A member of the Official Opposition asked if we had any further speakers on the particular motion and we agreed that in the spirit of co-operation, so that members of the Official Opposition could refresh their list, we would stand our speakers. At that point, I believe the record will show that the Deputy Speaker called for the vote on Motion No. 23.

At the start of the calling for the vote, the Deputy Speaker did not point out—and I am not sure whether he should or should not have, as I think it is for the Chair to decide—that the votes on Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25 would be taken separately. Therefore, I believe the record will show that the Deputy Speaker called the vote on Motion No. 23 and asked: "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?" I believe the record will show that on Motion No. 23 yeas and nays were recorded. The Deputy Speaker then said: "All those in favour of the motion will please say yea." I believe the record will show that there were yeas. The Deputy Speaker then said: "All those opposed will please say nay." I believe the record will show that Hon. Members said nay. It is also my belief that five members of the Opposition stood when the Deputy Speaker said: "In my opinion, the nays have it." As is their right, members of the Opposition stood to formally request a recorded vote. Then, pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the Deputy Speaker said: "A recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred." I am not sure whether he said "motion" or "motions", but, the point is that when the Deputy Speaker moved to Motion No. 24, I believe the record will show that he said: "Mr. Axworthy moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 43 to 48 at page 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?" I believe at that point opposition Members said yea, quite naturally. I know, and I can only speak for myself in the House, that I definitely said nay. Sitting in my place, I said nay. I am not sure the record will show that. There are records which the Chair will have the opportunity to examine; there is Hansard and there is the video tape of the proceedings. I am sure that the Chair, in the interest of fairness and in the interest of deciding what actually took place, with precedents in mind, will examine all of those.

Point number one of my point of order is that I believe the video tape records will show, display—in other words, Mr. Speaker, you will hear it—that there were yeas and nays. I realize that is an imperfect way of doing it, but I believe it can be drawn, from what I had an opportunity to hear earlier, that my nay was part of that confusion. I must admit that my hearing is biased on that point.

The second point of the point of order is that I believe the record will show that at no time did the Deputy Speaker say, as he did when he was on Motion No. 23: "In my opinion, the yeas have it." I believe, at the point at which the vote is called, that it is up to the Chair to declare the motion won or lost. I believe the record will show that at that point he did not declare the motion to be won or lost, but moved on to Motion No. 25. I submit that the Chair is the person in the House who decides whether motions have been won or lost. The only way in which he can express that opinion is to say it. In other words, I believe if the record is examined it will show that some Members agreed and then it will show that the Deputy Speaker moved on to Motion No. 25, without formally declaring the previous motion won or lost.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that until that declaration is made, the motion is in a hiatus. In other words, it has not been won, it has not been lost, and it is up to the Chair to declare whether it has been won or lost. If the Chair makes that declaration at the time of the vote—and if the Chair declares that the vote was won by the Opposition, then that's fair ball—then we should have the opportunity, as the Government, just as the Opposition did on the first motion, to stand our five Members. Certainly, we had five Members in the House. We should have had the opportunity to stand our five Members and request a recorded division on the vote. That did not happen. I suggest that is the third thing which should have happened. We should have had that opportunity.

In review, there are three things which I would ask the Chair to consider: one, whether the yeas and nays were properly heard and recorded; two, whether the Deputy Speaker ever officially declared the motion won or lost, and three, whether Members of the House on all sides had that democratic opportunity to have five Members stand and request an official recorded division of the vote.

I appreciate that things happen quickly in the House. There have been many, many opportunities when we, as the Government, have given the Opposition the benefit of the doubt in the interest of doing what the majority of Members of the House want done. I suggest that in the future there will be those opportunities. That is what this place is all about. They can argue, "Sorry, Mr. Simcoe North; sorry, Mr. Lewis; sorry, Government, we tricked you because something went by." That is not the point of this place.

Mr. Axworthy: You fumbled the ball, that's the problem. Why not kick it in the end zone now?

Mr. Lewis: I admit I don't know all the rules. Would the person who knows all the rules please stand—other than yourself, Sir? I would ask the honorary member at the table if he does not agree that what this place is really all about is that what Hon. Members want done, properly gets done in accordance with the rules, and not only the rules of the House but the rules of fair play. I would ask the Chair and the Table Officers to examine whether in fact my three points within the point of order have validity and then I would put it to the test of Hon. Members opposite as to just exactly how they want to play by the rules of fair play.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly on this point of order because I do not want to reflect on the decision of the Chair. However, since the Hon. Member brought that point up, I wish to remind him that on April 23 last you, Mr. Speaker, made it clear in the House that the amendments which were tabled with Bill C-15, for the purposes of debate, were grouped as to certain amendments. For example, it was ruled that Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25 should be grouped for debate and voted on separately. That takes care of the first point. There was a decision made by the Chair on April 23. We abided by that decision. We debated this Bill for several days, the last being May 2, and on every occasion the Speaker put the motions to the House separately when so required by the ruling made by the Chair on April 23.

I do not really want to comment on the fact that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) takes exception or umbrage with the hearing or the sight of the Speaker because I was here. We on this side of the House were not playing tricks on the Government. We were debating motions put by this Party and by the New Democratic Party. We were under the impression that the Hon. Member knew that we were going to vote on these amendments separately and when Motion No. 23 was called, we did indeed stand, because it is our privilege to call for a recorded vote.

On Motion No. 24, we did not stand. Why we did not do so is not for me to say. I really don't know, but I can tell the Hon. Member right now that someone in the Government was asleep at the switch. We knew that, but it is not my job as Party Whip to tell the Hon. Member how to act in his capacity as either Parliamentary Secretary or being in charge of that matter. However, there was no doubt in my mind that someone goofed on that one, but that is not for me to decide one way or the other. The motion was put in due form, it was passed in due form, and as far as I am concerned, it stands in due form.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal which might be said about the argument which has been made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). However, I want to restrict myself to one matter, that is, that it is necessary in order that a point of order be heard that it be raised at the earliest possible moment. I watched the proceedings on the television in my office. In fact, the point of order was raised at the earliest possible moment. The point of order was raised with the Deputy Speaker at the time and the Deputy Speaker, having heard the arguments, much of which has been replayed, as it were, by the Hon. Member this afternoon, in fact ruled that he had in fact dealt appropriately with the matter—as was the case. It is an affront, I might say, to the Deputy Speaker to now come into the House and attempt to have the Speaker overrule the ruling of his deputy.

I want to suggest that it is inappropriate behaviour and, with a little time, I could point to other circumstances where Speakers have pointed out to the House that where Deputy Speakers make rulings, those are the rulings, and there is no subsequent appeal to the Speaker of the ruling of a Deputy Speaker.

While the Hon. Member, in an effort to compensate for the inadequacies of himself and his colleagues at the time, may now wish to reconsider his position and have it reconsidered by the House of Commons, he should at least show the Speaker and his entire office, deputies included, the courtesy of accepting that the Deputy Speaker was given the option of considering the point of order, considered it and ruled it out of order. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that there is no point of order and that the time being taken now is time being wasted.

Mr. Axworthy: Furthermore, it is a good amendment.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise because of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I want to simply indicate to him that I was able to get a copy of the "blues" after this matter arose. I believe that if the Hon. Member had gotten a copy of the "blues", he would have seen the record, as shown by Hansard, which is the official record of the House. As I understand it, television has not yet taken the place of Hansard as the official record of this House. The written word is still the official record of what has transpired in this House—

Mr. Deans: The point of order has already been dealt with.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think this is germane to the point of order, as the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has alluded to the record of the House and I am now making specific reference to the "blues" which clearly state what transpired according to the official record. If you look at the "blues", Mr. Speaker, and I have a copy in my hand, you will see that at the time in question it states, "On Motion No. 24, Mr. Axworthy moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 43 to 48 at page 6". The Deputy Speaker said, "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?" Some Hon. Members said, "Agreed". The Deputy Speaker, according to Hansard, did not then deal with the motion. He did not then, as he is required to do by Beauchesne, say, "Carried".

Mr. Deans: He said, "Adopté".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, I see. So we are hearing things which are not now in the official record.

Mr. Deans: The "blues" are not the official record.

Mr. Gauthier: The "blues"? Come on.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: So it is not incumbent upon us to take the official record as being the appropriate one? I listened in silence to the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party. I would hope that he would extend the same courtesy to me. I know he is on a very weak point of order in this particular situation, but I am prepared to consider this matter in a serious way.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, simply is that there are three steps normally taken with respect to these matters, as you will know, Mr. Speaker. First, it is asked whether it is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion. Then the Speaker, if he is able to discern that there are yeas and nays, would then take the second step. This House operates on the basis of the discretion of the Chair and not on the basis of some lack of acoustical ability to hear whether there are both yeas and nays because there is activity on the floor of the House. At the first possible instant, Mr. Speaker, at least one Hon. Member stood in his place to indicate that he indeed had said "nay" at the appropriate time. It was not a delayed reaction. It was an instant reaction when the Deputy Speaker moved on to the next motion.

Mr. Gauthier: That's not true.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) stood in his place and said, "I said 'nay' ". I know that there are other Hon. Members in this House who are prepared to say that they said "nay". That is the basis on which this House operates. If we are able to accept the words of Hon. Members, then we have the opportunity of having at least the process and procedure dealt with in a reasonable manner. I say to you, Sir, as you will know, Beauchesne's Fifth Edition does put very clearly the procedure of putting a question to the House. Appendix I, Item No. 94, indicates that the occupant of the Chair makes a declaration with respect to whether the matter is carried or not. I was not here, I grant you that, Mr. Speaker, and I can only go on the basis of the official transcript which is Hansard. If one were to say to me that perhaps the occupant of the Chair did say "Carried" It would indicate to me that the acoustics in the House are not perfect because the Hansard reporter did not hear the Speaker, who had a microphone on. We in the House all understand that the Government was opposed to this motion. That has been indicated in debate. The Speaker is cognizant of what is going on. This is not a technical institution. It is one in which questions should be dealt with on a reasonable basis. If it is going to be said when an Hon. Member stands in his place to say that he said "nay", then I say that we should have the same right to say that the occupant of the Chair did not say "carried". I have proof here that according to the official record the occupant of the Chair did not say "carried".

• (1530)

Mr. Axworthy: Except the occupant of the Chair said he did. Are you challenging the Deputy Speaker?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I allowed the hon. Opposition spokespersons to deal with this matter. It is not becoming for Hon. Members to shout down a humble servant of the House who wants to make a serious point.

Mr. Axworthy: Bring the humble servant forward then.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Speaker is sitting in one position in the House and Hon. Members sitting at the other end of the House from time to time indicate the fact that they are in opposition to the motion. Certainly we are not going to make our decisions about votes and change the laws on the basis of whether or not a Member has to be extremely noisy. If they say "nay" and indicate they said "nay" at the first opportunity, it seems that this is a reasonable proposition. We are not asking for any favours of the Chair. It is not undermining a ruling of the Chair. I think there is a prima facie case which can be demonstrated on the official record. We can look to other sources which may indicate that something was said which was picked up on the recording. I simply reiterate my point, Mr. Speaker, that there is a question of an acoustical problem. Members say they said "nay". I believe them and I think we should take account of that and complete the process by calling for the yeas and nays in order to decide whether the yeas or the nays have it. That is only fair. That is democratic and I suggest to you, Sir, that it would be the reasonable way to go.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could I make a very brief intervention?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Government House Leader, has based his whole argument on what he says is the official record of the debates of the House. From what he is saying, it appears that all he is talking about are what are commonly known as the "blues". I submit, Mr. Speaker, and it is very clearly established, that the "blues" are not the official record or report of debates. Citation 155.(1) on page 48 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition reads:

> The Official Report of Debates, commonly referred to as Hansard, is the record of speeches made in the House; it also contains answers to written questions on the Order Paper.

I submit that what the Government House Leader is using as a basis for his argument is not the official report of debates. In fact, Citation 156 at page 49 of Beauchesne's says:

> The Debates are printed in bound volumes from time to time during a session.

I realize I wear glasses, Mr. Speaker, but I did not see any bound volume of debates. If my hon. friend is basing his argument on what is commonly known as the "blues", his argument must fail.

I would like to make one other point, Mr. Speaker. It is very clear that when the Deputy Speaker occupies the Chair, he has the full authority to exercise all the same powers with respect to decision making as the Speaker himself. This is confirmed by Beauchesne's citing the Speaker of the House of Commons Act, Section 5. It reads:

> Every act done and warrant, order or other document issued or published by the Deputy Speaker in relation to any proceedings of the House of Commons, or which under any statute would be done, shall have the same effect and validity as if the same had been done, issued, signed or published by the Speaker for the time being.

By way of conclusion, I would like to say that at this point there is no way that the representatives of the Government can impugn a decision of the Deputy Speaker by implying that in some way it has less force and effect than a ruling made by yourself. The ruling was made by the Deputy Speaker exercising, quite properly, the full authority of the Speaker. That ruling cannot be impugned by any of the interesting, but I must say with all due respect, ineffectual and weak arguments of the Government House Leader and his colleagues.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. I have heard all the House Leaders and a Whip. At this point I am ready to indicate something to the House. It is very simple. The matter was raised at the time. The Deputy Speaker ruled on the matter at the time. The Deputy Speaker stands in this place as the Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) on debate.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to contribute to the debate on Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, and Motion Nos. 27, 30 and 67 which are presently before the House. This is my first speech before this Chamber, and I would like to take a moment to offer a few of my personal thoughts on the vitally important issue of investment in Canada.

As a new Member of Parliament from Alberta, I came to the House determined to voice the views of my constituents and all the people of Alberta. As a small businessman in Edmonton, I witnessed the devastating and discriminating policies of the previous Government. During my 31 years of small business, I witnessed the province grow into an industrial power. I saw Alberta develop. With that development, I understood and shared the positive entrepreneurial attitude of Albertans.

When, following his return to office, Pierre Trudeau said, "Welcome to the 1980s", Albertans suffered the coldest shower in Canadian economic history in the name of Canadianization. To many Albertans, Mr. Trudeau's scheme of Canadianization turned out to be a lesson in isolation. When the Opposition talks about—

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker I have a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I respect the fact that this is the first speech of the Hon. Member, but there is a rule of relevance on report stage. We are dealing with an amendment dealing with the extension of time to 45 days from 30 days. It has nothing to do with what Mr. Trudeau said when he came to office in 1980. I would ask that the Hon. Member address himself to the specific amendment before the House at report stage. If he wants to engage in a larger debate on principle, he will have that opportunity at third reading. Since we have only limited time, it is very important that we deal with the amendments on the table at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that he should be relevant to the topic of the motions. I am sure the Member will do that.

Mr. Lesick: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Canadianization is very important. It is a topic which was brought up by the Hon. Member of the Opposition. It is very important that we should understand this aspect. Confidence is very necessary for us, otherwise no one could invest in Canada. I suggest that that is the real meaning behind the motions that were presented. The other is a question of nationalism and interventionism in the economic forces which drive the market-place.

The motion was perhaps presented by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) with good intentions. Canadians recognize that in order to find new markets and create new jobs and a better future for our children, we must seek out capital from all over the world. The Hon. Member's motion dealing with culturally sensitive proposals underestimates the intelligence of the Canadian community. Placing a time delay on investment, as suggested in the amendment, will serve little purpose. We Canadians know the nature of our society. The people of the country, particularly the unemployed, want economic renewal. I believe that we know how to protect and enhance our own Canadian cultural institutions.

What we need are jobs and this legislation will accomplish that goal.

● (1540)

The amendment to extend review of investment in culturally sensitive activities to 45 days from 30 days is not necessary whatsoever. Our Government promises speed of review that is combined with efficiency. Our Government, in the short time we have been in power, has enacted more good and absolutely necessary legislation than has the previous Government. Of course, it did so after consultation with interested and affected parties.

We are prepared to be more effective and progressively decisive. Investors should not be confused. They will have more confidence in the Government.

I believe that the amendments are not necessary. They are not supported by the Government or the people of Canada, and I strongly suggest that the amendments, particularly Motion No. 67, not pass. We cannot survive in isolation. We cannot live in a cocoon, shielded from the rest of the world. We have an obligation to future generations to build on our strengths and this Bill will provide us with that opportunity.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to Motion No. 27 in particular because it concerns new investment in Canada. The proposed amendment would prevent the investment of new funds in new businesses in Canada and it would particularly inhibit the concept of this Bill, which is to develop our nation and to provide work and other opportunities for our children.

Although there is chronic unemployment in our nation, the New Democratic Party has moved an amendment that would require a review of new investment in Canada by some board.

Mr. Langdon: That is not what it says.

Mr. Blenkarn: Such an amendment would obstruct new and innovative people from coming to our country to create businesses. It is our responsibility to give what Canadians demanded of us on September 4. We must turn the country around and create the opportunities for men and women to work and build this nation. New investment from whatever source is important to provide the opportunity to create.

The New Democrats believe that bureaucrats in Ottawa should decide what investment is acceptable, what jobs people should have, and who should have them. The concept behind this amendment is based on the concept in every slave state where those in power direct their citizens where to work and what to do. They decide on what investment and what technology can be accepted.

Canada has put up with that kind of control for too long. It was that concept which inspired the Foreign Investment Review Act that is now being changed. It was a concept based on the assumption that the bureaucrats in Ottawa who belonged to socialist-oriented parties knew best how development should take place in Canada and how people should use their talents; what should be created and by whom.

That concept was soundly rejected on September 4. This amendment would prevent investment in Canada unless approved by a board of review. There are many type of investment that come to our country. Recently, a new Canadian in my riding had an opportunity to bring a new plastic-fabricating operation to Canada from the United States. His American contact wanted to own a good part of the business because he was supplying the money and the technology. My constituent was primarily supplying the marketing ability.

The lawyer advised the American contact of the Foreign Investment Review Act. That term alone caused the deal to fall through, until I was able to persuade the American investor that the Act was going to be changed so that new investment would be welcome in Canada.

If this amendment is allowed to pass, we would be indicating that new investment is not welcome unless permitted. In some cases, FIRA required investors to spend up to $30,000 to hire lawyers, accountants and others to process the forms that were required for permission to invest in Canada. We are saying, "Come to Canada and invest. Create jobs and opportunities and let us, together, build this country".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 27 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 30 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 67 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1550)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 13 by striking out line 21 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"order to complete that notice and that the investment not proceed until the notice has been completed and a receipt specified under subsection (1) above has been obtained by the non-Canadians."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of expediting debate and to move the process along, I am prepared to withdraw this amendment because it was contingent upon previous other amendments which were unfortunately defeated. We seem to be back in the old spirit of not looking at things constructively any more. Obviously, because the Minister is back in the House now, things have changed. I will withdraw this amendment because it was a contingent amendment. We can go on to the next round of debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) to withdraw his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 31 withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 34, 35, 36, and 38 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

[Translation]

Mr. Axworthy moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 36 to 40 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) an investment to acquire control of a Canadian business in any manner described in paragraph 28 where the value calculated in the manner prescribed of

(i) the gross assets acquired, in the case where control of a Canadian business is acquired in the manner described in paragraph 28(1)(c), or

(ii) the gross assets of the entity carrying on the Canadian business and of any other entity in Canada the control of which is acquired directly or indirectly, in the case where control of a Canadian business is acquired in the manner described in paragraph 28(1)(a), (b) or (d), is five million dollars or more;".

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 36 to 40 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) an investment to acquire control of a Canadian business in a manner described by section 28 except where that business is in the area of cultural heritage or national identity;".

[Translation]

Mr. Axworthy moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 41 and 42 at page 9 and lines 1 to 3 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) an investment to establish a new business where the assets of the new business are five million dollars or more;".

[English]

Mr. Axworthy moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 10 to 15 and lines 45 to 47 at page 10 and lines 1 to 5 at page 11.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to make sure that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) understands that an affirmative vote—and I am reading from your ruling, Sir, of April 23—on Motion No. 34 disposes of Motion No. 35. A negatived vote on Motion No. 34 necessitates that the question be put on Motion No. 35. If that is clear, then we can proceed with debate, but I want the Hon. Member to understand that so he will not say yea when he means nay or nay when he means yea.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, this set of amendments focus on one of the most important clauses in the Bill. It is the area of legislation that describes what form of foreign investment is subject to review. It has been the judgment of the Government obviously that the thresholds should be changed substantially from the way in which they were constructed under the FIRA legislation.

The Government has done this by way of saying, "We want to clarify and simplify matters". At the same time, Mr. Speaker, what the Government has also brought forward by this change in threshold is a major invitation to create a vulnerability for a number of Canadian companies that would be subject, particularly in the case of indirect acquisition, to takeovers that were not constructed with any positive purpose in mind but were done, in large part, because of the manipulation and shenanigans in the New York stock market, the "team boom pickins" kind of activity that takes place where the stock market becomes a great big game and is simply a matter of rating and pirating various forms of acquisition. In this case, you pick up a lot of Canadian holdings by automatic and inadvertent exercise of that form of high finance pirateering. As a result, Canadian companies that have been well established in Canada that provide useful jobs and economic activity can be wiped out in a flash.

By creating the threshold of indirect acquisitions at the $50 million level a whole range of Canadian subsidiaries now held by parent companies, which includes a very large number of substantially middle-sized companies, will be rolled in as part of the over-all take-up of an indirect acquisition. Canadian communities and workers will be subject to the vagaries and vicissitudes of that activity without having any opportunity for their Government to say whether it is useful, positive and of benefit to Canadians.

We introduced this series of amendments to alter the threshold relationship to make the indirect acquisition threshold the same as the direct acquisition, namely, the $5 million level.

Let me refer to the presentation before the committee of the Science Council, which has a direct mandate to look at how we in Canada can create competitive companies to deal in the international market, particularly in scientific or research related industries. If you look at the testimony of that Council based upon years of researh and years of examination, it shows that the present level of threshold will result in a number of high-tech based companies in Canada being wiped out or taken over without any opportunities for judgment or review by this Government.

Once again we go back to the basic argument we have made. There is nothing wrong with foreign investment as long as foreign investment produces something valuable for Canada, as long as it has the kind of job creation we all want and the kind of investment in new high technology products, with the ability to develop export markets. We have seen time and time again, and the evidence points it out, that many foreign-owned subsidiairies have far less investment in research and development and they prevent Canadian-based subsidiaries from competing with the home corporation in the export market. In other words, they do not provide the kind of performance and behaviour that we need if we are going to build an effective international advantage for Canada.

All we are saying is that companies should at least be required to demonstrate whether they are prepared to make that kind of commitment. We propose that the threshold be brought down so that it can include Canadian subsidiaries acquired in indirect forms. I fail to see why the Government has made such a major discrimination between a direct acquisition and an indirect acquisition. In fact, one could almost argue that it is more important to review indirect acquisitions than direct ones, the reason being that if foreign investors come into Canada to buy Canadian companies and know the performance, attributes and characteristics of those companies, they are less likely to tamper with or strip them down. However, if they are simply picking up Canadian companies as part of indirect acquisitions as a result of their moving, shaking and manipulating in the financial markets of another company, it does not matter whether the acquisitions are indirect ones. We have seen callousness and indifference toward indirect acquisitions by many of their own companies.

I return to my original point. Perhaps the most flagrant and at times amusing form of financial gymnastics in the United States market is this incredible shotgunning of one company after another. There is a whole new category of stock market sharks who are simply out there to try to boost up stock percentages and dividends in the American market by buying and selling companies at will. Unfortunately, the after effect or side effect is that many Canadian companies are swept up in the rush.

What will happen when the level under this Act is raised to $50 million? Suddenly an investor will look at his sheet of acquisitions and ask how he acquired a company in Pickering, in Moose Jaw or in Corner Brook. What does he know about them? Does he care about Corner Brook or Mississauga? He may say: "Let's get rid of it, sell it off, I don't care". There is no direct involvement on the part of investors in that kind of acquisition.

We have brought forth this set of amendments to ensure that the Government would at least be required to review. This does not mean to say that the Government would be required to stop foreign investment. A fallacy which has been perpetrated time and time again in this debate is that somehow the Foreign Investment Review Act stopped foreign investment. Last year it allowed $4 billion worth of foreign investment into the country, one of the largest allotments of foreign investment in the last 10 years. However, by the review procedure, it required foreign investment coming into the country to demonstrate at least that it had value to Canadians, that it would create jobs and that it would create export markets, not simply be an afterthought or or a side effect.

In coming to grips with these threshold questions, we are really coming to the very heart of our concern that by having the threshold so high, particularly in the area of indirect acquisitions, a number of takeovers will occur which will work to the detriment of many communities, and a number of victims, mainly workers in the companies, will have no recourse. There will be no responsibility or obligation on the part of the Government of Canada to protect their interest.

Those are the reasons that we make the case, once again, that our amendments are designed to improve the Bill and to make it more useful and constructive. They are not in any way designed to detract from the proper procedure or from foreign investment producing something valuable. We believe they will ensure that the review procedure is applied in a way which will make the commitments clear and defined so as to require foreign investment to show the value for Canadians, not simply be allowed to take over companies without demonstrating a major contribution which will be of benefit to Canada.

Whether by inadvertence or not, the Government is at least showing a small flicker of insight and response by allowing certain amendments to take place. Once again, if it were to show another act of inadvertence, this amendment would be the ideal one on which to show it.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, with this particular group of amendments, we come to one of the key differences which, frankly, has divided us in our debates on the Investment Canada Bill since it came before the House, in our discussions in committee, and in our attempts at report stage to dig into the substance of the Bill. We have accepted that the Government believes it is in the best interests of Canada to permit new foreign companies to come into the country, to establish new premises or new enterprises and hopefully, to produce jobs, exports and benefits for Canada. This particular set of amendments does not deal with that point of principle. However, there is a second point of principle which we feel is an important one—should we permit small Canadian enterprises, small businesses which are so important to invidual Canadian communities, to be taken over without the review process being brought to bear?

Many Conservative back-benchers have claimed to believe during the debate on the Budget that the small business sector is crucial to our economic future. I believe that strongly, on the basis of my own constituency wherein small business is a vital, vibrant and growing part of the economy, and on the basis of the small business people we met across the country during our action group tour. A tremendous, exciting dynamism exists among small firms throughout the land.

This is a government Bill, and the Government says with this Bill that it believes large Canadian corporations need the safeguard of a review process if there are takeovers from outside the country of medium-sized and large firms. If it is correct in believing that, and if at the same time it is correct in believing that small businesses are crucial to our economic future, then it is equally correct to say that foreign takeovers of small Canadians firms, which are so crucial to us, also deserve to be reviewed. I am not saying that they need to be rejected, because this is not a Bill which rejects foreign investment. It is a Bill which attempts to review foreign investment to see to it that significant benefits come to the country. If there is any sense of honesty in that purpose, if there is any sense of reality in that commitment, I urge government Members to see to it that the review process applies equally to the takeover of small Canadian firms as it does to the takeover of large Canadian firms.

I want to put before the House some of the evidence which makes it crucial for such provisions to be part of the new Act. For instance, let me present the case of Canadian Porcelain, a small enterprise with assets of just over $1 million, based in Hamilton. In the past that enterprise provided insulation mechanisms which were quite significant within the electrical industry. It was forced into receivership by the predatory dumping of its competitors. However, the affected workers got together with the community of Hamilton and discovered that the community was prepared to back them in an excited and committed way. They brought forward a proposal to take over this bankrupt company and operate it successfully as a workers' co-operative. However, at the last minute, one of the U.S. competitors which had forced Canadian Porcelain into bankruptcy came in and bought up the plant instead. Fortunately,—and I say fortunately because it is as a result of the delay which we have been able to create with respect to the passage of this Bill—the Foreign Investment Review Agency is still the law of the land. Canadian Porcelain workers will be coming to Ottawa on Thursday to meet with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), and others, to make the case that FIRA should turn down the takeover by Lapp and permit Canadian Porcelain, with its strong base of community support, to keep the industry Canadian.

I would now like to talk about something which is close to the hearts of many of my constituents, that is, the Windsor Spitfires hockey team, which was taken over last year by a Michigan-based enterprise. It is a small operation involving approximately $1 million to $1.5 million in assets, which would not be subject to review under the terms of the Bill before us. Yet the take-over was subject to review by FIRA. That agency saw that the investment was not stopped. Quite frankly, the hockey team needed fresh capital to keep it going. FIRA was able to see to it that a clear commitment was given by the company taking over the team. That commitment involved keeping the team in Windsor and seeing to it that it would continue to employ Canadians, in terms of both its coaching and its support staff. This was something which was absolutely crucial to hockey fans and, indeed, sport fans more widely within my community.

It is possible to go on, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Association for the Advancement of Technology has made the case to the Government that it is the small high-tech firms which will be particularly susceptible to take over if this Bill passes as written. The association has made strong arguments to the Minister. In fact, we heard testimony in committee that the limits in the Bill should be brought down in order that small Canadian high-tech firms could not be taken over without at least a review process taking place. These small high-tech firms are absolutely crucial to our economic future. Bringing down the limits would permit the workers and shareholding partners in some of these firms to have a sense of protection in terms of their interest and their future.

We have also seen what are perhaps the most tragic cases of all in this country. I am speaking of cases where branch plants of U.S. companies are taken over by other huge corporations in the United States, or elsewhere in the world. These large multinational enterprises come to the conclusion, as indeed multinational enterprises must since they are profit-making enterprises, to shut down what now exists as duplicate facilities within their operations. We saw the case in Barrie where the Black & Decker plant was shut down. That shut-down cost 600 workers their jobs. There is absolutely nothing in the Bill before us which will protect Canadian workers employed in small and medium-sized firms which are taken over by the great conglomerates of the world and which are subject to rationalization and some type of global profit maximization strategy.

I make the case to the House that if we accept the amendment before us, we will bring to bear a review process—not a harsh one but a significant one—to protect the interests of workers in communities with respect to small Canadian branch plants which will be subject, in the future, to the pressures of world capitalism as it rationalizes throughout the world.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment with respect to Motion No. 34. In my view, this motion appears to deal with what I find to be the most despicable portion of the Foreign Investment Review Act. I am speaking of what happened when a Canadian subsidiary of a multinational company was transferred by one multinational to another in a world transaction made outside Canada. What happens is that a multinational may have a Canadian corporation as one of its many companies. The effect of transferring the control of the multinational involves, in effect, the transfer of the control of the Canadian corporation. Under the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act, the bureaucrats in Ottawa were expected to make a ruling as to whether or not one multinational company could take over the assets of another involving transactions of many millions of dollars. Indeed, in some cases, billions of dollars have been involved. These transactions took place in world-held corporations because one small entity involved in that conglomerate happened to exist in Canada. In some cases, in order to avoid the question of review, the Canadian subsidiary has been closed down completely. The thinking seemed to be, "Why bother trying to appease these people in Canada who think they know better than anyone else with respect to investment and how to create jobs?"

More important, the whole aspect of the Foreign Investment Review Act, as it operated in this sense, called into question the nature of Canada as a place to invest money and do business. This seriously hampered the investment of funds and the number of job opportunities for Canadians, perhaps in the most gross manner possible. The mover of the amendment which I am now discussing wishes to reinstate this concept if the assets of a company involve more than $5 million. Surely to goodness we are part of an international trading and development system. Some of our multinational companies are the largest multinational companies in the world. In the distilling industry alone, we have the top two distillers in the world, Joseph E. Seagram & Sons Limited and Hiram Walker & Sons Limited, number one and number two respectively. Our multinational corporations are able to deal, grow and do business. That we should say to another country's multinational, which may happen to have a branch operation somewhere in Canada that has nothing to do with the totality of its world-wide organization, that its world-wide activities are to be reviewed simply because of its operation in Canada, then we go a long way toward hurting Canada and the concept of Canada as a place where fair and free trade and open business are conducted.

The philosophy expressed by the Opposition seems to be that somehow the public officials know better than the business community how investment is to take place and how it is made. As a result of the attitudes in the Foreign Investment Review Act which tried to review transactions that did not take place in Canada at all and tried to review transactions for which the essence of the transactions were not Canadian at all, we have called into question the whole nature of investment in Canada. Canada is not deemed to be a fair place to put money because one cannot assign what one owns in Canada to someone else. Those kinds of transactions do not involve further foreign investment in Canada and never involved that at all. They do not involve a new takeover in Canada. They are only a matter of whether or not a multinational corporation with headquarters in Holland would take over the activities of a multinational corporation with headquarters in New York. What difference does that make to us? It is still a foreign-owned corporation. It is still part of a conglomerate.

In the view of this Government, we want to let members of the investment world know that Canada is a place to do business. We want to let them know that if they invest their assets in this country, they can sell them to whomever they wish. There are certain limitations on that and those limitations are spelled out in the Bill. They involve cultural matters and things that go to the essence of Canadianism. However, in terms of ordinary commercial activities, surely to goodness transactions of this nature should not be reviewed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 34. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 34 will dispose of Motion No. 35. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 79, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 36. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 79, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I understood you correctly, a negative vote on Motion No. 34 would then require a vote on Motion No. 35. Is that correct?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct. However, we must wait for the vote on that motion to take place tonight in order to decide if we must vote on Motion No. 35.

The question is on Motion 38. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 15 at page 10 the following:

"(e) gross assets shall be determined as at the latest completed fiscal period at current prices in a manner prescribed by regulations."

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is striking that one of the key considerations within this Bill is the size of a given investment. There are threshold levels which set out trigger points which determine whether or not an investment will be reviewed. Yet we do not at any stage talk about how we will measure those trigger points.

This is partly a technical point and partly a substantive point. In our view, if it is not set out clearly within the Bill the way in which a trigger mechanism will be used, there is a serious danger that we could have a system in place whereby the way in which gross assets are measured for purposes of the trigger mechanism will grossly undervalue those assets. That of course would mean that takeovers that should be reviewable according to the intent of the legislation would not be reviewable because the way their asset levels are calculated leaves them under the triggering level.

The triggering level itself is $5 million in the case of a direct acquisition and $50 million in the case of an indirect acquisition. As Members of the House who are in business or who have a background in law or economics will know, many different conventions are taken to establish what constitutes the assets of a company. For instance, it is possible to look at the $5 million threshold on the basis of historical costs as depreciated within a company. On that basis, a person might easily have a company which, at fair market value, is worth $20 million, however, on its books, with historical values depreciated, it would be worth approximately $3 million. That would mean that a company which should be reviewed would escape review. Therefore, we have brought before the House a technical amendment which is designed to ensure that the substantive purpose of the Bill is achieved. The amendment states:

—gross assets shall be determined as at the latest completed fiscal period at current prices in a manner prescribed by regulations.

In short, we are attempting to have a value placed on assets which reflect a fair market value of the assets, rather than an artificial level which would arise from bookkeeping conventions and the operation of depreciation over a long period of time.

With respect to family-owned businesses, this is a particularly important amendment. As many Members will be aware, most family-owned businesses do not offer shares on the public stock market. Their books are likely to be calculated on the basis of historical costs and assets, and there is likely to be a depreciation charged against those historical costs in order to reach a nominal book value level. If we do not do something to ensure directly within the legislation that there is a definition of asset value which represents fair market value, then family businesses in particular will likely be taken over without the review process.

I would be particularly interested in hearing comments on this amendment from my Conservative colleagues who have experience in the accounting profession. I would like to make the point that this is an attempt to ensure that the stated purpose of the Bill, as brought forward by the Minister—that is to say, that companies with an asset value higher thant $5 million will be reviewed—will in practice be respected.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I was particularly impressed with the fact that the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), in his description of the types of companies which he would want to be scourged by the amendment, would name family businesses. He said it would be those family businesses which do not keep proper records that would have to be inspected and re-audited in order to have some indication of the current value of the assets. His attitude is that family businesses are the businesses which should be hounded by the amendment which he has proposed. Is that not typical of the New Democratic Party, to ensure that family businesses are the businesses which should have to go to some sort of re-evaluation and produce some sort of a new current eveluation system demanded in the statute with respect to determining whether their gross asset value is within in the purview of the statute?

The present contemplation of the Bill is that what is a gross asset will be defined in the regulations. That is the kind of thing which is normally left to regulations. I do not believe that any of us is really happy about regulations, but it is possible and easy to change regulations with respect to "gross assets", which is a technical term, and do that, if it does not work out, in a way which will be different as time and experience indicate.

He said that the legislation should state: "the latest completed fiscal period". What is the latest completed fiscal period? Presumably, it is the last year end of the company. So if the company is sold ten months after the year end, presumably we would have to go back to the latest fiscal period. The motion also states, "Current prices". When are the prices current? Are they current at the last fiscal period, or are they the current prices when the sale takes place? Is that not a wonderful thing for an accountant or a lawyer to interfere with or to understand? That is the very reason for which these things are done by regulations.

The amendment which was produced by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor is one which does not add much other than complications and problems to the Bill.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to indicate that we support the amendment which was brought forward by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). We believe it to be a very useful clarification of how to compute gross assets. Once again I will turn to the case which we have tried to make time and again in the House, that if the purpose of Investment Canada is to simplify and facilitate the process, that means the business community must have a higher level of certainty about what to expect. If the present Bill is left intact, as it was originally contrived, it could lead to all sorts of what might politely be called creative accounting principles in order that companies could get below the threshold levels. But by establishing clearly in the statute the formula by which those assets would be computed, that uncertainty would be eliminated. It would ensure that there would be no attempt to become manipulative or creative in determining what the assets would be.

I find it exceedingly strange that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who has been the great crusader against over-regulation in Government, is now defending it. What a difference several months makes in terms of one's principles. How quickly they change.

The fact of the matter is that it is not a useful idea always to put things in regulation. It is better, if possible, to put them in statutory requirements, which are passed by Parliament, to have them entrenched in the legislation. That is exactly what this amendment intends to do. It intends to clarify the matter.

We think that the amendment is proper and we will support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 38A. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved, seconded by Mr. Gauthier:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 9 to 13 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) it falls within a prescribed type of business that is related to Canada's cultural heritage or national identity including the publication, distribution or sale of books, magazines, periodicals or newspapers in print or machine-readable form; the production, distribution, sale or exhibition of film or video products; the production, distribution, sale or exhibition of audio or video music recordings; the publication, distribution or sale of music in print or machine-readable form; the production, distribution or sale of educational materials, or other such businesses to be further specified in regulations pursuant to this Act; and".

He said: Mr. Speaker, when debate was introduced in this House on second reading, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) extended an invitation to this House. He said, "We believe there should be full and active review in the area of cultural heritage and national identity". He said, "I want this House to help me find that concept. I want to ensure that those areas which are most vulnerable and sensitive to foreign takeovers would be adequately protected by Parliament".

During committee we spent a great deal of time looking at that concept. We had a number of very useful presentations put before us by book publishers and various different cultural organizations. They came forward with what we believe to be a very useful and important way in which Parliament itself could clearly put its statement on what it believes to be an adequate protection for national identity and cultural heritage. But once again, Mr. Speaker, the Government has changed its mind. Once again the Minister's words are not worth the paper they are written on. We might as well throw Hansard out, because when we come to introducing an amendment which would entrench in the statutes those areas of our cultural heritage and national identity which need protection, the Minister refuses it. He says he will leave it up to regulation, which can be rewritten at a moment's notice by Order in Council. It can be stuck away in the Gazette somewhere, and it means that all those organizations out there which were looking for some degree of guarantee and assurance will be denied that opportunity. That shows the total disdain this Minister has. We have seen it today. He has not been in the House during the report stage, the most important part of the debate on any Minister's Bill. Where is he, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: I withdraw the remark, Mr. Speaker. Let's just say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Without reflecting on the Hon. Member's presence in the House, I draw to his attention that it is not parliamentary to reflect upon the absence of other Hon. Members in the House. I would welcome it if the Hon. Member would return to the address which he was creating in the lobby.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be more than happy to continue even though there are certain critical and strategic individuals and personalities who should be here but who are not, but I would not think of naming them.

With respect to this amendment, Mr. Speaker, the point is that this seems to be a right of Parliament. The Minister gave us the invitation which he is now ignoring. He does not want to deal with it. I know the reason why. It is because the Government really has no intention of living up to the protection and guarantee of those crucial industries.

In the last six to seven months there have been a number of important cases dealing with book publishing before the Government, with which it could easily dispense, which would provide a very clear signal to foreign investors that in crucial strategic areas we do not want foreign purchases. Yet because of the lack of attention and decision by the Minister, we now have even further takeovers. A number of new takeovers were announced in April and May by other foreign investors in the book publishing industry. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister is really not vitally interested in having any kind of control or restriction of foreign investment in the cultural area.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House another important and crucial area. Sometimes we have to laugh at the pretensions of this Government. It says it is the Government of the new social order. It is going to be in the vanguard of change. We had a number of people before the committee who said, "Look. The world is changing and data processing is the one area which it is crucial to protect". It is the 1980s equivalent of book publishing. People now put all kinds of things on computers. There is all kinds of software. What the computer people are saying is that there is an enormous haemorrhage of computer data processing to the United States. Close to $2 billion or $3 billion is lost every year in that industry simply because at this point in time there is no protection. Therefore, we introduced that responsibility in the amendment. We are saying, "Let's incorporate that as part of our cultural heritage and make sure that it is protected by legislation". Is the pioneer of change, the Government which is in the vanguard of the new electronic age, prepared to recognize that? No, it does not even deal with the matter. It will not even consider it. It will not give Parliament the right to make its voice heard by ensuring that it is part of the legislation. What that really adds up to, Mr. Speaker, is a subterfuge, a camouflage. This Government has no intention of providing protection for the cultural industries. It has very little interest in national identity. It does not want to have Parliament speak with a voice which will allow for that protection.

In this last moment before we start the vote, it would seem to me that those Hon. Members who listen to their conscience and feel that it is important that Parliament retain its rightful role to speak for the Canadian people and to protect our Canadian cultural and national identity, would vote for this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, May 23, 1985, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the Bill now before the House.

[English]

The question is on Motion No. 41 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 50, 52 and 53 are to be grouped for debate but voted on separately and a vote on Motion No. 50 will dispose of Motion No. 52.

The question is on Motions Nos. 50 and 52 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and Motion No. 53 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 14 to 23 at page 11.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very sorry to interrupt and I do apologize. However, I was meeting with the other House Leaders and we did not realize that the point had been reached where we are required to deal with the outstanding legislation. I would like to ask a question before I make a proposal. I would like to ask whether you are, Mr. Speaker, in fact, at the point of dealing with the motions which have not yet been debated but which must inevitably be put to the House in order to accommodate the necessity for divisions?

I would like, therefore, to ask, with that in mind, if you would seek the unanimous consent of the House to have all the outstanding motions deemed to have been deferred pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 79(11) so that we can now get on with the calling in of Hon. Members and avoid the necessity of the Chair having to read each of the motions which have not yet been debated and the formalities being gone through.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: You have heard the motion of the House Leader for the New Democratic Party. Is there unanimous consent to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should get this clarified before we have the vote because I think there might be a disposition with respect to the votes, and I want to put the proposition forward on the basis of considerations of the opposition Parties, which I appreciate very much because there are a great number of votes. My understanding is that there may be a disposition that if the question on Motion No. 1 is put to the House, the vote on that motion will also be recorded as applying to Motions Nos. 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 25, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 38, 38A, 41, 50, 52, 53, 63, 67, 69, 70, 72, 74, 75, 76, 76A, 77, 77B, 77C, 78, 79, 80, 81 and 89.

• (1650)

The next question to be put to the House will be on Motion No. 27. The vote on this motion will be recorded as applying to Motions Nos. 68, 77A and 85.

The final question to be put to the House will be on the motion for concurrence in the Bill at report stage, and there will be a vote on this motion. I think there is agreement with respect to grouping the votes in this manner.

Mr. Speaker: Just to clarify, I understand that Motion No. 31 has been withdrawn.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are right.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my ability, using my capacity to remember to its absolute maximum, I think the numbers read out by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) are correct. I must confess that I had anticipated that this particular procedure would have occurred after the bells rang and after the first vote was taken. If you would allow the bells to ring now, I would have an opportunity to compare my list with the list read out. I think that what has been proposed is ideal and we would, no doubt, agree with it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly disposed to follow through on this particular pattern. I, for one, was quite prepared to stay up the whole evening voting because I do that anyway these days. However, for the sake of other Members of Parliament we would be very happy to follow this procedure. I think it is very important that we do provide for an examination to ensure that the list of motions read by the House Leader concur with our own set. I would advise you that I did withdraw Motion No. 31 during the course of debate today, so it is not included in that list.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that we will, therefore, technically deal with the question of groupings in a little while. The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada.

Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, you will recall the exchange that took place before the bells rang. It may be appropriate now that my distinguished colleagues in the Opposition have had an opportunity to look at the list for them to respond with respect to the groupings for the purpose of voting.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in the short interval we have had, we have confirmed the number of amendments which the Government House Leader put forward just prior to the ringing of the bells. It conforms with the agreement we have made. We want to say that each amendment is important in its own right but we feel that for the facility of this House we will be able to agree that the vote on Motion No. 1 will follow through the votes outlined. We will follow with Motion No. 27 for the second round of votes and we will vote accordingly.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the list put on the record by the Government House Leader prior to the ringing of the bells is accurate. I want to add that in all cases the votes should be recorded as if they had been taken.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the first question is on Motion No. 1. The vote on this motion will also be recorded as applying to the several motions as outlined in the agreement reached a few minutes ago earlier this day and each vote will be individually recorded.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 6 to 14 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Recognizing that increased capital investment and innovative technology would benefit Canada, the purpose of this Act is to provide for the notification and review of proposed investments in Canada by non-Canadians in order to ensure that they contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities, and to encourage beneficial investment in Canada by Canadians."

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on the motion for concurrence.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moves that the Bill be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PEST MANAGEMENT ADVISORY BOARD

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this brief intervention is on the desirability of establishing a pest management advisory board. In December, 1983, the Hon. Eugene Whelan, the great and former Minister of Agriculture, announced the assessment and registration of pesticides would become a public process. The Government at that time recognized the danger that indiscriminate use of pesticides poses to the public, the environment, and the economy.

There is a need for public scrutiny of new compounds being introduced to the market to ensure there has been satisfactory testing of these products with regard to human health, carcinogenic and mutogenic properties, and environmental persistence. Potential risks of a particular pesticide must be weighed carefully against the potential benefits derived from its application. It is only reasonable that the affected public be party to and have a say in the decision-making process.

The pest management advisory board was seen as a mechanism to provide appropriate public consultation. Mr. Whelan made a commitment to establish such a board, in May, 1984. The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) confirmed his commitment to the creation of a pest management advisory board in October, 1984. The Minister also assured the House on March 1 of this year that an announcement was coming very, very soon.

We are patiently awaiting an announcement on the formation of a pest management advisory board.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

COMBINES

MERGER OF UNITED PRESS WITH CANADIAN PRESS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to condemn the Government for its continuing failure to address the problems of competition in the news industry.

In January competition was substantially decreased with the merger of United Press Canada with Canadian Press. We are seeing the adverse effects of that merger in terms of coverage of Parliament today because of cut-backs in service by CP, something it would not have dared do if United Press were still functioning.

On Monday the Government went a giant step further by reversing the previous ban on newspaper publishers holding television licences. This was done without any consultation with the public. In effect, this confirmed the status of the entire Province of New Brunswick as a journalistic slum where the Irving family controls the major media, and a good chunk of the rest of the provincial economy. Other areas and cities, such as London, Ontario, have similar problems of one family or corporation controlling the means by which large numbers of people get their news.

Yet the Government saw fit to take this action well in advance of tabling its proposals for amending the Combines Act, and well in advance of the report of the committee which was appointed to conduct a review of our broadcasting system. This leaves me and my Party to conclude that, yes, Conservatives do believe in competition and market forces but only when they do not get in the way of their friends, friends who own the newspapers, and friends who hold the broadcasting licences and make hefty donations to the Conservative Party.

TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS' WORK

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, today is World Environment Day as identified by the United Nations, and symbolized by our white carnations. I am proud to bring to the attention of the House that this year's theme of Canada's Environment Week is "Environment: A Shared Responsibility".

Ceremonies today across Canada will highlight the participation by volunteers in the different environmental services from which we all benefit.

[Translation]

In fact, some 1,600 Canadians regularly provide the Atmospheric Environment Service with indispensable weather data. Forty inspectors spend a large part of their time monitoring and supporting the work of these volunteers.

[English]

There are 25 volunteer associations throughout Canada that assist in the utilization of our national parks, historical sites, and canals.

Parks Canada alone benefits from the work of over 2,000 volunteers who are involved either in conservation, reconstitution of historic events, or guided tours of historic sites for parks.

I would like to join my thanks with those of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) today as she issues certificates of merit to outstanding volunteers. We need their enthusiasm, and I am certain our Government's recognition of their tremendous contribution will provide further encouragement for them to increase their involvement in our environmental development.

DEVELOPMENT OF FIRST NATIONAL MARINE PARK

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to rise in the House on behalf of the people of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, the riding of Chicoutimi and especially the residents of the Lower Saguenay, to offer their thanks to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

It has taken our Government only eight months to reach a consensus with the Government of Quebec on federal participation in the Saguenay Park, only eight months, while our predecessors were still negotiating after fifteen years of discussion and useless confrontation.

In the Throne Speech our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to a new spirit of cooperation in this country, and I think this is an eloquent example.

Our Government is therefore proceeding with the development of Canada's first national marine park. Under the direction of Parks Canada, we shall be preparing a feasibility study with parameters for intervention to be applied in the years to come.

This study, to be conducted jointly with the Government of Quebec and wholly financed by Environment Canada, will make it possible to integrate the Saguenay Fjord in our national parks network, which will also stimulate the development of the tourism and recreation industry in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area.

Mr. Speaker, the future looks promising for the people in this area, who were fed up with empty promises and for fifteen years had been kept isolated from any positive impact that Canada's tourist industry might have.

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget has proposed that each senior citizen couple take a cut-back in the purchasing power of their old age pensions next year in the amount of $200. In the next five years this will amount to a cut-back of over $1,200 in the purchasing power of their pensions. This is wrong, wrong, wrong.

I appeal to the Government to listen to its backbenchers like the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), who are telling it that to cut back on old age pensions next year would be wrong.

The Budget will put 750,000 of our low-income families below the poverty line during the next several years.

The Budget has given the multinational oil companies $10.9 billion over the next five years in reduced taxes and increased oil revenues.

Last year the multinational oil companies had record profits: Imperial Oil, $533 million, up 83 per cent; Gulf Oil, $308 million, up 41 per cent; Texaco, $423 million, up 23 per cent; and Shell Oil, $123 million, up 20 per cent.

This action of asking the senior citizens to give up $200 a couple next year in order to lower taxes for the multinational oil companies which have already recorded maximum profits, is unfair, unjust, and totally obscene. The cut-backs in seniors' pensions must be restored immediately.

PROTESTS AGAINST INDEXATION CHANGES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), has just returned from Moose Jaw where he spoke to the annual convention of Saskatchewan senior citizens, a group called Action Now. They passed a resolution opposing the Government's very cruel plan to deindex the old age security pension. Their motion reads:

• (1410)

Be it resolved that the Mulroney Government immediately cancel the proposed deindexation of pensions.

They are not alone. Three courageous PC back-benchers, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell), appear to be opposed to deindexing as well. However, I want to help my friends in the PC Party get rid of this cruel and heartless proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I have here copies of a petition which we in the NDP caucus are distributing to people in our constituencies. I have had some 252 more copies run off this morning, so I can send a copy to each Member of the House. If I can have a page, I will send 211 over to the PC Whip—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nystrom: —which he can distribute to his caucus; and if I could have another page, I have another 40 here for the Liberal Whip, which he can distribute to his caucus as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the page please revert to his place?

GROWTH OF POLLUTION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, today being World Environment Day, it is important to emphasize the impact of environmental issues on each and every one of us.

The damaging storms and tornadoes which swept through Ontario and the United States have served as a grim reminder of the enormous devastation that can be wrought by nature. Yet, far more powerful is the ability of man to alter and destroy his environment. In my own riding of Parkdale-High Park the sewage ridden Humber River is the largest source of pollution of the western beaches of Lake Ontario. PCBs and chemical spills in the Junction Triangle are a continuous threat to the schoolchildren and residents of west Toronto.

Ontario's northern lakes have become polluted to the point where they are considered dead. Our wildlife is endangered by the upset ecological balance, and acid rain has become a fact of life in most industrialized countries.

The environment is a shared responsibility between all levels of government and all nations. We must act now to protect the environment and to reverse the cycle of destruction already begun. Initiatives have already been taken by the Government with the introduction of the new automobile emission standards, and $300 million has already been committed over the next decade to the war on acid rain. I urge the federal, provincial, and municipal Governments in Canada, and leaders of all nations, to continue these efforts and to expand their commitment to dealing with this most important issue.

PETRO-CANADA

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REDUCED GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, further to the concerns of consumers and our friends opposite, I would like to remind the House that on June 1, in accordance with the Western Oil Accord, we abolished the Canadian Ownership Special Charge. I therefore welcome this opportunity to inform the House that Petro-Canada was the first to announce a reduction in the price of gas of 0.7 cents per litre, thereby setting an example for the other companies who immediately announced they would follow suit by posting this cut in the retail price of gas.

It is high time Petro-Canada acted as a good corporate citizen, something Canadians have been waiting for for a long time, and this is the first time I have wanted to congratulate the Corporation on showing such excellent leadership.

TRADE

QUOTAS ON SHIRT IMPORTS FROM BANGLADESH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on page 5 of today's edition of The Globe and Mail there is an ad asking Canadians to contribute $1 million to help Bangladesh cyclone victims. The ad is sponsored by groups such as Oxfam, UNICEF, Save the Children Fund, and Canadian Hunger Foundation.

On page 8 of the same newspaper there is an article entitled: "Ottawa to Institute Quotas on Bangladesh Shirt Imports". This measure is to be imposed in spite of the fact that shirts are almost the only product Bangladesh sells to Canada and that they do not compete with shirts manufactured in Canada but rather with imports from South Korea, Hong Kong, and Taiwan. Bangladesh is also the largest single recipient of Canadian foreign aid, and much of that aid has been for training rural women in the textile industry.

I wish to protest in the strongest possible terms the imposition of quotas on shirts from Bangladesh. I remind the Government of the public response evoked by the song We Are the World, and its own commitments to make the domestic industry competitive. Imposing such quotas will demonstrate that the Government has no brighter day to offer Canadians and the world; just shop-worn, regressive, and defeatist policies which will encourage dependence in Canada and in Bangladesh.

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope some day to have the opportunity of putting a question to the Prime Minister on his Budget, but in his absence I wish to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday I met with a number of senior citizens in Cap-Pelé, Shediac, Moncton, and Fredericton, New Brunswick. Aside from the fact that the Budget has ravaged Atlantic Canada, senior citizens in these communities wanted me to put a question to the Prime Minister, and to the Minister of Finance, with respect to living up to the promise they made to senior citizens across the country with respect to fully indexed pensions. Will the Deputy Prime Minister consult with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, and prevail upon them to live up to the undertakings which they gave to the senior citizens of the country to index old age pensions fully?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope the right hon. gentleman, whom I know to be an honourable man, also told these senior citizens that in looking at the Budget and at the finances of Canada the projections are made in terms of what the cost of the national debt is to Canadians, inclusive of senior citizens' programs, and others to be instituted in the future. I hope he pointed this out when he was speaking to the senior citizens.

I refer the Leader of the Opposition to page 13 of the Budget. When he spoke to the senior citizens, did he tell them that the matter would be monitored as of January 1, 1986?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the senior citizens of this country—

Mr. Chrétien: Giving money to the oil industry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The senior citizens of this country remember an unconditional promise given by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary. The Minister knows perfectly well that by 1990, an additional three-quarters of a million Canadians will be living below the poverty line as a result of the de-indexation of social programs. Even Members of his own party are showing their discontent, and across the country, those responsible for agencies representing senior citizens are furious.

Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is as follows: Is he going to listen to the comments of his Conservative colleagues? Will he acknowledge the incredible injustice and harm being done by the Budget of his colleague, the Minister of Finance? Will he recommend that the Minister of Finance restore full indexation of old age security pensions in order to meet the commitments made by his colleagues during the election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that I am always conscious of the reasonable positions put forward by my colleagues. I will also be receptive to reasonable positions put forward by members of the Opposition.

I say to the right hon. gentleman, as fairly as I can, that in looking at the projections with respect to the cost of the deficit up to the end of the 1980s and into the early 1990s, that Lalonde Budget of February, 1984, projected that the deficit would go down. When we took office, it was $5 billion more than Mr. Lalonde had said it would be, and the projections were going up. If the Right Hon. Member wants to talk to me about reality, he should go back to the February, 1984, Budget in which Lalonde said one thing and put into effect quite another thing, when he got into office. That is where he should start.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister who has a portfolio which gives him responsibility for those who are retired does not want to curtail or control the deficit on the backs of the weaker elements of society, the senior citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I said on budget night that this was a sneaky Budget because it contained a hidden tax on senior citizens. I would say to the Minister again today that we will fight this deindexation right to the end. I will give him one more opportunity to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister said that he was willing to listen to reason. I know that he does not want to cut old age pensions in order to provide money for wealthy speculators to speculate in European art, through the capital gains tax relief. Will the Minister meet privately with his colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, to tell them that the rest of his colleagues do not like this measure, that senior citizens' organizations across the country are outraged, and that his credibility as a Minister is being jeopardized?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in regard to social policy I would quote the words of a speech that was made on November 18, 1984, when the six and five discussion was taking place. At that time it was said:

> However, beyond a certain point, the interests payable on the deficit become intolerable because, from the point of view of a minister of social affairs, it is a waste of money. We must be realistic and avoid seemingly easy answers which would only prolong the economic crisis and exert even more pressure on all future social budgets.

That was a speech made by the Hon. Monique Bégin.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Right Hon. Member might disagree with her perspective as well. I am saying to the Right Hon. Member that we do want to maintain those programs, but we cannot sustain them when more money is being paid to the bankers for servicing the debt—

Ms. Copps: To the oil companies.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —than we are paying for old age pensions, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and the federal share of health care costs. The Right Hon. Member's proposals actually support the bankers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR CHANGE TO BUDGET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems rather obdurate. Fortunately his colleague, the Minister of Finance, is beginning to show some flexibility. Yesterday in Toronto, according to reports, the Minister of Finance said that Old Age Security would indeed be increased if hardship emerges. The Minister knows that when purchasing power is stripped from people who are already living below the poverty line and already in hardship, a hardship is created. Therefore, that change must be made. Why will the Minister not do the correct, honourable, and just thing by insisting on that change being made before Parliament rises in June?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can read to the hon. gentleman some words that he said on June 30, 1982. At that time the Hon. Member said the following:

> Our society is in a time of crisis. That is what the Budget is doing. The deficit issue is clearly a real one and it is obviously something that cannot be wished away.

That is what the Hon. Member said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The deficit in—

Ms. Copps: You may be laughing, but senior citizens are not laughing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that the questioner and the Minister would both like to be heard.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The deficit in 1982, when the Hon. Member spoke, had been projected at something like $12 billion for that year. It came in at around $19.6 billion. The deficit has doubled that on an annual basis. I think the Hon. Member understands economics. What answer would he give to Canadians? Would he tell them that he is willing to continue on the road on which they embarked, which has put the largest single amount of spending on the accounts of Canada today with respect to debt payment? How would he justify that to senior citizens?

NECESSITY FOR ACTION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I must respect the policies of the present Government.

However, I have a supplementary. The Minister realizes and knows perfectly well that pensioners are now suffering from anxiety as a result of that policy. This anxiety cannot be allowed to continue, and these pensioners need our help and your help. We must eliminate that anxiety immediately.

The Hon. Member for Victoria has said so. There have been other Members, in fact many Members among the Conservatives who agree with us. That being the case, would the Minister not agree that immediate action must be taken?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member of the position which he took on six and five. I would say to him, as it is clearly spelled out in the Budget, that we will monitor the situation when the matter comes into effect, as projected, on January 1, 1986. I would also hope, when he is trying to be fair—and when they said that there was no minimum tax—that he would take a look at the date on which the matter is to take effect. If he did that he would realize that it is also the same time when the minimum tax will come into effect, which the Minister of Finance said. That is what he said.

An Hon. Member: Maybe.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I always thought that the rule in the House was that a Member's word was to be understood and believed. So, I am saying to him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They obviously do not want an answer, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday the Minister of Finance indicated that if hardship were proven the Government would be willing to take another look at the deindexation of pensions.

Day by day numerous organizations, such as the United Senior Citizens of Ontario, The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, the National Advisory Council on Aging and others have made the argument that there will indeed be hardship to seniors as a result of the proposal. I would ask the Minister, if the Minister of Finance is out looking after the interests of Bay Street and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is out looking after the interests of the oil industry, when can we expect the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for the welfare of seniors, to stand up and fight on behalf of seniors?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I am doing, and if the Member looked at—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is exactly what I am doing. If he is suggesting that senior citizens are best protected by having more and more of our tax dollars going for the payment of debt rather than going toward making more money available for social programs, then I do not understand how that protects senior citizens. I suggest that he should take a look at that position. What he is asking is to have more go to the banks and to have less flexibility for the social programs which he and I want to support.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity today to watch the Minister on CBC television at noon, when he appeared with Mr. Hanmer from the United Senior Citizens of Ontario, and Mr. Hanmer gave exactly the same message as other organizations, and the same message that senior citizens gave me when I was in Saskatchewan yesterday. I simply want to ask the Minister again is he going to wait until these hardship cases which are projected appear on the critical list, before he will fight for seniors within Cabinet and in the country?

• (1430)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member that that is exactly what is happening. The proposals are going forward. I keep on saying to the Hon. Member that there is no greater crushing blow on seniors, or any other Canadian, than a debt which cannot be controlled. That is the first point I make.

Second, as I have said to the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members in the House, the question of monitoring the situation which the Hon. Member puts forward was in the Budget. But I am sure that he did not say to one senior citizen—and if I am wrong, I am willing to listen to him say otherwise—that the Government has also committed itself in the Budget to take a look at the impact. I am sure that the Hon. Member did not say that to one senior citizen in the proposal he made.

Mr. Deans: What difference does that make?

Mr. Young: It was the same Minister who made the same promises during the election campaign, and every one of them was broken, Mr. Speaker. Why should they believe the Government now?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Government and the Minister have been saying that seniors' organizations do not represent seniors. I want to say to him that they do, and the seniors have spoken up through petitions to us and everyone else. I intend to be in Toronto tomorrow to meet with seniors, and every day next week. I want to invite the Minister to come with me, to listen to the concerns of individual senior citizens so that he can start fighting on their behalf. Would he come with me? I'm not scared of them; are you?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, I am not. In fact I am meeting with them, and I will continue to meet with them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And I am willing—

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just a minute—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I don't know if they want an answer or not, Mr. Speaker, or do they just want to barrack.

I say to the Hon. Member, if he is talking to seniors, to put the whole proposal forward and I will put the whole proposal forward, but don't be selective and don't use fear tactics with selected details which you want to use for your own political purposes.

THE ADMINISTRATION

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, with the absences in the front-bench, I would like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. In fact I may have a cooler answer from him to clear up the confusion created by the Minister yesterday. Would the Parliamentary Secretary confirm this simple fact, that the Minister of Justice is responsible for putting the names of the two law firms in Newfoundland which employ his sons on the law agency list in the Province of Newfoundland for getting federal government legal work?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we had several questions yesterday which generated a full exchange between Hon. Members of the Opposition and the Minister of Justice on this subject. The hon. gentleman is fully familiar with the procedures which are followed within the Department for the appointment of agents. He might have the courtesy, as a parliamentarian, to put that very personal question to the Minister when he returns to the House, if that kind of detail is required.

Mr. Kaplan: It is a very important detail, and the Minister of Justice gave some confused answers on that subject yesterday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You were afraid to ask him questions directly yesterday.

REQUEST THAT CORRESPONDENCE BE TABLED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): This question is more simple, and I would like to direct it to the Parliamentary Secretary as well. Will he table today, on behalf of the Government, some very important documents; the two letters which were sent by the Minister of Justice, or on his behalf, to the two law firms in Newfoundland informing them that they were on the legal agency list, so we can look at those two letters? Will he also table today the two statements of account which have been sent by those law firms for legal services provided to the Government so that we can see who signed those two statements of account?

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have given particulars with respect to the quantum. Those are also available in Public Accounts. I can say to the Hon. Member that, with respect to the dates and approval of the accounts, those will be forthcoming. Whether or not the actual body of the account involving income tax matters and dealing with specific persons would be able to be put before the House, is a matter on which I would like to consult with senior law officers of the Crown. I will take the Hon. Member's question as a representation, and the Minister of Justice will be back to him.

PENSIONS

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the Canadian Federation of Students which represents a half million students and young people who reject the notion that their future should be assured at the expense of the senior citizens of the country. Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare listen to the voices of the elderly, the poor, the youth, and Hon. Members of his own Party—

Mr. Dick: Louder.

Mr. McCurdy: —and put a stop to putting the boots to the elderly in this country by his Government?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the latter part of the question, I do not accept that premise, as I have already explained to his colleagues and other Hon. Members. With respect to the first part of his question, the answer is, yes.

MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Are we to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister is in fact going to respond to the voices all across this country and put a boot to the Minister who is putting the boots to the elderly?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all Hon. Members would recognize that that was the same question, and the same answer applies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

QUESTION PERIOD—ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. During the last two days my colleagues and I have tried to put questions to the Prime Minister regarding the Government's policy on patronage and on its conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers, but the Prime Minister has not been here.

An Hon. Member: He's hiding.

Mr. Allmand: It appears, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has been in Ottawa but has arranged his schedule to be away during Question Period. These issues, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Allmand: —these violations of the guidelines by Ministers, and his campaign promises on patronage, can only be answered by the Prime Minister.

Has the Government adopted a new policy for the attendance of the Prime Minister at Question Period whereby he systematically misses a Question Period—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Allmand: —two or three days a week? Is that the new policy of the Government with respect to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow the one question, but I have to remind Hon. Members that any comment on the presence or absence of an Hon. Member is entirely against the Orders. I will allow the question, but I must advise the Hon. Member that he is getting very close on that question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is going to resign soon, anyway, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Who, the Prime Minister? The PM is never here, anyway.

Mr. Nystrom: So Crosbie is resigning, is he?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there have been several references today by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and other Hon. Members, as well as the Hon. Member who has just now put the question with respect to the policy of the attendance of the Prime Minister in Question Period. Naturally, he intends to make himself available to the House at every opportunity. Today he is in the City of Montreal addressing a very important—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At seven o'clock tonight.

Mr. Nielsen: He is addressing a very important meeting with Jewish organizations and he is engaging in other activities.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At seven o'clock tonight.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition intervening, but the fact of the matter is, Sir, that the Prime Minister has been in Question Period— and that is his policy—answering questions during the whole of this session thus far—

Mr. Gauthier: The Budget was the last time he was here.

Mr. Nielsen: —much more frequently than the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ATTEND

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I would like to remind the House that a few years ago, when the Government of the day tried to introduce a roster system regarding the presence of the Prime Minister and his Ministers, it was the subject of questions in the House because it was a question of policy. There is no comparison between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. It must be Wednesday.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that government Members recognize that the Prime Minister has a responsibility to be in this House and answer questions on behalf of the people of Canada. They should follow through on those cheers and make sure that the Prime Minister is here to answer questions.

Some Hon. Members: Speech.

Mr. Allmand: It is completely unacceptable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the Hon. Member to come to his supplementary, but I also invite Hon. Members to allow me to know whether he has come to a supplementary, by keeping quiet.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, these are questions of policy about which only the Prime Minister can give answers, policies relating to patronage—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the Member to come immediately to a supplementary.

Mr. Allmand: Will the Acting Prime Minister assure this House that the Prime Minister will be here tomorrow and Friday to answer these important questions?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Sir, it is the responsibility of every Cabinet Minister to answer questions of policy put by any Member of this House. It is my responsibility today, as well as that of other Ministers, on behalf of the Government, to answer questions of policy, as has been done by the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the best part of this Question Period. But neither in his first question nor in his supplementary did the Hon. Member address a question of policy to me so that I could answer on behalf of the Government, which I would be delighted to do in keeping with my parliamentary responsibility.

PENSIONS

BUDGET'S EFFECT ON INDEXATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has been made clear, and he has heard from a number of his own caucus members, such as Don Valley East, York East, and Victoria, that he is being asked to reconsider the deindexing of seniors' pensions. Yesterday he heard from a number of national groups representing seniors across the country indicating that what he has done has been essentially a betrayal of those he set out to assist. We are aware of the multitude of groups which have met and communicated with the Minister about their concern and displeasure. He has talked about all the groups he has met who support these measures. Can he tell us what groups of senior citizens he has met who say what he is doing is the right and honourable thing to do?

Mr. Nystrom: George Hees.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Member was right when he said I am meeting with groups.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The Forest Hill Seniors League.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just yesterday I met with the social policy reform group prior to their press conference—

Mr. Orlikow: What did they tell you?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He asked me who I met with, and I give that as an example of people I met with yesterday.

SUPPORT INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I put the question poorly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: All of these groups who have met or communicated with the Minister have also been in touch with the NDP caucus, telling us that they have indicated their displeasure, and that they consider his action to be a betrayal. I am asking if he has met with a single group who support the Government program of deindexation, a single group, or any seniors, and who are these groups who support his action?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If the Hon. Member is asking do all these groups—

Mr. Deans: Give us one seniors' group who supports this.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Come on.

Mr. McKnight: They cannot make up their minds who should ask the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Is he asking do all groups that I meet support—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Deans: Name one.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Will you give me some time?

Some Hon. Members: Name one.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, they obviously don't want an answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East.

Some Hon. Members: One!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

CANADA SUMMER GAMES—SELECTION OF SASKATOON AS 1989 VENUE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Last week he announced the selection of Saskatoon as the site of the 1989 Canada Summer Games. These games will leave Saskatoon with new and upgraded facilities which will be used by thousands of athletes for national and international events, as well as Saskatoonians for generations to come. As part of the bid for the Games, it is my understanding that a new approach to financing the Games was undertaken. Could the Minister explain to this House the unique agreement reached between the City and the federal Government, and its potential implications for such funding in the future?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, first of all allow me to tell the Hon. Member that the choice was a most difficult one in that the bids by Regina and Saskatoon were the best bids in the history of the Canada Games.

To answer the specific question, there is indeed a new era of fiscal responsibility launched by this Government, the City of Saskatoon, and other communities, in that we are attempting to work together to raise funds from the private sector, and we are succeeding. We will be splitting any excess, which we believe there will be, on a 50/50 basis. It is these types of positive agreements which will do more for amateur sports and amateur sport facilities with less tax dollars.

FINANCE

INVESTMENT OF PENSION FUNDS—BUDGET PROPOSAL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance and concerns the Budget proposal which would allow pension funds to invest up to 31 per cent of their assets outside Canada. Will the Minister tell the House what consultations were carried out to ascertain if Canadians are willing to see one-third of their retirement savings invested outside the Canadian economy?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to answer this question because there have been some very important changes on behalf of Canadian pensioners through the pension system, in the Budget. What the Budget says is that for every dollar pension funds invest in Canadian small business, they can invest an additional $3 outside the country. The pension funds have been asking for this change for some time because it is in the interests of pensioners that their pension funds earn the best possible rate of return.

Ms. Copps: Outside Canada? Sellout. That shows your mentality.

Some Hon. Members: Quiet!

Ms. Copps: That's right; buy American.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, if the Government's three to one offer is taken up, the amount leaving Canada could be as high as $28 billion. A capital outflow of this order would surely increase inflation, put pressure on the dollar, and could cause the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. Will the Minister not admit that this measure was ill considered and needs to go back to the drawing board?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Hon. Member is suggesting that $10 billion invested in Canadian small business is a bad thing.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of policy for the Acting Prime Minister, and it concerns the appointment of standing agents by the Minister of Justice. I learned yesterday that the Minister personally appointed the firms employing his two sons. On Monday the Deputy Prime Minister said that these appointments were made on the basis of merit alone. Yesterday, his colleague, the Minister of Justice, said that they were made on the basis of merit as well as on whether, in a political sense, the appointees are known to the Government and can be trusted.

● (1450)

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with his colleague, the Minister of Justice, that appointments of standing agents should be made not just on the basis of merit but also on whether they can be politically trusted by the Government of the day?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, one thing I can say is that one cannot trust that kind of preamble. To say that the Minister of Justice personally appointed his sons as standing agents is false—

Mr. Deans: He didn't say that.

Mr. Nielsen: —and not in keeping with what the Minister of Justice explained to the House, in the House yesterday and in the public media accounts which I observed.

To say that I said in the House that the only criteria upon which—

Mr. Robinson: That is what you said.

Mr. Nielsen: —these appointments were based—the Hon. Member says to me: "That is what you said". That is not what I said. I did not place any words of limitation when I referred to the criterion of merit in my response. But that is the implication that the Hon. Member very untruthfully wishes to leave in the House. It does not behoove him, either as a Member or a professional lawyer, to attempt to leave that kind of impression upon the House of Commons.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister said on Monday that these appointments were made on the basis of merit, and merit alone. The Minister of Justice's own executive assistant confirmed to me that the Minister personally appointed the firms containing his two sons as standing agents.

Who is responsible for the enforcement of the conflict of interest guidelines which have clearly been breached in these circumstances? Is it the Deputy Prime Minister? Is it the Prime Minister? Whoever it is, when will he start enforcing these guidelines, or are they not worth the paper they are written on?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, having been on shaky and false ground with respect to two of the statements in his original question, now makes, what I can only assume in the kindest interpretation, an unintentional effort to compound further the falsity of the preamble by deviating from his allegation that the Minister of Justice made appointments personally, to a position where he says an officer on the staff of the Minister appointed the firms personally. That is what he just said.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: It is totally not in keeping with his role as a Member of Parliament to attempt that kind of intentional confusion.

As far as the policy is concerned, the guidelines which existed at the time of assuming office are still in place, and the Ministers of the Crown are expected to abide by those guidelines.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Could the Minister inform the House why the Government has not restructured the Scientific Research Tax Credit Program instead of replacing it with a new program? I think basic research is important, and some industries in my riding are concerned about the termination of this program.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert for giving me this opportunity to point out to the House that the Minister of Finance has taken steps to stimulate research and development.

[English]

Obviously, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: How can you read the answer to the question?

Mr. Axworthy: What a phoney.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Author.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Siddon: Obviously Members opposite are not interested in listening to answers to questions in the House.

Mr. Nystrom: En français.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the Government has chosen to replace the scientific research tax credit with a much superior form of investment tax incentive known as a refundable research and tax credit. It will provide a much higher quality of investment on the part of government revenues to ensure that first class research projects are funded and are of particular benefit to the small and medium-sized business sector. These benefits will be of tremendous importance to the Hon. Member and her constituents.

PATENTS

PATENT EXAMINATIONS—COMPOSITION OF STUDY TEAM

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns ending patent examinations in Canada.

In the introduction to the report of the Nielsen Task Force it is stated on page 1 that the Private Sector Advisory Committee was established "to ensure objectivity, to make consultation an integral part of the process". Yet the President of the Patent Institute of Canada has said: "They never sought our views or those of anybody else we know of involved in patents". Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why his consultation was a sham, and why all of the industry representatives on the study team, apart from representatives of a bank and an accounting firm, have come from subsidiaries of foreign multinationals?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the assertions of so-called fact that are imbedded in that question. Quite frankly, I think that it does the Hon. Member no service to be critical of private sector participation in a very unique—

Ms. Copps: By America.

Mr. Nielsen: No, not by America, they are all Canadians. It does him no service to be critical of that participation in a unique exercise in public administration in this country where, for the first time, the private sector has been engaged in a government-wide review of over a thousand programs.

I might say that they have been doing that without any remuneration. For the Hon. Member to ridicule their efforts, and their consultative efforts, is rather disgraceful, if I may say so.

Mr. Berger: I do not think the Deputy Prime Minister knows what he is talking about.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about here is being the only industrialized country in the world to grant patents without domestic examination. How could the Deputy Prime Minister recommend abdicating Canada's technological and industrial sovereignty? How could he recommend putting over 1,000 persons in the private sector out of work, people who earn over $35 million in foreign exchange for this country? How can he recommend closing an office which earns the Government some $13 million in the 1985-86 Budget? What possessed him to make such a recommendation?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the charges which the Hon. Member makes are totally false.

Ms. Copps: Totally true.

Mr. Nielsen: The objective—

Mr. Berger: It comes from a Tory.

Mr. Nielsen: I sat silently while the Hon. Member put his question. I see no reason why he should not listen in the same kind of silence and courtesy. The objective of the task force is to review all government programs with a view to streamlining, eliminating duplication and overlap, and to deliver in a more efficient and cost effective way to the Canadian public the services to which they are entitled. That is the central objective of the task force. It is not a cost cutting exercise. It is a managerial exercise which is long overdue.

PENSIONS

CONTENT OF ONTARIO SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In yesterday's Speech fromt the Throne the Conservative Government in Ontario stated:

—we will make strong recommendations urging the Government of Canada to compensate fully for inflation those pensioners receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

If you will not listen to senior citizens, will you listen to Frank Miller, do your job, and get the Government to abandon this measure which taxes poor pensioners in order to pay for a Budget for the rich?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is not a Budget for the rich, it is a Budget for people in his own riding who have small businesses, it is for people who need jobs, and it is for people across the economic spectrum.

When the Hon. Member asks those questions he should keep in mind what is in the Budget. The matter will be monitored as of the date it becomes effective.

ENDORSATION INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): If you have failed even to convince the Conservatives in Ontario and Frank Miller, the Premier, can you name one group representing senior citizens, in the 4,000 miles from coast to coast in this country, which in fact has endorsed the proposal to deindex Old Age Security?

● (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can give him more than one on this basis.

An Hon. Member: How many brothers have you got?

Mr. Rossi: Tell me a brother over 65 who approves.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): If I have a brother? I do not think that the Hon. Member has to hurl that across the floor. I suggest to the Hon. Member that he at least use some sense of decorum in this place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): When I speak to senior citizens and I sit down with them to discuss the issues, as I said to the House yesterday, while senior citizens want protection against inflation and that is also what we would like to do, they do understand—

Mr. Deans: Give us one group.

Mr. Nunziata: You broke your promise.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —that one cannot continue spending the amount of money on debt, that leaves the country—

Mr. Deans: One group, please.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member can put up one finger, two fingers, and if he has more he can put those up too.

Mr. Deans: Name one group.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I say to the Hon. Member, surely when I speak to senior citizens and put the proposal forward, do not think that they also do not have an understanding of Canada's reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: One group.

PRIVILEGE

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENTS MADE ON RADIO PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a number of questions of privilege. I propose to deal with them in the order in which they were received.

I have been advised that two Members who had earlier indicated an interest have withdrawn their questions of privilege.

Therefore, the first question of privilege of which I have received notice comes from the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday during a wide-ranging interview with News Radio I made certain comments about the Speaker which the long-standing traditions of the House would prohibit me from making.

Those comments were reported in certain newspapers on Monday. Out of respect for the House and the Chair, I withdraw those specific comments completely and unequivocally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member would allow me to say that I appreciate deeply what he has done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT MADE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 3, during Question Period I said that Robert Pittman, a Newfoundland lawyer, had been the campaign manager for the Minister of Justice. Yesterday the Minister of Justice said that I was wrong and that Mr. Pittman never worked in his campaign.

I have checked with sources in Newfoundland and I am told that Mr. Pittman was not the campaign manager for the Minister. On the other hand, a Mr. Finton Aylward, senior partner in the same firm as Mr. Pittman—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Allmand: —was a senior campaign manager in the Minister's leadership campaign, and the firm Aylward, Morris, and Pittman was awarded legal business by the Minister.

I apologize to the House for the error I made, but the principle in my question on Monday remains the same.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Don Valley East is rising on a question of privilege?

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENTS MADE BY MR. NYSTROM AND MR. RIIS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, two Hon. Members, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), incorrectly used the name of my riding, Don Valley East, implying that I have a position that differs from that of my Party and my Government about the change in senior citizens' pensions included in the Budget.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has explained our Party's position in a clear and sensitive way today and several times in the House this week. I agree with his position. I also wish to make it crystal clear that I stand totally behind all the provisions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the President of the Privy Council rising on the business question, or is the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on the same point of order. I am sorry, but I thought the Hon. Member was a man of conscience and would defend the seniors in his riding.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Show respect.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order raised.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize. I take it the Hon. Member is rising on a point of order and I will hear him when we get through routine proceedings. Is it a point of order or a question of privilege arising out of Question Period?

Mr. Attewell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the President of the Privy Council would be delighted to be given the opportunity to have a question asked about the business of the House and get the attention of the public away from the mess that his Government has got itself into over the Budget.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have such great respect for the House Leader of the Official Opposition that I will not tell him we took a laughter gauge on that comment and it received one out of 10.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would recommend that maybe he could grow the mustache which the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) shaved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The business for tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, will be as requested by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It will be third reading stage of Bill C-15. We hope to finish that off, and, if necessary, have a vote tomorrow. I will be consulting to see if we can just have a voice vote.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, at the risk of pushing things too far, is there any way that we might find out, maybe, what we might do perhaps on Friday?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, would it then be appropriate to ask what method we might use to find out?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Carrier pigeon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The method would be to ask the business question on Thursday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, now that we have got to the point, are we going to operate on a day-to-day basis? Or would it be possible for the Government perhaps to provide us with more than one day at a time?

Mr. Stevens: Stick around, Ian.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we have been in the process of consultation. I believe it was either the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) or a very good look-alike who sat in my office for two hours a day over the course of the last few days discussing the business of the House. He will fully understand the fact that, once we have a chance to carry on these discussions in the full spirit of co-operation for which we are all so famous, I will try to give him, at the earliest possible date, an indication of business, not only for Friday but into next week. All I can say to the Hon. Member is that I am consulting with my colleagues, and we are looking at the list of legislation. I hope to discuss the business for the next week in answer to the Business of the House question tomorrow.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We will not sleep until we find out.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from three places in Saskatchewan, North Battleford, Saskatoon East, and Moose Jaw in which the people from those ridings indicate they would like the PC Government to index the old age pensions to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis as promised in the 1984 election campaign.

● (1510)

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a series of people in various Saskatchewan ridings, most of which are PC ridings.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How would you know; you have never been to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Nystrom: Quoting people from the City of Saskatoon, the riding of the Government House Leader, these people are calling upon the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to drop this crazy and cold-hearted idea of deindexing the Old Age Security pension. They want their pensions to remain indexed. I am very pleased to present a petition on their behalf.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 80 senior citizen residents in my riding of Ottawa Centre who protest the Government's decision to deindex after it made a promise not to interfere with Old Age Security. They petition the Government of Canada to reinstate the full indexation. In view of the concern about this issue, my telephone number is: 995-9511—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows better.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this is the third day in a row that we in the New Democratic Party have been presenting petitions from residents of our own constituencies and indeed from constituencies all across Canada. I have another dozen today from constituents of mine, and indeed from all parts of British Columbia, protesting the cut-back in the Old Age Security caused by partial deindexation and asking for full indexation of the Old Age Security benefits.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 335.

[Text]

IMPORTING OF UNLICENSED WHEAT

Question No. 335—Mr. Althouse:

1. Are penalties imposed at the border to those persons who attempt to import unlicensed wheat illegally into Canada and, if so, what are they?

2. How many such charges have been made by border officials in the past four years and what is a list of such charges?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The imposition of penalties for attempted importations of unlicensed wheat into Canada is determined by the circumstances involved. Where there is a clear attempt to smuggle, misdescribe or undervalue, the goods are subject to seizure and forfeiture under the Customs Act, as well as the imposition of monetary penalties. Where there is merely an attempt to import wheat without the benefit of an import licence, the goods are subject to the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act and regulations and the imposition of any penalties for infractions thereof comes under the purview of the Canadian Wheat Board. In these circumstances, customs detains the goods under Section 22(2) of the Customs Act and refers the matter to the Canadian Wheat Board. Section 22(2) of the Customs Act provides the authority for customs to detain goods of which the export or import is prohibited, controlled or regulated by or under any Act of Parliament and further stipulates that the goods will be dealt with as provided for by the controlling legislation. Generally, the goods are refused entry and subsequently re-exported from Canada or destroyed.

2. The Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise has no record of any seizure actions being effected for attempts to smuggle, misdescribe or undervalue importations of wheat. While, on a daily basis, customs detains controlled goods on behalf of numerous other government departments and agencies, it does not maintain statistics in this regard.

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—CHANGES IN THE OLD AGE SECURITY PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just sent out for the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), in whose name the motion stands. He will be here momentarily. He is discussing matters that were raised during Question Period just outside the door and is finding some difficulty getting through a rather large crowd. I know, however, that he is making his way in and will be in his seat almost immediately, if he is not already there.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain was rising on a point of order about the need to check the microphones in this place, since clearly some Hon. Members in the House believe that they are not working. That explains the volume at which they make presentations, occasionally.

Supply

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for failing to keep the following promise made by the now Prime Minister in July, 1984:

"A Progressive Conservative Government intends to re-establish the full indexing of old age pensions to the cost of living beginning January 1, 1985."

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to indicate that I take absolutely no pleasure in talking about the Budget, particularly the aspect of the Budget which the motion specifically addresses.

It is all a matter of fairness. The Conservative Budget of May 23 is not fair to our families, children and, most of all, our parents. Nothing epitomizes the unfairness of this Budget more than the deindexation of the Old Age Security program. Every senior citizen in Canada will have $100 taken out of his or her pocket in 1986 because of the Budget. In 1991, that will have risen to $680 per year, for a massive five-year cumulative total of $6.6 billion slashed from the Old Age Security Program. Hardest hit will be elderly women, the most vulnerable group in our society, 60 per cent of whom are single elderly women now living below the poverty line.

Further, deindexation of the Old Age Security pension is a direct attack on Canadian women—our mothers and our grandmothers. Deindexation will entrench inequality for Canadian women in the most regressive manner by condemning the poorest elderly to ever greater depths of poverty. There are 800,000 Canadian women over the age of 65 who are so poor that they receive either the full or partial income supplement. Over 60 per cent of single elderly women live below the poverty line. By 1991, the Government will have taken a cumulative total of $4.2 billion out of the handbags of our mothers and grandmothers.

The Government is refusing to listen to the women of Canada; to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, which represents over 360 women's groups; to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women; and to other organizations which have condemned this attack on elderly women. The Government should heed their message.

As I said earlier, it is a question of fairness. The Budget can only worsen because of deindexation a soft word that couches harsh reality. It is a word which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) never mentioned to Canadians during the election campaign of last summer. In fact, during that campaign the Prime Minister made a solemn pledge that "a PC Government would once more index the old age pension to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis". That promise has been broken. As a result of the Government's self-described tough but fair Budget, Old Age Security payments will be deindexed so that they are no longer fully inflation proof. Payments will not be adjusted to reflect the effects of the first 3 per cent of inflation. That is certainly tough, but it is definitely not fair. Pensioners have every right to sue the Conservatives for breach of promise.

In the weeks leading up to the Budget, the Conservative Government went out of its way to talk about a Budget which would be tough but fair. What we have seen is the Minister of unfairness, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), use the word "fairness" over 20 times in his budget speech. In the days since the Budget was introduced, the Prime Minister, his Cabinet and Conservative back-benchers, are travelling the country hoping that if they say the words "tough but fair" time and time again, Canadians will believe them. I say to the Prime Minister that no public relations campaign, no matter how slick, can disguise the fundamental unfairness of the Budget. Nothing can disguise the fact that this is a rich person's Budget.

No aspect of government affects the lives of all Canadians in such a massive way as does a Budget. Nothing better illustrates a Government's sense of fairness than a Budget and the distribution of wealth in our society. A Budget demonstrates fundamentally the type of society a Government wants to see for its citizens, what kinds of programs it wants and who pays the taxes. A Budget also reveals the soul of a Government. This Budget reveals that the Conservatives have no soul. This Budget is unfair and it is tough, but only on ordinary Canadians.

When it comes to ordinary Canadians, there is only one hand that takes. However, when it comes to big business, one hand takes a little but the other one gives back more. By 1990-91, the Government will have collected $4.1 billion more in personal income taxes and $2.6 billion more in consumer taxes, but corporate taxes will be reduced by $2.2 billion—tough measures for ordinary Canadians but more tax giveaways to the corporate few. The terrible truth is that the Budget hurts the most vulnerable people in Canadian society. I am speaking of the unemployed, families, the poor, native people, women, the young, seniors and the farming community. Yet the most privileged Canadians—the wealthy and large corporations—will actually receive more than what they already have. This is the Conservative Party's concept of fairness—less for those who need it most and more for those who need it least.

What hope does the Conservative Budget give to the 1.4 million jobless Canadians? The unemployed, particularly Canada's youth, many of whom are still waiting for their first job, are not given any reason for optimism. Indeed, their hopes of finding a job are diminished. Every economist knows that when you combine the tax increases and the spending cuts which are contained in this Budget, we stand to lose close to 50,000 jobs this year and 100,000 jobs next year.

The Minister of Finance attempts to argue that his Budget will be a boon to small business, that that sector will be able to create jobs. The Minister needs a refresher course in Economics 101. The fundamental reason for business to invest and expand is the prospect of being able to sell. This Budget takes over $500 out of the pockets of the ordinary family. Even Ruben Bellan, a leading Canadian economist, had the following to say about the Government's Budget: "The reduction in buying power will hurt every business in Canada".

The Conservative Government was given a mandate for jobs and fair taxes. Instead, Canadians were presented with a Budget which ignores jobs and intensifies unfairness. Nothing more startling illustrates this unfairness than the shabby and mean-spirited way in which the Tories treat Canada's pensioners. Every senior citizen in Canada will be adversely affected by the Budget. The old age pension will decline by 3 per cent each year due to deindexation.

As I have said before, deindexation may sound mild enough. However, the impact of deindexation will devastate the living standards of Canada's elderly—our parents and grandparents. The annual cut to each and every Old Age Security cheque to each and every pensioner in Canada will be $100 in 1986; $205 in 1987; $315 in 1988; $431 in 1989; $553 in 1990; and $680 in 1991.

By the year 1991, the Conservative Government will be saving $2 billion on the backs of Canada's elderly. The Government is taking money out of Canada's inadequate pension system—a system which already fails to provide the elderly men and women of this country with retirement in dignity. The Government is taking money out of the pockets of Canada's pensioners while some 1.8 million seniors live in poverty. The Government is condemning the poorest seniors to ever deepening poverty.

The deindexation of pensions means that the incomes of Canada's senior citizens will be subject to the ravages of inflation. It destroys the hopes and dreams of senior citizens for a decent retirement income. It is a shameful attack on the children of the depression—today's seniors who grew up in tough economic times, who came of age in the war years and who have contributed so much to Canadian society. Surely they have the right to retire in dignity.

I say to the Prime Minister that Canada's seniors have paid, and paid handsomely. He says that the Budget rewards those who get up half an hour earlier. That is a cruel joke to play on Canadians who have worked hard all their lives. Show some compassion, Mr. Prime Minister, and remove this contemptible deindexation measure from your Budget.

The Prime Minister has a double standard of fairness. He keeps his election promises for more money to the big oil companies and breaks his promises to Canada's seniors. During last summer's election campaign, when the Government was looking for votes, the Prime Minister promised full indexation of pensions. He promised full indexation would be restored on January 1, 1985. It is patently unfair for the Prime Minister to promise to restore the indexation of pensions for Canada's seniors during the election and then actually slash their benefits in the Budget.

I ask Hon. Members to consider the following. While this Government slashes old age pensions, it is giving $2.4 billion to big oil companies. It is giving $600 million to the rich through the capital gains giveaway. It is giving $235 million to the richest Canadians by increasing and fully indexing the contribution limits for RRSPs. It is giving a further $2.2 billion to corporations through reduced taxes.

I repeat, the Conservatives have two standards of fairness—one for the privileged few, the wealthy and large corporations, and another for Canada's elderly. The Minister of Finance is distressed that there are far too few rich people in Canada. In making that type of statement, I wish he would take a look at what he is doing to the seniors in the country and consider the plight they happen to be living in. It is out there. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) knows and understands that completely. I just wish the rest of the Cabinet would fully understand it. I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare takes up the suggestion I made to him earlier today in Question Period. I hope he does come with me to visit senior citizens. If he does that, it will give him increased ammunition to fight within Cabinet to make the Government reverse what it is doing to old age pensioners in the country.

When the Liberal Government planned to deindex pensions in 1982, the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) called it the meanest move in the Budget. The present Minister of Finance, who was at that time the Opposition's finance critic, and now is the Minister of unfairness, said that the Liberals' plan to deindex pensions "put the boots to those who are hardest hit in the economy today, the low income people and pensioners".

In fact, at that time, the Conservative Party spent $30,000 to take out full-page newspaper ads across the country in which it condemned the Liberals' plan to deindex pensions. It said it would be harmful to Canada's elderly. In that ad, it urged Canadians to send a mesage to the Government. I make the same appeal today. I urge anyone out there who is listening to this debate and who has listened to Question Period and what has been going on in this place since the Budget came down, to do exactly what the Conservative Party was asking him or her to do back in 1982, that is to say, to deluge this place with letters, petitions and telegrams so that the Government will clearly understand that what it is doing does not have the support of elderly Canadians, or even of those Canadians who are contemplating retirement.

I wish to make an additional point. I say this anticipating hoots of derision from Members on the government side. In this country, pensions are a non-partisan issue. Pensions affect everyone in the country. I do not care how you lean, whether it is in partial support of the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party, or even the Rhinoceros Party. What the Government is doing through its Budget will affect every senior citizen in the country, everyone who is contemplating retirement and anyone who looks forward to retirement in the few short years ahead.

The Government is just not listening to the message being sent to it by senior citizens across the country. As I said before, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance should take their own advice by responding to the message sent to them by social policy groups and senior citizens' organizations from coast to coast.

Deindexing old age pensions has been condemned by Canadian Pensioners Concerned, United Senior Citizens of Ontario, Action Now in Saskatchewan, the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, the Association of Jewish Seniors, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the National Council of Welfare, the Government's own National Advisory Council on Aging and numerous other groups. My colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party are going to make sure that the Prime Minister and the Government get the message. This unfairness to Canada's seniors must be stopped.

I say again that the New Democrats have launched a cross-country campaign for the reindexation of pensions. Our Party has fought tirelessly to ensure that Canadians could and would retire in dignity. That is our commitment. The Prime Minister and Conservative Members have broken faith with Canadians, and in the coming days and weeks, the New Democrats will continue to fight to have full indexation of old age pensions restored.

I know that the constituents of Conservative Party Members have begun to call Conservative Party Members to place their objections before them. I ask Members of all Parties to consider that. In the Tory caucus, there is an excellent opportunity for Conservative Members to go nose to nose with the Ministers who are doing this to the constituents whom Tory Members are supposed to represent. Conservative Members have an opportunity to join with the New Democratic Party to say to the Government that enough is enough and we ain't going to take it any more.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question to ask the Hon. Member. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been saying that he has spoken with a number of different individuals and groups about the deindexing of pensions. I know that my friend, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), has also been travelling around the country meeting with certain groups. I was wondering if he would be prepared to share with us the observations that he has made as he has come into contact with seniors' groups and particularly with a number of seniors' groups in western Canada.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to do so. First, I should say that last weekend, in response to what the government Members were saying, which was that they believed that the seniors of the country supported what the Government was doing, just out of curiosity I visited two senior citizens' apartment buildings in my constituency. I knocked on every door and told those who answered that I was there to talk about Old Age Security and what the Government was doing. I did not have to say anything more. I had a petition with me, and every single pensioner signed that petition. Members of my caucus went back to my constituency the same weekend and got exactly the same response.

Yesterday I went to Regina and Moose Jaw to attend a convention of the Action Now group, the seniors' unbrella group in Saskatchewan. Senior citizen after senior citizen had no hesitation in saying to me that what the Government was doing was wrong, that it was obvious that the Government is in the pocket of big business and that it was not listening to the senior citizens of the country. They said that the only groups the Government is interested in listening to are the big corporations, the Bay Street boys and the oil companies. If senior citizens are saying that to me, they are most certainly saying the same thing to Conservative Members who were elected to represent the interests of the people of their constituencies. By not speaking up and opposing this action, they are in violation of their duties.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) with great interest. I would like to tell a little story that goes back to August of last year when I visited a senior citizens' home, St. Anne's, in Saskatoon. One lady there asked me if the Government could bring about economic recovery so that people could get back to work and start paying their taxes again so that the Government could afford to pay seniors their pensions. It seems to me that she put the whole issue in a nutshell. She understood that her pension cannot come from a printing press but that it had to come from an economy with some substance and foundation.

I am not very happy about sharing the burden of this debt. Senior citizens are not happy, corporations are not happy and people who earn over $40,000 per year who are being surtaxed are not happy. However, when we took office last fall, it was made very clear to us that the debt was about to wreck the country. As someone said not too long ago, let us try to make some decisions in this Parliament while we can still make decisions. If we do not make them now, the decision-making power will be taken away from us and put in the head offices of banks and lending institutions outside this country.

Has the Hon. Member for Beaches really given this issue a broad view or is he just zeroing in on one particular item? I agree with the Hon. Member that everyone has a burden to share. I would like to think that those senior citizens who are able to help us share the burden will do so. We look forward to their assistance. I would be very happy to hear from any senior citizen in my constituency who cannot afford to pay 27 cents per day, because I would like to talk to that senior citizen.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to reply to the Hon. Member. Members who have been Members as long as I have know that I always take the broad view of things.

Mr. Andre: Yeah?

Mr. Young: I am totally unbiased and I take an objective point of view.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): From a socialist point of view, you are right.

Mr. Young: The Minister of National Health and Welfare knows that. Usually I do not find myself in disagreement with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Andre: At least you're smiling.

Mr. Young: I'm smiling at the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I personally find this part of the Budget to be deeply offensive. I find it deeply offensive to the senior citizens who were told time and time again that the Government would not touch the pensions and would in fact restore full indexation on pensions. Government Members made that promise at the time of the six and five program.

Whether one takes a broad view of the Budget or a narrow view, a commitment was clearly made to every senior citizen during the election campaign, following the election campaign and during the discussions on the benefits paper. That is what I find so offensive. I think the question of deindexation of pensions must be addressed, regardless of what else is in the Budget.

I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) that a number of senior citizens who were at that convention I attended yesterday signed the petition that was presented today by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Those senior citizens were extremely angry about what the Government was doing to them. I would like the Hon. Member to take that into account.

As I indicated earlier, any Budget must be seen in the light of how it addresses human concerns. It cannot treat people as a bunch of statistics. Last summer, when they were looking for votes, government Members promised us heaven and earth in the way of pension improvements, but they have reversed their position today and say that things have now changed.

Conservative Members can use a host of arguments to try to justify their position, but I do not think they will be able to convince senior citizens. I do not think that this will wash one little bit. People see this particular item of the Budget as being a betrayal of what the Government promised them, and they ain't going to accept it. I think the Hon. Member should understand that. He is in for the fight of his life over this one issue. If he thinks that the business community has power, he should just wait until he sees "grey power". Those people will knock him flat on his keister.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) who spoke of Saskatchewan. On Monday, I went to the Assiniboia Gravelbourg nomination convention in the riding of Assiniboia at which 1,000 Conservatives were gathered. It was interesting to note that the Budget was the subject of discussion. I had senior farmer after senior farmer tell me that, due to the Budget, they had been saved from a lifetime of work. The farmers told me that under the former Government, they would have lost the only pension program which they had. Senior farmer after senior farmer complimented us on the Budget.

I say to the Hon. Member who has just spoken that the Budget has brought a very positive response from Saskatchewan. It has been well received that we have kept intact the principle of universality. The people of Saskatchewan are very pleased with the Budget.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I cannot let that go without some comment. He was talking to Conservatives. I am talking to Canadians.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What is the difference?

Mr. Young: I thought that the Government was elected to represent Canadians generally, not only Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I could go out and talk with a bunch of NDPers and they would firmly condemn the Government, in principle, because it has given them a Budget which will hang them. I am not only speaking with NDPers, I am talking to Conservatives as well. Conservatives were on the hot line show yesterday and they did not agree with the Government. I have spoken with Liberals and they do not agree with the Government. I am still waiting for the day when government Members will come into the House and tell me that Cabinet Ministers have spoken with seniors and that they are prepared to identify the people with whom they have spoken. I have not seen any evidence of that. Government Members were asked time and again today with whom they have spoken. We asked them to give us names or the names of groups. But we did not receive an answer. Once government Members can come into the House and tell us that, I will listen to them a bit more closely than I have in the past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has now expired. We will now resume debate with the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate and to put forward various points of view. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), and I, despite our political differences, are very good friends. I would like to tell him, when he speaks to the Conservatives of Canada, that they are Canadians as well. While it might have been a slip of the tongue—

Mr. Young: The heat of debate.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is fine. He can be selective with whom he chooses to speak and I can be selective with whom I choose to speak. That debate could take up a lot of time in the House. I do not think that would be very useful. I think we must return to the point of the debate.

He has a position—and I say this to him from an objective point of view, though he may question my objectivity—which the NDP has generally held. That position is to spend more money, spend ourselves out of debt and out of a burgeoning increase in the debt load and the servicing of the debt. Members of the NDP believe that if we keep on spending, we can turn around the economy. I happen to disagree with that philosophy. However, I do not disagree with him that his Party has been consistent in putting forward that philosophy. While

I fundamentally disagree with it, I would say to him that in that sense he has been very consistent. I will have further words about the Liberals, because they have other viewpoints on deindexation which have been expressed before. We could spend a long period of time debating that.

However, I know that the Hon. Member is a precise man. I think he should take a look at the motion which is before the House. I hope he has read it. In fact, I went to the Table to ensure that there was not a printing mistake in the Order Paper. The Table gave me a signed copy, which bears the signature of the Hon. Member, so I know that the motion is exactly the same in the Order Paper as the motion which he put forward last night for debate today. I do not know if he has read it, but I will. It states:

A Progressive Conservative Government intends to re-establish the full-indexing of old age pensions to the cost of living beginning January 1, 1985.

If he took a look at the Budget, he would see that the plan is to come into effect on January 1, 1986. So what he is asking the Government to do is exactly what the Government is doing. I hope he will vote for the very thing which the Government is now doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will try to help the Hon. Member out of his dilemma. I really think that what he wanted to talk about was January 1, 1986.

Mr. Young: You are right.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Thank you. That is between friends. I am sure that he and other Members would want to commend the Government for having done exactly what they have asked the Government to do.

The only other point, which is more critical, that I would like to make on the motion, is that it is exactly that kind of imprecision that creates fear among senior citizens. It is from that point of view that I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he should be very careful when he puts forward a position or a point of view to make sure that it is the entire story.

When he asks for petitions, he should give senior citizens, in respect to them, the full details of the issue which is facing not only senior citizens but the entire Canadian society. If he does that and if he still receives the same response, I will respect that response. But I would ask him, please, not simply to put forward to a group of people, who need the explanation, a petition which is against the Government and its proposals and ask them to sign it. I do not think that is of any great benefit to those who sign it and whose names are then used in the House. It will not change the situation as far as clarity and understanding are concerned.

I know the Hon. Member will say that the motion was taken directly from the Conservative election manual. That is correct. I am pleased that he quoted the manual correctly. However, it does not do anything for clarity in this debate.

Let us look at the situation as Canadians, not as New Democrats, Liberals or Conservatives. Here is the situation. In February of 1984 when the Lalonde Budget was brought down, it was projected that the annual increase in the deficit which Canada had been experiencing would turn the corner and start to decrease. In addition, it was projected that the trend would continue into the 1990s. But when we became the Government, elected by the Canadian people, those projections and what was in the public domain in terms of public information had no relationship to the reality of September 4, 1984. In fact, the reality was that the deficit, which had been announced and projected even during the election campaign, was up to $5 billion more. But even that possibly could be controlled. What was even more worrisome was that the projections for the annual deficit were so large that the very ability to maintain the programs for which the Hon. Member works and fights as do I and other Members of the House, was being seriously jeopardized by the cost of servicing the debt. For example, next year the debt was to go to $38 billion on an annual basis. By the end of this decade it was going to be $40 billion on an annual basis. By the early 1990s it was to be $50 billion. So before many years hence we, as a Canadian society, were going to have a debt of $400 billion.

Let me put that into perspective, if I might, Mr. Speaker. At the present time, most of the cost of servicing the debt leaves our shores and goes into bankers' hands. I am sure the Hon. Member is not comfortable when I say that his proposal gives more to the bankers. I am sure he never thought he would ever have to defend that position. But if the Hon. Member looks at the situation clearly, he will see that we the Canadian society, are spending today from the federal share of health care, approximately $11 billion on an annual basis. He will see, for example, that on old age pensions and on the Guaranteed Income Supplement we spend another $11 billion. Therefore, the Canadian society spends approximately $22 billion on those two absolutely essential programs. But we are spending more on the servicing of the debt right now than on either of those programs. It is now up to $25 billion.

If we project just four or five years down the road, Mr. Speaker, and we look at the debt load which we are going to have not only as the Government but as the Canadian society, and if we annualize that at a 10 per cent interest rate—which I think most Hon. Members in the House would say is a reasonable number to project in view of the present circumstances—then the cost of that debt on an annual basis will have jumped to $40 billion.

The very relationship to the programs we want to maintain as Canadians, if it is not jeopardized today, it surely will be jeopardized in four or five years down the road. I cannot change that fact in any way I want. The debt is not a benign giant but rather something which the people of Canada asked this Government and this House to deal with. I have said as openly as I know how, in Question Period and in other locations, that had I been in other circumstances, I would obviously have opted for other options. But I say to Hon. Members that today more than 50 per cent or thereabouts—let us use that as a base figure—of our expenditures at the national level are in my Department of National Health and Welfare and in servicing the debt. I say this to members of the New Democratic Party in as straightforward a manner as I know how. They say, "Don't bring in any cuts. Don't bring in any reductions. Bring in taxes on the rich". But keep in mind that this change will come into effect at the same time as the minimum tax, which was pointed out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that is, on January 1, 1986, if I have the date right. But those Hon. Members do not tell the people about that side of the equation. So I am saying to them very directly; they know and I know that there is no money tree out there from which, if one shakes a certain branch, one will get more money without pain and will be able to sustain these programs without turning around that ship of state, that deficit and that load.

Mr. Waddell: You didn't have any problems with the oil companies, did you?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Surely they can understand that. Creating jobs was mentioned in the Budget. Surely, the best job that we can give Canadians is a permanent job. And if deficit financing is as successful as the socialists put forward, why is it that we have this large debt?

Mr. Waddell: Because you gave away too much money to the oil companies. You gave them $2 billion.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And why do we have 1.4 million unemployed—

Mr. Waddell: Because you have monetarism.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —of which 500,000 are under the age of 24. So I say to the Hon. Member, if his system works so well, why hasn't it worked?

Mr. Waddell: Because we have not been in government. You are in government. The Liberals were in government. We have been in the Opposition, remember?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And you will stay there. I will change my opinion about the Liberals and the New Democrats after I see what happens in Ontario. I do not know how you are going to defend that, but that is for you to worry about and not for me. I say to the Hon. Member very directly, please put that forward.

The other point the Hon. Member likes to make is that we have not maintained universality. That is also not the case. We have maintained universality. Every Canadian who is eligible for old age pension at age 65 still receives it, as they received it before the Budget, as they received it after the Budget, and as they will receive it as well on January 1, 1986.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): While I might have my philosophical differences with the New Democratic Party, I must mention the Liberals. Here they are rising in their places and telling us that this is a dastardly act. Let me read what my immediate predecessor, the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Monique Bégin, said. I do not believe she was ever accused in this House of being very concerned about the deficit. At the time she was speaking, the annualized deficit was $19.6 billion. Let me quote the following from Hansard of November 18, 1982, at page 20801:

> I emphasize this last point because, in spite of the position taken recently by the New Democratic Party, there are people in this House and throughout Canada who believe that we can simply increase the deficit by a few hundred million dollars to achieve our pressing objectives. However, beyond a certain point, the interest payable on the deficit becomes intolerable because, from the point of view of a Minister of social affairs, it is a waste of money.
> We must be realistic and avoid seemingly easy answers which would only prolong the economic crisis and exert even more pressure on all future social budgets.

That is the point, Mr. Speaker, and I say to my Liberal and New Democrat friends, that is the point. Have they looked at the demographic figures ten years from now? Have they looked at demographic figures 15 years from now? That is why, for instance, there were changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, which the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party knows full well will help people to plan for their pension futures. But do they say anything to the old age pensioners about that? No, they leave that out. They will not say anything like that. And, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no question that if people will rely throughout our history only on the OAS and the GIS, they will be at or near the poverty line. Surely it is better for us today to start planning for the future so that these programs that we all want to maintain can be preserved. I say to the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party, don't ask us to give the international bankers more. Don't defend the bankers. Defend the old age pensioners for a change.

I could go through speeches by the finance critic or the health critic for the Liberal Party, as well as others, but I say to all of them: Yes, we have maintained the principle of universality, and what we are also trying to maintain, through Bill C-26, for example, through the spouse's allowance, and through changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, is the ability of Canadians to invest and create jobs for the future.

Yes, I am sure the Hon. Member has many small businesses in his riding, people who do not consider themselves rich and who had to pay capital gains tax when they sold the business. I say to him, start believing in your neighbours, the people up and down your street. They can do more for the economy than this or any Government can do. Surely people can look after themselves better than either you or I can with rhetoric. Look at the StatsCan figures which came out yesterday, and keep this in mind: if we are going to continue down the road we have been on, the cost of servicing our debt will become so great that the programs and pensions we have for those who reach 65 a few years from now will be unsustainable. Let us not get into that trap. Let us make the decisions today which will turn that around and give not only our senior citizens some hope, but also those who are in the workforce today and those who want to start their own businesses. Let us give them the hope that they will not be crushed by a tax burden which they cannot maintain.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have just one question I want to put to the Minister. He had a great deal to say about the need to reduce the debt being the reason for a reduction in increases to the pensions Canada's senior citizens will receive. But he omitted reference to the billions of dollars which he knows are given to corporations each year. By these corporations' own admission, these breaks produce no gain whatsoever. The President of the Bank of Montreal spoke to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Toronto and said that the corporate sector is awash in corporate tax expenditures. That tells us that there is a lot of money which could be saved if there were some rationalization of the corporate tax expenditure side of the Budget.

Rather than take nearly $1,500 over the next five years out of the purses and pockets of senior citizens, why did he not look at that corporate tax expenditure side of the account and use that to reduce the deficit?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, as well as others, have said that the size of the debt is such that all of us have to share in its reduction. The Minister of Finance has said to the Hon. Member, as well as others in this House on numerous occasions, that what the Hon. Member calls loopholes and others call incentives, that is, the matter of corporate taxation, is something he is looking at very carefully to see if there can be some changes to meet some of the points the Hon. Member has made. But I say that no matter how we rejig it, let us not leave the impression with the Canadian people that there is a magic money tree and that shaking it will have no effect on our trade, our competitiveness, or the ability of corporations to continue to create jobs. Let us look at these issues but not in isolation or in the belief that there is a painless way of reversing a situation where we have no control over 25 cents out of every dollar we spend. If there is one section of the Budget which operates by itself without any decision being taken by this House or the Government, it is the payment of interest on our national debt.

I say to the Hon. Member that he should take the Minister of Finance at face value when he says he will bring in changes regarding a minimum tax as well as the corporate tax structure. I have my dates right and I hope the Hon. Member has his right. The Minister has said that the minimum tax will come into effect on January 1, 1986. I am sure that the Hon. Member, being an honourable person, will go back to Kamloops and put all those positions forward to the seniors in his riding before he asks them to sign any petition.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I have had the privilege of spending some time with him in the House and in its committees and elsewhere, and I respect his opinion. However, notwithstanding that, I was somewhat concerned about the tone of his comments. He sounded more like the Minister of Finance than like the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I say that knowing that the deficit is a matter of concern to all of us here in this House. The Minister confirmed that when he quoted statements made by the previous Minister of National Health and Welfare, Madam Bégin, and by other members of our Party. However, he knows as well that in grappling with the deficit and trying to reduce it over a number of years, any Government has choices. There are different ways to try to bring the deficit down. When the six and five policy was introduced by the previous Liberal Government, full indexation of the OAS and GIS was assured for those living at the poverty line, those who received the full GIS. Perhaps I am not expressing myself entirely correctly, but the effect is the same: those who received the full GIS also received an extra payment to compensate for the amount they did not get by reason of capping the OAS.

This is the kind of sensitivity to the poorest elderly Canadians that we are asking of this Government. We are not asking the Government to throw out its whole budgetary policy—well, perhaps we are, but not on this particular point. We are simply asking the Minister to provide full cost of living increases for those living at the bottom of our income scale.

I would also point out to the Minister that his Government has just increased the maximum for RRSP contributions. Whom will that benefit? This was the recommendation of a number of task forces, yes, but perhaps because of the urgent situation we are in that should have been postponed for a period of time. The people who can afford to make those contributions could perhaps postpone those contributions for several years in order to help the elderly poor in our country. That is the kind of choice which this Government appears not to have made in this Budget.

So I appeal to the good judgment of the Minister. He is not going to win this argument by just talking about the deficit; he also has to address the question of choices which any Government has to make in dealing with that deficit. Our opinion is that some of the choices made by this Government in presenting this Budget were not judicious ones and do not do justice to all of the elderly in our country.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member puts forward some very lucid points. He is absolutely correct when he says that we must remain sensitive.

However, let me point out what is in the Budget. His Party and the New Democratic Party plan to tell senior citizens throughout the country that their income will be cut immediately, and they project that to 1990-91. They can do so for political reasons, if they wish, but in doing so I have not heard them say that the Minister of Finance has made a provision in the Budget to monitor the situation when this plan comes into effect on January 1, 1986.

The Hon. Member's suggestion of increasing the GIS was one option. He accuses me of sounding like the Minister of Finance. I have the responsibility in Cabinet and to the country for those client groups that specifically receive services from my Department. I suggest that this includes almost every Canadian because our computer bank at the Department of National Health and Welfare contains a list of almost 18 million Canadians. My Department deals with almost every Canadian.

The Hon. Member may think that I sound like the Minister of Finance, but I say to him that I want more programs, just as the former Minister of National Health wanted more programs. I want more for spouses. I am pleased that the Government is introducing Bill C-26. I am pleased that the disability change was made in the Budget and that another 120,000 Canadian families who are looking after disabled members will get an extra benefit. I am pleased that we have been able to maintain the indexing on the basis of the Budget.

However, I suggest to the Hon. Member that Canadians must make choices, and that the difficult decisions that this Minister, the Government and Members of the House must make is whether our society can continue to increase the 25 per cent of our expenditures which now go to service the debt. Can we increase that amount ad infinitum, or must we make the decision to turn that deficit around and to allow future generations of Canadians the opportunity to have jobs and the ability to pay for services? While there is no social contract in a social welfare state, there is the concept of intergenerational responsibility.

The Hon. Member, myself and all Canadians who are in the workforce have a resopnsibility to pay our taxes for those who are over the age of 65 and who had worked when salaries and incomes were generally lower. I gladly accept that responsibility as a Canadian and I believe all Canadians accept that responsibility.

However, I suggest to the Hon. Member that there must be a balance. If this process continued, in years to come I would not sound like a Minister of Finance but, rather, like a Minister of National Health and Welfare who would be pleading for revenues which I know would not be available to maintain the programs which existed. That is what I and my successors would be pleading for, but there would not be that revenue. That was the option I had to consider and that is why I made this choice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, frankly, I listened with some astonishment to the plea by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for Canadians to restrain themselves. He called particularly upon senior Canadians and those currently living below the poverty line to tighten their belts in order to pay for intergenerational transfers.

His Government has had a litany of bloated spending that would cause any taxpayer to shudder. The Government sanctimoniously pleads with Canadian taxpayers to tighten their belts. However, let us consider what the Government has done in its first eight months in office. One of the first actions taken by the chiefs of staff was to double ministerial staffs. The total cost to taxpayers of Canada for this was $15 million. There were 54 VIP flights in the first 45 days in office, which cost $345,000.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is telling senior citizens who are currently living below the poverty line to give more. Meanwhile, his Party shells out money for designer Christmas trees. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spent $24,000 to fly the November economic statement to the Premiers. Presumably he has not learned of the value of Canada Post, and so had to spend $24,000 to send the economic statement to the Premiers.

The First Ministers' Conference in Regina cost the Canadian taxpayers $500,000 under the flag of the Government and the presidential seal of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's budget alone, which increased by 57 per cent, cost Canadian taxpayers a further $2.6 million. Presumably, Conservatives had to make sure that all their carpets were blue because renovations to Tory offices amounted to $131,158. The total price tag for those few changes, excluding the Marcel Masse trip from Ottawa to Vancouver for $19,000; the Harvey Andre $12,600 flight from Ottawa to Saskatoon; the Pat Carney Ottawa to Calgary to Vancouver trip for $17,456; and the Marcel Masse trip from Ottawa to Algeria to Greece for $57,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I ask the Hon. Member to refer to Ministers by their portfolios.

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The trip of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) from Ottawa to Algeria to Greece and back cost the Canadian taxpayer $57,000. The total cost to Canadian taxpayers for renovations and bloated office staffs was some $54,921,508.

Mr. Andre: A fraction of what Lloyd Axworthy spent on his office.

Ms. Copps: I realize that it is painful for the Government to hear the facts. The Minister of National Health and Welfare stands in his place and not only breaks his word but the word of the Prime Minister to the Canadian people. He pleads with senior citizens to bear the brunt of deficit reduction. He is calling upon senior citizens who are currently living below the poverty level in this country to allow their budgets to be reduced by $30 on a monthly basis and to make payments so that his Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), can pay a further $2 billion in tax dollars to the multinational oil companies.

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare is truly serious about calling upon all Canadians to share in the sacrifice, he would not have joined with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in an absolute tax giveaway to the multinational oil companies, which is being paid directly from the pockets of our poorest in the country. It is hypocritical of the Government to call upon seniors to make those sacrifices when that Party promised during the election campaign that no matter what cuts or changes were made, they would not be made on the backs of those who can least afford to pay—our senior citizens. That promise was spouted by the Prime Minister in his own tome Where I Stand, the New Tory Leader Speaks Out. The book was printed some two years ago, and presumably he has not had a conversion on the road to Damascus. Let us hear what the Prime Minister had to say some two years ago, about indexing benefits for senior citizens. He said: "Beginning with politicians and senior public servants it should become a priority to reduce and eventually eliminate and outlaw indexed contracts and benefits, including indexed pensions in line with inflation.

Clear and justified exceptions should be made for mothers' allowance and all other social programs designed to protect the ordinary and disadvantaged Canadians from the ravages of inflation for which they are not responsible".

● (1620)

Those were the words of the Prime Minister two years ago when he told the Canadian people where he stood. Where does he stand now, Mr. Speaker? Where does he sit? We cannot even find him in the House of Commons.

We see that he made those same promises again during the election campaign. The Tories said quite clearly, and it is alluded to in the motion before the House today, that the Tories are committed to reinstating complete indexing of old age pensions to the actual cost of living as of January 1, 1985.

What did the Minister of National Health and Welfare have to say in this House less than six months ago on the issue of indexing? Let me quote from the House of Commons debates dated December 21, 1984, when the Minister said:

> I can confirm that the regular indexing of the Old Age Security, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the family allowance will be increased as of January 1, 1985—

I realize that the Minister of National Health and Welfare may not have won his battle in Cabinet. I realize that the hawks in deficit reduction have prevailed upon the Conservative Party to ensure that the deficit is reduced on the backs of those who can least afford to pay. I would have thought that, at the very least, the Minister of National Health and Welfare would have had the courage to stand up and explain, on the one hand, why this Government is calling upon senior citizens to make this sacrifice and, on the other hand, why the Government is prepared to give away a half a million dollar capital gains write-off to the top 4 per cent in our society who can afford to take advantage of it.

The facts are clear. This Budget is not a fair Budget. This is a Budget which gives to the rich. It will ensure that a family of four earning $200,000 a year over the life of this Budget will actually, if that family takes into account the capital gains write-off, pay $2,352 less in taxes as a direct result of the Budget measures which punish senior citizens. At the same time, a family of four earning $15,000 a year, not exactly living in the lap of luxury in Hamilton, St. John's, Newfoundland, or in Vancouver, will pay $413 more in taxes as a direct result of these Budget measures.

I congratulate those Members on the government side of the House who had the courage to tell the people what they think about the measures of the Wilson-Mulroney Budget and what they think about this Government's complete turnaround in its promises to senior citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has referred to promises. He referred to promises made by the Liberals, but what he did not tell Canadians and what he did not make clear today in the House is, that while he is asking the elderly who are most in need to shell out $30 a month for this Budget, he is giving more than $2 billion to the oild multinationals, because this Government has rejected the energy policy option proposed by the former Government party, the Liberal Party.

The Conservative Party has shown Canada its true blue colours in the Budget, that cold blue blood that gives a cold shoulder to Canadians who are most in need.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed of the fact that Conservative Members are not rising in their seats to tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who made so many promises and who promised several times here in the House and outside the House that the Government would not make any changes whatsoever in the pensions paid to the neediest in Canadian society, our senior citizens.

[English]

I do not know whether a promise from a Tory means the same thing it means to other Canadians. I think what we have at issue here is not only the financial hardship and devastation which will be faced by hundreds of thousands of senior citizens, apolitical and of all political stripes, but also the credibility of this Government and this Prime Minister who promised the Canadian people that universality was a sacred trust, that they would not touch indexing at the expense of senior citizens, and that they would not reduce the deficit at the expense of those who can least afford to pay.

We see that the very words of the Prime Minister have shown themselves to be simply a blarney sham, simply a fraud to encourage the Canadian people to cast a ballot for a Party which pretended to be something it was not.

This Budget, this measure, this attack on senior citizens is the true colour of the Conservative Party of Canada. The Conservatives tried to adopt neo-Liberalism during the campaign. They tried to tell the Canadian people that they were going to protect our older people and create jobs for our young unemployed Canadians. But we see, Mr. Speaker, that the moment the Tories get their clutches on investment power in Canada, they give to the multinationals. They give to pension funds which are going to invest outside of Canada.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), today in the House raised a very important point about the philosophy of the Conservative Party. She pointed out that as a direct result of budget changes this Government has now permitted private pension funds to invest some $30 billion outside the country. When the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) was asked why she would permit this $30 billion outflow of capital which will mean hundreds and hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, she said that the companies asked her to do so because they wanted to go where they could get the best rate of return.

That sounds to me strangely like the kind of mentality and the kind of position expressed by the Prime Minister when he told Fortune magazine that Canadians cannot compete, that Canadians cannot offer the best rate of return, so let us send our billions and billions of dollars of pension funds out of the country to the United States and to Europe; let us send our capital gains write-offs of half a billion to purchase diamonds in South Africa or condominiums in Florida.

If this Government had an ounce of conviction about Canadian job creation and if it had an ounce of conviction about reducing the deficit, not on the backs of those who can least afford to pay, at the very least it would have made provision in this Budget for tax measures which would have ensured jobs in Canada for Canadians. But we see quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker.

With a single flick of the pen, the Minister of Finance has said to people in charge of pension funds across Canada, "Take your money elsewhere. Do not invest in Canada. Do not invest in Canadians. Go to Switzerland, go to England, go to the United States. Go where you can get the best rate of return". Any economist will know that this $30 billion potential outflow of capital from Canada will not only result in the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs, jobs which allegedly the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance are here to protect, but it will also result in a further depression of the dollar, which has been driven to new lows as a result of Tory policies.

The purchasing power of those senior citizens, who are already being grabbed for $30 a month as a direct result of tax measurs, will see their purchasing power further decreased by a dollar that will have less and less value on the international market.

Those same economists will tell us that this particular measure in the pension fund will result in an unprecedented level of inflation for Canadians. It shows quite clearly that the Government does not have faith in Canada. The Government does not believe in investment by Canadians in Canadian jobs for Canadians. The Government does not believe in indigenous industries which are not based upon a multinational influx of capital that will leave as soon as times get tough. The Government is only interested in lining the pockets of the rich, the pockets of the wealthy, and the pockets of those Canadians who financed the campaigns which led to its election.

For the first time Canadians can finally see the face of the Prime Minister and the face of the Government. When times get tough, they look to our senior citizens, to people who are now living below the poverty line, to pay the price for the gifts they are giving to their cronies and friends. Again I am speaking about the $500,000 capital gains tax write-off. Most senior citizens could not think of earning and putting together $500,000 in their lifetime, never mind setting it aside for a capital gains write-off. Most senior citizens are scraping so that perhaps they can have one meal of meat in a week. This did not stop the Minister of Finance from giving another little loophole to all people who travel abroad. The Minister of National Health and Welfare did not mention that in his cut-back discussions. He did not tell Canadians about this other little goody, that the Minister of Finance had decided that anyone who left the country for more than 48 hours would be allowed to bring in $100 of goods tax-free. Presumably most senior citizens who are earning the base OAS and the GIS are not in a position to make trips very often outside the country.

Who will be the beneficiary of this particular tax write-off? Presumably it will be business people who travel for a couple of days of meetings in New York or in Washington. Presumably it will be politicians who travel outside the country. It certainly will not be the ordinary steelworker or ordinary senior citizen who will have the chance to take advantage of this other giveaway by a Minister of Finance who seems intent on propping up his friends in high finance at the expense of ordinary Canadians.

I think there is unrest in the Tory ranks. For the first time we have seen Conservatives who have the courage to stand either inside or outside the House and dissociate themselves from the policies of the Government. I know they are receiving telephone calls. I know they are receiving responses from angry, hurt, betrayed and distrustful senior citizens who are saying to them: "I voted for you. I cast my ballot for the Conservative Party because I believed the Prime Minister when he said that universality was a sacred trust". They cast their ballot for the Conservative Party because they believed it when the Minister of National Health and Welfare promised that he would not touch the indexation of the OAS and the GIS. Those people believed the Conservative Party but, in one fell swoop, in one budget measure, a message has gone out loud and clear to Canadians, especially senior Canadians, that the Government and its Prime Minister cannot be trusted to keep their word.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I was glad to see that a number of Conservative Members had the courage to speak out, either in the House or outside the House, and tell Canadians that they did not agree with the Wilson-Mulroney measures. I want to urge all Members who have a conscience and who want to meet the needs of the neediest in Canada to rise and speak out. If we work together, we could take the advice of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—

[English]

He said in his book that to compromise was not a sin, that he believed he could back off when he had made a mistake. The Government has made a mistake. Let us all get together and unanimously endorse a policy to reindex the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. It would be work well done by all parliamentarians.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and a few comments, perhaps by way of a preamble. First I should like to compliment her on the reading material which she has brought to the House. It is improving somewhat, and I hope it continues to improve.

It would not come as a surprise to most of us from Saskatchewan farms that this Member, I suppose from the heart of industrial central Canada and of course speaking officially on behalf of the Liberal Party, would be so opposed to the exemption on capital gains tax. I want the record to show what I have to say, as I bring copies of the House of Commons Hansard back home to thousands of farmers who eke out a living on six, seven or eight quarters of land. Capital gains tax is their life savings. This is their pension in the ground on which they toil. The Hon. Member referred to neo-Liberalism. Good Lord, old Liberalism was bad enough! The Liberal Party of Canada does not want the capital gains tax exemption for my farmers, for all Canadian farmers. I think that should be on the record for people to see the Liberal Party and its true colour.

I should like to direct my specific question to the Hon. Member and to draw her attention to a recent Statistics Canada report which indicates that by the beginning of the 21st century one in four Canadians shall be 65 years of age or older. The present 12 per cent of senior citizens, 12 per cent now and ever growing, will be 25 per cent by the year 2000. I should like to ask this Hon. Member, this distinguished representative of the Liberal Party of Canada which bequeathed to all Canadians a $35 billion per year deficit, an accumulated deficit of $200 billion: Who will pay in the year 2000 for the valuable programs which are now universal to all Canadians 65 years of age and over and shall continue to be universal to these Canadians? Who will pay? That is what I should like to ask the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) for his question. It is unfortunate that he has not been participating in the budget debate. If he had, he would have known that this Hon. Member for Hamilton East has already spoken on the capital gains issue with respect to farmers. Having a little background in agriculture myself, I am certainly aware of the fact that an all-Party committee in the last House of Commons recommended that the capital gains exemption be lifted completely for farmers, so that there would be no ceiling on capital gains exemption for the farming community.

Unfortunately, in this particular Budget, the Minister of Finance has chosen not to offer what he promised to farmers. That promise was a complete exemption from capital gains. Instead he has chosen to offer a wholesale sell-out to the so-called 4 per cent of the investment community which can purchase condominiums in Florida and to offer them the capital gains write-off. If the Minister of Finance had been listening to the Hon. Member, he would have followed up on his suggestion to assist farmers. There is no direct assistance for farmers in the Budget. The only assistance they receive is the capital gains write-off if and when they sell their properties. It is great if one wants to close up shop but, if one wants to survive or to continue to eke out a living, there is nothing in the Budget.

If the Hon. Member were sincere about a capital gains write-off, he would move an amendment. I encourage him to move the amendment—and I will support him on it—which will allow a capital gains exemption for the farming community alone and will in fact retire the rest of that $125,000 cash bonanza for the rich and put it into a pool for senior citizens who are paying not for past Liberal sins but in particular for the cash bonanza which the Government has given to the very wealthy.

This capital gains write-off is a sham. It offers a write-off for investment of Canadian dollars outside the country. In the same way, the pension fund changes mean a potential outflow of $30 billion of Canadian investment funds to other countries where they can obtain better rates of return. We in the Liberal Party believe in Canada. We do not believe that we have to go to the United States, to Europe or to other countries to obtain better rates of return on our investment. We are prepared to put our money where our mouth is. Unfortunately the Government, by permitting a $500,000 capital gains write-off with no conditions attached—no conditions for farmers, no conditions for Canadian investment, no conditions for Canadian job creation—has created a bonanza for the rich which is being paid directly by our senior citizens.

Do not try to pass that scam off on the Canadian people. Do not try to tell them that it is as a result of past Liberal woes that this deindexation measure is being introduced. It is being introduced to make your pay-offs to the multinational oil companies, as well as your payola to that 4 per cent of the Canadian population who can take advantage of a $500,000 capital gains write-off. That is what the seniors of Canada are paying for. They deserve to know the truth.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) for a question or comment.

Mr. Harvey: I want to make a few comments, Mr. Speaker, because if the Official Opposition keeps this up the elderly will have the impression that their pension payments will be cut in half. But the facts are different and, keeping in mind the election promises and the need for the Government to get a handle on the deficit, I think it is important to follow up on our election promises in a moderate way. As to the elderly, their pensions will indeed continue to increase regularly.

Mr. Speaker, we have to remember that the Budget provides for full indexation of the guaranteed income supplement and this, of course, will be reflected in higher old age security pensions. Still, the Government is committed to honour general agreements of $1.6 billion with the Province of Quebec, and that is bound to have an impact on the life of Quebecers.

Among other things, Mr. Speaker, over two years the Government will pay out $550 million in spouse's allowances to senior citizens. But that is not enough for the Opposition. It is never enough, Mr. Speaker, but who else but them so mismanaged everything in the past 20 years that, after such waste by the Liberals, we now pay $3 million an hour in interest alone? All I can say is that our Government must curb the rising deficit while moderately fulfilling its election promises. We will certainly honour our commitments before the end of our mandate. I have a question for my colleague. In the newspaper La Presse, definitely not a gossip tabloid, economic affairs columnist Frédéric Wagnière wrote this before the Budget was tabled:

> Economic growth is stymied by a lack of investments, true enough, but investments are in turn discouraged by high interest rates and the deficit's voracity on capital markets. A higher deficit just might create temporary jobs but, unless something changes in the pattern of public outlays, additional expenditures would not produce permanent investments. To remedy the situation, the Federal Government must reduce the deficit, to encourage companies to invest and take advantage of the drop in interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, in eight months the situation in this country has proved that controlling Government spending is the most promising factor in creating jobs—200,000 new jobs.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member what she thinks of the journalist who was urging the Government before the Budget was brought down to control its spending. That is what we are doing with the Budget. We are reducing the deficit by 80 per cent through cutbacks in Crown corporations, Members' pensions, and through a freeze on regular departmental budgets. I would like to ask her whether the Government's policy, which has the support of financial journalists . . . whether it is not in line with the new economic reality in Canada.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the new reality is that the modified promises referred to by the Hon. Member are so many burnt out candles, according to me and according to all Canadians. When the Hon. Member talks about modifying the pensions of the elderly, to me it is like an amputation where instead of taking off the whole arm, they only amputate the hand. Mr. Speaker, if we cut off the hands of the neediest in our society, they cannot fight for their rights in this country.

[English]

When the Hon. Member speaks of a modified promise, in Conservative language that translates into a lie. There was a statement made in the House by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that indexation of Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement would not be touched. It is being touched by this 3 per cent a year measure. It does not take an economist to figure out that over the lifetime of this Budget, it will mean $30 less for each senior citizen. I am prepared to say that it is not an amputation of the whole arm; it is an amputation of the hand. When you leave senior citizens without hands, it is a disgraceful act for all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise this afternoon to say a few words on this most important topic before us. The reason we are here today is because the New Democratic Party, after seeing what was happening in terms of Old Age Security in Canada, thought it appropriate to set aside an entire day of debate in the House of Commons to allow Members to express their views as to just how they perceive this particular course of action flowing from the Budget brought in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a few weeks ago.

In a sense, the motion we are debating condemns the Government for failing to keep a promise. I distinctly remember back to the summer of 1984 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) visited my constituency during the election campaign. I believe he visited it twice. During both visits he clearly indicated to groups of supporters that the one item he felt extremely strongly about was the matter of indexation of pensions. He felt strongly that senior citizens should not be ravaged by the increases in inflation which the country was experiencing and continues to experience. He expressed the concern that their pensions, be they modest already, would at least be protected. He made a solemn promise to the people of Canada and, as I say, to the people of Kamloops-Shuswap, that full indexation of OAS would be one of the first priorities of the Government.

I do not see how one could be any more precise than that. That is just what he said. He said it time and time again during the election campaign. I am sure Members opposite sitting in the government benches today said the same thing during their campaigns. I am sure when they were saying it, they were doing so in an honest, positive and forthright way. After all, that is what their leader said. That is what the present Prime Minister said.

We have called for a special debate today in the House of Commons because that solemn commitment made to the seniors of Canada has been broken. This is a serious matter. Earlier in the day, the former Member for the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, was in the House. He fought for years and years to obtain a decent pension for those who retire at the age of 65. I admit we still have a way to go to achieve that end. It is an appalling situation when hundreds of thousands of senior citizens still live below the poverty line in terms of their incomes. I am referring to "incomes" and "poverty lines" as described by the Government through Statistics Canada.

What motivated Members of the New Democratic Party to call for a special debate was the fact that the Government decided to deindex OAS. Deindex is one of those neutral terms. For many Canadians, I suspect it has little meaning as they hear it day after day. They know it has something to do with pensions. However, what does the term mean to a senior citizen? It reminds me of other neutral terms which President Reagan has made famous. He refers to the deadly MX missile as the "peacemaker" of all things. It is one of the most deadly weapons known to man. I am reminded of the war in Vietnam. At that time, the statistics referred to "hits". What the term really referred to was the bombing and burning of entire villages, inclusive of the innocent women, children and elderly inhabitants of those villages. At that time, the "daily body count" was referred to. What that really meant was the thousands of innocent people who were murdered in the rice paddies and jungles of Vietnam. Body count, hits, peacemakers and deindexation are neutral words. They belie what is really taking place.

I think it would be appropriate for us to take a moment or two to identify precisely what the deindexation of OAS will mean to senior citizens of Canada. In 1986, senior citizens will each lose $64 from their annual OAS income. That is not to say that OAS will not be in place, but that based on what senior citizens should expect to receive through indexation which protects them from inflation, they will receive $64 less in 1986. In 1987, they will receive $171 less than they should expect. By 1988, senior citizens will receive $284 less than they should expect. In 1989, it will be $402, in 1990 it will be $526 and in 1991 it will be $680. It goes on and on.

In the next five years, senior citizens who are collecting OAS will each lose a total of $1,447. This is a very serious matter. I do hope that government Members have a chance to respond to my comments during the question and answer period because in the next five years, every single senior citizen in Canada will lose through deindexation $1,447.

I will not even discuss what this loss will mean to the communities through a loss to each senior citizen over the next five years of nearly $1,500. I do not want to discuss what that will mean to the small business communities. I simply want to speak about what this means to senior citizens.

In 1991, we will have slashed from the purses and pocketbooks of all the senior citizens across Canada $6.6 billion. If we add up what all the senior citizens of Canada will lose by 1991 as a result of this provision, it will total $6.6 billion. This is an extremely serious matter. It is taking place at a time when most senior citizens are simply struggling to survive.

My mother and father are two of those struggling senior citizens. They receive OAS and GIS benefits. The lifestyle that they are able to afford today is a very modest one. When I find that the Government is going to take from the pocketbooks, rip from the hands and slash from the wallets of senior citizens $6.6 billion over the next five years, I say that something is very seriously wrong with the Government's approach to reducing the deficit or whatever else it wants to use to justify this unbelievable measure.

Needless to say, hardest hit will be senior women. Today, 60 per cent of senior women are living below the poverty line. This measure will simply make that situation worse. Today, in 1985, 1.8 million senior citizens live below the poverty line. They live in poverty, but the Government is now planning to take, over the next five years, nearly $1,500 from each of their incomes. That is why we felt it was appropriate to have this debate today. That is why we are collecting petitions from every area of the country. To be fair about this, we are trying to bring some pressure to bear on the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who are responsible for this dastardly deed.

Over the last number of days as this problem has sunk into the minds of the people across the country, the airlines coming to Ottawa have been filled with delegations representing all kinds of organizations that have concern for seniors. The Association of Jewish Seniors from the metropolitan area of Toronto representing 5,000 seniors, the Ontario division of the Canadian Pensioners Concerned representing 10,000 seniors, the United Senior Citizens of Ontario representing 300,000 seniors, the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the Canadian Council for Social Development, the National Council of Welfare, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women are representing hundreds of thousands of senior citizens across this country. As these groups have visited the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare and Members, they have been unanimous in their condemnation of the deindexing of senior citizens' pensions.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that he has been talking to all kinds of senior citizens' groups and meeting with individuals. Today during Question Period, I asked him if he could, to enlighten the House, name a single one of whom he has spoken. We know of all kinds of groups that have approached the House of Commons saying that they condemn this measure because it will cause undue pain and suffering and will result in hundreds of thousands more senior citizens reaching poverty levels. I asked the Minister if he could name a single group which supports him. He could not do so. He mumbled and fumbled around and bafflegabbed a little bit, but he could not name a single group in Canada that supports this particular aspect of the Budget. I find that despicable.

The Minister of Finance has said that he cannot bring in a minimum tax at this time because he must consult with a variety of groups and with the provinces. Perhaps that is fair. He said that he could not now bring in changes to the corporate tax system because he must consult for months and months with the various corporations and corporate organizations. However, there was no consultation, no discussion, no visitation and no meetings before the Government imposed the deindexing of senior citizens' pensions.

Government Members spoke to no one. As a matter of fact, as I indicated at the outset of my talk, they misled the people of Canada. The Prime Minister and government Members said that they would not deindex pensions. They are honourable Members. I suppose the people felt that they had to trust the Prime Minister when he said that he would not do that. It came as a real surprise when that in fact was exactly what he did.

I would like to urge the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare to start listening not only to Parliamentarians from the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party who, in their role as opposition Members, feel an obligation more than ever before to represent the voices of seniors as we hear them through petitions and the letters we are receiving, but to listen to government Members as well. After all, we have heard the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell), the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), though they are Conservative Members, condemn this particular aspect of the Budget and encourage the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who says that he fights for seniors, to do just that. They are urging him to meet with the Minister of Finance to say that this measure is unfair, unjust and must be stopped.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare explained to us earlier today that the reason he is supporting this grab from senior citizens is that we need to reduce the deficit. We all know that we must reduce the deficit. However, there is a more appropriate way to do that than on the backs of those people who built this country. Our parents, our grandparents and our friends fought during the wars and were here during the Depression years. They built this country. To ask them to shell out an extra $1,500 each over the next five years in order to assist us in reducing the debt is, I think, absolutely inappropriate. If we need money, and we do, to reduce the debt, let us go elsewhere for it.

Let us recognize that each year we as a Parliament approve in one form or another tax concessions to large corporations to the tune of billions of dollars. Many of those tax concessions or, as I call them, tax loopholes, are not required and are non-productive. Perhaps they have never been required. However, because of lobbying in the past, we have introduced this measure and that measure. There are dozens of them on the books. Anyone who is honest will say that many of these tax giveaways to corporations are non-productive and do not result in any gain to the country. As a matter of fact, they sometimes result in a net loss to the country. I am thinking of the tax deductions that exist for corporations that are able to deduct the cost of money used for mergers and take-overs. It results in job lay-offs. It results in corporate concentration which is not necessarily in Canada's best interest. Let us turn to some of those people.

We have heard of the capital gains provision in the Budget. The people who make their living from capital gains will not have to pay any tax on the first half million dollars which they accumulate over the next few years. That would be appropriate for farmers who are selling their land to provide for their pensions. It could also be appropriate for small-businessmen who use that money for the same purpose. However, if that provision is used by people to obtain capital gains from investments in the Caribbean, Hawaii, Florida or Palm Springs, is not right. We are asking senior citizens to pay an extra load, while at the same time the folks who speculate in international markets do not have to pay capital gains in Canada. It is not right. I would hope there would be one Member in the House, particularly from the Conservative benches, who would stand up and say that the provision for capital gains which is derived from land speculation should not be condoned. I cannot believe it.

It is not only members of the New Democratic Party who have been saying that it is a problem. Newspapers have been filled with editorials about it. I would like to quote from an article which was written by Leonard Shifrin, who writes regularly on economic issues. He has written a number of articles about the Budget, and I would like to read into the record one paragraph of one of the many articles. The article reads:

> Eliminating the first three per cent of inflation indexing means pushing the poorest pensioners $100 further into poverty next year, $200 further the following year, and so on—an appalling prospect under any circumstances. But giving that money to rich investors through effectively scrapping the capital gains tax is, as one social activist put it, "breathtakingly evil."

As parliamentarians, we are all aware that a number of tax breaks have been given to certain individuals. Mr. Shifrin's article continued:

> According to the most recent figures from Revenue Canada, the half-of-one per cent of tax filers with incomes over $100,000 account for 43 per cent of all capital gains.
> That means in 1990, when the new capital gains exemption is in full effect, those with incomes over $100,000 will get more than $600 million in tax benefits.
> In that same year, the poorest senior citizens—supplement recipients—will lose $700 million in pension benefits.

Pensioners will not receive the pensions which are due to them, while at the same time certain individuals, particularly those in the upper income levels, will receive hundreds of millions of dollars in additional tax breaks.

A few days ago in Montreal, the Minister of Finance bemoaned the fact that there were far too few rich people in Canada. What we are hearing today from a number of individuals is that we have far too many poor pensioners in Canada. The capital gains provision will place more pensioners below the poverty line. I do not understand why people, of any political persuasion, would support this policy, which is taking money from the purses and wallets of senior citizens, and at the same time giving hundreds of millions of dollars in tax breaks to upper income earners in Canada.

It has been a privilege to have had the opportunity to participate in this debate. I hope that my colleagues opposite will explain how capital gains which is derived from land sales in Florida will be a good thing for Canada, when the Government is asking the senior citizens to bear a very great burden.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that NDP members continue to talk about owning a condominium in Florida and making a capital gain on that property. Today, most Canadians who own properties in Florida place them in corporations. Otherwise, if anything should happen to the owner, the property would be subject to succession duty, which consists not only of the capital gain, but also of the base value of the property. Therefore, all Canadians have been advised to place the property in a corporation. That capital gains would not be of any benefit to the corporation, it would only be of benefit to the individual. I cannot rationalize the Hon. Member's statement that the people who own property in Florida will realize a capital gain. It will not work. It is not there to be made.

The Hon. Member and I have been colleagues in the House for the last six years. He and I have talked about various investments. He has given to me some very sound recommendations. I am sure that, personally, he is in favour of the capital gains provision, because he knows that it is important to have investment by average Canadians in the economy. I would like to hear his personal feelings. I would like to have him forget that he is a member of the NDP for a minute.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, somehow I feel that if I am not standing here in a loincloth and living in a cave, then I am not a responsible New Democrat. I cannot believe the criticism which has been levelled at me. I happen to know a number of New Democrats who are in business. They run successful businesses. I find the line of discussion a little peculiar.

First, I do not think that I mentioned the matter of a condominium in Florida. I tried to explain, during my presentation, that the particular aspect of deindexation was asking a senior citizen, over the next five years, to forgo increases of almost $1,500. The Minister of National Health and Welfare explained that the money was required to reduce the debt and that senior citizens would not get what they were promised during the election campaign because of that. In my remarks, I said that there might be other ways to reduce the debt. I do not think that it should necessarily be done on the backs of senior citizens. I indicated that capital gains could be used and I quoted from a learned economist who frequently writes in various publications in Canada. One of his articles reads:

—the half-of-one per cent of tax filers with incomes over $100,000 account for 43 per cent of all capital gains.

