies of the year book issued? I have not received one.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend was not in the house when a similar question was asked and answered. These publications are distributed to members of parliament. The particular book to which he refers is not yet ready. All the publications are distributed to schools, colleges, libraries and any other institution which is on the mailing list.

Item agreed to.

The weights and measures inspection service, including the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, $345,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there a revenue from this department?

Mr. MALCOLM: The expenditure for the past year was $326,773 and the receipts were $399,308, leaving a surplus of $72,535.

Mr. LUCAS: There is an increase in the vote this year; what is the reason?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is due to increased business—increased fees collected.

Item agreed to.

Motion picture bureau, $75,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister make a statement on this item?

Mr. MALCOLM: This increase of $25,000 over the amount voted last year is necessary to meet the requirements of the bureau due to the expansion of its activities. The director of the motion picture bureau has estimated that an increase of $25,000 is necessary to provide for the following:

Growth of bureau, expansion of activities and increased volume of production	$ 5,000
To defray travelling and other expenses incurred in the performance of work for other departments and not refundable to the bureau under present regulations	3,000
To provide for the seasonal appointment of temporary employees whose salaries are paid from contingencies	1,000
To defray customs duties, et cetera, heretofore not provided for	3,000
To purchase additional equipment to meet increased needs of bureau	3,000
To provide for the production and distribution of 16 mm. films	10,000
	$25,000

Mr. BENNETT: How many people are employed in that bureau; how are the pictures distributed and how are the subjects selected?

Mr. MALCOLM: The Canadian government motion picture bureau was organized in 1917 and operates as a branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Its functions are: To produce and circulate throughout the world motion pictures and photographic material designed to disseminate information about Canada, its resources, opportunities, scenic beauties, attractions, basic industries and so on, and through this means encourage development, trade, settlement and tourist travel; as a central organization for the production of technical, instructional, advertising and other such types of films and pictorial material for all federal government departments; to cooperate with the provincial governments, the national railways and steamship lines and other organizations in the production of all types of pictorial matter used for the general development of the Dominion's interests, welfare and progress; to cooperate with the motion picture industry in matters pertaining to the general development, welfare and progress of the Dominion.

Since its organization in 1917 the bureau each year has shown steady and substantial development, both in the scope and extent of its activities and the volume of pictorial matter produced and distributed. During the present fiscal year the bureau has shown the greatest growth in every branch of its work of any year in its history. The total volume of motion pictures prepared and processed will, it is estimated, exceed the previous year's total by approximately 20 per cent, and the total amount of other photographic material produced and distributed will exceed the previous year's total by approximately 25 per cent. The total number of films in circulation throughout the world on January 31 of this year is approximately 80 per cent greater than at the same date a year previous. The extent and coverage of territory, while not definitely estimable, is vastly greater than for any other year.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister need not trouble himself further in that connection, but I should like to know how the subjects are selected and how the films are distributed, because I have seen some of these films which I thought were taken for the purpose of illustrating—because there is no other way by which they could be known—the performances of the Liberal party.

Mr. MALCOLM: My deputy points out that the subjects are really selected by the provinces who ask us to film them and we look after the distribution of the films.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that so in every case?

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think it is true in every case but I believe it is the general practice that we do this work for the provincial governments. We do agricultural pictures and studies of industrial and mining developments, and we also do work for all the departments in Ottawa.

Mr. BENNETT: The last part of the answer covers everything, I think.

Mr. MALCOLM: Some of the work performed for the departments in Ottawa is as follows:

Department of Agriculture, $3,183.05.
Department of the Interior, $4,754.96.
Department of Marine and Fisheries, $7.15.
Department of Labour, $24.95.
Department of National Defence, $851.13.
Department of Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment, $7.92.
Department of National Revenue, $10.80.
Department of Insurance, $17.90.
Department of Immigration, $306.30.
Department of Mines, $762.48.
Post Office Department, $687.20.
Canadian Forestry Association, $145.95.
Canadian National Railways, $597.10.
Canadian Exhibition Commission, $1,650.

Additional revenue was received from other sources. From First National Pictures of Australia, Limited, we received $2,451.41 for films leased; from the Canadian Universal Film Company, Toronto, we received $1,224.14; from the Film Exchange, New York, we received $341.20; from a firm in Paris we received $117.08, and there were other small amounts received from various sources. The total revenue amounted to $14,583.48.

Mr. BENNETT: That was just for work done?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, work done for the departments. The total revenue, including rental of films leased, amounted in the last year to about $18,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Under what principle are they distributed? Supposing someone in Calgary wanted to obtain one of these films; how would that be done?

Mr. MALCOLM: My deputy has just pointed out that these films are highly inflammable, and of course they cannot be shown except under the proper auspices, in a place which complies with the provincial regulations.

Mr. BENNETT: I am asking these questions because I was requested to do so and I should like to get it on Hansard. Supposing a theatre in Calgary desired to show one of these films; how would they go about it?

Mr. MALCOLM: If any theatre wants to show these films we make no charge; they have to pay just the carrying charges. We are very glad to have these films shown in any good theatres desiring to use them.

Mr. BENNETT: They just pay the express and freight?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, that is all. I think the same rule applies in the Ontario motion picture bureau, which spends much more money than we do.

Mr. SPENCER: This item calls for an increased expenditure of $50,000. I heard the minister's explanation for part of that increase, but I should like to hear an explanation as to the other $25,000. Then I would point out that this vote calls for publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad, other than countries of Europe. Is there another vote to cover European countries?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend is on the wrong item; we referred back to item 236.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: We are properly at vote 330 now.

Mr. SPENCER: Was vote 329 called?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, and declared carried.

Mr. MALCOLM: No, 329 was not called; 328 was passed and we reverted back to 326.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am quite sure vote 329 was not called, because I intended to ask the minister the reason for the increase.

Publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad, other than countries of Europe, $100,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: I shall be very glad to give my hon. friend the reason for the increase, but he will really see the reason in the wording of the vote. Last year the vote was for publicity in Canada, but we have had a great many applications for publicity in South America. It has been held that we can spend money very advantageously in the Latin-American countries, perhaps by supplementing the work of the motion picture bureau in advertising Canadian products there and so on, so this vote now includes advertising and publicity in countries other than European countries. This will permit us to spend any portion of the $50,000 for publicity in these countries to which I have referred.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to ask if any portion of this vote is allocated to publicity in the United States?

Mr. MALCOLM: Not a dollar of it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am very glad to hear that because I agree with some of the members who expressed the view this afternoon that there is a reasonable chance of doing business in South America. Those who are in business in that country and know something about it can tell the minister that. As I said this afternoon, there is very little chance of our doing business in the United States; we might as well save the advertising.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure my hon. friend that the countries to which I referred are those in which our publicity department would like to spend some money.

Mr. EVANS: This vote for advertising has been increased $425,000 this year. Last year votes 319, 329, 330, 331 and 332 totalled $950,000, while this year the total is $1,375,000, an increase of $425,000. I think the committee should have some explanation for this large increase, as these votes are all part of what may be taken as advertising for Canada.

Mr. MALCOLM: If the hon. member desires to consider the items together I shall be very glad to answer his question. The increase in the vote which we have been discussing is explained by my previous remarks. Publicity and advertising in the British Empire is increased by $50,000 because we feel that the work we have done in promoting publicity in regard to Canadian products has been very beneficial and we thought that the work should be continued and increased. I think the hon. member will realize that in a business amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, which we are doing with Great Britain, the money spent for publicity is a relatively small amount. If we can acquaint the people of the British Isles with the products which we have to offer them and which they need, I do not think that money could be spent in any better way. A comparison with the expenditures made by other countries, such as Australia, will show that our expenditure is indeed rather modest.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I have one criticism to make which applies not only to this department, but to others, and I think it is one to which the minister will listen with sympathy. It is very advisable that our advertising should preserve a continuity regardless of administration; whether a Liberal government be in power, or a Conservative or Labour government be in power, is not a matter of importance. The Empire Marketing Board has been doing some very wonderful advertising in connection with Canada through the medium of hampers which are packed with Canadian goods and which can be purchased at the corner grocery. In each basket or hamper there is a statement as to how much Great Britain purchased from Canada, and how much Canada purchased from them; the number of men who went to the war from Canada, and other interesting information. While in England I took the trouble to go into this matter very carefully and I was struck with the character of the advertising and the appeal it must make to the people interested. Certain departments have been issuing advertising with the name of the minister or the deputy minister attached, and I suggest to the minister, in the best spirit in the world, that these advertisements which are issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce of Canada should be issued by the department and should not contain any person's name. In England they have found that the preservation of the continuity of the advertising is the one thing to be observed and when, in a very short time, the people have an opportunity to place another government in power these advertisements will be issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce of the Dominion of Canada. These advertisements are really to advertise the products and not the individuals. This matter has been brought to my attention on more than one occasion and it has been said that the Department of the Interior, the Department of Trade and Commerce, and one or two other departments have issued advertisements of that character. At times the Post Office Department has done so, but it is advertising of another character. I trust the minister will see my point and that he will endeavour to eliminate the individual from these advertisements and speak only of the country or the department charged with the responsibility.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am very glad to have my hon. friend make that suggestion, because in making it he has found only one very small matter to criticize. I do not mind my name being on the advertising because I was rather proud of one thing in connection with it, namely that it has never been political advertising. I should like to remind the committee that in the distribution of our advertisements we have gotten away, I hope for all time from partisanship with regard to the press.

Mr. BENNETT: You are bound to.

Mr. MALCOLM: Our advertising appears in the Canadian press from the Atlantic to the Pacific; in the daily press twice a year and in the weekly press twice a year, without regard to the political leanings or the political viewpoint of the papers. I appreciate what the hon. leader of the opposition has said with regard to the continuity of the advertising. If the insertion of the name is the only part of our advertising which is worrying my hon. friend, and he can assure me that when that wonderful day comes of which he speaks, his minister's name will be left off—

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. MALCOLM: —I shall be very glad to consider his suggestion.