In other words, we are talking about a very select few. While I support the capital gains provision as it pertains to farmers and small-businessmen, I do not support the fact that people can obtain capital gains from land speculation in Palm Springs, or by selling property in the swamps of Florida, and that they will not have to pay capital gains on their activities outside Canada. Surely, we should treat Canadians with some respect. We should recognize investment in Canada, not on a global scale. If the provision was restricted to Canadian farmers and small-businessmen, then I would feel much different about it. Why not collect the hundreds of millions of dollars which will be lost each year in forgone taxation, rather than collecting it from the senior citizens of the country?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not respond to the point which I made. I would like to make another point. I would ask him not to use statistics such as those which he used. He talked about 43 per cent of capital gains going to people who earned over $100,000. The provision is limited to $500,000, which will be phased in over five years. It will only affect, in today's dollars, small businesses. There is a small smoke-shop in my riding which, when it started, was worth approximately $10,000. Now it is worth approximately $250,000. We are not talking about wealthy Canadians. Of course, they will receive a benefit on the first $500,000. The provision is benefiting the small-businessmen. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said that she would support unlimited capital gains for farmers. Farmers with $500,000 in investment have a fairly substantial operation, and $500,000 is a reasonable investment for a small business. That is what it is addressed to. It is not going to be even the amount of money which is shown in the Budget. I challenged that figure already, by the way. It is not even that amount of money in the first two years. It is a small amount of money. Keep in mind that Hon. Members opposite are interested in creating jobs and we are interested in creating jobs. This is going to create jobs because it is going to encourage people like us, if we were not in this place, to start businesses and create jobs and employ Canadians.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, both the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party are using a tactic, which I think is a scare tactic, on the seniors of this country, and that goes against the grain. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) fell into the same trap today. I thought he was going to miss it when he started because he said, in connection with the lack of indexing on the old age security, that a pensioner would lose, I believe, $64 in 1986. That is bad enough. That is $5 a month and $5 is an awful lot to some of our senior citizens.

Then the Hon. Member goes on and goes on and tells us that by 1991 we are going to take $6.6 billion out of the pockets of the senior citizens. The Hon. Member knows that that is not correct. A Budget is made for one year. The national energy policy, which is one of the worst policies I have ever seen, did not last forever. The next Budget made some changes in it. Again, who knows, inflation may go down and there will be no loss whatsoever.

The Opposition is assuming the worst possible picture of the highest inflation, and then extending it for years, when those Hon. Members know very well that Budgets come down every year. They are assuming that that is the case. When one uses that type of tactic, in my view it is a scare tactic, and that is not being fair to the senior citizens of this country. There is no way that $6.6 billion is going to be taken out of the pockets of our senior citizens. Our senior citizens know that. What bothers me is when a little lady who has spent her life working and depends on her pension starts to fear that these large sums of money are going to be taken away from her. That is a scare tactic. It's not right. You can tell her that she may lose something if inflation goes up, or if inflation remains at the same point in 1986, but let us not go into 1987, 1988, 1989 or 1991. That is not being fair to the senior citizens of the country. I would bring to the attention of all Hon. Members in the Opposition, including both leaders, that when they use this type of argument, they are being unfair to the senior citizens of this country.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond briefly to my hon. friend. The inflation rate in this country has been in excess of 3 per cent for many years, as the Hon. Member knows. Every projection I have seen for the next decade indicates that we can expect something at least in that range, if not higher. When a Government brings in a Budget which says it is going to deindex OAS, we assume that that is what it is going to do. We do not assume it is going to do that for just the next three months or even 12 months. If the Government says it is going to do that, we can only assume that that is what is going to happen over the next number of years.

The point I want to make, just to clarify for the Hon. Member, if that is what he wishes, assuming that the rate of inflation does not go under 3 per cent, and assuming that the Government does not change its policy, which I hope it does—my colleagues and I are going to do everything possible to make sure that policy is changed—then it will cost every senior citizen over the next five years an extra $1,447. That is what it will do unless the Hon. Member and his colleagues change their minds. I hope they do change their minds.

Mr. Taylor: You are saying "if".

Mr. Riis: Of course, I am saying "if" they don't change their minds—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Leo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion before the House today. Further to comments made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), I would like to talk about some of the positive aspects, since fear has been the watchword this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget measures proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) respect the universality of Old Age Security pensions. That is positive. Benefits to pensioners who are in need will continue to be fully indexed to the cost of living. That is positive. The Guaranteed Income Supplement, in addition to veterans' benefits, will be fully indexed to the rate of inflation. We must also remember that the universal Old Age Security pension will be partially indexed.

Let us be positive, Mr. Speaker, This afternoon, I had two reasons to be particularly pleased when I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) give the House the assurance that the Government would be studying closely the situation of elderly Canadians who are largely dependent on the government pension plan, to ensure that benefits paid to pensioners are adequate and will be increased if resources permit. That is positive. I think the Opposition could at least have noticed some of the positive aspects they heard about this afternoon. This decision will make it possible for the elderly to maintain a standard of living where they will have both quality of life and security, something they had yet to experience.

The Government is also to be congratulated on following up the recommendations of the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. That is positive and should be mentioned when we are talking to Canada's senior citizens. In fact, some 185,000 disabled will benefit from changes in the definition of disability for income tax purposes. A new definition has been developed in order to respond more satisfactorily to the special needs of all Canadians with serious handicaps.

Mr. Speaker, there is more. The Government is also to be congratulated on the proposals tabled by the Minister of Finance to amend the Pension Benefits Standards Act, which are aimed at improving the minimum standards for private pension plans regulated by the Act.

The proposed changes will make it possible for a greater number of employees to join pension plans and will give them the right to participate in the administration of pension funds. From now on, employees will get pension entitlement after two years of participation in a pension plan and will retain their pension entitlements when they move to new jobs. That is something concrete. Moreover, the new standards will require that pension plans provide benefits to surviving spouses of pensioners and, in case of marriage breakdowns, the value of pension entitlements will be split equally. Finally, pensions plans will be required to provide equal pensions to women and men retiring under the same circumstances.

When we add to this reform the improved tax incentives for retirement savings through higher deduction limits, we can rightfully say that these changes will further encourage Canadians to provide for their retirement years and set up for themselves adequate pension funds.

The PC government has also confirmed its commitment to a reform of the Canada Pensions Plan, including provisions for homemakers' pensions.

[English]

I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). The motion speaks of commitments made during the election campaign, and I welcome the opportunity to describe exactly what we said then and what we have now done. We are committed to offering senior citizens the means to preserve their independence, their privacy and their freedom. These were the terms set out by our leader, the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on July 26, 1984, in a Progressive Conservative Party program to reform public and private pension plans.

• (1720)

I would like to draw to the attention of Members of this House the over-all objectives: independence, privacy and freedom. It is even more important to note that when we made policy initiatives and announced them this summer during the campaign, we emphasized that the new Government was going to take office at a time when interest rates were high and the recovery was fragile. In that context, policy commitments were to be introduced over the course of our mandate, to complement and enhance our Party's national program for economic renewal.

I would like to suggest to Members of the House that it is in the context of a high deficit, high unemployment and a fragile recovery, that Government actions and Government choices have to be judged. With a deficit of about $35 billion, and debt charges of $22 billion, the debt has become a burden which cannot be ignored. Senior citizens have told us that they understand how difficult this Budget is on them, but they also understand what I have just said. Every responsible Canadian should be concerned when his or her Government spends more to service the debt than it spends on health care, pensions and transfers to the provinces for health and welfare.

When Canadians recognize that they currently spend more on servicing the debt than they do on health care and pensions, they know that someone has to take action. Surely such a situation, if left untended, cannot but further restrict individual decisions and government action in the future.

I heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) this afternoon use the analogy of an amputation, and she had no preference between amputating the hand or the arm. Let me tell you that Canadians understand it is always preferable to have an amputation than to have a slow and painful death. I believe that a Government acts in a fiscally and socially responsible manner when it proposes to get the deficit under control because it understands that not doing so will handicap our efforts to do things for senior citizens in the future. In trying to bring the deficit under control, we know that doing so provides the conditions necessary to retain social policies.

The worst thing we could do for people for people who depend on our social programs would be to ignore the problem until it was too late. Moreover, I further believe that every able Canadian should share in the burden of deficit reduction as they will also share in the recovery. There is no Canadian, young or old, fortunate or not, who wants the responsibility for sustaining unemployment. Equally, I know all Canadians are willing to contribute to the effort to increase employment and improve productivity.

Through its decision to modify indexation, it is important to note, of both revenues and expenditures, this Government will be successful in spreading the burden of deficit reduction as widely as possible while still retaining a degree of protection against unexpectedly high levels of inflation. Any increase in inflation above 3 per cent will be fully compensated.

There is one promise which this Government has kept above all, the promise we made to Canadians during the election campaign that we would allocate scarce resources to those most in need. A high degree of protection against inflation is maintained for pensioners in need. Full indexing has been maintained for those in receipt of the GIS and for payments to veterans. As well, as soon as the legislation can be passed, an additional 85,000 low income widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65 will become eligible for the spouse's allowance benefit. The vast majority of those who will benefit from this particular Bill are women who have been financially dependent for most if not all of their lives. There is no denying that these widows are amongst the poorest members of our society.

In the briefs moments I have had, Mr. Speaker, I tried to talk about positive things. However, I have some concerns. Members of Parliament were elected in September to speak for their constituents and to bring to this House the legitimate comments made by their constituents. Canadians voted for a change in September, but I believe, because I knocked on a lot of doors this summer, as did a number of my colleagues, that Canadians also wanted in their representatives a measure of a change in attitude. I have heard examples this afternoon of an attitude amongst Members of Parliament which I deplore. I heard the Hon. Member for Beaches say this afternoon in this House to those of us on this side that we are in for the fight of our lives. It concerns me enormously that a Member of Parliament would stand in this House and tell us that he and others are going out on the streets of Canada to orchestrate fear, start a fight and bring it back here to the House of Commons.

Members opposite, by their performance today and because of some things I have read in newspapers this past week, have spread fear among senior citizens in the same way that confidence men bilk people of their savings. I heard some of those Members talking about asking for signatures on a petition. It is not the responsibility of a Member of Parliament to walk around the country and say to people: "This Government is hurting you; sign here and we will do something about it."

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Duguay: On September 4 Canadians expressed confidence in this Government. We are acting in a way which responds to those things they said to us so clearly about putting the country's economy back in order. We are doing that. There are numerous examples of very positive things which have taken place. Since September we have created over 200,000 jobs, 89,000 in April alone. Today the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration brings down its third report. It talks about entrepreneurial immigration and suggests that would create 200,000 jobs and bring in over $7 billion of investment. We have done things to encourage in Canadians a confidence in their own ability, an ability we know they have.

What I have seen in this House today and what I have heard being said by Members opposite is that if we strike enough fear in the poor and aged, they will respond by signing petitions and we can get the Government to move back to the position of the former Government, that if you spend more money, somehow everything gets better. It must be made clear that when they say spend more money, they get that money from the same people they are now talking about trying to protect.

Canadians are prepared to share the good and the difficult in this Budget. I, too, have had calls from senior citizens, and let me tell what they expressed to me. They expressed a concern that their pensions will no longer be fully indexed.

Yes, every Canadian has expressed a concern in that the Budget effects them all, but every senior citizen who has had a conversation with me has ended up by saying that they understand this Budget is for the benefit of all Canadians and even though they are going to have a part in paying for the difficult financial situation the former Government gave us, they support it wholeheartedly and they are behind this Budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member concerns some of the measures in the Budget, particularly the indexation of pensions to senior citizens. There are approximately 6,000 senior citizens in my riding, each of whom will lose $100 a year as a result of the Government's disastrous Budget. That is an amount of some $60,000 that will be lost to senior citizens of my riding. Would the Hon. Member tell us if he believes it is fair that Lawrence Hanigan and Roy McMurtry, two Tory losers, will receive increases in salary of $38,000 a year and $22,000 a year for a total of $60,000 a year? Will he ask his Minister to cancel the salary increase of those two individuals and restore the indexation of the pensions of my constituents?

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to that question. Let me tell the Hon. Member that I too have a large number of senior citizens in my constituency. Many of them understand the meaning of the word "lost". The Hon. Member just entered the House, so he may have missed some of my earlier comments about striking fear in the older people in this country. Let me tell him about the fear that he just tried to strike into people. When we talk about something being lost, it is the loss of something that we already had. He is talking about incremental increases which would have been added if full indexation had been continued. No senior citizen will be losing money that he or she is currently receiving. They will be receiving more money than they had before. They simply will not be getting the full indexation that would have applied.

Mr. Boudria: What school of economics did that come from?

Mr. Duguay: Your projections are like what was said by the Club of Rome in the early 1970s when they used population graphs and studied food supplies to come to the conclusion that soon there would be nothing to eat on this planet. This is the kind of fear he is striking in senior citizens, and he ought to be more responsible as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, is the Member denying that senior citizens of this country will be losing $100 a year in real, inflation adjusted dollars? If he is denying that, will he table the statistics to prove otherwise? Everyone else, including backbenchers of his own caucus, have admitted that. If he does not, perhaps he could show us just how he calculates that my constituents and his will not be losing $100 each, in real inflation adjusted dollars, because of that disastrous Budget?

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, it should be very clear that when a Member of Parliament has to talk about the future of real, inflation adjusted dollars he cannot provide any real figures to support the future any better than I can.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), I would ask him to consider some figures reflecting very real losses. It is easy for him as a Member of Parliament to say that these losses to Canadian pensioners are national. He will not collect his old age pension for some 25 or 30 years. Therefore, it is rather easy for him to talk about what is and what is not a loss than it is for pensioners who will be suffering that loss. The annual cut to each pensioner in Canada as a result of deindexation will be $100 in 1986 and 1987. It will be $205 in 1988.

An Hon. Member: If they live.

Mr. Parry: The Hon. Member says "if they live". I hope the Tory Party, as a mass, is taking it somewhat more seriously than that. It will represent $315 in 1988; $423 in 1989 and $553 in 1990 because just as interest compounds when it is added, so accumulative reduction in an increase that would otherwise take place also compounds when it is deducted.

The Hon. Member accuses members of my Party of spreading "fear and misery", I believe were his terms. Then he quotes a study of the Club of Rome, saying that there will not be enough food left for people to eat. While I know that he was not specifically referring to Canadian senior citizens, he knows how easy it is for things to be taken out of context in the House. Are senior citizens telling him that they are prepared to bear these cuts? Is he, unlike the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), able to name a single senior citizen organization that says that senior citizens in fact support these cuts and are prepared to see them go ahead as a result of the Budget?

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, it is the third time that a member of his Party has read the same numbers into the record. We heard them the first time.

Mr. Boudria: You didn't understand them the first time.

Mr. Duguay: Those figures imply future reductions that are based on their projections. They do not take into consideration the fact that Budgets are presented in the House annually, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). They do not take into consideration that on January 1, 1986, the minimum tax will be brought in at the same time as these changes.

The point I am making is that Canadians are better served by their Members of Parliament when these questions are put into a broader perspective than focusing on one or two details and scaring senior citizens into believing that they must pay for all of the deficit reduction. The truth is that senior citizens and all Canadians have been asked to pay a little bit for the preservation of those things which we, as Canadians, have come to take for granted. Give senior citizens the choice of this minor reduction in their pensions—

Mr. Boudria: I thought you said a minute ago there was no reduction.

Mr. Duguay: Senior citizens have acquired a great deal of wisdom through their years. They know that the Government of Canada provides health and welfare benefits and transfer payments which go to other services which they use. Canadians know that this is a contribution that they are being asked to make for the benefit of their country, and I hope they will not be fooled by the fear tactics that I have seen in the House and before the press.

[Translation]

Mr. Harvey: How refreshing it is to listen to one of our colleagues, Mr. Speaker, especially when it is the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) who has clearly perused the Budget Speech, or at least the part we are dealing with now. I find it most unfortunate and deplorable that members of both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party should seize this opportunity to revive this period of the election campaign when they spread a wave of panic among our senior citizens who came to fear that the coming to power of a Progressive Conservative government would mean major cuts to their Old Age pensions.

Mr. Boudria: How right they were!

Mr. Harvey: Nothing of the sort has happened. What we should tell our senior citizens is that if the government does not get this country's deficit under control, all social programs will suffer, and that senior citizens will not be penalized in any way by the recent budget. Quite the contrary! The government will achieve deficit control by dealing with the 400 Crown Corporations which were created and poorly administered by the Liberals. That is where the Government wants to step in. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that what is going on at this time is very serious because all rationality is taken out of the Budget Speech. If it were possible, those people would make projections up to the year 2000. It is very serious! No one can predict what the inflation rate will be in 1988, 1989 and 1990. What we should tell the senior citizens is that their pensions will continue to increase gradually, unlike the sectors of Government spending most affected by the cut-backs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments are now over. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

● (1740)

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am also happy to make a modest contribution to the debate during this allotted day, and I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) on having introduced this motion, since it allows us to pursue the discussion of this issue in the House. What our friends opposite do not seem to realize, Mr. Speaker, is that the debate on the deindexing of old age security pensions has extended outside the House of Commons and that, whatever may be said in this place, it is impossible to open a newspaper, to listen to the radio or to watch television without reading or hearing comments by groups who are shocked at the way senior citizens are being treated by this Budget. The motion of the Hon. Member for Beaches therefore gives us an opportunity to do in this House what everyone else is now doing throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I find this Budget unfair and immoral in its treatment of senior citizens. A short while ago, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) told us that, in discussing this issue today, we were trying to scare people, but I must tell him that matters have reached another point because senior citizens are no longer afraid. Perhaps they were scared before the Budget was brought down. Now, it is too late to be afraid, the damage is done and senior citizens will suffer. The time for fear is past. It is now time for senior citizens to grieve and to fight. Do not accuse the Liberal Party of Canada of spreading fear! Senior citizens are well aware of what is happening to them. You can read it everywhere! Go to your constituencies! Some of you Conservatives have already been quoted this morning in the newspapers as reporting the message you received from senior citizens in your riding. Senior citizens realize that they will be losing money even though the previous speaker would have us believe they would not. It is quite simple. Indexing will be reduced by 3 per cent next year. Everyone knows that there will be some inflation. It is obvious that this will mean less purchasing power. It is quite clar.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said that, from what he could figure out, the cumulative loss in the purchasing power of a senior citizen would be $1,447 during the next few years. It is interesting to note that, by a strange coincidence, the Canadian Press, which made its own calculations, concludes that the loss in the purchasing power of senior citizens during the next five years will amount to $1,500. This does not come from the Liberal party or the New Democratic Party. These figures were arrived at by the Canadian Press. And if Hon. Members opposite would do their own calculations, they would come up with very similar figures.

The $1,500 amount figured out by the Canadian Press assumes a mere 4 per cent rate for inflation over the next few years. But we all know that inflation may, and unfortunately will probably exceed 4 per cent. What this boils down to is that senior citizens are being treated in an immoral, and again unfair way. What we find unfair is that this Government is asking those who are most in need, those who in our society have the least to contribute to reduce the deficit. When the Government says that the deficit must be reduced, I think that everybody agrees, not only in this House but all across Canada. But I would like to see how the Government would go about trying to convince senior citizens, who are in dire straits, that they must share in reducing the deficit. This is what we are opposing. This is what an increasing number of social groups across Canada are opposing. They are not opposing the Government's fiscal responsibilities, but the improper way it is dealing with the deficit problem.

[English]

Fiscal responsibility is a virtue. We agree with that. It is not a vice. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) seems to have turned into a Minister of Finance this afternoon and told us that we have to control the deficit. Everyone agrees with that. Where people disagree, where we disagree in the Opposition and where many more people disagree, more than the 40 of us and the 30 New Democrats, the thousands upon thousands of people, with the policy of the Government is when the Government asked the people who are the neediest to contribute to the reduction of the deficit. That is wrong. It is not the objective, not the goal, but the way, the means to do it. It is particularly wrong at a time when the Government has just shelled out a bonanza of $2.5 billion to the multinational oil companies through the Western Accord. How can the Government do that on the one hand and then ask the people who can bearly make both ends meet to contribute to the riches and to reduce the deficit?

[Translation]

When the Government is giving a present to a small number of people in Canada—and statistics show that a mere 4 per cent of Canadians pocket approximately 75 per cent of capital gains realized each year in Canada—when the Government gives them a tax holiday on capital gains without any obligation whatsoever, without requiring that the tax thus saved be invested to create jobs, without ever asking them to show how such a tax holiday will serve the best interests of Canada, I say that we cannot in the same breath ask for a contribution from those who are the most in need.

And the Progressive Conservative Party knows that very well. During the last election—I have here a document issued by the Progressive Conservative party outlining . . . it is a press release put out after a Conservative caucus meeting held in Sherbrooke on July 26, 1984. Not only there was the commitment to restore full indexation of Old Age Security as of January 1985, not only that, but on the first page, I will quote a paragraph which clearly shows that the Progressive Conservative Party understood those who are the most in need in our society. I am quoting three lines only: "These statistics show that more than 60 per cent of single women and 40 per cent of single men 65 and over have incomes falling below the poverty line".

With their eyes fully open, the Progressive Conservative Members have decided to launch an attach against those in our society who are the less in a position to defend themselves. And this in itself is cowardly and ill-advised.

[English]

One thing promised was that this Budget would be tough and fair. At least one promise has been kept, but it has been kept in reserve. It is tough on the poor and it is fair on the well off. That is something we cannot swallow on this side of the House. We will not accept it and we will fight for a long time. The Government will come to realize that we are not alone in this fight. We are here on the floor of the House of Commons just like a drum resounding what is being said on the streets of our nation. This Government has failed to recognize the difficulties of our older people.

This Government is asking for a sacrifice that our seniors cannot meet. This is the problem the Tories have to face. I am thankful the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has started to show flexibility. I am happy to hear him say that he might do something if financial conditions improve. He would be well advised to do that because he has no clue at this time about the way this movement could snowball across the country.

We are not scaring the old people. We are simply here delivering the message they are giving us on their behalf. They are not giving their message just to us but to Conservative Members of Parliament. They are probably also giving their message to the one independent Member of Parliament we have in this House.

As a matter of fact, let me outline what is happening within the Tory ranks. In the press this morning was the headline "Tory Backbenchers Battle Cabinet on Pensions". Let me quote a very respected Member of the Conservative Party, the former Minister of National Defence, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). He is quoted as saying that senior citizens "don't like" partial deindexation and that he would like to meet the senior citizens who, according to the Minister of Finance, "like it or appear to be in favour of it". He continued by indicating that senior citizens "are not stupid . . . They know that if there's 4 per cent inflation, their old age pension benefits and Guaranteed Income Supplement for the most needy pensioners is not going to go up by 4 per cent". Also he indicated that the Government had not "proved to me that that's where they should save money", and added:

I'm biased about this, but I'm glad we have a couple of months to come to our senses.

I think he is right and, with the opening shown by the Minister of Finance, maybe the Government will come to its senses. The Hon. Member for Victoria is not the only one who has spoken out on this. Another Member in a completely different category, a new Member who does not have the experience of the Hon. Member for Victoria, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), said:

I have had more telephone calls to my constituency office on this particular issue from senior citizens than I have had on anything else . . . since I was elected to Parliament.

That is clear enough. I understand the position of Hon. Members on the government side. I have sat on that side for years. I know it is not easy to stand and openly criticize the Government. I realize that. However, for God's sake, would it not be possible for discussions to take place within the Conservative caucus? Within the confines of walls, issues can be aired; Members can say what they have on their minds. They can tell the Minister of Finance that he has to do something about the pleas which they have received from pensioners in their ridings. However, I am grateful that a handful of Conservative Members had the courage to make these comments in public. Perhaps they are afraid that the discussions which have been going on behind closed doors are not sufficient. I am thankful on behalf of senior citizens that these Members have spoken out. If they had not done so, people would be left to believe that all Conservative Members felt that it was right to deindex the pensions. I would not like that because I would like some of them to be re-elected the next time; perhaps not as many as the last election but some of them.

[Translation]

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the members are not the only ones to object to the ruthless measures against senior citizens, especially those most in need. Now, one thing should be clear. We are not worried if the pension of a bank president or the old age pension of Mr. Trudeau, the former Prime Minister, are deindexed, but we are concerned about recipients of the guaranteed income supplement. Those people have no other income and most of them are under the poverty line. This is what concerns us as well as an increasing number of people throughout Canada.

This morning, I read that some groups were protesting the provisions of the budget dealing with senior citizens including the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, an organization highly considered in the country, the National Council of Welfare, the National Organization against Poverty, the Advisory Committee on the Status of Women, the Canadian Council on Social Development. All those organizations object to the measures included in the budget to reduce indexation for needy persons.

Those people have stated, and I quote: "The income of the poorer and most vulnerable among our senior citizens will be reduced over the years." They understand that the income of older persons will be reduced and I can only repeat very seriously what may seem presumptuous for a political party with only 40 members in this House, that we will continue to fight as long as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) does not alter his budget. I wish that warning to be perfectly clear and unequivocal.

[English]

We will not drop this fight until the Minister of Finance has decided to do something to correct this most blatant inequity, in our opinion and in the opinion of thousands of people across the country. We will not be alone, we 40 Liberals and 30 New Democrats in this House of Commons. Thousands of people agree with what we are saying. We are simply repeating what they are telling us. I see the Parliamentary Secretary is starting to nod his head.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I will tell you what I am hearing.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Maybe, maybe. I should like to refer to another aspect of the Budget. It has been indicated in the press and in various studies that 750,000 people will be pushed below the poverty line because of that deindexation. This is something that we cannot accept. This is something which we will fight. I repeat that we will fight to the end. Members on the government side of the House will probably be surprised to see the energy we will put into it.

[Translation]

What surprised me this afternoon as I listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) was, probably owing to Cabinet solidarity, the unexpected change in his attitude. Ministers of National Health and Welfare have generally been the defenders of the most underprivileged in our society, the elderly who get the guaranteed income supplement, but this afternoon he spoke as a Minister of Finance whose job is to control the deficit. That is the kind of speech he made. Surprisingly enough, he told us that benefits will not be guaranteed to the elderly 15 or 20 years down the road unless we immediately reduce the pensions now paid to the poorest Canadians. Strange indeed.

Mr. Boudria: Shame!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes, shame is the word to describe the situation.

All Ministers of National Health and Welfare have been that way, and even before the Budget the present Minister was hailed as the defender and champion of the poor. I am sure that Cabinet solidarity makes it harder for him to say clearly what he thinks in public, and I can appreciate that, but I dare hope he has already been in touch with the Minister of Finance to straighten out the situation.

We would not go back to the old system when old age security pensions were raised now and then by the Party in office. It was almost blackmail since the elderly never knew whether pensions would go up or not. Since 1976, indexation has been a regular process on which senior citizens can rely and which had become a must in our society. That is why the Party I represent—

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was wondering whether the Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition wanted to carry on the debate on this matter, considering that the Party which proposed it does not have a Member in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is the NDP.

Mr. Dick: That is the New Democratic Party. It does not have a soul in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That point of order is out of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I will just answer that point briefly. We are not here to support the New Democratic Party or the Conservative Party. We are here to support the aged and poor people who cannot look after themselves. That is all we are trying to do. I do not care who is present in the House. I know for what I am fighting.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), proceedings on the motion have expired. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in third reading of a Bill on which we have spent a lot of time over the past six months. I think it is worth hearkening back to the brave predictions of the Minister in December when he said that we would be through all this in January. It is now close to the middle of June, and we still have one final opportunity to try to convince the Government that it is necessary to reconsider seriously many of the ambitions which it has put forward.

While this particular Investment Canada Bill may not have generated wild surges of public opinion over the last two or three months, I predict that in years ahead it will be a matter of increasing public importance, concern and anxiety, and that the consequences of the actions taken by the Government will be as devastating and as disastrous for many ordinary Canadians as the actions taken in the present Budget. Unfortunately, too many Canadians will have to live with the consequences of this Bill. It is not an academic matter.

The Government has talked a great deal about jobs. It said that its primary ambition was to provide a change in foreign investment practices. I have no quarrel with that basic and very important preoccupation, because that has been our preoccupation as well in debating this Bill. We have been equally concerned about the jobs of Canadians and about the number of jobs which will be lost as a result of the actions taken by the Government through Investment Canada. We are concerned about the number of closed communities and industries which will have their technological advantages stripped. We are concerned about the way in which the capital will be used, not to produce employment, but simply to provide for unfair advantage.

Over the last several months we have seen that this Bill is really a blinkered ideological vision of a kind of continental dependency upon the United States. If anything has been galling about the remarks made by many Conservative speakers, it is their lack of trust and confidence in the country. They have said that we must base our economic renewal upon foreigners and that we must go ahead and depend upon their ability to invest in this country, not upon our own.

It is interesting that they turned down a number of amendments to the Bill which we introduced that would have made Investment Canada truly an agency to encourage Canadian investment. The reason they were turned down was because their primary interest, as we saw in the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in New York several months ago, was to go cap in hand to the corporate leaders of the multinationals and say: "Help us out". It is an awful admission of a new Government that it must rely upon those outside our borders to be the architects of our economic renewal. Somehow there has been this blind, almost voodoo-like belief that if all Conservative Members gather around in a circle and chant to themselves long enough and hard enough, economic growth will happen and somehow a form of mystical osmosis will take place.

Let me put forward, for example, a very critical contradiction which we see in the Bill between one set of economic policies and another. The Government has said clearly that it is interested in freer trade in Canada and that it wants to promote opportunity for Canadians to have a wider, broader market for their goods. I suggest that that is a very reasonable and useful issue to debate and examine, but if that is its concern about relying upon freer trade, then surely to goodness it has to re-examine exactly what it is doing in Investment Canada. What we are seeing here is the erosion of the ability of Canadian-based companies to compete more effectively in a freer international environment. If there is any one strong message which has come through all this debate, it is: Let us give our companies a fighting chance in this new, tough, competitive world. In fact, what this Bill will bring, if enacted, is the erosion, a reduction and elimination of that ability.

I am afraid what we will discover is that if we move on simultaneous fronts to this so-called open-door investment policy, without the ability to determine what the behaviour and performance of Canadian-based subsidiaries will be, we will find ourselves with a handicapped economy in regard to its ability to produce world markets. I would like to be precise in this regard. There is something in the order of 16,500 major enterprises in this country. Some 10,000 of those are foreign controlled. That is the highest percentage of foreign ownership in any country in the world. I would suggest if we move toward any form of continental or world free trade market, even as we proceed under the present GATT negotiations to a further reduction by 1987, that many of these subsidiaries will be required to act in a way which will substantially limit their independence of action.

We in the Liberal Party have great faith in Canadian entrepreneurs. What we have to pay particular attention to is the testimony given by Professor Glen Williams of Carleton University before the committee. He pointed out that contrary to the nice and pure economic models of a continental economist that if you look at the actual performance and behaviour of foreign-owned companies in Canada, there are a number of major institutional and structural impediments to their acting in a similarly economic and beneficial way when compared with Canadian-owned companies.

For example, we know that the demand for imports by Canadian-based subsidiaries is about five times higher than that of Canadian-owned companies. This is even with regard to raw materials. In other words, corporate headquarters sends down the message that these companies must buy from the parent, whether it is at the best price or from the most effective or productive enterprise. As a result, we are faced with companies which have become inefficient producers. We find that in areas such as data processing and in the purchase of machinery and services that the ambition of most Canadian-based subsidiaries of foreign-owned companies is to buy overseas at a much higher level and frequency than Canadian-based companies.

I would make the case to you, Mr. Speaker, that if foreign-owned firms bought their machinery and supplies in Canada to the same extent Canadian-owned firms do, then there might have been close to 300,000 additional jobs in Canada than there actually were in the past year. The actual economic subtraction of jobs in the country, which was created by this import demand of Canadian-based subsidiaries, has lost us close to 300,000 jobs in one year alone. The Minister is fond of saying that it is not a perfect world and that we will not see a total turnover. However, the point I am making is that the continued dependence upon this type of foreign ownership results in a substantial economic withdrawal from the country.

May I also point out that one of the major economic problems we face as a country is our balance of payments. This has an important impact on the rate of our dollar and our international financial standing. Last year, foreign-owned firms sent something in the order of $24 billion out of the Canadian economy. That amounts to approximately 30 per cent of their total sales. At the same time, Canadian-owned firms sent only $5 billion out of Canada, or some 8 per cent of their total sales. In other words, through this incredibly high dependence on foreign ownership, we have major financial leakage in the country.

The point I am making is that the Government is talking about opening the doors of trade, ensuring that Canadians can compete more effectively, while through the Bill before us it is maintaining and, in fact, enhancing, the type of handicap the Canadian-based companies have to compete with in an international environment. Canadian companies do not get the world product mandate. They do not get the R and D. They have a much higher level of dependence upon imports and sales. As Professor Williams also pointed out, they are subject to some of the whims and caprices of their parent corporations.

For example, let us look at what happened to Canadian General Electric in the past few months. The dividend sheet did not satisfy the stockholders of the new owners of the American-based General Electric Corporation, so the American-based president of that company ordered a stripping of the dividends and assets of Canadian General Electric to help bolster the balance sheet of the American-based company. What did that do to Canadian General Electric's ability to provide for more export markets and to provide for a stronger job-creation ability in Canada? It did nothing. In fact, it substantially reduced its ability to do those things.

In debate in the House and in committee, the Minister has been fond of trying to paint opposition Members as being afraid of the outside world. He should stop pretending that his own recipe for continental dependence and reliance upon the decisions of others is a fearless, new, brave entry into the economic order. I suggest that he is the one with the false bravado and that he has not been prepared to deal in a proper parliamentary way with the parliamentary and committee processes.

The Minister was not prepared to even look at constructive amendments that would help this Bill, amendments that would stay true to its objectives, but would improve upon them. That was probably one of the most disdainful performances by a Minister of this Parliament that I have seen in a long time. It was only through the total inadvertence and miscalculation of Members opposite that we were able to bring in a major amendment which the Minister had simply treated as a nuisance. It is an amendment that will protect people in the real estate field.

Evidence was given before the committee, as the Minister would know if he had bothered to read the record, indicating that the exemption related to real estate transactions was one of the things that led to the major real estate flips in Toronto and could lead to other forms of financial shenanigans like the Seaway and Greymac affair in which people were using foreign-owned, numbered companies based in Lichtenstein with no notification requirements.

We introduced an amendment to block that loophole and to make sure that foreign investment in real estate would be subject to review and notification. Fortunately, because government Members fumbled the ball, that provision will now be part of the law of Investment Canada. That did not happen because of any interest, responsiveness or sensitivity on the part of the Government but only because of the persistence of the Opposition.

Since then, a number of commentators have thanked goodness for the existence of that amendment because the figures in the Budget relating to the capital gains exemption and the proposals for the 6 per cent sales tax on materials will do nothing for renters but provide a greater risk for them. We introduced an amendment to provide protection for them.

What is before us is another example of Conservative camouflage. Conservative Members are saying that the economic renewal of Canada will be totally dependent upon the decisions of others who live outside of Canada and are saying that that is the new spirit of entrepreneurship that will exist in Canada. That is a total turn-around. It is the kind of thing that turns the world on its side, such as we have seen with other provisions of the Budget.

All kinds of groups came before the committee including Nova Corporation, McMillan, Binch and the Canadian Labour Congress. They all said that they were seriously concerned, as we move into the new international environment, about the capacity of Canadian companies to produce and respond to new competition, and they felt that that situation had to be corrected.

It is even more ironic if we look at the Budget. The Budget contains one of those grand ironies which we observe from time to time in Parliament. The Government, through its actions on pension benefits, is now offering a three-for-one sale to all pension funds in Canada. In attempting to entice them to invest in small business, the Government took off the lid so that $30 billion of pension funds can be invested in foreign ownership. That, together with the capital gains exemption, will mean that Canadians can now invest in Florida real estate, Swiss art or Chinese watches. The whole thrust of the Budget encourages an outflow of capital from Canada. Yet, the Minister has told us that the economic renewal will be based on capital which flows into Canada from other countries.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has opened up all kinds of sluice-ways which will ensure that billions of dollars of Canadian capital will pour out of the country. I predict that the net reduction which we have seen in the past two years will be geometrically multiplied over the next two or three years. It is ironic and silly. One part of the Government does not know what the other part is doing. Government members are falling all over themselves and contradicting each other with respect to the economic policy of the Government. There is no central strategy. There is no blueprint. It is a make-work project. The Government is the great critic of make-work projects, but it is the ultimate make-work project. Government members make the economic policy by the seat of their pants. There is absolutely no harmony to it other than the rhetorical flourishes.

However, if we look at the hard economic facts, the Minister of Finance is encouraging capital to leave Canada and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) thinks that some capital might flow into Canada. At the same time, by the admission of his own officials, the investment community in New York and other major foreign capitals, we are told that the net increase of new capital coming into Canada will be marginal.

It is no wonder that one of the most influential economic analysts in Canada, Informetrica, has predicted that by 1986 there will be a net loss of 80,000 jobs in Canada. This Government is the great producer of jobs? What the Government is bringing forward is such an economic horror show that it will scare off capital and jobs and leave a number of Canadian workers and communities vulnerable to takeover. Our technology will be stripped from companies and we will lose our ability to have an effective and competitive force in world markets.

Aside from the basic flaw in the economic reasoning of the Government, we object strongly to the way in which the Bill arrogates star chamber powers to the Minister. I defy any Member of this House to come forward with a piece of legislation which concentrates so much power and control in the hands of one Minister without any form of accountability. The Minister does not report to Cabinet, nor does he report to Parliament, yet he will be making decisions which will be worth billions of dollars and will affect every region of Canada without any cognizance except his own.

We saw how correct the Minister was in his flip-flop on the Domtar issue. He had to be soundly slapped down by the Prime Minister, by Members of the Opposition and the Quebec caucus because he had been insensitive to the economic interests of that region. We will find time and time again that the Minister, who has never shown much responsibility for economic development in the regions, will cause the Government incredible problems. I do not mind that. That is the Government's problem.

The amendments which we have tried to introduce would substantially improve the ability of Parliament to deal with these matters, and they would have made this better legislation. With that point, needless to say with the one exception of the amendment which we proposed—which we believed was a positive step forward—we will oppose the legislation.

• (1125)

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, through you to the Hon. Member, I hope he will be the first to agree that economics and getting people back to work was not the long suit of the Government of which he was a Minister. Will the Hon. Member tell the House just where—and I mean this quite sincerely—his economic policies differ from the social democratic economic policies of the people to his left?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if we could change the rules of Parliament to give me another 20 minutes, I would be glad to comply. The Hon. Member's question gives me an opportunity to clear up some mythology which has been perpetrated recently that somehow this Government, even in its first eight months or nine months in office, has been the great job creator. I would point out to the Hon. Member, because I was the Minister of Employment and Immigration for three years that we created as many jobs in 1980 as this Government is creating now. Between 1975 and 1979, in two of those years, we created 350,000 jobs, which is 100,000 more jobs than this Government will be creating this year. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that suggests that our economic policies were working pretty effectively. We had a very strong and major commitment.

During the period of recession, I would remind the Hon. Member because he was an Hon. Member of this House, we made a very clear, conscious decision that rather than exacerbating the problems of the worldwide recession we were all facing, we would maintain major investments in job-creation programs. We had the special capital recovery program with major investments into the municipalities. We had major job-training programs on which $1.4 billion was to be spent this year, which is about $500 million more than the Hon. Member's Government is spending on job training and development skills. Those were our kinds of interest.

As far as our philosophy is concerned, we believe that this country is a mixed enterprise. It needs investment by both private and public capital. It needs a partnership between the public and private sectors. It does not have some kind of fixed ideological blind side which says that only private enterpreneurship will work. We believe that the two, in combination, will work and we feel that that is the best prescription we can offer to the Government at this time.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the problem with all that the Hon. Member has just said is that—if my memory is sound—Canada had the highest rate of unemployment amongst the OECD countries for 1984. In other words, what the Hon. member's Government was doing was not working. It was working less well for the economy than any of the OECD countries from the standpoint of creating jobs. Does that not perhaps suggest to the Hon. Member that we have to try some new things such as encouraging the private sector?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, first, I would take issue with the Hon. Member. We did not have the highest unemployment figure. We only have to look at his Conservative compatriots in Great Britain to find a much higher unemployment rate than this country has faced. What Great Britain does not have is the kind of very severe regional disparities we do. There is a very thin economic base in parts of the Atlantic Provinces, in parts of northern Quebec and northern Ontario, and in parts of the area which the Hon. Member and I share as Hon. Members from western Canada. We have a large native population where there is no economic base. That is where the kind of public support about which we are talking is needed.

I have no argument with the need for new policies. I think that any Government at any time has to be always searching for better and alternative ways. One of the last acts I undertook as a Minister was in a major area of deregulation in the transportation industry, which I feel was a useful thing to do. I wish the present Minister would follow through on it. He has been holding back. That is an area where we could relieve a lot of government regulation and allow the private sector management to make their own decisions.

I agree that there are all kinds of areas where new innovation can be undertaken, but I am suggesting that if the Government's intention in this Bill, Investment Canada, is to encourage Canadian investment, it is going about it the wrong way. There is not much encouragement of Canadian investment. In fact, the argument we have made all along is that it is a total dependency upon foreign investment to help the Canadian economy. If the Minister had brought in a real Investment Canada Bill, we might have been prepared to support it.

• (1130)

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment on what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said about his Government putting more money in the Budget for training than we did. We were told by officials of Employment and Immigration when we looked into past programs, particularly the program for students, that the Liberal programs were very costly to administrate. That was why so much more money had to be put into the programs. The young people got less out of that program than they will out of the Challenge 85 program put together by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) for this summer. That seems to have been symptomatic of a lot of the programs his Government put forward. They were very costly in overhead and encrusted with bureaucratic rules. A lot of people were doing much less than they will in some of the programs we are now developing. This is one factor he should keep in mind when he is bragging about more money being put in his programs. It was not necessarily a very efficient spending of money.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the Hon. Member realizes that Motion No. 24 was adopted by inadvertence the day before yesterday simply because there had not been sufficient advance notice that the question was going to be put. Contrary to what he claimed a moment ago, the amendment did not change anything since we had already taken that situation into account and solved the problem that existed in 1976. The only possible outcome of his amendment motion was to re-establish FIRA's previous standards in that respect and, his claim notwithstanding, the situation remains unchanged.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the average cost of a summer job under our program was about $3,000 per student, which is a very economical way of putting a lot of students back to work. It also managed to get a lot of people working very quickly, which this program is not doing. A lot of students are still waiting because of the delay in getting applications out. I do agree that using the wage subsidy is a useful approach, but I would remind her that we pioneered that approach. We brought in the NEED program in 1983. We put up $500 million and we were able to generate $700 million of private investment at the same time. We proved that we could generate a fair amount of private, voluntary and provincial sector capital, and I am glad to see that the new Government has picked up on that, but I do not think they should claim paternity for it because I introduced the program in 1983.

As to the other matter, I simply say that she should go back and read the amendment. Under the Bill as presented, all real estate transactions were exempted from any requirement for notification or review. They are now subject to that review. Therefore, a very important area of investment which was totally ignored by the Government will now be subject to at least notification. It will give the agency concerned the opportunity to determine whether there are untoward things taking place, so I think it is a very important protection for the tenants. I hope the Hon. Member will use her good offices to encourage the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to use that particular measure in an effective way because he does not seem to care much about whether he really reviews things or not.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). Very short, please.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that the Hon. Member is not in touch with the reality of what is happening in the field. In the oil fields of his own province, as well as in Saskatchewan, because of the direction this Government has taken on both Canadian and foreign investment, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is booming today, something that did not happen under his Government. If you go to Estevan, Weyburn, or Melita, Manitoba, the Member's own province, you will find that unemployment is the lowest ever. There are 35 or 40 drilling rigs working today when there was only one when his Government was in power. The confidence which has been displayed—

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member that the 10 minute period for questions and comments has expired. Debate.

Mr. Axworthy: May I respond?

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member the 10 minute period for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Axworthy: Could I just be allowed to respond briefly to—

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member that the 10 minute period has expired. Debate.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I rather welcomed the fact that you first called upon the Hon. Member who has just spoken because it gives me an opportunity to speak immediately after him. I wanted an opportunity to hear him out once again, to weigh whatever arguments he may put forth with respect to the Bill before us at third reading stage, because I have been looking at some 45 hours in the House and 40 hours in committee for something of substance which I feel would make a significant contribution to this debate on the legislation we are now considering. I am disappointed again. The tragic thing as far as the socialist axis over here is concerned, is that they will not accept the raw facts of the past. Perhaps 10 years ago the Hon. Member could have risen in his place and said many of the things he said today, but why does he do it in 1985 when we have a record of 10 years to judge what their policy with respect to FIRA has led to?

I want to be mainly very positive today. I think we are entering a new era. I also think it is very unfortunate that, before the new era even begins, people attempt so desperately to discredit the legislation and take us back to the past and make arguments which have proven to be unworkable. Let me give the facts. Since FIRA was put in place, up until the end of 1984, the total inflow of direct foreign investment in this country dwindled to $3.2 billion.

Mr. Axworthy: From what?

Mr. Stevens: I say it dwindled because we find that while there was a very refreshing inflow back in 1972 and earlier, year by year, accelerated by the National Energy Program in 1980, we find that it went into a deficit position in 1981 and 1982. In 1980 this country had a net inflow of only $180 million. In 1981 there was a net outflow of $2.9 billion. In 1982 it was a net outflow of $2 billion. In 1983 it was $150 million of net inflow, and in 1984 it was $1.8 billion net inflow.

Mr. Axworthy: Not bad.

Mr. Stevens: If we add up the figures—

Mr. Axworthy: You just destroyed your argument.

Mr. Stevens: Can you believe it, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry—

Mr. Axworthy: That is not a bad record, $1.8 billion.

Mr. Stevens: He says that is not bad. A Conservative Mulroney Government says that kind of record is totally unacceptable in Canada.

• (1140)

Mr. Stevens: It is unacceptable because in the 10 year history of FIRA, the net inflow was $3.2 billion. The inflow to the United States from other areas of the world during the same period was $111 billion. If we had had even 10 per cent, which people say is the fair share for Canadian participation, we would have had $8 billion more of foreign investment in the country than we actually enjoyed. That is the record which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) says is not bad. That is totally unacceptable.

What can be said about the so-called Canadianization on which members of the previous Government like to comment? During the FIRA years, Canadianization amounted to $16 billion. However, 42 per cent of that was due to the state taking over and nationalizing Canadian companies. The net amount of private Canadianization was $9 billion. I am very pleased to be able to say today that in nine months, through a new sense of confidence in the country, we have been able to facilitate privatization on behalf of Canadians to the amount of $6.6 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Here is the record. The Gulf Canada deal alone, amounting to $5.6 billion, raises the level of Canadianization in the petroleum and gas industry from 40 per cent to 45 per cent. In addition, we were able to facilitate the Texaco deal, amounting to $485 million of Canadianization. The acquisition by Corena-Bancorp amounted to $39 billion. The acquisition of Dominion Life by ManuLife amounted to $157 million. The Imperial Life acquisition amounted to $360 million. Other companies acquired over $6.6 billion in total assets. I can only suggest that that comes from the new sense of confidence that Canadians are once again feeling in their own country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: It is interesting that as this socialist axis has tried to delay the Investment Canada Bill, we have been getting on with the job of creating jobs in the country through the approval of various non-Canadian investments totalling almost $4 billion, which will result in 26,000 jobs being either saved or created in the country. That is the difference between the facts and the type of discredited argument put forward by the Hon. Member.

That is the background. I will now speak about the future. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry said that we were not getting on with the positive aspects. Passage of the Investment Canada Bill would give the agency the power to do something positive. Under Section 5, there is a specific provision which will, for the first time, enable Investment Canada to go forth and seek Canadian and non-Canadian investment which will help to create the wealth and jobs that the country needs. That is why I am anxious for the legislation to be passed. To the very best of our ability we must prepare ourselves to deal with a volatile economic climate in the world today. In anticipation of the passage of this legislation we have been talking to agency officials about that.

We believe that we must accept the world in the competitive state to which it has evolved. To that end, the Investment Canada Bill will help us to bring together Canadians and non-Canadians in partnership deals, and to blend technology, capital, and people for the productive creation of jobs in the country. We ask all Members of the House to join our spirit of enterprise because it is that spirit of enterprise which will give our economy the momentum it has been lacking for over 10 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: So much for the future, now let's come back to the present.

Mr. Stevens: By actively encouraging and seeking out investment, Investment Canada will attract new ideas and technologies, give Canadians access to new markets and new capital, and most important, contribute to the creation of new jobs. It is totally inexcusable that the previous Government left areas such as Cape Breton Island with a 29 per cent unemployment level. That will not continue under our Government. The Hon. Member has asked me to speak about the present. Since the Budget was announced, 36 new initiatives have been proposed, which will be announced in due course, with respect to the island of Cape Breton alone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: That is the type of action that will be seen from this Government. Jobs will be created where they are needed in this fine country. Mr. Speaker, do you notice that when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry hears of success, job creation, and an expression of interest in bringing down the 29 per cent unemployment level in Cape Breton he runs from the House?

It is clear that international investors see Canada as a superb location for joint ventures and licence arrangements. We should go out and capitalize on that feeling. Canadian businesses have considerable market experience in the North American market. We suggest they can capitalize on this. We can gain through our technology leadership. We can gain through our tremendous knowledge in marketing, distribution, telecommunications and transportation. These are the things we are hoping to make more positive use of. We should not say no to the non-Canadian who may want to participate. We should be saying in a positive way "let us sit down and talk about it, and if there is enough benefit for Canada, by all means come in and join us in our new prosperity".

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Those are heady words.

Mr. Stevens: Many non-Canadian companies have established or are establishing in Canada to serve North American and even world markets. This is something we would like to develop further. We believe Canada can be held out as virtually the ideal location to get established not only to serve Canada and its people, but the people of North America. It is a stepping-stone. Let us be proud of it. We have one of the finest peoples and one of the finest countries in the world. Why up to this date, certainly not under the previous Government, have we not been willing to work with non-Canadians in developing that tremendous potential?

I would suggest that many Canadian corporations with expertise in advanced technologies and experience in the North American market are ready to join forces with non-Canadian investors and corporations to capitalize on that expertise and experience to which I have been referring. These kinds of international ventures with Canadians and non-Canadian businesses can have a distinctively positive impact on our economic growth. To bring about the economic growth Canada must have, Bill C-15 will help us to present the most positive and inviting image of our country and ourselves to Canadian and non-Canadian investors alike.

The world recognizes Canadian accomplishments, and we should recognize that. This is the way of the future. There is a will in this country to stimulate investment. There is a determination to revitalize the economy. There is a new-found commitment on the part of the Canadian Government to consult and co-operate with the business community, with the labour community, with the provincial governments, all to ensure that most positive and productive relationship possible. The new investment policy imbedded in Bill C-15 is a plan for collaboration for a concerted effort by the public and private sectors.

Investment Canada will work closely with other federal departments. It will, of course, work with our Canadian embassies in foreign lands, with our consulates, and with business associations across the country to promote investment and jobs here. This is a joint venture between all of the important players in Canada for the benefit of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I would suggest to Hon. Members, as is so evident in the debate that has developed in this House, that the two Opposition Parties are voices from the past. They feel because they have put programs in place which have been discredited, such as FIRA, being reactionaries, they do not want them changed. They say maintain the old, even if "old" is not working. We say let us change to the new. There is a better way.

Canadians want to break with the past. During the election campaign last fall, Canadians told us they wanted to see FIRA replaced with a more practical and dynamic investment policy. We have done that with Bill C-15 now before us. Bill C-15 is practical and a dynamic investment policy.

As we know, a recent Gallup poll showed that the majority, 62 per cent, of Canadians think that the Government should encourage foreign investment here. Bill C-15 will do that while retaining a review mechanism to safeguard our national interests. In voting today for final passage of Bill C-15, we are voting with the mood of this country. People want what is in Bill C-15. I invite all Members to vote with the Canadian public. Sixty-two per cent of Canadians say we are right, and as far as the unemployed are concerned, they know we are right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is very good of the Minister to bring statistics before the House this morning. I would like to ask him from where his statistics come. I have in front of me statistics most recently released by Statistics Canada that deal specifically with gross in-flows of direct foreign investment into Canada. This is, after all, and I am sure the Minister will agree, what we should be looking at in order to test the impact of FIRA.

According to these statistics, Mr. Speaker, the record looks something like this: In 1980 inflows by foreign investors for direct investment in Canada amounted to $4.2 billion; in 1981, they amounted to $4.7 billion; in 1982, $3.9 billion; in 1983, $3.5 billion and in 1984, $3.6 billion. If you include as well the purchases, the acquisitions, undertaken by specific foreign companies of Canadian businesses, those figures change slightly, but basically you have a period from 1980 through 1984 when in fact the statistics from Statistics Canada demonstrate very little change whatever with respect to inflows of direct foreign investment into Canada.

I have identified the source of my statistics. I have been very precise about what they represent. Could the Minister please comment, first, on these statistics? Second, could he give us a sense of where he got the outlandishly different statistics which he claims represented direct inflows of foreign investment into Canada?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, perhaps unwittingly the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has demonstrated once again why the New Democrats working in such close conjunction with the previous Government have led us into the type of deficit position we have. The figures to which the Hon. Member refers are gross figures. He does not take into account the funds that have been leaving the country. It is the net figure that is the important figure. You can see a clear illustration of the woolly type of thinking that comes out of the socialist ranks.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Outflow has nothing to do with FIRA.

Mr. Stevens: They are talking about figures without taking into account what is the net position at the end of the year or the day or the month. The figures which I gave are the most meaningful ones on balance. Has Canada attracted more investment or has more investment gone out of the country in the various years to which I referred? If Hon. Members check that, they will find that on balance the net inflow into Canada was $3.2 billion over a 10-year period.

• (1200)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the statistics, which provide all sorts of details with respect to both inflows and outflows, demonstrate that by far the great bulk—and I could give him the specifics—of the outflows about which he speaks represents acquisition of direct investment interest from non-residents by residents of Canada, in fact the very Canadianization process to which he referred positively and approvingly within his speech? Why does he bring those statistics into the debate? They undermine his position rather than support it.

Mr. Stevens: Again the Hon. Member, presumably unwittingly, raises something to which I referred earlier. The fact is that 42 per cent of what he refers to as Canadian residents are Canadian Governments. It is a nationalization program to which he is referring, wherein almost $7 billion of the figures that they attribute to Canadianization are federal and provincial Governments taking over concerns which used to be foreign-owned and, in the case of Petro-Canada or something like that, simply calling them Canadian without making it abundantly clear that it is nationalization and state ownership about which they are talking.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Minister refers to a woolly statement, I would only say, looking across from me, that it is the first time I have ever seen a goat with wool between its ears. The fact of the matter is that I have never heard such incredible, economic convolution in all my life.

The Minister points to net capital outflow. I presume this is a Minister who has some economic responsibilities in the Government. Is he so blind and so ignorant that he is unaware of the fact that the United States has become the central focus of large movements of capital from every country in the world because of its high interest rates? The entire international monetary system is being put in real jeopardy by the inflationary push around the world, and the Minister does not even take note of that fact. God knows why we are in trouble with the Budget, if this is the kind of economic analysis we receive from the Government's chief economic Ministers. Of course there is a net outflow of capital, as there is a net outflow of capital from every other country, because of the policies taken by the Reagan administration and because interest rates are drawing that flow into that country.

If this is to be a reasonably responsible debate, it seems to me that the Minister has some obligation to display—and I know he loves to tell a good story, not get confused by the facts—a tidbit of relevance to reality.

If the Minister is so concerned about the net outflow of capital to the United States in particular, did he personally oppose the proposal and proposition put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), which has taken a very large pool of capital under pension funds, some $30 billion according to the estimate in this week's edition of the Financial Post, and is offering it as a carrot in a three-for-one sale so that large pension funds can now have enormous leakages of Canadian capital into foreign countries in order to get them to invest in small business? If he is as concerned about net accounting as he seems to be, why did he agree with such a proposal, which will have as its end result a massive haemorrhaging of Canadian capital out of the country, not being used for investiment here at home?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the phenomenal interest rate increases which have occurred. However, he is overlooking the facts, and it is the facts with which I want to deal today. During the years to which I referred, Canadian interest rates were consistently higher than American ones. The fact is that in 1981, at a time when we had a net outflow of capital of $2.9 billion and higher interest rates than the United States, the Americans with lower interest rates had a net inflow of $22 billion. In 1982, we had a net outflow of $2 billion, with higher interest rates than the Americans. At the same time, the Americans had a net inflow of $10 billion. Those are lost jobs in Canada that we are talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise, first, on a point of order if I may. According to the Order for today, lengths of speeches are pursuant to Standing Order 35(1). Unlimited time exists for the Minister moving the motion and the Member replying immediately after the Minister. I just want to confirm whether that is correct.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the point of order. Once again, due to a certain hesitation on the part of the benches opposite, when it became the initial responsibility of the Minister to rise to his feet to move the motion, he did not. Therefore, we stepped in and Mr. Speaker ruled, before you took the chair, Sir, that the speeches would be limited to 20 minutes. That was the basis upon which both the Minister and I made our remarks, and I presume the same standard would apply.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: With due deference to my House colleague, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it is not the way things happened. The fact is that the Chair read the proposed motion to amend the Bill and asked whether we agreed. Those who did said yea, and that is when the Minister rose. The Chair realized that the Opposition did not seem to appreciate what was going on, that the amendment was going to be defeated, and the Whip of the Official Opposition then rose in a hurry and urged his colleague to stand up, and that is how they got sidetracked—

Mr. Gauthier: I want to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker. What the Hon. Member has just said is completely wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I think it is out of order anyway.

In answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon)—

[English]

That would have been the case, had the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) risen first to address the Bill. In these circumstances it is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who rose in the House, so we are proceeding according to the rules with 20-minute speeches and 10-minute periods of questions and comments.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, thank you for clarifying that matter. I must say that it is a pleasure to come to the end of this debate, frankly, because the debate has been an exercise in fallacious arguments and in trying to push through, in an arrogant fashion, what can only be considered irresponsible legislation. I hope, after the Bill is finally shoved through the House, that there will be some return to civility on the part of the Government.

• (1210)

I actually hesitated to intervene in the debate this morning because I expected that somehow out of the rafters of the House the ghost-like voices of Sir John A. Macdonald and John Diefenbaker would be heard. I can almost hear their voices now. I can hear Mr. Diefenbaker, with jowls shaking, looking down in concern at the Government and seeing its vision—this new vision for Canada of a stepping-stone society. The national policy of John A. Macdonald has become a stepping-stone economy of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

I believe that tells us what this historic debate has actually brought us to in the House of Commons. I think back to the initial press conference of the Minister quite some time ago and his idle prediction that within two or three months the legislation he proposed would be law. It is not law. First, it is not law—and I am explaining here why we have fought it so strongly—because it is a deeply flawed, dangerous and irresponsible Bill born not out of the concerns and needs of the economy but, rather, out of ideological myth. It is a Bill shaped not to suit the modern conditions and challenges which the economy faces but, instead, the whims of a reactionary Minister.

It is a Bill which has been supported by fallacious and irrelevant arguments of which we just recently had an example with respect to the statistics brought before us today. We have heard arguments which have been designed to obscure what the Bill is attempting to do, as opposed to confronting the serious problems our country faces and trying to do something about them. For the Conservative Government of the country, the arguments surrounding the Bill have been an exercise in propaganda, not an exercise in honesty. The Bill before us has been driven through the House with insensitivity and a type of autocratic arrogance and pride which has made the whole process unhappy, graceless and an insult to the parliamentary traditions of the country. It has been the process typical of a bully, not of an economic leader.

I wish to say how pleased and proud I am of the New Democratic caucus. In its struggle, that caucus has helped to keep the Bill before us from becoming law. I am pleased about that for two reasons. First, as a result of that action, certain takeovers in the country have been subjected to the process of review under FIRA. Had the Bill been in place, they might not have been subjected to a review at all, or to a much weakened process of review.

I am reminded specifically of the workers from Canadian Porcelain who met with the Minister this morning to ask that he intervene and see to it that their community-based co-operative would have a chance to realize its hopes and aspirations within their community. These workers would not have found it possible to look for redress had we not delayed the Bill, which gave them a chance under the provisions of FIRA. Second, I think it important that the Bill be seen now as part of a broader Conservative economic strategy—an economic strategy which the Budget has brought out clearly to the people of Canada. It is a strategy based on providing handouts, and all sorts of abject support, to foreign investors, speculators and the large oil companies of the country. These are the people who have received the benefits. The people who have paid the price have been the pensioners, the women who looked for action in the Budget and received none and the youth of the country who looked for job expansion and found nothing.

The Bill before us is part of the huge and mighty redistribution which the Government wants to see put in place. It is a redistribution which will hurt the vast majority of the country while helping the foreign investors of whom the Minister speaks. However, this will occur at the expense of our people, our small-businessmen, our young people and pensioners. It will come about at the expense of those who have borne the burdens of raising us all, those who provided the economic support with which the country was built. The flaws, errors and omissions in the Bill before us are truly outstanding.

The Bill before us illustrates an exercise in draftmanship which, frankly, leaves one standing appalled. There are loopholes in the Bill through which it will be possible to drive not just locomotives but dirigibles. There are loopholes in the Bill which will permit the takeover of a branch plant of a branch of an American company without any review process whatsoever. The Bill does not provide for review of branches, just of subsidiaries. There are loopholes in the Bill which do not even allow for the definition of the asset level which is to be considered for purposes of the threshold in the Bill. Again, it will create a field day for lawyers who will be able to make use of that piece of inadvertent or, perhaps, intentional, disaster which is built into the Bill.

It is a Bill which provides new power for the Minister. What I have referred to as the octopus of Canada will have yet one more tentacle over which the minister will have control. It is a Bill which speaks of promoting investment in Canada; yet, it does not have a single specific recommendation within it to extend and support Canadian-owned business. We attempted to remedy that by putting forward an amendment which dealt with a specific mandate for the Minister to assist Canadian-controlled businesses. It is the New Democratic Party which supports Canadian business, not the Members who sit on the government benches. Of course, the Conservative majority voted down that amendment.

The Bill before us has thresholds so high that important enterprises in key communities across the country will no longer be able to turn to Government for the type of bargaining support on takeovers which should be in place. It is a Bill which has rejected important and useful suggestions for new criteria to be looked at in trying to assess net benefit. Unbelievably, the Conservative majority in committee who looked at the Bill actually voted down the criteria dealing with whether or not a foreign company attempting to take over a Canadian firm had a viable economic record or not.

● (1220)

The amendment asked if the foreign company did in fact show in its home country that it was a viable economic actor. Even those in the most abject of Third World countries know that they have to look at the financial viability of a company that is taking something over within their domain. However, this Government does not know that. It would not put that provision into the Bill.

For all its empty talk about commitment to equality for women, for the disabled and for other minority groups, the Government rejected suggestions that the employment equity record of a company in its home country be examined. Therefore, we have a Bill before us which is fatally flawed and backed by the most fallacious arguments of which we can conceive. If I were to put my professorial hat back on in order to grade the economic reasoning of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I fear that he would be lucky to get an "F".

In the logic that the Minister has put forward, there is nothing that justifies the Bill that has been brought before us. The Minister has spoken of the great decrease in direct foreign investment inflows into this country. In the question I posed to the Minister, I quoted the actual statistics from Statistics Canada that demonstrate very clearly that in the measure that should be looked at, the direct inflows of foreign investment from outside to Canada, because those are the inflows that were supposedly discouraged by FIRA, there has been no significant decrease whatsoever.

The Minister spoke of making Canada part of the world. I hate to have to enlighten him, but we are perhaps the largest trading country in all of North and South America. The aggressiveness in our trade outshines spectacularly that of the United States, a country which trades far less than Canada.

Mr. Stevens: That's not true.

Mr. Langdon: It is absolutely true. In fact, 25 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product of Canada is traded while something in the order of 11 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product of the United States is traded.

Mr. Stevens: But they are 10 times as big.

Mr. Langdon: Those are facts and they show that we trade far, far more than the United States. Because we trade more, we must be aware of what is happening in the international economy. We must be aware of the fact that country after country supports its companies that are battling in the world market-place. France, Britain, Sweden, Switzerland and Japan have powerful programs designed to allow them to trade aggressively, effectively and powerfully; in fact, so much so that they outbargain this Minister flat-footed in the case of automobile quotas, for example.

Those countries are supporting their companies and their people because it means jobs in their countries. Our Minister is stripping away one of those important instruments that permits us to support our companies in the world market. He is not introducing us to the world, he is throwing Canadian companies out into that tough, harsh market-place without the kind of support which any responsible, modern, democratic Government should provide.

The Minister speaks of giving workers jobs. There is no one in this House who is more committed to getting jobs for the 15 per cent of Canadian workers who are out of work than I am. This Bill stops the process of review, but the review process is what gets us those jobs from foreign investment. Anyone who looks with honesty at the reality of the operation of foreign companies and large conglomerates throughout the world will recognize that there are problems. Those companies seek to benefit their home countries and they need to have pressure applied on them to get research and development jobs in Canada, to buy machinery in Canada and to make other purchases in Canada. That is what the review process does. It is to get jobs for Canadians, not to cost jobs for Canadians. By cutting out the review process, the Minister will cost this country jobs. He should be prepared to admit that rather than trying to cloak what he is doing in fallacious arguments.

The Minister should also recognize the fallacy of the other great argument he brings forward, which is that FIRA created a false image of Canada throughout the world. Let me suggest that there is an easy answer to that question. I would suggest that he buy a set of billboards and that he take out some advertising in New York and London. He should buy a set of billboards on which his slogans appear and put them in Paris. That would be no problem. However, he should not use that excuse to change crucial pieces of legislation that support Canadian communities and protect Canadian jobs.

In putting this legislation through the House, let us recognize as well that the Minister at every stage has tried to cut off debate and to block witnesses. There were 28 witnesses who wanted to speak to the Regional Development Committee but were prevented from doing so. Responsible amendments were brought before the House by the Opposition but only the one that got through by mistake was accepted. Thank God for that one.

We have before us a Bill which is faulty and irresponsible and which has been backed by fallacious arguments. It is a Bill which has been rammed through the House in as nasty and autocratic a manner as one could imagine. It is a Bill which turns its back on the real challenge of the future which is to Canadianize our economy.

We on this side of the House are proud of Canadian businesses. We are proud to support Canadian businesses that are fighting in the tough international market-place. If that is what nationalism is about, I am proud to be a nationalist. I am proud to accept a term which the Minister seems to think is a dirty word. To me, nationalism means standing up for the interests of our country, helping our businesses to get the kind of fair break that they deserve against huge giants which are far bigger and more powerful than the companies we have here in Canada. I am proud that there are now Canadian-owned multinational companies that can operate throughout the world. I want to see more of them. I want this country to be a key actor in the world economy but the way to have that happen is not through this faulty, shoddy piece of legislation. It will happen by taking leadership, by passing up this kind of ideological myth-making and by facing the future rather than running away from the past.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could give us a few more details on his billboard economics. How many billboards would he propose to put in New York? What would he have these billboards say? What kind of a budget would he allow us as far as these billboards are concerned?

• (1230)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, frankly, I thought that I would put the Minister's face on each billboard. Second, I thought that we simply could have a quote from the Minister which would say: "Open for business—Canada welcomes foreign investment". If the Minister had wished to have endorsation messages from the spokespeople for his Ministry and each of the opposition Parties, I suspect that we would have been quite pleased. I doubt that he would want our faces on the billboard as well, but I would certainly be prepared to add a clause which would say: '.We, too, welcome foreign investment in the country". We believe, under the review mechanisms which exist, that foreign investment can make a real contribution to the country.

I suspect that we could probably have paid the costs of the billboards by cancelling a few of the trips to New York, London and Paris which have been made by Ministers who have tried to deliver the message. If it is propaganda in which we are interested, billboards represent a magnificent option, compared to this gutting legislation which will hurt communities and workers across the country.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Member began his remarks by saying that we were speaking from an ideological position. I do not know why he should be surprised at that. We spent the entire campaign telling Canadians that we wanted to open up the country to foreign investment. He has been speaking for 20 minutes on his ideological position. Are we not entitled to speak on our ideological position?

He went on to say that we used fallacious and irrelevant arguments. Well, if we have a philosophical position, it is based on the premise of a free market system, on an investment policy, and on the jobs which will flow from that philosophy. It is all right for him to say that the arguments are fallacious and irrelevant, if he continues to argue from his socialist position. Of course, our position will look irrelevant and illogical if he has a socialist mind-set and tries to apply his arguments to a free market system. If he will think for a moment of a wholesome free market system, then he will see that the arguments which flow out of the legislation are totally relevant, logical and that they hold water.

He said that the process has been an insult to the parliamentary tradition of Canada. Wait a minute. We spend about eight weeks last summer arguing for an open business economy in Canada. As a result of that campaign—and his Party voted to have FIRA made stronger—we elected 211 Members. Is it not logical to assume, as those arguments were ventilated for eight weeks, that the Government which was elected on that platform should be entitled to its legislation? It seems to me that is parliamentary tradition.

The task force on reform visited the United Kingdom a few weeks ago. The thrust of the U.K. Government's entire parliamentary calendar was that once a Government is elected and it follows through on the manifesto which it presented during the election campaign, then it is entitled to the legislation. The Hon. Member should not say, because he is arguing from a socialist position against our philosophy, and because we have imposed closure, that we are violating parliamentary tradition. We are simply following through on what we said we would do.

He also argued that the Bill will redistribute across the country. Of course it will. The socialists would like to have it done through a central agency. We want to distribute on a freedom basis in order to let the market forces work. It does work.

Last week I received a news release from a company in British Columbia. Partly as a result of the cancellation of the National Energy Program, that company is now able to build a fertilizer plant in my riding. That will provide 1,300 jobs during the construction period and it will provide 200 jobs when the plant is in operation. That is what this kind of program does. Opposition Members want to have direct job-creation programs. That is what this kind of a market-oriented program will do.

If the Hon. Member wants to argue from his socialist position, he should say that he is a socialist, that he is arguing from a socialist philosophy and, therefore, the legislation seems illogical to him. I would ask the Hon. Member to please not say that when we argue from a free market concept we are illogical. He should not impose his arguments on our philosophy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous respect for Conservative ideology. I believe it is a particular world view which is consistent, logical and incorrect. Nevertheless, it is deserving of respect. I would welcome debates of the sort to which the Hon. Member has referred. However, in the House, we are talking as Canadians representing our constituents; 1.5 million of whom are out of work. We should be talking about practical, real and immediate ways to get the country going once again. This is not a debating society in which we trade views with respect to philosophy. As I see it, this is a parliamentary chamber in which we try to grapple with the economic problems of the country, in a pragmatic and realistic way.

We look at the facts and try to assess what we are doing wrong and attempt to correct it. I believe that is useful. It is something for which the people of Canada pay us to do. On the fringes, occasionally it is useful to indulge in an ideological exchange. Some day I might have a debate about why, in my basic commitments, I would call myself a socialist, but we are not talking about that today. We are talking about practical pieces of legislation. To debate that in a pragmatic, careful and serious manner is important to the future of Canada. We should not be ideological about it. We should not let our ideological baggage shape what we do. We should let reality shape what we do.

The Hon. Member suggested that parliamentary traditions were important to understand. I agree. Certainly, the Government was elected on the basis of a great many promises last summer. Most of those promises have been broken. God knows why the Government did not break this promise, as I would have welcomed that. The point is that parliamentary tradition permits a full presentation of alternate points of view. As well, it permits the capacity for the ordinary people of Canada to have some input. What bothered me most about the way this was done was that 28 witnesses from across this country wanted to testify and they were prevented from doing so by the Conservative majority who railroaded this Bill through.

● (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has now expired. We shall resume debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to dwell on the negative side and on the past like the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Like the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), I see myself as a Member for today and tomorrow, and I therefore prefer to concentrate on the very positive aspects of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have been listening carefully to Opposition Members on this Bill. They painted such a terrifying picture of the harm done by foreign investment that I found it hard to believe they were merely doing it out of partisanship or some kind of phobia. I went around my riding to find out for myself what the facts were about foreign ownership in Gatineau. I found, Mr. Speaker, that, contrary to what the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party Opposition have been saying, foreign companies established in Gatineau since the beginning of this century and new companies added since then tend to re-invest in their facilities as much as Canadians do. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, they do as much as, and in some cases even more than, some Canadian companies do for research and development. They do not abruptly close down unprofitable plants in the riding, they do not export tremendous sums of money to their own country, thereby harming our currency, and they have not managed to impose any regulations that would affect our sovereignty or economic growth. On the contrary, they are very responsible members of our community.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, they are not restricting Canadian branches to the domestic market, excluding them from markets in their own country or anywhere else in the world. Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention a specific example. That example is ERCO, a branch of Albright & Wilson Ltd., the United Kingdom's second largest producer of chemical products. This company's products are manufactured in seventeen countries and distributed throughout the world. Albright & Wilson Ltd. is part of Tenneco Inc., a larger U.S. industrial conglomerate whose activities include oil, gas pipelines, chemical products, shipbuilding and insurance. In fact, ERCO is one of those multinationals which our colleagues opposite are so fond of criticizing. ERCO, Mr. Speaker, started in 1887 and the town of Buckingham on the Lièvre River. At first, the plant produced elemental phosphorus for the Canadian match industry. Elemental phosphorus was obtained from locally mined apatite and extracted using electric power generated by the falls of the Lièvre River. Until 1950, ERCO's production operations were restricted to Buckingham, the site of its first plant. Today, 35 years later, ERCO Industries has five branches, including the Buckingham plant. It is one of the largest Canadian companies with annual sales of $214 million. Mr. Speaker, ERCO is the sole Canadian producer of elemental phosphorus and industrial phosphate, and the largest producer of sodium chlorate in the world. Its products are sold both domestically and internationally. The company even has a warehouse in the United States to supply the American market. If we look at the sales figures, 61 per cent of sales are in Canada, 33 per cent in the United States and 6 per cent elsewhere.

As for research and development, ERCO has had its own separate services and its research and development centre for 30 years. It is located in Toronto, Ontario, and employs twelve experts, six of whom are Ph.D.s, and ten technicians and office staff. They also have a technical library, and the company spends nearly $2 million annually on these research services.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, each plant has a group responsible for development which reports to the plant's management. Speaking of management, Mr. Speaker, ERCO is fully Canadian, from the president down to the employees, and has been for 25 years. All decisions are made in Canada, including the decision to re-invest half of the profits in modernizing and expanding the plant, which was started ten years ago. Mr. Speaker, the situation differs completely from the image we have been given of foreign companies.

Mr. Speaker, I could name a few more: CIP, for instance, which was a U.S.-owned company and now belongs to Canadians, not because we wanted to Canadianize it for ideological reason but because it was so well managed that it had become very attractive to probably our largest investor in Canada, Canadian Pacific. I am referring to Maclaren, a very prosperous family-owned company which was sold quite recently to the Noranda group. Did Noranda start laying off employees right away? It did not! It modernized the plant and is now training and re-training employees in the most advanced pulp and paper technology. And what is more, Mr. Speaker, Noranda is also part of an international complex.

I was comparing a foreign company and a Canadian company to demonstrate that their behaviour is the same. Maclaren is now starting a re-forestation program that will benefit our forests in the Outaouais area. And like ERCO, which is a foreign company, Maclaren has joined me and the Municipality of Notre-Dame-du-Laus in seeking a solution to a situation where a sawmill was closed because of a lack of markets, and as you know, Mr. Speaker, the lumber market is in very bad shape. So this is not exactly the picture we have been given of the typical foreign company that wants to invest in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, earlier we were talking about a poll that said that the majority of Canadians favoured foreign investment. On June 3, there was a headline in the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit which said: Yes to foreign capital! Interestingly, I looked at the breakdown of this poll, and it says here that the 62 per cent who were in favour of foreign investment included 50 per cent of the respondents who were NDP supporters, and who made up 18 to 20 per cent of the group. This means that a large number of Canadian NDP supporters are for foreign investment. In addition, nearly two-thirds of the Liberals are in favour of foreign investment, and of course a very large majority of Conservatives are in favour of foreign investment in this country. The question asked in this poll was: In your opinion, should Prime Minister Brian Mulroney encourage or discourage foreign investment in Canada? So 62 per cent said: encourage, and 19 per cent said: discourage. As I explained before, the answers did not depend on the politics of the respondents, since they all seemed to think there was something good in it.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore a fallacy to say that only a small minority of very wealthy pro-U.S. capitalists who are too scared to develop their own economy are interested in foreign investment. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, they are very sophisticated people with a vision of Canada and nationalist hearts beating in their chests, as the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor said. But they do not equate nationalism with statism, it simply means they are proud to be Canadians and they want to protect our quality of life. That is not closing the door to foreigners who do come up with excellent ideas and are prepared to work with us to solve our problems.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the many allegations that we failed to keep our election promises. As I said before, what the Opposition calls promises we call solutions we wanted to bring to our problems. Our goal was to find solutions to our problems, including the shortage of investment capital. We look upon foreign capital as a source of development financing, and there is no reason to close our door. FIRA had a negative impact, so much so that a Conference Board of Canada study concluded that one of the problems created by the review agency was that it attracted much political and doctrinal intervention. An example of that was the oil industry, Mr. Speaker, a sector which was already creating jobs and whose future employment opportunities were very promising. A good many Gatineau residents found jobs in Western Canada's oil industry, not to mention others on the payrolls of manufacturing plants related to the petroleum sector.

Mr. Speaker, this fear of foreigners and this propensity for nationalizing potentially profitable companies had a predictable effect: the country's economic development came to a standstill and this was a significant factor in our slide into a recession even worse than that experienced by neighbouring countries with which we compete. The bottom line was that they nationalized a disaster when they could have put their bets on a very dynamic sector that could have helped us cushion the impact of the impending world-wide crisis. No, Sir, they undermined and weakened the industry because they chose to take a doctrinal and ideological approach rather than see it as an economic development sector.

That, Mr. Speaker, is precisely why I listened with great concern to what Hon. Members were again telling us this morning. They have not changed their tune and they did not come up with anything new. They maintain that we did not listen to Canadians, but I think we did and the polls bear me out. What is more, Mr. Speaker, I sit on the standing committee of the House which studied this Bill, and we heard many witnesses who shared the views of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor and those of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We heard them out, we made notes of what they had to say, but then we also paid attention to other people who appeared before the committee to tell us they firmly believe that the review agency as it is structured did impede Canada's growth. There has to be some screening in key sectors, particularly those related to our culture and our identity as Canadians. But statistics did show that this mechanism slowed down the decision-making process to the extent that barely 5 or 6 per cent of all applications ever came up for review.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it would have been illogical to ignore the fact that economic experts and most people in Canada were urging us to do something about the agency because it did not foster development. That is precisely what we did, after listening to hours of discussions and evidence by various witnesses, and it must be kept in mind that this Bill contains a safety valve. There will be review levels and protected sectors, but what is even more important is that this Bill reflects a very positive attitude toward investment.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) mentioned France a while ago; he gave that country as an example and said that France promotes domestic investment, and I imagine he meant that it discourages foreign investment of at least is not as favourable to foreign investors as Canada will now be. I was in France recently, Mr. Speaker, as President of the Canada-France Parliamentary Association and I was taken around various regions by Socialist Members of the Government who took me to such places as the Dordogne, and I also visited Alsace with a Centrist Member of the National Assembly. Everywhere I found that these parliamentarians, whether Socialists ou Centrists, all said: You know, our greatest problem is to update our industries; the major problem is that our nationalized industries are not up to date; we had a lot more problems with Renault than with Peugeot; during the crisis, Peugeot acted with courage and showed good management as it should have done. They tightened their belts, made changes in job training and became more competitive, while Renault, because of the state bureaucracy, was slower to react, which caused us to lose markets, and we are now in difficulty.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, even in France where there is a Socialist Government, people realize that the economy is a reality and has nothing to do with theory, rhetorics and ideology. This Bill falls pretty much into line with the attitude now prevailing in France as well, because the Government there had to acknowledge the mistake it made early in its mandate in creating artificial jobs in the public service. It made mistakes in discouraging the private sector, and it now finds that the answers to its problems are the same as those we are suggesting. Therefore, I am quite ready to support this Bill. We shall be watchful in this case as in the case of our other pieces of legislation, such as the incentives for Canadian businesses that deal with the Government to provide equal opportunities for women. It is through this type of legislation, and I am not talking about Bill C-15 which deals with investment, but about the Bill introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss Macdonald), that we shall be in a position to ensure equality for women. I therefore find it passing strange to hear my colleagues speak about foreign investment as though it were a multi-headed monster which will swallow us, emasculate our men, eliminate equal opportunities for our women and ruin our cultural sector.

I think that Members opposite should try to live in this day and age. It is good to live today, better than yesterday, and it will be even better tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Either the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is dreaming in colour, Mr. Speaker, or she has not followed the debate. We have never said that foreign investments were bad for Canada. We have said that the foreign control of the Canadian economy was not particularly desirable. We have criticized the Bill in a constructive way in an effort to improve it. We have never said that foreign interests are not welcome in Canada. Far from that! They are quite welcome, but we would like them first to be subjected to a review process to make sure that Canada—

An Hon. Member: One o'clock!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am really sorry. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

STATEMENTS BY MR. CROSBIE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) yesterday put on a display of fireworks full of sound and fury, after his display of the day before in the House of Commons, for the most part this signified nothing. His remarks concerning the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), calling her "baby", a "titmouse", and a "poltroon", while being cheered on by other members of the Government, finally exposed the Tory attitude toward the women of the country.

What an insult to women to hear the derogatory remarks—

Mr. Dick: Is she a woman?

Mr. Boudria: —of the Minister of Justice, responsible for equality of women, whose feeble mind could only find one area in which to criticize the distinguished Member for Hamilton East, that being the fact that she is a woman.

Derogatory and sexist remarks such as "baby" and "poltroon" ought to be made unparliamentary. What is a poltroon? It is a worthless wretch. That is what the Minister of Justice and his cheering cronies on the other side consider a woman who stands up for herself on issues that she strongly believes in.

We remember the women's debate last summer during the campaign. Where is all the Tory concern for women now? "Poltroon" sums up how the Tories see women. First, broken promises, and now insults. Not only the Minister of Justice, but the whole Tory caucus, owe women an apology. Instead of letting him flounder like a bellowing, beached whale, the Tory Members gave that discredited Minister a standing ovation. The Tories promised—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Member that his 90 seconds have expired. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR FULL PENSION INDEXATION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) received a telegram yesterday containing the following resolution, and I quote:

Whereas according to a survey conducted by the National Advisory Council on Aging, Government allowances constitute half of the total income of the elderly in Canada;

Whereas the elderly have paid and are still paying, with good grace, taxes and income tax to ensure they have some protection so they will at least be able to meet their basic needs;

Whereas the Mulroney Government was elected on its promise to eliminate the ceiling on indexation of Old Age Security Pensions imposed by the Trudeau Government;

Whereas Mr. Mulroney has admitted that the measures announced by Mr. Wilson are a violation of the promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party in 1984.

The Quebec Senior Citizen's Federation demands that the Mulroney Government reinstate full cost of living indexation for Old Age Security Pensions, retroactive to January 1, 1985.

Yesterday, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bertrand) refused to meet this group. Next Wednesday, the Leader of the New Democratic Party will be meeting the group in Montreal.

As New Democrats, we challenge the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp)—

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS' FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, during the last three years more than 1,400 families lost their farms, while in 1979 there were only 25 foreclosures. Why the difference? Well, in 1979 Canadian agriculture was prospering, with good crops and good prices. As a result, in order to widen their base and increase their productivity, ambitious farmers borrowed capital from banks anxious to lend. Then came 1981 when the prices for wheat and cattle dropped below the break-even point.

During 1982 and 1983 prices stagnated and interest rates soared, pushing up farmers' debts. Some banks foreclosed, and now there are some 50,000 Canadian farmers experiencing serious financial difficulties. Unless something positive is done, some 1,700 more may go under, and the banks will own a lot of land.

Why do the banks expect repayment when a farmer has no crop? Farming is a long-term business, and not a one or two year operation. If the banks would make their loans over a 20 or 25 year period, most of the farmers would survive. We cannot afford to lose these farmers. Surely when we can send a man to the moon we can solve this problem. Remember, the land will not be moving away, and I do not want the farm families to be moving away either.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

TREATMENT OF COMPANY PENSIONERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the plight of over 600 CP Rail pensioners and over 400 pensioners' widows in my riding. We learned last week in Moose Jaw that tentative contracts signed by CP Rail and three of its national unions included agreements which eliminated VIA Rail passes for CP employees as well as for pensioners or their widows.

The present employees of CP Rail have the union bargaining team to represent their concerns and have supposedly received something in exchange for the elimination of the passes. While this may not be acceptable to the rank and file of the brotherhoods, they can now vote on whether or not to ratify this agreement. However, what choice do the pensioners have? Who speaks for them at the bargaining table? These pensioners worked hard for many years, often under adverse conditions, with low salaries. They now receive low pensions without the benefit of indexing and, to add insult to injury, they are now to lose their rail passes.

I call on all Hon. Members of the House to contact CP Rail and union officials in their areas, to indicate total disapproval of this agreement. I further call on CP Rail to take leadership in this area, and immediately reinstate the VIA Rail passes for all pensioners.

THE BUDGET

COMPLEXITY OF PROVISIONS—IMPACT ON SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, with the exception of accountants and tax lawyers whom small businessmen will have to hire to understand the entire implications of the new budget, very few Canadians will take advantage of those measures allegedly meant to create jobs. This was acknowledged by the Panel sponsored by the Ottawa-Carleton Economic Development Corporation that met to consider the Budget.

The task force which included two accountants and two lawyers stated and I quote:

[English]

The capital gains exemption will do little or nothing to stimulate investment, because it rewards investment decisions that would have been made without the tax benefits.

[Translation]

The capital gain exemption is a $125,000 gift to the rich.

The Budget was supposed to set a climate of confidence for investors in small- and medium-sized businesses but according to an expert on the task force:

[English]

—that confidence just isn't there. Everyone has taken the attitude that you've got to take advantage of some of these tax breaks right now because the rules could change very easily.

[Translation]

Rather than rewarding investors for investments already made in the country or abroad by giving them a capital gain exemption, such exemption should be restructured to stimulate investments made in Canadian concerns after the Budget. It would be more effective to stimulate investments in small- and medium-sized businesses and thus to create jobs.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

MULTI-SPORT EVENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am shocked and disappointed to learn that the Conservative Government has decided not to assist any more multi-sport events in Canada for the rest of this decade. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) admits that this moratorium on financial support will impede cities from seeking such events into the early 1990s. The new policy in fact requires Canadian organizations holding the franchise for specific multi-sport games to secure a statement of support from the federal Government before beginning the process of selecting a Canadian host city, if they hope to receive federal funding.

This interference by the Conservative Government in Canadian amateur sport is part of one more broken Conservative election promise. The Conservative Party committed itself "to maintaining the highest level of federal support for amateur sport in Canada". The Conservative Government now plans to channel its "limited financial resources towards the funding of our high performance athletes".

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservatives have forgotten how important international sporting events in Canada are in inspiring young Canadians to become high performance athletes. They have now given the boot to organizations and cities across the country, including London, Ontario, in its bid for the 1991 Pan American Games, and Thunder Bay, Ontario, in its hopes for the 1991 Nordic Games. At the same time the Charitable Donations Tax Credit, also promised by the Conservatives last summer, has not been included in the May 23 Budget.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, how distressing it is to hear day after day in the House Liberal Members blame the Progressive Conservative Government for everything under the sun. Among other things, they rake this Government over the coals with respect to pension indexation, yet when they were in office they capped the indexation at 6 per cent, which was a loss of 50 per cent in inflation.

Another admission they never make either, Mr. Speaker, is that they never told widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 that the Liberal Government forgot all about them when it was in office. Well, we did think about them. Liberal and NDP Members alike mislead the elderly by not telling them the whole truth. They do not repeat the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the Budget speech, so I will quote them for the Liberals:

The Government will review the adequacy of payments in light of future circumstances and will increase them as resources permit.

This week, Mr. Speaker, I held a conference for senior citizens in my riding and all of them did understand because I gave them a fair and positive explanation—I repeat, fair and positive.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we are up against a negative Opposition. They were bankrupt of ideas, so nothing has changed for them. When they sat on the Government benches they could do no wrong. Now that they are in Opposition, nothing doing, they still want to be in the driver's seat as if theirs were the sole and only Party entrusted with the truth. How pitiful and regretful!

PARLIAMENT

THIRTEENTH MEETING OF CANADIAN AND EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, it gave me great pleasure as a delegate from the Canadian Parliament to attend the 13th Annual Meeting of Canadian and European parliamentarians.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were cousins, and today we have become friends. After having attended the workshops and the discussion meetings together, we will be in a better position tomorrow to understand the wishes and needs of one another, and to work together at reaching solutions that will be profitable for both groups.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SITUATION OF ELDERLY AFTER PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give all Members in this House, and to you too, Mr. Speaker, an idea of the monthly budget of senior citizens from whom the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is requiring a sacrifice.

To start with, they get $605.20 a month. Their rent is $240 per month; hydro $21.47 per month; heating $57 per month; telephone $17; fire, theft and life insurance $20.83; water tax $5; food $216.50 per month, or $50 per week, or $2.40 per meal.

All that is left after deducting the above items is $27.40 per month. Out of those $27.40 per month they must buy clothes, drugs that are not covered by health care, dental care, glasses, household maintenance, appliance repair, transportation, newspapers and recreation.

Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would tell senior citizens where they are going to cut their costs. Will they be cutting on meals, will they cancel their insurance?

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is invidious to ask our senior citizens, who built this country, to make still more sacrifices.

ENERGY

SITUATION OF GASOLINE RETAILER

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, a very special case has just been referred to me. The owner of ten gas stations in Hamilton, Guelph, Oakville, Mississauga and Kingston, a well-established independent distributor who has been operating for eight years with 120 employees and a volume of sales of over 14 million gallons a year, has been in a very precarious situation since 1982. After being forced to close seven of his stations over the past three years, he has been dealt an even harder blow. Even though this might seem hard to believe, this distributor must purchase gas for his business from the Sunoco company, his main supplier, which sells him this product 1½ cents more than to its own gas stations.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that this operator has already suffered heavy losses and is just about ready to simply close down. In his own words, and I quote:

[English]

It is inconceivable that such a thing happened in a country supposedly supporting individuals' rights and freedoms. There is no control, and independents have their heads under the guillotine.

There is a grave problem in southern Ontario. At the moment majors can lower their selling price, or otherwise provide their subsidiaries with special support of some kind, and independents are left hanging there in the situation where they are losing their shirts, not their shorts.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PENSIONS

INDEXATION—ELECTION STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for some time to ask a question of the Prime Minister relating to the Budget. It is a question that has been put to him before in this House, to his Minister of Finance, and to the Minister of National Health and Welfare repeatedly.

Last July 26 in Sherbrooke the Prime Minister swore that he was totally committed to:

—reinstate complete indexing of old age pensions to the actual cost of living.

Those were his words.

Why has that promise been broken in the Budget? He must have been listening to what our senior citizens and, indeed, what the country have been saying, from one end to the other, about this broken promise to our retired people and the elderly in Canada. Will the Prime Minister use this occasion to confirm his promise that he made to the people of Canada last July, and reinstate indexation of old age pensions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the serious problems facing the elderly, and all Canadians, is the state of the public finances.

Ten years ago we were spending approximately $1 in every $9 of revenues to service the debt. It is now $1 in $3. The debt has gone from $18 billion to $190 billion, and built into the system is a possibility of a $400 billion deficit. Where would the elderly be if, to service this debt, it required 40 per cent and 50 per cent of government revenues? That is exactly the tragic heritage we were left by the Liberal Party. Everybody knows that we must begin to deal with it, beginning with the senior citizens to whom we owe so much.

We will be conducting ourselves in such a way as to bring down inflation and to keep it down, to make sure jobs are created, that new strength is brought back to the economy so we can do not just what we have been doing for our elderly and others but more, because the elderly are entitled to everything that a grateful nation can provide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

LABOUR MARKET DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is not the language the Prime Minister was using during the election, either about the deficit or about our senior citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The fact remains he has left another broken promise on the floor of the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance have been telling senior citizens living in poverty, in defence of this Budget that they have to suffer in the name of some grand new job creation strategy.

I have in my hand a secret document entitled "Communications Plan—Labour Market Development Strategy". This plan is a plan for announcing a job creation strategy on June 18. The Government plans, apparently, to implement six programs. This document was signed three days ago by the Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration, who said that we have to be careful here because these programs—I am using his words, Mr. Speaker—"look very much like the old approach to programming".

This Government in the Budget—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. This is a very long preamble. Does the right hon. gentleman have a question, please?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do, Sir, and I hope to the response to this question you will apply the same even-handed treatment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Apologize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why does that Budget parade a new series of job programs when the Deputy Minister in the document says, "We have to try to dress them up because they are the same old programs?"

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the document to which my right hon. friend refers. I will tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, that we do not have to dress up because it resembles in no way what transpired before, and that is the 201,000 new jobs that have been created since this Government was sworn in—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —including the 89,000 new jobs created in April alone, which represented the largest single monthly job creation initiative in almost five years in Canada. That is brand new compared to what the Liberals were doing. That is solid job creation, which means the beginnings of a return to sustained prosperity in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUDGET STATEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this document makes clear that the Conservative Government is still coasting on old Liberal programs and, what is more, the document relates to jobs which will last for only 16 weeks. In the Budget the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister talked about a long-term private sector strategy. Why does that strategy conflict with the document which the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration will table in about a week? What an extraordinary gap in philosophy as paraded in the Budget and revealed in the Minister's own document!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted the Hon. Member finally got around to recognizing that there is a new labour market strategy in place. May I tell him that the very first program coming out of that is Challenge 85, which was put together for young people, or students, this summer. Some 67,000 young people have benefited from that program so far, as against the 50,000 last summer who did not have career-related jobs—67,000 as against 50,000.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I can also tell the Hon. Member that this labour market strategy puts into effect something which the previous Government never did, that is, the provision of multi-year funding for the labour market strategy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO DEPUTY MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I remind her of her statement in the House on April 16 that the whole plan moved away from short-term, job-creation dead-ends which used to be in effect. Does the Minister agree with her Deputy Minister who said in this secret document: "Individuals should be therefore expected to spend a reasonable length of time on projects, at least 16 weeks". Does she think that 16 weeks is long-term job creation?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am really so pleased, after all this period of time, to see members of the Liberal Opposition taking some interest in jobs and training. Day after day I have been sitting here waiting for them to ask about it, and they have not opened their mouths.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We have not gone the route of the Liberal Party in trying to bypass the provinces and the private sector in developing this new strategy. We have worked with the other economic and social partners to put together a strategy which will provide training and job creation for some 400,000 Canadians.

OPINION OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately that opinion is not shared by her Deputy Minister who indicated in the same document, signed three days ago: "There is a risk of serious misinterpretation if these terms and conditions of the new employment programs are read in isolation. They look very much like the old approach to programming". Her own Deputy Minister is now on record as telling the almost two million unemployed Canadians that the Government has failed to bring in new ideas. Will she admit that the eight months' hoax on Canada's unemployed is up, and that she should table the programs in the House today, instead of waiting until June 18 to bring in a gussied up version of "Second-hand Rose"?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member always thinks that she can dish it out, but I have not noticed that she has been able to take it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: One of the things which the Government has done, so far in eight months in office, was to put $2 billion into job creation and training; $2 billion in eight months. It has been able to do something which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry could not do during the time that he was Minister of this Department. He could not get long-term funding. He had to go on ad hoc measures, one after the other, because the previous Liberal Government did not believe in anything but ad hoc measures. It would not take a long-term view of the need for training and job creation. That is what is different. The question is one which deals with job creation and training, and already some—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Answers are becoming long, too.

FINANCE

DEFERRED CORPORATE TAXES—INTEREST CHARGE REQUESTED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Government proposes to raise some $245 million from its proposal to deindex old age pensions. Yesterday the Minister said that if there had been any other way to meet the deficit needs, he would not have supported such deindexing. Would the Minister now be prepared to recommend to his Cabinet colleagues that an interest charge should be placed on the deferred taxes of corporations? If so, would he do so in order to protect the needs of pensioners, who would therefore not have to pay the additional amounts, and to raise for the Treasury of Canada in excess of $500 million?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to announce any changes to the tax structure. I return to the position which I took yesterday in the House. When we look at the structural debt of the country and the effect of that debt load—the cost of the debt, the servicing of the debt on a day by day basis, and its effect on social programs—we realize that that is money which could have been better used had we not had that debt. That is the issue with which we have to deal, not only to preserve the programs but to get the matter turned around.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that the deferred taxes of the major corporate sector are indeed a debt to the country? Does he not, therefore, think that it would be appropriate to ask those who owe the country many billions of dollars at least to pay interest on the money they owe, in order that the costs to senior citizens do not have to be raised?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me explain to the Hon. Member that those credits have been earned over the years by companies. In earning those credits, those companies have created the jobs which I think the Hon. Member is pleased have been created. I should remind him that the major thrust of the Budget is to create more jobs by encouraging the private sector, and by reinforcing the clear record of success over the past nine months, wherein 201,000 jobs have been created by the private sector which is responding positively to the new direction of the Government.

Oral Questions

AMOUNT OF DEFERRED TAXES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, recognizing that a deferred tax is a tax which one might presume should be paid at some point, is it not more reasonable that those who owe the country billions of dollars in deferred taxes should, at the very least, pay a reasonable interest for the deferral so that we do not have to reduce the incomes of those who worked to create this country by reducing their pensions, and thereby reducing their ability to purchase and provide for themselves?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if we follow through with the direction in which the Hon. Member wants to go, if he wants to wipe out the forest products industry, the mining industry, and the steel industry in Hamilton, an industry which supports many workers in this riding, we will see fewer jobs in those industries, and that will be on his head.

OLD AGE SECURITY

FULL INDEXATION OF PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, to hear our new Robin Hood, 1985 version, who takes from the poor to give to the rich, he wants to get rid of the elderly altogether. My question is directed to the Prime Mnister, Mr. Speaker.

The day before yesterday, six national organizations denounced the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in Quebec City, the three main organizations that represent over 200,000 senior citizens asked me to put the following question to the Prime Minister: Will the Prime Minister undertake today to restore full cost of living indexing for Old Age Security Pensions, as he solemnly promised to do during the election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the Hon. Member to what he said on November 30, 1982. I would also refer him to what the former Minister of National Health and Welfare said in the House, that is, that if the deficit is allowed to continue, then the very money we are spending on the debt load is money that we cannot use for social programs. In fact the Hon. Member said he supported that type of approach in his speech in 1982. It is strange that he does not support the same approach now in 1985.

SITUATION OF ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the lack of an answer from the Right Hon. Prime Minister is an insult to Canada's 2,500,000 senior citizens, and shows a blatant lack of courage.

Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister have the courage to ask the elderly when, after they have already paid their rent, telephone bill, food bills, $50 a month, they have only $27.40 per month left to buy clothes, toothpaste and soap which have now been taxed by the Minister of Finance, does he have the courage to ask them to make one more sacrifice?

Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister have the courage to rise in the House and tell them what they will have to give up?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Hon. Member was saying in 1982. Two years ago he was saying the exact opposite of what he is saying today. This is one of the most hypocritical and most typically Liberal statements ever heard in the House of Commons.

Shoemakers have the worst shoes.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker—

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—OIL COMPANIES' REVENUES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Just a minute ago the Prime Minister said that the elderly are entitled to what a grateful nation can provide. I wish to offer the Minister a second option in this regard. Considering that the oil industry has received a windfall, according to them, of $600 million a year as a result of the Government moving to world oil prices, is the Minister prepared to recommend to the Government that it take at least one-half of that $600 million back, in terms of a windfall profit tax, so that the elderly will not have to pay for job creation in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to protest the Hon. Member's continual misrepresentation of the facts in terms of the Western Accord. He constantly ignores the fact that all benefits from the Western Accord are to be channelled into new jobs and job creation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, because I believe the Hon. Member to be sincere in his duties as energy critic, I wish to draw to his attention to a recently released study by Informetrica. I have a rough copy in front of me on my desk. The study indicates that, compared to the pre-Budget base case it uses, the Western Accord would generate a cumulated total of 405,000 person-years of employment in the period 1985 to 1990.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The issue is jobs and job creation. I wish the Hon. Member would take notice of that.

REQUEST FOR TAX CHANGE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I invite the Minister to return to her riding of Vancouver Centre and tell her constituents why she is giving money to the oil companies and taking it away from the seniors.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, since he is the one who is responsible here. I will give him a third option, if he likes.

Is the Minister prepared to recommend to Cabinet that it take a piece of the Petroleum Gas and Revenue Tax back in the form of a revised taxation in order that seniors will not have to pay for this so-called job creation? In effect the Government has given to the oil companies what will amount to $5 billion over the next five years.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the premise on which the Hon. Member bases his question is entirely wrong. Jobs have to be created. Jobs create wealth. Jobs create for all of us an opportunity—

Mr. Waddell: Why do the seniors have to pay?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Jobs create wealth, which allows us to put our social programs in place. The Hon. Member knows that. He has told us to spend more and more, even if we do not have it. That is why we are spending more money today, for debt servicing for bankers. He is supporting the bankers who have said that we should raise the debt.

Mr. Waddell: I am not. I am supporting the seniors, not the bankers.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member wants the bankers to have more. He would have us take it away from the old age pensioners.

Mr. Waddell: That is wrong, and you know it.

EMPLOYMENT

LABOUR MARKET DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It, too, concerns the secret communications plan for the labour market development strategy.

I was deeply chagrined when I read in this document that Conservative Members of Parliament would be receiving more detailed information with respect to the proposed programs than Opposition Members. In fact the communications plan calls for a more specific and distinct information kit for Conservative Members of Parliament. This is an abuse of the privileges of the Members of the House. It is a blatant politicization of the Minister's Department.

Why does the Minister propose to give preferential treatment to Conservative Members of Parliament? Why is she discriminating against Members of the Opposition? Will she give the House her personal undertaking that, when the program is unveiled, each and every Member of the House of Commons will be given the same information to bring back to their constituents?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have all the pre-publicity for the labour market strategy. I hope we will continue to talk about it every day until it is formally announced. I tell all Members of the House that it is my intention to bring all the details with respect to this worthwhile project before all members of the Canadian public.

MEDIA INTERVIEWS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, that is not what the document says. The document signed by the Minister's Deputy Minister says that there will be a separate, more detailed kit for Conservative Members of Parliament. This is a serious matter. It infringes upon the rights of each and every Member of the House.

In view of the fact that the document not only discriminates against Members of Parliament but also against the media, since it speaks of selective interviews with The National and Canada AM, and since it also speaks of a plan to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Is this the Minister's idea of openness and fairness, or is it just another example of the Conservatives' cynical manipulation of the media?

• (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the promotion. I really do. If the Hon. Member wants to go beyond The Journal, beyond Canada AM, and beyond some of the other national programs, to invite the participation of all those in the Press Gallery, I would certainly welcome requests for interviews. I will be glad to explain to the press all the details of the labour market strategy, a strategy that is designed to put hundreds of thousands of Canadians to work, something that the previous Government ignored and overlooked for far too long.

OLD AGE SECURITY

IMPACT OF DEINDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister is aware of recent statistics showing that the increase in the number of elderly people will be greater and faster in Quebec than in Canada as a whole. The people of Quebec will therefore be more severely affected by the impact of the deindexation of old age pensions. My question is this: Why did the Minister choose to withhold $245 million from retired people by deindexing old age security pensions when he had a fourth option—he could have collected $600 million by maintaining the capital gains tax?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The philosophy that underlies that question is one which has been held by members of the NDP for a long period of time. That philosophy is that those who create wealth, who have property, who farm, and who run corner grocery stores, do not create jobs. I say give those people a chance. Let them use their investments. They are the ones who create jobs and build the country. As they create wealth, we will have money for social programs. That applies to Quebec as well as to every other part of Canada.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister had four options but has chosen to go with the 4 per cent of rich Canadians who claim capital gains taxes. When will the Minister start standing up for those who rightfully fall within the jurisdiction of his Department, the senior citizens, rather than for the small percentage of rich people who rip off the taxpayers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, who are the rich the Hon. Member is trying to identify? They are farmers in our ridings. They are fishermen along the coasts and in the inland fisheries. They are the men and women who own small businesses across the country. They are the blue-collar workers who can now invest and hold stock in Canadian companies. Those are the ones he says are ripping us off.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He will turn right around to claim that we should create more jobs when we do not even have the wealth to do so. I am saying that we should start creating some wealth in order to protect the programs we have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to ask the Prime Minister to put aside the insults, the bombast, and the stonewalling that we have heard from Ministers for the last few days about the appointment of the Crosbie sons by their fathers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Fathers?

Mr. Kaplan: I would also like to ask him to put aside the protestations of good character—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask Hon. Members to let me hear the question?

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to ask the Prime Minister as well to put aside the protestations about the good character and integrity of the Minister of Justice because that is really not the issue. How can the Prime Minister justify these appointments within the clear language of the guidelines against conflict of interest which clearly prohibit precisely what the Minister of Justice has done?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the need for balance and reasonableness must intrude. In regard to guidelines I would point out to my hon. friend, who was a Minister of the Crown, the following comment:

> I would remind you of our decision not to apply the requirements of these guidelines to our spouses and dependent children. The notion that husbands and wives may wish to pursue careers and activities independent from each other is increasingly prevalent in our society and I believe we are agreed that it is unfair to impose restrictions considered unacceptable to society as a whole.

That was a letter issued to Ministers by the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, on April 28, 1980, in regard to those guidelines. I think what the former Prime Minister was trying to say was that there is a degree of—

Mr. Kaplan: What about these guidelines?

Mr. Mulroney: You can send it to me, but I have a copy of it, if that is the case.

There is a need for balance and reasonableness in this entire matter. The Minister of Justice is a man of unimpeachable integrity. He has made a statement to the House which severs any relationship that may have come about through his Department with his sons in this case. I think that the explanations provided by the Minister are reasonable and appropriate.

Having said that, I would like to acknowledge that the guidelines are very much in effect and force, and that all Ministers are obliged to respect them in all ways, including appearance. We must seek to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, that portion of Mr. Trudeau's letter was meant to excuse wives and children from following the guidelines. It was not meant to excuse Ministers from following the guidelines. Ministers are obliged to follow the guidelines. If their wives and children want to get into businesses of one kind or another, Mr. Trudeau was telling them that the guidelines did not necessarily apply to them. However, the guidelines certainly apply to the Minister of Justice. He has appointed his children as legal agents in the Province of Newfoundland, something which is clearly contrary to the words of the guidelines. The exculpatory language indicating what children and spouses can do has nothing to do with what Ministers can do. The integrity of the Minister of Justice is not directly the issue; it is his conduct.

How does the Prime Minister get justification for these appointments out of such clear language? Is he telling the Canadian people that these guidelines are a farce?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not at all. We view the guidelines with the utmost of seriousness. They must be honoured by all Ministers, not only in reality but in appearances to the contrary that might emerge, inadvertently or otherwise. That is why the Minister of Justice, whose name has been synonymous with integrity in Newfoundland for 100 years, made the statement that he did.

Mr. Parry: Even when he was a Liberal?

Mr. Mulroney: Even when he was a Liberal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But that was provincially.

I think that the explanation given by my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, was both human and proper. May I say, recognizing that my hon. friend has every right to put the question, that I think the question diminishes the value of his efforts and he diminishes himself in the eyes of Canadians by persisting in this line of attack.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Director of Investigation and Research systematically reviews all large-scale transactions, and he will be reviewing this one as well with a view to determining whether or not the merger may have implications for the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. I am sure he will be carrying out his statutory duties as he has an obligation to do so under the Act.

PENSIONS

BUDGET IMPACT ON INDEXATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In defending the Government's position to cut full indexation of old age pensions, which will affect the mothers and grandmothers of Canada, by $4.2 billion between now and 1991, the Minister said that he had no option. I would like to give him a fifth option.

Would he not admit that if his Government had reinstituted the higher levels of income tax which were paid by the rich, and cut by the Liberal Government in the MacEachen Budget, it would have brought in $1.7 billion, and his Government would not be known as the purse snatcher of the nation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again, I do not believe that the premise on which that question is based is accurate.

Ms. Copps: Jake's a fake!

Mr. Waddell: You said you did not have any choice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He has the same message. He just keeps on yapping and he is not even speaking from his own seat.

The point is to create jobs. We need jobs in Canada for the young. We need jobs to create wealth. Surely that has to be the first point of consideration. The other point which I would make, and I made it yesterday in a speech, so he can see it in the debates which were held yesterday, is that he has left out, throughout the entire debate, when he speaks either in the House or to seniors, that the minimum tax which the Minister of Finance said clearly in the Budget would take effect in 1986 is the same period of time when the matter of indexation will take place. I would ask him to take a look at the Budget, at both sides of the issue, and to be fair about it on both sides of the issue.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. During this Question Period we have given the Minister five options. He has risen and defended those who make their money from capital gains. He has defended those who make their money from windfall profits. He has defended those who are not paying their fair share of taxes. Who, on that side, will defend the old age pensioners?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will, and every one of my colleagues does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The reason I have rejected every one of his options is that they are based on the same principle. That principle is: create a larger debt; take more money in tax dollars and pay it out in debt servicing. That was included in every one of his options. Those are options which have not worked. We have got an annual $35 billion debt. We have an accumulated $190 billion debt. It has not worked. Despite all that spending, there are 1.4 million unemployed people. Those are the reasons why we had to change the course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

EXPANSION OF DISABILITY DEFINITION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is my understanding that in the recent Budget, by virtue of expanding the definition of disabled, 120,000 Canadians will receive additional social benefits. I would like the Minister to explain how many of the 120,000 are senior citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange, when a question of that nature is asked, that the Liberals do not want to hear the answer.

Mr. Lapierre: We know the answer.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Under the present tax provision the definition for disability, namely, that a person can reduce their taxable income by a certain amount because of a disability factor, was based on what has sometimes been referred to as traditional disability criteria, such as a person who is bedridden, in a wheelchair, or blind. We thought it should be expanded to include, for instance, families who look after members of their family who are mentally retarded. We expect that an additional 120,000 Canadians, and their families who are fulfilling that responsibility, will be eligible. I will have to get back to the Hon. Member on the number of seniors whom it will affect.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

QUESTION PERIOD—ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the Conservative campaign booklet, "PC pocket politics", during the election campaign the Conservative Party said:

> Government must be accountable to the people of Canada . . . accessible government begins with respecting the role of Parliament . . . We will return Parliament to the forefront of legislative activity—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: If those promises mean anything at all, they mean that the Prime Minister must be here to answer questions which only he can answer with respect to violations of the conflict of interest guidelines and promises which he made with respect to patronage during the election campaign.

Has the Prime Minister introduced a new system, or has he given instructions to his staff whereby he will attend Question Period only two or three days per week? Does his staff set his schedule in accordance therewith? If he has, will he give the House the memo which sets out the instructions for attendance at Question Period?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is widely known that I stay away from the House because I am terrified of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: You would not answer the senior citizens, would you?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member has never gotten over her feeling of sadness that, when she leaves Queens Park, something good happens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: What have you got against Frank?

Mr. Nystrom: Would Bill Davis like that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: I was away for about 15 business days in Europe, Regina, Moscow, and elsewhere. My attendance record, adjusted for government business, is approximately 65 per cent. The attendance of the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP is just about the same. He should make the allowance that I had to travel.

When the NDP get into it, with what they're doing in Toronto their new slogan must be: "If you will be my valentine, I will be your concubine".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer my question. As a matter of fact, his flippant answer to my serious question is a clear violation of what was said in the Speech from the Throne, when he said: "The purpose of my Government is to renew the confidence of Canadians that Parliament is truly the voice of the people and that Government is their servant". Is the Prime Minister serious about his priority on Parliament? He did not answer the question which was put to him by my hon. colleague. I will put the question to him again, and I will quote from the conflict of interest guidelines. They state:

> Ministers shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends or to organizations in which their—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Members who are yelling and telling me that that is not a supplementary question are making it impossible for me to tell whether it is supplementary because I cannot hear the question. Would the Hon. Member please come to his question?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if one closely examines that item in the conflict of interest guidelines, how can the Prime Minister justify the Minister of Justice appointing his sons for legal business—

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order. Now that I have heard it, the question is clearly not supplementary.

Point of Order—Mr. Allmand

FISHERIES

FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS OFF WEST COAST

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who just stepped behind the curtains. The Minister expressed serious outrage at the time when he found out that the East Coast fisheries were being abused by foreign fishing fleets. Yet on the West Coast there are no observers for the foreign fishing vessels, there is no monitoring of the interception by Japanese and Asian fishermen, and there is certainly no research, or high seas tagging program. Would the Minister care to explain to this House why on the East Coast there can be studies, investigations, monitoring and observers, and there is nothing on the West Coast?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes, I can, Mr. Speaker. It has something to do with the 200-mile limit.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): I wish the Minister would take some time to inform himself exactly on what the difference is. His officials in committee indicated there was not one dollar for observers, monitoring or research, and high seas tagging. How can the Minister justify being the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and failing to fulfil completely the responsibilities he has to the West Coast fishing industry?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the interceptions to which the Hon. Member is undoubtedly referring are well out into the Pacific and beyond our 200-mile limit.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of four petitions, presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, June 5, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Certain petitions presented by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINTS OF ORDER

LEGITIMACY OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period when I put my first question it had to do with the seriousness with which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) considered the Question Period. When he gave me an answer to that question, I wanted to test the answer he gave to the first question in my supplementary question because he had not answered questions we had put to him previously. I do not understand how you, Mr. Speaker, could say that that second question was not supplementary to the first which had to do with the Prime Minister's attitude with respect to questions in this House relating to matters about which he can only answer.

I would like you, Mr. Speaker, to explain to me in the House how you ruled that that second question was not supplementary to the first?

An Hon. Member: You don't question rulings.

Mr. Speaker: It appeared to me that the question which was being put as a supplementary question was not a supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period the Prime Minister quoted at length from a letter of the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau. I would like to ask that the letter be tabled in accordance with the usual practice.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not one to peer over the Prime Minister's shoulder, but that was a separate document altogether, with an extract. It was not a letter.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Well, then, table that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I saw, as the Speaker, the Prime Minister referring to a document.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was not a letter.

Mr. Speaker I am prepared to reserve with respect to the "blues", but the question has been put as a point of order and relates to the rules in Beauchesne with regard to the tabling of a document which is referred to in the House. However, I am prepared to reserve and look at the "blues".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think that there is clear precedent with respect to the types of documents which should be tabled, and they are of an official nature, clearly, to start with. I would like to have an opportunity of addressing this matter so we can have a precise ruling. If an Hon. Member, for example, brings in a set of notes from which to refresh his memory, with an extract from another document, I hardly think that that is the kind of document which would be contemplated by Beauchesne, or under our rules. But I would like to address that whole question at a subsequent time.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he was quoting from a letter from a former Prime Minister. He gave the date. In accordance with the rules of this house that letter should be tabled now so we can see the total relevance.

Also, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the House Leader, I would ask if the Prime Minister would also inform us whether he has discussed with the Clerk of the Privy Council whether it is in order to table a letter from a Prime Minister of a former administration.

Mr. Speaker: The second half of that document creates a greater difficulty for me. I take it the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is asking me to defer making a decision so that he can prepare an argument. I have heard a case put with regard to the citation which claims that a statement was made in Question Period in which a letter was quoted. The only way that I know of that I can test that is to wait until I see the "blues". I think perhaps, in the circumstances, all I can do is to wait to read the "blues", but I am open to representations on that, I suppose.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice now that if you hear argument on this point from the Government House Leader, I intend to offer an argument on the same matter, with your permission.

Mr. Speaker: I accept that as well.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has not finished his point of order?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I was misled by what was said into believing that there was a letter from which the Prime Minister was reading. If he was reading from a document, I want my request to apply to that document from which he was reading, letter or not.

Mr. Speaker: I accept that. I think that under the circumstances I will have to reserve and try to determine what was said in Question Period, whether there was a reference made, on the understanding that both House Leaders will make representations.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, the document was quoted today. It is that document we want to see. It is not a document which may be produced tomorrow. The rules are very clear. You have said that yourself, Mr. Speaker. I would rather that you do not, Mr. Speaker, go and see the "blues" which will be published within an hour or two. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has left the House, and that is his privilege. He probably left with the document, but it is that document we want to see. When someone refers to a document in this House, he has to produce the document, if a request is made. We do not see why we should wait until tomorrow to see the document. It is that document we want to see.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the point that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is making. Since, I take it, the document has left the House, or the letter or whatever it is, I do not think it makes any difference at this moment whether I reserve my ruling until I review the video tape because, I take it, the point the Hon. Member was making relates to whether the document should leave the House once it has been put under appeal. There is no way that I know of that I can make the document magically reappear.

An Hon. Member: Why can't you?

Mr. Speaker: There are limits to the Speaker's authority and powers, I assure you, and one of them is making papers appear.

I will, therefore, reserve and come back to the House with a judgment on this matter as quickly as I humanly can. It will be this afternoon some time.

ALLEGED INACCURATE STATEMENTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on June 3, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) made a completely inaccurate statement—and I refer to Hansard at page 5325—alleging that I had appointed my chief campaign organizer as a legal agent of the Department of Justice in matters involving, I think he said, drugs at approximately $200,000 a year. That statement was completely untrue and incorrect. This person, Mr. Pittman, has never done any work for me of a political nature at all.

The Hon. Member further worsened these false statements in the House yesterday, on June 5, when I was out of the House. I am back in the House today, Mr. Speaker. I rushed back from Toronto to be here for the Question Period, but there were no questions asked by the hon. gentlemen opposite. They haven't got the backbone, of course, of an India rubber man.

At page 5439 of Hansard of June 5, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East admitted he was wrong. He said that Mr. Pittman never worked in my campaign. He said he checked with sources in Newfoundland and was told that Mr. Pittman was not the campaign manager, but a Mr. Finton Aylward, senior partner in the same firm—and I quote:

—was a senior campaign manager in the Minister's leadership campaign, and the firm Aylward, Morris, and Pittman was awarded legal business by the Minister.

That was his statement. But let me correct the record, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Aylward was not a senior campaign manager in the Minister's leadership campaign, although he certainly was a supporter, as was, reportedly, just about everyone in the Province of Newfoundland in that campaign. I therefore say that these are false allegations and I want to point out that the firm of Aylward, Morris and Pittman was on the list of legal agents even in those days, so long ago, when the Liberal Party was in office. They somehow got on by mistake.

• (1510)

Mr. Foster: That was when you were a Liberal.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, could I point out to the House that Mr. Paul Dicks received $120,329 in 1983-84 while he was President of the Liberal Association of Newfoundland. A supporter of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner)—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —Mr. Ed Roberts, got $75,000 during the period that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: He was a friend of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, but none of this was pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Minister resume his seat?

Mr. Crosbie: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Deeply, I can tell.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to tell us his plans for the business of the House over the next several days in light of the rather extensive discussions he has been having with myself and the NDP House Leader today and for some days previously.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As you know, we will conclude consideration of third reading of Bill C-15 this afternoon. Tomorrow the business of the House will be item No. 20 standing under the heading of Government Business on the Order Paper. That motion relates to an amendment to the Constitution of Canada with respect to the consideration of legislation in the Senate. The business for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week will be Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, followed by Bill C-51, an Act to provide borrowing authority. I hope that the House will be able to conclude consideration of both these Bills by the end of Wednesday.

Finally, I would like to announce that I am designating Thursday of next week as the final allotted day in the current supply period.

PETITIONS

IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS ON FAMILY REUNIFICATION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition on behalf of the Community Coalition on Immigration, an organization representing the Chinese, Filipino, Portuguese, Latin American, Caribbean and South Asian communities in the city of Toronto. The petition requests that amendments be made to the immigration regulations as they relate to family reunification. The petitioners beseech the federal Government to expand the current definition of the family reunification classification to include sons and daughters, brothers and sisters over the age of 21, regardless of their marital status.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present once again a petition from hundreds of elderly people protesting their being used as fodder in the war on unemployment and for the benefit of the rich in this country.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to rise in my place to present a petition on behalf of a group of citizens from British Columbia. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the Old Age Security program in Canada.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, for the third time this week I have the honour to present a petition signed by Canadians from all parts of Canada indicating that they are very upset with the fact that the Government broke its election promise to index old age pensions to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis. They ask that this House make sure that the Conservatives keep that election promise.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of more than 150 people, mostly from the Province of British Columbia, protesting the cutting of the indexation provisions of Old Age Security. They demand that full indexing be restored, as was promised by the Conservatives prior to the last election.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from citizens primarily from Vancouver and environs who protest the fact that the May 23 Budget imposes undue and unfair hardship on pensioners by deindexing Old Age Security pensions. The losers will be the poor, the unemployed and women. The petitioners humbly pray that the House of Commons reinstate full indexation.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): I, too, have a petition from a number of Canadians who call upon the Government to change its policy regarding deindexation. They make very clear their opposition to these serious policy changes in the Budget.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present to the House a series of petitions, mostly from the Cities of Coquitlam, Vancouver and Burnaby, in which the petitioners request that the Government reinstate full indexation of the Old Age Security program in Canada.

IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS ON FAMILY REUNIFICATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 1,724 Canadians, mostly from Toronto, requesting that the Immigration Act and regulations be changed so as to allow sons, daughters, brothers and sisters, regardless of their marital status, over the age of 21 years, to immigrate under the family reunion program.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from a number of people in Canada who are protesting the deindexation of pensions. They point out that the erosion of their pension rights will occur at a rate of $100 for 1986 up to $680 by 1991, and they request that full indexation be put into effect.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a peititon from many residents of Vancouver who protest the cruel and insensitive action of deindexing old age pensions. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to restore full indexation for old age pensions.

DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by 1,700-odd households of the City of Mercier, in my beautiful riding of Châteauguay, asking the House to make representations to Canada Post for door-to-door mail delivery in that community. Those citizens maintain that as taxpayers they are entitled to the same services as those provided for all other Canadians.

DEINDEXATION OF OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by many residents of the City of Vancouver in British Columbia. The petitioners are against the Government's proposed deindexation of old age security pensions, and they point out in their petition that the people most severely affected in Canada are the poor, the unemployed and the women.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise to present a petition signed by numerous people in New Westminster and Burnaby, British Columbia, near my area of Vancouver-Kingsway. They ask that the House of Commons reinstate full indexation of the Old Age Security program. I can tell your Honour that my office is literally flooded with phone calls with respect to this particular issue.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

MEASURE TO REPEAL

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-242, an Act to repeal the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, this Bill will save money for employers and employees, indeed the entire private sector as well as the Government. In my view and that of many others, this Act is redundant and an unnecessary burden on business and individuals generally.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: When we adjourned, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had been given the floor for a comment. I will therefore recognize the Hon. Member for a comment, but, in the circumstances, will end the period for questions and comments after that time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I guess we will have to read our rules some day to find out exactly what happens when a Member is not in the House following an adjournment and the question period has to be followed through. I would love to have the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) here to address my questions to, but I will just make a short comment. We all understand the difficulties of trying to be in two or three places at the same time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). In a speech which, I assume, was intended to be constructive, she made a few statements which surprised me somewhat. She said, for instance, that Opposition Members had painted a terrifying picture of the legislation before the House, in other words, of Bill C-15. Maybe terrifying for her, but I can assure her it was in an attempt to be constructive, to amend the Bill and to make some important changes, that we proposed some 94 amendments, most of which, 92 in fact, were rejected by the Government.

The Hon. Member, as I said before, made some rather surprising comments. If I understood correctly, she said that the foreign companies in her riding re-invest just as much as Canadian companies do. I would ask her to review the figures she gave the House, because if Bill C-15 applies to Canada as a whole, then we are not talking about Gatineau or one particular area, we are talking about the whole country, and foreign companies certainly do not invest as much as Canadian companies. That is the whole point. I am not talking about the question of foreign investment in Canada. We have always said they were welcome. What we do not want is foreign control of our companies, our industry and our trade. We want to try and be masters of our own house and our economy, in order to be able to compete internationally.

The Hon. Member also stated that foreign companies in her riding were doing as much research and development as Canadian companies, if not more. It may well be that in Gatineau a few foreign companies are doing research and development, but generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, in Canada, and we only have to look at the official figures provided by Statistics Canada last year, and we have the figures for the years 1973, 1975, 1977, 1979, 1980, 1982 and 1983, I have them here, the table has been published . . . It is false to say that foreign companies do as much research and development as Canadian companies. Not much is done in Canada, and that is the problem. We would like to see more.

The Science Council has said we will have to tackle this problem and try to do at least the bare minimum of research and development to provide incentives and create jobs. It is absolutely false to say that foreign companies in Canada do more research and development, and I would ask the Hon. Member to remove her blinkers and take an objective look at the situation here in Canada.

The Hon. Member also claims that foreign companies do not export Canadian profits and funds abroad. Mr. Speaker, I submit that we would need only look into the Canadian entity, the business which multinational firms are doing in this country to realize that they are not here out of the kindness of their corporate hearts or because of our expertise, but to make money, something for which I do not blame them, but we, on the opposition side, would like to encourage Canadian, American and foreign firms to come here to create jobs which would benefit Canadians and possibly help us recover the control over our economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I am somewhat bitter as I rise today because I had hoped that the government would have shown more patience, indulgence and comprehension during this debate on Bill C-15, and would have made possible for both government and opposition members to express their views concerning this important piece of legislation, the purpose of which is to establish an agency called Investment Canada.

[English]

Bill C-15 is indeed an important piece of legislation. It may be the only important piece of legislation which has been before the House in the last seven or eight months. We in the Official Opposition have considered Bill C-15 at second reading, committee stage, and for the short time we were able to debate it, at report stage. We have put forward our arguments and suggestions in a forthright and responsible manner. We see an impatient and sometimes arrogant Tory Government which is deaf to all improvements. We see a Tory Government using its huge majority to stifle debate and put a halt to the normal democratic process in the House by allowing only one more day of debate on third reading. This is the day. We have only one day to discuss third reading of a very important piece of legislation, Bill C-15. I regret that, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

In fact, what the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has said and done here clearly demonstrates that there is no room here for a constructive debate, that there is no room according to him for constructive criticism or for the submission of valid alternatives. I find this deplorable, Mr. Speaker. I truly regret what the Minister has done, what the Minister imposed on the House and what the Opposition has tried to improve. The Minister has decided not to continue. The majority obviously wins in a democracy, but it is still deplorable, and I, for one, suggest that the Minister would have been well advised to be present and listen a little more during the debate. Even his Parliamentary Secretary would have benefited by being present in the House to listen to what the opposition had to say.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat bitter as I rise to deal with the third reading, because I think it is important that all those who have been involved at the various stages of debate on this bill . . . I think it is of paramount importance to let Canadians know that the Liberal Party of which I am a member, the Official Opposition which has tried to improve this bill, is not against foreign investments. Quite the contrary! We are and will continue to be in favour of foreign investments, and to work very hard to persuade international financiers to consider Canada and to invest in our country. What we reject and will continue to fight against is foreign control over our economy.

In my opinion, there is not a single Canadian who does not understand that if we want to take our rightful place in this world, in this industrialized and, in many cases, post-industrialized world, if we want to take our rightful place on this planet, it is absolutely essential that we first gain control of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that Bill C-15 will do nothing to help us achieve this objective. This Government, which is seemingly rudderless and which abdicates any form of leadership in an area such as investment so important for job creation, has imposed closure, and told us that, no, it does not want to allow a proper and thorough screening of foreign investments and prefers to put its confidence in businessmen, and to say: Come, Canada is for sale. Mr. Speaker, we say that this is not the right thing to do. What we must do, and let us hope that this Government will see the light, is not only to promote foreign investments, but also to ensure that such investments are in the best interests of Canadians.

In an area as important as foreign investment, the Tory Government is telling us: Let us trust foreign investors; it is not up to us to ensure that their investments will benefit Canada! I deplore such an attitude, Mr. Speaker, which lost us technologies and skills in the past, for instance in the famous AVRO case, where an aeronautical company closed down under a Conservative Government during the 50's, as Hon. Members will recall, causing the loss of an important aeronautical technology and Canadian researchers left Canada because they could not find jobs in this country at the time.

This same attitude is being shown today by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). We have only to look at the case of Mitel. They brag that they got a British company interested in investing in Mitel, a Canadian company. That is all very well, but the difference between myself and the Minister is that I am quite willing to welcome foreign capital, but only if it is invested in a company which remains fully owned and controlled by Canadians. Exactly the opposite happened in the case of Mitel, Mr. Speaker. We have witnessed a foreign takeover of a Canadian company which admittedly had management problems, but was one of the most important high technology companies in the world, credited with fantastic breakthroughs in its field in the last ten years.

Mr. Speaker, the second reading debate on Bill C-15 was relatively short. As we know, what is discussed at the second reading stage is the principle of the Bill. At the report stage, we believed in the good faith of the Government and we really thought that we would be allowed to make constructive amendments to strengthen the Bill. But no! What did we see? We once again saw the Minister and the Government who were afraid of debate and of constructive suggestions. As I said earlier, we introduced nearly 94 motions, only one third of which were discussed. The rest were shelved because of closure. The Government said: No, we are not interested. When imposing closure, the Government gave no valid reason for its arrogant decision, and to add to the insult to Canadians, the Tory backbenchers have been rather idle during this debate. They have not taken part, but then they rarely do so. They are like obedient sheep, and I find this very unfortunate because they represent 211 constituencies and millions of voters. However, their voice was not heard during this debate. This is not democracy, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

We on this side of the House have participated in this debate in good faith. We put forward our ideas at second reading and at committee stage. We tried to do it at report stage. As I said, before closure was so rudely introduced, we thought that we would be able to discuss and amend this Bill constructively. We are attempting to have, at least during third reading, some semblance of constructive viewpoints put forth by the Government, but we have not had that.

We heard the Minister this morning tell us about net outlays of cash and gross outlays of cash. He talked to us about many, many things in a way that is probably confusing to many Canadians and to many of us in this House. In fact it comes down to what the purpose of this legislation, be it the old FIRA which will disappear with the passage of this Bill, or the new Investment Canada Bill. The purpose of this Bill is to try our damn best to interest foreign capital in Canadian development, but with an objective that would be in the interest of Canadians. First there should be notice and review of the supposed takeover and then a follow-up to make sure that it is in the interest of Canada and the interest of Canadians and that there will be from this inflow of capital jobs and other benefits to Canadians.

We did have the satisfaction of finding the Tories somewhat, if I could use the words, "asleep at the switch" on Tuesday last when the question on Motion No. 24 was put to the House. We were pleased, I must say, to have obtained this important change in the Bill. I think it has a very strong impact on the rental housing market. I sincerely believe we will have a better protected market for rental properties. The experience in this field, of course, brings to one's mind the notorious SeawayTrust and Greymac affair in Toronto of several months ago when we saw inflated transactions carried out by numbered companies affecting some 13,000 apartment renters which caused havoc and undue anxiety. If it had not been for the FIRA legislation at the time and the provincial government which intervened, I think some people would have been hurt unjustly.

I recognize the good in the FIRA legislation as it existed. I think this amendment of ours, Motion No. 24, will make it possible for rental properties when they are the object of takeovers to be reviewed as to whether they are in the best interest of Canadians.

This Government has claimed that consultation is to be the cornerstone for its dealings with Canadians, that it cares, that it will listen and act accordingly. This is not the case with Bill C-15. Not a single Opposition suggestion was accepted willingly by the Tories. I bet senior citizens and middle-income Canadians are glad the Tories listened to them in putting forward what I call the purse-snatcher Budget which they brought in. What about the indexing reductions senior citizens will have to face in the years to come? I am sure those ordinary Canadians wanted to pay more taxes and get smaller pensions. It is totally irresponsible, unwise, and without precedent that a Government breaks its word so much on a so-called sacred trust.

Sometimes I wonder whether the Government has any credibility, whether one can believe its word. In my view it goes along aimlessly, day by day. We could quantify very easily the measures which it has taken over the last months in committing, for example, patronage scandals, left and right, without giving the country any real leadership. Bill C-15 exemplifies the lack of direction on the part of the Government.

I should like to address some aspects of the Bill, one of which is its impact on research and development.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that there are jobs in research and development. Research and development with respect to new products in Canada generate many jobs. On the other hand, the screening agency and the change that is proposed by the Government could, at least in my humble view, be considered from a somewhat more critical viewpoint. I think there are three major consequences to the change in the screening agency as we knew it, and to the establishment of the agency known as Investment Canada.

Over the last two decades, Mr. Speaker, without exaggeration, we have experienced a significant acceleration in the interdependence of countries as involved in the global economy. Foreign trade has been a factor of growth, both for us and the others. To be a full partner in the global economy network, a nation must control its economic base, from which it will derive its strategy at the world level. And where the economic base of a nation is owned by foreign interests, that nation's power of decision at the international level is displaced and significantly reduced. Recent economic history, the oil conflict in particular, the global debt crisis, the protracted recession of the 1980's, show without a shadow of doubt that the interests of creditor nations always outweigh those of debtor nations.

Foreign control may also result in a loss of national identity. This also affects the international economic policy, especially where a nation's most sensitive sectors such as the cultural and the communications sectors, are controlled by foreign interests. But although the domestic production of certain activities may be more costly in terms of net economic costs than their importation, regulations favouring Canadians may be the only real means of checking such activity.

There are also consequences with regard to technological progress. This is my second point. As we know, Canada has been striving for a number of years for an international presence in the fields of research and development. We all know about the space arm, developed in this area, which is one of the very successfully innovative developments this country has made in the space industry.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the National Science Council has often stressed the point that Canada was not a great performer in that important area of research and development. We were often reminded that foreign multinationals had a tendency to concentrate their research and development activities in their own countries, and because of that they ignore the scientific potential of Canadians.

The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) pointed out this morning that in her constituency, things were different. She said: "Oh, at home, you know, CIP is a company that does a lot of research and development". I am not sure, I will check, but generally speaking most countries . . . CIP is a Canadian company but, as a rule, foreign companies do less research and development than Canadian companies.

All we need do is refer to Statistics Canada. My source of information is simple enough, a Statistics Canada publication entitled "Industrial Research and Development", Catalogue No. 88-202 of June 1984, the most recent. We see in the table that Canadian companies invest 1.4 per cent of their sales in research and development. American companies here in Canada spend less than 1 per cent—.9 per cent to be precise. The same is true of other countries, and that is where the problem lies. Foreign companies are inclined to do technological research and development in their own country and import it in other countries where they have branch plants. It stands to reason that foreign companies would prefer to import their new technology and do little if any research and development here, be it in car manufacturing, high technology, space research, ordinary mechanics, engineering and so on.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that we must promote—and try to enforce, if necessary—basic respect for Canadian initiative. We are trying to make them understand that investment is welcome in Canada, and it is. But come here in the interest of Canadians, do your research here, develop new products of international quality which we can sell on world markets, and help us develop our natural resources. But do not try to buy Canada, it is not up for sale!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. B. Tardif).

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed to hear my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) suggest that the government imposed closure when a bill has been considered for over 80 hours in the House and in committee and when the opposition has resorted extensively to filibuster tactics. As we know, on the second reading to which the member for Ottawa-Vanier just referred the opposition introduced a motion for a six-month hoist and rather than debating the philosophy of the bill, they carried an aimless series of discussions. When the bill was sent to committee, the opposition once again tried to delay the consideration of the bill with its numerous amending motions. In the House, we saw what the approach of the opposition was. It is somewhat surprising but we know precisely what has been the behaviour of the opposition up to now.

On the other hand, I would like to ask my colleague what he thinks about the results of a poll published on Monday last in the newspapers especially in a fine one, Le Soleil de Québec under the headline: "A majority for foreign investments in Canada". Two Canadian out of three hope that Prime Minister Mulroney will promote foreign investment rather than discourage it, with only 19 per cent. A small minority, that is 9 per cent, is satisfied with our present policy and an equal number are undecided.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, both questions of the Parliamentary Secretary puzzle me somewhat. In the first place, when the debate began on December 7, 1984, we had four days in the House. This is not much when we consider that the Tories held some bills for months when they were the opposition. It cannot be said that four days are too much. In January, the bill was debated for six days in committee and there were 14 sittings, two of which with the minister. This is not much. There was surely no exaggeration. A large number of witnesses could not be heard.

• (1550)

That is not consultation.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, this Bill has not been the subject of an in-depth study by the House. That is the Government's fault. The Government imposed closure.

As to the second question of the Hon. Member, namely whether Canadians want foreign investment, of course they do. There is no problem there. I always said so. I doubt if there is a Member of the Official Opposition or anybody else here who ever claimed that we are against foreign investment. Quite the contrary, we have always said: Welcome here, but we are not for sale. And when we hear that Canadians are satisfied with the previous legislation—Yes, I know, a recent poll shows that Canadians are satisfied with foreign investment controls. I agree with you that we started off with a major percentage held by foreigners. There is no denying it, we became buyers with the help of the FIRA legislation, the review agency which admittedly has been extremely useful to Canadians by enabling them to buy back their own economy, in many cases, and to develop it as they saw fit.

For me, the problem is not there. The problem is that we have to keep trying to attract foreign capital to this country. If we read the same newspapers—Le Soleil, Le Droit, the Globe and Mail and other outstanding Canadian newspapers—we see for instance that American bankers are not interested in investing money in Canada because profits are hardly worth the trouble. We all know the American monetary policy, the basic policy of very high interest rates. What do you expect, the Hon. Members knows I have often said that foreign investors go where they can make a profit, and that is quite normal. I say that there is nothing wrong with profit, I am all in favour of profit, but it has to be to the advantage of Canadians and Canadian jobs. We agree on that, I do not think there is a problem. What I am saying. Mr. Speaker, is that the Bill under consideration will not accomplish more than the previous legislation did, and it might even accomplish less if only because we will no longer have adequate power to control, review, scrutinize and sometimes screen foreign interests that are not particularly favourable to Canada. That is the main issue of this debate, the main point we have been trying to make throughout. Again I would like to make Hon. Members understand that I am not against foreign investment. I am against take-overs by foreign interests.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

A supplementary for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. B. Tardif).

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on what was said by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

When he says that we will no longer be reviewing investments to be made in Canada, he may have overlooked the fact that Investment Canada will review a certain percentage of such investments, namely those over $5 million if they are direct investments and those over $50 million for indirect investments.

I think it is most unfair of my hon. colleague to say in the House that we shall no longer be reviewing foreign investment.

Furthermore, in the first part of his speech, the Hon. Member said that we had cut off debate. He forgot to mention how they proceeded to cut off serious debate on the second reading of a Bill in this House. When the Opposition moved a questionable motion in the House to postpone consideration of a Bill for six months, I think that was the first motion that prevented us from giving serious consideration to this Bill. And the situation the Hon. Member is complaining about today was in fact created by the Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, regarding the first point made by the Parliamentary Secretary, she is right and I apologize. There is a review when a direct take-over worth $5 million or an indirect take-over worth $50 million is involved. That I overlooked. I thought I knew everything there is to know about this legislation, but I acknowledge my mistake and if I did not already say so before, I apologize.

As far as closure is concerned, the Government proposes and we are trying to dispose of the legislation here in the House, and when the Government proposes certain things and does not have the patience to let Members take the time to discuss them, I am sorry, but I refuse to believe that 40 Liberals and 30 New Democrats are in a position to scare 211 Progressive Conservative Members. That is just not true! The Government proposes often and it disposes as it wishes, and I can talk here until I am blue or red or purple or whatever in the face, but it will not make any difference at all and it will not change history, because the future of this legislation is already of foregone conclusion: at 4.45 p.m., the bells will ring and we will vote whether we want to or not, because the Government has so ordered. The Government does not want any more debate. It has imposed closure and it has said: We have had enough, we are going to vote. I do not blame them. That is what a majority is for and I should know, but I say it is not right.

[English]

Mr. Angus: I have one question for the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. First, I would like to congratulate him and his Party on getting the one amendment through, even though I suppose we might all agree it was through the back door.

Does the Hon. Member suggest that this Government will use the same approach as the last one and approve 95 per cent, if not more, of applications which apply under the real estate section? Alternatively, does the Hon. Member think this is a provision which will be ignored, just as FIRA provisions were in the last year or two of its operations?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question, of course, I hope not. I hope the Government will see the light and use this chance to screen, if that is the proper word, foreign investment takeovers of rental properties. I believe we have added some teeth to the provision, although they are not the tiger teeth I would have liked to see.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Not a full set!

Mr. Gauthier: That is right, not a full set. Rather, it is just a small tooth in the Bill which will probably be useful at the right moment in order to prevent foreigners from speculating and inflating real estate prices in Canada to their multinationals or corporations. I believe the Government should take advantage of Motion No. 24.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the reality we face today is that there are far too many Canadians who do not have jobs. We need to create jobs for Canadians. We have said this many times in the past. Bill C-15 certainly honours my Government's commitment to this end.

Foreign investment can stimulate our economy. The Foreign Investment Review Agency only hindered our participation in the competition to attract foreign companies to invest in Canada. One must ask why. Why for over 10 years was the previous Government content to abandon the goal of attracting the necessary equity investment to our country? FIRA put a severe crimp in the important of equity capital. This is an economic tragedy. Canada is rich beyond belief in land, materials, natural resources and the ability of workers. However, we find it very difficult at times to raise sufficient capital to take advantage of our magnificent and abundant investment opportunities.

Canada needs equity capital. We need it desperately. Some 600,000 jobs were lost due to the hostile ideology of the previous Government toward a toothless monster called foreign investment. That is not what my Government is about. We fully recognize that Canada needs, in real terms, nearly $100 billion over the next six years to create the opportunities necessary to create new jobs. We are firmly committed to doing this. Bill C-15 is one of the mechanisms by which we can achieve our goals. This Bill fulfils an election promise made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) on behalf of the Conservative Party on July 18, 1984. Then on September 4, the Canadian people sent a loud and clear signal to Ottawa giving us a new mandate for change. We were elected to make positive changes for Canadians because the Canadian people were tired of the same old, empty promises made by a tired, old Government. We campaigned hard on a promise of change, and Bill C-15 is proof of our sincerity and our determination to fulfil our mandate.

Members of the Opposition have tried everything to stall this change. We must ask ourselves why they insist on preventing positive and productive legislation. Undoubtedly it is because they never wanted to keep a pledge or a promise, and perhaps this is the reason they do not know how to deal with a sincere Government, a Government dedicated to change.

Foreign investors felt harassed and unwanted by FIRA. Merely the name of the agency was enough to disinterest many companies wanting to build a solid Canadian-based company. FIRA became an over-zealous, meddlesome nuisance which subjected prospective investors to a tangle of red tape, delay and frustration in the screening process. The irritant for businesses was going through the process, and the agency was perceived by some investors to be so burdensome that they did not even bother to apply to invest in Canada.

In June 1984, the Development Minister of Nova Scotia said that FIRA deprived Nova Scotia of foreign capital needed to create jobs and that foreign investors had contributed substantially to economic growth and job creation in that province. He added that Canadian investors cannot match the economic boost Nova Scotia received from foreign-based employers.

A West German ambassador has said that FIRA tended to inhibit German investment in Canada and had a deterrent effect on smaller industrial firms which shied away from the expense and bother of the red tape of that kind of agency. The British Trade Minister said that FIRA is an irritant and a barrier to foreign investment and that it is much easier for a British company to invest in Seattle than in Vancouver.

It is sobering to guess how much further ahead we would have been in job creation and output if we had not been forced into the narrow economic nationalism of the last 20 years. Canada lost many potential gains in the world markets of technology, investment and trade. This decline must not be allowed to continue.

Investment Canada eases the regulations facing corporations whose shares are publicly traded. A corporation in which the majority of voting shares are owned by Canadians, by Canadian-controlled companies or by Governments which meet the requirements will be considered to be Canadian under this Bill. Under FIRA, at least two-thirds of the voting shares had to be Canadian before a publicly traded corporation could be allowed to acquire firms without government interference.

Bill C-15 strengthens the incentive for publicly traded firms to increase Canadian participation and autonomy. Bill C-15 dissolves much of the oppression felt by much of the business community about FIRA and in its place it establishes an effective Act that protects Canadian interests but protects them in a positive and constructive way. Investment means jobs. Investment means more choice for the consumer. Investment means a better standard of living. Investment means faster growth.

Bill C-15 is not just of benefit to those of us on this side of the House. Each and every Member and their constituents will see the positive and real benefits that will come from the jobs that will be created by the foreign investors who will bring new capital to all areas of Canada.

One of the largest contributions from foreign investment is its contribution to Canada's economy through new job creation. As Canada began to recover from the recession, foreign-controlled firms contributed more to job creation than Canadian-controlled firms in some sectors. In 1984, in the manufacturing sector, foreign firms accounted for proportionately more new spending than Canadian firms.

Based on the estimate of the World Bank, $100,000 in new investment is required to create one new job in an industrialized country such as Canada. That translates into roughly 74,000 jobs being created by foreign investment in one year alone if $7 billion is invested. We cannot afford to snub this kind of investment. Our jobless cannot afford and will not accept going without meaningful work simply because of false fears and hysterical paranoia that we will lose our Canadian identity solely because we are encouraging foreign investment. The 1.4 million unemployed want to be put to work and it does not matter if they work for a Canadian or a foreign-owned firm. A job means work and an end to unemployment.

Foreign companies that invest in Canada are good corporate citizens. Located in my riding of Sarnia-Lambton is a very large industrial base for the petrochemical industry which contributes much to the economy of the riding. Imperial Oil has established in Sarnia its largest research and development centre in Canada and is firmly committed to continued R and D in Canada and the rest of the world. This company is committed to Canada, committed to employing Canadians and committed to contributing to a growing economy.

According to a poll recently conducted by the University of Waterloo's Laurier Institute for Business and Economic Studies, fewer than one-third of Canadians consider the issue of foreign investment in Canada to be a serious problem. A survey of 3,000 people across Canada revealed that at the beginning of the year, Canadians were positive about foreign investment in Canada. As recently as June 3, a headline from Ottawa's The Citizen indicated that more foreign investment was OK and that according to a national poll, 62 per cent of Canadians are positive about it. As a matter of fact, a similar poll indicated that of political supporters, 70 per cent of Conservative supporters, 62 per cent of Liberal supporters and 51 per cent of New Democratic Party supporters were positive about more foreign investment in Canada.

On May 6, an article in The Globe and Mail indicated that the British felt that the best news to come from Canada this year was the impending replacement of FIRA with Investment Canada. The Canadian-U.K. Chamber of Commerce in London believes that the new Act will allow potential investors to resume normal business rather than having to enter FIRA offices armed with corporate lawyers to do battle. British companies have contributed more than $6 billion to Canada, equivalent to 9 per cent of all foreign investment.

Investors from all countries are caught in the absurd vacuum of having to deal with the old Foreign Investment Review Agency while waiting anxiously to see what will be the final outcome of this legislation. We are confident that all investors will be pleased and will respond positively with new investments in Canada with the passage of Bill C-15.

Bill C-15 will erase the previous decade of hostility toward foreign investment. In 1980, the National Energy Program and the tough, regulatory FIRA actively encouraged foreign companies to consider other alternatives to investing in Canada. In the years following the introduction of the NEP, we witnessed an outflow of capital which sadly characterized the investment climate in Canada. After these devastating outflows of direct foreign investment funds of $1.4 billion in 1982 and $4.6 billion in 1981, Canada is now returning to a positive balance.

Contrary to what some would like to believe, Bill C-15 does not abandon our wish to develop a truly Canadian industrial strategy. However, we refuse to be bound by the tight, restrictive practices of the NEP and FIRA. Bill C-15 aims to bring together many different types of investors. We recognize that there are Canadians who wish to enter into a business relationship with non-Canadians to develop a business, industry or other activity. These non-Canadian investors will bring with them new technology, new equipment and new ideas with a view to serving the whole of the North and South American market as well as meeting the needs of Canada.

Investment Canada recognizes that there are many needs to be served and that we can no longer afford to treat Canadian needs in isolation. We tried that for over 10 years and we watched in desperation as the unemployment rate rose from 5 per cent to over 11 per cent.

Bill C-15 is fully cognizant of the many diverse yet similar interests of both the Government and the investment community. Clause 5 of the Bill recognizes some of the positive aspects which we perceive for Investment Canada. First, we need to encourage business investment which is deemed to be appropriate by the Minister. Second, we want to assist Canadian businesses to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement. Third, both interests are served with research and development and analysis relating to domestic and international investment. Fourth, we will assist each other with an exchange of information services, with the aim of facilitating economic growth in Canada. Fifth, it is the aim of the Minister to develop an industrial and economic policy for Canada. Last, we will ensure that the notification and review of investments will be carried out in accordance with the legislation. I assert that those six principles will provide the most positive and secure investment climate. We have not thrown caution to the wind. We have become realistic and in tune with the needs of the 1980s.

Bill C-15 provides a suitable review process of non-Canadian investment over certain thresholds. With respect to direct acquisitions, the Bill will review those applications which involve an investment over $5 million. It will mean that if the investments involve $5 million or more, there will be a review which will involve 90 per cent of the investment in dollar terms, and 80 per cent of that which was previously reviewed will be exempt. We feel that a $6,000 price tag attached to reviewing little corner stores is too high a price and is not productive for the Government. Instead, the Government proposes to review indirect acquisitions of $50 million or more and direct acquisitions of $5 million or more. That will allow us to review those bigger ticket items which possibly need to be reviewed, while leaving the smaller acquisitions alone. We are eliminating the wasteful ways of the previous Government. We are putting our own house in order and making productivity a number one priority when a government process is involved.

I think the past Government lost sight of that with its many years in office. It is still unable to shake that attitude in opposition. We are proposing from the very start to perform like any private sector business and to make ourselves concerned with productivity and cost.

Another major change which we are proposing is to introduce some sensibility and reasonableness with respect to the amount of time which will be allowed for the review process to be completed. We have simplified and streamlined the procedure. There will be a 45-day limit for notice of acceptance or non-acceptance. The Minister should be able to contact all interested parties and come to a decision within that 45-day time limit. However, in cases which are detailed and intricate, or if the Minister needs more time, we propose a 30-day extension. If the Minister still has not made a decision after 75 days, the application is deemed to have been approved. That is a positive amendment to the very ambiguous and drawn out review process which was associated with FIRA. We believe the applicant deserves fair treatment and should not be strung along waiting for the Government to make up its mind. If the business community were to operate in such a fashion, very little would be accomplished. Government should be no exception.

I have spent my time during the debate dealing with the inefficiencies of the past legislation and the positive amendments which we have put forward in Bill C-15. I feel I must now turn my attention to the one reservation which has been put in place. For any proposed investment which we have deemed to be of a cultural nature or of a national identity nature, we feel that there should be a review process, regardless of the size of the investment. We realize that many businesses involved in cultural activities do not have their importance judged solely by their balance sheets. We cannot and should not attach a dollar figure to such companies. We feel that firms in economic activities such as book publishing, media-related businesses, film production and distribution, deserve special attention. We propose that if an investment falls within a prescribed specific type of business activity which is related to Canada's cultural heritage or national identity, a review should take place.

Few people would reasonably suggest that Canada should heedlessly ignore our cultural autonomy or sovereignty. We certainly do not suggest that. We merely want to encourage foreign investment by creating a better climate for investment. That means an end to the policing, the regulations and the red tape. We also recognize the need to protect the national sovereignty in energy, banking, the communications media, telecommunications, film and book publishing industries. We have implemented that with the addition of the cultural policy component. That also shows our appreciation of the special consideration which must be given to the culturally-related industries.

In closing, I would like to say that I am honoured to have participated in the debate today on Bill C-15. I would also like to say that it is the commitment of the Government to adopt an approach of consultation rather than confrontation in our attempts to develop an economic strategy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated that "the Government is there to assist—and not to harass the private sector in creating new wealth and the new jobs that Canada needs". That new attitude is incorporated in the Bill respecting investment in Canada. It is the beginning of instilling a new confidence in all sectors of the economy.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) has made the usual contradictory speech which government Members have been making on this legislation. On the one hand, we hear about all the reasons for which we must have foreign investment and, on the other hand, we hear a variety of points being stated as to the way in which the Minister will supervise the matter. That suggests to me that members of the Government are not sure that the route which is being taken is the proper one. In spite of their protestations about narrow economic nationalism, I believe they fear that foreign investment might not do the job. The Member has evinced the supine and dependent attitude that we have seen time and again from government Members that they hope to get in on good things in the United States, or that foreign investment will bring us what we do not have the ability to do in this country. The Member has evinced that attitude perfectly well.

What evidence does he have that foreign investment has brought us prosperity in the past, or that it has, in a national sense, created the kind of employment which we need. What evidence does he have that it has not closed the door in the past to Canadians who would like to exploit high technology in the country? Is there evidence that it has not closed the door to investment opportunities for Canadians by filling markets with companies which are completely controlled by outsiders so that it is not possible to buy stock in those companies? Has it done anything for Canadian exports when foreign interests have established enterprises in Canada which explicitly are not in the export business? They end up exporting only one thing—the profits which they make selling their products at high prices to Canadians.

There are several matters which one can cite in criticism of foreign investment. They are ones which government Members, in supporting Bill C-15, have not addressed properly. We have not had a real demonstration of the values of foreign investment against these critical observations. So I challenge the Hon. Member to provide evidence for his claims that poor, desperate Canadians who have not been able to find work—thanks to the policies of the last Government and this Government—are going to get anything better from foreign investment of the sort the Hon. Member is calling for and that which the Government has proposed in Bill C-15.

• (1620)

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, certainly I do not think there is any sort of contradiction at all. We are saying, as a Government, and Investment Canada is saying, that we are very interested in foreign investment coming here, investing and starting up industries which are going to provide jobs. The common argument of the Hon. Member's Party is that foreign investment brings no new technology but simply exports everything, including the profits. The experience I have had in my riding, which is very important to me, is that 95 per cent of the direct employment is from foreign investment. There is a major research and development centre, probably one of the major centres in Canada, in my riding. We have Imperial Oil, with a research and development centre for Exxon. We have Dow Chemical Canada, which is a multinational corporation. Some of these companies employ over 2,500 employees.

It is very difficult for me, coming from the kind of riding I do, to say that foreign investment is not good. A lot of those companies located in the Sarnia area over 30 years ago. So I guess that this is a good track to run on. The concern is how many companies like the Dow Chemicals, the Exxons and so on, we scared away with the FIRA type of legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) for one supplementary question, then I intend to hear argument with regard to the tabling of documents requested earlier today.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I suggest, perhaps in response to what the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) said, that to argue the situation of one riding as opposed to the nation is quite an inadequate case.

Let me turn to another matter. The Hon. Member has also suggested that Investment Canada will provide incentives for Canadian companies to increase their shareholdings. There has been talk at various times about this legislation improving Canadian and foreign investment. I am curious to see what the Hon. Member would have us believe in that particular area of encouragement to Canadians.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, one response I would have is that, from my experience in the business community, a lot of the larger corporations, the multinationals, in getting into new businesses, are more interested in not having them solely under the wing of the major company, and they are looking for Canadian investors to be part of that or to be the major owner of those kinds of businesses.

I think the Hon. Member probably understands that that has become very prevalent in Japan and in some other places in the world. I think there is a tremendous potential for that sort of thing and, hopefully, we will see in Thunder Bay as well as in Sarnia major corporations now working with the individual investors, the latter being the suppliers for those major companies.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. KAPLAN—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members earlier asked me to allow argument to be made with regard to the question of the potential tabling of a document which was referred to in Question Period. Is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) or the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) ready to make argument?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could start this off. Some days I find it rather difficult to understand exaclty some points of order—I shouldn't say "some days", every day I find it difficult to find out what the points of order of members of the Official Opposition are. I try to be as accommodating and co-operative as possible. If I understood exactly what they wanted, and if it were a legitimate point of order, I think we could deal with it. However, there is no question today that reference was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to a letter written by the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, to the then Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance, the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen. The date of that letter was April 28, 1980. As I understood the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it was that that document which was cited should be tabled.

I am not quite sure what the point is. The document which was referred to by the Prime Minister has been tabled. It is a sessional paper. It was in fact, as I recall it, tabled on May 1, 1980, by my predecessor, the Hon. Yvon Pinard, and it is now a public document. Perhaps I do not quite understand what the Official Opposition is driving at, but I take it that those Hon. Members are referring to the reference in Beauchesne with respect to citing state papers. There was a reference by the Prime Minister to a document which is already a public document. It has already been tabled in the House of Commons. It is a sessional paper of the previous Parliament.

I simply make those observations at this point, not from the point of view of trying to obstruct the point of order but rather to suggest that perhaps it is not a legitimate point of order, unless I have my understanding of the request of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) all wrong.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, at the time the Government House Leader objected to the tabling of the letter which was read in the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), he did not say that in effect the request was unnecessary because the document was already a public document.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I said that in my seat.

Point of Order—Mr. Kaplan

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): He attempted to argue, when on his feet, that there may well have been grounds for withholding that letter from Parliament and the public. I want to make sure that it is understood that even if that document had not already been tabled in the House on May 1, 1980, it was a document which, under the clear precedents of this House, had to be tabled. The document in question was cited, so that, I submit, Mr. Speaker, under the terms set down in the precedents it would have to be tabled in this House, if requested.

Mr. Beatty: It is all rather academic at this point.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I just want to make sure that the suggestion the Government House Leader made earlier this day that somehow there were valid grounds for not producing the letter—even if it had not already been made a state paper, as the Government House Leader did not say—would not be a valid argument because the document in question was in fact quoted and was specifically used to influence the debate in the Question Period. I just want to make very clear, Mr. Speaker, that these are circumstances which would require the tabling of the letter, if that request were made.

It may be that this document is already a public document because it was tabled in the House on May 1, 1980. If that is the case, we will request copies of the document so that all can see what the letter is about and the context in which that document was used.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to stress that even if that document had not been tabled on May 1, 1980, the precedents are very clear that once we had requested that document, after it had been quoted at length in the House by the Prime Minister, it would have had to have been presented to the House in response to that request.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I now see what the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition is talking about, so I believe I can now address the point of order. What the Hon. House Leader tries to raise by way of a point of order is, of course, a hypothetical situation. I could not understand how the Opposition could be referring to a document which was already a public document, saying that it had to be tabled twice. So of course I was on my feet, as I usually am, trying to do the right thing. I said then to the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition that we could spend days, months, indeed years, tabling documents over and over and over again.

However, that is not the question. The Hon. House Leader of the Opposition is trying to have you, Mr. Speaker, rule on a hypothetical situation with respect to some document which may some day be quoted from, and to make a blanket observation with respect to documents quoted by a Minister of the Crown. There are a number of different types of documents, and I do not think I have to take any more time of the House on this except to say that in this particular instance it is fair to say that clearly it is quite proper for a Minister of the Crown to quote from a public document. I do not think there is any question about that. That disposes of a point of order, I submit, with respect to what has transpired. That is precisely the admission made by the House Leader: the document is a public document. I do not think it would serve any purpose to speculate here. We can read Beauchesne's and consider each situation on its own merits, but I do not think we want to make some sort of general rule for the future with respect to categorizing any document which is quoted as being liable to be tabled. I think we have to look at each case on its own merits.

Mr. Speaker: Clearly the general point is correct. The Speaker can only be asked to rule on whether a particular document quoted from is covered by Beauchesne's. There are precedents on this question, and I am not quite sure that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) concluded. Is he arguing that the document should be tabled?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is now saying that this document was tabled in 1980 and is therefore a public document, then I will be happy to send, in the appropriate way, for a copy of this paper. But I want to state at this time that that was not what he was saying earlier today. He was raising objections of a procedural nature. It is only later in the day, a few moments ago, that he informed the House that the document had been tabled. If he had said that right after Question Period when the point of order was raised, then we would not have got into this discussion. But I also want to make sure that a precedent is not inadvertently created which undermines the existing precedents concerning the necessity to table documents once they are quoted from in debate or in Question Period.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Certain types of documents.

Mr. Speaker: As Members would expect, I have reviewed the tape and the statement as well as the precedents. That is what I am supposed to do. There is a very clear precedent from 1977 on exactly the same matter. Mr. Speaker was asked to rule and he said:

> Yesterday on a point of order respecting the tabling of documents we dealt with a point concerning a document which was referred to by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during an intervention . . . he indicated that he quoted from a document which . . . was a public document and that he was prepared to table it if the Chair saw no objection.
> The Chair concluded, and I think properly, that he saw no—
> —impediment to tabling a public document . . . if the Prime Minister is prepared to table it, the tabling will take place at the earliest opportunity.

That was the citation at the time. I think, given the precedents, it would be appropriate to ask that the letter which was quoted from be tabled.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in light of what you have just said, I formally ask that the document in question now be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: I think I already said that this is appropriate. Given the precedents, having been asked to rule on the question, the only ruling I can make is that such a request is in order and the letter already referred to, which is in the Archives according to the references made, should properly be tabled. There is nothing which prevents a document from being tabled more than once, if I can put it that way.

Mr. Beatty: It is in the mail and we will have it to you by July.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the people of Canada who are watching this whole process are sitting spellbound in front of their television sets, wondering how Parliament works.

I take great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in tabling for the second time a document which purports to be a copy of a four-page letter dated April 28, 1980. It is from the Prime Minister of the day to the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, now of another address, and I hope it will satisfy the curiosity of the Official Opposition.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, this may be a hard act to follow.

I rise to end the debate on Bill C-15, third reading of the Investment Canada legislation, and I do so with regret. I think this will be a day that will go down in history as the start of at least an uncontrolled sell-out of this country. The principle of the Bill is not whether there should be foreign investment, but how foreign investment shall come into this country. Shall there be some kind of control? Shall there be a mechanism to ensure that whatever dollars are brought in to create wealth, it is done for the benefit of Canadians?

I want to start by giving you and this House, Mr. Speaker, an example of the negative side of uncontrolled foreign investment. A number of us in this House spent many hours this morning learning about the impact of one such foreign company on the livelihood and lifestyle of some Canadians. I am speaking of the foreign owned company Reed Paper. That company came to Dryden, Ontario, purchased a mill and extracted what it could from the forests. It did not reinvest in the mill but it did dump 20 tonnes of mercury into the English-Wabagoon River system. This legislation once again opens the doors and removes the controls which would prevent this kind of thing from happening again. These companies have as their prime motivation the extraction of profits from our country. They do not come in here with goodwill and good faith to help a community. They come in here solely for how much money they can make and take back to their shareholders.

It is this kind of attitude that we are concerned about. That is why we want legislation which will provide effective control. We do not want to say that investment cannot come in, but we want to be able to say, "Here are our rules and here is what you must do in our country. You must provide job guarantees. You must meet our environmental laws and regulations. You must protect the communities you invest in. You must not arbitrarily decide to close your company because you want to regroup in your home country". We saw so much of that in the Province of Ontario a number of years ago. We heard about the legacy of those kinds of decisions this morning. We heard how we as a society contributed to allowing a company to destroy the livelihood of two native bands in northwestern Ontario. They were self-sufficient. They had full employment. They were not on welfare. But today, as a result of the decisions by that company, 80 per cent of those people are on welfare. Disease and alcolholism is rampant. It is a shame what we have allowed to occur in the name of foreign investment and laissez-faire. We must ensure that we learn from the past for a change. Let us not open the doors again. Let us ensure that we have a say in what happens, in how money is spent for the betterment of society as a whole.

I compliment my colleagues who put forth many amendments on this legislation in an attempt to make this Bill somewhat better. Admittedly, some of the amendments were an attempt to reverse the direction of the Bill. We need to work within Canada to create a climate that will encourage people to invest at home. This week we heard from one of the major employers in my riding as well as in the ridings of my colleagues the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and the Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), with regard to the company's attitude toward Canada. It indicated clearly that it did not have the confidence necessary to invest in Canada. It is going to the United Stated because its partners in the United States did not have the confidence in Canada to invest here. Changing the rules will not mean that more dollars will flow in. Something else must happen.

A report on entrepreneurs was tabled in the House yesterday. The Government is trying to bring money in from foreign lands by allowing immigration on the basis of worth and willingness to invest. The Government defines an entrepreneur as someone with money rather than someone with an idea who will work hard and create wealth. The Conservatives have taken the same approach as they have accused the Liberal Government and the NDP of wanting to take, that is, to throw money at a problem. The only difference is that they accuse us of wanting to throw public money whereas they want to throw private money. They do not want a strategy for the investment of money to create jobs and wealth.

Mr. St. Germain: There is no public money left. We're broke.

Mr. Angus: I grant that in terms of the current state of the Treasury there may be some shortfalls. However, if we started to ensure that the oil companies and multinationals paid their fair share, the money would be there to make some sound investments on behalf of the people of Canada rather than to sell them out as the Government is doing with this Bill.

This is a sad day for Canada. The Government does not want to lead, it wants to respond. It does not want to take the initiative to say that foreign investment by itself is not good. The Government does not want to admit that public opinion sometimes has to be translated into the proper perspective and plans. Eighty per cent of Canadians want greater control of our economy by Canadians. The Government should be working on getting the savings out of the bank. That will not happen through capital gains and RRSPs. The Canadian population is much too—if you will pardon the expression—"conservative".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: That is small "c" conservative as opposed to big "C".

An Hon. Member: Back to parks and recreation.

Mr. Angus: It has been suggested that I should go back to parks and recreation. At least we knew how to plan for the betterment of Canadians.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): They are busy privatizing that too.

Mr. Angus: That is right, they are busy privatizing parks and recreation these days.

The clock is moving forward to the end of what little gains were made over the last 10 years to control our own destiny. In conclusion, I will be proud to stand up as a Canadian to vote against this legislation.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being 4:45 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, May 23, 1985, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker)—Fisheries—Codfish—Size of West German catch. (b) Government position; the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger)—Consumer and Corporate Affairs—Closing of Patent Office—Government position; and the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—Refugees—Report on method of determining status. (b) Minister's position.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is the following one. Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the third time and passed. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Stevens), which was agreed to on the following division:

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED SUBSIDY PROGRAM FOR AIR TRANSPORT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study and report on:

(1) design and implementation of a direct subsidy program on passenger and freight air transportation in the Northwest Territories in an effort (a) to allow residents in remote areas access to affordable air travel (b) to encourage professional, business and tourism development throughout the area (c) to improve intercommunity development and trade throughout the area;

(2) adoption of the recommendations of the Air Transport Committee report on the adequacy of air services in northern and remote areas, to eliminate where applicable federal sales tax, excise tax and airport fees;

(3) design and implementation of venture capital program to enable air carriers operating in northern and remote areas to acquire appropriate aircraft for northern and remote operations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to propose my first Private Members' motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Suluk: My motion addresses the matter of northern air transportation services, an issue of grave importance to my constituents in the riding of Nunatsiaq and, indeed, to all residents of the Northwest Territories.

Before I go on, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the wonderful people of Nunatsiaq who have sent me to Ottawa to represent them.

The Northwest Territories occupy a vast geographic area of 1.3 million square miles, approximately the size of India. With its rugged terrain, unpredictable weather conditions and lack of a developed transportation infrastructure, it is not difficult to see why the evolution of transportation services in the Northwest Territories has been slow. Its population is sparse in relation to the land mass it occupies. Some 47,000 residents are scattered throughout the Territories, with many located in small remote communities with little or no access to year-round road, rail or marine services. Just over one-half the population lives in small urban centres, such as Yellowknife, Fort Smith and Frobisher Bay, while the other half lives in isolated settlements in the rural outreaches of the North.

My riding of Nunatsiaq is characterized by these small rural communities. There are 33 communities ranging in size from 35 to 2,700 people which make up the riding of Nunatsiaq. Of the 17,000 who inhabit my riding, over 85 per cent are of native descent, the majority Inuit.

Large distances exist between communities in my riding and in other regions across the North. With little, if any, road access, and infrequent marine services limited to the brief summer months, air services have assumed vital roles in northern development. There is a heavy reliance across the North on air transportation services for the movement of goods, foodstuffs, materials and people. As the transporter of necessary supplies, the air industry has assumed an essential role throughout the Northwest Territories.

Political, social, economic and cultural development are all perilously dependent upon the fragile transportation network of the North. However, problems abound when a fragile transportation system is linked to such community development, and the price northerners pay for this dependence is high. Personal travel costs are often prohibitive. The cost to import goods from other parts of Canada is also very high.

Air fares are costly and unaffordable to most northerners. Goods and foodstuffs reflect inflated prices, with the cost of transportation a prime factor. For example, a 10-pound bag of potatoes sells for about $15 in the northern community of Pond Inlet, while the same bag of potatoes can be bought for just over $3 at an Ottawa grocery store. Among other factors, the price difference is attributed to the cost of transporting the food product to the North.

Most northern communities face similar high costs on all food items. Northern food costs are usually more than double the price paid for similar items in the south. Yet, most northern residents earn incomes well below those of our southern neighbours. The personal freedom to travel throughout the North and to other parts of Canada is considered to be a luxury limited to business and government and employer-subsidized travellers. Air travel in the North is costly and air fares are as much as 15 per cent to 40 per cent higher than air fares in the south for similar distances. For example, the one-way economy fare between Regina and Winnipeg, a distance of 331 miles, is $121. By comparison, the fare between Rankin Inlet and Repulse Bay in the North at a similar distance is $233. A ticket from Resolute Bay to Frobisher Bay, a distance of 1,000 miles, costs $355, while a fare between Montreal and Winnipeg is only $254.

To fly from Cambridge Bay to Pelly Bay, a distance of 388 miles, costs about $486, but a flight from Calgary to Vancouver at a slightly greater distance is only $139. I could go on comparing fares but inequalities are too numerous to mention. Suffice it to say that intra-regional and North-South air travel is costly and the further North one travels, the more obvious the discrepancies become.

Freight rates are slightly more equitable, but they still prohibit importation of a large amount of goods without a substantial cash outlay. Most communities in the North, therefore, rely on the annual re-supply by ship and barge to import large quantities of dry goods at more equitable prices. This activity generally occurs during the brief summer months following the break-up of the ice. Most communities receive only one re-supply annually. As well, inadequate docking, port and unloading facilities exist in many northern communities, and spoilage and loss of goods due to damage is often high.

Sea lift is also considered to be a less efficient mode of transporting goods to the North. Not only are the risks greater but the time required to prepare for marine re-supply is lengthy. It generally takes eight to twelve weeks to prepare sea lift orders and an additional eight to twelve weeks before the orders are delivered to the communities. The requirement that all orders must be prepaid also limits any benefits to Government, private businesses, co-operatives and individuals.

Generally the transportation of goods across the Territories comes through three corridors. The western Arctic is served by air, road and barge out of Edmonton. The central Arctic is served through Winnipeg by rail, ship and air, and the eastern Arctic through Montreal by ship and air only.

For eastern Arctic residents, the reliance on air transportation is most apparent. If one lives in Grise Fiord, Canada's most northerly community, for example, all of one's food, goods, construction materials and supplies come through or from Montreal. At a distance of over 3,500 kilometres, it would be similar to living in Montreal and having all of one's essential supplies coming from Paris without benefit of jet service for most of the route. Just imagine the logistics, costs and inconveniences such a venture would generate. Add inclement and unpredictable weather conditions and you will have some idea of the harsh realities facing many northerners, Mr. Speaker.

The high cost of transporting goods and the high cost of personal travel to and within the North is prohibitive to many northerners. This becomes especially significant when we stop to assess the economic profiles of northern communities and particularly those in the Riding of Nunatsiaq. High unemployment and low-wage economies across the North are among the many factors that inhibit the use of air transportation services. Extra cash on hand for air travel simply is not available to many northerners and particularly to low-income earners.

The Territories have one of the highest unemployment rates in Canada and were at 17 per cent in December 1984. In my riding, this percentage fluctuates from a low of 5 per cent in one community to a high of 41 per cent in another. As well, the smaller, more isolated communities of the North, characteristic of my riding, usually lack a modern economic base and have low monetary incomes.

As well as high unemployment, residents in the North face some of the highest costs of living in Canada. For example, Keewatin residents in Central Arctic communities face living costs ranging between 50 per cent and 79 per cent higher than those of residents in their supply base of Winnipeg. Yet the most recent average income reported for Keewatin residents was only $11,521.

Kitikmeot residents in the more northern semi-western Arctic region face even higher costs, ranging from a low of 70 per cent more than Edmonton prices for Cambridge Bay residents to a high of 139 per cent more for residents of Pelly Bay. Yet Kitikmeot residents earn an average annual income of only $8,324.

High transportation costs impact on many other areas of northern living as well. They not only directly affect the cost of living by inflation the costs of goods but also indirectly affect it by forcing employers to pay higher salaries to compensate for higher employee living costs, thereby increasing the costs of local goods and services.

Because few can afford it, intra-regional and North-South travel for pleasure is severely curtailed. Traditional family ties are threatened when family members living in separate locations cannot afford to visit and interact with one another. The affordability factor contributes to the sense of isolation and sometimes imprisonment felt by northerners who have no alternative travel opportunities to air travel.

Tourism and business development are also directly affected by high transportation costs. Substantial capital is required to begin new businesses and to expand existing ones. Most often the supplies and construction materials needed to begin or to expand such businesses are ordered from southern Canada. This is a costly venture creating high operating costs which are generally passed on to consumers in final prices.

The northern tourism industry experiences similar difficulties. An important economic industry in the Territories, it is heavily reliant on the transportation industry for the movement of people to and within the North. In 1983, between the months of June and September, an estimated 44,000 people visited the Northwest Territories. Over 29,000 people visited the Fort Smith region in the western Arctic, while less than 10 per cent of those who visited the North visited communities in my riding. Of that number, 66 per cent were travelling on business and not pleasure-related duties.

A number of factors can be blamed for the lack of tourist traffic throughout my region. It is less well developed as a tourist region than the western Arctic, air fares and travel distances are greater, accommodation costs are high, and travel schedules are often less reliable.

An informal survey of some hotel operators in my riding showed that the bulk of business generated by accommodation facilities comes from Government, business travellers and construction crews working on community projects. Of course, there are exceptions of this, but the majority of operators questioned said that incentives such as cheaper air fares are needed to attract more tourists to the region.

Very few northerners appear to be travelling in the North for pleasure. An informal survey of passenger profiles at northern airports in the riding showed a high percentage of the travel being generated by Government, business travellers, individuals attending meetings and people travelling to medical facilities. Another survey showed that during the summer months, only 15 per cent of all travellers in the North are local residents. Based on the relatively essential nature of air services to these communities, I find this percentage to be quite low.

Most northern communities with which I have corresponded argue that cheaper air fares and freight rates are necessary if renewed economic vigour is to be realized across the North. Such incentives are needed to stimulate multi-development of the Territories and to allow individuals access to the personal freedom of travel.

Who, therefore, is travelling in the North? My research indicates that one of the biggest financial supporters of northern air services is the Government of the Northwest Territories. It estimates that approximately $31.5 million will be spent on air transportation alone for business-related travel by all of its Departments in 1985-86. Singular costs include $800,000 for circuit court travel, $4.8 million to transport patients from remote communities to regional hospitals in the North, and $3.1 million to transport patients to facilities outside of the Territories. Last year an additional $4 million was spent on air charters. Freight costs for all modes of transportation is put at an additional $20 million. If the Government were to withdraw its use of northern air services, the industry would in all probability be jeopardized.

Research also indicates that a number of what could be called inequitable or discriminatory factors influence the eligibility of northern travellers. While exact figures are not available, some northerners, especially those employed in the public sector, receive generous northern allowances designed to reduce living costs and to enhance northern living. Approximately 44 per cent of those employed in the North work in the public sector and are eligible for those types of benefits, which include vacation travel assistance, settlement allowance or isolated post allowance, and a non-taxable accommodation allowance.

A number of private businesses, especially southern-based companies, also offer similar incentives to bring employees to the North and to keep them there. However, for many northerners such benefits do not exist. They must shoulder the full burden of northern living costs without any of the special allowances which are accrued by northern public servants.

In light of all the complicated yet inter-related factors, I am proposing that the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study northern living and air transportation costs to see if federal subsidies on air passenger and freight transportation would improve the current situation and stimulate northern development. I believe such subsidies are necessary if northerners are to enjoy a standard of living comparable to that of their southern neighbours. They would have the effect of reducing the costs for food and goods, and would encourage travel, business development and other economic opportunities throughout the North.

The air industry would benefit from increased utilization, and air services would undoubtedly be enhanced.

Southern Canada currently benefits from generous federal subsidies which are designed to improve transportation services across Canada. The air subsidies, while currently under close government scrutiny, appear to be designed to encourage the development of air services in areas where carriers are unwilling to undertake services. As well, surface carrier subsidies seem to be aimed at decreasing transportation costs to a point where regional economies are competitive in the export of agricultural and manufactured goods. Northern transportation concerns do not fit either criteria, and it is argued by northerners and the Government of the Northwest Territories that some special consideration should be given to northern residents and to their unique situation.

I have tried to highlight some of the positive effects such subsidies could encourage, and it appears that they are necessary, if not essential, for the enhancement of northern living. It is my contention that until such initiatives are undertaken, many northerners on restricted incomes will remain unable to afford the air services on which they are so dependent. As well, other initiatives should be undertaken which are designed to reduce the operating costs of air carriers serving northern and remote areas. Any economies realized would be passed on to the consumer, who would benefit from reduced air fares and enhanced services.

While subsidization would, in all probability, continue to be a requirement for some northerners, amounts could lessen over time as air industry costs decline.

Most carriers serving the North are readily able to identify cost pressures unique to serving the northern environment. Those costs are generally included in the fare structures. The factor with the greatest significance is fuel costs. Fuel accounts for as much as 30 per cent of the total operating costs of northern air services, and those costs are generally passed on to the consumer.

In light of the limited time which I have, I would propose that what I have recommended, and what might be tabled later, be sent to the Standing Committee on Transport in order that the recommendations be studied in more detail to see if, indeed, the cost of air travel in the North could be subsidized. The subsidies would then, in turn, lower many of those costs which Governments, such as the Government of the Northwest Territories, pay for services from the south.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member who introduced this Private Member's motion. I recognize that it is his maiden speech and I would like to pay my respects not only to his presentation, but also to the importance of the issue which he has raised. However, I regret that he was forced to bring it forward because, in fact, what he has recommended was in place last fall, in early September, but was wiped out by an act of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). That is unfortunate. It means that we have lost a full year's time in which to deal with the very critical and serious matters of northern transportation. We are having to start all over again.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that he has recommended a number of steps which run totally contrary to steps that were announced in the Budget. Those steps substantially reduced the budget of the Department of Transport and substantially increased the requirement of the Department to raise user fees, fuel taxes, and other things which will add to the costs of northerners as well as to those of other people in the country.

I would like to comment on the history of this matter. Last year we brought in a new domestic airline policy for Canada, after holding extensive hearings across Canada. It had, as its primary objective, the introduction of a much higher level of competition in the air industry. The announcement which was made last April recognized that northern Canada had special characteristics. At that time, the Canadian Transport Commission did not have a full opportunity to examine what would be the exact specifics of the requirements of northern Canada. As a result, when I introduced the policy, we set up, on a temporary basis, a demarcation line which separated the country into two zones. There was a southern zone in which the new competitive airline policy would be applied, and a northern zone was established to provide time for further study. Last April, I referred these matters to the Standing Committee on Transport. Almost a year ago, the same reference was given to the committee. However, when the new Government came into power on September 4, it did not carry through with the reference. Unfortunately, those important matters have lapsed for a full year. That time could have been effectively used to pursue the matter of northern transportation. Because the present Government would not have anything to do with nasty Grits, it simply put it on the shelf. Now it is up to the Hon. Member to revive the matter. I agree with his objectives and goals, but, unfortunately, it is unnecessary because the matter was previously before the standing committee.

Furthermore, at that time there was a venture capital program to help airlines in northern parts of Canada, the remote areas and small communities in buying new equipment. We did not need a new program. There was already a program which was introduced last April. That program had a $10 million allocation. It was not money which was newly brought from the Budget. I reallocated money which was already in the budget of the Department of Transport. We set aside those funds. We started working in places like northern Manitoba, the Atlantic provinces and the northern parts of Canada. We were working with local communities and local airlines because we recognized that one of the primary problems in providing a new deregulator—or, as I used to like to call it, a "more liberalized air environment" in Canada—was the very poor equipment, and that is still true, I believe, in the northern parts of Canada. I have found, as I travelled, that there are a lot of 40-year-old DC-3s flying around, and that situation does not give adequate, proper and sometimes safe care to northern travellers.

● (1740)

We introduced that capital program. It was in place. But it was wiped out in the November statement of this Government.

Mr. Forrestall: It was an inadequate program.

Mr. Axworthy: It was a very effective program because the communities and the airlines were beginning to negotiate as to how they could use it. I know there is a tendency in this House for Hon. Members on the government side to stand up and say, "Boy, everything you guys did before was all wrong", but I simply point out that we did some things right and the present Government did some things wrong when it came to power. It wiped the slate clean, and now the program has to be reintroduced by means of this motion.

I have no argument with its being reintroduced but Hon. Members opposite should recognize that their Government was responsible for eliminating what in effect is asked for in this motion. I think it is very important to take note of that history, although we have now acquired the remarkable facilities in this House to rewrite history. It is said that everything started on September 4. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when it came to deregulating the airlines, it started several months before then. I would like to say to Hon. Members that I only wish the Government had the same interest in pursuing that policy. In fact, I find it wonderfully ironic—and I find many things ironic about this Government—that it can give us this rhetoric about getting Government off the backs of private enterprise and getting rid of all of the government regulations when in fact the Government has slowed down the deregulation process which we put into place. The steps we introduced last spring have in effect been put into limbo.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if we had the power to amend, I would have been very happy to provide further amendments to this resolution. For example, the Transport Committee should make a full examination of the role and responsibility of Air Canada under the new airlines domestic policy. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in one of his off-the-cuff, shoot-from-the-hip policy statements said that they could not look at Air Canada. It was very clear, when we introduced the new domestic airline policy, that we could not have a proper deregulated atmosphere when we have a Crown corporation which has 65 per cent of the business. Yet this Government has in effect eliminated the opportunity to pursue the matter of how we deal with a more advanced and expanded deregulated atmosphere. It cannot deal with that properly until it comes to grips with what to do with Air Canada. The Prime Minister, as is his wont, has again forestalled that opportunity.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member had provided even further terms of reference for the Transport Committee to look at how we can continue to develop the second phase of the new domestic airline policy which was brought in last spring. There are a number of things which could be done. I mentioned Air Canada, for one. There have to be major amendments to the National Transportation Act on the whole question of public convenience and necessity, again giving consideration to the proper exit and entry of airlines into these areas, and there has to be proper attention paid to the labour relations side of the problem, because we will not have a more effective airline policy until there are proper policies put in place.

I make the case personally that there should be a much higher level of employee participation or ownership in companies like Air Canada. When we sold Nordair off last year we gave the employees 10 per cent of the ownership, which has provided a very substantially different set of labour-management relationships in that company. So my point is, Mr. Speaker, that I think the Hon. Member has brought to the attention of this House a very important item but he has not gone nearly far enough.

Let me also address something else which I deeply regret. The Hon. Member talked about the impact of high prices and cost of air travel in the North. I would say that it is an extreme case in the North, but the same problem also affects travellers in the south. Perhaps there is no area of the economy which is more price-sensitive than air travel. One can almost have a direct inverse relationship between price and volume of use. Yet, from the time this Conservative Government came into office, it has substantially increased the cost of air travel. It increased the airport fees, the fuel tax, the landing fees, and even last week it brought in a motion rescinding my decision not to charge for the carts which people use to carry their baggage around airports. This has to be the meanest minded group of people in the world. But I know why the Government did that. It has been recaptured by that Department, which has the notion that everything has to have a name tag and has to be charged for. But there are all kinds of travellers coming into Canada. They arrive with their shillings or their pfennigs, and when they arrive at the airport and try to get a baggage cart for all of their luggage, they will not have the 50 cents to buy the baggage carts. But this Government, in a very dominant, nonsensical move, has reintroduced that charge.

My point is that the Hon. Member should recognize that these are the very things he has asked for in his motion. He says, "Let's have subsidies to offset the higher cost of fuel, landing fees and other things". Well, Mr. Speaker, it is his Government in the last eight months which has substantially increased those costs.

Mr. St. Germain: We had to increase them because of all the money you squandered in Manitoba.

Mr. Axworthy: I would just say, Mr. Speaker, that if there is any place which deserves to have a lot of money spent on it, it is the Province of Manitoba. If Hon. Members want to get into debate about that, I would just say that, unfortunately, this Government is now taking away all the money which was used to provide jobs in Manitoba and it will reap the consequences, but that is the problem of the Hon. Members opposite.

There is one basic fallacy in debating this motion. The Hon. Member is asking for direct subsidies. I would point out to the Hon. Member that the Department of Transport has had $800 million reduced from its budget between now and 1990.

Mr. Forrestall: Where is that from?

Mr. Axworthy: From the Budget papers. It is $150 million per year plus a few extra tag-ons. I would say to the Hon. Member that he had better watch out for those freight subsidies in the Atlantic Provinces because they are on the list of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) for examination as well. He had better read those papers because he is going to be in trouble in his area, just like many other Hon. Members, because of the prying and poking of the Deputy Prime Minister.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the budget of the Department of Transport has been substantially reduced. The Government has increased the cost of air travel, and now we have an Hon. Member from the government side asking for direct subsidies. I would say to those Hon. Members that it is not consistent, that there is a contradiction in this respect. I would also say to the Hon. Member that, in addition to putting his reference in front of the committee, I would strongly recommend that he use his place in caucus to make arguments to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to the Deputy Prime Minister, who is in charge of the slashing, hacking brigade, and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). These Ministers have been responsible and are responsible for substantially restricting the ability of the Department of Transport to provide its services. At the same time, they are slowing down the deregulation efforts which would have provided a more competitive atmosphere.

I would like to make one further comment, Mr. Speaker, which I think has to be carefully examined when the matter does go before committee. To what degree can we permit and expand the role of competition in northern travel? When the hearings were held last spring during the time when we were developing our new air policy, there was a natural fear and anxiety on the part of many northern residents that the one source of air travel that they now experience—I will not say "enjoy"—might be lost if there was more competition brought in. I was surprised, however, at reading the transcripts of the CTC hearings—because we had sent the CTC off to do further study—how many representations were made in front of that committee to the effect that there really was a requirement for further competition, that the monopoly situation which is enjoyed by many air carriers in that province was being used as a way of jacking up prices and at the same time providing lousy service. I would, therefore, express some question, really, as to why it is that the Hon. Member's motion, in dealing with the matters of northern transportation and air services in particular, did not raise more effectively the role of competition in that area.

I think one of the focal points of committee examination should be how the CTC can substantially reduce its regulatory control of northern air transport services without at the same time abandoning its responsibility to protect those areas where it is an essential service. I suggest that perhaps a better way of doing it would be to use the test of whether air transport is the sole means of transport for the community. That might be a better test of whether it should be a competitive or non-competitive environment rather than using the geographical demarcation line which is based on airline policy. As I said to an Hon. Member, I would be more than happy to give some testimony to the committee on this matter of the allocation and use of resources.

History is catching up with this Government. It now has one of its own Members having to recommend to the Government that it do something that it had undone about nine months ago. For that I applaud him, his courage, wisdom and judgment. He is recommending what a Liberal Government had already introduced, and it is too bad we had to lose this much time. I hope that when the committee has the opportunity to study this reference more carefully, it might want to broaden the reference because there are many questions not contained in the resolution on how to achieve a more effective form of air service in the North.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are three or four comments I would like to make at the outset. I want to join with the former Minister of Transport in congratulating the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) on bringing forward the resolution in front of us at this time. I also want to acknowledge the fact that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), in his former role as Minister of Transport, did pursue some of these areas. While we as members of the Opposition at the time agreed that he was headed in the right direction, there was some concern that perhaps he was not going far enough. The Hon. Member will be aware that there is on the Order Paper a motion to refer the report of the CTC on northern transportation, particularly that involving remote areas, to the Standing Committee on Transport together with all the appropriate authority and power to hear witnesses and travel, so that it can bring the matter to a conclusion, we hope, this fall.

The points and observations of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq have been listened to. His representations have been made to the Minister and to others concerned. I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) would want me to say that he shares, in this particular area, the concerns not only of the Hon. Member who represents the great eastern Arctic but also the views and concerns expressed by the former Minister of Transport. In that sense I am pleased to make those acknowledgements and to join with both speakers in indicating that there is a sense of urgency with respect to this matter.

I might have wished that the CTC, in its hearings, had gone further. Indeed, as we kept abreast of the hearings and representations, we might easily have thought there would be 150 recommendations, but in their wisdom they have left us with three or four. However, in those recommendations I think lie the seeds of the motion concerning the enormous difficulties facing the people for whom the aeroplane is not a luxury at all but an absolute necessity. Distances, times, access to health care, friends, families and businesses, all require adequate air service. I use the term "adequate" not necessarily advisedly; perhaps it is a more than adequate air service and perhaps what we need is a first-class air service. As someone who had operated in the area of general aviation—and lost my shirt, to tell you the truth—I know and understand the difficulties of operators having to use old aircraft and equipment. I also know the cost burden of new equipment. So we in this Chamber have a task in front of us and, hopefully, very soon the committee will be able to undertake precisely that which is recommended in the motion in front of us.

I know the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) might want to make an intervention, and while I have acknowledged the role of the former Minister of Transport with respect to the difficulties up North, let there be no misunderstanding about the role played by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic, and the former Member for what was then the Eastern Arctic.

Mr. Murphy: Same name.

Mr. Forrestall: I apologize, I have forgotten. This problem has been with us for a long time and the problems are well known to us. I commend the Hon. Member for his motion and I hope that before six o'clock we might call the question and it will be the disposition, I trust, of the entire House to agree to the motion.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that it is almost six o'clock, but we did get started late so I would hope that, with the unanimous consent of the House, you may allow me some leeway before you see the clock. However, I am certainly going to be very brief in my remarks.

I support the general intent of the motion. Coming from the riding directly south of the riding of the Hon. Member who introduced the motion, I recognize that there are a lot of difficulties with regard to northern and remote travel. Although this resolution restricts itself to the Northwest Territories, it is my understanding that the other motion which will be before this House very soon will allow us to look at the broader picture regarding the problems faced by the people in the remote and in northern areas.

I had the opportunity to appear before the Air Transport Committee when it was making its study into the adequacy of air service into northern and remote areas. I pointed out some of the problems we face. I think we recognize that a system of deregulation which is quite suitable for communities such as Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal and even Winnipeg, perhaps does not make a lot of sense in communities with a total population of maybe 500, 600 or 700 people. At the same time, I believe that because we do have subsidies, indirect as they may be, for train ad air transportation in the south and for the building of highways, we can therefore look at this in committee to make sure that we are being fair to people who live in these remote areas.

• (1800)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am willing to see this motion go forward. I will have an opportunity to make more recommendations in the committee. I think it is a worthwhile project for us. Even though the Committee on Air Transport has looked into many of these areas in the past, it is of great value for Members of Parliament to find out for themselves what is going on. It is easy to read reports. I, like many Members in the Chamber, have read a number of reports over the last few years. However, it is not the same as listening to people in those areas who are for or against a particular position. In that way one comes to understand the feelings of people in those remote areas and the problems that they face.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Suluk) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Member's Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—CODFISH—SIZE OF WEST GERMAN CATCH. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the issue we will be talking about for the next couple of minutes is very serious; that is, what is wrong with the Government and the system when there is such drastic over-fishing taking place off Canada's coastline with no action being taken. I suppose it fits in with the general pattern of the Government of Canada.

Today, as never before in our history, the United States is imposing quotas on the importation of salt fish. The United States is objecting to Newfoundlanders catching salmon off the north and east coasts of Newfoundland. The federal Government is saying that we may be at fault and it may prevent people from catching salmon. In fact, only 1 per cent of the salmon that are caught are judged to be heading toward American waters.

The West German fleet has come into Canadian waters and over-fished a quota many times. We heard the complaints of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) to the EEC. The EEC told him where to go. He was told that they were not over-fishing any quotas and would not give orders to the West German fleet. That continued month after month. As we all know, the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization deals with over-fishing outside the 200 mile limit. That organization was not even informed of the over-fishing outside the 200 mile limit by the Government of Canada until all the German boats were filled up and had left the area. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stood up and said he was pleased to announce that the boats would be leaving "tomorrow". Of course they had to leave "tomorrow", because they were all filled up.

To add insult to injury, after the EEC quota had been violated the Government of Canada issued further quotas to the English and French fleets. That is absolutely disgraceful. Canadian fishermen are now objecting to this over-fishing. In public conversations everywhere we hear accusations of bribes and pay-offs. This is happening because the Government of Canada has taken no action whatsoever against foreign nations for over-fishing in Canadian waters.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans should tell us why the West Germans were not stopped and why he gave the EEC more fishing authority under the same quota that had been violated three times. He should stand up and admit to the people of Canada that there is a standing agreement with the French Government that the French fleet can do no harm on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, that it can over-fish all it wants because of an agreement with External Affairs, that External Affairs is conducting negotiations with the French Government over the territorial sea around St. Pierre et Miquelon thereby External Affairs says to the Department of Fisheries, "No, we can't do anything about the French fleet. The French fleet can over-fish all it wants and will not be stopped".

All this should be explained by the Minister of Fisheries. He should tell the truth, that the Department of External Affairs, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the federal Cabinet are the ones setting the policy. They are the ones responsible for over-fishing. They are the ones now responsible for all the accusations about bribes and pay-offs on the east coast of Canada to fisheries observers and employees of the federal Department of Fisheries. That is the reason for this conversation and why we have fishermen saying that "we are all right. We are going to fish although our quotas are gone in herring and several other species".

Everyone knows over-fishing is going on. Everyone knows observers and fisheries officers are reporting it. Everyone wonders why no action is taken. Why no action at all? Everyone is wondering why the Minister of Fisheries will not come clean, and why the Government of Canada will not do something. Everyone wonders why the firing pins have been taken out of the guns. People want to know the answers to all kinds of questions, Mr. Speaker.

I conclude that the Minister of Fisheries is being governed in his fisheries policy by the Government of Canada through the Department of External Affairs and by a policy that says we would rather negotiate, we would rather discuss, and we do not want to do anything that will upset our trade relations with the EEC or upset the United States because of free trade, or upset the French because we are negotiating over the territorial limits of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The Minister of Fisheries should stand up and be counted. The Minister of Fisheries should get out from under that cloak of the Government of Canada. If he does not, we will see fishermen on the east coast of Canada fishing beyond quotas. We will see nets out in the water where nets should not be, because those fishermen know from watching the television news that these serious violations are taking place and that this Government of Canada for several reasons will not do anything about it.

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear my friend across the way raising some of these very important issues affecting the fishery of Atlantic Canada.

This was the first year since Canada extended its jurisdiction to 200 miles that FRG vessels fished outside the Canadian 200 mile zone on the "Nose of the Grand Bank". As the area in which they were fishing was outside Candian jurisdiction, and there is no NAFO regulation in place, the view in Europe was that there was no legal framework in place to prohibit this fishery.

As the portion of the NAFO Division 3L in issue is outside the Canadian zone, Canada did not have the right to order the vessels to stop fishing. We were instead invoking what we saw as certain obligations to which the European Community has subscribed in the Long Term Agreement with Canada on Fisheries, in the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization Convention, and in the law of the Sea Convention.

Canada, through diplomatic and ministerial channels, confronted the European Economic Community and the FRG with its serious concern about the conservation of the cod stock which overlaps into this area, and the impact such overfishing would have on it. Canadian representatives sought the cessation of this fishery. On May 9, the last two FRG vessels left the area.

The 3L cod is part of a single identifiable stock located in Divisions 2JT+3KL. The vast majority of this stock occurs within Canadian jurisdication. The total allowable catch for the 2JT+3KL cod stock is established by Canada with reference to advice from the NAFO Scientific Council. The total allowable catch, 266,000 tonnes in 1985, has been fully allocated to both domestic and foreign, including EC vessels. Accordingly, unregulated fishing of this stock, without regard for internally accepted scientific advice, jeopartizes the effective management and future health of the stock.

The Minister raised the issue during his recent trip to Europe. It was at this time that the vessels agreed to leave the area. The Minister emphasized the serious potential conservation problem which this overfishing represented. It was agreed that the issue be discussed at the NAFO Scientific Council, which is presently meeting in St. John's. While we will have to await the outcome of the meeting, I believe we can anticipate discussions with the EEC on this matter.

This is a serious problem and, because of the legal uncertainties, we believe it is best to try and solve it in co-operation with the EC.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—CLOSING OF PATENT OFFICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the decision to close the Patent Office or rather to discontinue patent examination in Canada is probably one of the most absurd decisions this Government has been responsible for since coming to power only a short time ago.

Hon. Members will recall that in its first report which was tabled at the same time as the Budget, the Nielsen Committee had suggested that Canada should sign the Patent Co-operation Treaty, also that it should discontinue patent examination in Canada, and finally that the responsibility for researching patents first registered in Canada should be turned over to an international organization. In spite of the many questions I have directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the Government does not seem to have renounced its project to discontinue patent examination in Canada. We must therefore assume that it is the Government's policy to implement this recommendation.

This proposal has raised the greatest concern among those involved in this area. Last week, I received a letter from a patent solicitor and well-considered lawyer in the Ottage region, a letter which was made public and which dealt with the impact of such a decision. This gentleman, from the well-known Ottawa firm Fetherstonhaugh, explained to me that Canada, through this decision, was in fact renouncing its technological and industrial sovereignty. This would affect 1,000 jobs in the private sector, in other words people now working all across Canada helping inventors file their patents with the Canadian Patent Office.

It must be understood, Mr. Speaker, that 95 per cent of patents registered in Canada originate from abroad. A foreign investor wanting to protect his invention here in Canada must have it registered and make sure that it meets the standards and requirements of Canadian law. Those people from abroad come here in Canada and hire Canadians to help them deal with the Patent Office. The impact of that proposal to abolish screening here in Canada and to transfer it to an international agency in Geneva or Washington would amount to exporting those jobs, because those people, who pay for services provided by Canadians, would henceforth go to Geneva and hire people in Switzerland to do the work now being done by Canadians. This is absolute nonsense.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it must be remembered that last year, the Patent Office made a $3 million profit. And because of rate increases introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last November, the profit forecast for the 1985-86 fiscal year is $13 million. This means not only that we will be depriving 1,000 Canadians of their jobs, but that we are going to close down an office that in the end is earning some $13 million for Canadians.

Where could such a proposal come from! The answer is quite simple, Mr. Speaker. There has been no consultation of any kind before it was put forward.

• (1815)

[English]

The president of the Patent & Trademark Institute of Canada was quoted in The Toronto Star last week as saying words to the effect that neither he, nor anyone he knows who has anything to do with patents, was consulted prior to making this recommendation. I would remind Hon. Members of what is said at page 1 of the report of the Deputy Prime Minister entitled New Management Initiatives. It is stated that the Private Sector Advisory Committee was established to ensure objectivity, and to make consultation an integral part of the process. Yet, here is the president of the patent institute saying that neither he, nor anyone he knows, was consulted prior to the tabling of this decision.

Yesterday, when I put this question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), he told me, and I quote:

[Translation]

The charges which the Hon. Member makes are totally false.

[English]

The information I have presented to the House today is not something I have dreamed up. It is information which was forwarded to me by people at work in this particular field. It is quite curious that the person who wrote to me last week described himself as a frustrated Tory. This is someone who worked for the Conservative Party during the last election, someone who raised funds for the Party, a person who now says that when he calls the office of the Deputy Prime Minister he is told by the secretary that she has instructions not to return telephone calls.

In conclusion, I would indicate that this group from the patent institute, has been trying to schedule a meeting with the Deputy Prime Minister for the past week. Appointments have been scheduled. Someone says, "We will call you back." No one calls back. I am simply asking the Parliamentary Secretary to convey a message to the Deputy Prime Minister suggesting that he might meet with some of the people in this particular field to see whether or not a decision which could have very serious consequences for Canada, and Canadian industry and technology, can be reversed before any further damage is done.

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, on May 29, the Hon. Member asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) about patents and economic growth in Canada. The Government's efforts for an economic recovery have but one objective—to have all Canadians share, in fairness, our nation's wealth and progress. Therefore, this Government will seek every opportunity to become aware of, and to exploit, the various elements essential to our integration into the international networks necessary to ensure economic growth in our country.

This allows the opportunity to comment on the Government's decision to ratify the Patent Co-operation Treaty, the PCT, an international treaty administered by the World Intellectual Property Organization, a specialized UN agency in Geneva, Switzerland.

Under the PCT, any Canadian may file an international application. The effect of this international application would be the same as if national applications had been concurrently filed with the national patent offices of the PCT member countries which the applicant designates in his application. The international application is then subjected to a search by an international searching authority and the applicant is advised of the results so that he can decide on the basis of the international search report whether or not it is worthwhile to pursue his application in the various countries he has designated.

Under Chapter II of the PCT, it is also possible to obtain a preliminary examination of the application by an international preliminary examining authority and the applicant is then placed in an even better position to decide whether or not to pursue his application further. A Canadian applicant would then designate countries in which he wants a patent and the national authorities then have to decide on whether or not a patent will be granted.

When a sufficient number of applications are contemplated, and that number is approximately five, the advantages for Canadian applicants can be many. These include: another avenue to foreign patenting by Canadians; a simplified and cheaper process for Canadians when filing abroad; a reduction in agent costs because applicants can file in one format and one language; and an improvement in the quality of the patent searches because of the extensive documentation to be searched.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that by ratifying the Patent Co-operation Treaty, Canada will in many cases give its inventors and innovators a simpler and less costly avenue to foreign patents and will therefore help to put Canada in a better position in international markets.

REFUGEES—REPORT ON METHOD OF DETERMINING STATUS. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has begrudged and minimized its international obligation under the United Nations Convention for Refugees. It has been doing that for years and continues to do so. In fact, it is trying to keep out as many of the people as possible who come to Canada claiming to be refugees.

These people are being slandered by Mr. Best, the Executive Director of the Department, who again and again tells the press and everyone else that many of these people are bank robbers, terrorists or, at best, economic migrants who simply want to get into this land of milk and honey by pretending to be refugees. He keeps saying that only 35 per cent of those who have applied in the past have been found to be refugees, although he knows when he says that that the Supreme Court has ruled that the process of determining the status of refugees is wrong under Canadian law and must be changed.

For years lawyers and churches have said that there should be refugee hearings in front of decision makers. They have said that the people who make the decisions regarding a person's life or death should be able to look that person in the eye and decide if he or she is telling the truth.

There has been no action on this request for the last dozen years by either the previous Government or the present Government. Because of that, sympathy built up for refugees. There were appeals to the courts. The process has gotten clogged up and now there are 14,000 claims, and counting family members that means that the cases of 20,000 people are backlogged.

Two months ago, the Supreme Court said that these people must have the kind of hearing before the decision makers that so many lawyers, church people and other public voices have requested, and which the Government has consistently denied them. What has happened since April 4 when the Supreme Court announced that decision? The Minister has done absolutely nothing. Requests to the Minister from the critics of the two Opposition Parties to discuss this issue with her have been stonewalled. She will not discuss what possible action she might take. She will not consult on her actions. Instead, she is using the Rabbi Plaut Report to stall.

The Plaut Report was supposed to be brought to the House in December. In the fall, the Minister announced in her Estimates that it would come in January. In March she said she would have it in a few days. In April she said she would have it in a few weeks. When I asked a question in the House on May 10 she said it would be published very shortly. It is now June and there is no word yet of that report.

• (1825)

This causes people to wonder and worry about rumours. What is she planning to do? Does she plan a sort of double shuffle of the Immigration Appeal Board? Does she plan to increase its numbers, but cut down its quorum so that it can run refugee claimants through an oral hearing like sausages through a sausage machine, and run most of them out of the country? Is that the plan that Cal Best of the Department of Immigration is forcing upon the Minister as her official advisor?

The Immigration Appeal Board does a good job on ordinary appeals, but it lacks the expertise that the Refugee Status Advisory Committee has in hearing refugee appeals. In fact, it is infected with the bias of Cal Best and senior officials of the Department of Immigration. There is the danger that a series of hasty decisions could be made which would be biased against refugees, sending some of them into very dangerous conditions.

I would urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to give consideration to a resolution which was put forward by the Standing Conference of Canadian Organizations Concerned for Refugees. That organization met last week and recommended:

—that a universal program of special measures be adopted—

That could be done without the delay of legislation. The Minister could declare the programs tomorrow under existing legislation. The resolution continued:

—special measures be adopted by the government to speedily facilitate a humanitarian solution to all persons in the refugee determination process on April 4, 1985. The special measures should apply equally to all people caught by our faulty process regardless of nationality or ethnic origin. It would be unjust to ask people, many of whom have been in our old and inadequate process for several years, to return to the beginning to start over.

I call on the Minister to adopt some just action at the present time. If she cannot think of anything better, then she should adopt the resolution of the Standing Conference of Canadian Organizations Concerned for Refugees.

There are only three weeks left before the summer recess. I urge the Minister not to drag out the matter until next fall, or next Christmas, in defiance of the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to expand on the reply which was given on May 10, 1985, by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), regarding the very important matter of refugee determination in Canada.

As most Members are aware, Rabbi Gunther Plaut, a noted humanitarian and scholar, has been conducting an in-depth review of our refugee determination system. The review was made necessary by the severe pressures that have been placed on the process in recent years by increasing numbers of persons coming to Canada and seeking refugee status here. That has created a large backlog of cases which are awaiting consideration.

Obviously, the backlog situation is unacceptable. It means, in fact, that bona fide refugees, who have already undergone traumatic experiences, face an uncertain future when they must wait 18 months or longer until their fate in Canada can be decided. For others who may have made claims to refugee status as a way of trying to circumvent normal immigration procedures, it means that they have bought time in Canada.

It should be explained that refugee claims have been determined in Canada fairly and objectively for about 13 years. Refugee claims are not judged in the Canadian system by immigration officers. The review in the first instance is carried out by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, which is an independent entity within the Commission, that makes recommendations to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The claims which are not accepted can be reintroduced at the Immigration Appeal Board.

In a decision rendered on April 4, 1985, the Supreme Court ruled that all refugee claimants were entitled to an oral hearing. Until now, it was only the exceptional cases which were heard orally. The Minister fully supports that decision. To a considerably degree, the decision is the culmination of a process that has made the refugee determination process in Canada one of the most open and equitable processes of this kind which exists in any country.

However, the blueprint for a new procedure that would give effect to the Supreme Court decision is not a simply thing. The process must be fair, but at the same time it must function efficiently and with a minimum of delay. Once Rabbi Plaut's study is available to the public, the Government will have a better idea of the way in which these diverse elements can be reconciled. Also, because changes to legislation will be required, Members will have an opportunity to debate the issue.

I call upon all Members to support the positive and effective legislative changes which will be introduced, so that Canada will be able to continue to respond generously to humanitarian needs.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NEED FOR ORDER DURING DEBATES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women are outraged at the insulting behaviour of the Progressive Conservative Party vis-à-vis the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). As a Montreal journalist said: "Insults continue to fly fast and furious at the Parliament of Canada."

The Government is being attacked by the Opposition on its budgetary policy and political patronage. At a loss for other ways to defend itself, it tried its rough and ready macho style on the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. In so doing, the Government is insulting all Canadian women, who are nobody's baby, doll or chick.

I would urge the women in the Progressive Conservative caucus to tell their whip his role is not to downgrade women but to keep order in the caucus ranks.

I would also urge all Canadian women to let the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) know what they think of the male chauvinism displayed by the Conservative Party to women, and more specifically, to female Members of the Liberal Party.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ATLANTIC CANADA—ACTIONS OF LIBERAL AND CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Budget was especially harsh on Atlantic Canada, one of the poorer regions of our country. In response, the Liberal caucus set up a task force to tour the region. However, what the Conservative Government did was following the cuts to that region which were started by previous Liberal regimes.

The Liberals complain about the cuts to VIA Rail. It was the Liberals who cut VIA Rail and freight subsidies to Atlantic Canada.

The Liberals complain about cuts to regional development. It was the Liberals who cut the entire Department of Regional and Economic Expansion. Some 55 per cent of its money was spent in Atlantic Canada.

The Liberals complain about the transfer payment reductions made by the Conservatives which will amount to $2 billion by 1990. Yet the 1982-1987 formula imposed on Atlantic Canada also severely cut the amount of money to that region.

Old age pensioners in Atlantic Canada will suffer because of the Conservative Budget. The Liberals did the same with the six and five program. Cuts to U.I.C. hurt Atlantic Canada. The Conservatives have also abandoned Sydney Steel, just as the Liberals did.

I have a letter which I will be sending to all Atlantic Canadians indicating not only the cuts of the Conservatives but the cuts made by the previous Liberal Government. Let us have honesty in politics.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker:

Senior citizens are often isolated, poor, and in a crippling state of dependence. Recent statistics indicate that more than 60 per cent of women and 40 per cent of men over the age of 65 who live alone have incomes that are below the poverty line.

Those were the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on July 26, 1984, at Sherbrooke, Quebec. They are true words. Unfortunately, they are sprinkled with alligator tears.

In full knowledge of the plight of senior citizens, the Prime Minister has taken from the pockets of senior citizens needed pension increases which are required for the necessities of life. The Prime Minister had made the words "honour" and "appropriateness" the buzz-words of his Government. These words, when used by Conservatives, have come to be synonymous with "manipulation" and "deceit".

The Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues try to tell Canadians that they run a compassionate, open, and caring Government. Their actions bespeak a Government which has introduced a form of economic euthanasia on the backs of elderly Canadians. No equivocation, no rationalization, and no economic doublespeak will make their actions against senior citizens fair. The Conservative Party, from its early days as the Family Compact, has been the Party of privilege in Canada. That has not changed.

S.O. 21

The Prime Minister promised to introduce a new civility in this place and in Canada. That new civility amounts to knifing elderly Canadians in the back and saying: "Please accept this knife as a token of our compassion". That is a real shame.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government's patronage gravy train rolls on. On March 15, just two weeks after being called to the bar, John McMillan, the brother of the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan), was appointed legal agent for the federal Government. Securing an appointment as legal agent was not all that difficult for Mr. McMillan. According to reports, Mr. McMillan secured the appointment by picking up the phone and calling his brother's office in Ottawa. Furthermore, and I quote Mr. McMillan: "The chap who co-ordinates the appointment of legal agents also happened to be an old friend". The article from which I quote goes on to add that Mr. McMillan appreciates what his friends in Ottawa have done for him, as it will stand him in good stead in his law career.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) campaigned on the need to change the old way of doing things. He was going to end costly and irresponsible patronage appointments. Instead, we are witnessing a litany of cabinet Ministers' relatives lined up at the public trough. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has an option. He has a duty to the people of Canada to change the old Liberal way of doing things by appointing people to government positions on the basis of merit and not blood lines.

EMPLOYMENT

INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, once again the Liberal and NDP forecasters of economic doom and gloom have been proven wrong. They have learned today that employment increased last month by 70,000. Combined with April's increase of 89,000, this represents the largest absolute increase for a two-month period in 32 years. Over 70 per cent of these new jobs are full-time jobs.

Unemployment is down in seven provinces, with the largest declines occurring in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and British Columbia.

Canadians have not been fooled by the gloomy, short-sighted predictions of the Opposition. They remember only too well the disastrous economic record of the Liberals, supported by their NDP bedfellows. They have not forgotten the unnecessary suffering and hardship caused by ill-conceived economic policies. Instead, Canadians have accepted the invitation extended by the Government to join together and set this country of ours back on the road to economic recovery and witness the dawning of a new age of prosperity.

Canadians, once again, are full of hope, trust, and optimism. The Government is delivering on its commitment to create jobs, jobs, jobs. Together with the people of this nation we will deliver more, more, more.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, when this Government came to power, its platform was economic renewal and national reconciliation, a platform that was announced in the November economic message and confirmed and further developed in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) two weeks ago.

Mr. Speaker, our policies were aimed at renewing investor confidence and liberating the private sector. The Opposition has shouted down these proposals and demanded more money for creating temporary jobs, but we did not give in because we believe that the private sector is in the best position to create useful and durable jobs, provided it is given a chance to do so.

Mr. Speaker, we have asked Canadian entrepreneurs to deliver the goods and they have done so a hundred times over.

According to statistics published today, 271,000 jobs have been created in Canada since September. It is the first time we have seen such a high growth rate over a two-month period since Statistics Canada started publishing monthly labour market data.

The unemployment rate in Canada, at 11.6 per cent when the election was held, went down to 10.5 per cent in May. Unemployment among young people dropped from 18.3 to 16.2 per cent. Seventy per cent of these new jobs are full-time jobs.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is aware of its responsibility to Canadians who are unemployed and who have given up looking for work. The fact that tens of thousands of Canadians have found jobs in an indication that our policies produced—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF JOBS

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): This morning, Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada published the findings of its

May 1985 survey on gainfully employed Canadians. It reveals that April and May this year were months during which Canada recorded more than modest gains—above average results are an encouraging trend in our fight against unemployment. Progress over those two months constitutes a historic and perhaps unprecedented achievement since the end of World War II.

The total number of jobs in Canada went up by 159,000 in April and May, and that—in seasonally adjusted figures—is the sharpest increase over two consecutive months ever recorded by Statistics Canada since it first began to collate such monthly figures in 1953. We now have 271,00 more Canadians at work than we had nine months earlier. At this rate, we might exceed 400,000 new jobs over a 12-month period, a mark surpassed only twice since the end of the 1940s.

Mr. Speaker, this upward trend can be seen everywhere, not only among a given segment of the population or in a specific region of the country. Unemployment rates declined among all major age groups, men and women alike, in seven out of ten provinces.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is rightfully proud of its notable progress at every level in our fight against unemployment. That has been the performance of the Government so far, and it is firmly committed to improve on its record.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, once again it is Friday in the nation's capital and we come to the awarding of the "Patronage of the Week Award". This week the process has been difficult because of a number of last minute entries. The nominees?

Mr. Boudria: John McMillan.

Mr. Kaplan: John McMillan, the brother of the Minister of Tourism (Mr. McMillan), two weeks out of law school, has been named Canada's legal agent in Prince Edward Island. He has complained that he has not gotten much yet.

Mr. Boudria: Faith Good.

Mr. Kaplan: Mrs. Faith Good, the mother of the Chief of Staff of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), has become Vice-Chairman of the Board of the St. John's Port Corporation.

Mr. Boudria: Jim Wood.

Mr. Kaplan: Jim Wood, a former Mountie, is now presiding over veterans' pensions.

S.O. 21

In the final analysis—

Mr. Boudria: The Crosbie brothers.

Mr. Kaplan: —it was no contest. The envelope, please?

The winners are the Crosbie boys. Rat pack T-shirts for the Crosbie boys will be available in the office of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) during business hours of nine to five.

THE FORMER ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat distressed earlier today because I thought we were not going to have the Patronage Award of the Week awarded as there was not one awarded last Friday. I thought that this might be the last SOW Award. I am encouraged, however, to see that once again the awarders of the Patronage Award of the Week have found some names, and have given a double award at that. Perhaps we can meet fire with fire, and give a double award as well.

Choosing the first name from our SOW barrel, the first SOW of the Week is Denis Ethier, the former Liberal Member of Parliament for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, who was appointed Chairman of the Livestock Feed Board by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), back when he had no option. I suggest that the Livestock Feed Board is a great place for a "SOW".

Now the tension mounts as we get to our second award winner of the day. I draw another name from our piggy barrel. My goodness, the second winner is a rat. The other "SOW" is the present Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), the author of the black book on Tory patronage, the man who makes so much of his humble beginnings as a House of Commons busboy. He is also the man who got that job on the recommendation of his number one sponsor, the former Liberal MP for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, Denis Ethier. Obviously, when it comes to patronage, the rat pack knows that of which it squeaks.

EMPLOYMENT

INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, here is more good news. This morning's employment statistics provide compelling proof that the pro-employment policies of the Government are working. In the month of May employment surged forward by another 70,000 jobs. When combined with the April increase of 89,000 jobs, that means that in the last two months the economy has created 159,000 jobs. This is the largest absolute increase in employment in any consecutive two-month period since Statistics Canada began collecting employment data in 1953.

In practically every sector of the Canadian economy there are now thousands more people working than there were last September. There are 32,000 more jobs in agriculture, 22,000 more jobs in manufacturing, 74,000 more jobs in trade, and 135,000 more jobs in the service sector. Over three-quarters of these new jobs are full-time.

The new Government has created a total of a quarter of a million jobs since its election last September. That is 66,000 jobs more than the former Government created in its entire final 12 months in office.

● (1115)

The Opposition laughed when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the election of a Progressive Conservative Government would create thousands of jobs. Let's see if they are still laughing today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PENSIONS

IMPACT OF BUDGET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. The chorus is growing. Manitoba Tories, Premier Frank Miller and, in fact, most members of the Tory caucus, now recognize that the deindexation of old age pensions was an incredible blunder.

I am glad that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has arrived in the House. The Minister has stood in the House in defence of that move. He has spouted Hansard, and has read quotes from other sources. However, his job is to defend his constituents. I am hearing a lot of constituents asking why he is not doing that job. They are asking why he is sounding like the Minister of Finance. Why does the Minister not go to the Prime Minister and tell him what he really believes, so that he can stop spouting nonsense in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there would be general agreement in the House, following the creation of 89,000 jobs in April and 79,000 new jobs in May, that this is a great day for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It represents a combined increase for April and May of 159,000 new jobs. That represents the largest back-to-back increase in job creation since Statistics Canada began compiling the data in 1953.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I know that good news for Canada seems to be met with a glum disposition on the other side. It is good news. It is putting people back to work. It is the way to strengthen the social system. It is the way to bring strength back to the financial management of Canada. The way in which new and more valuable protection can be given to the elderly in Canada is by a sound economy which will be achieved through job creation.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RESIGNATION OF FINANCE DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is obviously very nervous when he resorts to a discussion of job creation when he is faced with the situation of the elderly. I am sure that the elderly people who will lose up to $60 a month because of the Budget, by the year 1990, will be happy to hear that. I would invite the Prime Minister to inform himself. In the first eight months of the last Liberal administration, 272,000 jobs were created.

As we know, the Deputy Minister of Finance, Marshall "Mickey" Cohen, resigned yesterday. We know Mr. Cohen, and we know that he is too good and too knowledgeable to be associated with this incoherent, unfair, and piecemeal Budget. I would like the Prime Minister to give us the commitment, as he sinks further and further into the fiscal swamp, that he will not try to put the blame for the Budget on the back of Mickey Cohen, because it was designed and drafted in the Prime Minister's office. Will he give us that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend should read The Toronto Star of today. He is quoted as saying that the Progressive Conservative Government has been extremely supportive of and loyal to Mr. Cohen. That is completely counter to the implication of his question. If it is in The Toronto Star, it has to be true!

Mr. Cohen is an outstanding public servant. I accepted his resignation with genuine regret. He has brought honour to the Public Service, and he has served the Department of Finance with great distinction and accomplishment. Any suggestion to the contrary is, as my hon. friend knows, malicious and absolutely false.

● (1120)

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to hear that because, as I said, Mr. Cohen is much too good and much too knowledgeable to be associated with this travesty.

PENSIONS

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): I go back to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. He knows that, every day, fear and anxiety are mounting amongst the elderly. I am getting calls; we are all getting calls. An Hon. Member behind me, I think, said he is getting calls. Everyone is getting calls. We are all concerned. Everyone is asking me: "What are you going to do about it?" Now I am asking the Minister what he is going to do about it. What is he going to do about correcting this cruel and brutal measure in the Budget?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the first point I make to the Hon. Member is that he, I am sure, does not want to spread fear by using figures which are wrong, and he again used a wrong figure this morning. I think that is the first point we should agree on.

The Hon. Member fobs off the creation of jobs as being meaningless to the elderly. But let's keep in mind that the creation of those jobs, and the reduction of the 29 basis points in the bank rate yesterday, are both examples that the Government's economic plan, along with the co-operation of the private sector, is working.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I agree with the Hon. Member—I have said many times in the House that I am defending the senior citizens, and this is what I am defending. I do believe that as that new wealth is created and that new room is opened up, those who should first get that benefit are those who are our senior citizens. And that is what this Government has always said.

THE BUDGET

CONSEQUENCES FOR VARIOUS SOCIAL SECTORS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

I am a little surprised to hear the Government benches congratulating themselves on increased employment and a reduction in unemployment. Any first-year university student knows that it takes at least a year or a year and a half for a Budget to have any effect, and today's figures are the result of the Lalonde Budget.

Mr. Masse: Why not the Mackenzie King Budget?

Mr. Garneau: Despite repeated requests by the Opposition, the Government has refused to disclose the impact this shower of taxes on the Canadian middle class will have on the Canadian economy.

My question to the Minister of Finance is as follows: At a time when in the United States, there is a proposal for fiscal reform which would increase corporate taxes and reduce taxes for the middle class, why has the Progressive Conservative Government taken an entirely different route by increasing taxes and income tax for the middle class and reducing corporate taxes, especially for the oil multinationals?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is just rehashing old questions which his colleagues in the New Democratic Party have asked, and they have been getting the straight answers. I am not going to bother boring the House with those answers again. However, I do caution the Hon. Member, when he makes these comments about job creation, that since January 75,000 more younger people got jobs, 112,000 women have found jobs since September 4, and 271,000 Canadians in total have found jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The difference, Mr. Speaker, is that we are not saying that we created those jobs. We know that Canadians created those jobs, and that is the nature of the Budget. That is the nature of the economic policy of the Government. It is to give that confidence and encouragement to Canadians so that we can have this clear record of success, about which all Canadians should be rejoicing today. They are not walking around with that little cloud above their heads like the Hon. Member. They are saying that this Government is on the right track. It is reinforcing that clear record of success with the Budget.

RECONCILIATION OF PURCHASING POWER LOSS AND JOB CREATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance refuses to understand the question. Since July last year, there has been a constant upward trend in employment. We are afraid that the Budget the Minister has just brought down will stop this trend, and I would ask the Minister of Finance why he is asking the Canadian private sector to create jobs, when he has just cut the purchasing power of the people who are supposed to be the customers of these Canadian businesses, a cut that will total $37 billion by the end of 1990. I have been asking this question for months, and I have never had a reply. I will try again this morning and ask the Minister where the private sector jobs are going to come from, when he is cutting our purchasing power by $37 billion.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Hon. Member to cast his mind back to what his Leader and others in his Party said, that the measures in the November 8 statement were going to cost the country between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs and we would see just a wipe-out of the private sector because of those dastardly changes brought in on November 8. But what have we seen since then?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Tell him.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): A continuation—

Mr. Garneau: Wait another 12 months.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Member says wait. We wait, we wait, and we wait, and we will probably see hundreds of thousands more jobs created—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —because of the positive response by the private sector to the Budget.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FULL INDEXATION OF PENSIONS—ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is he aware of the fact that 34 groups representing pensioners and elderly people throughout Canada have come out against his Government's deindexation of old age security pensions? They include the Conservative Government of Ontario, the Conservative Party and the New Democrats of the Manitoba Legislative Assembly and, in Quebec, the Fédération québécoise des clubs de l'Âge d'or, the Forum des citoyens âgés, the Association féminine d'éducation et d'action sociale and the Association pour la défense des droits des retraités et des préretraités du Québec, and not a single organization is in favour of it.

In view of such widespread and negative reaction, Mr. Speaker, why did the Prime Minister welsh on his election promise to maintain full old age pension indexation to offset inflation?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I and others in the House have said, time and time again, that the first obligation of the Government is to create a climate whereby jobs and wealth would be created. As the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have said today, and as objective Canadians are saying, at least the right course has been struck and it is starting to have positive results.

We are also saying that, as the wealth is created, not only do we want to protect the social programs he speaks of, we have to reduce the cost that Canadian taxpayers are paying to service the debt, money which is then not available for social programs, health care, pensions, or anything else the Hon. Member wants to ask me about. That is the reality, and while he might disagree with our economic philosophy, as we do with his, I would hope at least he would see the results for what they are.

PROMISES MADE TO RETIRED PERSONS DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Again it is directed to the Prime Minister since he is the one who, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party during the election campaign, made the unconditional promise to maintain old age security pensions for retired Canadians.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Prime Minister whether or not he will live up to his election campaign promise to retired people? On behalf of elderly Canadians, can we take the Prime Minister at his word?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been left in such a precarious situation that, this year, we will have to spend $25 billion to service the national debt we inherited from the Liberal Government.

Here is the tragic picture to put the problem in its proper perspective: social programs as a whole cost the federal treasury about $19 billion, so we are actually spending a lot more on the national debt than we do on social programs, and that is a tragedy for Canada. We simply have to balance the books, and that is what we are doing. The only effective option acceptable to all Canadians and all Quebecers is the creation of permanent jobs in the private sector. Since the Progressive Conservative Government has been elected, we have created 271,000 new jobs in Canada, an achievement which bodes well for all Canadians.

FINANCE

SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES—CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Consultants who addressed the Ottawa-Carleton Economic Development Corporation membership gathered to study the Budget came to the conclusion that, save for accountants and tax lawyers whom small and medium-sized business will have to hire to unravel the many intricacies of the new Budget, precious few Canadians will benefit from the so-called job creation measures.

In the opinion of the Minister of Finance, would it be more productive to make the capital gains tax exemption available to those who invest in small and medium-size businesses, thereby creating jobs, rather than to offer a $125,000 cash reward to people who have already made investments or will make some in foreign countries?

• (1130)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, Members opposite, including those in the New Democratic Party, said that the job loss resulting from the November statement would be between 50,000 and 100,000. That was generally accepted by the Members opposite. If the Member is at all objective he will understand that the approach we took in November, which we have continued in the Budget, has been truly successful in creating job opportunities for Canadians right across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In response to the specific question, we decided not to have a specific valuation date. We were going to spread the effects of the change in the capital gains exemption over a period of five years in order that there would not be the windfall impact about which the Hon. Member speaks.

INVESTMENT OF SAVINGS PLANS IN SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance believes that his Budget will create so many jobs, why did he reduce the potential for job creation by small business by preventing owners and their families from investing their retirement savings plans in their own small businesses?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we did consider the option proposed by the Hon. Member. We did not do it because we felt that the advantage which some people might have taken of that provision would have resulted in a great deal of complexity in the Act. That complexity in the Act may have made it more difficult to get RRSP funds and pension funds into small businesses. In that way, without spending a nickel of taxpayers' funds, we will create a number of jobs by removing that obstacle and getting the equity capital into small businesses so that they can expand.

PENSIONS

IMPACT OF BUDGET

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As of this morning 32 national seniors' organizations and two provincial Governments have said that they do not agree with the deindexation of pensions by the Government. Today will be the fifth day that my Party is tabling petitions from seniors across the country saying that they do not agree with what the Government is doing. Yesterday I met with several hundred seniors in Toronto who said that they did not agree with what the Government is doing. They asked me to ask the Prime Minister why he is doing this to them.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks a very good question. I would very much like to be able to stand before the House of Commons and announce that it is within the power of the Government to reduce taxes and increase benefits for all Canadians, including the elderly.

We found a financial situation that was infinitely more difficult than anyone could have reasonably foreseen. We found that, in the absence of action, the entire social welfare structure could be jeopardized. If interest payments kept demanding more, and more, and more of government income, there would be less, and less, and less left in the future to sustain and render viable social programs for the elderly and others in Canada.

We had to make some hard decisions. I wish that the news could be better for all Canadians. I hope that in the near future it will be better. However, I think my hon. friend would agree with me, as I know all senior citizens will, that the way to renewal is through job creation. The 271,000 jobs created so far represent a major step toward rendering our social programs more viable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. That does not answer the question the seniors are asking. It is not only the seniors who are asking that question. Later on today I will be tabling in the House a petition from 400 students of Malvern Collegiate in my constituency, who are grandchildren of those seniors. These students are asking the Prime Minister the same question. Why are you doing this to our grandparents?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that that too is a worthy question. I wish that we could be as generous as we would all like to be, with regard to all requests for more help for Canadians. My hon. friend mentions the students who will be filling the petition, as they ought to. He may want to remind them that Statistics Canada figures revealed this morning that there were 51,000 more students working this May than at the same time last year. I think that is progress as well.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, this supplementary question is again directed to the Prime Minister. If the economy is on a recovery, we are all happy to see it. No one would disagree with that. If the economy is on the recovery which the Government claims it is, and if the Government is providing jobs for students and others, that is an even better reason why the Government should not be doing this to senior citizens.

In light of all those facts, would the Prime Minister not reconsider deindexing pensions for the people who need the money the most? Will he not come clean and say to the seniors in the country that he is going to abide by the clear commitment he made to them during the election campaign, and since, and will not touch their pensions?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is both a sensitive and important question, very properly framed by my hon. friend. We have fully indexed the GIS. We have fully indexed payments to veterans. We have extended payments to widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age. We have extended the provisions of disability to include some 120,000 more Canadians. We have done all of these things because we are trying to make the social programs economically sustainable and durable in Canada. They are gravely jeopardized by the burgeoning mountain of debt which now calls upon Canada to pay more in interest than to our entire social welfare infrastructure.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why make the poor pay?

● (1140)

Mr. Mulroney: I hear criticism from the Liberals, the same people, with their six and five program, who deindexed pensions of the elderly by 6 per cent and 5 per cent. That's what is wrong.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CONSULTATION WITH THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Right Hon. Prime Minister will show a little more dignity and respect in answering questions about the elderly than he did just now.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister acknowledged that when he tabled this document in January, he was aware of the financial situation of this country, and he made a commitment to the Canadian people and to Parliament that changes in social programs would not be used to reduce the deficit. The Prime Minister has deceived Canadians once again.

To make up for this, is the Prime Minister at least prepared to meet another commitment he made on July 26 in Sherbrooke, his eighth commitment, and I quote:

To consult directly with senior citizens' groups on legislation that concerns them.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to meet with all senior citizens' groups next week or the week after?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Budget papers make it quite clear that the Government is going to monitor very closely the views of the public and how the situation develops, and when appropriate and if necessary and when we are in a position to do so, we will take the appropriate measures. I think that is in the Budget in black and white. It is a public secret.

I said yesterday that the position taken by the Hon. Member and the Official Opposition was a surprise to me, because they were saying the exact opposite three years ago. For instance, this morning I read in an editorial: "Crocodile tears shed by the Liberal Party." The article said: "Their 6 & 5 policy introduced at a time of spiralling inflation had cut deeply into benefits for the elderly." That is what you did with your hypocritical and dishonest policies, and we are now trying to correct the situation.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, how does the Prime Minister expect the Canadian people to believe his second paper when he has failed to keep his word and his commitments in connection with that paper?

THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): My supplementary to the Prime Minister is as follows: Will the Prime Minister have the intellectual honesty to do what the MacEachen Budget did, since they are saying that a Liberal Budget had deprived those most in need, which is just not true . . . I will read what it says here:

Pensioners most in need must also be fully protected from the limitation on the indexing factor. The Guaranteed Income Supplement for senior citizens . . .

An Hon. Member: Ask your supplementary!

Mr. Malépart: That is my question to the Prime Minister, Sir.

. . . with lower incomes will continue to be fully indexed. In addition, everyone receiving GIS will get a supplement to the GIS payment offsetting fully the limitation on indexation of Old Age Security payments.

Why pick on senior citizens, Mr. Speaker? What they want to know is what the Government has against senior citizens, especially those who are most in need. What reason do they have for not giving them what the Liberals were prepared to give?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what a petty and hypocritical question! The Hon. Member ought to be ashamed to ask such a question. The elderly in Quebec and Canada know perfectly well that economic renewal is necessary, that it is the cornerstone of any decent guaranteed income or social security program. All Canadians, including and especially senior citizens, know perfectly well that our social programs have been put at risk as a result of the national debt, and that the only way to get out of this situation is by creating jobs.

I think the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie should realize that among the 159,000 jobs created in only two months, 60,000 were created in Quebec. That is the best news Quebec has had in ten years, and senior citizens are well aware of that.

[English]

Ms. Copps: Ça c'est mentant.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wilson: Get out of here, baby.

MANITOBA LEGISLATURE RESOLUTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. While he is the Minister for all of Canada, he is also a Manitoban. He knows that yesterday a unanimous resolution was passed by the Legislation of that province calling for the full indexation of old age pensions for seniors, and talking about the profoundly negative effect the federal Government's program of deindexation will have on old age pensioners. Will he join other Manitobans and make sure that the Government reverses its position?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the resolution and have had discussions about it. The Hon. Member knows that he and I have said in the House many times that we are going to monitor the situation. It is not even in effect, only to come into effect on January 1 next. Therefore, the situation remains the same.

I also tell him that the Manitoba Legislature, as is any other legislature, is an independent parliamentary body. They can pass their resolutions and we can accept them and examine them, as with other representations.

REQUEST FOR FULL INDEXATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. He made a promise during the election campaign. He has now heard from the Province of Manitoba and the Province of Ontario. He has heard from seniors and young people right across the country.

The reason he has given the House is that the deficit is a problem. Will he not admit that when the Liberals were in Government, the Conservative Party, just as the New Democrats, said that the deficit would be higher than it actually turned out to be? Would he not admit that and reinstate that pension for the old people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the difference is that the February figures provided by the former Government provided a large deficit plus a trend line which it said was going down. However, when we came into office we discovered that the trend line was going up.

I ask my hon. friend to reflect upon what that does. For example, if we go from 10 cents on the dollar to 33 cents on the dollar, and ultimately to 40 cents and 50 cents on every dollar of government revenue to pay the interest on the debt, that puts the capacity of the Government of Canada to maintain these social programs in peril.

It is because we want to maintain their integrity, and to enhance them at the earliest possible time, that we are taking measures which are painful for all Canadians. However, they are designed to be helpful in creating the kind of durable job creation that throws off tax dollars and the new wealth that will allow us to sustain and enhance those social programs, particularly for the elderly.

I think the news this morning of the creation of 271,000 new jobs in Canada should be cause for rejoicing by the Hon. Member.

INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT LEVELS—ANALYSIS OF NEW JOBS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There is good news from Statistics Canada today because 159,000 new jobs have been created in the last two months. We have not heard a question from the Liberals or the New Democratic Party about this situation. They do not want to ask about that because it is good news. Therefore, let me ask the Minister if she could give us an analysis of those new jobs that have been created.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the figures that were released this morning by Statistics Canada concerning the creation of new jobs in the last few months, and indeed since September of last year, represent the breakthrough in economic renewal right across the country.

Since September of last year 271,000 new jobs have been created as against the 94,000 jobs that had been created under the Liberal Government in the same period of the previous year. Furthermore, 131,000 fewer Canadians are unemployed as against the same period of time when unemployment went up under a Liberal Government. People have to recognize that those are the kinds of statistics which have brought about the economic breakthrough which the country is witnessing.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my questions are directed to the Prime Minister. I have read and reread all the arguments the Prime Minister has made on the record in defence of the conduct of the Minister of Justice in relation to giving government legal work to his sons, to try to find the case the Prime Minister was making. I bear in mind today's revelation that CMHC work was given directly to them, not to them in any capacity as members of a firm. Is the Prime Minister saying that when he, as Prime Minister, is satisfied with the probity, integrity, and honour of one of his Ministers, that that Minister is not obliged to follow the guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No. Mr. Speaker, I have said no such thing. In fact I have said quite the contrary. The implication of my hon. friend is, as he knows, vexatious and spurious. It does him no honour to persist in this kind of malice in the House of Commons, which is both unfair and misleading.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would protest the imputation that my concerns are not sincere. I am wondering what the guidelines mean. How can the Prime Minister take clear guidelines and find that what the Minister of Justice has done is not preferential treatment? How can he defend it based on the specific words, the clear words of the guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope I gave an answer which would satisfy my hon. friend. It was given in good faith. It dealt with the facts of the issue and the extent to which, indeed, the guidelines were very much in force. Not only must they be implemented and clear of violation, but even the appearance of violation must be avoided. I think that has been established to the satisfaction of the House, I hope that is the case, but I would be happy to provide any further information the Hon. Member wishes.

UNACCEPTABLE CONDUCT INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister to enlighten the country. How can the guidelines, as they have been interpreted in the case of the Minister of Justice, ever be violated? What would constitute unacceptable conduct by one of his Ministers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a hypothetical question. I can only tell him that Canadians quite properly expect Ministers of the Crown, and all Members of Parliament, to adhere to the highest possible standard of conduct, and that is exactly what we are going to do. Anything at variance with that would be unacceptable. I have made that very clear. Having said that, I am satisfied that the explanations provided by the Minister of Justice are appropriate, and I hope my hon. friend would agree with that.

IMPACT OF BUDGET

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He has indicated, if not said, that he derives no pleasure from the measures which were brought about that will take from senior citizens a certain part of their expendable income. With that in mind, would he undertake to review the five options we offered yesterday, options which, if implemented, could yield to the Treasury in excess of $3 billion in any calendar year, or any fiscal year, with an eye to finding, within the five areas we have recommended could be reviewed and taxed in a somewhat different way, the required $245 million, to allow the Government not to decrease the indexing provisions applicable to old age pensioners?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend raises an excellent point. While I have not read the transcript, I noticed that one of the committees of the House dealt yesterday with the thrust of the question which my hon. friend raises, where the Liberals, in a gift to their friends in big business, threw off $2.5 billion in forgone tax revenues in R and D spinoffs. We shut down that tax loophole, because that was what was happening to the social programs.

We have imposed a tax on the capital of banks and trust companies, we have imposed a surcharge on the wealthy, and we are going to impose a minimum tax on the wealthy, because we agree with that spirit of fairness.

Again I give my hon. friend the assurance, as was said in the budgetary documents, that we will monitor this very closely and at the earliest possible moment discuss it in the House with my hon. friend, at his convenience. We will continue to monitor it to ensure, to the extent humanly possible and as quickly as finances permit, that no difficulty is sustained by our elderly in Canada.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will recognize that we have six months to change this policy toward old age pensioners. I ask him to look seriously at whether, within the five options we have offered, or in any other way, there seems to be sufficient money to meet the demand. Would he look at those and determine for himself that it is in fact possible to rearrange the tax structure within those areas in such a way as to raise the $245 million, and to say to Canadian seniors that in fact we recognize their contribution to the building of the country and that, as a grateful nation, we will ask others with more disposable income to take on the burden which would otherwise have been placed on them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be no change in the documents filed by my hon. friend.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Mulroney: Before you are overcome with your own maudlin sense of self-importance—not the NDP House Leader, the people behind him—and before you expire on the spot, we, conscious of this, have given an indication in the budgetary documents that we would do precisely that, that we would monitor it very carefully.

However, we also indicated—and I know my hon. friend would agree with this—that the only way it could be done, in that borrowed money and printed money do not work any more, is through job creation and long-term, equitable sharing of new wealth. And 271,000 new jobs represent new wealth, new prosperity, and new hope for all Canadians.

NATIONAL PARKS

MINING AND FORESTRY PROJECTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I will direct my question to anyone among that uninspired lot of Ministers. The Minister of the Environment has made the front page of at least one national paper and was quoted as saying: "I don't have to think the national parks are sacred". She went on to say that she would not rule out mining and forestry in national parks. My question is a simple one. Is this an expression of her own opinion or an expression of the consensus of Cabinet and of the Prime Minister, in a year in which Canadians are celebrating the centennial of Parks Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should say that I am getting a little dismayed at coming to the House of Commons and constantly finding the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP absent.

An Hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Mulroney: I think they are off at an engagement party in Queen's Park.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: TV cameras are the only attraction keeping you here this morning!

Mr. Mulroney: Liberals out of office, now that really hurts!

[English]

I can tell my hon. friend that I understand the Minister indeed was misquoted, because her view is that of ours, that the parks are very much part of our national heritage and will always remain so.

WILDLIFE TOXIC FUND—NORANDA MINES CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that the Minister was misquoted. However, I wonder whether, by accepting from Noranda Mines a contribution of $50,000 to the wildlife toxic fund announced by her a few days ago, she has opened the door to a possible conflict of interest in our national parks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will take a look at it, Mr. Speaker, but I will have to check the record to see what Noranda Mines contributed to the Liberal Party. If he wants to carry it to that extreme, I think it will wind up in a little fit of lunacy. I think we have to be reasonable and thoughtful in our approaches here, and I think that is what we have tried to be.

HEALTH

MEDICAL USE OF HEROIN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the House if he has reached agreement with the provinces and law enforcement agencies with respect to a protocol for the medical use of heroin in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As all Hon. Members know, he has been the foremost spokesman on this important issue in the House. I would say the protocol is coming to conclusion. We expect it to be concluded by the end of this month. The sourcing will come from the United Kingdom. According to that source, we understand it could be available at the beginning of October, 1985.

As the Hon. Member also knows, heroin has to be put on each provincial pharmacological calendar. I have discussed that matter with the provinces and I think it is well in hand.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, June 6, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF ALLEGED SEXIST REMARK

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have to rise for a second time in a week in the House and ask government Members, and in particular the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to withdraw the sexist remarks he and members of his Party have made two times in one week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: The House Leader may not consider this a question of privilege. I consider it a question of privilege when the women of Canada are insulted by terms such as "baby".

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker—and I have forwarded a letter to the Chair to this effect—in light of the fact that we are living in 1985 and such sexist terms are not acceptable in the House of Commons, to order the Minister of Finance to withdraw the statements he made, which included the words, "Get out, baby". I am not his baby. I am not the baby of any Member on the government side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: I am sorry that the members of the Conservative Party think it is a big joke to call other Members of this place "baby". I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule that the Minister finally and unequivocally remove the word "baby" from the House of Commons.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would never use a word such as that unless properly provoked. The Hon. Member used the word menteur three times in referring to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). That means, in English, liar, liar, liar. The Hon. Member knows that and she will not deny it.

Ms. Copps: I do not deny it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): She says she will not deny it.

Any time a Member of the House uses that sort of language, that Member loses the total respect of the House. After that point in time, whatever language is used in connection with the Member goes. I do not take back what I said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has stated a proposition which simply cannot be accepted. Even if hypothetically one Hon. Member uses unparliamentary language, it does not justify another Hon. Member's use of unparliamentary language, especially when the Minister of Finance has used language which is not only an insult to a distinguished Member of this House—

Some Hon. Members: Who? Who?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —but to all women of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I did not hear the comments which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) made.

An Hon. Member: She admitted it!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

I did not hear the comments the Hon. Member for Hamilton East says the Minister of Finance said. There is a simple reason for that, which is that it is often difficult for me to hear during Question Period in the House.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has sent me a letter with respect to this matter. There is no question in my mind that sexist remarks are objectionable. However, there is some question in my mind as to whether or not the fact that they are objectionable makes them unparliamentary. Equally, there is no question that language which the House generally finds objectionable tends to cause disorder, which then brings us into the area of order, the use of language, and the creation of disorder through language, which is a separate matter.

Under the circumstances, having recognized the seriousness with which Hon. Members have taken this point in their comments, I think we all have an obligation to each other—males to females, females to males, Liberals to Conservatives, NDP to all of us and everybody to the NDP—to bring our language into check and to remember that this is the House of Commons of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINTS OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT CITED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I asked that a document from which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) quoted be tabled. I understand the Government's reply to that request is to refer to a letter of former Prime Minister Trudeau which has been tabled in 1984. I rise because the letter from Mr. Trudeau is not the document which I was asking to have tabled. I was asking to have tabled the document from which the Prime Minister was quoting.

Yesterday, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said, as reported at page 5490 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I am not one to peer over the Prime Minister's shoulder, but that was a separate document altogether, with an extract. It was not a letter.

In other words, the document before the Prime Minister was not a letter; it was a document that I gather contained an extract from former Prime Minister Trudeau's letter. According to Beauchesne, Members of the House are entitled to have tabled the document from which the Prime Minister was reading yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Beauchesne is very clear on this point. In fact, I can quote it from memory:

> Only the document cited need to be tabled by a Minister.

That is the very clear practice. If, for the sake of argument, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were holding a piece of paper on which was printed a single paragraph taken from a letter, and he then indicated, as I think he did, having seen the videotape, that he was quoting from a letter with a date and read the quotation, then the document that is properly required to be tabled is the letter he has cited. If the Hon. Member is arguing that the piece of paper he was holding has to be—

An Hon. Member: No one said that.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that if that is what the Hon. Member is saying, then, no, no such obligation is necessary.

Let us be clear that what is cited is the letter from the Prime Minister to the Ministers. That is to what he referred.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully refer you to Beauchesne, page 116, at the top of the page where it is written:

It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House—

I respectfully submit that, yesterday, the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) told you, Sir, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was talking about a document. I respectfully ask, Mr. Speaker, that you give some further consideration to the matter, in light of the words of the Government House Leader.

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty because we dealt with this matter separately yesterday. At the time, I invited argument from Hon. Members. Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) asked me to hear arguments on this very question. I did. I take it that the Hon. Member for York Centre is now trying to raise a separate point which is with respect to whether or not the piece of paper is the document to which Beauchesne refers. It is not my view that that is what Beauchesne means; nor would it make any sense if it were taken that way. I take it that what it means is that, when a Minister indicates, as he did yesterday, that he is quoting from a letter, which is exactly what the "blues", the videotape, and Hansard show, then his obligation is to table that letter.

ALLEGED INCORRECT S.O. 21 STATEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier today, when making a statement under Standing Order 21, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) suggested to the House that I had received a political appointment, or had been recommended for one by the previous Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, when I started working here in 1966.

Page 243 of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide for 1981 shows clearly that the previous Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, one Denis Ethier, was first elected to the House of Commons in 1972—six years after I had started working here. The Parliamentary Guide indicates that the Hon. Member for the riding in which I lived at that time was one Paul Tardif, later succeeded by John Turner. Those were my Members of Parliament, not the one stated incorrectly by the Hon. Member.

CORRECTION OF S.O. 21 STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on two or three occasions in this House has stated during Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21 and during the course of Question Period last week that representatives of Action Now, a senior citizens' group from Saskatchewan, had been refused a meeting with me. I have checked with my office. There has never been any such request for a meeting with me. I would gladly meet with this group as I have over the years. I just wanted to make clear for the record that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is wrong in his facts and in this particular case he is ultimately and very much wrong.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride in the young people of our country that I present a petition today from some 400 students of Malvern Collegiate who are asking the Government to live up to the promise it made during the election campaign to index pensions to the full cost of living and ask the Government to reconsider its present policy.

I have another petition from senior citizens who reside at 1080 Eastern Avenue in my constituency and they make the same request.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed on behalf of the old age pensioners of Canada in which the petitioners ask the House to make sure that the Conservative Government lives up to its election promise of indexing the old age pension to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis, and I think that that is very important. This is the fifth day on which Members of our Party have risen to present these petitions and the request obviously has the overwhelming support of Canadians everywhere.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition to the House from many citizens of Windsor who protest the proposed deindexing of the old age pensions and call on Parliament to re-establish the full indexing of old age pensions.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens of Ottawa pointing out that the proposed cut in the old age pension will take from old age pensioners $100 in 1986, $205 in 1987, and $315 in 1988, and they are asking this House to reinstate full indexation of the Old Age Security Program of Canada.

I have another petition, also signed by a number of residents and pensioners of the City of Ottawa, who petition the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of the old age pension and who recall that during the election campaign, Progressive Conservative Members stated that a PC Government would once more index the old age pension to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis. They are asking that that promise be kept.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Canadians from coast to coast are getting very concerned about the lack of indexing on pensions. It is my privilege to present a petition from citizens, who are mostly from Saskatchewan, protesting the Government's action in cutting the indexation of Old Age Security, reminding the Government of its promise to index pensions fully, and urging that indexing be fully restored.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from citizens of Canada reminding the Government that it promised to restore full indexation of pensions and requesting Parliament to see to it that that full indexation is in fact restored.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present from some residents of my riding who are petitioning the Government to reverse its policy on deindexing Old Age Security Program payments because of the ultimate high cost to pensioners. They are asking that the Progressive Conservative Government live up to its election promise to continue the indexing of pensions on a quarterly basis based on the actual cost of living.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POWERS OF SENATE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

That:

Whereas the Prime Minister of Canada is committed to convening before the end of 1987 a constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces to consider proposals for the reform of the Senate;

And whereas it is expedient, at this time, that the powers of the Senate with respect to bills that are passed by the House of Commons be limited;

And whereas sections 38 and 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provide that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

Now therefore the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE
AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following sections:

"54.1 (1) Where a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, is presented to the Senate at least thirty days before the end of the session but is not passed by the Senate without amendment within thirty days after it is presented, the bill shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

(2) There shall be endorsed on every money bill when it is presented to the Senate and when it is presented to the Governor General for assent the certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons signed by the Speaker that it is a money bill.

(3) A certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons given under subsection (2) shall be conclusive for all purposes, and shall not be questioned in any court of law.

(4) In this section and section 54.2, "money bill" means a public bill that, in the opinion of the Speaker of the House of Commons, contains only provisions dealing with the following:

(a) the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation;

(b) the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on the Consolidated Revenue Fund or on money provided by Parliament, or the variation or repeal of such charges;

(c) supply;

(d) the appropriation, receipt, custody or issue of public money;

(e) the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or

(f) subordinate matters related to any of the matters set out in paragraphs (a) to (e).

54.2 (1) Where any bill, other than a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, is presented to the Senate at least forty-five days before the end of the session but is not passed by the Senate within forty-five days after it is presented, the bill shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

(2) Where any bill, other than a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons and presented to the Senate, is passed with amendments by the Senate, and the House of Commons does not concur in the amendments within fifteen days after the bill is passed by the Senate, the bill, in the form in which it was presented to the Senate but with such amendments made by the Senate as are concurred in by the House of Commons, shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

54.3 (1) In every bill presented to the Governor General under section 54.1 or 54.2, the words of enactment shall be amended by striking out any reference to the Senate.

(2) Any alteration of a bill to give effect to this section shall be deemed not to be an amendment of the bill.

54.4 Any law made pursuant to section 54.1 or 54.2 shall be deemed, for the purposes of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada, except Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982, to have been made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons.

54.5 For greater certainty, nothing in sections 54.1 to 54.4 shall be construed as amending Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982.

54.6 Nothing in sections 54.1 to 54.4 diminishes or qualifies the rights and privileges of the House of Commons."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and section:

"XII.—REFERENCES

148. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

CITATION

3. This Amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, year of proclamation (Powers of Senate).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to have the opportunity to move such an important resolution that will affect the Constitution of Canada in a very significant way if the resolution is adopted by this House and then adopted by the requisite number of provinces, which in this case would be seven provinces, having in excess of 51 per cent of the population of Canada. The resolution goes to the very heart of the parliamentary democratic system of Government.

The purpose of the resolution is to seek to ensure that the will of the people, as expressed through free elections and as represented in the House of Commons, which is where the people of Canada are represented in our electoral system, cannot be blocked, frustrated or undermined by the Senate. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the other place is a non-elected, appointed body which is appointed solely by the Government of Canada through the Privy Council and the Cabinet.

The resolution before the House has two main purposes. It would alter, through a constitutional amendment, the powers of the Senate and thus ensure that the Senate cannot exercise an absolute veto over Bills adopted by the House of Commons. At present, the Senate, the unelected part of the Houses of Parliament, can veto absolutely Bills that this House of Commons adopts. The resolution would commit the Government to convene a First Ministers' Conference before the end of 1987 so that the 11 First Ministers of Canada and their Governments could consider fully the options for the future of the Senate. There is a commitment from the Government that this would be done if the resolution becomes part of our Constitution.

I would like to tell the House of the evolution of our democratic institutions to give the background for the reason we are moving this resolution. In doing that, it is necessary to review our gradual but continuing process from the arbitrary rule of French or British colonial Governors with their appointed Councils to full self-government through democratic and responsible institutions.

As Hon. Members know, our form of Government has evolved dramatically since its early days. Like other democratic countries which follow the British system, we are continuously adapting our political institutions to changing values and different circumstances, all of which reflects the unending quest to try to put into practice the ideals of democracy.

The first critical step toward these ideals was taken 227 years ago in 1758 when the first representative assembly was convened in Nova Scotia. For the first time in any part of what is now known as Canada, the British Governor and his Council could no longer impose taxes without the consent of an assembly which represented the people. That began in Nova Scotia in 1758.

● (1220)

It was an important development which began to move toward control by the people over their Government. In the following decades, representative assemblies were established in other British North American colonies: Prince Edward Island in 1773; New Brunswick in 1784; Upper and Lower Canada in 1791—of course, Upper and Lower Canada followed behind the Atlantic Provinces—and Newfoundland in 1832, which followed behind Upper and Lower Canada. Newfoundland has been following behind ever since.

Shortly thereafter, leaders such as Joseph Howe in Nova Scotia, Louis Joseph Papineau in Lower Canada, William Lyon Mackenzie in Upper Canada, and Amor de Cosmos in British Columbia began to campaign, not only to control the imposition of new taxes, but they also demanded that the executive be responsible to the elected assembly for government policies and how the taxes were spent.

That led to the next crucial step in the evolution of our political institutions—responsible government. Mr. Speaker, as you are a well-known constitutional scholar in your own right, you will know that, again, Nova Scotia led the way. In January, 1848, the Nova Scotia Assembly adopted a motion of non-confidence. The Executive Council, which was led by James Johnston, resigned and J. B. Uniacke was asked to form a Government. Following the Nova Scotia example, that historic change spread throughout British North America. It occurred later that year in New Brunswick and in the Province of Canada. It occurred in Prince Edward Island three years later, and in 1855 in Newfoundland. Newfoundland, which is usually a half hour ahead, was a number of years behind in that case.

Thus, the principle of responsible self-government in domestic affairs was firmly rooted in the unwritten part of the Constitution, which was important even before Confederation. The rule was established that the Government which lost the confidence of the elected House would have to resign or seek a new mandate. There is an example of that now in the Province of Ontario. Apparently, that Government may have lost the confidence of the elected House. The Liberal Party and the NDP, heart-to-heart, cheek-to-cheek, jowl-to-jowl and toe-to-toe, as they usually are, are joining together in an attempt to eject the Government which is governing at Queens Park. We will know in the next two or three weeks whether they will be successful.

That is the system. If the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party wish to coalesce, to act covertly, overtly, or in any other way, that is their responsibility and the electorate will deal with them later.

The Ministry collectively became responsible to the elected representatives of the people for government policy. For example, the Cabinet is responsible to the elected representatives for government policy, not to the Senate. The Cabinet is not responsible to the Senate. Each Minister with a portfolio became accountable to the House for the administration of his or her Department. As a result of those developments, responsible government was the guiding principle for the Fathers of Confederation when they met in Charlottetown, Quebec City and London to consider what form the union should take.

In the years that followed, as Canada grew eastward, westward and northward—eastward, of course, to take in Newfoundland—representative and responsible government was established in other provinces. In the 1860s, British Columbia did not have an elected assembly. That province's struggle for responsible government coincided with the campaign to join Confederation. In 1871, B.C. became a province. Later that year, in accordance with the terms of the union, responsible government was instituted in British Columbia. I will not say any more about responsible government in British Columbia, as that might be debated.

Manitoba was created in 1870 with an elected assembly and a responsible government.

Mr. Murphy: He is on camera now.

Mr. Crosbie: Who is on camera? The hon. chatterer opposite is certainly not on camera. It would be very damaging for his Party if he were. If that simpering visage went across the country, I am sure it would badly damage his Party's standing in the polls, which is already very low.

A Territorial legislature was established in the prairie region in the late 19th century. Alberta and Saskatchewan were granted responsible government when they became provinces in 1905. The Yukon and the Northwest Territories have had fully-elected Councils since 1908 and 1966 respectively. Although the form of responsible government is not yet perfect in that part of the country, the political development is moving in that direction.

Many changes have been made in Canada, as in other democracies, to bring about a more full and more equitable participation of the citizens in the process of choosing who should govern them. Citizens have the right to choose who should govern them. But mark this. If we do not do anything to change the powers of the Senate, then the citizens of Canada will not choose who should govern them because they will be governed by the Senate. Legislation which is passed by this House can be repudiated and rejected by the non-elected, appointed Senate, which has a Liberal majority, a majority of Liberals who were repudiated by the people of Canada in the last election.

At the present time there are three vacancies in the Senate. One person has been named, but not yet appointed, from New Brunswick, Mr. Simard. There are 72 Liberals in the Senate, 25 Progressive Conservatives, three independents and one independent Liberal. The Senate is dominated completely by the Party which was rejected decisively in the election of last September. Very few might regret that, but that is what happened. The Party which now controls the Senate has been rejected by the people of Canada. The Party which has a majority in the House of Commons has been chosen. Its policy and its leader have been chosen by the people to govern Canada. What we are dealing with is whether Canadians can choose who should govern them. If the Liberal cabal in the Senate can reject or delay unduly the legislation of the House, then the people of Canada are not choosing who governs them.

Many changes had to be made in Canada to achieve the political process which we have today. There were a number of barriers. There was once a very stiff property qualification for candidates for the House of Commons. That was changed in 1874. Until 1898, ony men who met a property-owning requirement had the right to vote. Some women gained the right to vote in 1917, and basic adult suffrage was established in 1920, although even then it was not fully universal. Certain groups of oriental origin were denied the suffrage until 1948. That is quite amazing. Indians, Inuit and Doukhobors did not gain the right to vote in federal elections until 1960. By 1940 all provinces had granted the franchise to women. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is not here to celebrate that. In the 1970s, limits were placed on election spending in order to limit the influence of Parties' and candidates' financial resources in election campaigns. Today, all political Parties are starting to ensure that women, visible and audible minorities, and disadvantaged groups participate fully in the political process.

An important anomaly persists in Canada—an appointed and not accountable Senate is still empowered to exercise an absolute veto over legislation which is adopted by the elected House of Commons. Why has this anachronism persisted until now? To get the answer we must look at what the Fathers of Confederation intended when they designed the Senate. They tried to marry the principle of federalism to a parliamentary form of Government. That took some imagination and boldness and, on the whole, the form of Government they developed has served us pretty well, but we are trying to combine a parliamentary form with a federal system of Government.

The Senate was conceived as a hybrid second Chamber. Its name, and the basic principle of representation, was supposed to be equality of representation of regions rather than representation by population, and that was based on the example of the American Senate. On the other hand, the Fathers of Confederation chose a method of selection which was more like that of the House of Lords in the United Kingdom. The method of selection was not a surprising one for those times. We often forget, Mr. Speaker, that the American Senate was not then elected. It was an appointed body in the 19th century. Appointment reflected the values and the desire of the Fathers of Confederation to protect against what they called "The excesses of democracy". We all know, Mr. Speaker, that there are excesses of democracy, but our view today is that it is up to the people to decide whether or not there have been excesses. As a result, the legitimacy of the Canadian Senate at that time compared favourably with second Chambers which existed elsewhere.

The Fathers of Confederation also chose to give the Senate powers virtually equal to those of the House of Commons. That did not shock anyone in the year 1867. The Senate had the full legislative functions of the House of Lords at that time, including an absolute veto over legislation. Its powers were just about the same as those of the elected House. But since then, of course, we have had an evolution in other countries and major changes to both of the second Chambers which were the model for our Fathers of Confederation. In 1907, Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons in England adopted this motion:

> In order to give effect to the will of the people as expressed by their elected representatives, it is necessary that the powers of the other House to alter or reject Bills passed by this House should be so restricted by law as to secure that within the limits of a single Parliament the final decision of the Commons shall prevail.

We all recall the bitter struggle which took place between the House of Lords and the then Liberal Government of the United Kingdom, which was finally settled with the adoption of the Parliament Act in 1911, after two elections, as I recall. So the power of the House of Lords over money Bills was reduced by law to a short delay. Its absolute veto over other legislation was reduced to a suspensive veto. And in 1949 in the United Kingdom, the length of the suspensive veto over ordinary legislation of the House of Lords was further shortened. So that is the situation in the United Kingdom.

In the United States, the American Senate underwent a major change early in this century. The Senators were chosen by the state legislative assemblies. But in 1913, only two years after passage of the Parliament Act in Britain, a constitutional amendment was adopted which provided for Senators to be popularly elected on a state-wide basis.

We have not as yet, Mr. Speaker, followed either the British or the American development. Why is it that Canadians were content to leave the Senate as it was originally constituted despite the fact that these major changes took place in the United Kingdom and in the United States? Basically, the reason is that, for the most part, the Senate has been quiescent. It has not interfered with the elected House of Commons. Therefore, no one has bothered or been forced to take any steps with reference to the Senate. That is basically the reason. But now we see a different tendency, Mr. Speaker. We see a situation where the majority of the present Liberal caucus of Parliament is composed of Senators. There are 72 Senators. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has 72 Senators in his caucus, and I think it is 42—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thirty nine others.

Mr. Crosbie: —thirty nine others besides himself in the House of Commons. Liberal Members of Parliament are outnumbered in their own caucus by 72 to 40. So one can understand the dilemma in which this places the Leader of the Opposition. He is dominated by the Senate and the Senate dominates his caucus. The Senators, the cabal, the unelected group which wields the power in the Senate, wields it in the Liberal caucus and, naturally, that poses a dilemma for the Leader of the Opposition. That is why we are likely to see him today do everything he can to postpone this legislation, to prevent us from getting on with the job of bringing Canada into the 20th century electorally and democratically. That is why the Leader of the Opposition is likely to do everything he can to propose amendments, to fiddle with the principle of this resolution, so that the cabal will be left in charge in the Senate, able to thwart the will of the people whenever it wishes. I sympathize with the dilemma in which the hon. gentleman finds himself. But perhaps I am wrong. Perhaps he will spring to his feet as a new George Washington, even with his wooden false teeth, the father of his country.

I am a Senate supporter myself, Mr. Speaker. I think it performs useful functions. It is a place for legislative review and inquiry. Senate committees have done excellent work. I have seen excellent reports, as we all have, from Senate committees. I have praise for their thoroughness. Some of those reports have even gained recognition outside of Canada. But its method of selection is undemocratic, we have to admit that. Therefore, the authority of the Senate is weakened because the Senate does not have the endorsement of the people of Canada in any evident sense.

The Senate has been reluctant, usually, to challenge the will of the elected House. But from time to time, Mr. Speaker, the Senate has caused problems for the operation of parliamentary democracy in this country. It is most quiescent when the majority in the House of Commons is similar to the majority in the Senate, when the Party majorities are the same. In those periods the records show few difficulties. Canadians tend to forget that the Senate has this absolute veto because it does not exercise it, and we have seen that from the years 1965 on to 1985, except for the eight months of interregnum.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Nine months.

Mr. Crosbie: No, it was not nine months. It was eight months, time enough to conceive.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It seemed like nine months.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, but not to deliver. You will recall that.

We all know Mr. Speaker, that in the last 20 years, the Liberal majority in the Senate did not dare to berk or oppose actions taken by the Liberal Government and by the Liberal majority in the House of Commons. So no one had to worry or bother with the Senate. But the Senate now appears to be in the mood for constitutional confrontation. If that is the case, then, Mr. Speaker, we who are elected by the people of Canada have to be ready to meet that challenge. When the unelected want to disrupt the system, to impose their own arbitrary will, and to oppose those who are elected here by the people of Canada, then we have to be prepared to seize the nettle, not to mind the pricks of the thorns in the nettle, and get on with the job of seeing that this country operates in a democratic fashion.

Mr. Boudria: You are full of sincerity.

Mr. Crosbie: The man who got his start through patronage should not interrupt a statesman-like speech.

Mr. Marchi: You are the expert, John. You are the professional.

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. gentlemen will just keep quiet for a while, we won't remind them of their patronage antecedents.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You brought patronage to an art form, John.

Mr. Crosbie: What about you?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition really takes a chance when he gets on with remarks about patronage. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that Senator Lewis's firm received $479,497.98 in legal fees in the last three years down in Newfoundland?

Mr. Nunziata: You are shameless, Crosbie.

Mr. Crosbie: Or that the Leader of the Opposition's firm down in Newfoundland—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I have the facts. I am going to deal with you weasels when the time comes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like Hon. Members to get on to the relevance of this motion.

Mr. Crosbie: Sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was diverted.

The situation has been different when the majorities in the two Houses were not the same. Let us just see what has happened. The Senate proves troublesome when the majority in the Senate is not similar to the majority in the House. Then it seeks to block or delay Bills unduly passed by the House. In 1913, two years after Sir Robert Borden obtained a mandate for change from the people following 15 years of Liberal rule, the Liberal-dominated Senate vetoed the naval Bill. In the 1920s, disagreements between Mr. King's Government and the Conservative majority in the Senate were fairly numerous. Between 1921 and 1930, 32 government Bills adopted by the Commons failed to pass the Senate, among them the old age pension Bill of 1926. In 1961, three years after Mr. Diefenbaker received what was then the largest mandate in Canadian history, the Senate, with a large Liberal majority after 22 consecutive years of Liberal rule, refused to proceed on a Bill to remove James Coyne as Governor of the Bank of Canada, a Bill which had been adopted by the House of Commons. In the same year, the two Houses clashed over a change that the Senate majority proposed to a Bill to amend the Customs Act.

This is what emboldens the little group of wilful Liberal Senators up there now to adopt this kind of conduct. This cabal, encouraged by the 1961 precedent, believes that in 1985 it can act in the same manner—a group of appointed persons who have not been authorized by the people of Canada to do anything. In fact, the people of Canada would like to see them disappear; they indicated that last September 4. But these Senators think they are in a legal position to checkmate the House of Commons and the government majority, and these examples from 1961 encourage them. Well, let them try it. That is the purpose of this resolution, and I expect the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will have a change of heart and join us in putting this through today. That is what should be done.

The last time the Senate interfered with or opposed the House of Commons was in 1961, 24 years ago. In all the time since, the Liberal majority in the Senate tamely went along with whatever was proposed by Liberal Governments in this House. Three months after the present Government received the largest mandate ever in Canadian history, the Liberal-dominated Senate sought to frustrate the will of the Commons. Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, was sent to the Senate on December 21, 1984, after being passed by the House of Commons with unanimous support. Unanimous. Unanimity. In other words, all three Parties in this Chamber supported the borrowing authority Bill. It went to the Senate and it had to be passed because of expenditures authorized by the previous Liberal Government. We had to do the borrowing in order to carry out obligations entered into by the Liberal Government, yet the Senate refused to pass the borrowing authority Bill passed unanimously by this House. The majority who refused to do that are members of the caucus of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. They returned from Christmas recess and still postured for 37 calendar days before they passed Bill C-11 on February 27, 1985. That long delay had serious financial implications for the Government of Canada; it created uncertainty in the capital markets. The financiers of the world wondered who was in control of the Government of Canada. Should they listen to the Government when the Government tells them that it wants to borrow money? Or did they have to deal with Senator MacEachen? Senator MacEachen was the Minister of Finance whose record was, of course, terrible in the Budgets of 1981, 1982 and 1983 which he brought up; he did not even bring them down. Is this Senator MacEachen—

Mr. Marchi: What happened in 1979, John?

Mr. Crosbie: —now to be the person with whom the people who lend money have to deal? The people of Canada suffered because of 1979, that is for sure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Tell us about your Budget, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The question is: Do the lenders of the world have to deal with Senator MacEachen and Senator—who are some of the other queer names up there? They have never put themselves on the line, most of them; they have never run for election. Senator Grafstein never ran for anything but orange juice at a political meeting. Senator Kirby, the famous machiavellian of the Constitution. Senator Kenny.

Mr. Rossi: Hnatyshyn.

Mr. Crosbie: Senator Sinclair. When did any of them ever run for elective office? I do not believe one of them has ever run for anything, and if they did they were certainly never elected. This is the Trudeau swat team, or the Turner swat team, and what happened?

Mr. Rossi: You never made it.

Mr. Crosbie: You can shout all you like but you—we were wondering where Mr. Rossi was. There he is. Whenever you hear a loud noise you know where that honourable gentleman is, Mr. Speaker.

I have a letter here from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which says this:

> —the Senate delay in passing Bill C-11 forced the government to postpone several planned borrowing operations because there was insufficient Parliamentary Borrowing Authority outstanding to authorize the raising of new funds. It is estimated that this interruption in the borrowing program cost the government about $15 million due to interest rate increases that occurred before the postponed operations could be rescheduled.

That is the calculable cost, $15 million, of this obstinate Senate's delay in passing a borrowing authority Bill which was necessitated by the previous Liberal Government's actions, and which all Parties in this House agreed should be enacted. The Minister goes on to say:

> There were also indirect costs associated with the Senate delay. Although these costs are difficult to measure, it is clear that any interruption in the government's borrowing program will introduce some confusion and uncertainty into financial markets, if only because the federal government's position in the market forces all other participants to plan around the federal borrowing schedule. On this occasion in particular, however, it should be noted that the delay coincided with a period of considerable downward pressure on the value of the Canadian dollar in foreign exchange markets, and participants were concerned that the government would not be able to borrow international reserves with which to support the dollar.

That is the uncalled for and unjustified risk to which the Senate action exposed the Government of Canada. The letter is dated May 22, 1985, and if anyone wants a copy of it, I have no objection.

That is why this resolution is before the House, Mr. Speaker. It has become evident that we will have to deal with this Liberal cabal, this unelected coterie of wilful Liberals in the Senate, before our term has expired. That kind of obstruction of the Government's legislative program is unacceptable. The question is: Do the people of Canada deal with a Government led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who has a majority of 211 in this House of Commons, or do they have to deal with Senator MacEachen the Liberal Leader in the Senate, and Senator Kirby and Senator Grafstein? None of them are now elected, and most of them never have been elected. Are they the hidden Government of Canada? Or is the Government of Canada the Government which sits on this side and in those two wings of the House of Commons? That is the question this resolution puts before this Chamber and the people of Canada.

If the Liberal majority in the Senate, so early in our term—we have not been here a year yet—was willing to obstruct a measure which had been unanimously adopted by the Commons—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): People think it is a very long time already.

Mr. Crosbie: —how will it react on important policy issues upon which there will be strong differences coming forward in the months ahead? How are they going to act then?

It is going to be a lot longer for you chaps, the rat pack.

Mr. Nunziata: You brought the Government down after nine months. It was your Budget, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. titmice. We can deal with members of the opposition in this House; they are elected and we have to put up with them no matter how vacuous, nonsensical, unethical or lacking in standards they are. However far they sink in the realm of human decency, we have to forgive them; they have been elected. But that does not apply to the Senate because it was never elected.

Some of the measures we want to propose in the months and years ahead will generate controversy in this House. But we have the mandate. We are not prepared to accept a repetition of incidents such as the naval Bill affair or the Coyne affair. We are a new Government with a strong mandate to provide new directions, but we have been frustrated by the Senate. However, we are not prepared to stand by while they do that; if they wish a constitutional crisis, so be it, we will meet the constitutional crisis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We believe that Canadians will support us and the principles which underlie a democratic government. Those principles lead us to change our political institutions when they are found wanting. Recent events have prompted us to resolve that the time has come to bring the Senate up to date. This could be done in a number of ways. Abolition of the current Senate is one possible course. Not one member of the NDP is here in the House to listen or participate. Perhaps there will be somebody—oh, there is one coming now. They are not interested in this constitutional conundrum. This is the Party which is supposed to be so worried about the ordinary people of Canada. The members of the NDP, they are not even around when we are debating the form of government of this country and what should happen to our Constitution. Then they come in and whistle. Let us all stop and listen. The whistling makes more sense than anything that gentleman is going to say later in this debate.

• (1250)

Abolition of the current Senate is one possible course. The Premier of Manitoba has said that that is the course he prefers. I understand it is the course that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) says that he prefers. However, it is not an obtainable course because there are provinces in the country which want the Senate maintained because they believe it helps to protect the regions of the country from domination by central Canada. Therefore, we will not have the abolition of the Senate. As well, the Senate would have to concur in its own demise, so that is not a possible course of action whether we like it or not.

What will the New Democrats do in the face of that? Will they support this resolution or will they oppose it because they prefer to have the Senate abolished? What are their confrères going to do in the Legislature of Ontario? Are they going to help preserve the veto for the appointed Senate, for the Liberal cabal, or are they going to vote in the Ontario Legislature to support this resolution? That will be an interesting question to be decided in the next few months. Will the NDP work with the Liberals in Ontario and here to preserve the unelected Senate?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I thought you had Ontario sewn up for your resolution.

Mr. Crosbie: We believe Ontario to be sewn up, but it remains to be seen.

A second broad option is a major reform of the Senate.

Mr. Murphy: You sure screwed it up.

Mr. Crosbie: You have your chance to govern in Ontario. Let us see what happens when you little turkeys get some responsibility in Ontario. We will see what happens when they have to take responsibility rather than just sitting around criticizing.

The other broad option, which we think is the most promising one, is a major reform of the Senate. We have all heard many suggestions through the years. Some advocate electing the Senate and some advocate appointments by the provincial Governments or sharing appointments between federal and provincial Governments. Various groups in western Canada, particularly in Alberta, favour what they call a "Triple E" Senate. A committee of the Alberta Legislature has just given a well researched report, and the Alberta Legislature has passed a resolution for the adoption of that report. Others have suggested that the legislative powers of the Senate be reduced and that it be assigned some new and more specialized powers. Some have suggested a double majority on linguistic matters or a role in reviewing appointments to major federal boards.

However, there is no consensus at present among the public or Governments on the nature of a broad reform package that would be generally acceptable, nor are we close to one. Many proposals must be examined and debated before they can be reconciled. That will take a long time. In the meantime, the Senate's powers would remain as they are and the possibility of obstruction would continue to haunt the Members of this House.

With all of that in mind, the Government has chosen a course to deal with both the short term and the medium term. We are proposing that the present legislative powers of the Senate be curtailed to bring it into line with the principles of democratic parliamentary government. We are making a commitment that in addition to this limited constitutional measure the future of the Senate be thoroughly addressed after the amendment is enacted. After careful consideration we feel that reducing the powers of the current Senate is the most reasonable way to overcome, at this time, this anomaly in our representative and responsible federal institutions. It has the advantage of ensuring that the will of the elected House will ultimately prevail. It can be brought about in relatively short order.

Our resolution proposes that the power of the Senate over money Bills be reduced to a suspensive veto of 30 days, which is more than adequate time for it to study money Bills and give us its views. Money Bills would be defined in the Constitution. Each such Bill would be so certified by the Speaker of the House of Commons whose opinion could not be challenged in court. The Senate would have a suspensive veto of 45 days over all other Bills.

Both of those periods are longer than the average time taken by the Senate to pass Bills in recent decades. The average time taken is perhaps four or five days. In addition, the Senate has a custom and a right to begin to study Bills as soon as they are introduced in the House of Commons. In addition, a procedure would be instituted whereby any non-money Bill amended by the Senate would be presented for assent to this House, either in an unamended form or in other forms with amendments that might be agreed to by the House.

We value the service which the Senate performs in suggesting amendments to correct errors or deal with potential problems that they may notice which we have not. We all know that proposed legislation does not always leave this House in perfect form. The second look by the Senate can often identify improvements which do not challenge government policy. If they do challenge government policy, government policy must overcome. However, possible improvements which do not challenge government policies are well and good.

Following proclamation of this amendment the Senate would continue to perform its legislative review function and the House would still be notified by message of Senate amendments to Bills. The Government will recommend that amendments made by the Senate be reported to the House and dealt with. The preamble to the resolution specifically commits the Prime Minister to convene, before the end of 1987, a Constitutional Conference of First Ministers to consider proposals for Senate reform. In addition, the Prime Minister has given the Premiers a written commitment that, soon after proclamation of this amendment, a federal-provincial continuing committee of Ministers chaired by the Minister of Justice will be established to begin the preparatory work for the 1987 conference.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will you table that correspondence?

Mr. Crosbie: It is all right here. I am coming to it. I can assure Hon. Members and all Canadians that a full public debate on the future of the Senate will accompany these federal-provincial meetings.

What is the position of the Government on reform of the Senate? At this stage we have an open mind on the shape of a future reformed Senate. Many ideas have been put forward. We will assess the past proposals, as well as others, before determining what options we prefer and the position that we will take in these inter-governmental discussions that will take place if the resolution is adopted by the House and the necessary number of provinces.

What is the process for adopting the amendment? In closing, I would like to point out that I am hoping that this will not be an overly long debate. I would think that Members of the House on all sides would wish to pass this resolution quickly because there is surely no one in the House who believes that an unelected body should be in a position to obstruct completely the elected people who represent this nation. I would be dumbfounded if even the Official Opposition were to take that position. However, perhaps it will bow to numbers—72 to 40. The superior brain power of its Senate representatives will probably carry the day. However, I am hoping for the best. I assume that we will have the co-operation of the NDP. Since it wants the Senate abolished, it will of course help curb its power.

What is the procedure? After a short debate today, the House will be asked to adopt the resolution. By the way, when the former Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, responded last year to the report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, he agreed with the recommendations of the committee. I would like to point this out to the Leader of the Opposition, who usually does what his predecessor wants him to do, particularly in the matter of appointments, Mr. Speaker. The former Prime Minister said that the House of Commons should continue to be the pre-eminent Chamber in Parliament. It cannot be the pre-eminent Chamber in Parliament unless the veto power of the Senate over this Chamber is removed. It should also be kept in mind that we are not considering all aspects of the Senate on this occasion. This is a limited measure and the broader questions will be considered later.

Mr. Nunziata: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe it is getting awfully close to one o'clock. If I received unanimous consent we could carry on.

Mr. Nunziata: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m. this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) had the floor.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will only be a few minutes in finishing my remarks. Although there must be a quorum, only the Leader of the Opposition is on the Liberal benches. The rest of them are gone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe there is a quorum in the Chamber and I hope that Hon. Members will not reflect on the attendance in the Chamber. I see a sufficient number of my colleagues in the House. I hope the Hon. Minister will carry on with debate.

Mr. Rossi: There are only 10 Tory Members.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, normally the Liberal MPs are here and the Leader is not. Today, the Leader is here and none of his MPs are present—I am glad that four have struggled in.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Listening to you is a struggle.

Mr. Crosbie: I saw a movie on TV recently. It was about the last little band of gorillas left on Borneo. I must say that they had a lot in looks over you guys.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I noticed the Minister's knuckles scraping the ground every time he walks down the street.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Senate, I hope we are proven wrong when the NDP spokesman makes his remarks. If a Party wishes to have the Senate abolished totally, surely the logic of at least reducing the power of the Senate becomes overwhelming. I am expecting that before our debate is finished we will hear that the NDP, even if it is reluctantly, will join us both here and in the legislatures of the provinces to see that the powers of the unelected Senate are curbed so that we may move on to debate in the next several years what should happen to the Senate in the ultimate sense.

For members of the NDP to take the position that they do not want a Senate at all and then refuse to help curb the powers of that same unelected body that they object to is so inconsistent and illogical that one does not expect even the NDP to stick to it.

You are no doubt aware that this amendment will require the consent of the legislative assemblies of at least seven provinces having at least 50 per cent of the population. We have consulted with the Premiers about the proposed amendment and I am pleased today to table letters of support from eight of the Premiers.

Premier Lévesque has informed the Government in writing that while the Government of Quebec does not oppose the substance of the resolution, it will not participate in the debate on the amendments until a solution has been found for Quebec's constitutional grievances of 1981.

There are two possibilities. Our Prime Minister, with his well known and well developed negotiating skills will reach an agreement with Mr. Lévesque that will provide a solution for those constitutional grievances, or there may be a change in the Province of Quebec at the next election that will produce a leader in Quebec who will be able to settle with the Government their constitutional grievances. I am still expecting that before the process has ended we will have the support of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.

In any event, Premier Lévesque has written and I will table his letter together with the letters from the other Premiers.

Premier Pawley has also advised us that the Manitoba Government prefers the abolition of the Senate and therefore will not endorse the proposed amendment. Even Premier Pawley, I believe, will see the logic of joining in at least reducing the powers of the Senate, even if the NDP cannot get what it perceives to be perfection, which is the total abolition of the Senate. May I table these letters, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House would have to revert, by unanimous consent, to tabling of documents. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POWERS OF SENATE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie:

That:

Whereas the Prime Minister of Canada is committed to convening before the end of 1987 a constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces to consider proposals for the reform of the Senate;

And whereas it is expedient, at this time, that the powers of the Senate with respect to bills that are passed by the House of Commons be limited;

And whereas sections 38 and 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provide that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

Now therefore the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE
AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following sections:

"54.1 (1) Where a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, is presented to the Senate at least thirty days before the end of the session but is not passed by the Senate without amendment within thirty days after it is presented, the bill shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

(2) There shall be endorsed on every money bill when it is presented to the Senate and when it is presented to the Governor General for assent the certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons signed by the Speaker that it is a money bill.

(3) A certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons given under subsection (2) shall be conclusive for all purposes, and shall not be questioned in any court of law.

(4) In this section and section 54.2, "money bill" means a public bill that, in the opinion of the Speaker of the House of Commons, contains only provisions dealing with the following:

(a) the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation;

(b) the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on the Consolidated Revenue Fund or on money provided by Parliament, or the variation or repeal of such charges;

(c) supply;

(d) the appropriation, receipt, custody or issue of public money;

(e) the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or

(f) subordinate matters related to any of the matters set out in paragraphs (a) to (e).

54.2 (1) Where any bill, other than a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, is presented to the Senate at least forty-five days before the end of the session but is not passed by the Senate within forty-five days after it is presented, the bill shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

(2) Where any bill, other than a money bill, having been passed by the House of Commons and presented to the Senate, is passed with amendments by the Senate, and the House of Commons does not concur in the amendments within fifteen days after the bill is passed by the Senate, the bill, in the form in which it was presented to the Senate but with such amendments made by the Senate as are concurred in by the House of Commons, shall, unless the House of Commons directs to the contrary, be presented to the Governor General for assent, whether or not Parliament is then in session, and when assented to shall have the same force and effect as if passed by the Senate.

54.3 (1) In every bill presented to the Governor General under section 54.1 or 54.2, the words of enactment shall be amended by striking out any reference to the Senate.

(2) Any alteration of a bill to give effect to this section shall be deemed not to be an amendment of the bill.

54.4 Any law made pursuant to section 54.1 or 54.2 shall be deemed, for the purposes of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada, except Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982, to have been made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons.

54.5 For greater certainty, nothing in sections 54.1 to 54.4 shall be construed as amending Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982.

54.6 Nothing in sections 54.1 to 54.4 diminishes or qualifies the rights and privileges of the House of Commons."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and section:

"XII.—REFERENCES

148. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

CITATION

3. This Amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, year of proclamation (Powers of Senate).

He said: Mr. Speaker, let us look at the roll call of honour. The Premier of British Columbia says that his Government will support this resolution. The Province of Alberta, through Premier Lougheed and the Government, has expressed the same position. The Government of Saskatchewan has indicated its support through Premier Devine. The Government of Ontario has indicated its support through Premier Miller.

Mr. Nunziata: Former Premier.

Mr. Crosbie: If Premier Miller does happen to lose the confidence of the House and another Premier is elected, I have every faith that the new Premier of Ontario and the coalition will support the resolution.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Don't be too presumptuous. Don't count on it.

Mr. Crosbie: I have no doubt that the Progressive Conservative Party will. Perhaps it is not likely that the Liberal Party there will not, but the Senate does not control it as it controls the federal caucus here by 72 to 40. Those are big odds, and we feel sorry for the hon. gentlemen opposite, knowing that they are in the hands of 72 elected Senators.

The Province of New Brunswick, through Premier Hatfield, has indicated its support.

An Hon. Member: Who is that?

Mr. Crosbie: Premier Hatfield has zapped you guys for 15 years and I will be very surprised if he does not zap you for another 15 years.

The Premier of Prince Edward Island has indicated that province's support. Premier Peckford of Newfoundland and Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia have indicated their support.

If we pass the resolution, it will go to the Senate. The Senate may or may not pass the resolution, and if it does not pass the resolution within the next six months, it will come back to the House for us to deal with it a second time. Apart from that, there will be a period of one year from the time the House passes the resolution for the necessary number of provinces to act. The constitutional amendment will not become effective for at least one year from the time was pass it unless all 10 provinces concur with it. Since it is unlikely that all 10 provinces will concur with it, it will mean that once it passes this House there will be a period of at least a year during which, if the necessary number of provinces support it, it will become an effective constitutional amendment a year after we have passed it in this Chamber. That is the procedure, and I think there is a very good chance that the necessary support will be forthcoming.

• (1410)

If the majority in the Senate acts again in the same anti-democratic way as it did with respect to the borrowing authority Bill, with as little cause or as little reason to delay or veto legislation sent to it by the majority in this House, I have no doubt that it will aid us in our cause of having the necessary consent of those provinces. I do not believe any responsible Party or Government today would take the position that an appointed Senate, appointed in this particular manner, should be able to thwart what the people of Canada want through the Government they have elected.

I am coming to the end of my remarks. I have mentioned that the Senate has only a suspensive veto here. If it uses its suspensive veto, then it will be back before the House a second time. Perhaps the steps I have outlined could be completed by this autumn, but I doubt that we could have proclamation of this amendment until some time in 1986.

In conclusion, the resolution before the House is necessary, fair and reasonable. The only reason it was not brought in many years earlier was that normally the majority in the Senate was the same as the majority governing in this House, that the Government has had a majority in the Senate. If that had not been the case, I think we would have seen this amendment proposed many, many years ago. If carried, it will remove a major anomaly in our system of democratic Government and will adjust the Senate's powers so that they are more appropriate for a wholly appointed second Chamber. In addition, this will launch the process of full consideration of the future of the Senate. It will allow Canadian people to be involved in determining what role the second Chamber should play or whether or not it should play a role at all.

I urge all Hon. Members to support this resolution, to support the principle of democracy. I cannot see in this day and age any Member of the House who would vote against the idea that it is the people of Canada to whom we are responsible. It is the people elected by the people of Canada in this House to whom the Government is responsible, not to the Senate. The Senate has not been given any authorization whatsoever by the people of Canada. It has no place in our structure except as an anachronism when it comes to finally deciding what should or should not pass into the statutes of the country. It has a power now which is no longer reasonable or explicable in the 20th century. It should be prepared, just as the Parties opposite should be prepared, to help us bring the Senate into line with the democratic realities of the 20th century. Anyone who is not prepared to do that has some explaining to do to the Government and to the people of Canada. How can it be tolerated any longer that a group in the Senate, not even of the same Party as the one which forms the Government in the House, should be able to say yea or nay to the people of Canada and to the Government of Canada? That situation is no longer tolerable.

I invite the Leader of the Opposition and the representative of the New Democratic Party to indicate their acceptance of that principle today, to agree to the longer term process of reform in the Senate and, with their co-operation, to have this resolution voted on this very day and sent to the Senate so that it as well can consider what its position should be.

Some Hon.Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) urge passage of his resolution in a single day, and in listening to him for so long, I wondered whether he was being consistent. I want to assure him, as one who believes in the supremacy of the House of Commons, that we will conduct our debate along those lines. I wondered whether his heart was really in it for a while when he mentioned those three vacancies in the Senate, but I hope he has not said things about our colleagues in the other place which will make it uncongenial for him if he should ever find himself there, for their memories are long. I do not think our colleagues in the other place will tremble when reading the words which the hon. gentleman uttered this morning and this afternoon.

In light of the history of this particular resolution, the Prime Minster (Mr. Mulroney) in his bluffing style challenged me to support an immediate move for the abolition of the Senate. Frankly, I am surprised, since the hon. gentleman commented on my occasional absences from the House, that the Prime Minister is not here himself to deal with this particular situation because it goes right to the fundamental aspects of our Constitution. The Senate, as the Hon. Minister pointed out, represented the territorial impulse in our Confederation. That was the reason the smaller provinces agreed to join with Upper Canada, now Ontario, in our Confederation. This is not an ordinary resolution. It is not a Bill. It goes right to the fundamental constitutional structure of the country. The Prime Minister was the man who raised this in the public consciousness. With the greatest respect to my friend, he should have been the one to bring this before the House of Commons, dealing as it does so fundamentally with the way our country is put together.

This resolution is nothing more or less than an indirect attempt to abolish the Senate of Canada. If that be so, the NDP should have no difficulty in supporting it. However, it is also a resolution which has very serious implications for the constitutional responsibilities of this House, and I will describe why. It also relates to the rights, responsibilities and duties of all its Members. We have read the resolution very carefully, and we believe that this House ought to be apprised of some of its implications, and indeed the country should as well.

Effectively, this resolution is really an attempt to reduce the Parliament of Canada to a one House Parliament, so it restricts any role that the Senate might play. This item is on the Government's agenda at a time when the attention of the Government, and indeed the focus of both Houses of Parliament, should be on the economy, on jobs, on the plight of pensioners and on the problems of young people, particularly those between the ages of 15 and 24, who are trying to find jobs. I interpret the coincidence of the debate of this issue on this Friday as a diversionary tactic, hoping to catch the attention of the newspapers and other media over the weekend and to distract the attention of the people of Canada from the atrocious Budget which the Government brought down a few days ago. It is an atrocious Budget which is unfair in that it taxes the average Canadian family about $500 and allows the wealthy investor to receive a lifetime cash bonus of $125,000. It is sneaky because it taxes by way of deindexing our tax system and it contains hidden, secret tax increases of 3 per cent per year, per year, per year, hitting our old age pensioners. It is a Budget which does not provide for jobs or growth. On the basis of the best advice we can receive, it will cost between 100,000 and 125,000 jobs in the next two years. It is a diversionary tactic and a desperate attempt by the House Leader and the Prime Minister, using the Minister of Justice as a decoy, to distract—

An Hon. Member: A decoy?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is a sitting duck, I will put it that way.

An Hon. Member: He is a big decoy.

Mr. Crosbie: Come and get me.

Mr. Nunziata: Come outside, John.

● (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We might have the rat pack on this side; you have the quack, quack over there.

This is a diversionary tactic, a desperate attempt by the Government to distract the airwaves and the news over the weekend. The Government, with its overwhelming majority in this Chamber, is more concerned with settling old scores, reigniting old feuds and avenging old vendettas, particularly in the Atlantic Provinces, if one listened to the Minister this morning.

I wish to say at the outset that the Liberal Party has always been, remains and will remain in favour of Senate reform. At the 1982 policy convention of the Party I have the honour to lead, a resolution was passed calling on the Government of the day to examine the possibility of an elected Senate and of increasing the role of regional representation therein. That is the position we are taking with respect to this resolution.

In order to obtain speedy provincial agreement, it is stated in the preamble to the resolution before us that the Government is holding out the promise of a full constitutional conference on the Senate by 1987. Although outside the House, the Prime Minister said that 1987 might not be the date, and that it might be 1988 or 1989, one wonders how firm his commitment is. In the resolution itself there are no real proposals for reform, either with respect to the method of appointment, the term of office, the role or the regional balance of Senators. There have been no pronouncements by the Government with respect to where it stands in regard to Senate reform so as to give the provinces and the country an indication of where the Government intends to take us. There is no White Paper, no discussion paper, no Grey Paper. There is no basis upon which this debate can be conducted.

Until this morning, the Minister of Justice made no speeches with respect to the subject. Certainly, the Prime Minister has not clarified his ideas to the country. There have been no speeches stating what the reform might be or in which way the Government may be contemplating it. This resolution gives us no guidelines as to what further reforms are contemplated.

As the Minister has indicated, the resolution borrows some of the language of the Parliament Act of the United Kingdom which was passed in Westminster in the year 1911. That Act applies the same 30-day limit on the House of Lords' consideration of money Bills as the Minister would like to put on the consideration of money Bills by the Senate. For the enlightenment of the provincial Premiers, who seem acquiescent with respect to the resolution in exchange for a full conference on constitutional reform of the Senate later, for as yet unspecified reforms, the Government has not revealed its hand. Certainly, the Minister did not address the subject this morning. I wish to point out that the Parliament Act of 1911 of the United Kingdom has an interesting sentence in its preamble which states:

> And whereas it is intended to substitute for the House of Lords as it at present exists a second Chamber constituted on a popular instead of hereditary basis, but such substitution cannot be immediately brought into operation.

It was on the basis of that preamble that the Government of the day was able to convince the House of Lords and, indeed, Parliament, to pass the Act. That was some 74 years ago. The preamble states that it was the Government's intention to bring in a popularly-elected second Chamber. As we all know, the Lords of the United Kingdom are still created by Her Majesty on the advice of her Government.

Thus, I say to our provincial Premiers: "Don't be duped, fooled, cajoled and inveigled into this type of resolution on the basis of a future constitutional conference in 1987. The people of Great Britain have been waiting for 74 years". I have even less confidence in our Government than I would in the Government of the United Kingdom in 1911.