Item agreed to.

Publicity and advertising in the British Isles, $150,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Is the increase in this vote due to the activities of the Empire Marketing Board?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is due to a closer cooperation with the activities of the Empire Marketing Board. That board is doing what might be termed sentimental or general advertising, trying to create in the minds of the British people the idea that they can procure within the empire the major portion of the goods they need. The board finds it rather difficult to refer to specific items with reference to one particular country; because they may be competitive with another part of the empire and we endeavour to supplement the work of the board by specific advertising. For instance, last fall we tried out an advertising campaign in the Midlands. This campaign was recommended by Mr. Forsythe Smith and Mr. Gerahty, and it proved very successful as it increased the sale of Canadian apples to an enormous extent. The publicity department proposes extending the scheme to various other districts in England, and it is the extension of general schemes to supplement the work of the Empire Marketing Board which necessitates the extra expenditure.

Mr. CAYLEY: Is the Dominion represented on that Empire Marketing Board?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, Mr. Wilson of the Department of Agriculture is a member of the board; Mr. H. Watson, our senior trade commissioner in London is a member; and Mr. Gerahty, the director of publicity in London, is a member also.

Mr. CAYLEY: Do we make any contribution to the upkeep of that board?

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

Mr. SHORT: As very good results were obtained from the advertising of apples in England last year, I would suggest to the minister that he use part of this increased amount in continuing that advertising this year. There is an abundance of blossoms this year and if Providence gives us the right kind of weather we will have a very good crop. If good results have been obtained from the advertising of Canadian apples last year in the old country, does the minister not think it would be a good idea to extend that advertising and to increase the sales as much as possible?

Mr. MALCOLM: What my hon. friend is asking for is just what I have explained, namely, that where we have found the scheme profitable we want to enlarge it. With regard to apple advertising, we are not paying all the money. We are offering any group of Canadian producers assistance in their publicity if they will contribute. We spent in the apple campaign in the Midlands, $30,000, of which $15,000 is to be paid by the producers' association, so that the scheme is doubly beneficial. The producers do not feel that as good results can be had from the amounts which they are willing to vote as can be obtained when the campaign is handled properly by a publicity department in London, and much of this increase will go to an extension of the apple selling campaign.

Mr. ARTHURS: Votes Nos. 329, 330 and 332 appear to be votes which should be chargeable, to a great extent at least, to the Department of Immigration. It seems that the Department of Immigration is disguising a good deal of its expenditure under other departments and, particularly, under this department.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend is hardly fair in that. This money which is spent in publicity through the Department of Trade and Commerce is entirely for publicity in connection with marketing. None of this money has been spent in immigration offices at all.

Mr. ARTHURS: Am I not right in connection with vote No. 332, which reads:

Exhibitions and state fairs in Great Britain and the United States, amount required for the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Mr. MALCOLM: The moneys have all been spent on state fairs at which we exhibit Canadian products. We have now a very fine collection of Canadian products being exhibited.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions—exclusive of the requirements of the Department of Immigration and Colonization, $265,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister will give us an explanation of this item; it looks very strange.

Mr. MALCOLM: The exhibition branch, as my hon. friend recalls, was under the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Mr. BENNETT: At one time under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MALCOLM: It has now been taken over by the Department of Trade and Commerce and is being looked after by Mr. Turcotte, whose department has been transferred from here to London.

Mr. BENNETT: Vote No. 332 refers to exhibitions and state fairs in Great Britain and in the United States. Vote No. 331, which refers to exhibitions exclusive of the requirements of the Department of Immigration and Colonization, is the one about which I am trying to get information at the moment.

Mr. MALCOLM: Those are for our state fairs in Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: Vote No. 332 refers to exhibitions and state fairs in Great Britain and the United States. Vote No. 331 refers to exhibitions exclusive of the requirements of the Department of Immigration and Colonization. That is why I am asking about it. The amount is more than a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. MALCOLM: There is an increase of $65,000 in this item. This amount is required for shows and window displays when space has to be purchased in the British Empire; for the purchase of goods in Canada for exhibition purposes; for the purchase of materials used in exhibition displays, including lumber, paint, oil, and so forth; for the removal of goods from Canada to London; for the salaries and travelling expenses of the staff; the rental of the site for the exhibition warehouse and cold storage plant. The details are as follows:

Permanent salaries, $43,020.
Purchase of goods in Canada, $15,000.
St. Catharines warehouse—

Which is for the collection of fruits.

—$9,000.
Ottawa office, $4,000.

This office is being run on a very small scale now.