As a reminder to the House and to you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that Ministers call you a constitutional expert. I am happy to second that particular compliment. Constitutional change is slow and difficult, as it should be. It will only come about if there is a concerted effort and a political will to bring about change among all participants—in this case, the federal and provincial Governments.

The constitutional amendment before us, like the Parliament Act of 1911, would limit Senate consideration of a money Bill to 30 days. Frankly, we do not see any objection to that. However, the authority to decide what constitutes a money Bill will lie on your shoulders, Mr. Speaker. You will be asked as Speaker of the House to sign a certificate indicating that a particular piece of legislation is, in fact, a money Bill. Your decision—and the Minister confirms this—will be conclusive and beyond challenge, either here, in the other place or before the courts. Your fiat will be clear anywhere and anytime with respect to the definition of a money Bill.

I do not question your wisdom, Sir, in any way. However, it is too much of an imposition to put upon a Speaker. In the United Kingdom, a money Bill must be absolutely pure. That is to say, no other matter can be tacked on to that Bill. We know from our close relationship with the United States that money Bills in the House of Representatives and the Senate in that country have all sorts of amendments tacked on to them. That practice is growing under our parliamentary system. However, in the United Kingdom, under the Parliament Act of 1911, no other matter can be tacked on. No related non-money provisions, such as changes to the machinery of collection, and so on, can be tacked on. I venture to say that your decision, Mr. Speaker, can be enormously difficult if it is left to you and you alone. The British legislation anticipated just that. It provides that the Speaker shall consult with:

> —two Members to be appointed from the Chairman's Council at the beginning of each session by the Committee of Selection—

—before deciding if a particular piece of legislation is a money Bill or not. In other words, the Parliament of the United Kingdom buttresses the decision of your colleague, Mr. Speaker, the Speaker of Westminster, with the supplementary advice that he has to consult and form a committee to decide on what is a money Bill and what is not.

The resolution before us does not contain that important provision. Unlike the British Bill, the amendment being sought by the Government would also impose a 45-day limit on all other Bills, Bills which are not money Bills. In other words, if it is a money Bill, the Senate can have it for only 30 days. Then, it is automatically sent for Royal Assent. If it is a Bill which proposes to do something else, then the Senate can have it for only 45 days, after which time it is given Royal Assent. It may be very difficult to decide whether or not a Bill is a money Bill. Under the British legislation, the House of Lords can delay almost all non-money Bills for slightly over one year. I wish to recite for the House how that provision works.

If a Bill other than a money Bill, or a Bill to extend the duration of a Parliament, which has been passed by the House of Commons twice in successive sessions and sent up to the Lords at least one month before the end of the session, is not passed by the Lords without amendment, then that Bill may be presented for Royal Assent. However, one year must have elapsed between the second reading of the Bill in the first of the two sessions and the third reading of the Bill in the second session. In other words, the delay for the review of that Bill by public opinion and by both Houses is just over a year.

The resolution before us limits that process of Senate consideration of any money Bill to only 45 days—not a year, not 180 days. That is, quite simply, the abolition of the Senate as we know it. It is the abolition of any constructive role that the Senate might have in amending or improving legislation.

Throughout its history the Senate has provided very valuable amendments to certain pieces of legislation. Over the years it has helped us improve hundreds of Bills with amendments. In 1975, for example, it proposed 139 amendments to the bankruptcy Bill. Those amendments were so all embracing and conclusive that the Government of the day withdrew the Bill and reintroduced it reflecting those amendments. In 1977, the Senate proposed some 80 amendments to the Maritime Code Bill, a new code of maritime law in this country. In 1983, a Senate committee rewrote a large part of the Canadian security intelligence Bill.

There is nothing extraordinary about the Senate's proposing amendments to Bills that have been passed by this House. Sir John A. Macdonald wanted a House of sober second thought, a difficult metaphor for him to have proposed, but in any event he wanted the Senate to have the opportunity to review legislation.

In addition, and the Minister recognizes this, Senators have provided very valuable committee work on the matters of aging, science and technology, poverty, pensions, the Income Tax Act, agriculture and so on. If this constitutional amendment is agreed to by the House, there will be no time for the Senate to fulfil its role adequately or to fulfil its constitutional duty as a House of sober second thought. It will be converted to a reading club.

Just as important is the provision in the resolution that if an amendment is made by the Senate and the amended Bill is returned to this House, this House will be given only 15 days to consider and agree to amendments before the Bill automatically goes to Royal Assent in the form in which it was first passed by the House. The clock starts ticking as soon as the amended Bill returns from the Senate. It starts ticking as soon as the message is received by Your Honour.

There would be no requirement for the Government to move concurrence. Therefore, if the Senate were to propose an amendment, we would be at the mercy of the House Leader, who could conceivably put it on the Order Paper and thus, with the stroke of a pen, simply ignore the views of Members of the other place and, most important, Members of this House who might want to speak on an amendment. The opportunity to comment on amendments proposed by the Senate would be lost. It would become constitutional closure of the House of Commons.

As well, the resolution states that this 15-day limit on any further debate or discussion applies, in the words of the resolution, whether or not Parliament is then in session. In other words, Members of the House of Commons will not have to be here to pass legislation. We could do it by default if the Senate amended a Bill and we did not have the opportunity to review Senate amendments. We would reject them automatically if we were not sitting or we would reject them automatically if the House Leader did not give us the opportunity to consider them.

Why have a Senate at all? That was my view at one time when I wrote a thesis on the subject. Then I found that it was constitutionally impossible to abolish the Senate because the provinces are intimately involved. That is why the bluff of the Prime Minister was so empty.

As long as we have a Senate, what Senator will spend any amount of time considering amendments that will improve legislation? Why would he or she even bother reading such legislation if there is so little chance that his or her amendment will ever see the light of day and that any changes will be acted upon by the House of Commons? What government Minister would bother going before the Senate any longer when all he or she would have to do is to allow the time to run out? Why should any Minister go before the Senate to defend and explain his or her legislation?

Mr. Crosbie: Because of our respect for them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I doubt that, and so does the Minister. I know that the Minister has a very sensitive feeling for the Senate, particularly for those three vacancies.

Mr. Crosbie: There is one from Newfoundland.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why would he bother appearing before the Senate? He and his colleagues would just have to wait 45 days and the Bill would become law.

The amendment contained in the resolution would have another immediate consequence for the operation of Parliament. If the principle that what can be done will be done becomes the practice, constitutionally giving the Senate a 30-day suspensive veto on money Bills and a 45-day suspensive veto on non-money Bills, then the Senate would have the unchallengeable constitutional right to impose that delay on all legislation. I am not so sure that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice have really thought that matter through.

It should be noted that Bill C-11, the Appropriation Act which apparently prompted this ill-conceived resolution, was under consideration in the Senate for only 37 days. It was under consideration from January 22 to February 27, one week longer than the suspensive veto period. Now envisaged in the resolution and a considerably shorter period of time than the suspensive veto period of 45 days for non-money Bills.

In its haste to attack and emasculate the Senate, the Government is now saying that the Senate should have a suspensive veto of 30 days. It is saying that the reason that that is so necessary, the reason we must change the Constitution, the reason we must get all the Premiers to agree, the reason we must put aside the question of jobs, pensioners, the Budget and economic matters, the reason we must open with such urgency the question of Senate reform so inadequately dealt with in this resolution, is that the Senate held up Bill C-11 not for 365 days, not for 180 days, not even for 45 days but for 37 days. That is precisely seven days longer than the period of delay which is now to be constitutionally enshrined in the suspensive veto for money Bills. In other words, we are going to embark on a whole process of constitutional change because the Government was delayed for seven days in getting its way on a Bill. I think that is pathetic.

By reducing the Senate powers on all Bills to a suspensive veto, a Government will be able to extend its own life indefinitely in certain circumstances. Under the War Measures Act, 1914, a proclamation by the Governor in Council—

Mr. Crosbie: What twisted nonsense is this?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister has not even thought these questions through in his obscene haste to get on the record books, to do the bidding of the Prime Minister and to seek revenge on certain of his Atlantic colleagues.

Mr. Crosbie: Whose legal advice are you taking, Nunziata's? Is he your constitutional expert?

Mr. Nunziata: I'm a little brighter than your sons.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All right, now.

Mr. Nunziata: I passed law school, John, and you know it, the first time around.

Mr. Crosbie: I'm surprised that you creeped out of anywhere.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are still blinking your eyes in the light as well.

In any event, I wanted to draw this to the attention of the Minister because I do not think that he thought it through. Under the War Measures Act of 1914, a proclamation by the Governor in Council is conclusive evidence that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists, and has existed for any period stated therein. Under the Constitution Act, 1982, Section IV, a House of Commons may be continued beyond five years by an Act of Parliament if no more than one-third of the Members vote against the Bill. If the Senate is reduced to a suspensive veto, then a Government with the support of more than 189 Members, two-thirds of 282, could pass such an Act and have to wait only 45 days through the suspensive veto power of the Senate before the law perpetuating itself automatically comes into force.

As well, it has been established by the Supreme Court of Canada that the emergency powers interpretation of the peace, order and good government clause found in Section 91 of the Constitution Act allows that in times of emergency, Parliament may make laws relating to matters ordinarily under provincial jurisdiction. With only a 45-day veto, the Senate would be powerless to prevent a Government determined to invade a provincial area of responsibility. That, by the way, is one of the reasons we have a Senate. It was the territorial impulse at the time of Confederation to protect the weaker provinces from the stronger ones so that they would not be overwhelmed by votes in the House of Commons.

I sincerely hope, therefore, that provincial Premiers, when considering support for this resolution in return for a conference on real reform in the future, will take into consideration the very real threat to their own powers contemplated by the indirect abolition of the Senate. Where is that provincial support? I believe that the Minister does not have that support. I believe that without that support, this is a resolution that goes nowhere. Without that support, this is a debate in a vacuum and a waste of the time of the House.

I have read the letters which the Minister just tabled. A member of the Press Gallery gave them to me because I did not have them at the time the Minister made his speech. I have read with particular care the letters from the Premiers of western Canada who are very concerned about the regional aspects of the Senate but who take the Prime Minister's word that there will be a constitutional conference. I know the views of the Premier of British Columbia. I knew the views of the Premier's father when he was Premier. They want a stronger numerical representation in the Senate for British Columbia. I am aware of the resolution made in the Legislature of the Province of Alberta for an elected Senate. I know that Manitoba wants no Senate at all. Then we get to Frank Miller, the erstwhile Premier of Ontario. A letter was sent from Premier Miller to the Prime Minister on April 19, which was tabled in the House. It read:

● (1440)

—I wish to indicate to you that the Government of Ontario is prepared to provide its concurrence.

For this purpose, we will introduce a resolution in the legislature of Ontario at an appropriate time.

Well, it is no longer Miller time in Ontario. I think the appropriate time has come and gone. I do not know what commitment the Minister has from Mr. Peterson or from Mr. Rae—

Mr. Crosbie: They have to get there first.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is so. Mr. Miller, after he found himself in the minority situation, was asked questions by the fourth estate—the Minister calls them the third House, but I still believe they are better known as the fourth estate. Mr. Miller said that in view of the new situation in Ontario, it was not on the top of his priority list. I bet it is not on the top of his priority list. He is getting hangnails trying to hold on to power. He has other things on his mind. Furthest from his mind, at the moment, is the resolution which is before the House.

Mr. Crosbie: He outlasted you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is so. But I just outlasted Charlie Tupper. What does it prove? What it proves is that the Minister needs seven out of the ten provinces—

Mr. Crosbie: We have got them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —with 51 per cent of the Canadian population. Quebec will not participate because it is not part of the—

Mr. Crosbie: It will before we are there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —constitutional fabric. Frank Miller said that he would do it at an appropriate time. He will not be there. Manitoba is not in it, and I have a feeling that some of the other Premiers, when they have read what I have to say about what the Senate means to the constitutional fabric of the country, may have second thoughts. In any event, with Quebec and Ontario not there, he does not have the support. I do not want to trespass on the traditions of the House, but what he is really doing is wasting the time of the House with the resolution.

[Translation]

Our position on Quebec is also very straightforward. We feel it is unacceptable that the Government of Canada should try to impose changes that would alter the constitutional structure of Canada, before Quebec has signed the constitutional accord. We object to the Government proceeding in this way. Since the Government of Quebec is not in a position to discuss or join in the process because Quebec is not part of our Constitution according to the Constitution Act, 1982.

We therefore consider this proposal by the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister to be an insult to the people of Quebec. The Government is saying to Quebecers that their position on the matter is irrelevant and that it does not want to hear the views of the men and women of Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think this should be a matter of considerable concern to Quebec Members like those protesting in front of us. I ask Hon. Members, why is the Government proceeding without the participation of Quebec? It is an insult to the men and women of Quebec! In our view, if we really want to reform the Senate and if the Government decides to make this a priority, it should first call a full federal-provincial conference, as of now, immediately, this year, in 1985, and not in 1987, 1988 or 1989, but now, to ensure, first of all, that Quebec is part of our Constitution before amending any part thereof. But, as Hon. Members are aware—

An Hon. Member: Go back to sleep!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, our colleagues are getting a little excited. I can easily understand why.

My Liberal colleagues and myself will demand an elected Senate. We are going to demand additional representation for the regions, the Atlantic Provinces and Western Canada. This country came into being as a result of two factors: first of all, the parliamentary system, since proportional representation at the time gave a special advantage to Upper Canada or Ontario; the second was the federal and territorial aspect. The debate that led to Confederation shows clearly that if there had not been some kind of Upper Chamber, a second Chamber like the Senate, to protect territorial interests within the Federation, neither Lower Canada, now Quebec, nor Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island would have become part of our country, because these provinces were unwilling to be submerged in the House of Commons by the flood of Members from Upper Canada. I would like to quote George Brown—he is not often quoted in French—who was not much in honour, but the French translation of his words on the subject of Ontario was as follows, and I am quoting from the Debates on Confederation, page 88:

> The very essence of our agreement is that we shall have a federal and not a legislative union. Our friends in Lower Canada have agreed to proportional representation in the Lower Chamber, provided seats in the Upper Chamber are apportioned equally. We would have been unable to make any progress without that condition. I for one am fully prepared to agree to the principle of equal numbers.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear from this excerpt from the Debates preceding Confederation that the purpose of the Senate was to equalize territorial or federal representation and thus balance densely populated Ontario. The Senate made it possible to provide for balanced representation of the territories that agreed to join our Federation, and this requirement could be met thanks to a more or less equal division of seats among the four regions, namely, Western Canada, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. Six additional seats were subsequently attributed to Newfoundland.

We must consider this principle which forms the basis for our Confederation. We must also consider the role played by the Senate in protecting minorities, and especially French Canadians, because this aspect was also a major point in the minds of the Fathers of Confederation, and is mentioned several times in the Debates.

The resolution before the House today would deprive the Senate of any significant legislative role and reduce Parliament to a single Chamber. If the resolution is passed, the Senate's ability to defend the smaller provinces and minority rights will be seriously diminished if not eliminated altogether.

[English]

The proposition which we will put before the House—and we will make the appropriate amendent—is that we believe an elected Senate, as recommended in the report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, which was released in January of 1984, would be a positive move in restoring the credibility of the Upper Chamber and in reinforcing our style of federalism. It is true that the current system of appointment, which is the sole preserve of the Prime Minister of the day, has increasingly been called into question. No matter how judicious, reasonable and fair the appointments may be, and no matter how qualified the individual may be, there is the perception that the Senate exists only for the appointment of the Prime Minister's friends of the day. That is the weakness with that method of appointment.

Other speakers on this side will have something to say about improving the method of appointment. Should the method be shared with the provinces? Should there be a term instead of the Senator being appointed until he reaches the maximum age of 75? Should there be a rebalancing of regional interests? My Province of British Columbia wants more seats in the Senate. I am sure the other provinces do as well. But that would be part of the reason that Premier Bennett would agree to and want a constitutional conference.

While I have a great deal of respect for Members of the Senate, I do believe they would agree with me—and they do—that the credibility of that institution would be greatly enhanced if they were elected Members. As the report of the special committee says, Your Honour, and I quote in the language of the report:

> Only a politically strong second chamber can dispute, when necessary, the decisions taken by a Government that is supported by the House of Commons. Therefore only an elected Senate can satisfy the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation: The provision of a chamber that would balance judiciously the power of the Commons (which is based on representation by population) by safeguarding the legitimate interests of the people of the less populous provinces.

So what we are saying to you, Your Honour, and to the country, is that if Senate reform—and we do not believe this measure really touches it—is on the agenda of the Government, despite the economic and budgetary problems we should be discussing at this stage, then let us really reform the Senate. Let us reform it or abolish it. We would begin with an immediate constitutional conference on an elected Senate.

Failing that, we would want to look at the term of appointment, the style of appointment, the source of appointment, and we would want to look at a balancing of the roles of the two Houses. This measure does not approach reform. It is a sham. It is a little petty, political revenge for the Prime Minister and the Government against the members of another political Party.

Mr. Nunziata: Shame on you!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Allan MacEachen will be proud of you.

Mr. Crosbie: You will be all right in caucus next week. You have saved yourself—72 to 40. We know who has the power now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to tell you, Your Honour, that the Members of the Senate in our caucus agree with an elected Senate, and if this matter ever gets out of this House, they will put an amendment and vote for an elected Senate in the Upper Chamber.

Mr. Crosbie: Sure they will.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, they will. Count on it. I have a feeling that the House will eventually come to the conclusion to which I have come, that this is a wasted exercise, the provincial consent not being there.

Mr. Crosbie: Then why spend so much time on it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have not even approached the time taken by the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: You have been 40 minutes.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Well, you were an hour.

Mr. Crosbie: I was an hour in sensible discussion.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Minister was giving us a very inadequate Government of Canada 100 just like a first-year freshman at Memorial University. It was about that style and standard.

Mr. Crosbie: I was filling in the background for Nunziata.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You gave us a lot of background.

We believe that the Senate could better represent the outlying regions of this country, including Newfoundland, through increased representation from these regions. The exact form of increased representation should be the focus of the constitutional conference. The special committee recommended doubling the representation in each of the western provinces and Newfoundland, and substantially increasing the number of seats in Atlantic Canada and the Territories, while leaving the same number for Quebec and Ontario. We believe that this is a good starting point for discussion.

There is no mention in the resolution by the Government on ways to improve the way the Senate works. What is really critical is that this resolution is totally incompatible with a reformed Senate which could represent the regions of our country more effectively. Therefore, we cannot, nor will we, agree to strip the Senate of power now with the vague promise of real constitutional reform later. We will participate in a resolution which calls for an elected Senate. We may participate in an amended resolution which deals with the method of appointment or the term of appointment. But what does the Government have in mind for the Senate? We do not know. We did not learn from the Minister, and the resolution does not tell us. What has the Government promised the provincial Premiers which does not appear in the correspondence which was tabled this afternoon? We do not know and the Government will not tell us.

Mr. Prud'homme: Wheeling and dealing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We can accept the principle of establishing reasonable limits on the time the Senate can spend on government Bills. We can accept the 30-day time limit on money Bills. But we would suggest a time limit of at least 180 days, the constitutional time limit which is now in the Constitution Act, 1982, in order to give the Senate, on non-money Bills, the opportunity to consider the legislation adequately and provide us with its views. We can accept that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We also accept the principle that in situations where there is a conflict between the two Houses, the will of the elected Chamber, the House of Commons, prevails.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, that is a step forward for the Liberal Party.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): None of the paltry rhetoric of the Minister and none of the irrelevant interjections of the House Leader will sway me from the position I have always held. We have never called into question the primacy of the House of Commons. What we are saying to the House is: abolish the Senate or reform it, and reform it in a meaningful way, and we believe in an elected Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: You guys are gutless.

Mr. Prud'homme: Crosbie is speechless.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We accept the principle that when the two Chambers are in conflict, the will of the House of Commons prevails.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They only have 180 days.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The reality is that that situation of conflict will arise infrequently. It has only arisen a few times in the history of Parliament, and the nation has not been rent asunder. So why are we now in such a rush? That we accept the supremacy of this place, the House of Commons, has never been in doubt. I have said that several times in this House and outside the House since I have had the honour to return to the House of Commons.

Mr. Crosbie: Act on it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We also believe, as at Westminster, that amendments proposed in the second Chamber should be given adequate consideration by this House when those amendments are sent back, that artificial and arbitrary limits should not be imposed on this House's consideration of legislation. We also believe that in those rare cases that the Senate rejects a Bill passed by the House of Commons, the opinion of the House of Commons should be sought again before that Bill is again submitted. There should not be automatic Royal Assent.

What I do not like particularly about this resolution is that the way it is drafted allows the House of Commons to legislate by default, either at the fiat of the House Leader when the House is not sitting by the passage of 15 days. Not only is the Senate being affected by this very inadequate resolution but the rights of Hon. Members of this House are also being truncated. The Government is attempting to make a fundamental change to the way this country is governed. This motion requires us to think and vote not as ordinary legislators but as reformers of the Constitution, which is again why I believe the Prime Minister should have had the carriage of this resolution before the House.

We are not playing a game here. We are not playing a political game. We are rewriting the fundamental rules of the game in this country. We take this initiative very seriously, indeed.

I listened to the Minister carefully this morning. The reason, he said, the Government is presenting this legislation is that, "We can't allow legislation to be held up by the old Liberal clique in the Senate".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The House Leader endorses that particular sentiment.

This motion expresses the Prime Minister's anger and his Irish frustration. With three-quarters of this House of Commons now under his control, he resents the independence of another Chamber.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Unelected.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He even resents the independence of Ministers. He has put political commissars and chiefs of staff in every ministerial office to try to convert the style of our Government into a presidential system. He wants to remove every obstacle to his power, and one of the obstacles he wants to get out of the way is the Senate of Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: Where were you when Trudeau was in?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is a massive power grab, Mr. Speaker, under a very simplistic constitutional resolution.

I would like to analyse for the House what the Senate really did to incur the Prime Minister's wrath.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): What does it do?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Well, that's a good question. I am not counted among the great admirers of the other place, and I have known the Hon. Member for a good long time. But what did the Senate do to incur the Minister's wrath and the Prime Minister's wish for revenge? What did the Senate do that was so heinous? What was so damaging to the fabric of our country that we must now amend the Constitution?

Mr. Crosbie: It endangered our credit rating and everything else.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, and I see you sitting transfixed by what I have to say—

Mr. Nunziata: Send him to the Senate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, as I said to Finlay MacDonald on his appointment, that I am the only one standing between you and abolition. So listen to me carefully.

Quite simply, this is what happened: the Senators upheld a constitutional principle, a principle which I believe all of us in this House share, namely, the principle which was offended by the appropriation Bill, that Parliament gives new authority—listen to me carefully—to a Government to raise money only after the Government has provided a full explanation of the purposes for which the money will be used, only after it has tabled the Estimates for a particular year or brought in a Budget.

Mr. Crosbie: You are really an apologist.

• (1500)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister does not like to hear a constitutional argument. Not that it bores him, he just cannot understand it.

Mr. Crosbie: I can understand the fix you are in with Allan MacEachen on the hotline.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will tell you what I will do. I will give this undertaking to the Minister, that later I will buy him a drink and get down to the type of conversation he really enjoys, indeed relishes.

Mr. Crosbie: You are good in the locker-room; they tell me you are a bit of a jock.

Mr. Rossi: Go back to sleep, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Unlike the Hon. Minister, I haven't got a thing to hide.

Mr. Crosbie: That is what they have all told me about you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let us look at what the Bill in question did, the Bill which prompted this whole phony resolution. It contained two parts. I am taking my time here, Mr. Speaker, because there has been a lot of hullabaloo about nothing. The media were seduced and inveigled into immediate reporting of what they thought the facts were, but let's go through the facts.

The Bill contained two parts. One part provided a borrowing authority for $7.3 billion for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1985. Part II was to provide authority to borrow $12 billion to be used in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986, for which we had not been provided spending plans; the Estimates had not been produced. The Leader of the Government in the Senate, the former Premier of Manitoba, Duff Roblin, admitted as much when he said on February 21 in the other place, and I am reading from the Senate Hansard, that:

> Parliament should not be asked to approve borrowing authority in the absence of published evidence that the authority is needed.

That is Senator Roblin, Government Leader in the Senate, speaking in the Senate on this particular Bill. He was not alone in that belief. On a similar piece of legislation, the former Prime Minister, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), when in opposition said, and I am reading from Hansard of July 19, 1982:

> —this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than that amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle—

The next day the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) added his agreement, and I cite the debates of this House of July 20, 1982:

> There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year.

That is the same principle that the Senate upheld in this Bill. Not to be outdone, the current Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), when he was in this seat as Leader of the Opposition during the Progressive Conservative leadership race, had the following to say about a request very similar to Bill C-11 from the then Minister of Finance, Marc Lalonde. On February 22, 1983 he said this:

> It is a parliamentary first, sir, when you have a Minister who comes before Parliament and asks for authority to go to the public for $14 billion without the supporting and buttressing evidence of a budget.

The principle is clear: without a Budget or the Estimates, you do not get the money. That has been fundamental to Parliament ever since the early days of Westminster.

Mr. Crosbie: How come you didn't observe it when you were in power?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, I am going to get to it right here. The Conservative Party always took that position. When the Government was in opposition, when these ladies and gentlemen were on the opposition side of the House, they took the position that authority should not be granted until Parliament has received not only the Main Estimates, but a Budget as well. The current Minister of Finance, when in opposition, said about not doing this, and I use his words of February 22, 1983, as recorded in Hansard:

> The utter contempt that this Government is showing Parliament and Canadians is unprecedented.

What happened to this principle for which the Government when in opposition spoke so eloquently and forcefully in support of? Power corrupts, and I have never seen power corrupt so absolutely or so quickly as when it affects this particular Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That principle, for which the Minister of Finance and the Deputy Prime Minister fought in opposition—

Mr. Crosbie: The new Lord Acton! No wonder you want to retain the House of Lords.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not blame the Minister for not being attentive; he is having trouble following this argument. In any event, what happened? At the first opportunity they rejected that principle. They presented Bill C-11, the borrowing Bill, and this whole tempest in a teapot arose out of that Bill. Some $12 billion in additional spending for the next year—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And $15 million is a tempest in a teapot to you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —with no estimates. That is why on November 28 in this House my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston)—

Mr. Rossi: Where are you going, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —moved the following—I seem to have—

Mr. Rossi: This is too much for you. Listen and learn, stick around.

Mr. Crosbie: Can I be excused?

Mr. Rossi: Stick around.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We do have to leave the room once in a while. Order, please. The right hon. gentleman has the floor.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That might be the only place where the Hon. Minister really knows what he is doing, Mr. Speaker, so I will not object.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As I was saying, that is why my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount put the following amendment to that Bill:

—"this House will not proceed with a Bill to provide borrowing authority for a fiscal year for which the Government has not provided complete details of spending requirements or revenue projections".

That was November 28, 1984. It has been said by the media and the Government that we did not take the same position in the House as our colleagues took in the Senate. That is absolutely untrue. We took the same position in the House that was later taken in the Senate, and the same position taken by the Conservatives when they were in opposition. It is a principle which I accept fully. The NDP also proposed a motion opposing Bill C-11 and used identical wording to that presented by the now Secretary of State for External Affairs in July of 1982. Realizing that the Government with its huge majority intended to proceed anyway, and wanting a debate on universality before the House rose at Christmas, the NDP and the Official Opposition, in order to get that debate, agreed, after putting our objections to the Bill, to allow it to go through.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, fiction prevails.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We agreed in order to get the debate on universality. There was no mention of the Senate in that agreement. Obviously an order of this House cannot bind the Senate just as an order of the Senate would not bind this House. There is also a long standing principle, one which the Government has chosen to ignore in its condemnation of the Senate's response to the borrowing Bill.

Let us examine what happened when the Bill arrived in the Senate on January 22. It could not get there any earlier because the Government Leader had adjourned the Senate until January 22. That was not our responsibility on the Liberal side of the Senate. That responsibility lay with the Government House Leader. The Bill was then referred immediately to the Standing Committee on National Finance.

The Senators had no problem with the first part of the Bill relating to the current fiscal year, but it objected, as we had here, to having $12 billion tacked on for spending for which there was no Budget and no Estimates. The Senate asked that the Bill be split since the Government did not need the second part until April 1, 1985. They would pass the first part and then pass the second when the Estimates were provided. This was a constitutional position buttressed by precedent and citations, and in no way unreasonable and out of the ordinary. In other words, the Senators said stick to the principle that borrowing authority not be given until the Estimates are provided. Conservatives have always taken that position, we took that position and the NDP took that position, but suddenly there was an eruption; righteous indignation poured forth from the Government, reinforced by the media, the likes of which we have not seen in many years. The Senate was hijacking Parliament.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Liberals in the Senate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They were thwarting the will of the people. They were being high-handed and destructive to democracy in upholding the same principle this House of Commons has upheld for the last 50 to 100 years. The Government seized the opportunity to denounce what the Prime Minister called the old Liberal clique, a clique of Senators who were somehow purposely subverting the will of the people. The press picked it up, there were great stories and headlines like "Old Gang of Liberal Senators Thumb Nose at Tory Majority".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let us look at the old gang for a minute. I want to talk about this old gang. In spite of all the rhetoric and hysteria from the Government on the issue, what were the facts? Who were in the old Liberal cliques which so frightened, angered, and enraged the Prime Minister by demanding that this principle of long standing of no money before the Estimates or Budget be adhered to? The report on the Bill from the standing Senate committee said:

● (1510)

The Committee recommends that the Senate remain reluctant to approve any request for borrowing authority if such a request is not supported by a Budget or by Main Estimates for the period for which the borrowing authority is being requested.

That is nothing unusual. It is fully in accordance with principle. That resolution passed the committee without a single negative vote. Who were among that old Liberal clique? There was Senator Kelly, co-chairman of the committee, past chairman of the Progressive Conservaitve Ontario fund and close buddy of William Grenville Davis. There was Senator Doody, Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, and a former Minister of Finance of the Newfoundland Government of Conservative Premier Frank Moores who was appointed to the Senate by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he was Prime Minister. There was one of our newest Senators, the still pure and uncorrupted Finlay MacDonald. He was a member of that committee and endorsed that unanimous report.

That was the old Liberal clique. They agreed to the report of the committee which states very clearly that by not splitting Bill C-11, the Government was violating a long-standing principle. Conservative Senators wanted to uphold that principle too, as I am sure everyone in the House wants to. That was a unanimous report. It was not a Liberal clique. Every Conservative Member agreed to it and voted for it. Let us not hear any more talk about Liberal cliques in the Senate trying to subvert the House. It was not true then and is not true now.

Then we had the great bravado of the Prime Minister in the House. On March 5 he challenged me, saying, "If you agree to abolish it, let's do it today". What consitutional nonsense. He does not need my approval to begin with. He has a majority here. However, he certainly needs provincial approval and he knew that nothing I would say could elicit that approval. He was more interested in scoring political points when he should have been carrying this resolution in the House. He provided a few hearty laughs and a few flips of the fins of the trained seals on the Conservative benches. That was the only purpose of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We thought he was joking, but this resolution shows that he was not. He fully intends to abolish the Senate indirectly, through the back door, by making it nothing more than a reading club. His only concern is that it be converted from a Liberal reading club to a Tory reading club. Then he had the audacity to hold out the promise of Senate reform to the Premiers in exchange for this little amendment now. I will be very interested to hear what the Premiers think they are going to get in return.

There has been a new style of Senate appointment introduced recently, Mr. Speaker. The provincial Member for Madawaska-Victoria announced the appointment of Jean Maurice Simard, the Minister of Public Service Reform in the Government of Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick. The Prime Minister's office had to issue a confirming statement that Mr. Simard will be appointed "at a later date". That is a new style of appointment to the Senate. It is on the instalment plan. Mr. Simard wanted that appointment because he does not know what will happen to Premier Hatfield. However, the time is not right because things are a little dicey in the legislature. When I was being introduced to the legislature of New Brunswick on Tuesday, the Premier was not present. He had not shown up since the report of the RCMP commissioner was introduced.

When will Mr. Simard be appointed? What is the delay? Who is choosing the date? Are we now awaiting the pleasure of Premier Hatfield? We know his Government is in trouble, but it is pushing it to be guaranteeing his Minister jobs in the Senate even before a provincial election is called. The people of Charlotte county are very pleased to know that Jean Maurice Simard is going to be their representative in the Senate because southern New Brunswick does not have a representative at the moment. However, that is another matter.

This resolution is not real reform of the Senate. It is nothing but a blatant power grab by the Government. It is an attempt to remove all impediments in the way of the Prime Minister and his office to have their own way. This is the new presidential style of the Prime Minister, replete with the seal. He is soon going to have a helicopter pad at 24 Sussex. This Government is going to go in style. It is really the Prime Minister's office and the bureaucracy who are setting the legislative agenda. I have great respect for the House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), but we know where he gets his marching orders.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, but my wife is in Saskatoon.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They are coming from this highly centralized and manipulative Government. The Prime Minister wants to control his own Ministers, the media, and anyone else who dares stand in his way. The current target is the Senate under the flimsy excuse of Bill C-11. Giving our consent to this constitutional amendment would be tantamount to abandoning our responsibilities as elected Members of Parliament and turning that responsibility over to the Prime Minister's office. We intend to present further amendments to this motion in the event that the Governmment chooses to use its majority to override our proposal and that of the joint special committee of the Senate and House of Commons.

We also believe very strongly that constitutional amendments should properly be studied in committee before being presented to the House. Only in committee can there be the careful scrutiny and painstaking clause by clause analysis which is necessary. The Members of the Party I have the honour to represent in the House are in favour of reform. However, we do not agree with the style of resolution brought before the House. The constitutional conference should come first and now, if that is the agenda of the Government. These could then be a proposal and public discussion. There could then be consideration of views and a consensus reached. Meaningful and workable reform of the way this Parliament carries out the business of this country can and should be considered. We reject this fly-by-night meaningless resolution on constitutional questions.

For this reason I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan):

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "before the end of 1987" in paragraph one, and by inserting the following paragraph immediately after paragraph one:

"And whereas it is desirable that the proposal of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Senate Reform set forth in its report of January 1984, that Senators be selected by election, be considered by a constitutional conference before the end of 1985;"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have received the amendment of the right hon. gentleman. I would like to reserve my decision on it and carry on with debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Under Standing Order 35(1), I think it is appropriate to have a brief question and comment period at the end of the remarks of the right hon. gentleman. I wonder whether it would be possible for me to question the right hon. Member?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have no objection to that, but I think the understanding was that I would not question the Minister. That was the deal, unless you want to bring him back in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret that under Standing Order 35(1) the first three speakers have unlimited time—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Maybe I can clarify. If there has been an arrangement, although I was not aware—

Mr. Prud'homme: Bring Crosbie back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I just have the floor for a minute? The first three speakers have unlimited time and I believe those who have unlimited time do not have a question or comment period, in accordance with Standing Order 35(1). After that, there are 20 minute speeches plus the question and comment period.

• (1520)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be willing to waive the rule because I find that the Minister's questions are very instructive and revealing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have standing orders. Perhaps we could do something like that after the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) proposes new rules and regulations.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, of course, we have rules and we must follow rules. However, your Honour also knows that we can do anything we want with unanimous consent. If you succeed in bringing back the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), I would like to seek unanimous consent under the condition that you ask the Minister of Justice to come back to the House. We would like to ask him questions as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments, but under these particular rules, I regret that we will not be able to do so. Therefore, I would like to recognize the next Hon. Member for debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Friesen: It will be a short speech—abolish the Senate.

Mr. Murphy: It will be a short speech because, unlike the first two speakers, I do not have unlimited time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will give it to you.

Mr. Murphy: However, I am in a position to be asked questions which will help educate Hon. Members, in any event. As a former teacher, I always believed that it was good for the class to learn by asking questions of the teacher.

In many ways I regret that we are dealing with this resolution at this time. It is interesting to note that the first resolution introduced by the Government after its Budget is one concerning the Senate. We were led to believe by the Government that it had an economic package which would create jobs for young Canadians. We were led to believe that it had an economic vision for the nation. Therefore, I suggest it would be logical that two weeks after its Budget, the Government would come forward with its legislative package in order for the Opposition and Canadians as a whole to know exactly what the Government wishes to do. Instead, we are dealing with what I believe is quite accurately called a diversionary tactic. We are dealing with a resolution restricting the legislative role of the second House. This was a policy that the Conservatives never espoused during the election campaign.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I simply want to remind the Hon. Member that he does have 20 minutes, followed by a question and answer period. It is only the first two speakers who have unlimited time. He can govern himself accordingly.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I said that as an aside earlier, but I did not want to challenge your ruling at that time.

Since I do have a brief period in which to speak, let me point out that by taking away the legislative role of the second Chamber, it is challenging the very reason for having a second Chamber. By limiting it to a 30 day review of monetary bills and a 45 day review of non-monetary bills, the Government is really saying that we do not need a second chamber in this land. Of course, that is something that I can accept.

Incidentally, I was disturbed by a report in the news media last night and today that the Liberal House Leader has suggested using the second Chamber to prevent any legislation which would deindex the old age pension. I do not know if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) supports that, but it was certainly reported as a statement made by the House Leader of his Party.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not what he said, apparently.

Mr. Murphy: That was the interpretation. If that was the idea of the Liberal Party or any party that had control of the Senate, it would be a stupid and very dangerous move. While I believe we should do what we can within this Chamber and in the nation as a whole to protect the indexation of the old age pension, I do not believe we could ever use an undemocratically appointed, non responsible Chamber for that purpose. It would mix a good cause with the murky reputation of the Senate and Canadians would become confused about whether we were fighting for the rights of the Senate or for the ordinary pensioners of this land. The real cause is the fight for the pensioners and the Senate should not be used in that cause.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: But you will do it here.

Mr. Murphy: We will do it here, Mr. Minister. I believe it would be dangerous to use the Senate for any such purpose. Although many Canadians would support the use of the Senate in defence of pensioners, it would be very easy for a Senate majority or any group of Senators to take up their own noble cause in the future which may not be acceptable to a majority of others.

Our main disagreement with this resolution is that the Government is trying to reform the Senate while maintaining its existence. It has not found a new role for the Senate or indicated that it serves a legitimate purpose. It simply wants to keep the Senate while restricting its role in reviewing Government legislation and giving it less time to review economic matters. We will be left with a political body that is neutered in terms of dealing with many matters. However, it will remain a body of patronage so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and others can place their friends in the Senate.

I was a representative of my Party on the joint committee studying Senate reform. We travelled throughout the country and found that there was not one acceptable solution to Canadians. Many would like to abolish the Senate, many would like an elected Senate and others wanted one which was appointed in part by the provinces. Others would have the Senate play a special role in deciding constitutional matters or political appointments.

While there is no consensus on the purpose of the Senate, Canadians do agree that patronage must stop. I suggest that the Government House Leader convey the message to the Prime Minister that all Canadians want to stop patronage. The Government should put forward its proposals for Senate appointments and what its purpose should be rather than simply presenting a resolution to reduce the power of the Senate while allowing the Conservatives to make appointments just as the Liberals did in the past. That is not the purpose of the Senate and it is not an acceptable proposal to Canadians in a democratic age.

Our Party has long opposed the Senate, not only because of the patronage issue which we abhor, but also because we do not believe that there is any rationale for having a second Chamber, at least as outlined at the present time. Even after sitting on the joint committee on the reform of the Senate, I do not believe that we have found any purpose for the Senate. We have not found an acceptable way to reform the Senate.

Let me deal with some of the reasons we are told that we must maintain a Senate, whether elected or appointed. A principle reason is that we need regional representation because of the nature of this country, with large populations in Quebec and in Ontario and the smaller populations in other provinces. It is suggested that the Senate represents and protects the interest of the regions. That is blatantly false. It is recognized throughout the !and that the provincial Governments, their premiers and their legislative assemblies are doing the best job of protecting, working for and speaking on behalf of the interests of the provinces and the regions of this land. No other body, no other second Chamber, will ever have the legitimacy of an elected provincial Government and the elected assembly to which that Government is responsible.

Often we are told the reason we need a second Chamber is to protect the rights of minorities, for example, the minority in terms of a linguistic group in the Province of Quebec. That is not how the Senate is functioning at this time. The Premier of the Province of Quebec is quite able, as was the case with his predecessors, of speaking on behalf of the people of that province. Also it is interesting to note that a very large proportion of the Members of this House have come from the Province of Quebec and that no Government, with the exception of the one headed by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), in the last 20 years survived without the support of a majority of seats from Quebec, and this Government is no different. Obviously the House of Commons, through its elected Members, has had a very strong influence in protecting the interests of Quebec. They have a very strong voice in this Chamber and they usually have a very strong voice in Cabinet. Very seldom do we hear a voice in the Senate speaking out as a regional representative from western Canada, from Quebec or from Atlantic Canada. A good test of that would be for people across the land, who might be listening to this debate, to think of the name of the Senators from their regions. Most Canadians cannot name one Senator from their own provinces. Obviously Senators are not protecting or representing regional interests in an effective manner.

Other Members have indicated that we need the Senate because of its committee work. Probably that was a true statement 15 or 20 years ago when Senator Croll was well known for the work he did on poverty and other Senators were well known for their useful, investigative work on behalf of various concerns. The House of Commons itself has now undertaken that role. We have set up many task forces over the past few years to look into federal-provincial funding, various aspects of transportation, the Canadian role in Central America, the Canadian role in international affairs, interregional development, the whole issue of pensions and the specific concerns of the disabled. In other words, we have taken on a role which used to be identified as a role of the Senate, and we have said that elected Members should be involved in that process.

By having elected Members on a task force for the disabled or a task force looking into federal-provincial equalization payments or established programs financing, not only can they do the job very effectively, but when they return to the House they help to educate and to explain to the rest of us exactly what people across the land think about the issues which they were investigating. This is something which does not happen when a Senate committee goes out. The Senate does not report to us. We do not have the kind of communications system with the Senate to know what it has studied or learned across the land. From time to time committees are necessary because, despite that we all have fairly large egos, we do not know it all. Certainly there are people out there who can explain better the problems they face and the solutions they have, which benefits all of us in the House. That is something which can be done and should properly be done by the House.

Two other reasons have been given for having a second Chamber, and they come from the constitutional debates which took place prior to 1867. One was that it would help to prevent mob rule. Basically mob rule has come to be known as democracy. It means that the people elect their representatives, and that those representatives are supposed to come here to speak and work on behalf of those people. Just as important, they are responsible to those people and will face them in any upcoming election. This indicates that an elected House is essential. No appointed Chamber can ever represent people of the land.

One difficulty with the present Senate is that it represents the opposite of mob rule. Senators are not responsible, they are not elected, they never have to face the public and, as was noted in the Clarke-Campbell report, many Senators are engaged in outside occupations. Basically they are lawyers and directors; they represent other interests in the land than that of the electorate. They are completely unanswerable. We have no idea what they do on behalf of their corporations, law firms or advertising firms. We have no idea what they do on behalf of their other occupations. We pay them a full-time salary, yet it was recognized by the committee, headed by a former Liberal Member of Parliament and a former Conservative Member of Parliament, that many of them, indeed most of them, were engaged in outside occupations.

Obviously those on boards of directors of various firms who sit in the Conservative caucus, now that that Party is in Government—and the same was true for those who sat in the Liberal caucus when that Party was in Government—have a strong influence on policies, directions, legislation and regulations coming from Government. We never know what is being said. We know that a certain Senator sits on the board of Inco and that a certain Senator sits on the board of directors of the Bank of Montreal. We know that Senators sit on the boards of this corporation or that corporation, but we have no idea what they say to their friends in Cabinet or how they use their voice and vote in caucus. This means that the Senate works against mob rule, democracy and openness in Government.

I recognize that I have very little time remaining, but I should like to deal with the real role of the Senate as perceived by many people, that is, to give sober second thought to legislation which we may rush through the House of Commons. It is obvious to anyone who has studied the role, function and performance of the Senate that it does not do that. The average Bill is in the Senate for less than three days. The Clarke-Campbell report indicated that on average the Senate, over the last six years, sat for 66 per cent of the number of days the House of Commons sat. Most of us in the House will remember situations such as the following one: a controversial piece of legislation is debated in the House for weeks, if not for months; it is sent to a special or standing committee before which witnesses from all across the land appear. In some cases the committee will actually travel across country. After hearing the evidence and studying the Bill on a clause by clause basis, sometimes it makes amendments, sometimes it improves the Bill, and then it is brought back to the House of Commons for further debate. Thereafter it is rushed over to the Senate where it passes all stages in two hours. That is sober second thought! Obviously it is not.

I propose the abolition of the Senate. I will not move a resolution to that affect. Everyone knows where the New Democratic Party stands. However, we really do not have a Senate at the present time. It has not really existed in the minds of Canadians for the last hundred years. It does not exist in terms of any effective role or in terms of legislative overview, with or without the amendments the Government is putting before us at this time. Let me indicate how I know this to be true.

I would like to read into the record the length of time that the Senate has sat in the five-week period between April 23 and May 30, 1985. As all Members know, the Senate only sits three days a week. On April 23, the Senate sat for one hour and 10 minutes. On April 24, it sat for one hour and 40 minutes; one hour and five minutes on April 25; two hours and five minutes on April 30; 20 minutes on May 1; one hour and 20 minutes on May 2; one hour and 20 minutes on May 7; one hour and 15 minutes on May 8; one hour and 45 minutes on May 9; one hour and 20 minutes on May 14; one hour and 40 minutes on May 15; one hour and 40 minutes on May 16; 50 minutes on May 28; one hour on May 29 and 30, respectively.

These are the figures for five consecutive weeks in which the Senate sat. They are certainly not construed figures. The total comes to 20 hours. We have been told that we have to spend $30,000 and hour to keep the people in the Senate. They do not even believe themselves that there is any need for them to review legislation. They do not believe that they have any real purpose. They can barely get through their prayers before they adjourn for the day. They do not serve as a Chamber of sober second thought. They do not serve any real legislative purpose; and they have not done so for a long time. Let us rid ourselves of the house of patronage. Let us clean up our democratic system and put in place one House which is elected by and responsible to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague of the New Democratic Party. Considering the remarks he has just made and the fact the the other House sat only 20 hours during five consecutive weeks; considering that, by his own logic, the Canadian Senate is of no practical use to this country and yet has an absolute right of veto on any piece of legislation passed by the House of Commons, could he explain how he can logically be against this resolution aimed at vesting the Senate with only a suspensive veto? The Hon. Member ought to know that if we want to abolish the Senate, as the New Democratic Party would have it, we need a consensus in this country, and any reasonable person—even a Member of the New Democratic Party—would realize there is now way to achieve such a consensus.

So how can he be against that, at least if the Senate had only a suspensive veto it could not thwart the will of the elected Commons.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked that particular question. It gives me a chance to go on with the problems of the Senate. What the Government is suggesting is not much of a change at all. It is not suggesting much of a reform.

As was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), even the great filibuster—as perceived by the Government—with respect to the borrowing authority legislation lasted for only 37 days. In other words, the reform proposed in the Bill before us would not change that much. For that matter, it would somehow rationalize the idea that the Senate could actually drag out each money Bill for 30 days without criticism, since that will be acceptable if the Bill before us passes. By setting what might be called maximum hours, or days, the Senate is being told that it has a legitimate right to spend 30 days on each money Bill and 45 days on each other piece of legislation. In the Senate, one hour quite often equals one day. That is one reason I object to the so-called reform.

The real reason I object to the so-called reform is that it is not reform at all. We are keeping a house of patronage. It is very much like another type of house. We are not saying that it is needed. We are saying it exists, therefore, we will put up with it. If it gets in our way, then we will bash through a constitutional amendment to deal with it. However, there is no attempt being made to reform it.

The Hon. Member has said there is no chance of abolition. Just five or six years ago people were saying there was no chance of our having our own Charter of Rights. At one time, people were saying there was no chance of us ever having an amending formula in this country. The only chance we have to abolish the Senate is for the Government to say that it is not doing anything, it is aware of that and it is not needed for a place of patronage. The Government must decide to bring a resolution to the House which will set out the fact that we do not need a Senate. If the Government has the courage to do something like that, then watch the provinces. Most of the Premiers in Canada are Conservatives. Watch them try to go to their people and defend the Senate.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has put great store in democracy. I do not blame him for doing this. However, great thinkers on constitutional affairs have always maintained that the democratic element should be balanced within a constitution, in line with other elements. Not only should we listen to the mob, as the Hon. Member has described them, but there should also be an element in Government filled by those most skilled at Government. There should exist an element which can be provided by those wo have expertise in statesmanship. A monarchial element should also be part of a constitution. Does the Hon. Member put his whole store in the democratic element within a constitution; or does he agree with Socrates, Sir Robert Walpole and Dave Nickerson that there ought to be other elements, too?

Mr. Murphy: I can certainly not support the views of the last person mentioned by the Hon. Member. The other two persons he mentioned lived quite a long time ago. Perhaps the Hon. Member is also thinking in the past.

There is not a second Chamber in the Province of Ontario, nor is there one in the Province of Manitoba. There are not second Chambers in any of the provinces in the land. I do not feel that the people are any worse off because of the fact that there is not some type of unappointed group, be they statesmen or political hacks. We can survive quite well with democratic rule. We can survive with people who have been elected by the population and who are responsible to it. My reference to mob rule was in connection with John A. Macdonald's phrase "mob rule". My phrase would be "democratically-elected representation".

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to enter into the debate but, rather, to sit and listen to the comments of my learned colleague. However, I really must comment when he brings into question and casts a dark pall on the reputation and integrity of literally all members of the Upper Chamber. These are distinguished Canadians of whom he is speaking. I would particularly like to mention one of note, and that is the Senator from Riverview, New Brunswick, who was recently appointed. She has contributed to the province through 13 years of public service and is more than prepared and willing to continue that kind of contribution to the rest of Canada. I would have to ask the Hon. Member if he really believes that through the years the Senate has existed, it has made no contribution whatsoever to Canada.

• (1550)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, in my speech, I mentioned that in the past, some of the committees of the Senate have provided some useful information and have done some useful studies. I also went on to point out that that role by and large has been taken over by the House of Commons with the number of task forces that we have set up over the last few years to look into things such as the problems of the disabled and pensioners and federal-provincial relations and the like.

In my speech and in response to the two Hon. Members who asked questions of me, I was very careful not to impugn the dignity of any one Senator. I am arguing that a body that sat on May 1 for 20 minutes and on April 30 for two hours and five minutes, the longest it sat in a five-week period, despite the credentials of the individuals within it, no longer has a place in the Canadian democratic system.

Those individuals, including the one to whom the Hon. Member made mention, could do a much better job for their own personal reputation and for Canada if we found other roles for them to play within our system. They have made a great contribution in the past and they could do so in the future, but the other House is not the place for that contribution.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit concerned about the arguments that the Hon. Member is making. He went to great lengths to describe the amount of time that Senators spend sitting in the Senate considering legislation. I would submit that the Hon. Member is being intellectually dishonest by arguing that because the Senators spend so little time in the actual Chamber the Senate is not worth keeping.

How many hours has the Hon. Member spent in this Chamber this week? Indeed, how many hours has he spent in this Chamber since the House reconvened? Is it fair to argue that if one divides his salary by the number of hours that he has actually sat in this Chamber, he is not worth that amount of money? Will the Hon. Member agree with me that a considerable amount of work done by a Member of Parliament and indeed by a Senator is not done in this Chamber or the Upper Chamber but in committee and in individual offices?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite prepared to go through my index to tell the House what I have done since September 4—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope not.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, I recognize that it would probably take more than 20 hours to read through the list. However, today I suspect that I have spoken longer than the Senate has sat. In fact, the Senate did not sit today. I made a statement, I asked a question, I tabled petitions, I made a speech and in a few moments I will be speaking on Private Members' Hour. The point is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I am afraid the Hon. Member's time has expired. The time for questions and comments has now expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the constitutional resolution introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has two objectives: first, through a constitutional amendment, of course, to limit the powers of the Senate so as to prevent it from exercising its absolute right of veto on Bills adopted by the House of Commons; two, to commit the Government to convene a conference of First Ministers before the end of 1987 with a view to examining in depth the various options available with respect to the future of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today I listened to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in reply to the Minister of Justice and the resolution introduced in the House. I am a rather inexperienced parliamentarian compared to the Leader of the Opposition, but I must say I was surprised—

An Hon. Member: He did not impress you?

Mr. Valcourt: No, he did not impress me, but what did impress me is the fact that he completely failed to speak to the main issue inherent in this resolution. As far as I and, I am sure, many of my colleagues are concerned, that is the crux of the matter. We are talking about a principle whereby the respective powers of the two Houses must be balanced so that the mandate of those who are directly elected not be unduly restricted or that the principles inherent in responsible government not be destroyed. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what can happen with the powers now enjoyed by the Senate. They have an absolute right of veto and with that alone they can frustrate the will of all elected Members of the House of Commons.

Earlier when he explained why he is against this resolution, the Leader of the Opposition had the gall to say that he would not be party to this because Quebec did not subscribe to the constitutional agreement and therefore will not take position either way. I have no idea what logical principle can prompt the Leader of the Opposition to rise in this House today and tell the Government: We are against resolution because Quebec will not have anything to do with it. Yet it is no secret that Quebec was left out of the constitutional agreement by the federal Liberal Party in the first place. That is history now, yet they use that as an argument to say they object because Quebec is not included. Mr. Lévesque's position is clear, for he told our Prime Minister: We are not against restricting the powers of the Senate, in keeping with democratic principles, but we will not even discuss the matter until we become party to the constitutional agreement. That is a fair proposition, Mr. Speaker.

The question of the Canadian Senate has been the subject of numerous propositions and criticisms in recent years, Mr. Speaker, and again a moment ago the Leader of the Opposition said they would seek to amend the resolution and ask that a federal-provincial conference be covened in 1985. Yet he had hardly finished saying that he just did not understand why this resolution was on the Order Paper. Why would the Government want to have a constitutional resolution on the Order Paper at this time? First he blames us for proposing that a conference be held in 1987—a commitment of our Prime Minister—then in the same breath he asks: What is this resolution doing on the Order Paper?

Mr. Speaker, it is all very simple. This draft resolution is before the House because the Senate abused its powers under the Constitution in dealing with Bill C-11. The Senate's attitude to the subject matter of Bill C-11 served as a clear warning. It reminded us of something that is an anachronism, something I am sure does not exist in any democracy, which is that the Parliament of Canada, the elected Members of this House, can adopt a Bill, and if the majority of the Senate does not agree with the legislation passed by the House of Commons, it can say no, on the basis of its absolute veto right.

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bourassa, on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to encroach on the Hon. Member's time, but just the same, I would like to check the speech by the Leader of the Opposition, because the Hon. Member has just said that in his speech, the Leader of the Opposition said he would not participate because Quebec was not participating. I think we should look at the speech by the Leader of the Opposition before allowing this kind of statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will look at the "blues" next week.

Mr. Rossi: The House is being misled, perhaps not deliberately, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think that is the case, considering the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Valcourt) will have the floor when debate resumes on this particular piece of legislation.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 193?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved that Bill C-235, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-235 has as its objective the removal of the monopoly on the sale of freshwater fish which is presently enjoyed by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in much of western and northern Canada. I want to emphasize that it is not an attempt to remove the FFMC. I have spoken on this subject before on many occasions and people have criticized the idea because they think that it will remove the FFMC, that plants will close down and that there will be nothing to replace them in certain areas. That is not the intent of the Bill. FFMC would continue to exist as long as it could in a competitive market-place.

As well as making some small amendments, we want to repeal Part III of the Act which gives to the FFMC a complete monopoly on the sale of most species of freshwater fish. That part also contains penalty clauses. Canadian citizens who commit the heinous crime of selling fish to someone other than the Crown corporation can be fined or sent to jail. Can we imagine Canadian citizens being sent to jail for selling fish to someone other than the federal Government agency?

I have spoken on this matter for 10 years, in many fora. I have spoken about it in the House of Commons on many occasions and previously as a Member of the Legislature. I have waxed eloquent on many occasions. I have been forceful. I have cajoled and threatened. I have been reasonable and logical. I have tried every knack of argument in debate which I know. It seems that after 15 years, we are making some headway. Today I will be rather cool, calm and collected, because I suspect that there is a certain amount of agreement among the Parties. I will even be nice to my socialist friends. I suspect they might help me, just this once. I want to retain the goodwill of the other Parties at least until five o'clock.

The other Parties may disagree with what I see as a resolution to a very difficult question which faces the freshwater industry. They should realize that the FFMC has not been particularly successful and that fishermen are not obtaining a fair return for the amount of effort which they put into the business in which they are engaged.

Marekting, in my opinion, in the opinion of many Members of the House, and certainly the people who are engaged in the fishery, has not been performed efficiently and effectively. That problem is not restricted to the freshwater section of the industry, it also affects the salt water fishery on the East Coast and on the West Coast.

I would like to compliment Senator Jack Marshall, of the other place, and his committee. That committee is engaged in an over-all study of fish marketing throughout Canada. I hope the committee will be able to present to the Senate, and to Canadian people in general, valid recommendations as to how we might improve the fishery within Canada. The committee is looking at FFMC and its practices. Of course, that will be only a very small part of the over-all effort. The committee is concerned with matters which have a national priority and importance on the East and West Coasts.

In my opinion the FFMC is a social experiment which has failed. In the Northwest Territories—and I believe the situation is very similar in the prairie provinces—before FFMC got into the business with its monopoly, there was a very active and viable fishery. The fishermen were not rich, but at least they were working and could make a decent living. After several years of government monopoly, the industry lives and relies on government subsidies and hand-outs. The provincial and territorial Governments have been obliged to subsidize a federal Crown corporation. Evidently, there is something very wrong in that situation. If the provincial and territorial subsidies were removed, the industry would fail completely. It would have declining numbers of fishermen, catches and markets.

The FFMC is possessed of a crushing debt. The interest payments on the debt, according to the last annual report which was published in 1984, amounted to approximately $1.25 million, which the fishermen must pay. The fishermen are paying the interest on the debt which has accumulated to a great extent by reason of past mismanagement within the corporation. Some improvements have been made in the operation of the corporation, but there is still a long way to go.

Fishermen do not want hand-outs. I have spoken with the fishermen in my riding and they do not like the idea that someone else is paying subsidies to keep them in business. They know the business. They are good fishermen. They know how to catch top quality fish, which would command premium prices if the marketing opportunities existed. Fishermen want the chance to sell the fish at a fair price. They do not want subsidies to keep them in business. I agree whole-heartedly with them.

If we are successful and the monopoly is removed, the FFMC will remain, but it will have to become competitive. There will be something by which to judge it. Other people will be in the market-place. If they do a better job, we will be able to see that the FFMC is not working. If my submissions are right, that is what will happen. I might be wrong, but there is no harm in trying.

Fishermen's co-operatives could be formed. Several fishermen could get together and hire a salesman. They would then be working directly for the fishermen instead of for some Crown Corporation with a board of directors which no one ever sees. Private enterprise could get back into the fisheries business. Individuals would no longer be restricted by the law of Canada from entering into the business and earning a living buying and selling fish. I can see no reason why Canadian citizens should be prevented by the law from doing just that. It seems to me it is an elementary freedom which we have taken away from Canadians.

I see specialized marketing arising. For instance, in the area I come from, there is a very premium quality fish. It is a lot better than some of the fish caught in Alberta, for instance, with no disrespect to the Hon. Member sitting in front of me. We like to think that our fish is just a little better than his, and markets in the past have proven that. Markets have been prepared to pay a little extra for Slave Lake fish and that has not happened with FFMC. The fishermen there do not get that extra little bit.

Local processing by way of smoking and canning might very well be developed. Individuals could go into that field and we could get things going. That would bring about local job creation as well. There could be direct fishermen to retailer sales. I know fish companies in Ottawa which have tried to make deals with fishermen in freshwater country to buy their fish directly thereby cutting out the middle man, in this case, the Crown corporation. They could pay the fishermen better prices and the citizens of Ottawa would be able to buy fresher fish at lower prices and everyone would benefit, if we were able to do that under the law which, of course, with the present monopoly, is not possible.

I would like to review very briefly, Sir, the fisheries policy which was enunciated prior to September 4 by the Party of which I am a supporter. A very comprehensive fisheries platform was put together and this was presented to fishermen in the fishing ridings at the time of the election campaign. A lot of support was forthcoming on account of these policies.

Specifically, with respect to freshwater, there were two elements of the Conservative plank at that time: first, comprehensive review of the activities of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in close consultation with fishermen and Governments of the western provinces and Northwest Territories and the second element in the policy was that western Canadians would be granted greater control over their fishery, especially the marketing of its products. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation will not be allowed to retain a monopoly on this activity.

Fishermen who were well aware of that policy are now demanding that action take place. They have waited long enough. We have been in office long enough and they are expecting us to make some headway. I know there are problems faced by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser). In my opinion, he is certainly doing a very good job. He is one of the best Fisheries Ministers we have had for some time. And he is gradually resolving some of the outstanding problems. Of course, he has to face the East Coast and West Coast national priorities.

As well, when we talk about freshwater, we have to deal with the Governments of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories and try to work out some form of consensus. That is a difficult job for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I have an understanding that the subject matter of the Bill might well be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans. If that takes place what we will be doing is fulfilling to some extent a promise to the fishermen in freshwater country. It certainly is an important first step in carrying out these promises. I hope that after the committee has given its full deliberations to the element of this Bill, the ramifications of the monopoly, it will become the policy of the Government of Canada supported by both opposition parties.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this Bill is certainly not new to the House of Commons. It is certainly not new in the Hansards of the House of Commons since the Hon. Member who introduced it has spoken on the subject many times. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, of all of the subjects we have listened to with respect to doing away with the powers of Crown corporations, this is one of the corporations which has been talked about more than any other in the House of Commons over the last few years.

To set the record straight, Mr. Speaker, two Crown corporations were created by past Governments primarily to market fish. One Crown corporation was on the East Coast of Canada and the other was in western Canada. One had to do with saltfish and the other had to do with fresh fish. The difficulty that the Ministers of Fisheries and Oceans have had with the repeated suggestion of the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), is that each Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has always looked at it with the idea that the corporation was for the general good of the area concerned. It is the same argument which is used in eastern Canada and in western Canada as it relates to this particular corporation.

I have wondered, Mr. Speaker, over the years if perhaps the Hon. Member for Western Arctic did not represent the one area covered by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation which perhaps had a very accessible and probably very marketable product and there was, perhaps, a great demand for that product in Canada and the United States. Perhaps the marketing corporation was using that profitable section of its control to balance out the least profitable areas of its jurisdiction. I rather suspect that that is the truth of the matter and that the hon. gentleman can see no other solution to this problem but to do away with the monopoly of this particular Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is a down side to this argument. When you do away with the corporation in effect, with that type of a monopoly, then of course the more profitable elements of its jurisdiction will themselves do their own marketing and thereby raise the costs and economic viability of the remainder of that jurisdiction, probably to the point where the Government would not be able to finance that particular corporation. However, the hon. gentleman has a point. I think that the Party he represents listened to him very carefully over the years. In fact, it listened to him to the point of putting in the Party platform that it would end the monopoly of the Canadian Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. That was in party policy. Of course, Mr. Speaker, you have to understand that when you end that monopoly, in effect you end the corporation, unless the Government is prepared then to turn around and provide greater per unit subsidization of that operation than it did in the past.

It is unfortunate that the hon. gentleman's Bill is before us at this point in time for the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) because of all the times in Canadian history over the past 10 or 12 years, as far as fisheries is concerned, this is perhaps the most difficult time for a federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He has had the courts in western Canada and British Columbia come up with decisions which really said that the federal Fisheries Act had no teeth and that it could not allocate licences by gear types. Recently the court in New Brunswick passed down a judgment which said the Government cannot control where people go to fish. As long as they have a licence, they are allowed under the mobility provisions of the Constitution to go wherever they want to go and fish. The Minister was also confronted with all of these problems which were created because of budgetary cuts. Then he was presented with the problem of overfishing.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if you polled the Members of the House of Commons who have been here for several years, they would have to say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) probably made the best choice possible for the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I think it generally agreed, Mr. Speaker, that he made the best choice possible with what he had to choose from. The gentleman knows his business. He knows the fishery inside out and he knows the environment inside out as well, but he is being presented with all these problems.

We have a Bill before the House for second reading and we have the federal Minister trying to figure how he can weasel out of a campaign promise, a Party position, to end this monopoly. Add to that the fact that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic is still sitting in the House. That presents an additional problem for the Minister. The Minister knew that the first thing the Hon. Member would do when he came back in the Chamber was put a Bill on the Order Paper asking for the demise of the Canadian Frewshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

I think that his concluding remarks, where he said this matter could be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, could be a way out. I certainly would support that proposition if it were proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary. I suppose we have to challenge him to do that. We have to ask him what is wrong with referring it to the committee. Is he afraid to have it discussed? I am sure the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic would agree that it should be discussed openly and examined by Members of the House of Commons, especially since the Conservatives put it in their Party platform. The speaker for the NDP should make sure that he does not go on too long so the Parliamentary Secretary can stand in his place, own up to a promise made by a Conservative Government, try to half satisfy the Hon. Member for Western Arctic and do what he should do by referring this entire subject matter to the standing committee.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am not used to getting up in the House today. It is unfortunate that we are not allowed to mention the presence or absence of a Member, but I cannot ask a question of the Liberal Member who asked me about what I had been doing in the House because he is not here. Neither will I take advantage of this time to continue the debate on the uselessness of the Senate, so I will speak about the matter before us.

It will be no surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, that there have been discussions among the three Parties and that there is a willingness to accept that the subject matter of the Bill before us should go to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for further study. I find that acceptable. I have entered into debate with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) as to his intentions, which is basically to dissolve the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation or make sure that it competes with private buyers. I disagreed for many years with that supposition of the Hon. Member. Having said that, let me tell you that I agree in principle with what I believe the Parliamentary Secretary will be doing in a few minutes, referring the matter to the Standing Committee.

I represent a riding which covers two thirds of the Province of Manitoba and which has many commercial fishermen. By virtue of the fact they all fish in fresh water, they sell their products through the FFMC. In the main they are very satisfied with that corporation. When there was an attempt by a previous Conservative Government in the Province of Manitoba to look at ways of changing the system, trying to bow out of the FFMC system, the fishermen in northern Manitoba, about 95 per cent of which are native, said no. That was done during the 1980 federal election and I stood with the fishermen in my riding and said "if I am elected, I will be there supporting the FFMC". I also said and I say now that the corporation is far from perfect.

I believe there are some officials from the Department upstairs listening at this time and they will be aware that there have been many complaints about the system. There are problems with it, just as there are problems with any system of marketing fish in this and other nations. The Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Liberal Party will recognize, being from Atlantic Canada, that there are many problems in the fishing industry there. There are many problems in the industry in western Canada. This is so even in some parts of this nation the marketing is done by private enterprise. So, it is not a matter of public versus private enterprise. Some people would like it to be an ideological debate, but it is not. It is not a matter of the FFMC having the monopoly and some people object to monopolies.

One of the problems we face is that regardless of where you fish, the prices are not high and costs are increasing. The increase in the cost of gas resulting from the recent Budget is not going to make life much easier for fishermen. It will make it more difficult for fishermen, especially in remote communities. As the price of gas goes up, obviously it is more expensive to operate. As well, it means that all goods shipped in to the fishermen are going to be that much more expensive.

I welcome the idea that this whole matter will be referred to committee and I hope to have a chance to participate on behalf of our caucus on that committee. I would also hope that in doing a thorough study, the committee will look at ways of travelling to where the fishermen live and work so we can see firsthand what the problems are. As I said in debate yesterday on northern transportation, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) put forward a motion that the Standing Committee on Transport should travel and look at the problems that people of the north face regarding transportation.

I believe that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry should do the same thing and listen to the people actually engaged in fishing. We should listen to the type of problems they face and the suggestions they may make concerning improving their situation. I recognize that fishermen will not speak with one voice. Like farmers, miners, labourers and businessmen, they do not always agree on what is the most perfect solution for their industry, but I think if we as Members of Parliament travel to those areas, we will hear for ourselves what people are saying. We will have some understanding of what the problems are.

We will not have this just by reading a report. We will not understand it by just listening to the FFMC officials testify in the standing committee once a year as they do at the present time. It is better for us to be out there and talk about the problems resulting from the high cost of transportation, from the fact we do not have processing stations in northern Manitoba and other parts of the north. We can talk about the problems they have with the fact that much of the fish they catch cannot be sold, whether through the FFMC or any other organization, because there is no market. Perhaps, after going through that process, we can come up with some changes to the FFMC which would satisfy the people involved.

One suggestion I would like to make at this time, and hopefully the committee would consider it, is that we make sure the fishermen themselves are actually on the board of directors in some numbers in order to have some effect on the direction and decisions made by the board. Right now the board of directors are not involved in the fishing industry themselves, basically. There is an advisory body representing the fishermen which gives advice to the board of directors, but that is not the same as having representatives of the fishermen on the board. If we made that one change so that fishermen felt they had some stake in the decision making, it would satisfy a lot of the fishermen in my area. They would be able to help determine price and the assistance the corporation gives to fishermen. They would be able to help plan the marketing and processing strategy, and deal with initial and final prices paid to the fishermen. That is not a new concept. We accepted that concept in the Wheat Board. We allow representatives of the farmers to be elected to the Wheat Board to help determine the decisions of that institution. I think that fishermen of freshwater fish would appreciate having that same input into their future and industry.

I could go on at some length talking about specific problems. I could spend a lot of time talking about the problems in my own riding, the fact that we do not have processing there, and the fact that most of the lakes are not connected to highways. I could talk about the disastrous effect of the last Budget on the fishermen in my riding because of the increase in the cost of fuel. However, I do not think that would serve any particular purpose at this time. I am going to sit down, but as I said at the outset, I would like to indicate my support for the proposal, which I believe we will be hearing in the next few minutes, to send this whole subject matter to the standing committee for further review and, hopefully, to travel across the country to allow the people who are actually fishing to speak to the Members of Parliament.

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague for introducing this Bill. It gives us a rare opportunity to address the freshwater fishery and the problems of its fishermen, a group which we tend to ignore, given our preoccupation with the East and West Coast fisheries.

We are not the first to be concerned about these matters. For many years people with the best interests of the fishermen at heart debated the problems of fish marketing on the Prairies. It was a major question in terms of people, of profits, and of political will. When six governments finally joined to set up the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, they knew they were making a fundamental change.

What brought them to that point? Perhaps we should look back for a moment to see what was on the minds of the federal, provincial, and territorial Governments at the time. Why did they want this corporation and how has it worked out? Their decision to set up the corporation followed many years of discontent and recommendations for change. For example, the 1933 Commission of Inquiry into Manitoba fisheries concluded that fishermen were in a most unfavourable position. American capital largely controlled the fish distributing agencies and it was said that racketeers had entered the business. The uneconomic competition between distributors for fish and markets was hurting the fishermen rather than helping them.

The 1933 commission called for collective action on behalf of the fishermen. It called for better co-ordination of the industry, better quality, better inspection, and for a fish-clearing house, another way of saying single-desk selling. The idea, of course, is that single-desk selling can give the producers more power in the market and can give the buyers a better availability of supply.

In 1938 the Manitoba Government again commissioned a thorough report. The author, H. C. Grant, said that "the most apt description of the fisherman in Manitoba is that he is a labourer working for a piece rate wage. For all practical purposes, the local packer or exporter provides the only source of credit available to the fisherman". The author linked the fisherman's lack of independence and his inability to sell his own fish with his discontent and suspicion about the whole marketing set up.

After the war, similar complaints persisted about market weakness, the strength of American buyers, and dirty deals. The Saskatchewan Government found it desirable to set up a fish marketing board and then a system of co-operatives. This helped, but American importers still had the upper hand and, by and large, exporters and dealers passed the risks and losses back to the fishermen.

A national conference on fisheries in 1964 brought matters to a head. The Manitoba Government presented a brief that said in part:

> Disorderly marketing is a central problem in the inland fishing industry. Local packers and shippers, apparently unable to bypass the American broker, force rapid changing prices f.o.b. the packing shed, and must therefore broaden their margin to offset losses caused by sudden devaluation of inventory. Consequently, the fishermen receive a lean share of constantly fluctuating prices. The packing-shipping firms tend to concentrate on shrewd marketing to earn occasional windfall profits rather than industrial engineering to economize on collection and handling costs . . . Handling and packing facilities are characterized by poor equipment and low quality control facilities—

> At this time the Province of Manitoba knows of no better alternative than the establishment of a regional marketing board to meet the marketing problems of the industry.

Out of that conference a federal-provincial committee on Prairie fisheries recommended an export monopoly with monopoly single-desk selling. This recommendation lead to another and very thorough study by Commissioner George McIvor in 1965. Mr. McIvor talked to the various Governments. Among Prairies provinces Manitoba produces the most fish. Manitoba's Minister of Mines and Natural Resources, the Hon. Sterling Lyon, repeated the same arguments the province had made to the 1964 conference about the need for a marketing board. All the Prairie provinces and the Government of the Northwest Territories favoured an export monopoly.

Exporters and dealers had most to lose from a marketing board. However, even among them, Commissioner McIvor found an awareness that marketing of Prairie fish needed some from of re-organization and rationalization. In his travels and hearings, he found that the fishermen urgently wanted a changed system of marketing. The McIvor report said that prices were weak because of too many exporters selling to a few American importers. Some exporters only amounted to agents of U.S. importers. If the importer suffered a market setback, or took some risk that backfired, he had the power to pass the losses back to the Canadian exporter and the exporter passed the loss back to the dealers who passed it back to the fishermen.

McIvor discovered once again what previous studies had stated; the weakness of exporters linked up with a series of underlying weaknesses in the industry. The 35 or so exporters—too many—did business with 200 or so dealers—far too many for the amount of fish handled. There was no standardization of brands and no co-ordination of supply. The system created losses in efficiency, quality, and profits. All of this weakened market prices. Even when the export market took an upturn and exporters raised prices to their dealers, McIvor found that the dealers failed to pass the increase back to the fishermen. He investigated the sales of the two major products, white fish and pickerel, in 1965 and found that fishermen got less than half the export price. For Prairie fish in general, depending on the specific fishery, they got only 45 to 60 per cent of the price. However, the fishermen never knew what the market price was. Often they never even knew what price they would receive from their own local dealer from day to day.

Many of the fishermen worked on credit with the dealers and never got out of debt. Fully 25 per cent of them were completely dependent on the dealers credit, totally under the dealers' control. The commissioner's report said that "under these circumstances, the fisherman is essentially an indentured labourer for the fish companies. It is self evident that fishermen in this situation do not negotiate a price. There is no bargaining. The fisherman's prime concern is existing".

In short, if the exporters were weak, so was the whole system and especially the fisherman. McIvor added that "in general, this commission is not aware of a worse pocket of poverty in Canada than the northern segments of the inland fishery". Fishermen in general were dissatisfied. "They are not happy, are not content, but are very discouraged".

McIvor concluded that clearing up the situation would take an export monopoly and more. With a single-desk exporting agency and no other change, any gains would disappear in the network of dealers and bring no help to the fisherman who should come first. He said, in effect, that the Government should take over marketing lock, stock, and barrel. It should buy the fish from the fishermen through its own agents, process the fish, and market it.

The six governments agreed, but only after taking another long look. They did economic studies, found that it would work, and finally in 1969 passed complementary legislation to set up the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. They all did this even though it went against the grain of a free enterprise society. Like many other governments in many countries, they finally decided that this fishery was a special situation which needed special action. They saw a chance for progress in terms of people and profits and they had the political will to work together to make it happen.

In addressing this bill, Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of process. Process is important in this matter, because, as I have said before, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation involves five other provincial partners; Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Northwestern Ontario, and the Northwest Territories. The legislation which established this corporation is effective because of companion legislation passed by those five jurisdictions. In addition, the federal Government entered into formal agreements respecting the operations of the corporation with the five Governments.

The House is already aware that the Government is deeply committed to improving the climate of federal-provincial relations. I would be concerned if we were to proceed on this matter in a unilateral fashion. In fact, the introduction of this Bill has already provoked reactions from four of the five governments. All four have expressed strong opposition to the intent of the Bill.

I move, seconded by the Members for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Valcourt):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-235, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry."

● (1640)

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how the amendment will affect my remarks. My instincts tell me to support my hon. colleague for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and support the amendment. However, considering that I am a new Member, perhaps you may be able to instruct me as to the procedural matter involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair cannot guide the Hon. Member and cannot participate in the debate. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on a point of order, then the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, if I heard the Hon. Member correctly, he was rising on a point of order and was not addressing the subject matter of the resolution. That means that he can still address the subject matter of the resolution and the amendment that is before the House.

With respect to his point of order, the Hon. Member, who represents the eastern riding next to the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), has probably had time to confer with the Member for Western Arctic and understand his position.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I appreciate the position of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk). I would advise him that there was agreement between the Parties to refer the subject matter to committee so that we could discuss in more detail some of the concerns of Members of the House. Possibly at that time he will be able to raise his concerns about this Bill.

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some comments concerning the Bill proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

There have been a number of objections raised by residents in my riding because the people in my riding have become more politically aware of the intrusion of federal and territorial governments into every aspect of their lives. This corporation is another example of that because it was originally designed to assist fishermen 50 years ago and may no longer be relevant today.

Some months ago I received a resolution from the annual meeting of the Keewatin Wildlife Federation, which is directly north of the Province of Manitoba. The Federation was requesting that I present on their behalf a resolution calling for the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to get out of the business of marketing fish in our region.

As the Hon. Member for Western Arctic said, perhaps more eloquently than I can, the Board has too much of a monopoly. People in the North want land claims to be settled and aboriginal rights to be entrenched in the Constitution because they believe that Governments are beginning to intrude too much into the everyday aspect of their lives.

While Inuit may have been considered not knowledgeable of Government matters and unable to govern their own affairs 15 years ago, many are now saying that they are able to address these issues themselves. This is just another example of a corporation that is perhaps designed more to help fishermen in the provinces and is no longer really relevant to the people in the North.

The resolution by the Federation asks the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) to rescind the provisions of the Board so that they no longer affect, them. They would like to keep it in the provinces where it might still do some good, but we do not want it in our region because we do much of our marketing today. It is delaying another attempt by them to do their own business with whom they want.

I am reminded of a case in Ottawa in which a businessman inquired whether he could import Arctic char from the Baffin regions, which is east of the Keewatin region. I told him that he could not do so because the regulations require him to go through the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board.

In conclusion, I am sure that the committee would be more than able to look into many of these concerns in greater detail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has been moved by Mr. Gass, seconded by Mr. Valcourt:

That Bill C-235, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gass) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is disposition to call it five o'clock.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: There are 44 motions in amendment on the Notice Paper at the report stage of Bill C-31, and Act to amend the Indian Act. All of these motions have been examined and I am now in a position to make a preliminary determination as to their procedural acceptability and to group them for debate.

Motion No. 1 is in order and will be debated and voted on by itself. Motion No. 2 gives the Chair some procedural difficulty in that it appears to go beyond the scope of the Bill by amending the parent Act. Likewise, Motions Nos. 3 and 4 also appear to be amending the parent Act. In addition, the Chair has serious concerns about the effect of Motion No. 4 on the Royal Recommendation. Motion No. 5 infringes upon the financial initiative of the Crown and thus is out of order.

Motions Nos. 5A, 6, 7 and 18A will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows: (a) an affirmative vote on Motion No. 5A will dispose of Motions Nos. 6 and 7 and no questions will be put to the House on Motions Nos. 6 and 7; (b) a negative vote on Motion No. 5A will require that the question be put on Motion No. 6; (c) an affirmative vote on Motion No. 6 will dispose of Motion No. 7 and no question will be put to the House on Motion No. 7; (d) a negative vote on Motion No. 6 will require that the question be put on Motion No. 7; (e) Motion No. 18A will be voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 6A, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 19 give the Chair some problems in that they all appear to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown and thus appear to be out of order.

Motions Nos. 13, 14, 14A, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 24 and 32A all deal with various aspects of Band Lists and should be grouped for debate but voted on as follows:

(a) An affirmative vote on motion No. 13 will dispose of motion No. 14. Therefore, no question will be put on motion No. 14. A negative vote on motion No. 13 will necessitate the question being put on motion No. 14.

(b) As motion No. 14A is dependent on motion No. 32A, it is the Chair's intention to put the question on motion No. 32A.

The decision of the House on motion No. 32A will also apply to motion No. 14A.

(c) Motions numbered 15 to 18, 20, 21 and 24 will be voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 19 was grouped with Motions Nos. 9, 10, 11 and 12 and was dealt with earlier. Motions Nos. 22 and 23 appear to go beyond the terms of the Royal Recommendation and this is a cause of concern to the Chair. They appear to be out of order.

Motion No. 24 was dealt with earlier. Motion No. 25 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 26 gives the Chair some difficulty in that it appears to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. Motion No. 27 also gives the Chair procedural difficulty in that it is attempting to amend the parent Act.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 28, 38 and 39 will be grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

Motion No. 28A appears to go beyond the scope of the Clause in that it expands the use of the term "dependents" and would thus infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown.

Motions Nos. 29 and 30A will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Motion No. 30, similarly, gives the Chair some procedural difficulty, in that it appears to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown.

Motion No. 30A I dealt with a moment ago.

Motion No. 31 also raises in the mind of the Chair some procedural concerns because it attempts to amend the parent Act.

Motion No. 32 will be debated and voted on by itself.

Motion No. 32A was dealt with earlier.

Motions Nos. 33 and 33A raise the same concerns expressed for motion No. 31, namely, these motions appear to be amending the parent Act.

[English]

Motions Nos. 34, 35 and 36 appear to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown, thus going beyond the Royal Recommendation. Motions Nos. 35A and 37A will be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motion No. 37 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 38 and 39 which were grouped with Motion No. 28 were dealt with earlier.

Motions Nos. 40 and 41 will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows: (a) an affirmative vote on Motion 40 will dispose of Motion No. 41 and no question will be put to the House on Motion No. 41; (b) a negative vote on Motion No. 40 will necessitate the question being put on Motion No. 41. Motion No. 42 will be debated and voted on separately.

It would be the Chair's intention to give Hon. Members an opportunity to speak to the procedural acceptability of the motions on which I have expressed some concern. Following Routine Proceedings today when the order for resuming debate is read, I will hear Hon. Members on their procedural arguments.

[Translation]

For the benefit of Hon. Members, these motions are numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6A, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28A, 30, 31, 33, 33A, 34, 35 and 36.

For the moment, debate will begin on motion No. 1, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 1

(a) by striking out line 4 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"1.(1) The definition of "elector"."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am proposing this amendment to the definition of "elector" to put more control into the hands of the band so that it may define who the elector is and if he or she should reside on the reserve. It does not necessarily imply that others will be eliminated from the electors' list by not living on band property; it will be strictly up to the band. I believe the amendment goes a long way in creating the situation for which we are all aiming—self-government for reserves and bands. I ask Hon. Members to consider Motion No. 1, as it simply extends the definition.

● (1110)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the House is discussing Motion No. 1, I thought I might spend a moment on the general sense of the matter which is before the House and the various motions which have been grouped in a fairly extensive fashion.

Three months ago, I asked Hon. Members to consider legislation which would eliminate two very great historical wrongs in Canada's legislation regarding Indian people: discriminatory treatment based on sex, and the practice of dictating to Indian communities who may and who may not be members of each community.

When I tabled the legislation I said that I did not want to proceed in a way which would increase control of all Indian communities and people, men and women alike, in a colonial fashion which is no longer acceptable in 1985. I have attempted to ensure that the legislation is not simply a well-intentioned attempt to redress the injustices of the past. That would inflict even greater injustice and irreparable damage upon the people of the First Nations.

Following the policy of the Government to seek consensus, I encouraged parties to talk to each other in an attempt to reconcile their differences and to accommodate each other's concerns. I spent many thoughtful hours attempting to understand and attempting to respond positively to the various requests. I invited those who sought new avenues to present them to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. That committee, under very able chairmanship, has done a heroic and conscientious job in considering all the ramifications of the legislation and in recommending improvement.

While there might be other ways to reach the objectives which I am sure we all agree must be reached, the three pillars of principles which underlie the Bill, are unshakable. The first principle was the removal of discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act. The second principle was the restoration of status and membership to those who lost status and membership as a result of the sex-based discriminatory provisions in the Act. The third principle was to ensure that Indian First Nations, who wished to do so, could control their own membership. Those are the three principles which we needed then and which we need now to allow us to find the balance and to proceed with serenity in passing this legislation in the face of any disappointment which may be expressed by persons or groups who were not able to accomplish 100 per cent of their particular objectives.

As I said, decolonizing is not a painless process. No one comes out being a 100 per cent winner. We can never go back to square one and start over. We have to begin with the reality which confronts us today. The committee—and I refer to its members from all Parties—performed a difficult and lengthy task with diligence, compassion and fairness. I want to take this opportunity to remind Members of the high quality of the discussion which we had three months ago.

I would like to address Motion No. 1 which is before the House. Two purposes of Bill C-31 are involved in the amendment to the definition of a child: first, the equal treatment of children, and second, the right of specific Indian individuals to transmit status to their children.

If an Indian person is capable of transmitting status to his or her natural child, it seems logical to extend that capability to include a child whom the Indian person might adopt, either legally as defined by provincial or territorial law, or by the custom of his or her people. The equal treatment of children in an immediate family is important to the preservation and integrity of the family unit. Band custom adoptions are not uncommon and very frequently involve a relative of the child in question.

Section 48(16) of the Indian Act, on the subject of "distribution of property on intestacy", already recognizes children adopted in accordance with Indian custom as having the same rights as a naturally born child or a legally adopted child. Surely, an Indian parent does not have to die intestate for his or her children to be recognized as equals by the federal Government. The amendment to the definition of "child" as outlined in Bill C-31, simply complements the right already recognized in Section 48. Even more important, this Bill would remove that feature of Bill C-31, which would ensure that in future all children will be treated equally whether born in or out of wedlock.

In 1985, what used to be called "illegitimacy" should not affect the registration of children with Indian parents. To adopt this motion would be a step backward in treating all Indians fairly, and I urge this House, with great respect, to reject it for the reasons I have given.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I also would oppose this first motion. The Hon. Member said that it only expanded the definition of who is an elector. That is not so. As the Minister pointed out, in effect it drops the new definition of "child", and the definition of "child" as we have it here is, "Child includes a child born in or out of wedlock, a legally adopted child and a child adopted in accordance with Indian custom". When the committee held hearings on Bill C-31, there were a fair number of witnesses who pointed out that it was necessary to expand the definition of "child" to include those children who are adopted in accordance with Indian customs, and as the Minister pointed out, in 1985 it is completely incongruous and anachronistic to maintain a distinction between children born in or out of wedlock. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, we will not support Motion No. 1, which would have the effect of removing this expanded definition of "child" from Bill C-31.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the motion which is now before us demonstrates the difficulty we are facing in this Bill. The Minister was correct in pointing out that decolonization is never a simple process, and the reason that we are into this difficulty is that we have involved ourselves to such an extent in the lives of the Indian people of this country that we must come down to the fine distinction as to who can be properly considered a "child" within the context of an Indian First Nation.

Since the Minister began with a rather general statement about the thrust of Bill C-31, perhaps I can briefly comment on that as well. When I consider the provisions, including this first motion, it seems to me that the situation we are faced with is not unlike that of two passenger aircraft which are flying in opposite directions and have a separation between them. That separation is usually a thousand feet or so. That is the difficulty we have in Canada. There is a desire in this country, particularly now that we have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, for individual or personal rights to be emphasized. At the same time, we have Indian First Nations which have never relinquished their autonomy. They have never turned over the control of their lives to the Government of Canada, to the Parliament of Canada. A long time ago, before any of us were here, that responsibility was assumed by the Government of Canada, and the rest of us have had to live with that ever since. As long as those aircraft are separated by 1,000 feet and flying in opposite directions, there is no difficulty. However, if that separation disappears, we have a clash.

That is the difficulty with Bill C-31, no matter which motion we debate. There is a cultural clash. We have individual rights which are a part of the Anglo Saxon tradition and part of the American tradition falling from the American Bill of Rights. Part of our traditions come from the French Revolution. All of that is dear to us who live in western democracies.

At the same time, in Canada we have another tradition which is equally valid but different, that is, the concept of collectivity, the concept of a group of people working together to protect their cultural integrity. The fact that we have assumed control over their lives to such a degree means that, inevitably, there will be a cultural clash. We are the ones who have the power, authority, and numbers. Therefore, the stage is set for grave injustices.

I know that the Minister is aware of this. All Hon. Members who served on the committee are aware of it. No matter what we do, when we involve ourselves in the lives of these people to such a degree as we are in clause 1 and in Motion No. 1 by defining who is a child, we find ourselves in an awkward, embarrassing, and difficult situation from which we cannot extricate ourselves with any grace. There is no answer to the problem.

As Members of Parliament we must constantly bear in mind that while we are engaged in this exercise our goal must be to put the emphasis on decision-making with the First Nations themselves. That is the direction in which we want to move. We cannot do that today with Bill C-31. We need too many other things. We need a constitutional amendment, if we can get it. We need agreements between Canada and Indian First Nations if and when we can get them. At the moment, no matter which motion we deal with today, we are going to be faced with this awkward and difficult situation.

Having said that, I must confess that it is confusing to know which way to go on Motion No. 1. In what way will we be interfering more or interfering less? The arguments of the Minister regarding illegitimate children and those who are adopted into the Indian First Nation ought to prevail. That would be the position of my Party.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: I have a few remarks I would like to make. When we started debate on Motion No. 1 I was looking for my notes. I have now found them and would request unanimous consent to be given three or four minutes to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Athabasca to complete his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, the Hon. Member for Athabasca has the floor.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the proposed definition in Bill C-31 reads as follows:

"child" includes a child born in or out of wedlock, a legally adopted child and a child adopted in accordance with Indian custom.

A Member who spoke previously talked about how much we should interfere in the running of bands and band government. The present definition of "child" in the Indian Act says that a child includes a legally adopted Indian child.

As the Minister pointed out, the over-all objective of Bill C-31 is the elimination of sexual inequality, the establishment of band control over band membership, and the restoration of lost rights. The insertion of the new definition of "child" in the Bill is not aimed at, nor does it achieve, any of the three objectives outlined previously by the Minister. I contend that the determination of who is a child is not an issue of sexual discrimination. One of the principles of the Bill, in my view, is to eliminate the acquisition or loss of status in band membership through marriage. The objective of my amendment is to eliminate the acquisition of status or band membership through adoption.

• (1125)

Essentially, if this amendment is not allowed to go through, a family or individual will then be able to impose an obligation on either the Government of Canada or on the band concerned as a result of a family decision. I do not think that that is correct. We are unaware of any band which has requested this Government to amend the definition of a child, but we are going ahead and doing this on our own. We are not only giving the power to create Indian status and band membership to a family, which increases the number of persons entitled to treaty benefits, but it also creates a problem on some reserves where a family makes a decision that certain people are going to be recognized as band members and treaty Indians.

Those are the comments that I would like to make. I think this will increase the charge on the taxpayers and it will certainly interfere at a very basic level with band membership and its control.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on this motion and make some comments, as Chairman of the Standing Committee, on the work done by the committee on this Bill. This is not the first attempt by Parliament to try to deal with a difficulty which has existed for close to 100 years. I have served on the committee for over 13 years now, and I know that over that time Members of Parliament and Ministers have brought this problem to the committee and the House many times. But as we moved on the constitutional process, Ministers became more serious regarding this matter. The committee was challenged by the Minister in the previous Government to deal with the situation. We had a special committee about two and a half years ago which met during the summer. Let me say, in answer to Members who will wonder why it did so, that it was in an attempt to try to deal with this question. A report was drafted and submitted to the Minister for his guidance.

About a year later, a Bill was presented to the House in the dying days of the session. An experience then took place of which I believe no member of any committee would wish to be a part. There was an attempt to deal with a question which is so serious to the lives of individuals in a matter of only a couple of days. The Bill failed. It failed not in the House of Commons but in the Senate. Of course, the session was over and therefore the issue came to an end. It has now been revived at this time in the House of Commons by the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). He outlined to the House on second reading the principles upon which the Government was standing and the Bill was drafted.

The committee took those principles seriously. The rules of the House limit what a committee can and cannot do. We went to work in our limited way and, as Chairman, I want to congratulate Members from all sides of the House who spent many hours not only trying to decipher the Bill but listening patiently to the intensive lobby from people interested in the Bill. These not only included Indians but many others in the country who have been concerned about this issue which involves discrimination, our attitude toward women and of course the very important issue of the treatment of Indian people of this country.

The committee spent 76 hours in public meetings and approximately three times as long preparing for those meetings. The committee heard 52 witnesses, starting at nine in the morning and often working until midnight in order to hear them. There were 10 written submissions from over 200 people, representing groups who did not appear at the hearings.

Members on the committee made 23 direct amendments to the Bill which were passed in the committee stage, 15 of which were a direct result of testimony that was given to the committee. The Minister and his staff were very helpful in assisting the committee draft the amendments properly and guiding us as we put them into the Bill.

As I said, we had some difficulty because we wanted to amend the Bill more fully than we were allowed. As chairman, I had to bring members to order from time to time as they attempted to put forward amendments that were not within the purview of the committee to pass. However, the committee made a recommendation to the Minister that he go to the Cabinet and get a Governor General's recommendation to make certain of those amendments. Some of them now appear on the Order Paper and we will be debating and voting on them soon.

As members of the committee studied the three principles of the Bill, they agonized whether they were doing the right thing. The committee often received opinions from both sides of the question and, as stated by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), members were involving themselves in the lives of other people and therefore had to make decisions according to the governmental process now in effect, according to the Act which has been rarely amended. As I watched members of the committee perform, they attempted to do everything possible in their experience to be fair to all sides involved in the question. I believe they did everything possible under the rules to be fair to the bands because they are the groups who have held their culture together.

During the last 100 years, the Government has put numerous roadblocks in their way and a review of history makes one wonder how many bands in this country have been able to exist. However, they did so through tenacious survival tactics.

When we make these changes again and involve ourselves in their lives, we must be cognizant that we do not involve ourselves in future injustices that will result from legislation that may appear to be an attempt to put one more solid punch between the eyes before Government gets itself out of the process and allows Indian people to become self governing bodies within the Canadian concept of society.

At this time we are discussing an important amendment about the treatment of children. It is a difficult decision to be made by Members in the House. I know that as we make the decision every consideration will be given to the debate that is put forward and the fact that we are involving ourselves in the lives of people. They are not machines that can be manipulated and dealt with inhumanely. We are dealing with people's lives today and in the future. We are determining how they will exist in this country. As we make these decisions, I hope Members are cognizant of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion No. 1 negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next group of motions consists of Motions Nos. 5A, 6, 7 and 18A.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moves:

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 44 to 49 at page 3 and lines 1 to 24 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"1951, under subparagraph 12(1)(a)(iii) pursuant to an order made under subsection 109(1), as each provision read immediately prior to April 17, 1985, or under any former provision of this Act relating to the same subject-matter as any of those provisions;

(e) the name of that person was omitted or deleted from the Indian Register, or from a band list prior to September 4, 1951,

(i) under section 13, as it read immediately prior to September 4, 1951, or under any former provision of this Act relating to the same subject-matter as that section, or

(ii) under section 111, as it read immediately prior to July 1, 1920, or under any former provision of this Act relating to the same subject-matter as that section; or".

Recommendation
(pursuant to Standing Order 79(6))

Her Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons that Bill C-31, An Act to amend the Indian Act, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 44 to 49 at page 3 and lines 1 to 24 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"1951, under subparagraph 12(1)(a)(iii) pursuant to an order made under subsection 109(1), as each provision read immediately prior to April 17, 1985, or under any former provision of this Act relating to the same subject-matter as any of those provisions;

(e) the name of that person was omitted or deleted from the Indian Register, or from a band list prior to September 4, 1951,

(i) under section 13, as it read immediately prior to September 4, 1951, or under any former provision of this Act relating to the same subject-matter as that section, or

(ii) under section 111, as it read immediately prior to July 1, 1920, or under any former provision of this Act relating to the same subject-matter as that section; or".

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moves:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 3 to 10 at page 4.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moves:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 9 and 10 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"(B) to enable that person to satisfy an occupational qualification to maintain or obtain employment, or".

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moves:

Motion No. 18A

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4

(a) by striking out line 17 and 18 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"tered under paragraph 6(1)(c) and ceased to be a member of that".

(b) by striking out lines 39 to 45 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

(a) if that person is entitled to be registered under paragraph 6(1)(d) or (e) and ceased to be a member of that band by reason of the circumstances set out in that paragraph; or

(b) if that person is entitled to be registered under paragraph 6(1)(f) or subsection 6(2) and a parent referred to that provision is entitled to have his name entered in the Band List or, if no longer living, was at the time of death entitled to have his name entered in the Band List."

(c) by striking out lines 3 to 6 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"the first day on which he would otherwise be entitled to have his name entered in the Band List of the band of which he ceased to be a member shall be deemed to be entitled to have his name so entered."

● (1140)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those motions are grouped for debate.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the grouping includes Motions Nos. 5A and 18A standing in my own name, motion No. 6 in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) and Motion No. 7 in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

I would like to deal with those four motions in this grouping, but first I want to deal with those standing in my own name and then with the other two motions.

Motion No. 5A will ensure that all those who were enfranchised for whatever reason can regain status under the Indian Act. The related amendment, Motion 18A provides that decisions on band membership for this group will be made according to membership rules adopted by the bands themselves. If bands do not adopt such rules within two years, those enfranchised would also be entitled to band membership under federal law.

Bill C-31 as tabled proposed to restore Indian status and band membership to those who lost them through enfranchisement in circumstances deemed to be unfair. Such circumstances included enlisting in the Armed Forces, receiving a university degree or entering the clergy before 1920 or obtaining or maintaining a job.

It became very evident at the standing committee and elsewhere that more categories of enfranchisement could reasonably be considered as unfair. Several groups argued that all enfranchisements had been unfair.

On the other hand, granting band membership directly to all who had been enfranchises voluntarily under Subsection 109(1) and related sections, as well as their wives and children enfranchised with them, could be unfair to the bands and, indeed, fly in the face of our approved understanding of the importance of Indian control of Indian communities.

The fairest compromise in this matter, in my view, Mr. Speaker, is the following: First, to grant status under the Indian Act to all those enfranchised under Section 109(1) and related sections. Second, to leave band membership to be determined by the bands' own rules, which is Motion No. 18A. Specifically, this motion amends paragraph 6(1) of Bill C-31 to refer to all those enfranchised under Subsection 109(1). As a result, all references to categories of unfair enfranchisement are deleted. Nor would the Minister be required to exercise discretion in cases not falling into any of the specific categories as had been suggested at the standing committee. Not only do Motions Nos. 5A and 18A offer a balanced approach on restoration of rights to those enfranchised, but this approach will also lead to fairer and easier administration of the law.

The new Section 6(1)(e) refers to two sections of previous versions of the Indian Act that also resulted in enfranchisement. Section 13, before 1951, resulted in removal from band lists if a person were absent from Canada for more than five years. Section 111, before 1920, lead to loss of status for persons who gained a university degree or joined the clergy or a profession. These government motions will affect about 8,000 people who were enfranchised under Section 109(1). Previously it was estimated that only about half of these people would have benefited from Bill C-31. Their first generation descendants will also be eligible for status under the Indian Act.

That completes my remarks with respect to Motions Nos. 5A and 18A standing in my name to amend Bill C-31 as it came out of the committee. I would like to have the House support Motions Nos. 5A and 18A.

Let me now turn my attention to Motions Nos. 6 and 7. Motion No. 6 stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands which deals with a part of the amendment that I have put forward as a Royal Recommendation. I suggest, as outlined in Motions Nos. 5A and 18A, that the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, if it is not ruled out of order, be not supported given the changes made through Motions Nos. 5A and 18A. In the circumstances I am asking that Motion No. 6 not be supported.

Motion No. 7 moved by the Hon. Member for Athabasca deals with a technical adjustment to one of the categories of unfair enfranchisement which was specified in the Bill as originally tabled. In my view, approval of Motions Nos. 5A and 18A would make Motion No. 7, with great respect meaningless since all reference to such categories would be dropped. I urge the House to reject Motion No. 7 as well as Motion No. 6, and urge the House to support Motions Nos. 5A and 18A as a significant improvement to the Bill flowing from the discussions in the standing committee.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the position of my Party regarding this grouping of amendments will be to support Motions Nos. 5A and 18A. Before I get into the background of why these amendments were required, let me express a word of appreciation for the way in which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has responded in amendments Nos. 5A and 18A to the wishes of the committee. This demonstrates a high degree of co-operation and of working together to achieve what the committee members felt to be a continuing injustice if an amendment were not put forward. The Minister has responded. Members of the committee are grateful for that.

If Hon. Members look carefully at the Order Paper, they will notice Motion No. 5, which is in my name, has been ruled out of order by the Speaker. There can be no procedural argument against that at all because such a motion does require Royal Recommendation. I hope, some day when we reform Parliament, that we will do something to spruce up the way we handle the report stage of Bills coming out of committee. Our committee Chairman quite rightly pointed out that to extend the range or categories of people eligible for the recognition of status obviously involves the expenditure of public money because such persons are eligible for certain benefits, such as post-secondary education and health care premiums. So it is not good sense at all to have the same motion come back in the House after it has been ruled on in the committee. However, that has been the practice of the House of Commons for as long as I have been here and until we hear from the reform committee a better way of dealing with the report stage, that is the situation.

● (1150)

It does give me the opportunity at least to compare my Motion No. 5 with the Minister's Motion No. 5A. The thrust is basically the same except that I went somewhat further than the Minister did. There were certain categories, for example, Métis people who had received script, who had been included in my motion and they are not in the Minister's motion. The acceptance of 5A and 18A gives us no difficulty at all.

Having said that, allow me, Mr. Speaker, to provide a little background and then to conclude with the comment about the distinction between status and membership in an Indian First Nation.

First of all, the background: it may surprise some Hon. Members in this House, I am sure it will surprise a lot of Canadian people who are not given to examine carefully all aspects of the history of this country, that within the Indian Act there is a good deal of Canadian history, an attitudinal approach to the aboriginal people of Canada.

Whether the Fathers of Confederation were not aware, or whether they were too much aware; but by assuming control over Indian people and subsequently Parliament passing the Indian Act, there was a policy in place that could be very accurately described, although it is crude and rough, as a policy of termination. That will shock a lot of Canadians because the very term smacks a little bit of the "final solution" coming out of the Third Reich. Of course there was nothing physical about the policy of termination, but there was everything cultural about it. It was in fact a policy of cultural genocide, to gradually do away with a distinct aboriginal or Indian culture in this country and to do so by a series of enticements which would allow individual Indian persons to remove themselves from certain prohibitions that were imposed upon them if they did not find the enticements to be attractive.

Among those enticements were the rights to vote, before it was extended to Indian people by an Act of this Parliament; the right to consume alcoholic beverages in public places; the right to go to universities and enlist in the Armed Forces; all of those categories that the Minister mentioned, if an Indian chose any one of those he was, so to speak, enfranchised. To say that in another way, he was terminated. He was no longer considered in the eyes of the Government of Canada to be an Indian.

So we have that very strange term in this country, which I am sure would baffle anyone. The term is non-status Indian. Let us say that you went to some other part of the world, Australia, for example, where there is also a significant aboriginal population and tried to explain to a legislator in any one of the Australian states or in the federal Parliament, which they call the Commonwealth, that we, by an Act of Parliament, have categorized Indian people; those who are of mixed blood, the Métis; those who have made certain decisions vis-à-vis the Indian Act as non-status; and those who have not made that decision as status, and if you could explain that in a logical, rational way to someone who does not live in Canada or has not been a part of it, then you are a much better teacher than I am, because the end result of that is just a puzzlement.

We can remove the puzzlement here because we know what the intention was. The intention was that, over a period of time—I do not think anyone knew how long it would take—the Indian people would disappear. They would be integrated. They would be assimilated. They would become part of the mainstream, and we would encourage this to happen by certain provisions of the Indian Act.

That is what we mean, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about terminating a people or enacting legislation which results in cultural genocide. Over a period of time it was hoped I think by the Fathers of Confederation, if they thought about it at all, but it must have been thought about by the framers of the first version of the Indian Act, that we will get rid of these people.

The Chairman of the committee has quite rightly noted that the Indian people of Canada have had tremendous tenacity, that now, deep into the 20th century, they still survive. They still have their cultural identity which is distinct and which is deeply held on to by these people despite all of the winds of adversity that have blown against them for so many decades, for a period of time that exceeds a century. They have held on to certain fundamental rights that they emphasize they have never, never relinquished: the right to control and manage and direct their own affairs; the right to be self-governing; they never relinquished that. They have not relinquished their own cultural integrity to any other authority. They retained all of that. What they did was to make generous room in this country for those who came from other parts of the world. In some cases they entered into treaties with the colonizers. Unfortunately, although those treaties are sacrosanct, highly respected and highly regarded, nevertheless I think, even though they have almost a sacred quality for Indian people, we all recognize that there was unequal negotiation for those treaties, that the colonizers had an advantage and they took advantage of these people.

All of that has continued up until the present time, and now at long last we have revealed this policy for all that it is. I think we have stripped away the disguise. Part of that was done by the work of the special committee on Indian Self-government and many Members who are present in the House today who worked in that special committee will know what I am talking about. We stripped away the disguise of the policy of termination or cultural genocide and we said that we have to restore that original right which was never relinquished, the right to be self-determining within the context of the Canadian Confederation.

It does not need to be repeated here again that there is nothing threatening about this to anybody. There is no question here of separating the First Nations from Canada. There is no question here of setting up some kind of Canadian apartheid system, none of that. That is what we have now. That is exactly what we have now. We have people who are segregated now, who are dominated by an Act of Parliament called the Indian Act which dominates no other group of people in Canada. Can you tell me of another group of people in this country who would allow themselves to be controlled and regulated in every aspect of their lives by an Act of Parliament? No other group of people in this country would tolerate it for one single day. They would be here on Parliament Hill in vigorous demonstration asking for the repeal of the whole Act, because you cannot take a group of people and put them under a totalitarian regime such as we have done with the Indian Act when, disguised within that totalitarian scheme, is a scheme or plan or, if I may say so, a plot eventually not to need the Indian Act any more because there will no longer be any Indian people.

All of that has been resisted and the Indian people have gained allies in the Parliament of Canada. They have gained allies among some of the provincial Premiers, unfortunately not a sufficient number. But they will win; history is on their side; they will win. They will become self-governing entities within this country and they will be out from under the domination and the control of the Indian Act.

This policy of termination is now at long last coming to an end. The amendments that the Minister has proposed, the amendments that the committee recommended, go in that direction of saying, stop; stop taking away from people who call themselves Indian people, through some clause of an Act of Parliament saying that someone is no longer an Indian, however, if someone wants to call themselves something else such as non-status, we will accept that.

● (1200)

The Indian Act had a large number of ways of taking away the status of an Indian person. Sometimes this was done voluntarily and sometimes it was done involuntarily. During the committee hearings, we recognized that the distinction between voluntary and involuntary was a very false one because there were so many social, psychological, economic and cultural pressures that might cause a person to so-called voluntarily disenfranchise. Was that voluntary enfranchisement really voluntary? Did the person really know what he was doing? If the person was married and had children, did he sit down with his family to discuss the implications of this decision? We heard testimony that indicated that that did not occur.

While Bill C-31 says that we will allow Indian people to have their status restored, I do not think that we can be as selective about who will be able to have this opportunity as we were in the first version of Bill C-31. The committee indicated we should extend the privilege to other persons who were disenfranchised or lost their Indian status so they may apply to the Registrar to have their status restored.

I would like to conclude by drawing the distinction that the Minister drew between status and band membership because we do not want this to be interpreted as imposing persons upon First Nations without their consent. In the course of the committee hearings, the Minister was asked to define status, and the definition that he offered was a relationship between the Government of Canada and an individual Indian person. Recognizing that relationship and giving it legitimacy also means that there are certain benefits that flow from it.

In these amendments, we are saying that a large range of categories of Indian persons will have the opportunity to have their lost status as Indians restored. However, the matter of membership will then be up to the bands, provided, as the Minister pointed out, that after a period of two years, they have put in place a band membership code. If the bands have this code, people will be able to apply to them for band membership. If the First Nations fail to put together a band membership code, then these persons will be imposed upon them by having their names placed on the bamd membership list.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, you can see that we are moving in the right direction. However, we are moving cautiously in the right direction and we have not yet totally and completely relinquished the right of the Parliament of Canada to deal in such minute detail with something that is so absolutely central to the autonomy and ability of First Nations to define their own membership and citizenship. We are caught right in the middle of this maelstrom. The Chairman of the committee described very well the agony and sense of frustration that every single Member feels.

In the name of justice, if we are going to extend the right to have status restored to some, we cannot make these artificial distinctions between those who relinquish their status voluntarily and those who relinquish their status involuntarily. I think we must open the gates much wider. This will mean additional costs and obligations for the Government of Canada, but I think that they are costs and obligations that we should willingly bear.

We must face up to the fact that the imposition of persons on First Nations without their consultation and without them having their own membership or citizenship code continues in a way that none of us really want to see. However, we are in an evolutionary process. I think we are making slow progress. I am convinced that much of this problem will be swept away when we take the large step.

One of those constitutional conferences will succeed and will say either that an aboriginal right in this country is the right to be self-governing or, through the courts, that the right to self-government already exists in the Constitution as a primary and basic aboriginal right even though it is not spelled out in the Constitution for greater certainty and clarity. Once that decision is made, we will not need to focus our attention on this endeavour into which the efforts of the committee, the Minister and his officials have gone. We all know that no matter what we come up with at the end of this day or the next, none of us will be fully satisfied.

Every amendment that we approve or reject must be done in recognition of the fact that at some point, and let it not be too far down the road, we will have to take the big leap forward so that in the next Parliament and the Parliament after that we will not be engaged in the same kind of exercise. It is long overdue that we cease this constant meddling and interfering and turn over matters like this to the proper authorities, namely, the Indian First Nations themselves.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to indicate that we will be supporting the Minister's Motions Nos. 5A and 18A. As well, I would like to make a few comments about my own amendment, Motion No. 6. Perhaps I could make a few preparatory comments.

For the first time, Bill C-31 is drawing a fairly sharp distinction between band membership on the one hand and Indian status on the other. Perhaps it is inevitable and necessary that we take this step as an interim one. I think it is important to remember that, going back in history, the Governments of Great Britain and later Canada dealt with Indian peoples primarily as peoples.

The whole concept of Indian status whereby the Government deals particularly with Indians as individuals is someting new. We are now refining that definition to some extent. While in the past, Indian status and band membership had been largely coterminous, now they are not nearly so much so. In fact, in the future we will see for the first time band members who will not have Indian status and we will see an increasing number of people who will have Indian status without band membership. I do not think any of us in this House are fully aware of all of the ramifications of that.

As we move toward a system of Indian self-government and recognition of the basic rights of Indian people, I think it is incumbent upon us to move away from the concept of recognizing Indian status as pertaining to individual Indian people. We should be dealing more and more with the recognition of the rights of Indian nations as nations so that we will recognize their rights as a people.

We heard testimony before the committee indicating that there should be no such concept as Indian status and that the Government should be dealing only with Indian nations and nations. Others came before us to say that what the Government wants to do in terms of Indian status for individuals is the Government's own business, that their business is with their people as a people, and that the whole concept of Indian status is a bit irrelevant. However, I think there was the overwhelming feeling that if we are to have the concept of Indian status, anyone recognized by the Indian people as being a band member should also be recognized as having Indian status in the eyes of the Government. I regret to say that the amendments brought forth by the Minister do not yet satisfy that requirement. This is a serious shortcoming in the Bill and one that continues to exist.

Clause 4 of the Bill contains a number of subclauses and basically repeals Sections V to XIV of the Indian Act. Those are the sections that deal with who is entitled to be registered as an Indian and who is entitled to have band membership. They develop a new system of determining who will be entitled to be registered as an Indian and who will have band membership.

• (1210)

Clause 6 of the Bill determines who is entitled to be registered. Basically it says that those who are entitled to be registered are those who already have such entitlement, those who lost status under paragraph 12(1)(b) or paragraph 12(1)(a)(iv) of the old Indian Act, and, subject to certain conditions, those who were enfranchised. The conditions are outlined in Clause 6(d)(i) for people who were enfranchised are as follows:

(A) as the result of the enlistment of that person in the Canadian Forces, the armed forces of Her Majesty wherever raised or the armed forces of any state allied or associated with Canada, or

(B) so that that person might obtain or maintain employment—

People who were enfranchised under those conditions will once again be eligible for Indian status. The testimony which the committee heard time and again pointed out that that distinction was completely arbitrary and absolutely unfair.

We were asked in committee hearings about the people who wanted the basic right to vote. Until the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker recognized that right for Indian people, they had to be enfranchised in order to obtain that basic right. What an affront that was to democracy! The basic right to consume alcohol, to go into a beer parlour or a liquor store, was something which status Indians did not have. For many young Indian people, that was discrimination. That is when they first realized that to be an Indian was to be discriminated against. Some Indian people became enfranchised to obtain liquor rights. Sometimes that is looked down upon by other Indian and non-Indian people. They feel that those Indians sold their birthright to have the ability to drink. Every Member in the House was once 18 or 19. Most of us remember how important it was to be able to have the right to go into a beer parlour and buy liquor.

Enfranchisement took place for a number of reasons. I am pleased to see that the Minister has recognized that to limit reinstatement to those who were enfranchised for the purpose of getting employment or for the purpose of serving in the Armed Forces, is a completely arbitrary situation. The Minister has proposed that the people should have the right to be registered if they have been enfranchised. In Motion No. 18A the Minister has given the bands the right to determine whether or not those people should have band membership. That is a compromise. It might make the legislation marginally more acceptable to some people and marginally less acceptable to others. I believe that it would be unjust not to restore band membership to people who once had it, but who lost it unjustly. It would be unjust to grant band membership to those who never had it. It would be unjust to force those people into band membership.

It has been noted previously that there is no ideal solution to the situation. We are dealing with the whole policy of decolonization. We cannot do that with clean hands. The Minister, and all Members who are involved in decolonizing, have dirty hands. However, I believe that Motions Nos. 5A and 18A are reasonable compromises. We have a responsibility to deal with the situation. I believe the Minister has come up with a compromise which is as reasonable as that which could be suggested by our Party or by the Liberal Party. On that basis, we are prepared to support the amendments.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-31, as it was approached in committee, gives status to some persons who voluntarily enfranchised, either to join the army or to get a job. Other Indians who voluntarily left will not get status. I think Hon. Members are missing the impact which that could have on individual bands.

The way in which the Bill is presently constructed requires that lists be kept by the Department. If a two-year period elapses and the band has not implemented membership rules and regulations, the list which has been kept by the Department is automatically imposed on that band. There are a lot of bands in isolated communities which will not be totally familiar with the amendments which have been brought forward by the Minister within that two-year period. I see that as a danger.

Another very specific danger is what the legislation will do right across the country. Within the grouping I have moved Motion No. 7, which will not be voted on if Motion No. 5A is passed. However, in moving Motion No. 7 I was attempting to limit those who could receive status. A problem which faces Canadians, particularly those in my area, is that status Indians are allowed to hunt and fish out of season. Currently, there are challenges before the courts because status Indians who are working for Syncrude, Suncor and other oil companies in northern Alberta on Crown lands are claiming tax exempt status. I believe there are a lot more implications to this particular amendment than those which have been addressed.

Many bands will assume immediate control of their membership lists. However, my contention is that many bands will not do that.

I know of a number of individuals in Alberta who have left wealthy bands during the last five years. When they voluntarily enfranchised, they took with them a great deal of money from band trust accounts. Some people took upwards of $300,000 and some took $150,000 or $200,000. From the moment this Bill is passed, once again, those people will automatically become status Indians. I do not believe we are being sufficiently careful. I cannot remember many groups which came before the committee requesting that the legislation be expanded in this way.

• (1220)

I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for the Penner Report on Indian Self-Government. The Department of Indian Affairs, all of us generally agree, is a monster of inefficiency and waste which we are trying to eliminate within a certain period of time so that the Indian people can become like any other Canadian, not having to answer to a Department of Indian Affairs. This Bill ensures that we are going to have the Department of Indian Affairs, with its bureaucracy, around for a very long time because we are increasing the number of status Indians from its present level. I would suggest we may even double the number of status Indians—not band members—across the country.

In Alberta there are Métis who have been members of the Métis Association of Alberta since they were young men. They have fought for the Métis cause, have lived as Métis, but now will be treaty Indians under this amendment. It has to stop somewhere. I think we should very carefully limit those who are granted reinstatement from the voluntary side. If these people left voluntarily, who are we to say, "The decision you people made years ago is not the right decision and we are going to make you Indians again"? They left voluntarily for a number of reasons. My grandfather voluntarily sold the mineral rights to his homestead. I cannot go back and say that he made a mistake when he voluntarily did it. He is dead now, but if he were alive he could not go back and say, "I made a mistake. Now that oil has been found on my homestead, I really shouldn't have done that". That is what we are talking about. It was not an easy thing to do. If someone wanted voluntarily to enfranchise, it was not just a case of going into the office and saying, "I want to quit" and signing a form. It took a year, and in some cases two years, to do so. We are trying that within a one-year or two-year period, people will have had time to think it over and we should not now say, "No matter how you thought then, we are now going to change things and make you an Indian. You cannot give up your status". I believe we have not given enough thought to that matter and I propose to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will be happy to know that it is not my intention to rise to speak on every amendment. However, I would like to make just a few comments on this clause because I believe it is important. I am not going to attempt to comment on the excellent speech and history lesson given to us by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) because I think he outlined the basis upon which we now debate this clause.

I would like to remind Hon. Members who served on the special committee of the word "trust". When that committee began its work, we had a very interesting experience in the Province of Alberta. We recognized that over the years the House of Commons had lost the trust of the band members across this country. They were constantly aware of the very points about which the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior talked, the policies of the past Government. Every time an Hon. Member of Parliament came to the reserve saying that he was there to do good things, the Indian people immediately said, "Just a minute. We have had some experience with the good things you talk about".

There is another word I would remind Hon. Members of, and that is the word "consent". Parliament, which assumed that it had certain responsibilities, could invoke laws which impinged upon the lives of the Indian people. Those two words, I believe, are very important as we amend the Indian Act one more time. As we said in the committee report, we should move toward allowing again the self-governing process to take place in this country for Indian people. But with this Bill we will again impose band membership on the Indian people, that is band membership for those people who lost it under subparagraph 12(1)(b). This amendment, I believe, is consistent with the report in which I believe so strongly which says that we trust Indian people to bring back to the reserve members of their family and people who they think have a right to be there and who will contribute to the community.

I congratulate the Minister for this amendment because he is giving our trust to these people who were voluntarily or involuntarily enfranchised. We are giving our trust to the Indian bands and allowing them back to band membership if they feel they have the right to be there. That was the basis upon which we reported to this House some time ago.

In this Bill there is a recognition as well of the fact that after this Bill is passed, Parliament cannot extract itself from the process. We must review what is happening, and if we find that the courts impose themselves upon this legislation and change it in any way which can be pointed out to be detrimental to the Indian people of this country, we must involve ourselves again in that process. This Bill provides that two years from now the Minister and the parliamentary committee will review this process.

The two amendments put forward by the Government, I believe, are good amendments to the legislation. They were, in part, asked for by the committee and I support them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 5A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Motion No. 5A agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: An affirmative vote on Motion No. 5A disposes of Motions Nos. 6 and 7.

Motions Nos. 6 and 7 dropped.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now vote on Motion No. 18A. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 18A agreed to.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take it that Motions Nos. 6 and 7 were disposed of as a consequence of the affirmative vote on Motion No. 5A?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister is correct. So far, Motion No. 1 was lost. Motion No. 5A was adopted. Motion No. 18A was adopted. There will be no votes on Motions Nos. 6 and 7 because of the vote on Motion No. 5A. The Speaker has given the opportunity to Hon. Members of the House to make comments on the acceptability of the other motions.

The next group of motions which are grouped for debate are Motions Nos. 13, 14, 14A, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 24 and 32A.

The mover of Motion No. 13 is not present in the House. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) to move the motion in place of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the preliminary ruling by the Speaker this morning, Item No. 7(a) says that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 will dispose of Motion No. 14. Therefore, no question will be put on Motion No. 14. I would like to submit, Mr. Speaker, that Motions Nos. 13 and 14 are two quite distinct issues. Motion No. 13 relates to the question of who is eligible to vote with regard to the establishment of band membership rules. Motion No. 14 requires a mandatory instead of a permissive appeal mechanism, and so I do not see how we can say that Motion No. 13 will dispose of Motion No. 14. I request the Chair's attention to that matter.

• (1230)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Speaker has already ruled on the group of motions that I am about to put to the House. What I suggest to the Hon. Member is that debate will start on the grouping as I have given it now, and if the Hon. Member wishes to make additional comments this afternoon during Routine Proceedings, which is the time the Speaker has allotted concerning other motions, he may do so at that time.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, you quite rightly drew attention to the fact that my colleague who was to move Motion No. 13 is unable to be here this morning. However, I know that she feels very strongly about this motion and certainly wishes to speak to it. You asked whether I would move that motion in her name. I will not be able to do so because of a different point of view on its impact. But I think the whole grouping is going to entail a good deal of debate; it is central to the issue we are dealing with here.

Therefore, I would ask the Speaker whether he would agree that this particular grouping be stood until after Question Period and that we move ahead to the next item, which would be Motion No. 25. In the Speaker's ruling it is item No. 11, Motion No. 25 to be debated and voted on separately. I would ask for unanimous consent of the House to stand that one group, proceed on to Motion No. 25 for the remainder of the time available or perhaps the one following that, and let that other grouping be debated this afternoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I certainly understand the constructive intent of the Hon. Member. My thought was that we should try as far as possible to deal with these matters in sequence, and the Hon. Member's colleague will have an opportunity of addressing her motion when she is in the House, I am sure. Because of time constraints, we might want to proceed with this grouping as such. It will allow us to carry on debate, without being too technical, regardless of whether or not the Member is here. We can always revert to this item when the Member returns, if that deals with the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). My concern is similar to that of the Government House Leader, that we maintain the order which I think we have implicitly agreed upon. I assume we will not conclude prior to one o'clock because there are nine or ten of these motions. If we did, it would certainly be a wonder of efficiency. I take it from the Government House Leader that we can move back to allow the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) to comment on Motion No. 13. There are a number of motions in front of us and many Members of this House who would like to comment on them, so I hope we would not necessarily move through the whole of this grouping but, rather, allow the flow of debate to go forward. It seems to me that if we are in danger of passing through these motions prior to one o'clock, we could perhaps deal with the question of procedure at that time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am on Motion No. 13. I understand the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) can speak when she comes in, but right now I need a mover for Motion No. 13. If not, I will have to declare it withdrawn.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern of the House Leader and the Minister that to jump ahead does confuse the issue. I also appreciate that we want to proceed in order; there is no problem there. However, I have to tell the House quite forthrightly that my problem is that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) feels very strongly about her motion. She made a significant contribution in committee and I think she deserves the opportunity to make her case. Perhaps what we can do, rather than moving the whole grouping, is to move on to Motion No. 14 and let that be the engine which starts the debate on this grouping. That motion is in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). If that could be done, and if we then allowed the Hon. Member for Mount Royal to move her motion as soon as she is back in the House this afternoon, it would present no procedural difficulty and I would appreciate it on behalf of my colleague.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The suggestion by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior is unacceptable to the Chair because the adoption of Motion No. 13 would dispose of Motion No. 14. The only way it would be possible is if we left those two motions out for the time being.

Miss MacDonald: Let someone get up and move it for her.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand that there is unanimous consent to start with the grouping of Motion No. 14A and leave Motion No. 13 and Motion No. 14 for the time being?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is clearly on the understanding that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) will be here this afternoon. I do not want this to be delayed indefinitely. If we have a commitment that she will be here to move Motion No. 13 immediately upon Orders of the Day being called this afternoon, I think it would be reasonable. Otherwise we would have to take a vote on the motion at that time.

Mr. Penner: My understanding is that the Hon. Member will be here, and I am speaking on her behalf in asking that this delay be agreed to by the House, and I thank the House Leader for his co-operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, we will leave Motions No. 13 and 14 for now and start the grouping with Motion No. 14A.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moves:

Motion No. 14A

(a) by adding immediately after line 35 at page 6 the following:

"(3) Where the council of a band makes a by-law under paragraph 81(p.4) bringing this subsection into effect in respect of the band, the consents required under subsections (1) and (2) shall be given by a majority of the members of the band who are of the full age of eighteen years."

(b) and by renumbering the subsequent subsections accordingly.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moves:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 36 to 48 at page 6 and lines 1 to 4 at page 7.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moves:

Motion No. 16

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 22 at page 7 the following:

"(6.1) Upon receipt of any notice under subsection 10(5), the Registrar shall not thereafter add or delete any name to or from the Band List for the band unless the Minister gives notice in writing to the band council of his decision that the membership rules do not comply with the conditions set out in subsection (1) or subsection (11) and, in that event, the Registrar shall not add any name to the Band List for that band until the expiration of a period of 180 days after the Minister has given notice of his decision in writing to the band council.

(6.2) Within six months after the Minister has given notice to a band council under subsection 10(6.1), the band council may either

(a) give any further notice or notices to the Minister under subsection 10(5), or

(b) appeal the decision of the Minister to a court referred to in subsection 14.3(5) and, in the event that an appeal is taken under this subsection from a decision of the Minister, the provisions of subsections 14.3(2), 14.3(3) and 14.3(4) shall apply as if reference in subsection 14.3(4) to the Registrar were references to the Minister.

(6.3) In the event that, within six months after the Minister has given notice to a band council under subsection 10(6.1) the band council gives any further notice to the Minister under subsection 10(5) and the Minister decides that the further membership rules for that band provided to the Minister pursuant to that subsection do not comply with the conditions set out in subsection (1), the Minister may refer his decision to a court referred to in subsection 14.3(5) and the provisions of subsection 14.3(2), 14.3(3) and 14.3(4) shall thereupon apply mutatis mutandis as if the Minister was a person taking an appeal under subsection 14.3(2) and as if references to the Registrar in subsection 14.3(4) were references to the Minister.

(6.4) After the commencement of an appeal under subsection 10(6.2) or subsection 10(6.3) in respect of the membership rules of a band, the Registrar shall not thereafter add or delete any name to the Band List for that band until the final resolution of such appeal."

● (1240)

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moves:

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 3 at page 8 the following:

"(11) In this section, "elector" includes every person whose name is included on the band list and is of the full age of eighteen years."

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moves:

Motion No. 18

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 3 at page 8 the following:

"(11) Subject to subsection (12), subsections (3) and (4) shall not apply where, at any particular time before April 17, 1987, the council of a band gives notice to the Minister under subsection 10(5) and it is established to the reasonable satisfaction of the Minister that

(a) the number of persons alive at the particular time who were entitled on April 17, 1985 to have their names entered in the Band List for the band pursuant to paragraph 11(1)(c) is more than 20% of the number of persons whose names were entered in the Band List for the band immediately prior to April 17, 1985;

(b) the aggregate of the number of persons alive at the particular time who were entitled on April 17, 1985 to have their names entered in the Band List for the band pursuant to paragraph 11(1)(c) and the number of dependent children of such persons is more than 20% of the number of persons whose names were entered in the Band List for the band immediately prior to April 17, 1985 and who at the particular time are ordinarily resident on reserve lands set apart for the use and benefit in common of the members of the band; or

(c) the number of persons alive at the particular time who were entitled on April 17, 1985 to have their names entered in the Band List for the band pursuant to paragraph 11(1)(c) and who at the particular time are over the age of eighteen (18) years is more than 20% of the number of persons who were electors of the band immediately prior to April 17, 1985.

(12) Subsection (11) shall not apply unless the membership rules established by the band provide that

(a) all persons who would be entitled to have their names entered in the Band List for the band pursuant to paragraph 11(1)(c), paragraph 11(1)(d) or subsection 11(2) if the Band List was maintained in the Department shall be entitled to have their names entered in a transitional list which shall be maintained by the band;

(b) any person whose name appears in a transitional list shall be entitled to apply to the council of the band for membership in the band and to have his name transferred from the transitional list to the Band List for the band;

(c) all applicants for membership in the band and for transfer from the transitional list to the Band List pursuant to paragraph (b)shall be entitled to a hearing by the council of the band or by a committee established in accordance with such rules; and

(d) all applications for membership in the band and for transfer from the transitional list to the Band List pursuant to paragraph (b) shall be dealt with fairly and equitably without discrimination on the basis of sex.

(13) The name of a person who is entitled to have his name entered in a transitional list pursuant to paragraph 12(a) is not required to be entered therein unless an application for entry therein is made to the council of the band on or before April 17, 1990."

Motion No. 20

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 40 at page 10 the following:

"13.4 No person shall be entitled to have his name entered in a Band List under paragraph 11(1)(c) unless the application is made on or before April 17, 1990."

Motion No. 21

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 10 to 15 at page 12.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moves:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 30 at page 13 the following:

"General

14.4 (1) Where the total number of persons whose names have been entered on a band list under paragraph 11(1)(c) and who have attained the age of eighteen years equals or exceeds fifty percent of the total number of members of the band who have attained the age of eighteen years, no amendment may be made to any trust arrangement relating to the assets of the band without the consent of a majority of the electors of the band and a majority of the electors of the band who were members of the band immediately prior to April 17, 1985.

(2) This section shall cease to have effect on April, 1995 or earlier if requested by the Band Council."

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moves:

Motion No. 32A

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 22 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"band;

(p.4) to bring subsection 10(3) or 64.1(2) into effect in respect of the band;"."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All of the motions that have been put to the House will be grouped for debate.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, before I begin to make comments with respect to the series of motions before us, I take it that, given the procedural change, we are now dealing with Motion Nos. 14A, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 24, and 32A. As opposed to the grouping, we are not dealing with Motions Nos. 13 or 14 in order to accommodate a procedural necessity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is right.

Mr. Crombie: Thank you very much. I have some comments specifically with respect to all or most of these motions. I would first like to indicate that, as the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) indicated, there are many aspects that are central to this Bill, and this is one of them. The voting rights regarding band membership rules and eligibility on the assumption of band membership control is very important because it goes a long way toward the principle of band control of band membership.

All of these motions before us are an attempt, from various perspectives, to try to fix up the situation. The situation is interesting because in many ways the current situation has evolved according to certain specific needs. Under the current provisions of the Bill, eligibility to vote varies from band to band. Some bands use the principle of the definition of "ordinarily resident" in the Indian Act. Others use a customary system and allow any band member to vote whether or not he or she resides on the reserve.

The short point I would like to make is to recognize that there is a variety which has arisen across the country over many years in response to the peculiarities and particularities of the particular band. My amendment seeks to ensure that that principle remains. There are motions with which I will deal in a moment that attempt to make it uniform across the country. While such uniformity may provide more clarity and understanding, I suggest that it is not the proper way to proceed. It would offend the requirement for a varied eligibility requirement for voting which the Indian communities have already evolved themselves.

Other motions which have been grouped for debate attempt to impose certain rules on certain bands. It is an attempt to improve the eligibility of those who may not be within the ambit of an Indian community. The Government rejects that as well.

The essence of the Government motion is to put into law and theory the practice which already exists. That is why Motion No. 14A would make it easier for band councils, through passage of a bylaw, to extend voting rights to all people over 18 if they felt it was appropriate for their particular situation. Nothing requires it; it simply states that a band has a right to move in that direction if it wishes to do so. If it does not wish to move in that direction, it need not do so.

That is why Motion No. 14A, standing as the Royal Recommendation, leaves the matter to be decided by the bands. That is where it should be, in the Government's view.

I will comment on Motions No. 13 and 14 later. With respect to Motion No. 15, in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), it was well argued by the Hon. Member at committee. However, this motion would remove protection of acquired rights from the Bill. That is a principle which has not received much debate in the House, but it was central to the Government's argument.

Since it was not challenged significantly, we did not deal with it to a large extent in the committee. Certainly, if we accepted Motion 15 it would, as I indicated, remove from the Bill the protection of acquired rights. Band membership rules would not be constrained to respect the rights of people as they existed immediately prior to a band's rules being established.

It is the Government's view that protection of acquired rights is absolutely essential to ensure that membership rules are applied fairly. I think it is fair for me to say that the matter of protection of acquired rights is a matter of common justice. Without this provision, it would be possible for bands to deny membership as a result of action or events that took place years before the rules were established. For example, a band could make rules that all band members who married non-Indians could no longer be band members. This would clearly be unfair, as people had no knowledge of the rules when they decided to marry.

Also, without this provision, bands could conceivably frustrate the principle of restoration simply by saying that any person who had previously lost status as a result of Section 12(1)(b) was not eligible for band membership. Again, in the Government's view, that would be unfair. Therefore, I am urging Members of the House not to support Motion No. 15.

With respect to Motion No. 16, again moved by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), this would establish an unnecessary and cumbersome procedure for dealing with possible disputes between the Minister and the bands regarding the acceptance of band membership rules. This is especially true because the Minister does not have the power to reject memberships rules due to their content. The only grounds for rejection would be improper consent from the band or the community, inappropriate notice before the band vote, or lack of protection of acquired rights. Those are the only three ways in which the Minister could intervene.

It is difficult to see why disputes on these points would need to be resolved in the courts. During the first two years after passage of Bill C-31, it is essentially meaningless to freeze the band list during a dispute since Subsection 11(1) states that the only groups that can be added are: first, people already on the list; second, members of new bands established by the Governor in Council; third, persons restored to band membership under Bill C-31, even if that band takes over its own membership; finally, children born after April 17, both of whose parents are members of the same band.

There is no point, in our view, in excluding these people from band lists since, presumably, they would be entitled under any band rules.

The standing committee already dealt with the problem of Subsection 11(2) coming into effect inadvertently during a dispute over acceptance of a band's membership rules.

The new Section 10(7) provides that the rules will be effective from the date the band gives notice to the Minister, no matter when the rules themselves are approved. Quite frankly, I fail to see the need for this motion because it would make the Bill more complicated, without improving it. Therefore, I also ask that Members of the House not support Motion No. 16.

As I indicated earlier, I believe the effect of Motion No. 17 would be to have a uniform provision. In our view, that is not consistent with either the practice or good policy for Indian communities.

Motion No. 18 would establish a transitional list for some bands, the so-called high impact bands. This could mean that some women under Section 12(1)(b) who married non-Indians would not get their band membership. There are no guarantees that such people would ever come off the transitional list. That is the difficulty with Motion No. 18. It would contradict the principle of restoration for victims of sexual discrimination. That is why, in our view, it is important that Motion No. 18 not be supported by the House.

With respect to Motion No. 20, I suggest, with great respect to my hon. friend, that this motion is inappropriate and unfair. Bill C-31 quite clearly seeks to restore rights to certain individuals, as outlined in Subsection 11(1)(c). One of those rights is to regain band membership. Rights of individuals should not have artificial time limits imposed, as would be the effect of this motion.

While many take it for granted that all native people are aware of Bill C-31 and its implications, the fact remains that many are not aware of the proposed legislation. As indicated in the standing committee, the Government will have to engage in the appropriate communication and community consultation program. Furthermore, it is very possible that some individuals who would be eligible to be band members are living outside Canada and would not be aware of any changes to the Indian Act for many years to come. Others may be minors now and not in a position to make an application.

In practice, we can be sure that the vast majority of those who will want to regain their rights will make the necessary application within the next two to five years. There is no compelling reason not to allow those few who remain to apply at some later date. The attitude of some bands, as indicated at the hearings of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, may cause some reluctance on the part of individuals to apply actually for their status membership for a number of years. Therefore, in the Government's opinion, it is unacceptable to have any time restrictions imposed on restoration of rights.

I see that it is now one o'clock. I would ask that we proceed in the usual manner.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

MORATORIUM ON FUNDING OF MULTI-SPORTS EVENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am once again dismayed, although not surprised, to learn of another broken election promise by the Conservative admnistration. This time it concerns the moratorium until April 1, 1990, on funds for major multi-sport events in Canada. Specifically affected by this decision are the bids by London and Thunder Bay, Ontario, for the Pan Am Games and the Nordic Games respectively, to be held in 1991. It is clear that this announcement will have far-reaching negative effects.

During the election campaign the Tories issued a sports manifesto highlighting their commitments. High on the list of priorities was, and I quote:

> We are committed to maintaining the highest level of federal support for amateur sports in Canada. We believe that the federal role can be improved, and we believe that in the years leading up to 1988 this role must be improved.

The recent decision by the Sports Minister makes a mockery of these promises and delivers a strong insult to the Canadian sports world. Canadian sponsorship of these international sporting events is most important for our young athletes as a source of motivation, inspiration and drive. There also exists an economic potential for job creation and tourism dollars. Finally, these international games encourage national pride, not just among our athletes but among all Canadians. I urge the Government and the Minister to re-think this proposal, to be good sports, and honour their commitment.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF 1935 UNEMPLOYMENT TREK

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, fifty years ago on June 3, 1935, a thousand unemployed set out from Vancouver riding boxcars on an historic trek to meet the Conservative Prime Minister to demand work and wages, and an end to slave labour camps.

The Prime Minister stopped the trek in Regina for a peaceful rally, which turned into a bloody riot, which became known as Regina's Day of Infamy.

Conditions are similar today. Unemployment remains high, youth have few opportunities, food banks have replaced soup kitchens, and the poor are facing social program cuts, while pensioners find their income reduced. As the trekkers say, "Fifty years later, we see the same government arrogance and indifference. We see the same callousness and social programs that took years to win being slashed. Once again the jobless are blamed for their lack of work and the poor for their poverty."

We join the trekkers in calling on this Conservative Government to make employment its first priority. It is especially shocking that these same trekkers and their generation are having pensions cut by this Government through reduced indexation. We ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to apologize to these trekkers, and to make sure that the present generation of young people have work with decent wages.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

RESTRICTIONS ON RADIO STATION LICENCES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the interest of preserving freedom of the press and other media. The Radio and Television News Directors Association (central Canada), met in my riding on the weekend and passed a resolution opposing unfair regulations sought by the CRTC prior to granting licences for radio stations in Windsor and Montreal.

Members of the Association say the CRTC is intimidating those seeking licences by accepting a minimum of 45 per cent Canadian content in news and editorial broadcasting. Such constraints would never be placed on newspapers and magazines, and it is completely unfair to expect the electronic media to comply.

This governmental intrusion into the newsrooms of Canada virtually destroys the mandate of our news gatherers. The preservation of the Canadian identity is all well and good, but the availability of world news should never be purposely omitted.

A promise of performance including Canadian news content percentages should never be offered by a radio station, nor should it be accepted by the CRTC. All other facets of broadcasting are regulated by the all-powerful CRTC and it must not be given the authority to regulate news broadcasts. I believe existing provisos in Windsor and Montreal should be lifted immediately, and no further suggestion of this kind should be offered or accepted in the future.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DELIVERY ON ELECTION PROMISES

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government has kept its promises to Canadians. We promised to reduce government waste and control federal spending. We have delivered.

Since September 4 over $4 billion has been cut from government spending, pensions for Members and Senators have been reduced, and 15,000 civil service jobs will be eliminated by 1990.

We promised to reduce the huge national deficit, and we have delivered. Because of the measures taken last fall and in the recent Budget, the deficit will be reduced by $20 billion over the next five years. We promised fair and just social programs, and again we have delivered.

We have increased the child tax credit, increased pensions for veterans, and extended the Spouse's Allowance Program.

Above all, we promised Canadians jobs, and we have delivered in a very big way. Since the election over 270,000 jobs have been created, and business confidence is booming.

The Government has honoured its commitment to Canadians. We have strengthened the economy, improved government efficiency, and reduced unemployment. Because of the actions and policies of the Government, Canada is working again.

DISASTERS

OCEAN RANGER—COMPANY'S PROFITS FROM INSURANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the just released 1984 annual report of the U.S. company, Ocean Drilling and Exploration Company Ltd., it states that ODECO made a profit of $45 million from the sinking of the Ocean Ranger.

The rig was valued at $33 million but was insured in such a way that the company realized a $45 million profit, which was listed as profits per common share in its annual report. The company also bragged that only $16 million of a $200 million liability insurance policy was paid out in settlements. Eighty-four lives were lost, and the company made a $45 million profit, Mr. Speaker.

The settlements to surviving family members also show the same scandalous tone. The settlements to U.S. families, on average, was double the settlements to Newfoundland families. The offers made by the company, for example, to families of single men who died were $150,000 if they were American, and $75,000 if they were Canadian.

A cloud of scandal and lack of concern now hangs over this whole affair. The U.S. company and big business shareholders made a $45 million profit and, as far as the offers and settlements were concerned, it depended upon which country a person was from as to what he or she got. The federal Government and the provincial Government of Newfoundland should investigate this matter on an urgent basis. They should also tell offshore workers why the evacuation procedures have not changed since the sinking—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his 90 seconds have expired. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE VEHICLES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the abject failure of Conservative policies toward the Canadian auto industry is dramatically clear. This industry has been the major force in economic recovery in Canada but, rather than help to expand auto jobs and exports, the Government has demonstrated inaction, indecision, and incoherence.

Last week Honda Motors announced a four-fold jump in its U.S. imports into Canada, thereby finding a back-door way to escape any Canadian import limits on Japan.

Over the weekend, reports showed a 19 per cent increase in monthly Japanese car imports over April, 1984. The Minister has continued to reassure this House that there is no need for legislation and that he would act if there were signs of an import surge. These import increases show we need action now. We need immediate quota limits on the major Japanese auto companies, and the introduction of effective Canadian content laws as called for by the Auto Task Force.

The Government must get its act together. It is time for the Minister to stop wringing his hands in despair, and start showing economic leadership.

ABORTION

A DEFENCE OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Nazi Germany enacted a law permitting the extermination of "useless members of society". Now we have the same pattern evolving in which a whole category of people, the so-called "unloved, unwanted, and unborn" are being senselessly slaughtered.

● (1410)

The morality of our parents and grandparents where abortion was not accepted is changing drastically to a false belief that the growing baby is nothing but a "fetal tissue" and aborting it is just like having a tooth pulled. I believe life begins upon conception. It has been proven that brain waves can be detected at seven weeks, and at 18 days the beating heart of a baby already pumps blood through its own bloodstream. In addition, a fertilized ovum can be transferred from one woman to another, and the embryo is not rejected as is the case many times when a kidney is transplanted. Many babies born prematurely live, even those born as young as four and one half months.

Preserving the life of the mother, the expectation of a defective child, rape and incest account for only about 4 per cent of the abortions; mostly it is for the convenience of the mother or parents, and the argument that a child is not wanted is merely an excuse as there are hundreds of couples wanting to adopt babies.

No one has the right to murder a child, born or unborn. The sooner we return to the morality of our parents and grandparents, the sooner thousands of unborn lives will be saved.

CANADA BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CALL FOR RETENTION OF THE FRIENDLY GIANT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in response to my question on February 13, concerning the phasing out of The Friendly Giant, the president of the CBC wrote me last week and said that repeats from a library of 800 will run from April for at least a year, and that Friendly will continue to work with the CBC-TV children's department as a consultant, and star in some half-hour holiday specials for next year.

That is not good enough. I have received hundreds and hundreds of representations from Canadians of all ages begging that the program be perpetuated. Let me quote only a couple:

> His warmth and gentleness are great—they discuss books and poetry and music—my kids dance and laugh and listen, and they learn about respect for people and animals.
> Kathy Nicholson,
> Orangeville, Ontario

And:

> This is one of the few symbols distinctly Canadian and has added value of being non-violent, a rare feature in children's television viewing.
> 53 students, Faculty of Law,
> McGill University

And:

> Friendly, Rusty and Jerome are equal contributors in conversation from which children receive a sense of equality.
> Rosalee and Allen Lockyer, > Blandford,
> Nova Scotia

And:

> To argue that 26 years is enough is like saying that because Shakespeare has been done for four hundred years is reason to drop it.
>
> Rev. Peter Sharpe,
> St. Joseph's Basilica,
> Edmonton

I say to my colleagues, hang in there, don't be afraid of our big Crown corporations. Go after what you believe in. I believe the CBC is trying to close the drawbridge on three of our great Canadian fictional characters and I, for one, will not let that happen.

FISHERIES

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—CONSEQUENCES FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) sent shock waves through the Atlantic Provinces, to the point of threatening their very existence. The many cut-backs in federal spending will have a very severe impact on our region. In fact, we get the impression that the Federal Government has slammed the door shut.

Mr. Speaker, as if that were not enough, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) got into the act, and I can tell you that the way he did it was certainly calulated to shock the people of New Brunswick.

Imagine, following a ruling by a court of justice, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans threatened the fishermen of New Brunswick! The very person supposed to protect fishermen is helping to create a conflict situation. Mr. Speaker, all of this is happening in the so-called new era of consultation and co-operation the Government promised us.

If this goes on, Mr. Speaker, we are not out of the woods yet.

Maybe the Minister should take a few tranquilizers before opening his mouth in a conflict situation, because his threats of closing down the Atlantic fisheries have only made the situation much worse. The Minister ought to know that one does not settle fisheries conflicts by threatening fishermen. His conduct has raised some doubts as to his ability to settle conflicts of this kind. Statements like the Minister's increase uncertainty in the Atlantic fisheries industry, and the Minister should think twice before letting himself get carried away.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF NORTHERN OIL AND GAS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Following the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord which have done so much to reinvigorate the Canadian oil and gas industry, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has again struck paydirt in the North.

In her address to the Beaufort Industry Group Conference held recently in Inuvik, she reinforced the policy of the Government of Canada to proceed expeditiously with the development of northern oil and gas, emphasizing regional benefits and national security.

Of particular significance was her announcement of a comprehensive review of the Canada Lands management policy leading to amendments to the Canada Oil and Gas Act this fall, together with a replacement for the Petroleum Incentive Program until such time as transportation systems are in place.

The possibility of an Arctic Accord negotiated between the Governments of Canada and the Northwest Territories, which would address questions such as revenue sharing and the territorial responsibilities within the management regime, was well received, and ought to be implemented in a timely manner.

Such an Accord, Mr. Speaker, would have the same beneficial effects in the North as the previous agreements have had in both western and Atlantic Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OLD AGE SECURITY

PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for two weeks the Right Hon. Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare have been claiming that Canadian pensioners support de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions.

During the weekend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare finally admitted that our senior citizens are not in favour of this Bill to de-index their pensions.

My question is as follows: The Minister has a responsibility to protect the elderly here in Canada. Is the Minister prepared to act responsibly and insist that his colleague the Minister of Finance and especially the Right Hon. Prime Minister of our country restore the real value of Old Age Security pensions and related benefits?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. gentleman for the question which was put forward, I think, in a very reasonable point of view. He said that I and other members of Cabinet had used the words "fully support". I do not think, with all respect, that those are the words that I have been using. I have been saying that there are senior citizens whom I have spoken to who understand the circumstances and also understand the proposal. I do not believe I ever said that all senior citizens support the deindexing, or the partial indexing, of the OAS. I said that also in the interview, in a very straightforward statement that it is obvious that not every senior citizen or every senior citizens' group does support it.

I think the point that has to be made, and that is why I am pleased that he put the question in that context, is the protection of both the social programs and also their future. I think if we take a look at those social programs and also at what the debt does to the ability to maintain those programs, and especially look at the future for new programs and new demands, when we look at that, then as we create new wealth and get the economy moving I think it is on that basis that we have to really see these programs, in total context.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I say to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that when he finds that one single group of pensioners who do support the Budget we would appreciate it very much if he would give us the names and bring it to the attention of the House.

May I turn to the Prime Minister, saying that I have had the opportunity of listening to the Prime Minister state on one occasion—and I understand that he has said a similar thing when he has had other opportunities to defend the Budget—that our senior citizens must share in the burden necessary to bring down the deficit. Why ask our senior citizens to help cut the deficit when such extraordinary tax advantages are given to wealthy investors as a result of the capital gains tax exemption?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may be wrong, but I do not think I ever used the phrase that my right hon. friend has imputed to me. I did indicate that we had inherited a situation which has now placed in grave peril the capacity of the Government to sustain, as it must, the integrity of social programs in the future.

When we pay 30, 40 and 50 per cent, hopefully never, if that were the case, of government revenues to sustain the interest on the debt, then as a country, collectively, the policies of the past, that degree of profligacy, would have compromised the capacity of the Government of Canada to do what it must to provide the elderly and others with the kinds of programs to which they are entitled.

● (1420)

We are trying to re-energize the economy through job creation so we can create the new wealth that we can then use to sustain these social programs. I hope my right hon. friend would agree that the 271,000 new jobs created since last September are a mark of confidence and go a long way toward helping the country back to the full economic recovery which will allow us to build new programs for the elderly.

BUDGET IMPACT ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a group of Canadians who have retired, who are no longer earning income and cannot protect themselves against inflation, and who should not be asked to bear their share of the burden of deficit control. Our position is that one does not control the deficit on the backs of the weak and those who cannot protect themselves.

The Prime Minister should know that, as a reslt of the deindexation provisions, about three-quarters of a million Canadians who are living just above the poverty line will be brought below the poverty line and, of those three-quarters of a million Canadians, about 230,000 of them are senior citizens. Does the Prime Minister really believe that it is proper for a budgetary measure to throw one-quarter of a million more senior citizens into poverty? Why does he continue to defend the indefensible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just to place the matter in context, on June 29, 1982, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry said the following, as reported at page 18911 of Hansard:

> They say we are changing the tax system, that we are de-indexing down to 5 per cent or 6 per cent for certain tax brackets and changing the pensions and some of the allowances. Yes, we are doing that. We are doing it because we believe there are enough Canadians who feel compassion and concern for their fellow Canadians who are out of work.

That was the position of the Liberal Party. We have indicated that we will monitor events very, very carefully. Our proposal would have a 3 per cent effect, while the proposal brought forward by the Liberals deindexed pensions and other benefits by 6 per cent, because inflation was at almost 11 per cent. The Right Hon. Member has the temerity to say in the House of Commons today exactly the opposite of what his Party said in the past. He should be ashamed for taking that kind of position.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Prime Minister that Liberal Members are not ashamed of telling the truth, but that is obviously not the case with Tory Members. The fact of the matter is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It is about time the Prime Minister learned the same lesson. At that time we doubled indexation of GIS and did not take $860 million out of the pockets of the poorest Canadians, the senior citizens.

CONCEPT OF FAIRNESS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has said that he has spoken to senior citizens. I spoke to the same group of senior citizens in Manitoba but I found that they had different points of view from the ones he was expressing. They want to know where the fairness is. They want to know why it is that senior citizens who are living at the poverty line will be losing $860 million. They want to know how it is fair that they will lose that money at the same time the Government is giving over $650 million worth of benefits to those who can invest in RRSPs. Why is it fair that there can be a full indexation of RRSPs for those who earn up to $80,000 per year, while there is no full indexation for a senior citizen who lives at the poverty line?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, knowing how the Hon. Member works in Manitoba, I am sure he also told them about the full indexing on the GIS. I am sure he talked about the minimum tax that will be effective January 1, when he was talking about fairness. I am sure he talked about the surcharge on upper-income Canadians when he was talking about fairness. I know the manner in which the Hon. Member operates in Manitoba, and I know that he does not put those kinds of propositions forward. I have seen the way he operates.

Surely it is best to look at the deficit. I can quote the Hon. Member's speech again. I can tell the Hon. Member what the former Minister of National Health and Welfare said, which is that if we continue to pay the cost of that deficit, that money is not available for social programs. Surely, when looking at that issue, we must look not only at the present but at the future. I would ask the Hon. Member what there will be in the future if the debt keeps growing and there is nothing to use on increased social programs.

USE OF GOVERNMENT REVENUE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Minister has seen what I do in Manitoba. We never see him in Manitoba, so we do not know what he does about anything at all.

The Minister put a question to me. Let me reverse that. Let the Minister tell the House why it is that senior citizens will be losing $3.7 billion on both the OAS and the GIS while there exists the kind of give-aways the Government is giving to its corporate and wealthy friends, adding up to close to $14 billion? Is it not true that that has nothing to do with deficit reduction but with the fact that we are asking senior citizens to pay for the largest lottery give-away to the well-to-do Canadians in the history of the country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate why he has never seen me in Manitoba. It is because he is not there to see me.

Mr. Axworthy: I was there this weekend; you weren't.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I was there last weekend and the weekend before. In fact, if the Hon. Member were to look at addresses, he will find that certain of us know who lives in Manitoba, and who does not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member likes to raise the issue of a class war. He likes to think that that is what the issue is.

Mr. Axworthy: It is. That's exactly what it is.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): A class war? Is it a class war for the farmers in Manitoba, for whom the Hon. Member occasionally spoke on the sugar-beet issue? Is it part of a class war that those people are now going to be able to use their farms as pensions? Is it a class war for small-businessmen, blue-collar workers, and other Manitobans? Obviously the only concern the Hon. Member has is to make sharp, small political points. The point to which we must surely return is the issue of the ability that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do have to tell the Minister that his answer is getting long.

[Translation]

DEINDEXATION OF PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Over the weekend the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that pensioners are not satisfied with the Budget and, again last weekend, even Nova Scotia and Manitoba Conservatives indicated they are not satisfied with the Budget.

Western Canada residents have urged me to ask the Prime Minister this question: If deindexation was not acceptable from the Liberals in the past, why is it now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the economic situation we inherited is altogether appalling, to the extent that it now costs more to service the national debt than to pay for all social programs. As a consequence—and there is a tragic aspect to this—the future of social programs throughout Canada is jeopardized if we do not take corrective measures. We believe, and I hope we are right, that the only way to maintain our social programs is to have a buoyant economy where ever more Canadians and Quebecers are working. Statistics published Friday reveal that 70,000 new jobs were created last month and 89,000 the month before. Admittedly that is very encouraging news in the job creation sector, and we hope this new wealth will enable us to maintain the integrity of all our social programs. That is what we want to do.

[English]

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, ever since the Budget was brought down we have heard a whole series of excuses about this matter. The first excuse was that everyone supports what the Government is doing to pensioners. Government members found out that that would not wash. Then they said that there were no other options. Considering that the Prime Minister has said that the Government is now doing this in the Budget because it discovered that it had a larger deficit than it had anticipated, why is it that the Government indicated, as recently as the end of January, well after it knew its debt position, in a paper put out by the Government itself, that there would be no change to the OAS? Why were we given that commitment in January, and a reversal of it when the Budget was brought down?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated to my hon. friend on many occasions, and to his colleagues, that this measure and its possible effects will be monitored closely over the course of the next few months. I take no joy whatsoever in cutting back on benefits to anyone, least of all elderly citizens. I take not the slightest amount of joy in that. The fact of the matter is that the profligacy of previous Governments has now placed in jeopardy the capacity of Canada to sustain those programs in the years 1989, 1990, and 1991. I think we have a moral obligation to take a very serious look at it, and to ensure that the elderly and others are protected in the future. We are in the process, through new job creation, of building a stronger economy. I have given my hon. friend—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the answers are very long today.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has spoken once again, as he frequently does, about moral obligation. It seems to me that there is a moral obligation for the Government to be consistent in what it says.

The Prime Minister did not answer the question. If he knew in January, as he did, what the deficit position of the Government was, why did the Government say that there would be no change in the old age pensions? Why has the Government now put the burden of deficit reduction on the backs of pensioners, when it made a commitment to the senior citizens of Canada in January that it would not do that? That is what morality is all about in politics.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would cast his mind back to the debate then, the question was whether the Government would support and maintain universality of the Old Age Security Program. That was the issue. The point to which he was alluding at that time was that the Government was not committed to universality. The universality question in the report was stated very clearly. People who became eligible at the age of 65 for Old Age Security, regardless of their income, either before retirement or after retirement, would be eligible for the Old Age Security. The Budget has not changed that. In fact, if he takes a look at the amount of money which old age pensioners will get—and he likes to leave the impression that there will be less money in their cheques—he will realize that their cheques will not be less; they will increase.

FINANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING STATEMENT THAT BUDGET IS TOUGH BUT FAIR

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We know he has repeated many times that the Budget was tough but fair.

Today, a headline in The Globe and Mail, for instance, reads:

[English]

Deficit cutting really a mask for aiding rich.

Allan Maslove, Director of the School of Public Administration at Carleton University, argues that "the Budget is in fact more noteworthy for its redistribution from the middle class to the high income groups than for its deficit reduction".

[Translation]

Considering the comments by analysts that were published today and many others that were published previously, would the Prime Minister explain to the House by what kind of mental acrobatics or magician's trick he manages to maintain that his Budget is fair and equitable?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing magic about it. In September, we took over at a particularly difficult time. We had to start the uphill task of economic renewal, because it was the only way to provide for social programs in the future. Since September 17, we have created 271,000 new jobs in Canada, and I think that for an unemployed person, the best kind of equity is a new job. That is what we have done. We are taking economic renewal seriously, which was proved again last Friday, when statistics indicated there were 70,000 new jobs. I hope the Hon. Member will agree this is another step in the right direction for economic renewal in Canada and for social justice.

OLD AGE SECURITY

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister has been talking about the Budget deficit.

I would like to ask him a very simple question. How is it possible that a Government that says it is in financial trouble, has enough money in 1985-86 and 1986-87 to grant $900 million in task benefits to those Canadians who will be making capital gains, while it does not have the $265 million needed to maintain full indexation of Old Age Security pensions? Why was there enough money to help the rich who are given tax exemptions on capital gains and was there none for the elderly, although this would cost a third less?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, frankly I am amazed at this kind of sophistry, coming from such a distinguished and Hon. Member.

He knows perfectly well that we are trying to boost the private sector, to which he was closely linked in the past. Several years ago, the Hon. Member was not against proposals of this kind. We are in a position to boost the private sector by means of the measures indicated in the Budget, but it is all aimed at achieving a new dimension of social justice, and first of all, social justice demands jobs. And that is what we are trying to achieve in Canada and Quebec: durable jobs for Canadians and Quebecers. That is what we are doing.

[English]

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister implied that he was fulfilling his promise to senior citizens. I would like to quote from his blue book which stated: "In the Government's view, no change is required in the Old Age Security Program". Why does the Minister now feel justified in making the seniors pay for the deficit when he promised in the book, as the Prime Minister promised before the election, that senior citizens would not bear the brunt of the deficit?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will go back to the point which I made to her Leader. She has been asking whether the Government was committed to the universality question. I say to her that that issue, as the three principles in the consultation paper state clearly, has not been changed. I believe she should keep in mind that the largest single cost today to the Government of Canada is the payment on the debt. She is advocating that the debt should be increased. She has never committed herself to a reduction in debt. She feels, philosophically, that it can be increased. What she is saying, by so doing, is that the debt could increase and that it would have no impact on social policy. Obviously, that is not the case.

POSITION OF ELDERLY WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is completely distorting the options which this Party presented to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and he knows it. Does he think it is fair for elderly women, who make up most of the poverty group in the country, to bear the brunt of the deficit, rather than placing a tax on the rich? We think that is where the Government should get the money to help reduce the debt.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member supports the Budget. In the Budget the Minister of Finance said that there would be a minimum tax as of January 1, 1986. There is also a surtax in the Budget—

Mr. Orlikow: Some day; not now.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, now that I have their attention, they will know that that is the truth. That is what the Minister of Finance said. There is also a surtax which has been put into place. I hope, when the Bill on the spouse's allowance for widows and widowers comes before the House, that she will support it as well.

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON PENSIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Premiers of three maritime provinces are meeting today and tomorrow to consider how they can cope with the disastrous Budget and the impact which it will have on eastern Canada. Conservative Premier Buchanan has already condemned the deindexing of the Old Age Security and has said that it "was not only wrong politically, it was the wrong thing to do for senior citizens". Conservative Premier Miller of Ontario and the Tories in Manitoba have also condemned it. Are you going to stonewall your own provincial leaders, as well as the elderly of this country?

• (1440)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order. Mr. Speaker does not stonewall.

Mr. de Corneille: Or are you going to stop looking after your political necks, and start looking after the seniors by reinstating their full indexing?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question on Friday, as well as a similar question which was asked on that day. I say to the Hon. Member that obviously Conservative Premiers, leaders, and provincial legislators can make their views known. That is their responsibility. But I say to them, and to the Hon. Member, that the Government, well before the Opposition raised it in the House, had taken this in mind. In fact I will quote again some words from the Budget; "The Government will review the adequacy of payments in light of future circumstances. It will increase them as resources permit". That has been a consistent position right from the night of the Budget.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the provincial Premiers who are meeting in the Maritimes right now are also agonizing and sick about the fact that this gruesome Budget will also soon be cutting back over $2 billion per year on transfer payments to the provinces. This will ravage health care, and sock it especially to the elderly. What is the Minister going to do about these sneaky, hidden cutbacks in medical care when he knows that the quality of medical services is going to be impaired, and that an additional 230,000 seniors will be put under the poverty line by 1990 as a result of the Budget's inhumane treatment?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says "sneaky" when it is in the Budget. But I remind the Hon. Member that the former minister of Finance made that provision without any consultation or beforehand notice to the provinces when he cut back on the established programs financing. The present Minister of Finance is giving notice now that when the negotiations start on the next five-year program, this is the process he wants to take.

If the Hon. Member takes a look at the budget words, he will find that that $2 billion would still allow for an increase in the EPF payments from the federal Government to the provinces. But it would be a reduction if one takes a look at the projections from this five-year plan of the EPF to the next five-year plan. If the Hon. Member takes a look he will also find that the percentage paid by the federal Government for both health care and post-secondary education would remain the same.

The Hon. Member should look at his own words when he was in Government and he will see that he said: "When are you going to cut back and make the provinces pay the money they receive from the federal Government for those two programs?" In fact those Hon. Members had a task force trying to monitor exactly that.

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, this weekend I talked with hundreds of pensioners who, like pensioners all across the country, feel angry and betrayed by a Budget which the Minister of National Health and Welfare himself admits will increase poverty among the elderly. Will the Minister explain to the House, and to those pensioners, why we cannot afford indexation of poverty-level pensions for the elderly but can afford to provide windfall profits to the wealthy and large oil corporations?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member puts words in my mouth—and I take it he does so inadvertently—when he says that I have admitted that the Budget would increase poverty. I have said no such thing. What I have said is that if we can get the economy turned around, and if we can create jobs and wealth, people who are now unemployed in communities such as the one the Hon. Member comes from, which was sorely hit by unemployment will get jobs. Poverty will not be increased, but wealth will be increased, and as that wealth is increased, and as taxes are paid on that new income, we can also maintain social programs. That is the equation I and my colleagues have been putting forward, and I suggest that that is the equation the Hon. Member should examine.

REVIEW OF EFFECT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should get away from rhetoric and get back to the issue of promises, so I will address my supplementary question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who, a few minutes ago, made another promise. He promised that the situation of the pensioners would be re-examined. I would like to know how the Prime Minister expects to be believed when the Government promised the pensioners that full indexation would be maintained.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I notice that we did not hear from my hon. friend when we had, I think, the very good news again about job creation on Friday. But inasmuch as my hon. friend is from Windsor, perhaps this would interest him. "April was a banner month for motor vehicle dealers as sales of new cars and commercial vehicles hit their highest level ever in Canada".

Mr. McCurdy: I ask you about promises.

Mr. Angus: You don't have an answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Apparently the Hon. Member doesn't want prosperity for Windsor. They will dismiss you pretty quickly in Windsor.

This is good news for the automobile industry.

We have indicated very clearly that it is our intention to monitor events very carefully, and at the earliest possible moment, as soon as resources permit—

Mr. Rodriguez: Another promise.

Mr. Mulroney: —to be helpful to all those affected. The New Democratic Party hasn't said a single word about job creation. All it is concerned about is social discord and class warfare. We are interested in new prosperity and new wealth for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: That won't wash any more.

Mr. Thacker: Did your Leader take a reduction? Not one cent.

PENITENTIARIES

COST OF MAINTAINING INMATES

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Many Canadians are helping to control the national debt. They are supporting the new philosophy of economic responsibility and restraint which now exists. What measures are being used by the Solicitor General's Department and how is the inmate population in Canada contributing to the control of this debt, reducing expenditures, and sharing in the economic responsibilities of the nation?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleague that the cost of maintaining inmates is the responsibility of the Corrections Services of Canada. The security costs remain very high. However, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that we do operate industrial shops, greenhouses, and farms, and to the extent possible we try to be as cost effective as we can under the circumstances.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Fifty years ago today a large number of unemployed were stopped on their trek to Ottawa in a brutal way by the Conservative Bennett Government of that day. Today some of those people completed that trek, with many other behind them. Their demands are the same, "work and wages". Since the Budget had no specific programs for job creation, would the Minister tell the House when she is going to announce specific programs for job creation, and would she tell us what goals she wishes to attain by those programs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know that it is sometimes difficult for the Hon. Member to accept the fact that there are facts and figures in the Budget which pertain to job creation and training. In this case there is some $900 million additional dollars for job creation and training.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I can also tell the Hon. Member that I had the opportunity to meet this morning with this group of people who had come to Ottawa to discuss their concerns and their needs, and also to tell them the trend which has been developing in the last number of months; the creation of some 270,000 jobs since September; the fact that every single sector of the economy improved as far as jos were concerned last month, and the fact that unemployment insurance will be reviewed positively.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Miss MacDonald: All of these things were discussed, Mr. Speaker, and these people said they appreciated the fact that we were able to get together and discuss these matters.

Mr. Keeper: No, they were disappointed.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has announced that $900 million several times, and we still have not seen the details. We were all pleased last week to see last month's slight improvement in employment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: We were all pleased about that. But no one can be content with a 10.5 per cent unemployment level. No one can celebrate that figure. I want to ask the Minister if she is content with 10.5 per cent unemployment? If she is not, what is her goal, and how does she intend to achieve a goal which is much lower? It was 7 per cent before the recession.

● (1450)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, of course no one is satisfied with 10.5 per cent unemployment. It was 11.6 per cent when we came into office, and it is on its way down. I would also tell the Hon. Member, because he does not seem to realize these things, that, yes, we did announce $900 million for job creation and training in February, but it was an additional $900 million announced in the Budget.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Fifty years ago young unemployed men attempted to come to Ottawa to demand jobs. Today another Conservative Government is reducing their pension benefits.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: Will the Prime Minister not admit that the policy of making the victims pay, and not those who own, control, and manage our economy, is as wrong today as it was in the time of R. B. Bennett? Will he stop repeating past mistakes, and not proceed with the deindexing of the Old Age Security pensions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend reflects tonight or tomorrow upon that question, he will be before you asking that it be withdrawn. It is really quite unworthy.

The fact is that since we came to office we have managed, through co-operation with the private sector, trade unions, indeed all groups, to bring down interest rates by almost 3 per cent, and 271,000 new jobs have been created. In the months of April and May a total of 159,000 new jobs have been created, the largest back-to-back job creation figures since Statistics Canada began compiling them in 1953. That is great news for Canada, and you should stand up and celebrate it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain where the Prime Minister is. The answer I got certainly had nothing to do with the question I asked.

HISTORIC EVENTS

1935 TREK BY UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that on July 1, 1935, a peaceful meeting of relief camp workers and Regina residents was attacked on orders of the Conservative Government of R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order. Is this relevant?

Mr. de Jong: Does the Prime Minister not feel that an apology is now in order?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not dignify a scurrilous remark like that. But I will say that I look forward to meeting with representatives of the marchers in my office at 3.30 with a great deal of empathy and affinity because, unlike some members of the NDP, you are looking at someone from a union background as opposed to some other lofty circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Solidarity forever.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We shall overcome, brothers.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Scarborough West.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON POSTAL RATES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the Post Office my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary. When I served here in the early 1970s I found that the chief constituency complaint was mail delivery. Coming back in 1984 I find the certain grievance is still the Post Office. In view of this persistent lack of public confidence caused by things such as, for example, a constituent writing a letter to me here in Ottawa and having it take longer to deliver than it would have taken a messenger to carry it by foot, will the Minister consider freezing the cost of postage until the credibility of the Post Office is restored?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and for his comments on the mails. His question has been noted and will be submitted to the Minister as soon as he returns to Ottawa.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

JAPANESE CAR IMPORTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last April, when the quota agreement for imports of Japanese cars expired, the Minister said he would monitor the situation and prevent any surge of imports of Japanese cars into Canada while discussions for a new deal with Japan were under way. There are now figures from the Japanese auto exporters indicating that in April there was an 18 per cent increase in those imports, and likely a similar increase in May. Yet there is still no deal.

Why has the Minister not kept his word? Why has he allowed this surge to go on? Will he undertake to take steps immediately to push back the level of Japanese automotive imports until there is a new quota arrangement at previous levels, or a new deal with Japan involving commitments for Canadian content equivalent to what is happening in the U.S., to preserve and enhance jobs and production in Canada for Canadian workers?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to figures which appeared in the press over the weekend. If he checks Statistics Canada figures coming out this morning he will notice that the Japanese figure is a much lower increase. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that we are noting any increase and we have already written to Japanese authorities asking for an explanation of whether this is indicative of an increasing of their 18 per cent market penetration in Canada, or if it is just a monthly adjustment which sometimes occurs and does not indicate increased sales.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what Herb used to say.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think what my hon. friend needs is an adjustment in his attitude. He needs to act decisively right now to make sure that surge of Japanese cars into Canada does not go on because, whatever figures he quotes, the Japanese manufacturers themselves say there has been that increase. Will he take action now to stop that surge, and undertake to have an agreement in place by June 12, as was the case previously?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is rare that you see the Hon. Member excitable but he certainly is today, to the point of saying attack before you are even attacked as far as export market penetration is concerned.

Oral Questions

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, although I was going to ask the Prime Minister to lead the House in a rendition of Solidarity Forever after his last comment.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We shall overcome.

Mr. Deans: No! Please, no!

Mr. Robinson: My question concerns a promise made by the Minister in January of this year that no change would be made to the Old Age Security or Guaranteed Income Supplement payment system, and that the Government was not proposing changes "at this time" in the elderly benefits system. What was it that that changed from January when the Minister knew full well the debt position of the Government which resulted in its decision to place the full load for debt reduction on the backs of those least able to pay for it, the senior citizens?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is using words which are not adequate. He used the words "full load". That is not the case. He is taking a specific part of the Budget and saying that represents the full load. I say to him, as I have said to his Leader, that, if he looks at it, the system has not been changed. Universality is in place.

Mr. Broadbent: He did not say universality; he said no change, period.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He used the word "system" in is question. I say to him that the people who were eligible for an old age pension before the Budget are eligible for that same pension after the Budget, and that is the issue.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the issue is why on earth Canada's senior citizens should have to pay for debt reduction when the wealthy are enabled to invest in condominiums in Florida and get a greater return on their capital gain. That is not fair. It is tough, but it certainly is not fair.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's discussion paper made no reference to universality. He said there would be no change.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robinson: Why is he changing the system now?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. If he looks at the three principles right on the front of that discussion paper, he will see "universality will be maintained". That is one of the three principles on which the whole paper is based. He can refer back to that.

He says that only the senior citizens are asked to carry the cost of the debt. I repeat, as I have done in other Question Periods, and today, that there is a surcharge on those who are recipients of a higher than average income. There is the minimum tax that will come into effect January 1, 1986. As well, it was necessary to turn the country around from the direction in which it was going, namely, that the deficit was going to grow, and grow, and grow, and take more, and more, and more from our social programs. That is untenable. It cannot be sustained, and that is why the changes were announced in the Budget.

PENITENTIARIES

RENOUS—CANCELLATION OF SPECIAL HANDLING UNIT PROJECT

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It was recently announced that construction of a special handling unit at the Atlantic Institution at Renous was to be cancelled. What impact will this have on local employment? Can the Minister give his assurance that this decision will not affect future staffing at the penitentiary?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the special handling unit at the Atlantic Institution will not be constructed. Careful projections indicate that we have a surplus of these facilities now, and will have a surplus of space for some years. I sympathize with the Hon. Member's concern about the effect that this will have. However, I want to assure him that the preponderance of the jobs involved in this Institution, which are heavily weighted in favour of local employment, will not be affected.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DAMAGING AND INCORRECT REMARKS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice this morning of a question of privilege which involves comments made in the House a week ago today on Monday, June 3, when I was not present in the House. It is a most serious matter, the publication of libel. It has to do with remarks made by the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). At page 5322 of Hansard of Monday, June 3 he addressed himself to me and members of my family. I want to read the offensive passage, Mr. Speaker. He said:

> The Minister's family has one member who is a prominent businessman, and from whom Revenue Canada is now claiming $380,000.

There is not a word of truth in that, Mr. Speaker. It is not claiming $380,000. He went on to say:

> Both of the Minister's sons are legal agents for the Department of Justice, courtesy of their father, and have as their responsibilities the task of acting on behalf of Revenue Canada.

That is also untrue. Only one of the sons was a legal agent for Revenue Canada. He went on to say:

> The question is: will the Minister's sons, who were named as federal legal agents by their father, act to prosecute the uncle, who is their father's brother, and who owes the Government of Canada $380,000?

That is false in its entirety,, Mr. Speaker. My brother, who is Andrew C. Crosbie, does not owe the Government of Canada $380,000 or any amount in connection with his income tax or otherwise. However, it was totally irrelevant to the debate in any event. The Hon. Member slandered someone who is not in the House in a manner that has nothing to do with the House and on a matter with which he has nothing to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the Minister tell me what the question of privilege is, please?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if Members of the House can libel whom they like in this connection, and draw the inference that some kind of deal is in place so that a son of mine would not be taking any action against the brother who owes $380,000, the whole thing is a shabby aspersion on myself, my sons, and a false allegation against my brother.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I am entitled to set the record straight because this has been repeated on the radio and in the news in St. John's, Newfoundland. It interferes with him in his capacity to enter into business arrangements because people now feel that he owes $380,000 to the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the Hon. Minister one more time. Could the Hon. Minister please tell me what his question of privilege is?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He has none.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that my actions as a Minister and Member of the House have been reflected upon. The suggestion is that I will take some action which will relieve my brother from having to pay the $380,000 allegedly owed in income tax. Surely that is a breach of privilege. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the chartered accountants of my brother, Andrew C. Crosbie, who advised me—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Order.

Mr. Axworthy: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please! The Minister is introducing into the record his view of a set of facts and is indicating that in his view the facts that were quoted earlier were not correct. That, I take it, is his right in one sense. However, I must ask the Minister to tell me quickly what question of privilege he is raising, because he has not raised one as yet.

Mr. Crosbie: The question of privilege is that the provisions of the Privacy Act with respect to Andrew C. Crosbie have been violated. The principles of the Income Tax Act have been violated because there is a claim against Andrew C. Crosbie in connection with a firm called Crosbie Offshore Services Limited and a question of payroll source deductions in his position as a director. A letter was sent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: —to him from Revenue Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Crosbie: —on April 10, 1985, a private letter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Minister please take his seat?

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: I will give the Minister one more opportunity.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why? There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister will please immediately come to the question of how his privileges, as a Member of the House of Commons, have been breached. There is no other question that can be raised as a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, Mr. Speaker, my privilege as a Member of the House has been breached because the Member has tried to cast aspersions on my conduct as a Minister by relating false information to the House about my brother and the Department of National Revenue. And, Mr. Speaker, we are entitled to know where he got his information, if he got the information, and he must be prepared to back up that information—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: —and put his seat on the line, or else there is no one in the country who is safe.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That's where the question of privilege comes in.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! There is a clear dispute as to facts. There has, therefore, as the Hon. Minister I think knows, been no question of privilege raised.

Presenting reports from standing or special committees.

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Crosbie: I pointed out to the House that the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has made a completely false and damaging statement in connection with my brother, Andrew C. Crosbie, who does not owe Revenue Canada $380,-000. And I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Crosbie: —the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement unequivocally.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, order. That's what I want, order. That's what I want, rights—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Crosbie: —for innocent people being maligned.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Minister resume his seat? The Hon. Minister may wish to give his brother counsel as to his brother's rights outside the House in the courts.

Mr. Crosbie: What rights has he got?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order, please!

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of privilege here. There is no point of order here. Presenting reports from standing or special committees.

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice will please resume his seat.

Mr. Crosbie: There is a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice will please resume his seat.

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Don't get thrown out.

Mr. Crosbie: If this kind of reprehensible conduct can go on in the House, no one is safe.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice will please resume his seat immediately.

Mr. Deans: John, sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: This is a disgrace.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice will give me no choice in about one more try.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That's what he wants.

Mr. Crosbie: Go ahead.

Mr. Deans: Don't do it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice has raised a point which is significant to him, and he may wish to make a statement under Statements by Ministers, or he may wish to have someone make a statement under Standing Order 21, but no point of order and no question of privilege that I can see has been raised.

Mr. Crosbie: Standing Order 21, what's that got to do with it?

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports from standing or special committees. Tabling of documents. Statements by Ministers.

Mr. Crosbie: We are not finished with this yet.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by Ministers.

Mr. Crosbie: All right, Mr. Speaker. I wish to make a statement in connection with the Department of National Revenue and the case of Andrew C. Crosbie and the false allegations made by the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on June 3, 1985.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Is the Minister making a statement in his capacity as Minister of Justice or is he making a statement in his capacity as a brother?

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to answer the Minister by indicating that I will verify my facts and respond tomorrow, or at the earliest opportunity, with a full withdrawal, if appropriate.

PETITIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a few petitions.

The first one is from people at the Centre d'accueil Champlain, a senior citizens' home in Brossard. These people are opposed to de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions, and they ask the Government to maintain full indexation.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is from Manoir Saint-Lambert, on the South Shore of Montreal, where people are against de-indexation and ask the Government to maintain full indexation.

Two more petitions of the same nature were signed by residents on the South Shore of Montreal.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from over 300 people, including B.C. pensioners, parents, workers and young people, who all agree that the May 23 Budget imposes undue and unfair hardship on pensioners by deindexing the Old Age Security Program. That represents a loss of $100 this year and $680 in 1991.

This is reneging on the campaign promises of the P.C. Government in which they promised to index the old age pensions to the actual cost of living, and it is a massive withdrawal from our collective commitment to public pensions. The pensioners are asking that the Government reindex old age pensions to the full cost of living.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of over 200 senior citizens from my constituency of Burnaby who are expressing their anger at the May 23 Budget which deindexes the Old Age Security Program and which further flies directly in the face of the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that a P.C. Government would fully index the old age pension to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis. These pensioners, my constituents, young and old, are asking that the Government withdraw this regressive proposal and reinstate full indexation of the Old Age Security Program for Canada.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions, all of which deal with the same issue. They all request that full indexing of old age pensions be reinstated.

These petitions are signed mainly by residents of my constituency of Trinity but also include signatures from other Toronto and Ottawa ridings.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of Canadian citizens from British Columbia to Thunder Bay who call upon Parliament to reject the Government's proposal to deindex the Old Age Security and who ask that it be reinstated immediately.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 371.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

BORDER CROSSINGS

Question No. 371—Mr. Parry:

What is a list of border crossings, between Canada and the United States, where a toll charge applies for the use of a road, bridge, tunnel, right-of-crossing or ferry under one kilometre and, in each case, what is the charge for a passenger automobile?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): There is no toll charge for the use of roads and rights-of-crossing between Canada and the United States. Of the international bridges and tunnels between the two countries, the following are under one kilometre and have a toll charge:

(1) The Baudette-Rainy River Bridge (Rainy River, Ontario) has a one-way standard toll of $1.25* for automobiles and drivers plus $0.10 for each passenger. It also has a one-way commuter toll of $1* for automobiles and drivers plus $0.10 for each passenger.

(2) The Fort Frances-International Falls Bridge (Fort Frances, Ontario) has a one-way standard toll of $2.75 for automobiles, drivers, and passengers as well as a one-way commuter toll for automobiles, drivers and passengers of $0.60.

(3) The Rainbow Bridge and the Whirlpool Rapids Bridge (both in Niagara Falls) as well as the Lewiston-Queenston Bridge (Queenston, Ontario) have a one-way standard toll of $0.50 for automobiles and drivers plus $0.10 for each passenger at least five years of age. They also have a one-way commuter toll of $0.24 for automobiles and drivers plus $0.08 for each passenger at least five years of age.

Most ferry crossings between Canada and the United States are greater than one kilometre. Those under one kilometre are:

Port Lambton, Ontario—Robert's Landing, Michigan, $2.50 (auto and occupants). Sombra, Ontario—Marine City, Michigan, $3.00 (auto and occupants).

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development; and Motions Nos. 14A (Mr. Crombie), 15 and 16 (Mr. Shields), 17 (Mr. Manly), 18, 20 and 21 (Mr. Shields), 24 (Mr. Manly) and 32A (Mr. Crombie) (p. 5574).

Mr. Speaker: I indicated earlier this day that I would be prepared now to hear procedural arguments, should there be any.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed the motions which the Chair had raised concerning procedural acceptability. I agree with the Chair's concerns and the reasoning cited on all motions.

Consultations have been held with Hon. Members opposite and I believe, notwithstanding procedural issues, there may be unanimous consent to accept Motion Nos. 3, 33 and 33A. Therefore, may I propose that Motions Nos. 33 and 33A be grouped for debate and voted on separately and that Motion No. 3 be debated and voted on separately.

With respect to the grouping of motions for debate and voting, I agree with the Chair's suggestions regarding the grouping.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the procedure involved is that when there is some doubt that the amendment does not deal with the Bill to amend but with the parent Act itself, the only way to proceed is by way of unanimous consent. We certainly would in no way withhold unanimous consent.

I simply ask the Government House Leader that Motion No. 27, which is in my name and falls in the same category, be included for debate for the same purpose.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat at a disadvantage because I have been advised with respect to negotiations. I feel somewhat constrained at this time, without further discussion with all concerned, to accept the propostion. I certainly will pursue that and perhaps we could seek the eye of the Chair again. However, I understand the request made by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, dealing with the groupings mentioned by the Government House Leader, we are certainly prepared to give our consent to move Motions Nos. 33 and 33A forwad for debate. We are particularly pleased that the Government is willing to give consent for Motion No. 3 to be debated. There will be a minor amendment which I hope will make that motion acceptable to the Government.

We would certainly be prepared to give our consent to Motion No. 27 being brought forward

I am very concerned about your grouping of Motion No. 14 with Motion No. 13 and the suggestion that the vote on No. 13 cover the vote for No. 14. These two motions deal with two distinct subjects: Motion No. 13 deals with the question of who is entitled to vote in a band referendum on band membership. This is, in fact, the same subject as Motion No. 17, which also stands in my name. However, I have no objection to Motion No. 17 being grouped with Motion No. 13, as the subject matter and indeed the intent are exactly the same with regard to those two motions.

However, Motion No. 14 does not deal with the question of who can participate in determining band membership rules as do Motions No. 13 and 17, but with the rules themselves. Motion No. 14 amends Bill C-31 to make an appeal process mandatory and not permissible under band membership rules.

Therefore, I urge you to re-examine that grouping and make it possible for us to debate and vote on Motion No. 14 separately.

I suggest that Motion No. 36 is a necessary acknowledgement by the Government of its responsibility for the consequences of Bill C-31. You have ruled, among other motions, that Motions Nos. 9 and 10, standing in my name, are out of order because they infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. Regrettably, I must accept that ruling, but that ruling itself implies that there is a government responsibility for the reinstated members. That is what Motion No. 36 seeks to recognize.

The Government is reinstating members to bands. Many of these bands are very poor. They require additional lands, additional houses and additional infrastructures such as roads and sewers. The Minister has acknowledged this responsibility. I think it is important to have it stated explicitly in the legislation. I hope you will rule that Motion No. 36 will therefore be in order for debate.

Mr. Speaker: It is somewhat unclear to me. The Member seemed to be debating Motion No. 36. The preliminary ruling concerned the fact that Motion No. 36 does seem to seek to expand the royal prerogative. Is the Hon. Member saying that it does not do that?

Mr. Manly: The burden of my argument was that you had made certain other rulings that infringed upon the royal prerogative because they expanded band membership. Bill C-31 is really about the whole process of expanding band membership and Indian status. Therefore, the kind of obligation that we see in Motion No. 36 is implied. I am simply asking that it be made explicit.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Can I try one more time? Is the Hon. Member saying that Motion 36 does nor does not expand the royal prerogative?

Mr. Manly: I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that it does not expand the royal prerogative because it is implied in what Bill C-31 is trying to do.

Mr. Speaker: I think I will read the "blues" on that one.

Is the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rising to speak on procedural points?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order in connection with this Bill. Should I raise it now?

Mr. Speaker: One moment, please.

[English]

If that is the end of the procedural arguments, I might indicate that I shall take them under advisement. I will say to Hon. Members that I have looked at the question of what can be done and what cannot be done by unanimous consent. There is a very significant difficulty when one comes into the area of those things that involve the royal prerogative.

I am also, as I think Hon. Members know, disinclined, where I sense there is a will of the vast majority of the House, to force something that could simply become the subject of another Bill and thus put it through all the stages again. I think that I sense there is a will to do those things and I will want to confirm that. I certainly do not believe the Chair should stand in the way of the will of the House. I do, however, want to enter a caveat. We have traditionally allowed unanimous consent on matters that do not relate to the Royal Recommendations. I may be making a phone call or two and I will be back to the House on the matters that have been raised.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At this morning's sitting on this Bill, Mr. Deputy Speaker, when putting one of the motions put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), used my name as that of the seconder. As a matter of courtesy I allowed this, but then Mr. Deputy Speaker proceeded to use my name for several other motions. I did not protest this morning, but I have now taken a look at the content of these motions and I am afraid that I find I cannot possibly support them. Therefore, I would like to have the record amended or, if that is not possible, at least to have a note put that I did second the motions as a matter of courtesy to my colleague. I wish the motions to be debated, then I will be able to vote on them according to my conscience.

Mr. Speaker: There is a procedural difficulty here.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the need to debate these matters, I would be most pleased to second the motions put by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Speaker: The rules of the House stipulate that where someone wishes to change a matter like that, it can only be done with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to change the name of the seconder of the motion and substitute the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, in that case, perhaps it could be said, for the record, that I did it as a courtesy, because the Acting Speaker actually did not give me a chance or a choice in the matter. He did not ask my opinion. He simply read the motion without consulting me.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know she has sought the floor on a point of order and that that point of order and her comments will themselves be recorded in Hansard. Hansard will show what she has just said.

Resuming debate.

Is the House ready for the question?

Is there some confusion? I was calling resumption of debate. I indicated that I would reserve on the further procedural matters.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Minister was speaking this morning when we entered the debate.

Mr. Crombie: Yes, I was, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: And I believe he had spoken for 10 minutes. The Table indicates to me that the Minister had completed his 10 minute comments and some other Member can now have the floor, unless the House wishes to give consent to the Minister to continue beyond the 10 minute period. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is unanimous consent. The Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie).

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay my own Bill. I think there were approximately three other motions in this grouping. I have some modest though wise thoughts to offer to the House, although it may well be that the wisdom of the Bill is so overwhelmingly obvious that I do not need to do so. I was, however, speaking to that part of the grouping dealing with Motion No. 21 which I would urge the House not to support. Motion No. 21 would delete a positive amendment which was adopted after careful consideration by the standing committee, with support from all Parties.

The discriminatory provisions of the Indian Act have been present for over 100 years. It is a fact of life that documents such as birth and marriage certificates are often lost or destroyed. In some remote areas, especially in the period before the Second World War, they may never have existed.

It would seem imperative that the federal Government be prepared to accept other than official documents in order to ensure that every individual is entitled to be registered as an Indian can in fact be registered. It is simply a matter of fairness.

Some individuals have already indicated that they have tried to find official records and cannot do so, sometimes because fire has destroyed the vital statistics of their community or files have been lost or displaced. While the onus is on the individual to prove his or her claim, it would seem that the federal Government should be prepared to accept proof in whatever form it is available. Accepting sworn hearsay evidence will not add one person to those eligible to gain Indian status or band membership. It might permit some people to prove their entitlement who would otherwise have no way to do so. That is why I suggest, on behalf of the Government, that the House not support Motion No. 21.

In the grouping there is as well Motion No. 32A. I would like to respond briefly with respect to Motion No. 32A only because it is a motion standing in my name. It is a motion necessary to ensure that bands have the power to pass by-laws with regard to certain matters covered by this Bill, the first of which was added by the standing committee and the second moved by the Government in this debate.

The two provisions affected are, first, Subsection 64(1)(2) whereby band councils can decide to make persons who receive pay-outs over $1,000 on loss of status ineligible for programs funded by the band until such time as the amount over $1,000 paid to that person, plus interest, has been repaid to the band. Second, Subsection 10(3), Motion 14A, is another government report stage amendment. This is a provision whereby band councils can decide to permit all band members over 18 to vote on membership rules and not just those ordinarily resident on reserve, as is the normal requirement for electors. I think that covers all of the comments I would like to make with respect to the motion in this grouping.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dealing as the Minister just has with the same grouping, that is to say, motions Nos. 14A through to 32A, and Motion No. 7 as per the Speaker's ruling of this morning, before indicating my own view on each of these amendments, some of which I can support and some of which I will have to vote against, I want to say that the Minister is correct in pointing out that on this group of amendments, we come to a very central aspect of the Bill. There are bound to be some differences of opinion within political Parties on matters of this kind. That has been demonstrated this morning and it will be demonstrated again this afternoon, regardless of which Party of the House we are talking about.

Let me begin by putting my view on these amendments in some kind of context. The Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) this morning quite correctly indicated to the House that a long time ago, and the precise date and year is not important, we got off the track when we began as a Parliament and as a Government thinking in terms of individual Indian persons. We got off the track because that was not the pattern that had been established for us by the Royal Proclamation of 1763 when the Crown, according to that Royal Proclamation, confronted various tribes and nations and established a pattern for negotiation and agreement which was, in effect, nation to nation. It is true that the colonial power was a nation that dominated the world and it was dealing with small nations here in continental North America, but nevertheless that was the pattern or the modus operandi for proceeding nation to nation or, if you like, nation to tribe.

When we came to the time of our Constitution and we began to assume unto ourselves the responsibility for Indians, we no longer dealt with nations or tribes, we began to deal with individuals. It is at that point that we talked about integration and assimilation, or putting people into the mainstream. Even if we do not use those terms, that in fact is the thrust of what the Indian Act tries to do in so many cases.

We are left now, in this last period of this century, with the problem of having categorized Indian people into all of these strange categories, status and non-status, on-reserve and off-reserve, and who knows what other kinds of designations, either because of the legislation or for some kind of bureaucratic convenience in the delivery of programs. That is one difficulty.

The second aspect I want to refer to is that which was raised so eloquently by the chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs when he pleaded with the House that what we really need is to restore the trust relationship as it ought to be properly understood, not in some kind of legal, carefully defined terms but as a trust relationship; that is where we stop doing things to other people and have a relationship where we assist one another, and we reach agreements by way of negotiation. The Indian nations of this country have to learn to trust this Parliament and they have to learn to trust the Government. I think we have started down that road, but we have only just begun.

If you put those two together, that is the context I am trying to establish in getting to the amendments. Thank you for your patience. The context is that we ought to be dealing nation to nation; The Crown ought to be dealing with Indian First Nations on the basis of trust and confidence.

With respect to Bill C-31, the kind of proposal that has been suggested by the chiefs of Ontario is a very reasonable and adequate approach. What they say, and here there can be no argument in the House, is first, they support the removal of sexual and other forms of discrimination from the Indian Act. We support the removal of those odious and unacceptable sections of the Indian Act based on discrimination, sexual and otherwise.

Second, the chiefs of Ontario have reminded Members who have received their resolution that they have taken a lead role in accommodating all of their citizens into their communities and they have done so, Mr. Speaker, despite the restrictions of the Indian Act. Is it not interesting that here is a group of First Nations coming together in the Province of Ontario, the chiefs of Ontario, and they have not allowed these discriminatory provisions to keep them from having in their communities those whom they want as their citizens, despite the law that we have passed?

They say in their resolution that what we should be doing here today is, and this was the burden of the speech that I made this morning, first to recognize the exclusive right of Indian First Nations to determine their own citizenship and/or membership, whichever term one prefers to use—exclusive right.

Second, and here we are going to get into some differences of opinion, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) says don't look at me, but when she gives her speech, it is going to become evident. I would argue along with the chiefs of Ontario that the existing band list currently in use by Indian First Nations should be the starting point in the definition of membership and citizenship of the First Nations. Then, having established their membership code, if it is not already in place, those members who are currently on the band list will establish the citizenship criteria, if it has not already been done. For us to say, "oh, can we allow them to do that", this is where we come back to the chairman of the standing committee and the trust relationship. Do we have to be so suspicious and so fearful that there is going to be injustice and unfairness and that it is not going to be equitable if we say that that is their exclusive right? Do we really have to, by an Act of this Parliament, make sure that it happens? I do not think so.

That having been done, Mr. Speaker, if you have followed me so far, the people on the existing band lists will draw up the membership code, if it has not already been done, and we trust that it will be done in fairness and equity and with justice. Now we come to deal with those people who are on this expanded band list, all of the persons whom we talked about this morning and whom I argued had lost their status because of various provisions of the Indian Act, either voluntarily or involuntarily. They will be on what we may describe as an expanded band list. The chiefs of Ontario said it was a general band list. I do not think that the particular term matters very much.

When all of those people are added who have been affected by the various provisions of the Indian Act, then these persons shall be eligible, shall have the right to make application for membership to the Indian First Nation Government. Finally, each First Nation Government will have a membership code, which we have already talked about, and it also will have an appeal mechanism. That is the basis upon which I will make my decision on the amendments of this particular grouping.

I would say this with respect to the Minister's Amendment No. 14A simply gives a choice to the bands. It says the bands, in enacting their by-laws, can either include those who are electors or those who are on the band list. That gives them a choice. It is optional. If it allows the First Nations to have a choice, to have an option, and it is not an imposition, I see no way in which I could oppose that. With respect to the others, the same principle will apply.

● (1540)

I have no difficulty with Motions Nos. 15 and 16 in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) which both attempt to provide the band with a greater degree of power and with less control and manipulation coming from the Registrar. I have to vote no on Motion No. 17 because it goes contrary to what I already suggested was acceptable, which was that contained in Motion No. 14A, the existence of an option.

Motion No. 18, which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca, comes very, very close to what I described as the expanded list, what the chiefs of Ontario called the general list and what the Hon. Member has called a transitional list. What is in a name? From my point of view, speaking as a private Member of Parliament rather than on behalf of all of the Members of my Party who can speak for themselves, I would be inclined to vote yes to that.

Motions Nos. 20 and 21 put some restrictions on the timing. I would vote in favour of those motions. Motion No. 24 is a motion to which the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands will wish to speak. It stands in his name and is a very technical motion dealing with what we call the double majority. We will be dealing with that in another context later on. I think it has been shown that what the members of the committee thought would be achieved by that motion will not in fact be achieved. I would be inclined to reject that motion.

Finally we come to Motion No. 32A which is intimately linked to Motion No. 14A. To accept one is to accept the other. However, Motion No. 32A does have one addition which I accept; that is that those who return to a band but have taken a benefit from the band at the time of leaving will now have to return to the band anything in excess of $1,000, plus interest, before they can become beneficiaries. I think that that is a safety clause and I would be able to accept it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few brief words. I would like to address my remarks to the amendments that I have grouped.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it not usual practice to recognize Members of all three Parties in the initial stages?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I thought I would, but after I had recognized the Hon. Member for Athabasca.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I will relinquish the floor to the Hon. Member in order to keep with tradition, if that is what he wishes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I did not see the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) rise. When I saw the Hon. Member for Athabasca rise, I thought he deserved the floor. I will bow to whatever the House wishes. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands has the floor.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this grouping of motions because I think that this particular series of amendments is of absolute importance to this Bill. Motion No. 14A standing in the name of the Minister falls short of what is required for the Bill. Motion No. 14A makes it permissible for band councils to recognize the right of all people over the age of 18 to take part in determining any membership rules that the band wishes to develop. I think that this is a fundamental right that should be recognized in this Bill.

In committee, we heard a great deal of testimony from some of the native women's groups, from the Native Council of Canada and from its affiliates, indicating that there is a necessity for the people to be heard. They pointed out that they should not be shut out of the political process. We are dealing with a situation in which people have lost their Indian status and their band membership. As a result, they do not have residency on the reserve. In the Indian Act as it reads now, the band electorate are those who are normally resident on the reserve, unless it is handled by band custom. That means that in many cases, people who are non-resident are not able to vote. That also means that people who are reinstated will not be able to take part in making membership decisions.

The women who are about to be reinstated would like to be able to take full part in all band political processes. I think an argument can be made on the other side indicating that perhaps non-residents should not be involved in making decisions regarding the chief or council, although I think a very good argument can be made that they should have a voice there. Perhaps an argument can be made that non-residents should not have the right to take part in making decisions with respect to the amendment that the Minister would like to bring in regarding the sale, possession or consumption of alcohol. This kind of decision is something that should be left to those who are resident in the community.

In this motion, we are talking about the basic rules for band membership. Band membership has not been exclusively limited to those who live and are ordinarily resident on the reserve. It is a very broad question and I think that all people who are members of a band should have the opportunity to take part in that decision. On that basis, I would urge the House to support Motion No. 17 rather than Motion No. 14A because Motion No. 17 would amend Clause 4 to read:

In this section, "elector" includes every person whose name is included on the band list and is of the full age of eighteen years.

I think some rights must be guaranteed the people who are being reinstated to band membership.

With regard to Motion No. 15, I was a bit surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) say that he was prepared to support that motion. Motion No. 55 gives bands the right to deprive membership from people who have been reinstated. In other words, it indicates that Bill C-31 can be disregarded by some bands if they so choose. I do not think that that is something about which this House has been talking for the last four, five and even 10 years when we were speaking of Indian women who lost status and band membership under Section 12(1)(b) having those rights restored. I do not see how the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior can give his support to Motion No. 15.

The Minister has said that there is no need for Motion No. 16. I do not see too many problems with that motion, but I do not see any great merit in it either.

Motion No. 18, submitted by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), attempts to deal with the question of high impact bands. I find this motion quite unacceptable because it enables bands to circumvent the intent of this Act by placing the names of people who would be reinstated on a so-called transitional list. This would be a limbo list and one that would have no real meaning. People would be put on this transitional list and left there forever and a bay if the band so wished. Those on the list would not really have their rights restored in the way Bill C-31 attempts to restore them.

Motion No. 20 establishes a time line such that people must apply for their band membership by 1990 if they want to be accepted under this legislation. I do not think that is realistic. I think the situation should be much more open. As the Minister pointed out, there are people who may have lost their Indian status and their band membership who are out of the country and who will not hear of the legislation in time to apply by 1990. If we are attempting to reinstate people, we should leave the situation wide open.

● (1550)

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, come on.

Mr. Manly: If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) does not like the Minister's argument, he can talk to the Minister about it. I happen to agree with the Minister.

Motion No. 21 would restrict the type of testimony which could be used by the Registrar in hearing evidence as to who should or who should not be accepted for membership. The part of the Clause which the Hon. Member for Athabasca wants to remove reads as follows:

For the purposes of this section, the Registrar may receive such evidence on oath, on affidavit or in any other manner, whether or not admissible in a court of law, as in his discretion he sees fit or deems just.

We are dealing with a situation in which many people were deprived of their band membership and Indian status in ways which were quite unjust and not always properly documented. It is sometimes very difficult to get proper legal documents. The committee, in its wisdom, opened it up by adding the Clause which I have just read, in order that the Registrar would be able to hear a wider variety of evidence than would normally be admissible in court. Motion No. 21 would remove that. I believe it is a retrogressive motion and we will oppose it.

Motion No. 24, which stands in my name, is very similar to Motion No. 35A, which was moved by the Minister. As has been pointed out, Motion No. 32A, the last in this grouping, is consequent upon Motion No. 14A. I have no further comments.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I believe the grouping of amendments which we are now discussing is the very heart of Bill C-31 and is also representative of the disagreement which many bands across the country have with implementing the present Bill.

In bringing forward Motion No. 15, I am attempting to establish band control of band membership. It is as simple as that. There are two issues: band control of band membership and their status. I think we all agree that the Government of Canada can determine status. The Government can name, by legislation, anyone whom it wishes to the status list, making those persons treaty Indians. That is a government prerogative. However, it is the very nature of the bands to determine membership. Nowhere in the present Indian Act has there ever been licence to determine what is band membership. This is a first attempt by the Parliament of Canada to dictate to the bands who should be their members. There is nothing in the Indian Act which indicates who is entitled to be a band member. Therefore, I am suggesting, as a matter of logic, that band members should be determined by the Indian bands.

Bill C-31 is unprecedented in the massive assertions which the Parliament of Canada would have over band membership. Bands have controlled their membership from the time the rivers began to run and the sun began to rise, and before white man came to the country. I think that is the basis of Bill C-31. As I said before, it is quite proper for the Government to determine who is an Indian and to determine the question of Indian status. However, in my view, we must distinguish between Indian status and band membership. We cannot impose band membership on the bands. It has never been done before. The Penner Report indicated what should happen in Indian self-government. One of the key recommendations in the Penner Report was the control of band membership. That parliamentary committee spent a year-and-a-half going across the country, seeking the information from Indians and bands. Yet, we are going against what a parliamentary committee recommended after it had studied the question for more than a year. It does not make sense.

The principle of Bill C-31 is to be lauded. We should all be ashamed that we have allowed the Indian Act to stand for so long, as it discriminated against women. In other words, if an Indian woman married a man who was not a treaty Indian, she lost her status and her band membership. That was wrong. Indian Governments did not impose that on their women; the Parliament of Canada imposed it. That is the tragedy. Now we recognize that it was not just. Clearly, women were discriminated against. In our wisdom, we will now change the law and automatically return the women who were discriminated against to the band lists. They will now be band members. In fact, we are saying that we cannot solve the problem because we made a real mess of it, so we will impose the problem on the bands. In Motion No. 15, I am asking only that control of band membership go to the bands.

There seems to be the feeling that we cannot trust the bands to make intelligent assessments and judgments in saying whom they will return to their membership. There is nothing in the Constitution Act, 1867, that gives to the Parliament of Canada the right to determine who are members of a particular band. It has always been the band which has decided that. Never before in the history of Parliament has an attempt been made to determine who will be a band member. That is obvious. It is the bands which determined membership.

The Indians did not ask for this. The Indians who appeared before the committee unanimously said that if we were talking about self-government, they wanted control of their band memberships. I will give a list of the groups which appeared before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development: the Brotherhood of Indian Nations for Manitoba, March 12, 1985; Assembly of First Nations, March 14, 1985; the Coalition of First Nations, March 18, 1985; the Union of New Brunswick Indians, March 13, 1985; Treaty Six Alliance for Alberta, March 18, 1985; Indian Women of Treaties 6, 7 and 8 for Alberta and Saskatchewan, March 20, 1985; Treaty Six Chiefs Alliance and Saddle Lake Indian Nation, March 21, 1985; Sarcee Nation, March 21, 1985; Treaty 7 Blood Tribe, March 21, 1985; Four Nations of Hobbema, March 21, 1985; Yellowhead Tribal Council, March 21, 1985; Six Nations Band Council, March 25, 1985; Treaty 8, March 26, 1985; Muskegog Cree Tribal Council, March 27, 1985; Nishnawbe-Aski Nation, March 27, 1985; Union of Nova Scotia Indians, March 28, 1985; Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations, March 28, 1985; Council for Yukon Indians, March 28, 1985; Conne River Band, Newfoundland, April 1, 1985.

• (1600)

There have been additional supporters since then of band control and membership which is fundamental to Indian government. They are the First Nations of Quebec by resolution May 23, 1985; Indian Association of Alberta by way of resolution and a telex, May 3, 1985; The Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance, letter of May 10, 1985 and Chiefs of Ontario Resolution of June 4, 1985.

We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has the confidence of the Indian people in Canada who are seeking at the First Ministers' Conference aboriginal rights for the First Nations. Now we are bringing in Bill C-31 to this House which imposes membership on the bands, undercutting the very thing we are attempting to do at the First Ministers Conference. It truly does not make sense to me. The Indian people, the bands, as a fundamental right and, as has been proven in the past, an historic right, should control band membership. That is why I put forward Motion No. 15.

Motion No. 16 is a minor amendment. Because of the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), I have no problem if Motion No. 16 is not accepted. I know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be reasonable. He has the knack of sitting down and resolving a problem if it comes before him.

But, what about the next Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? That is the reason I put Motion No. 16 forward. It is a mechanism to resolve a dispute if one develops between the Minister and a band.

If Motion No. 15 is accepted, then we do not need my Motion No. 18. Motion No. 18 is only a transitional band list because, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, there are some bands which face the possibility of extinction by the reinstatement of the very people we are talking about in the Bill, if they outnumber the present members of the bands. There are some small bands with a good economic base which have 15 to 40 members. If we had the band controlling band membership, we would not need Motion No. 18. I only put it forward in the hope that we could come to our senses and agree that we really should be giving control of band membership to the bands.

Motion No. 20 provides a five-year deadline to apply for band membership. That is all it does. What I am saying is once this Bill is passed, 20 years or 30 years from now someone could approach the band and ask to be registered as a treaty Indian. He did not worry about it 15 or 20 years ago because gold had not been found on the reserve in northern Ontario, but now that it has been, he wants his band membership back. I say that that is ridiculous. Each band, as a Government, has the right to know over a period of time—is my time up, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, it is.

Mr. Shields: Then I will close off right now. I do appreciate being allowed one more minute. Motion No. 21 is with respect to evidence going before the Registrar. I was hoping to make the Bill a little more clear because I think we are allowing the Registrar too much leeway as to what he can receive into evidence and what he cannot.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the next Hon. Member, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45 to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Divorce—Proposed change in waiting period; the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—(a) Impact of toxic chemicals on sea-gulls. (b) Request that Minister meet scientists; and the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Industry—Employees of Dominion stores in Ontario.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development; and Motions Nos. 14A (Mr. Crombie), 15 and 16 (Mr. Shields), 17 (Mr. Manly), 18, 20 and 21 (Mr. Shields), 24 (Mr. Manly) and 32A (Mr. Crombie) (p. 5574).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be short but I feel a responsibility, having met with the three tribes in my riding, the Stoneys, the Blackfoot and the Sarcees, to bring their views to the attention of the House. I would like to deal with Section 15 only. These three tribes of Canadians of Indian descent feel very strongly that they were given the right to control their membership under Treaty 7 and they have been doing so. Now they are worried about the size of their reserve, about the increase in population, the housing problems and how these matters are going to be handled.

Members of the Blackfoot tribe, even the women of the tribe, oppose the Bill entirely. The primary reason for their opposition to the Bill is the fact that there are now going to be some memberships imposed on the band council without adequate funds to handle that situation. I do not know how much money will be made available, and I am worried about that aspect. If an Indian woman marries a white man with four or five youngsters, which is not beyond the realm of possibility, she is then entitled to live on the reserve and her husband's children, under the definition which was passed this morning, could become members of that reserve.

Some of the reserves are exceptionally well off financially. There are benefits which Indian people have such as education, health and welfare and no taxation. There is the real danger of a lot of people moving on to the reserve under these provisions who really do not have the interests of the band at heart, or even the interests of the Indian people. I think we should take another look at this particular aspect.

Even the native women are not happy with the suggestion that they have been discriminated against. Under their code, they feel they were not discriminated against. They made choices of their own free will. I think there is a danger in this type of Bill of being influenced by the white population to too great an extent. The Indian people have to live their own lives. They want to retain their culture and their way of life. White people want to impose their moral values on the Indians. The people of the tribes in my riding, at least, feel that they are mature enough to use their own culture, develop their own ways, accept their own religions and run their own reserves. They do resent other people being imposed on them by legislation. I want to voice that view of the three tribes in the Bow River riding.

I have been advised by another delegation that all tribes in Alberta are opposing this section. I do not know that for sure, but I am disturbed by the fact that the Indians in Alberta generally are not members of the National Brotherhood. I just do not like the idea of their being left out. A very prominent chief of the Stony tribe came here to the constitutional conference. He could not get in because the National Council of Indians would not let him in. He went home very disappointed. This is a very important tribe in Alberta which could not even have an observer because of the National Brotherhood. These things disturb our people. They are disturbed over the fact that the legislation will force people on to the reserve who would otherwise not be able to do so.

• (1610)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I cannot sit here and listen to this wonderful list of bands and groups who have spoken out with respect to the right to band control, and the issue of discrimination against women which is elucidated, enunciated and spoken to but not meant sincerely. Discrimination against women has been done against their will. They were enfranchised despite the band practice. As the Hon. Member across the way mentioned, the bands controlled their process, procedure and membership long before we got here, but they did not enfranchise their women; we did.

What I am saying is that before the Minister moves in this regard, I think he should reinstate the women and the people who lost their status and then start from a degree of equivalency, equity and good common sense and let them participate. I think discrimination, the way he is putting it, is a false issue. Discrimination against women is blatant and they very definitely spoke out. The list that was read earlier was not a complete list.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words on this particular group of motions. I know that this Bill is trying to make the best out of a bad deal. This was part of the Indian Act for a good many years and, while it was inadequate, people learned to live with it. Therefore, it is important that as many wrongs as possible be corrected through the enactment of these amendments without doing harm to the future of the bands which are presently worrying about what is going to happen to them over the next couple of generations. One of the weakness of this Bill is that it does not put in place the finances which might be necessary because of the changes wich are going to be made.

I guess we have covered Motion No. 14A fairly well. Our concern was that it is permissive. If you took Motion No. 14A and Motion No. 17 together, I suppose you would fulfil those requirements we feel are important because if the Bill is passed in its present form, there are a lot of people who might be returned to status. However, with Motion No. 14A, they may not get an opportunity to say anything about what the membership should be or will be. There are people who were enfranchised against their will in many cases, or for reasons which are now considered by this House and most of the people of Canada as being unacceptable. The motion does not make it necessary for those who might be returned to status to be listed and be part of the democratic structure of the band. I think it is also necessary to point out that this clause does not return to status anyone who did not have status before. Consequently it is not a particularly bad approach, as I indicated, since it does correct some of the wrongs in the original Indian Act.

Motion No. 16 makes an effort to reduce the power of the Minister and allow for a little more open discussion. I agree with that and support it to some extent at least. As to Motion No. 21, there are groups of Indians and individuals who have never been given status. I have quite a large number of these people in my constituency. They were not given status because they were not on any of the reserves at the time the treaty was signed. Consequently, they find themselves roaming around from reserve to reserve, never getting status because there are no records of their status. It is very important to be able to accept as evidence statements which may not be documented. Therefore, we support that particular approach. As I said, it is making the best out of a bad deal, but in the process we have to be sure that all positions are aired, and that we ensure the possibility of economic and social development among the bands in the future. If this is the aim of this legislation and we are willing to put in place the necessary funds, then we should support it and get the Bill through the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 32A (Mr. Crombie) agreed to.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 15 in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is now on Motion No. 16 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. Accordingly, the motion is lost.

Motion No. 16 (Mr. Shields) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 17 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The next questions is on Motion No. 18 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. Accordingly, the motion is lost.

Motion No. 18 (Mr. Shields) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 20 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 20 (Mr. Shields) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 21 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 21 (Mr. Shields) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 24 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea. All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 24 (Mr. Manly) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 25.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) on a point of order.

Mr. Penner: You will recall that there was an agreement, under Speaker's ruling No. 7, to take out Motion No. 13 in order to accommodate my hon. colleague, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I think it would be proper at this time to call Motion No. 13 before Motion No. 25 is called. That was agreed to earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must advise the Hon. Member that we will have to reserve that until the Speaker comes in with his decision, if that is agreeable to the Hon. Member. It has to be that way because I believe the Speaker ruled that he will decide—

Mr. Penner: No, no, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish at all to dispute with the Chair, but there was an agreement reached that at three o'clock, as soon as debate was resumed, assuming that all other motions had been disposed of, that we would return to Motion No. 13. It has taken some time to deal with the whole grouping but, by agreement of the Parties, Motion No. 13 was to be heard next. That was agreed to. I think the Speaker simply saw it as an agreement among the Parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) on the point of order.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, as I recall the procedural discussion at the time, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) wished to speak to it. Motion No. 13 also involves Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). I think that if you are going to call Motion No. 13, you should also call Motion No. 14. That would complete the original grouping.

Mr. Penner: That is quite correct. That is my understanding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that the Speaker has still not ruled on whether or not Motion No. 14 requires a separate vote from Motion No. 13. I would respectfully ask that any division on this wait until we have had an opportunity to hear the Speaker's ruling. I am quite prepared to have the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) move her motion and speak on it, but I would like an opportunity to wait for the Speaker's ruling before there is any vote on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) to speak also. However, I must wait for a ruling from the Speaker. I am hoping that that will happen shortly and then we can debate Motions Nos. 13 and 14 together. I cannot really do anything until the Speaker has ruled because I believe that the speakers have a different view on Motions Nos. 13 and 14 and they would like to participate in this debate. I must wait for the Speaker to make that decision. Does the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior have another point of order that he would like to bring up?

• (1630)

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, it is quite right, as I indicated earlier, that we would debate Motions Nos. 13 and 14 together. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has created an additional problem for the Speaker by suggesting that Motion No. 14 must be considered on its own merits. It is that ruling for which we are waiting.

There is no difficulty at all with Motion No. 13. Since it is agreed that that would be debated, I think we should proceed with it and dispose of Motion No. 13 before proceeding to Motion No. 25. In keeping with the dictum of the Government House Leader earlier that we should deal with these in the order in which they appear and in which the Speaker has made his ruling, I would suggest that you would have no difficulty in just calling Motion No. 13 and leaving No. 14 in abeyance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must disagree with the Hon. Member who is a distinguished Member of the House from the class of 1968. I appreciate his argument but, the Hon. Member will know because he has occupied the Chair a number of times, when the Speaker groups Motions No. 13 and 14 for debate, an Acting Speaker cannot change it at this stage. I hope he will allow debate to begin on Motion No. 25 and wait for the Speaker's ruling on Motions No. 13 and 14. Therefore, I believe we should start with debate on Motion No. 25.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw the motion and perhaps save a lot of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) is withdrawing Motion No. 25. Is there unanimous consent for its withdrawal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 25 (Mr. Shields) withdrawn.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to improve my batting order with the Chair, since I did not succeed in having Motion No. 13 debated, I want to draw Your Honour's attention to ruling No. 13 by the Speaker this morning, dealing with Motion No. 27. The ruling states that Motion No. 27, which stands in my name, gives the Chair procedural difficulty in that it is attempting to amend the parent Act. Far be it for me to even begin to dispute that ruling of the Speaker, but may I, in keeping with the traditions of the House, ask whether I can have unanimous consent to at least debate Motion No. 27 and then have it disposed of by a vote, after my arguments have been heard?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, having heard the representations made by the Hon. Member, certainly we on this side of the House have no difficulty with the Chair calling Motion No. 27 and hearing the Hon. Member's arguments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to group Motion No. 27 with Motions Nos. 28, 38 and 39?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior) moved:

Motion No. 27

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 7 by adding immediately after line 10 at page 14 the following.

"(2) Subsection 17(2) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Where pursuant to subsection (1) a new band has been established from an existing band or any part thereof, a portion of the reserve lands and funds of the existing band may be held for the use and benefit of the new band, if the council and a majority of the electors of the existing band consents." "

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River) moved:

Motion No. 28

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 7 by adding immediately after line 10 at page 14 the following:

"(2) The Minister shall, within two years of receiving notice from a representative of a body of persons seeking a declaration pursuant to paragraph 6(1)(b), cause an investigation to be made as to the desirability of such a declaration and report his recommendations to the Governor in Council, which report the Minister shall cause to be laid before Parliament at its next session for consideration through an appropriate committee."

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior) moved:

Motion No. 38

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 20

(a) by adding immediately after line 21 at page 19 the following:

"(b)(i) the number of people entered on band lists maintained pursuant to section 10 whose applications for registration under section 5.(5) of this Act have been rejected by the Registrar;

(ii) the total number of applications made under section 5.(5) of this Act which have been rejected by the Registrar;".

(b) by adding immediately after line 27 at page 19 the following:

"(2) The Minister shall make available to every band council a copy of the report referred to in subsection (1)."

Motion No. 39

That Bill C-31, be amended by adding immediately after line 35 at page 19 the following:

"21. (1) Where a band council requests a study of the impact of the amendments on the band, the Minister shall, in agreement with the band council, designate a person, who shall serve without remuneration, to work with the band council for the purpose of identifying such impacts.

(2) The Minister's designate shall, in agreement with the band council, determine the social, cultural and economic effects of the amendments on the band, including the requirements for additional land, increased program, service and capital costs, and any other matters that may be identified.

(3) The Minister's designate shall report his findings and recommendations to the Minister and the band.

(4) The recommendations of the Minister's designate and the Minister's response to these recommendations shall be included in the report referred to in section 20."

He said: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by speaking to Motion No. 27. I thank the Minister and Hon. Members for giving this motion the benefit of the doubt with respect to its procedural acceptability. However, we can do almost anything here by unanimous consent. I will never forget my first day here when someone moved that we call it six o'clock when it was only 4.30.

Motion No. 27 is not very complicated and simply amends Clause 7 of the Bill, which deals with new bands. Clause 7 amends Section 17(1) of the Indian Act which deals with the Minister's power to create new bands.

The present legislation allows the Minister to amalgamate bands which request that amalgamation. We are not suggesting any change in that respect. The law also allows the Minister to constitute new bands from existing bands and we do not suggest any change there. A new power provided to the Minister is that new bands may be constituted out of the Indian registry. He may do so if requested by the persons proposing to form a new band from the Registrar's list. I point that out by way of background.

However, we are concerned that Section 17(2) of the Indian Act remains in Bill C-31. According to Section 17(2) of the Indian Act, when a new band has been created from an existing band, the Minister can take whatever reserve lands and funds from the existing band he deems necessary for the new band. In other words, if two bands are being created from one, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has the power to select whatever amount of land and whatever amount of funds he deems to be appropriate to give to the new band. As stated by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), the problem is that it impinges an external authority on the autonomy of the bands. There is no provision for consent of the existing band to any such action by a Minister.

Let me come directly to Motion No. 27. That motion would simply require the consent of the council and a majority of the existing band electors to any such action by the Minister. The Minister knows, and so do all Members who served on the committee, that one of the basic concerns about Bill C-31 is the necessary resources of land and funds to accommodate the reinstated people. The Minister before the committee has given his assurance that the bands will be no worse off as a result of these amendments. We have taken the Minister at his word because there is nothing in the legislation to guarantee that. I think if we accept my amendment, Motion No. 27, and put in this consent clause, it is one way of assuring the existing bands that if new bands are to be created out of this new registry list that the land and the funds will not be taken from them to create the new bands.

● (1640)

I do not need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you are aware already that the existing pie, if you can call it a pie, is very very small in most cases. Our Indian First Nations, with only a few exceptions, are among the poorest communities in Canada. If by ministerial prerogative we can take that pie, which does not have very much filling, and subdivide it still further, I think we will be imposing a very serious injustice on these people. We are saying that nothing could be done without their consent with respect to the further division of their property or the further division of their funds. It is simply a consent clause.

With your permission, Sir, I would go on to the other two motions in my name since they are grouped for debate. I turn my attention to Motion No. 38. Motion No. 38 can be dealt with very quickly because it has to do with the reporting provisions to Parliament of the actions taken by the Registrar in accepting new people.

As it is now, by my amendment Motion No. 38, we would require more specific information to be included in the report. The Bill does not cover all the Indians who may be recognized as Indians by their own people. I will not say anymore on that except to say that it just improves the reporting provisions. The motion provides more elaboration.

I come now to Motion No. 39. It is somewhat weaker than I would like it to be. The reason it has been watered down is we had to be very careful I did not step on the toes of the Royal prerogative. If I had been able to do that, and if private Members were able to spend even a little public money, our amendment would have had much more validity and strength. Since we could not do that, I had to get the idea across that there has to be some method or means of assessing the impact on bands of those people returning to the community.

I would have liked the Minister to be able to appoint a commissioner through this amendment and have the commissioner agreed upon by the bands to study the impact and then report to Parliament, making it an obligation upon Parliament, where there was an impact determined which demanded there be more land made available or that there be more resources be made available, to respond. Since there no Royal Recommendation can go with a private Member's motion, the best we could do here was to have a Minister's designate who would serve without remuneration, approved by the Minister and by the bands to take a look at the impact of the new reinstated people coming back into the bands to find out what impact was on housing, on educational facilities, on recreational facilities, on the amount of land and on funding made available to the band. That Minister's designate would then make certain recommendations about what ought to be done and report back to the Minister.

It is not as strong and as forceful an amendment as I would like it to be. In fact, it is not as strong an amendment as I originally wrote myself, but I had to take guidance and counsel from learned people who work for the House of Commons. This is the end result of that.

I would like to emphasize that we should look behind the motion and recognize that there needs to be some way for the Minister and for Parliament to know what the impact is of what we have done by way of Bill C-31. If the Minister finds Motion No. 39 to be appealing or even if it is accepted and proves to be a useful way of proceeding, he may in due course want to give it additional strength and use his ministerial powers to do so.

Those are the three motions to which I wanted to draw your attention and the attention of all Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments on these four motions grouped for debate. I am in support of all four motions. First, Motion No. 27 which, as the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) pointed out, places the responsibility for making decisions with the band council and the majority of the electors of the present band for any decision regarding new bands. The present Act leaves this at the discretion of the Minister. I am sure the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) would agree that this is the kind of decision that should rightfully belong with the band council and the band electors. I am pleased to give my support to this amendment, and I hope the Government will also.

Motion No. 28 in the name of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) simply seeks to have some mechanisms by which people who wish to form new bands will be able to get some answer from the Minister because, at present if people want to form a new band and apply, their letters can just fall into limbo. Motion No. 28 requires that the Minister, after receiving notice, shall within two years make some investigation into the merits of forming a new band and issue a report to the House of Commons. I think two years is a realistic time period. It is something where the bands obviously need Government support.

Motion No. 38 just briefly deals with further reporting and more detailed reporting to the House of Commons. That is something I think all Members would want to see. The results of Bill C-31 are something all of us will want to monitor very closely in the next number of years. The more detailed information we have laid before us so we can assess the impact on bands, the better we will be able to do our job and the better we will be able to respond to any situation that many arise that requires parliamentary action.

Motion No. 39 I find very interesting. There will be someone to do a study when bands request a study on the impact of Bill C-31 on a band. The impact of Bill C-31 will be considerable on a number of bands. When I first read this, I thought the Liberals had reformed their whole approach toward patronage since September 4. I thought perhaps they were carrying it a little too far when the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior wrote that "this person shall serve without remuneration", or perhaps he just assumed the person to be appointed would not be a Liberal. I understand that he was really concerned about not treading on the toes of the Royal prerogative, so I can understand the reason for putting in that clause. This is a worthy amendment and one that I hope will receive the support of the Government.

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker: Could I interrupt the proceedings just for one second, before recognizing the Parliamentary Secretary, to clear up the remaining procedural matters and get them out of the way.

I have had the opportunity to review the Hon. Member's contribution to the procedural debate on Bill C-31 and I am now ready to make a definitive ruling.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has suggested that if unanimous consent were sought, Motion No. 3 could be debated and voted on separately if such is the will of the House. Since this amendment does not infringe upon the prerogative of the Crown, I would therefore seek the consent of the House for Motion No. 3 to be deemed in order. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

The President of the Privy Council also suggested that the House would be disposed to debate together Motions Nos. 33 and 33A but would vote upon the motions separately. Again, is there unanimous consent to deem Motions Nos. 33 and 33A in order and to be proposed to the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has argued for a separate vote on Motions Nos. 13 and 14. I have listened to his argument and reviewed both motions. Motions Nos. 13 and 14 both seek to amend line 30 at page 6 of the Bill and must be dealt with as previously announced. Therefore, an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 will dispose of Motion No. 14. If Motion No. 13 however is negatived, then and only then will the question be put on Motion No. 14.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands has also submitted argument to the Chair on Motion No. 36. On reviewing that motion, once again I regret to inform the Hon. Member that this amendment clearly infringes upon the financial initiative of the Crown and therefore cannot be put before the House.

For the benefit of the House I would therefore recapitulate the motions which have been ruled out of order. They are Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6A, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 19, 22, 23, 26, 28A, 30, 31, 34, 35 and 36.

As soon as we have finished with the current grouping now before the House, the Chair will return and propose the question on Motion No. 3. When Motion No. 3 has been disposed of, Motions Nos. 13 and 14 will be proposed.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, when you were reading the list of motions that had been definitely ruled out of order, you mentioned Motion No. 3 but then you later said that it was in order.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. The Hon. Member is absolutely correct. I did read Motion No. 3 and should not have. I thank the Hon. Member for his attention.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly to Motion No. 27. As the Indian Act now reads, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has complete discretion in Subsection 17(1) to constitute new bands from existing band lists, in effect to split bands. In Subsection 17(2) he also has discretion to divide reserve lands and funds accordingly. Bill C-31 originally provided for future band splits to require approval of a majority of band electors.

In reviewing the Bill, however, it became clear that this approach would indeed be impractical. In fact, it might even make band splits impossible. This is because such splits normally involve a minority group, frequently one that lives apart from the majority of the band. There may be good reasons for acting on the desire of such minorities to split away, but it is unlikely that a majority of the whole band would agree.

During the standing committee's clause by clause review, the Bill was revised to require that those persons proposing to form a new band make a request to the Minister, rather than that a majority of all band electors approve. Any split would still be subject to the Minister's discretion, so inappropriate cases can be rejected. If a decision is taken to split a band, it is only logical to split the band's land and resources accordingly. The members of the new band obviously have a right to a fair share of the assets of the whole band. It would be inconsistent to give a group within a band a right to request the Minister to constitute a new band without also giving them effective access to a reasonable portion of band assets.

The present motion does not seek to amend Subsection 17(1) as reported by the standing committee. To be consistent, and indeed in fairness to those who may seek to form a new band, we cannot accept the change proposed in this motion to Subsection 17(2). In fact, probably the fairest way to share band assets in the case of band splits would be to leave the matter to an independent third party, namely the Minister. Such decisions would only be taken after consultation with all those affected. I might also point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are not talking about a frequent problem. In the past 10 years, for example, there have only been approximately two dozen cases of band splits under Subsection 17(1).

In conclusion, I urge all Members to vote to defeat this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a few comments with respect not to Motion No. 27 but, in the current grouping that we have of Nos. 27, 28, 38 and 39, some comments with respect to the latter three.

Motion No. 28 refers to a motion placed in the name of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). The motion is well intentioned, but I would submit, with respect, inappropriate. The basic idea seems to be to ensure that applications to constitute a new band are dealt with within two years. In my view, this motion is entirely unnecessary. As it now stands, it is the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to recommend to the Governor in Council on the formation of entirely new bands under the Indian Act. Such decisions are properly dealt with in this way. With the range of issues involved, and I could tell you from some experiences in northern Ontario, dealing with five bands in particular, it is a complex process from the identification of the land base and negotiations with the province on that issue to agreement on financial arrangements. Such investigations and negotiations may take six months or six years, depending on the circumstances. Such cases are always the object of public scrutiny and affected bands have in the past been very effective in convincing the standing committee to champion their cause. There is no reason to think that that informal process cannot continue to serve well the interests of all concerned.

On a technical level, I should point out that the motion is, with respect, flawed. There is no authority under Paragraph 6(1)(d) to declare a body of persons to be a band. That paragraph only sets out the eligibility of such persons to be registered as status Indians under the Indian Act. The mechanism for declaring a new band is provided by a combination of the definition of band in Subsection 2(1) and the power in Subsection 73(3) for the Governor in Council to make orders, and I quote "make orders and regulations to carry out the purposes of the provisions of the act".

In conclusion, with respect to Motion No. 28, in my view we should only make rules where they are needed, and in this case there is no reason to change the existing situation. No arbitrary requirement to report to Parliament will make it easier to resolve the complex issues normally involved. With the technical nature of the motion, along with the substantive comments I have made, I hope the House will not support Motion No. 28.

With respect to Motion No. 38, Mr. Speaker, proposed and standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), Motions Nos. 38 and 39 deal with Clause 20 which provides that the Minister will report to Parliament within two years of the Royal Assent to this Bill on the steps he has taken to implement the Bill. Motion No. 38 in particular, as presented by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior would require the Minister to report on the number of people granted membership by the bands that are denied registration as status Indians. The Bill as presently drafted gives bands full control over membership if they wish. There is no obligation to inform the Minister who has applied for, been accepted or denied membership. The Minister would have no accurate way of reporting to Parliament on which, if any, such band members had been denied status. The proposal, with great respect, is not practical.

The second part of the motion, which would require that the implementation report be made available to every band council, is merely a statement of current practice and would seem hardly necessary to require a statute. All reports to Parliament are, of course, available to all citizens, and copies of the report would be circulated to all band councils as a matter of routine at any rate. That is the practice of the Department in dealing with such important documents.

• (1700)

Very briefly, Motion No. 39, which was also moved by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, requires the Minister to designate a person to carry out a band impact study if a band so requests. I have already said before the committee and publicly that I have every intention of carrying out such studies on a band-by-band basis as required. Forcing the Minister to designate a specific person to carry out impact studies for individual bands is, I submit, unnecessary. It establishes an unduly rigid model which infringes on what is already a clear Ministerial responsibility. The Government has introduced this legislation and it will take all the steps necessary to ensure that it is properly implemented.

Questions might also be raised about the quality of studies to be done by persons serving without remuneration. If studies are to be done as I believe they should be, is it not necessary to ensure that they be done properly? If it is likely that we may be required to hire or to have volunteers, we should have the option to do both. Finally, the proposal, while well intended by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, is neither necessary nor practical in my view.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ANNUITIES TO DSO RECIPIENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of paying veterans of World War I and all recipients of the DSO, the same annuities with respect to gallantry awards received by veterans of World War II.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss my motion in the House today on behalf of World War I veterans who received awards for gallantry during that war. It may come as a surprise to some of us here today that some of these veterans receive annuities for their awards from the Government of the United Kingdom. This fact came to my attention earlier this year when one of my constituents telephoned me about the matter.

I knew that the veterans of World War II who received gallantry awards did receive a small annuity from the federal Government and a quick look at the Veterans Affairs annual report confirmed that gallantry awards and annuities were being paid by the Canadian Government only to those veterans who served in the Second World War and later. I found that the total of those payments in 1983-84 amounted to about $62,000. That would indicate that the resolution that is before us today would do well if it managed to find recipients still surviving from World War I to receive a tenth of that amount.

Prior to 1943 when the current policy came into effect, all awards, pensions and gratuities with respect to gallantry had been paid to Canadians by the British Government. In June 1943, an Order in Council was passed which made the Canadian Government responsible for awards to Second World War veterans.

For reasons which have been long forgotten and are completely unknown to me, the Order excluded World War I veterans who, up to the present time are paid gratuities and annuities from the British treasury. Perhaps I could read a few words from the policy manual as it relates to gallantry awards:

In 1943 the Canadian Government assumed the responsibility for the payment involved insofar as members of the Canadian Forces were concerned, with respect to awards earned during World War II or later, but did so under the rules established by the British.

This may account for the amount of these awards which is meagre indeed. The policy manual goes on:

If the veteran is in receipt of a pension for disability under the Pension Act, or an allowance under the War Veterans Allowance Act, or an annual allowance under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, he is entitled to an annuity of $50.00 from the commencement date of his pension or allowance or 24 August, 1972, whichever is the later date.

Later on, this was changed to read as follows:

—that it is deemed advisable for the Dominion of Canada, through the Canadian Pension Commission, to assume payment of all such grants arising out of awards which have been or may hereafter be made in respect of the war to members of the armed forces of Canada;—

Remember that this was dated 1943.

It is important to realize that these gratuities are only paid to Canadian gallantry award winners if they have applied to the British Government for them. I submit that many Canadians did not know to whom to apply in the British Government and some were disinclined to apply to another Government in any case. It is now time for our Government to recognize officially the brave members of our Armed Forces who fought in World War I by granting to them, directly from Canadian funds, the annuities and gratuities for which they were eligible if they applied to the British Government.

In connection with this and included in my motion is a request that recipients of the Distinguished Service Order also be entitled to an annuity or award. By way of background, it had been decided many years ago and at least as far back as World War I that winners of the DSO who were almost exclusively of the rank of Major or above were not soldiering for money and indeed that it would be an affront to offer them a gratuity for merely being brave. While the Victoria Cross, the George Cross and the Distinguished Service Cross are included in gratuities, the DSO has been excluded. I would like to see that changed as well. The exclusion of the DSO is a relic of a class distinction that has never really fitted the relatively classless Canadian society of the 20th century.

• (1710)

Since tabling this motion last March, there has been some progress, which leads me to believe that the Minister is giving serious consideration to accepting the motion. I do not need to tell the House that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) has made great strides in bringing to the veterans of the country the maximum benefits to which they are entitled. He has passed legislation to ensure that their pensions are realistic and he has initiated policy changes that give the advantage to the veterans in deciding controversial claims. I am confident that he will continue in this manner and that veterans will receive every consideration, as they so richly deserve.

I would like to speak on another matter, which has been brought to the Minister's attention by the Royal Canadian Legion. Indeed, I have quite a large file on the matter. The matter concerns World War II volunteers who served in Canada only, but who served as volunteers for 365 days or more. Those veterans are not entitled to receive war veteran's allowance, as they did not serve in a theatre of war.

The Minister knows very well of the anomalies to which that policy has given rise, as a result of some "Canadian only" veterans who were deemed to have been in a theatre of war as a result of having crossed over from the mainland to Prince Edward Island. However, on Vancouver Island the rules are different. Vancouver Island was at one point shelled by an enemy submarine, yet it is not considered to have been in a theatre of war. Veterans who served on Vancouver Island do not qualify for the war veterans allowance. As far as I am concerned, any veteran who volunteered for active service but, through circumstances not of his or her own making, did not make it outside the western hemisphere, should be entitled to the full benefits which are accorded to other veterans.

I know the Government has a first priority to reduce the deficit and, therefore, I understand the reluctance to commit additional funds. In that respect, the Legion made the following suggestion in the brief which it presented to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It read:

While the estimated cost is high, some of it would be offset by reduced expenses for the Canadian Pension Commission in the consideration of disability claims. With a change in legislation it would not then be necessary to seek rulings from the Commission to try to establish an entitlement to qualify for an assessment of 1 per cent or more. Furthermore, there is the provision in our resolution of having had to serve for a period in excess of 365 days in Canada as the basis of eligibility.

The veterans of Canada would no doubt appreciate a statement of principle from the Minister that "Canada only" volunteers who served in excess of 365 days are deserving of the war veterans allowance and that, when fiscal circumstances are more favourable, a plan of action to implement payment of the allowance to those veterans would be made known.

With respect to the motion, as I have stated, some progress has been made. The Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission provided to the Minister a cost breakdown of the provision of gratuities and annuities to World War I veterans and to all recipients of the DSO. The Minister graciously provided me with a copy. After the start-up costs, which would provide for all one-time payments in 1985-86, subsequent years' costs for World War I recipients, who are currently paid by the British Government, would amount to less than $5,000 in 1986-87 and would lessen each year thereafter. It should be clearly understood that nothing I am saying would limit the payments to those veterans who are currently being paid by the British Government. Many veterans preferred not to apply to the British Government for the gratuities, and many others, while eligible, were never aware of their eligibility.

The Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission recommended that consideration be given to assuming the costs. The Chairman's brief noted:

The present situation appears to be a widespread source of dissatisfaction and has been the subject of several resolutions from veterans organizations. Failure to assuage this dissatisfaction may appear to be failure to honour promises of generosity.

The Chairman also pointed out that the advantage to the Government of Canada in assuming the costs of all gallantry awards would provide a "positive image of Canada accepting full responsibility for costs associated with gallantry awards to members of the Canadian Forces".

A meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to discuss the Estimates on May 30 gave me the opportunity to question the Minister directly on the subject. As I anticipated, the Minister was receptive to my suggestion. In response to my questions the Minister stated:

—it seems to be a reasonable suggestion and as soon as I get the figures from the British High Commissioner I will be able to do something—

The Minister's statement is most encouraging and I am hopeful that his request will become a reality very soon. The Minister has to be counted among the best in Veterans Affairs. He has received well-deserved praise from many segments of the veteran population. He can count me among those who support his efforts to ensure that veterans are given the best treatment possible.

I have made representations to the Minister on behalf of numerous veterans from my riding of Victoria and from elsewhere in Canada. Members of the House will know of my concerns for veterans and of the legislation which I have put forward. I want to continue work in that vein and I am assured of a sympathetic hearing with the current Minister.

In summary, the motion presented today is a request to the Government to pay to recipients of gallantry awards from World War I, along with all recipients of the Distinguished Service Order, the same annuities which are received by Canadian veterans of World War II. A corollary to this, but not included as part of the motion, concerns making the veterans aware of the change. The Minister may wish to consider instructing his officials to prepare an advertisement, which could appear in a publication such as Legion magazine, to inform veterans of the change in the payment of the awards.

There are, no doubt, some veterans who not are aware of their entitlement to an annuity. Others—and I know of some who fit into this category—have chosen to forgo a payment from the British Government. However, if the award were to come from their own Canadian Government, they would gladly accept it. The awards represent very small sums of money. They are based on 10 pounds per annum, which is currently approximately $50 or $100 per annum, depending on whether the veterans have any other government income. The annuities are a source of enormous pride, far larger than the amount would indicate, to the recipients.

I look forward to this initiative being taken and hope that the motion will gain the necessary acceptance of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on the motion standing in his name on the Order Paper of the House, in which, as he explained so eloquently, he urges the Government to——consider the advisability of paying veterans of World War I and all recipients of the DSO, the same annuities with respect to gallantry awards received by veterans of World War II.

I know that the Hon. Member for Victoria, who also served in the military, has done a great deal to improve the lot of our veterans, and especially World War I veterans. At the time, as the Hon. Member described in his speech, everything was the responsibility of the Government of the United Kingdom, especially everything concerning acts of bravery and gallantry, as they used to say, by those who fought under the Canadian flag—the Canadian Expeditionary Force as it was called at the time.

• (1720)

I also wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Victoria on the detailed exposé given at the last meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, of the problem he outlined for us this afternoon. I feel there is indeed an injustice that should be remedied, because, need I repeat, all acts of bravery and gallantry rewarded either with the Victoria Cross or the George Cross or any of the other awards were remunerated or subsidized by the United Kingdom or England, as we said at the time. This was the case until 1942, when it was decided by order in council that the Government of Canada would pay the annuities with respect to awards given to veterans for distinguished service during World War II. However, nothing was done for veterans of the battlefields of 1914. There is an element of unfairness that should be corrected, and I am very happy to see that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is here in the House and is considering the comments made by the Hon. Member for Victoria. I am very pleased.

I also would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about our World War I veterans, for the simple reason that we have never had any official figures on the number of veterans who are still with us. According to the 1971 Census, there were still 18,500, and of that number, 5,000 were receiving a War Veterans Pension or some kind of allowance from the Department of Veterans Affairs. However, I am sure that if we calculate how many veterans are still alive today, the number receiving a pension or an allowance has decreased. In any case, according to the figures available to the Department of Veterans Affairs, it seems that the average age of World War I veterans was 88. I imagine we should follow up at least some of the recommendations that were given in a most eloquent brief submitted by the Canadian Legion on May 30 of this year, which said that all World War I veterans should receive benefits under the new "Aging Program" that has been very successful for the simple reason that it makes it possible for the veteran to live comfortably with his family until he can no longer take care of himself. I believe we can extend life, not indefinitely, of course but quite substantially if we can help these people enjoy a comfortable old age.

I therefore totally agree with the brief on veterans submitted by the Canadian Legion, and I am sure the Minister will give special attention to the entirely justified demands being made for those who served so well. I do not think there is any reward in this world that could possibly be considered adequate compensation for these people who fought in the first of three wars, and I do not think anything we could give them would ever be commensurate with their efforts to fight for freedom.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter I received, and I suppose the Hon. Member for Victoria has received a number of letters like it. It is a letter from a veteran who wrote to me, not without humour, in May 1985, on the subject raised by the Hon. Member for Victoria in his motion. I quote:

[English]

The Acting High Commissioner, Sir George Perley drew up with the War Office an agreement that was finally approved on January 24, 1915.

That is not yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

It specified that Canada provide the pay, allowances and pensions of her troops and defray the cost of transporting them and material to the United Kingdom. In addition to paying the actual cost of all supplies and stores issued in Great Britain. There is one interesting addition to this agreement. It states that Canada shall pay the sum of six shillings per shell, per man, of all shells fired by Canadian artillery with the exception of seige artillery shells.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have no idea who dreamed up such a thing, but if we could find out how many shells were fired during World War I, perhaps we would know how much all that cost Great Britain, if the agreement was in force.

In any event, I continue reading the letter of my British Columbia friend who states:

[English]

My contention is that the Conservative Party under Sir Robert Borden made these agreements so they should straighten it out.

[Translation]

He was referring to this Government, of course. So I am sure that—

[English]

I contacted the Legion Magazine asking that any former members of the CEF—

The expeditionary force.

—who had won gallantry awards for World War I and had not received such gratuity get in touch with me.

I have been flooded with letters from both winners of awards and next of kin and all say that they have never received any such gratuity and in most cases were not aware that such gratuities were in force.

Personally I have no particular bone to pick on this issue as the only award I ever received was the Croix de Guerre. (Came up with the rations).

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all that to say that most veterans did not know that gratuities were offered those who had sacrificed themselves and accomplished acts of bravery during World War I.

I fully agree—and I am sure the Minister will look into this matter—that the policy ought to be reviewed so that the Canadian Government might offer gratuities to those Canadians who have served with honour. Needless to say, that would include the group which has always been forgotten, the group of veterans who were recipients of the Distinguished Service Order.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the humble contribution I wanted to make. I rest assured that our representations will be given every consideration by the Minister of Veterans Affairs who has always paid close attention to the claims of the Canadian Legion and of Hon. Members who have shown great interest in veterans affairs so as to improve the situation of those to whom we owe so much.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of the Private Members' Bill which has been introduced by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) which deals with the annuities paid to veterans of the First and Second World War who received gallantry awards such as the Victoria Cross, the Military Cross, the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Distinguished Conduct Medal, the Military Medal, the conspicuous Gallantry Medal and others. The Bill proposes also that recipients of the Distinguished Service Order also receive similar annuities.

Recently I had the honour of being one of those who were members of the veterans and parliamentary delegation who went to Europe to commemorate the heroic contribution of Canadians in the last World War. Our delegation was headed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and included the Hon. Member for Victoria as well. The trip contributed significantly to my understanding and pride in the contribution of Canadians who fought to preserve freedom in Europe.

● (1730)

We owe a great debt to those who served during both wars. Many did not come back, and many of those who did suffered wounds and made great personal sacrifices. This motion deals with the way we honour some of those people, those who received awards for gallantry in the service of their country and the defence of freedom.

At present the veterans of the two World Wars receive annuities of different amounts and from different Governments. This discrepancy was brought to the Canadian Government's attention by a resolution of the Royal Canadian Legion last year which pointed out that an additional pension is paid to veterans of World War II by the Canadian Government when they are recipients of various medals and awards. Veterans of World War I are not eligible for this payment. Until 1943 it was the British Government's responsibility to pay a gratuity and annuities to the recipients of gallantry awards. In June of that year the Canadian Cabinet agreed to take over the payment of annuities to all future recipients, as well as for those who had received awards up to that point in World War II. The Canadian Pension Commission was authorized:

To assume and pay out of the War Appropriation or out of moneys provided for the purpose by Parliament any gratuity annuity, pension or other pecuniary obligation, arising out of any award which has been or may hereafter be made by His Majesty the King in respect of gallantry during the present war to any member of the Armed Forces of Canada.

Under the Gallantry Gratuities and Annuities Order, the CPC pays an annuity to those who have received one of the gallantry awards if he or she is awarded a disability pension, War Veterans Allowance or an annuity under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. This applies only to those who earned awards since the beginning of World War II. As for annuities still being paid to veterans of World War I, we do not know exactly how many there are at this time or how much they receive. I understand that the Canadian Government has made inquiries of the British Government as a first step in eliminating the discrepancies between the different groups of gallantry award recipients, but has not yet received the requested information. When it is received, I am confident that the Minister will move with haste to bring about the necessary changes to eliminate the present inequities. Even though it has been the responsibility of the British Government to pay monetary benefits to members of either the Canadian or British Forces who fought in World War I, I understand that Government has no interest in changing the amount it pays to those veterans. In order to ensure that veterans of both wars are treated equally, the Canadian Government will be required to accept responsibility.

As I stated earlier, we will support this motion. There is no reason that veterans from the two World Wars should be treated differently. I understand the Canadian Government has made inquiries and taken the first steps necessary to bring the two groups up to the same level. I trust it will also provide for the inclusion of DSO recipients among those qualifying for annuities. I cannot believe that the issue of deficits or controlling Government expenditures could be significant when one considers the heroic contributions of the people involved on the one hand, and the trivial amounts involved on the other.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak very briefly in support of the motion of the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). It is a particular pleasure to have the opportunity to speak in favour of a motion put forward by that Hon. Member because, while I have known of his reputation for many years, I actually had the opportunity of looking at his picture on a daily basis for a good many years in the office of my former law partner, Sydney Frost, who had served with the Hon. Member for Victoria as a Company Commander with the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in the Netherlands during World War II. I can still remember that picture on Syd Frost's filing cabinet showing all the Company Commanders gathered in front of a tent in a muddy field in Holland in 1945. Therefore, I am really pleased to have an opportunity to speak in support of a motion put by him today.

It is astounding to me that the veterans of World War I would not be receiving the same sort of recognition, as far as gallantry awards are concerned, as the veterans of World War II. The only reason I can attribute this to, it seems to me, must be the fact of the slow but steady growth of Canada to that of a complete and sovereign nation. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the collection of Canadian colonies came together in 1867 to form Canada, and that was some 47 years before the beginning of World War I. There had been slow but steady progress in that period of time toward full sovereignty for Canada, but of course we had not achieved that exalted status in spite of the fact that at the beginning of this century we had sent a contingent of our Armed Forces to serve in the Boer War. Many people believed that World War I was really the beginning of the true Canadian nationality.

You will recall, of course, that there was the Canadian Corps where the Canadian Forces served together, albeit as part of the British Expeditionary Force in Europe. However, they were a separate fighting unit. Of course, many people consider that the Battle of Vimy Ridge itself marked the creation of the true Canadian nationality. That of course was the premier exercise of the Canadian Corps in World War I, although there were many, many outstanding battles in which the Canadian Corps received recognition.

It is interesting to think back to those times and remember that the Prime Minister of the day, Sir Robert Borden, insisted that the Canadian Corps fight together as one separate unit, and that Canada have its place in the Imperial War Cabinet separate and apart, not just as part of a war effort involving Canadian forces being directed by the British Government alone. He also insisted, of course, on a separate place at the peace table for Canada. Flowing from that a few years later, the Statute of Westminster was passed by the British Parliament which gave Canada full control over its foreign affairs as well as the control over its domestic affairs which it achieved in 1867.

The time is long since past when we should be recognizing our Canadian heroes of World War I. They are a symbol of Canadian sovereignty and I am very pleased to be able to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Victoria. I am sure that the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is going to stand now and tell us that the Government accepts this responsibility as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before he does I have to recognize the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) and the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King).

Mr. Roger Clinch (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, one might think it strange that a relatively young new Member in the House would want to say a few words on this Bill, but I feel compelled to rise in support of the motion put forward by my colleague from Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). There are many reasons for doing so, not the least of which is the fact that as a former member of the executive of the local Legion, I found that the support of this Government and this Ministry has been excellent since the new Minister took office.

● (1740)

I would like to congratulate the Minister on his fine work. The words of my constituents in Gloucester are all favourable on the moves the Minister has made for veterans. That is another reason I stand to support my colleague today in his efforts to better the lot of some heroes of World War I.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, there are many heroes, not the least of whom reside in my riding. World War I was to be the war to end all wars. We know that that did not come about, unfortunately. There were also many heroes in World War II. That is why I am pleased to support my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria and give him my wholehearted support for this motion.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased indeed to speak in support of this very worthy motion which would seek to bring a degree of equity to a matter which, by national measurement, may not assume very significant proportions, but which, to a number of deserving Canadians, would in fact be of considerable significance.

The financial cost implicit in the recommendation is not a consideration. It is, therefore, increasingly important that this symbolic gesture of appreciation to those who served our country's interest with such courage and valour be made. It is important that they should receive this tangible acknowledgment that we recognize them and their individual actions. We fully expect that this motion will pass. We endorse the purpose of the motion which states that:

—the Government should consider the advisability of paying veterans of World War I and all recipients of the DSO, the same annuities with respect to gallantry awards received by veterans of World War II.

We have confidence in the end result of this consideration. We should note that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) has already written a letter to the British High Commissioner in Canada asking for information pertaining to the numbers of Canadians who are eligible to receive this gallantry award because of specific decorations which they received for service during World War II. Until the figure is obtained from the United Kingdom with respect to those Canadians for whom they accepted responsibility in the matter of gallantry awards, it is not possible to respond to the request through Government of Canada action.

It is with a degree of satisfaction that we would point out that the proposed action is completely consistent with the directions taken by the present Government of Canada. The spirit of this motion reflects and parallels the desire expressed in Bill C-28, which is to ensure that veterans and their dependents be treated with equity and generosity compatible with the sacrifices which they made and the service they rendered their nation.

I believe that the entire nation endorses this general thrust in all that is done through the Department of Veterans Affairs. It is certainly the case that the Minister has, by deed and word, spoken encouragingly of the attitude of the Government in respect of expanded and improved programs for the veterans of Canada.

We are all aware that such legitimate responses to identify inadequacies in present legislation and present programs cannot be immediately implemented because of financial constraints. However, this motion should confront no such impediment since the cost is insignificant. We appreciate the opportunity to speak in support of the motion and commend the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on his presentation.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable pride that I rise today as the grandson of a veteran of World War I, the son of a veteran of World War II, and a former member of the armed services of Canada myself. I am very pleased to support the private Member's motion of my colleague from Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). In relative terms, he is my neighbour on Vancouver Island in British Columbia.

I think it is important that the Government act on this matter, and I expect it will. After all, this is the same Government that, through Bill C-28, increased pensions for our veterans. I think it worth noting today, as we discuss those who fought to protect what we hold dear, just what Bill C-28 made possible.

Through Bill C-28, the basic rate of pension will be increased to reflect parity with the average take-home pay of selected categories of public servants. The basic rate of pension will be increased each year hereafter by the percentage increase in the above-mentioned take-home pay, or by the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, whichever is the greater. Disability pensions at the married rate will be continued for a full year following the death of a pensioner. Survivors of pensioners who had been receiving an Attendance and-or an Exceptional Incapacity Allowance will see the allowances continued for a full year following the death of the pensioner. It will be enshrined in the legislation that whenever a split decision occurs in the adjudication of a veteran's pension claim, the decision favouring the veteran is the decision of the Commission.

More than 700,000 Canadian veterans will directly benefit as a result of that Bill. Should the Department of Veterans Affairs act on the motion of my colleague from Victoria, over 22,000 veterans of World War I will benefit. This attention is long overdue. The average age of these people is 87. Their ranks are becoming thin. How often have we watched the veterans file past us during Remembrance Day ceremonies? How many veterans of that first war to end all wars have marched on to their final reward without receiving the attention they deserve from their nation? This thank-you, if we can call it that, is long overdue.

I commend my hon. colleague from Victoria for his motion. I know it arises from his sincere representation, over many years, to represent those who served Canada so well. I think I speak for all members of this Chamber when I say that the Hon. Member for Victoria is still fighting the battles that count and still serving his nation so well. I urge our Government to support this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to recognize the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees).

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all Hon. Members for giving me this opportunity to speak during Private Members' Hour. The House has extended the utmost courtesy to me in doing so and I very much appreciate it. In fact, it is an honour to be able to participate in this debate. I would like to congratulate all of those who have spoken in the debate so far on the excellence of what they have said. They have put forward their views on behalf of themselves and their Parties very well indeed.

The motion before us is yet another example of the dedication of the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). It is the kind of dedication that he has always shown in dealing with Canada's veterans. No matter the time or place, veterans can always count on the Hon. Member to speak out on their behalf.

In his comments today, the Hon. Member advanced a relevant and forceful argument in support of his motion. It was a superb speech truly befitting a superb motion. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House is not waiting for the other shoe to drop because this is a private Member's motion that I wish to adopt. The Government is perfectly willing to consider the feasibility of following through on the excellent proposals put forward by the Hon. Member for Victoria. I would like nothing better than to go a step further and say that these measures will be acted on immediately. Unfortunately, further study is required.

At present, the British Government is responsible for the payment of World War I gallantry awards made to Canadians. Canada assumed the same responsibility in 1943 for those Canadians who won decorations in World War II. Those Canadians decorated in the Korean War are also the responsibility of our Government.

● (1750)

When the Hon. Member for Victoria first placed his motion on the Order Paper, I initiated inquiries with the British authorities. I wanted to find out how many Canadian veterans were involved and what exactly has been paid to these veterans. As of today, I have not received the answers to these questions. Once the facts are at hand, however, I can assure the House that it will not take me long to reach a decision on this matter.

There is one concern I will be pursuing in the interim. First World War veterans are unique in many ways, and one of those is the almost 70 year tie to the British Crown in respect of gallantry awards. I would not want to sever that tie without first making absolutely certain that the veterans want me to do so.

The second part of the Hon. Member's motion concerns the Distinguished Service Order and the Military Medal. Unlike Second World War veterans, First World War holders of these medals receive no additional pension. In response to this motion, and to a resolution passed by the Royal Canadian Legion, I wrote to the British authorities to inquire as to what plans the United Kingdom might have to compensate these particular medal holders. I received word last week that it was not considered possible to trace all surviving holders of these medals, let alone to track down the beneficiaries of the estates of those who died. The United Kingdom, therefore, has no plans to compensate these individuals. This reply settles half of the question. The remaining half must be answered by the Canadian Government. I fully intend to do that.

The House has already been most gracious in allowing me to participate in Private Members' Hour. I do not wish to abuse that courtesy by speaking too long. Let me just state once again that I salute the Hon. Member for Victoria for his sincere interest in Canada's veterans. The Hon. Members' motion is commendable and deserves the support of all Members of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. McKinnon, seconded by Mr. Darling, moves:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of paying veterans of World War I and all recipients of the DSO, the same annuities with respect to gallantry awards received by veterans of World War II.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall we call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

DIVORCE—PROPOSED CHANGE IN WAITING PERIOD

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in the House on May 9 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) if he would consider meeting with concerned and interested groups to discuss the proposed changes to the divorce legislation and specifically to reconsider the proposed change of the waiting period when there is a marriage breakdown from three years to one year.

Perhaps the length of time which has passed since the divorce legislation was last changed warrants an argument for review and change. The 17-year old Act is due for a change so that it properly reflects and represents the 1980s, and recognizes that attitudes to marriage are much different today than they were in 1968. Indeed, it is very distressing to know that today 40 per cent of all marriages end in divorce. Some may say that it is a national epidemic. This obviously represents a large number of Canadians and ultimately the divorce legislation will have a great impact on many lives.

On May 25, I escorted my older daughter down the aisle in a marriage ceremony. They started that marriage with great hopes and dreams, and both sets of parents share that dream. It would be an outright tragedy if that marriage which has so much hope was in any way eroded as a result of legislation that we might pass in this Chamber. That is why I encourage my Government to proceed with caution on this very important legislation.

Even more distressing and disturbing is the fact that almost 70 per cent of divorced spouses either refuse or fail to comply with their court ordered alimony and child support payments. I feel that this is a total disgrace and an abuse of the present system.

The proposed legislation is an excellent attempt at humanizing the process of divorce. This legislation and its elements can ease the pain of ending an unworkable marriage.

The legislation recognizes some of the unpleasant social realities of divorce, and also strives to recognize the consequences of divorce rather than concentrating on the grounds of divorce, as does the current law. It is indeed time that "no fault" divorce legislation was introduced so that Canadians are no longer forced to lie or create often scandalous, unreal situations for the sake of a divorce. It is refreshing and sensible to know that the new legislation will permit couples to divorce without having to go through a charade of events in order to qualify for divorce on such grounds as adultery.

I fully support and commend the intention of the Hon. Minister of Justice to clamp down on divorced spouses who do not meet their financial obligations. I hope the provinces will mutually agree to the establishment of a tracing system for defaulting spouses, much like the current system that exists in Manitoba. It is outrageous that this negligence is currently costing Canadian taxpayers approximately $1 billion a year. This proposal will go a long way in attempting to correct this alarming situation.

While divorce may be the dissolution of a marriage, it is not necessarily the absolute end of all relations between family members. Indeed, we must consider seriously the quality of life and, more important, the quality of family life in Canada. I believe that family life is the cornerstone of Canadian society, and divorce legislation must continue to protect the victims of divorce, usually the children.

I am concerned about the proposed change to the length of separation from the current three years to one year. Perhaps a move to a one-year no fault divorce clause may indeed speed the legal process of a divorce, but I also strongly believe that this will weaken the institution of marriage and hamper the prospects for reconciliation. I believe that quicker access to divorce will add to the hardship by encouraging people to seek divorce rather than try to improve their marriage. Perhaps we could compromise and institute a two-year test trial separation period rather than one year, because it is always more difficult to raise the limit of a law once it has been lowered.

In summary, I hope the Minister of Justice will take my suggestion of compromise seriously and implement a two-year separation period for an uncontested no fault divorce. I remind the House, that on the whole I believe this legislation is an excellent representation of what Canadians are looking for in new contemporary divorce law.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the deep seated concerns that have been expressed by the Hon. Member, not only publicly but also privately to me and other Members of Parliament.

I point out to the Hon. Member that not too many years ago all grounds for divorce were based on fault. Other sections of the Divorce Act were introduced which allowed for marital breakdowns, those in which there was consent in terms of marital breakdowns, and the element of abandonment, which took five years. Right now it is perceived by the Government that three years is too long a time; that people resort to the more traditional grounds of adultery and cruelty rather than waiting three years.

• (1800)

I invite the Hon. Member to attend the committee which is about to study the Divorce Act in detail, commencing tomorrow morning at 9.30 a.m. We have an abundance of witnesses and this will be one of the areas we will explore. Because of the deep-seated feeling the Hon. Member has with respect to this matter, I cordially invite him to hear the evidence and maybe suggest further witnesses on this point if he is not satisfied with those who appear before the committee. Certainly he will be heard.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—IMPACT OF TOXIC CHEMICALS ON SEA-GULLS. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET SCIENTISTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on May 22, 1985, at page 4957 of Hansard, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) is recorded as saying in reply to my question that the program on the impact of toxic chemicals on sea-gulls has been reinstated at the Burlington Centre, and monitoring continues. The purpose of tonight's intervention is to get as a minimum an understanding as to what the word "reinstated" means. Does reinstating mean as the word implies, as it was before? That is what reinstating means. Does it mean reinstating the full-time scientists, three of them at least, who conducted bio-effects analysis? Does it mean more than just the collection of eggs, but the examination of contents? By examination we will know what the long-term effects are on human health.

The statement in Hansard raises a number of questions. We would like to know whether the new fund announced only a week ago for toxic studies on wild life will support these activities. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wildlife Service was cut by some $4 million last November with a loss of some 70 scientists and technicians. Will this fund permit the continuation of these activities at the Burlington Centre on sea-gull eggs? To what extent is the new fund going to pick up the earlier work? It is a new fund in the amount of $1 million a year. Previously it was some $4 million. Therein lies the importance of the meaning of the word reinstated. The importance will, I am sure, not escape the Parliamentary Secretary.

We have heard a number of rather unhappy statements from this Government about other environmental areas. We have not seen much happiness in the country as a result of last week's statements by the Minister on the future of parks. The reference to possible mining and logging has caused an incredible amount of unhappiness from Newfoundland to British Columbia. After a visit to the Niagara River, which incidentally took place after eight months in office, the Minister was quoted as saying that the water in the Great Lakes is becoming better, following the acknowledgement that toxicity in fish found at the mouth of the Niagara River is increasing. No commitment has been made on South Moresby, despite a number of interventions from Members on every side of this House, including the Government side. Having found a disposition to proceed with acid rain as a result of the previous Government's activities, there has been no action taken by this Government internationally, vis-à-vis the United States, in order to encourage them to join some other 20 nations in the signing of the protocol at Helsinki next month. This Government has been totally silent on that front, yet this matter is crucial now, and becomes even more so as every week goes by and we approach the date of the signing of the protocol.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, why it is becoming imperative that this Minister, when giving an answer in the House, be clear in what she says. If reinstating the program of sea-gull egg analysis at the Burlington Centre and monitoring continuation means what the words mean, as it did before, then of course we are glad to hear that. We will be glad to know that perhaps the activities of the wildlife services as they existed until November of 1984 will be re-established. Hence, Mr. Speaker, you will understand the necessity of putting this question to the Parliamentary Secretary, so as to understand clearly what the word "reinstating" means as far as this particular program is concerned.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from Davenport (Mr. Caccia) included a number of interesting notions in his preamble. I will not have an opportunity to respond to all of them, but certainly I will try to answer as precisely as possible the specific question he asked initially in the House on May 22, and that he ended with today.

The one comment I would add is that the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), while visiting the very serious situation in the Love Canal and other areas on the American side, in viewing those directly, was doing that subsequent to visitations made by myself and other Members of Parliament some months ago, and with information that had come to her along the way. In fairness, Mr. Speaker, she did that within a much less period of time than did the Hon. Member for Davenport, who was the Minister of the Environment in the last Government. I do not think he has visited Inco even yet. I do not know whether or not he really saw what he was dealing with in Sudbury. The Minister of the Environment did take it upon herself to go and see directly what the serious nature of the problem was.

I am really happy with the tone that the Hon. Member from Davenport has taken because I think I can come directly and precisely to the question—

Mr. Caccia: Answer the question and stop fiddling around with other issues.

Mr. Gurbin: He wants me to come directly to the question. Having had the chance to ramble on about 10 different subjects I guess I too should have a little latitude too.

Specifically, he wants to know about the herring-gull egg program. He knows that there are two components. One is the Canadian Wildlife Service and the other is the Canadian Centre for Inland Waters.

Since April 1, 1985, the Canadian Wildlife Service has been gathering the eggs and monitoring the colonies, preparing the eggs for chemical analysis and interpreting the biological significance of chemical data from the analysis of the eggs. From the same date, the Inland Waters Directorate has been in charge of the chemical analysis of dioxin in the eggs, carrying out the analysis of new contaminants in the eggs, ensuring the reliability of the data through quality control and administering contracts for standard analysis of toxic chemicals in the eggs.

• (1810)

Those are the parts of the program and precisely the things that are being done on behalf of the Department of the Environment. I think that this very precisely indicates the continued efforts on the part of the Department of the Environment toward ensuring, in so far as possible, as a part of a much broader and necessary approach, that we deal with those contaminants that are in the Great Lakes waters in particular.

INDUSTRY—EMPLOYEES OF DOMINION STORES IN ONTARIO

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on May 16 I raised a question regarding the closing of 93

Dominion stores through sale to A & P and the possible closing of other stores that remained in the ownership of Dominion Stores Limited. In his answer, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) indicated that the sale of those 93 Dominion stores to A & P had been approved by FIRA through a concern for the preservation of about 7,000 jobs. However, he said that he would naturally be concerned about the jobs in the remaining stores.

I appreciate the Minister's answer and I appreciate his concern, because I believe it is incumbent upon all of us in Parliament and associated with the Government to show an active, positive concern for the all too large number of Canadians who, through no fault of their own, are turned out of work as a result of reorganization of the corporate structures by which they have been employed. That has happened in the case of this impressive food chain which for so long was the leading food distribution organization in this country.

I am concerned about this matter because a large number of Dominion employees from as far away as Hamilton gathered together in Scarborough West to express their concerns about their futures in the stores that had not been sold. They had concerns about what kind of alternative employment opportunities they might be given, what kind of severance pay they might enjoy and what assistance they might receive in finding alternative employment. I recognize that these are not necessarily the legal responsibility of the federal Government, except in those areas that come directly under the jurisdiction of the federal Government. However, there is a human concern here that must weigh very heavily upon our hearts and minds.

One of the things that impressed me when looking at the annual reports of Dominion Stores Limited is that its reports have contained considerable discussion of the various arrangements that were required for the reorganization of the company and the sale of certain stores, but almost no reference at all to the human dimension of this reorganization. There was no explicit concern expressed for the well being of the persons who would be affected, in contrast to the annual reports of other major corporations which, while with comparable realism in the business world, recognize their social obligations to the people who have made those companies possible. For example, the annual report of Alcan states the following:

> Any organization is only as effective as the people in it, and the Board of Directors would like to acknowledge the efforts of Alcan employees around the world in meeting the challenges of today's sometimes frustrating conditions.

I was impressed by the statement of one of the owners of Dominion Stores Limited, as quoted in the press, that the return on investment is what it's all about. Certainly all of us can see that a practical concern for the return on investment has to be on the agenda of everyone concerned with the operation of a business, small or large. However, people are part of what it is all about. One cannot build a business without people investing their lives in the well being of that organization. A great company is put together not just by financial capital, equipment and material things, but is put together by people. It is through the efforts of the people, their self-discipline and devotion that a company grows.

• (1815)

When a handful of people who control a company, and who possess the ownership of its capital, decide to close it, surely it is incumbent upon them to recognize the responsibility they have to the people who helped make it possible. It is incumbent upon us to accept the same responsibility. If it is not possible for a federal government to inject its concern directly into a transaction because of constitutional implications, surely it is possible for a federal government to take the lead in bringing together its provincial counterparts so that just procedures can be formulated in behalf of the people who find themselves threatened with unemployment, through no fault of their own.

For example, in the case of Dominion Stores Limited, some people have worked for the company for more than 20 years. They might well have expected that their seniority would have guaranteed them a place in one of the stores which A & P had purchased. However, the agreement between Dominion Stores Limited and A & P has made it essential that employment be provided only to those people already working in those stores. The people in the remaining stores now face an uncertain and anxious future. They came together and requested their Member of Parliament, their provincial member and other representatives to share with them in this concern.

I am grateful to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that I was able to put this question to him. I am grateful for the concern which he expressed. I hope we will take a further step forward in showing our sense of responsibility as a Parliament and as a Government to those men and women who, through no deficiency on their part, now wonder if they will ever again have the chance to work.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the sale by Dominion Stores Limited of 93 of its stores located in Ontario to The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Limited, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) asked what assurance the Government of Canada could give employees in other stores in Ontario that they would receive fair treatment if any more stores were sold or closed by Dominion Stores.

As the Hon. Member is aware, Dominion Stores has, in recent years, reduced and restructured its retail sales activities in the food sector. As a result, some stores have been sold, and stores that were not economically viable were closed. Many have been reopened as warehouses under the name Best for Less, while others have been converted into Mr. Grocer franchises.

Under the Foreign Investment Review Act, the Governor in Council authorized the acquisition of 93 Dominion stores by A & P on April 29, 1985. The screening of this transaction under the Act made it possible to ensure that any loss of jobs at Dominion Stores Limited would be minimized. In fact, as mentioned by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) in his letter of May 2, 1985 to the Hon.

Member, A & P must keep the 7,479 employees in the 93 stores concerned. The agreement also protects the jobs of a further 429 working in the warehouse and in administration. In any case, it was expected that 373 full-time and 300 casual employees would be laid off by Dominion Stores Limited because of a reduction in activities following the sale. To help these employees, a complete program was set up covering lay-off notices, severance pay, adjustment committees consisting of representatives of the company and the federal and provincial governments, as well as a number of relocation counsellors from the private sector. It is estimated that the program will cost Dominion $6 million.

The screening process was necessary because A & P is controlled by non-Canadians. The sale or closing of one or more stores by Canadian investors is not subject to screening by the Government under the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 10, consideration of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 5 to 15 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The Governor in Council may by proclamation declare that this Act or any portion thereof, except sections 5 to 14.3 or sections 37 to 41, shall not apply to:

(a) any Indians or any group of band of Indians or

(b) any reserve or any surrendered lands or any part thereof, and may by proclamation revoke any such declaration." "

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to have a clarification on a point of order. I understand that if I make a minor amendment, the motion will probably be acceptable. Am I entitled to move that amendment, or must it be moved by someone else?

Mr. Speaker: Given that the motion is in the Member's name, the amendment must be moved by someone else. Technically, the Member is now rising to move and to speak on Motion No. 3. Therefore, The Hon. Member must seek someone else to move the amendment, other than the seconder of Motion No. 3. Therefore, I will change the seconder of the main motion. With the unanimous consent of the House, the seconder of the main motion shall be Mr. Deans.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to make a few comments and perhaps after that my colleague could move the amendment.

Basically, the motion suggests that the suspension of power by the Governor in Council should include the membership restrictions which we are dealing with in Bill C-31. The power to suspend certain sections of the Act goes back to the first federal Indian Act which was implemented in 1876. The only restrictions which presently exist upon that power apply to Sections 37 to 41 of the Act. As Hon. Members will know, Sections 37 to 41 deal with the surrender of land. I believe the reason that these sections are restricted is the great importance of land to Indian people and to their existence as a nation. The Government, in its wisdom, hedged the surrender of land with a fair number of procedures that were intended to protect Indian people from fraud or from alienation of their land without very careful consideration being given by the people of the band and by the band council. Those procedures are set out in Sections 37 to 41.

Section 4(2) of the Act states that the Governor in Council may exempt certain bands from certain sections of the Act, except those sections dealing with land surrenders.

For the past several days we have been debating Bill C-31, which is attempting to restore one of the most basic rights to Indian people, that being the right to belong to their own people. I believe that right should also be protected from any arbitrary action on the part of the Governor in Council. For that reason, I believe that Bill C-31 should be amended, in line with Motion No. 3, so that Section 4(2) of the Indian Act will specifically exempt the new membership sections from the power of the Governor in Council over certain bands.

My colleague will move an amendment which will change line 15 to line 6 in the motion. That will leave the "greater certainty" clause which is already in the Bill. I did not intend to remove that clause. It was an error on my part that line 15 remained rather than line 6. Therefore, my colleague will be moving a minor amendment which I hope will correct the situation.

• (1110)

In the last Parliament, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has some very negative comments about the whole use of Section 4(2) by the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in trying to circumvent the problems we all recognized with Sections 12(1)(b) and 12(1)(a)(iv) of the Indian Act. The Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments pointed out quite rightly that the Government should not try to do by proclamation what should properly be done by legislation.

As I listen to this debate, it seems to me to be the clear will of the House of Commons that those people who lost status through Sections 12(1)(b) and 12(1)(a)(iv) should have their status and their band membership restored. We want to see this happen without exception. Therefore, I feel we should build that protection into the Act and request that this motion be accepted, with the amendment which will be moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), so that the membership sections will not be open to suspension by the Governor in Council.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has indicated, a technical amendment to his motion is in order. I would read it as follows:

That motion No. 3 to amend Clause 2 of Bill C-31, dated May 9, 1985, be amended by subtituting for the reference to "lines 5 to 15" in the second line of the motion, a reference to "lines 5 and 6".

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands has given the reasons for presenting this amendment which I put before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we have a seconder for the motion? Mr. Robinson. The Chair will take the amendment under advisement for a few moments and will make a ruling shortly. In the meantime, I will recognize the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie).

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the matter which is contained in Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) and the minor amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

I agreed with the general intent of this motion as originally drafted. However, at that time it had, in my view, a serious flaw which would have prevented me from supporting it. This problem, I believe, has been corrected by the proposed subamendment. Section 4(2) of the Indian Act could be used to frustrate the will of Parliament if, at some time in the future, a proclamation were issued exempting some bands from the application of the provisions in this Bill regarding registration and membership. Such an action would be clearly undesirable and could result in unfairness to people seeking membership or the restoration of rights. The Hon. Member's motion would ensure that this would not occur.

The aspect of the motion which gave me some trouble before was that the original motion struck out lines 5 to 15 of Clause 2 of the Bill as reported. These lines provide that previous proclamations made under Section 4(2) of the Indian Act, which dealt with various membership issues as well as other matters, would be deemed valid. As Hon. Members may recall, over the past several years the Governor in Council has used Section 4(2) to exempt bands, if they so requested, from discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act. This procedure was seen as a stopgap measure for those bands wishing to eliminate discrimination without having to wait for the sometimes lengthy process of legislative change.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that since 1980, 111 bands have been granted exemptions from Section 12(1)(b) and 313 bands from Section 12(1)(a)(iv). The use of this procedure was not without dispute. The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments raised serious questions as to the propriety and validity of using Section 4(2) in this manner. Motion No. 3, which was offered by my friend, the Hon. Member from Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, and is now before the House, is one which, therefore, the Government can clearly support.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, before I leave this issue, that the fact that a considerable number of bands, on their own, without any pressure whatsoever from anyone, utilized Section 42(a), is a very good record. And those who are concerned about whether or not the bands will act in an appropriate manner in dealing with their own people and those people coming back to their community should look at that record; 111 bands were granted exemption from Section 12(1)(b) and 313 bands from Section 12(1)(a)(iv).

● (1115)

Having said that, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his Motion No. 3 and indicate that the Government will support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has received the amendment to Motion No. 3 and finds it to be in order.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to rise very briefly to indicate, as a member of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments for the past six years, that it is with a great deal of pleasure that I see the Minister accept the amendment proposed by my colleague from Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands. Certainly we had a number of very serious concerns with the process under the existing provisions of the Indian Act, and I hope the Minister's colleagues might be as willing to consider seriously the recommendations of that rather obscure committee as has the Minister himself today.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say briefly that I have no problem supporting this amendment either, but I want to pick up on the remarks made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) when he said that the record of Indian bands in employing the Order in Council provision to allow women under Section 12(1)(b) to retain status prior to this Act going through is probably one of the best arguments one could make for allowing bands to control their own membership. Recognizing the discrimination in the Indian Act, an Act imposed by this House of Commons, recognizing the injustice to their female band members who married non-Indians and subsequently lost their treaty rights and band membership, 112 bands took the initiative to come forward to seek an exemption. One of those bands was the Fort McKay band north of Fort McMurray, my home town. Chief Dorothy Macdonald of that band supports the principle that the bands should control band membership. She supports this principle 100 per cent. In effect, that is what she, a woman chief, did when she made representations to Cabinet for special exclusion from the Indian Act as it presently reads. I still firmly believe we are making a mistake by not allowing the bands to control their own membership and I want to elaborate on that for a moment.

I do not for one minute agree with the law the way it was. The Indian Act discriminated against women, and I do not for a moment agree with that. But righting the wrong, forcing it on the bands in this cavalier manner, is not the way to do it, in my view. We would have been much wiser if we had said that bands should control their membership. We would have been much wiser if we had said that if in two years there are still injustices and they have not been redressed, this Parliament would then act. On one hand we say we want Indians to have self-government, and we talked about it at the First Ministers Conference. As I said yesterday, the Penner Report published last year clearly indicates that this is the way we should be moving. I understand the push. I understand the abhorrence that we all feel when we look at the Indian Act and see the discrimination that was practised for many years. Indian women who married non-Indians lost their Indian status and were removed from the reserves. The wives of men who married non-Indians became treaty or registered Indians and band members. That was certainly an injustice.

• (1120)

Indian self-government has evolved to a point. The control of band membership has always been their jurisdiction. The federal Government in Canada can determine who is a status or registered Indian, but that does not force band membership. We have done a disservice to the women who wish to regain treaty status. We are doing them a disservice inadvertently as well because we are preventing the children and grandchildren of those women from gaining Indian status and band membership. With the amendments now, some of them will gain Indian status. However, we have done a disservice because the bands that would have been open and accepting, had we allowed them to proceed in their jurisdiction without interference, will now resist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment of Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is now on Motion No. 3, as amended. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion Nos. 13 and 14 will be grouped for debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4

(a) by striking out lines 25 and 26 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"membership", a majority of the members of the band of the full age of eighteen years gives its consent to the band's".

(b) by striking out lines 29 and 30 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"sent of a majority of the members of the band of the full age of eighteen years,"

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by strking out lines 30 to 35 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"band establish membership rules for itself.

(3) Membership rules established by a band under this section shall provide a mechanism for appealing decisions on membership."

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to thank my colleagues in the House for delaying the debate on my motion. I guess that the airlines are getting to be as reliable as the post office. I am very pleased to speak on Motion No. 13 of Bill C31 at report stage.

When this Bill was first introduced at the end of February, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) indicated that this Bill would achieve the elimination of discrimination based on sex in the Indian Act, that status and band membership would be restored to those who lost it as a result of discrimination, and that there would be recognition of the principle of band control of its membership. I agree with the Minister. These are very laudable principles, but they have not been met in this Bill.

• (1125)

In the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development we heard from many Indian and non-status women and men who will be affected by this Bill. I think I am correct in saying that not one witness expressed satisfaction in total with the Government's proposals. Perhaps that would have been too much to expect. I think the Minister has gone a long way to redressing some of the concerns.

I share, however, many of the concerns expressed on this very complex issue relating to the Indian Act and the Bill before us and to self-government. I understand all that. Nonetheless, I moved this motion in response to the many questions raised by reinstated persons with regard to their participation in the decisions to take control of the band lists and the development of band codes. It seems to me that we are now planning a new version of the Boston Tea Party where rules will be drawn up without the input, impact or participation of those members upon whom it will have a true impact.

As the Bill now stands, a majority of the elected, not a majority of the members, must give their consent to the band's control of its own membership and to the establishment of membership rules. Under the Indian Act, in the definition of electors the term "ordinarily resident" is used to determine elector eligibility. Given the difficulty some bands now have in providing housing for all those who wish to reside on the reserve—and the Minister knows well I have addressed that issue—and the need for infrastructure and increased and improved housing, the reality is that there is much poverty and poor housing that needs to be addressed. The Minister has inherited that problem and he has to address it in another forum at another time. That is not related to the fact that people of Indian persuasion, of Indian belonging, of Indian custom, are now not going to be allowed, because they cannot obtain housing, to have their say. That is why I called it a Boston Tea Party. It is unlikely that many of these reinstated persons will be able to take up any kind of residence with their former bands, even if they would want to do so. As a result, they will be unable to meet the electors' criteria and will therefore be ineligible to participate in the decisions on the band list and, more important, the development and adoption of band membership codes.

I believe all members of an Indian nation should have an opportunity to participate in the band membership process since these rules represent a legitimate move toward native control and self-government over their own affairs. I think it is totally unfair to exclude them. I support this move not only because it affects the decision of the bands, but because they will have no opportunity even for input.

Their absence is not of their doing. I heard the Member talk before about ancient times et cetera. He spoke, and I agree with him, of the river running, the sun shining, and the moon rising. But the bands would have been there if we had not interfered. Why can we not take it that we will start from scratch after we have regulated what we stuck our nose into, something that we should not have done in the first place?

The children of men and women who regain their status as a result of this Bill do not get automatic band membership themselves. This is discriminatory and results from past injustices suffered by their parents. It is regrettable that the Minister did not move an amendment that would have righted this wrong. That aside, their only option for gaining band membership is through application to the band following the adoption of membership rules. Who knows what is going to play at that time? I do not think anyone can claim that a democratic process has been followed if reinstated persons are unable to contribute to the development of the rules that will ultimately affect them and their children. Under this Bill there is no assurance that children under the age of 18 who will be allowed to return to the reserve with their parents will be able to continue to live there when they turn 18.

● (1130)

It is totally unacceptable to me, and to most women, to divide families according to different status of transmittable rights to offspring. I should like to know who gave anyone, including the Minister, the right to play Solomon and to determine whose child shall be allowed to be a member of the Indian nation and whose child shall not. I also reject the notion that somehow we would be infringing upon the principle of band control. With all due regard, I think the principle of democracy and participation in the future of one's life is paramount, not band control.

At any level of Government, be it federal, provincial, municipal or international, citizens are given the opportunity to voice their concerns and views on decisions which affect their daily lives. Through various forums, they are able to affect change if they feel strongly on a particular issue.

I have travelled with the equality rights committee across Canada, listening to discriminatory practices and repeatedly hearing from many women's groups about the discrimination with which they are living. They are looking for equality. It is actually ironic that no one in the House has come out with the best of efforts. There have been many who have tried, and I congratulate everyone in the House who has been involved. However, good intentions are not an acceptable replacement for resolving the first level of discrimination, that is, the right to participate in the development of band codes and in the control over band lists. The bands should have the right to continue to make those decisions after the original inequity has been removed. At that point we start from square one, but not until then. I just find that to be totally unacceptable.

The Minister indicated—and I think it was yesterday—that he would be unable to reject an application for control of band membership rules on the basis of their content, but only on procedural grounds. In committee I wanted to bring forth an amendment that all band membership rules and by-laws would conform to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. At that time I was informed that this was implicit in all federal legislation. If the Minister finds himself in the position of having to accept rules which do not comply with the Charter at the end of this two-year process, and if the Minister does not have that responsibility, band members will have to go to court to fight for their rights. The Minister has to recognize that not only should the Charter apply, but our signature on international covenants should apply, if we in the halls of Parliament want to be perceived as respectable.

I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Government to give consideration to this amendment which ensures full membership and band participation and the development of band codes, and which avoids the great cost of fighting injustices in the court. If Bill C-31 remains unchanged, we will continue to deny their rights to men and women who have suffered enough as a result of discriminatory factors and sections of the Indian Act. Members of the Indian nations should not confuse nationhood and self-government with their right to have something to say about what is happening to them and their right to be heard on important and fundamental issues which concern both them and their children and will certainly impact forever on their lives.

These rules will affect women, some men and their children. I ask the Minister to let them have a say. If what the Hon. Member opposite keeps saying is so, those women will agree with everything that has been well thought out with respect to the development of band code and the development of membership. It will not create the tremendous problem which he seems to feel is inherent in women's participation in these kinds of developments, those who do not have the right to be ordinarily resident through no fault of their own.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) probably outlined more graphically exactly what happened with Bill C-31. I listened with a great deal of interest to what she had to say. She said that she had travelled with the equality task force, had listened to women's groups, and that she thought it was unacceptable to most women. My whole point is that Bill C-31 is not just a women's issue. Women have been discriminated against in the past under the Indian Act. The Indian Act is a federal government Act. It was not imposed by the Indian people themselves. That is the point. Our predecessors in the House of Commons passed an Indian Act which discriminated against those women. I abhor the thought that my colleagues of 30 or 40 years ago would have agreed that that was the proper thing to do. Indian people were discriminated against, absolutely. However, they have developed a collective system of Government. For the first time in the history of this country, we are now saying to Indian people that we cannot trust them to run their own affairs and that therefore we will impose membership upon them. We are telling them that we will right the wrong which we know has been done to Indian women. We are not going to compensate; we are going to impose those people back on them and they are the ones who will have to compensate. That is what we are doing.

We must understand the issue and what would happen if the Hon. Member's amendment were accepted. The way it reads now, we would have people influencing the electors, and the electors who are normally residents of the band would determine the membership code. I see nothing wrong with that; I see absolutely nothing wrong with that. If we had influence from the other side, what would happen in small bands where the people returning to the reserves outnumber those already there? The people living off the reserves could actually determine who would live on the reserves, in the collective. It just does not make sense to me that people living in Ottawa, in Montreal, perhaps as a neighbour of the Hon. Member in Mount Royal, or in the United States, should have a say in determining the membership code of a collective in northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan or northern Ontario. It just does not make sense.

There is no protection for old members. What about band members who for years worked under discrimination, who could not vote or do the kinds of things we normally do? What about people living on reserves who had to go to a white Indian agent, perhaps from Mount Royal, Edmonton or Calgary, and ask for permission to leave the reserve to go into the Town of St. Paul to do some shopping, and the Indian agent would say that it was all right and give them a pass? That is the type of rule those Indian people lived under. They developed their own system of government. We are now saying that we will give them no protection, and that we will let people who have had no connection with the band or with their system of government come in and determine the membership codes.

In the Province of Alberta we have had Métis colonies, for example the Kikino Métis colony. A number of people have lived there all their lives. They were born there. They participated in ranching, farming and so on, and now they are living in this Métis colony. If we cause the Métis to be categorized as Indians, they are going to be kicked off the colony because the colony people have said treaty Indians cannot live on the colony.

• (1140)

We have done some terrible things here that none of us have really addressed because we are rushing this Bill. The way it is in the Bill, the electors must be at least ordinary residents on the reserve. This amendment that the Hon. Member from Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is proposing would let anyone, with or without connection to the reserve, vote on membership rules. It would strip the historical community of control. It cedes to the newly created membership. It could devastate bands. It offends, in my view, the fundamental, basic issue, and that is, band control of band membership. The whole Bill offends that, but this amendment would clearly offend that.

I think that I have had my say on this one, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted to get those remarks on the record. The fundamental problem that we have is that although, with good intention, we have said that we have to do something to undo the wrong that was done to the women, unfortunately it has become a women's issue. I suggest that that is how the Hon. Member for Mount Royal was drawn into the whole debate, because she sees it as a woman's issue. I see it as discrimination to women; I see it as an injustice, but it is fundamentally an Indian issue; it is not a women's issue.

The issue is: are we truly going to allow the Indian people to develop their own system of Government, as we keep saying in this House of Commons that we are going to do? Are we going to do that, and when? Six months or a year from now are we going to come forward and say, Well, we have to do some more changing on the Indian Act before we turn over control of their lives to the Indian people?" Are we going to say, "Oh, gee, we did not recognize that all these people were going to want to become Indian again; we have to expand the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to accommodate all these new Indians we have created". That is what we are talking about in this House.

At what point in time are we going to say, "Enough is enough, let these people become full Canadians with every right that you and I have". They should not have to come running to Ottawa with a band council resolution to do something on their own reserve, to build a school, to build a damned privy out behind the community centre. That is what we are talking about. It is an Indian issue and we have forgotten that because we have allowed the women's groups right across the country to snowball this thing into a women's issue. I am sorry that the Hon. Member from Mount Royal has fallen into that trap.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on a question of privilege.

Mrs. Finestone: It is not a women's issue that I have been addressing; it is an Indian issue of which women are a part, and I would like to know how—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe this is a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the contribution to this debate made by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), and we all know that the Hon. Member has a reputation as an advocate of human rights which is enviable. We all wish we had equivalent reputations in fighting for human rights. The Hon. Member's speech this morning was certainly an eloquent speech.

Mr. Robinson: But—

Mr. Penner: Yes, exactly, but a very big but. The speech was eloquent, all of the sentiments expressed were correct, but the speech was made in the wrong forum. That speech should be made by one who is a member of an Indian First Nation. That is where the speech should be made.

All of those arguments are valid; all of the suggestions put forward by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal are in fact in the report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-government as matters that should properly be considered by an Indian First Nation in putting together the components of their Government and in seeking recognition by the Government of Canada, because one nation seeks recognition from another nation. There are certain requirements in seeking recognition, and so the report laid forward a pattern or a suggestion by which this process may be undertaken. The matters referred to specifically and clearly by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal are all listed there.

The issue here is not really the validity of the arguments themselves about including the maximum number of people in decision making about the membership code and about the particular form of government and the other requirements for seeking recognition. All of those are valid arguments. The simple question is, who calls the shots?

The report of the special committee, on page 54, says:

> Representatives of Indian band governments rejected any federal intervention in the matter of reinstatement.

I quote from a brief presented by the Assembly of First Nations on that occasion.

> It is up to the Indian governments across the country to resolve that and to put into place some just means of making sure that there is reinstatement or whatever it is they want to do.

The special committee did not shy away from the difficulty that these First Nations were facing in putting together the components of a Government that would be eligible for seeking recognition from the Government of Canada, but you will notice the emphasis that I am giving time and time again—I am talking about Indian First Nations. There is a kind of accepted way of proceeding when you are dealing nation to nation, which is the pattern that was laid down for us by the Royal Proclamation of 1763 and one that we departed from, as the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) correctly pointed out in his remarks yesterday. When we started dealing with Indian people on an individual basis, we got off the track. We should have stayed on that nation to nation approach, and we would not be here debating this issue today; we would not be in this difficulty in which we find ourselves at the present time.

The special committee did not shy away at all from the problem that is raised by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. All of her arguments are good. Allow me to repeat the arguments for her. You will notice a subtle difference, which is, that the suggestions for proceeding were suggestions to be seriously considered by Indian First Nations, not matters to be legislated here in this forum, in this Parliament of Canada. Here they are, Mr. Speaker.

> The following procedure might be adopted—

Not "shall" but "might be adopted".

> —by Indian First Nations to determine membership or citizenship:
>
> 1. The people in each community would begin with the Indian Act list, plus those who might be reinstated by any changes in legislation.
>
> 2. These people would get together to ask who might be missing and to include those they wished to include.
>
> 3. These people would agree on membership criteria and thus decide who else might be included or excluded. The criteria should be in accordance with the standards in international covenants concerned with human rights.
>
> 4. These same people would agree on appeal procedures and mechanisms.
>
> 5. The whole group would then determine their form of government and apply for recognition.

Now we come to Recommendation No. 9:

> 9. The Committee asserts as a principle that it is the rightful jurisdiction of each Indian First Nation to determine its membership, according to its own particular criteria. The Committee recommends that each Indian First Nation adopt, as a necessary first step to forming a government, a procedure that will ensure that all people belonging to that First Nation have the opportunity of participating in the process of forming a government, without regard to the restrictions of the Indian Act.

● (1150)

The difficulty that we are facing at this time with this motion is that everything that has been said is so right. Everything that has been said cannot be argued against. The validity of the proposition put forward by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal is unassailable.

We are dealing with Indian First Nations which never relinquished their autonomy to anyone. Their autonomy was taken away from them and now, a long time after that took place, it is beginning to dawn on a few of us that we made a terrible mistake and created problems that are beyond our ability to solve here in this place. If we were to put aside Budgets, transportation matters, agricultural matters and all the other matters with which we in this House deal, and if we were to give full and undivided attention to all the problems that are facing the Indian First Nations, we would exhaust ourselves with work and we would exhaust ourselves with endeavour, but we would not begin to solve the problems because we do not have the understanding and capacity to do so. Far more important than that, we do not even have the jurisdiction. The jurisdiction belongs to the Indian First Nations themselves, and that is what Indian self-government is all about. It is about putting the problem-solving in the hands of the people who know how to solve the problems and who have never relinquished the right to deal with their own problems in their own way. We are not arguing about the principle contained within Motion No. 13 nor the ideas behind it. We are simply saying that the jurisdiction or the forum is wrong and it is the Indian First Nations themselves which should be dealing with matters of this kind.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some problems within the Liberal Party regarding where Liberal Members really stand on this issue. I was listening to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) who said that it is the right of each Indian First Nation to determine its own membership criteria. I think that that is certainly a principle that we in the New Democratic Party would support 100 per cent. The question, however, is what constitutes a First Nation? Bill C-31 attempts to reinstate people to their proper membership in a First Nation, a membership which was unjustly denied and taken away through the action of the infamous Section 12(1)(b) of the Act.

At the beginning, I might point out that we are in support of the motion put by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). We believe that people who lost memberships unjustly should still be regarded as members of First Nations. It was an unjust Act by the Parliament of Canada that took their membership in First Nations away from them. Certainly those people who are trying to get together to reconstitute their own authority to determine their own membership, those people who were wrongly denied membership by the Parliament of Canada, should have the right to participate in this entire debate.