London exhibitions, British Industrial fairs, $8,000.
Ideal homes, $15,000.
Cookery and food, $3,000.
Birmingham British Industrial fairs, $4,000.
Portsmouth British Industrial Fair, $1,500.
Aberdeen British Industrial Fair, $2,000.
Cardiff British Industrial Fair, $2,000.
Aldershot British Industrial Fair, $1,500.
Manchester British Industrial Fair, $1,000.
Liverpool British Industrial Fair, $1,000.
Belfast British Industrial Fair, $1,000.
Edinburgh British Industrial Fair, $1,500.
Bristol British Industrial Fair, $1,500.
Dublin British Industrial Fair, $1,000.
Smaller exhibitions in the British Isles, jointly, $5,000.
Continental fairs, $25,000.
Window displays, $6,000.
Imperial Institute, $25,000.
General expenses, including wages of temporary staff in London, $87,680.
Rental of site for warehouse, $1,300.
Expenditure to January 31, 1929, Advances, $85,562.02.

Mr. BENNETT: From April 1, 1928.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, until January 31, 1929.

Printing and stationery, $678.67.
Rents paid, $9,490.29.

That will be to some extent eliminated when we have our new warehouse.

Salaries, $20,962.32.
Special assistance, $9,361.64.
Travel, $5,874.70.
Sundries, $45,873.81.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister will admit that we are spending $87,000 in salaries and wages.

Mr. MALCOLM: No, that is general expenses. The permanent salaries amount to $53,000.

Mr. BENNETT: But the minister has an item of $87,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can give my hon. friend the salary list.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not want to trouble the minister in regard to that, but it seems questionable whether he is getting adequate returns in view of the expenditure. It looks like spending $100,000 for the sake of getting $165,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend realizes that it is essential to maintain the nucleus of an organization. We are not spending hundreds of thousands of dollars, perhaps a million dollars, as we did when a large fair like the one at Wembley or some other world fair happened to be taking place. But as long as we keep the organization together, we are always in a position, should it be advisable to go, for instance, to Antwerp to the fair which they propose holding. If we could have exhibitions commensurate with the staff, we would be voting more money than we are. The staff is large but, as I say, it is essential to maintain the organization. It is not so large as my hon. friend might think. Mr. Turcotte, the director, gets $4,125; Mr. Buckle, the departmental accountant, $3,180; Mr. Dalglish, chief of mineral exhibit division, $3,360. We have vacant the positions of chief of designing and decorating; chief of agricultural and commercial exhibit division; assistant to the chief designer. These positions have been vacant for some little time. Then we have two men at St. Catharines and five at Winnipeg preparing the grain and fruits exhibits, so that it is really just a nucleus of an organization that we have. I can tell my hon. friend that it would be very hard to do without it, even if it does cost us $87,000.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions and state fairs in Great Britain and the United States, amount required for the Department of Immigration and Colonization, $110,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: In respect to this item the hon. member for Parry Sound is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there not a duplication of our activities with respect to items 331 and 332? Here is the Department of Immigration and Colonization doing certain work in displaying our products, and my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is doing the same thing, exclusive of the Department of Immigration, in items 331 and 332. He is going into state fairs, and the Department of Immigration is doing the same thing. This is a joint exhibit apparently.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is not in reality, but the Department of Immigration had been handling the whole exhibition branch and we felt that the Department of Trade and Commerce should not be loaded with the whole of the charge. In this item there is $50,000 for the collection of exhibits, $54,000 for state fairs and $6,000 for general exhibits. The state fairs cost last year $40,000, and the Winnipeg collection of exhibits, $38,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Where were these state fairs held?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am very sorry I have not the list here, but I am prepared to let the item stand and give my hon. friend the list.

Mr. BENNETT: Are the appointments to these various positions, one or two of which still strangely seem to be vacant, made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MALCOLM: In every instance.

Item agreed to.

International customs tariffs bureau—further amount required, $659.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I was one of those who chorused "carried" when we passed a small item of $666 for this same purpose about an hour ago. What is the explanation for this further vote?

Mr. MALCOLM: A letter was recently received from the Consul General of Belgium advising that the extension of the Dominion's external trade would justify its inclusion in the first class group of states that are parties to the customs tariffs union, and that the contribution from the 1st of April would be increased by the amount we are here asking for. It is rather difficult for Canada to refuse to pay her proportionate share while securing all the benefits. It is only a small amount in any event. I do not think it is held by anyone that we should not pay $1,200 or $1,300.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Although it does not come under this item, I would ask if the minister has considered the question of the violations of our coasting law, and whether the same conditions will be allowed to prevail this fall to the disadvantage of our boats.

Mr. MALCOLM: I shall be glad to discuss that matter when the steamship subvention items are up.

Item agreed to.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—Atlantic ocean, Pacific ocean, and local services, $1,070,050.

Mr. BENNETT: To shorten the discussion of this item, will the minister say whether there are any new subventions over last year, and give the reason for the decrease?

Mr. MALCOLM: On the Atlantic there are no changes. The three services are the same as last year, and the vote is the same. On the Pacific we are asking for a grant for a new service between British Columbia ports and the antipodes, largely for the assistance of the lumber trade. That item is in the supplementaries. There is no change in the main estimates so far as the Pacific service is concerned. On the local services there is an increase on the Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence service of $1,200; on the Mulgrave and Canso service a reduction of $725; on the Murray Bay and north shore service a reduction of $7,100. I think that covers the changes.

Mr. SHORT: I desire to draw the minister's attention to the freight rates on apples charged by the Atlantic steamship federation. I spoke about the matter when I made a few remarks on the budget. The minister was not then in his seat. The rate on apples from Nova Scotia to European ports is 90 cents per barrel, provided the shippers sign a contract with the federation that they will use no outside steamers. If they do not sign that contract, the federation insists on a rate of $1.10 per barrel—a discrimination of 20 cents per barrel. The Nova Scotia shippers resent this discrimination very much indeed, and if the Minister of Trade and Commerce can remove this injustice his action will be very much appreciated by those shippers.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does the hon. member say that that steamship federation is getting a subvention from the Dominion government?

Mr. SHORT: I presume that some of the lines in the federation are subsidized.

Mr. MALCOLM: These are not subsidized lines. I assume my hon. friend is referring to the North Atlantic conference rates. I should like very much to be able to assure him that I could dictate to the conference, but I do not know any minister of trade and commerce in the past who has tried to do it and not come to grief.

Mr. STEVENS: You tried it a couple of years ago.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I would point out to the minister that in 1925 his right hon. leader in his celebrated declaration from Richmond Hill told the country that there would be no monopoly on land or sea, that the north Atlantic conference would be brought to account at once, and that there were to be fair rates accorded to everyone on land and sea. Since then I understand the Canadian government merchant marine has twice increased its rates, cooperating with the conference. Now we have my friend from Digby (Mr. Short) complaining of a situation which the government, I am confident, is powerful enough to counteract, and if it will address itself to that purpose I am satisfied good results will follow.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. BENNETT: Before the minister answers, I would suggest that there is no good reason why he should fear the fate that overtook his predecessor in office in an endeavour to deal with this problem. His desire for office is not so great, I am sure, as to discourage him from venturing upon the field where a certain distinguished gentleman met his Waterloo. But may I observe that the way the situation was dealt with, on the great lakes as well as on the Atlantic ocean, reminds one of Mrs. Partington; and the result was about the same. The minister should deal with the point brought up by the hon. member for Digby. That is, if apples are shipped on a through bill of lading the rate charged is fixed by the north Atlantic conference, and if the shipper does not avail himself of a vessel within that ring, he has to pay two rates instead of the through rate. The other day I was talking to one of the leading citizens of Nova Scotia who had resisted this discrimination. Surely the minister is powerful enough to deal with that situation. Knowing his ability to secure appropriations for North Bruce to provide steamship connections from the most remote ports in that peninsula with the outside world, surely he is not going to neglect the apple shippers of Nova Scotia for the sake of the local traffic of North Bruce. If he displays the same energy in dealing with that situation as he has in securing rebates on coal used in the salt works in his constituency, and in securing appropriations for public works in the most remote part of the North Bruce peninsula, I am sure he will be able to secure substantial results for the Nova Scotia apple shippers.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition must realize the situation relative to the north Atlantic conference rates as well as any hon. member of this house. It has often been held that we would be much better off if the Canadian government merchant marine did not observe the conference rates, but I am not of the view that that is necessarily the best course to pursue. The shippers of apples from Nova Scotia enjoy the same rates under the north Atlantic conference as the shippers of apples from the United States to Great Britain. When we consider that we are put on an even footing with the shippers of American apples, I think we ought to be reasonably satisfied. The Nova Scotia apple shippers can always charter a ship if they so choose.

Mr. BENNETT: But they have to have refrigerator space.

Mr. MALCOLM: Probably so; but I firmly believe that if we get into a rate war we would not fare as well as we are faring at the moment. The country to the south of us is willing to spend money to subsidize steamship services for low rates, and I rather fear that if we took action we would put our shippers at a disadvantage.

Mr. BENNETT: But there was to be no monopoly on sea or land.

Mr. MALCOLM: There has been no monopoly; the north Atlantic conference rates have been reasonably low. In conjunction with those rates shippers have the advantage of warehouses and docks for handling their freight.

Mr. BENNETT: And through bills of lading.

Mr. MALCOLM: Which are a distinct advantage. The north Atlantic conference lines are endeavouring to secure trade, and therefore it is reasonable to assume that they are not going to quote rates which will not develop traffic. The minute their rates become too high, chartering will immediately take place. I am not inclined to think that my hon. friend from Digby is working in the best interests of the apple growers of Nova Scotia in making his request.

Mr. SHORT: The apple growers of Nova Scotia think so, because they have passed a resolution condemning that discrimination.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, I know a lot of people who theoretically condemn the conference rates. But I have very grave doubts whether their position in relation to the United States shippers would be improved if such action were taken.

Mr. BENNETT: But the major part of the United States traffic out of New York is carried in British bottoms.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: They do not object to the rate of 90 cents per barrel, but they do object to being penalized if they do not use the federation steamers exclusively. For instance, if a shipper wants to ship his apples this week by the federation boat, and next week desires to ship by another line, he is charged $1.10 per barrel instead of 90 cents unless he gives them the entire shipment. That is what they complain of. They are not complaining of the rate of 90 cents, which is a fair rate and is the rate paid by the United States shippers. But they do object most strenuously to having to sign an agreement to give their entire shipment to the federation steamers.