We must realize that we have, over the past 150 years, destroyed the institutions of the Indian people to a very great extent. The fact that they have survived is due to their persistence and durability rather than to the good intention of the Parliament of Canada. We have destroyed the accountability systems within Indian Governments. For us simply to abdicate and walk away from the situation by saying that we will grant Indian self-government is a farce. It is to act as did King Leopold of Belgium who walked away from Katanga. The example set in the Belgian Congo was one of the worst instances of colonialism that existed in the 19th and 20th centuries, and the example of Katanga was one of the worst instances of decolonialization that we have seen. We cannot decolonialize by simply walking away from the situation. I think we have a responsibility to the Indian people to make sure that when vacating the field, we leave some proper mechanism in place to ensure that the rights of ordinary people are protected. That is what the motion put by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, Motion No. 13, attempts to do.

Motion No. 14 is similar to Motion No. 13. It suggests that when Indian peoples develop their membership criteria, there shall be an appeal mechanism. The present legislation indicates that there may be an appeal mechanism. We say that such an appeal mechanism is necessary. This is not because we are dealing with Indian people but because we are dealing with human beings. It is important that we recognize that while we have a positive view of Government and believe that Government can and should be doing positive things for people, we also believe that Government should be bound by certain checks and balances. We believe there should be certain processes that give people the right of appeal.

Certainly, if people feel that they have not been properly dealt with in terms of applications for membership, they can go before the courts. However, we know that going before the courts is a very expensive and time-consuming process. It would serve the interests of all parties if, before appeals to the courts were made necessary, people who felt a sense of grievance could go before an appeal board that would be devised by the Indian First Nations. In committee, the suggestion was made by several witnesses that it could be some kind of a council of elders. This appeal mechanism would make it less necessary to go before the courts in many instances and would save time and money. I think it would work in the best interests of all concerned.

It has been pointed out that in many cases Indian bands will build in their own appeal mechanisms. I know that that is so and I have full confidence that they will do so. However, there are other situations in which this might not happen. I think it is important that there should be an appeal mechanism in place for all membership criteria so that if people feel a sense of grievance, they know what first step they can take.

I urge all Hon. Members to consider the arguments that were presented by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal in support of Motion No. 13 and to consider the arguments I presented in support of Motion No. 14 so that we may make sure that when we talk about an Indian First Nation developing membership criteria, we mean to include all members of that First Nation. On that basis, I urge the support of both Motions Nos. 13 and 14.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 13 proposed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) would make all band members over the age of 18 eligible to vote on membership issues. This would be a uniform provision applying to all bands irrespective of their current practices with regard to voting on important band matters. We heard very forceful arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), and I support most if not all of the views put forward by those Hon. Members.

The over-all issue of eligibility for voting was debated at some length yesterday. Unfortunately, as was disclosed this morning, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal was not able to be present in the House for that very lively debate. Other Hon. Members will recall that the House debated and passed Motion No. 14A standing in my name. This motion enables bands to have flexibility in deciding on the voting regime most suitable for their particular circumstances. I think that this approach is preferable to the restrictive approach advocated by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

With respect to Motion No. 14, I have the following comments to make: the provisions of Bill C-31 dealing with band control of membership were only intended to be enabling provisions. There should be a minimum of statutory restrictions on how bands organize their membership activities. Motion No. 14 would make it mandatory for bands to have rules concerning a band level mechanism for appealing decisions on membership.

• (1200)

There is little debate on the desirability of appeal systems. However, bands should be able to determine whether such mechanisms are required or appropriate for their particular situation. A mandatory requirement to have appeal rules will be viewed as an encouragement of an area of decision-making which should and can be exercised by the bands.

During the hearings, many bands expressed the view that the Bill was overly restrictive and that the ability to make membership decisions was too confined. We trust the bands. In our view, bands will act fairly in exercising their membership function. Bands will establish formal or informal mechanisms, which will be appropriate to their particular circumstances, to ensure that membership decisions will be fair and equitable. With few exceptions, fairness has always been a part of Indian self-government. We have confidence in their ability in the very sensitive area of membership rules.

If there are isolated cases in which disputes cannot be resolved at the local level, it will still be possible to seek redress through the court system. Of course, that is an option which is available to all Canadians. Members of Indian bands can certainly use that mechanism if it is required.

Motion No. 14 is also flawed in that it would strike out an important amendment which was made during committee stage. In the amended version of the Bill, the committee agreed to include a provision that membership rules could be approved only after appropriate notice had been given of the band's intention to adopt such rules. The provision is important as it ensures that all members will have an opportunity to participate in the decision-making process. The proposed amendment would delete that provision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I would remind the House that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 would dispose of Motion No. 14.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 13 negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stand deferred.

The next grouping includes Motions Nos. 29 and 30A.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to withdraw Motion No. 29.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Athabasca to withdraw the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 29 withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will proceed to the consideration of Motion No. 30A.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 30A

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 11

(a) by striking out line 13 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"amount that exceeds one thousand dollars under paragraph 15(1)(a), as it".

(b) by striking out line 25 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"amount by which the amount that he received under paragraph".

(c) by striking out line 29 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"subject-matter as that paragraph, exceeds one thousand dollars, together".

He said: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) for withdrawing his motion.

Motion No. 30A is simply a technical motion. The Standing Committee introduced Subsection 64.1(2) into the Bill which would permit bands to deny programs financed from band funds to persons who received a per capita pay-out from band capital and revenue accounts on loss of status, until the amount of that pay-out, less $1,000, is repaid to the band, plus interest.

Subsection 64.1(1) is similar, in that it denies such persons access to current distributions of band funds to individual band members until the amount previously received is repaid, plus interest. The purpose of the amendment is to introduce into Subsection 64.1(1) the same $1,000 threshold which is included in Subsection 64.1(2). The amendment is required in order to ensure that the two parts of Section 64.1 are consistent in establishing a threshold of $1,000. I would commend the amendment to all Members of the House.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise in support of the amendment. However, I would first like to indicate how pleased I was when the committee initially added the original amendment to the Bill, as I believe it deals with fairness.

In cases in which band members have had to leave recently because of sections in the Act which were discriminatory, the law required that the band had to make a per capita pay-out, based on investments in both their capital and revenue accounts. The bands had no choice in the matter. They had to make the pay-out.

When making these changes to the Bill, the committee felt that there ought to be some fairness. Those individuals who withdraw from their reserve in the month or year before the Bill passes ought to return with the amount of money and assets with which they left, in order that it will be fair to the band to which they are returning. That amendment was accepted by the committee. However, during committee debates, the committee moved an amendment which indicated that we should not ask—nor would the band want to ask—the people who left 30 years ago with $10 or $15 to repay that amount, as most of the bands in Canada at that time did not have assets which amounted to a large pay-out. The committee felt that a limit should be placed on it.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) moved such an amendment, and it was accepted by the committee. However, arguments have been put forward that the amount, which was at $5,000, was too high and would not be sustained in the courts if challenged. Therefore the amendment is now being moved to reduce that amount to $1,000. I hope that all Hon. Members will take this seriously and support this amendment so that there can be some fairness as we impose this Bill on many Indian communities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 30A agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next motion to be debated is Motion No. 32 in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved:

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 10 and 11 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"(p.1) the residence of persons who are not members of the Band;".

He said: Mr. Speaker, Clause 15 of Bill C-31 recognizes new powers of band councils in Section 81 of the Indian Act, including Subsection (p)(1), the right to make by-laws regarding "the residence of band members and other persons on the reserve." I do not believe that any Government should have the right to decide whether or not its citizens can reside within their own territory. Basically, that is what the present legislation does. Section 81(g), (h) and (i) of the Indian Act already recognizes the powers of band councils to make laws respecting zoning, construction and land allotment. This gives band councils the right to make necessary regulations regarding where people are going to live and properly to allocate reserve lands.

However, that is quite different from giving band councils the right to determine basic residency rights for their own members. Last year the Assembly of First Nations and the Native Women's Association of Canada reached a consensus that band councils should have the right to determine the residency of non-Indian spouses and other non-Indian people on reserves, and I support that right. I do not think that band councils should have the right to make basic decisions about whether or not band members should reside on reserves. I think that that is a right of band members which should underlie any rights of band councils.

This becomes particularly important in light of the fact that the House has just finished rejecting Motions Nos. 13 and 17 which would have ensured that even non-residents would be able to participate in developing membership criteria. The House has voted against that. I believe it was a wrong decision on the part of the House, but the House has done so and we must accept it. However, that means that it is up to band councils to determine whether or not some of these people who have been reinstated are going to be able to take part in elections. It is going to be up to band councils to determine basic residency. I do not believe that this is a right which band councils should have because I feel it is a fundamental right of Indian people who belong to a band to be able to reside on the reserve of that band. This amendment would recognize the proper right of a band council to make provision for regulations for the residents of persons who are not members of the band. I urge the adoption of this motion.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a couple of remarks. I think the motion is socialism in its purest form. Someone could jump in a car and say, "I'm going to move back on to the reserve", if the band has no control over membership. We are only giving them in this Bill the same control that the people in Ottawa or Edmonton have over who lives within the community. They may not control it directly, but they control it by by-law. One cannot, for example, move a house trailer on to a lot, even though one owns it, if it is in the middle of downtown Ottawa or in a suburban development of Mount Royal. One cannot move a mobile home there if that is what one wants to do. We are controlled by by-laws on our residency requirements in these various areas.

All city councils and town councils have the right to make by-laws to determine how and where one is going to live within the community. The Hon. Member's Motion No. 32 would give the absolute right not to the collective membership to control what happens on the reserve but to the individual. To me, this would result in chaos because anyone would have the absolute right to move on to the reserve and pitch a tent, a teepee, live in an abandoned truck or whatever, with no thought to the orderly development of the reserve. That is why I could never support this motion. It borders on the ridiculous.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here in utter astonishment as I listened to what the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) had to say. The Act already provides the power to band councils to divide the reserve, or a portion thereof, into zones and to prohibit the construction or maintenance of any class of buildings or the carrying on of any class of business, trade or calling in any such zone. That is from Section 81(g). The Hon. Member's argument that what my friend, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), is proposing is a socialist measure, I find utterly astonishing. I do not know how the Hon. Member for Athabasca, who regards himself as the defender of the right of individuals, can suggest that city Governments are involved in determining who can live within their borders when they decide what sorts of dwellings people are going to have. That is quite incredible.

Surely, in this country we prize our right to move about. We do not, as is true in many European countries, believe that one needs to register with the police when one arrives in a city or town so that the police know that one is there even as a visitor. We prize the right to move about. It is surely a fundamental liberty which Conservatives generally, I believe, defend, and certainly it is important to we New Democrats. That is why my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, is proposing that the Act specifically provide for the right to be resident on the reserve.

I ask my colleagues on both sides of the House to reject out of hand the argument made by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. It is simply ridiculous.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this particular motion. First, I do not agree with the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) which would restrict the application of band by-laws concerning residence to persons who are not members of the band. I really feel that probably we are not in that much disagreement on this issue. However, in my view, the suggested change would seriously and unnecessarily restrict the powers and responsibilities which should legitimately be vested with band councils. In fact, the Bill, as presently drafted, recognizes the long standing informal power of bands to regulate residence of all people living on the reserve.

As the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said, control over residence is essential if bands are to ensure orderly and effective planning and development of their communities and the smooth integration of new and restored band members. Concerns have been expressed that the current provision in the Bill might be used arbitrarily to restrict people, whether existing or restored band members, from living on the reserve. I would like to assure my colleagues that this is indeed not the intention of the provision. Personally, I do not believe it will be used in that way. Rather, it is a simple way of ensuring that communities can control residence in the best interests of the total community.

As we know, the bands must make decisions on community services, infrastructure, housing and education. By-law powers over residence will enable bands to co-ordinate such decisions with the actual flow of people back to the reserve and ensure that existing conditions of over-crowding or over-taxed facilities are not made worse. Recognizing control over residence as a by-law power merely confirms a long-standing and accepted practice. At present, most bands already control residence through their ability to control allocation of land and housing, and through a process of arriving at a group consensus on the pace and direction of development. The adoption of the proposed motion would needlessly restrict such band authority. Formalizing residence control in a by-law should also make the system fairer because it will make the rules more explicit. At present, control is exercised informally and rules are not explicit. With by-laws in place, individuals will have a much clearer picture of what rules are being used to regulate residence. If the rules are unfair, they can also be attacked more easily.

• (1220)

Therefore, I believe this motion is not in the best interests of the Indian bands and I urge my colleagues and all Hon. Members to vote against it.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few remarks to those of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I think she outlined the situation very eloquently and properly. I think the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) will recognize that there is one other difficulty, that is, that on most, if not all, reserves in this country there is a shortage of housing and a shortage of the capital to build that housing. In most of these communities there is a long list of people waiting for a residence on the reserve. In fact, in most communities there is crowding in the existing housing. Even though the bands have been fair in providing housing on the reserves, to then impose on the community additional residents who would have the right to move directly on to the reservation would cause chaos in most bands. What we are attempting to do in this clause is to offer the bands a fundamental right, one which exists across Canada, to an orderly and well-planned system which is fair to the people who live in the community.

Many of us in committee who examined this question have said it is right and proper that those people presently on a waiting list ought to be looked after as quickly as possible by the Government and the band before the new residents move in and put themselves on the list. This clause as it now stands allows that right to the band chief and council, and I think that is very important. So I would reject this amendment as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 32. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next grouping includes Motions Nos. 33 and 33A.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moved:

Motion No. 33

That Bill C-31, be amended by adding immediately after line 22 at page 17 the following:

"15.1(1) Paragraph 81(r) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(r) the imposition on summary conviction of a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding thirty days, or both, for violation of a by-law made under this section.

(2) Section 81 of the said Act is renumbered as subsection 81(1).

(3) Section 81 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

(2) Where any by-law of a band is contravened and a conviction entered, in addition to any other remedy and to any penalty imposed by the by-law, the court in which the conviction has been entered, and any court of competent jurisdiction thereafter, may make an order prohibiting the continuation or repetition of the offence by the person convicted.

(3) Where any by-law of a band passed is contravened, in addition to any other remedy and to any penalty imposed by the by-law, such contravention may be restrained by action at the instance of the band council."

15.2 Section 82(2) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) A by-law made under section 81 comes into force 40 days after a copy thereof is forwarded to the Minister pursuant to subsection (1) but the Minister may declare the by-law to be in force at any time before the expiration of that period."."

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 33A

That Bill C-31, be amended

(a) by adding immediately after line 22 at page 17 the following:

"16. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 85 thereof, the following section:

"85.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the council of a band may make by-laws

(a) prohibiting the sale, barter, supply or manufacture of intoxicants on the reserve of the band;

(b) prohibiting any person from being intoxicated on the reserve;

(c) prohibiting any person from having intoxicants in his possession on the reserve; and

(d) providing for exceptions to any of the prohibitions established pursuant to paragraph (b) or (c).

(2) A by-law may not be made under this section unless it is first assented to by a majority of the electors of the band who voted at a special meeting of the band called by the council of the band for the purpose of considering the by-law.

(3) A copy of every by-law made under this section shall be sent by mail to the Minister by the chief or a member of the council of the band within four days after it is made.

(4) Every person who contravenes a by-law made under this section is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction

(a) in the case of a by-law made under paragraph (1)(a), to a fine of not more than one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both; and

(b) in the case of a by-law made under paragraph (1)(b) or (c), to a fine of not more than one hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to both.

17. Sections 94 to 100 of the said Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"OFFENCES"

18. Subsection 103(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"103. (1) Whenever a peace officer, a superintendent or a person authorized by the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that an offence against section 33, 85.1, 90 or 93 has been committed, he may seize all goods and chattels by means of or in relation to which he believes on reasonable grounds the offence was committed."

(b) and renumbering the subsequent Clauses accordingly.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to Motion No. 33, which reads as follows:

That Motion No. 33 be amended:

(a) by deleting all the words after the word "by" in the seond last line of the proposed new Subsection 81(3) and substituting the following therefore

"court action at the instance of the band council."

(b) by deleting the proposed new Clause 15.2.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 33 would amend Bill C-31 to accomplish three particular objectives. First, it would increase the maximum fine for breach of a band by-law from $100 to $1,000. Second, it would create a power to enforce by-laws in the courts identical to that given to all towns and municipalities in many provinces, including Ontario. You will understand in a moment why I underline Ontario. Finally, it would remove the power presently enjoyed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) to veto legal and valid band by-laws.

Under Section 81 of the present Act, bands have a power similar to towns and municipalities elsewhere in Canada to enact by-laws over a great number of matters, including traffic, zoning and construction, residential health, regulation of business concerns, and the preservation of wildlife on reserve lands. Section 81(r) of the present Act provides that the maximum fine for breaching a band by-law is $100. This is obviously inadequate, thus the proposed amendment would leave Section 81(4) as it is except for the replacement of the words "one hundred" with the words "one thousand".

The second part of the amendment would give to bands the power to seek injunctions from the courts where their by-laws have been breached. The proposed amendments, which would add new Subsections 81(2) and (3), are taken word for word from Ontario's Municipal Act, with which the Minister is most familiar. Let me say as an aside, that I think the Minister, when he was mayor of the City of Toronto, helped push this through to Queen's Park. I am given to understand that, indeed, he may have had some involvement in obtaining these amendments from the Ontario Legislature to assist municipal Government in Toronto, and he would therefore understand why these powers are necessary for the bands. It is impractical for the bands to be laying charges every day when there is a persistent violation of the by-laws. These by-law making powers would apply to all bands and would reinforce band control over band matters, which is one of the principles of the Bill and something dear to my heart.

Finally, the new Subsection 82(2) would delete the present power of the Minister to disallow valid band by-laws. I emphasize that, at present, even if a band makes a perfectly legal and completely valid by-law, the Minister has an unfettered discretion to veto it. With the amendment, we will still allow the Minister to have some say in that area. The amendment would also apply to all bands and would reinforce the principle of band control.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair rules that the amendment to Motion No. 33 moved by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) is in order.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak with respect to Motion No. 33 and the amendment, as well as to Motion No. 33A, which deals with an entirely different matter, but the two are grouped for purposes of debate and the vote.

• (1230)

I am pleased to speak in favour of Motion 33, subject to the subamendment moved by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). This motion will very clearly strengthen the power of the bands to enforce their own by-laws. This was not included in the original Bill, but all Members who have dealt with this at the committee level understand the importance of the motion of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). The motion will strengthen the power of the bands by raising the maximum fine for violation of by-laws from $100 to $1,000. That is only reasonable given the fact that the original $100 was fixed in the 1950s. It will strengthen the power of bands to enforce their by-laws by permitting court orders to be sought to prevent the continued violation of band by-laws.

Anyone who understands the administration of Indian communities at the band level understands the frustration of by-laws being continually broken while bands are unable to enforce them. Increasing the fine to $1,000 and giving bands the power to apply to the court for injunctions in order to stop the continued violation of the by-laws is clearly in the interest of bands. It clearly ought to have the support of all Hon. Members.

I am pleased with the subamendment as well, Mr. Speaker, because it was impossible for me to agree to that part of the original motion which would have done away with the Minister's power of disallowance regarding certain by-laws. Given the normal understanding of how we ought to proceed with Indian self-government, I would have liked to agree to that, but at this time, and within the context of this Bill, it seemed to me inadvisable. It is an awkward power for the Minister to have, but in some cases, in the interest of everyone, it may be necessary. That is why I did not want to have that power cut out at this point within the context of this Bill. I am very pleased with the good work done by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. I urge all Members to support Motion No. 33 as amended.

I will now turn to an entirely different matter. It relates to by-laws but the subject matter is of greater moment and immediacy. I would like to take this opportunity to deal with a matter that has come up which is of pressing concern to Indian communities across the country. I would like to deal with the issue of the use of intoxicants on reserves.

Several recent court decisions in Manitoba have brought into doubt the validity of key sections in the Indian Act which deal with intoxication. The sections may contravene both the Bill of Rights and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Many bands, particularly those in remote areas, are very concerned that if these sections are not valid, they will have no means to control the serious alcohol problems which unfortunately exist on many reserves.

These motions are intended to give bands the means to control this serious problem in a way that is consistent with both the Bill of Rights and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We cannot wait for the outcome of appeals on these court cases as in the interim, during which prohibition could be effectively lifted, several years could elapse. The result could be devastating for certain Indian communities.

Motion 33A would enable band councils, subject to the approval of band electors at a special meeting, to prohibit the sale, barter, supply or manufacture of intoxicants on reserves; the state of intoxication on reserves; or the possession of intoxicants on reserves. The by-laws could also provide for exceptions to the prohibitions on intoxication or possession of intoxicants. These exceptions could deal with such cases as medicinal use of alcohol, transportation of unopened bottles across reserves, intoxication in a private house, or consumption on special holidays.

This new provision would replace Sections 94 to 100 of the current Act. These sections established prohibition on reserves unless a band explicitly decided by referendum to go "wet" under provincial law. At present, only about half of the bands have decided to go "wet". By putting this new by-law power outside of Section 81 of the Indian Act, any by-laws adopted by bands would not be subject to disallowance. Bands would be required to forward a copy to the Minister, but this is only intended to facilitate registration under the Statutory Instruments Act, a condition which must be met if prosecutions are to be valid.

Clause 16 requires that such by-laws have the consent of the majority of electors voting at a special meeting. This preserves the concept of community approval in the present Indian Act whereby switches from "dry" to "wet" require band consent, although now consent will be needed to shift in the other direction, from "wet" to "dry". This reversal arises since, with the repeal of Sections 94 to 100, it is assumed that provincial laws, normally "wet", will apply unless by-laws are enacted.

Subsection (4) establishes penalties to replace those eliminated by repealing Sections 94 to 100. A distinction is made in the severity of the minimum penalties between offences against the prohibition on access where the person providing the intoxicant deserves a strong penalty and likely can afford to pay, and offences against the prohibitions on possession or intoxication where the person charged is likely to be poor and unable to pay. The actual amounts, $1,000 and $100 maximums, are based on the fines in the present Act of $300 and $50, adjusted to take account of inflation. The summary conviction method of prosecution is retained to facilitate expeditious handling of cases.

Clause 18 amends Section 103 to clarify that intoxicants or other property related to offences against by-laws passed under Section 85.1 can be seized. Warrants will still be required under Subsection 103(9)(4) to conduct searches related to the offences.

The by-law power of new Clause 16 would come into force with the rest of Bill C-31. Motion 42 would delay the repeal or amendment of the existing Indian Act provisions for a period of six months. This will allow time for bands to develop band by-laws to replace the provisions of the Indian Act which are to be repealed. In Manitoba, interested band by-laws could be implemented shortly after Bill C-31 passes. Many bands, especially those in Manitoba which are directly affected, as well as the Attorney General of Manitoba, have urged prompt federal action on this problem. I am pleased that we can take advantage of the present deliberations on Bill C-31 to plug this very large hole which now exists in the Indian Act.

That is the technical aspect which I wanted to emphasize with respect to Motion No. 33A. The bands, chiefs, and council members who have been in touch with me are very concerned. I hope that we will have no difficulty in getting this part of Bill C-31 passed. It is important that it be passed as soon as possible.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to debate the amendment to Motion No. 33A proposed by the Minister and to commend the Minister for responding to a very serious concern arising as a result of the decision of the Manitoba court.

I would like to raise a matter about the terms in which the Minister is proposing to respond to the Manitoba decision, which I hope he will take into consideration before moving forward. My concern is with respect to the proposed power of the Act under Section 103 as set out in paragraph 18 of Motion No. 33A. That would permit a peace officer, a superintendent, or a person authorized by the Minister to seize goods and chattels with respect to this particular offence.

Section 103 of the existing Act provides a power with respect to Section 97, the relevant section in the current Indian Act, in virtually identical terms. It allows for seizure under a number of sections in the proposed Act. I want to draw to the Minister's attention that, while this particular amendment seeks to respond to a decision of the Manitoba court on the Charter of Rights, I believe the proposal in Section 103 itself is in breach of the provisions of the Charter of Rights. I ask that the Minister consider very seriously the concern in this regard.

• (1240)

As it stands now, the Charter of Rights requires that search and seizure provisions be reasonable, and I refer Members to Section 8 of the Charter of Rights. This provision was recently interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter and Southam. As a result of that interpretation, the Minister's colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), brought before the House Bill C-27. This Bill, among other things proposed a series of amendments to search and seizure provisions in a number of federal statutes. This provision, Section 103, was not touched by the Minister of Justice's proposed amendments in Bill C-27, presumably because it was felt that it was more appropriately addressed in the context of Bill C-31.

I want to draw to the Minister's attention the fact that, as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter and Southam, a provision such as this, which allows for a seizure to take place without any warrant whatever, at any time whatever, falls far short of the standards which are set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that the provisions of the Criminal Code may be relevant here. An amendment proposed in Bill C-18 may make this provision inoperative, that is, an amendment to the seizure provisions in Section 443 of the Criminal Code. I want to note specifically the concerns with respect to this proposed Section 103 in a number of respects, and I am relying upon the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Hunter and Southam that established the standards which were then used to amend other federal legislation in the search and seizure area.

First, there is no requirement whatever in this provision to obtain a warrant. As it stands now, as long as there are reasonable grounds, a police officer can go on the property of the individual in question and seize goods without any warrant at all. Under the provisions of the Charter, such a search and seizure would, in my view, be clearly struck down as being unreasonable. There is no warrant requirement at all. The only circumstances in which a warrant may not be required are circumstances in which there might be a danger to human life, society or loss or destruction of evidence. In those special circumstances, a warrant can be dispensed with. This particular provision allows for a seizure in all circumstances whenever there is a suspicion of an offence.

What is a typical amendment made to other legislation? First, let us take one example from Bill C-27, the amendment of the seizure provisions of the Customs Act. That amendment provides that there must be a warrant issued where there are reasonable grounds. The only circumstances in which a warrant can be dispensed with are clearly set out. Those are the circumstances to which I referred earlier.

Second, the section requires that the warrant be executed at a reasonable time. There is no provision whatever in Section 103 as to when the warrant might be executed. Once again, that provision is unreasonable in that respect.

I would urge the Minister to reconsider this section. Certainly I think all sides of the House agree that there has to be a response, and a speedy response, to the Manitoba court decision which could lead to very serious problems were this Parliament not to move forward quickly. I ask that the Minister consider standing this provision in order that perhaps there might be an amendment brought forward similar to the amendments brought forward to other legislation dealing with search and seizure provisions to deal with those two basic concerns. First, there should be a warrant requirement for a seizure, unless the circumstances are such that a warrant is not appropriate, and that is again contained in the terms set out in Bill C-27. Second, the warrant should be executed at a reasonable time, not at any time.

I would appeal to the Minister to stand this particular clause in order to review the provisions that have been brought in with respect to other search and seizure provisions in other legislation flowing from the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter and Southam. If that is not done, then we may be responding, ironically enough, to one Charter challenge by including a provision that is wide open to challenge as well, and the Minister may just have to come back before the House to make the amendments which, I submit, we should be making now to ensure that Section 8 of the Charter is respected in this Bill.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an important issue. However, the cases mentioned relate to search. Section 103(4) already requires a warrant to conduct such a search. I will read Section 103(4):

> (4) A justice who is satisfied by information upon oath that there is reasonable ground to believe that there are upon a reserve or in any building, receptacle or place any goods or chattels by means of or in relation to which an offence against any of the sections mentioned in subsection (1) has been, is being or is about to be committed, may at any time issue a warrant under his hand authorizing a person named therein or a peace officer at any time to search the reserve, building, receptacle or place for any such goods or chattels.

Therefore, there is no need to deal with this matter in Motion 33A. There will be no problem under the Charter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to speak again?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I knew that my friend, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) was going to speak to the matter. I simply wanted to assure those who have raised the concern, and I appreciate their raising it, that I checked the matter to make sure it was consistent with our understanding of any challenge under the Charter, as I have with other parts of the legislation. I was assured that we had no difficulty with respect to the Charter in so far as our wisdom could take us in determining it.

Second, I understand the general argument which the Hon. Member has made, not only concerning this Bill but in other forms and on other occasions and other Bills. I did not want to have to move in the whole freight of that argument to deal with what is a decision that needs to be made now. That is why I took the route of saying, "This is what we need to do. Will it offend the Charter?" The answer was no.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's bringing the matter forward. I think the Hon. Member for Erie has supported the legal view that we have. In my own view, I think it is necessary not only that we not stand the item but that we proceed with it as fast as we can, given the fact that, according to the best wisdom possible, we are consistent with our obligations concerning the Charter.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few comments on this entire section. First, I welcome Motion No. 33 in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). This recognizes more power on the part of band councils to enforce by-laws. I think any of us who have dealt with Indian bands are aware of the great frustrations that bands feel in having to make by-laws and then finding they have virtually no power to enforce them. This gives band councils the right to seek some kind of court action and provide for stiffer fines.

Again, I think we will all recognize that this is a partial measure. What we really need is for a broad recognition of the powers of band councils and Indian Governments far beyond Section 81 of the Indian Act. I think it is important to take this one step, and I am pleased to support that motion.

With regard to Motion No. 33A concerning the alcohol problem I should like to make some comments. Of course, this is one of the key problems which has existed between Indian and non-Indian people since the time of first contact. There has always been a fine line between discrimination and the rights of Indian people to protect themselves from the ravages of alcohol. I first became aware of this problem as a United Church minister in British Columbia, where we were lobbied very extensively by groups such as the Native Brotherhood. They protested against discriminatory sections which prohibited them from having, purchasing, being in possession of or consuming alcohol. I came at the problem from a slightly different perspective some years ago than it is being approached right now. Some Indian bands in Canada see protection from alcohol as a basic treaty right. When the Manitoba courts struck down the sections dealing with alcohol in the Act as a contravention of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, many people urged the Minister to act with some speed. Certainly I was one of those who wanted to see some action.

• (1250)

At the same time, some concern has been expressed about the way in which the resolution was brought forward. To be fair to the Minister, he checked with me beforehand, but since then people have raised concerns. I would like to share one concern with the House, the fear of some Indian bands that by repealing Sections Nos. 94 to 100 of the Indian Act, the federal Government is in effect vacating the field and leaving it open to provincial incursion. If there is one area of Indian affairs about which Indian bands are most sensitive, as the Minister knows, it is the opening up of the Indian reserves to greater provincial incursion. We have a problem in this regard. Some Indian bands want reserves to be completely dry, and this amendment gives them that power. I hope it will be effective. However, what alternatives are there to total prohibition? What rights do band councils have to regulate, for example, the sale of alcohol, except by coming under the jurisdiction of the provinces?

On that basis, I should like to move a subamendment—and I would ask the House to support it—which reads as follows:

That Motion No. 33A be amended in lines 9 and 10 to read:

(a) prohibiting the barter, supply or manufacture of intoxicants on the reserve of the band and prohibiting or regulating the sale of intoxicants on the reserve of the band;

By way of explanation, this means that in addition to band councils having the power to prohibit the manufacture, barter and so on of intoxicants, they also have the right to regulate their sale. This will formulize what is already taking place where some Indian bands want the power to regulate the sale of intoxicants. Certainly we are not talking about the manufacture of intoxicants as being something which should be regulated by Indian bands at the present time. Perhaps with Indian self-government, that is something at which we should look. Even in 1985, even before we have moved to full-scale Indian self-government, we should recognize the right of Indian bands to regulate the sale of alcohol on their lands as well as to prohibit it completely.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to look at the actual wording of the subamendment of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). I heard his words, and I think I understood his intent. I would like to stand the amendment over until after we resume debate following Question Period, which would provide me with an opportunity to assess its impact and whether it would assist us in trying to deal with the problem currently experienced by Indian communities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). The Chair rules that the amendment is in order. Shall I call it one o'clock, or is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the motion be stood over, so that I could read the subamendment of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps we could call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, just for the purpose of clarification, did Your Honour make a ruling on the amendment to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall)? Is it found to be in order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands is to Motion No. 33A, and the amendment of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) is to Motion No. 33.

Mr. Penner: I understood that the additional amendment was to Motion No. 33. You said that you would look at it, Mr. Speaker, and I was just wondering whether you reached a decision on it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the ruling was given. The amendment of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming to Motion No. 33 is in order, as is the amendment of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands to Motion No. 33A. May I call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the May 23 Budget brought down by the Government is bitter medicine for eastern Canada. When the Members from the Atlantic provinces toured the region last week, we heard from angry and frustrated Canadians, people who have less money in their pockets because of the Budget. Farmers say higher gas taxes and user fees for potato inspection will force farmers off the land. They are also afraid that the Maritime Feed Freight Assistance Program will be reduced or eliminated.

Tourist operators are scared of higher ferry rates, increased National Park fees, higher taxes on gas, cigarettes, and alcohol. They say that they will be operating in the red by the end of the season.

Fishermen are still smarting from a cut of $40 million last fall. How will a further reduction of $25 million affect their business? Fisheries research and development programs need more money. Programs for small craft harbours and vessel subsidies need more money, not less.

P.E.I. has the highest rate per capita of senior citizens in the country. They are not standing for deindexing; they are fighting back. The three Atlantic Tory Premiers agree with those people. They agree that the Maritimes got the short end of the stick in the Budget. They said so at the Council of Maritime Premiers' meeting held yesterday and today in Prince Edward Island.

It is time for the Members on the government side to stand up and speak in their caucus, to speak in the House and tell the Government that they will no longer tolerate the shabby treatment Atlantic Canadians are getting from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Government must come clean on aid for White Farm Equipment Ltd. For weeks the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has avoided direct questions on this issue with assurances about consultation and private sector financing. There has been little concrete action, and the June 14 deadline is fast approaching.

If the Minister has arranged private sector financing, let him say so today. If none is available, he should announce that the Government is prepared to step in with loan guarantees.

The Minister has heard the president of White Farm Equipment Ltd. put his case. The financial picture is clear. He need not consult further with the workers. They have demonstrated full support for Mr. Sinclair, the president. He does not have to discuss the matter with small business. All suppliers have told him White Farm is vital to their health. He need not consult Members of this House. Many have sent letters to the Minister urging support for White Farm Equipment.

What are we waiting for? The Minister must simply make his recommendation to Cabinet, and the Government must demonstrate the political will to save those jobs. I ask him to consider this. White Farm is a Canadian company. It does research and development in Canada. White Farm's Canadian workers are bringing new technology into production. Even a depressed market has seen the value of White Farm's new products increase its market share. That is a Canadian success story that the Government must continue to support.

EMPLOYMENT

LONDON UNEMPLOYED HELP CENTRE—PROVISION OF WORK BOOTS

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, last month, after a dark year and a half searching for a job, a virtually penniless constituent of mine was brightened by a job offer on a construction site in London. When he reported for his first day on the job, it was apparent that he was not wearing work boots. He was sent home, and his job was put in jeopardy.

A new pair of steel-toed work boots is an expensive proposition for an unemployed worker. The House may be wondering why I am recounting this story this afternoon. I want to share it with my colleagues because there is a solution to this problem as developed by an organization in my riding, called the Unemployed Help Centre.

This non-profit organization has established a work boot depository that makes used work boots available to those in need, for use on their new jobs. The initial reserve was generated by labour councils and others who contributed used work boots. This unique program has proved to be very useful in London. I am certain that it would be similarly useful elsewhere, and I would like to commend it to this House and encourage my colleagues to establish similar programs in their constituencies.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SIGNING OF AUXILIARY AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND QUEBEC

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Quebec City, I witnessed the signing of the Canada-Quebec Subsidiary Agreement on Scientific and Technological Development, with the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon), and for Quebec, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson and the Minister of Higher Education, Science and Technology, Mr. Yves Bérubé.

The five-year $100 million agreeemnt is aimed at stimulating scientific and technological development and the attendant jobs in Quebec and facilitating coordination of efforts at both levels of government, with particular emphasis on implementing projects of strategic value for Canada and Quebec.

The signing of this agreement comes at a particularly important time, after the new federal Budget which emphasizes technological development and innovative projects in order to spur economic growth.

Government representatives jointly stressed the importance of the consensus reached on management of the Institut d'optique et de laser located in Sainte-Foy, in my riding.

The subsidiary agreement contains provisions concerning the conversion of the Institute into an independent enterprise, managed by a board of directors whose members will be mostly recruited from the private sector.

I must say I am extremely happy with the signing of this agreement, because it will undoubtedly be very—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but her time has expired.

OLD AGE SECURITY

LIBERAL PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want all Members of this House to know exactly what kind of senior citizens this Progressive Conservative Government is asking to make sacrifices and to submit to cuts in their Old Age Security pensions.

First of all, these are all people who were born before 1920. They grew up during the Depression. They got married and raised children and sent them to school at a time when education was not free. They are all parents, fathers and mothers, who had to pay for medical care for their children at a time when health insurance and hospital insurance were non-existent. These are people who are still making sacrifices to remain independent and avoid being a burden to their children and who are living in their own homes. These are all people who helped build our country.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party say no to the sacrifice the Progressive Conservative Government wants to impose on our elderly. We in the Liberal Party say: we are going to fight this Government to ensure that our elderly get the social justice to which they are entitled.

DISARMAMENT

STATEMENT ISSUED BY WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Women's International Peace Conference which ended in Halifax this past weekend called for significant initiatives in advancing world peace. The official statement issued at the end of the conference calls for a comprehensive test ban treaty, an end to research, testing, development, and deployment of all weapons of mass destruction, and an end to the militarization of space.

At this time of foreign policy review, a peace statement which reflects the views of many Canadians deserves strong support from the Government. A telex of the official statement has gone to the Prime Minister's Office and a Conservative Member of Parliament in attendance at the conference has also brought him a copy. I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to use his good relations with Soviet Leader Gorbachev and President Reagan to press them to negotiate in good faith. I urge him to take decisive action in stopping Canada's participation in the testing of Cruise missiles over Canadian territory. I urge him to act on the opposition of most Canadians to Canada's participation in President Reagan's star wars program.

The Women's Conference in Halifax gives us hope that reason will prevail in the international power play. The Canadian Government must take the hope this statement expresses, and act decisively.

SPORT

TRIBUTE TO EDMONTON OILERS, STANLEY CUP HOCKEY CHAMPIONS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, Edmonton, my home city, has produced superb championship sports teams. In an earlier era, the Edmonton Grads were the world's best women's basketball team, and for 25 consecutive years most players were from Edmonton, and they were amateurs.

In recent times, the Edmonton Eskimos reigned supreme in the Canadian Football League, winning the coveted Grey Cup five consecutive years, an unprecedented record, and a number of players were from Edmonton. On Thursday, May 30, the Edmonton Oilers won the Stanley Cup for the second year in a row. Last fall eight Oilers played on Canada's victorious team for the 1984 Canada Cup, considered to be the world championship.

For championship teams, Edmonton has an unequalled record. The Edmonton Oilers have Wayne Gretzky, the acknowledged "world's" best hockey player. A number of other players are considered to be in the superb class. Naturally, we have a few players native to Edmonton.

The Oilers' excellence is due to a combination of good business and team work. The general manager and coach, Glen Sather, must be given credit for assembling and fusing these excellent hockey players into a team of such excellence that they are forging a completely new dimension of hockey in North America, and, indeed, the world.

● (1410)

Peter Pocklington, owner and entrepreneur, is responsible for the Edmonton Oilers, and made it all happen. The City of Edmonton continues to represent the very best in Canadian sports, and that has been recognized around the world.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF DEATH PENALTY

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, last weekend once again, in the Montreal Region, two heinous crimes were perpetrated on young people, including one girl from Longueuil who was raped and murdered and a five-year old child from Ville Emard who was sexually assaulted and fatally beaten, and whose body was found in my riding. A few weeks ago, an elderly couple was murdered for the sake of $70, and in the last few months, many more such murders have been committed.

Mr. Speaker, it has become very urgent to re-open the debate on capital punishment in Canada, and I am addressing these words especially to my colleagues, the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), in the hope that the Government will table, as soon as possible, a bill to restore capital punishment in Canada.

Although some people tend to say that bringing back capital punishment would be a return to barbarism, I wonder whether they feel the same way about the perpetrators of these foul murders. Imagine, sexually assaulting a defenceless five-year old child and beating it to death. It is too horrible for words. If that is not barbaric, I wonder what is.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the police will manage to arrest the murderers so they can be brought to trial and sentenced. As for the victims' families, I offer them my sincere sympathy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—STATEMENTS MADE BY UNITED STATES SENATOR KENNEDY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in Toronto, Senator Kennedy acknowledged a long-standing problem in his address to the Canadian Acid Rain Coalition. The problem he recognized is that the utilities and other powerful interests in the United States are determined to block congressional action on the problem of acid rain. Senator Kennedy also recognized the appointment of two special envoys on acid rain for what it really is, a delaying tactic. Kennedy sees little purpose in having two individuals conduct yet another study to determine if there is an acid rain problem.

While waiting for envoys to deliver the impossible, because they have no political clout, our forests, fisheries, lakes, buildings, and structures continue to suffer from the damaging effects of acid rain. Instead of waiting, the Government should take an active role in urging Canada's friends and allies to exert pressure on the United States between now and July 30 when, in Helsinki, 20 countries will sign an agreement to reduce acid rain emissions by a minimum of 30 per cent by 1993. It should be the highest priority of the Canadian Government to do everything in its power to ensure that the United States joins us and the other 20 nations in signing that agreement in Helsinki next month.

FINANCE

REGULATIONS GOVERNING REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, a person who owns a Registered Retirement Savings Plan is entitled at any time until the age of 71 to cash in that plan, pay the tax on it, and use the money in any way he wants. Indeed, people have used Registered Retirement Savings to enjoy a sabbatical, to put together money to purchase a business, or for any other purpose they had in mind. However, when a person attains the age of 71, Big Brother steps in. For some reason the Government has treated those with Retirement Savings Plans who reach the age of 71 as nincompoops, as incompetents, and as having the management ability of an infant child.

By edict, the Government demands that anyone who has a Registered Retirement Savings Plan must either convert the plan and purchase an annuity from a life insurance company or, in the alternative, enter into a Registered Investment Fund arrangement with a trust company, when he reaches 71. We trust people to save their own money until they reach the age of 71. However, when they turn 71, all of a sudden treat we them as second-class citizens.

I call on the Government to change immediately the provisions of the Income Tax Act, to allow those over the age of 71 the right to continue to manage their Registered Retirement Savings Plans as they wish, to invest as they wish, to withdraw money as they wish and as they need, and, in short, to have the same freedom as the rest of us.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the seeming demise of the RRAP program is causing considerable concern to municipal governments across Canada. Mayor Dick Spencer of Prince Albert has written:

> Not only has the RRAP program been a considerable benefit to the home owners whose accommodation has been upgraded, but it has had substantial impact on the small business construction industry. The program has enabled many people on low incomes, senior citizens, and working families, to maintain their homes and remain in them. We have canvassed our community and find a continuing need for this assistance, and are concerned that it might be further reduced or eliminated. Our allocation has dropped from a high of over $1,000,000 in 1977 to $280,000 in 1984, and $170,000 in 1985.

Mayor Spencer goes on to say:

> Housing is one of the vital sectors of our economy and so directly significant to the citizens of this country. We believe adequate housing is a fundamental right and this program has assisted to achieve that objective through direct senior government intervention to the home owner.

We call upon the Government to increase RRAP funding to its previous high levels. The program's socio-economic benefits will far outweigh its costs.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO CREATE INDEXED BONDS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question this afternoon is for the Minister of Finance who, on the CBC this morning, told us that he might consider the creation of indexed bonds for investors. I wonder if he could explain to the House and the Canadian people the rationale or logic that exists in his mind behind giving investors protection against inflation for investment income, while at the same time depriving those Canadians who depend on Old Age Security of full indexation to protect their incomes.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should ask the Hon. Member to discuss that matter with his Leader. Last August, the Leader of the Opposition suggested that this was the way to save money in interest costs. I would point out to the Hon. Member that today we are paying between 10 per cent and 11 per cent on normal bonds. There are some people who suggest that we could issue indexed bonds at rates of 7 per cent to 8 per cent. We are exploring this as a possibility and, if it proves to be a way of saving money, perhaps it is something we will do.

PENSIONS

MONITORING OF BUDGET'S IMPACT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Minister has to reach into the Liberal platform for the first fresh idea he has provided the House. The proposal put forward by the Leader of the Opposition when he was Prime Minister was not to deindex at the same time the incomes of those Canadians who were surviving on Old Age Security payments.

I am sure the Minister of Finance will correct me if I do not paraphrase him correctly, but I believe the Prime Minister said yesterday that he would monitor the situation and that, as resources became available, he would monitor those resources and establish full indexation if that were possible. He would no longer be monitoring hardship but would be monitoring resources. I wonder if the Minister of Finance would be able to tell us that this is not arbitrary, and what level of growth beyond that which is in his Budget is necessary, in his mind, in order to establish full indexation for the beneficiaries of Old Age Security.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in two places the Budget said that we would be monitoring not only the performance of the economy and the financial performance of the Government of Canada but also the impact on elderly people. It indicated that, if resources permit, we will take the opportunity to enhance these programs. That is something that we have to watch carefully as time goes by, before we make a decision.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare could defuzzify that response for us. We know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is interested in re-establishing full indexation as quickly as possible. In view of the statements he has made in the House, could he tell us what level of projected growth must be reached before he will insist to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister that full indexation be established? It is important that the elderly poor know that this figure is not arbitrary but that targets have been established, targets to which the Government will adhere.

● (1420)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member feels that growth in the economy is now possible, and that the direction has been set in which growth can be maintained, sustained, and developed. I am pleased that he has accepted that. What I would say to him, as the Prime Minister said yesterday, is that we are monitoring the situation. I said that the situation would be monitored and that the Government would make a decision in the light of those statistics as they become available.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET MEASURE BE RESCINDED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is an unfortunate day when the Prime Minister accuses anyone in the country who is opposed to the OAS reductions of promoting class warfare. Whether or not he knows it, that is an insult to the 2.5 million senior citizens who are opposed to those reductions.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Given that the Atlantic Liberal caucus, during the last week, heard from senior citizens in Atlantic Canada, who, in their own words, are normally calm, moderate intelligent and mature, and given that those same senior citizens have described the Budget as immoral, indecent, dishonest—and to use a new buzzword, it stinks—is the Minister of Finance prepared to accept the reality that senior citizens do not support this measure? Will he reverse these Draconian measures which will increase an already unacceptably high number of senior citizens who live at or below the poverty line?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member, when he was meeting with the senior citizens and others in Atlantic Canada, whether he set out very clearly the over-all thrust of the Budget, which is to create jobs through the private sector, to reinforce the clear record of success which we have had. Since September 4, 271,000 jobs have been created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: But we still have 10.5 per cent unemployment.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has reminded me that unemployment is down from 11.6 per cent to 10.5 per cent. I thank him very much for reminding me of that.

As that performance in the economy continues, as we are confident it will, then we will be able to look carefully at all ranges of social programs, and we will do what the country can afford. That is the direction in which we are going, and I hope he has clearly made that point to the people with whom he has met.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Minister of Finance that senior citizens do not need to be lectured by anybody. They are intelligent, they are articulate, and they understand that the Budget is not fair. They do not need lectures from me, and they do not need lectures from the Minister. I will tell the Minister that they are coming to Ottawa.

Is it fair to ask a pair of senior citizens in their eighties, with $100 of discretionary spending a month, to bear the burden of deficit reduction in Canada? Is that fair? Is the Minister of Finance prepared to set aside a day to meet, in a public forum in Ottawa, with those senior citizens from whom we heard in Atlantic Canada? The Minister had better reverse himself now, to avoid the spectacle of swallowing himself whole when he does reverse himself when the senior citizens of the country get organized. I tell you, they are coming to Ottawa—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that there is no one on this side of the House who is happy doing what we have been doing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is a fundamental reason for it. The fundamental reason is that the interest costs of the Government have grown from $8 billion to $25 billion over a six-year period. The accumulated debt of the country is increasing three times faster than the country is growing, and the interest costs to the Government of Canada are exceeding the total amount of what the federal Government spends on medicare, OAS and GIS. Clearly there is a problem. If the Member is worried about fairness, what is fair about a baby being born and having a debt of $7,000 put on its head the minute it is born, knowing that five years from now, when the baby starts school, that it will have a $14,000 debt if nothing is changed? That is why something has to be done.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO CREATE INDEXED BONDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week he went to Montreal and told Canadians that there were not enough rich people in the country. Yesterday he went to Quebec City and announced a proposal to make the rich richer. Is it his concept of justice for the Government of Canada to bring down a Budget that reduces indexation for pensioners, which will increase the number of pensioners living in poverty by some 200,000, and then, a few days later, announce that it will introduce indexation to protect the income of all those rich Canadians who invest? Is that his concept of fairness?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, and I believe the Hon. Member knows that the premise of that question is totally false.

What is happening is that the Government of Canada is paying between 10 per cent and 11 per cent on marketable bonds. Some people in the marketplace have proposed that we should consider indexed bonds because they can be issued at between 7 per cent and 8 per cent. That amounts to a saving of some $30 million to $40 million on a bond issue of $1 billion.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party cannot have it both ways. He cannot tell us to look for other ways of saving money, and then turn around and say that we should not try to do something which some people have said will save $30 million to $40 million.

INVESTOR PARTICIPATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot take away indexation from the pensioners and give it to the investors of Canada. That is what he is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask the Minister, as we have checked with a stock brokerage firm today, will he admit to the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —he has talked about the bonds which he wants to create—

Some Hon. Members: Name it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Will the Minister acknowledge that it is not the ordinary pensioner who will be able to take his money and buy stocks? In fact it will be, as the stock brokerage firm informed my office, wealthy individuals on the one hand, and large corporations on the other hand, which will use his scheme. Will he admit that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member change his broker, because that is wrong. Buyers of indexed bonds, if they are to meet any sort of successful response in the marketplace, would be pension funds, insurance companies, and those financial organizations which are established to provide for the retirement income of Canadians. That is the market at which we are directing the proposal. It is not for corporations, and it is not for upper-income people. It is for the companies which are providing pensions for the many unionists whom the Hon. Member says, he likes to represent.

REQUEST THAT PROPOSAL BE DROPPED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is in a nice position to give some assurance to Canadians. He has talked about pension funds for pensioners. He does not have to wait for a monitoring process, which will go on for a number of weeks or months, to admit that pensioners will suffer because of this measure. If he is concerned about pensioners, will he now tell the House that the Government will restore indexation for pensioners, and that it will not proceed with its scheme to give investors a special break until all groups of Canadians are protected against inflation?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that this proposal, if you want to call it a proposal, had been discussed by the Liberal Party when it was in government—

Mr. Broadbent: So?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and it was raised with me during my time as Minister of Finance, as a proposal. There is nothing imminent about it. Nothing is going to happen tomorrow or next month. It is something we are trying to explore to see whether there are ways of saving money for the Government of Canada and, through the Government of Canada, for all taxpayers.

I would hope that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would give us some support in trying to control government spending, so that we can then restore some of the social programs which all Canadians, including my colleagues on this side of the House, would like to see in place.

OLD AGE SECURITY

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think everyone is aware that this Government is more concerned about helping the rich than trying to help the needy.

Mr. Speaker, last January, five months before this Government came to power, the Prime Minister was aware of the Government's financial situation, he was aware of the national debt, and at that time, through his Minister of National Health and Welfare, he promised that changes in social programs would not be used to reduce the deficit.

My question is as follows: Could the Right Hon. Prime Minister explain to the House, and perhaps he would care to look me in the face instead of reading, could he explain to Hon. Members and all senior citizens in Canada what made his Government renege a second time on its commitments to senior citizens?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what happened is that last Friday, we were informed that 70,000 new jobs were created in Canada, that interest rates dropped by 29 base points, that automobile sales rose 29.9 per cent during the month of April, and that today, for the first time, real investment in Canada will have increased by approximately 13 per cent.

For the first time since we inherited this extraordinary Liberal legacy, we are seeing signs of progress in our economy which I think should be encouraging to everyone, and which, if the pace is maintained—and we will be monitoring it regularly and closely—will enable us to ensure that a renewed economy can be used to improve and maintain Canada's socio-economic programs which were placed in serious jeopardy by the approach taken by the Liberal Government, as pensioners know so well.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, why deprive the elderly of their Old Age Security pension? Why turn on the neediest in Canada? My supplementary will therefore consider two aspects of the question.

I want to ask the Prime Minister first of all, why, if he failed to meet his previous commitment, he would be any more likely to meet the commitment made in the Budget, namely that he will be monitoring the situation of the elderly? Why would he be telling the truth this time, when he did not keep his word before?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the House why he preferred to spend $56 million to change the colour of military uniforms and $400 million over the next four years to send more members of the Canadian Forces to Europe, instead of protecting the elderly here in Canada? Why did he do that?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, all Canadians and all Quebecers are aware that for fifteen years, the Liberal Government did everything it could to undermine the credibility of our Armed Forces across Canada. It is common knowledge, and that is one of the reason why they were repudiated at the polls.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest we ask for the unanimous consent of the House to award a special prize, an Oscar to the Hon. Member for his brazen nerve, because two years ago, they were saying the exact opposite. They were the game people who cut the elderly off at 6 per cent. That is what the Liberal Party did, the bunch of hypocrites!

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO CREATE INDEXED BONDS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the Minister think it is fair to propose a scheme for the indexing of investments, a scheme which guarantees not only protection from inflation for those investors but also guarantees them a return on that investment, while at the same time moving to partially deindex the pensions of old age pensioners? Does the Minister of Health, responsible for pensions, think it is fair for the Government to offer to protect the investors' incomes against inflation, while requiring the pensioners to accept all of the burdens of the loss of their income?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has heard the explanation of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Broadbent: That's why he asked you.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member has clearly, I hope, understood—or at least listened to—the proposal put forward by the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Deans: I understand.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —that if moneys can be saved for the taxpayers of Canada, that is a responsibility he has. That is a responsibility not only of every member of Cabinet but it should be a responsibility and objective of every Hon. Member of this House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there is a responsibility on all Hon. Members here to be fair to the senior citizens. But I am asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he thinks it is fair today to propose that, through some measure brought forward by the Minister of Finance, we will make sure that those who invest in Canada are protected against inflation to the fullest extent, plus receive an income, while at the same time we are moving to deindex the pensions of senior citizens—partially, but nevertheless to reduce their incomes? Is that fair?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe what should be fair—

Mr. Rodriguez: Is it fair?

Mr. Blaikie: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —is that we want to get the economy working, that we want the economy turned around—

Mr. Waddell: Why do it on the backs of seniors?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —that we want to protect seniors' pensions, that we want to protect their future pensions, and that we want to protect the jobs which Canadians must have.

Mr. Rodriguez: Is it fair?

Mr. Blaikie: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): All that is part of the equation of living in society, and I think that when we talk about fairness we should look at the entire package rather than the specifics which the Hon. Member wants to raise in the House of Commons so that he can get on evening TV.

Mr. Broadbent: So do you, with that answer.

THE ADMINISTRATION

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday we heard the Minister of Justice tell the House and the country that, to use his own words, "his brother Andrew was innocent and didn't owe the Government one red cent", in connection with claims of which National Revenue has given his brother notice. Does the Prime Minister consider it proper and acceptable for the Minister of Justice to take sides like that?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant, not knowing anything about the case, to comment on anything which might become the subject of litigation at a future date. I understood yesterday's exchange to be much more related to an accusation which had been raised by a Liberal Member of Parliament, which impugned a member of the Minister's family, about which he, as a Member of Parliament, attempted to set the record straight. That was my understanding.

PROCLAMATION OF BROTHER'S INNOCENCE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, that question may be resolved in other proceedings which will take place in the House, but what the Prime Minister has a responsibility for is his Minister of Justice taking sides in any matter before the courts.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Kaplan: The Prime Minister has indicated that he himself won't be taking sides because he does not know the facts. But does he think it is proper for the Minister of Justice to stand here, or in the hall outside, and influence, or attempt to influence the way things may develop, by proclaiming his brother's innocence? Is that a proper course to follow for the Minister of Justice of this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member feel that it is improper for an Hon. Member from any part of the House to rise—

An Hon. Member: He's a Minister, come on.

Mr. Mulroney: —or a Minister—and attempt to deal objectively with an allegation—

Mr. Nunziata: Objectively? He was ranting and raving.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I will be careful, because I know how offended the Hon. Member for York South-Weston is by ranting and raving.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But that was my understanding of it. I would, quite frankly, in the presence of a loose allegation of that kind, defend with vigour the right of my hon. friend, if that kind of accusation was made against a member of his family, to rise and have it clarified.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Bay Street, the Minister of Finance. He will know that over the last number of days it has become clear that any advice the Minister received from Atlantic Canada prior to the Budget was thrown overboard on May 23. The Budget is very clearly biased against Atlantic Canada. Not only does it pick on those who are most vulnerable, the seniors, it also picks on the most vulnerable region, Atlantic Canada. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to stand in his place today and defend a Budget which will short circuit economic development in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Budget took very much into account the interests and concerns of Atlantic Canada. I am sure the Hon. Member would be quite interested in the comments made concerning the Liberal task force down there: "There is very little spontaneity in the meetings. The politicians sitting at the head table could not resist the opportunity to make speeches and dominate the proceedings". This is because, as the Hon. Member knows, there were no other people at the meeting except the politicians and the media.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: A typical Liberal meeting.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Is that right, Brian?

Mr. Tobin: You just hung yourself.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party says—

Mr. Tobin: You just hung yourself—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tobin: —and you are too foolish to know it.

An Hon. Member: Shut up!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: That is what you are telling the people of Atlantic Canada, to shut up.

Some Hon. Members: You!

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to be quiet.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, perhaps there are some interesting people at Liberal gatherings, but the Conservative Premier of Prince Edward Island said the Atlantic Provinces got short circuited in the Budget. The Conservative Premier of Newfoundland said the other day that the Budget fails to address regional disparity.

The Minister of Finance has clearly indicated that if, there is undue hardship on senior citizens as a result of deindexing, the Government will reconsider that move. Will he, as a sensitive Minister for the Atlantic Provinces, in theory, have a look at the Budget provisions which impact negatively on that part of Canada?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are pretty good in theory, Nelson, when you are across the floor.

Mr. Riis: This Budget is definitely biased against that part of Canada. Will he reconsider what it is doing to Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member to reconsider the question, because 10,000 jobs were created last month in the Province of Nova Scotia. So good things are happening in Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Members opposite wonder why these things are happening. They are happening because there is a good response to the philosophy and style of this Government and the direction it is following in encouraging—Mr. Speaker, it is hard to compete with the fog-horn on the other side of the floor.

The Atlantic Provinces, like all parts of the country, are responding positively to the direction the Government has been following since September 4, and will continue to respond positively as time goes by.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FUTURE OF NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last year, the fortieth of the nuclear age, saw the world experience 35 nuclear explosions. The future of the Non-Proliferation Treaty depends to a great extent on the credibility of the nuclear powers. In light of the uncertain future of the NPT, will the Minister support its future by calling upon all nations to cease and desist from further nuclear testing as a sincere way of showing support for the Non-Proliferation Treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the review of the Non-Proliferation Treaty occurs, as the House knows, later this summer, in August and September, with an eye toward trying to achieve a successful result of that conference. Canada's Ambassador for Disarmament has been meeting with representatives of other countries, nuclear and non-nuclear powers, and through the Department of External Affairs we have been in touch with countries which are not yet signatories to the Treaty, urging that they affix their signatures to that document. We will continue to follow every means open to us to try to assure the regime of the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the Minister is meeting with her Nova Scotia counterpart this week, does she still stand by her commitment to that Minister that the Petroleum Incentives Program will be replaced by a frontier incentives program?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of items on the agenda for our talks tomorrow, and I am sure that in the course of those talks we will certainly be concentrating on the subject the Hon. Member has introduced.

REPLACEMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, first she says yes, and now she says she does not know. Who is speaking for the Government on energy matters? Is it the Minister? Is it the Minister of Justice, who said in Halifax that the Government has to be convinced a new incentive is needed? Is it the Minister of Finance, who told Members of the oil industry in the West that when it comes to special measures to encourage northern and offshore exploration we need to be pushed, "by You"? Who is speaking for the Government on energy matters, and are we going to get a replacement for the Petroleum Incentives Program?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member ignores the fact that under the grandfather clause of the present PIP grants there will be something like $2.5 billion spent in the offshore and the Beaufort over the next few years. That is a very generous grandfather provision. The best incentive for oil and gas development is going to be the development of Venture and Hibernia, and those projects are progressing. Adjusting the incentives is, as I said, one of the things we will be discussing with the Nova Scotia Energy Minister tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

REPLACEMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF THE PORT OF QUEBEC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Members of the Board of the Port of Quebec have just been informed that they are to be replaced, against their will, by a new board that is to be appointed by the Conservative Government and that will be more favourably inclined towards the policies of that Government. Could the Minister inform the House why the Government continues to consider this board of directors as a repository of Conservative patronage instead of providing for local autonomy as in other ports like Toronto and Hamilton, by letting the municipalities appoint port commissioners?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that members of the Quebec Port Corporation serve at pleasure and there are some changes to be made in the port directorship. Those changes will be announced in due course.

PORTS

REASON FOR NON-INVESTMENT IN QUEBEC OF PROFITS MADE BY PORT OF QUEBEC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, according to the Budget, from now on, port administrations will have to return any financial surpluses to the Federal Government. Since the Port of Quebec is one of the ports in Canada that shows a profit, could the Minister explain to the House why the profits of the Port of Quebec are not left with the Port to be invested in Quebec instead of being given to the Treasury to be spent elsewhere in Canada, without any positive economic impact for the Quebec region?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are several ports in Canada that operate at a surplus. That surplus is funneled through the Canada Ports Corporation. When there are surpluses they accrue to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and that is what was contained in the Budget.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF DEATH PENALTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

In view of the increasing number of heinous crimes in recent months and considering that 25 to 35 years in prison does not seem to act as a deterrent, and also considering that in a survey I made in my riding, 80 per cent of respondents said they agreed with bringing back capital punishment, could the Solicitor General inform the House whether he intends to table, in the near future, a Bill to restore capital punishment in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member which illustrates his concern for a very sensitive issue. Earlier in this Parliament the Right Hon. Prime Minister indicated the hope that, sometime during the life of this Parliament, there would be a chance to deal with this issue. At the present time the priorities of the country and the House are for economic renewal. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's question as a representation.

NATIONAL PARKS

PARKS POLICY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who has developed an amazing skill of upsetting Canadians from coast to coast whenever she is interviewed on environmental matters, no matter which official language she chooses to speak in. Is she prepared to confirm that she firmly supports the 1979 Parks Canada policy that reads as follows:

> Commercial exploration, extraction or development of natural resources will not be permitted in a national park.

Will she therefore withdraw the dreadful statement that she made on this subject last week?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal environment critic had bothered to read the whole article, he would not be reacting to a headline that failed to reflect accurately the content of an hour-long interview. Canada's parks are part of our national heritage, and I intend to protect, improve and beautify them.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Since she has withdrawn her statement, is the Minister now prepared to assure the House, and concerned Canadians from coast to coast, that she will not review or change the present policy of Parks Canada, namely, that there will not be any mining, timber cutting, or other activities in conflict with Parks Canada policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that if the Hon. Member would stop reading newspaper headlines all the time, he would know about the many statements I have made before the Standing Committee of the House.

I believe that the stupidity of the Hon. Member's questions is equalled only by his abysmal lack of sincerity.

AGRICULTURE

UNITED STATES RULING ON CANADIAN HOG EXPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. We now have the ruling of the U.S. Commerce Department on the hog countervail. Can the Minister explain to the House what actions, if any, the Government is prepared to take to meet the conditions laid down by the U.S. ruling in order that the countervail will be withdrawn?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the Hon. Member on the issue which he has raised. This is not good news for us, or for the Canadian pork industry. However, this is not a final decision. The matter has been referred to the U.S. Trade Commission which will have to prove injury or damage to the U.S. pork industry. We have been successful in previous cases. We will be utilizing every opportunity possible to continue making representations on the issue, in hope that a positive, final decision will be rendered on or about July 25.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Given the response from the United States thus far, is there any indication that the Government will withdraw the proposed stabilization amendments which do not seem to meet with the approval of the U.S. Commerce Department?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly sure what the Hon. Member is referring to in his question. We must recognize that the greater part of the bonding provision results from traditional payments under the federal stabilization program coupled with numerous provincial stabilization payments. The message to be received from that is that we should attempt to move toward the tripartite stabilization plan which is currently before committee and the House.

ADMINISTRATION

PORK INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

This morning we had an opportunity to meet with Quebec producers who readily told the committee they are convinced that they have been betrayed by the Government. Earlier the Prime Minister attempted to tell us that everything is going just fine, but I would point out to him that tragedy has just struck the pork industry in Canada and that the American decision is siphoning $200 million from the industry. The Minister is saying he will wait until July 25.

Mr. Speaker, would the Minister tell us whether he intends to wait for the fourth decision—he has already lost the first three and we happen to know that his inaction will lead to many bankruptcies in the pork industry—or whether he will do something now rather than wait until he is once again faced with a unilateral decision by the American Government?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not abandoned the Quebec pork producers or any other producer group in the country. One can simply look at the facts to see what we have achieved since assuming office on September 17. In fact we resisted an application from pork producers to make additional stabilization payments. That was not a popular or pleasant position to have to take but, upon reflection, the resistance which we exerted at the time resulted in benefit to the pork producers.

I have indicated before that this is not a final decision. It now goes back to the U.S. Trade Commission which will have to prove injury. Experience in previous cases has shown that we have been successful. We are going to continue to work with the hog industry to utilize every available opportunity to make representations on its behalf, in order that we will be successful in the final analysis.

REQUESTS TO THE UNITED STATES PRESIDENT FOR ASSISTANCE TO PORK PRODUCERS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Prime Minister would answer and not dissociate himself from the whole thing, because as Prime Minister he is directly concerned.

President Reagan told him in Quebec City that he is as close as the nearest telephone. Does the Prime Minister intend to phone the President of the United States at the earliest opportunity and take up the cudgels for Canadian pork producers, making sure that the industry will not go belly up instead of waiting as his Minister wants to do? He lost three times in the United States and seems prepared to lose a fourth time while the situation is deteriorating rapidly.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Hon. Member is always so intent on making such unfounded cases against his colleague. The Minister of Agriculture gave him a complete and logical answer and we will continue to make all the necessary representations to the American administration in support of producers from Quebec and elsewhere. This is an important issue which, in our opinion, deserves a new approach on the part of the American administration. We are pushing hard in this case to obtain fair treatment for Quebec producers.

NATIONAL PARKS

ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and follows from the question asked by the Hon. Member for Davenport of the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment has consistently refused to answer questions in the House in a mature and comprehensive way. Could the Prime Minister tell us, on behalf of the Government, whether the Government will ensure that the kinds of economic activity referred to by the Member for Davenport will not take place in our national parks? While he is at it, would he consider asking the Minister of the Environment for her resignation, given the ripples of anxiety that she consistently causes among Canadians concerned about the environment, and her many offences against the environment since she was elected?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed a number of Members twitched when the Hon. Member used the term maturity—

Mr. Broadbent: Only in the Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —particularly his colleagues. In point of fact the comment is unfair. The Minister has just provided a very thorough and, I thought, proper response to the Member's first question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Better read Hansard.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Last week I was given an opportunity to provide an appropriate answer to the same Member with regard to the Government's intentions in this area. I think also that the Hon. Member, who is so interested in this, should from time to time acknowledge that the Minister was the first person to bring in such a massive and successful program to clean up the Canadian environment, and that she should be encouraged for that kind of action—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —as opposed to a Minister who did absolutely nothing for years and years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's gift for exaggeration does not mask the fact that there are very serious problems. I would ask the Prime Minister to answer the question asked of the Minister of the Environment by the Hon. Member for Davenport, and give a commitment that there will not be those kinds of economic activity in our national parks. Yes or no? Just answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: It is you I asked the question of, in case you did not get the message.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Hon. Member was not speaking loudly enough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: You were not listening. You do not listen to the pensioners. You listen to no one.

Mr. Mulroney: The Progressive Conservative Party takes a back seat to no one, least of all the NDP, when it comes to protecting the environment.

Mr. Mulroney: No one has any lessons to learn from you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish you would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to withdraw what he said about me this afternoon and on another occasion last week. Last week, I decided to let the matter pass, but today, for the second time, the Right Hon. Prime Minister has called me a hypocrite.

Mr. Speaker, I may remind you, with respect, that in Beauchesne's, on page 108, chapter 7—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member making a presentation on language in the House?

Mr. Malépart: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The kind of language used by another Hon. Member?

Mr. Malépart: The language used by the Right Hon. Prime Minister in referring to me.

Mr. Speaker: So in fact, this is a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order. As I said before, for the second time, the Right Hon. Prime Minister used unparliamentary language as defined in Beauchesne's on page 108, chapter 7. For the second time, the Right Hon. Prime Minister called me a hypocrite.

Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me to show that what the Right Hon. Prime Minister said about me is not true, because I have official papers to prove that he is mistaken—

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I think you should just ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to withdraw what he said.

Mr. Speaker: What did he say?

Mr. Malépart: "Hypocrite."

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I missed the word, so there is a complaint. It was the word—?

Mr. Malépart: "Hypocrite."

Mr. Speaker: Very well.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Defend him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think the Hon. Member would be the first to agree that he probably is the last person in this House to rise on a point of order about unparliamentary language.

Mr. Deans: That is immaterial.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has been yelling across the floor of this House more unparliamentary terms in this session than anybody I have seen in the course of my parliamentary career.

An Hon. Member: What about Nunziata?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as I recall, makes reference to statements made in that context as being hypocritical, that is not unparliamentary.

There are many, many instances when that has been ruled not only not to be a question of privilege but also it is clearly not a legitimate point of order because it makes reference to things being hypocritical, as opposed to referring to a Member being a hypocrite, which I will desist from saying.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that the use of the word "hypocrite" has been rules both parliamentary and unparliamentary. There is no word itself which is unparliamentary; there is only a contextual circumstance in which language can be used in an unparliamentary way. What I heard amid the noise was an accusation made against what I thought were members of a political Party and not a specific Member. Had it been made against a specific Member, then I would have had a different position.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I will check the "blues". Under the circumstances, what I heard was an accusation against a political Party. I will, for the sake of the record, check the record. I am sorry, under the circumstances, that was all I could hear.

ALLEGED IMPUTATION OF MOTIVES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a point of order flowing from the answer to my supplementary question which I asked of the Minister of Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). In her answer, in the concluding sentence, the Minister of the Environment imputed to me the motive of being inspired by bad faith. It was done in a manner, I think, not consistent with proper parliamentary language.

Maybe this escaped you, Mr. Speaker, and therefore, I would ask you please to check the "blues" and perhaps let me have the benefit of your views tomorrow. If you agree with me that the language used by the Minister of the Environment is improper and the accusation of being motivated by bad faith is improper, then I ask the Minister of the Environment to withdraw her words and apologize.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has a request to which I will gladly accede. I would remind Members of the citation in Beauchesne which is very clear:

—a Member will not be permitted . . . to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case—

I take it that is the citation to which the Hon. Member is referring. I will, therefore, be happy to do as the Member requested and verify the record one way or the other.

LOTTERIES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON FUNDING OF 1988 OLYMPIC GAMES

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, last September, just days after taking office, this Government announced that the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation would be wound up along with the dormant Loto Canada Corporation.

This decision was made for two very obvious, and I believe good reasons. First and foremost was the fact that the existence of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation contravened the spirit, if not the law of the 1979 lottery—

Mr. Speaker: Could I interrupt the Minister for one second to ask two things: First, that there be an opportunity to hear him. Second I sense that in the noise we missed an earlier call for Tabling of Documents. To do that we need unanimous consent. With the consent of the House, may I revert to Tabling of Documents for one moment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER ON REDISTRIBUTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2), I have the honour to lay upon the Table in both official languages copies of the document entitled White Paper on Redistribution.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by Ministers. Again I apologize to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) for interrupting him. The Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

LOTTERIES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON FUNDING OF 1988 OLYMPIC GAMES

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, we will try again. As I said, last September, just days after taking office, the Government announced that the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation would be wound up along with the dormant Loto Canada Corporation.

This decision was made for two very obvious and, I believe, good reasons. First and foremost was the fact that the existence of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation contravened the spirit, if not the law, of the 1979 lottery agreement between the federal Government and the provinces. For this reason alone, it was necessary to terminate the sports pool as soon as possible, in order to restore a measure of trust and co-operation between the two levels of Government. Second, at the time of our announcement the corporation was losing approximately $1.5 million per week. Suffice it to say, the sports pool was a burden which Canadians could ill afford to bear.

In the spirit of greater federal-provincial co-operation, not to mention fiscal responsibility, the cabinet decision was obvious. Within days of the resumption of the new parliamentary session, Bill C-2 was introduced, thus beginning the legislative process of winding up both the sports pool and Loto Canada.

Of course, this left us with the problem of raising the necessary non-tax revenue dollars toward our commitment to the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in Calgary. I immediately approached the provinces with a view to having them share with us this financial commitment, in light of the tremendous economic impact the games would have on all regions of Canada. Specifically, I am pleased to announce that a recent study concluded that the games will indeed contribute approximately $1.2 billion in new economic activity and 28,000 new person-years of employment.

As well, in return for the support of the provinces, I recommended that we clarify once and for all by way of legislation the federal-provincial relationship as it pertains to lotteries. Based upon our show of good faith, the provincial Governments were more than willing to sit down and talk.

As negotiations ensued, it was determined that the Department of Justice, along with the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation and in co-operation with the provinces, would propose draft amendments to the Criminal Code for our consideration, proposals which could protect the provincial status quo in the field of lotteries. In return, it was proposed that the provinces would pay $100 million in non-tax revenue dollars to go toward the funding commitment of the federal Government to the games.

Over the course of the past nine months, much intensive work and many hours of negotiations have taken place. In this regard I should like to take this opportunity to thank my provincial colleagues responsible for lotteries for the co-operative and open manner under which these negotiations were conducted.

On that note, I am very pleased to announce that as a result of these extensive consultations and negotiations I have concluded today, on behalf of the Government of Canada, an agreement with the provincial Governments whereby the provinces will contribute $100 million to the federal Government in three equal payments over the next three years. For our part, my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), will be introducing legislation in due course which will propose amendments to the Criminal Code guaranteeing the protection of the provincial status quo in the field of lotteries.

It goes without saying that this agreement will greatly contribute to the future promotion of federal-provincial relations and in fact confirm that a new era of co-operation is a reality. Indeed, it is as great a day for Canadian sport as it is for Canadian federal-provincial relations. It is with this newfound sense of friendship and co-operation that we can look forward to both a "best ever" performance by our young athletes and hosting the most successful winter Olympics held anywhere in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today on behalf of my Party to respond to the statement of the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). I congratulate the Minister for being successful in obtaining a total of $100 million from the provincial Governments for the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in Calgary.

The Minister suggested for a number of months that he was seeking to secure this type of arrangement from the provinces. The sports community in general will indeed be heartened by today's news. It will also be reassuring to the athletes, to the Olympic organizing committee and to all those involved in staging the 1988 winter games.

However, notwithstanding this announcement, the federal Government has made a commitment of some $200 million in federal contributions to the winter games. With the provincial share, plus an Olympic coin program, there is a shortfall of between $50 million and $70 million, depending upon how much the Olympic coin program generates. Toward this end, I think it would be incumbent upon the Minister and his Government to inform the House and Canadians, as well, from where the remainder of the federal contribution will come, how these funds will be generated, and when they will be generated.

These are fundamental questions which need to be answered so as to provide certainty and consistency to all interested parties involved in staging the Olympic games, that is, that the promised funding plan will indeed be maintained in full and in time.

The second important aspect is whether the agreement with the provinces is a one-time arrangement or whether a new deal has been negotiated which would amend the agreement of the Conservative Government back in 1979. At that time the federal Government agreed to provide exclusivity in the area of lotteries to the provinces in exchange for an annual amount of some $35 million. Yet, when one examines the arrangement closely, the projected lottery-generating revenues are in the neighbourhood of some $200 million annually. Simple mathematics would suggest clearly that this deal certainly does not favour the federal Government and provides a good and attractive monopoly for the provinces.

Perhaps the Minister has changed those terms, not to penalize the provinces, but to obtain a fairer arrangement for the federal Government, so as to assure greater dollars for federal sports initiatives on a national scale. I trust, in the time allotted to us following the statement, the Minister will address himself to those concerns.

Finally, I assure the House that we on this side had always been firmly committed as a Government to amateur sports and to the pursuit of athletic excellence by Canadians of all backgrounds and from all walks of life. It should be well noted that it was the previous Liberal Government which gave the strongest guarantee ever offered so that Calgary would play host to the Olympic games in 1988. In addition, we need to be reminded that it was a Liberal administration which paid the lion's share in order to send our athletes to Los Angeles, where they made Canadians extremely proud and honoured by their athletic abilities.

It is our sincerest hope that Canadian athletes participating in the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympic Games will do equally well. Moreover, as the eyes of the international community will be upon us in 1988, we wish to ensure our support in making these Olympic games a truly magnificent occasion, an occasion which will instil a huge degree of honour and pride in all Canadians from one coast to the other.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to respond to the statement of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). I am sure he was very pleased to make the announcement that a part of the federal contribution from non-tax dollars has been nailed down. At the same time, recognizing the source of those funds, I am a shade ambivalent about the agreement. I should like to comment on the basic nature of it and raise some questions, which I hope the Minister will be able to answer this afternoon.

The fact that half the federal contribution of $200 million is drawn from gambling revenues, albeit gambling in the hands of provincial Governments, leaves my caucus colleagues and me unhappy. We think that sporting activities should not be involved in this form of misery tax which gambling so often becomes for people. We would sooner see a genuinely progressive tax as the basis for supporting amateur sport.

It is hardly surprising that the Minister was able to arrive at this agreement, given that he decided to follow along the same lines as the Government in 1979 of giving the entire responsibility for gambling to the provinces. If you are giving away the store, it should be possible to receive something in return. Considering an amount of $100 million over three years, it is not very surprising, although it is curious, that it has taken this long, for an agreement to be reached with the provinces.

The fact that we are going to have an amendment to the Criminal Code which will seek to establish once and for all the provincial responsibility in these areas leaves me uneasy because gambling certainly requires supervision by the federal Government. I hope that the Criminal Code amendment will be drawn up with some care so as to ensure that the conceivable entry of criminal elements into this area will not happen without the attention of the federal Government to the matter. It could in any case be done by delegation rather than by way of this proposal to do something to the legislation once and for all.

To come more particularly to the situation that the federal Government faces in making its contribution, I note that the Minister envisions a tremendous economic impact of the games on all regions of Canada. The situation of the Maritime provinces has been in the public eye for the last day or two and it seems to me doubtful that the Atlantic provinces will share very much in the gain from the Olympic Games. I do not doubt that the Province of Alberta and other parts of the Prairies will share in it fully. I hope that the provincial contribution towards this $100 million is largely drawn from persons in the western provinces, given the fact that it is going to be based on gambling revenues.

I wonder whether the Minister could tell us what the regional split, if not the provincial split, on the $100 million will be to assure us that it is people who may have some benefit from the Olympic games who will, in fact, be the ones who will be paying the shot.

He has also indicated that a recent study on the economic impact of the Olympic games envisions approximately $1.2 billion in new economic activity and 28,000 new person-years of employment. Has that study been tabled or would the Minister be good enough to table it in the House so that we may have a way of assessing it, because an earlier study in the news recently—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but I must indicate to the Hon. Member that the time for his statement in reply has expired, unless the Member could come to an end in a very short time.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Other points that I would like to make have to do with the additional $100 million. As has already been suggested by my Liberal colleague, the coin program may not reach $50 million. If it does not, more than $50 million will have to come from the private quarter—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I must indicate to the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Paproski: I would like to ask the Minister a question if I may, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know if this $100 million is a one-time contribution over the next three years from the provinces, and does the original agreement for which the annual funding from the provinces from the lotteries, I believe, is around $37 million to $38 million still exist? Is this money over and above the $37 or $38 million that the federal Government is receiving from the provinces at this time?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to confirm to the Hon. Member that the 1979 agreement does indeed stay intact. As he knows, we are receiving in the neighbourhood of $36 to $37 million a year tied to the CPI. Those Members who are suggesting that we have given away the store are totally on the wrong side of the track because we are getting our fair share from the provinces. The agreement that I announced today is separate from the 1979 agreement. It is a one-shot deal beyond and above the monies that the provinces are already contributing to sports and cultural matters, from the federal perspective.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, that was one of the questions that I was going to ask. What I was going to ask as a supplementary was whether or not the Minister would see fit, since he was discussing with his provincial counterparts amending that 1979 agreement, to try to get a much fairer split for the federal side.

Second, I would like to get an indication from the Minister as to how he plans to make up that shortfall between $50 million and $70 million depending on how much the Olympic coin program is going to be generating, so that we will be able to know more specifically the complete package of the $200 million commitment that was made by the Government.

Last, I would like to know, based on the interventions made by my hon. friend from the NDP Party, what the provincial split will be. Will it be an even type of agreement based on all the 10 provinces, or will some provinces, particularly the host province, be picking up the greater portion of the $100 million than, let us say, the eastern provinces?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I always find it amazing that when we do something right we still get questioned and criticized for it. I just want to point out to the Hon. Member that it took the Liberal administration, the previous Government, about nine months to lose 46 million tax dollars on the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation. It took us the same amount of time to raise 100 million non-tax dollars. I just want to put that on the record to make it very clear.

In order to answer the Hon. Member more specifically, there is a formula that the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation has on behalf of the provinces as to what their share is in their contributions to the federal Government. In round figures, the Atlantic Provinces contribute approximately 5 per cent; Ontario contributes 32.7 per cent; Quebec contributes 26.65 per cent; and the western provinces contribute the rest, which is approximately 36 per cent.

Having said that, however, concerning this new agreement it will be up to the provinces and the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation to determine what the split is going to be. I am just guessing that it will be based on the same split by which the regular payments are made to this Government.

As far as the Hon. Member's other question is concerned, he knows full well that we have been working with the private sector and we have been looking at other areas of fund raising. We are convinced that the commemorative coin program, the first issue of which comes down this fall is going to raise at least $50 million. As well, other matters are not only under review but under actual consideration at the present time. I hope that he will have the same type of confidence in me that he has had in this field and as I have.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, pursuing the matter of the private sector contributions, I would appreciate the Minister's clarifying the matter somewhat. The Calgary organizers are pursuing very actively the support of various sponsors and have in fact had some singular successes, particularly with the ABC Network in a very large payment for the rights, of which $270 million, I take it, is coming to the organizing committee. What is the federal Government able to hold out to the private sector and how real do the chances seem to be that $50 million, or possibly more, will have to be raised by that means?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify. The fact of the matter is that I never said that the remaining portion was going to be coming from the private sector. What I said and what I repeat is that the private sector is one of the areas being considered as to where these funds could possibly come from. In fact, there is some discussion among some of our parliamentary committees of potentially raising funds from another source. I do not think that it would be prudent at this time to get into that matter just for the sake of trying to make sure that it comes forward.

As far as the private sector is concerned, I want to say what I have said on many occassions publicly, that the program that we hope to have in place before Christmas is one that is not going to compete against the Calgary organizing committee. We are not going to be looking for sponsors to the Olympics. We are going to look at other ways and means that are now being negotiated to raise funds not only for the Olympics but, more important, for future amateur sports programs.

Mr. Shields: I have one last question to the Minister. During the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary, will the Minister be commentating on the figure skating competitions?

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: Order. A short question from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister specifically whether or not the economic impact study which he cited in his statement will be tabled in the House.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not having answered that question. That impact study has perhaps not been tabled in the House, but it has been made public by the Department of Supply and Services. I am not sure whether or not I am in a position to table it. I know that the study has been made public. I would be very happy to make it available to the Hon. Member and if the Hon. Member would persist, my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), and I would look at the possibility of tabling it. However, it was made public some time ago.

PETITIONS

LACK OF SAFETY IN SCARBOROUGH

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition on behalf of a group of Canadian citizens residing in the St. David's Senior Citizens' Village and residents who live on or near Danforth Road and Trudelle Street. They wish to express their concern about the lack of safety on Danforth Road and Trudelle Street in the City of Scarborough.

Mr. Prud'homme: Why would they bring that here?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the matter. However, might I suggest that in the future, petitions of that nature would more properly be tabled with the municipal council by the Hon. Member. That process might in fact achieve the purpose that is intended.

KIDS ACTION FOR PEACE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was presented a petition in my riding this morning signed by 17 students from the Emily Carr Middle School in Gloucester, Ontario, who represent an important initiative called Kids Action for Peace. Their petition for peace is accompanied by these 1,000 paper cranes made in the ancient Japanese tradition as symbols of hope and peace.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member wish to summarize the petition?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in presenting this petition and these 1,000 symbols of the petitioners' determination to remind us all that peace is essential for our survival.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a petition from a group of seniors, a kind a petition which the Conservative Member should have presented.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Waddell: My petition on behalf of these people states that they are against the deindexing of the pensions in the Budget and they are going to suffer as a result. I would like to table the petition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order. That's not what they said.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I was tabling the petition, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) called me a liar. He yelled across the floor that this is not what these people said.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) did not call the Hon. Member a liar. He did say something across the floor just as the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) earlier today in Question Period said something across the floor. I think under the circumstances I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a number of petitions making the case that the May 23 Budget imposes undue hardship on pensioners by deindexing the Old Age Security Program which will amount to $680 by 1999 and increase from that year thereafter.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present petitions from constituents of the riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon who protest that the cuts in the OAS fly in the face of Conservative campaign promises indicating that a P.C. Government would once more index the old age pensions to the actual cost of living on a quaterly basis and call upon the House of Commons to reverse the decision proposed in the Budget.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising under petitions? The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) may rise again only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Waddell: Well, it's a different petition.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway again seeks the floor on petitions.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member can only rise a second time with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, are Conservative Members saying that I cannot present another petition on behalf of petitioners containing the exact wording to which the Hon. Member objects?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The rules are here for a purpose.

Mr. Waddell: What rules? I rise on a point of order. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could tell me which rule indicates that I cannot present more than one petition.

Mr. Speaker: There is no rule that says that the Hon. Member cannot present more than one petition. There is a practice that says a Member may seek the floor once to present petitions at which time the Member may try to present more than one petition. With great respect, that has been the practice for some years while the Hon. Member has been a Member of the House.

Mr. Waddell: No.

Mr. Speaker: Yes. The difference between the two is a matter for discussion outside the Chamber. Our practice is that a Member seeks the floor to present petitions. The Hon. Member sought the floor, presented a petition and sat down. He had the right at that time, as he would know if he would check our practices, to present more than one petition, but he must do so at the same time.

Mr. Waddell: That's not what Madam Speaker Sauvé did.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, that is exactly what Madam Speaker Sauvé did. I only say that sotto voce to the Hon. Member who would not have things yelled across the floor.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

REFERENCE OF WHITE PAPER ON REDISTRIBUTION TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between the Parties. I think you will find that the following order would be accepted by the House if presented at this time:

Order Paper Questions

That the document entitled "White Paper on Redistribution", tabled earlier this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections;

That the Committee report its findings and recommendations not later than June 28, 1985; and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the final report of the Committee is completed, that the Committee shall report its findings by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House and that it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent necessary to introduce his motion?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, is it in order for me to ask a question of clarification of the Minister?

Mr. Speaker: If the Motion were introduced, it would be a debatable motion. However, I believe that what is sought would probably be a helpful practice.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, did the Minister say that the committee will report by the end of June 1985? Does that mean that no hearings will be conducted on this particular paper?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the intention is that this White Paper, which consists of a draft Bill, will receive the consideration of the committee until the end of this month and the committee will make its recommendations, at which time it is the intention of the Government to consider the recommendations of the committee with respect to the amendments proposed in the White Paper. We would then have to take other legislative action if it is the will of the House to proceed. This is not in any way dealing with legislation as such but rather a White Paper setting out certain principles that will allow Members to have input before legislation is introduced.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 367 will be answered today.

[Text]

CHEESE IMPORTS PERMITTED BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 367—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985, what was/is the level of cheese imports permitted by the Government for (i) speciality cheeses (ii) cheddar cheeses?

2. Have the cheese producers in eastern Ontario asked the Government for a reduction in these levels and, if so, was a decision made and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): 1. The total quantity of cheese imports in 1984 and 1985 permitted under the global import quota was 20,400,000 kg. (45,000,000 lbs.): (i) Allowable imports in 1984 consisted of 19,946,403 kg. (44,000,000 lbs.) specialty cheeses and (ii) 453,597 kg. cheddar (1 million lbs.). In 1985, the permitted levels for specialty cheese and cheddar are the same.

2. The Government is not aware of any representation made specifically by eastern Ontario cheese producers to reduce the present level of the cheese quota.

[Translation]

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development; and Motions Nos. 33 (Mr. Shields) and 33A (Mr. Crombie) (p. 5627).

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, prior to the break at one o'clock, there was a motion put standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) and further motions from another Member of that Party dealing with my Motion No. 33A.

● (1540)

I have had an opportunity to look at the suggestions which have been made with respect to both the search and seizure question and, indeed, at the matter relating to the question of changing the powers with respect to the distribution of liquor in the Act. With great respect, although I appreciate the matters which have been raised, I am going to ask the House to reject the amendments to Motion No. 33A, as they are matters which relate to the powers which exist between the federal Government and the provinces. Clearly it would be inappropriate for me, in the context of this Bill, and without consultation, to make any changes in that connection. All I am seeking to do in the motion is to fill the gap which was created by the court.

With respect to the powers that exist between the two levels of Government, I would be happy to look at any further changes with the Hon. Member to determine if there is an appropriate way in which to proceed. However, I think it would be inappropriate for me to proceed without first holding appropriate consultations with the provinces which are involved.

These are no small matters. Anyone familiar with the constitutional history of Canada will recognize that many powers, in terms of the interpretation by the courts of the legislative powers which exist between two levels of Government, were determined by matters which arose from the power to make rules, regulations, laws and by-laws with respect to the production and distribution of liquor. I do not want to get into all of that, as it is a much more complicated matter. However, as the matters which have been raised by the Hon. Member are important, I think we should look for another form. Certainly I do not want Motion No. 33A to be lost, as we still need to have the power delivered to the Indian communities to make rules and regulations with respect to the distribution of liquor, according to the powers which exist in the Indian Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question will be on the amendment to Motion No. 33. The next question will be on Motion No. 33. Then the question will be put on the amendment to Motion No. 33A. The final question will be on Motion No. 33A.

The first question is on the amendment to Motion No. 33 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. MacDougall) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 33 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 33 (as amended) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on the amendment to Motion No. 33A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Manly) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 33A standing in the name of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 33A agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to Motion No. 35A.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 35A

That Bill C-31, be amended

(a) by adding immediately after line 30 at page 18 the following:

"19. (1) Where the total number of persons whose names have been entered on a band list under paragraph 11(1)(c) of the Indian Act and who have attained the age of eighteen years equals or exceeds one third of the total number of members of the band who have attained the age of eighteen years and the council of the band makes a by-law bringing this section into effect in respect of the band,

(a) a surrender to Her Majesty of any right or interest of the band and its members in a reserve is void,

(b) no expenditure of Indian moneys under paragraph 64(1)(a), subsection 66(1) or subsection 69(1) of the Indian Act may be made, and

(c) no amendment may be made to any agreement or arrangement in order to effect a payment or distribution of property held for the use and benefit of the band to any member of the band unless it is assented to by a majority of the electors of the band and a majority of the electors of the band who were members of the band immediately prior to April 17, 1985.

(2) The council of a band may make a by-law to bring this section into effect in respect of the band.

(3) A by-law made under this section may not be amended or revoked unless its amendment or revocation is assented to by a majority of the electors of the band and a majority of the electors of the band who were members of the band immediately prior to April 17, 1985.

(4) Any by-law made under this section shall cease to have effect on April 17, 1992 or on such earlier date as may be specified in the by-law.

(5) This section shall cease to have effect on April 17, 1992."

(b) and by renumbering the subsequent Clauses accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussion with those who have been concerned with this matter. These two motions deal with what is known as the "high impact" bands question.

Members of the committee will be well acquainted with the many hours of discussions which we had on the matter. Of course, the point was that we wanted to determine if we could establish a mechanism that would allow us to deal with those bands which would be affected to a far greater degree in terms of community members returning to their communities. Therefore, there were a number of thoughts and concerns as to how we might proceed.

With respect to Motion No. 37A, I have carefully studied the committee's proposal and I certainly appreciate the hard work that went into devising a solution to the high impact problem. I cannot, however, endorse the 10 per cent rule which was proposed by the committee in Clause 19. I think the rule was an imaginative approach to the issue, however, I believe that it is seriously flawed. Therefore, it is not possible for me to support that 10 per cent solution.

I had proposed another amendment, which is contained in Motion No. 35A. It is clear that the people who would gain the most from it are not in favour of it. I have listened to representations from the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and a number of Indian communities and organizations from the Province of Alberta and elsewhere. However, I can find no one who wishes to support the proposal and, therefore, I will withdraw Motion No. 35A. I do so, without gilding the lily in any way, for those who do not think that the parliamentary system yields opportunities for people to be heard and to have matters changed to suit their interests. Those who doubt that the process works ought to come and visit the life of Bill C-31.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 35A has been withdrawn by the Minister. I will now move to Motion No. 37A, which I have not done.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 37A

That Bill C-31, be amended

(a) by striking out lines 31 to 46 at page 18 and lines 1 to 9 at page 19

(b) and by renumbering the subsequent Clauses accordingly.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. You said that the Minister had withdrawn Motion No. 35A, but I believe when a motion is on the Order Paper, it must be withdrawn by unanimous consent. We are prepared to offer consent to have the motion withdrawn. I would like to make a comment, apropos that, which I think will be in order.

As my Party gave consent to the Minister to withdraw Motion No. 35A, I wanted to point out, as the Minister said, that there was a very genuine effort made in committee, and a very genuine effort made by the Minister himself, to accommodate Bill C-31 to those bands which would be impacted upon much more than other bands as a result of the enactment of this legislation. The House should be aware that the so-called "high impact" bands are primarily located in western Canada, in the Province of Alberta. Those bands also have the good fortune of being resource rich. If this Bill is not restricted in any way, they could have their populations increase from 200 per cent to 400 per cent.

Committee members made a genuine effort, in listening to testimony, to attempt to find a way in which we could lessen or cushion the impact over a period of time. We failed. Anything which we came up with was not acceptable to the high impact bands. In giving consent to the withdrawal of the motion, I want to have the assurance of the Minister that his office and officials will make a concerted effort to follow what happens when Bill C-31 becomes law, as some bands felt that the legislation would impact upon them in a way which would be felt to a much lesser extent by other Indian bands across the country.

I think we need to pay special attention to see that there is fairness, that we are not imposing a terrible injustice on these people in a way in which the Minister never intended, based on the three principles or the three pillars he enunciated at the beginning of this debate. We just need an assurance that somehow it will just not be forgotten. I am sure the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) will not let the Minister forget it, in any case, but I feel the House does need the assurance that it is not just going to be ignored and that very special attention, a monitoring if you like, will continue until such time as the committee, in two years hence, reviews the operation of this legislation. I do not want the so-called "high impact" bands to have to wait two years before there is some analysis of what in fact is happening to them.

Mr. Manly: We are happy to give our consent to the withdrawal of Motion 35A, although it is very similar to my Motion No. 24 which was rejected yesterday. Motion No. 35A would have attempted to meet the concerns of the high impact bands without at the same time undercutting the basic principles of the Bill, providing for reinstatement of those people who had lost their status unjustly. It was an attempt to find a better way than the present clause 19 of the Bill which, I am pleased to say, the Minister also feels is inappropriate to the intent and principles of Bill C-31. We are very pleased, therefore, to support Motion No. 37A which withdraws and strikes out clause 19 of Bill C-31.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the concern raised by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), and other Hon. Members, and give him and the House the assurance that we will take special care with respect to monitoring the impact of Bill C-31 certainly on all bands but particularly on those bands which are known as "high impact" bands.

As was so well put by both Hon. Members opposite, there was a strong attempt to try to deal with it, but all of the people who are going to be affected have asked for a withdrawal of the only solution we finally had. I am aware of the potential problem. I feel that there is protection enough in the Bill, but I will take the stricture of the Hon. Member and make sure that I will be able to report a process over the next two years which will ensure that the high impact bands are not adversely affected by this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Chair have the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Minister to withdraw Motion 35A?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 35A withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now resume debate on Motion No. 37A. Does the Minister wish to speak on the motion?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should make a remark on Motion 37A. I thought I had mentioned it earlier in my comment with respect to 35A. Much of this, of course, came after considerable work by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) who is representing the interests of those bands in Alberta which have been so concerned about the impact of the Bill on their future fortunes and I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his hard work on behalf of those people and on behalf of all of us for making this a better Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 37A agreed to.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved:

Motion No. 37

That Bill C-31, be amended by deleting Clause 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"19. For greater certainty, membership rules established pursuant to Section 10 and all by-laws and regulations made under the authority of this Act, are subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms."

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have already deleted Clause 19 with Motion No. 37A. I would simply like to make a few comments about the necessity for including a greater certainty clause ensuring that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will apply to all membership rules, by-laws and regulations made under the authority of the Act. The argument is made, and I am sure will be made, that in passing the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it applies to all legislation which is passed by the Canadian Government or indeed by any legislature in Canada. However, we know that the question of aboriginal rights is detailed in the Constitution outside of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This has raised some questions with regard to the whole concept of the equality clauses.

The argument will be made, for example, with Motions Nos. 40 and 41 that perhaps by moving that kind of a motion we are in effect weakening the constitutional guarantees of aboriginal rights. I believe Motion No. 37 is somewhat different. All Hon. Members who are interested in this subject, dealing with Bill C-31, should be aware of the history of Jeanette Lavell. When she brought a case before the courts to try to have her rights restored under the old Bill of Rights, she found that the Indian Act took precedence.

We are very concerned that this House declare with every bit of conviction it can that there shall be nothing which will take away the rights of people who are re-established by Bill C-31. On that basis, I urge all Hon. Members to support Motion No. 37, which would establish Clause 19 to read, "For greater certainty, membership rules established pursuant to Section 10 and all by-laws and regulations made under the authority of this Act, are subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms". I urge all Members to support this motion.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to Motion No. 37 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). Simply put, it is the government's view that the amendment proposed in Motion No. 37 is, with great respect, not necessary. Section 32(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides that, "This charter appplies (a) to the Parliament and Government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament". There is no need, in the government's view, for "greater certainty" as is proposed in Motion No. 37. Membership rules and by-laws are subject to the Charter. They are pieces of legislation subordinate to the Indian Act, which is a federal statute and, therefore, the Charter applies. No further clarification is required.

I would add one other consideration. I know the Hon. Member does not intend this, but I think that putting the clause in the Bill as contemplated in Motion No. 37 has the feel of paternalism about it. We do not include it in any other Bill with respect to the federal legislation touched by the Charter.

I think that some people could reasonably argue why we would do it in a Bill affecting Indians through the Indian Act. My view, and the view of the Government, is that it is not only unnecessary but unnecessarily paternalistic so that we would reject, and ask the House to reject, Motion No. 37.

• (1600)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to oppose or support any amendment to Bill C-31 because in my opinion the Bill, in its present form, is so bad, so flawed, that no one amendment can improve it. What is particularly distasteful to me is the whole process by which we are dealing with this Bill and passing these amendments. Here we are a group of non-Indians—there is one Inuit and one or two Métis in the House but no status Indians—still passing laws in 1985 which will impact on the lives of thousands of Indian people. I find that process distasteful.

I can remember after the war, when I was a young person in school, the British Parliament was debating ending its colonial regimes in Africa and Asia. I listened to the argument that, well, we cannot let these people be independent just now and do their own thing because they may do the wrong thing. They may violate human rights or hurt certain people and so on. Unfortunately, that attitude is still present in this Parliament. We do not trust the Indian people to do what is right by themselves, despite the fact that we, the Governments of Canada, made up of almost entirely non-Indians, have a horrible record with respect to the Indian people over the last 100 years.

We have over 100 years of Canadian Governments of all political stripes, Conservative and Liberal, dealing with Indian affairs, and Indian communities are still in abject poverty and still suffer social conditions which are way out of line with what is seen in the rest of the country, but here we are still legislating and imposing upon them our views and our way of doing things. That is very distasteful and so when I rise on an amendment, I do not do so with great relish.

In committee I finally got so frustrated with the process I refused to participate any further because this is a colonialist, patronizing and manipulative process we are going through. However, and unfortunately, the Bill is going through and some of us have tried to improve it to the best of our ability. It was in that spirit that I put forward an amendment which would have guaranteed land, resources and funding to those bands impacted by these measures. However, it was ruled out of order.

A few years ago the Government of the day agreed to a bilateral process whereby no laws impacting on Indian people would be passed unless they were developed in a bilateral way between the Indian nations and the Government of Canada. I have great respect for the Minister, I think he attempted to do that in developing this Bill, but in committee amendments were thrown on the table helter-skelter and we were obliged to deal with them, vote for or against, without any further consultation with those groups and individuals whose lives will be touched by this Bill. I think all Members agree 100 per cent that we should remove the discriminatory provisions from the Indian Act immediately. Where the problem arises is with respect to those measures in the Bill which attempt to restore status—

Mr. Shields: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With great respect, I think the Hon. Member is involved in third reading debate. We are dealing with one clause of the Bill under amendent and I think we have been very good in keeping our remarks to the amendment rather than having full debate on the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure, given the experience of the Hon. Member, that he will keep his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments by my hon. friend. This amendment relates to the Charter of Rights which deals with some broad principles and I will get to the point I want to make in a second.

I was saying that none of us are in disagreement with the principle of removing discrimination from the Act. It is all these other provisions which are causing a lot of difficulty. Since the Bill was reported to the House several weeks ago, I have not found anyone who really likes the whole thing. Some people like this section or that section, but I have not found anyone who thinks the entire Bill is a good one. It is my honest conviction that the Bill should be sent back to committee for further consultation with all those groups who are touched by it.

With respect to the amendment now before us, the Hon. Member suggested we put a provision in the Bill to state that the membership lists will be bound by the provisions of the Charter of Rights. Well, again it seems to me that is a very serious statement of mistrust with respect to our Indian people. It seems that we just do not trust them to do the proper thing, yet we have had a terrible record in attempting to do the right thing ourselves. The Hon. Minister said it: Why do we put it in the Bill when we do not put it in all the other Bills we have passed since the Charter has gone into effect? Are the Indians any worse than any other people in Canada? Why should we bind them in a special way to the Charter? On the other hand, thank God for the Charter and the Constitution because they contain two provisions which, if tested, I think will overturn many of the provisions we are attempting to pass today. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 says:

(1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

According to my interpretation of "aboriginal and treaty rights", they include the right to determine your own band membership, and the right to self-government. If we pass some of the provisions of this Bill and they are tested in the courts, they will, in my opinion, be overturned. However, only time will tell. Section 25 of that same Act says that:

The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada—

It goes on to state in detail some of those rights and freedoms. I rise in this debate out of a sense of frustration with the fact that we have been dealing with things like this for over 100 years and it is regrettable that we, as a Parliament of people of European descent, pass laws like this to govern lives of the Indian people of this country. It makes me feel uneasy, and we are rightly criticized by countries around the world when we continue to do it. I feel that this amendment, like many of the others, is out of place and I will oppose it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by the remarks of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). He is right in saying what many Members have said, that we are dealing with a problem which has developed in this country over a period of more than 100 years. We are dealing with the descendants of the original inhabitants of this country who, for a host of reasons, have the poorest health record, the poorest education and the lowest rate of employment. In every statistic showing people living in a bad way, the natives are at the top of the list. We are proposing in this Bill to go a long way towards doing away with the authoritarian, paternalistic approach which we, the white people who took this country over from the original inhabitants, have dealt with them in the past. We are proposing that they be given, as much as possible, the right to self-government. We all support that.

● (1610)

Surely the Member must realize that, just as we white people have often been less than fair in dealing with certain individuals or groups, the same thing has happened and could again happen with native people. The Member knows, better than I, the differences that arose between the national and provincial organizations of native people and native women because of the different way in which the children of a native person married to a non-native are treated. The children of a marriage between a native father and a non-native mother have been classified as native. The children of a native mother and a non-native father have not been classified as native. When women and other groups said that children of all mixed marriages should be treated in the same way, many leaders of native organizations opposed that.

Mr. Shields: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but say once again that we are dealing with Motion No. 37 moved by the Hon. Member which applies to membership codes. The Hon. Member is debating the total Bill. We should be getting on with debate on the motions. There will be time for the Hon. Member to make comments on any other areas when they come up for debate. However, we are presently dealing with a specific motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has a point and I would like the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) to debate Motion 37.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, with all due deference, this is the first time that I have spoken in this debate at any stage. I have spoken for less than three minutes and I will come to this particular amendment in about one more minute. If the Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) would contain himself, we would move on a lot faster than we would with him raising these so-called points of order.

The teachers on the Fort Alexander reserve near Pine Falls, Manitoba, some of who are native, decided that it was in their interest, and in the interest of most teachers, to have an organization and to associate themselves with the Manitoba teachers' society. They followed the provisions of the Canada Labour Relations Act and tried to get certified. The Canada Labour Relations Board and the courts have ruled that they have a right to become members of that organization. The chief and the band council absolutely refused to accede to that very legitimate request.

We believe in Indian self-government, but in administering their self-government, the Indians must live up to the same basic principles as everyone else who lives in this country. They should not have the right to do things that are contrary to the Charter.

Mr. Penner: You're wrong.

Mr. Orlikow: Well, the Member says I am wrong.

Mr. Penner: You're wrong. Read the Constitution.

Mr. Orlikow: He is entitled to his opinion. That is my view and I say that the Charter—

Mr. Penner: You're wrong.

Mr. Orlikow: Well, the Member can say that I am wrong. In my view the equality provisions of the Charter should apply to everybody in the country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment moved by my colleague, the Member for Malahat-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Administration of Justice—Enforcement of Young Offenders Act; the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Charter of Rights—Funding of litigation. (b) Departmental studies. (c) Override provision; and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Pensions—Minister's position. (b) Concept of fairness.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development; and Motion No. 37 (Mr. Manly) (p. 5653).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) were not such an experienced and sensitive Member, I would not take the time to indicate once again why his arguments on this particular issue are as wrong as wrong can possibly be. All he need do is acquaint himself with the Constitution which is now the law of the country. As my hon. friend, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) correctly pointed out, Section 25 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms says that aboriginal rights and freedoms are not affected by the Charter. My hon. friend from Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands wants to make a Constitutional change. The Minister is quite correct in saying that we should reject that. He wants the contents of our Constitution to be applied to Bill C-31. That is absolutely wrong.

Section 25 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms says:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada—

Mr. Orlikow: What are those rights?

Mr. Penner: What are those aboriginal rights? Among them is the basic right to determine the membership of your First Nation. That right does not belong to the Parliament of Canada. It belongs to the Indian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: That is what my friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East was trying to get across and he did it very well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Could I ask—

Mr. Penner: The Hon. Member failed to listen and came up with the spurious argument that this Charter ought to apply to everybody.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Penner: I tell him now that he is wrong and he is wrong—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Penner: —and he is wrong and he should understand that he is wrong.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if I could ask the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on a point of order, and he has already spoken on debate.

Mr. Orlikow: I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would permit me to ask him a question.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no provision for questions and comments. The only way in which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North can speak again is by getting unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Crombie: Back to C-31, folks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) on debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful not to have to get involved in this particular tempest. The measure that is before us proposes that all by-laws and regulations made under the authority of this Act are subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Minister has spoken carefully in objection to this suggesting that the legislation of the land is subject to the Charter of Rights and that it is both unnecessary and paternalistic to propose the addition of this section to the legislation.

In contention of that position I would suggest, with all due respect to the Minister and the committee that has worked very hard on this Bill and made much progress on it, that the question which faces us here is not so much the legislation itself as lists and by-laws under the Act. There is reason to put this forward. I would take a moment to read from the committee which debated this at length and heard from witnesses. I read specifically from the testimony of Ms. Beth Symes, legal counsel to Indian Rights for Indian Women. On this very question she says:

> We have heard, from various opinions, that, in fact, the band membership rules, codes, applications etc., would be subject to the Charter. As that is still an open question and the determination as to how far down the structure the term "government" goes, is still very much an open question—

She offers the opinion that this will be an open question for the next 10 to 25 years in constitutional law in Canada. She concludes:

> I think it only prudent to ensure that the rights set out in the Charter be protected. The membership codes and the residency rules should be specifically required to conform to the minimum requirements enunciated in the Charter. Not to do so may prove to be extremely expensive, say, 10 years down the road. I say it should be in and it should be in expressly.

That is a good reason for supporting the motion which my colleague and I have put forward this afternoon.

● (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 37. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. Motions Nos. 40 and 41 will be grouped for debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River) moved:

Motion No. 40

That Bill C-31, be amended by adding immediately after line 35 at page 19 the following:

"21. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be construed as abrogating or derogating from the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada."

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 41

That Bill C-31, be amended

(a) by adding immediately after line 35 at page 19 the following:

"21. Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada."

(b) and by renumbering the subsequent Clauses accordingly.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address Motion No. 40 which stands in my name, I would like to forewarm all Members of the House that it is my intention to withdraw Motion No. 40. Following consultation with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and with the three principal native organizations which, as the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) pointed out, have the largest stake in Bill C-31, we have reached the belief that no really valid useful purpose would be accomplished by the inclusion of the text of Motion No. 40 in this Bill. Bearing in mind that the Constitution in Paragrpah 35(1) provides a very similar clause as to the non-derogation and non-abrogation of the very important and fundamental aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal people of Canada, it is my intention, therefore, to withdraw Motion No. 40. With your permission, Sir, I would seek unanimous consent of this honourable House so to do.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, of course I will not withhold unanimous consent. I want to say that I do so with some regret. I think that although the arguments of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) are valid, that it is a bit redundant to have Motion No. 40 included in the Bill because we already have in our Constitution a section which says that nothing can abrogate or derogate from recognized aboriginal and treaty rights. Nevertheless, I found a certain amount of appeal of actually having this motion in the Bill because there is such a threat that aboriginal rights in some way can be transgressed by Bill C-31.

I regret the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is not here at the moment because it would be clearer now what a contradiction there is between the motion we have just defeated put by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) who wanted to put the effect of the Charter upon the membership codes of the bands and the motion of my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River, with whom I agree fully. I want the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North to hear this now that he is here. I am not making peace. I am saying on the basis of substance and validity that these two motions are in direct contradiction with each other and the motion of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, had it not been withdrawn, would have been given my full support.

Let me draw to the attention of Hon. Members Section 35 of the Constitution. It states that the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed. Meetings have been going on among first Ministers as well as preparatory meetings with the Ministers of Justice and Attorneys General trying to define precisely what those rights are. I would argue it is axiomatic, it is a basic principle, it is a foundation of aboriginal rights that among those rights are the right of self-government. If you accept that there is the right of self-government, then you have the right to determine your own membership codes.

We cannot say that we have developed a magnificent Charter. We know in this House of Commons that when we were debating the Constitution we knew that there was give and take and wheeling and dealing on the Charter. We know it is not something that has come from Mount Sinai. It is the product of the men and women who worked on it. It was the best we could do at the time, but it is not perfect. It is not such an absolute perfect document that we now have to say that if we cannot impose this on other people then somehow what they do will be inadequate.

I go back to what the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) said so well. "Can we not trust other people, the aboriginal peoples of this country, the Indian people of this country to develop a Charter that may be in terms of their membership code and in terms of their nationhood far, far superior to anything we have developed in this House up to the present time?" In fact, have we made enough inquiries to know that such may not already exist? I would suggest if we were a little more aware of the principles that govern Indian nations, we may discover to our amazement and surprise in centuries upon centuries and thousands upon thousands of years of governing themselves that they have acquired certain principles we could very well adapt for ourselves which would be far superior to what we have done with our Constitution and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I regretfully say to the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River that I will agree to his request. I understand his argument. We already have the Constitution, but I would have been very happy to see that clause included for greater certainty.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) says that the Indian bands have the absolute right to determine membership. I say to him if they have that right then I can see some band deciding that a child born of a mixed marriage where the father is an Indian and the mother is not will be a member of the band, but a child born in a mixed marriage where the mother is an Indian but the father is not will not be a member of the band. Maybe that fits with the Hon. Member's concept of justice and equality, but it does not fit mine.

I say again what I said before, as far as I am concerned every person living in Canada regardless of race, colour, creed, age or any of the other things we have talked about is entitled to equal treatment and equal rights. It could also be another group. If a band can vary that, then I am opposed to it.

Mr. Penner: Read the Royal Proclamation of 1763.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed the debate with respect to this motion so far. I know how Members can feel so strongly about it. We have enjoyed the debate on the organizing principles of the Bill as well. I might say, Mr. Speaker, as Motion No. 40 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) is now being withdrawn with unanimous consent, that I would seek unanimous consent to withdraw Motion No. 41 standing in my name because it stands in my name only because the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River has Motion No. 40 standing in his name. If the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River withdraws his motion, I would like to withdraw mine.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to give my permission to the Minister and to my colleague to withdraw their motions.

I would like to make a short comment about the concern raised by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) who said there was some contradiction between my position on Motion No. 37 which we just dealt with and the position taken by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). I do not think there is any contradiction.

Motions Nos. 40 and 41 were withdrawn out of a concern that if a similar clause were not put in every single bit of legislation that affected aboriginal people, then the guarantee of aboriginal rights in our constitution would simply wither on the vine. If we include that guarantee in some pieces of legislation and not in others, the courts might feel that they had open season on aboriginal rights. It is on that basis that my colleague and the Minister withdrew Motions Nos. 40 and 41.

● (1630)

The question with regard to Motion No. 37 was quite different. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior made the argument that aboriginal rights were outside the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and that the Charter should not be impinging upon any aboriginal rights. He saw the whole question of membership as being one of those rights, as I do, but I believe that it is a right which should pertain to all Indian people, including those who are being reinstated. They should have that right guaranteed to them. No one should have the right to take it away from them, including any band council. They need the protection of the Charter. Aboriginal peoples need the protection of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms even though their specific aboriginal rights are outside the Charter. Therefore, I think it was important to mention this in the Bill, and I do not see any contradiction between supporting Motion No. 37 as we do and withdrawing Motion No. 40 as we do.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, we in this Party give unanimous consent to the Minister withdrawing Motion No. 41. I listened carefully to the arguments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). I think the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) said it all. If the two Members of the New Democratic Party who just spoke want to review how the British Empire was dismantled and decolonized, they can do so. However, the following questions have been asked: How can we allow these people to govern their own lives and to manage their own affairs if we do not give them our marvellous, wonderful British tradition; how will they ever manage without our institutions and guidelines?

The Indian people of Canada can manage, govern and control their own affairs without us imposing upon them all the good things we think we have developed for ourselves. Good things they are, but they are good things for us. Let us not decide so arbitrarily that these are such good things for them. Perhaps we should turn it around and ask: What good things can they impinge upon us? Would that not be a nice change of atmosphere? What would happen if they brought a law into this Chamber saying that they have developed some good things in their several thousands of years of occupying and living on this continent? Perhaps they would like to impinge some of their laws, rights and freedoms on us. I can imagine the tremendous protest there would be. They would be asked: "By what right do you do that? We are sovereign and independent; you cannot come in here and impose your laws on us". However, when it is turned around, and because we are dealing with a minority, we do it in the name of self-righteousness, and we ought to be ashamed of ourselves.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will be very short in my response.

Mr. Crombie: You are short.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, I am short; that is true. I have listened to those Liberal Members, both of whom I respect a great deal, giving us a rough time for our position on the Bill. I just remind them that during the period of time when we discussed that particular clause in the Constitution, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) and some of the rest of us put our political necks and the neck of our Party on the line. We went out on the farthest limb in terms of our support. Our whole support for the Constitution was around that particular clause. I ask them to remember that. I do not think we have to apologize. They were on the back-benches of the Liberal Party but they eventually accepted it, as did their Leader. We should put that behind us.

I should like to make another comment about this particular clause in the Constitution because it is peripherally related to the debate. We do not need to have some of the clauses respecting aboriginal rights in the particular Act because many people in the country, including some provincial Premiers in western Canada, will be very surprised when the Supreme Court of Canada brings down decisions recognizing the most radical clause in the Constitution. I am really pleased that the Minister and the new Government are trying to follow those traditions, prodded by our critic, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands. Take it easy, boys, remember the past.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, it would have been nice to get those kinds of speeches out of those Liberals last year, the year before, and the year before.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) to withdraw Motion No. 40?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 40 withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there also unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Minister to withdraw Motion No. 41?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 41 withdrawn.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

Motion No. 42

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 21

(a) by striking out line 36 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"21. (1) Subject to subsection (2), this Act shall come into or be"

(b) by adding immediately after line 38 at page 19 the following:

"(2) Sections 17 and 18 shall come into force six months after this Act is assented to."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion provides for a transitional period regarding the implementation of the amendments with respect to the control, sale and use of intoxicants on reserves. This issue in substance was debated and the amendment approved under Motion No. 33A, standing in my name, earlier in the day.

Motion No. 42 basically provides that Clause 16 would be deemed to have come into effect on April 17, 1985 with the rest of Bill C-31, but that Clauses Nos. 17 and 18 would only become effective six months after Royal Assent. The change is needed to ensure that bands outside Manitoba retain their protection under Sections Nos. 94 to 100 long enough to pass appropriate by-laws under Section 85.1, and to permit bands inside Manitoba to enact by-laws immediately after Royal Assent is given to Bill C-31, that is to say, as soon as the Bill passes. In some cases there may be a few months where both band by-laws and the Indian Act are enforced. A few practical problems are actually expected to arise. Therefore, I ask the House to support Motion No. 42.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 42 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 42 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on Motion No. 14, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, with the possible exception of the "late" Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), perhaps the count that was taken on Motion No. 14 could also be applied to Motions Nos. 17, 32, and 37. That being the case, the count could be recorded in exactly the same way in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, if the suggestion of the House Leader of the NDP is followed, I would like it to be recorded that I voted with the Party.

Some Hon. Members: Which Party?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): There is only one Party.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do I take it there is consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) will be recorded as having voted the same way as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). The next vote is on Motion No. 17. Mr. Manly moved:

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-31, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 3 at page 8 the following:

Wise—192.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moves that Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want the record to show that I was present today but did not vote for or against the amendments because I believe the Bill to be seriously defective and that it should be sent back to committee for further consultation with the peoples affected.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 13?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT (NON-LISTED ELECTORS)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved that Bill C-236, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (non listed electors) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak on Bill C-236. It is my private Members' Bill which had first reading on April 25, 1985, and is to amend the Canada Elections Act. I want to thank the Government because I understand it is prepared to refer the Bill to the committee in principle allowing the points to be discussed in committee. I am most appreciative for this action. That is the way Parliament should work.

Briefly let me tell you what the Bill does, Mr. Speaker. It is fairly simple. There are three provisions in it. The first clause reads:

> This amendment allows urban voters to be "sworn in" and vote on election day where their names fail to appear on the voters list for the urban polling division. This procedure is currently open only to rural voters.

I will come back to rural voters and explain it in a moment. The second clause reads:

> This provision attempts to remedy the situation where candidates and their canvassers have been denied entry to apartment buildings, hotels and the like which have "no soliciting" policies.

I will come back to explain that. The third clause reads:

> This provision would allow travellers and students temporarily resident outside Canada to vote in general elections in a manner similar to Canadian Forces and Public Service electors posted outside Canada.

Why did I bring this Bill forward now so early in the session? Because the subject is still fresh in most all Members' minds. It was only last summer around about this time that the previous Prime Minister called upon the Governor General to dissolve the House to have a federal election which took place in September. As a result, most Members of the House are quite familiar with the Canada Elections Act. The Act was last amended in this House, I believe, on October 25, 1983, through Bill C-169.

Members of this Parliament are aware of what it is like to go through an election. They will know the strengths and weaknesses of the Act. Generally it is pretty strong. We are fortunate to have a vibrant democracy in Canada. I wish my Party had won more seats, but I am particularly happy that I was returned and my colleagues, such as the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) who is sitting beside me were returned.

I took the occasion to write to Members of the House to give them some notice of my Bill and I am pleased to say that I received a response from numerous Members who were prepared to support the Bill or who had some comments and took up my request. I will just mention that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) responded, a Liberal MP. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) responded, a Conservative. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) already a very active Member of this House who has been here only a short time, a Conservative, responded. The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) responded. All Members responded very favourably to referring the Bill to committee.

Some other Members responded who had some concerns with the Bill and, to be fair, I should mention them. A Member from my own Party, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) had some concern about the provision with respect to urban electors voting at the polls when they were not registered. We will discuss that point in committee. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) also expressed some concern about that part of the Bill.

Let me just go through some of the provisions of the Bill that are relevant to the matter this afternoon. The first provision of the Bill arose from a letter I received from one of my constituents and concerns that I received at the time of the election. Essentially last year's election was a summer election. A lot of people were out of the country who wanted to vote but could not because they were going to be out of the country. Elections usually come every four years. We should err on the side of trying to make it possible for as many people to vote. We should try to figure out procedures that would allow people to vote. I would like to read a letter from E. Carol MacPherson who lives at 2981 E. Twenty-Sixth Avenue, Vancouver, in my riding. The letter is dated July 30, 1984. She writes:

> Dear Mr. Waddell:
>
> Like many other people, I imagine. I am having difficulty arranging to vote in this upcoming election. I will be out of the country between August 11 and September 8. The Returning Officer has told me that I will not be able to vote and no possible arrangements can be made. Surely something can be done for those of us trying to be responsible citizens. I am offended by the attitude of the Returning Office that I am somehow remiss to take my hard-earned holidays when an election has been called.
> I am writing to your office not only because you are my MP but also because I support your candidacy. I appreciate the work you have done for your constituency and I would really like to vote in this election.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I wanted her to vote in the election too. The letter concludes:

Thanking you in advance for your interest and assistance.

I could not make the effort then, but I am making the effort now.

I noticed an advertisement in the Vancouver paper, The Sun that I happened to spot. It concerns the elections in Australia. It was an ad that was buried away in one of the advertising columns of the Vancouver Sun. It advertised for people to vote in the Australian election who would be away when the election took place. The ad was for people living in Vancouver who were Australian citizens. It outlined the voting procedure. I thought it was quite a good idea. I would like to see us to do something like that in Canada. I will bring that idea to the committee. Let me read the advertisement. It reads:

Election day is December 1, 1984.

A general election for the Australian House of Representatives, the Senate and two Referendums Questions will be held on Saturday, December 1, 1984.

● (1750)

A second heading in the article read: "Apply now for a postal vote" and continued as follows:

If you are enrolled on the Commonwealth Electoral Roll and you are travelling or are temporarily a resident in Western Canada and will not be returning to Australia before Election Day, you may apply for a Postal Vote.

Postal voting facilities and a list of candidates are available at the Australian Consulate-General, Vancouver—

Also included in the advertisement was a telephone number. I found that to be quite interesting. It is true, as my colleague said, that in Australia one is required to vote. My Bill does not require Canadians to vote. Actually, it does not provide for a postal vote. However, it tries to provide the same facilities as those provided for foreign service officers and armed services personnel to vote in federal elections. I think the same could be done for people residing abroad or for people travelling abroad when elections are held. That is one of the first provisions of my Bill.

The second provision is one to give urban voters the same rights as rural voters. There is a provision in the British Columbia Elections Act by which people can show up at the polls, show proof of their identity, and swear affidavits indicating that they were not enumerated but that they lived in the riding and should be able to vote. I believe that can be done under the Canada Elections Act if one is a rural voter. There is some controversy about it, although we have that provision in the Province of British Columbia and it appears to work in provincial elections. The controversy is that perhaps it would enable people to abuse the system. That may be so, but I would argue that we could prevent abuses by a proper procedure.

I have been at the polls, as I am sure other Hon. Members have been, when voters turn up, only to discover that they were not enumerated and could not vote. They feel badly about it, because Canadians generally take their voting rights very seriously. As the former Prime Minister used to say, "If you don't like me, you can throw me out at election time". It is one of our real rights, perhaps the highest one, next to free speech. It is important that we make the vote as available as we can and on the widest basis possible.

I will point out in committee that if we have a different procedure for rural voters as opposed to urban ones in our present Canada Elections Act, it may be unconstitutional and against the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I think the committee should look at it very seriously.

My third point in the Bill is a rather personal one. During the last election campaign, canvassers could not go into the Patricia Hotel in the riding of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East. People actually live in that hotel, many of whom are loggers who work in the woods and make the hotel their permanent residence. It was more like an apartment than a hotel. However, the manager of the hotel would not allow canvassers in. I telephoned him and told him that I was a lawyer and a Member of Parliament, that I would like canvassers to be able to go into the hotel so that its residents would have an opportunity to get all available literature, and that it would give us a chance to get their vote or to convert them, if they were thinking of voting for another Party. The manager said: "I don't have to let you in; show me the law". Thereafter I checked the law and discovered that there was nothing in the provincial Act or in the federal Act which would require him to let canvassers in. I telephoned him again to tell him that he was right and to appeal to him as a citizen of Canada, as someone who I expected shared my view that it was very important to have utmost freedom for the dissemination of political literature, freedom of speech and so on. I told him that he should let in canvassers and he said: "Too bad, I will not let them in". I told him that there was more than one way to skin a cat, that I would have to change the law. This is why I am particularly pleased to have the Bill before the House this evening. I will send a copy of it to that particular hotel manager.

I considered other possible issues to raise in the Bill. I did not raise one such issue because I thought there was opposition to it. Perhaps I will raise these points for discussion in committee. However, I notice that the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has Bill C-219, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, on the Order Paper. He is asking for changes in terms of candidates who seek a leave of absence to run. I hope that matter will eventually come before the House as another issue pertaining to the Canada Elections Act.

I think the issue of public opinion polls should be raised. Should we continue to allow public opinion polls to be published during an election campaign? I noted that in the campaign last year it was important to have these polls. However, that issue was not raised in my Bill. Other issues would be shorter election periods and the right of prisoners to vote. Perhaps they could be discussed at another point.

I have made three simple amendments. I would be very pleased if they could go to committee to be discussed.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-236, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (non-listed electors), be not now read the second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the terms of the amendment. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary. I think that is the appropriate disposition of Bill C-236, presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

I just want to note for the record that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has before it the report of the Chief Electoral Officer for consideration. Some of the matters raised in the Bill of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway are under discussion before the committee. I just want to add three points to what he has already said.

In the first place, with respect to the matter of the differentiation between urban and rural voters, I, for one, believe that that distinction has to be eliminated because under the new provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms all Canadians have equal voting rights. I think we should eliminate that distinction altogether. While I appreciate the effort of the Hon. Member, I think there is another resolution to the problem.

With respect to the matter of a permanent voters' list, the Hon. Member mentioned the list in his presentation, but the Bill actually referred to the special voting rules. I agree that that is something we ought to consider for Canadian voters. I think it is overdue. We have computer systems which can put in place a very easy method to establish a permanent voters' list so that we can obtain the kinds of advantages which the citizens of Australia enjoy.

• (1800)

The third point, access to candidates, I think is long overdue and is a provision that the committee ought to consider. Hopefully it will be enacted. When writing to the hotel proprietor in Vancouver, let me say to the Member through you, Mr. Speaker, you can add that the Hon. Member for Halifax West thinks you should have been allowed into the hotel as well. I say that to all the department superintendents across the country: don't try to obstruct the voting process. Maybe we should have provisions like that.

I see it is approaching six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and you will want to call the question on the motion which I hope all Members will approve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Dick) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, just because the matter happened to come up a week ago—there is no problem with what has gone through—I think if you check the "blues" you will find there was a case where we all agreed, but the Speaker did not ask to see if there were any nays. An amendment was lost in a Bill two weeks ago on that same type of procedural mistake. I think it should have been checked to see if there were any nays. There were not any, as it turns out.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—ENFORCEMENT OF YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you will remember that on April 26 I put a question to the Acting Solicitor General with respect to a request that his Department review the Young Offenders Act, bearing in mind concerns expressed by the Chief of Police of Metropolitan Toronto, Jack Marks, in connection with the Young Offenders Act.

Chief Marks, as you will remember, Mr. Speaker, pointed out a number of concerns relating to the Young Offenders Act. He indicated that at that stage in April there were some 400 individual cases of persons under the age of 12 who allegedly had committed criminal offences but could not be charged with those criminal offences. I understand there are somewhere in the neighbourhood of 500 individuals under the age of 12 in the Metropolitan Toronto area that fall into the same category. They had allegedly committed some very serious offences, including arson, break and enter, theft, assault, sexual assault and crimes of that nature. Since that time there have been reports of other very serious matters, including a high-speed chase involving an 11-year old boy who drove a car at a high speed, chased by the police, which resulted in the injury of two police officers. No charge could be laid against that 11-year old boy under either the Criminal Code or the Highway Traffic Act of the Province of Ontario. He could not be charged with any criminal offence whatever because of the provisions of the Young Offenders Act.

Those were some of the incidences pointed out by the chief at that time. Since that time a number of other cases have come to light. One, of course, was the 17-year old offender who had been charged with armed robbery with a sawed-off shotgun, who then escaped custody, yet the police could not warn the public of the name or identity of that person because of Section 38 of the Young Offenders Act.

The police have also pointed out the serious position in which the law puts a person accused of committing a sexual assault, or something of that nature, against a young child under the age of 12. A judge can now accept the uncorroborated testimony of a child under the age of 12 in order to convict a person on a charge of that nature, but that child is not subject to being charged in the event it turns out that the evidence given is not true, or not correct. A child under the age of 12 can give evidence which can be accepted as sufficient to convict an adult. In that event the judge is accepting that evidence on the basis that the child understands what is right and what is wrong, and what is meant by the truth. But at the same time that child can not be charged for perjury if in fact the evidence that the child gives is false. Those are some of the instances raised by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department in connection with this situation.

• (1805)

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that at that time the Acting Solicitor General raised the point that the police could fall back on the Child Welfare Act, or perhaps the new Ontario law now scheduled to come into effect on October 1 of this year, the Child and Family Services Act. In both instances it would be necessary for the police not only to investigate the offence involving the young offender, but to investigate the family situation as well, with a view to determining whether the family was a good family, or was not looking after the child properly and did not have the child under proper control. The police and the Children's Aid in a number of instances have pointed out their concern with that sort of approach.

It is obvious that in most of these instances the child under the age of 12 lives in a good home, is well looked after and well cared for. Certainly there would be no way that the Child Welfare Act as it now stands would apply to that child, and no way in the opinion of the police or of Children's Aid that the Child and Family Services Act, which will come into effect in October of this year, would have any application or effect in that situation.

As a result of those inquiries I arranged a meeting with the Chief of Police of Metropolitan Toronto and the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. MacKay) to discuss these concerns and try to sort out some answers to these problems. On that occasion, the police raised five separate areas of concern. They raised matters relating to those offenders under the age of 12; a ban on publication, a records repository, breach of probation and the definition of temporary restraint. All of these questions remain to be answered.

I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us today that the Solicitor General is seriously considering introducing some legislation to correct this situation so that the police can better serve and protect the citizens of Canada.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am personally aware of the meeting that took place between the Hon. Member, the Chief of Police of Metropolitan Toronto and the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay). I believe that meeting took place within the last 14 days and I am aware, from public and private statements that have been made by the Hon. Member, that he is very concerned about the Young Offenders Act. I might say that certain provisions of that Act have concerned all Members of the House or, at any rate, most Members of the House. I can tell the Hon. Member that his concerns are being monitored.

In January of 1985 the Solicitor General met with his corresponding Ministers at a provincial level. It was agreed at that time that there would be a mechanism for carrying out investigation of the Act and the necessary consideration of amendments that might be called for. I would ask the Hon. Member to be patient with respect to this matter. I know that the Solicitor General is very concerned and I know that he will get back to the Hon. Member in due course.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS—FUNDING OF LITIGATION. (B) DEPARTMENTAL STUDIES. (C) OVERRIDE PROVISION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to pursue a very important question I asked of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) on February 1 of this year. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that was the day after the Minister had announced his response to the challenge that was posed by Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Section which guarantees equality for all Canadians.

Many of us were very bitterly disappointed by the fact that the Government had failed to move forward with significant legislation, having been given three years to review its legislation comprised of some 1,100 statutes. In fact, the Government made very little progress in making amendments to ensure that equality would be a reality. As I have indicated, women, the disabled, minorities, and hundreds of thousands of Canadians felt a sense of anger and betrayal. They had waited three years for naught.

• (1810)

The effect of the failure on the part of the federal Government to move forward with the legislative initiatives which would ensure real equality is that those who wish to assert their rights and put an end to discrimination in Canada are being forced into the courts. Of course, a committee has been established, and I have the honour of representing my Party on that committee. That committee has heard witnesses from across Canada expressing concerns that legislation has not been amended.

If there is one concern about which we have been told very strongly and clearly than any other, it is the concern that if equality is to be a reality, and if the possibility of the courts being the last refuge is to be a reality, the courts must not be restricted solely to those who can afford to pay. It is on that basis that I asked the Minister of Justice on February 1, 1985, to agree to establish a special fund which would assist in challenges under the provisions of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights. That was not something which had been dreamed up that week, it was a question in response to a solemn commitment which had been made by the then Leader of the Opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on August 14, 1984, during the election campaign. The Prime Minister said:

A Progressive Conservative government will financially assist all Charter of Rights cases deemed to be of national importance. Cases involving the rights of the handicapped and disabled would certainly fall into this category.

There was only one amendment in the Government's legislative response to Section 15 which affected the rights of the disabled and the handicapped. That amendment changed the word "lunacy" to the words "mental disability" in the Canada Shipping Act. That was not the major pressing concern of more than two million disabled people in Canada.

Many other concerns were expressed by the disabled community, which resulted in the strengthening of the Charter of Rights to include physical and mental disability. Those concerns were reflected in the Obstacles Report. There was no shortage of recommendations. The Government did not make the legislation changes which were needed. Therefore, the only alternative, pending those legislative changes, is court challenges.

We have waited for the funding for those challenges. The corporate sector is already active in the courts defending its rights. It has unlimited resources. Generally speaking, victims of inequality tend to be economically unequal; they tend to be poor and powerless. It is those people who must be assisted financially.

We were told in February 1985, by the Minister of Justice that the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) was considering the establishment of a fund to assist in court challenges. The Minister of Justice said that his colleague was a mighty volcano in Cabinet on the question. He said that the Secretary of State was ready to explode at any moment. He was considering the issue together with the Minister of Justice. Well, we are waiting for the Secretary of State to explode. We have been waiting for a little whimper from the Secretary of State. It is the Minister of Justice who has been doing the exploding recently.

This is an issue of fundamental importance. As Frank Scott said so eloquently, "The trappings of democracy hang loosely on an emaciated body politic". I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice will stand in his place today and respond to the concerns of women's groups, the disabled, and other minorities, and announce that the Government will, in fact, make equality rights a reality, at least to the extent that the people can challenge unjust laws in the courts. I call upon the Parliamentary Secretary on behalf of the Government to live up to the commitment which was made by the Prime Minister during the last federal election campaign, to live up to the commitments made by the Minister of Justice and that mighty volcano, the Secretary of State, and finally announce a court challenges' fund.

• (1815)

April 17 has come and gone and still this Government's promise remains unfulfilled. I hope that we might finally see some evidence of funding which will ensure that these challenges, so important in the absence of a meaningful legislative response, can in fact go forward.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member, seeing that brevity has its own rewards, that the whole matter of funding is under consideration by the Cabinet—

Mr. Robinson: How much longer?

Mr. Speyer: —and it will be announcing in due course its decision.

PENSIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION. (B) CONCEPT OF FAIRNESS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue a question I asked of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) last week. It concerns the discrepancy between the actions the Government has taken with respect to deindexing the old age security payment in the budget and some things the Minister of National Health and Welfare had to say prior to the introduction of that budget. I referred to a number of things, the first of which was the commitment made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the discussion paper released by him in January concerning social benefits, that there would be no change in the Old Age Security-Guaranteed Income Supplement system. That was a flat statement by the Minister in that document, that no change was required.

In fact, the Minister did not even seek out the opinions of the seniors with respect to the pension system, because he gave the impression in January that this was not even an issue. It was not even up for discussion. Yet when the budget finally came down we found that there was to be a radical change in the system, a deindexing of the Old Age Security payment which will affect seniors far and wide, no matter what part of the country they live in. I think, therefore, that the Minister needs to be called to task for saying one thing in January and allowing the Government, of which he is a part, to do another thing in the budget in May.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) cannot hide behind the fact that the situation is other than what he expected it to be. It is often said by the Government, "Well, we said that when we were in opposition but we didn't know what a mess we would be left in by the Liberals". Yet I am talking about a commitment the Government made in January after it had been in power for five months and after it had had ample time to assess the financial situation. That commitment was made in January and abrogated on May 23 when the budget came down.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare then found himself on the far side of the facts once more when he compounded his embarrassment of having been in a position where the Government was doing something he said it would not, by claiming that seniors supported what the Government was doing. That did not last very long because, I am sure, Members of Parliament on the government side began to get the message back to the Government that it was bad enough to do this to seniors but it was compounding the error to get up and claim that it actually had their support. That was adding insult to injury and making matters a lot worse. And very soon we found the Government saying that it never really did claim that seniors supported this and it was aware of the lack of support for this move. So the Minister changed his mind on that also.

The third thing said repeatedly by the Minister which was contradicted by the budget was that no money obtained from changes in the social benefits package would go towards cutting the debt. Yet reducing the debt has been the kernel, the core of every answer given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to questions raised in this House about the old age pension. It is in direct contradiction to everything he ever said about money saved from cut-backs in social programs not being used to reduce the debt. Yet that is the very thing he has said over and over again in this House since the budget came down.

● (1820)

The fourth thing the Minister has been saying which is not true has to do with the indexing of the Guaranteed Income Supplement. He keeps trying to give the impression that people who receive the GIS are fully protected by this Government. That is not true. People who receive the GIS also receive Old Age Security, and those payments will not be as high as they normally would have been because of deindexation. This is to be distinguished from what happened under the Liberals when they brought in six and five because even they had the decency to double-index the GIS so those people would not suffer from the changes. This the Conservatives have not done and that is why it is false for them to stand up and say that people receiving the GIS have been fully protected. They have not been fully protected.

This Budget is morally disgusting in the way it demands of senior citizens a sacrifice which many of them are unable to make. At the same time it turns over billions of dollars to the oil companies, the investment community, and people who have the opportunity to make a capital gain of $500,000. Is this what you call moral rectitude, giving a capital gains exemption of $500,000 to people who have accumulated all those assets over a lifetime while at the same time asking pensioners on the GIS to make a sacrifice for the country? I think the whole darn thing stinks, pensioners think it stinks, and this Government is going to come around, you wait and see. If it does not, people will remember four years from now who it was that said one thing before the election, particularly to the elderly, and then did another after being elected.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to answer the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). When we reviewed our social programs, we stressed that the principle of universality would remain unchanged. This principle is the basic element of our social—

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: You said there would be no change in the system; you did not say there would be no change in universality.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bertrand: I listened to you, now listen to me!

This principle forms the basic element of our social safety net for the elderly. In fact, senior citizens have informed us that they were opposed to any changes in this respect. Therefore, no changes will be made in the universal Old Age Security pension.

I hope the Hon. Member will listen carefully to what I have to say next. As we announced in the Budget, the Old Age Security Pension will be indexed only for the annual increase in the consumer price index greater than 3 per cent. In addition, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, a key program on which half of elderly Canadians depend, will be fully indexed to cost-of-living increases. We also formally announced in the Budget, and this has been repeated several times, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), my colleagues and myself as well, that the Government will be monitoring the situation very closely, to ensure that benefits are adequate, in light of present and future needs. We will increase these benefits as resources permit, and we shall be very happy to do so.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill does not seem to be aware of the important measures taken by the Government which have had a direct and positive impact on senior citizens and needy Canadians. For instance, the Government has shown its support for the disabled. The definition of disability for income tax purposes will cover all types of serious disabilities affecting Canadians, and many elderly will be able to benefit from this measure. Furthermore, provisions to improve standards for private pension plans under federal jurisdiction will have a much broader impact. Since a consensus has been reached between the federal and provincial governements, we hope that standards for pension plans will be uniform at both levels of government. The uniformity of the standards will mark an important step towards improving pension plans across Canada. Discussions with our provincial counterparts on the subject are expected to start very shortly.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to stress the fact that in the present economic situation, the Budget proposals will help us to maintain economic growth and control the deficit. It is the only way to make it easier for the government to respond to the needs of all Canadians. I would also ask Hon. Members and Canadians in general to consider the general context in which these proposals were made. In addition to controlling the deficit, we will be creating a climate that will foster confidence and economic growth. Mr. Speaker, we are doing all that is humanly possible to protect the interests of present and future generations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.26 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Mulroney-Wilson Budget is clear proof that the Government has abandoned Canada's farmers. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union, which collectively represent thousands and thousands of Canadian farmers, have clearly expressed their frustration and anger with the Budget.

Across the country there is a growing sense of despair that the Government doesn't really care about farmers, pensioners, the unemployed, our youth, and middle-income families who are struggling to raise their children. As further evidence of the concern, last Thursday 150 of the executive officers of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture held an emergency meeting in Toronto to review the Budget and its negative impacts. They passed a resolution condemning the Budget for betraying the farmers of Canada, and are now preparing an action plan to demonstrate their frustration and anger.

The Mulroney-Wilson Budget does nothing to deal with the farm financial crisis. The 39,000 farmers who, the FCC says, are under severe financial stress, can only look forward now to foreclosure. What happened to the agri-bond program promised by the Conservatives in last year's election campaign? What happened to the promise to lower farm loan interest rates? What about Section 31 of the Income Tax Act?

When you look for winners and losers in the Budget, Mr. Speaker, it seems everyone loses except the multinational oil companies and the rich.

PENSIONS

OBJECTIONS TO PARTIAL DEINDEXATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday representatives of 11 organizations with a membership of one million pensioners met in Toronto to oppose strongly partial deindexation of old age pensions. They are mad and militant, and demand that the Government reindex pensions.

They protest that there was no formal consultation with senior citizen organizations concerning fundamental changes in old age security; that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) broke his promise to index old age pensions to the actual cost of living; that seniors, many of whom live in poverty, are being forced to sacrifice to reduce the deficit; that deindexation will mean a loss of over $1,600 per person over the next five years; that the ranks of the poor will swell due to the measures in the proposed Budget; and that the wealthiest Canadians will have added windfalls from the elimination of the capital gains tax, while Canada's elderly are asked to contribute $400 million.

Pensioners feel this is a cruel move against Canada's elderly who have contributed so much to Canada. Pensioners demand reindexation.

SHIPBUILDING

INDUSTRY AFFECTED BY ORDERS PLACED ABROAD

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, while the domestic shipbuilding industry is reeling through its worst crisis in 50 years, foreign built ships for the domestic market continue to enter Canada in record numbers. In the last two years alone, this has amounted to over 434,000 gross tonnes. Every time a vessel is built abroad for the domestic market, shipbuilding and allied industrial jobs in Canada are lost to foreign competition.

It is ludicrous to see as well, Mr. Speaker, that export orders placed in Canada by offshore buyers are eligible for subsidized financing through the Canada Export Development Corporation, yet domestic ship owners, Canadian ship owners, do not qualify for these reduced rates. No other shipbuilding nation in the world subsidizes export orders and not domestic orders. Common sense would indicate that if Canadian owners were to be eligible for concessionary financing at EDC rates, increased orders would accrue to Canada, creating much needed employment for domestic shipbuilding and allied industries.

There are some 40 constituencies across Canada which have shipbuilding and ship repairing facilities, and allied industries, in their areas. These ridings, and the industry, have had their hopes and expectations dashed and devastated. We had hoped that at long last something would be done to ease the dire situation in the shipbuilding industry by the introduction of positive initiatives. This has not materialized, leaving our shipbuilding industry crippled, and deeper and deeper in the mire of uncertainty.

I believe I speak for all Hon. Members of this House, especially those Hon. Members—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his 90 seconds have expired.

THE ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I would draw the attention of the House to the very positive impact of the climate of confidence this Government is creating with respect to foreign investment.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, I attended the sod-turning ceremony at the Nardeux construction site, a French company which has decided to invest in Matane in the Gaspé area. This high technology electronic equipment manufacturing plant will create 200 jobs when it becomes operational in about a year.

I take this opportunity to set the record straight. It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that it was somebody else rather than I who first made the suggestion to build that plant. My response to this claim is that a good many bright ideas turned out to be white elephants or ghost industries under the previous administration. This is where a distinction must be made between the original concept and its implementation by the successor. That being so, it is imperative to emphasize that the installation of the French company's facilities in the Gaspé area is due, first to the favourable climate brought about by this Government's Bill C-15 and, second, to the dynamic human resources in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, it is concrete and patent evidence that the present Government can take full credit for restoring confidence among countries that are anxious to invest in the Canadian economy.

THE ADMINISTRATION

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on June 3 I made a statement in the House because of a potential conflict of interest concerning the appointment by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) of his sons as legal agents. The possibility existed that a person could be asked to prosecute another member of the same family. Given the track record of the Government on nepotism, and its reckless disregard for the conflict of interest rules, that possibility could have become a reality.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Income Tax Act states that directors of a company are jointly and severally liable for the withholdings of taxes, as confirmed by the Minister of Justice reported at page 5589 of Hansard, when he stated "there is a claim against Andrew Crosbie", the Minister further stated that his brother owes nothing to the Government.

Whether there is one son or two who act on behalf of Revenue Canada, whether there is a "claim against" or "debt owing" is not the issue. If there is a difference between "claim against" or "debt owing" I withdraw, but I am informed that there is not a difference. It is highly improper, Mr. Speaker, for a Minister of Justice to state that his brother is innocent before the merits of the case have been heard.

When asked whether he was using his position as Minister of Justice to defend a member of his family, the Minister of Justice stated to the press outside the House: "You may be prepared to let down your family, but I've got a right to defend my family".