Mr. RYCKMAN: If the statement made by the hon. member is correct there is an instrument ready to hand for the minister to wield. He might consult the Department of Justice and find out whether action can be taken under section 498 of the criminal code which has recently received a reinforcement from the Supreme Court of Canada in a case laid before it. I submit that the situation indicated by the hon. member is intolerable. One resents an injustice. If A is charged half what B is compelled to pay then B has a right to insist upon fair treatment; and the government is there to see that fair treatment is meted out. The matter now is with the minister. This is a matter of transportation, a matter of trade and commerce, and it is within his jurisdiction.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister has a remedy in his own hands in connection with the use of the facilities in the harbours of Halifax and St. John and other ports. The case referred to by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) is one in which the apple grower in Nova Scotia would not sign an agreement "all or none". That is the whole story—all or none. Can a free Canadian citizen be compelled to accept this situation. If I do not ship all my apples one way I am to be penalized by paying twenty cents a barrel more in order to get them to the other side? We have wharves and railways, and we should teach these people that, while we will utilize their facilities for the purpose of shipping apples, when it suits us, if someone else comes forward who will take our apples at the same rate, we will use the facilities they afford, and no one shall put a pistol to our heads and say, "All or none."

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend has put the case clearly. The north Atlantic conference give the conference rate to a whole shipment. They say, "If you cannot give us all your business we cannot give you the conference rate." Whether or not the parliament of Canada can say to a British shipping company that they must not discriminate between the shipper who gives them half his cargo and one who gives them his entire shipment, I am not prepared to say. I appreciate the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Ryckman), and the matter is one that has been given consideration. But I am just cautious enough to be unwilling to promise my hon. friend that anything can be done.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The minister will promise further consideration?

Mr. MALCOLM: I shall certainly be glad to go into the matter, but I will not promise that something will be done because the north Atlantic conference is not very easily dealt with.

Mr. SHORT: Do I understand that the minister promises that the department will look into the matter?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): If the minister will look at item 150 he will see a vote of $3,600 providing for a service between Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence, while there is another vote of $18,000 for a steamship service between Sydney and Bay St. Lawrence. There seems to be a duplication here; that vote of $3,600 should be eliminated, should it not?

Mr. MALCOLM: There is an increase this year of $1,200 to make up the $3,600 subsidy which we have agreed to pay for the service, and there is a supplemental item to meet last year's deficit.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): But is not that $3,600 unnecessary?

Mr. QUINN: We have heard of the freight rate on apples from Nova Scotia to England. Can the minister give us an idea of the freight rate on apples from New Zealand to Canada?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I have no freight rate schedules with me.

Mr. QUINN: I have just received information that a cargo of apples—twelve thousand boxes, an hon. member informs me—is about to arrive at Halifax for distribution in the eastern provinces. There would seem to be some advantage to the New Zealand shipper when he can ship apples half way round the world to eastern Canada at this time of year. To me it looks very much like carrying coals to Newcastle to ship apples to Nova Scotia. What is the advantage to the New Zealand shipper?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend has mentioned something of which I had not previously known. He realizes of course, as we all do, that this time of year is fall in New Zealand. Their apples are ripening and going on the market, and I presume they have chartered a steamer to take an entire shipment, with no doubt a very favourable rate.

Mr. BENNETT: The rates are so low that on a through bill of lading from New Zealand to Calgary butter comes in at only a few cents per hundred pounds more than the rate from Vancouver to Calgary.

[Mr. Ryckman.]

Mr. SHORT: The express rate on apples from Windsor, Ontario, to St. John and Halifax is $1.20 per hundred pounds, while the express rate on apples from the Annapolis valley to Windsor, Ontario is $2.50 per hundred pounds. While Ontario is an apple-growing province, there are grown in Nova Scotia varieties of apples which are very much in demand in the cities of the upper provinces. Now with a discrimination against our maritime, or Nova Scotia, apples of $1.30 per hundred pounds we cannot expect to build up a trade in Nova Scotia fruit. Is there anything that the minister can do in the way of having these rates regulated? It surely does not cost any more for the express companies to carry apples from Nova Scotia to points in Quebec and Ontario than it does for them to bring apples from those same points to Nova Scotia. Why there should be this discrimination against our Nova Scotia apples I cannot understand, and I should be glad to have the minister look into the matter.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister promised a few minutes ago to explain a matter I brought to his attention.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend is referring to the waiving of the coastal regulations in the fall to permit the storage of grain in boats over the winter. All I can say to the house is that every fall there has been a pressure brought by those moving grain to take advantage of all the available space that can be found. That pressure undoubtedly comes from the shippers who wish to allow American boats to load grain and hold it in storage at the bay ports for unloading during the winter or spring. The coastal regulations call for the unloading of the boat during the season of navigation; to allow the boat to remain with a cargo is a violation of the coastal regulations and requires the passing of an order in council. These orders in council have been passed for the last several years on the recommendations of the Board of Grain Commissioners, in an endeavour to provide additional space, and the Lake Carriers' Association, which I believe has made complaints to the hon. member for Kingston, naturally objects to this practice.