The Minister has attempted unsuccessfully to deflect his own inadequacies on someone else, but it hasn't worked. He has gotten himself into deeper trouble every time he has raised this issue in the House of Commons.

RESOLUTION CALLING FOR RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the well manicured hand of the Government has been caught in the cookie jar of the elderly. It has even offended its allies, including the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Business Council on National Issues, and the Canadian Federation of Small Business.

I have a telegram from the Ontario Federation of Students which reports that an emergency resolution was passed last night, which reads as follows:

> Whereas the recent decision of the Government of Canada to deindex old age security programs will have a harmful effect on many senior citizens in Canada, and whereas deindexation of the old age pension is unfair to Canada's seniors who have inadequate sources of income, and whereas Finance Minister Michael Wilson has stated that deindexation of pensions is of benefit to the grandchildren of senior citizens, and whereas we, the grandchildren, oppose forcing seniors below the poverty line to subsidize our futures, be it resolved that the Ontario Federation of Students demands immediate reinstatement of full indexation of old age pensions for the seniors of Canada.

I think that makes it unanimous for everyone, Mr. Speaker, except the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—TÉMISCAMINGUE, QUEBEC

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on February 12 of this year, following the announcement of a new student summer employment program, Challenge '85, I said in the House that Témiscamingue would accept the challenge.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of announcing today that Témiscamingue has indeed accepted the challenge. In fact, the response of the private sector and our municipalities to my appeal was so positive that 530 jobs will be created this summer in my riding, which is 180 more than in the summer of 1984. I particularly want to stress that this tremendous success was made possible by the efforts and involvement of 78 businesses in the riding which decided to do their share by hiring students this summer.

That is the kind of leadership given by our Government in creating jobs. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) deserve our appreciation for designing a program that has proved to be so popular.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, offer my sincere thanks to the business people and municipalities that agreed to encourage and to invest in the energies and talents of our young students.

PARLIAMENT HILL

DIESEL FUMES EMITTED BY CHARTERED BUSES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I present you with a proposal which would make Parliament Hill a more pleasant workplace. The Hill has the dubious distinction of possessing its very own source of air pollution. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the powers that be to disallow chartered buses from idling their engines while parked between the Centre Block and the West Block. Diesel fumes hang everywhere in that area and fairly choke the people who work on the Hill, as well as many tourists who have come to meet their representatives in Ottawa.

Having checked with the RCMP I have learned the buses in this area are parked illegally. Efforts to keep the area clear of buses are not always successful, but surely we could try to have the drivers turn them off if they do stay.

As Chairman of the Special Committee on Acid Rain, and a concerned citizen, I would remind Members that the nitrogen oxides spewing from these beasts is a major contributor to acid precipitation. Heavy duty vehicles contribute 12 per cent of the NOx emissions in Canada. I have heard of Members of Parliament with offices in the West Block say they want the bus engines turned off. We are tired of having a pall of pollution hanging over our heads, and I encourage others to join us in the fight for clean air.

DISARMAMENT

WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE AFFIRMATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from the Women's International Peace Conference in Halifax, and I would like to read into the record excerpts from their final affirmation:

> We 350 women of the world community, from 33 countries, affirm the overwhelming need and desperate urgency for peace, which we believe is both the process we live and the goal for which we work.
>
> At this conference, women from diverse racial, cultural, ethnic and political backgrounds representing different sides of conflict areas, came together as a living example of women negotiating peace. Some of us compromised our own safety to make this commitment. Although women's voices have not been heard and women have not participated equally in peace negotiations or in the formulation of the institutions and the cultural fabric in which we live, we are more than half the world's population; we do have power, and we are shaping it for peaceful living. We condemn militarism. It is an addiction that distorts human development, causing world-wide poverty, starvation, pollution, repression, torture and death. Feeding this habit robs all the world's children and future generations of their inheritance.
> We all live in the shadow of the threat of nuclear war. We demand an end to research, testing, development, and deployment of all weapons of mass destruction, to the militarization of space and to all forms of violence. As a first step, we call for a comprehensive test ban treaty. We are committed to acting globally, nationally, locally and individually for peace. We will not compromise our commitment to the survival and healing of this planet. We affirm the right of every human being to live with dignity, equality, justice and joy.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S LITERARY AWARD WON BY AUTHOR JACQUES BRAULT

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Brome-Missisquoi, I would like to say how proud I am of the honour bestowed on one of my constituents. In Toronto on June 6, Her Excellency Madame Jeanne Sauvé awarded the Governor General's Award for Literature to Jacques Brault.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Bertrand: The author was very definitely inspired by the natural beauties of the riding, its lakes, hills and valleys.

I sincerely hope that his work will continue to find an enthusiastic readership and that Hon. Members will be unanimous in offering him their congratulations.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PENSIONS

REQUEST THAT BUDGET MEASURE BE RESCINDED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the last 24 hours the Maritime Premiers have said that deindexation is unnecessary, senior citizens have said that they feel betrayed, and numerous social agencies have called for restoration of indexation. Most significantly, the business community, at which the Budget was aimed, has said that deindexation should be stopped and full pensions restored. As the President of the BCNI said, we shouldn't reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged.

The Prime Minister came into office wanting to build a consensus. He has achieved the consensus, but people are against his order. Will the Prime Minister admit that the Government has made a serious mistake, and immediately withdraw the Budget order cancelling indexation for senior citizens?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in light of his attitude today I think my hon. friend would want to reflect upon a statement he made in the House of Commons on June 29, 1982. At that time he said: "They say we are deindexing down to 5 or 6 per cent for certain tax brackets. Yes, we are doing that".

You deindexed and cut away the value by 6 per cent to elderly citizens, and you have the temerity today to stand up and say exactly the opposite. That is why you are in such bad odour with the Canadian people. They do not trust you and do not believe you precisely because of statements like that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The business leaders are Canadian citizens and taxpayers. They are entitled to their point of view. We listen to these views, as we do others, and will continue to monitor the situation very carefully.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister talks about trust. I do not think a group of organizations representing over one million senior citizens ever said that they felt betrayed by a Liberal Government. That never happened to us, but it is happening to this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We know that the Government will change its mind. The Prime Minister has already said that the change will have to be made. The only reason they are not making the change now is that they feel they have to defend the Minister of Finance.

If the senior citizens can keep their full old age pensions, we will let the Prime Minister keep the Minister of Finance, and not ask for his resignation. God knows why he would want to keep him. However, would the Prime Minister agree to that proposition—return full pensions to the senior citizens, and he can keep his Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The candidate for finance from the Liberal Party is just entering now. I have said many times that no one on this side of the House, or anywhere, takes any joy or pleasure in having to cut back on expenditures to anyone. The fact is that we inherited a situation such that, without action, the social security programs for the elderly and others would be placed in serious jeopardy. We have been acting in what I think is a thoughtful way and, I hope, is a fair way, to try to ensure that the strength of the economy is such that these programs can be sustained and enhanced in the future.

There would be very little disagreement on the statement that the Hon. Minister of Finance is viewed by all Canadians as a thoughtful, competent, and compassionate man.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

EFFECT ON CROSS-SECTION OF CITIZENS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Prime Minister should change his clipping service because he is obviously not getting the right information.

We obviously see that an entire cross-section of Canadians are demanding a change. Perhaps the business community put it best when it said: "If you want to reduce the deficit, do it another way rather than trying to take away the security and future of senior citizens."

Why can the Prime Minister and the Government not understand a basic consensus of all Canadians, and make that change? You have admitted plenty of mistakes in the past. Now is the time to admit a mistake that really affects Canadians.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend has never been associated with the expression of acknowledgement of a mistake.

I know that this will surprise my hon. friend, but we have never contended that we are without flaws. We have been trying to deal in a straightforward manner, not a perfect manner, with a gravely imperfect situation that we inherited.

May I tell my hon. friend that we are trying to sustain these important social programs through economic growth and development, and the creation of 271,000 new jobs since the Government was sworn in is ample proof of our capacity and commitment to do precisely that. It is because we want to preserve the integrity of the social programs for the elderly that we are building these new jobs across Canada that will benefit the entire nation.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET SENIOR CITIZEN ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the only thing that surprises Members on this side is the flippant manner in which the Prime Minister answers questions.

Joyce King of the United Senior Citizens of Ontario said yesterday that, contrary to Government propaganda, there was no formal consultation with recognized senior citizens organizations prior to those OAS changes being brought in in the Budget. That is the same story that we heard last week in Atlantic Canada—no consultation.

In the interest of allowing senior citizens to be heard, will the Prime Minister agree to set aside adequate time next week to meet with the recognized senior citizens' organizations in a public forum in Ottawa? Will he do that for senior citizens?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I try as best I can to meet with all groups who seek to see us. I cannot see them all, but I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been meeting with representatives of seniors groups, as have other Ministers of the Crown. I know that we would look forward to further meetings, some of which are already scheduled between the Minister and representatives of other groups. We are careful to listen to them, and we listen to them carefully. That has always been our position.

In fact, so that there is no surprise, it is set out in the budget document that the Government will review the adequacy of payments in light of future circumstances, and will increase them as resources permit. That has always been the intention of the Government. It seems to me perfectly honourable and straightforward.

Mr. Tobin: The only senior citizens the Minister of Health apparently met are those who, he tells us, support this budget measure. I can tell him that there are some who do not.

Prime Minister, senior citizens want to meet with you. They want a meeting with you, and they deserve one. They believe that you have been deafened by the applause of 210 Members of Parliament, who applaud your brutal measures toward senior citizens. Will you, Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: Will you, Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members are trying to remind the Hon. Member that questions are to go through the Chair.

Mr. Tobin: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister if he, not another bevy of Ministers, but the Prime Minister, who personally carried the flag last summer and made specific commitments to senior citizens last year, will be available? Can you make a few hours available next week to meet in a public forum with senior citizen organizations which are coming to Ottawa to hold yourself accountable, or are you telling them that, even if they spend precious dollars, you will not hold yourself accountable to them?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: They want to know.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I could not hear the end of the question.

Mr. Tobin: May I repeat the question? Point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Beaches.

• (1425)

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I have just returned from talking and listening to seniors in Manitoba and Saskatchewan over the last couple of days. Those seniors are telling me to advise the Prime Minister that the Prime Minister did not have a mandate to do what he is doing to senior citizens through the Budget.

There is now a broad cross-section of Canadian society that is saying he does not have a consensus. Would the Prime Minister now do the honourable thing that he promised to do during the election campaign, and since, and say to the seniors: "I gave you a clear commitment and I am going to live up to it"? Will the Prime Minister not make that statement now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that, with the measures presently in place, we will not only honour our commitments to the senior citizens but do very much better during the life of the mandate of this Government in the obligations we have toward senior citizens. I think senior citizens, and all Canadians, recognize that a healthy economy is required—

Mr. Nunziata: You have no credibility, Mulroney.

Mr. Mulroney: —to be able to pay out these benefits. We want to make sure we are able to do so. We are hoping that the kinds of economic moves we are making will result in a stronger economy so that we can do more, infinitely more—not less—for the elderly.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The seniors across the country are saying to me, and I am sure they are saying to other Members of Parliament: "We do not need more rhetoric. What we need is action from the Government". I ask the Prime Minister again, will he do the honourable thing by the seniors, and now do what he promised he would do during the election campaign, and not do a flip-flop and do the opposite? Will the Prime Minister give that commitment to the House and to the seniors, now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be obviously pointed out, although I thought it was clear, that, as we speak in the House of Commons, no senior citizens' revenues have been negatively impacted upon in any way.

Mr. Deans: You said you would do it.

An Hon. Member: It is proposed.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member says it is proposed. Yes, it is proposed for January 1 of next year. Meanwhile no senior citizens are in any way negatively affected by this. We also indicated in the same document that was put forward that, as a concomitant obligation, we would continue to monitor the matter very closely to ensure that, at the earliest possible moment, we would be able to sustain the senior citizens further. That is what we are doing. It seems to me it is straightforward and in good faith, and I hope my hon. friend accepts that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, Canadian seniors took the Prime Minister at good faith a year ago, and look what has happened to them since.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET SENIOR CITIZENS IN HALIFAX

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. If the Government truly believes in consultation, I intend to be in Halifax on Monday speaking to seniors.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Young: The Minister of Finance will be there at the same time, speaking to business people. I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he will take five or 10 minutes out of his busy schedule to come and talk, meet, and listen to the seniors I will be meeting with in Halifax on Monday. Would the Minister of Finance agree to do that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the Canadian seniors voted for this Party, and then asks "what happened?". What has happened is that 271,000 of their children and grandchildren have new jobs. That is what has happened since this Government came in.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: How many seniors have new jobs?

Mr. Mulroney: If you are going to be fair—and I know my hon. friend wants to be fair—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Why don't you sit down? You are a disgrace; you are a sham.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: You broke your promise.

Mr. Nunziata: What about integrity, honesty, and credibility?

Mr. Speaker: All this yelling back and forth does none of us any credit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF BUDGET MEASURE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last week when we visited Atlantic Canada we talked with senior citizens who told us of the serious situation in which they find themselves. In fact many of them who are receiving OAS and GIS are living at a loss of over $300 to $400 per year. The Council of Maritime Premiers met yesterday and it, too, agreed that seniors had been ill-treated by the Budget.

Will the Prime Minister rethink this ill-conceived move in the Budget, and restore full indexation on the OAS to senior citizens? Will he meet with seniors to discuss this in a public forum, and look at it seriously? It is a very serious problem, and I think the Prime Minister should address it seriously.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been seeking to do precisely that. I recognize that it is a serious problem. I told my hon. friend, I think on another occasion, that I suspected that no one in the House of Commons, irrespective to his political persuasion, took any pleasure at all in having to reduce programs for any of our citizens. I think in an ideal world we would like to increase those programs for everyone. The fact of the matter is that it was our judgment that the value of these programs was being seriously jeopardized by a mountain of debt, the interest payments on which were compromising the capacity of the Government of Canada to meet and enhance these programs.

Having said that, I acknowledge full well the possible impact of it, which is why it was specifically inserted in the Budget. There has been no impact upon any of our senior citizens as we speak, nor could there be until 1986. Meanwhile we are continuing to monitor it very carefully to evaluate precisely the kinds of concerns which my hon. friend mentions, and others, and to do everything we can for the elderly.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and I have a somewhat similar background inasmuch as we both drove a truck at one time. The Prime Minister should take his responsibility as Prime Minister very seriously. He has done very well, to go from a truck driver to a Prime Minister.

Mr. Axworthy: Don't disparage truck drivers.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot hear. The Prime Minister has to stop playing the role of a truck driver.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Henderson: You gotta stop playing truck driver, you gotta stop blowing your own horn, you gotta stop giving the gears to senior citizens, and you gotta—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but I cannot hear the question. Could the Hon. Member, please, direct his question through the Chair?

Mr. Henderson: Will the Prime Minister do the honourable thing and meet next week with senior citizens in a public forum in Ottawa? I want a clear answer. Yes or no.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I meet with senior citizens all the time, and I will be meeting with senior citizens again next week.

PENSIONS

DEINDEXATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Progressive Conservative Party has called a special end-of-session caucus meeting to be held this Saturday, and they are obviously going to discuss pensions and the de-indexation announced by the Government in the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, this gives the Prime Minister only 24 hours, since the group of Conservative Members that just travelled across the country knows that Canadians in general are opposed to de-indexation. Instead of waiting for his special caucus meeting, will the Prime Minister take advantage of the remaining 48 hours to reverse this policy and re-instate indexation for the elderly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the caucus meeting mentioned by the Hon. Member was called well before the Budget was brought down in the House.

There is no connection between the subject of the Hon. Member's question and next Saturday's caucus meeting. It is the usual meeting held at the end of a session by any properly run caucus.

That being said, I repeat the comments I made earlier. The Budget proposals on limiting indexation are not in effect at this time and will not come into effect until January 1 of next year, and if we do proceed with this measure, the initial effects thereof could not be felt until April, 1986. We have a whole year to monitor the situation, as we mentioned in the Budget. It seems to me that is entirely reasonable.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PROMISES CONCERNING CONSENSUS AND CONSULTATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

During the election campaign, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party promised he would follow a policy of consensus and consultation. Is consensus dead? Is consultation now being ignored? If that is not the case, why is the Prime Minister ignoring the consensus reached by all social groups, including business, that are opposed to indexation. And why is his Government ignoring his promise to consult with the elderly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the problems I admit we do encounter on a regular basis is the fact that as far as large groups in our society are concerned, we cannot meet the demands or needs of all groups at the same time. In fact, I think even our political adversaries would acknowledge, and rightly so, that we are trying to find a consensus, to build a consensus, on important national issues.

I can say without the slightest hesitation that, as far as this particular measure is concerned, we were somewhat hesitant, the proof being the statement in the Budget that we are going to monitor the situation on a regular basis. No one enjoys budget cutbacks, any more than my hon. friend does, and that is why we wanted to monitor the situation very closely in order to be fair to the elderly citizens of this country.

Oral Questions

OLD AGE SECURITY

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister will agree with me that the situation of elderly Canadians is serious enough as it is, that their prospects for the coming months are not very encouraging. Mr. Speaker, we could resort to abuse, but that would not improve the plight of senior citizens. You could be civil and polite. Yesterday you saw Mr. Lévesque who said: It is an inhumane decision. You also know that the business community said that it is an unacceptable decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister accept two suggestions: First, would he agree to meet here in Ottawa with various groups of Quebec elderly citizens who I know want to see him and, second, will he admit that it has been a mistake and will he amend the Bill at the earliest opportunity?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the idea of limiting the indexation of benefits did not come from the Conservative Government. My colleague will admit that, when he was sitting on this side of the House, the Liberal Government did implement a much more drastic measure concerning limited indexation in Canada. I think it is an undeniable fact. That being said, I am neither ashamed nor hesitant about repeating to my colleague that we wanted to be so fair with senior citizens that we thought we had to include in the Budget a specific provision concerning our intention to follow up on this case, hopefully to make appropriate changes in due time. Since not one elderly person has yet been adversely affected by the Government's intention and that the first impact would not be felt before April 1986, we have ample time to see how the situation evolves and take immediate action to help elderly Canadians.

GROUPS TRAVELLING TO OTTAWA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister will have to admit that the Liberal Government at least protected the elderly through double indexation, for 20 years. I think that if the Prime Minister is at all honest, he will acknowledge that fact, unlike the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary contains two points: first of all, the Prime Minister failed to answer the question: will he agree next week to meet with the groups that are coming here to Ottawa and second, could the Prime Minister explain to the elderly why they should trust him this time around on what it says in the Minister of Finance's Budget Speech, because on two occasions he broke promises that had been given in writing, one in July in Sherbrooke in the Province of Quebec and one in January?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member started out saying he wanted to be nice and polite, and unfortunately, he wound up his statement with some very harsh, and I would think petty, judgments of others in this House.

However, the question was: Will I be meeting Quebec groups next week in Ottawa? The answer is no. Next week I will be meeting Quebecers in Quebec City and elsewhere in the Province of Quebec.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET SENIOR CITIZENS IN HALIFAX

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. A few months before the Budget was brought down the Minister of State for Finance as well as the Minister, I think, and certainly some of his officials, met with representatives of the oil industry in western Canada, discussed their taxation plight, made promises to them, and in the Budget and the Western Accord delivered great windfalls to the industry.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance why is he hunkering down here in Ottawa. Why is he afraid to meet with the seniors? Why is he isolating himself, and will he not accept the perfectly reasonable suggestion of the Hon. Member for Beaches that he meet in Halifax with a seniors' group next week?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously the fact that I will be in Halifax does not mean that I am hunkering down here, afraid to meet with people. I would be happy to meet with the group that the Hon. Member suggests.

THE BUDGET

TAX MEASURES AFFECTING OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to tell us, and to tell the seniors in my riding who have been asking me, why is it that the oil industry got such favourable treatment from the Government and the seniors have been treated so shamefully. I want to ask him further, apropos of that, why do some of the seniors' groups in the poorest part of the country have to pay for job creation when the oil industry gets so many windfalls compared to the seniors. Why do the seniors have to pay for that job creation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member is still the energy critic for the New Democratic Party. He will know that the tax position of the oil industry today, after the changes that have been brought about by this Budget, is less attractive to the industry than it was prior to the energy agreement in October 1980. We have put the oil and gas industry back into a position where it is being treated equally with other industries in the country, with no discrimination, and that did involve taking some favourable tax measures away from the oil and gas industry that were in place prior to October, 1980.

FOOD AND DRUGS

BAN ON USING CHLORAMPHENICOL WITH LIVESTOCK

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, through you I would like to address this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that five American states, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, have effectively banned the importation of Canadian livestock and meat due to the use of the drug chloramphenicol in Canada, could the Minister tell this House what action, if any, is the Government prepared to take so that Canadian farmers can sell again, the United States?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us have been concerned about the ban in the five states, and that chloramphenicol was used as the example to have that ban put into effect. I believe that it is a non-tariff barrier. I think government Members feel that it is a non-tariff barrier, but prior even to that date we had put in a 60-day review period. As of last Thursday, Cabinet signed an order, but we waited until yesterday's decision on the countervail by the U.S. Commerce Department. This morning, as a result of the hardship to Canadian producers that emerged, we decided that immediate action should be taken on the ban. I, therefore, effectively immediately, am imposing a temporary ban on the use and sale of chloramphenicol for food-producing animals.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NEW BRUNSWICK MINISTER OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt to advise Members of the presence in our gallery of Mr. Yvon Poitras, Minister of Municipal Affairs for the Province of New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

REQUEST THAT BUDGET MEASURE BE RESCINDED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since the Prime Minister promised last July, and I quote, "complete indexing of old age pensions to the actual cost of living", and since in November he further promised that any money saved through the review of universal social programs would be redirected to people in need, will the Prime Minister honour these two promises and instruct his Minister of Finance not to proceed with the $1.6 billion assault on the pockets of Canadian pensioners?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks a very good question. I do not think there is any doubt that the wish of all Members of the House of Commons is to do more for the senior citizens, the elderly and the disabled. We have taken many initiatives since we have been here, to extend the spousal allowance, to extend the definition of disability and so on, along those lines.

What my hon. friend, given her expertise in finance, would, I think, readily acknowledge is that there is substantial peril to the social programs in Canada involved in the financing required for deficit coverage. What we have been trying to do precisely is to begin the process of financing, but we want to do it with as much fairness as is humanly possible. This is why there was no precipitous action taken on this, and why it was triggered for next January to take effect in April of 1986, so we would have the time to listen to my hon. friend, and to monitor the economic situation so that—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the question was quite short.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, taking money away from consumers will not reduce the deficit. It will slow growth, and increase unemployment. Even The Wall Street Journal, so admired by Members opposite, has described the Canadian Budget as a prescription for economic disaster.

● (1450)

Recognizing that the Prime Minister has often spoken of a compassionate society, and I am sure he was sincere, may I remind him that 10 groups, representing one million Canadian senior citizens, have asked for this—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Hon. Member is making a long preamble to her supplementary question. Does she have a question, please?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since 10 groups, representing one million Canadian senior citizens, have said that the measure will represent an attack on the compassionate society which they built, will the Prime Minister reconsider?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the reason this particular measure was not implemented on budget night was because of our apprehension in regard to the possible impact. That strikes me as being legitimate. We wanted to monitor the situation as closely as possible so as to minimize whatever effects there were on the elderly.

It is our view, and I hope it is shared, that the way to sustain sound social programs is through an economic recovery. That economic recovery appears to be in train. That is good news for Canada, and most of all it is good news for the integrity of the social security programs.

CONSULTATION INQUIRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am sure the Minister knows that heads of 11 major organizations, representing one million pensioners, met in Toronto yesterday to protest partial deindexation of pensions. They are mad and militant. They are demanding that pensions be reindexed.

Will the Minister explain why there was no consultation with seniors' organizations, when there was consultation on every other front? Why was there no consultation with seniors before the Government changed its policy and decided to deindex pensions? The Minister knows that deindexation will affect 2.5 million pensioners and will push another 200,000 pensioners into poverty.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member said that consultations took place—

Ms. Mitchell: There were no consultations.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I listened to her, and I would appreciate the same courtesy. She said that there had been consultations with various groups. She said that there had not been consultations with senior citizens' groups. But there was consultation with various groups, and I say to her—

Ms. Mitchell: Not regarding pensions.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I would say to her what the Prime Minister has been saying today in Question Period. That is why those words were in the Budget. Those words were there the day the Budget was brought down. The Government then looked at the situation very carefully. The Prime Minister and I have said today that, as the economy improves, the matter will be monitored. That has been the commitment, and we will stand by that commitment.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ADVOCATE ON BEHALF OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there was no consultation with seniors at the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, but that there was consultation regarding child benefits. Why is he trying to deceive people?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that suggestion and proceed to her question.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of getting on with the question, I will withdraw. But I think it is abominable the way that the Minister has been treating—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Minister read the seven-point brief which was presented yesterday by those groups, if he has not already done so? Will he consult with them personally? He can do that today. Most important, will he, at the Tory caucus meeting this weekend, become their advocate? Will he speak for a change on behalf of pensioners, and take their position to that caucus?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am the spokesman for pensioners in the caucus and in the House. I am also the spokesman for the spouse's allowance, the widow's allowance, the widower's allowance and disability—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I could go back to the report on The Journal when she and I appeared together. She said that she would be willing to tax senior citizens more. Why has she changed? We have not changed.

THE BUDGET

ARTICLE IN WALL STREET JOURNAL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the influential newspaper, The Wall Street Journal, in a four-column article asked: "Will Canada cut its economic throat?" In commenting on the Budget, the article began: "Canada is about to commit economic suicide in the interest of economic theory".

How can the Minister of Finance expect to keep the economy growing and reduce the deficit when his avalanche of taxes will erode more and more the buying power of Canadians? Does the Minister of Finance believe that he can tax the economy back to prosperity?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the same Cassandra-like tones came from that side of the House last November. They said that 50,000 to 100,000 jobs would be lost. Since then, more than 200,000 jobs have been created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would suggest that the Hon. Member look at what is happening in the economy. Let us look at what has happened. In the first quarter we had growth which was approximately 50 per cent higher than the normal economic expectations. Yesterday we had the investment intentions which have increased from an expectation of 6 per cent last October to 13 per cent. That equals jobs. Those jobs will support the social programs of the country. I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that that is the positive direction to be taking.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, still concerning the tax policy of the Minister of Finance, I would like to get back to the capital gains tax exemption. The Wall Street Journal pointed out in the same article, and I quote:

[English]

"Exempting capital gains will indeed be helpful to entrepreneurship but to U.S. not to Canadian entrepreneurship."

[Translation]

Instead of defending the indefensible, would the Minister of Finance not agree that he should immediately close this tax loophole he opened in his Budget and use the money to fully re-index Old Age Security pensions?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the Hon. Member has been talking. I know the man who wrote that article. I have met him and I have talked to him on a number of occasions. Over the course of the time which I have known him, I have read numerous articles in which he stated that the United States was on the wrong track and that it should not have been going in the direction which it was. What has happened? Last year was a year of record growth in the United States. The year before that was a year of record growth in the United States. Surely the Hon. Member knows that for every one-handed economist there is another one-handed economist, and that there are all sorts of two-handed economists saying different things. If the Hon. Member believed every economist and followed what every economist said should be done with the economy, he would be very, very mixed up, even more so than he is today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

IMPACT OF BUDGET—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Earlier in Question Period he said that the Liberal six and five program was even more draconian than this Government's program. Why would the Prime Minister want to propose a program of deindexation that he, by his own admission, calls draconian?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there would be general agreement at any time in which there is a lessening or even a maintaining, without increase, of contributions to the elderly, that that represents an important step. It is one which must be thought about very carefully. It is because we would only do it with such reluctance that I used that term. It is because of our concern and our commitment to the elderly in the country that we have acted with such prudence in accordance with the compassion and the traditions of the country.

● (1500)

GOVERNMENT MONITORING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. He has been indicating that the Government is carefully monitoring the situation. Precisely what is it that the Government is monitoring? Is it public opinion which the Government is monitoring? Is it the number of senior citizens who will be living below the poverty line? Could the Prime Minister be precise so that we can understand what it is the Government is monitoring as it evaluates this deindexation proposal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we said in the Budget precisely what we intended to do and how we intended to do it. Obviously, if my hon. friend will understand, we are going to be looking very carefully at all of the leading economic indicators, following them very carefully to see the impact which this might or might not have by April of 1986. And at the earliest possible moment, as I have indicated many times, we will, hopefully, be able to take steps which will be of further benefit to the elderly in Canada.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, June 11, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

May I add one comment? In relation to the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) on Tuesday, June 11, 1985, I wish to draw to the attention of the House that it is not in accordance with the rules or traditions of the House for Hon. Members to produce exhibits while presenting petitions. Furthermore, I would like to remind Hon. Members that documents are objects other than sheets of signatures and should not be included in a petition.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a number of citizens, including many senior citizens, protesting against measures in the federal Budget which severely affect the economic situation of senior citizens and asking the Government not to deindex the old age pensions.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many citizens, including students, requesting that the full indexation for old age pensions be continued.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several dozen citizens of the City of Sault Ste. Marie calling upon the Government to reinstate the full indexation of the old age pensions and pointing out that the seniors should not have to pay for the increased benefits given to the multinational oil companies and high-income people.

PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from 610 concerned women, many of them constituents but others from across Canada, requesting the Government to redefine pornography, to fully recognize the human rights of women and children and to legislate against the importation, sale and circulation of pornographic materials in Canada.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people in Coquitlam, Burnaby and Vancouver, British Columbia, protesting that the Old Age Security cuts fly in the face of a Progressive Conservative promise that " a P. C. Government would once more index the old age pension to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis". I would like to file that petition.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of several dozen citizens from the great Saskatchewan community of Wynyard. This petition calls upon the Parliament of Canada to reinstate the full indexation for senior citizens, saying that if that does not happen, the losers will be the poor, the unemployed and the women of Canada.

EXIT VISA FOR SOVIET CITIZEN IDA NUDEL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition which calls upon this House of Commons to direct the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to call immediately upon the Ambassador of the U.S.S.R. to demand that Ida Nudel be given an exit visa in order to receive adequate medical attention. Ida Nudel has now waited for an exit visa for 12 years. She has been diagnosed as suffering from pancreatic cancer and she requires medical treatment.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) have another petition?

Mrs. Finestone: I have a second petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by another 15 women with the same concern. It is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and requests that a demand be presented to the Ambassador of the U.S.S.R. for the release of Ida Nudel so that she can come to the West and have proper medical treatment.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition of three pages with the signatures of senior citizens and other citizens of Saskatchewan who petition this Government to take another look at the deindexing of old age pensions and to change them back to the way they were before.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF 1891 CENSUS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition on behalf of 58 residents of the Niagara region and elsewhere, most of them members of the Niagara branch of the Ontario Genealogical Society. They ask the House to release copies of the 1891 census for Canada and make it available to the public for research purposes.

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of constituents who are protesting the deindexation of Canadian pensions. They are asking that the Progressive Conservative Government live up to its campaign promise to maintain pensions at their current levels.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petition from citizens in Vancouver East and in many of the surrounding areas, namely, Burnaby, Coquitlam, Port Coquitlam, Maple Ridge, Surrey, Kelowna and New Westminster. These citizens, of all ages, are asking that the Government change its policy regarding pensions and that it reindex pensions so that senior citizens will not suffer in the oncoming years.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of senior citizens in my riding who call upon the Government to live up to its promise to index fully senior citizens' pensions.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Salmon Arm, British Columbia, protesting that the annual cut to each and every OAS pensioner in Canada will be $680 in 1991.

I also have the pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents from the community of Kamloops, British Columbia, who point out that the May 23 Budget imposes undue and unfair hardship on pensioners by deindexing the Old Age Security and call upon Parliament to reinstate full indexation for the Old Age Security Program of Canada.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition in the form of 11 pages of signatures of senior citizens who protest the Government's intent to deindex Old Age Security. They demand that the Government listen not only to senior citizens but to the Chamber of Commerce and other interested groups and abandon its intent to deindex Old Age Security.

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED DISPOSAL AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-53, an Act to authorize the disposal of the Northern Transportation Company Limited and the forgiveness of its debt to Her Majesty, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

COMPOSITION AND ORDER OF REFERENCE OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between the Parties with respect to the terms of reference for a Special Joint Committee of Parliament on Canada's International Relations. I think that if you were to ask the House, there would be unanimous consent for me to bring this motion forward on the following terms. It is a bit lengthy but I think it is important enough that I should read it into the record. It reads as follows:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider Canada's International Relations;

That the document entitled "Competitiveness and Security: Directions for Canada's International Relations", tabled on May 14, 1985 (Sessional Paper No. 331-4/10), be referred to the Committee;

That the Committee consider and report upon the issues discussed in the above-mentioned document and make recommendations in their report concerning the objectives and conduct of Canada's international relations;

That the following 12 Members of the House of Commons to act on behalf of the House as members of the said committee be: Messrs. Axworthy, Chrétien, Crofton, Mrs. Duplessis, Messrs. Harvey, Hockin, Jardine, Miss Jewett, Messrs. Kempling, Langdon, Porter and Stackhouse;

That the Committee have the power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House;

That the Committee have the power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff;

That the Committee have the power to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the Committee;

That a quorum of the Committee be seven members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, whenever 4 members are present, so long as both Houses are represented;

Canada's International Relations

That the Committee submit an interim report on Canada's participation in research on the Strategic Defence Initiative and on Bilateral Trade with the United States no later than August 23, 1985;

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the Committee is completed, that the Committee shall report its findings by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House and that it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the table;

That the Committee present its final report no later than May 31, 1986; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there are two matters I wanted to raise with the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) before the motion is put. Clearly we intend to give consent, but I wanted to say that I think it is the hope of all Parties that, although the time limit is short for deliberations, there will be adequate time for the extensive consultation we know is necessary. I also want to ask the Government House Leader to verify on the record that, recognizing the extensive nature of the travel involved in order to hold hearings and achieve the necessary input from the public, a reasonable substitution of Members on the Committee will be permitted from time to time as necessary in order to accommodate the hearing process.

There is one final matter. I believe the Government House Leader intends to assure this House, perhaps by reading into the record the letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to the Opposition House Leaders, that the Government does not intend to move on any verification of any arrangements between Canada and the U.S. on either of the two questions the committee has been asked to deliberate upon until after it has tabled its report in the House of Commons.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when we heard that the Government wanted to propose that the House and Senate create a special joint committee to hold hearings lasting up to a year on its Green Paper on foreign policy, we took a firm position that this committee would be of no value either to Parliament or the Canadian people unless the Government gave an undertaking that decisions would not be taken on at least two key issues, the Special Defence Initiative, known as star wars, and the matter of bilateral trade relations with the U.S., until the Canadian people have had a reasonable opportunity to present their views on these issues to the parliamentary committee. At first, the Government, to say the least, was reluctant to—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Come on, Herb.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —give such an undertaking. But I am very pleased to note, through the motion presented today, that the Government is prepared not to make such decisions until after August 23. I understand that the Government House Leader is prepared to table certain letters confirming that undertaking. In those circumstances, I am pleased to say on behalf of the Official Opposition that I give our consent to the motion just read out by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wish to comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans)?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker, It is with mixed feelings that I rise at this time. I had rather hoped we would not get involved in the political rhetoric of the House Leader of the Official Opposition on this matter. I think this has been addressed in Question Period and I am not going to comment other than to say that the consultative process we brought forward in the Speech from the Throne is a precedent. This Government has to apologize to no one with respect to participation by Members of Parliament in the consultative process through parliamentary committees. I think it is important to understand that we have been delayed by the actions of the Opposition for one month when we could have had important meetings with the people of Canada. But I will not say those things because I do not want to get involved in political rhetoric on this issue.

In response to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, I think we will be able to work out, and I am quite prepared to do so, a sensible and reasonable arrangement with all Parties concerning membership on the committee—and the necessary substitutions. He will understand that on these joint committees, because of their nature, there are some difficulties with respect to substitution. Having said that, I can give him the assurances, as I have done privately to both him and the Official Opposition House Leader, that I am very much interested in making sure that we make the best use of Members of Parliament from all Parties. If there is a reasonable proposition to be put forward, we will of course agree because we are able to do that in so many instances.

I have documents here which I propose to table with the unanimous consent of the House at this time. The first document is a memorandum which I sent to the opposition House Leaders outlining the confirmation of the agreement. The second document is a letter which I have from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) which has been circulated to Hon. Members, and I think I can read it into the record now so that we will understand what has been agreed to by the opposition Parties and the Government. The letter is dated June 10, addressed to myself, and reads as follows:

I am pleased at the progress you are making in discussions with House Leaders of the other Parties respecting the reference of the Green Paper to a Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate.

I understand the other Parties want a reliable assurance that the hearings and the interim report will be considered by the Government when we take decisions on trade arrangements with the United States, and the American invitation to participate in SDI research. Please assure them that I see no circumstances that would require us to take decisions on those questions before August 23; indeed, I would welcome the observations of the Committee and the interested public, before any decisions are taken on those questions.

With good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Joe Clark

With the consent of the House, I will table those two documents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Government House Leader to table the documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

● (1520)

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I listened very attentively to the Hon. Minister. I am sure that my interest in foreign affairs is well known. The Minister said that he is ready to consider proposals made by the hon. representative of the NDP. He said that he will look into them and come to an agreement. Is it possible that the Minister would now consider amending his proposal and tabling it tomorrow? In that way there would be unanimous consent of all interested parties.

I listened very attentively to the representation of the representative of the New Democratic Party. He made a very sensible proposal. The Government House Leader has answered in a very sensible way. He is an old Member of the House in terms of tenure. Would it be possible that, after quick consultation, he would return tomorrow so that we will all know exactly where we stand on this matter?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the matter was discussed between the House Leaders. I am in your hands, of course. However, the specific terms of reference had been agreed upon, as had the procedure to be followed today. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) raises a question which I take very seriously. We will want to resolve this matter. It has been in the interest of us all to work out a sensible arrangement because we will all be faced with some pressure owing to the fact that this committee will be sitting in the summer months.

As I have indicated to the House, we want to continue with the core. It is important to specify the people who will give leadership to this committee. We will, of course, be prepared to sit down and work out an arrangement between the Parties. I have given a commitment to sit down with the House Leader of the distinguished Member's Party. We will be able to work out a solution that is agreeable to all Parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Does the House agree to the motion of the Government House Leader?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Reluctantly.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 279 and 280.

[Text]

UNESCORTED TEMPORARY ABSENCES

Question No. 279—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In 1984, how many inmates of federal penal institutions were allowed unescorted temporary absences and how many were (a) parole violators (b) convicted of (i) murder (ii) manslaughter (iii) armed robbery?

2. How many were convicted of crimes committed while on absence?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. There were 3920 inmates who received unescorted temporary absences in 1984. (a) 563. (b) (i) 111, (ii) 185, (iii) 831.

2. Data on inmates convicted of crimes committed while on any form of leave from the institution does not currently exist in the Offender Information System.

CRIMES COMMITTED WHILE ON UNESCORTED TEMPORARY ABSENCES

Question No. 280—Mr. Stackhouse:

Of the 3,116 inmates of federal penal institutions allowed unescorted temporary absences in 1983, how many were convicted of crimes committed while on absence?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Data on inmates convicted of crimes committed while on any form of leave from the institution does not currently exist in the Offender Information System.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire once again of the Parliamentary Secretary as to when an answer to question No. 86 asked on November 15, 1984 might be forthcoming. This question deals with PCBs at abandoned DEW line sites. I know from private conversations with DND and DIAND personnel that this information is available. Is it just that this particular question has been forgotten about?

Mr. Dick: By no means, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the Hon. Member that this extremely important question will be answered very soon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, now that we have finished with the details of clauses and motions to amend it is time to review briefly what we have accomplished and where we shall go from here. The passage into law of Bill C-31 will be an historic moment. It will mark the first time in a generation that significant amendments have been made to the Indian Act. It marks a small but tangible beginning to the process of federal government recognition of Indian self-government.

When I rose in the House nearly four months ago to move second reading of this Bill I said that there were three principles at the heart of the Bill. With the passage of Bill C-31 these principles will become reality. For the first time in well over a century we will have an Indian Act free of the blight of sexual discrimination. For the first time in over a century the Government of Canada will recognize that Indian communities should be able to define who their people are. Finally, after more than a decade of struggle, those women who suffered the direct effects of sexual discrimination through marriage to a non-Indian will be able to regain the Indian status and band membership that they lost so unjustly.

In the course of debate we have become well aware that Bill C-31 does not resolve all the shortcomings of the Indian Act. It was not meant to do so. Much more needs to be done. However, let us recognize with some honesty the solid achievement which this Bill represents. When I spoke last March I said that I would stick to the three basic central principles in the Bill, but that I would also accept amendments that would make the Bill better. There is no doubt that the work of this House on all sides has made this Bill better and fairer. The standing committee alone adopted 30 amendments at report stage, and the House adopted another 10 the other day. The positive results of the parliamentary process are there to be seen in the final version of this Bill.

These results were achieved by a joint effort that I want to acknowledge. I would first like to express my gratitude to, and respect for, the dozens and dozens of native and other groups which apppeared before the standing committee and made their views known. Second, I want to salute the chairman of the standing committee, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). The Hon. Member offered his patience and wisdom in guiding the committee's deliberations. In the same breath I would like to thank as well my Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz); the two opposition critics, the Hon. Members for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) and for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), and all the members of the standing committee for their long hours and obviously very careful consideration and reflection on this Bill.

I am probably more painfully aware than most in the House that many groups will not be satisfied with this Bill. Some will complain that we should have given band membership directly to the many tens of thousands of descendants of those who lost their membership through discrimination. This Bill says no to that proposition. Only those who themselves had band membership and lost it through sexual discrimination should be restored to band membership. Other groups will complain that we should leave band membership entirely to the bands and let bygones be bygones. This Bill says no to that as well. This Bill says that there is a duty on the part of the federal Government to restore what its laws have unjustly stripped away.

After all the debate, Bill C-31 is, I say with some modesty, a careful balance between two just causes, that of women's rights and that of Indian self-government. If either of those two clauses had triumphed, it could only have been at the expense of the other. Therefore, this Bill avoids both those extremes. No one gets 100 per cent of what they sought, but each group gets something that is vitally important to them. There was no other fair path to follow.

● (1530)

I think now is the time that our thoughts should shift from Bill C-31 to the future. The first step is implementation. The Government understands the heavy responsibility it has in this matter. I have repeatedly assured the House of the Government's commitment to seeing the Bill through to implementation. I want to reiterate today that bands will not become worse off as a result of this Bill.

When Bill C-31 is passed in the Senate and receives Royal Assent, which I expect will be next week, I will announce my Department's administrative arrangements for dealing expeditiously with implementation. In two years this matter will be brought back before us when I report to Parliament on the progress of implementing the Bill. I can assure the House that that report will be extensive and thorough.

I see a real opportunity in this Bill for greater local community control by Indian communities. I hope that virtually all bands will take the initiative to assume control of their own membership. They will also discover, if they do not know now, that the Bill provides other new opportunities for increasing local control over their own communities, to regulate the use of intoxicants, to regulate residency on reserves, and to enforce their by-laws by injunctive relief in court. These are new examples of powers that bands have not had until the passage of this Bill.

I also urge the bands to open their hearts to those 18,000 people, mainly women, whose right to band membership is restored through this Bill. These people are not strangers, they are their own flesh and blood. Now is the time for reconciliation, to welcome back those whom unfair laws had forced to leave.

To those regaining their rights, I offer my sincere best wishes. Their long wait is over. At the same time, I would like to suggest to them that they also share in the responsibility of bringing about a true reconciliation. The sensitivity of these people in dealing with the concerns of many band members will accelerate the healing process within Indian communities.

However historic Bill C-31 may be, it is only the first stop on a very long journey. Our goal becomes clear with each passing day: to restore true self-government within the Indian nations of Canada.

Bill C-31 is not self-government. Band control of membership is merely a modest step forward. The main challenge remains. the Constitutional process has not proven to be a shortcut. It is becoming more and more evident that self-government can really be defined only at the band, tribal and community level. That is the next agenda. The two years between now and 1987 will not be lost.

I invite all Hon. Members to join with me in committing to the cause of Indian self-government the same enthusiasm and dedication which has brought Bill C-31 to its final approval in the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you may recall the song with the words, "No, I never promised you a rose garden". No one ever said that being a legislator was easy. If anyone thinks that being a Member of Parliament is like living in a rose garden, some of us, including the Minister, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) who was our chairman, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the Parliamentary Secretary can attest at least to the thorns.

Bill C-31 has been a conundrum to those of us who have been intimately involved with this legislation for a long period of time. It has been a riddle because one must wonder why so many good intentions, honest endeavours and heartfelt efforts to correct wrongs and injustices in our laws—not Indian tradition—can create possible misery, disharmony and problems.

I hope the Minister's appeal for a reconciliation that would avoid much of that disharmony is forthcoming. I share that sentiment with him totally, but I am not sure it will happen.

Who will incur this possible misery and problems? It will be the Indian First Nations, the Indian bands and the Indian communities. The formation of Bill C-31 is somewhat analogous to the manufacture of gunpowder. Gunpowder is made by taking three non-explosive elements and combining them to produce an explosive mixture. With respect to Bill C-31, there were good and well-intentioned elements which, considered separately, are valid. Yet, when placed together they have the possibility of creating difficulty and turmoil.

First, there were the women who, because of our law, lost their status by marrying non-Indians. At the same time, their brothers who married non-Indians retained their status, and in fact their wives acquired Indian status. If one attempted to explain that legislation to anyone outside of Canada, or to many Canadians for that matter, they would not believe that we would have such provisions within a statute passed by this Parliament. It makes one wonder what takes place in the House of Commons.

It should serve as a warning to what we do in this Parliament, because I am always apprehensive about passing legislation that will be ridiculed and scorned by future generations of Members of Parliament. I hope that will not be the case.

During this debate we have heaped abuse on Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, which is a totally indefensible provision of that federal statute. It is a provision that enshrined sexual discrimination. The women who were affected by it were rightfully incensed. No one can argue with them. They were joined by women right across the country in a cause célèbre. There were court cases. The issue was even brought to the attention of the United Nations, much to Canada's shame. Then along came our Charter of Rights and Freedoms within our own Constitution. This added a new powerful incentive to rid our laws of all discriminatory sections. That is the first element, Mr. Speaker.

• (1540)

The second is the attempt by the Minister to deal with this complex issue. It is an issue the Minister inherited when he was appointed to that portfolio. It is a complex issue that was imposed on him. It is not a problem he created. The Minister realized from the outset that he was dealing, as he said at the beginning of his speech, with an important women's issue, but he was also dealing with an Indian issue, the right of Indians to be self-governing and the right of Indians as self-governing entities to determine their own citizenship or membership, if you prefer. There were two aspects. I think the Minister knows that these two aspects were bound to be on a collision course. It was inevitable. Try as you will, there was bound to be a confrontation. The Minister tried to avert the clash. He said the Bill rested on three pillars, that it was constructed on three basic principles: first, to remove the discriminatory provisions of the Act; second, to restore status and band membership to those who had lost it because of the sex discrimination provisions in the Act, namely that infamous Section 12(1)(B)—isn't it going to be marvellous if we never have to hear any more about 12(1)(B) when this Bill is passed—third, to ensure that Indian nations, if they wish to do so, could have control over their own membership. Those were the three pillars or principles.

The Minister made it clear that not everyone would be satisfied. There would not be 100 per cent satisfaction on every principle. That is true. When this Bill is passed, there will still be some discriminatory aspects of the Indian Act.

When this Bill is passed, we will not have ended the practice of deciding who is and who is not an Indian and creating categories of Indians.

Just listen to some of the categories we create because of our legislation and policy, Mr. Speaker. We have registered Indians and status Indians. We have non-status Indians and band list Indians. We have Indian children of reinstated Indians. We have treaty Indians and reserve Indians and off-reserve Indians. And so it goes.

Finally, on the matter of not everyone being 100 per cent satisfied, we know that the Bill will give only partial control to the Indian First Nations over their own memberships. It is partly recognized and partly affirmed. Of course, it is true that the Minister has said that this is only a beginning and there is a future to which we must look, and no one here can have any disagreement with that.

Let me remind the House once again of the assertion of the Indian First Nations, an assertion that was solidly supported by the all-Party unanimous report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government. The assertion was that it is the rightful jurisdiction of each Indian First Nation to determine its membership according to its own particular criteria. All Hon. Members in this House may not agree with that assertion. I say to them that it is, in my view—and I think those who served on the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government would agree—an aboriginal right, and when we tinker, meddle or interfere in matters related to membership within an Indian First Nation, we are clearly outside of our jurisdiction, we are into someone else's jurisdiction. That right by Indian First Nations was never surrendered to any Parliament of Canada. It was assumed by us in our Constitution of 1867 and by the passage of the Indian Act that we have some prerogatives in dealing with Indian band membership and citizenship.

What we did was to usurp that right. It was never surrendered to us. It was never given to us. We simply took it. Never was it relinquished at any time by Indian First Nations. Therefore, it follows logically that, when Indian leaders and Indian Governments say to us they reject fully and completely any federal interference in such matters. They say we are simply and clearly out of our element. It is beyond our authority. But we do it every time we decide who is and who is not an Indian, and what are the different kinds of Indians, those categories to which I referred a moment ago. To engage in this exercise is presumptuous beyond reason. It is presumptuous when we do it now, just as it was presumptuous of those parliamentarians who preceded us and did it in a fashion that left us with this awkward, embarrassing situation that we have to try to resolve. We cannot do it satisfactorily. We could not do it satisfactorily through the Bill presented by the previous Government and we cannot do it satisfactorily through this Bill, try as we will.

I think the difficulty is that we have forgotten from history what should never have been ignored but has been ignored until very recently when we amended and added to the Canadian Constitution. There was something we forgot that could have pointed the way and avoided for us so much of the difficulty in which we have enmeshed ourselves over a long period of time. I am referring to the Royal Proclamation of 1763. It is not my intention to make too much of that document. I know it is a colonialist document. It is not a Magna Carta for Indian people by any means. But it did provide for us, and it could have provided for previous generations, at least a modus operandi, a way to proceed, that would have avoided so much of the difficulty and so many of the problems that now entangle us hand and foot.

If only we had only followed the prescription which was clearly laid down and proceeded on the basis of nation to nation, government to government, Crown to Indian First Nations. That was the way to proceed. If we had proceeded that way, what would the result have been? Instead of usurping authority that did not belong to us and instead of assuming unto ourselves the power to legislate for these people, these first citizens of Canada, we would have proceeded by way of negotiation leading to agreement. That is the way it was done with the treaties. That is why most Indian people in this country who have treaties, even though they recognize they are far from perfect documents and that a much more powerful Government took advantage of them, regard them as sacred, not so much for every substance in a treaty itself, every item and clause in a treaty, but because of the way in which the treaties were reached through negotiation leading toward agreement.

● (1550)

When we followed that approach in modern times, we were able to avoid, to a significant extent but not entirely, many of the problems foisted upon us by the Indian Act. For example, the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement was negotiated and agreed upon. Members of Parliament, in the House and in committee, indicated that they did not like certain aspects of that agreement. They had to be reminded that their job was not to renegotiate that agreement but simply to ratify it and that, if they did not like certain parts of the agreement, it would have to be returned to the signatories for renegotiation. That approach is one which must always be followed and never abandoned. Although the approach to the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement was correct, we have to say that once again the Government of Canada failed in its implementation. Thank goodness an all-Party committee decided to take the Government to task and make it live up to its obligations. We grabbed government Members by their shirt collars and gave them a good shaking, and they responded with some protest by saying that they had lived up to the legal obligations but may have betrayed the spirit of it a little. They betrayed the spirit more than a little. In any event, it demonstrates why there is so much suspicion and hesitancy to engage with parliamentarians and with Governments in these kinds of agreements.

If there is difficulty in that respect, how much more is there when it is done unilaterally, or when we pretend that there has been some kind of consultative process when something has already been put in place and we just allow briefs to be presented and viewpoints to be expressed and call it consultation?

Another example of the approach which I am advocating is the Cree-Naskapi Act. That Act was not unilaterally devised by the Government with the help of private Members of the House of Commons. It was worked out over a very long period of time, clause by clause, with government officials and officials of the Cree-Naskapi peoples. When the Bill came before the House, we knew that what we were doing was ratifying the agreement. That is the way we must proceed at all times in the future.

Another example would be the agreement which was reached with the Committee for Original Peoples Entitlement, the so-called COPE Agreement, and the people who live in the Mackenzie Delta and the Beaufort Sea area of northern Canada.

Through the various stages of Bill C-31—and it has been a lengthy and difficult exercise—we thought we were allowing some room for consultation. I have nothing but praise for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin. He did everything he could to accommodate as many witnesses as possible. I have only praise for his work and his leadership in that committee. However, the kind of consultation we have is not the same as negotiation leading to agreement. This is why in the Indian community of Canada "consultation" is a stained word, a word which we can hardly use, a word which has become suspect.

When Bill C-31 has been passed, we will have driven out, if I can use such language, an unclean spirit from the Indian Act. That unclean spirit is sex discrimination. St. Luke's Gospel tells us what these unclean spirits do when they are driven out. According to St. Luke, they tend to pass through waterless places seeking rest but they find none. Then they return to their place of origin and find that everything is swept and in order, at which point they say: "Oh, look how everything is clean and orderly", and invite in seven of their friends. That is a very unusual mid-eastern biblical way to describe a problem of today. What St. Luke is saying, very simply in modern language, is that depending on how we proceed to solve problems, the end result may prove to be a state which is worse than the original situation. I hope I did not lose you on that, Mr. Speaker.

Let me deal with it from another point of view. In my first year as a Member of Parliament, I met in the corridor upstairs a Cabinet Minister whom I greatly respected. He supposed that I had come down here to solve the problems of my constituents and of Canadians in general. I told him that that was my hope, and he gave me a word of advice. He said: "You will probably discover at the end of your career, whenever that is, that for every problem you solved or attempted to solve, in all likelihood you have created seven more". I thought of that when I read in the newspaper this morning about an Indian woman who had lost her status through marriage and was reported to have said that it was unfortunate that the discriminatory provisions and the Government's attempt to correct them have caused hostility and deep divisions within Indian communities. Then she went on to say: "We are all victims of a very bad law, and it is going to take 10 years of healing".

I believe deeply and passionately that our colonizing measures and attempts to deal with Indian people must end. The policies of termination, assimilation and mainstreaming must halt. It is time to recognize fully and unequivocally, without any hesitation, the right of Indian people to self-government, to govern with the consent of their own people and to govern being responsible to their own people. We want them to participate in Confederation; we want them to be partners in Confederation. They have been kept out from the beginning. We want them to participate, but their participation in our Confederation, as I emphasized earlier, should be by way of negotiation leading to agreement. Let us honour those agreements when we make them. Let us not hedge, fudge, legalize, squirm and wiggle our way out. Let us make honest and good agreements and stand by them. That is the way Indian First Nations and Indian people want to participate in our Confederation.

In any event, we must proceed on the basis of Government to Government. That may sound a little incongruous because we are talking about our Government, which is big and powerful, in comparison with many Governments of Indian First Nations, which are small, but surely that is not an argument against dealing Goverment to Government. After all, we do not hesitate to go to Washington, to Moscow or to any other nation much larger than our own, to deal Government to Government for the benefit of our people and their people at the same time. That is the way in which we must proceed.

● (1600)

When we recognize that Indian self-government is the only way that we can proceed in living together with the Indian people of this country, then we have to recognize at the same time that the right to control their own membership is an essential aspect of Indian self-government. It is a cornerstone of Indian self-government; it is the underpinning of self-government. If you cannot control your own membership then what does self-government mean?

The process whereby we decide who is and who is not an Indian must cease. We cannot go on categorizing Indian people into all these various divisions, arrangements and a range and varieties of groups and sub-groups. When one thinks about it, does it not offend one's sense of human rights to do this to the first citizens of Canada, to divide them up into all these groups as if they were exhibits in a zoo, to put them in these categories with a title of status or non-status, in all of these various divisions that I mentioned earlier? It is repugnant; it violates my sense of human rights, and I am sure the other Hon. Members of this House feel the same way. The constant meddling and interfering in the internal matters of Indian First Nations must stop, and it must stop now.

Let me say, for the benefit of Members who may think otherwise, that those who within the Indian community oppose this Bill are not opposing it because they want to see sex discrimination continue; on the contrary. Within the Indian community there is opposition to this Bill because they see it as based upon faulty premises whereby we proceed to solve problems which belong to us and which have been created by us at the expense of the Indian people.

The community hearings and the debates in this House on Bill C-31 have been spirited, vigorous and often emotional. There is one question that will continue to be in my mind, which is, has any real light been shed on the issue of Indian rights? Do we understand even a little bit better now than we did before? Within my own caucus we have many meetings, and I know that there are now many members of my caucus who had never before acquainted themselves with this issue who now have the beginnings of some comprehension, and for that I am grateful. I am sure that there are other members of the commitee who had not been immersed in this problem for a long period of time who also began to understand and to appreciate the significance of Indian rights.

Have we learned enough, as the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East suggested yesterday, so that we will not be back here again in the near future chasing ourselves down the very same dark and dead-end valley? It is time for a new day. It is time, as the Minister said, to put all this behind us and move into the future when we will recognize the right of Indian self-government and their right to determine their membership. When we recognize those rights, then we can no longer go on interfering, meddling and creating problems, and in trying to solve them, creating more problems.

May I say to you, Your Honour, let there be light.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the sex discrimination in the Indian Act, Bill C-31 has finally moved to redress a long-standing wrong against Indian women and against the Indian community. Like most of our legislation, it continues to be written in sexually exclusive language. I think we need to remember the words of the philosopher that "the limits of my language are the limits of my world". If we use sexually exclusive language, then we are limiting the world of over one half of the population of Canada. I believe it is time for the Parliament of Canada to clean up all of its Acts, including the Indian Act, to use sexually inclusive language. I am pleased to understand that there is a committee working with the Department of Justice on this issue. I think it is important to flag it right at the beginning.

I first raised this issue on March 5, 1981, when the Sandra Lovelace case was before the United Nations, and other parliamentarians had raised the issue before that. In 1981, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. John Munro, indicated to the United Nations that Canada would soon be introducing legislation to end the discrimination and that this legislation would give bands the ability to pass by-laws on membership. He promised that this legislation would be introduced by mid-1981. Instead, the Liberal Government waited until June of 1984 before introducing Bill C-47. With only two weeks to go before recess, the Government pushed the Bill through as a final attempt to redress the issue. Indian witnesses had only a few hours to address the Bill. Yet, with a lot of pressure from the Liberal Government, the Bill did pass through the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it passed through this House on the last day of our sitting, with all-Party support. Then it was stopped in the Senate.

Between the Sandra Lovelace case in 1981 and the Liberal Bill C-47 in 1984, we were given a steady diet of leaked government memoranda and secret documents supplemented by regular statements and press releases that promised action. When the Liberal solution, Bill C-47, finally did come, it raised many problems for all concerned. The Bill was so poorly written that the committee had to make some basic changes simply to make it consistent. The Bill ignored the consensus that had been reached earlier that year between the Native Women's Association of Canada and the Assembly of First Nations when they met in Edmonton. The Government said that it had not had time to talk to either group about that proposal. The Minister responsible at that time for the status of women, the Hon. Judy Erola, went even further and described the AFN/Native Women's Association consensus as inadequate.

The Liberal Bill, Mr. Speaker, made absolutely no provision, nor does this Bill, for band control of membership, but instead used blood line provisions to decide band membership. It made no provision for providing the necessary funds to meet the needs of reinstated members. The Liberal Government, in fact, could not even provide Members of the House with realistic figures of the costs. Estimates ranged between $50 million and $250 million. Increasing funding to Indian bands to meet the needs was to be at the Government's initiative, and as the Liberals had been in power through the years when Indian conditions deteriorated, it is hard to believe that the Liberals would have provided the necessary funding.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday the Liberals and Conservatives voted together to defeat my motion that would have recognized the right of Indian band councils to make by-laws controlling the residency on reserves of non-Indians that would not have jeopardized the right of any band member to reside on the reserve. Liberals and Conservatives supported the clause giving band councils the right to control the residency not only of non-Indians but also of band members.

What hypocrisy! A year ago, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development was dealing with Bill C-47, the Liberal Bill on the same subject, and Clause 8 of Bill C-47 gave residency rights to non-Indian spouses. I moved for its deletion, Mr. Speaker, because I believed then, as I believe now, that Indian bands should have the right to determine the residency of non-Indians on reserves. My motion was defeated by the same group of Liberals and Conservatives who defeated my other motion yesterday. Last year they refused to recognize the right of band councils to determine residency for non-Indians. Yesterday they wanted the band councils to have the right to control residency, even the residency of band members. I find that inconsistency very hard to understand.

In the voting yesterday we realized one of the reasons for which there were four years of procrastination by the Liberal Government. The Liberals could not make up their minds where they stood on the issue. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East abstained from voting yesterday. He said that he did not like the process which had been followed. I remember some years ago when an issue arose which no one in the New Democratic Party liked. I suggested that we might abstain from voting. Stanley Knowles looked at me and said: "Failure to vote when you have the opportunity to vote is a sin against the Holy Ghost for which there is no forgiveness." At the time I thought it was one of Stanley's little jokes. However, I think there was a serious intent behind what he said. When we stand for election, we are taking responsibility to make certain basic decisions. We do not have the option to opt out.

All of us who have been involved in the issue which deals with Section 12(1)(b) and the complex issues which surround it, know that it is not a great issue in which to be involved, especially if we are sensitive to charges of colonialism, meddling, racism and genocide. I think it was General Westmorland who once said about the Vietnam war that it was the wrong war, at the wrong place, at the wrong time. But that is the war in which the United States fought. The question of Section 12(1)(b) is the issue on which we must decide. We cannot simply opt out on it like Hamlet, who said: "The time is out of joint o cursed spite that ever I was born to set it right".

We cannot pick and choose our issues. Section 12(1)(b) and Section 12(1)(a)(iv) are on the agenda because they were left as a bitter legacy by the previous Government. Those in the House who want to complain that Bill C-31 meddles with the rights of bands to determine their membership must remember that every day of procrastination which we had under the previous Government meant that Canadian law was meddling with the right of Indian bands to determine their membership. We were meddling in Section 12(1)(b) which infringed on the right of Indian people to belong to their own nation. To attempt to clean that up should not be characterized as meddling. We are attempting to remove a very meddlesome law, and that removal is long overdue.

I agree with the basic compromise which is attempted by Bill C-31 between the right of bands to determine their membership and the right of people to be returned to band membership, if they had lost it unjustly through Section 12(1)(b) or through Section 12(1)(a)(iv). I agree with the compromise which recognizes the right of bands to develop their membership criteria and to seek ways in which other people can be brought into membership, or to provide for the future for people to be excluded from membership, if that is what the bands feel is required.

During the course of the Bill, the Minister made a number of changes which reflect the concerns which were expressed by witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The changes also reflect the concerns of the members of the committee. I proposed an amendment in committee which was in line with a great deal of the testimony which we heard. The amendment would have provided for the reinstatement of all Indian people who had been enfranchised, regardless of the reason. While the amendment was defeated in committee, the Minister later introduced a similar amendment. I believe it is a measure which improves the Bill, and I commend him for it.

Unfortunately, the Government did not act upon another amendment which would have opened up the process of registration to those who were missed by Indian agents a number of years ago. Particularly in the northern sections of the provinces, there are many Indian people who were out on the trap line, hunting or food gathering when the process of registration took place. Therefore, entire families were missed in the registration process. While the Minister has the power to register them under the present Act, I think it would have been an important step if Bill C-31 had recognized that power explicitly and had given the Minister the encouragement to register the people who were unjustly missed in times past. The same amendment would have allowed all who have band membership, under Indian band membership codes, to be considered status Indians under Canadian law. The recognition of the right of Indian nations to determine who is a status Indian would have been an important addition to the Bill. I regret that the Government did not see fit to move on that matter.

The Bill provides for the Registrar to accept oral testimony, at his discretion, which would not normally be acceptable in a court of law, in regard to registration cases. That is an important step in allowing those who should rightfully be registered to get their name on the status list. I am pleased that the amendment was accepted.

We can see how complex the issue is from the effect which removing discrimination would have on different generations. If the children of reinstated women marry non-status Indians, they will not be able to transmit status to their children, even though their cousins will be able to do so. That is unacceptable. The Government should have accepted amendments which would have removed that continuing discrimination by generation.

I set out a number of amendments which attempted to establish basic criteria for accountability. I believe that most Indian bands want to include an appeal process in their membership criteria. In addition, I believe that all Indian bands want to include all members of their community in the formation of membership rules. The Nuu-chah-nulth Tribal Council spoke for a great many Indian nations across Canada when it said:

> Our position is that there are no non-status Nuu-chah-nulth. Only death can bring an end to Nuu-chah-nulth blood. This of course conflicts with Canadian law, and will continue to do so as long as we do not have our own governments, with their own resource base.

They definitely want to include all people in the process. I am confident that most bands will want to do that. While I regret that we did not protect the minority who might belong to bands which do not choose to do that, I am glad that the Minister at least introduced an amendment which made it clear that band councils can involve the full membership of the band in setting out band membership criteria.

I think it is important to remember that we are dealing with 100 years of history. In that 100 years, many Indian systems of accountability were deliberately broken down by the agents of the Government. Because our Government has broken down Indian systems of accountability, we cannot simply walk away from the system, say that we are involved in decolonizing and that all we have to do is to sign our name to a document. It is more complex than that. I would have liked to have seen the Government include some of my amendments which provided for basic appeal processes and some basic accountability. Some bands might not wish to include it, but I believe most bands will do that of their own accord.

• (1620)

One of the most important amendments which, unfortunately, was ruled out of order because it infringes on the Government's financial prerogatives, would have provided funding and land for reinstated band members. The Minister talked about the three principles on which this Bill was constructed. I maintain there is a fourth principle which should have been included, that is, the principle of adequate funding and land for reinstated band members. The Minister talked about the need for reconciliation, and now is the time when reconciliation is badly needed. I want to emphasize that reconciliation will become impossible if government funds are not made available to deal with this situation. Witness after witness emphasized this point, yet the Government was not willing to write a basic financial provision into the legislation.

This is a great weakness in the Bill. The Minister in testimony admitted the appalling nature of Indian conditions across Canada. Those Hon. Members in the House right now are fully aware of the unemployment on Indian reserves. It is 80 per cent and 90 per cent in some cases. We are aware of the terrible housing and health statistics, the suicide rate, the incident of alcoholism and family violence. We know that these problems cannot be solved simply by throwing money at them, but we also know, or we should know and should recognize, that they will be made worse if we are not willing to provide the basic financial resources necessary to deal with them.

The Government's track record on providing necessary funding is so poor that Indian nations are quite correct in being very concerned and suspicious about any increase in on-reserve population. Budget shortfalls have been common for years, so they are not the specific problem of this Government. But the Indian nations have a special concern now because the lack of financial guarantees in Bill C-31 coincides with the secret Conservative task force studying Indian Affairs budgets. This is the same backroom approach which the Liberals used, and it is time, I think, Mr. Speaker, that we opened up a funding process instead of continuing to confine it to the back rooms.

The Indian people should be brought directly into the budget process. In April, Members of Parliament and the Indian people first learned some of the details of what was cynically called in the Government's own document, "Operation Buffalo Jump" of the 1980s. That is the Conservative's secret report on how they could make cuts in Indian Affairs and other native programs. "Operation Buffalo Jump" attempts to walk away from the trust in and responsibility to the Indian people of the federal Government. The report, constructed totally in the back rooms without any Indian involvement, casts a very serious shadow on this Government's credibility on native issues in general and on this Bill in particular.

The Minister has given his personal word that the funds will be forthcoming to deal with any increased expenditures arising out of Bill C-31 on a case by case basis. But, Mr. Speaker, the personal word is the kind of style we should have left behind with John Munro and the Liberals. Personal word is not enough. It does not work. Ministers come and go, and in the meantime the Indian people get stuck with paying the bill.

We can look at the betrayal of senior citizens in the present Budget. The Indian people are aware of that as well. That makes them wonder very seriously how much the Government's commitment to provide financing for their needs really means. They have seen the Government's betrayal of senior citizens and wonder whether they are next. They saw the Nielsen task force working away while the Prime Minister, (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) were meeting with Indian people at the First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights and the Constitution.

'Operation Buffalo Jump' is a reprint of the 1969 Liberal White Paper. It amounts to nothing more than a cruel blueprint to use Indians as the shock troops in the Government's fiscal policy. First, we send in the waves of senior citizens, then follow the Indians. It is going to be the same kind of massacre we saw at Galipoli. Even the name of the report 'Operation Buffalo Jump' is cynical, racist and objectionable on that basis.

With the appointment of a new Minister there was hope that Indian people would receive a better hearing from the Government. The land claims policy was going to be reviewed. Indian people now wonder where that review might take them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but by virtue of our Standing Orders, only the Minister moving the motion and the critic of the Official Opposition has unlimited time. The Hon. Member's time is up unless the Hon. Member asks for consent to continue.

Mr. Manly: It is customary, Mr. Speaker, for the first speaker in the opposition Party to have extra time, and I would ask for that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to grant the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) extra time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Manly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank Hon. Members for this courtesy.

Land claims policies are now being reviewed and we wonder where such reviews will take us. Indian people are wondering where they are going to end up with the reviewed land claims policy. Will the Government address the serious need of Indian peoples for land, or will it simply take more away from the Indian population and give it to large resource companies, particularly in the North?

The Minister called for reconciliation. We agree with that call. This should be a time for reconciliation. I want to emphasize to the Minister and to all Hon. Members of the Government that the Government itself has to play a key role in that reconciliation. The provision of adequate financial resources is absolutely crucial if there is going to be reconciliation and not more difficulty.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the women who are going to be reinstated to band membership, and other people as well, have a great contribution to make to their own nations. I think that most Indian people across the country are looking forward to this with a sense of celebration. Even while I say that, I know that others are strongly opposed to it. But I believe there are a great many Indian people who look forward to it with a sense that they will be reunited in band membership with their sisters and daughters, nieces and cousins, and this is an important step. They have a contribution to make and they are going to be able to make it.

The Assembly of First Nations, when it appeared before the committee, said, "We are glad to re-state our pleasure that the Government has moved dramatically toward the position that the Assembly of First Nations has put forward in the past. There has been a real attempt to recognize First Nations' self-determination of citizenship". It went on to say that there were still elements of distrust, however, in parts of this Bill, the first most basic criticism of its provision being:

> The limitations on band control of membership in the clauses on compulsory reinstatement and in the clauses on acquired rights represent a final paternalistic or colonial thrust by the Government of Canada.

● (1630)

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that this is not one of the points on which the Government was prepared to move. I can only presume that the Assembly of First Nations feels a great disappointment that the Government was not prepared to accept that suggestion. They continue:

> A third basic point is that this reform must not be at the expense of the ongoing constitutional process. The fundamental principle of the First Nations' self-determination must receive constitutional recognition, and with it the basic right of self-determination of citizenship. On this understanding we can proceed with proper reform legislation.

The constitutional process has bogged down, at least temporarily, and I urge the Government to get on with it and make resources available so it can move ahead with the constitutional processs. The Indian people see that as absolutely essential to recognition of their right to self-government. They continue:

> A final basic point is our continuing concern for adequate arrangements in relation to reserve lands, band funds, program funding.

I regret that the Government has not moved to provide adequate arrangements for program funding, band funds or adequate lands. As New Democrats, we want to see Indian self-government recognized with the proper funds in order to make decision making at the local level a reality. We have seen the First Ministers meet time and again to discuss aboriginal rights, only to restate, like Premier Bennett, that they do not understand what the term means.

Bill C-31 is a small step toward redressing some of the injustices of the past. It is a step toward recognizing the right of Indian peoples toward deciding their own membership. It is a small step, an important step, and I want to commend the Minister for taking it.

We have not washed our hands of this issue yet. The last part of Bill C-31 calls for a report. The Minister has promised that report will be very detailed and will be referred to the committee. I am sure the committee will want to examine it closely. The impact of this legislation on bands all across Canada demands the very closest scrutiny on the part of the Government and members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I am pleased to see that the Government has included that amendment. This is an important element of what we are attempting to do in Bill C-31, but, in conclusion, we cannot feel that great about it. It is a small step which some Indian peoples see as a negative, others see as a positive but not going far enough. However, it is a step in the right direction and I want to commend the Minister and his Government for taking it.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a Member who has an interest in this Bill and as one who served as chairman of the committee. As anyone who serves as chairman of a committee knows, it is often difficult to express your views or question witnesses. The chairman's job is to attempt to keep members of the committee on course, keep order, and run the meeting in the best way possible.

It is often difficult for Members to put up with the personal tactics which a particular member may use in committee. I want to thank my colleagues on the committee for putting up with those tactics which I may have used from time to time but which I felt were helpful in our attempts to deal with this Bill. I recognize that as chairman you make few friends when you have to deal with a particular question. I also realize that being chairman of a committee is a very important responsibility, one which I take seriously and took seriously when I assumed that responsibility. As chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I know that we attempted to retain the reputation that committee has had over the years of finding solutions to the problems of Indian people in an impartial manner.

In the past the Committee has had very little legislation of a controversial nature brought before it. As a result, members of the Indian community looked highly upon the committee as a group of people who were helpful. Indeed, we were helpful over the years in certain areas, as was pointed out by the Hon.

Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). He is a past chairman of the Committee and he acted very responsibly and took his duties seriously. We assisted in the matter of the James Bay Agreement and other problems across the country. As everyone knows, we are popular when we take on the bureaucrats for the way they spend money given by Parliament to the Minister. However, from time to time this House gives the committee legislation which does not make us too popular with the people we have to represent.

I noted that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior said that we had something analogous to gunpowder. I looked at it as kind of having a tornado by the tail because it was always twisting. As we brought witnesses before the committee, they gave emotional testimony as to how this Bill was going to affect them as communities and as individuals, and then another witness or group of witnesses came before us and said that if we did that, it would affect them in such a way and we simply could not take that advice.

Each day we went through that kind of testimony from various bands across this country and their representative organizations. The committee tried to take that testimony seriously. We tried to deal with it in a manner which we felt would best accommodate the various interests and yet not harm the communities too much. I want to commend the members of that committee for doing what I feel was an excellent job. I also want to say to the Minister that we appreciate the work he did. He was available when we needed him, he was flexible, and yet he tenaciously stuck to his principles. Knowing that the Cabinet and the Minister had certain principles they were not going to deviate from was helpful to the Committee.

As we look back over the history of the past 100 years, we know that governments were reluctant to deal with these problems because they were difficult. This Minister inherited a problem which had to be dealt with because we adopted a Constitution and society said it was time to deal with this problem. Bill C-31 was brought to the House and went through various stages, and we are now in the final stages of passing those changes in the House of Commons.

As was stated by the previous speaker, it is not that those who opposed the Bill are for discrimination. That is not the case at all. The concern is with regard to the impact of this legislation. There is concern about people who will return to their communities after not having been there for a long time. There is concern about the resources that have been available to try to build a life for the people who stayed in the community. There is concern about whether the Government will provide sufficient resources if new people decide to move to the reservations.

● (1640)

I know that many individuals here would not be happy if the Government attempted to impose changes on their community without proper negotiation and settlement beforehand. In committee and over the years we attempted to consult with the people involved. Parliament acted with good intentions. However, I agree with the Member for Cochrane-Superior that it is not the same as negotiation and agreement. We are dealing with a jurisdiction that has never been given up by the Indian people of the country. One wonders how a legislator can accept responsibility for them. Yet, laws which have been passed in Parliament have assumed that jurisdiction. They have assumed that the Parliament of Canada had responsibility for the Indian people of the country.

I know that there will be difficulties with regard to the removal of discrimination and that problems will be caused for bands as people return to the communities. I also recognize that the starting point for allowing Indian people to resume responsibility for their own government is contained in this Bill.

I enjoyed the year and one half that I spent touring the country on the special committee on Indian self-government. We went from province to province, reserve to reserve, and community to community listening to testimony. We then worked diligently to put that testimony into a report. Now that Parliament has dealt with this law, I hope that the Government can move quickly to be as helpful as possible to Indian bands across the country. I hope that the Government can move quickly to return the responsibility for self-government, which they never gave up, to the Indian people.

The message that I want to leave here today is that I hope the committee can now get on with that work. I believe that we have done the best that we can to deal with this legislation in a fair manner. Members from all sides of the House have contributed to it. Amendments have been accepted from all sides of the House in an attempt to make the Bill even better. I agree with the Minister and other Members who have spoken that now is the time to reconcile the differences and to get on with the very important job of restoration of self-government to Indian people across the country.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two comments in connection with this matter. As a Member of Parliament I represent three tribes of Indians; the Blackfoot, the Sarcee, and the Stony. I believe that a Member should reflect the thinking of the people who send him here. My Indian constituents are strongly opposed to the Bill. They look upon it with fear and trembling.

They say that they signed Treaty No. 7 with the Queen and accept that as gospel. The Queen gave them the right to operate their own reserves without outside interference. They are the master in the reserve, the same as a father and mother are masters of their own home. They object to the assumption that we now give them something which they believe they already have. The chiefs and band councils of all three of these tribes look upon the passage of this Bill with fear and trembling.

At present there is a lack of housing on the Sarcee reserve. The chief estimates that 500 people may come on to the reserve in addition to the 750 who live there now. What will the situation be? There is a lack of land. Will we create reserves within reserves, or will we extend the reserves? Many of these problems have not been answered, and they are worrying our people.

The bottom line is that the Indians whom I represent want to preserve their culture. It is a question of survival within the realm of their own decrees and customs. They want self-government within our nation, but they want it to be in the Indian way on each reserve without interference by other governments or organizations that do not like the customs of our native people.

Members of the Blackfoot, Sarcee, and Stony tribes are good Canadian citizens. They have excellent statesmen. When the law is passed, they will endeavour to live by it. We must all co-operate to the highest degree because there is a possibility of tremendous strife developing when we categorize the people who will live on a reserve. It will be a challenge to make this Bill work for those who presently disagree with it.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on third reading of Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Indian Act, I would like to reiterate some of the comments that I made at first reading stage and to relate some of the lessons that I have learned and some of the observations that I have gleaned in the committee process of examination and debate of the Bill. As far as possible I would like to avoid repeating those comments that have been made by previous speakers and to try to confine myself to my own assessment of the impact of this legislation and the challenge that it poses for this and future Parliaments. Let there be no doubt that this revision of the Indian Act, by its very nature, is in no way a final solution to the very many difficulties that this institution's habit of legislating for Indian people what they should rightly and legitimately legislate for themselves has caused.

I believe that I will be the only new Member to speak on this Bill. I am fully conscious of the responsibility that rests upon me by virtue of representing more Indian bands than any other Member of the House. As Bill C-31 stands it is, at best, a mechanism for a transition which it starts but is not going to accomplish fully. I believe the Minister himself said that it does not correct all problems, and I certainly support that assessment. However, as he observed, it does represent the first revision of the Indian Act in a generation. It is a sad comment on the process in which we are engaged that it cannot represent the last revision for a generation but does in fact, in itself, contain the seeds of the necessity for future revisions.

● (1650)

A favourable aspect of the Bill is that it requires a report back to Parliament in two years on the impact of the Bill. I am hopeful that in two years time, while some Members may not relish the prospect, some of the imperfections in the Bill will have made themselves manifest by their effects and we will in fact be in a position to correct some of the problems which this Bill will create by its passage. Problems are never stamped out. They may be stamped, but only into many smaller reflections of the major problem which existed in the first place.

I am pleased that the Minister, in the last few days before the Bill came back to the House, introduced a measure to empower bands to pass legislation on the regulation of intoxicants on reserves. I believe that one of the unwelcome consequences of the Charter of Rights was that the bands were essentially stripped of their power to regulate intoxicants. I am glad that this legislation empowers bands afresh with that ability to regulate intoxicants.

At the same time, as the Minister observed, the Bill places band control of membership in the hands of the bands. It certainly does not place in their hands the full control of membership that bands should have. Let me quote from a resolution of the Chiefs of Ontario who state that Bill C-31 should "recognize the exclusive right of First Nations Governments to determine their own citizenship". As we know, that exclusive right is at some variance with the need to put Bill C-31 into a form where it does not discriminate against those females who married outside the band. Nevertheless, we must indeed hope that this is the last time that the House of Commons will see an abrogation, because it is an abrogation, of the rights of First Nations to determine their own citizenship.

I believe that I learned something from my daughter a couple of weeks ago. When discussing matters of citizenship and ethnicity and race, my daughter insisted that she was fully Chinese because her mother is Chinese. Perhaps she has grasped a truth that had escaped the House of Commons for many years—the dominant role of the mother in the transmission of a person's identity. I believe it is justly said that morality can never be fully legislated. Today, we are trying to legislate identity which also cannot be fully controlled or predicted by legislation. Therefore, our effort is doomed to a partial failure at the very least.

The process which we went through in committee examination of Bill C-31 was, in some ways, a tragedy. That is not meant as a criticism of any Member of the House. However, we were negotiating under that deadline set by the Charter of Rights. While we missed that deadline by a couple of weeks, the legitimate objective of the Government was to avoid the court challenges to the Indian Act which would have inevitably resulted had the legislation not been passed.

I agree with my colleagues who have said that there was not enough consultation in the framing of the amendments to Bill C-31 and in the framing of the Bill itself and not enough consultation in the committee process. We were denied the opportunity to seat representatives of the aboriginal organizations as members of the committee for the process of examining Bill C-31. That is an opportunity that I would have liked to have seen taken advantage of. Heaven forbid that we should go again to a major revision of legislation that so dramatically impacts the lives of Indian people without the special seats reserved on the committee for Indian people in order for their leaders to represent the people's views and needs before the committee.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) spoke of the way in which the Bill will create classes of Indians. I would charge the Minister with the objective in future revisions that we should be able to eliminate the classifications of Indian people to the point where there will just be the one classification, namely those people who are Indians and members of a band and who are recognized as Indians and band members by virtue of the due process operation of the membership code of the band to which they belong.

There are major funding issues that have not been addressed in the Bill. They have been touched on. Other issues include population on reserves, equity, delivery of the same programs to all members of a particular band residing on the reserve, the inadequacy of housing, the differential way in which people are to be reinstated which leads to those different classes of Indians that have been mentioned.

We must indeed hope that this is the last time that legislation will further divide Indian people and that all future legislation will be designed to lessen those divisions rather than create new divisions and in some ways also perpetuate old divisions, which is what we have seen.

Let me quote further from the resolution of the Chiefs of Ontario regarding Bill C-31. "Each First Nation will establish membership codes. Each First Nation shall establish an appeal mechanism". I believe that the commitment of Indian people to the establishment of membership codes and appeal mechanisms is of paramount importance because it is a commitment that is made, regardless of what action is taken or not taken by Parliament.

This is a point on which I would like to expand further. The fact is that Indian nations today are formulating their own membership codes or citizenship codes. They will be doing this obviously with an eye to legislation and an eye to the decisions of Parliament. However, they will be doing it in the free exercise of their independent right. As the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) observes, they never abrogated their free independent right to determine their own citizenship. Indian people have come a very long way since the time when Government was personified as the "Great White Mother" in the treaties. I use the term "Great White Mother" advisedly because the majority of Indian people in Canada today are in treaties that were signed in the time of Queen Victoria. Indian people today are very well cognizant of what the federal Government can do to their lives and what the federal Government is not able to do to their lives. It is in appreciation of those parameters that they are, themselves, developing those membership codes.

I received a telephone call from Chief Charlie Nash of one of the bands in my riding, instancing the reservations that the Chiefs of Ontario had placed in their resolution. I would like to have read the entire resolution into the record, but it would take too long to do so.

● (1700)

I understand there is in my riding today a petition circulating against Bill C-31 instancing, of course, the degree to which Bill C-31 abrogates the inherent life of Indian First Nations to determine their own membership. Nevertheless, I think I have to say that we must remember the dictum, I believe of Clausewitz, Das Politik ist der Pratik von das Möglichkeit, translated normally into English as politics is the art of the possible.

We have been presented in the continued operation of the former Indian Act, the way in which it divided Indian people and the way in which it controlled virtually every aspect of life in a fashion that otherwise would not be permissible in a democratic society, with a Gordian knot, such that Alexander solved by completely severing it. That is not an option possible to us.

We must in the best spirit and the best faith possible do our best to unravel that knot. It is in the context of unravelling that knot that I would say Bill C-31, for all its deficiencies and drawbacks, is nevertheless a first step that has been worthwhile taking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1985-86 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 28, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of State (Finance)) that Bill C-51, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks concerning this Bill and the Government's request to the House for borrowing authority as it relates to the Government's programs for this year. Before I get to the subject matter of the Bill, let me say that the Canadian public is rallying behind the demand by senior citizens not to have their pensions deindexed. I believe this feeling goes far beyond that one policy of the Government as announced in the Budget.

Let us examine what happened as far as the Government's spending program is concerned for this year. Certain decisions were made last November and last October in an effort to reduce the amount of money required by the Government of Canada in the normal operation of the Government. I refer specifically to actions that did not receive very much attention nationally and that did not receive very much attention in the House of Commons. For example, when the decision was made in an effort to save money so that the books of the Government of Canada would not look, as it claimed, all that bad, the Government took certain actions that impacted on people in such a way as to be clear discrimination against people of certain ages.

It was decided in order to save x number of dollars to use the income of a person from his or her separation of employment. In other words, when somebody today, as of March 31 gone by, receives an amount of money from his or her employer, whether it be separation pay, accumulated sick leave benefits, no matter what it is, that person in receiving that money would impact on other federal Government programs, specifically, unemployment insurance. If you receive say, $2,000 on separation of your employment and if you were eligible to receive $200 a week unemployment insurance upon separation, then the new policy says you cannot receive it until after the first 10 weeks. When you look at that as a cumulative effect on somebody's income he or she received after being employed, you discover that in a great many cases people lost as much as $12,500 because you have to take into account what that person would have been eligible to receive and what that person now loses as it relates to payments upon separation of employment.

If that were not bad enough in trying to save money for the Government of Canada, what the Government did was to say we will also take into account all payments received in the form of pensions. How many thousands upon thousands of people take early retirement? How many people in the Armed Forces leave after 20 years, go to work after that and now, although they paid into unemployment insurance, they cannot draw it because of the measures taken by the Government of Canada in the last November statement in an effort to save money, in an effort, so the Government of Canada says, not to have to borrow as much, so as to reduce the deficit.

What we had was a cumulative effect of these measures. First, if you worked all of your life, you always had in Canada that benefit given to you that you paid in all your life. You could draw a year's unemployment insurance if you so wished. That was taken away because you now take into account your severance pay, your cumulative sick leave pay, in fact all payments made by the employer upon separation of employment. Then the Government in the same measure said that all pensions received will be taken into account as income for unemployment insurance benefits.

You can imagine someone who has worked for the Government of Canada for years receiving a small pension on leaving, receiving separation pay, losing cumulatively $12,500 and then not being allowed to draw unemployment insurance after having paid it. A millionaire who could have investment income, drawing income from the bank or investment is not affected. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the Government of Canada said that only pension incomes will be taken into account.

The Government of Canada talked about old age pensions and said it was going to deindex those to a certain degree, but that was only one thing in a long list of things that have been done since the new Government of Canada took office. There are things that were not talked about very much, not discussed very much, not talked about in the committees and not examined very much, but the person who is ceasing his employment after many years knows the effects compared to previous years.

As well, along the same trend, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada took certain actions which I suppose look good on paper but which affect people to a very great degree. In some cases I do not believe the Minister in charge of that Department really knew what the effect would be down the line. I will give you as an example, Sir, the reduction in the home repair program given by the Minister as being a way of reducing the deficit, a way of reducing expenditures in his Department.

● (1710)

Many offices throughout the country were delivery agents for RRAP and existed on income from the Government of Canada for processing applications forms. In other words, delivery agents received about $500 for processing an application form under that program. In some cases it was $450, in other cases it was $500, and in northern areas it was over $1,000 for each application form. The offices with their clerks, inspectors and managers existed on that income. Whether the delivery agent was a national anti-poverty organization, a provincial housing authority or a municipality, that is how the system worked. The Government of Canada came along, said that it wanted to save money and chopped funds from RRAP. No one thought about—and certainly departmental officials did not think about it—what would happen after the amount was reduced by the Minister and it was realized that the income from the processing of applications would not be adequate to keep those offices going.

What have we seen over the past few months? We have seen these offices close and delivery agents disappear. We have heard provincial administrations saying that they cannot make up the difference to maintain those offices. Now we see vast areas of the country, which were covered before, not being covered. The people involved have been asking for a calculation of the cut, how the amount was arrived at. Nationally it is a 25 per cent cut, whereas in Newfoundland it is 44 per cent.

Let us look at the absolute inaction on the part of the Government of Canada as it relates to certain things which should be done. In the name of reducing the deficit, the Government has not even looked at them. One example would be the federal minimum wage and its effect on poor people. On January 1, 1985, at least five provinces increased their minimum wage, and a couple of provinces since then have done so. There is an unwritten rule—it is not in legislation nor in the regulations—which says that the federal minimum wage will be equal to the average across the country.

The federal minimum wage applies to federal property and to all agencies, organizations and groups regulated under the Canada Labour Code; in other words, radio stations and various other operations. There is a reason for that. We do not want a janitor, for example, to receive a higher minimum wage for working for a private business one week than he would receive for working under contract in a federal government building or for an agency controlled by the federal Government.

What has happened since the new Progressive Conservative Government took over? Nothing has happened in terms of the federal minimum wage. It has not moved one cent. What has been the result of that? If we look across the country, we see that the federal minimum wage is lower than the minimum wage of the provinces. In British Columbia, the minimum wage is about $3.65 per hour; in Alberta, $3.85; in Manitoba, $4.30 or $4.35; in Ontario, $4.00; in Quebec, which is the highest, $4.58 or $4.60; in New Brunswick, $4.20; in Nova Scotia, $4; in Newfoundland, $4; and in Prince Edward Island, $3.85. Probably for the first time in our history the federal minimum wage at $3.50 per hour is lower than the minimum wage of every provincial administration. What does this mean? It means, for example, that a security guard from Burns Security in Toronto can work at the Toronto International Airport and earn $3.50 per hour, whereas when he watches people going in and out of a private office building downtown, he can earn $4 per hour. Some people might chuckle at this, but it is a very serious matter in that it relates to people with very low incomes.

What will happen in terms of the student employment program this summer? What will happen if a student is referred to a project of an agency of the federal Government on federal property and receives the federal minimum wage, according to the guidelines, of $3.50 per hour? Such students will say: "My goodness, I hope I don't work for a federal government agency and end up with $3.50 per hour, because if I work for a provincial agency or private enterprise I will receive $4".

Perhaps that does not sound like much, but the difference increases in the Province of Manitoba with its minimum wage of $4.30 or $4.35 per hour or in the Province of Quebec, which has always had the highest minimum wage, at $4.58 or $4.60 per hour. That is a larger difference, it is a difference of over $1 per hour. Let us think about what that difference means to janitors and security guards who need every cent they can get, to people on low incomes, to people who can just barely make it, if they can, or to students who are saving in order to attend universities and colleges across Canada. For the first time the federal minimum wage has dropped drastically below the minimum wage of every province.

I have listened to remarks in the House concerning the Government following the policies of the Government of the United States. Some of us find it difficult to relate to the policies of the U.S. Government. For example, we find it difficult to understand why that Government took such a protectionist attitude last fall toward exports from Canada. We heard recently about problems with hogs, lumber and various other items. In the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in my riding and in the ridings of other Hon. Members, the Government of the United States, through its Department of Commerce, has placed quotas on our fish which has been cured, which has been salted. Most companies are paying a 16 per cent tariff. That is a policy of the U.S. Government, and the Government of Canada has done nothing to object to it. As a result of that great discrimination, people are required to post bonds in order to export products to the United States. This is the first time in our history that people involved in the salted fish industry have had to post bonds. There is a very important meeting going on today in which officials of the United States Government will decide whether the tariff will remain on salted fish.

• (1720)

I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that if that meeting does not produce the result of a cancellation of this improper tariff, if it does not result in having to cancel these bonds that are posted by exporters, he had better get on the first flight to Washington. He had better do that because this is happening with too great a frequency. This is happening in a great many areas of our economy.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) says that we are considering cutting off the commercial salmon fishery on the northeast coast of Newfoundland. He said that we have to consider it because the U.S. Government asked us last month to do it. Why? Because 1 per cent of the salmon that is caught commercially off the east and northeast coast of Newfoundland is supposed to be destined for U.S. waters. When we take into account the actions of the U.S. Government through its Department of Trade and Commerce and look at a request like that from the U.S. Government to cancel the commercial salmon fishery for Newfoundland, we know what we should do with the request from the U.S. Government.

I have not even reached the main purpose of my address here today. Again, this goes to illustrate the many things that this Government has done that adversely affect the ordinary person, the poor people, what it has done to cut services to the public and to cut down other pensions and disposable income. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, there are so many of these things that you cannot really get to the subject of your address. I am sure, however, there will be other opportunities that will arise when I can do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer).

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in support of Bill C-51, an Act to provide borrowing authority which has been introduced into the House by the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). The substance of this Bill is relatively straightforward. I shall therefore dwell only briefly on its specifics because I wish to address in greater detail the larger issues that it raises.

Last December the Government made a commitment to the opposition Parties that it would introduce a request for borrowing authority for the 1985-86 fiscal year within two weeks of its first Budget. It is a measure of the seriousness with which this Government approaches its fiscal responsibilities that this commitment was fulfilled when Bill C-51 was introduced within 24 hours of the May 23 Budget. This Bill will give the Government the necessary authority to borrow $18.2 billion for this current 1985-86 fiscal year. The first $16 billion of this figure will be used to supplement the $12 billion already borrowed earlier this year under the related borrowing Bill, C-11, thereby meeting the total of $28 billion in the 1985-86 financial requirements as set forth in the Budget.

The remaining $2.2 billion is needed to roll over the temporary borrowing authority that was obtained under Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act last February. It will be remembered that recourse to Section 39 was necessitated by the intransigence of the other place with respect to the timely passage of Bill C-11. This episode in the other place involving the deliberate delay by Liberal Senators of Bill C-11 is worth reiterating for the public record. Their irresponsible obstruction of a crucial piece of legislation cost Canadian taxpayers some $15 million. The whole event constituted a microcosm of the kind of fiscal mismanagement with which this country has been plagued for the last 16 years.

This bitter fact leads inevitably to the larger questions which arise out of this borrowing Bill, and surely there can be nothing larger than this country's annual and cumulative deficits, now the major component in government financial requirements and consequently the major reason for the incomprehensible figures involved in borrowing Bills such as this.

Let me begin my brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, on the deficit with an analogy. The major financial transaction in the lives of most Canadians usually centres around the purchase of a home. It is a transaction that usually involves tens of thousands of dollars and leaves the purchasers with a substantial mortgage to repay over a given number of years. The vast majority of Canadians will work long and hard to repay this debt as quickly and as diligently as they are able. Why? It does not take a financial genius to know that a state of perpetual indebtedness is not a preferred option. The home owner knows that his mortgage is simply a necessary means to a desirable end and the sooner this indebtedness is erased, the better off he will be. Moneys once channelled into principal and interest owed, and all too often more interest than principal, can then be used more profitably elsewhere. If, however, a home owner's annual expenses begin to exceed his income, then meeting his monthly mortgage payments becomes an increasingly difficult problem. If this unfortunate state of affairs continues for an appreciable length of time, the home will be lost.

It may be something of a quantum leap, Mr. Speaker, from the typical Canadian home owner with an average annual income and monthly payments on a $25,000, $50,000 or $75,000 mortgage to the monolithic Government of Canada with its multibillion dollars in yearly revenues and expenditures, but the same basic economic principles apply in each case. It is an indication of the severity of the financial situation facing this country that any Canadian home owner who had managed his personal finances in a manner in keeping with the federal Government's requirements over the past decade and a half would have long since defaulted on his mortgage, declared personal bankruptcy and found both himself and his children indebted for life to his creditors.

Such is the situation which confronts this Government. This is simply because any Government, just like any individual, which has allowed annual expenditures to far exceed its annual revenues and which must borrow with interest every year to try to make up the difference, simply digs itself into a deeper and deeper hole. We are in a hole that is about 16 years deep. We have had successive budget deficits since the early 1970s and they have led to an annual budgetary projected deficit of approximately $37 billion when we took office in September and and a net public debt of approximately $190 billion in the fiscal year 1985-86. Fortunately the actions in the November economic statement and the May Budget have reduced the projected deficit from $37 billion to $31.1 billion.

Permit me to look ahead just five and a half years to 1990. If we had not taken the actions in the November statement and in the May Budget by cutting expenditures and raising revenues, then the interest payments on the debt would be more than $50 billion per year, not just the $22.1 billion that we have now. In other words, just the interest payments on the debt would be 226 per cent higher than they are today, and that is just in five and a half year's time.

If we fail to act now to correct 16 years of Liberal mismanagement, annual interest payments could approach $50 billion. The impact of the November statement and the May Budget taken together is to reduce our annual deficit by 1990 by some $20.1 billion and 80 per cent of that $20.1 billion reduction will be on the expenditures side and only 20 per cent in new revenues.

The net public debt now comprises 45 per cent of Canada's annual Gross National Product and the annual interest payments of this debt now exceed total federal spending on Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement and the federal share of health care, combined. I think that is an amazing figure and I would just like to repeat that. The annual servicing of the debt now exceeds the total federal spending on Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement and the federal share of health care, all combined.

This euphemistically termed "fiscal problem" has been detailed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in one of the budget documents entitled The Fiscal Plan. He notes that during the past three years the net federal debt has grown almost four times faster than the Gross National Product and interest charges on that debt have grown three times faster than revenues. What happens to the debt-to-GNP ratio during the remainder of the decade is inextricably related to three key economic variables: interest rates, real growth rates in the economy, and the size of the deficit. The Minister of Finance said:

● (1730)

In any given year, a budgetary deficit can provide support to economic activity. If, however, over an extended period of time real interest rates exceed real economic growth, as has been the case in recent years and is the case today, the deficit will tend to grow rather than decline since the economy is unable to generate sufficient additional revenue to pay the ever-increasing debt service charges on its growing debt. The Government must then continue to borrow from future growth simply to pay the carrying costs of past deficits. Such borrowing itself increases future interest charges and sets in motion a vicious circle where, without policy action, the debt continues to grow faster than the economy.

If that happens, we can expect to have increased interest rates, higher inflation and a drastic decline in business and consumer confidence. In other words, the writing is on the wall. We can no longer postpone the inevitable. It is absolutely essential that we reduce both the deficit and the debt-to-GNP ratio. To do otherwise is to mortgage into oblivion the socio-economic future of our children.

The Chinese use two symbols to write the word "crisis". One symbol speaks of opportunity. The other symbol speaks of danger. In the situation in which we are in today, there is no question that the danger with respect to the financial crisis is to do nothing. The opportunity is to seriously and honestly attack the problem. I am proud to be a member of the Government and the Party which, in the November statement and in the May Budget, has begun to attack that problem.

The previous administration sacrificed economic sanity for political expediency. It engaged in an escalating pattern of deficit financing. However, on September 4, 1984, the Canadian people put an end to that suicidal nonsense. They elected this Government with a mandate to fashion a socio-economic strategy that would put the country back on its feet. To that end, the Minister of Finance introduced the economic statement on November 8 and the Budget on May 23. Both initiatives are designed with a two-fold focus: to begin the mammoth but essential task of controlling the growth of the public debt, and to engender employment through the creation of a healthier economic climate.

Every Canadian knows that to reduce a deficit—for example, to reduce the amount of money owed on a mortgage or on a car loan—one must either increase their income, decrease their expenses, or preferably do both at the same time. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that the Government's reduction of the national debt is going to entail both an increase in taxes and a reduction in program expenditures. As I previously mentioned, virtually 80 per cent will be the reduction in program expenditures, and 20 per cent will be in increased taxes.

Admittedly, that is not an ideal scenario, but, let us not fool ourselves. Let us not play pathetic little political games with the Canadian public. They can read the bottom line. They know what has to be done. All they ask is that the necessary action be bold and just. Consequently, the Government is committed to ensuring that the control of the public debt will not be attained through drastic, disruptive or short-term measures. That is why the second variable in the national debt-to-GNP ratio must also play a vital role in the economic recovery and growth of the country. We must carefully facilitate a strong economy through policies which will remove obstacles to growth and encourage the entrepreneurial spirit, thereby allowing the private sector to do what it does best—create jobs.

Of course, a welcome by-product of the latter scenario will be greater taxation revenues to reduce further the public debt and to strengthen federal government expenditures. This much needed constructive cycle of economic activity is directly antithetical to the vicious circle of debt outpacing the economy which we have now known for some 20 years.

It must be admitted, for the moment, that the Canadian economy is hanging in the balance between those two scenarios and that it is difficult to predict with certitude which of the two directions it will take in the years to come. One thing is clear. The past two decades of economic mismanagement, deficit financing and a Government continually spending beyond its means has not worked. The direction of the past is not an option.

Indeed, the recent Budget is an intentional break from the past. It is an integrated package of fiscal policies which are designed to encourage private initiative as the key to economic growth and job creation, to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Government, and to take control of the national debt.

Economic growth and job creation are encouraged through such measures as the personal lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000. That is particularly important to the farming community and to small business. Another measure is the additional $900 million which will be allocated to a series of training and employment programs. Another measure is the strengthening of research and development by allowing businesses a full refund on the tax credits earned on the first $2 million of research and development expenditures each year. The extension of the small business bond program until the end of 1987 is another measure. The creative use of pension funds for investment in small business is a further important aspect of job creation. Proposals such as these redirect much-needed financial support into small and medium-sized businesses, and reflect the Government's faith in the ability of Canadians to make investment decisions which will be of lasting benefit to the country.

The commitment to improving the federal Government's efficiency and effectiveness is indicated by such initiatives as the reduction of the federal Public Service by 15,000 positions over the next six years. Another initiative is the ending of the guarantee of full indexation of Members' of Parliament and Senators' pensions as of January 1, 1986. The privatization of those Crown corporations with commercial value but no public policy purpose is another initiative. A very important measure is the ministerial task force on program review. That is a vital initiative which has never before been witnessed in the history of Canadian public administration. These concrete examples signal a change in government policy, calling for greater fiscal responsibility in the management of its affairs.

Control of the debt is directly related to both economic growth and government fiscal management. That will be further assisted by the various actions which were announced in the Budget. First, spending increases by all Departments have been limited to just over 2 per cent. That is the lowest increase in 18 years. Only the defence and foreign aid Department's spending will be permitted to increase beyond that limit. There was also a temporary deficit-reduction surtax imposed on higher income individuals and larger corporations. A two-year tax has been imposed on the capital of large banks and trust companies. It amazed me, when the Budget was brought down, that the NDP did not applaud that measure. Also, excise taxes were imposed on alcohol, tobacco, gasoline, candy and dog food.

The modified indexation plan on Old Age Security and family allowance payments provide for indexation only when inflation exceeds 3 per cent. I must hasten to add, to ensure that I balance the whole picture, that the GIS payments will be fully indexed. Personal exemptions and tax brackets are indexed only to reflect annual increases in the Consumer Price Index which are greater than 3 per cent.

Actions such as these will achieve a reduction in this year's deficit of $4.4 billion. They will also ensure that the annual deficit and the net public debt will be $20 billion and $75 billion, respectively, lower than they would otherwise have been.

All this is very tough medicine, but it is desperately needed to cure a very sick patient. Therefore, through its first Budget, the Government has endeavoured to do what it was mandated to do—to create the climate in which all Canadians can participate to get the country back on its feet; walking, and hopefully someday running, in the right direction. There are already several indications that this is working.

• (1740)

Last fall the Opposition derided the Economic Statement of the Minister of Finance, claiming that it would cost Canadians thousands of jobs. What is the answer to that? Since September 4, the economy has generated more than 270,000 jobs. That is since this Government took office. While the unemployment rate is still far too high, it has dropped from 11.6 per cent to 10.5 per cent. At least it is beginning to move in the right direction. During this same time period, interest rates have also been on a steady decline, making it more viable for Canadians to generate the economy through the purchase of homes, the borrowing of business start-up money, and so on. Last year the inflation rate fell to 4.4 per cent, which is the lowest since 1971, and it has been running at an even lower rate during these past few months. Recent figures indicate that the Canadian economy is now growing faster than that of the United States.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that if this trend continues, perhaps there will be a less frequent need for Members of this House to stand up and speak in support of legislation such as the Bill we have before us today. Nevertheless, I do support Bill C-51 and ask that it receive swift passage because it is vital that this Government have the fiscal resources to function properly. However, let us remember that this legislation is a legacy of a sorry past, a past which this Government and this country simply cannot afford to repeat.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, as the Member for the riding of Argenteuil, I am of course in complete agreement with what the Hon. Member just said. You know it is a funny thing, but when we hear people talking, and it is quite normal, when we go down the street in our ridings, everybody wants to reduce the deficit but nobody wants to pay. It is like Petula Clark's song: "Everybody wants to go to heaven, but nobody wants to die."

Mr. Speaker, when I listen to the Hon. Member, it reminded me of one of my constituents who on February 5, 1982, wrote an article about something that upset him, and he was selling the article for $1. I think it is rather interesting and it fits in so well with the Hon. Member's argument that I would like to include what he wrote in 1982 as part of my comments, if I may. Today, he must be appalled to see that nothing has been done, that in 1985 the situation is even worse.

He wrote: "After the Interprovincial Conference of First Ministers who pointed out that the national debt was $95 billion, plus $70 billion for the provinces, making a grand total of $165 billion." At a rate of 11 per cent, he figured that the interest would be $18 billion per year or $1.5 billion per month. He said: "Supposing our debt of $165 billion is paid back in monthly instalments over a period of ten years or 120 months. That would mean monthly payments of $1.75 billion", so that according to him: "Each month, Canada would have to pay at least $2.75 billion." Two billion seven hundred million dollars a month. That is a lot of money. He said: "Where are you going to get that kind of money? Only on the international markets, on Wall Street in New York!"

Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents wrote that in 1982. Today I suppose he would say exactly the same thing, with even more emphasis. He would certainly be pleased, and I intended to call him after the Budget was tabled. He must be very pleased, because he said at the end of his article: "The result of manipulations by those clowns in Ottawa". I may recall that the Conservative Party was not in power in 1982.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that our Government has a duty and a responsibility to put this country back on the road to prosperity, otherwise the social programs which our Liberal friends like to think they are the only ones to defend . . . I hope Hon. Members opposite do not think that I do not defend the elderly in my riding. I hope they do not think they are the only ones on the other side doing that in their ridings, because we do exactly the same thing in ours. Yes, we are giving answers. Last Friday, I met with senior citizens in my riding, with groups that were pleased with the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance. Yes, it is funny, we do not seem to be meeting the same people. We are on the same planet, but it all depends what you mean and what you say.

Mr. Rossi: Bring them here!

Mrs. Bourgault: Yes, we will bring them here, Mr. Speaker. So they were pleased because what they think... it all depends how the matter is explained to them. When you people over there do the explaining, you obviously do the explaining in your own way. When we do the explaining, we do it our way. And our way is the intelligent way.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to say that the elderly in my riding understand the issue because I explained it to them. My congratulations to the Hon. Member and keep up the good work.

[English]

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, in response to the remarks made by my colleage, I can tell her that I have had comments from senior citizens, as I am sure every Hon. Member has, about the modified indexation plan. Some are supportive and some are not. However, a large number of senior citizens are being confused by some of the rhetoric of the opposition Parties which are not painting the whole picture. I think it is very important we give the senior citizens the whole picture. As I indicated in my remarks earlier, it is true that we have modified the indexation to begin after only 3 per cent on the OAS, but the GIS is fully indexed. I should also add that some of the people across Canada who are on GIS also receive subsidized housing. That is another plus they have as opposed to those who receive only OAS.

I believe it is also important to remember something else. During these past few moments as I have been speaking, there have been one or two children born in Canada. Are we aware of the fact that that young child, boy or girl, now has a $7,535 debt to pay which was given to him or her by the 16 years of Liberal mismanagement?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reimer: We should also recognize—Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could have order.

Mr. Nystrom: Tell those Tories to shut up.

Mr. Reimer: An Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party says to tell the Tories to be quiet. I hear it from both the Liberals and the Tories.

If one takes the taxation statistics of 1982, Mr. Speaker, and simply looks at the total figures of all federal income taxes raised, then looks at how much we are paying on the interest on the debt alone, in round figures one could say that all people earning less than $40,000 annual income would not have to pay any federal taxes if we did not have to pay interest on the debt. That is how large our debt is. I have told that to some of my seniors, and they applaud the actions of this Government. I think we have to put the whole picture before the Canadian people. I wish the Opposition would tell the whole story and not just a few selective parts.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) talked about all the seniors in his riding who support deindexing. I wonder if he could read into the record the names of any organizations in his riding which support it, or read into the record any letters which support the government's move to deindex pensions?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the rules correctly, I would have to seek permission to do that. However, just in response to what the Hon. Member is saying, I have met with some seniors. I cannot say I have met with all of them, but I have spoken on the telephone with some and visited some in their homes. The biggest single problem they are having today is the misinformation and the rhetoric they hear from the opposition Parties and from some of the media. That is where the problem really lies. When I give them the information in the Budget books and give them the full picture, the vast majority—I did not say all of them—are supportive of the attempts we are making.

• (1750)

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Government wants to borrow some $18 billion, and I suppose the way things are in this country it has to. My question is: Money for whom? Who is going to pay for it? What is this money going to be used for? I look at the Budget brought down by this Government a few weeks ago and I say to myself that the low income people, the senior citizens, are the ones who are going to have to pay. I ask the Government why? Members opposite were elected on a platform which said they were going to be fair.

In the few moments left to me, I want to make a couple of arguments based on that concept of fairness. I have here a copy of an article from today's Globe and Mail concerning a study done by the Canadian Council on Social Development. This is a fairly reputable organization. In fact, the director was for years a gentleman named Reuben Baetz. He was and is a Conservative Cabinet Minister in Ontario and will be, I guess, for another week or so until a vote in that legislature. What that organization is saying is that the PC Budget redistributes money from the poor to the rich. The report says that by the year 1990, the wealthiest families in this country will be receiving an extra $4,500 because of the Budget, and the poorest people will see a drop in their income. They say:

> A study by the council, to be released later this week, says the Conservative Government's budget will increase the disposable incomes of families earning $50,000 or more in 1990, while families with earnings of $40,000 or less will face reductions in their disposable incomes.

What they are saying is that a family earning about $30,000 a year will receive an average of $1,089 less by the year 1990 because of this Conservative Budget. The less affluent families will also face significant cuts in disposable income ranging between $808 for a family earning $20,000, to $396 for a family earning $10,000.

In contrast, Mr. Speaker, and here I speak to my friend in the Conservative Party from Quebec who was just on her feet, the wealthiest families in this country will receive a windfall because of the Budget. The Council says that families who earn over $200,000 a year will have their disposable incomes increased by $4,500 by the year 1990. That is not fair, Mr.

Speaker. If you earn over $300,000 a year, your income goes up by $4,500, but if you earn $30,000 a year, your income goes down by over $1,000. I ask my friends, particularly my good old friend from Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who I know likes to talk about fairness and justice for ordinary Canadians, is it fair that we penalize the poor in this country to line the pockets of the rich? Is that fair?

An Hon. Member: Tell us how it is done?

Mr. Nystrom: I can tell you how it is done. Why don't we take from those who can afford to pay? Tax on the ability to pay. Tax the wealthier people in this country, the big corporations. If there was an element of fairness in this Budget where we all had to pay a little bit but those of us who make more pay more, and those who are wealthy pay even more, then you would not have this kind of protest across this land.

Mr. Boyer: Surtax on the banks.

Mr. Nystrom: That is what I find very unfair in this particular Budget. You can go on and on. They mention different things in the Budget. They refer to the proviso for capital gains. Sure, farmers and some small businesses had to have the exemption increased, but why have it opened up wide to $500,000 a year? That surprised friends of mine in the investment community. It is just a wide open exemption on capital gains. Most of the money will be made by people who earn over $100,000 a year.

RRSPs are another example. The Council said that the amount claimed for RRSPs by families who earn under $40,000 a year is very little. Most people who contribute to RRSPs earn well over $40,000, $50,000, $60,000 a year. If the ceiling goes up, who takes advantage of that but the wealthier people in our country. I ask my friends in the Conservative Party: Where is the fairness? Where is the justice? If I go over the campaign promises I see where the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said time and time again that they were going to be fair to ordinary Canadians. The Prime Minister said in a speech back in July, 1984, that the Conservative Party intends to re-establish the full indexing of Old Age Pensions to the cost of living beginning in January, 1985. The Minister of Finance said in August, 1984, that they have no intention of raising income taxes for Canadians.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you talk about jobs?

Mr. Nystrom: That was a promise made by the Prime Minister and a promise he broke.

[Translation]

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance—

An Hon. Member: He is a good Minister!

Mr. Nystrom: He is not a good Minister. The Hon. Member says the Minister of Finance is a good Minister. The Minister of Finance has increased the burden on the elderly in this country. The Budget will have a very serious impact on low-income Canadian pensioners between now and 1990. Mr. Speaker, next year, single pensioners will suffer a loss of $100. For a couple the loss will be twice that next year. In 1987, a single pensioner will lose $205; next year, $312; the year after, $423, and in 1990, $537. Over five years, a single pensioner will lose about $1,577, and in 10 years, pensioners, the elderly in our society, will have lost 30 per cent, Mr. Speaker, and that from a Government that made an election promise to bring fairness to Canadian society.

The same applies to family allowance, Mr. Speaker. I have the example of a family with two children, and an income of $20,000: their family allowance will be $15 less next year and $105 less by 1990.

Something else: tax credits applied to income tax payable by Canadian residents, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION—
INDEXATION OF OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before putting the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), since today is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedure to consider and dispose of the supply Bill. In view of recent practice, do Hon. Members agree that copies of the supply Bill be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe) moved:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by reading this motion to the House slowly because it is not a motion of condemnation or non-confidence. It is not a motion which seeks to draw blood or generate an attack. It is a motion which seeks to right a wrong and do so immediately. The motion reads:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

At the end of the day we shall be calling upon members of every Party, regardless of political stripe, regardless of differences we may have on other matters in this House, to cast a vote to reassure the senior citizens of this country of their security in their old age; to wipe away the kind of uncertainty, worry, indeed quiet desperation which comes to somebody living below the poverty line, sheltered within four walls, with only $75 or $80 or $90 of discretionary spending a month, and who wonders how in the name of God he or she will make ends meet if the Government proceeds. That is all this motion purports to do. I hope Members will find it possible, no matter which side of the House they sit on, to not support a Liberal motion but to support a motion of confidence in the good will and wealth of this country to provide a measure of dignity and fairness to our senior citizens in their old age.

Last night, as I was sitting at home watching the CBC evening news, in particular The Journal, I was treated to a discourse by Mr. Douglas Fisher in that segment called The Last Word. As everyone in this House knows, in fact as a good many Canadians know, Mr. Fisher is a respected journalist, columnist, and a former NDP Member of Parliament. Last night, as usual, Mr. Fisher was eloquent. He told Canadians essentially that having recently turned 65 years of age he was amazed at the number of small breaks which are offered or afforded to senior citizens. He was amazed that a fair number of goods and services are offered to senior citizens at a discount. He indicated that he personally did not need the breaks and, furthermore, as a recent recipient of the Old Age Security cheque, he was not really all that terribly upset about the Government's proposed deindexing of Old Age Security pension benefits by 3 per cent a year. In fact, he said that outraged opposition Members, be they Liberal or NDP, and others who would protest the cut in the OAS, were not really speaking for him as a senior. He rhetorically asked his listeners, "Are they speaking for you?" I have learned to respect Mr. Fisher's powers of contemplation. He went on to say that he was willing to make a sacrifice for the young people of the country, to help reduce the deficit, to make things better in the future.

I bring Mr. Fisher's comments to the attention of the House because I think those comments symbolize and fairly accurately reflect the narrow thinking that has been done by those who suggest that senior citizens can afford this attack on their security in their old age. While Old Age Security cuts may be acceptable to Mr. Fisher, and it seems even desirable, in economic terms Mr. Fisher has about as much in common with the typical senior citizen of the country as chalk does with cheese. Mr. Fisher does not depend on OAS to pay the rent or to put bread and butter on the table. I believe he draws a very reasonable salary and unless I miss my guess as to his credit, he is probably prepared for that time when he will get tired of political commentary and will retire with an adequate pension plan.

For the majority of senior citizens in the country, the majority of whom live just below or only slightly above the poverty line, an Old Age Security cheque is not a cheque which is left in the desk, forgotten until one can find time to go to the bank and cash it and decide how to invest or spend it. For the majority of senior citizens in the country, an Old Age Security cheque is quite literally the difference between a life with a measure of dignity and humble independence, or the prospect of being a burden on friends and family as they try to make ends meet. For those senior citizens an Old Age Security cheque is not pocket change. It is bread and butter, roof and board and home, be it their own home, an apartment or a senior citizen's cottage.

We live in a terribly sheltered ivory tower here in Ottawa. We spend our time talking about senior citizens at "Wonderful Wednesdays" in the corridors of so-called power. We wonder what effect this latest uproar will have on the next Gallup poll. We wonder if, how, and when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will back away from this latest political blunder. It is thinking about senior citizens in terms of Gallup polls and measuring them in terms of what is politically possible or politically impossible that has brought the House and the country to the point where every recognized social, business, and government agency in the land is demanding that the Government of Canada withdraw now from this policy. It is telling seniors that they will live with the uncertainty of a decision which the Government will make six months or a year from now.

• (1115)

Senior citizens are not just numbers to be manipulated at election time and sold out when the first Budget is brought down. They are not the stereotype group of people who spend their time between cards, bingo and handicrafts, slowly slipping into a second childhood. They are a large group of 2.5 million people. The common denominator they share is that they are over 65 years of age. But in reality, that is where the stereotyping should end. They are 2.5 million individuals—as individual as any age group in society. If they are to be described as a group in any way, shape or form, let us recognize that our seniors, if anything, can be characterized by their tolerance, their wisdom—that wisdom that only comes from having lived and enjoyed almost all of life's experience—and their selfless nature. They are the least demanding of any among us.

The Liberal Party says, as our motion demands, that full indexation for Old Age Security must be restored immediately. In trying to defend this heartless measure, the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have told us about the genuine concern that senior citizens have for their children and grandchildren. They say that the senior citizens to whom they have talked support this measure and are 100 per cent behind the Government because they are concerned about their children and grandchildren. There is some truth to that statement because senior citizens are concerned about their children and grandchildren. They built this country for future generations. But to extrapolate from that the notion that they can afford to pay now and that they should be asked to pay the burden and the price of providing a $125,000 capital gains gift to those who are most wealthy among us is absolutely ridiculous.

What do the children and grandchildren say about this ? Do they accept the proposition of the Minister of Finance that either seniors take a cut in their old age pension or live with less security so that the Old Age Security is turned into old age insecurity, or else youth will not get a job creation program? Do they accept that either/or proposition: either the youth or the seniors receive some assistance, but not both? No, they do not.

The Prime Minister has told us that anybody who stands and challenges this Draconian budget measure is trying to incite class warfare. It is class warfare when the Government tells the people of Canada that it must choose between casting young people out without hope for a job or denying senior citizens the dignity of retirement in their later years.

What do young people say? Do they enjoy being made the scapegoats for a brutal government decision? Yesterday, the Ontario Federation of Students held their annual meeting at the University of Guelph. Much to their credit, they passed a motion calling upon the Conservative Government to "restore full payments to seniors". That is what I expected of them. I never had any doubt. Those young people, who have been told by the Government that it is either they or senior citizens so they had better get on side and support the Government, said that the Prime Minister does not speak for students when he says deindexing will help create jobs for youth and benefit youth. "We are the youth, but we are also the grandchildren of these pensioners". They said, "A lot of them do not have an alternative income besides their pension, which means that it will put our grandparents and our parents below the poverty line".

That is what the young people of Canada have said to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

• (1120)

The Government said it consulted everybody before the Budget was brought down. The Government said that it has talked to people and reached a consensus. Joyce King of the United Senior Citizens Federation of Ontario tells us there was no consultation with senior citizens. If anything, the opposite, a commitment that their pensions would not be touched. A sacred promise was given during last summer's election campaign.

Mr. Nunziata: It was a lie.

Mr. Tobin: There was no commitment, Mr. Speaker, no commitment. The Atlantic Liberal caucus travelled to Atlantic Canada last week. We met with senior citizens' groups in each of the four Atlantic Provinces. Not one group felt it had been consulted. Every group felt it had been deceived. Each group made up its mind that it was going to stand and fight, not fight the good fight, not fight for the sake of making a statement, not fight for the sake of expressing an opinion or of putting themselves on the record, but to fight and win.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rossi: And they are going to win.

Mr. Tobin: They have won, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Organization of Small Business, the Canadian Council on Social Development, the National Council of Welfare, have spoken ont. Conservative back-benchers have spoken out, and I salute those back-benchers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: For having the guts.

Mr. Tobin: Then there were the Quebec National Assembly, the Manitoba Conservative Party, Maritime Premiers, the New Brunswick Senior Citizens' Federation, Ontario Senior Citizen Groups, the Quebec Golden Age Association and the Ontario Federation of Students who have spoken ont. All of these people in society with diverse and different interests who came at this Budget from a different personal perspective have spoken with one voice in rejecting a move that would say to our fathers and mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers that they ought to bear the cost, that they ought to bear the brunt of balancing the books, of setting up a fiscal regime that pleases the stockbrokers' mentality but ignores the reality that a Budget is about people and not about a stockbroker's report.

I warn this Government. We have put a motion down. We have asked that immediately, not tomorrow, not next week, not next month, not maybe next year but immediately, because the Government has lost the battle, it be gracious and accept that it has lost the battle. Immediately put an end to the uncertainty, immediately put an end to the kind of worry a man or woman who sits in his or her apartment or cottage has about deindexation.

I spoke to a senior citizen in Corner Brook. He said, "My son, I am 82 years old. I have $100 worth of discretionary income a month. Do you know what that $100 is for, my son? Do you know what it is for after I pay my rent, my heat, my light? I buy some groceries, but I also need to have money to give to the church because I support the church. I also need a few dollars to buy a few cards and gifts for my friends who are sick and who are ailing, because they expect that. When I was in the hospital and sick they came to me with a basket of fruit or a card. I need to have a few dollars to get the bus to K-Mart to get a few groceries. Stamps are going up. I like to write my children. They are all over Canada. They all have good jobs, Mr. Tobin. I am so proud and I try and stay in touch with them. That is what I use my $100 for".

I do not want that old man sitting in his apartment wondering when, if and how it becomes politically convenient for the Government to do what it has already decided to do, to back away from this program. I do not want him to spend the next seven or eight months wondering if he will have the price of a stamp after 1986 to write to his son or daughter who has gone to Alberta, British Columbia or Ottawa. Nobody in this House wants that. Not any Member on any side of the House. That is why I say to Members opposite that this motion is not a motion of condemnation. It is not a motion of non-confidence. It is not a motion that asks for the head of the Minister of Finance. It is a motion of confidence in Canadians, in their sense of justice and in their sense of sharing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: It is a rare chance for us as Members—and seniors one day we will be, God bless us all, hopefully—to begin practising today the central thrust of the reform committee. It is a chance for us, as recommended by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to begin to vote in the House of Commons as Members of Parliament, questioning our consciences, listening to our constituents and doing what we know is right. I have no monopoly on my concerns. The NDP has no monopoly. In fact, none of us has any monopoly on concern or appreciation for senior citizens. I appeal to Hon. Members opposite today to join us in supporting this motion.

• (1125)

As I said earlier, I warn the Government not to come forward with a solution which begins a back-door exercise to erode universality or with a solution which double indexes the GIS, because that is a back-door attack on universality. That is not acceptable to the Liberal Party. That is not acceptable to many Members of the House. The eyes of the people of Canada are upon us today. They are watching us. They are weighing our words. They will see how we are counted this day in Parliament. I warn Hon. Members that we had better not try their patience too far.

I should like to reflect upon the comments of Mr. Fisher last night on television. He said that he really did not need the OAS and was not too concerned. I tell Mr. Fisher that I will survive this Budget. My income is sufficient that I will survive. I am OK, Jack. Mr. Fisher has already told us that he will survive this Budget. His income is OK. He is OK, Jack. However, my 85-year-old grandfather, Jack Tobin, will not. He worked 49 years as a millwright, he paid into his company's pension plan and now he receives a little cheque which will not put bread on his table, let alone butter. He needs that OAS. Even though I will survive and others may survive this Budget, my grandfather is counting on me as a Member of Parliament to speak in my place today. He is also counting on others who may be OK themselves and may survive this Budget to speak for him. Without any more fanfare, I invite Hon. Members to consult—and I know that you really do not need to—and do what their consciences tell and invite them to do and that justice demands that they do, that is, support the motion today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin) on a question or comment.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I rise to pose some questions to the Hon. Member with the utmost seriousness, because my riding has a larger than average number of retired people, larger than the national average by about 20 per cent. My constituency office is located in the middle of about 20 large facilities for retired Canadians. This issue has been a concern of my Party, and of course of mine, for many years. We have discussed it intensely for the last few months.

I should like to share with the House two insights by way of posing a question. The first criticism I heard was a question posed by the Hon. Member. They are asking questions about the security of the OAS from the Oppositon. In his speech the Hon. Member—and I would like him to correct it, if he can—gave the impression that we are abolishing the OAS. We are not abolishing the OAS. We have made this absolutely clear. In fact, inflation indexation is there after the 3 per cent on the OAS, and the GIS is fully indexed. My constituents are simply asking for facts, and they are being unreasonably frightened by the kinds of scare tactics and the rhetoric of the Hon. Member.

• (1130)

Their second concern is that they want to know what we are doing about inflation. The Hon. Member opposite speaks not at all about inflation. The greatest damage done to the senior people in this country was done between 1980 and 1984 with interest rates at 22 per cent and with inflation through the roof. Seniors could not cope with it. This Government is trying to come to terms with inflation and seniors are willing to make a contribution too. Seniors with the lowest income, of course, should not be expected to, but others, I am told, feel that they want to make their contribution. What does the Hon. Member say about inflation? How does one come to terms with inflation? If, in fact, one comes to terms with inflation, is that not the greatest contribution we can make to the incomes of seniors?

The third question I would ask has to do with the Hon. Member's comments on polls. He said this Government is dictated by polls.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the 10-minute period for comments and questions is intended to be shared. It is not intended that Members should utilize the entire 10 minutes to make a speech. I can well appreciate that he might have questions or want to make comments, and that is quite within the rules, but there are other people, I am sure, who might also want to ask questions or to make comments on the speech of the Hon. Member who has spoken on behalf of the Liberal Party.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, that you ask the Hon. Member if he could resume his seat and allow the Hon. Member to answer and allow other Members to take their turn, if they so desire.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The representations made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) are, of course, well taken. We have a 10-minute question and comment period, and the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin) was nearing approximately three minutes. I ask him to conclude his comments so that we may proceed with other Members who may wish to participate.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have only put questions, I have not made a speech. The final question has to do with polls. There is no poll that has ever asked the Canadian people whether they wanted to deindex the first 3 per cent of OAS. That has never been in the minds of any polling organization, much less a political Party, and to claim that that has been a part of any Government's polling apparatus is questionable. I ask the Hon. Member to answer these three questions, primarily to answer the question about inflation.

Mr. Tobin: Be it ever so humble, Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief in making this comment. When the Hon. Member is here a little bit longer he will understand something, that on very rare occasions in the life of a Parliament there are days when the walls of partisanship disappear from this place. There are days when a special mood prevails in this place, when the importance of the issue at hand is not one that is subject to the cut and thrust of partisan debate. I say to the Hon. Member that he has missed an opportunity with the kind of comments he has just made to participate in that kind of very special mood, that kind of very special non-partisan debate.

I did not refer to polls. Inflation is less than 4 per cent. The issue is not whether or not you are fast on your feet or whether or not I can get up and be terribly partisan in my response, of which I assure you I am quite capable. The issue is whether or not we can isolate today and understand in human terms the nature and the effect of this budget measure on our senior citizens and whether we, as Members of Parliament, today are prepared to express ourselves to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Finance and urge them to do quickly what we know they are going to do ultimately anyway, and not in the process destroy the concept of universality.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for his passionate plea that we really do look at what this measure is doing for senior citizens and for his desire that we set aside some of our partisan rhetoric on this issue. I commend the Hon. Member for that attempt.

I wonder if I could not ask the Hon. Member then, in view of that request that he has made of all of us, whether I could not also request him, to be fair and to be accurate and honest in what he is saying.

For example, early in his comments when he was referring to Mr. Fisher and his comments last night on The Journal he used the words, "The cut to OAS payments". I think we should state it correctly. It is not a cut to any OAS payments as they are today. What it is, is a proposal to limit the increase past 3 per cent. So I appeal to the Hon. Member, would he please be accurate and would he be fair?

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member, who I think was here when the six and five program was introduced, and I am sure he supported it, what was inflation at that time when the payments were reduced to six and five? Would he please indicate that? What is inflation today? Would the Hon. Member then please tell us, by how much did that measure then in the six and five program reduce the increase in the payments compared to how much this one will reduce the payments of OAS? I appeal to him to be fair so that the seniors who are watching this debate today will say, "Here is a debate today where the Members are being fair and are being accurate and are trying to deal with the problem".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if I had the exact numbers in front of me, I am afraid that the answer would be very embarrassing for the Hon. Member opposite. Let me read from this six and five proposal as outlined in the MacEachen document. There is quite a difference. It reads:

> Pensioners most in need must also be fully protected from the limitation on the indexing factor. The Guaranteed Income Supplement for senior citizens with lower incomes will continue to be fully indexed. In addition, everyone receiving the GIS will get a supplement to the GIS payment offsetting fully the limitation on indexation of Old Age Security payments.
> Veterans' pensions will continue to be fully indexed.

Setting that aside, the important difference here is that the six and five program was a program that applied to every government Department, every government service, every government program, every government salary for two years. I do not have the exact numbers, but I will tell the Hon. Member that it cost everybody in this country very little because inflation went down to about six and five in those two years. The difference is that it did not fundamentally alter or change permanently the program as this budget measure does which says that every year for the next four or five years senior citizens will lose with certainty 3 per cent of the value of their pension a year.

That is quite different. You are not talking about a one-year program; you are talking about a change to the Old Age Security payment system in this country. It is fundamentally different. It has been expressed by many groups.

I heard the Hon. Member accuse me of providing false information. Is he accusing the senior citizens of this country of providing false information? Is he accusing the Council of Maritime Premiers, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Quebec National Assembly, the Manitoba Progressive Conservative Party, or the Conservative Parties of the Atlantic region? Are all of those people wrong in their assessment of what this measure means for senior citizens? I beg to differ with the Hon. Member. I am afraid they are not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We will now resume debate with the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to participate in the debate, but not at all with pleasure to have to say the things that have to be said about this Government that has betrayed its commitment to the people of Canada in general and to Canada's pensioners in particular.

I also want to say that I listened with interest to the speech that has just been given and I want to say without hesitation that it was a moving expression of concern for the senior citizens of Canada. There was not one word uttered in that speech that would not have the wholehearted endorsation of my Party.

• (1140)

Some two decades ago, a very distinguished Canadian said the following:

> I hope that, having accepted the principle that retirement security should be on the basis of adequacy, we will go on improving that basis, finding ways of raising the levels of our pensions so that all Canadians can look forward to a retirement in decency and dignity.

Those words were uttered by the Hon. Stanley Knowles, a man whom all Members of the House have honoured in the past, a man who assumes a special place in the Parliament of Canada and has a chair at the Table with the Officers of this Chamber, a man who, more than any other Canadian of any Party, devoted his life to improving the well-being of our senior citizens. I cite him because he was honoured by all Members of the House of all Parties as he had the support of the overwhelming majority of Canadians for that to which he had devoted his life, namely, ensuring that when Canadians retire, they do not simply have to eke out an existence but ought to be able to assume a life of dignity. There is a fundamental difference between the two.

What Mr. Knowles said some years ago is a tradition that we in our Party thought had come to be shared by Members of all Parties. We had thought that this attitude had become engrained in the traditions not only of Canadians outside the House of Commons but had become part of the traditions within the Parties of the House.

I regret to say that rather than building on the basic change in our attitude toward pensioners and rather than building to create the possibility of a greater dignity and a greater feeling of security for our pensioners, as has been the tradition of the Canadian Parliament for the past four or five decades, the present Government has done just the opposite. It has broken faith with the traditions of our House. It has broken faith with the traditions that we thought had become established within the Conservative Party itself.

Members of my Party find it heartless and cruel that we as a Parliament should be voting on legislation that will fight the deficit on the backs of the pensioners. We find it heartless and cruel and, frankly stated, a moral abomination, to have a Government in 1985 that would bring before the Parliament of Canada a measure that will add 200,000 pensioners to the poverty list in Canada. That is a moral abomination.

Half of the 2.6 million pensioners of Canada are already so poor in 1985 that they receive either partial or full supplements. That is how bad the current situation is. Among those Canadians are women, and I would like to mention, as it is significant indeed, the plight of Canadian women who become old.

[Translation]

Yesterday I was in Montreal where I met some senior citizens. One senior explained what the situation was like for elderly women today. I think what she said is far more eloquent than anything I could say, and I quote:

Women 50 years old or over are the poorest population group in Canada today, and one woman out of three in Canada is 50 years old or over. Figure it out for yourself.

She went on to say, and I quote:

There are now a million and a half female pensioners in Canada. Fifteen years from now, there will be at least two million. Old age is a woman's world.

The majority of us live alone, because our husbands often predeceased us, and we are poor. More than 70 per cent of widows, divorcees and single women are now living below the poverty line. The majority of us survive our husbands. This means that nearly 25 per cent of us are on our own when we reach retirement age. What happens to our financial security? When our spouse dies, we have no income. And not all women have husbands that are protected by a private pension plan. Only 39 per cent of workers today contribute to such plans. After a life spent raising children and keeping house, we have no decent level of security, and even in the best of circumstances, the wife will never get more than 60 per cent of the pension her husband was receiving—

Mr. Speaker, as you see these figures are most alarming, and they describe the circumstances in which the vast majority of the elderly in Canada are living, and in spite of these figures and facts the Progressive Conservative Government knows all too well, it is attacking one of the most vulnerable groups in our society. The de-indexation of pensions will perpetuate inequality among Canadians in the most regressive way by making our needy elderly even poorer. Mr. Speaker, it is an injustice and it is appalling but it is the truth!

[English]

We realized from the very beginning, from the very moment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) sat down after delivering his budget address, just how unfair is the Budget. We realized just how clear is the double standard according to this Party that is now governing Canada. The double standard is pervasive throughout the Budget.

Very quickly, what is in the Budget for the rich? Surely all members of all Parties of this House ought to be approaching a Budget from the point of view of fairness, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance said so often before the Budget came down. They told us to look for fairness. Well, we looked for fairness, and what did we find? We found for the rich a $500,000 life-time tax exempt capital gains provision. We found no minimum tax introduced this year. We found a surtax for the rich, yes, but payable on federal tax payable. Getting through the jargon, that means that if the rich hire the right chartered accountants and do not end up having any taxes payable, they do not even have to pay the surtax. We found all kinds of advantages that clearly exist for the wealthy of the country and for the corporations.

The Prime Minister cited the change that has been made in the taxation system for banks. A slight new tax has been added to the banks in Canada. There have been some additional increases in corporate taxes in other sectors, but when we look through the smoke and mirrors of the Budget to the net effect of tax proposals on the corporate sector, we find that by 1990, while individual Canadians will be paying more than $4 billion in additional taxes, the corporate sector will actually be paying $2 billion less in taxes rather than more. That, to us in the New Democratic Party, is not fair, Mr. Speaker. The rich individuals receive some benefits, the corporations receive additional benefits, but the ordinary Canadian, what does he or she receive? Five hundred dollars in tax increases on everything from a gallon of gasoline—which, of course, will not come in until September 1, Canadians will feel it then—to pet food.

● (1150)

The purpose, surely, Mr. Speaker, of democratic politics ought to be for us in the legislative process to use our political power not to intensify inequalities in society but to change those inequalities. That ought to be the task for all of us who are elected. We should think day in and day out about how we can overcome inequality and unfairness in order to build a Canada which is more just for all. This Budget does exactly the opposite. I will just take two single items which ought to stand out in everyone's consciousness: first, the changes in the RRSPs, which is overwhelmingly used by those who earn more than $50,000 a year, and, second, the benefit which is given in the capital gains provision. Only 4 per cent or so of Canadians will benefit from that hand-out, the richest 4 per cent. The Government is giving to the rich $1.5 billion with those two provisions alone. And what does this Government take out of the pockets of pensioners? It takes $1.6 billion. The Government takes $1.6 billion away from pensioners and gives $1.5 billion to upper-income Canadians.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the principle is clear to the Tories that they are giving most to those who have the least need and taking the most away from those who have the greatest need. That sort of sums up the Tory vision of justice. As I said the other day, this Budget takes from the needy in order to give to the greedy.

Canadians ought to rise up in anger, as they are doing in increasing numbers all across our land. The Government, however, does not want to say openly what it is doing. It does not want to admit that there is a net transfer of wealth going on through this Budget from average and low-income Canadians to the wealthy. It does not want to admit that it is unfair, so it offers all kinds of excuses. We have heard them ever since budget night. First, we were told—believe it or not, Mr. Speaker—that pensioners actually supported it. All Hon. Members will recall that. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, all rose and said, "The pensioners want to do this. They want to do their bit to bring down the deficit". That lasted for about 12 hours, I think, until they abandoned that line, seeing themselves how ridiculous it was. Then they shifted to another kind of argument, one well known to the Prime Minister, they said they had no option. The Prime Minister said that everyone had to pay his or her share and the pensioners were out there so they had to pay their share as well.

But we gave the Government some options. My colleagues and I have spent the last ten days in the House of Commons proposing one option after another. We said that perhaps a minimum tax should have been introduced. That is not too heretical. Most countries in the world already have a minimum tax on the rich. Most democracies in the world; western Europe, even the United States—even Ronald Reagan's America—have a minimum tax. It is time the rich in Canada paid their share. Why did the Government not bring in a minimum tax?

There was another option. We made a proposal, which has been applied in other countries, that all those corporations which have deferred taxes and owe all these revenues to the people of Canada, should pay a certain percentage of interest on what they owe just like other individual taxpayers. That would have given the Government additional millions of dollars.

Another proposal, Mr. Speaker, was with respect to the Western Accord. We agree with the Western Accord and those aspects which give to our producing provinces additional shares of revenue. That is entirely justifiable and overdue. But, we asked, why give multinational oil companies windfall profits? Why give them additional millions of dollars on oil which has already been discovered?

Another option we presented, Mr. Speaker, is that instead of expanding the loopholes in terms of extending the capital gains tax for upper-income Canadians, we should just leave it where it is. That would save us millions of dollars. Finally, we said we should restore to upper-income Canadians the tax rate which they were paying before the Liberals made the change in their 1982 Budget. Just bring back those marginal rates and that would give us additional millions of dollars.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that from these five options we would get anywhere from $4 billion to $5.5 billion. They were real options. They were serious options. They would have given us a fair tax system; they would have been effective in stimulating the economy; they would have been comparable to what exists in most other democratic countries; and, very important in the context of this debate, they would have left the pensions going out to the pensioners at fully indexed rates so that they could continue to live with some dignity. But, in short, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives turned it down.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Prime Minister: Sir, you had not one, not two, not three options. You had five options. And in the crunch, Mr. Prime Minister, when you had to make a choice, you chose the few over the many. You chose the rich over the pensioners, and for that you deserve to be condemned by the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, with some observations about this particular motion and about the abominable course of action which the Government of Canada proposes to take, which has now demonstrated three characteristics of this Government; first, its insincerity, second, its insensitivity, and, third, its intransigence. That is a harsh judgment, Mr. Speaker, but we are not here to be mealy-mouthed. We are here to be fair but firm and clear in our judgments. I want to hear Hon. Members of the Conservative Party reply to these charges because they are serious. I say that the Government is insincere because the Prime Minister of Canada in Sherbrooke—

[Translation]

—in Sherbrooke he promised our country's pensioners he would continue to index pensions. And in the same speech on July 25, he indicated that as Prime Minister he wanted to consult pensioners on future changes in the system.

[English]

He said that the Government would keep the indexation and he said that pensioners would be fully consulted about any future changes to their pensions. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, responsible for pensions, himself, in a document in June, indicated that the Government of Canada would not be changing the pensions. We all know what has happened. We know that these promises have been categorically broken by the Conservative Government.

I will cite just a couple of instances of the Government's insensitivity. The Minister of Finance in the past week went all the way from saying we did not have enough rich people in Canada—which was insensitive enough—to making a speech a couple of days ago in Quebec City in which he made a proposal to make the rich even richer. He said we could no longer fully index pensions but he was thinking of bringing in indexation for investors. How insensitive can one be? The Prime Minister, responding to a question about pensions the other day, had the nerve to talk about car sales. I suppose he expects that half the pensioners living in poverty, and the 200,000 additional pensioners who will have to begin to live in poverty, are going to be able to go out and buy a car. That is great sensitivity.

The Government has shown intransigence almost without limits. Almost everyone in this country has indicated his or her opposition to what the Government is doing. If the Government wants to listen, now is the time. The three Atlantic Premiers who spoke out were opposed. The legislatures of Quebec and Manitoba unanimously disagreed with the Government. Tories all across Canada are opposed. Pensioners are opposed. Members of my caucus have submitted to the House of Commons more than 10,000 names on petitions of Canadians from coast to coast who say they are opposed to what the Government is doing.

• (1200)

Now is the time for the Government to listen to what the people are saying. Even businessmen have joined in. They have said the Government is wrong. I say the Government does not need consultations for another week, month or year; it simply has to listen to what the people of Canada are saying today. If it listens to that message, it will, at the end of this debate, get up and say it made a mistake and it is going to restore to the pensioners what they deserve, namely, fully indexed pensions.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the impassioned plea to stop partial deindexation. It seems that the basic premise of both the Liberals and the NDP is really twofold. First, because you turn 65 you should receive taxpayers' dollars. The second premise is that wealth is created by the tooth fairy. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) talked about inequality. Perhaps he can answer this question in order to enlighten the needy elderly of this country. We have a former Prime Minister who is receiving some $90,000 a year in pension as a former Member of this place. How do we justify giving him $276 a month while we have others who are more needy?

Mr. Broadbent: I want to say very frankly to the new Member that I found the suppositions which lay behind his question very disturbing indeed. The first part of his question was whether I really think that someone, because he suddenly turned 65, ought to get money from the taxpayers, or something to that effect. I say to the Hon. Member that that is precisely what universal pensions are all about. But it is not money that is being given as a charity. Universal pensions mean we recognize as a society that men and women in our country work all of their lives, make a contribution to our society, and deserve a pension. They paid for it through their labour and their taxes throughout their lives. That is what we believe.

It is very clear that the Hon. Member wants what his Party threatened to do before Christmas, which was to put an end to universality. I say to the Hon. Member that in the 19th century people like him believed we did not need universal education because the rich could afford their own schools. Then they went on and said we did not need medicare for everyone because the rich could afford their own doctors. Very clearly he wants to dismantle our pension system and say that only the poor should get pensions. We reject that because we have a higher view of what we can create by way of decency in this country of ours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), for questions or comments.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, after they finish congratulating each other, they might want to listen!

I have a question for the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, but first of all, I have a comment . . . Are you going to keep quiet and listen? Mr. Speaker, don't you think whoever is speaking has a right to be listened to? We didn't say a word when it was your turn!

The Leader of the New Democratic Party said that the greedy would benefit from this Budget. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that the greedy he is referring to include at least 100 CIP workes who were informed yesterday that contrary to what was going to happen before the Budget, they will not lose their jobs, new machines will be purchased, existing jobs will be maintained and the number of jobs in the bush increased, because of the new climate being created to stimulate the economy. And those people are not greedy. They are the ones that applauded—

An Hon. Member: That is not the subject of the motion before the House today!

Mrs. Mailly: Will you keep quiet!

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has a right to be heard, and my colleague should give her a chance to say what she has to say. However, I wish that what she has to say would be relevant to the motion before the House. and I do not think the subject she was broaching had any connection with old age security pensions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that the Hon. Member for Gatineau was giving the House a preamble to her comments, and I am sure that she will make those comments relevant to the speech by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) for giving me a chance to be heard.

An Hon. Member: Speak to the motion before the House!

Mrs. Mailly: Is that going to go on all day . . . Mr. Speaker?

An Hon. Member: Of course!

Mrs. Mailly: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition . . . excuse me, we—

An Hon. Member: Bring on the jobs!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I want to take this opportunity to hand down a ruling.

[English]

Last week the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) raised a question of privilege in connection with the conduct of one particular Member, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi). The exchange is to be found in Hansard at pages 5335 and 5336. I stated that I would take the question of privilege under advisement and make a ruling later. Since there has been no problem between the Hon. Members for the last week I had not made the ruling, but I will make it today.

The matter as raised by the Hon. Member for Gatineau is not a question of privilege. It might more properly be classed as a point of order. The Standing Orders require the Speaker to maintain order in the Chamber, and it is the duty of the Chair to intervene or protect the Member where offensive or disorderly words are used, whether by the Member addressing the House or by any other Member present. It is also the duty of the Chair, when its attention is drawn to certain words used, to determine whether or not they are offensive or disorderly. There is a lot of precedent and practice that language should not be ironical or offensive, nor should it contain ridicule, epithets or innuendo.