So far as my department is concerned, and so far as I personally am concerned, I do not see that any great harm has been done to the Canadian shippers; as a matter of fact I think some good has been done the handlers of grain by allowing them to take advantage of this extra space. It is quite possible that it is a mistake to let so much grain come down; it is quite possible that the opinion held by some that there is altogether too much grain in our show window and not enough back in the warehouse, to use the vernacular, is well taken. Perhaps it might be very much better if we had more grain in the country and less at the front, but I can only tell my hon. friend that we will have to look at it from year to year and consider the circumstances that exist at the time. If there is a tremendously heavy pressure for storage space and the shippers of grain want this privilege, we might be inclined to grant their request, but unless there is a heavy movement and a great need for storage space I would not be inclined to permit this to be done. I wish my hon. friend would not ask me to make a promise with regard to the matter until such time as the request is made, but since he always has taken such an interest in the matter I would say that before we grant the request another year I shall be glad to discuss the matter with him in order that he may defend himself with those who press him on behalf of the lake shippers.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister does not appreciate the objection I raised. The shippers make no objection to the violation of the coastal laws with regard to the retention of grain in vessels; their objection is that after that privilege has been granted these vessels have returned to the head of the lakes for another cargo. There is no objection at all from the transportation people in regard to the storage of grain in vessels; that is quite reasonable and helps everyone, but the objection is that after they receive that privilege they violate the provisions of the order in council by returning to the head of the lakes for further cargoes.

Mr. MALCOLM: I had forgotten about those two or three cases to which my hon. friend refers, but I can assure him that they will not be repeated.

Item agreed to.

Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions

British Columbia and Australia, service between, $80,000.

Eastern Canada and Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine, steam service between — further amount required, $20,000.

Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence, service between—further amount required, $1,200.

Mr. STEVENS: I have just one very brief observation to make in reference to this item. I am very glad to note the subsidy which is to provide for service between British Columbia and Australia and to assist in meeting the unfair competition we are up against with the subsidized service from Washington, Oregon, to Australia. I have just one point to draw to the attention of the minister, a point which I mentioned to Sir Henry Thornton in the railway committee when we were discussing the estimates of the merchant marine.

The government merchant marine gave a very excellent service on the Atlantic; that service was quite satisfactory and I believe it stimulated business, but it did not pay. I suggested that it might be possible to use those ships on the Pacific, if we had close collaboration between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Canadian National Railways. If this subsidy were paid to the merchant marine it would be so much money saved, in a sense, so I would suggest to the minister that when this matter is being considered the government merchant marine should have the advantage, if there is any, and if it is found impossible to use those ships in this service the subsidy should be given a Canadian company rather than an American company if an American company should tender for the service, having in mind the danger of subsidizing a service which might be prejudiced through its very close association with the United States service from the Pacific coast to Australia.

Mr. MALCOLM: I did discuss with Sir Henry Thornton and the officers of the Canadian National Steamships whether or not they would be in a position to tender for this service. I am afraid they will not be able to do so. Hon. gentlemen will notice that the next item in the supplementaries shows an increase of $100,000 for our river Plate service to South America from the Atlantic coast, due to the fact that the traffic has increased and it is necessary to use more ships. I do not think it will be possible to make very much use of the older vessels of the Canadian government merchant marine. Tremendous changes have come about in shipping during the past decade, as my hon. friend well knows; the 9 and 10 knot boat built some years ago is not profitable at present and it is not satisfactory to shippers. The cost of operation of old boats is so excessive that the newer types of ships with Diesel power plants are driving them off the high seas. The Canadian government merchant marine, if parliament felt that we should increase our expenditure on ships and go into the business with new and up-to-date boats, of course could carry out this service as my hon. friend suggests. It might be good business, but unless the Department of Railways and the Canadian National Steamships decide on a program calling for the yearly construction of three or four modern freighters with modern power plants, they will not be able to compete with the newer boats which we can secure under subsidy. The best of the government ships are now on the Atlantic; some of the unprofitable ships are being taken off and sold, and I think that is a wise move. The United States Shipping Board has disposed of all its unprofitable boats, some of them at very low prices.

I can assure my hon. friend that this service, for which we are asking $80,000 for the remainder of this year and for which we may require $100,000 next year, will do what the old merchant marine service did in connection with the transportation of lumber. The lumbermen on the coast are all behind this service; perhaps we have taken longer to consider it than we should have taken, but I wanted to be sure that we would not do an injustice to the existing service. However, I am quite convinced that the existing service cannot do for British Columbia lumber shipments what can be done by this new service, and I can assure my hon. friend that of course British shipping will receive the preference when tenders are considered. Last year we were offered a very good service for the river Plate ports by some motorships, but they were of foreign registry and we felt that if we were subsidizing at all we would prefer to subsidize ships under British registry. We felt that the merchant marine had two or three boats which would be suitable for that service, and therefore they received the subsidy. I am glad to say that these boats have left the Atlantic seaboard loaded on every occasion, and I believe the proposed service will also prove profitable.

Mr. LADNER: What services are now in operation which would be capable of rendering the service which is being provided for in this item?

Mr. MALCOLM: If the hon. member will look at item 150 in the main estimates he will see an item, "Canada and New Zealand, on the Pacific, service between." That service has been in existence for some time and is operated by the Union Steamship Company.

Mr. STEVENS: That is a mail and passenger service.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is really a mail and passenger service, and, as I remarked a moment ago to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, I am quite satisfied that the shippers are right when they say that this service cannot transport the lumber as well as give a proper freight service.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. LADNER: It really means the establishment of a new freight service in order to assist the lumber trade?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, the lumber trade will receive the greater benefit from it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How did we come to get into a local service in Argentine with this river Plate service?

Mr. MALCOLM: That is a through service from Canada.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why do you call it the river Plate service?

Mr. MALCOLM: Calls are made at river Plate ports.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do I understand that the service starts at Buenos Aires and continues up the river?

Mr. MALCOLM: The service is from Canada to Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine Republic.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The reason you refer to the river Plate is because that is the end of the route?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are not interested in giving a service up the river at all?

Mr. MALCOLM: Oh, no.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): I notice an addition of $1,200 is being asked for the Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence service, which in my opinion is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. MALCOLM: Under vote No. 167 for 1928-29 the sum of $2,400 was voted to provide a subsidy for a motorship service between Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence, and other ports in northern Victoria county, Nova Scotia. A contract was entered into with the Nova Scotia Shipping Company, Limited, Halifax, covering three trips in the spring and three trips in the fall of 1928, at a subsidy of $400 per trip. The report of the royal commission investigating the fisheries of the maritime provinces and the Magdalen islands, 1928, recommended that this service be assisted by a subsidy to such an extent as would ensure its operation at regular periods during the whole season of open navigation; that is to say, throughout the summer months, as well as during the spring and fall. The continuation of the service during the summer months was strongly supported by the Department of Marine and Fisheries and by petition from the fishermen of Neil's Harbour, South Ingonish and other points in northern Victoria county; and the fish dealers of Halifax, and the Halifax board of trade. An agreement was arrived at by correspondence with the Nova Scotia Shipping Company, Limited, who undertook to make one trip each month during the summer, or three trips in all, at the rate of $400 per trip. This additional service is being provided, on the recommendation of the fishermen and the boards of trade, for an added period of three months.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): The next item provides for $2,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: The hon. member probably knows the boat which was on that service, the Prince Albert, which was sunk by ice. We made an agreement with the contractors to build a new boat and put it on the service. The new steamer will cost from $40,000 to $45,000 to build and the contractors, therefore, ask for a slight increase in their subsidy, amounting to $2,000. Previous to 1927 the provincial government contributed a subsidy of $3,000 to this service, but this was discontinued in 1927 and the contractors are entirely dependent upon the Dominion subsidy to make the operation of this service possible. It is, therefore, proposed to increase the Dominion subsidy to $15,000, and in view of the construction of an entirely new boat to grant a ten-year contract for this service to the Albert Steamship company.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): Who comprise that company?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I cannot tell the hon. member anything about the personnel of the company.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—salaries, $572,625; contingencies, $40,000.

Mr. LADNER: Mr. Chairman, I observe with pleasure that the salary of the deputy minister has been increased from $8,000 to $10,000, and I make that observation because I think that in most cases the higher government officials who are vested with great responsibilities in administering large departments do not always receive the renumeration their work warrants. I do not recall the exact instances, but I believe there are other deputies who have not received corresponding increases, and it seems to me that this is a question which should receive the consideration of the government. The decision to grant these increases must have been arrived at through the application of some principle, and I should like to ask the minister what that principle was and on what basis the increases were made; whether or not the question of the length of service was involved, and whether or not all the deputy ministers received an increase.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend any information as to the representations made by my colleagues on behalf of their staffs. I was of the opinion that my deputy minister was entitled to a slight increase in his remuneration, and when the request went to the treasury board I was very glad to know that they had acceded to my recommendations. Whether or not the other ministers asked for the same increase for their deputies, I am not prepared to say. I think perhaps the right hon. the Prime Minister would be able to answer that question.

Mr. LADNER: One will observe that these increases are uniform, and to that extent there must have been some effort made to apply a principle. If we accept the minister's word that there was no principle at all, then it must have been just a guess. I think my question is a fair one; I do not ask it with respect to any particular deputy as I do not recall who did not receive increases, but probably it is unfair that any discrimination should be made in this regard. I think the committee is entitled to know if there was some basis which governed the increases. If the uniformity of $2,000 in the increases has any significance then the minister would have the information.