It seems to the Chair that the interjections across the Chamber by Members have become more frequent of late and neither side of the House is entirely blameless. Interruptions of another Member while he is speaking are most disruptive. They can confuse the Member who has the floor and can make for a most unpleasant atmosphere in the Chamber. The Chair is requesting Members' co-operation in this area and urges Members to cease shouting out and making interjections in debate when they do not have the floor. If that co-operation is not forthcoming, then the Chair will have to undertake its duties with more vigour, for Standing Order 15 is clear:

The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum—

I conclude by again urging all Hon. Members to show courtesy to their colleagues. That is in keeping with the best traditions of this honourable Chamber.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Gatineau.

Mrs. Mailly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So back to our dialogue with the Leader of the NDP Opposition Party.

Mr. Prud'homme: Well now, listen—

An Hon. Member: You are making a speech, not a comment!

Mrs. Mailly: I can hardly hear myself, let alone the answer of the Hon. Member. Well, Sir, I said earlier you were talking about greedy people who want to take every advantage of the Budget. I pointed out that such greedy people would have to include Gatineau's CIP workers who learned yesterday that their plant will be upgraded as a result of the new climate created by the Budget. It is altogether relevant to refer to the Budget job creation climate underlying all our measures, Mr. Speaker. The Budget has to be considered as a whole.

An Hon. Member: That is not what today's motion is all about!

Mrs. Mailly: For their own political considerations all the people you mentioned chose to instil fear in the elderly—

An Hon. Member: Make your speech on your own time.

Mr. Parry: This is ridiculous!

Mrs. Mailly: Just a minute, let me finish, you do the same thing.

Mr. Prud'homme: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has every right to our undivided attention, but if she wants us to listen to her she ought to abide by the Standing Orders of the House. She is making a speech. Her comments would be welcome, but if she wants to make a speech we have about—

Mr. Rossi: She should not even have the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: Just a minute, please. We do have a few hours left for debate. Let her put her name down and we will be here to listen to her and make comments. But if she wants to make a speech, this is not the proper time.

Mr. Rossi: Right on!

• (1210)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With deference for the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I would suggest that the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) tried to make a comment a moment ago but was interrupted—including by the Chair who made a ruling. I think she repeated what she had said, properly so, and like all Hon. Members she is entitled to at least three minutes of the question period. I would invite the Hon. Member for Gatineau to go on with her comments.

Mrs. Mailly: Talking about greedy people, those mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition would have to include plant workers who stand to gain a lot from the new economic recovery climate brought about by the Budget. We had proof of that in my riding yesterday and there will be more such encouraging news. It was quite obvious even before the Budget that the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had created a climate conducive to job creation. So instead of focusing too closely on the partial deindexation of pensions one ought to keep in mind the ultimate aim of the Budget, and that is job creation and economic recovery.

An Hon. Member: The motion has to do with pensions, not unemployment and job creation.

Mrs. Mailly: Please, Mr. Speaker, I can hardly hear myself!

An Hon. Member: Speak to the issue of today's motion—pensions.

Mrs. Mailly: Well, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: This is not the Rotary Club, you know.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, surely the intent of the 10-minute period for Members to ask questions and make comments is that the questions and comments should be brief so that the Member who made the speech will have an opportunity to reply.

Mrs. Mailly: I was being brief, but everyone keeps interrupting me.

Mr. Orlikow: I have not finished my point of order. The Member keeps saying that others interrupt her. I wish she would at least have the courtesy to listen to my point of order.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Member, that she is going to use up the entire 10-minute period so that the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) will not be permitted to answer the supposed question she is asking. I say that that is wrong and you ought to rule accordingly, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can assure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that should there be a question at the end of the comment of the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) will certainly have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Orlikow: What is your question?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I will finish my comment. I have every right to make a comment as well.

Mr. Deans: A brief comment.

Mrs. Mailly: The Leader of the NDP has made several comments and cast aspersions on this Budget. He has said that it is for the greedy. I am pointing out that among the "greedy" he has to think of the workers whose jobs have been maintained and the workers whose jobs will be created.

I want to make the further comment that he mentioned that pensioners did not support the measure. In my own riding pensioners have supported it.

[Translation]

Mr. Tassé of Morin Street in Gatineau—

[English]

—has sent back his pension cheque for the month—

Mr. Rodriguez: He must be a Tory.

Mrs. Mailly: He is not a Tory. He has sent me back his cheque for the month of May saying, "Keep on with the good work because I know very well that the NDP and the Liberals are going to try to scare you into going back on your very good Budget". He has also encouraged Mr. Trudeau to do the same.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will give the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) an opportunity to reply, should he wish to.

Mrs. Mailly: I have not posed the question.

Mr. Orlikow: You are finished. Sit down. Make your speech in your own time.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, first in English—

[English]

—the Member mentioned the pensioner who lives in her riding. I can only conclude it must be either George Hees or Doug Fisher.

An Hon. Member: Or Charlie Lynch.

Mr. Broadbent: It may be someone else. To understate it, no more than 90 per cent of pensioners would be in opposition. I guess that would be the case. I do not want to be glib. The evidence is overwhelming. I hope that the Member understands that the vast majority of pensioners and all Canadians are opposed to what the Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: She talked about the motion but, unfortunately, this debate has to do with pensions, not workers in general. I would like to talk about unemployment in Canada, as she would, but I must point out that pensions are the issue right now.

Not unlike her Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, she would rather talk about something else because she knows full well that the policy concerning retired Canadians is unfair. That is a fact.

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, a point of order to suggest—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask—

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask all Members to show courtesy to other Members. We had a very vigorous and lively debate on Bill C-31 in the last two days in the House. All Members were always courteous. I would ask the same thing of Members today on this motion.

We will resume debate on the motion with the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan).

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in today's debate because I regard this motion as a hypocritical motion by a hypocritical Party whose tactics since the Budget have been almost exclusively designed to scare senior citizens in the country. The reliance on scare tactics by this Party is not new. Last fall when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced his economic statement, that Party tried to scare the unemployed by suggesting that the measures in the economic statement would reduce employment in the country by 50,000 to 100,000 persons. Everyone in the Chamber knows that those statements and innuendoes did not work. Today we are seeing the most rapid increase in job creation recorded in the history of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: The Party is hypocritical in its criticism because it raised the possibility that within the next five years, if nothing else changes, we may see an increase of 200,000 in the number of people living in poverty. That is hypocritical because under that Party's Government in the last five years we saw an actual increase by 400,000 in the number of Canadians living below the poverty line. They did not say a single word. They allowed that situation to develop. They cut OAS by more and did not tackle the basic problem of poverty among seniors in the country as it relates to pension reform.

Those problems are well known and are not new. The problems with our public and private pension systems were identified by the Conservative Government when the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) announced a national pension conference in 1979. The Liberal Minister of National Health and Welfare confirmed over five years ago that we had serious problems with our pension system, and particularly with benefits for single women over the age of 65. That Party knew for five years that we had serious problems with poverty among the elderly in the country, but it did nothing whatsoever other than delay.

• (1220)

When the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) raises his heartfelt pleas for the poor in this country who are receiving GIS, he knows full well that the NDP Government in Manitoba systematically increases the charge-backs to the poorest in Manitoba for the rent supplements. Every time the GIS is increased, the NDP Government of Manitoba reduces the net income of seniors in Manitoba. That is what his Party is doing to protect the elderly in this country.

The Liberal Party is hypocritical because it tries to extrapolate one section of the Budget for five years and literally scare our elderly. Where were the Liberals when these problems developed? Where were they when women over 65 years of age gradually fell further below the poverty line? Where were they when widows below 65 faced increasing difficulties? Where were those Members when the OAS was cut as a result of the six and five program? They were silent and did nothing about the basic problems.

This is not the only example of the hypocrisy shown by the Liberal Party Members in this Parliament. When the unemployment statistics were released, they stood up month after month to complain that unemployment of 10.5 per cent was unacceptable in this country. They might have had some credibility if any one of them ever stood up to suggest that there was a problem in this country when unemployment was running at 12 per cent. However, they stayed silent. That is why I say that their actions now and then prove just how hypocritical they are.

Where were they in 1980 when the National Energy Program literally destroyed the energy sector in our country? They were silent again. Where were they during the last four years when poverty among our seniors rose by 400,000? It rose steadily, year after year, under their Government. They were silent.

A more recent example of their hypocrisy concerns interest rates. Last February when interest rates rose for two weeks, after a steady decline for four or five months, the Liberals were standing in the House trying to scare homeowners. They were saying that homeowners would lose again because interest rates were rising. Long-term interest rates are at a seven-year low, but the Liberals have been silent since that time. They did not protest the high level of interest rates when mortgages hit 22 per cent in 1982.

As a result of their bankrupt policies, the Liberals had no other policy than to leave the country close to economic ruin. The only tactic available to them now is to try to scare Canadians, whether it is our unemployed, our homeowners or our senior citizens.

The Progressive Conservative Party was elected to repair the damage caused by the Party which has proposed the motion today. Liberals should remember that it was one of their Prime Ministers, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who predicted that the 20th century belonged to Canada. There are 15 years left in the 20th century and I believe that we can develop the policies necessary to make the 20th century belong to Canada, rather than allow Canada to become a second rate nation as we did under the economic policies of the Liberal Party. We will do this by restoring prosperity, step by step, as we have been doing.

Our fall economic statement attempted to take stock of our country's situation and provide long-term projections of our goals. While we projected what would happen with such things as employment, the only tactic used by the Liberals was to scare people.

Second, we attempted to analyse objectively why the recovery in the United States had been so much more dynamic than the recovery in Canada. There are many similarities between the Canadian and the American economies. In both countries, for example, the automobile sector led the recovery. In both countries, the smokestack industries such as steel and textiles have not recovered.

However, there was a big difference between the economic recoveries in both countries. The energy sector in Canada was devastated while this did not take place in the United States. While the small business sector in both countries was almost the sole creator of jobs, that sector in the United States was much more vibrant. Research and development in the United States played a much greater role in the economic recovery because it was true research and development rather than the quick flip schemes introduced by the Liberals two years ago, Those projects produced almost no economic benefit and wasted $2 billion of public money.

With respect to reviving the energy industry—

Mr. Marchi: Talk about the motion.

Mr. McCrossan: I am talking about the motion because it concerns the economic situation in this country and what we are doing about it.

One of our priorities was to bring about energy accords. Again, the Liberals used scare tactics about the rising price of energy as a result of these accords. Prices in my riding have touched down to 37.7 cents a litre since the Western Energy Accord. That is the lowest price in the last year and a half. The Liberals are simply trying to scare the consumer unjustifiably. The same tactic was attempted in the United States when President Reagan decontrolled oil prices there. The opposition there suggested that oil prices would increase continually.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is with some regret that I rise to interrupt the Hon. Member in the middle of his speech. However, it seems to me that the Hon. Member should address himself to the motion before the House. There must be some rule about relevancy.

He has been carrying on for some time about subject matters that do not pertain directly to the motion. It seems to me that the Hon. Member is somewhat apprehensive in terms of addressing the motion directly. We on this side of the House would ask him, rather than speaking about extraneous, irrelevant matters, to address himself specifically to the motion which reads:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation—

I am sure that Hon. Members and Canadians would like to know where the Government stands on this particular motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has made his point. If I understand the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), he is trying to relate the general economic condition of the country to the matter of old age pensions. However, I would ask him to be as specific as possible in relation to the motion.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I was trying to do. If the Hon. Member had let me go on for one more sentence, he would have seen that I was coming to the fourth point.

In analysing the Budget, we came to the same realization as did the previous Government that the full cost of living indexation for all government expenditures and all tax deductions led to a systematic increase in the real deficit of this country. There have been a number of private economic organizations that have developed estimates of just how much this problem has built up in the last four years. Those estimates indicate that up to $10 billion of our $35 billion deficit is due to overindexing, which is the combined indexing of all benefit expenditures and all government tax exemptions.

We have begun to address that problem by fixing the pension system as the previous Government neglected to do. In his Budget, the Minister of Finance has taken decisive steps. The first step is to correct the private pension system so that future problems will not develop to the same magnitude as they have today. For example, in 1980 a number of reports from the House, the Senate, Quebec and Ontario recommended that last survivor pensions in the private sector be made mandatory. The previous Government did nothing about those recommendations. For five years it did nothing. We had five more years of people retiring without protection, without spouses having the protection that almost everyone recognized they should have from our pension system.

• (1230)

By 1980 we knew that our vesting requirements were completely inadequate, that women particularly were losing out on their pensions and were going into retirement without adequate income because their pension provisions were not being protected. That consensus was there by 1980. But that Party did nothing about it. It did nothing about ensuring that women in the workplace have eligibility for pension plans whether they were full-time or part-time workers. We changed that in this Budget. The previous Government did nothing to protect divorced women, with the increasing rate of divorce, to ensure that they could keep pension credits in retirement. We changed that in the Budget by bringing in credit splitting on divorce.

Ms. Mitchell: For how many women?

Mr. McCrossan: We brought in unisex provisions in this Budget to ensure that women, particularly the ones with problems concerning pensions, have full protection.

Ms. Mitchell: All women?

Mr. McCrossan: That contrasts with the previous Government's record of no action whatever in the area of pension reform in the private sector since 1976.

In this motion the Liberals condemn our Government for partial indexing of pensions since—

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In order not to mislead the general public watching the Hon. Member, would he clarify that it is only women in the federal jurisdiction who will be affected—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, I do not consider that to be a point of order.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, we are doing everything we can to affect pensions under our control. We are trying to set a lead. That hypocritical Party that was the Government did not try to give any sort of leadership whatever. The Liberal Government let the problem fester over the last five years.

Ms. Mitchell: What about the Canada Pension Plan and the OAS?

Mr. McCrossan: The Liberals were suggesting that we should be condemned for not fully indexing—

Mr. Nunziata: Read the motion.

Mr. McCrossan: —the Old Age Security pension. That is an important part of our pension system. It is not the only part. Since 1976 the previous Government had refused to increase by even one dollar the limit on money that people could set aside to put into pensions. There was no partial indexing for a cost of living above 3 per cent. The Liberals sat and watched the private pension system get weaker and weaker so there would be more reliance on OAS and GIS as a result. The Liberal Party is hypocritical because the Liberals did not take the sort of action they are espousing in this motion.

I mentioned that in the analysis of the Budget we decided that we had to take action to eliminate the structural deficit, the deficit that arose because of the full indexing of all government expenditures and the full indexing of all tax deductions. We did not take the steps which the previous Government took with the 6 and 5 program of a drastic reduction and of providing no protection regardless of where inflation went. We decided we would take the step of protecting our pensioners against the re-emergence of inflation. That is why we took the steps in the Budget, not only to limit the OAS for expenses and deductions but all government expenditures and all tax exemptions. We took an action which was long overdue with respect to Members in this House of saying that Members could not have special protection and special benefits which everyone else in the country cannot have. We eliminated the full indexing on MPs' pensions as well, a step which the previous Government did not take.

This Liberal motion is hypocritical because it focuses on one aspect of the Budget while assuming that nothing else changes in the meantime. The Liberals are hypocritical because if their Members who served on the Health and Welfare Committee had shown up for this debate, they would know that the all-Party committee passed a unanimous recommendation to study the structure of the OAS, the GIS, the age exemption and the pension exemption and asked for a referral back to the committee this fall. I fully expect we will have that recommendation implemented.

Ms. Mitchell: You said you would not touch the OAS. What about the blue book?

Mr. McCrossan: No. In the blue book the Government was not looking at making a change at this time. The all-Party committee unanimously recommended that we take a look at the entire structure of OAS, GIS, the tax exemption for age and the pension income exemption. Members know that that matter will be coming back to the House later this year, certainly before the April 1 deadline when the OAS limiting applies. Moreover, every Member of this House knows that the CPP is up for renegotiation with the provinces, that basic changes will be made in the next year in the design and benefits coming from the CPP which affect a level of protection provided our pensioners. This Party has a strong commitment to improving disability and spouse's pensions in the CPP. We can expect a full pension overhaul.

This motion, in assuming that nothing else happens anywhere in pension reform when it is obvious that this Government is treating it as a priority, is hypocritical by extrapolating one small item in the Budget and saying that is the only change and by trying to scare people as if nothing else were happening. The Opposition knows full well that all kinds of measures are under development that will affect the level of incomes for our elderly. That is why I say that this motion is hypocritical. In nine months we have brought forth Bill after Bill after Bill. I believe this Parliament will be recognized as one of the most active in history. In nine months we cannot undo 15 years of mismanagement. We are proceeding with programs step by step. Members know we have a strong commitment to pension reform.

Mr. Nunziata: It is time to wake up. You fell asleep on September 4.

Mr. McCrossan: It is time for you to wake up. I have been following and working on these issues. I have a fair idea of our commitment to pension reform. I can tell the Hon. Member that we have succeeded in increasing job creation. We have succeeded in getting interest rates down. We have succeeded in getting business expenditures up, more than double. We have succeeded in getting more benefits to single mothers through the child tax credit. We have succeeded in bringing in widows and widowers' pensions for those between the ages of 60 and 65. Just wait until the Opposition sees the results of the actions of this Government. The Liberals are trying to scare people once again. Their scare tactics are unjustifiable. Just as they tried with the November statement and as they tried in February with the Budget and with Challenge '85, the Opposition is trying to scare, but one by one their scare tactics are proving to be unjustifiable. They were wrong then; they are wrong now. They have no policies themselves. They are bankrupt of ideas. They have no policy other than to scare the weak in our society, particularly to concentrate on scaring the elderly, even though the Liberals have the knowledge that other steps are in progress which will change the situation and improve it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: I am not a betting man, Mr. Speaker, but I would be prepared to wager $5 or so with any member of the Opposition who wants to wager about the change in the number of people under the poverty line during the next three or four years compared to the last three or four years.

Mr. Orlikow: I will take that bet.

Mr. Nunziata: One hundred dollars. Bet your salary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could we forget about the bets please?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCrossan: The record of this Government as it comes to pass will indicate clearly that each of our economic measures has produced results. I fully expect and have every confidence that the number of Canadians below the poverty line will decline just as dramatically in the next four years as it increased so dramatically over the last four years under the last Government.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I want to say to the Member that my Leader asked me to apologize for his absence. He had an emergency call, otherwise he would have been here.

I want to put two questions to the Minister. The Hon. Member talked about the jobs created by this Government. Has the Hon. Member seen the most recent report of the OECD? I could send him a copy of an article which appeared in the May 31 edition of The New York Times and summarized the report. It was reported that in 1984, only one country among the OECD countries had a higher rate of unemployment than Canada, and that was Great Britain, with its 11.7 per cent unemployment rate compared with an 11.3 per cent unemployment rate in Canada. The OECD estimates are based upon information from experts in Canada in the Department of Finance and in the Department of Employment and Immigration. For the year 1985, it was estimated that the unemployment rate for the United States would be 7.25 per cent; for West Germany, 8.25 per cent; for France, 10.5 per cent; for Britain, 10.75 per cent; for Italy, 10.75 per cent; for Japan, 2.5 per cent; and for Canada, our country with this Conservative Government, 11 per cent, the highest percentage of unemployment of any OECD country.

• (1240)

Also the Hon. Member expressed some criticism of the policies of the New Democratic Party Government of Manitoba. I will not say that everything that Government does is perfect, but surely the Hon. Member realizes that the Province of Manitoba has a very high deficit. The reason for that is that it has done more to protect the standards of the old, the sick and the needy than any other Government. That Government may make decisions which he and I do not like, but does he not realize that the reason for the high deficit and for making decisions which none of us like is that it has done so much to protect the people who need protection the most?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his questions. I could not have planted better questions myself. With respect to the 1984 unemployment figures in Canada, I was trying to emphasize in my speech that exact point, that we inherited a mess.

Mr. Orlikow: Talk about 1985.

Mr. McCrossan: The Hon. Member indicated that those particular figures were published in May, 1985. Obviously they are obsolete because we have a 10.5 per cent unemployment rate now, not an 11 per cent one. Obviously they were prepared without any knowledge of what was in the Budget. If they were published at the same time as the Budget, they certainly could not have incorporated the effects of the Budget on the economy. It is obvious that someone in Brussels or Paris would not be able to keep up to date on what is happening in Canada.

I was dumbfounded when I heard the Hon. Member say that it was NDP policy, at times of high budget deficits, to cut back on the benefits to the elderly in Manitoba, the most needy in society, those collecting the GIS.

Mr. Orlikow: I did not say that at all.

Mr. McCrossan: I wonder whether he talks with his Leader, who just apologized for leaving. Everything members of that Party have been saying in the House indicates that cutting back of that nature is unacceptable. The Hon. Member's own critic, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), made a point in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs concerning our unanimous recommendations—

Ms. Mitchell: They were not unanimous. We did not support them.

Mr. McCrossan: There were many unanimous parts of the recommendation. I believe the Hon. Member will agree that the part to which I am about to refer was unanimous, that we should approach all provincial Governments to ensure—

Ms. Mitchell: And the federal Government, with which you did not agree.

Mr. McCrossan: As I was saying, it was agreed that we should approach all provincial Governments and the federal Government to ensure that increases which we were giving to the most needy were not simply used as a vehicle for revenue reduction by the provinces.

Ms. Mitchell: What about the federal savings?

Mr. McCrossan: Her Party in that province is doing exactly what she recommended to stop.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, quite simply and quite honestly, I found the Hon. Member's speech to be disgusting. He skirted, he danced, he went back to 1970-72, but he refused to discuss the motion at hand. He talked about hypocrisy. Talk about hypocrisy; it was his Leader, the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and members of his Party during the last federal election campaign who went across the country and told senior citizens that full indexation was here to stay forever, that full indexation was a sacred trust and that they cared about the people who built this country. Then the Budget was brought down, and the Government said: "Hold on, senior citizens, we will rethink what we told you last September and we will perhaps partially deindex pensions".

The Hon. Member talked about a motion which condemns, which is political, and which suggests a scare tactic. He ought to know that no one has a monopoly, as was indicated by our first speaker, on the concern for senior citizens—not this Party, not the NDP, not the Liberal Party. We are trying to be a vehicle, in this motion, for thousands upon thousands of Canadians who have been writing, telephoning, telegramming and trying to give the message to the Government and to its Leader that the proposal is regressive and will hurt. Through this motion we are trying to sensitize Hon. Members opposite to the problems faced by senior Canadians from one coast to the other. The Hon. Member ought to have the courage and the conviction to address himself to the motion. It does not condemn. It is not a vote of non-confidence. It reads as follows:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

Does the Hon. Member agree or disagree that pensioners should have fully indexed OAS payments?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker ignored that there are five parts to the pension system. There is the Old Age Security, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Canada Pension Plan, the provincial supplements and the private pension plans. All these have to be taken into account. It is the total result from the package which counts, not the individual breakdown.

Mr. Caccia: No, no.

Mr. Rossi: No.

Mr. McCrossan: Absolutely. It is the total package, the total dollars to senior citizens which count, not just one package or another.

Mr. Nunziata: It is not a package. Everyone does not get everything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McCrossan: The point I was making in my speech was that that Party has ignored all other sectors of pension reform, knowing full well that work is ongoing in those other areas, that we have already made major strides in the area of base protection in the private system, and that the changes in the OAS will not occur until April 1, 1986. There are various parts of the package which ensure the living standard of our elderly. This Party has a commitment to reduce the number of people living in poverty, particularly the elderly who are under the poverty line.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, there are so many questions I should like to ask, I do not know where to start. The Hon. Member talked about hypocrisy. The Government has shown great hypocrisy. In committee the Hon. Member said at one point that indexation had no basis in reality and that it was just a gimmick of Statistics Canada. In my opinion, he personally led the fight to propose deindexation of the family allowance. We know that it will go down by 3 per cent, affecting all children.

I am sure he will have the figures which show that deindexing is certainly a reality to pensioners, starting with $100 less this year and moving up to $680 less in 1991, for a total of $2,284 less over six years. Since he referred to the matter debated in committee about the savings from reduced family benefits and trying to get them back from the provinces, would he agree that he would not support motions to put those funds directly back into increased benefits for children and that he wanted them to go to social programs?

• (1250)

Also, he said that this Budget gives more benefits to mothers through the increased child tax credit. Would he agree that those mothers in the $10,000 to $20,000 bracket will pay extra taxes, that they will pay increased sales taxes of up to $500 a family, that they will have their family allowance deindexed by 3 per cent and they will only get an extra $70 on the child tax credit and even that is reduced to a lower eligibility for lower income groups? So where does he see that the mothers are going to get increased benefits for their children? They are going to have at least $1,000 less money in their pockets.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, first with respect to the issue of indexing and the report, I firmly believe that the Hon. Member is wrong, that I have been fully committed to indexing, that I subscribe to it—

Ms. Mitchell: Deindexing.

Mr. McCrossan: No, no, protection against the cost of living, and I have a record both within this House and within the Ontario Legislature of proposing this.

Second, the Hon. Member stated that benefits would go down by $100 this year. This is the sort of inaccurate statement that Hon. Members on that side have been making. Benefits will not go down one nickel this year. The Hon. Members have been consistently stating things which are not based on fact.

Mr. Riis: In real terms they will.

Mr. McCrossan: Not in this year they will not, Sir, they will not. In terms of the savings in the social programs the Hon. Member is quite correct that I argued in favour of retaining savings from rearrangements of programs inside the social envelope rather than on any one specific plan. If the Hon. Member checks out the Budget this year she will see that the increase in social envelope spending more than makes up for any decrease resulting from the Budget in the next fiscal year. That commitment has been continued, and I am sure that as our economic situation improves we will continue to adhere to the commitment which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave in the House.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, considering the last 15 minutes of the exchange on both sides of the House, I would respectfully request of you, Mr. Speaker, that you rule a little more harshly regarding interruptions on all sides of the House so that we can maintain proper order and decorum and so that the person speaking can say clearly what he or she wants to say. Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to you to do that on all sides of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point made by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) is well taken. The Hon. Member from Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on debate.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is a very simple one and one that I would hope some Hon. Members on the other side may feel able to support. The motion reads:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

I want to approach this discussion, Mr. Speaker, in a non-partisan way because I think the issue is too important to all of us to be accompanied by the kind of acrimony we have heard recently, and I want to propose ways in which I think the Government might quite responsibly reverse its position.

I have some sympathy for budget makers in these difficult times. Canada is recovering from a world-wide recession, but the recovery is fragile and the budget decisions need to be made very wisely; indeed budget makers almost need to be prescient. The cost of servicing the national debt is worrisome and needs to be addressed but, Mr. Speaker, this is not the way.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday indicated that the plan to remove indexing was tentative and that it may not go ahead. I would ask, if the budget proposal to deindex pensions is to be regarded only as a tentative proposal, why was it presented at all? The usual reason for giving advance warning is, of course, so that people can take measures to protect themselves, but if the indexing is to be reduced as planned, if, over the next five years a couple now aged 70 stands to lose about $1,500, what can they do with advance warning? Between the ages of 70 and 75, are they likely to be able to go out and find part-time jobs to make up for the income they will lose? They cannot do a thing. That is one of the reasons why this particular measure of deficit cutting offends all of us, that it is attacking a group who are helpless to find other solutions. Advance notice is of no help to them. It only causes anxiety and stress.

If, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday, cut-backs on old age pensions are not graven in stone, if the cut-backs are not going ahead, then say so now and let the senior citizens relax and enjoy their summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): If this was meant as a trial balloon, the Government has had its answer. Senior citizens, young people, business, labour have all united to oppose deindexation of senior citizens' pensions. Clearly the Government received bad advice immediately before the Budget and there is no shame in saying no and in going back to the positions that it took during the last election. In July of last year, the Prime Minister said that he thought full indexation to the full cost of living should be maintained for senior citizens. That was an honourable position, Mr. Speaker, and surely one to which the Government could go back without any loss of face particularly if, as we are told, this proposal was tentative.

In January there were further statements from the Prime Minister which I think he and his supporters might very well want to reconsider. In January the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I believe, although I am not quite sure whether this was said by the Minister of Finance or by the Prime Minister, but in any case, in January the Conservative position was that "the Government regards the present system as a good one, which is working well", and that it "is a sound one which should not be disturbed", that "changes in these programs which may result from this review should improve benefits for those in need", and that "savings should not be transferred to deficit reduction".

Again thus was a very good statement of policy made in January by the Government which may very well, on reflection, prove to them a more acceptable policy than the trial balloon we have before us.

May I call it one o'clock and continue after the recess?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government continues to boast of its success with job creation as a result of the marginal improvement in employment during the last two months. We are all pleased with that slight improvement, but it is still too early to tell whether it is the beginning of a real trend or simply an aberration.

Furthermore, the unemployment rate is still at 10.5 per cent. Who can be content with that? Before the recession in 1981, the average unemployment rate was 7.5 per cent, and that was not satisfactory. More important, no one in Government can honestly tie the recent improvements to any government program. As a matter of fact the only government program fully implemented to date is Canada Works 1985, a Liberal program. In the Budget and the Regina statements, there were lots of promises but no details and no implementation.

The Globe and Mail of June 8 reports that many economic analysts are reluctant to attribute job improvement to any federal policies. Thomas McCormick of Data Resources has said: "I wouldn't attribute a whole lot to what they've done". He traced the new jobs to the continued strength of Canadian exports, and to buoyant consumer demand. This means that there will not be any significant and steady improvement in the employment picture unless the Government brings in specific job-creation programs, with specific goals. We need a six and five program for employment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

ECONOMIC SITUATION IN BEAUCE REGION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reveal to Hon. Members some realistic figures on the Beauce region which reflect the energy and confidence of our business sector.

Under the Challenge 85 program, we have been able to get jobs for over 515 students in Beauce, a considerable improvement over last year, and more than 70 per cent of the jobs created were provided by the private sector.

Also, for the sector covered by the Conseil économique de Beauce-Sud, yesterday's statistics show an increase of 17 per cent in permanent jobs, an increase of 34 per cent in the value of goods shipped and an increase of 65 per cent in investments in small and medium-sized businesses. In fact, this means 840 additional jobs.

In concrete terms, Mr. Speaker, this amounts to a real increase of $100 million in sales in just one sector in the greater Beauce region.

Mr. Speaker, the regions must help each other and have confidence in themselves. The important thing is to restore a climate of confidence and to maintain it. It takes team work. Small- and medium-sized businesses, workers, pensioners and Government authorities, supported by a positive press, must work together to create jobs. They have a moral obligation. And that is what is happening in our region. Before improving social programs, we must control the deficit and have a healthy economy. That is what we believe in my region because the people of Beauce are known for their common sense, and they know we cannot live with a deficit that is gnawing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CAUCUS MEETING

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, with the election last September 4 of hundreds of Conservative back-benchers, many Canadian senior citizens have lost a strong voice to defend them in Parliament against the attack on pensions by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). However, there is still time to encourage Conservative MPs to speak out for the people they were elected to represent.

I am told that there is to be a special Conservative caucus meeting this coming Saturday. I encourage all those people who live in Conservative-held ridings and are concerned about the Government's attack on pensions, to call their Conservative MPs immediately to demand that they speak out in caucus on behalf of the senior citizens of Canada. This is especially important to those who live in ridings where strong NDP voices were lost to silent Conservative back-benchers.

People who live in the riding of Nanaimo-Alberni should call their Member at 613-996-4971; people who live in the riding of Kootenay West should call their Member at 613-992-2855; people who live in the riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke should call 992-2876, and people who live in the riding of Winnipeg-St. James should call 992-2474. They should tell their Members to get off their butts and fight for pensioners at that special meeting of the Conservative caucus on Saturday.

THE BUDGET

BUDGET'S IMPACT

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I had a chance to accompany the delegation of French-speaking parliamentarians in connection with the activities of the International Association of French-speaking Parliamentarians. The purpose of the meeting was to look at water technology and science. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that most parliamentarians and representatives from thirteen countries who attended the meeting were very much impressed with the abundance of natural and human resources in this great country of ours. They were constantly saying how lucky we were to have such a wealth of resources.

S.O. 21

Mr. Speaker, I then asked myself once again why we have so much unemployment in this great country, with all its natural resources, and men and women who are anxious to use their knowledge and skills for our country's progress. I then realized that the previous Government had introduced regulations that inhibited hopes for success and restricted personal initiative. Today, our Government is giving Canadians new hope and urging people from all over the world to come and work in this land of opportunity.

The Budget of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is telling Canadians to work and succeed. Mr. Speaker, this Budget will reward only those who work and succeed, instead of those we think might succeed—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

OLD AGE SECURITY

DEINDEXATION OF PENSIONS—REACTIONS OF SENIOR CITIZENS' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, ever since the Conservative Government announced in the Budget that it would limit indexation of Old Age Security pensions, more and more senior citizens' groups have been expressing their dissatisfaction with this proposal.

In New Brunswick, the Senior Citizens' Federation, with a membership of 30,000, said outright that the Government proposal to deindex pensions is unacceptable.

More than 73 per cent of the elderly in my province are already living below the poverty line. According to the president of the Federation, Mrs. Edna Bourque, "the changes announced by the Minister of Finance have greatly increased anxiety among the elderly and seriously affected their quality of life."

"Fully aware of this intolerable situation", Mrs. Bourque went on, "today our Federation is launching a campaign that will have repercussions from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in order to reverse this immoral federal decision."

It is clear that deindexing Old Age Security pensions is discriminatory and unfair in the extreme.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is now being attacked by its own citizens, and it has no choice but to revert to a more equitable position.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—MARTIAL LAW IN THE PUNJAB

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, last week marked the first anniversary of the storming of the Golden Temple in Amritsar, India. The Golden Temple holds the same significance for the Sikhs of the world as does the Vatican for the Catholics of the world. The destruction of this holy centre has contributed to deep division in India, and has led to several tragic events.

For a year the Punjab State has been under martial law, and communication has been difficult. Many are concerned that serious transgressions of human rights have occurred and continue to take place in the Punjab. Such organizations as the International Red Cross and Amnesty International have been denied entrance to this State.

The citizens of my riding are concerned. I would like to quote from a letter addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) dated May 30, and written by the Mayor of Williams Lake, British Columbia. The letter reads:

> I believe that both yourself and Canada are well respected as being truly concerned with world peace. A good percentage of our well respected new Canadians are from India and are truly concerned with the problems in their homeland. We have a large Sikh community in Williams Lake who have proven their responsibility to Williams Lake, British Columbia and Canada by not holding any public demonstrations concerning the reported atrocities in India. The East Indian population are good sound residents of Williams Lake and are truly concerned with the safety and lack of communication from their family and friends in India.
> I would truly appreciate you and your government taking the lead in doing anything within your jurisdiction to assist with the peaceful solution to the problems in India.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CAUCUS MEETING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the election of September 4 has resulted in 211 seats being held by Conservative Members. What Canadians, and especially seniors, are now realizing is that these Tories are a silent majority when it comes to protecting the pensions of our senior citizens.

This coming Saturday, Conservative MPs will be holding a special caucus meeting in Ottawa. I would encourage all those who are represented by Conservative Members to call the constituency offices or the Ottawa offices of their Members before Saturday, to demand that they speak up for Canada's senior citizens at that meeting. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should be given a clear message to withdraw the deindexation of old age pensions.

I would especially urge those who live in ridings where strong NDP voices were lost to call their silent Tory Members. Those who live in the riding of Saskatoon East should call 343-6060 in Saskatoon. Those who live in the riding of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake should call 446-2144. In Dauphin, Manitoba, they should call 638-9633, and in Selkirk-Interlake they should call 785-2918. The voice of the people can, and must, prevail.

THE BUDGET

SUPPORT FROM PENSIONER

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, since May 23 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced his Budget, he and other members of the Government have been stressing the need for Canada to reduce its deficit and live within its means. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there are countless Canadians who share these views, and I would like to share with you excerpts from a letter I received from a lady in Prince George, British Columbia, whom I have never met but who, I am sure, all Hon. Members will agree is an outstanding Canadian. The letter reads as follows:

Dear Sir,

I hereby return my old age pension cheque, and pledge its return for six months. It is plain to see that Canada is in deep trouble. Our beautiful Canada is becoming a decadent nation! I grieve for her.

That is not enough, and while it is ludicrous to think that my cheque can make a difference, I feel that is the only honest thing I can do—could this tiny drop become a trickle, then a torrent that would wipe out this debilitating debt? I believe it could. I believe there are enough people in this country, who, like myself have had the privilege of working and rearing families in this beautiful land, who would now be willing—no glad!—to pay back the debt we owe to this great land.

Thousands of men and women gave their lives for this country, and many more thousands gave several years of their lives during recent wars. Surely the rest of us, who live above subsistence level, can give—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

CITIZENSHIP

FEE INCREASE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, one of the most rewarding parts of being a Member of Parliament is being able occasionally to attend citizenship ceremonies. I have been to many, as I am sure other Hon. Members have as well. One of the most interesting parts of the ceremony is to see the very large families which show up to become Canadian citizens on these occasions.

That may change as a result of the increase in citizenship fees imposed by the new Government, and which become effective at the beginning of April. The fee used to be $25 for an adult. It is now $40. For a child it used to be $8. It is now $15. So for a large family it can cost well over $100.

Last week I telephoned the citizenship office in Toronto to ask if there had been a drop in the number of people applying for citizenship. I was called back a few days later and told that this April there was a 40 per cent drop compared to what there had been in April a year ago. Canadian citizenship is priceless, but this 40 per cent drop is the result of the actions of the Tory Government.

S.O. 21

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the letter which was sent by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) to the President of the Canadian Nature Federation, Greg Sheehy. In this rather snarky letter the Minister indicates to the President of the Canadian Nature Federation that she would like to be judged only by her actions and not by her words. I want to say to the Minister that I think anyone who has been around here for a while will know that Ministers must also to be judged by their words. What Cabinet Ministers say creates a political context, sends out a message, sends out a signal. If the Minister of the Environment muses about logging and mining in national parks, she sends out a signal. In fact I am informed that some logging companies have already expressed an interest.

If the Minister says that people have worked for 30 years with PCBs and no harm has come to them—as a rather pathetic defence of government inaction on that issues—she sends out a signal to polluters that the Government is kind of relaxed about that issue.

If the Minister of the Environment muses about privatization in public parks, that says something to people who might be interested in the private exploitation of those parks. It may be that the public nature of our parks is not as sacred as it used to be.

So I say to the Minister of the Environment that she is to be judged not only by her actions but by what she says, by the kind of signal she sends out, and the sooner she realizes that, the better.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CANADIAN ROLE AT OTTAWA CONFERENCE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's thirteenth ecumenical memorial service in Ottawa commemorating the suffering of the Baltic and Ukrainian nations, and the continued violation of human rights by the Soviet Union, was an emotional reminder of the existence of human oppression. This year's ceremony was all the more special since the conference of experts on human rights is being hosted by Canada in the nation's capital.

Yet while the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) pledged that both he and the Canadian delegation would find ways to press and raise individual cases with the Soviet Union, and with any others violating human rights, this has not occurred. I believe the Government's silence at the conference has been politically questionable, highly regrettable, and morally wrong.

The Canadian delegation must raise these concerns with the Soviets. They must speak up in defence of fundamental human rights, and press the offenders to live up to the Helsinki Accords which they all signed. Quiet diplomacy, unfortunately, is all too often met with quiet denials. Therefore, in the last remaining days of the conference I urge the Government to take to the high road, to publicize the harsh realities, and name the names, for it is in the court of public opinion that the guilty will be judged, and in which we will bring to an end the immoral and unacceptable oppression of humanity. It is a battle we cannot afford to lose.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF UNITED KINGDOM MINISTER FOR OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to indicate to the House the presence in our gallery of the Right Hon. Timothy Raison, Minister for Overseas Development, of the United Kingdom.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SUPREME COURT RULING ON MANITOBA MINORITY RIGHTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my questions to the Deputy Prime Minister. I believe everyone in this House recognizes that this is a very historic day in the establishment of a more civil, tolerant, and equitable society in Canada. The opinion rendered by the Supreme Court on the establishment of minority rights is a very clear verdict and a very clear signal which, considering the past judgments of this House, I am sure we all endorse.

However, I think it also raises some very crucial and immediate questions about the kinds of initiatives which will have to be taken by the Government of Canada and by the Government of Manitoba. Because of the very immediate timetable which was set out by the Supreme Court in terms of a response to the establishment of minimum standards, I would like first to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the Government of Canada intends to do to respond to those invitations and directions from the Supreme Court. In particular, can the Deputy Prime Minister give us assurances that the Attorney General of this country will clearly submit, within the 120-day period, a timetable? Or will the Government follow the option of negotiating and consulting with the Government of Manitoba to see if there is another political solution, to avoid the major expenditure of time and resources which would be required under the decision by the Supreme Court?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand that that decision was rendered at 10.30 this morning. It is a very lengthy judgment, well in excess of 200 pages. The Hon. Member would, as would all Hon. Members, I am sure, expect the Government to examine very carefully the detail of that judgment before arriving at any conclusions. That will be done, and it will be done as quickly as is reasonably possible.

Of one thing the Hon. Member can be assured. As has been demonstrated while we have been sitting on this side and the other side of the House, this Party is and remains unequivocally committed to the official languages course in this country.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we fully recognize the importance of taking a proper and careful look at the decision. I would want to remind the Deputy Minister that part of that decision states that any law which is passed by the Legislature of Manitoba from this day hence forward, which is not in conformity with the decision, is invalid. That, therefore, puts an incredible responsibility and onus on the province for the provision of language services so that the Legislature can continue to function as the proper body for that jurisdiction.

Can we receive assurance from the Deputy Prime Minister that the Government of Canada will immediately offer every assistance, by way of resources and personnel, to ensure that proper language services can be obtained by the Legislature of Manitoba, so that it can continue to function in its proper capacity?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can be absolutely certain that the federal Government will offer whatever resources are necessary to ensure that it fulfils its obligations under the official languages policy, and to comply with the often expressed views of the Prime Minister and this Party with respect to the obligations of government to two official languages in this country.

• (1420)

It may well be that the Hon. Member's interpretation of the laws passed from this date on in the Province of Manitoba requires that sort of immediate attention which might well become the focus of some initial action by the federal Government. My information is that laws passed have effect for the time being, but whether it is—the Hon. Member shakes his head. That is our problem. The judgment is extremely lengthy, as I say, and will have to be examined very carefully. But whatever is required of the federal Government in that regard will be done.

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CONSULTATIONS WITH FRANCO-MANITOBANS AND GOVERNMENT OF MANITOBA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Considering the tremendous importance of this decision and of participation by all Canadians in the political process, could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the Government of Canada will be having consultations with the Franco-Manitoban community and the Government of Manitoba, with a view to proceeding together, with firm resolve, to put into effect the decision handed down by the Supreme Court?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT JUDGMENT—SITUATION OF FRANCOPHONES IN MANITOBA

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, as a preamble to my question, directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, and following what was said by my hon. friend from Winnipeg, I want to say, as a Francophone, and I imagine all Francophones in the House must be delighted with the judgment handed down by the Supreme Court today that this is an historical gesture which I think guarantees not only the rights of Francophones in Manitoba but also those of Francophones everywhere in Canada where those rights are not yet fully respected. I think we can look forward to an even brighter future.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Government consider that the resolutions adopted unanimously by the House of Commons in 1983 and 1984 can and in fact do constitute a minimum basis for seeking both a legal and a political solution for Franco-Manitobans?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Well, to begin with, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Government would want to look at the judgment today in the context of those resolutions, which would require some memory refreshment. But I can assure the Hon. Members that we in this Party and this Government look upon languages in our country as an instrument of unity. That is our approach, and given that kind of approach by all Members of this House, indeed by our citizenry at large, we will achieve a far greater degree of unity than has ever been achieved in the past.

[Translation]

LEGISLATION PASSED BY MANITOBA LEGISLATURE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased with what the Deputy Prime Minister had to say, but I think it should be understood that Francophones will never again tolerate second-class treatment, in Manitoba or anywhere else in Canada.

I would like to get back to a point made by my hon. colleague regarding the urgency of the situation. On page 65 of the Supreme Court judgment, which covers 88 pages, the following is said, and I quote:

> As for the future, the Constitution requires that from the date of this judgement, all new statutes of the Legislature of Manitoba be adopted, printed and published both in French and English. Any statute of the Legislature that does not meet this requirement will be invalid and inoperative.

Therefore, regarding the point made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, does the Government of Canada intend to give its immediate and urgent attention to this matter so that the Manitoba Legislature's operations will not be paralysed by a lack of resources for operating in French and English in its legislation?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond very positively to the hon. gentleman, as I thought I was doing with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. Not having studied the judgment which, as he will appreciate, is very lengthy, it is my understanding that the laws passed by the Manitoba Legislature would in the interim have validity until such time as the 120 days—

Mr. Axworthy: Past laws, not future.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Past laws.

Mr. Nielsen: That may be incorrect. I have not yet studied the judgment in detail. There may be a catch-up period in there. However, whatever is required to be done by the federal Government to assist in achieving the, I am sure, mutually desired objective of implementing the spirit of that judgment, will be done in order to achieve equality of language rights not just in Manitoba but throughout the entire country.

THE BUDGET

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the Prime Minister is absent, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Today's Globe and Mail reports that the Minister of Finance knew before bringing down the Budget that one of the most unfair measures was the capital gains tax exemption. Can the Government at least change the capital gains provision so it would not apply to real estate and use those millions of dollars to restore full indexation of pensions?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): With respect to the capital gains tax exemption, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is referring to an article pointing out to what extent the exemption would be helpful in the real estate sector. I would simply draw his attention to the fact that, in most cases, the exemption as it relates to real estate applies to our agricultural sector. Farmers have been working very hard to turn our lands into an asset to the benefit of the Canadian people. They deserve assistance through the Budget and I am pleased that our Government was able to give them the help they have long since earned.

[English]

REAL ESTATE SPECULATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the reference in The Globe and Mail was to the past provisions of the capital gains tax, not the proposal by the Government. As far as I am aware, all Parties in this House are in favour of exempting capital gains for the family farm and individual homes. That is not the point.

Some Hon. Members: What about small business?

Mr. Broadbent: The question concerned real estate speculation, and my question to the Minister of Health, in the absence of the Prime Minister, is this. Given that in 1983 most of the millions of dollars that were given away through the capital gains provision—we do not have the figures, but the Government does—went to real estate speculators, will the Government at least change the law it now proposes in order to make those provisions inapplicable to that kind of speculation, and use the millions saved to reindex pensions?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Government will continue to pursue measures which have as their prime objective the creation of jobs. That is what this Budget is all about, and that is what this measure is all about; it is jobs throughout the economy, throughout industry, and throughout every region of Canada. We have already had a demonstration of that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, even a Minister in a Conservative Cabinet should know that real estate speculation just makes bucks, it does not create jobs. That is the point.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): In the past the Minister of National Health and Welfare defended Canadian pensioners. Was he aware that, as reported in The Globe and Mail today, the previous capital gains provisions overwhelmingly benefited real estate speculators? If so, did he stand up for pensioners saying that that is not the kind of provision he wants, but rather that as Minister he wants full indexation for pensioners? Did he do that in Cabinet, or did he accept this nonsense?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the provisions referred to by the Member fall largely within the Department of Finance and should be explained by that Department. However, I would point out that if we can get additional activity in the housing and real estate markets, there will be many spin-off effects. He must realize that the creation of more activity in those areas will create more jobs.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows that speculation only drives up prices and rents.

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and is an attempt to clarify an ever-increasingly confusing situation. Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister referred to the Budget measure to deindex OAS as a budget proposal. In response to a question from the Hon. Member for Beaches he said, "Yes, it is proposed for January 1 of next year".

My understanding is that budget measures are budget measures; they are not proposals and are not a White Paper.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tobin: Is the measure with respect to OAS indeed a budget measure which will come into place on January 1, 1986, or is it a budget proposal? If it is a proposal, why is it not in a White Paper? What is it doing in the Budget?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will try to clarify for the Member in order that he will understand the budgetary process and legislation in the House.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Don't lecture.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He asked for an explanation, and I will try to give it to him. If he looks at any Budget he will find that there are aspects which take effect immediately. On the other hand, any change in existing legislation would have to have legislative change and be voted on in the House in order to come into effect. Until that has taken place the matter is a proposal in that sense.

CONTENT OF BUDGET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Given that explanation, Mr. Speaker, are we now to assume that all tax measures that do not take effect immediately, such as the capital gains exemptions, the changes to the child tax benefits, the deindexing of personal income tax, and the deindexing of OAS, are all proposals and open for discussion? That is the argument the Minister has just made. He is confusing the situation much more and is causing increasing anxiety for senior citizens.

Will he now make up his mind whether it is a Budget or a White Paper on tax changes that is before the House? He had better clear the air because senior citizens do not deserve the anxiety, heartache, and uncertainty that he and his colleagues are inflicting upon them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer that I gave to the first question applies to this one. In the preamble to this question he tried to—

Mr. Tobin: The whole Budget is open for discussion. That's what you're saying.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Your question was too long. Keep quiet for a while.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He tried to tie taxation in with changes on the OAS as legislative initiatives. The first answer which I gave him was correct and applies to the second question as well.

THE BUDGET

GLOBE AND MAIL ARTICLE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On budget night the Minister of Finance stood up and went on and on about how fair and just this Budget was for Canadians. We have learned from The Globe and Mail that the Government's own documents indicated that that was not the case and that in fact the Budget was biased in favour of the wealthy, and was particularly going to hit the poor and middle income earners of Canada. The Minister of Finance lied to the people of Canada in that particular statement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Riis: I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister to table those reports now.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I understood correctly, I believe the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap accused the Prime Minister of having lied.

Mr. Broadbent: No, the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If that is not what the Member said, I shall take his word for it and read the "blues", but that was my understanding of what he said.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not accuse the Prime Minister of lying. If I accused the Minister of Finance of lying I will retract that statement, but I will say that I am probably the only person in Canada who believes him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: The Globe and Mail has indicated that the Government's own studies indicated that this was a very biased Budget. Since at least there appeared to be a conflict here, will the Deputy Prime Minister now say that these documents will be tabled so that the people of Canada will see what the Minister of Finance knew when he made his statement on budget night?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the article that the Hon. Member refers to quotes a number of statistics applying to 1990. I personally do not know the origin of these statistics, but having worked in economics for a long time I know that projections for 1990 must be based on a lot of assumptions.

Mr. Broadbent: What about 1983?

Mr. de Cotret: To answer that in terms of 1986 I will give you the numbers contained in the Budget Papers. In 1986 someone with an income level of $20,000 would see a tax increase of $104. Someone with an income level of $200,000 would see an increase of close to $5,000. Therefore, for a ten-fold increase in income there would be a fifty-fold increase in taxes. I do not believe that is taxing the poor more than the rich.

MONITORING OF ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In that last response I think the Government was saying that it has confidence in the Budget and that the economy will in fact improve.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I take it from the applause, Mr. Speaker, that the Government benches are in agreement with that. The Prime Minister has indicated that he is going to monitor the situation carefully. If the Prime Minister and the Government have confidence in the Budget and in what they are doing, they must have confidence that things are going to improve, and there is therefore no need to monitor the situation any longer. Let us stop the deindexation for pensioners right now. Let them relax for the summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Say you don't have confidence now.

Mr. Blaikie: Think positive.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the convolutions and distortions of the Hon. Member in whatever participation he has taken in Question Period since the opening of this session of Parliament, I can truthfully say that I am probably the only one in the House, or elsewhere in the country, who gives any veracity whatsoever to his bald misstatements during the period for questions.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

REPORTED PAYMENT OF BRIBES IN ARGENTINA

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Solicitor General, to whom I have given notice. Press reports from Buenos Aires indicate that the Argentinian Government yesterday released a report that $4 million Canadian of Canadian taxpayers' funds was paid in bribes by AECL of Canada, and its Italian contractor on the Argentinian Candu reactor construction project, to the late Mr. Jose Gelbard, then the Argentinian Minister of the Economy, in the period 1974 to 1978. The same Mr. Gelbard, who was then a Washington resident, refused to appear before the Public Accounts Committee of this House.

• (1440)

My question relates to the fact that the Government of the day and the RCMP at that time indicated that they were powerless to trace those funds beyond anonymous bank accounts in Switzerland and Lichtenstein. Why were the Argentinian authorities able to trace the money beyond those numbered accounts in Switzerland and Lichenstein when I was told, as Chairman of a House of Commons committee, that the Canadian Government was powerless to do it? Has any report ever been received by the Government of Canada relating to whether or not any of that money came back to Canadian citizens? Will there now be a—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawrence: —an investigation into that matter?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving notice of that question. However, he will appreciate that as Acting Solicitor General I am not in possession of all of the facts with respect to the matter which he raises, and which he has raised over the course of the years.

All I can tell the Hon. Member is that it is the practice of the Solicitor General neither to confirm nor deny that there is any criminal investigation taking place at any particular time. However, I will take notice of the question and make sure that the Solicitor General receives the information which the Hon. Member has been good enough to convey today.

THE BUDGET

PROVISION AFFECTING FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Government is apparently now willing to reconsider the proposal to reduce indexation of senior citizens' pensions next year, will the Minister also undertake to review the Budget's family allowance proposals which, if enacted, would hurt many thousands of low-income parents?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the changes to the family benefits will in fact help low-income families. For example, families with incomes of approximately $28,000 will see their child benefits increased in the 1985-89 period. Some 325,000 families with incomes below $10,000—many of whom are single parents—will be better off by some $300 by 1990-91. If the Hon. Member looks at those projections, the premise on which her question is based is in fact not the case.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Without arguing the Minister's figures, he did not answer my question asking whether this is a firm measure or a proposal.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. If everything in the Budget which is not in effect today is to be treated as a proposal only, as implied earlier, why not reconsider the capital gains benefits which would be paid for by low and middle-income Canadians and will benefit a very small number of affluent Canadians without necessarily creating one single job in the process?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the impact of the capital gains measure is very clearly identifiable. It is a measure that will help people in the agricultural community, small-businessmen, small investors, and fishermen all across the country. It is a measure of fairness to create jobs.

The most severe unfairness that we had to face following years of Liberal Government was the high rate of unemployment that was bestowed upon the youth and middle-aged people in our country. This Budget is concerned with creating jobs, and this measure will go a fair way in doing that.

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET—CONSULTATION INQUIRY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the Minister recall his Government's statement in the Throne Speech last November:

—a priority goal of my Ministers will be to breathe a new spirit into federalism and restore the faith and trust of all Canadians in the effectiveness of our system of government.

A constant process of consultation and co-operation must be restored.

If the Minister recalls that statement, how does he square the lack of any kind of consultation not one scintilla, with senior folk, with respect to the changes he has made by deindexing old age pensions, with the Statement in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member has read the throne speech because it was valid then, and it is valid today. I want to tell the Hon. Member as well that he should not say there was not one scintilla of consultation, or that there is no continuing consultation with senior citizens. He should not make that statement without looking at what an individual Member, or this Minister, for that matter, is doing. That kind of statement by the Hon. Member is simply not the case.

Mr. Rodriguez: There was no formal consultative process. There was no system to get an opinion from senior folk or their organizations.

REQUEST THAT PROVISION AFFECTING PENSIONS BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in light of what is taking place across the country among senior folk and their organizations, does the Minister think it is fair and sensitive to have senior citizen pensioners dangling in the wind all summer, fall, and next winter? Will he now say that he will not have senior folk go through that kind of insensitive process, and withdraw the deindexation proposal now?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member of the statements made by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons yesterday. Those statements are on the record, and that is the position of the Government. I refer the Hon. Member to those statements made by the Prime Minister.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT JUDGMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it has to do with the historical judgment rendered today by the Supreme Court. I find altogether surprising and unacceptable the fact that the Deputy Prime Minister, with all the human resources at his command, could not find enough time today to acquaint himself with a judgment which I consider historical. It is unacceptable!

An Hon. Member: A 200-page document!

Mr. Gauthier: Not 200 pages, 88 pages. Mr. Speaker, it is symptomatic of his lack of interest in this matter.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether his Government has already contacted the Manitoba Government before today's judgment, precisely to avoid chaos and take the necessary corrective measures in anticipation of the Supreme Court judgment?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rather regret that I do not have the 15-second wisdom that is possessed by the Hon. Member. I think he will agree that the kind of historic decision to which he refers is very lengthy indeed and deserves very careful and thorough study.

In the meantime, I am assured that the judge refers to a process that has to be triggered to ensure that the federal Government is involved in a judicial process with respect to the time which is to be set during which the transition is to take place. I see no need for instant action. However, whatever action in whatever timeframe is required, after that careful consideration has been given to the matter, will be taken by the federal Government.

Let me repeat once again that I am sure no Hon. Member of the House would want to take advantage of the timing of this situation to use any question with respect to the official languages of this country as a political opportunity to create any divisions. That is certainly not the purpose of anyone in government.

CONSULTATIONS WITH MANITOBA GOVERNMENT AND SOCIETY OF FRANCO-MANITOBANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I quote from page 68 of the English version:

[English]

The period of temporary validity will not apply to any unilingual Acts of the Legislature enacted after the date of judgment.

After today. Therefore, Manitoba needs attention now. It needs consideration now, and it needs help from the federal Government to translate the documents. Will the Deputy Prime Minister—

[Translation]

—can the Deputy Prime Minister give us the assurance that this very day he will get in touch with the Manitoba Government and the Franco-Manitoban Society to find a fair and equitable solution to this problem?

Mr. La Salle: We know what to do, but you did not do anything during twenty years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We ought to let the Deputy Prime Minister answer the question.

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, even if there is merit in the Hon. Member's interpretation of the judgment, I question whether his mien and the manner in which he delivered his question in a very combative way does anything to contribute to the unity on this particular issue in our country.

I can assure the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members of this House, that whatever is necessary on the part of the federal Government to give effect to the judgment, whatever the requirements might be after studying the judgment, will be done. I can assure the Hon. Member of that. There will be no hesitation in coming forward to fulfil the federal Government's obligation in that regard.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON FAMILY BENEFITS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who changed him mind once, and I hope he will change it back again. The Minister said in January that no changes were required in the OAS or GIS payments. Then the Government, of course, deindexed old age pensions.

The Minister has also preached that his Government would help those in greatest need. He said this many times. How can he say he is helping those in greatest need when many families earning between $10,000 and $20,000, with two kids, will have to pay up to $500 in sales tax, will have family allowances deindexed by 3 per cent, some will have to pay income tax, and many will lose their family benefits? How can he possibly say that he is helping those in greatest need?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First, Mr. Speaker, the term which the Hon. Member uses of deindexation is not correct. The full indexation on the Guaranteed Income Supplement is maintained and contained in the Budget. Partial indexation does apply on the Old Age Security. I hear Hon. Members say they want seniors to have clarification. Hon. Members opposite should not use words or examples which are not contained in the Budget.

Having said that, if the Hon. Member takes a look at the family benefits, part of the argument has always been from social groups—I have heard her say it herself and I have argued the same point—that the most regressive part in terms of family benefits was that, as the tax exemption was applied, the higher the income of a family, the higher the taxable income, the greater was the benefit. That trend has been reversed. One can argue more can be done and should be done as the economy improves. I suggest to the Hon. Member that can be a consideration once we get the economy generating not only more jobs but more wealth.

CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister that any pensioner who is on GIS is having his OAS deindexed, and further, 200,000 more will be on GIS.

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

Ms. Mitchell: Of course; they get the OAS too.

I would also like to say to the Minister that the increase he is proposing in the child tax credit is an insult to the poor. Seventy dollars the first year does not even nearly begin to cover taxes.

Does the Minister care about Canada's children? There are parents really struggling to have their children brought up and provide decent meals. If he cares, will he reindex family allowances? Also, will he have another look at family benefits and make sure any changes really go to benefit families and not the federal Government, which is what the Minister is doing now?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member persists in using a word or phrase that she knows is not correct. Deindexing, if it had been put in place, even for the OAS, would have meant absolutely no protection for any increase in the cost of living. The Hon. Member knows that is not the case. She feels if she repeats these words often enough in this House, or in other venues, that some of the people will start to believe it. That is simply not the case, and the Hon. Member knows it.

Ms. Mitchell: You are too busy preaching.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The point I want to make to the Hon. Member again is that she now deprecates the very thing she supported in the committee. The very thing she said was to put more money in the child tax credit, because it is the fastest way to get money into the hands of families that need it. Today she changes her mind. Also, if we had taken away the $70, the Hon. Member would have made the argument that that is a burden those families cannot bear. Suddenly, when they get the money, she says it is not enough. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SAINT-DENIS MILITARY BASE AT SAINT-ADOLPHE-D'HOWARD

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and relates to the closing of the Saint-Denis military base at Saint-Adolphe-d'Howard in my riding. Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with a group of citizens who are rightfully very concerned about the economic impact of the closing of this base.

Can the Minister today, first reassure my constituents by saying that the base will not be closed without a committee looking into what can be done and, second, can he assure my constituents that his Department will take appropriate measures to help them find alternate use for the existing base facilities?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member on taking the initiative in setting up that local committee in the first instance, which is the desirable course of action for any Hon. Member who has one of those Cadin-Pinetree lines in his or her riding, so that such local committees can act in close concert with officials in the Department of National Defence and in the Department of Employment and Immigration, and others, all of whom have been instructed to minimize any impact that might occur socially and economically within those ridings. I am pleased to assure the Hon. Member that the unemployment impact will be minimal in her riding.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CROSBIE OFFSHORE SERVICES LIMITED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It is about Crosbie Offshore Services Limited, a company which owes the federal Government at least $332,000 alone for payroll deductions withheld and not transmitted.

Is the Minister aware that in November, 1984, when that company was petitioned into bankruptcy, his Department officials seized a bank account of that company with over $1 million in it and that they could have paid the debt owed to the taxpayers? Instead of doing that, three days later they released those funds which were used by the company for general operations without any repayment to the taxpayers of Canada. Is the Minister aware of that?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, what surprises me about this is that in the Hon. Member's desire to attempt to gain some profit from this sort of an incident—

Mr. Nunziata: Answer the question.

Mr. Beatty: —the Hon. Member would attempt to disclose income tax information related to taxpayers. As the Hon. Member, who is a former Solicitor General, would know, it would be against the law for me as Minister of National Revenue, in fact it would be a contravention of Section 241 of the Income Tax Act, to disclose in any way the confidential information relating to a taxpayer's file.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the information I have used comes from public records in a bankruptcy proceeding in St. John's, Newfoundland.

REPRESENTATIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Let me ask the Minister a supplementary question. Why was this done? Were any representations made that it be done, by or on behalf of his colleague, the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that it is against the law under the provisions of Section 241—

Mr. Nunziata: What are you hiding?

Mr. Beatty: I see the Hon. Member has moved from the back row to the front row so he can shout from a seat in the front row, but his interjections do not make any more sense from the front row than they do from the back.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: As the Liberals should know, this provision is in the Income Tax Act for a very good reason, and that is to protect the rights of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Nunziata: Quit stonewalling.

Mr. Beatty: For the Hon. Member to come into the House of Commons and to ask for me to release information which he knows I cannot release under the law, is obviously an abuse of his role as a Member of Parliament and is an abrogation of the rights of taxpayers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

REQUEST THAT FULL INDEXATION BE RESTORED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare. The high percentage of retired people on Vancouver Island, combined with very high unemployment figures, means that the deindexing proposals of the Budget will hit our area of the country even harder than they will hit other parts of Canada. Because of this negative impact, even the Conservative Hon. Member for Victoria is trying to dissociate himself from the Conservative Budget of May 23.

In the interest of fairness, both to senior citizens and to depressed areas of Canada, will the Minister now urge his cabinet colleagues, particularly the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, to reconsider this very unfair policy, and reinstitute full indexing of the Old Age Security for senior citizens?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct when he identifies the unemployment factor, not only on Vancouver Island but in other areas of Canada. This is why the Government and, I think, Canadians generally, were pleased with the trend which is beginning, that more jobs are being created, that more people are going back to work, and that there is more confidence, both in the investment community and in the Canadian public generally, in the manner in which the economy is starting to perform. We have a long way to go yet, but at least we can take some benefit out of the trend lines.

On the second part of his question, which was similar to other questions asked of the Prime Minister yesterday and of me today, the assurances of the Prime Minister as he gave them yesterday are the assurances of the Government of Canada. The Hon. Member should re-examine those assurances in light of today as well, because they stand.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to respond to your invitation to ask the Government House Leader what business he proposes for tomorrow and subsequent days of next week.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we have not quite concluded our discussions with respect to the business for tomorrow and indeed carrying on into the next two weeks. I have presented a proposal to the Hon. Member on which we certainly have the agreement of the New Democratic Party. If the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition is in agreement, I could bring forward the order which was the subject of discussion. If not, perhaps we could continue with our discussions, as it impacts upon the order of business for tomorrow. As the Hon. Member knows, we talked about bringing on some Bills tomorrow. I just want to ensure that we are on the same wavelength in respect of the sequence of business for tomorrow, which impacts on the business for the next two weeks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the spirit in which the Hon. Member has made his remarks. I have to complete certain consultations. Hopefully, with Your Honour's indulgence and if it is necessary, later in the afternoon we could revert to this question so that the information will be placed on the record of the House.

TRANSPORT

ORDER OF REFERENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have one item which is now agreed upon. It is an order of reference to the Standing Committee on Transport with respect to northern transportation issues, which I withheld because of the request of the transportation critic of the New Democratic Party. Since the assurances he sought have now been obtained, I am in a position, with the consent of the House, to put forward the following order of reference:

That the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study and report on federal transportation policies and programs affecting northern, remote and isolated areas, and in particular,

(1) the criteria which should be used to define the adequacy of transportation services to a community;

(2) the manner in which the cost of services should be assessed in terms of costs to the Government versus the need to provide a necessary transportation infrastructure; and

(3) the degree to which the Government should participate in the provision of a transportation infrastructure in the North as opposed to the Government revising its role in the ownership or regulation of transportation services themselves;

That the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

And that the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, all I would like to say on behalf of the Official Opposition is that we agree to the proposal put forward by the Hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

TABLING OF INTER-GOVERNMENTAL POSITION PAPER

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 46(2), I wish to table in both official languages copies of an inter-governmental position paper on the principles and framework for regional economic development. In a spirit of new co-operative relationship, the document has been signed by representatives of the federal, provincial and territorial Governments.

DISASTERS

ASSISTANCE TO TORNADO-DAMAGED CENTRAL ONTARIO AREA

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, several tornadoes struck central Ontario, devastating many homes, businesses and farms. While most of the damage was concentrated in my riding and that of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), other areas were also seriously affected.

The full extent of the losses and cost of restoration are not yet known, and federal officials are co-operating with other levels of Government on detailing the extent of damage and the status of clean-up and repairs.

This natural disaster has left hundreds homeless and put several hundred temporarily, and perhaps permanently, out of work. My purpose today is to describe the steps which our Government is taking to help alleviate the human and material loss, while recognizing that there is nothing that we can do to ease the sorrow of those persons who have lost family or seen their homes or lifetime work destroyed.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), in his capacity as the Minister responsible for emergency planning, will provide federal financial assistance to help Ontario meet the costs of recuperating from the effects of the May 31 tornado. This federal aid will be provided under the terms of the Disaster Financial Assistance arrangements, administered by Emergency Planning Canada.

The DFA arrangements provide a mechanism for responding to provincial requests for disaster aid. A formula relating the disaster expenditures to the population of the affected province is used to calculate the appropriate federal contribution. Federal cost sharing begins when provincial expenditures on disaster relief exceed one dollar per capita, and becomes progressively more substantial as expenditures increase. The DFA arrangements include guidelines which describe disaster relief needs eligible for federal financial assistance.

Based on the Ontario Government's most recent estimate of the need for financial assistance, the province may be contributing about $18 million and the federal Government about $9 million, for a total of $27 million. If the need is greater, then for each additional dollar conbributed by the province up to $22.5 million, Ottawa will contribute $3; and for each provincial dollar over $22.5 million, the federal Government will contribute $9.

The agricultural community was especially hit by the tornado. Houses, farms, buildings and some crops were damaged or destroyed, and many farmers now face cash flow problems. Agriculture Canada is prepared to provide financial and counselling services to assist in rebuilding about 200 farms affected.

• (1510)

My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who is here today will be setting up a special fund for farm assistance to finance a portion of farm capital reconstructions and re-establishment which are not covered by commercial insurance or by the DFA. Up to $5 million has been set aside for this purpose.

Under the Central Ontario Disaster Relief Committee, Agriculture Canada, in co-operation with the province and with farm organizations, will set up a working group to co-ordinate delivery of information, counselling and aid to the farm community. Agriculture Canada will also assist in damage assessment.

If required, a temporary Farm Credit Corporation office may be established in Orangeville to assist producers in assessing damage to their farms and in developing financial plans for future viability. As well, the FCC will assess requests from any of its borrowers in need of assistance as a result of the tornado. The corporation will consider reamortization of loans, temporary deferral of payments, or other special arrangements to suit the needs of individual borrowers.

My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), will take action to alleviate the hardship of residents in the stricken communities by making job creation funding available under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act to assist in community repair and restoration. This will help fund special restoration projects in such areas as Barrie and Grand Valley.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the commission recognizes that some urgently needed skills may be in short supply during the next few weeks. Under its mobility program, the commission will assist in defraying the costs of bringing skilled workers into the area to hasten the rebuilding, if necessary.

Fifteen additional employment and immigration staff members have been assigned to an emergency centre in Barrie to supplement the local staff in dealing with the loss of employment.

To help those who have lost their jobs as a result of the tornado, the Barrie office has set up a central unit to speed the processing of unemployment insurance claims, as well as an emergency cheque distribution centre.

The Ontario regional office of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has established a task force to address the damage to manufacturers and service industries in the area.

After a preliminary assessment, DRIE plans to assist in several ways: First, free business counselling will be provided through the sector and financial expertise of the Ontario regional office or the CASE service of the Federal Business Development Bank.

Second, DRIE has posted officers to work out of the Barrie branch of FBDB with responsibility for the immediate assessment of damage to business. They will assist business with reconstruction efforts, through the whole range of the Department's activities and, if shortages of essential building materials develop, DRIE's network will be used to locate supplies throughout Canada.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) will establish a $3 million central Ontario tornado damage business development program to encourage modernization and expansion in the affected area. The fund is designed to go beyond insurance and other aid as an inducement for businesses to seize the opportunity to expand and to upgrade their operations beyond simple replacement of storm damage. The fund will help generate additional long-term jobs and will contribute positively to the strengthening and future prosperity of the affected communities. Assistance will be available up to a maximum 35 per cent of eligible capital costs for firms which can demonstrate viability and significant economic benefits. The Department will discuss future prospects with affected firms, which should make their business plans known by September 30, 1985. In addition, the Minister has asked the FBDB to consider temporary payment deferral or reamortization for affected customers' loans in the same manner as does the Farm Credit Corporation.

Several dozen units of temporary housing have been made available through Canadian Forces Base, Borden. Additionally, 700 soldiers from the base have done a superb job in assisting, and over $25,000 in goods and services have been provided.

My Ministry, the Department of National Revenue, will treat donations to recognized disaster relief agencies or to municipalities as tax deductible. We believe that this measure will give added incentive for Canadians to contribute to rebuilding the damaged area. As well, recognizing that many financial records have been lost, I have instructed my officials to assist any person or business unable to provide supporting documents for tax purposes.

Both Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Department of Public Works have arranged to have inspectors in the area. CMHC will assist with identifying restorable buildings and help local officials with the issuing of building permits. The Department of Public Works will assess damage to public infrastructure.

Through these measures, Mr. Speaker, we hope to restore essential services and assist individuals, farmers and small businesses to begin reconstruction.

If I may be permitted a personal comment, I would like to state on behalf of my colleagues from the affected area that we deeply appreciate the compassion and generosity of the thousands of people who have offered assistance to the people who are most in need who have suffered from this disaster. Their kindness has enormously assisted as these families begin the long job of rebuilding their lives.

Finally, I know that every Member of this House would want me to express our sorrow for the victims of the disaster. No one can adequately describe the sense of loss of many of those families. But their courage and their determination to rebuild inspires us all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the Minister in expressing very deep sympathy particularly to those people who have lost relatives or friends. Our hearts go out to them. There are no words to express the distress that they must feel.

For those who are left and who have to rebuild their homes, their businesses and so on, this aid on the part of the federal Government is, of course, a very correct step which we in this Party approve and support.

Canadian disaster relief has generally been efficient and well co-ordinated, and we commend the Minister for ensuring that it be so in this case again. We have all been very impressed by the courage and resourcefulness shown by those people who have lost everything and who are having to start to build again, and it is obviously very right and proper that everything possible be done to help them take up their lives again, as they will. The voluntary groups are already there. Indeed, I was pleased to hear the Minister say that favourable tax treatment will be given to those assisting in this way. There are also volunteer groups there that are assisting with their physical labour and with their presence and comfort. We certainly expect that the situation will be monitored so as to ensure that the existing help is adequate and will be added to as time goes on.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to express some appreciation to the Minister for the statement he has made today to say, on behalf of my colleagues as the Minister did, that we have a deep sense of sympathy for those who lost fiends or relatives in this unfortunate disaster that occurred.

Ms. Jewett: Some disasters are fortunate?

Mr. Deans: My colleague says some disasters are fortunate. I did not mean to give that impression. I hope that she understood that.

For those who watched the events unfold, it was an incredible situation, almost beyond belief. I want to say that we are pleased that the Government has moved to make a statement today to clarify the involvement of the Government of Canada—and I hope that it does in fact—where there are new initiatives involved, establish a clear pattern in the event that other similar occurrences, undesirable as they may be, should ever face us in the future.

What was said by the Minister I take as a preliminary statement in that it sets out the basis upon which assistance will be given but that there is ample evidence to show that the losses may well be far in excess of the original determinations that were made at the time, and with each passing day there are clear indications of even greater losses than might have been anticipated.

• (1520)

I would say to the Minister that it is interesting and commendable to see the comprehensive nature of the Government's involvement in this matter. It is good to see the thoughtfulness that has gone into seeking out from the many and various Ministries the kind of support that will assist people who have lost belongings or, in many instances, businesses and the way in which the Government has been able to co-ordinate things through the office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). There has been an over-all effort on the part of the Government in all of its manifestations.

I suppose the key to the matter is that an ongoing assessment must be made and that this assessment may take a long time to reach a conclusion. It may be a year from now or even longer, based on previous experiences with similar circumstances before we are able to assess accurately the extent of the damage and loss.

I hope that the Minister will come to the House from time to time to update us on the level of contribution from private individuals, the continued involvement of the provincial Government of Ontario, to what level that involvement is incurred and also to what level the federal Government becomes committed in terms of the allocation of financial resources in particular.

As I said, it is not often that people in the House of Commons join together with one common goal. However, I think it can be said that in this instance, everyone here shares the concern expressed by the Minister. I would say on behalf of this Party that we are prepared to support the initiatives brought forward by the Government.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am not from Ontario. Actually, I am originally from Ontario but I now represent British Columbia.

I would like to say to the Minister that I found it very impressive when watching the television to see neighbours helping each other after the disaster. We are very proud of those Canadians who live in that area for rallying so quickly. I do not think that I will ever forget seeing on television the woman who spoke of losing a 13-year old boy who babysat for her family. I will continue to remember that, as I am sure will many watchers of that program. One can replace lost property but one can never replace lost family.

My question to the Minister is a broad one. Sometimes we learn things from a disaster. At least the smart people learn things from a disaster. This area was hit by a tornado. Perhaps there could have been better warnings or perhaps people could have responded to the warnings more quickly. Perhaps people could have understood more about what tornadoes do. What have we learned from this disaster? What will the Government do to try to make sure that if there is another tornado disaster like that one, there will not be loss of life?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. There are a number of things which I think all of us have learned from this disaster. Emergency Planning Canada in conjunction with its provincial and municipal counterparts will be doing an assessment to see how the emergency services responded. I think that for the most part the emergency services responded astoundingly well. I was on the scene within a matter of an hour or two after the disaster took place and was astonished to see how quickly the OPP, the Red Cross, the Canadian Forces people from Base Borden and others were on the scene to help out. Obviously we will gain from this experience and what we learn will be applicable in the future.

One of the things that is clear is that it would be extremely helpful for us in the future to encourage all levels of Government to develop disaster contingency programs. This should be done as well at the municipal level and at the hospital level to ensure that the provision of emergency services is there as quickly as possible when they are needed.

I do not want to sound trite in making these observations, but two things left a very deep impression on me. The first thing was that sometimes we as human beings are arrogant enough to think that we have tamed nature. We have not. By having a chance to visit the area on the ground shortly after the disaster took place and by touring the area from the air, I was able to see the absolute capriciousness of the disaster. It was simply a matter of fate whether a person lived or died. We now realize something about the frailty of human beings and how subject we are to the whims of fortune.

The final thing that stands out most pointedly in my mind is the essential generosity and strength of the individuals who were involved. Being in the area both immediately after the disaster took place and in the days following, I was astonished to find people coming to the area who had no connection with the area at all to say that they had shovels and strong backs and to ask if there was anything they could do to help out. Just to give one example of this, a crew of over 200 Mennonites came to the area and moved systematically from the western to the eastern end of the disaster area to clean up farmers' fields and assist in hauling physical damage out of the way. This generosity and neighbourliness on their part was something that I think has left a permanent impression on everyone who was affected.

At the headquarters in the area where relief was being provided, immediate offers of accommodation were being made. People offered to take whole families in to live with them if they needed help. In visiting the area, I saw that there were stockpiles of blankets, food, clothing and other necessary goods. It was just overwhelming that people were offering everything they could. The number of generous individuals who volunteered financial contributions was remarkable as well.

I do not want to protract this discussion, but let me cite one other example. When the work crews came to the area, one of the organizers said that they needed 75 pies to help feed the crews in West Luther Township and the surrounding area. The church members from Mount Forest sent some 200 pies and soup for 500 people. That sort of generosity is something which will remain with people for the rest of their lives.

One cannot help but be struck by the tremendous courage and dedication of the people who were affected. There was no sense of self-pity evident; there was simply a sense of courage and determination to rebuild. I think that is an inspiration to all of us.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put one question to the Minister. I must say that I have been very impressed with the way the Minister has handled the disaster, and I know that not only he but the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) visited the area in person.

I would like to ask the Minister whether or not the area designated by the Province of Ontario has been expanded to include the some $40-million worth of damage which occurred the evening before in Leamington where a large number of greenhouses were destroyed. I wonder if the Province of Ontario has designated only Barrie and surrounding areas as disaster areas or whether it has asked for assistance out of the fund to include that area of southwestern Ontario that was affected the evening before. I understand that there was considerable damage in the Niagara Peninsula as well. Perhaps the Minister could clarify whether or not the province has designated those additional areas.

As well, I would like to comment on the generosity of the response to the disaster. I do not recall a disaster occurring in Ontario in recent years for which a whole network of radio stations including at least two in my constituency took part in a telethon last Monday which raised many hundreds of thousands of dollars. I think that the spirit of generosity and charity is alive and well in Ontario, as has been demonstrated by this disaster.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is currently having discussions with the Government of Ontario as to the parameters of the disaster areas. Initially the area that was looked at by the province of Ontario was the area from Arthur or Alma in the east.

• (1530)

It touched some areas on the far side of Barrie and the east side of Barrie, into central eastern Ontario. That area is certainly covered under that. In addition, other damage which was done as part of the same weather system will be included under the program. The difficulty is in terms of determining whether damage that was done, for example, the day before, was done as part of the same weather system or whether it constitutes a second disaster.

No one minimizes the amount of damage done there. The problem is that under current federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangements, there is some difficulty in terms of lumping two disasters together. Each one would have to be considered separately unless they were part of a common weather disturbance.

The other point I might make is that my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), has already visited the Leamington area. I can indicate, I believe, on his behalf, that some of the measures which I announced today relating to agriculture would apply in the Leamington area. Most of the damage which was done there was done to the rural area, to the farmers, and we hope that the relief which has been offered by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, will provide some assistance there.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO THE OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition containing the names of hundreds of people from Winnipeg who protest the government's proposals to partially deindex the old age pension. Through this petition they join with thousands of other Canadians,—and thousands more to come over the next few weeks—who want to indicate their opposition to this unjust measure by the Government and they call upon the Government to change its mind, go back to the commitment it made in January, and even before that to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said before the election, and fully ensure the indexation of Old Age Security payments.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several dozen citizens and constituents in the Algoma and Sault Ste. Marie area who call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the old age pensions. They note, for instance, that the average pensioner will lose $100 next year; more than $200 the following year; and over $600 by 1990. They simply call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government to keep their campaign promise and restore full indexation of the old age pension. When the Prime Minister receives a petition like this, I know—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present a petition signed by over 800 residents of the lower mainland of British Columbia, New Westminster, Coquitlam, Burnaby, Surrey, Vancouver East, Langley and Delta, British Columbia, who once again protest the partial deindexation of the Old Age Security. They ask the Government to fulfil its promise to fully index the old age pension.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by more than 600 residents of Manitoba, who call upon the Government to restore the indexing of pensions. They point out that the losers by this proposal of the Government will be the poor, the unemployed and women.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and honour to present a petition signed by many hundreds of residents of Toronto who protest the proposal of the Government to reduce the purchasing power of the old age pension cheque by 3 per cent. They call upon this House and this Government to restore full indexation of the old age pension.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the tireless efforts of my constituency officer, Mr. Nick Wihnan, and many volunteers, I have the honour to present petitions with 834 signatures from my riding, including Fort Frances, Devlin, Emo, Shevlin and Stratton. These Canadians request a remedy to the government's plans to deindex pensions which will impose hardships on pensioners, and call for the full reinstatement of indexing of the Old Age Security program.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions here from hundreds of Manitobans who consider the deindexation of pensions, whether partial or otherwise, to be unfair. They call upon the Government to implement its promise to fully index pensions and to restore the cuts which will cost each and every pensioner $100 during 1986 and $680 by the year 1991.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I aslo have a petition with respect to pensions. It is signed by a number of Canadians, some of whom live in Surrey, which is represented by a Conservative who does not speak up on this issue for the pensioners. The petition states that the May 23 Budget imposes undue and unfair hardship on pensioners—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could the Hon. Member summarize.

Mr. Waddell: —by deindexing the Old Age Security program. I would like to file this petition.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, added to over 2,000 names which have come in already from Vancouver East, I am honoured to again present petitions today from a number of people from the lower mainland of British Columbia, including petitioners from Vancouver East, Coquitlam, New Westminster, Burnaby and from many surrounding communities. These petitioners ask that the Conservative Government reconsider and reindex old age pensions so that people will not suffer. They ask that the Conservative Government carry out the promise it made to the people of Canada.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL ANTHEM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-243, an Act to amend the National Anthem Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, this Bill simply amends the National Anthem Act in a minor but significant way. At present our national anthem "O Canada" contains a reference to "all our sons" in relation to patriotism. This masculine designation denies the equality of the sexes and is not consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This amendment changes the reference from "all our sons" to "all of us", and does away with this improper designation.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION—
INDEXATION OF OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Tobin:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) had the floor.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose, I was quoting some very good statements from the Government's consultation paper on child and elderly benefits of January, 1985. I was suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that on reflection, Hon. Members on the government side might find those statements more to their liking and a better basis for public policy than some of the statements which appeared in the Budget paper. In particular, there were the principles announced in the paper which were to be considered as firm commitments, and I quote, "The concept of universality is the keystone of our social safety net. Its integrity must not and will not be called into question", and, "Any savings which mirrors out in program changes will not be applied to reduction of the deficit".

For whatever reasons, the Government changed its position between June and Budget day, but we were somewhat reassured to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say yesterday that some of the measures in the Budget are in fact to be treated as proposals and are not graven in stone. It is in this spirit I am putting forward some thoughts which I hope will assist Hon. Members of the Government to vote for our resolution and to encourage their Ministers to reconsider.

The question of retirement security in our country has for a number of years included some layers; first, whatever kind of private pension people have if they are in the workforce, and these really have not proved very useful for most Canadians. This is either because the period required to vest the pension is too long, because many smaller firms do not have pension plans at all, and because Canadians are mobile and they lose their pension rights in the course of several moves in a career. Therefore, the private pension plans up until now have not proved to be of great use to the majority of Canadians; second, the Canada Pension Plan, since its inception, gives a certain floor to Canadians in the labour force, but of course it is of no help to housewives, for example, who are out of the labour force for a very long time; third, then there are private savings or investments for people in a position to make that kind of provision for their older years. Then for everyone, regardless of income or whether one has been in the labour force or not, there is the Old Age Security. For the poor, those who have nothing except for the OAS, there is the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

When one looks at the people now on pensions, an overwhelming majority receive the OAS and the GIS. Those who had savings very often found them eroded by inflation and they are in the situation of requesting a partial GIS. Regardless of private pension plans, private savings or the CPP, for most Canadians the OAS is the only reliable source of income in their later years. As I said, two thirds have nothing else and, therefore, they receive the means-tested GIS. Our old age pensioners, by and large, are not in a position to defend themselves against a sudden and unexpected loss of income.

The people currently receiving OAS are of a generation which has gone through a lot. Many of them grew up during the Depression and lived through a world war. They are pretty tough people for whom life has not been easy. Nevertheless, it was they who supported all through the years the various measures which put in place our present social security net. Indeed, one of the leaders of a senior citizens' group has been quoted recently as saying that they are the generation which put in place this compassionate society we have. They built it and they feel that they have some rights in the matter and that drastic changes in our social security system should not have been made without consultation with them.

Let us contrast the statements made by the Prime Minister last July, last November, and those in the government consultation paper, all of which were very good, with the present situation. When the Budget came down, we saw just four lines devoted to this proposed measure, four lines to say that old age pensions are being deindexed, and that indexation will remain for the GIS. That still hurts those receiving the GIS because their income is still being reduced. Let us look at what some of these figures might mean.

The two and a half million old age pensioners stand to lose close to $1,500 each over the next five years because these measures are cumulative. By 1990 a further 200,000 of those receiving OAS today will fall below the poverty line. The measure will save the Government $15 million in 1986, rising to $1.6 billion in 1990. Another measure in the same Budget conferred a $1.25 billion give-away in capital gains to the wealthy in our society, a small group, and this gift has no strings on it. There is no requirement that it create Canadian jobs or relate to Canadian assets.

There is a certain apparent insensitivity to the plight of the poor here which is in rather stark contrast with a very sensitive statement made by the Prime Minister in July where he said that recent statistics indicate that more than 60 per cent of women and 40 per cent of men over the age of 65 who live alone have incomes below the poverty line. At that time the Prime Minister promised, if elected, he would reinstate complete indexing of old age pensions to the actual cost of living as of January 1, 1985. The reality, of course, we have seen in this Budget. As I said, it described the measure in four lines. It gave no examples of the impact on senior citizens, but we learned that very detailed tables were prepared by the Department of Finance, presented to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who elected not to make them public.

In this Budget, apart from the proposal to reduce the indexing of senior citizens' pensions, we have a number of measures which are clearly going to add to the cost of living. We have tax increases for gasoline, health care products and so on which could amount to hundreds of dollars a year in lost income. Our senior citizens will be faced with an increase in the cost of living and a decrease in their income.

We have heard a lot of accusations about how the opposition are exaggerating, but let me read what senior citizens themselves say. First, this Budget was delayed for months because the Government was consulting. We have 10 groups representing one million of Canada's 2.6 million elderly who issued a joint statement on June 11 in which they say that, contrary to government pronouncements, there was no formal consultation with senior citizens' organizations. That was stated by Joyce King of the United Senior Citizens of Ontario. Ray Applebaum, of the Older Adults' Centres Association of Ontario said that with deindexing, hundreds of thousands of seniors will drop below the poverty line. The Canadian Council on Social Development estimates that deindexing will add as many as 200,000 elderly people to the poverty ranks by 1990.

● (1550)

The statement by this coalition of 10 senior citizens groups also pointed out that Canada's elderly are being asked to contribute $4.536 billion over five years to help bring down the deficit. The core of that statement was the following:

> As senior citizens, we have helped to build a society of social justice and compassion. That society is now under threat by the Government's proposal to the Old Age Security system. We must not, and will not, let that happen.

Another factor in the Budget which was not outlined in the published Department of Finance projections, but was leaked, shows transfers to the provinces being reduced by billions of dollars over the next five or six years. That will, of course, impact on various services which are used by senior citizens. Yhetta Gold, President of the 18 member National Advisory Council on Aging, said that any further erosion of pensions or social benefits will have a direct negative effect on health care.

If this proposal goes forward, it will not be good for the country. I keep hoping that the Government will return to the position it had taken prior to January of this year, which is a much saner position. I hope the Government will consider the question of acquired rights. Making changes in pensions that will affect people in 20 years will give people a chance to plan and readjust, especially if the changes are made in the entire pension planning. However, making changes in this way affects people who have no redress because they are in a situation they cannot change. With all my heart, I recommend that the Government reconsider the matter.

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I believe that everyone in the House appreciates and accepts the sincerity with which the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) speaks. She has a certain civility which we may all wish to emulate. In fact, it is a pleasure to sit in the House while she is speaking. The decorum is much different then than it was earlier today.

I would like to make reference to comments made by the Hon. Monique Bégin when she was Minister of National Health and Welfare and spoke on Bill C-131. She said:

> —the Government is asking as many groups as possible—taxpayers, public servants, mothers receiving family allowances and pensioners—to help set the course toward achieving this goal. We ask these Canadians to accept a cap on the indexation of their income taxes and benefits over the next two years.

She goes on to say:

> The purpose of Bill C-131 is twofold. First, it proposes to limit indexation of the basic Old Age Security pension, known as OAS, to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent the year after.

Finally, she said:

> We are asking 1.1 million old age pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation.
> I have to stress that it is not without reluctance that we make this request. We do so with the knowledge that these pensioners who are relatively better off, will be able to adjust accordingly.

In light of the Member's earlier remarks, and the fact that she was a member of the Government at the time that the Minister made these statements, how can she now reconcile these remarks with the ones she made today?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer that question because I know the Member asked it in good faith and it is a question that should be asked. The situation at the time of the six and five program was very different than the present one in that inflation was at 12 per cent. This program was put into place reluctantly, as Monique Bégin said. Capping was put in place for two years only and with the aim of bringing inflation down. It did indeed bring inflation down in that very year.

If my figures are correct, in those two years the average senior citizens lost about $2 a month. That program was also time limited. The program which has now been put in place is cumulative and will cause single pensioners to lose $1,500 over five years. There is no foreseeable end to the program. It is true that the Government has said that it will monitor the situation and may make changes, but we have not been given a definite termination date. Therefore, the two programs are quite different.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have a question and a comment for the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). I listened with interest to her presentation. I understand why she is concerned about the senior citizens of Canada. We are all concerned with the welfare of our senior citizens, but at the same time we recognize that compassion will not provide senior citizens with comfort. It will not pay their food bills or help them with their rent. In order to assist senior citizens and all citizens of Canada, we must have sound financial policy. It is that sound financial policy that we want to present to the House of Commons and implement across Canada in order to help our senior citizens and all citizens as time goes on.

My question is in relation to a particular program of the Liberal Government of which she was a member. She sat in this very Chamber on the Government side of the House and listened while her Minister of Finance, Mr. Marc Lalonde, introduced the research tax credit program. An editorial in The Toronto Star today says that the measure with respect to the modification of indexing of old age assistance will save the Government $1.6 billion by 1990. However, an article in The Gazette of Montreal refers to the research tax credit program which will cost the taxpayers of Canada $1.9 billion to $2.3 billion. Two billion dollars have gone down the financial drain in scams and fraud. One Ed Fitch, who is 29 years old, gained $20 million. Frank Hertel gained $13 million through the tax scam introduced by the Liberal Government.

It is that kind of financial mismanagement which has put the Progressive Conservative Government in a position where it must consider difficult measures in order to restore financial responsibility to the country. Would the Member for Trinity tell the House where she was when her Government introduced the research tax credit program which cost this country $2.3 billion?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I hope you are going to allow me time to reply to this very long question. I supported the research tax credit at the time but, in retrospect, I can see that it has been terribly abused. It was abused because it was a tax measure which was demand driven. It took on a momentum of its own and there were not sufficient safeguards in it. For precisely the same reasons I oppose the proposed capital gains tax change.

• (1600)

I support easing capital gains tax requirements for family farms, small business and Canadian business where there is a clear requirement and expectation that Canadians will benefit. However, the Government has introduced a plan that is wide open and just as likely to be abused as the program of which the Hon. Member spoke.

The Hon. Member spoke of responsible financial policies. I believe there will be a difference between his position and mine. Whatever recovery we have had in the country in the last year has been largely consumer led. The Government is proposing to take purchasing power away from low and middle income Canadians, the people least likely to start an inflationary spiral, who spend their money on necessities. In fact, some of the measures in the Budget may drive the deficit higher than what we have seen.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member favour a top-up of the GIS rather than reindexation because this appears to have been the philosophy of the Liberal Party in the past? I would be concerned about that because it erodes universality, just as the six and five program did. It means pensions will go up. For example, those who are 50 years old will lose about a third of their purchasing power when they are of pensionable age.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): In the present situation I do not believe that topping up the GIS is an acceptable solution because that does not touch the basic question of the security of the Old Age Security pension.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity with enthusiasm, though tempered by a somber sense of duty, to rise in the House today to speak in support of the motion by the Official Opposition. Every Member of this House will recall that before the Budget was brought down, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) used the following terms to qualify the Budget: Tough, but fair. Well, I think Canadians would do better to remember what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said before the election, and I will quote him in English since I find his French difficult to master:

[English]

"If I told you what we were going to do, you wouldn't elect us", and "We are going to do things that are tough, mean and nasty".

[Translation]

So to describe the Budget we are discussing in the House today, the words used by the Minister of Justice are obviously more appropriate than those of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

The Progressive Conservative Budget brought down on May 23 is not fair to our families, our children and especially not to our parents. The injustice of this Budget is best illustrated by the de-indexation of the Old Age Security program. As a result of this proposal, in 1986, the elderly in Canada will each lose $100, while by 1991, the amount lost will have risen to $680 annually, adding up to a cumulative total of $6.6 billion withdrawn from the Old Age Security program in five years.

The impact will be most severe on elderly women, the most vulnerable group in our society, since 60 per cent are either single, widowed, separated or divorced and already living below the poverty line. Furthermore, de-indexing Old Age Security pensions constitutes a direct attack on Canadian women, on our mothers and grandmothers. De-indexation will perpetuate the inequality of Canadian women in the most regressive way possible by making those already in need even poorer. About 800,000 Canadians over 65 are so poor they are receiving at least part of the income supplement. More than 60 per cent of Canada's elderly women living alone are below the poverty line. In 1991, the Government will have taken a total of $4.2 billion from our mothers and grandmothers.

As a result of de-indexation, a term innocent enough in itself but cruel in its impact, the consequences of the Budget will be worse than expected. It is a term that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) never used in speaking to Canadian men and women during the election campaign. In fact, during the campaign, the Prime Minister gave the solemn undertaking that "the Progressive Conservative Government would reinstate indexation of Old Age Security pensions to the real cost of living on a quarterly basis". He did not keep his promise. As a result, Old Age Security benefits will be de-indexed in such a way that they will no longer be fully protected against inflation. Benefits will not be adjusted to absorb the impact of the first 3 per cent of inflation. That is what the Prime Minister calls a Budget that is "tough but fair". It is tough, but it certainly is not fair. Tough for whom? Fair to whom? We may well ask.

No Government measure has as much impact on the lives of Canadian men and women as a Budget. Nothing better illustrates a Government's sense of equity and the extent of wealth distribution within our society. A Budget is the best example of the kind of society a Government is trying to achieve; it shows the program the Government has in mind and where the tax revenues will come from. A Budget also reveals the soul of a Government. This Budget tells us that the Conservatives have no soul. It is a hard and unfair Budget, and ordinary Canadians alone will bear the brunt of it.

When dealing with ordinary Canadians, the Government can only take something away from them. However, when it deals with major companies, it takes a little with one hand and gives a lot more with the other hand. By 1990-91, the Government will have levied the equivalent of $4.1 billion in additional taxes on personal incomes and $2.6 billion in consumer taxes, while over the same time the corporate tax load will have decreased by $2.2 billion. The Government therefore takes drastic measures against ordinary people and makes ever more generous concessions to the corporate sector. The saddest part of the story is that the Budget penalizes the most vulnerable people in our society—the unemployed, the poor families, native people, women, youths, farmers and the elderly. At the same time, rich and well-to-do Canadians as well as big companies get more than before. This is how the Conservative Party sees fairness: less for the needy and more for the rich. And if I may quote from the Holy Bible in English, since that is how I learned it:

[English]

"Taking from those that have not, to give to those that have. From those that have not will be taken that which they have."

[Translation]

The Conservative Government was given a mandate to create jobs and implement a fair tax system. Yet it gave Canada's men and women a Budget which says nothing about jobs and makes unfairness even worse. Nothing better illustrates such inequity than the despicable way the Conservatives are treating retired Canadians. Every elderly person will be affected by the Budget. As a result of deindexation, old age security pensions will go down 3 per cent every year.

• (1610)

Deindexation will have a devastating impact on the standard of living of all elderly Canadians, men and women alike, and that includes our parents and grandparents. The annual decrease in the amount of every old age security cheque—and these figures bear repeating—the reduction in the amount of the cheque of every retired Canadian will be $100 next year, $205 in 1987, $315 in 1988, $431 in 1989, $553 in 1990, and $680 in 1991. That year the Progressive Conservative Government will be able to save $2 billion at the expense of senior citizens.

The Government is taking money out of an already hard pressed pension system, a system which prevents elderly men and women from living their last years in dignity. The Government is reaching into the pockets of old Canadians, yet roughly 1.8 million of them live below the poverty line as it is. Thus the Government is forcing the poorest of our senior citizens to make do with even less.

Another consequence of pension deindexation is that the income of elderly Canadian men and women will be eaten away by inflation. Deindexation means that senior citizens can no longer look forward to a decent retirement income. It is a contemptible attack against the youths of the depression years, against those people who grew up through the economic crisis, who became adults during the war and who did so much for our economic welfare. Better still, it is to them that we owe the type of affluent society in which we live today. How can anyone deny them the right to retire in dignity?

Elderly people have done more than their share. The Right Hon. the Prime Minister maintains that the Budget rewards those who get up half an hour earlier. It is a bad joke. It is a mean joke for those who worked very hard throughout life.

The Right Hon. the Prime Minister has a rather peculiar notion of equity. As he had promised during the election campaign, he does give more to the big oil companies, but he forgot all about his commitments to the elderly. Last summer the Right Hon. the Prime Minister promised that full pension indexation would be restored as of January 1, 1985. It is a glaring injustice on the part of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister towards the elderly.

For the Conservatives, there is one kind of justice for the privileged classes, for the rich, for the big corporations and another kind of justice for the elderly. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was worried about the lack of rich people in Canada. When he makes that kind of statement, I wish the Minister would reflect on what he is doing to the elderly in this country and I wish he would realize what their situation is.

While the Government is hacking away at Old Age Security pensions, it gives away $2.4 billion to the oil multinationals. It gives $600 million to the rich in a form of a capital gains tax exemption. It gives $235 million to those who are well off by increasing and fully indexing the ceiling on RRSP contributions. It gives $2.2 billion more to corporations by reducing corporate taxes. After eight months in power, the Government has found dozens of new ways to tax the average taxpayer, but it has failed to introduce a minimum income tax for the rich.

Average taxpayers could be paying less income tax and the rich could be paying their fair share, if just two changes were made in the tax system: first, by introducing a minimum income tax of 20 per cent for the rich who are paying little or no income tax, and second, by setting marginal income tax rates for the rich at the pre-1982 level. These two changes in the tax system would bring in $2.1 billion, and thus make more than ten income tax and tax increases for low-income Canadians unnecessary.

Their incomes would not have been diminished as a result of de-indexing of Old Age Security pensions, family allowance payments and the personal tax exemption; the elimination of RHOSPs and de-indexing of tax tables; and increased taxes on consumer goods.

Canadian men and women wanted a fair Budget, a Budget that would create jobs. In spite of a widely publicized consultation process, the Government has failed to consider the concerns and priorities of ordinary people. It has listened only to the voices of wealth and power.

We in the New Democratic Party intend to ensure the Government hears the voice of ordinary people. Our Party has constantly defended the right of Canadian men and women to be able to retire with dignity. We are committed to this cause. The Prime Minister and Progressive Conservative Members have broken their word, and over the next few weeks, the New Democratic Party intends to pursue its efforts to restore indexation of Old Age Security pensions.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my French is not as fluent as that of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). Does the Hon. Member feel that in addition to the deindexing of old age pensions, the reduction of indexing of family allowance is almost as bad and that this really reflects the Conservative Government policy of eroding universality as a general policy?

[Translation]

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for her question. During the pre-Budget conferences held as part of the so-called consultation process, we of the New Democratic Party suggested to the Government a number of options in connection with family allowance and tax exemptions for families, which we feel would have made for a fairer tax system for Canadian families. Now it seems the Progressive Conservatives have decided to ignore that option in favour of one that benefits only the rich, and now, as a result of changes in the family allowance program, Canadians with a gross income over $18,000—I think that is the correct figure—will be paying more taxes.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: I would be delighted to ask another question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You are practised from Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: I am surprised the Minister is not asking questions.

A mutual colleague of ours, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) in Vancouver recently raised the whole question of the impact of the reduction of indexation on pensions as it would impact on people who are age 50 now. I know the Hon. Member was speaking as an accountant so perhaps he could confirm some of the figures. Apparently the impact on a 50 year old person today in the year 2000 will mean a lifetime loss in purchasing power equal to $36,000 in 1985 dollars if that person lived to be age 85.

Another figure we have heard is that one-third of the earning power of a 50 year old when he or she gets to pensionable age would be lost. It appears the big losers are those who have not yet retired because of the cumulative effect of this measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment that de-indexation of pensions will result in a permanent net loss for Canadians who retire in the year 2000 or after. This means that if de-indexation is maintained ad infinitum, the longer a person lives, the more that person stands to lose as a result of these measures.

What we are asking the Government is for a policy that would end de-indexation at some point, because it is clear that if we go on indefinitely with pensions indexed at 3 per cent below the general level of inflation, we will reach a point where pensions will be worth half what they are today. I would like to quote some figures that go back in history; instead of being projections for the future. In 1967, the Old Age Security pension was set at 20 per cent of the average salary, while today, in 1985, as a result of the austerity measures of the previous Government, which prevented pension increases from keeping pace with general salary increases, this percentage has already slipped back to 15 per cent of the average salary. According to our calculations, by 1991, the Old Age Security pension will be down to about 13 per cent of the average wage, the tragic result of de-indexation.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask my colleague a question relating to reducing the deficit and job creation. We have heard, certainly in the last week, government Members justifying the deindexing of the Old Age Security and the saving of some $1.5 billion by 1990, while having given the oil companies some $2 billion by that time in extra tax relief.

Miss Carney: Wrong, wrong.

Mr. de Jong: Very often it is justified by saying that the oil companies will create more jobs. Would the Hon. Member comment on whether $2 billion given to the oil companies or $2 billion given to old age pensioners would create more jobs?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is deliberately misleading the House or giving the impression of—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member is presenting erroneous information. Mr. Speaker, would you care to ask him to address the matter under debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Minister knows that that happens to be a question of debate, not a point of order.

Miss Carney: He is not on the subject.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has certainly made an unparliamentary statement. I would ask you for a retraction by the Hon. Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my understanding that the Hon. Minister said that the Hon. Member was deliberately misleading the House, and that language is unparliamentary. If that is the case, I am forced to request that the Minister retract the word.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to withdraw that word at your direction, and I would like to restate the case, that the Hon. Member is so ignorant and so belligerent and so malicious that he would attempt to criticize something which has brought unity to this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has been eating nails or raw hamburger. She is certainly not in a very fine mood. Not to distract from the question which I am essentially—

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I direct Your Honour's attention to the fact that the Hon. Member is making value judgments about my feelings and what I eat, which is not appropriate to the conduct of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Again that is not a point of order; it is a question of debate.

Mr. de Jong: Far be it from me to speculate or comment on the feelings or moods of the Hon. Minister.

Miss Carney: Sexist, sexist.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Minister flabbergasts me. The point I wanted to make or the question I wanted to ask of my colleague, if government Members will allow me to do so, concerns job creation. Would $2 billion of extra revenues to the oil companies create more jobs than $2 billion being given to old age pensioners who would be out there spending every nickel of it at the corner grocery store, perhaps on chesterfields or whatever? Very often, in the case of oil companies, very much of that $2 billion would be invested in other places.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for leaving me so much latitude with my answer. This leads me to the subject of consumer behaviour, which is one of my favourites. Frankly, the case is exactly as he stated it. If I could restate it, without being ignorant, belligerent or malicious, everyone who has studied economics knows that putting money into the hands of pensioners ensures that it will very rapidly go into the consumer economy and indeed into that sector of the consumer economy which has the highest potential for job creation and job maintenance, namely, the purchase of the daily necessities of life. On the other hand, the oil companies—and here we talk about some organizations which can be belligerent and malicious—will be using the money to spruce up their balance sheets, as the Minister should very well know.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House for debate today, in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), reads as follows:

> That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

Let me begin by saying that I think all Members of the House, and Canadians generally, accept that position as a desirable goal. However, we have to take a look at the situation. As we examine this question, it is important to keep a number of facts in mind. While this is a desirable goal, when opposition Members are forced to put these matters before the House in the form of motions, they use correct words, but when they ask questions in Question Period, as did the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) again today, they use phrases which, while hoping to get some short-term political gain, do nothing for the debate. Twice today she used the term "deindexing". She knows and I know that that is not correct.

Ms. Mitchell: Partial.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): She just now said "partial" indexing or deindexing, depending upon one's point of view. That is correct. I am pleased she admits that and has come around to that position.

We hear members of the New Democratic Party, day after day, saying that the position of the Government relative to the Budget is wrong. From their socialist position, I guess they are right. I happen to disagree with their position. I happen to disagree with them when they say that if we keep raising the deficit, we will have more employment.

Mr. Riis: Get to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will get to Saskatchewan.

Mr. de Jong: Collect the money somewhere else.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting that when they speak, they want to be listened to. They are very capable of handing it out, but they do not like taking it. If deficit financing is such a successful policy, and if it creates the numbers of jobs as they keep insisting in the House, why is it that in 1968 our accumulated deficit was some $18 billion and our unemployment rate was substantially below what it is now, and today our annual deficit runs in the order of $35 billion and we have 1.4 million people unemployed? In fact, our annual deficit is double the deficit which we accumulated in our first 100 years of history, and our accumulated deficit is now some $190 billion.

• (1630)

Those are issues that they do not address or want to address. They like to live in that world of theirs in which they feel that somehow you should spend more money, even if you do not have it. They have even given advice to go to New York to get more money and give more interest to those who buy the Treasury bills. I say to them they like to have it both ways, but they do not like to look at the responsibility of their suggestions.

I will be even more specific than that, because they say that they are the most conscious of the needs of Canadians. Let me give them a very specific example. The best example I can give is the Manitoba NDP Government. Let us take a look at its record. What did it do? Now I have their attention. What happened when the $25 increase was added to the Guaranteed Income Supplement for those retired Canadians who have the lowest income? What was the Manitoba NDP Government's response?

Mr. Riis: Probably the same as B.C.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting comment that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) just made. He said probably the same as the B.C. Government. How many times have we heard them in this House condemn the British Columbia Government as the most hard-hearted Government on the face on the earth? Now he identifies with it and says that the Manitoba NDP Government would do the same thing.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would remind the Minister that he now is a Minister of Government and we would like to hear, and pensioners would like to hear, the justification for the program that is so hard on seniors. He is not really in Opposition. If he wants to take his time as an opposition Member—

An Hon. Member: He is a statesman.

Ms. Mitchell: Fine, but I thought he was a Minister. Let us hear something that is going to define government policy.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, they do not want to be reminded of their actions. They just want to make their point for political reasons—

Mr. Riis: Do not make a political speech, make your point.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am going to make the point. No matter how much harassment, I am going to make the point.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt the Hon. Minister on his debate, but I would simply like to appeal to the House and to the Chair that perhaps he can address himself to the motion rather than NDP—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to disappoint the Liberal Member. I will get to him, too. I say to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap what happened in Manitoba was that of the $25 increase, the Manitoba Government, looking at its situation and its financial reality, reduced the amount of money to those very Manitobans who were getting a shelter allowance by $8. When asked the reason why, the argument was not that they wanted to do it or that they preferred to do it but that they had to because of the deficit situation that they were in. The point I make to him is whether it is an NPD Government, a Liberal Government or a Conservative Government—

Mr. Riis: You said we do not care about the deficit. Now you are saying we do. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am saying to you very clearly that you in the federal NDP Party put those points forward, but when you have to take Government, as in Manitoba, then suddenly the shoe starts pinching a bit because the proposals that are made in this House by the NDP are not in the same manner or the same reality that that Government has to deal with.

Let me give another example. Take a look at the percentage of increase that has been given to Manitoba hospitals and to Manitoba post-secondary educational institutions under the present situation.

Ms. Mitchell: Are we in the Manitoba legislature or are we in the federal House?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The only point I am making, and I hope he understands it, is this: regardless of what he wants to say in this House or regardless of the motions he puts forward, Governments, whether at the provincial level or the federal level, all recognize that one cannot continue deficit financing without it starting to have an effect on the very programs we want to maintain. That is the point I am making to him and, being a responsible Member and the finance critic of the NDP, I think he recognizes that. He might not want to say it for political reasons, and I can appreciate that, but I say to him that when Governments look at the financial situation that they find themselves in, either provincially or federally, those are the conditions that have to be applied.

The Liberals like to put forward the notion that they have nothing to do with the legacy, it is not theirs, they are not responsible. Today, for example, they say, do not change the pension conditions. If you take a look at just the revelations of today, you will not hear them say anything about the fact that they lost on behalf of the Canadian taxpayers more money through scams on the research tax credit than the total amount that is identified for five years on the pension plan.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I point out to them that it is those kinds of losses, that kind of profligate spending that has not put this Government into the situation it finds itself, but has put Canadians into that situation. That is the point of departure, I would suggest, that all of us have to take a look at.

I am saying to the Hon. Members in the House today that what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said yesterday—the reasons and the assurances that he gave that we would be monitoring the impact carefully and we would take remedial action as circumstances warrant it and as resources permit it—that commitment which the Prime Minister gave yesterday stands.

It is clear that the proposal that is the subject of the debate today was not introduced because of some ideological zeal to cut spending for its own sake but a trend in the public finances of Canada which would, if not arrested, have led us in a relatively short period of time to a point where today's hard choices would have been replaced by even harder necessities.

Just 10 years ago, only 11 cents of every dollar that the federal Government spent went to pay interest charges on the debt, and 50 cents of every dollar spent by the federal Government went to programs in the social policy envelope. In the fiscal year just ended, 22 cents of every dollar of spending went to pay interest, double the amount of just 10 years ago, and just 43 cents of every dollar was available for programs in the social envelope. Those were budgetary realities, spending realities of the former Government. I am sure when they looked at those statistics, they also took no comfort in the fact that the amount of money available for social programs had declined over the last 10 years and the reason it had declined was not because the government expenditures had declined but rather because there was less money left from government expenditures because of the ever growing cost of maintaining the debt.

• (1640)

In fact, we spent more last year to pay the interest on the Canadian debt than we spent on old age pensions, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, family allowances and cash transfers to the provinces for health and post-secondary education combined. I cannot put that any other way. That is the situation. As well, I cannot put it any better than did the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, whom I knew well and who said in a speech made to this House that the ever-increasing debt is wasted money from a social policy point of view. That is the issue. That money does not come back and is not available for pensions or health care after it goes to pay the debt. It is the only factor in the expenditures of the Government of Canada on behalf of its taxpayers that is self-driven and over which we have no choice and no determining power. One could argue that agreements between the provinces under Established Programs Financing, once passed in legislative form, have the same conditions attached to them, but at least that is a portion of our expenditure which we can negotiate.

I trust that I do not need to emphasize for Hon. Members of the House where the trend was leading us. As a larger and larger share of tax dollars would be consumed to pay interest on the debt, there would be less and less money available to spend on pensions, health and our other important social programs. That is the same dilemma that would face a family that was paying out a larger and larger share of its income on charge-card interest charges. Soon such a family would have to cut back on basic items to regain control of its finances. Borrowing more to maintain its current spending on such items would simply hasten the day when absolute essentials would have to be sacrificed to keep afloat financially.

In taking measures now to prevent us from reaching a point where even more difficult measures would become imperative, we have not spared other groups of society. High-income earners will pay a surtax this year and next. A tax on bank capital and a corporate surtax have been introduced. Those who have used various exemptions and deductions in the past to avoid paying taxes on relatively high incomes will be required to pay a minimum tax in 1986. All taxpayers will be affected by the move from full to partial indexation in the income tax system. There are expenditure reductions in many other government programs and the size of the Public Service will also be affected. However, when all these steps have been taken, they will still not add up to enough of a deficit reduction in the years ahead to ensure that we regain control of our public finances. We also had to look for savings in the programs which are the subject of today's debate.

I would think that regardless of one's partisan stripe, one could only get the finances of Canada into a position where the deficit does not become an ever-increasing burden through cost reduction, efficiencies, and the creation of new wealth. That is the three pronged approach being taken by the Government. Therefore, we said in the Budget regarding this specific item about which Members have asked that we will monitor the situation. That was in the Budget papers, as was known from the moment the Budget was announced. We hope and have reason to believe that the economy is beginning to perform better. As this happens, we will look at the economy and the matter will be monitored. Again, I would refer to what the Prime Minister said in the House yesterday.

Let me say that while there can be legitimate controversy here and elsewhere over whether or not we should have pursued other deficit reduction measures in the form of tax increases or stronger reductions in other programs, I think any person who honestly looks at the situation will have to admit that other options would not achieve the turnaround for which all of us are looking.

What gives us the greatest encouragement is that investor confidence is up in Canada. We have seen somewhat of a reduction in interest rates. We have seen a dramatic increase in the number of Canadians who are employed. We have not heard opposition Members say anything positive about that. If they have, I am willing to retract those words, but I do not recall hearing anything of the sort. In fact, if opposition Members were to look at the figures, they might argue that the jobs created are short-term ones. They might even concede that there are more people working, but only in the short term. I was looking for that concession, but we did not even receive that.

If opposition Members were to look at the figures more closely, they would find that not only are more Canadians working, but that those who were unemployed for the long term, many of whom were women, have found work. However, that has not been lauded. I am not asking opposition Members to laud the Government. I am saying to them that if they want to use their criticism, let them do so, but they said the very same thing after the November 8 economic statement. Opposition Members have a different philosophy. Their philosophy is that wealth is created by taking it from those who earn it and allowing Government to filter it through its fingers. They feel that somehow that creates more wealth. They were wrong then and they are wrong now.

In 1982, opposition Members said that there was a legitimate national goal and the legitimate national goal was to reduce inflation. They said that inflation was eating away at the incomes and purshasing power of Canadians. No greater emphasis was placed on any group than on Canada's senior citizens. That was a correct evaluation of the system and opposition Members then took action. However, if that was a legitimate national goal at that time, surely reducing the cost of the debt and its effect on programs and people is worthy of being the national goal of the Government and the people of Canada today. Opposition Members might not like that, but that is the reality and that is the truth.

Opposition Members have asked me to give examples of groups and individuals that approve of the Budget. I have received such letters from senior citizens but—

Mr. Marchi: Name them.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am not going to name them and I will tell you why.

Mr. Marchi: Why?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am not going to put those letters on the public record—

Mr. Marchi: Why not?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Let me answer. Give me that respect and I will do the same for you.

Mr. Marchi: I am always giving you respect.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will not put a letter on the Table indicating that these senior citizens support me. No, I am responsible, I am the Minister and I am going to take both the acceptance and criticism of the program. That is my responsibility and I am going to do it just that way.

We can argue about how best to deal with the situation, but let us first recognize that if the situation is not addressed today, people who are now 60 years of age and will retire five years from now will have to look at pensions that have been eroded. People who are now 55 years of age who will retire in 10 years will face an even further erosion of their pensions. That is the reality and those—

Mr. Marchi: How about those who are 65 today?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): If the Hon. Member were to go back to the very statements made by myself, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the Budget, he will find that it is for those who are 65 now that we will monitor the situation and adjust it as needed.

● (1650)

Mr. Marchi: I heard with some interest, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister and it seemed to me that he certainly could have passed for a Minister of Finance. I think we should remind the Minister that he is the Minister of National Health and Welfare and that as part of his responsibility he must be an advocate, speaker and vehicle for those seniors. However, I heard him simply talking in numbers and facts about those things which had to do with the economy of this country. Notwithstanding the fact that that is very important, surely to goodness he could have rose in his place and talked a little more passionately about his constituents and his clientele.

He made a number of comments. If we accept those comments at face value—which I certainly do not, but let us assume they are true—all those factors and figures he espoused for the last 15 or 20 minutes were certainly well known to him, to his leader and to his Party last summer. Given the fact that those figures and facts were known—if we accept them at face value—then why were they prepared at that time to go from one coast to another and tell the senior citizens they would not touch the indexation of their pensions?

They said, "Elect us, and that will be a sacred trust". If that was said, how can the Minister stand in his place today and justify the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) giving multimillions of dollars away to the multinationals? Why is he doing their dirty work? Why can he not stand up and talk to the senior citizens and maintain the promise he made to them last summer?

As well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about the Opposition being completely negative and solely criticizing without seeing some of the positive aspects. You can turn that coin as well, Mr. Speaker, and ask why the Minister continues to try to defend the indefensible. Why can those Hon. Members of the Government not stand up and admit to this country and to the senior citizens that what they did was wrong? They should stand up and say that, cut their losses and get on with the security which should be provided to the senior citizens.

I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister the promise which was made during the summer. All the financial statistics given by the Minister today, when he said there was no other way of manoeuvring, were there when he went across the country and gave the seniors his promise. Why is he prepared to renege on that promise? Why can he not stand up and be courageous, have some conviction for his own clientele, not for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of Finance? He is the advocate for the senior citizens.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I will try to explain to the Hon. Member again what the effects are on senior citizens. The Hon. Member conceded that what I have been dealing with is facts. That is what I have been dealing with, facts. I have also said that I will, and am, speaking for seniors. I hope he understands the point that we did not know, and he did not know—he was not in the House and he cannot be held responsible for it—about for instance, the kinds of scams which were costing us $2 billion plus as Canadians.

Mr. Marchi: Come on.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just a moment. The Hon. Member did not know. If he takes a look at the last Budget of the previous Government, he will see that the trend line was down on the deficit. Not only for the one year was the deficit $5 billion more than projected, but the trend line was quite opposite to what had been announced. What had been announced was that the trend line on the deficit was going down, but in fact what had happened was—and it was not only for the one year in which we came to power—the deficit was approximately $5 billion higher than had been announced in the House.

The first point I make is that during the election it was not known. It was withheld by the previous Government. Second, if the trend line would have continued, not in the far distant future, a year or two, that deficit would be $40 billion on an annual basis. I appreciate that projections can be imprecise on either side of the issue. I accept that point made by the Hon. Member. However, if he would look at the projections for the five-year period for which most budgets are now projected, he will find that the projection by the end of that five-year period would be approaching $50 billion annualized deficit. I think the Hon. Member would admit generally that that trend line had to be reversed because it is the seniors who are getting the pensions, who are part of the social structure, and the expenditure in the social programs could not be maintained or sustained if that kind of debt were incurred or continued.

The Hon. Member also stated that money was given to the multinationals. That is another quick throwaway line which is used so easily. What happened with the National Energy Program? That is part of the recession and part of the problem of the deficit. We saw in western Canada young people who, as Canadians from various parts of Canada, had come to the West to work. We saw them on the Trans-Canada Highway going through my riding. They were going back unemployed. Instead of being able to create wealth and develop the future of the country, these young people had to rely on unemployment benefits through no fault of their own.

If the Hon. Member does not like that example of the wealth those Canadians could have created so that we could maintain social programs, I will give him another example. I have heard from time to time Hon. Members of the Opposition saying, "It's a deal for western Canada". I'm not sure the Hon. Member realizes, but for every dollar invested in the oil and exploration industry in western Canada—and I am speaking as a Manitoban and, in my part of the province we do not have oil exploration—over 40 cents is spent in industrial Canada.

The point I make to the Hon. Member is simply that I want better pensions for old age pensioners. That is why we came in with the widow's pension and why we are coming in with the widower's pension. That is why we came in with a disability pension. That is why I would like to see full indexing restored when the economy improves. That is why I would like to see the spousal allowance extended as the economy expands. That is my goal. That is why I work for seniors. That is why I work for others in the social programs. That is my intention and that is what I am going to work for. That is what my colleagues are working for.

Mr. Nunziata: He is making a speech.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I believe I have the right, Mr. Speaker, to respond, unless the Hon. Member thinks I do not. I believe the Hon. Member asked the question with all sincerity, but what I am saying to him is let us protect not only the present, let us protect the future, and the best way we can do it is just this way.

I could give the Hon. Member the example of the Scandinavian countries. Many people would put them forward as a model we should emulate. I point out to the Hon. Member that one must take a look at the tax rate and speak to people in the social programs, as I have done both in Sweden and in Denmark. I was told that they now have to re-examine and the reason they have to do so is because the deficit has now become such a load that they cannot maintain programs. They have to create new wealth. That is a reality. I cannot put it any other way.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that the best protection for seniors, or for any other Canadian, is to create wealth not only in order that the programs can be maintained, but that we can also create jobs and the wealth which comes from those jobs. That is for young people, for middle-aged people and for everyone in the country. The people who should benefit first, as we have said, are the Canadian senior citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. de Jong). He has less than a minute left in the question and comment period.

Mr. de Jong: It is unfortunate that the Minister used the question and comment period for most of his speech. The point I would like to make is, first, the Minister went against the Liberals because they introduced the five and six program. At that time he also voted against six and five. He cannot have it both ways. Canada, on a per capita basis, is the second lowest spender on social programs among OECD countries. To say the reason we have this huge deficit is because we are giving too much money to our old folks in social programs, I think, is unbelievable. The Minister talks about the deficit. Indeed, that is a very important point. He makes reference to the R and D tax credit being a scam. I stood in my place in this House and asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) about that scam.

● (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The period for questions and comments is now over.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we have put forward today a motion which is couched in very reasonable terms. We have done so in order to elicit a sense of co-operation and understanding across the floor, and also to give courage to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in his deliberations. Instead we have heard in a speech by the Minister a Minister of Finance speaking to us. I wonder whether there is something wrong with a Minister of Finance who needs the help of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or whether there is something wrong with a Minister of National Health and Welfare who has to project his speech in defence of a mandate which was not given to him in the first place. Something is wrong when a Government begins to operate in that fashion. This is particularly so at a time when senior citizens across the country are sending in petitions to Ottawa from ridings everywhere. Outrage is spreading across the country, and it is legitimate that we should ask ourselves, regardless of the Party we belong to, why this is happening. Evidently one group of citizens has been asked to make a sacrifice while another has not. I will explain.

The Government is asking pensioners to accept an erosion in their purchasing power of 3 per cent per year beginning in 1986. This quickly turns out to be approximately $120 in the first year, and that amount will grow in subsequent years. It did not take a long time for people to see through what this portion of the Budget meant to them as pensioners. People affected by this are therefore up in arms. They have discovered that they were deceived by the Progressive Conservative Party. They were deceived in the last election because of the promises made and they were deceived when, last December, as a result of an uproar on this side of the House, the concept of universality was retained or salvaged which, in itself, meant retaining also the purchasing power and indexing of people's pensions. When people discover they have been deceived, they get angry. That is normal and natural and it happens to each one of us. This is why the petitions are coming in and will continue to come in between now and the end of the month. They will continue to pour in over the summer if we sit over the summer. The phone calls are coming in by the dozens because evidently people are angry.

What is the Government doing in this situation? Well, the Government is on the run, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is retreating. He is now talking of a proposal. It is no longer a Budget measure or decision. All of a sudden we hear the unthinkable, that it is now a proposal. The Government is saying that it is changing its mind and the Tory back-benchers, and I do not blame them at all, are on their knees. They are pushing for change because they do not want to go back to their ridings and face the music. They know they are going to face the music and they would like to go home with an ease in their mind and their political consciences. This is why the motion we put on the Order Paper today is an attempt to somehow be helpful to them. It is an opportunity to say look let us get together and resolve this nonsense.

Canadians have seen through the rhetoric of this Government. They have seen that the promises made in social policies as well are rapidly evaporating with the passage of time. We have seen the outstanding public relations that the Prime Minister was able to develop over the last few months vanish because he is now talking a language different from that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That Minister is still promoting his Budget. He is still pushing ahead with his measures, but he does not seem to have the support of his Prime Minister. There is some wavering taking place over there.

It would be interesting to know what went on in Cabinet this morning as we see where this Government is heading in light of these developments. The Minister of Finance said on Budget night that there shall be deindexation of the OAS; the Prime Minister is now saying there may be deindexation. In a few weeks the Prime Minister is likely to say that there shall be no deindexation at all. We will then ask him why he subjected the pensioners of Canada to the anxiety they have been living with these days. Why was it necessary to provoke such an uproar?

Why ask the grandparents, with a rhetoric which only the Prime Minister is capable of, to pay for alleged jobs created for their grandchildren by way of deindexation? Have you ever seen such distorted rhetoric in your life? It is as if this generation of pensioners has to finance the jobs of their grandchildren in the market-place now that they have reached retirement age. I sometimes wonder what is the logic process in the minds of this Government. Therefore, it is inevitable that one would conclude that the whole basis of this Budget is ill-conceived.

No one in his right mind would remove a tax on the oil companies and shift the burden, in a way, to the pensioners in order to make up for the lost revenue. Nobody in his right mind would go for the $500,000 capital gains concession, a bonanza for speculators but a loss of tax revenues which the Prime Minister is asking Canadian pensioners to carry on their backs. I am asking you, Mr. Speaker: Does this make sense to you? It does not make sense to me. It does not make sense to a lot of people. If it did, we would not be getting all these inquiries and petitions that are pouring in every day.

• (1710)

The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that we are wrong, but that is political debate. In politics we start from the premise that our Party knows better than the other Party. This sin has been committed since politics was invented. However, is the Minister of National Health and Welfare saying that the Premiers of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick are wrong in condemning this measure? Is he saying that the Premier of Manitoba and the Quebec National Assembly are wrong on this matter? Is he saying that Ontario, with its lame duck Premier, is wrong to have disagreed with this measure? Is he saying that the Ontario Student Federation and the Business Council on National Issues are wrong? Can all of these people be wrong while he is right on this matter? Evidently, Mr. Speaker, a conceptual flaw allowed the Government to arrive at this decision.

The Tories thought that they could tell pensioners to accept a 3 per cent loss in purchasing power and that they would use the money saved to create jobs for Canadians. They thought that this kind of logic would stick because we have been told that in Question Period dozens of times. They also thought that the cancellation of some $920 million in tax revenues from oil companies would not be considered by pensioners. Pensioners are mature, well informed, intelligent people. They have perhaps more time to read than some of the Ministers in this Cabinet. They put two and two together fairly quickly and that is why they are reacting so energetically.

In the 1970s, Senator Croll said that the day would come when senior citizens would have to organize and exert pressure with the Government. At that time everyone smiled. Those words have turned out to be prophetic. He was right. That great man has done a lot for pensioners in this country.

It is important to build the pension system in our country rather than to weaken or appear to be dismantling it by saying that this is just a proposal. It is irresponsible to do that. If anything is done, it should be to make a proposal which strengthens the pension system and gives hope for the future rather than raise a spectre of erosion and losses to the most vulnerable sector of our population which does not have the opportunity of being employed.

The proposed measure would add 200,000 pensioners to those who live under the poverty line. Does that seem progressive to you? Is it fair to tell a pensioner, who is already living on Old Age Security, to turn to the GIS if he cannot make it with the deindexation? The vast majority of Canadians would not want the Government to take that direction.

Corporation taxes were decreased by $2 billion through the Budget. Individual taxes were increased by $4 billion. The Budget also introduced a personal capital gains exemption of $500,000. The general thrust of the Budget inevitably draws one to the conclusion that it is in the interest of the well-to-do in our society. Therefore, it is wrong, Mr. Speaker. That is why we are all up in arms and why this motion is before us today.

I submit that our motion offers an opportunity. It says:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

This motion urges the back-benchers of the Government Party to put our social security pension system back on the right track to protect pensioners from the vagaries of inflation by protecting their purchasing power. They must be ensured they will not lose ground to economic development over which they have no control.

In 25 minutes it will be necessary for us all to recognize that a mistake was made. This motion offers an opportunity for the redress of potential damage before the summer recess in order to allow our senior citizens to enjoy the summer in the full knowledge that their future is not threatened by this kind of "proposal". If this is only a proposal, the Government has heard enough from this side of the House, and from outside of the House, to reconsider its stand.

I call upon the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Minister of Finance to make this announcement before Parliament adjourns for the summer. They must read the mood of the country and understand the anxiety that is developing in the country. They must take the step that will be applauded by everyone in the country.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the remarks of the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and on those of some of the other Members of the two Opposition Parties. They continually refer to the so-called windfall profit to the so-called multinational oil companies. The two areas where they believe our Government is giving them money are; first, through oil deregulation and second, the termination of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax. As far as deregulation is concerned, the price of oil has been falling internationally and it seems that there is much less money, if any, in windfall profits.

• (1720)

When they talk about the termination of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, they should also remember the $1.7 billion that the oil companies received last year from the Liberal's Petroleum Incentive Program. That program will be terminated, commencing March 28, 1986, while the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax does not terminate until 1989.

Let me also remind Members opposite that as part of the Western Accord, the consumers of natural gas are saving $900 million a year which would have been tacked onto the price of natural gas. This is money coming from the pockets of the oil companies and going to consumers. I would ask them to remember all the facts.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, all that I can say in reply to the Hon. Member is that judging from the length of his intervention in which he devoted himself only to one subject, he seems to be more interested in the petroleum industry than senior citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention whatsoever of trying to score political points in this debate. I sincerely believe that there is nothing meaner in a difficult situation than to try to make political hay out of the plight of the weakest and poorest in our society.

But I just cannot understand, and I even think it is indecent on the part of the Opposition to attempt to lecture us under these circumstances. I am thinking about some of them, not necessarily the lesser luminaries of that Party. Among others, I have in mind the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, Miss Bégin, who said this in December 1982: "The Government intends to amend these laws after carefully considering the situation and because it realizes that all Canadians must be prepared to make sacrifices to fight inflation and ensure our economic recovery". Nobody was even talking about creating jobs then. Miss Bégin went on to say: "Reduce the indexation of benefits to senior citizens who do not need the guaranteed income supplement. They were asked to make the same sacrifice as other Canadians." It was Miss Bégin who then expected that from the elderly.

She added: "Most Canadian men and women are now faced with a new economic reality. The only way to solve our problems is to take drastic measures to reduce inflation. Canadians in every walk of life have to adjust to that situation, however difficult it may be, so that they will not be up against harsher consequences in the future".

Here are the comments at this time of Mr. Johnston, today's finance critic: "The problem raised by the Budget deficit is serious and must not be overlooked. It could lead to a loss of confidence and jeopardize other necessary measures. That is why we must never miss an opportunity to reduce it". And then, further on: "We hope that when they debate these crucial problems in this time of serious crisis the Members of the House will demonstrate that they understand the significance and the general characteristic of this problem. This is not the time to make speeches to gain short-term political benefits even if some prospects—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the Parliamentary Secretary, but I would simply remind her that we are still in the questions and comments period. I may have misled her when I gave her the floor, but we are still in the questions and comments period.

Mrs. Bertrand: Those were comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Perhaps I might remind Hon. Members that questions and comments are allowed during the questions and comments period but, as much as possible, comments ought to be reasonably short so that the person to whom they are directed might reply.

This remark is for the benefit of all Members of the House.

I will allow the Parliamentary Secretary to complete her comments.

Mrs. Bertrand: Well, I will conclude, Mr. Speaker. The then Opposition finance critic said: The national interest requires a national approach to this problem.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary and inform her that we are talking about the policy for 1985, not 1982. There really is a tremendous ideological and philosophical difference between her party's approach to controlling the deficit and mine. The Progressive Conservative Party seems to think, indeed it has high hopes of reducing the deficit through cutbacks and controlling the deficit at the expense of senior citizens. We believe that to reduce the deficit, we must develop and strengthen the economy, and as the Government's revenue increases we can gradually start reducing the deficit. That is the difference between the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have a short but strongly-felt question for the Hon. Member. Does the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) believe that the effort of the Government to extend pensions to low-income widows and widowers between the age of 60 and 64; that tripling of the number of persons eligible to claim deductions for disability; that the pension reforms that were brought in through earlier vesting and portability and that more fair RRSP contributions will have significant impact immediately and in the future for the security of our senior Canadians?

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin) will remember that while we supported the concept, we wanted it expanded to include the single widows and widowers in that age group and we felt that the measure was not comprehensive enough. However, we on this side of the House have a rather long standing tradition and history of building up the social security system of this country.

We really have nothing to learn from the Progressive Conservative Party. If anything, we would urge the Progressive Conservative Party to stop fighting the deficit on the backs of the pensioners, as this measure does in its present form, but to build the system further, strengthen it and reduce the retirement age gradually from 65 to 60 to provide an even better future for our pensioners so that we can be proud of our social security because it is a measure and a mirror of the quality of our society.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, permit me to commend the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for caring about the senior citizens in his constituency and for expressing a sense of justice and fairness. I commend him because he is standing up for his constituents. That cannot be said for Hon. Members opposite who are refusing to stand up and speak for the many constituents in their ridings who are telling them that what the Government is doing is unfair.

It seems that what is at issue is the integrity, honesty and credibility of the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in particular. The Prime Minister and the Government promised senior citizens that they would ensure full indexation of their pensions. The senior citizens of the country were promised that any money saved as a result of a social benefit program being touched would not be used to reduce the deficit, but that is precisely what is being done by the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The period for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

• (1730)

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to stand in support of this motion today. I certainly hope all Members in conscience will look at it individually from the point of view of their constituents. Regardless of what Party they support, I hope they will support a reversal of policy that would be helpful to seniors rather than harmful. We know that the Budget calls for the deindexing of the universal OAS—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No.

Ms. Mitchell: —by CPI minus 3 per cent. How about that?

Some Hon. Members: Right.

Ms. Mitchell: This same deindexation of 3 per cent will be applied to the income tax spouse's allowance for widows and widowers aged 60 to 65. Senior citizens, and the poorest of seniors are elderly women, have been singled out in the Conservative Budget for particularly unfair measures. The Conservatives' fervour to control the deficit and their aversion to taxing the wealthy has lead the Conservatives to target senior citizens for cut-backs in a Budget that they were trying to sell originally as tough but fair.

As we have asked many times in this House, is it fair to take $1.6 billion from seniors while giving $1.5 billion to those who no longer will have a tax on capital gains and roughly $2 billion to the oil companies? Is this fair? I think most Canadians by now know very well it is not because the message has got out over the past week that this is not a fair move and something must be done to change it. We are appealing to the Government today to change.

Partial deindexation of the OAS actually, in our opinion, is underhanded and sneaky. Even worse, it is dishonest. During the campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that a Progressive Conservative Government once more would index the old age pension. I agree with the Conservatives that the Liberals did impose a form of deindexation in the six and five program. The Prime Minister said the Conservatives would restore the OAS once more to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis. We know they have not done this. The Prime Minister should be very concerned. People have lost faith in the kind of promises he has made and then not kept.

More recently, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Government in its Blue Paper to discuss elderly and child benefits stated that in the Government's view no change was required in the OAS-GIS payment system. The Government went on to make a change in that system, no matter how the Minister seems to try to distort this. I cannot understand why he does not see for the GIS group, the poorest of the elderly people in Canada, the majority of whom are women, that he is taking away from their old age pension as well. The Government certainly did not keep its word. We know the effects of this Budget will be both immediate when the Government brings in the 3 per cent deindexation and in the long term.

I heard a Member of the Government back-bench say in a rather sarcastic term "Oh, $100. Isn't that too bad?" I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House that I have talked to a number of senior citizens in my riding and in other meetings that I have attended that even a loss of $100 is a great hardship to many seniors. In Vancouver, bus fares have gone up recently. Many elderly people will not be able to get around the city as they used to. Phone bills have gone up and many seniors have had to have their phones removed. Hydro and rents are up. Many seniors who happen to own their own homes are in desperate straits because they cannot get RRP funds to improve them and they will have to move out.

Federal sales tax hits seniors particularly hard. In British Columbia no longer can seniors get non prescription drugs on their Pharmacare cards. Every time they go to the drug store, seniors will be hit with extra taxes. Many seniors have pets. Many pensioners who do not have families have pets. They will now be taxed on pet food and they will have to get rid of their pets. Why should senior citizens not be able to have a glass of wine? That is completely out of the question now. Senior citizens in Vancouver have told me that their pension just covers food, rent and second-hand clothing. They have had to give up newspapers, telephones and they will never be able to afford new clothes. They cannot even afford now to get on the bus and visit friends and relatives.

The one positive thing about this whole Budget is that it has aroused such anger in senior citizens as well as other Canadians. They are organizing and there is no way they will take this, no way at all, Mr. Speaker. I know Government Members must be receiving just as many protests as we are, saying that seniors will not take this and will be demanding the reindexation of pensions.

I would like to refer particularly to the Council of Senior Citizen Organizations of British Columbia. I talked with a number of their officers. They refer to the organization as COSCO. They sent a telegram to the Prime Minister three or four weeks ago on behalf of over 100,000 pensioners and many affiliated groups, including the Old Age Pensioners of B.C. which has 47 branches and the Senior Citizens Organization of B.C. which has 43 branches. They say it is quite unfair what the Budget has done, that COSCO and affiliates with over 100,000 members protest the loss of indexing on the universal old age pension, something that should be protected at all costs. They go on to ask the Government and the Prime Minister to reconsider their move.

The 3 per cent deindexation of old age pensions we know has a cumulative effect which is particularly significant when you really look at it. The loss of $100 will be hard on people when that reduction is instituted next year. Over the course of five or six years, as many Members have said, seniors will lose $2,284 and added to that is the extra loss in spending power because of taxes. It is really a pretty tragic situation. It is very symbolic. People are saying right across the country, not just those who support our Party but those who supported the Conservative Party in all faith in the election, that "We cannot trust this Government anymore. We have lost faith. The Prime Minister and Ministers make promises and then change their promises." The Budget itself is dishonest. There is no question about it, Mr. Speaker.

The 3 per cent deindexation in the Budget has become a symbol of hypocrisy and unfairness and also of the Conservative Party and its Government.

As NDP Members know, we launched a petition campaign. We have already submitted well over 10,000 signatures. I know there have been at least 2,000 from my riding. I want to tell the Minister who is laughing that this is only the start of it. He will see many many more. I wish the Minister would take this matter much more seriously since his Members have said he is supposedly an advocate for seniors—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, I am.

Ms. Mitchell: —rather than making them victims of his policies.

Pensioners groups are very concerned. They are holding meetings. The Government will continue to hear from them. I hope also that the pensioners, and I am sure they will as they get on with this campaign, will not forget their grandchildren. They will be suffering the same deindexation, a 3 per cent reduction in family allowances. Of course it is not as much money, but it is the same kind of nasty social policy which is typical of this Government.

● (1740)

I should like to mention particularly a meeting which was held in Toronto the other day. I flew there to attend it. It was called by 11 major organizations in Ontario, as well as national organizations, representing over one million pensioners across the country. I would like to read into the record the names of the groups represented at that time: United Senior Citizens of Ontario, representing 300,000 seniors; National Pensioners & Senior Citizens Federation, representing 400,000 seniors; Canadian Pensioners Concerned, representing 50,000 seniors; Metro Seniors Council, representing 700 senior clubs and many more members; Canadian Council of Retirees, representing 45,000 seniors; Older Adult Centres Association of Ontario, representing 80,000 seniors; Ontario Association of Residents Councils, representing 20,000 seniors; Third Age Learning Age, representing 900 seniors; Network for Home Support Services of Metro Toronto, representing 40 senior home support agencies; Association of Jewish Seniors, representing 6,000 seniors; and the Toronto Mayors Committee on Aging.

If the Minister has not read this joint statement, I wish he would at least read the statement in which I summarized some of their points. As I said, they represent one million senior citizens. There was complete consensus on the part of those people and they were of all political stripes. There was no question that they were absolutely fed up with the Government. Some of them were even advocating that seniors who voted Tory and joined the Party should cut up their membership cards and send them in.

I hope the Minister will listen to their points. One of the first points they raised, the one on which they commented with the greatest degree of feeling, was that after the Government talked so much about consultation, there was no formal consultation with organizations representing senior citizens. They were assured in the blue report that there would not be changes and therefore there was no need for them to appear as witnesses before the Standing committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The Government went ahead and really betrayed them. At the meeting they were asked by a reporter: "Do you feel betrayed?" As one voice, everyone at the meeting said: "Absolutely".

They also referred to the fact that the Prime Minister, in his pursuit of office, when he was out to get votes, pledged on behalf of his Party that a Progressive Conservative Government would index Old Age Security pensions to the actual cost of living.

An Hon. Member: A betrayal.

Ms. Mitchell: Certainly that was a betrayal; there is no question about that. They have done just the opposite, and I think the Liberals did the same thing when they imposed the six and five program. I am glad to hear that they have changed their position.

Mr. Nunziata: We are in this together.

Ms. Mitchell: There should be no reduction of indexing for senior citizens or for families. The Conservatives also demanded that seniors make a significant sacrifice to help reduce the deficit.

Mr. Nunziata: Let's fight together.

Ms. Mitchell: I am quoting senior constituents from Ontario, including senior citizens in the riding of the Hon. Member, as well as those represented by national groups, if the Hon. Member is interested.

Mr. Nunziata: I am interested.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Ms. Mitchell: They deplore the fact that the Government is trying to make seniors sacrifice to reduce the deficit and that far too many of them already live on meagre incomes. By any definition, it can only be considered a state of poverty. Also, they indicate that to subject seniors to the removal of inflation indexing is immoral, and that deindexing, coupled with increased taxation on consumer groups, will deliver a further blow to those Canadians who are struggling to live with some semblance of dignity.

An Hon. Member rose in the House and said that our senior citizens were very proud. That generation suffered during the Depression and world wars. They do not want to admit that they are poor. Many of them are very poor, but they would prefer to suffer rather than to ask for help. These are the people that the Government is victimizing once again.

They went on to say in their statement that the proposed policy of deindexing would mean a loss to each old age pensioner from $100 up to $553 in 1990, representing a total loss of $1,604 per person over the next five years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the Government House Leader to present the information which he now has about the business of the House.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope my report will be relatively brief, but it will be in two parts.

Pursuant to the Standing Orders, on the tenth last sitting day of the House in this trimester, provision has been made with respect to a motion which deals with extended hours. There have been discussions between the Parties. Rather than proceeding with this matter tomorrow, and with the unanimous consent of the House, I should like to present this draft order which I think Your Honour will find is acceptable to the House. The order reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding the provision of Standing Order 9 commencing Monday, June 17, 1985 until Friday, June 28, 1985 the House shall meet at 11:00 o'clock a.m. and continue to sit without interruption until 9:00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays and that the House shall meet at 2:00 o'clock p.m. and continue to sit without interruption until 9:00 o'clock p.m. on Wednesdays and that the House shall meet at 11:00 o'clock a.m. on Fridays and shall continue to sit without interruption until 5:00 o'clock p.m. on Fridays provided that during this period:

(a) the Private Members' Hour shall be suspended, and

(b) for the purposes of Standing Order 45(1), adjournment debate shall commence at 9:00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursday and conclude not later than 9:30 o'clock p.m. on the said days and that it be conducted pursuant to Standing Order 45; provided that from 4:00 o'clock to 5:00 o'clock p.m. on Friday, June 14, 1985 the House shall consider Government Orders; and provided that adoption of this Order shall preclude the moving of any motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 9; and provided that when the House adjourns on Friday, June 21, 1985 it shall stand adjourned until 11:00 o'clock a.m. on Tuesday, June 25, 1985.

If Your Honour seeks the unanimous consent of the House to have that order adopted, you will find that consent to be forthcoming.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: As you know, Mr. Speaker, this is a debatable motion, but I have no intention of debating it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I just want to announce the business of the House, so that we will have an idea of the sequence of Bills. Tomorrow, the House will consider Bill C-41, Bill C-2 and Bill S-3. I hope we will deal with those Bills in their final stages. Continuing on Friday and carrying on into next week, the sequence will be: Bill C-51, the Borrowing Authority Bill; Bill C-44, respecting the Western Grain Transportation Act; Bill C-26, respecting the Old Age Security Act; Bill C-27, respecting amendments to legislation by virtue of the Charter; Bill C-36, amendments to the Aeronautics Act; Bill C-24, respecting COSP and CHIP amendments; Bill C-39, respecting supplementary equalization; Bill C-32, respecting fisheries; and Bill C-53, respecting the Northern Transportation Company Disposal Act.

• (1750)

It is my intention to call them on the basis of this listing for the convenience of Members so they will have some idea of the procedure and plan accordingly. I hope to keep it in that sequence, but as House Leaders will understand, there are Bills in committee and a few other items of legislation which we have discussed in the House Leaders' meeting that will be brought forward. Obviously, the reporting of Bills in committees will have an effect on the order of procedence here. We will monitor the legislation from time to time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I originated the word "monitor". It was such a popular word, it was included in the Budget. We will monitor the progress being made on this legislation and when other matters are reported from committee and, indeed, when other items which have been discussed with the opposition House Leaders are introduced in the House, there may be a change in the sequence.

We look forward to making progress on the hours that have been indicated so that we will be able to adjourn on June 28 according to Standing Orders.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-4, an Act to extend the term of Canadian Patent No. 855,255 to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION—INDEXATION OF OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Tobin:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being 5.50 o'clock p.m., it is my duty to interrup these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 62(10).

[Translation]

Mr. Tobin, seconded by Mr. Nunziata, moved:

That this House urges the Government to commit itself now to maintain the present system of full indexation of Old Age Security pensions after January 1, 1986.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Tobin), which was negatived on the following division:
